Project Note – V2

This Work is Licensed Under 4.0 International (CC BY-NC-SA 4.0)

The initial content of this document was downloaded from the Early English Books Online (EEBO-TCP) website. The books were transcribed in a character for character manner and since there was no standard spelling during that time, it can be a bit cumbersome to read, with variations such as "unlesse", "vnlesse", and "vnles" appearing regularly.

With that in mind, this project is intended to clean up those books as much as possible and make them more accessible to the interested reader. A list of variant spellings and their corrections was utilized to clean up the text, but this is only as comprehensive as the list itself. Because of the nature of the original transcription, some words have missing characters or places where the original language (e.g., Greek) was not transcribed. The original text also contained linked footnotes and these have not been incorporated. Included in these works are some, but very limited text taken from other public domain sources.

Although this is admittedly no substitute for a properly proofread and scholarly edition, we believe that the result is a body of work which is far more accessible, particularly for searching and reading, than its predecessor (though our thankfulness for EEBO-TCP cannot be expressed.) The documents have been cleaned and presented to the best of our present ability, in what we hope is a pleasing and useful format for the vast majority of Christian brothers and sisters who desire to access and read these spiritually nourishing works.

For the sake of this collection, it has attempted to take a traditional theological as well as historical approach to Puritan research, meaning that, while there were some Arminian Puritans, those have been omitted if observed, and also, while there were other Non-Conformists that were Catholic, Quaker, Brownist, Pilgrims, etc., this collection has tried to observe only works from theologically reformed Puritans; Baptist, Presbyterian, and Congregational Non-Conformists; as well as CoE or Anglican clergy that were sympathetic or assistive to the Puritan cause. Furthermore, this collection only contains works from the period between 1500-1700, not just because that is the standard historical period of Puritanism, but because this is also the limit of the works found on EEBO-TCP. This is not an exhaustive collection of Puritan/Non-Conformist works, but a collection of those pertinent works which were located on EEBO-TCP which enables the searching thereof by their conversion from facsimile to text. The reason the alphabetical flow of the authors in these titles are not perfectly in order, is because many names were added well into the compiling of these texts, and we had to choose between prolonging publication to start over, or continue and publish with the names somewhat out of order.

Finally, please forgive our eagerness in the midst of imperfection in offering such an errant publication. Given the sheer number of texts, time constraints, and other duties; this is the best we can offer for now; yet, knowing the spiritual treasures within these pages, we pray that this effort, though feeble, will still result in the edification of His Church, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to the glorification of our Gracious God. \**All of the text and titles included in these works are in the public domain, and can be used in any way; for profit or otherwise, by anybody or entity. Only this specific derivative and creative work is bound by the creative common license listed above.* -- Soli Deo Gloria

TO THE VERIE WORTHIE AND VERTVOVS GENTLEMAN, Sir George Fitz-Ioffery Knight, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace and Quorum, in the County of Bedford; saving health.

Right Worshipful:

THIS Sermon, though it be borne last, was not so conceived. But as it came to pass in Tamars travel of her Twins; though Zarah put forth his hand first, and had a scarlet thread tied to it, the distinguishing mark of primogeniture, yet his brother Pharez was borne before him. I intended this Subject to a worthy Audience, fastening my meditations on it: but soon finding, that I had grasped more sands, then I could force through the Glass in two hours, and loath to iniure my proposed method; I let it sleep, till fitter opportunity might waken it. Now behold, without the common plea of this writing age, the importunate request of friends, I willingly adventure it to the light. And since your favor to my weak (or rather no) deserts, hath been ever full of real encouragements: since your affection to literature, (and the best of learning the Gospel) hath ever vouchsafed a friendly countenance to your neighbor-Ministers: I could not make myself so liable to the censure of ingratitude, as not to intreat your Name for Patronage. Which, though it deserves better acknowledgement, and finds it from more worthy voices; yet I, that yield to all in learning, would yield to none in love, and service to you. The cause in question requires a worthy defender: not for the own weakness, but for the multitude and strength of oppositions. Men brook worse, to have their sins ransacked, then their inveterate wounds and ulcers searched. Qui vinum venenum vocant, they that call drunkenness poisoning, speak harsh to their ears, that (quasi deum colunt) embrace and worship it as a God. You are one of that surrogation, into whose hands God hath trusted his sword of Justice. Draw it in his defense against the enemies of his Grace and Gospel. You sit at the common stern, and therefore are not so much your own, as your Countries. Our derided, rejected Preaching, appeals to your aids. Help us with your hands, we will help you with our Prayers. With wisdom and courage rule the wild days you live in. Proceede, (worthy Sir) as you have conformed yourself, to reform others. Reach forth your hand to your confined limits; over-turn the Table, spoil the Banquet, chastise the Guests at this riotous Feast. You see, how justly, this poor, weak, course-woven labor desires the gloss of your Patronage to be set on it. I cannot either distrust your acceptance, knowing the generousness of your disposition; nor need I so much to entreat your private use, (who are stored with better instructions;) as your commending it to the world. If any good may, hereby, be encouraged, any evil weakened, my reward is full. The discourse is sexduple; whereof the first fruits are yours: whose myself am, that desire still to continue

Yours Worships in my best services, THO. ADAMS.

Ad vel in Lectorem.

RELIGIOUS Reader, (for I think, few of the profane rabble read any Sermons) let me entreat thee for this, that (cum lectoris nomen feras, ne lictoris officium geras) thou wouldst accept it, not except against it; and being but a Reader, not usurp the office of a Censurer. The main intents of all Preachers, and the contents of all Sermons, aim to beat down sin, and to convert *sinner*s. Which the most absolute and vn•rring Scriptures have shadowed under diverse metaphores; comparing them to beasts, to blots, to sicknesses, to sterrillities, to pollutions, to leauenings, to whoredoms, to Devils In all which (and many other such figurative speeches) I thin•e it lawful, nay necessary for us, God's Ministers, to explain the Metaphor; and (still within bounds of the simillitude) to show the fit accordance and respondency of the thing meant, to the thing mentioned. Indeed, to stretch the Text against the own will•, is to martir it: and to make every metaphor run upon four feet, is often violabile sacris. B•t so long as we keep the Analogy of faith, and the sense of the present Theame, it is a fault, to find fault with us. Indeed Rhe•oricall flourishes without solid matter, is like an Egyptian bondwoman in a Queens robes; or the Courtiers Chamber, which is often a rotten room, curiously hanged. God's word is full of dark spec•es, dark not in themselves, but to our thick-sighted understandings: therefore his propositions, require expositions. Not that we should turn plain Morals into Allegories, but Allegories into plain Morals. The former was Origen's fault, of whom it is said, (I speak not to uncover that Fathers nakedness; but to show that all men may err, and therefore truth of love must not prejudice love of truth) that wherein he should not allegorize, he did; and wherein he should have allegorized, to his woe, he did not. I have presumed, not without warrant of the best Expositors, to manifest the manifold temptations of Satan, under the Harlots inveigling her Customers. 1. As Wisdom ver. 3. sends forth her Maydens, her Ministers, to invite guests to her Feast of Grace. So Vice sends forth her temptations; nay, she sits at the door her self, ver. 14. and courts the passengers. 2. If Wisdom call the Ignorant. ver. 4. Who so is simple, let him turn in hither, as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith, &c. Vice, which is the true Folly, is her Zani, and takes the words out of her mouth. ver. 16. Who so is simple, let him turn in hither, and as for, &c. 3. If Wisdom promiseth Bread and Wine, ver. 5. Come eat of my bread, and drink of the wine, which I have mingled. Sin will promise no less to her guests. ver. 17. Stollen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant. Here is then a plain opposition of Grace and Sin, Wisdom and Folly, Chastity and uncleanness, Christ and the Devil. He is mistaken then, that shall judge me mistaken in this Allegory. I stand not so much on the sound, as the sense; not so much on the literal, as spiritual meaning. In the former I have instanced, insisted on the latter. It should be tedious, to give account for every circumstance. The learned and good man will judge facurably. To the rest. Si quid tu rectis istis Pro•ir us imperti, si non, his vttere mecum. I pass by •he triutall objections against Sermons in print: as the deadness of the letter, the multitude of Books p•essing to the P•esse, &c. As if the eye could give no help to the soul: as if the queasy stomach could not forbear surfeiting: as if some men's sullenness, and crying push at Sermons, should be prejudicial to ot•ers benefit: as if the Prophets had not added line to line, as well as precept upon precept. I hear of some •dle Drones, humming out their dry derisions, that we will be men in print, slighting the matter for the Authors sake. But because their invectives are as impotent, as themselves are impudent, I will answer no further, then haec culpas, sed tu non meliora facis. Or to borrow the words of the Epigrammatist.

Cum tua non edas, carpis mea carmina Leli:

Carpere vel noli nost•a, v•l ed•tua.

Sloth sits and censures, what th'industrious teach.

Foxes dispraise the Grapes, they cannot reach.

One caveat, good Reader, and then God speed thee. Let me intr•• t•ee, not to give my Book the chopping censure. A word old enough, yet would have a Comment. Do not open it at a ventures, & by reading the broken pieces of two or three lines, judge it. But read it through, and then I beg no pardon, if thou •islikest it. Farewell.

Thine THO. ADAMS.

THE DIVELS BANKET. The first Sermon.

PROVERB. 9.17.18.

Stollen waters are sweet, and the bread of Secrecies is pleasant: but he knoweth not that the dead are there, and that her guests are in the depth of Hell.

I Have here chosen two Texts in one, intending to Preach of a couple of Preachers; one by usurpation▪ the other by assignation; the Worlds Chaplen, and the Lord's Prophet. Where conceive, 1. the Preachers: 2. their Texts: 3. their Sermons: 4. their Pulpits: 5. their Commissions.

1. The Preachers are two, the first hath a double name: Literally, here, the Harlot: Metaphorically, Sin; the mind's Harlot; for between them is all spiritual adultery committed: Some understand it more Synecdochically, the Temptation to sin; but (omne mauis includit minus) their interpretation is like that short bed, you cannot lay this Harlot at her full length in it. Others conceive an Antithesis here, and by conferring the 4. verse with the 16. collect an opposition of two sorts of Preachers; the sincere Prophets of Wisdom, and the corrupted Teachers of Traditions, errors, leasings. I cannot subscribe to this sense, as full enough: let it go for a branch, call it not the body of the Tree. This first Preacher then▪ is the delightfulness, or if you will, the dec•itf•lness of sin. The second is Solomon; not erring, adulterating, idolatrising Solomon: but converted, confirmed Solomon▪ A King and a Preacher.

2. Their Texts: 1. Sins Text is from Hels Scriptum est: taken out of the Devils Spell; either Lucian his old Testament, or Machiavelli his new: laws made in the court of damnation, enacted in the vault of darkness; like those under the Parliament-house; Gunpowder-laws, fit for the Justices of Hell. 2. Solomon's Text is the Word of eternal Truth: with a Scriptum est, caelitus inspiratum; given from Heaven: this is Desuper, the other Desubter; this is all, Scripture is given by inspiratio• from God, profitable, &c. the former is the Delusion of th• Devil; thatlying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's proph•s, the divinity of Hell.

3. The Sermons differs as well as the Texts. 1. The Harlots dixit, verse 16. is thus amplified: Stollen waters are sweet, and the bread of Secrecies is pleasant. Tullius, nor Tertullus, nor Hermes, the speaker in the Parliament of the Heathen gods, never moved so eloquent a tongue: she preaches (according to the palate of her audience) Placentia; nay, it is Placenta, a sweet Cake; whose flour is Sugar, and the humor that tempers it, Honey, sweet, pleasant. She cannot want auditors for such a Sermon: for as it is in Fairs, the Pedler, and the Ballat-monger have more throng, then the rich Merchant: Vanity hath as many customers as she can turn to, when Veritie hath but a cold market. 2. Solomon's Sermon is opposed to it with a But:But he knoweth not that the dead are there, and that her ghosts are in the depth of Hell. A cross blow, that disarms the Devils Fencer: a flat conviction or Non-plus, given to the arguments of sin: a little Colliquintida, put into the swe•t-pot: that, as I have observed in some beguiling Pictures; look on it one way, and it presents to you a beautiful D•mosell: go on the adverse side, and behold, it is a Devil, or some misshapen Stigmaticke. Sin shows you a fair Picture: Stollen waters are sweet, &c. Suaue & delicio sum; Pleasure and delight. Solomon takes you on the other side, and shows you the ugly visages of Death and Hell, the dead are there, &c. If Sin open her Shop of delicacies, Solomon shows the Trap-door and the Vault: if she boast her Olives, he points to the Prickles: if she discovers the green and gay flowers of delice, he cries to the Ingredients, Latet anguis in herba, the Serpent lurkes there: Illa mouet, iste monet; she charms, and he breaks her spells: as curious and proud as her House is, Solomon is bold to write, Lord have mercy on us, on the doors, and to tell us, the plague is there; Stollen waters are sweet, &c. But the dead are there, &c.

4 Their Pulpits have local and ceremonial difference. 1. The Harlot's is described verse 14. She sits at the door of her house, on a seat, in the high places of the City. 1. Sedet; she sits: she is got into that enchanted Chair, Psal. 1. 2. at her house: she need not stray far for customers: in se turba ruunt luxuriosa, proci: they come in troupes to her: 3. at her door: she presents her self to the common eye, and would be notable, though not able to answer the show: 4. on a Seat: nouit suum locum: Vice knows her Seat; the Devil is not without his Randeuous: what say you to a Tavern, a Play-house, a Feast, a May-game? that I say not, an Ordinary: 5. in the City. Whoredom, scorns to live obscurely in the Suburbs: She hath friends to admit her within the walls. 6. Nay, in the high places of the City: in the largest streets, populous and popular houses; in excelsis vrbis: one of the most curious and •ta•ely edifices of the City.

Thus Sin reads not a high-way lecture only, as among Thieves; nor a Chamber-lecture only, as among Courtezans; nor a Mass-lecture only, as among Jesus•tes, nor a Vault-lecture only, as among Traitours; nor a Table-lecture only, as among Humorists; nor a Tap-house-Lecture o•lie, as among Drunkards; that fetch authority from the pot, like Augustus Caesar, to tax all the world: but a City-lecture, such a one as Iesabell read to Iezreell: a public Preaching, her Pulpit being excelsa ciuitatis, top-gallant; filling eminent places, with emanant poisons. 2. Solomon's Pulpit is yet transcendent and above it; for it is a •hrone; a Throne of Iuorie, ouerlaid with gold: such a Throne, as no Kingdom could follow it. The Preacher is a King, the Pulpit a Throne; nay, an Oracle: de Solio rex oracula fundit. For God gave him wisdom, yea, such a wisdom, that no man but his Antitype, God and man, did ever excel him.

5 Their Commissions. 1. The Devil gave Sin her •rrand; guilded her tongue, and po•soned her heart: put a cup of damnation into her hand, and the Sugar of Temptation to sweeten it; allowed her for his City-Recorder, or his Town-la•ke; and sealed her a commission from Hel•; as Saul had from the High Priest• to bind with snares (Filios T•rrae) the Sons of Men. 2. But God gave Solomon a celestial roll to eat, as to Ez•kiel; and touched his lips with a co•le from his own Altar, as to Isaiah, putting into his mouth (documenta vitae) the ordinances of eternal life.

God hath set this day before you two diverse Pulpits, adverse Preachers, dissonant Texts; declares, who speaks by his warrant, who besides it, against it. Behold, as Moses said, I have set life and death before you, take your choice.

The Dialogue of both the verses present us with a Banquet: (conuiuuium, or conuitium rather) a Feast, but a Fast were better: a Banquet worse then Job's children's; or the Dagonals, of the Philistines; (like the Bacchanals of the Moenades) when for the shutting up of their stomachs, the house fell down, and broke their necks. You have offered to your considerations, verse 17. (supplying but the immediately precedent word, Dixit) 1. The Inviter: 2. the Cheare. Solomon comes after, (as with Salt and Vinegar) and tells you 3. the Guests: 4. and the Banquetting-house, verse 18. But the dead are there, &c.

The Inviter: It is a woman, She saith to him: but that name is too good; for she hath recovered her credit: a woman, as she brought woe to man, so she brought forth a weal for ma•: causa d•lictī, solatium relictī: an instrumental cause of transgression, and no less of Salvation. If you say, she brought forth Sin without man, so she brought forth a Savior without man: as the Devil tempted her to the one, so the Holy Ghost overshadowed her to the other. This not a woman then, but a Harlot, meretricia mulier: a degenerate woman, vnwomaned (•t pudore & pudicitia) of both, modesty and chastity.

The feast is like to be good when an Harlot is the Hostice. And sure the Scriptures found some special parietie, if not ident•tie between these two: not making their names convertible, which had been much; but expressing by one word both of them, which is more; as if it concluded their professions and conditions, names and natures all one, which is most of all. Impleta in nostris haec est Scriptura diebus. Experience hath justified this circumstance. A Harlot then, bids, and feasts, and kills: what other success can be looked for? If Delilah invite Sampson, wa•e his locks; she will spoil the Nazarite of his hayres: there are many Dalilahs in these days.

I have read of many Inviters in the holy Writ: some good, many indifferent, most evil, this worst of all. 1. Good, Matth. 22. you have the King of Heaven a Feast-maker: Cant. 5. you have the Kings son a Feast-maker: Jesus Christ bids, Eate oh friends, drink abundantly, oh beloved, Revel. 22. you have the Spirit of glory a Feast-maker, and an Inviter too: The Spirit and the Bride say, Come. To this Feast few come, but those that do come, are welcome: well come in regard of themselves, for there is the best cheare: Blessed are they that are called to the Marriage-Supper of the Lamb: welcome, in respect of God, who doth not grudge his mercies. 2. Many indifferent, and inclining to good. Abraham's feast at Isaac's weaning: Samson's at his marriage. The Wedding-feast in Cana, where the King of glory was a Ghest; and honored it with a Miracle, with the first Miracle, that ever he wrought. 3. Evil; Nabal's feast at his Sheep-shearing; a drunken feast: Belshazzars feast to a thousand of his Lord's, surfeiting with full carouses from the sacred Boles; a sacrilegious Feast. The Philistines feast to the honor of Dagon; an Idolatrous feast. Herod's birthday-feast, when John Baptists head was the last course of the service; a bloody feast. The rich Churls, a quotidian feast, a voluptuous surfeit, all bad. 4. This yet worst of all, the Harlots feast, where (the Ghests at once, comedunt, & comeduntur;) their souls feast on evils, and are a feast to Devils: for whiles men devour sins, sins devour them, as Actaeon was eaten up of his own dogs. This is a bloody Banket, where no ghest escapes without a wound, if with life: for if Sin keep the Reuels, Lusts are the Iunkets, Ebriety drinks the Wine, Blasphemy says the Grace, and Blood is the conclusion.

But allegorically Sin is here shadowed by the Harlot; Voluptuousness, (meretricum meretrix) the Harlot of Harlots; whose Baud is Be•lsebub, and whose Bridewell is broad Hell. Wickedness (foeminei generis dicitur) is compared to a Woman: and hath all her senses: Lust is her eye to see: Bribery her hands to feel: Sensuality her palate to taste: Malice her ear to hear: Petulancy her nose to smell: and (because she is of the foemine sex, we will allow her the sixtsense) tittle-tattle is her tongue to talk. This is the common Hostice of the world; Satan's house-keeper, whose doors are never shut: noc•es atque dies patet, &c. There is no man in the world keeps such hospitality, for he searcheth the air, earth, sea, nay, the Kitchen of Hell, to fit every palate. Vitellius searched far and wide for the rarities of nature; Birds, Beasts, Fishes of inestimable price; which yet brought in, the bodies are scorned, and only the eye of this Bird, the tongue of that Fish is taken: that the spoils of many might be sacrifices to one supper. The Emperor of (the low Countries) Hell, hath delicates of stranger varitie, curiosity. Doth Judas stomach stand to treason? there it is; he may feed liberally on that dish. Doth Nero thirst for homicides? the Devil drinks to him in •oles of blood: is Jeroboam hungry of Idolatry? behold a couple of Calves are set before him: hath Absalom the Court-appetite, Ambition? loe, a whole Kingdom is presented him for a mess, a shrewd bait: Machiau•ls position, faith-breach for Kingdoms is no sin. The Devil thought this Dish would please CHRIST himself, and therefore offered him many kingdoms for a morsel; reserving this to the last, as the strongest argument of his Sophistry. Doth Herod affect Envy? behold, a Banket •f Reuenge, furnished with the murdered corps of thousands, Infants. Doth the ravening mawe of the Pope (Ahab-like) forbear meat, because he cannot get the Vineyard of a Kingdom? or hath he bound himself with the spels of devilish con•estations (like those in Ac•es) not to eat or drink till he hath killed Paul? behold, here is wine set before him in a golden cup, (Wine of Abomination) wherewith whole nations reel: Locusts and Vipers, pestilent and serpentine poisons, whereof the world laughing dies. Is any Courtier p•oud? here are piles of Silks: Is any Of•icer troubled with the itch in his hands? here is vnguentum aureum to cure it; a mess of bribes. Hath any Gentleman the hunger-worm of Covetousness? here is cheare for his diet: Vsuri•s, oppressions, exactions, enclosings, rackings, rakings, pleasing gobbets of avarice. Is any Trades-man light-fingered, and lighter-conscienced? here is whole feast of Frauds, a table furnished with Tricke, conveyances, glossings, perjuries, cheatings. Hath any Papist a superstitious Appetite? he is set down in the chair of Ignorance, and to him are served in by Sorbonists, Jesuits, S•minaries, Loyolists; a large and lavish feast of Crucifixes, vnctions, scrapings, traditions, Re•iques, &c. And as Cheese to digest all the rest, yet it self never digested, Treason. For your route of Epicures, Ruffians, Roarers, Drunkards, Boone-companions, you may know the place easily where these Kas•rils light, even at the carcass-feast. Sin hath invited them, and they scorn to be scornful; hither they come, and every man hath a dish by himself, eat whiles he blow again; except their appetites agree in the choice. You hear the Inviter.

Let it not pass us without observation, Satan is not without his Factors abroad: he hath spirits enough of his own, my name is Legion, Mark 5. but he is not content, except he suborn man against man, till (homo be homini daemon) man a Judas to his friend, woman an Eve to her husband. I confess, he hath many Setters of this literal name and disposition; Harlots, scattring his Stews (like the lice of Egypt) over all the world: but I will not restrain his Kingdom to these narrow limits only, which is not bounded but with the Earth: he that compasseth it, and hath such dealings in all Kingdoms, is not without his plotters, and Intelligencers in every corner.

He hath superstitious Seminaries in the Countrie, me•cenary periurers in the Hall, a long Lane for Brokers and Usurers in the City, and sometimes a dangerous brood of Jesuits in foreign Courts, croaking like Frogs, even in their Phara•hs Chambers: whilst himself roaues on the Sea of this World, like a Pirate, Cardinals and Jesuits are his Mariners, and the Pope sits at the Sterne: Antichrist is his Steward, (strange, he who calls himself Christ's Vicar should be the Devils Steward) and hath ever been faithful to his Kingdom. Many souls have they successively sent to people his low world, whiles their own went also for company. The wickedness of some Popes have been monstrous, and almost forbidding all the Officers of Satan to match them. That if a score of the most prodigious reprobates should be mustered out of Hell, it is likely enough, that nineteen of them would be Popes; and perhaps to make up the twentieth, there would be some strife between a Jesuit and a Cardinal.

Rome, is this Harlots local seat, her house, styled by the Scripture, the Whore of Babylon; her Doctrine is here expressed: Stollen waters are sweet, and the bread of Secrecies is pleasant. Waters of Heresy, stolen from the Cisterns of Superstition. The bread of Deceit, molded by Error, and baked in the Oven of Tradition. We have three commune Enemies; as we are Men, the Devil; as Christi•ns, the Turk; as professors of the Gospel, the Pope: the first hath the two last for his Factours: of whom, we pray▪ aut conuertantur, ne pereant: au• confundantur, ne noceant: either for their conversion, to save themselves; or for their confusion, not to hurt us. Amongst us, the Pope doth most present mischief: Peter told CHRIST, Behold, here are two Swords; CHRIST told Peter, Behold, here are the Keys: Peter•ayes by his Swords, and takes the Keys: the Pope now lays by his Keys and falls to his Sword: Oh quantum hic Petrus ab illo? What difference betwixt the true Peter, and his false Successor? yet, as if he were Heau•ns Porter, men flock to him: whom let me appose with that of the Poet:

Ecquae tanta fuit Romam tibi causa videndi?

What foolish wind blows you to Rome?

He hath infinite petrie stales, to tempt men to sin, whom he hath officed for Bidders to this Feast. Will you take a short muster of some of his Inviters, organa iniquitatis, enginers, bidders to this Banket of vanity: they have all their several stands.

1. In the Court, he hath set Ambition, to watch for base minds, that would stoop to any secure villainy for preferment; and to bring them to this Feast This attempt can tempt none but the base, the Noble spirit cannot be so wrought upon: this is a principal Bidder.

2. In Foro, at the Hall gates, he sets Inviters, that beckon contention to them, and fill the world with broils. I mean neither the reverend Judges, nor the worthy Counselors, nor the good Attorneys; but the Labels of the Law: Sollicitors indeed, for they are a solicitation to our peace: Petty-foggers, Satan's fire-brands, and mortal things; which he casteth abroad, to make himself sport: but they do more hurt amongst the Barley, the Commons of this Land, then Samson's Foxes with the fire at their tails: Oh, that they were shipped out for Virginia; or (if they would trouble so good a Soil) into some desert, where they might set Beasts together by the ears, for they cannot live without making broils.

3. Pride is another Bidder, and she keeps a shop in the City: You shall find a description of her Shop, and take an Inventory of her Wares, from the Prophet, Esa. 3. The tinkling ornaments, the Cawles, and the Moonetires, &c. She sits upon the Stall, and courts the Passengers with a What lack ye? Nay, besides her Person, she hangs out her Picture; a picture unlike her self, though she not unlike her picture; all paint. Infinite traffic to her, but with the same luck and success, that the visitant beasts came to the sick Lion: Vestigia nulla retrorsum: or at best, as the runners to Rome, that return with shame and beggary.

4. Ingrossing is another Inviter; and hath a large walk: sometimes he watcheth the landing of a Ship: sometimes he turns whole loads of Corn besides the market. This Bidder prevails with many a Citizen, Gentleman, Farmer, and brings in infinite guests: the Devil gives him a letter of Mart for his Pyracie.

5. Bribery is an officious fellow, and a special bidder to this Feast. He invites both forward and froward: the forward and yielding, by promises of good cheare: secunda dies; that they shall have a fair day of it: the backward honest man, by terrors and menaces, that his cause shall else go West-ward: (indeed it goes to Westminster.) Yea, with pretence of Commiseration and Pity; as if the conscience of their right did animate them to their cause: thus with a show of Sanctimoni, they get a Saints money: but indeed (argentum foecundum, argumentum facundum) there is no persuasion more pathetic, then the purses. Bribery stands at the stair-foot in the robes of an Officer, and helps up Injury to the place of Audience: thus Judas his Bag is drawn with two strings, made of Silke and Silver, Favor and Reward.

All Officers belong not to one Court: their conditions alter with their places: there are some, that seem so good, that they lament the vices, whereupon they yet inflict but pecuniary punishments. Some of them are like the Israelites, with a Sword in one hand, and a Trowell in the other, with the motto of that old Emblem, In vtrumque paratus: as the one hand dawbes up Justice, so the other cuts breaches of division. They mourn for Truth and Equity, as the sons of Jacob for Joseph, when themselves sold it: they exclaim against poenall transgressions. So Gaius Gracchus defends the Treasury from others violence, whiles himself robbed it: so the Pindar chafes and swears to see Beasts in the Corn, yet will pull up a stake, or cut a Teather, to find supply for his pinfold: so Charles the fifth was sorry for the Popes durance, and gave orders of public prayers for his release, yet held him in his own hands prisoner.

6. Faction keeps the Church; and invites some vain glorious Priests to this Feast: Schism and Separation, like a couple of thorns, prick the Churches side, wound our Mother, till her heart bleeds: All Seminaries of Seditio are Satan's special <math>\langle \diamond \rangle</math> .

7. Riot is his Inviter in a Tavern▪ he sits like a young Gallant at the upper end of the Table; and drinks so many and so deep healths to the absent, that the present have no health left them. This is a frequented Inviting place, that I say not, the Feast it self. Coueousnesse often is the Host, Ebriety drinks the liquor, Swearing keeps th▪ reckoning, Lust holds the door, and Beggary pays the shot.

8. Oppression hath a large circuit, and is a general Bidder to this banquet. This Factour hath abundance of the Devils work in hand: he vntiles the houses of the poor, that whiles the storms of Usury beat them out, he may have peaceable entrance: he joins house to house, as if he was straitened of room; tell him from me, there is room enough for him in hell.

There are infinite swarms of Inviters besides, which run like vagabonds on the Devils errand, with Salutem's in their mouths; as Judas to Jesus, all hail; but it proved a rattling salutation, for Deaths storm followed it: all these declare to us the bankets praeparation. Infinite among ourselves; Rome offers us more help: but we answer them, (as Octavian did of the Crowe: (Satis istarum arium habemus domi.) We have enough of these brides at home: they are all Messengers of our wrack, Porkposes, premonishing a tempest; Usurers, Brokers, Vagrants, Ruffians, Blasphemers, Tiplers, Churls, Wantons, Pedlers of pernicious wares; Seminaries, Incendiaries, Apostates, Humorists, seditious troublers of our peace: you may perceive that our Winter's busy, by the flying abroad of these wild-geese. All are Bidders.

These Instruments of Tentation cannot hurt us, except we be enemies to our selves. They do their worst: Vertit{que} in meliora deus: God turns all to our best. Like wandering Planets, they are carried with a double motion, (Suo & primo mobili:) with their own, and a superior mover. By their own, which though (non sine error, tamen sine terrore) wandering, and stalking with big looks, yet are not so feared as they expect. 2. By the First and Great Movers, which over-rules them with a violent hand. Perhaps they exercise us with tentat•ons, as Ashur did Israel; but the work done, the rod is thrown into the fire: they are but •ubbish to scour the vessels of God's house; Apothecaries to minister us bitter drugs, not able to put in one dram more then God our Physician prescribes; Shepherds dogs with their teeth beaten short, to hunt us to the sheepfolds of peace. In all their works, the villainy is their own, the virtue God's: (as in Christ's betraying, Opus dei redemptio, opus Iudae proditio.) If we think, they flourish too long, let us satisfy our selves, with Job and David; that (Subito ad Inferos) They go suddenly down into the pit. So the Poet propped up his tottering •aesitations, with this conclusion.

Abstulit hunc tandem Russini panatumultum,

Absoluit{que} deos.

In the end, God clears his Justice from any imputation, by turning the workers of wickedness into hell.

[ 2] Do not think, because I have held you long with the Bidders, that I mean to forestall you of the Banket: behold, I have brought you now to the Feast, such as it is: Stollen waters are sweet, and th• bread of secrecies is pleasant. Thus it is in gross; to cut it up, and serve it in, in several dishes; you have. 1. A prescription. 2. A description. 3. An ascription. 1. A prescripon of their essences. 2. A description of their natures: 3. An ascription of their qualities. Quae, quanta, qualia. 1. The Iunkets are prescribed, quae sint, of what kind they are: Waters, Bread. 2. They are described quanta sint, of what property, virtue, nature; Stollen, Secret. 3. They are ascribed to, qualia sint, of what operation, relish, or quality; Sweet, Pleasant. Stollen waters, &c. Thus have you their quidditie, their quantity, their quality. This is the Banket (la•um, ltum) dainty and cherishing: ch•ape, for it is stolen; delightful, for it is sweet. We will ascend to view this Feast (not to feed on it) by the stairs and degrees of my Text. You have. 1. waters. 2. stolen. 3. sweet. So you have. 1. Bread. 2. eaten in secret. 3. pleasant. Of them all first literally and morally, then doctrinally.

Waters: Not the waters that the spirit moved on at the creation, the •irst waters; nor the waters of Regeneration▪ moved by the same spirit, sanctifying waters: nor the waters of Bethesda, stirred by an Angel, salutare and medicinal waters: nor the waters issuing from under the threshold of the Sanctuary; preservative waters. But the bitter waters of Marah, without the sweet wood of Grace to season them. Waters of Trouble, from which David prays for delivery. Tumultuous waters: Waters that turn into blood: bloody waters. Waters of Tribulation, to them that digest it; though waters of Titillation, to them that taste it: much like our hot waters in these days; strange chemicall extractions, quintessences of distilled natures: Viscera, ne dicam, mysteria Terrae: The bowels, nay the mysteries of Earth, good and happy in their opportune and moderate use; but wretched in our misapplied lusts; to turn the blood into fire, and to fill the bones with luxury; not to make nature swim in a river of delights, but even to drown it.

Waters; neither Succourie nor Endiue, &c. no refrigerating waters, to cool the Souls heat, but waters of inflammation: Spain's Rosasolis, water of Inquisition: Tyrones Vsquebah, water of Rebellion: Turkey's Aqua fortis, a violent and bloody water: Rome's aqua inferna, a superstitious water; stilled out of Sulphur and Brimstone, through the Lymbeck of Heresy. Oh! you wrong it: it is aquavitae, and aqua coelestis. Let the operation testify it: it is aqua fortis, aqua mortis. Vinum Barathri: the wine of hell: no poisons are so baneful: It tastes like honey; but if Jonathan touch it, he will endanger his life by it. These are wretched waters, worse then the moorish and Fennie rivers, which (the Poets fain) run with a dull and lazy course: tranquilla alta: streams, still at the top, but boiling like a Cauldron of moulten Lead at the bottom: Phlegeton, & Pyriphlegeton (ignitae et ••miniae vnde) were mere fables and toys to these waters: they are truculent, virulent, obnoxious waters, derived by some filthy guttures from the mare mortuum of Iniquity.

The Pope hath waters, not much unlike these of the Devils Banket. Holy-waters; holy indeed, for they are con•ured with a holy exorcism, saith their Massebooke. Of wonderfu•l effects; either sprinkled outwardly, they refresh the receiver, as if his head was wrapped with a wet clout in a cold morning; or drunk down, they are powerful to cleanse the heart, and scour out the Devil. Oh, you wrong Rome's holy water, to think it the Devils drink; when the proverb says, the Devil loves no holy water: yes, he will run from it, as a mendicant Friar from an alms! To speak duly of it; it is a special river of hell, and drowns more, then ever did the red Sea, when it swallowed an whole Army of the Egyptians. Why, but holy-water is a special ransom to free souls out of Purgatory; and digged out of the fountain of Scripture. Asperges me, Domine, Hysopo: Thou shalt sprinkle me, oh Lord, with Hyssop: (for so their translation hath it:) the sense of which place, is, saith the Romist; that the Priest must dash the grave with a holy-water-sprinkle: for you must suppose, that David was dead and buried when he spake these words, and his soul in Purgatory. It is added that Dives desired in hell, a drop of water to cool his tongue: Oh then, how cooling and comfortable are the sprinklings of these waters on the graves of the dead. But if they can speak no better for them, they will prove some of these waters, here served in at Sins banquet: for if Antichrist can make a man drunk with his holy-water, he will swallow all the rest of his morsels with the less difficulty.

These then are the waters; not the water of Regeneration, wherein our Fathers and we have been baptized: nor the waters of Consolation, which make glad the City of God: nor the waters of Sanctification, wherein Christ once, the Spirit of Christ, still, washeth (the feet) the affections of the Saints. Not the Hyblaeen Nectar of heaven, whereof, he that drinks, shall never thirst again: nor the waters of that pure River of life, clear as Crystal, proceeding out of the Throne of God. But the lutulent, spumy, maculatorie waters of Sin; either squeezed from the spungie clouds of our corrupt natures, or surging from the contagious (vaines of hell) springs of Temptation.

I might here blab to you the Devils secrets, and tell you his riddles, his tricks, his policies; in that he calls Sins, Waters, and would make his guests believe, that they wondersully refresh; but I reserve it to a fitter place: the Sweetness shall carry that note from the waters, I will contract all to these four observations; as the Sum of that I would write of the waters, not on the waters; I have better hope of your memories. 1. The preferment of waters at Satan's Banquet. 2. The Devils policy in calling Sins by the name of waters. 3. The similitude of Sins to Waters. 4. The pluralitie and abundance of these waters.

Water is here prefer• to Bread; for lightly Sins guests are better drinkers then eaters; they eat by the •omer, and drink by the Epha: Indeed; a full belly is not of such dexte•itie for the Devils employment, as a full brain. Gluttony would go sleep, and so do neither good nor harm: Ebriety hath some villainy in hand, and is then fitted with valor, the drunkard is an Hercules furens: he will kill and slay: how many do that in a Tavern, which they repent at a Tiburne? you will say, it is not with drinking water: yes, the Harlots waters, (such as is served in at the Devils Banquet;) mixed with rage and madness. Water is an Element, whence humiditie is derived: the sap in the Vine, the juice in the Grape, the liquiditie in the Ale or Beer, is water: Indeed sometimes Neptune dwells too far off from Bacchus door; and the water is mastered with additions: yet it may (alienate the property) not annihilate the nature and essence of water: water it is still, though compounded water: compounded in our drinks, but in wines, derived, (à primis naturae per media) not extinguished in the being, not brought to a nullity of waters. Drink then, bibendum aliquid, though the Harlot gives it a modest and cool name, waters, is the first dish of the Devils Banquet. The first entertainment into this Appij forum, is with the three Taverns; not so much a drunkenness to the brain, as to the conscience. There is a Drunkenness, not with wine: there is a staggering not with strong drink. The Devil begins his Feast with a health, as Belshazzar, whatsoever the up-shot be. He propounds the water, and he propines it; he will not give them worse then he takes himself. As Jupiter is said, to have at his Court-gate two great Tunnes; whereof they that enter must first drink; and himself begins to them.

Jupiter Ambrosiasatur est: est Nectare plenus.

Intemperance is the first dish to be tasted of: it is (if not principalis, yet, si ita dicam, principialis) if not the prime dish, yet the first dish: Satan must first intoxicate the brains, and extinguish the eye of reason; as the Thief that would rob the house, first puts out the Candle. Understanding is first drowned in these waters: Riot iustles, and the Wit is turned besides the Saddle. The Sons of the Earth would not so doate on the Whore of Babylon, if the wine of her Fornication had not made them drunk: the ghes here rise early to the wine: it is the first service; and are indeed (as the Apostles were slandered) nine-of-clock Drunkards: The day would be without his sufficient sorrow, active and passive mischiefs, if the morning wine should not enflame them. They that are daily guests at the Devils table, know the fashions of his Court; they must be drunk at the entrance. It is one of his laws, and a Physic-bill of hell, that they must not wash, till they have drunk. These Waters are to be applied inwardly first, and once taken down, they are fitted to swallow any morsel of damnation that shall afterwards be presented them.

Water was the first drink in the world, and Water must be the first drink at the Devils Banquet. There is more in it yet: The Devil shows a trick of his wit in this title. Water is a good creature, and many coelestiall things are shadowed by it. 1. It is the element, wherein we were baptized. 2. And dignified to figure the grace of the holy Spirit. Yet this very name, must be given to Sin. Indeed I know, the same things are often accepted in diverse senses, by the language of Heaven. Leaven is est-soones taken for hypocri•ie, as in the Pharisees: for Athei•me, as in the S•dduces: for Prof•nnesse, as in the H•rodians. And generally for Sin, by Paul, 1 Cor. 5. Y•t by Christ, for grace. Luke. 13. God is compared to a Lyon: Amos. 3. And Christ is called the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah. Apocal. 5. And the Devil is called a Lyon. A roaring Lyon, &c. 1. Pet. 5. Christ was figured by a Serpent. John. 3. And to a Serpent is Satan compared. 2 Cor. 11. Stones are taken in the worst sense, Matth. 3. God is able of these stones to raise, &c. Stones in the best sense: 1. Pet. 2. Living stones: and Christ himself, the headstone of the corner. Psal. 118. Be like children, saith Paul; and not like children: be children in simplicity, not in knowle•ge. Graces are called Waters; so here vices; but the attribute makes the difference: Those are living Waters, these are the Waters of death. The Devil in this plays the Machiavelli; but I spare to follow this circumstance here, because I shall meet it again, in the next branch; Bread of secrecies.

Sins may in some sense be likened to waters; yea, even to waters in the Cup, for to waters in the Sea, they are most like; The one drowns not more bodies, then the other souls. They know the danger of the Sea, that pro•ecute their business in great waters: they might know the hazards of Si•ne, that sails in the Devils Barge of luxury: I may say of them both with the Poet.

—Digitis à morte r•moti

quatuor, aut septem▪ si sit latissimataeda.

They are within four or seven Inches of death: how many souls are thus shipwrecked? how many weepeout a De profundis, that would not sing the songs of Zion, in the Land of the living! they forgot Jerusalem in their mirth, and therefore sit down and howl by the waters of  $\langle \phi \rangle$  : but these, here, are Festival, not Marinall wate•s.

1. Water is an enemy to digestion; so is Sin, clogging the memory (the souls stomach) with such crudit•es of vice, that no sober instructions can be digested in it: especially Waters hurt digestion in these cold Countries, naturally cold, in regard of the Climate, but spiritually more cold in devotion, Frosen up in the dregs of Iniquity. Surely many of our Auditors drink too deep of these Waters, before they come to Jacob's Well: our Waters of heavenly doctrine will not down with them. The Waters of sin so put your mouths out of taste, that you cannot relish the Waters of Life: they are Marah to your palates. It seems, you have been at the Devils Banquet, and therefore thirst not after righteousness. The Cup of the old Temptation hath filled you: you scorn the Cup of the New Testament. If you had not drunk too hard of these Waters, you would ask Christ for his living Water: but Achan hath drunk cursed Gold, when he should come before Io•uah: Geh•i hath drunk Bribes, when he should come to Elisha. No marvel if you suck no Juice from the Waters of God, when you are so full and drunken with the Waters of Satan.

2. Water duls the brain, and renders the spirits obtuse and heavy: It is an enemy to literature, saith Horace merrily:

Who in a Rithme rehearses,

That w•ter drinkers never make good Vearses.

We have no skill in the himnes of the spirit, no alacrity to praise God, no wisdom to pray to him: why? we have drunk of these stolen waters. The chilling and killing cold of our Indeution, themorose and raw humors of our uncharitableness▪ the foggy, dull, stupid heaviness of our invincible ignorance, show that we have been too busy with these Waters, nothing will pass with us, but rare and nouell matters, (Ieiunus raro stomachus vulgaria temnit) and in these, we study to admire the garb, not to admit the profit.

3. We find Grace compared to Fire, and gracelessness to water: the Spirit came down on the Apostles in the likeness of fiery tongues, at the day of Pentecost: and John the Baptist testifies of CHRIST, that he should Baptise with the Holy Ghost, and with Fire. The spirit of sin falls on the heart like a cold dew. It is implied, Revel. 3.15. that zeal is hot, wickedness cold, neutrallitie luke-warm. Fire is hot (and dry) Water is cold (and moist) praedominantly, and in regard of their habitual qualities: so zeal; is 1. hot; no incendiary, no praeter-natural, but a supernatural heat; equally mixed with Love and Anger: such was Elias zeal for the Lord of Hosts; he could not be cold in this life, that went up in Fire to Heaven. 2. Drie: not like Ephraim, a Cake baked on the one side, but crude and raw on the other: no, the heat of zeal hath dried up the moisture of profaneness. But wickedness is 1. cold, a gelid nature, a numbness in the Conscience: that, (as when the Air is hottest, the Springs are coldest, so) when the Sun of Grace warms the whole Church, is yet shaking of an Ague; nay, and will not creep (like Simon Peter) to the fire. 2. Moist, not (succus & sanguinis plenum) full of juice and sap; but sin runs like a cold rheum over the Conscience. This metaphor follows Saint Paul, Quench not the Spirit: wherein he fully justifies this circumstance, forbidding the water, of impiety, to quench the fire of Grace.

Here then see the impossibility of uniting the two contrary natures in one conscience, as of reconciling Fire and Water into the same place, time, and subject. If sin keep court in the Conscience, and sit in the Throne of the Heart, Grace dares not peep in at the gates; or if it doth, with cold entertainment. I have heard report of a generation of men, that carry Fire in the one hand, and Water in the other: whose conversation mingles (Humentia siccis) Wet and Drie together, like the Syriphian Frogs in Pliny, whose challenge was, mihi terra lacus{que}, I have Land and Sea for my walk: but alas, if the water be true water of sin, believe it, the Fire is but a false fire, the blaze of hypocrisy: but the Hermit turned his guest out of doors for this trick, that he could warm his cold hands with the same breath wherewith he cooled his hot pottage.

4. Water is a baser Element, and I may say, more elementary, more mixed, and as it were Sophisticate with transfusion: Fire is in the highest Region, the purest Element, and next to Heaven: this is the seat of grace, (non inferiora secuta) scorning the lower things. Sin is (like water) of a ponderous, crasse, gross, stinking, and sinking nature. They that have drunk the Cup of slumber, had need to be bidden Awake, and stand up, for they are sluggish and laid: Grace (though in the Orbe of Sin, yet) hath her conversation in Heaven, and (cor repositum, vbi proemium depositum) her heart laid up, where her love and treasure is: her motto is, non est mortal quod opto. She hath a holy aspiration, and seeketh to be as near to God as the clog of fles• will let her. Sin is like water, though raging with the surges and swellings, and only bounded in with God's non vltra, here I will stay thy proud waves, yet deorsum ruit: whiles these waters swim in the heart, the heart sinks down like a stone, as Nabal's.

5 Physicians say, that water is a binder: you may apply it, that men in these days are terrible water-drinkers: for the times are very restrictiue: you may as well wring Hercules Club out of his fist, as a penny from avarices Purse. Men's hearts are costiue, to part with anything in pious vsus: their hands clutchit, doors shut, purses not open: nay, the most laxatiue prodigals, that are lavish and letting-fly to their lusts, are yet heart-bound to the poor. It is a general disease procured be these waters, to be troubled with the griping at the heart. Such were the Kine of Bashan, soluble to their own lusts, bring, let us drink: bound up, and strait-laced to the poor: not refreshing, but oppressing, not helping but cr•shing the needy: they grieve not for Joseph; nay, they grieve Joseph. These Kine are dead, but their Calves are in England, abundantly multiplied. These are not the days of peace, that turn Swordes into Sickles; but the days of pride, wherein the Iron is knocked off from the plough, and by a new kind of Alchemy converted into plate. The Farmers painfulness runs into the Mercers Shop, and the toiling Ox is a sacrifice and prey to the cunning Fox, all the racked rents in the Country will not discharge the Books in the City.

Great men are unmerciful to their Tenants, that they may be over-merciful to their Tendents; that stretch them as fast as they retch the others. The sweat of the laborers brows is made an ointment to supple the joints of Pride. Thus two malignant Planets reign at once, and in one heart, costiue covetousness, and loose lauishnesse: like the Serpent Amphisboena, with a head at each end of the body, who, whiles they strive which should be the Master-head, afflict the whole carcass: whiles Covetise and Pride wrestle, the Estate catcheth the fall. They eat Men alive in the Country, and are themselves eaten alive in the City: what they get in the Hundreth, they loose in the Sheere: Sic proedae patet esca sui: they make themselves plumpe for the prey; •or there are that play th• rob-thief with them: Vnius compendium, alterius dispendum: if there be a winner, there must be a looser: Serpens Serpentem deuorando fit Draco: Many Landlords are Serpents to devour the poor, but what are they that devour those Serpents? Dragons. You see what monsters then, usurious Citizens are. Thus whiles the Gentleman and the Citizen shuffle the Cardes together, they deal the poor Commons but a very ill game. These are the similitudes. I could also fit you with some discrepancies.

1. Waters mundifie and cleanse, these soil •nd infect: the Conscience grows more speckled by them, till men become not only spotted, but spots, as Lucan said of the wounded body, totum est pro vulnere corp•, the whole body was as one wound.

2. Add, that waters quench the thirst, and cool the heat of the body, but these waters rather fire the heart, and inflame the affections; puff the Splene, which swollen, all the other parts pine and languish into a Consumption: the heart is so blown with lusts that all the graces of the soul dwindle like blasted Impes: these are (aquae soporiferae) waters of slumber, that cast the soul into a dead sleep, whiles the Devil cauterizeth and seares up the Conscience.

3. We say of water, it is a good Servant, though an ill Master: but we cannot apply it to Sin; it is not good at all: indeed less ill, when it serves, then when it reigns: if this false Gibeonite will needs dwell with thee, set him to the basest Offices. So Israel kept in some Canaanites, lest the wild Beasts should come in upon them: our infirmities and mastered sins have their use thus, to humble us with the sense of our weakness, lest the furious beasts of pride and security, break into our freeholds. But sin of it self is good neither Egg nor Bird, neither in Root nor Branch, neither Hot nor Cold, neither in the Fountain nor in the Vessel.

The pluralitie of these waters prolongs and determines my speech: their nature is not more pernicious then their number numerous: indesinita locutio, infinita turba: an vndefined word, an vnconfined number. If there were but one cup alone, it would cloy, and satiate, and procure loathing, (as even Manna did to Israel) therefore Satan doth diuersifie his drinks, to keep the wicked man's appetite fresh and sharp. If he be weary of one sin, behold, another stands at his elbow: hath Dives din'd? he may walk up to his study, and tell his Money, his Bags, his Idols: or call for the Key of his Wardrobe, to feed his proud eye with his Silks: for (Diuitiae & deliciae) Riches and Pleasures serve one another's turn. If Nabal be weary of counting his Flocks, or laying up their Fleeces, he may go and make himself drunk with his sheep-shearers. Hence it is that (ex malis moribus oriuntur plurim leges) to meet with the multiplicity of sins there is required a multitude of laws; as when Physicians grow rich, it is an evident sign of an infected Common-wealth. Sin stood not single in God's view, when he threatens so fearful a punishment, as the whole Book (again) cannot match it. Therefore the Land shall mourn, and everyone that dwelleth therein shall languish, with the beasts of the Field, with the Fowls of Heaven; yea, the Fishes of the Sea also shall be taken away: an universal vastation: but as 1. privately, there was no Truth, yet if there had been Mercy: nay, no Mercy: somewhat yet, if Knowledge had stood constant: no Knowledge in the Land. So 2. positively, there was Swearing: can swearing be without lying? no, lying too: is the tongue alone set on fire at the Devils Forge? no, the hand is also a firebrand of Hell; Killing, Stealing, Adultery join their forces: and to give testimony against their singularity, Blood toucheth blood. How should reprobates else fill up the measure of their sins? Thus when the ungodly have eat and drunk, they may rise up to play.

Will you descend to personal instances? loe, Judas is new come from this Banquet; give him a vomit, and what lies on his stomach? strange waters, and abundance of them: behold, the Spanish waters of Pride, the Romish waters of Treason, the Italian waters of Murder, the Jewish of Hypocrisy, the Turkish of Thievery, the Grecian of all Villanie: ask Mary Magdalene what variety was at this Banquet, she will tell you of seven Viols, seven Devils; you may hear another tell his name, Legion. Bid Absalom give you a Tavern-bill, or short Inuentorie, of these waters, and he will read you▪ In primis the swelling waters of Pride. Item, the surfeiting waters of Luxury. Item, the scalding waters of Adultery. Item, the red waters of Bloodiness. Item, the black waters of Treason; and for the shot, ask him the total sum of the Bill, and he will tell you Damnation. If sins be thus familiarly linked in one man, how do they tune in a Consort? how agree they in Company? nothing better; not a Broker and a Pawn, not a dear year and a Cormorant. Hence Christ calls the way to perdition, the broad way. You cannot stir a foot in the great Road to the City of Hell, Pluto's Court, but you meet sins in throngs; vanity is the largest and most beaten thorough-fare of the world. Some double in their companies, some treble, some troupe, none go single. vae soli: if one sin were alone, it would be easily vanquished. The Devil knows that (vis vnita fortior) collected strengths are unconquerable: and therefore drives his waters so, that (vndae super advenit vnda) one wave seconds the former. 1. Sometimes they go like Beasts, by couples, Rom. 13. Ryot and Drunkenness, Chambring and Wantonness, Strife and Envy. Ierem. 23. Adultery and Othes: and Ierem. 2. My people have committed two evils,&c. 2. Sometimes they dance in Triades, by threes, Phil. 3, Gluttonny, Pride, Covetousness, Gallat. 5. Vaineglory, Prouocation, Malice, Amos 1. For three transgressions and for four,&c. If there be not rather a great number meant: Saint John abridgeth all the vanity of the world into a triplicite: All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lus• of the eyes, the pride of life. This is the Trinity the world doth worship: Haec tria pro trino Numine mundus habet. 3. Sometimes they come by whole herds and droues, like the Host of the Aramites. Galat. 5. you may read them mustered up: Adultery,&c.

Thus I have shown you the multiplicity of these waters: what remains, but that th• s•me fire of God's Altar, that hath enlightened your vnd••standings, do a little also warm your conscience•• should prevent the method of my Te••,•f I s•oul• yet show you the direful, dismal operation of these waters: yet somewhat I must say to make you loath them. As Captains provoke their Soldiers, Per verbum vocale, per semivocale, per mutum: By vocal speeches, semi-vocal Drummes and Trumpets, mute Ensigns: so God dissuades you from these waters. 1. By his word; Viua et viuifica voice; A living and enliuing word: either in the Thunders of Sinai, or Songs of Zion, which the Word incarnate hath spoken. 2. Or by his semi-vocal writings: for at the beginning God talked with man by himself; but after, finding him estranged from his Creator, he sent him his mind in writing: And this he makes sounding by his Ministers. 3. Or by his dumb Ensigns, wonders, terrors, Judgments upon the lovers of these waters.

Trust not too much to these waters: they are not so virtual, as the described Inviters, the Devils Prophets tell you. Satan had long since his Water-Prophets: such were the Oracles Colophonium and Bronchidicum: wherein one by drinking of waters, the other by receiving the fume of waters, fore-told future things. Porphyry observes that antiquity, called them 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Madness; but the error and impudence of succeeding ages 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Diuinations. These were the Priests of Bacchus, welcome to the world, as those would have been to Israel, that Prophecy of wine and strong drink. Men hear of strange fountains (famous for wondrous cures) and run strait thither. The Devil is a juggler, and would make men believe, that if they drink at his fountain of Idolatry, they shall have good luck after it: (he blushed not to lay this battery of Temptation to the Son of God.) As good luck as Sampson had, when he drunk out of the Asses tooth, and presently after lost his eyes: or rather, as he that to find his Horse, must, by the Mass-Priests direction, drink at Saint Brigets Well, accordingly found his Horse, and riding home hereon, broke his neck. Yield it a Fable; the Moral shall yield us this: that we trust nothing, which hath not God's word for warrant. Charmes, Spels, Coniurations, are all vanities, lying vanities: he tha trusts thereto, forsakes his own mercy.

Fear these waters, for they are dangerous: sin is not more cool in the t•st, then it is fiery in the operation. Afflic•ion is hot to the relish, (you cannot drink of my Cup) but cool, easeful, peaceful in the digestion: but these waters are (mel in ore, fell in cord) sweet in the palate, bitter in the stomach. The Oracle gave it: Ninum prius capi non posse, quam fluuius ei fiat hostis: Nineveh should not be taken, before the waters became her enemy: she feared no invndation, the Sea was too remote: yet in the third year of her Seige, the waters of the Clouds broke loose, and with abundant rain overwhelmed the walls; (Muros deiecit ad stadia viginti) to twenty furlongs. We live secure, and devour these waters of iniquity, as Fishes the water of the Sea; but when God shall make our sins compass us at the heels, and raise up these floods against us, we shall cry, as the drowning world, woe unto us, the waters are become our enemies: the floods of our own sins overwhelm us: so the Drunkard drinks a river into his belly, that drowns his vital spirits with a Dropsy.

Let us pump out these waters of Sin, which we have devoured: It is the only course we have left, to keep our Ship from sinking: Euomite, quos bibistis, fluuios. Cast them out by repentance: this is a saving vomit; or else God will give you a vomit of Sulphur, and shameful spewing shall be for your glory: We have all drunk liberally of these waters; too prodigally at Sins fountain, Quando voluimus, et quantum valuimus; when we would, as much as we were able; not only to drunkenness, but even to surfeit and madness: if we keep them in our stomachs, they will poison us: Oh, fetch them up again with buckets of sighs, and pump them out in rivers of tears, for your sins. Make your heads waters, and your eyes fountains: weep your consciences empty and dry again of these waters: Repentance only can lade them out. They, that have dry eyes, have waterish hearts: and the Proverb is too true for many; No man comes to heaven with dry eyes: let your eyes gush out tears; not only in compassion for others, but in passion for yourselves, tho' have not kept God's Law. Weep out your sullen waters of discontent at God's doings, your garish waters of pride, freezing obduracie, burning malice, foggy intemperanc, base covetise. Oh think, think, how you have despised the waters of life, turned Jesus Christ out of your Inn, into a beastly Stable; whiles Pride sits uppermost at your Tables, Malice usurps the best Chamber in your minds, Lust possesseth your eyes, Oaths employ your tongues, Ebriety bespeak your tastes, Theft and injury inthroned themselves in your hands, Mammon obsesseth your affections: Sick, sick, all over: you may cry with the Shunamites Son, Caput dolet: my head, my head: and with Jerusalem, my bowels, my bowels. Oh let faith and repentance make way, that the blood of our Savior may heal you.

We are not only guilty of aversion from God, but of adversion against God; Oh where is our reversion to God? the waters of lusts are (aquae < in non-Latin alphabet > ) the waters of folly and madness; but our tears are (aquae < in non-Latin alphabet > ) the waters of change of mind and repentance. Poenitentia est quasi poenae tenentia: Repentance is a taking punishment of our selves: oh take this holy punishment on your souls: Weep, weep, weep for your vanities. Achan cannot drink up his execrable gold, nor Gehazi devour his bribes, nor Ahab make but a draught of a vineyard, mingled with blood, nor Judas swallow down his cozenage and treason, without being called to a reckoning. Nos quare non credimus, quod omnes astabimus ante tribunal? Why account we not of our future standing before a Judgment Scate? Omnium aures pulso. All we, whom these walls compass, have been drunken with these waters: some, that hate Swearing, with dissembling: some, that abhor Idolatry, with profaneness: some, that avoid notoriousness, with hypocrisy: many, that pretend ill-will to all the rest, with those (Lares et Lemures) household-God's, or rather household-Goblins and Devils, which almost no house is free from, Fraud and Covetousness. We know, or at least should know, our own diseases, and the special dish whereon we have surfeited; oh, why break we not forth into ululations, mournings, and loud mournings for our sins? cease not till you have pumped out the sins of your souls at your eyes, and emptied your consciences of these waters.

And then, behold other, behold better, behold blessed waters: you taste of them in this life, and they fill your bones with Marrow, and your hearts with joy; they alone satisfy your thirst: without which, though you could with Xerxes Army, drink whole Rivers dry, your burning heat could not be quenched. Here drink, Bibite et inebriamini, Drink, and be drunken in this Wine-cellar: only, having drunk hearty draughts of these waters of life, retine them constantly: be not queasy-stomached, Demas-like, to cast them up again; the token of a cold stomach, not yet heated by the spirit: for as the loathing of repast is a token that Nature draws toward her end; so when these holy waters prove fastidious, it is an argument of a soul near her death. Take then and dige this water. Recipitur aure, retinetur cord, perficitur opre. The ear receives, the heart retains, the life digests it: but alas, we retain these waters no longer then the finger of the Holy Ghost keeps them in us; like the •arden-pot, that holds water but whiles the thumb is upon it.

Leave then, Beloved, the Devils Wine-Celler, as Venerable Bede calls it, Vbi nos dulcedo delectationis invitauit ad bibendum, Where the sweet waters of delight tempt us to drink. But David, though he longed for it, would not drink the water of the Well of Bethlehem, which his three Worthies fetched, because it was the water of blood, brought with the danger of life: and shall we drink the waters o• the Devils Banket, (the venture of blood) with the hazard of our dearest souls? No, come we to this aqua Coelestis, be we poor or rich, have we money or none, all that come, are welcome. And know, that having drunk liberally at the fountain of grace, you shall have yet a larger and pleasanter draught at the fountain of glory: that river of life, clear as Crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb: to which the Spirit and the Bride (are Inviters and) say, come. It is a delightful banket we enjoy here; The Kingdom of heaven is right•ousnesse, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghost: None know the sweetness of these joys, but they that feel them: but the Supper of joy, the Banket of glory, the Waters of blessedness are such as no •ye hath seen, &c. Illic beata vita in fonte. There is the Spring-head of happiness: they cannot want water, that dwell by the Fountain.

Nam licet allata gra•us sit sapor in vnd•,

Dulcius ex ipso fonte bibantur aquae.

That which is derived to us in Pipes is pleasant, oh what is the delight at the Well-head? The Devil, like an ordinary Host, sets forth his best wine first, and when the guests have well drunk, worse: but thou oh Lord, hast kept the best wine till the last. They are sweet we taste here, but medio de sonte leporum surgit amari aliquid, There are some persecutions, crosses to embitter them, the sweet meat of the Passover is not eaten without sour herbs: but in thy presence, oh Lord, i• the fullness os joy, at thy right hand, there are pleasures for evermore. There is no bitterness in those waters: they are the same, that God himself and his holy Angels drink of; so that as for Christ his sake, we have drunk the bitter Cup of persecution, so we shall receive at Christ his hands, the Cup of salvation, and shall bless the name of the Lord. To whom, three persons, one only true and eternal God, be all praise, glory and obedience, now and forever. Amen.

THE Second Service OF THE DEVILS BANKET.

BY THOMAS ADAMS, Preacher of God's Word at Willington in Bedford-shire.

ZACHARIAH 5.4.

I will bring forth the curse, saith the Lord of Hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the Thief, and into the house of him, that sweareth falsely by my Name: and it shall remain in the midst of the house, and shall consume it, with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof.

ROYARD. Homil. 1. in I PET. 3.

Reddere bonum pro bono, Humanum: reddere malum pro malo, Belluinum: reddere malum pro bono, Diabolicum: reddere vero bonum pro malo, Diuinum.

- To return good for good is the part of a Man.
- To return evil for evil is the part of a Beast.
- To return evil for good is the part of a Devil.
- To return good for evil is the part of a Saint.

TO THE HONORABLE AND Virtuous Lady, the Lady Jane Gostwyke, Baronnetesse, saving Health.

MADAME:

I Am bold to add one Book more to your Library, though it be but as a Mite into your Treasury. I that have found you so ever favorable to any work of mine, cannot but confidently hope your acceptance of this. Not for the worth of it, but because it bears your Name (and my duty to it) in the forehead, and offers it self to the world, through your Patronage. Somewhat you shall find in it, to harden your love to Virtue; much to increase your detestation to Vice. For I have, to my power, endeavored to vnmaske the latter, and to spoil it of the borrowed form; that sober eyes may see the true proportion of it, and their loathing be no longer withheld. I cannot doubt, therefore, that your approbation of the Book will be frustrate by the Title. I am content to furnish out Satan's Feast, with many special Dishes; and to discover the Waters of Iniquity, which he hath broached to the World. Not to persuade their Pleasure; but lest Ignorance should surfeit on them without mistrust: Lest the perverted Conscience should securely devour them without reprehension. Here you shall see, in a small Abridgement, many actual breaches of God's sacred Law; not without liablenes to condign punishment. You heard it with attention, spoken in your private Church: You gave it approval: I trust, you will as well own it written. It is not less yours, though it be made more public. I need not advise you, to make your eye an help to your soul, as well as your ear. They that know you, know your apprehension quick, your Judgment sound; and (that which graceth all the rest) your affections religiously devoted. Yet since it is no small part of our goodness, to know that we may be better, I presume to present this Book, and (with it) my own duty to your Ladyship, the poor testimony of my present thankfulness, and pledge of my future service. The God of Power and Mercy continue his Fauours to you; who have still continued your favors to

Your Honors humbly devoted THOMAS ADAMS.

THE Second Service of the Devils Banket. The second Sermon.

PROVERB. 9.17▪

Stollen waters are sweet, and Bread eaten in secret is pleasant.

WEE have already served in the first course at the Devils Banket; and feasted your ears with those Waters, from which God keep your souls fasting. Some things are proposed to our practice, some things are exposed to our contempt and dislike. The more accurately the Scriptures describe sins, the more absolutely they forbid them: where wickedness is the subject, all speech is declamation. As no spectator at those horrid Tragedies, where Oedipus is beheld the Incestuous Husband of his own Mother, or Thyestes, drunk with the blood of his own Children, or at any of the bleeding Bankets of the Medea's, can receive those horrors at the Windows of his senses, without terror to his bowels, and trembling to his bones: so when you hear the relation of the Devils cheare, all the flattering, petulant, insidious, nature-tickling dishes of delight: the rarities of Impiety, the surfeits of the World, Horse-leaches to the blood, Witches to the affections, Devils to the Consciences of men; think that they are related, that they may be rejected: to bestow upon the Devils Cates his own names: the glory of Pride, the satiety of Epicureanism, the gallantnesse of Ebriety, the credit of Murder, the greatness of Scorn, the gracefulness of Swearing, the bravery of (the stigmatic) Fashion, the security of Usury, the singularity of Opinion, the content of Superstition; nunciantur, vt renunciantur: think not, they are prescribed for you, when they are described to you. Monstrantur vt monstra: they are set forth as monsters, that they might be loathed: they are advanced as Traitors heads, in terrorem futuri proditoris, to the terror of him that should be tempted to future Treason.

God's intent in declaring this Banket of Sin, is to make you loathe it; and that which is written, is for our instruction, to de•err, not to commend, as some of the Heathen had a custom in their solemn Feasts, to make a bondslave drunk, and then set him forth as a rediculou• object to their children. This Banket then, peribetur vna & prohibetur; is at once declared and declaimed, spoken of and forbidden: lest through ignorance you should like and eat it, you are more fully made acquainted with the vileness of it. Hence our royal Preacher draws the Curtain of the World, and shows you all the delicates of her Table; not to whet your appetites to feed on them, but to cool your courage, dishearten your opinions, alienate your affections; giving you a true censure of their worthiness; all is vanity, and vexation of soul. They are detected, that they might be detested. Therefore if any of Gracchus brood, shall like a Catilmary disposition the better, because Tully hath indicted, interdicted, condemned it: if any son of Belial, shall more affectedly devour some morsel of damnation at this Feast, because the Preacher hath execrated it; and derive at once notice and encouragement from our terrifying censures: testimonium sibi ferat condemnationis: let him bear in himself the evidence of his own condemnation. They are wretched men, (qui minime declinant, quod boni maxim declamant) that most impetuously pursue, what all good men dissuade: running with Ahimaaz the more eagerly, because their friend Joab forbids them. So blasphemously spake the sacrilegious spoilers of Proserpines Temple in Locris, whose ring-leader was Dionisius: Videtis ne amici, quàm bona nauigatio ab ipsis Dijs sacrilegis tribuatur? sailing home, and now arriving at the Haven safe; see you not my friends, saith Dionisius, how fair and fortunate a Nauigation, the God's vouchsafe to Sacrilege? as if they therefore robbed the CHVRC, because they were by the Oracle expressly inhibited: so (gens humana ruit in vetitum nefas) man's nature praecipitates it self into forbidden wickedness. This is an horrid sin; peccatum primae impressionis, & sine nomine adaequato: a wickedness of that nature, that there is no name significant enough to express it.

The manners of the Heathen might justify, and exemplarily make good that verse:

Nitimur in vetitum semper, cupimus{que} negata.

We hunt for things unlawful with swift feet,

As if forbidden joys were only sweet.

But such a report among Christians is so strange, that (fictum, non factum esse videatur) it would seem rather a fable than a fact, a tale then a deed. Publish it not in Gath, nor tell it in the streets of Askelon, that any Israelite should the more desperately cleave to Baal, because Elias hath cursed it. There are none such; neither is there Rain in the Clouds: Indeed Charity would not believe it: for it is even the order of Nature, that (tarda sole magnis rebus adesse fides) slow faith is given to great reports: but alas, we are forced to see, (what we would not believe) such refractory Recusants to all Christianity, loving and speaking, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, according to their own lusts, that would not be so ill, if they had not been taught to be better: quibus res diuinae lusus sunt, ijs & voluptas pro vita, & libido pro ratione est. They that play with Divinity, and make Religion a mock, giude their Life by Pleasure, and their Reason by Lust. Time was, the Kingdom of Heaven suffered violence, and men took it by strong hand, now it offers violence, and men by strong hand repel it: before it was so precious, that every man preassed (and crowded) into it, now it presseth upon us, and we are glad to be rid of it, (as Covetousness of poverty at his door.) And as the fountains would not be so cold, if the Sun had not heated the air, and forced the contrary quality into such abstruse corners; many would have been less outrageous in their filthiness, is the Gospel of Grace, had not so universally spread his beams: Their whole life is a continual prevarication; and it is the cordial Physic to fat their spleenes, that they can be cross to God.

But, lex in sermon tenenda; I speak to Christians, of whom we cannot but hope better things: if there be any here that hath sold his faith for his pleasure, as Adam did his life for an Apple, or Esau his birth-right for a mess of Pottage, and will venture himself a guest at the Devils Banket, maugre all devitation; let him stay and hear the Reckoning, for there is a Shot to be paid, which cannot be avoided: as Circe's Cup turns men into beasts, so it brings them to a beastly end, it fates them against the slaughter-day of Judgment. We leave then the prescription of the waters, and come to the description of their natures: Stollen. It is a word of Theft; and implies, besides the action of Stealth, some persons active and passive in this business; some that do wrong and steal, some that suffer wrong, and are robbed. Robberia is a sin, literally forbidden only in one Commandment, but by inference, in all: What sin is committed, and some person is not robbed? Doth not Idolatry rob God of his worship?

Blasphemy of his honor? Saboth-impiety of his reserved time? Doth not Irruere rob our betters? Murder rob man of his life? Theft of his goods? False tstimonie of his good name or right? Doth not the Harlot here, knit the eight precept to the seventh, and call (adulterium, furtum?) The pleasures of a forbidden bed, Stollen waters? Let us solace our selves with loves▪ for the good man is not at home, &c.

Since then, all sins are waters of stealth, it is an inevitable consequent, that every sin robs some: let us examine, whom. The parties robbed are. 1. God. 2. Man. 3. Our selves: and there be diverse sins rob either of these. Of every circumstance a little, according to the common liking; for some had rather h are many points, then learn one: they would have every word a sentence, and every sentence a Sermon; as he that wrote the Pater-noster in the compass of a Penie. Only I entreat you to observe; that this is a thievish Banket, where is nothing but stolen waters: all the Cates be robberies: the guests cannot drink a drop, but there is injury done. Accordingly, I will jointly proceed. 1. To describe the Waters of Sin at this Feast. 2. And withal, to prove them stolen waters, such as rob either our God, our Brethren, or our selves. I need not clear the Feast from an opinion of coursesesse, because the prime Service goes under the name of waters: this alone doth enforce the delicacy: Neither is all water, for the Bread of Secrecie is one half of the Banket. Let us not be too nice in the letter and shadow: the substance is; The Devil invites and tempteth men to feed on vanity, to feast on Sins: those sins I have labored to display, so far as the Metaphor would give me leave: only, let your affections follow me: that as I fear not to make the Iniquities hateful to your understandings, so I may hope, they will be loathed of your hearts, eschewed of your lives: in confidence whereof I proceed. The first course of these wæers, are such sins, as more immediately rob God: And here, as it is fit, Atheism leads in the rest: a principal Vial of these stolen waters.

1. Atheism is the highest Theft against God; because it would steal from him not (sua, ed se) his goods, but himself: proceeding further (then, Deus haec non curat, to, Deu non est.) Then to say, God will not regard it; but, there is no God to regard it. These offer not only a wicked hand to their own conscience, to scrape out the (deep-engraven and) indelible characters of the Divinity there; but a sacrilegious hand to heaven, as if they would empty it of a Deity, and pull Jehovah out of his Throne, and make him a nonens. All, with them, is begun and done, either by the necessitiy of Fate, or contingencie of Fortune. Te facim•• Fortuna Deem. If any strange vice be committed, the Planets shall be charged with it. Mercury told the lie, Mars did the murder, Venus committed the whoredom. Thus by looking to the inferior causes, (producing necessary effects) they rob God, who is (prima causa creans causas) the causing cause, and the original mover of all things. These are worse then the Devil: for, if at first he doubts and tempts Christ, yet seeing, feeling his power and miracles, he confesseth: only impudent Caiaphas, saw and knew, yet tempts, Thus often, the Instrument excels the Agent; and there be Machiauels, Politicians, Atheists, have tricks beyond the Devil. The Devil believes and trembles, these have neither faith nor fear. The Devil quakes at the day of Judgment torment us not before the time, these deride it: Where is the promise of his coming? Strange! even the Father of Sins comes short of his Children; and that there should be Atheists on Earth, when there is none in Hell.

These Monsters are in the Wilderness! No, they borough in Zion: if seldom such, as say, there is no God, yet frequent, that call Religion a fable; or at least, testify no less of it in their lives: for, Quorum est commune Symbolum, facillimus est transitus: How many make that their Gospel, which they can spell into their purses; and embrace no other Creed, then their Lord and Masters humor? that turn articles of piety to particles of Pollicie: and sophisticate old singleness into new singularity? If a Seminaries argument, shall be more gold-weighty then the best Sermon of ours, they are for Rome the next tide: any Religion, that can enrich their Coffers, shall have their applauses: What differ these from Atheists? or that Pope, who hearing Cardinal Bembus speak of the Gospel, burst forth into this blasphemy: Quantum nobis ac nostro coetui profuerit ea de Christo fabula, atis est omnibus seculis notae. How gainful the fiction or tale of Christ hath been to us, and our Crew, the whole World may know and witness. All Religion is with them a Fable, or at best, fallible. They would fit Religion to their own humors, as Procastes dealt with his Ghests: for all that came he had but one bed: if they were shorter then his bed, ee racked them out, to make them long enough: if longer, he would cut them shorter, till they were fit. These are cruel thieves, that would rob God of himself.

2 The second Vial is Heresy: a dangerous water, because it soon tickles the brain, and makes the mind drunk. This Sin robs God of his Truth: There are many of these Thieves, though contrary among themselves; whose opinions are as cross one to another, as Samson's Foxes, but their tails meet, to scatter the Fire of dissention in the Church: no Lawyers wrangle more in public; nor more lovingly feast one another in private, with the gains of their dissimulation: How bitterly the Brownists on the right hand, the Papists on the left, rail at each other; how friendly agree they, like Herod and Pilate, to afflict Christ? how in effect do they sing both in one tune, to build up Dotion with Ignorance, to wrangle with the Prince for his Supremacy?

In elder times, you had Cerinthus and Arius robbing Christ of his Divinity: Moniche and Marcion of his Humanity; the Nestorians, of the Unity of both natures in one Person. They are dead: oh, bury them, bury them: let their Heresies rot. Alas, how are the spirits of them all, by a kind of transanimation, come into the Romists? Christ is, there, robbed of his Truth of his garments, of his peace, of his life, as well as at Jerusalem; and that without show of being his enemies; Spoliastis amici, You are my friends, yet rob me. Bones rob Christ of his adoration: stones of his Prayers: the Pope of his power. Remission of sins, validity of merits, ease of pains, the Pope must give; who would give the world, that he had them for himself. Too much shall be given to the name of Jesus, more then he would have; that a wicked man shall by it cast out Devils: to whom if the Devils reply not, as they did once to the audacious Sons of Sceua; Jesus we know, and Paul we know, but who are ye? yet God answers them, Qui haec &c. Who hath required this at your hands? Too little to the nature of Jesus: Mans merits shall share with him in justification: Penance in satisfaction: Angels and Saints in Intercession. These are subtle Thieves, that have their bodies for a Communion, their consciences for a Mass, their voices for the Prince, their hearts for the Pope, their souls for the Devil.

3. The third Vial of this Course is Sacrilege: a water, like some winding Meander, that runs through our corn fields, and washeth away the Tenth, God's part. This Sin robs God of his goods: Will a man rob God? yet ye have robbed me: but ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? in Tithes and offerings. Oh! that none among us durst drink of these Stollen waters! but, alas, what law can be given to rob Altars? If Blindasinus be a man of gifts, so justified by the sensible Presenter, what should cross his admission? Is not a Quare impedit, his special friend? yes; and yet not more, then a Prohibition is often a good Ministers foe. Hence now there is little difference betwixt serving at the Altar, and steruing at the Altar. Ministers have (multos laudatores, paucos datores,) Many praisers, few raisers; many benedictors, few benefactors.

Plead not, that they are not stolen, because conveyed by the Ministers consent; for the right is originally in God. Spoliastis me: You have robbed me: me, saith the Lord. The Incumbent consenting is not robbed, God is. They zealously require a learned Ministry, when themselves imbezzell the rewards of learning: they complain of an ignorant, not of a beggarly Clergy. They are content, we should stand in the Pulpit, so long as they may sit in a Tith-shock; and seem wonderfully affected with the oraculous voice of their Minister, but the creaking noise of a Tith-Cart into their own Barn is better Music. Oh, the fearful cry of this Sin in the ears of God against this Land! he hath sprinkled some drops of his angry Vial for it: Droughts, blastings, witherings, are but his Distringis: he destroys all, because we will not pay some: Si domino decimam non dederis, ad decimam reuerteris: He doth justly take away the nine, when we deny him the Tenth: Indeed I confess, that many an Eliashib compacts with Tobiah, to steal holy things: a Cnosticke Patron, a Paphian Priest: so the one have ease, let the other take benefit. Tobiah must have the Tith-corn, the glebe land, and perhaps the very house for a Dairy, and his Cosen Eli•sh•b shall have the tith Geese, and the Egges at Easter. Shall not the Lord visit for such wi•kednesse as this? shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation?

Whiles the rewards of knowledge are diverted to profane uses, God and his heaven is robbed of thousand thousand souls: Oh, pray we, (quid enim nisi vota supersunt?) Pray we, with that most reverend Bishop, That God would rather convert; if not, confound those that rob him of his goods, the Church of her right, the people of understanding. But if no contestation of God, nor protestation of men, can stint their swallowing these stolen waters, let some good Nehemiah be revived, to re-enforce from their felonious hands, that holy Rent, which God hath from every Tenant of his reserved: let the zeal of some Phinehas turn away God's wrath from our Israel. Decimate, quibus debetis, et diuites fietis: Pay your tithes, to whom you should pay them, and you shall be enriched. Bring ye all your Tithes into the Store-house, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now here-with, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of Heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. Read and ponder Heliodorus deed and doom, and quake at it. You cannot steal waters from the living God, but they will poison you.

4. The fourth Vial is Faction, a Water of Trouble to the drinker: this robs God of his order and peace: the Waters of Schism are stolen waters: yet such as many a Separatist loves to drink of: they think not that they rob God, whiles they steal peace from the Church. Christi tunica must be vnica: Christ's Coat was without seam, his truth must be without Rent: we must be all at one, least at all none. Let us not plead so hard for parity in the Church, till we bring Anarchy into the Common-wealth: let our dispositions be like Abraham's: I pray thee, let there be no strife between me and thee, for we are Brethren. Let not God's eutaxie, Order, by our frivolous scruples be brought to ataxie, Confusion. Let Calum's rule over-rule our turbulent and refractarie spirits: Omnia indifferentia in Ecclesiae libertate posita sunt. All indifferent things are put to the disposition and ordering of the Church. Oh you, whom Christ hath made Fishers of souls, fish no longer in troubled waters: Let us not wrangle anymore about colors, as the Constantinopolitans did once in the days of Justinian, about blew and green; till they were all neither blew nor green, but red; the streets swimming in blood, and the Emperor himself endangered. So the Factions of the B•anchi and Neri, about the two colors of black and white, cost the Dukedom of Florence dear, even the beauty and peace of the Country. What, have we all been deceived? hath God been a stranger to us all this while? Ha•e I been so long time with you, and have you not known me, saith Christ to Philip? hath the Truth been hid in corners; that we must grope for it in a Sectaries budget? or are not such men rather, sick of Donatisme? that every Novelist with a whirligig in his brain, must broach new opinions, and those made Canons, nay Sanctions; as sure as if a general Council had confirmed them. Wretched men, that shake off the true comely habit of Religion, to bespeak them a new-fashioned suite of profession at an Humourists Shop. Oh that their sore eyes could, before they left us, have seen what sacrilegious breaches they have made into God's free-hold; robbing his Church of her peace, and waking the Spouse of Christ with their turbulent noises. Factions are stolen waters.

5. The last vial of this first Course is Profaneness: a compounded Water, whereout no sin is excluded: there was no poison the Devil could think on left out, when he tempered this water. It robs God of his glory. We are borne to honor God: it is his due; and that he will have, either (ate, or dete) by thee, or upon thee: Irreligion robs him of this honor: Solummodo hoc •habet, &c. only he hath this to help himself, that he can make it shine in thy •ust confusion. So Menahem destroyed Tipsah, because they would not open unto him: but these will open to Christ knocking, if he will be content:

Basely to dwell in the divided part,

• the fowl, sluttish, and polluted heart.

If CHRIST will dwell with Bel•all, and share part of the Conscience with wickedness, let him come, and welcome: but he scorns to be an Inmate, and let Satan be Lord of the house: he that accepted a stable for his presence-chamber in his humility, doth justly disdain such abode now in his glory: though the walls be but Clay, if the furniture be good, Humility and Repentance; and the cheer answerable, Faith and Charity, he will enter in and Feast. But as his Wombe was, wherein borne; and his Tomb, wherein buried; so must his Temple be now glorified. He was conceived in a womb, where none else was conceived; received into a Tomb where none else was interred: so he will temple himself in a heart, where no affected sin shall be his equal. The profane among the Heathen were thrust from their sacrificial solemnities.

Innocui veniant: procul hinc, procul impius esto,

Casta placent superis; pura cum mente venite.

Pure, innocent, and spotles sprites,

Are welcome to these holy rites:

To the profane and sensual state,

Be ever shut the Temple gate.

But now, our profane save that labor; they thrust from themselves all pious rites: they sing not with the Church, a Tenebo te Domine, I will hold thee fast, oh Lord; but with Simeon, a Nunc dimittis, though with another spirit: they are glad to be gone. CHRIST is as welcome to them as Csars Taxers to the Jews, or the Beadle to the Brothel-house: so the Gergesites tell him to his face: Sir, to be plain with you, you are no guest for us: our secure lives, and your severe Laws will never cotten.

Men live without considering themselves: vnde, vbi, quomodo, quo. Whence they are: where they are: how they do: whither they go: that all these mathematicall lines have Earth for their Center. Whence are we? from Earth. Where are we? on Earth. How live we? unworthy of Earth, or any blessing upon it. Wither go we? to Earth. Terram terra tegat: Earth to Earth. We are composed of four Elements, and they strive in us for Masterie; but the lowest gets the better and there is no rest till Earth have the predominance. These men live, as if there was neither Earth to devour their bodies, nor gulf lower then Earth to swallow their souls.

This is profaneness: The world is rank & manured with sin: Atheism grows up as a Tree, Error and Ignorance are the Leaues, Profaneness and Rebellion the Fruit, and the end is the Axe and the Fire. Their best is verbal Devotion, actual Abomination. Diu•dunt opera a fide, & vtrum{que} perimitur. They separate works from faith: they divide the child and kill it. Works are dead without Faith: and Faith is not alive without Works. They take away that visible distinction betwixt Christians and Infidels, whiles they live not as honest men. Oh, that I could cut this point short, and yet keep my discourse but somewhat even with the subject: but the world drinks too greedily of these profane waters, which rob God of his glory. Most men are no longer Tenants to the Devil, and retailours of his Wares, but proprietaries; (perverted and perverse persons) they strive to be as deep sharers as himself. Machiavelli will no longer work Journey-work with the Devil, he will now cut out the garment of damnation himself. The Vices of these men are so monstrous, that they no less benumb in all good men the tenderness of affection, then in themselves the sense of all humanity. Vox faucibus haeret. It is a shame to utter, an amazement to hear, yet they blush not to commit such execrable impieties. Impudence is only in fashion, and there is no forehead held so graceful, as that the Prophet calls graceless, an Harlots forehead, that cannot blush. Swearing swaggers out admonition: drunkenness drinks down sorrow and penitence: Usury floutes at Hell.

It was Epitaph'd on Pope Alexanders Tomb, Iacet hîc & scelus & vitium. Here lies wickedness it self: it could not be so buried up. He was vile enough. Thais Alexandri filia, sponsa, nurus. Lucrece was his Daughter, his Whore, his Sons Wife: Horrid! that Viper went not to Hell issue-less. What is this but Infidelity and Atheism, though not in Antecedent, yet in Consequente: if not verbal, yet real: under the form of Godliness, an implicit renegation of the power? Multi adorant Crucem exterius, qui crucem spiritualem per contemptam conculcant. Many superstitiously adore the Crucifix, that are enemies to the Cross of Christ, and tread his holy Blood under their scornful feet: Nay, they are not wanting that brag with Pherecides, that they have as much prosperity, though they never sacrifice, as they that offer whole Hecatombes. They will be wicked, if it be for nothing else, to scape the rod of affliction. They make sport with the Book of GOD, as Daphias with the Delphicke Oracle; who inquired of it, whither he should find the Horse he had lost, when indeed he had none: the Oracle answered, inuenturum quidem, sed vt eo turbatus periret; that he should find a horse, but his death withal. Home he is coming, joyful that he had deluded the Oracle; but by the way he fell into the hands of the wronged King Attalus, and was by his command thrown headlong from a Rock, called the Horse, and so perished: as fabulous as you may think it, the Moral of it will fall heavy on the deriders of God.

These are the sins, that immediately rob God, fitly called by our whorish Sorceresse, Stollen waters; which shall never be carried away without account. The second sort of Stollen waters are those sins, which mediately rob God, immediately our Brethren; depriving them of some comfort or right, which the inviolable Law of God, hath interrested them to: for what the Law of God, of Nature, of Nations, hath made ours, cannot be extorted from us, without Stealth; and may be (even in most strict terms) called Stollen waters.

1. Here (fitly) Irreuerence is served in first: a water of Stealth, that robs man of that right of honor, wherewith God hath invested him. Even Abimelech, a King, a Gentle King, revered Abraham: even stately Herod poor John the Baptist. Yes, let reverence be given to Superioritie, if it be built on the bases of worthiness, and to Age, if it be found in the ways of righteousness: Indeed, it should be so, that Seniores annis, should be Saniores animis, and praefectus perfectus; that eminency of place and of virtue should concur, that Greatness and Goodness should dwell together: but the conscience of reverence is fetch'd from God's precept, not man's dignity; and therefore the omission is a robbery: the neglect of honor to whom it belongs, is a Stollen water. The eye that mocketh at his Father, and despiseth to obey his Mother, (doth he think them worthy, or not) the Ravens of the Valley shall pick it out, and the young Eagles eat it. But, alas, these are those irreverent days, where (infoelix lolium, & steriles dominantur avenge)•nuectiues, railings, calumnies, libels, grow up among sober and wholesome admonitions: the same ground produceth both Hearbes and Weedes, and so nourisheth both Sheep and Serpents.

The Nettle grows up with the Rose, and the Lamb must graze in the Wolves company. These are like furious Beasts, that ranging for their pray, and being hampered in the snares, when they cannot break loose to forage, they lie down and roar.

From this foul neast have fluttered abroad all those clamorous Bills, slanderous Libels, malicious Inuectives, seditious Pamphlets; whence not only good names have been traduced, but good things abused. Self-conceit blows them up with ventosity; and if others think not as well of them, as they of themselves, strait like Porcupines, they shoot their quills, or like Cuttels vomit out Inke to trouble the waters. That impudent and insolent claim is made ordinary in these days: With our tongue we will prevail; for our lips are our own. When the Eagle in the Air, Panther in the Desert, Dragon in the deep, Leviathan in the Ocean, are tamed; yet the Tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. It is fired, and with no weaker Fire than Hels. Their hearts are Ouens, heated with malice, and their tongues burning peeles; they are never drawn, but there is a batch for the Devil. These are not only the Geese in the Capitall, to gaggle at Statesmen in the Common-wealth; but Foxes also about the Temple, that, if they be seen stealing the Grapes, fall a biting their descryers by the shinnes. Because the Church hath not heretofore given some the Keys of her Treasure, nor called for them when Bishoprics and promotions were a dealing, they will indite her of incontinency with Rome, (miserable sons, to slander their Mother with adultery.) What they would and cannot do themselves, they blame in others, with Corah, Ye take too much upon, ye sons of Levi. Libels are stolen waters.

2. Murder usurps the second room; a red Water, that robs man of his life: whither they be Popish commissions to cut throats, for the Whore of Babylon can drink nothing but blood; or the monstrous illuminations of the Anabaptists, deriving revelation from the spirit of horrid murder; that the brother should cut off the brothers head, by a command from Heaven, the Father & Mother standing by: Luther calls this a gross Devil: or the sudden quarrels of our age, where evidences of pusillanimitie▪ or (at best) inconsiderate fury, are produced as arguments of Valour: A cross word is ground enough for a challenge: and what issue hath streamed from these Duells, who can think and not quake? The Land is defiled with blood; not shed by an alien hand, God hath been content, (talem nobis averter pestem) to free us from that plague: but civil, uncivil broils. We fall out for feathers; some lie dead in the Chanell, whiles they stood too much for the wall: others sacrifice their hearts blood for the love of an Harlot: Not to pledge a health, is cause enough to loose health and life too. Oh, who shall wash our Land from these aspersions of blood? Murder is but Mans-slaughter, and Mans-slaughter no more then dog-slaughter. Parce ciuium sanguini, should be our condition of life, as it is a sanction of nature, (to spare the blood of Citizens, connatural, collateral, connationall with our selves:) but now it is not spared (sanguini vel ciuium vel sanctorum) to spill the blood of either Citizens or Saints: yet precious in the sight of the Lord is the blood of his Saints, when the blood of his enemies shall not be impunely shed.

There is not a drop of blood thus spilled upon the earth, but swells like an Ocean; and nothing can dry it up, till it be revenged. The most excellent of God's creatures on earth, the beauty, the extract, the abstract, or abridgement of the world, the glory of the workman, the confluence of all honor that mortality can afford, and (what is above all the rest) the Image of the almighty God, with pain borne, with expense nurtured, must fall in a moment: and by whom? one son of Adam by another: the proverb is exiled, homo homini Deus, man is a God to man: nay, it is rare, saith the Philosopher, to find a man to man: for want of using reason how many are beasts; and for not using it well, how many Devils? Hear the Law, ye lawless brood of Cain, that slay a man in your anger: Blood for blood. You think to scape with a Pardon, but there is no pardon of Earth can ease the bleeding conscience. Let none kill Cain, that so every day kills himself. As in that great plague on Egypt, all the waters in their Rivers, Streames, Ponds, Pooles, Vessels were changed into blood, so shall it be in the conscience of the Murderer: his eyes shall behold no other color but red, as if the air were of a sanguine die: his visions in the night shall be all blood; his dreams sprinkling blood on his face; all his thoughts shall flow with blood: If any David scapes the wounds of man's sword to his body, or God's to his soul, let him thank the blood of the crucified JESUS, whose wounds must intercede for his, and procure a pardon. This is that Blood, which doth 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, speake better things, and stint the ceaselesse cry of the blood of Abel: but all this to none, but those that bleed in soul for those sins.

Purge the Land of this blood, ye Magistrates: For the Land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of them that shed it.

They that in spilling blood such pleasure have,

Let them not go, but bleeding, to their grave.

Purge it then, lest God in revenge make his arrows drinke with blood. Fear not to find them, ye Iurors, lest whiles you sau a Murderer, you expose, object, hazard your own throats to his Sword. Hear this also, ye Physicians, think it is the life of Man is questioned: the Epigram comes here to my mind:

Furtum non facies: Iuristae scribitur haec lex,

Haec, non Occides, pertinet ad Medicum.

Thou shalt not steal; the Lawyers square to right them.

Thou shalt not kill; is the Physicians Item.

Sell not insufficient drugs; nor pitch so high a price on your Ignorance. Let it not be true of you, that pessimus morbus est Medicus, the worst disease is the Pysician. That Emperor found it true, by a mortal experience, that Turba medicorum interfecit Regem; Physicians killed him. Blood is precious, let it be preserved.

3. Adultery knows her place: a filthy water, yet in special account at this Feast. It may well be called a stolen water; for it robs man of that comfort which the sacred hand of heaven hath knit to him; vnrauels the bottom of that joy which God hath wound up for him; subornes a spurious seed to inherit his Lands; damps his liuelihood, sets palenesse on his cheek, and impastures grief in his heart. It is that special instance of wickedness, whereby Solomon here expresseth all the rest. The whorish woman calls the pleasures of a forbidden bed, stolen waters. Woe is to him, that is robbed, I mean, the bitter woe of a temporal discontent; which is an inseparable consequent of Christian affection wronged: but more woe to the Robber; who, besides the corporal strokes of Heavens angry hand in this life, shall feel the fearful addition of an eternal woe in hell. Whore-mongers and adulterers God will judge. If a present punishment be suspended, the future shall never be dispensed with. Our firmament hangs too full of these falling Stars; corrupt Meteors, wandering Planets, that only glimmer in the night, when the Sun of vigilancy is set. This cursed weed begins to grow almost as rank in England, as in Italy: only no Authority gives toleration to it: they are here, Aquae surreptitiae, waters of stealth; but there, Inuitant adaperta viros male limina spurcos. The open doors invite their entrance, while the law doth not only wink but warrant. There is no hope to keep out Venus, when Drunkness her Gentleman-Usher, and Dice her old company-keeper are let in. Many Nightingales have sung sad lamentations, woe and ruin against these rapes and whoredoms; but the unclean Sparrowes, cherping the voice of Lust on the house-tops, are suffered to have nests in the roof, when the good Nightingale is driven to the Woods.

There are not wanting, by report, (and those no beggars) that justify this, and clear it from sin by arguments: strong wits, and those sublimed: the wittier, the wickeder. I will give them a double answer, which no distinction shall evade. God hath charged, Thou shalt not commit Adultery: Hazard thyself to dispute against and enervate God's Prohibition, and try, if the second confute thee not; the black poison of thy own conscience; which is set on fire by Lust here, and though it have the fire of Hell added to it shall never be wasted. The Devil was modest when he came to Eve, with, praecepitne Deus, &c, Hath God charged you not to eat,&c? now bluntly, Non praecepit Deus: God hath not concluded Adultery a sin. Inaudita oracula fundit. Impudence in the highest degree, to give God the lie; and except against the absoluteness of his precept.

I intended brevity in the broaching these stolen waters; the matter forceth me to prolixity against my will. Lust hath many friends in these days; many Promoters, whereby she insinuates her self to the world. Among all, those in print do most mischief. Libri Sybaritici, as the same sin-guilty Martial calls them; Books of Epicureanism and Sensuality. Ouids amatorias have bright and trite covers, when the book of God lies in a dustie corner. The Devil plays with us, as Hippomenes with Atalanta, seeing us earnest in our race to Heaven, throws us here and there a golden Ball, an idle Pamphlet. If Cleanthes open his Shop, he shall have Customers: Many a Traveler there sets down his staff; though he pulls off his eyes with Ouids dole: Cur aliquid vidi, cur n̄xia lumina feci? Why have I so couetously beheld these vanities? Paucis de Philosophià gustandum, was the old charge: let few drink at the fountain of Philosophy: but we are drunk with that, all Philosophy condemned. The Stationer dares hardly venture such cost on a good Sermon, as for an Idle Play: it will not sell so well: wicked days the whiles. Oh that they were all condemned to an Ephesian fire; that we might say, as Alcibiades of that Athenian heap of burning scrowles, Nunquam vidi ignem clariorem: We never saw a clearer fire.

4. Thievery needs no more then the name, to prove it a Water of Stealth: This robs man of his goods; those temporal things, whereof God hath made him a proprietarie: A sin which Usurers and Money-mongers do bitterly rail at: They that are of no religion, yet plead religion hard against Thieves: They can lay the law to them, that have no conscience themselves▪ They rob a Country, yet think themselves honest men; and would hang a poor petty robber for forty pence. Let him answer them in the Satire.

O major tandem parcas in sane minori.

As no theft can scape condemnation, so yet different degrees shall be punished with different torments. Extortion, usury, fraud, injustice, are not less thefts, because less manifest. Antiochus could make a black horse which he had stolen, seem white, and a white black; so these Thieves have tricks to make evil good, and good evil: especially tacente lege, so long as the law holds her peace. But as the other escape not the Gallows, so one day, Dabit Deus his quæque funem; God will give these also condign punishment. They say, that the dung of the Black-bird falling on the Oak, turns into slime; of that slime is made Birdlime; of that Birdlime is the Birde her-self snared. So these ground Thieves twine a cord of three strings, Injury, Usury, Fraud; Covetousness twists them into a rope, the Devil makes the noose, and of this cord they are strangled: A threefold Cable is not easily broken. Whiles they steal from others the interest, they rob themselves of the principal, their souls. They please the world with their baits, ready money, but there is a hook under the bait.

Munera magna quidem misit, sed misit in hamo:

Sic piscatorem piscis amare potest.

I have read of an Athenian, such another Fisher; that he had in an apparition a net given him, to catch whole Cities in; but for all that, he died a beggar: These Thieves have such nets to catch whole Towns, Commons, Churches, Steeples and all, but in the end the net breaks, and the Fisher topples into the deep, whence he never comes out again: for these Swine so root into the earth, till they eat themselves into hell.

I do not spare with connivance the Iunior Thieves, because I bring their Fathers to the bar first. He that shall with a violent or subtle hand, Lyon-like or Fox-like, take away that, which God hath made mine; endangers at once his body to the worlds, his soul to heavens sword of Justice: and shall pass from a temporal Barre, to the Tribunal Judgment of Christ. Let not misconstruction hear me: there are more of these, die honest men, then of Usurers: for one Usurers repentance, I will produce you ten executed Thieves. Only here it is, the great Thieves agree one with another; Claw me, and I will claw thee: Winke at mine, and I will not see thy faults: They tune like Bells, and want but hanging. For these Thieves, I might indeed be silent and spare my breath, to the conversion of more hopeful sinners: but we must free our consciences from the guiltiness of not reprovng; least they curse us on their Death-beds, as that Usurer made his will; wherein he bequeathed his soul to the Devil for extorting, his Wife for inducing, his Deacon for enduring, or not reprovng. Though every Usurer makes account to walk to hell, (yet since both hell and heaven be equally set to his choice, why should he choose the worst way?) let not his Minister, for silence, bear him company.

Well; the Thief knows his doom, a double banishment, out of the Territories of earth, out of the confines of heaven: therefore let him that hath stolen steal no more? Repentance shall be sure of mercy. And let not the great Thief think to scape; as he is a Gallimaufrey of all sins, so he shall have a Renduous of all punishments. His house is the Devils Tavern; the guests have sweet wine, but a sharp reckoning. The Devils Fence-school, as the stabbings, woundings, hackings, rackings which torture the Common-wealth, are there experimentally taught. The Devils Brothel-house, where the Usurer is the Baud, and his money's the Harlots: (only they differ from Harlots in their pregnancy and teeming, for they lay like Pigeons every month:) marry because the Devil is Land-lord, his rent eats out all their gains.

5. Slauder is a water in great request: every guest of the Devil is continually sipping of this Vial. It robs man of his good name, which is above all riches. There be some think to scape this censure: though they speak evils of others, yet true evils: but Cham is cursed for declaring his Fathers nakedness, though true. These are like vultures, ad malevolentiam feruntur; They pass over Meadows and flowers to fall upon carions: like Flies, they leap over all a man's good parts and virtues, to light upon his sores. If Noah had not been once drunk, Cham had lost his sport. There are many of these Ziphims, that to currie favor with Saul, betray David: but in my opinion, Doeg's truth was worse than Rahab's lie. A man's good name is deer. Plerique famam, qui non conscientiam verentur. Manie stand upon their credit, that neglect their conscience. Vilium est hominum alios viles facere, et qui suo merito placere non possunt, placere velle aliorum comparatione. It is the part of vile men to villify others, and to climb up to immerited praise, by the stairs of another's disgrace. This is no new dish at some Novelists table; to make a man's discredit, as sauce to their meat: they will toss you the maligned's reputation, with the rackets of reproach from one to another, and never bandie it away, till they have supped. If they want matter, Jealousy is fuel enough: it is crime enough for a Formalist, (so they term him) that he is but suspected guilty. But the Matrone of the Cloyster would never have sought the Nun in the Vault, if she had not been there her self. It was Publius Claudius his best policy, least Cicero should accuse him justly of Sacrilege, to step in first and tell the Senate, that Tullie profaned all religion in his house Thus he that hath most corrupt lungs, soonest complains of the unsavory breath of others.

The Calumniator is a wretched Thief, and robs man of the best thing he hath: if it be a true Maxim, that the efficacy of the Agent is in the apt disposition of the Patient; whiles thou depriest man of his credit, thou takest from him all power to do good. The slanderer wounds three at one blow; Vno ictu, vno nictu. 1. The receiver, in poisoning his heart with an uncharitable conceit. 2. The reputation of the slandered: for a man's name is like a glass, if it be once crack'd, it is soon broken: every Brier is ready to snatch at the torn garment. 3. The worst blow lights on his own soul: for the Arrow will rebound: Maledixit sibi. The slandered scapes best: For God shall bring forth his righteousness as the light, &c.

These are those Hogs in a Garden, which root up the flowers of a man's good parts. But if there were no receiver, there would be no Thief: men would not so burden themselves with the coals of contumely, if they had nowhere to vnload them. It were well for Mephibosheth, that Ziba dwelt a good way from Court. If Saul were deaf, or Doeg dumb; no matter which: for these are two Whelps of that Littour, that must go to hell: one hath the Devil in his ears, the other in his tongue. It is a good general rule of Saint Bernard to govern our tongues by. Sint verba tua rara, vera, ponderosa: rara, contra multiloquium; vera, contra falsiloquium; ponderosa, contra vaniloquium. Let thy words be few, true, substantial: many words, false words, vain words, become not a Christians lips. Inuectives against other men are ever evil, but then worse, when they be false: a man may sin, even in speaking the truth, when just circumstances forbid it; but he cannot but sin in lying; and there is no circumstance can clear him. Cor linguae foederat naturae sanctio, veluti in quodam certo connubio: ergo cum dissonent cor et locutio, sermo concipitur in adulterio. Nature hath knit the heart and the tongue together in the bands of marriage; that which the tongue brings forth, without (or contrary to) the heart, is the birth of adultery. Speak then the truth from thy heart, but wrong not thy brother with a needless truth. Thus Calumnies are stolen waters! Beware then you Diaboli, accusers of your Brethren, Dogs with arrows in your thighs, that are troubled with sore mouths, and Cankers in your teeth, you drink stolen waters, and minister them to others also; both Physician & Patient shall die for it.

6. The last Vial of this Course is Flattery, a water taken out of Narcissus Well; whereof, when great men drink plentifully, they grow mad in their own admiration: and when Self-love hath once befooled the brains, the Devil himself would not wish the train of consequent sins longer. This is a terrible enchantment, that robs men with delight: that counts simplicity a silly thing, and will swear to a falsehood to please a Felix. This man out-runs the Devil: he is the Father of lies, yet we never read, that he swore to a lie: for he that swears, acknowledgeth the Being that he swears by, greater than himself; which the Devil scorns to do. The Flatterer in avouching a lie, and swearing to it, hath a trick beyond the Devil. The superlative titles of these men, cause others to over-value themselves. Pride derives her encouragement from the Flatterers artificial commendations. Thou art far in debt, and fearest arrests; he that should come and tell thee, thou art rich, able to purchase, swimst in a full and flowing stream, thou givest no credit to him, though he would give too much credit to thee. Thy souls state is more beggarly, broken, bankrupt of grace, and run in arrearages with God, yet the Flatterer praiseth the riches of thy virtues, and thou believest him. It is a fearful and fanatical blindness for a man to carry his eyes in a box, like Plutarches lamiae, and only look into himself by the eyes of his Parasites: as if he desired to read the Catalogue of his own good parts, through the spectacles of Flattery; which makes the least letter of a great show, and sometimes a Cipher to be mistaken for a figure. The Sycophants language is a false glass, and represents thy conscience white, when thou mayst change beauty with the Moore; and loose not by the bargain. Let Herod be as hollow as a kexe, and as light as Air, yet weighed in his Parasites balance, he shall poise with solid Virtue, nay, with God himself.

Oh, for some golden Statute against these Aristophanes Fawners, and Herodian Picke-thanks, that cry, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and Vox Dei, like the Churchwardens Bills, Omnia been, everything is as it should be, when all the foundations of the earth are out of course. These Italianate Apes, and French Parrats, that can spin themselves silken suits (ex assentando) on the voluble wheels of their pleasing tongues. Oh that we could think, when these beasts play and skippe above their wont, that there is some tempest a coming. The Flatterer is a delightful Coosenage, smooth perjury, rumors friend, Consciences adversary, Honesties murderer. He allures to Vice vnken'd; colors Vice perpetrated: the horriblest sin is but an error in his verdict. He can Bless and Curse with one mouth; Laugh and Cry with one look; Kiss and Betray wirh one sign. Bion compares him to a Beast: Plato to a Witch; all to a Thief; some to a Devil. Plus nocet lingua adulatoris, quàm manus persecutorie. There is no Foe to the Flatterer. The Gramarians fitly: Mobile cum fixo: like the Adjective, he varies case and gender with his Substantiue. A Cameleon! tet•git quoscun{que} colores, to all colors; except Red and White, saith Pliny: Red signifying Modestie, White Innocence.

Natio comaeda est: rides? maiore cachinno concutitur, &c.

If thou sayest, it is hot, he wipes his forehead: if cold, he quakes of an Ague. As in the Delphicke Oracle, Pythias did never prophecy, but when she was set on a Treuit, and the wind blew intelligence into her: so this Devils prophet is dumb, till you set him on the Tripode of Ease, Credit, Gaine, and stroke him on the head like a Spaniell, and then he will lick your hand, and fill your ears with the Oracles of Hell. He is sibi natus, multis notus, omnibus nocuus: Mundi nothus, Inferni nixus. He is borne to himself, known to many, hurtful to all: the worlds Bastard, Hels true-borne Child. Patitur dum potitur. He suffers much, that he may put up somewhat, when he speaks of the absent, he knows no case but the accusative: loves none (from his Patron) but the datiuie. Hi• laudes numerat, dum ill laudes munerat. He will multiply thy praises, if thou wilt divide to him thy goods. There is a monstrous fable in the Alcoran, that the Earth is placed upon the sharp end of an Oxes horn; the weakness whereof is the cause of Earthquakes: but he that fixeth his estate on •Flatterers sharp tongue, will put an Earthquake into it, and soon run to ruin. Our Chronicles report of Canutus, that when his Flatterers styled him Ruler of Sea and Land, he commanded his chair of Estate to be brought to the Sea-side: and when the waves beat on him, he cried, I command you to return: the sturde waters, (scornful of such a control, as the Devils were of the sons of Sceua, Jesus we know, but who are ye? God we know, calming floods, quieting the winds, but who art thou?) beat on him more furiously: then, loe saith Canutus, what a goodly God I am; and behold my command▪ convincing his flatterers. Oh that some strong West-wind would rid our Land of these Locusts.

The last sort of Vials served in at this Course, are Stollen waters, which immediately rob our selves. The Devil finds us cheare at our own cost, and with cates stolen from our own possessions, he makes us a bounteous feast. Truth is, every Cup of sin we drink of, is a water, that (at least indirectly) robs our selves: neither can we feed on Atheism, Heresy, Sacrilege, Murder, Adultery; but we rifle our souls of grace, our Consciences of peace: for the Devils Banket never makes a man the fatter for his feeding: the guests, the more they eat, the more lean and meager they look: their strength goes away with their repast, as if they fed on nothing but Sauce; and all their sweet delicates in taste were but fretting in digestion; (like Vinegar, Olives, or Pulse) neither doth batten & cheerish, because it wants a blessing unto it. Only it gets them a stomach: the more heartily they feed on sin, the greater appetite they have to it. Though custom of sin hath brought them past feeling, and they have long since made a deed of gift of themselves into the hands of licentiousness, yet behold in them still an eager prosecution of sin, even with greediness. Though mischief was the last thing they did when they went to bed; nay the only action of their bed, yet they rise early, so soon as the morning is light to practice it. They may be sick of sins incurable surfeit, yet feel themselves hungry still; that the Cup of their wickedness may be filled to the brim; and so receive a portion and proportion of torment accordingly. Thus as the gyrouagi equi, molam trahentes, multum ambulat, parum promouent; the Mil-turning-horse, conjured into his Circle, moves much, but removes little: or as the Poet of Ixion. Voluitur Ixion, qui se sequitur{que} fugit{que}: So, the more these guests eat, the more unsatisfied they rise up: Ye shall eat, and not be satisfied: ye shall drink, & not be filled; as he, that dreameth of good cheare, but awakes with an hungry soul. All the delights of sin put not the least drop of good blood into the vaines, nor bless the heart with the smallest addition of content. They browse like Beasts on these sweet boughs, but they look thin after it, as if they had devoured their own bowels.

1. The first Vial of this nature is Pride: a stolen water indeed, but derived from thine own Fountain. It may strike God, offend thy Brother, but it doth immediately rob thyself. The decoration of the body is the deuoration of the substance: the back wears the silver, that would do better in the Purse. Armenta vertuntur in ornamenta: the grounds are unstocked, to make the back glisten. Adam and Eve had Coates of Beasts skins; but now many beasts, flesh, skins and all, will scarce furnish a prodigal younger son of Adam with a suit. And, as many sell their tame beasts in the Countrie, to enrich their wild beasts in the City; so you have others, that to revel at a Christmas, will rauell out their Patrimonies. Pride and good husbandry are neither Kith nor Kin: but Iaball and Iuball are brethren: Iaball, that dwelt in Tents, and tended the Heards, had Iuball to his brother, who was the father of Music: to show, that Iaball and Iuball, frugality and Music, good Husbandry and Content are brothers, and dwell together. But Pride and Opulencie may kiss in the Morning, as a married couple; but will be divorced before Sun-set. They whose Fathers could sit and tell their Michael-mass-hundreths, have brought December on their estates, by wearing May on their backs all the year.

This is the plague and clog of the Fashion, that it is never vnhamperd of Debets. Pride begins with Habeo, ends with Debeo; and sometimes makes good every syllable gradatim. Debeo, I owe more then I am worth. Beo, I bless my creditors; or rather, bless myself from my Creditors. Eo, I betake me to my heels. Thus England was honored with them whiles they were Gallants, Germany or Rome must take them, and keep them being beggars. Oh that men would break their fasts with frugality, that they might never sup with want. What folly is it to begin with Plaudite, Who doth not mark my bravery? and end with Plangite, Good Passenger a Penny. Oh that they could from the high promontorie of their rich estates foresee how near Pride and Riot dwell to the Spittle-house! not that but God alloweth both garments for necessity, and ornaments for comliness, according to thy degree: but such must not wear Silks, that are not able to buy Cloath. Many women are (propter venus•atem inuenustae, saith Chrysostom,) so fine, that they are the worse again. Fashions far fetched, and deer bought, fill the eye with content, but empty the purse. Christ's reproof to the Jews may fitly be turned on us: Why do ye kill the Prophets, and build up their Tombes? Why do ye kill your souls with sins, and garnish your bodies with braveries? the Maid is finer then the Mistress, which Saint Jerome saith, would make a man laugh, a Christian weep to see. Hagar is tricked up, and Sara put into rags: the soul goes every day in her worky-day clothes, vnlighted with graces, whiles the body keeps perpetual holy day in gainesse. The house of Saul is set up, the Flesh is graced: the house of David is persecuted and kept down, the Spirit is neglected.

I know, that Pride is never without her own pain, though she will not feel it: be her garments what they will, yet she will never be too hot, nor too cold. There is no time to pray, read, hear, meditate; all goes away in trimming. There is so much rigging about the Ship, that as Ovid wittily, pars minima est ipsa puella sui: A woman for the most part is the least part of her self. Faemina culta nimis, faemina casta minus: too gawdie bravery, argues too slender chastity. The garment of salvation is slighted: and the long white robe of glory scorned: the Lord Jesus Christ, a garment not the worse, but the better for wearing, is thrown by; and the ridiculous chain of Pride, is put on: but ornamentum est, quod ornat; ornat, quod honestiorem facit: That alone doth beautify, which doth beatify, or make the soul happy: no ornament doth so grace us, as that we are gracious. Thus the substance is emptied for a show; and many rob themselves of all they have, to put a good suite on their backs.

2. The next Cup of these stolen waters is Epicureanism: a water, which whiles we sup of, we suck our selves. A sin, that whiles men commit it, it commits them, either to the high-way or the Hedges: and from thence either by a Writ, or a Warrant, an Arrest, or a Mittimus, to the prison. Solomon saith, He shall not be rich. The Gut is a Gulf, that will easily swallow all his comings in. Meat should be (as wise Agur prayed) food convenient for thee, or as the Hebrew phrase is, the food of thy allowance. This dish, is to feed on all dishes, that may pleas• the appetite, or rather may delight surfeit; for appetite dares not lodge in an Epicures house. This Sin is instar omnium; like the Feast it self: save, that the Glutton feeds on God's good •reatures corporally; but on Satan's mystical board is set nothing but what is originally evil, and absolutely baneful. So that here, Gluttony that feeds on all Dishes, is but a private Dish it self; and though perhaps for the extent and largeness it takes up the greater room, yet for the number it is but one.

It is most rank Idolatry, says Paul; and so near to Atheism, with a no-God: that it makes a carnal God. In mea pa•ria Deus venter: as profound, and profane, as the Babylonians sacrifice: they to their Bell, these to their Belly. Perhaps, you will say, they are more kind to themselves: not a whit; for they wrap up death in their full morsels, and swallow it as Pilles in the Pappe of delicatie. They overthrow nature, with that should preserve it, as the Earth, that is too rank, mars the Corn. They make short work with their estates, and not long with their lives; as if they knew that if they lived long, they must be beggars: therefore at once they make haste to spend their livings, and ende their lives. Full Suppers, midde-night Reuels, Morning Iunkets, give them no time to blow, but add new to their indigested surfeits. They are the Devils crammed Fowls, like Aesop's Hen, too fat to lay; to produce the fruits of any goodness. They do not (dispensare, but dissipare bona Domini) wisely dispence, but blindly scatter the gifts of GOD. They pray not so much for daily Bread, as for dainty Bread; and think God wrongs them, if they may not (Dives-like) fare diliciously every day. Sense is their Purueyour; Appetite their Steward: They place Paradise in their throats, and Heaven in their guts. Mean time, the state wastes, the soul pines, and though the flesh be puffed and blown up, the spirits languish; they love not to live in a Fenne, but to have a Fenne in them.

It is not plague enough that GOD withal sends leanness into their souls, but their estates sink, their lives fall away: they spin a web out of their own bowels: worse then the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet › , Men-eaters, they are ‹ in non-Latin alphabet › , self-eaters, they put a Pleurisy into their bloods, a Tabe and Consumption into their states, an Apoplexy into their souls, the meat that perisheth not, is fastidious to their palates; that they may feed on that, which feeds on them; and so at once devour and be devoured; drink of a cup that drinks up them.

3. The third Vial is Idleness; a filching water to: for it steals away our means both to get goods, and to be good: It is a rust to the Conscience, a thief to the estate. The Idle man is the Deu's Cushion, whereupon he sits, and takes his ease. He refuseth all works, as either thankelesse or dangerous. Thus characterized: he had rather freeze then fetch wood; he had rather steal then work, and yet rather beg then take pains to steal; and yet in many things rather want then beg. Ignauī sunt fures, saith Melancthon: Sluggards are thieves: they rob insensibly the Common-wealth, most sensibly themselves: Poverty comes on him as an armed man. The Idlesbie is poverties prisoner: if he live without a calling, poverty hath a calling to arrest him. When the Cistern of his patrimony is emptied, and seems to invite his labor to replenish it; he flatters himself with enough still, and looks for supply without pains. Necessity must drive him to any work, and what he cannot (auferre, he will differre) avoid, he will delay.

Every get-nothing is a thief, and laziness is a stolen water: if the Devil can win thee, to ply hard this liquor, he knows it will whet thy stomach to any vice. Faction, Thievery, Lust, Drunkenness, blood, with many Birds of this black wing, offer themselves to the Idle mind, and strive to prefer their service. Would you know, says the Poet, how Aegistus became an adulterer? In promptu causa est: desidiosus erat: the cause is easy, the answer ready: he was Idle. He that might make his estate good by labor, by Idleness robs it. This is a dangerous water, and full of vile effects: for when the lazy have robbed themselves, they fall aboard and rob others. This is the Idle-man's best end, that as he is a Thief, and lives a beast, so to die a beggar.

4. The fourth Cup is Envy: Water of a strange and uncouth taste. There is no pleasure in being drunk with this stolen water: for it frets and gnaws both in palates and entralls. There is no good relish with it, either in taste or digestion. Only it is like that Acidula aqua, that Pliny speaks of, which makes a man drunk sooner then wine. Envy keeps a Register of Injuries; and graves that in Marble which Charity writes in the dust, Wrong. It cannot endure that any should be conferred with it, preferred to it.

Nec quemquam iam ferre potest Caesarue priorem,

Pompeiusue parem.

Caesar can brook no Greater; Pompey no riuall. John the Baptist was of another spirit: when he heard that the people had left him to follow Christ, he spake with the voice of content, My joy is fulfilled. He must increase, and I must decrease. Inuidus non est idoneus auditor. The envious man is an incompetent hearer: his ears are not fit to his head. If he hears good of another, he frets that it is good: if ill, he is discontent that he may not judge him for it. If wronged, he cannot stay God's leisure to quit him: he is straight, either a Saul or an Esau; by secret ambushes, or by open hostilitie, he must carue himself a satisfaction. No plaster will heal his pricked finger, but his heart-blood that did it: if he might serve himself, he would take unreasonable penny-worthes. S. Augustine would cool his heat. Vis vindicari Christiane? Wilt thou be revenged of thine adversary oh Christian? tarry a while: Nondum vindicatus est Christus: Thy Lord and Savior is not yet avenged of his enemies.

Malice is so mad, that it will not spare friend, to wreake vengeance on foes. So Garnet told the Powder-traitors; that some innocent might be destroyed with many nocent, if the public good could not otherwise be perfected. His instance was, that in a Town besieged, though some friends were there; yet no wrong nor offense, at advantage to cut all their throats. Hence, if there had been Papists in the Parliament-house, yet rather than loose so holy a massacre, they must have flown up with others. Call you these Saints? Tantaene animis coelestibus irae? It was God's reservation in the old Testament, for accursed Sodom, Si decem iusti, if ten righteous persons be found there, &c. It was Christ's suspension in the new, Let the tares alone till Harvest, least the Wheat be plucked up withal, Theodosius was taxed, that in sontes vnà cum sontibus trucidasset, that he had slain the good with the guilty; and might not be suffered to enter into the Temple. In the Primitive Church the Bishops staid process against the Priscillian Hertikes, ne catholici cum illis perirent, least some good Christians should perish with them. Jehu intending due destruction to the worshippers of Baal, made a special search, that none of the Lord's servants were amongst them. But malice is ever blind, to see what sequel attends her courses. The Envious man is content to loose one eye of his own, so he may put out both his neighbors: nay, which is worse, he will loose both his own to put out one of his. The least trespass shall not pass without suite. The Devil can send him on a very slight errand to Westminster-hall. Be the case never so broken, if the Lawyers wit can stitch it together, that it may hold to a nisi prius, it is enough. I may (with a little inversion) read his destiny from the Poet.

Hunc nec dira venena, nec hostius auferet ensis,

Nec laterum dolor, aut tussis, vel tarda podagra:

Garrulus hunc quando consumet.

Let him not fear Domestical poison, nor foreign sword, nor a stitch in's sides, nor a Cough in's lungs, nor the Gowte in's joints: Hunc proprius liuor consumet. He will fret himself to dust. His Praecordia are steeped in Vinegar. A sound heart is the life of the flesh: but Envy is the rottenness of the bones. The Drunkard rots his flesh, the malicious his bones: He burns up his blood in the furnace of hatred.

Insunit; cùm aliena nequit, sua pectora rodit.

Madde, that his poison will not others kill,

He drinks it off himself, himself to spill.

Envy is thrown like a ball of Wild-fire at another's Barn; rebounds and fires thine own. The Swallow having crossed some Lands and Seas, returns next Summer to her old Chimney: the Arrow of malice shot far off, turns upon his heart, that set it flying. Bless yourselves; you know not whither you will be carried, if once you be horsed on the back of the Envious man. Forebear then this water, as thou lovest thy health, blood, life and peace.

5. The fifth Cup is Drunkenness; a Vial of the waters of Stealth: a liquid food literally taken. For that, which Ebriety sins withal, is wine and strong drink. (Vae fortibus ad potandum. Woe to them that are mighty to devour Drink; and strong to carry it away; for their habillitie encourageth their more frequent sins.) But Drunkenness, as it is a Cup of this service, is a special water of it self, at the Devils Banket. This sin is an horrible self-theft: God hath past his word against him. The Drunkard and the Glutton shall come unto poverty, and Drowsinesse shall clothe a man with rags. He that drinks more in a day, then he can earn in a week, what will his gettings come to at the years end? There is no remedy, he must shake hands with beggary, and welcome it into his company. How many (in the compass of our knowledge) have thus robbed themselves; and been worse enemies to their own estates, then the most mischievous Thieves! Thieves cannot steal Land, unless they be Westminster-hall Thieves, crafty contenders, that eat out a true title with a false evidence: but the Drunkard robs himself of his Lands: Now he dissolves an Acre, and then an Acre into the Pot; till he hath ground all his ground at the Malt-querne; and run all his Patrimony through his throat. Thus he makes himself the living tomb, of his forefathers, of his posterity: he needs not trouble his sick mind with a Will, nor distrust the fidelity of Executours; he drowns all his substance at the Ale-fat; and though he devours much, is the leaner every way. Drunkenness is regius morbus, a costly sin. It is like Gun-powder, many a man is blown up by it. He throws his house so long out at windows, till at last his house throws him out at doors. This is the Tiplers progress: from luxury to beggary; from beggary to theeuerie: from the Tavern to Tyburne, from the Alehouse to the Gallows.

6. The last Vial of these self-stolen waters, is Covetousness: a dish of drink at the Devils Banket, which more come for, then for all the rest. The covetous is a cruel Thief to himself, worse then the Devil: for the Devil would give much for a soul; how much would he give for himself? The Covetous man loves money better then his own soul? This mercenary Soldier is fit for any office in the Devils Campe. There is no sin so ugly, so hideous, but sent to the Covetous man's door in a golden visor, it shall have entertainment. This Sin is like a great Beast, which violently breaking upon God's free-hold, makes a gappe wide enough for the whole Heard to follow. Fruitur mundo, vtitur Deo. The Covetous possesseth the world, and makes use of God: but if a man cannot serve God and Mammon, he can much less serve Mammon and God: God scorns to be set after the world. He heavens himself on earth, & for a little pelf cousous himself of bliss. He steals quiet from his own bones, peace from his conscience, grace from his soul! Is not this a Thief?

How much of fame, liberty, peace, conscience is laid out to purchase gold? some for love of it would pluck down Heaven, and empty it of a Deity: others to overtake it, run quick to Hell. And they, that seek it, find it: for if a man will sell Heaven for pelf, he shall not fail of his purchase. Hence Mammon is the God of no beggars; but Merchants and Gentles, and Cormorants, and Usurers, and Chuffes. The Idols of the Heathen were silver and gold: It is but inverting the sentence. Their Idols are silver and gold, and silver and gold are our Idols.

Many a wretched Father plays the Thief with himself, and starves his own carcass, to leave wealth to his Babe. He lives on roots, that his prodigal Heir may feed on Pheasants: he keeps the Chimney corner, that his Heir may frequent Ordinaries: he drinks water, that his Heir may drink wine, and that to drunkenness. Though he be richer then Dives, he lives like an Alchemist. Miserable Fathers make wretched Sons: none often have more undone them, then they that have done most for them. They make heritages, but God makes Heirs: the children of such Churls seldom roast what their Fathers took in hunting. Now what Thief can more spoil another, then such a man doth himself? he cannot find in his heart, to put a good morsel into his belly. He dares not eat an Egg, least he should loose a Chicken. A poor Beggar is in better estate then a rich Miser: he wants many things; but this wants all things. Corpus extenuat, vt lucr̄m extendat: He wrinkles and contracts his body, that he may enlarge and replenish his purse: he pincheth his carcass, to stuff his Capcase. No marvel, if that he hear not the moans of the poor, when he is deaf to the complaints of his own belly. Whereas, he that laboreth, laboreth for himself, for his mouth craveth it of him. It is the voice not only of God's spirit, that so it should be, nor of reason only, that so it must be, but even of nature, that so it is; unless in such unreasonable beasts as the Covetous; or rather (worse then beasts, for they serve the necessity of nature) unnatural wretches: Dressing, like Cooks, much good meat, and not vouchsafing to lick their own fingers. There is an evil, saith Solomon, under the Sun; and such an evil, that the Sun can scarce see a worse: A man, to whom God hath given riches, and that so abundantly, that he wanteth nothing of all that his soul can desire, yet God giveth him not the power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it. Thi• is vanity and an evil disease. A Disease it is, and fitly called the Dropsy.

Thus the Covetous man pines in plenty, like Tantalus, up to the chin in water, yet thirsty. He that hath no power to take part of God's blessings, which he keepeth, plays the Thief finely, and robs himself. His extortion hath erst stolen from others; and now he plays rob-thief, and steals from himself. They say, the rule of charity should be fetched from home. He that is miserable to himself, will never be liberal to others; he that pines himself, God bless me from begging at his door. It is miserable living at this man's finding: for like a Chemist, he turns everything into silver, what he should wear, and what he should eat; and so robs both back and belly of warmth, of sustenance. All, to conjure a little money into the circle of his Purse; which he will do, though he fetch Spels from the Devil to do it: yet keeps it only to look on, not to use. Nemini bonus, sibi pessimus. As he is good to none, so (let it be his plague) he is worst to himself. He is ever in debt to his belly: the purest metal is for his Coffers; the coarsest meat is good enough for his stomach. He doth so cross the vanity of Pride, which esteemeth the dearest things the best; that he thinks nothing sweet, but what is cheap. If ever he satisfy his complaining stomach with a good morsel, it shall be from his neighbors Trencher.

He hath not so much idle time, as to sleep; but either he dreameth of his gold, or riseth to see if the doors be fast. So Claudian (amongst others) describes the Covetous dream. Et vigil elapsas quaerit auarus opes. He seeks that in his sleep, which he could not find waking. The Covetous give better ear to the Priests of Ianus, then to the Apostles of Jesus: Quaerenda pecunia primùm est: First se•ke money, hath thrust out (Querite primùm regnum Dei) First seek the Kingdom of God. They will hear us willingly, if our Text be Commodity, and our Sermon Policy. A Bill, that contains the sale of a Lordship, or the news of a Morgage, or the offer of good security for ten in the hundred, is more heeded, then a book on the Stationers shop, with the way to heaven, for the Title. Neither let us (as is said) judge him only to drink of this water, that extorts from others; but even him that pincheth himself. So S. August. Non solùm auaru• est qui rapit alienae, sed qui cupide seruat suae. He is not only covetous, that raketh from others, but he also that taketh from himself. The niggards looks to his entering guests, is like Diana's Image in Chios, which frowned with a lowering countenance on all that came into the Temple, but looked blithe, and smiled on them that departed. This is he that thinks there are no such Angels as his golden ones; no such Paradise as in his Counting-house. He cares not to run quick to the Devil of an errand, so gain sends him, & pays him for his pains. He hath a short conscience, and a large damnation. He is a special guest at the Devils board; and never misseth his Ordinary, which he affects the more, because he pays nothing.

The more he devours, the hungrier he is: a full supper of profit, gives him the more eager appetite to his morrows breakfast. All he eats, is like Physic to him; he looks thinner after it. He takes great pains to go to hell: whither since he will go, he might do it with more ease. He hath no heaven, neither present nor future; and having sold bliss for riches, as Aesop's Dog did the flesh for the shadow, behold, he looseth both. Other sinners for their damnation, have somewhat, which they call delightful: the Covetous man buys hell with hell; eternal, with present anguish. Thus he robs himself of all content; and when all is done, he's a man undone, and pierced through with many sorrows.

We have now ended the service of the waters; with the 1. Praescription of their Beings, Waters: and 2. The description of their natures• stolen. The Vices, which under this smooth name the Devil tempts his guests to surfeit on, are to your hearing odious: I will step no further to fetch in application, then from the word, Stollen.

All stolen things are accountable for; the law of all Nations hath provided, that (cui{que} suum) every man may enjoy his own. God is a just Judge, a retributor of every man his own. No thief can scape 1. The apprehension of his Pursuiuant•. 2. The apparance to his Sessions. 3. The penalty of his sentence. He hath appointed a general Assizes, a day, wherein he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man, whom he hath ordained, &c. To which there is a necessity of appearance. For we must all appear before the Judgment seat of Christ, that everyone may receive the things done in his body, &c. At which time (an account is not avoidable) God shall bring every work into Judgment, with every secret thing, whither it be good or evil. What then will be the success of these stolen waters? We carry out our robberies now without question; we invade our brethren, we evade the Law: But behold, at Euening-tide trouble, & before the Morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us.

Felony is the Inditement, a rebellion against our Sovereigns Crown and Dignity. Ambitious theefes in the Court, Simoniactal thieves in the Church, hollow-hearted thieves in the City, oppressing and men-eating thieves in the Country: all must be summoned, their debts summed, their doom sentenced. The impartial conscience from the book of their lives, shall give in clear evidence. There is no retaining of Counsel: no bribing for a partial censure: no trick of demure: no putting off and suspending the sentence: no euading the doom. The cursed generation of thefts are now easily borne, and borne out. Subtlety can give them the help of a conveyance, and money purchase a connivance. But then alas! what shall become of them, and of many souls for them? what shall become all the Traitours, gory Murderers, impudent Atheists, secret Church-robbers, speckled Adulterers, rusty Sluggards, nasty drunkards, and all the defiled wretches that have sucked damnation from the breasts of black Iniquity. An impenetrable Judge, an impleadable Inditement, an intolerable anguish shall ceaze upon them. Mountains of Sand were lighter, and millions of years shorter then their torments.

Oh think, think of this, ye Sons of rapine, that with greediness devour these stolen waters. You cannot rob God of his glory, man of his comforts, yourselves of your happiness, but God, Man, your own Souls shall cry against you. What thunder can now beat into you a fear of that, which then no power shall ease you of? why strive we not, Nineveh-like, to make the message of our overthrow, the overthrow of the message? and so work, that according to Samson's Riddle, the Destroyer may save us? Wherefore are we warned, but that we might be armed? and made acquainted with Hell in the speculation, but that we may prevent the horror of it in passion? Let me tell you, ye thieves, that sit at Satan's board; there is a thief shall steal on you, steal all from you, The day of the Lord will come as a Thief in the Night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, &c. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , a Thief, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , to take away privily, or by stealth: or, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , of hiding or covering. Fur a furuo, quia in obscuro venit. A thief as well for stealing on us, as for stealing from us. He comes in the dark, when nobody sees, treads on wool, that nobody hears, watcheth an hour that nobody knows.

This Thief shall steal on you, perhaps Banketting at this Feast of Vanity: as the Flood came on the old World, whiles they ate and drank, and were merry. Watch therefore, for you know not what hour your Lord doth come. So Chrysostom on that place, from our Saviors comparison of the good man of the house: non laederetur ill furto, si sciret venturum: vos scitis, paratiores esse debetis. The thief should not hurt him, if he knew of his coming: you know he will come, prepare for his welcome. We are all householders; our bodies are our houses; our souls our goods; our senses are the Doors and Windows, the Lockes are Faith and Prayer. The day of our doom will come as a thief; let our Repentance watch, let it never sleep, lest we perish. Si praescirent homines, quando morituri sint, deligentiam super cam rem ostenderent. If men foreknew the time of their death▪ they would show carefulness in their preparation; how much more being ignorant? But alas! Ignorance covenants with death: and security puts far away the evil day, and causeth the seat of violence to come near. When the Prophets of our Israel threaten Judgments, you flatter yourselves with the remoteness. The vision that he seeth, is for many days to come, and he prophecyeth of the times that are far off. As if it concerned you not what ruin laid waste the Land, so peace might be in your days. (But there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.) our Rose-buds are not withered, our dances are not done: sleep Conscience, lie still Repentance. Thus with the sentence of death instant, and in a prison of bondage to Satan present, saith S. Augustine, Maximo gaudio debacchamur: we are drunken, we are frantic with pleasures. There may be other, there can be no greater madness.

Loe, the success of these stolen waters. You hear their nature: time hath prevented their sweetness. God of his mercy, that hath given us his Word to inform our Judgment, vouchsafe by his Spirit to reform our consciences, that we may conform our lives to his holy precepts. For this let us pray. &c.

What here is good, to God ascribed be,

What is infirm, belongs of right to me.

DIANA BOWLES: saving Health.

THat I have clothed this SERMON in the Livery of your Patronages, I might give many reasons to satisfy others. But this one, to me, is instead of all, that you affect the Gospel: Not with the sudden flashes of some ouerhote dispositions, but with mature Discretion, and sound Obedience. I could not therefore suffer any thought of mine own unworthiness, to dissuade me from presenting this poor labor to your hands; who have so <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> favorably accepted my weaker services. I owe you both a treble debt, of Love, of Service, of Thankfulness. The former, the more I pay, the more still I owe. The second, I will be ready to pay, to the uttermost of my power; though short both of your deserts, and my own desires. Of the last, I will strive to give full payment, and in that (if it be possible) to come out of your debts. Of all these, in this small Volumne, I have given you the earnest. As you would therefore, do with an ill debtor, take it till more comes. It shall be the more curreant, if you will set thereon the seals of your acceptance. It is the latter end of a Feast: yet it may, perhaps, afford you some Christian delicate, to content your well affected spirits. It shall let you see the last service of Sins Banket; the harsh and unpleasant closure of vanity; the madness of this doting Age; the formal dislike and real love of many to this World, the evil works of some critical, others hypocritical dispositions, the ending, conclusion, and beginning confusion of the Devils Guests. The more perfectly you shall hate sin; the more constantly you shall hold your erst embraced virtues. And so in happy time work out your own salvations. God give a successful blessing to your Christian Indeuours: which shall ever be faithfully prayed for, by

Your Worships affectionately devoted THOMAS ADAMS.

THE Breaking up of the Devils Banket. The third Sermon.

PROVERB. 9.17.

Stollen waters are sweet, and Bread eaten in secret is pleasant.

THE custom of sin hath so benumbed the sense of it; and the delighted affections brought the conscience so fast a sleep in it; that he troubles Israel, who would waken Israel: and his speech is harsh Barbarism, that speaks against the Devils Diana; the Idol of Vice, which many worship. Our understandings think well of Heaven, but our affections think better of Earth. Alexander after his great Conquests, wrote to the Graecian Senate, Vt se deum facerent, that they would accept him into the number of their God's. With a resolute consent, they denied it. At last a (right) Politician stood up, and told them, that (videndum est, ne dum coelum nimis custodirent, terram amitterent) they should look well to it; least whiles they were so religious for heaven, they lost their part of earth. Hence they made (though but a perfunctory and fashionable) decree. Quoniam Alexander Deus esse vult, Deus esto. Since Alexander will be a God, let him be one. God commends to us his •eauenly graces; Satan his lying vanities. Our Judgments must needs give assent to God. But because his precepts go against the grain of our affections; and the Deu•ll tells us, that curiosity for the uncertain joy• of heaven, will lose us the certain pleasures of earth: we settle upon the Graecian resolution, (though more seriously:) not to be so troubled for our souls, as to lose a moment of our carnal delights. This is the D••ls a•sertion, in calling stolen waters Sweet• t•• truth whereof I am •old (though a little I disquiet y•u• lu••) to examine. You have heard the prescription, Waters: the description, Stollen.

The Ascription of the quality (in itself•) or effect (to others) of these •aters, if we may believe•Temptation, is Sweet. Stollen waters are Sweet. It is the speech of the Father of •ies, and therefore to carry little credit with us. Sweet? to none but those that are Lust-sick; like them •hat are troubled with the green-sickness; that think Chalke, and Salt, and Rubbish, savory.

It is a strangely-affected soul, that can find Sweetness in sin. Sin is the depravation of goodness: the same that rottenness in the Apple, sourness in the Wine, putrefaction in the flesh, is sin in the conscience. Can that be sweet which is the depraving and depriving of all sweetness? Let any subtlety of the Devil declare this riddle. The prae-existent privations were deformity, confusion, darkness. The position of their opposite perfections, was the expulsion of those foul contraries. Sin comes like bleak and squalid Winter, and drives out these fair beauties: turns the Sun-shine to blackness; calmness to tempests; ripeness to corruption; health to sickness; sweetness to bitterness.

They desperately thrust themselves on the pikes of that threatened woe: Esa. 5. that dare say of bitter, it is sweet; and consent to the Devil in the pleasantness of his cheare; when the impartial conscience knows it is Gall and Wormwood. Yet such is the strong Inchantment, whereby Satan hath wrought on their affections, that bloodiness, lust, perjury, oppression, malice, pride, carry with these Guests an opinion of sweetness. If froathie and reeling Drunkenness, lean and raking Covetousness, meager and blood-wasted Envy, keen and rankling Slander, nastie and ill-shapen Idleness, smooth and fair-spoken Flattery, be comely? what is deformed; If these be sweet, there is no bitterness. But though the Devil be not an Angel of light, yet he would be like one. Though he never speaks Truth, yet he would often speak the color of Truth. Therefore let us observe, what fallaces and deceitful arguments he can produce, to make good this attribute; and put the probability of sweetness into his stolen waters. For the Devil would not be thought a Dunce; too weak to hold a Position, though it be never so absurd. Stollen waters, Iniquities are sweet to the wicked in three respects. 1. Because they are stolen. 2. Because they are cheap. 3. Because they give delight, and persuaded content to the flesh.

Wines would be less set by, if our own lands were full of Vineyards: Those things that Nature hath hedged from us, we long and languish for; when Manna it self, because it lies at our doors, is loathed. Virtutem praesentem fere in nostris odimus; Sublatam ex oculis procul quaerimus invidi. The more spreading good things are, the more thought vile: and (though against that old and true rule) the community shall detract from the commodity. It is the perverseness of our natures, till sanctification hath put a new nature into us, that God's yoke is too heavy for our shoulders: we cannot draw in the geeres of obedience. We can travel a whole day after our dogs; but if authority should charge us to measure so many miles, how often would we complain of weariness? The Bird can sit out the day-measuring Sun, see his rise and fall without irksomnesse, whiles she is hatching her Egges; if her nest were a Cage, with what impatience would she lament so long a bondage! So the Usurer, though he began his first bag with the first hour, and pulls not off his hands or his eyes, till the eye of Heaven is ashamed of it, and denies further light, he is not weary: let him sit at Church two hours, the seat is uneasy, his bones ache, either a Cushion to fall a sleep with, or he will be gone. That Christ may justly and fitly continue that his reproof upon such: Can ye not watch with me one hour?

Thus the Commaund makes things burdensome, and Prohibition desirable. The wicked would not so eagerly catch at vanities, if God had not said, nolit tangere, touch them not. Rapine, Lust, Ebriety, Sacrilege would sit idle for want of customers, if God's interdiction had not set a ne ingrediatis, on their doors. Enter not. Rome, (I know not how truly) brags, (and let her boast her sin) that she hath the fewer Adulterers, because she sets up the Stews. It is reported, that Italy did never more abound with Students, then when Julian had shut up the School-doors, and turned Learning into exile. He had fellows in that Empire of so contrary dispositions; that some restrained all things, some forbad nothing; and so made their times either tyrannous or licentious: insomuch that it was a busy question in those times; whether of those Emperors were worse; one, that would let every man do as he list; and the other, that would suffer no man to do as he would. It is observed of the Jews, that whiles the Oracles of heaven were open, and Religion leaned on the shoulders of peace, they fell frequently to Idolatry: but with the Babylonian bridle in their mouths, they eagerly pursue it: their persecution for it, increased their prosecution of it. So the blood of Martyrs seeds the Church; as if from their dead ashes sprung (Phoenix-like) many professors.

If trodden Virtue grow so fast, like Camomile? how then doth restrained Vice thrive? sure this Hydra rather multiplies his heads, by the blows of reproof. Sure it is, that ex malis moribus oriuntur plurimae leges. If men were not prone to infinite sins, a more sparing number of laws would serve our turns. And the more dangerous the law hath made the passage of Injustice, the more frequently, fervently they love to sails after it. What they quake to suffer, they tickle to do; as if their Itch could not be cured till the Law scratch them: so perverse is their disposition, that only coaction must force them to good, only correction bind them from evil. Now, as it is shame, that necessity should draw us to that, whereunto our own good should lead us: so it is past shame to war for that, which God hath charged us to ware of. Malum est agere quod prohibetur, sed agere quia prohibetur, pessimum. He that doth that which is forbidden, is evil, he that doth it because it is forbidden, Devil. But as the honest man, that hath somewhat to take to, is in most care to come out of debt; so he that hath neither honesty nor lands, takes care only to come into debt, and to be trusted.

Thus we all long for restrained things, and doate on difficulties; but look with an overly scorn; and winking neglect on granted faculties. Pharaoh is sick of God's plague: the peaceable dismissal of Israel will cure him: he sees his medicine: no, he will be sicker yet; Israel shall not go. Oh, that these, who wrestle with God; would think that the more fiercely and firily they assault him, they are sure of the sorer fall. The harder the earthen vessel rusheth upon the Brasen the more it is shiuered in pieces. But nothing doth give the ungodly such content, as that they dangerously pull out of the jaws of difficulty. No Flowers have so good a smell as the Stollen: no repast so savory as the cates of Theft.

Quae venit ex tuto, minus est accepta voluptas.

Facilitie and liberty only takes off the edge of Lust; and what God doth restrain, man will not refrain. The Adulterer cares not for the chaste society of a fair and loving wife; but the lusts of uncleanness, which he steals with hazard, from another's bed, are sweet in his opinion. Ahab's whole kingdom is despised in his thoughts, whiles •e is sick of Nabaoths Vineyard. Hear Esau, What is my Birth-right to me, when I cannot taste of those red pottage? Oh the crossenesse of our refractory dispositions, that are therefore the more earnestly set upon the pro, because God hath more clearly charged them with the contra: as if our natural course was Crab-like to go backward; and our delight was to be a second cross to CHRIST, whereby though we cannot crucify his Flesh, yet we oppose and oppugn his Spirit: as if Cynically we affected snarling, or like the Giants, would try our strengths with God.

Thus we have examined the Devils reason, and find the natures of the wicked actually disputing for the truth of his assertion; and so, interdicta placent, the waters of sin seem sweet, and are more greedily swallowed, because they are stolen. The Prince of the air so rules in the hearts of the children of disobedience, that their appetites only covet prohibited meats; and their affections languish after discharged obiectes. But your turning of things up-side down, shall be esteemed as the Potters clay. And, those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me. GOD hath a hook for Sennacherib, a curb for Saul, a bridle for these Horses and Mules: the highest mover ouerrules the swift motion of these inferior Sphaeres, that they cannot fire the world: but as they delight to make other men's possessions theirs by stealth; so they shall one day be glad, if they could put off, that is theirs upon other men; and shift away the torments that shall forever stick on their flesh and spirits.

2 The second argument of their sweetness, is their cheapness. The sins of stealth please the wicked, because they are cheap: what a man gets by robbery, comes without cost. The ungodly would spare their purse, though they lay out of their conscience. Parcatur sumptui. Favor their temporal estates, though their eternal pay for it. Judas had rather lose his soul, then his purse: and for thirty siluerlings, he sels his Master to the Pharisees, himself to the Devil. Yet when all is done, he might put his gains in his eye. It is but their conceit of the cheapness; they pay dear for it in the upshot. The Devil is no such frank Chapman to sell his Wares for nothing. He would not proffer Christ the kingdoms without a price, he must be worshipped for them. The guests carry not a draught from his table, but they must make courtesy to him for it. His worship must be thanked at least: nay, thanks will not serve, affected, obeyed, honored. He is proud still, and stands upon it, beyond measure, to be worshipped. He will part with an ounce of vanity, for a dram of worship: but the worshipper had better part with a talent of gold.

The Devil indeed keeps open house; noctes at{que} dies, &c. He makes the world believe that he sells Robin-Hoods penny worths; that he hath manum expansam, a prodigal hand, and gives all gratis: but vijs & modis, he is paid for it; and such a price, that the whole world comes short of the value. Only he is content to give day, and to forbear till death: but then he claps up his debtors into everlasting imprisonment, and lays an heavy execution on them; that eve the Spanish Inquisition comes short of it. Thus as the King of Sodom said to Abraham, Da mihi animas, Give me the souls, take the rest to thyself. The Prince of darkness is content, that thou shouldst have riches and pleasures cheap enough; only give him thy soul, and he is satisfied. The Devil would have changed his Arithmetic with Job, and rather have given addition of wealth, then subtraction, if he could have so wrought him to blaspheme God.

Satan seems marvelous frank and kind at first: Munera magna quidem praebebet, sed praebebet in hamo. They are beneficia viscata, ensnaring mercies. As the Tree is the Birds refuge when she flies from the snare; and loe, there she finds Bird-lime, that tears off her flesh and feathers. Conuiuia, quae putes, insidiae sunt. They are baits, which thou takest for bankets. The poor man is going to prison for a small debt: the Usurer lends him money, and rescues him: two or thee winters after, his fit comes again, and by how much an Usurer is sharper then a mere Creditor, he is shaken with the worse Ague: that kindness plungeth him into a deeper bondage: the first was but a thredden snare, which he might break, but this is an infrangible chain of iron. Men are in want, and necessity is (durum telum) a heavy burden: the Devil promiseth supply. Behold, the drunkard shall have Wine, the thief opportunity; the malious revenge; if they be hungry, he hath a Banket ready: but, as I have seen Emperickes give sudden ease to a desperate & inveterate grief, yet either with danger of life, or more violent revocation of the sickness; so their misery ere long is doubled: and that which was but a stitch in the side, is now a shrewd pain in the heart. The Stag and the Horse (saith the Fiction) were at variance: the Horse, being too weak desires Man to help him: Man gets on the Horses back, and chaseth the Stag, Vs{que} ad fugam, us{que} ad mortem, to flight, to death. Thus the Horse gets the victory; but is at once victor & victus, Captain and captive: for after that he could never free his mouth from the bit, his back from the Saddle. Non equitem dorso, non fraenum depulit ore. Man is beset with exigence: he wails his weakness: the Devil steps in with promises of succor. Judas is made rich, Gehesi gets change of suites: Nero is crowned Emperor, but withal he gets possession of their affections, whence all the power of man cannot vntenant him. Thus the last slavery is worse then the first, and the cheare is not so cheap at sitting down, as it is dear at rising up.

This is the Devils cheapness: no, every good and perfect gift is from above. The Devil gives nothing, but God gives to all, 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉, richly, or abundantly, so that when he gives, he takes nothing back: for the gifts of the spirit are 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉, without repentance. Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters of life, and he that hath no money, &c. God hath waters, no stolen water, but waters of freedom; and other blessings (if ye love liquid things) o• an answerable nature, greater virtue; and those, whereof he is a true proprietarie. *Wine and Milk: Milk to nourish, Wine to cherish the heart of man: buy them without money, let not your poverty keep you back: here is cheapness, if you have a saving desire: come freely and take your fills: The Gospel is preached to the poor. Think not to buy the graces of God with money: lest you and your money perish. Only take your time, and come whiles God is a giving: for there is a time when the door of bounty is shut. Though he stretch forth his hand of mercy all the day; yet the night comes when he draws it back again. They that answer him, proffering grace, as Daniel to Belshazzar, Keep thy rewards to thyself, and give thy gifts to another; may knock at his gates, and be turned away empty. Now, spare to speak, and spare to speed. Then, though you cry unto me, I will not hear: To day, then, harden not your hearts. Pray unto him, and he will give good things to them that ask him. He doth not sell, but give; not the shadows, but the substances of goodness. The conclusion then is clear, blessings and graces are truly cheap, And no good thing will God withhold from them that walk uprightly: All things shall work to their good, that are good. The Devil gives nothing, but sels all for price; neither are they good things he selleth; but figuras boni, the mere forms & counterfeits of goodness.*

But if the cheapness of sin so affect men, what mean they to run to Rome for it? where I do not say only, that sin and damnation hath a shrewd price set upon them, but even bliss and comfort: and no Pilgrim can get the least salve-plaster to heal his wounded Conscience, but at an vnreasonable reckoning. But soft! it is objected, that Rome is still baited in our Sermons; and when we seek up and down for matter, as Saul for his Asses, we light upon the Pope still. I answer, that I can often pass by his door and not call in: but if he meets me full in the face, and affronts me, (for good manners sake) non praetereo insalutatum, I must change a word with him.

The Pope is a great Seller of these Stollen waters: (yet his Chapmen think them cheap.) He thrusts his Spear into the Mountains, and sluceth out whole floods: as it is fabled of Aeolus. He usurps that of God, that he can spanne the waters in his fist: that he hath all the graces of God in his own power; and no water can pass besides his Mill: as if he could call for the waters of the Sea, and pour them out upon the face of the Earth: or as Job speaketh of Behemoth: Behold, he drinketh up a River and hasteth not: and trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth. As if all the graces of God were packed up in a bundle, or shut into a box, and the Pope only was put in trust to keep the Key; and had authority to give and deny them. So Aeolus the God of Winds (saith the Poet) gave Vlisses a Maile, wherein all the Winds were bound and wrapped up together; except the Western wind, which he must needs occupy to carry himself home. The Pope brags, that all waters are banked up into his fountain, and none can drink but by his leave; except the Supremacy & perfect Sanctitie: which is the Wind and the Water, he must use himself, thereby to sails to Heaven: (a Haven that few Popes arrive at:) but otherwise there is no grace to be had, but from the mother-Church of Rome, whose vncontrollable head is the Pope. A miserable Engrosser, that would shut up all goodness into his own Ware-house. Yet when he lists, he will undertake to pour floods on the solid ground; and make Rivers run in dry places.

He hath a huge Pond of Purgatory, whereout whole millions drink, and are pleased. But as Darius pursued, drunk puddle-water, and said, it was the best drink that ever he tasted. So it is the menaced terror, and the false alarms, that the Jesuits ring in Ignorances ear, that makes men drink so greedily at the Popes Puddle-wharfe. He is a great Land-lord of these stolen waters. He sits upon many waters. Some he steals from the Jews, some from the Turks, some from the Pagans, much from Idolatry, all from Heresy. That (as John de Rupe scissa in a popular Sermon) if every Bird should fetch her own feathers, you should have a naked Pope. Let every River challenge her own waters, you will have a dry Rome: But now his waters spread over the face of the Earth: neither are they cheap, believe but a Bird of their own Cage.

Temples and Priests are Marchandiz'd for pelf,

Altars, Pray'rs, Crowns; nay, Heaven and God himself.

Vendit Alexander Cruces, Altaria, Christum,

Vendere iure potest: emerat ill prius.

Rome's Sea is sold, to quench the Popes mad thirst.

Well might he sell it: for he bought it first.

But is the Shop never opened, but to the mart of so good Commodities? yes, if their Penance-Parlour wa• opened, you might find a rate for Stollen waters: Pardon for offenses committed: nay, Indulgences for future sins, which but for an impregnable toleration might not be done. And let the traffiquers speak from their own feeling how cheap they are. They have a pecuniary patronage, and are warranted from the Popes Exchequer, rather than his Chancery. Even that corrupt Justice gives such sins no connivance, but when the dusts of bribery have shut his eyelids. It is their carefulness, Quod huiusmodi dispensationes non concedantur pauperibus. That such dispensations be not granted to the poor.

If this doctrine were true, it was time to raze Christ's speech out of the Scriptures: It is hard for a rich man to enter into Heaven: for it is easy for the rich, that can open the gate with a golden Key, and the poor are only in danger of exclusion. And, that which would be most strange, Hell should be peopled with none but Beggars: Not an Usurer, not an Epicure, not a Cormorant, not a vicious Potentate should grace the Court of Satan. For the Pope will for Money seal them a Passport for Heaven. Nay, how doth this disgrace Purgatory! when none but beggarly wretches shall be in danger of drowning in that whirlpool. Whence all their friends (being equally poor) have not money enough for their redemption. These are the rotten post• whereon the Fabric of Rome stands. Think not their sto•len waters cheap. Your purses must pay for them. Yet happy were you, if no higher price was set on them. All is not discharged with your ready m•ny; there is another reckoning: your souls mus• pay for the•. The Devil tyes his Customers in the bond of Debets; and woe to them, that are too far in his books: for if Christ cancel not his hand-writing against them, he will sue them to an eternal Outlawrie; and make them pay their souls, for that they boasted they had so good cheap.

3. The third argument of these waters sweetness, is derived from our corrupt affections. Sin pleaseth the Flesh? Omne simile nutrit simile. Corruption inherent is nourished by the accession of corrupt actions. Judas Covetousness is sweetened with unjust gain. Joab is heartened, and hardened with blood. Theft is fitted to, and fatted in the thievish heart with obuious booties. Pri•e is fed with the officious complements of observant Groomes. Extortion battens in the Usurers affections by the trolling in of his monies. Sacrilege thrives in the Church-robber, by the pleasing distinctions of those Sycophant-Priests; and helped with their (•ot laborious) profit. Nature is led, is fed with Sense. And when the Citadel of the heart is once won, the Turret of the understanding will not long hold out. As the suffumigations of the oppressed stomach, surge up and cause the headache: or as the thick spumy mists, which vapor up from the danke and foggy earth, do often suffocate the brighter air, and to us (more then eclipse) the Sun. The black and corrupt affections, which ascend out of the nether part of the soul, do no less darken and choke the understanding. Neither can the fire of grace be kept alive at God's Altar, (man's heart,) when the clouds of Lust shall rain down such showers of Impiety on it. Perit omne Iudicium, cùm res transit ad affectum. Farewell the perspicuitie of Judgment, when the matter is put to the partiality of affection.

Let then the taste be Judge at this Feast, and not the stomach, Lust and not Conscience; and the Cates have unquestionable sweetness. He is easily credited, that speaks what we would have him. Go up to Ramoth Gilead and prosper, was pleasing Music in Ahab's ear. Ye shall not die, though you eat, delighted Eve. The Sirens Song is more esteemed, then the Oracle of Pallas; because it is sung to lustful, not wise Auditors. The strange distinctions, which they give in these days, that (claw the Devil) flatter an Usurer for gain, are believed, before the Sermons, of the Sons of the Prophets, of the Son of God. Let a factious Novelist maintain the justness of Impropriations at the Church-wrongers Table for a meal; his talk is held arguments, when the Scripture-arguments are held but talk. As Micah speaks of the Prophets, that would preach for Drunkenness. So these sell their conscience for countenance; and feed men's humors, whiles they have an humor to feed them. Quod nimis miseri volunt, hoc facile credunt. Though they be Prophets for profits, yet they are readily believed. So easily the brain drinks the poison, which the affection ministers. It is not then strange, if these Cates be sweet, when concupiscence tastes them. Pascitur libido conuiuijs, nutritur delicijs, vino accenditur, ebrietate slammatur. Lust is fed with Bankets, nourished with delights, kindled with Wine, set on fire and flame with Drunkenness.

What could make the Religion of Rome so sweet and welcome to many, but the congruence and pleasingnesse to their nature? Whiles Nature finds ascribed to her self freedom of will, validity of merits, the Latitude of an ignorant and cursorie faith, she runs mad of conceit. That Indulgences for all sins may be derived from that open Exchequer; that if a man wants not money, he needs not loose heaven; that the bare Act of the Sacrament confers grace without faith; and the mere transient sign of the Cross, whoever makes it, can keep off the Devil. Oh Religion sweet to Nature. Nay (to speak nearer to our district instance.) Lust not only affectual, but actual, is dispensed with. Priests are licensed their Concubines, though inhibited Wives. Adultery is reckoned among their petty sins. I have read it quoted out of Pope Innocentius the third, of their Priests. Mane filium virginis offerunt in choro: Nocte filium veneris agitant in thoro. The Priests do not engross all the Market of venerie to themselves, (yet they do prettily well, for their allowance. One Benefice with one Wife is unlawful, but two Benefices and three Whores are tolerable.) But the Stews, like the common Bath, is afforded to the Laity; and if their States will maintain it, a private supply besides. Vrbs est iam tota Lupanar. The whole City is become a mere Stews. As the Prophet Isaiah said once of Jerusalem; so we may say of Rome: The holy City is become an Harlot. Full of Harlots they will not stick to yield, and so full of Adulterers. Nay, the City it self is an Harlot, and hath left her first love. She committes Idolatriy, (which is the vilest Adultery) with Stockes and Stones.

Thus Nature drinks pleasant waters, but they are stolen. Lust encroacheth upon the Law: and Concupiscencies gain is God's loss. Some of them, saith Bishop Jewel, have written in defense of filthiness. What black Vice shall want some Patronage? But causa patrocinio non bona, peior erit. Powerful arguments, no doubt: yet powerful enough to overcome the yielding spirit. Strong affection gives credit to weak reasons. A small temptation serves to his perversion, that tempts himself; and would be glad of a cloak to hide his leprosy, though he steal it. How can it then be denied, that sins are sweet, whiles Lust doth take, taste, censure them?

The Devils Banket is not yet done; there is more cheare a coming. The Water-service is ended: now begin Cates of another nature; or, if you will, of another form, but the nature is all one. Norma et forma manet. The same Method of Service, the same manner of Iunkets. It may be distinguished (as the former.)

- Into a prescription, de quo. Bread,
- Into a description, de quanto. Bread of Secrecies.
- Into an ascription. de quali. Bread of pleasure.

Bread hath a large extent in the Scriptures. Vult sufficientiam vitae et praesentis et futurae. Under it, is contained a sufficiency of food and nourishment. 1. For the body. 2. For the soul. Therefore some would derive the Latin word, Panem, from the Greek word, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and so make it a general and comprehensie word; to signify, omne quod nobis necessarium▪ all things needful, whither to corporal or animal sustenance.

1. Corporal: the fourth petition in that absolute Prayer, lessoned to us by our Master, implies so much: Give us this day our daily Bread. Where saith S. Augustine: Omnem necessariam corporis exhibitionem petimus: We beg all necessary sustentation to our temporal life. So, in sudore vultus vesceris pane tuo: All thy repast shall be derived from thy travel. Set Bread before them, saith Elisha to the King of Israel: And he made great provision for them. Job's kindred dideat Bread, that is, feasted with him? He that ate of my Bread▪ saith David, or did feed on the delicacies of my Palace.

2. For the soul. I am the living Bread, that came down from heaven: if any man eat of this Bread, he shall live forever. It is not straitened of this sense. Matth. 15. It is not meet to take the children's Bread, and to throw it to dogs. Christ and all his benefits are shadowed forth by Bread. The loss of the Word, is called by the Prophet, a Famine, or loss of Bread.

Bread then implies multitudinem salutem, magnitudinem solaminum, plenitudinem omnium bonorum: Much health, great comforts, fullness of all requisite good things. And what? Will Satan brag that he can give all these? and that his Bread, intensiue, is so virtual in its own nature: and extensiue, that it shall afford so much strength of comfort, validity of nutriment; and never fail the collation of health to his guests? This is in him an hyperbolical, and almost an hyperdiabolical impudence; to make the bread of sin, equal with the Bread of life: and to ascribe unto it potentiam virtutis, and virtutem dulcedinis; that it is Bread, and sweet bread, nourishing and well-tasted. As Ceres must be taken and worshipped for the Goddess of Corn, and Bacchus for the God of Wine; when they were (at the utmost) but the first Inuenters of grinding the one, and pressing the other: for God is the God of both fields and Vineyards. So the Devil would seem owner of Bread and Water, when God only is Lord of Sea and Land; that made and blesseth the Corn and the Rivers. His Power containeth all, and his Providence continueth all that is good unto us.

Observe, how the Devil is God's Ape, and strives to match and parallel him, both in his words and wonders. He follows him, but (not passibus aequis) with unequal steps. If Christ have his waters of life at the Lambes wedding Feast; the Devil will have his waters too at Lusts Banket. If the highest give his thunder, hailestones, and coals of fire, (as to Elias sacrifice:) the red Dragon doth the like: He maketh fire to come down from heaven, in the sight of men. If Moses turn his rod to a Serpent, the Sorcerers do the like: but yet they fall short, for Moses rod devoured all theirs. Must Abraham sacrifice his Son to the God of Heaven? Agamemnon must sacrifice his daughter to the Prince of Darkness. A Ram redeemes Ishaac, a Hind Iphigenia. For Jehovah's Temple at Jerusalem, there is great Diana's at Ephesus. It is said of the Son of God, that he shall give sight to the blind; and heal the sicknesses of the people; The Son of Jupiter, Aesculapius shall have the like report. Ovid and Hesiod have their Chaos, in imitation of sacred Moses: Noah's deluge shall be quitted with Deucalions. For our Noah, they have a Ianus; for our Sampson, a Hercules; for our Babel-builders, they that lay Pelion upon Ossa, Giants. If Lots Wife be turned to a Pillar; loe, Niohe is metamorphosed to a stone. Let God historifie his Jonah, Herodotus will say more of Arion. Of which S. Augustine well: We may suspect, the Greek tale of the one, means the Hebrew truth of the other. Thus, if Christ at his Table offer to his Saints, his own body for bread, blood for wine, in a mystical sort: The Devil will proffer some such thing to his guests, Bread and Waters; Waters of Stealth, Bread of Secrecie. He is loath to give God the better: he would not do it in heaven, and therefore turned out: and do you think, he will yet yield it? no, in spite of God's water of Crystal, peace and glory; he will have his waters of Acheron, guilt and vanity. But by Satan's leave, there is a Bread, that nourisheth not. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not Bread? and your labor for that, which satisfieth not? It (seems but) is not bread: and (if it be, yet) it satisfieth not. Say it could, yet man lives not by bread only; but by the word and blessing of God. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, all the delicates, that Sin can afford us, are but 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the bane of the soul. Pabula peccati, pocula lethi.

〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 properly signifies ( 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 :) All meat prepared with fire. There is no cheare at this Banquet dressed without fire; either present of Lust, or future of torment.

Now since the Devil will put the form of Bread upon his tempting wickedness; let us examine what kind of bread it is.

1. The seed is corruption; an unclean seed. No other then the tares, which the Enemy sew: God sew good Corn, but whence are the tares? The seed whereof this bread is made, is not Wheat or good Corn; but Cockle, Darnell, Tares; Dissention, Rebellion, Lies, Vanities. The Devil is herein a Seedes-man, but he sows corrupt seed; that infects and poisons the heart, which receives it.

2. The heat of the Sun, influence of the Air, sap and moisture of the Ground, that ripens this seed, are Temptations: The seed once sown in the apt ground of our carnal affections, is by the heat of Satan's motion soon wrought to ripeness. So that it is matured suggerendo, imprimendo, tentando: suggestion, impression, temptation hasten the seed (to grass, to a blade, to spindling, to a perfect ear:) to growth in the heart: and all suddenly, for an ill weed grows apace. Rather then it shall dwindle and be stunted, he will crush the clouds of hell, and rain the showers of his malediction upon it. Before he sows, here he waters.

3. The seed thus ripend is soon cut down, by the Sickle of his subtlety; whose policy to preserve his state Florentine, is beyond Machiauels. His speed is no less; else he could not so soon put a Girdle about the loins of the earth. But what policy can there be in shortening the growth of sin? this trick rather enervates his power, weakens his Kingdom. The Devil doth not ever practice this cunning; but then alone, when he is put to his shifts. For, some are so vile, that the Devil himself, would scarce wish them worse. Such are Atheists, Rob-altars, Usurers, Traitors, &c. But some living in the circun ference of the Gospel, are by man's awe and law restrained from professed abominations! what would you have him now do? Sure Satan is full of the Politiques. Daemonas grammatici dictos volunt, quasi 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, id est, peritos ac rerum scios. He is a Devil for his craft. I call therefore the reaping, his Subtlety: for he might seem therein to dissolve his Kingdom, and spoil the height of sin, by cutting it down. But the sequel and success proves, he doth it rather to corroborate the power thereof, by making it fitter for application. Thus he transforms himself to an Angel of light; and is content to top the proud risings of palpable and outward Impieties, that he may more strongly possess the soul by hypocrisy. Thus there may be an expulsion of Satan from the house of the heart, quoad veterem eruptionem, when his repossession is made stronger, quoad nouam corruptionem. Common grace throws him out, but he finds the house empty, swept, and garnished, that is, trimmed by hypocrisy, and therefore enters and fortifies with seven other spirits more wicked then the first. What he cannot do by notorious rebellion, he performs by dissimulation. So that as Sorcerers and Witches converse with evil spirits in plausible and familiar forms, which in ugly shapes they would abhor. So many would not endure him, vt rude cacodaemon, as a rough and gross Devil, in manifest outrageous enormities; who yet as a smooth, sleeke, fine, and transformed Devil, give him entertainment. This then is his Harvest.

4. Being thus reaped and housed, he soon thresheth it out, with the Flaile of his strength. He is called the strong man; where he takes possession, he pleads prescription; he will not out. His power in the captived conscience scorns limitation: He is not content to have the seed lie idle in the heart, he must thresh it out, cause thee to produce some cursed effects. He doth not (to speak for your capacity in the Country) hoard up his Graine; but with all his might, and the help of all his infernal flaires, he thresheth it out, and makes it ready for the Market. If any Cain, or Judas be so hasty, that he will not stay till it be made Bread, tarry for temptation, but tempt himself; the Devil is glad that they save him a labor: howsoever, he will have his Graine ready; his suggestion shall not be to seek when he should use it. He would be loath that the lustful eye should want a Harlot, the corrupt Officer a bribe, the Papist an Image, the Usurer a Morgage, the thief a bootie. He knows not what guests will come, he will thrash it ready.

5. Being thrashed out, it must (you know) be ground. Satan hath a Water-mill of his own: though founded on mare mortuum, a dead Sea, (for all sins are dead works) yet the current and stream that drives it, runs with swifter violence, then the straits of Gibertare. The flood of concupiscence drives it. The Mill consists of two stones, Deliciae & diuitiae: Pleasure and Profit. There is no seed of sin, which these two cannot grind to powder, and make fit for Bread, when Concupiscence turns the Mill. Rapine, Sacrilege, Murder, Treason, have been prepared to a wicked man's use, by these Instruments. Quid non mortaliae pectora cogunt? Covetousness and carnal delight bid any sin welcome. Only pleasure is the nether stone; Idleness would lie still, but Covetousness is content to trudge about, and glad when any sacks come to the Mill. These two grind all the Devils grist, and supply him with temptations for all the World. All the ugly births of sins, that have ever shown their monstrous and stigmatic forms to the light, have been derived from these Parents; Carnal pleasure and Covetousness. You see how the Devil grinds.

6. It is ground, you hear: It wants leavening. The Leaven is the colorable and fallacious arguments, that persuade the sweetness of this Bread. This is, 1. either the Leaven of the Pharisees. 2. Or, the leaven of the Sadducees. 3. Or, the Leaven of the Herodians. The Leaven Pharisical, is described by CHRIST himself to be Hypocrisy: a tradition to make clean the outside of the Cup, but no devotion to keep the inside pure, from extortion and excess. The Leaven of the Sadducees is the doctrine of the Sadducees: as the mistaken Apostles (about Bread) corrected their own errors. This Doctrine was a denial of Resurrection, of Angel, of Spirit. The Herodian Leaven, was dissolute profaneness; derived from the observation of Fox-like Herod. These pleadings for Sin, by the Devils mercenary Advocates, put (like Leaven) a better taste into his Bread. Thus it is leavened.

7. It lacks now nothing but baking. Sure, the Oven, that bakes this corrupt Bread, is our own evil affections; which the Devil heats by his temptations; and with supply of Fewell, to their humors. Thus by sin he makes way for sin, and prepares one iniquity out of another. He strikes fire at the covetous heart of Judas, and so bakes both Treason and Murder. He hath made Absalom's affections so hot by Ambition, that Incest and Parricide is easily baked in them. The Prophet Hosea speaks the sins of Israel in this Allegory, They are all Adulterers, as an Oven heated by the Baker: who ceaseth from raising, after he hath kneaded the Dough, until it be leavened. They have made ready their heart, like an Oven, whiles they lie in wait: their Baker sleepeth all the night; in the morning it burneth as a flaming fire. They are all hot as an Oven, &c. Yea, Ephraim it self is a Cake half baked. Thus, when our affections are made a fiery Oven, through the greediness of sin, there is soon drawn out a batch of wickedness.

Thus the Devil runs through many occupations, before his Bread be baked, his Banket prepared for his guests. He is a Seedesman, a Waterer, a Reaper, a Thrasher, a Miller, a Moulder, a Baker. A Baker here for his Bread, as before a Brewer for his Waters. And to conclude, an Host, that makes the wake, invites the guests, and Bankets them with their own damnation.

You have heard how this Service may be called Bread; and therein the subtlety of the Devils prescription. Let us as justly poise his description in the balance, and see how it holds weight. Secret bread, or, the bread of secrecy; nay, of Secrecies: for sin is not like the Rail, that sits alone; but like the Partridges, which fly by Coueys. Secret. This will be found a fraudulent dimension: for there is nothing so secret, that shall not be made manifest. The speeches of whispering, the acts of the Closet shall not scape publishing. The Allegory of Adultery is prosecuted. Forbidden lusts, stolen by snatches, and enjoyed in secret, are sweet and pleasant. It is instanced in this particular, what hath a general extent to all the paralells; every sister of that cursed stock. I will hold with it thus far; that sin loves secrecy; and I will testify against it a degree further, that no sin is so secret, as the Tempter here affirms it; or the committers imagine it. And from these two roots, I will produce you a double fruit of Instruction.

1. Vniust things love priuacie: the Adulterer saith Job, loves the dark. Thais draws Paphnutius into the secret, and more removed chambers. The two wicked Elders thus tempt that Emblem of chastity; Ostia pomerij clausa sunt: the gates of the Orchard are shut; and nobody sees us. Hence the generation of sins are called the works of darkness. And reformation of life is compared to our decent walking in the day. Though the light of grace shines, saith the Sun of brightness, yet men love darkness better, because their deeds are evil. Ignorance and the Night have a fit similitude.

1. Both seasons are still and hushit: no noise to waken the Sybarites; unless the Cockes, the Ministers: Nuncij Dei et diei: and their noise is not held worth the hearing. Few will believe Christ's Cock, though he crows to them that the day is broken.

2. Both seasons procure stumbling. The ways of our pilgrimage is not so even but that we need both light to show the rubs, and eyes to disce•ne them. The Gospel is the day, Christ is the light, Faith is the eye that apprehends it. Light without eyes, eyes without light, are defective to our good. If either be wanting, the stumbling feet endanger the body. In the spiritual privation of either Gospel or Faith, the affections are not able to keep upright the Conscience.

3. Both are uncomfortable seasons. Nox & erroris & terroris plenissima. The night is full of wondering, of wandering. Imagine the Egyptians case in that gross and palpable darkness: the longest natural night, that the Book of God specifies. A silent, solitary, melancholy, inextricable season. In which, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; no murmur disquiets the Air; no man hears his name; no Birds sing; except the Owl and the Night-rauen, which croake only dismal things.

4. Both are fit seasons for fowl spirits to range in. It hath been fabled of night-walking sprights. Let it be false, yet this is true: the Devil is the Prince of darkness; his kingdom is a kingdom of darkness; and his walks are the walks of d•rkenesse. In the caliginous night of Superstition and Ignorance, he plays Rex, and captiuates many a soul to his obedience. His children (as it is fit) have the same disposition with their father. They are Tenebrio's, and love nocturnos conuentus, meetings in the dark: as the •owder-Tra•tours met in the Vault. But the eyes of Jehovah see not only things •one in the tops of the Mountains, but could sp•e the Trea•on of the Vault.

2. And this is the consequent I•struction, which I would the Devils blinded guests should know! God sees. There is nothing secret to his eye. 1. He sees our sins in the Book of eternity, before our own hearts conceived them. 2. He sees them in our hearts, when our inventions have given them form, and our intentions birth. 3. He sees their action on the Theater of this Earth, quite through the scene of our lives. 4. He sees them, when his wrathful eye takes notice of them, and his hand is lift up to punish them. There is nothing so secret, and abstracted from the senses of men; Vt creatoris aut lateat cogitationem, aut effugiat potestatem; that it may either lurk from the eye, or escape from the hand of God. No Master of a family is so well acquainted with every corner of his house; or can so readily fetch any Casket or Box he pleaseth: as the Master of the whole family in Heaven and Earth, knows all the Angles and Vaults of the World.

Jupiter est, quodcun{que} vides, quocun{que} moueris.

In him we live, move, and have our being.

The villan•es of the Cloistures were not unseen to his revenging eye. Perhaps they took a recluse life, that they might practice experimental wickedness, without suspicion: pro•sing to the world contemplation, premising their own thoughts to contamination. They thought themselves secure, shadowed from the eye of notice, and fenced from the hand of Justice. So they were in doctrine, out of the world; but in proof the world was in them: they were not more (politi) strict in profession, then (polluti) loose in conversation. But as dark as their Vaults were, the all-seeing GOD descried their whoredoms, and destroyed their habitations; or at least emptied them of so filthy Tenants. The obscurity of their Cels and Dorters, thicknesse of Walls, closenesse of Windows, with the cloak of a strict profession thrown over all the rest, could not make their sins dark to the eye of Heaven.

Our impieties are not without witness. To videt Angelus malus, videt te bonus, videt et bonis et malis major Angels Deus. The good Angel, and the bad, and he that is better then the Angels, far above all principalities and powers, sees thee. The just man sets forth his actions to be justified. Lucem & aethera petit, & teste so•e viuit: He loves the light, and walks with the witness of the Sun. It is recorded of Jacob, He was a plain man, dwe•ling in Tents. Nathaniel (by the testimony of the best witness) was an Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile. It was the Rabbins council to his Scholar: Remember, there is 1. a seeing Eye: 2. a hearing Eare. 3. a Book written. Sic viue cum hominibus, quasi Deus videat: sic loquere Deo, quasi homines a'diant. So converse with men, as if GOD saw thee: so speak to God, as if men heard thee. For, non discessit Deus: quando recessit. God is not absent, though thou dost not feel him present. Corporeall substances are in one place locally and circumscriptively: incorporeal created substances, neither locally nor circumscriptively, but definitively. GOD the creating substance is every whit in every place: not circumscriptively as bodies; nor definitively as Angels; but repletively, (Io'is omnia plena) filling every place by his essence. He is hypostatically in CHRIST: graciously in his Saints: gloriously in Heaven: powerfully in Hell. You see then the falsehood of the Devils assertion: Sins would be secret, but they are not.

The Bread of secrecy being described, I should come in the third and last place, to the Ascription: It is pleasant. But because the former adjunct of sweetness, doth but little diuersifie from this of Pleasure; and I shall have just occasion to convince the Devils feigned delicacy, from Solomon's proved misery: I will therefore silence it. And for conclusive application, give me the leave of your patience, to examine the truth of the (former) secrecy.

It is the Devils policy, though he cannot blind his eyes that made the light in Heaven, and the sight in man; yet he would darken our sins with the veil of secrecies from the view of the world. And are they so? no, (the suffering eye sees them, and can point them out, nay) sensible demonstration speaks them to the ea•es, and objects them to the sight of man. The iniquities of these days are not ashamed to show their faces; but walk the streets without fear of a Ser•eant. The sins of the City are as pert and apert as the sons of the City. I would Iniquity was not bolder then Honesty; or that Innocence might speed no worse then Nocence. Absit vt sic, sed vtinam vt vel sic, saith Saint Augustine, in the like case: God forbid it should be so bad; yet I would it were no worse. For the times are so wheeled about to their old bias, that vix licet esse bonum, it is scarce safe to be an honest man. Suspition makes the good evil, and flattery makes the evil good, the first in the opinion of others; the last in the opinion of themselves. Our faith is small, and led ••th reason; our life evil, and led without reason. Corruptio morum to'lit scientiam ethicam. Our evil manners shut up Philosophy and Divinity too into the cave of Ignorance.

This Forest of Man and Beast, the world, grows from evil to worse; like Nabuch•dnezzars dreamed Image, whose Head was Golden, Silver arms, Brasen thighs, but his feet were of Iron and Clay. What Ovid did but Poet•ze, experience doth moralize, our manners actually perform. This last is (as it must be) the worst. Our Covetise saith, It is terrae aetas, an Earthen Age. Our Oppression, ferrea aetas, an Iron Age. Our Impudence, ah•nea aetas▪ a Brasen Age. Neither aurea, nor argentea, saith Necessity. For the poor may say as the Priest, Silver and Gold have I none. Let me say; our sins have made it worthy to be called, inferna aetas, a hellish Age.

Sin is called by Paul, The old man; but he is stronger now▪ than he was in his I•fancy; diebus Adam•, in the days of Adam. Most men's repentance is in the knee or tongue, but their wickedness in the heart and hand. Money mars all: for this, and the pleasures this may procure, Esau sels his Birth-right, Judas sels his Master, Ahab sels himself to work wickedness. Sin was wont to love priuacie, as if she walked in fear. The Tippler kept his private Ale-bench, not the Market place: the Adulterer his Chamber, not (with Absalom) the house-top: the Thief was for the night or sequestrate ways: the corrupt Lawyer took bribes in his Study, not in the open Hall; but now (peccata nullas petitura te••bras) our sins scorn the dark. Men are so far from being ashamed of their fruitless lives, that mala comittunt, commissa iactant, iactata defendunt: they commit evil, •oast that they committed, and defend that they boasted. Pride is worn as a chain, and cruelty as a garment; conspectu omnium, as proud of the fashion. They talk of a Conscience, that seeks covers, like Adams Fig leaves: but these glory in their shame; whose end is damnation, saith Saint Paul. The very Harlot comes short of them: she wipes her lips, and saith, she h•th not sinned. B•tter fare those, that yet would be accounted honest.

We may justly parallel these times and our complaints to the Prophet Isaiah's, The show of their countenance doth witness against them: they declare their sin at Sodom, they hide it not: But woe be to their souls, for they have rewarded evil to themselves. So the Jews answered GOD, pleading hard to them, There is no hope: no, for I have loved strangers, and after them I will go. Nay, resolutely they discharged GOD of further pains: We are Lord's, we will no more come unto thee. Therefore Ezekiel denounceth their destruction: For this cause ye shall be taken with the hand of Judgment, because your sins are discovered: and in all your doings your transgressions do appear. So the same people to the Son, as they had erst to the Servants: We will not come unto thee. How often would I have gathered you, but you would not? Ye will not come at me, that you might have life.
 1. The way is easy. 2. You shall have life for coming: it is worth your labor. 3. You can have it nowhere else; then Come to me. No, you will not come at me: as Daniel answered Bels•azzar, Keep thy rewards to thyself, and give thy gifts to another.

These are sins with lifting up the hand and he•le against God: the hand in opposition, the heel in contempt. There are two Ladders, whereby men climb into HEAVEN; the godly by their Prayers, the wicked by their sins. By this latter Ladder did Sodom and Nineveh climb. GOD grant our sins be not such climbers; that press into the presence Chamber of HEAVEN, and will be acquainted with GOD, though to our confusion. Are our wickednesses done in this R••on and Sphaere of sin, the Earth; and must they come to Heaven first? Must the news be at the Court, of what is done in the Co•ntrie, before the Countrie it self know of it? Our consciences take no notice of our own iniquities; but they complain in the audience-Court of HEAVEN, and few out an Outlawry against us. So impudent and vn-blushing is our wickedness, that with the Prophet we may complain: Were they ashamed, when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ash•med, neither could they blush. Our sins keep not low water, the tide of them is ever swelling: they are objects to the general eye; and proud that they may be observed. And let me tell you; many of the sins I have taxed, as secret and silent as you take them and as hoarcely as they are pleaded to speak; are no less then Thunder to Heaven, and Lightning to men. They do votally and vocially ascend, that would actually, if they could.

The laborers hire cries in the gripulous Landlords hand. The furrows of the Incloser cry, complain, nay, weep against him: for so is the Hebrew word. The vain-glorious builder hath the stone crying out of the Wall against him, and the beam out of the Timber answering it. The Blasphemers tumult cries, and is come up into the ears of God. The Oppressors rage and violence reacheth up to Heaven, and is continually before me, saith the Lord. These are crying sins, and have shrill voices in Heaven, neither are they submisse and whispering on the Earth.

To be short; most men are either Publican's or Pharisees: either they will do no good, or loose that they do by ostentation. Many act the part of a religious man, and play Devotion on the worlds Theater, that are nothing beside the Stage; all for sight. Angels in the Highway, Devils in the by-way: so monstrous out of the CHURCH, that they shame Religion. It was proverbied on Nero, It must needs be good that Nero persecutes: their wicked lives give occasion to the world, to invert it on them. It must needs be evil, that such wretches profess. Others are like Publican's: Only they were Christened when they were Babes, and could not help it; but as angry at that indignity, they oppose Christ all their lives.

Take heed, Beloved; Hell was not made for nothing. The Devil scorns to have his Court empty: you will not bend, you shall break: you will not serve God, God will serve himself of you. Put not these vices from you, by your impudent cloakings! How many stand here guilty of some of these sins? How many may say with Aeneas, Et quorum pars magna sui, whereof I have a great share. Many cry out, the days are evil, whiles they help to make them worse. All censure, none amend. If everyone would pluck a brand from this fire, the flame would go out of it self. But whiles we cast in our iniquities as Fewell, and blow it with the Bellows of disobedience; we make it strong enough to consume us; yea, and all we have. For God will not spare ever; he is just, and must strike.

Shall we loosen our hands to impiety, and tie God from vengeance? I have often read and seen that Mercy and Righteousness meet together; that Righteousness and Peace kiss one another. But Mercy and sinfulness keep not the same house, Peace and wickedness are mere strangers. To reconcile these, is harder then to make the Wife and Limbe live together in quiet. Think not that God cannot strike. Mars vltor galeam quoque perdidit, & res non potuit seruare suas. The Heavens then God's could not avenge their own quarrels: But our God can punish a thousand ways: Fire, Plague, War, Famine, &c. Milla nocendi arts. Our sins may thrive a while, and batten, because they live in a friendly Air, and apt Soil; but in the end they will overthrow both themselves and us.

Ciuitatis euersio est, morum non murorum casus.

A Cities overthrow is sooner wrought by lewd lives, then weak walls. Were the walls of our Cities as strong-Turreted and inexpugnable, as the wall that Phocas built about his Palace; yet it may be really performed on them, as the voice in the night told him: Did they reach the Clouds, they may be scaled: the sin within will mar all. Graciores sunt mimici mores prauis, quam hosts infesti. Our worst enemies are our own sins. And though these punishments fall not suddenly, yet certainly, if repentance step not between. Adam did not die presently on his sin; yet God's Word was true upon him: for he became instantly mortal, sure to die, and fell (as it were) into a Consumption, that never left him, till it brought him to the grave. GOD hath leaden Feet, but Iron hands; take heed ye feasting Robbers: when God struck that secret thief Judas, he struck home: he took away the world from him, or rather him from the world, and sent him to his own place. Feast, Reuell, Ryot, Couet, Ingrosse, Extort, Hoord, whiles you will; Earth is not your House, but your Bridge: you must pass over it, either to Canaan or Egypt, Heaven or Hell; every man to his own place.

Grant, oh dear Father, that we may so run our short Pilgrimage on Earth, that our dwelling-place may be with thy Majesty in Heaven, through the merits and mercies of our Savior Jesus Christ. AMEN.

In conviuum Diabolicum.

They, that to glut on sins such pleasure have,
Descend with sickly Conscience to their grave;
Unless Repentance and true Faith make sure
The physic of Christ's blood, their wounds to cure.
Forebear thou Christian'd soul the Devils Feast,
And to Heavens Supper be a welcome Guest.

FINIS.

THE SHOT: OR The woeful price which the wicked pay for the feast of Vanity.

BY THOMAS ADAMS, Preacher of God's Word at Willington in Bedford-shire.

LUKE 16.25.

But Abraham said; Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things, but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

AUGUST. de Ciuitate Dei. Lib. 22. Cap. 3.

Prima mors animam dolentem pellit de corpore:

Secunda mors animam nolentem tenet in corpore.

The soul by the first death is unwillingly driven from the body: the soul by the second death is unwillingly held in the body.

LONDON: Printed by Thomas Snodham for Ralph Mab, and are to be sold in Paul's Church-yard, at the sign of the Grey-hound. 1614.

TO THE VERY WORTHY GENTLEMAN, M<sup>r</sup>. FRANCIS CRAWLEY: saving Health.

SYR:

There are four sorts of Bankets, which I may thus distinguish: Laetum, letiferum; bellum, belluinum. The first is a joyful Feast: Such was the Break-fast of the World, in the Law, or the Dinner, in the Gospel, or (yet the future more fully, the Lambes Supper of Glory: this is a delicate Feast. Yet not more, then the next is deadly; the black Banket, which is prepared for the wicked in Hell. Which consists of two Dishes, saith the School: Poena damni, and poena sensus; or as the Philosopher distinguisheth all misery, into copiam & inopiam: copia tribulationis, inopia consolationis. Or after some, of three: amissio coeli, priuatio terrae, positio inferni: the missing of that they might have had, the privation of that they had, the position of that they have, and would not have, torment: or according to others, of four: Mercillesse misery, extremity, vniuersallity, eternity of anguish. Our Savior abridgeth all into two, or rather one, (for they are homogenea) weeping and gnashing of teeth. This is a bloody Banket, where (cross to the festival proverb, the more the merrier) the multitude of guests shall add to the horror of miseries; so afflicting one another with their ecchoing and reciprocal groans, that it shall be no ease socios habuisse doloris. This is a lamentable, but the third a laudeable Feast. It is that the Christian maketh, either to man (which is a Feast of Charity) or to God, (which is a Feast of Grace.) Whereunto God hath promised to be a Guest, and to sup with him. The last is a bestial Banket wherein either man is the Symposiast, and the Devil the discumbent; or Satan the Feastmaker, and man the Guest. Sin is the food in both. The die is not varied, but the Host. Satan feasts the wicked, whiles they feed on his temptations to surfeit. The wicked feast Satan, whiles their accustomed sins nourish his power in their hearts. S. S. Jerome, Daemonum cibus ebrietas, luxuria, fornicatio & vniuersa vitia. Our iniquities are the very diet & dainties of the Devils. With this last only have I meddled, endeavoring to declare it, to dissuade it; (according to the dichotomiz'd carriage of all our Sermons;) by explication, by application. Sin is the white (or rather the black mark) my arrow flies at. I trust, he that gave aim to my tongue, will also direct, level, and keep my Pen from swaruing. But since reproofs are as Goads, and Beasts will kick when they are touched to the quick; and he that speaks in Thunder, shall be answered with Lightning; by which consequence, I may suspect storms, that have menaced storms: therefore, behold, it runs to you for shelter; not to instruct your knowledge, who can give so exquisite counsel to others in the Law, to yourself in the Gospel; being qualified, as that perfect Rhetorician should be, vir bonus, dicendi peritus: but that through your Name, I might offer (and add) this poor Mite into the treasury of the Church: ascribing the Patronage to yourself, the use to the world, the success to God. Accept then this poor testimony of my gratitude, who have vowed myself

Your Worships in all faithful service THOMAS ADAMS.

THE SHOT, OR The woeful price which the wicked pay for the Feast of Vanity. The fourth Sermon.

PROVERB. 9.18.

But he knoweth not that the dead are there, and that her guests are in the depth of Hell.

SAtans guests are unhappily come from the end of a Feast, to the beginning of a fray. As the Sodomites eat and drunk, till the fire was about their ears: so these are iouiiall, and sing care away; but it seems by the sequel, that the Devil will not be pleased with a Song; as the Host in the Fable, with the singing guest. He cries out, as the Usurer at his spawning hour, Give me my money: Arguments are held complements; persuasions, entreaties, promises of speedy satisfaction will do no good on him that hath no good in him: he is like the Cuckoe, always in one tune, Give me my money. The Debtor may entreat, this Creditor will not retreat; he will to war, (you know the Usurers war) except he may have his money. So the great Usurer, the Devil, (I hope Usurers do not scorn the comparison) when the Feast is done, looks for a reckoning. The Usurer, perhaps, will take security; so will the Devil: Security and deadness of heart, will a great while please him. But when Dives hath dined, the Devil takes away: Death is his knife, and Hell his voyder. He takes away one Dish more then he set down; instead of the reversion, the Feasters themselves, nay the Feast-maker too: for Dives is the founder, and Satan is the confounder: the one provides meat for the belly, the other, by God's sufferance, destroys them both. Satan according to the tricks of some shifting Hosts, bids many friends to a Feast, and then beats them with the Spit. Dainty cheer, but a saucy reckoning. The Feast is vanity, the Shot vexation. Thus they that worship their belly as God, temple themselves in Hell: and as their end is damnation, so their damnation is without end. Therefore shall they go captive with the first, that go captive: and the banket of them that stretched themselves shall be removed.

I would willingly lead you through some Suburbs, before I bring you to the main City of Desolation; and show you the wretched conclusion of this Banket, and confusion of these Guests. All which arise from the conterminat situation, or (if I may so speak) from the respondent opposition of these two Sermons, Wisedomes and Follies, that is, God's and Satan's. For this sad sequel is (if not a relative, yet) a redditiue demonstration of their misery; for after the infection of sin, follows the infliction of punishment. The turrets I would lead you by, are built, and consist of Farewels and Welcomes; of some things deposed, and some things imposed; positive and privative circumstances; valedictions and maledictions: they take their leaves of temporal and affected joys, and turn upon eternal and cursed sorrows. I will limit these general observations into four.

All sinful joys are dammed (if not damned) up with a But. They are troubled with a But-plague; like a Bee with a sting in the tail. They have a worm that crops them, nay gnaws asunder their very root; though they shoot up more hastily, and spread more spatically then Jonah gourd. There is great preparation of this Banket, properation to it, participation of it; all is carried with joy and Iouisance: there is a corrective But, a veruntamen, spoils all in the up-shot. A little Colliquintida, that embitters the Broath. A perilous, a pernicious, rock, that splits the Ship in the Haven. When all the prophecies of ill success have been held as Cassandra's riddles; when all the contrary winds of afflictions, all the threatened storms of God's wrath, could not dishearten the Sinners voyage to these Netherlands; here is a But that shipwrackes all: the very mouth of a bottomless pit, not shallower then Hell it self.

It is observable that Solomon's prouerbiall says, are so many select Aphorisms; containing, for the most part, a pair of cross and thwart sentences; handled rather by collation then relation; whose conjunction is disiunctiue. The Proverbs are not joined with an Et, but an At: with a But, rather then with an And. Stollen waters are sweet, &c. But he knoweth not, &c. It stands in the midst, like a Rudder or Oare, to turn the Boat another way. Rejoice oh young man, &c. But know that for all these things, God will bring thee to Judgment, &c. All runs smooth, and inclines to the byace of our own affections, till it lights upon this rub. The Babel of Iniquity is built up apace, till confusion steps in with a But. It is like the sudden clap of a Serieant on a Gallants shoulder. He is following his lusts, full sent and full cry; the arrest strikes him with a But, and all's at a loss.

As in a fair Summers morning, when the Lark hath called up the Sun, and the Sonne the Husbandman: when the earth had opened her Shop of perfumes, and a pleasant wind fannes coolenesse through the heated air: when every creature is rejoiced at the heart. On a sudden the furious winds burst from their prisons, the thunder rends the clouds, and makes way for the lightning, and the spowtes of heaven stream down showers; a hideous tempest sooner damps all the former delight, then a man's tongue can well express it. With no less content do these guests of sin pass their life, they eat to eat, and drink to drink, often to sleep, always to surfeit: they caroll, dance, spend their present joys, and promise themselves infallible supply. On a sudden, this But comes like an unlooked for storm, and turns all into mourning; and such mourning (as Rahell had for her Children) that will not be comforted, because their joys are not.

A wicked man runs headlong in the night of his unwaked security, after his wonted sports; and because he keeps his old path, which never interrupted him with any obstacle, he nothing doubts, but to speed as he had wont: but his enemy hath digged a pit in his way, and in he topples, even to the depth of Hell. Thus wicked joys have wretched sorrows: and as man hath his Sic, so God hath his Sed. If we will have our will in sin, it is fit, he should have his will in punishing. To this sense, Solomon frequently in his Proverbs. They will pursue wickedness, But they shall be plagued. I have forbidden usury, adultery, swearing, malice, as unclean meats; you will feed on them: But you shall be punished. There is a reckoning behind, a But they never shot at: but they shot besides the But, the whiles. God hath prepared them as the miserable marks, that shall receive the arrows of his vengeance, till they are drunk with blood. They shall suffer that in passion, which Job spake in apprehension. The arrows of the Almighty shall be within them, the poison whereof shall drink up their spirits, and the terrors of God shall set themselves in array against them. So Moses sung in the person of God against the wicked. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall eat flesh, &c. They forget, that when God shall rebuke them in his wrath, and chasten them in his hot displeasure, his arrows shall stick fast in them, and his hand shall press them sore. This is their sad Epilogue, or rather the breaking off their Scaene in the midst; The Banket of stolen waters and secret bread is pleasant: But the dead are there, and the guests be in the depth of Hell.

The Devil doth but cozen the wicked with his cates; as before in the promise of Delicacie, so here of perpetuity. He sets the countenance of continuance on them, which indeed are more fallible in their certainty, then flourishable in their bravery. Their banquetting-house is very slippery; and the feast it self, a mere dream. Let the Guest preserve but reason, and he shall easily make the collection: that if for the present,

Ga•dia plus aloes, quam sua mellis habent;

To the compound of his joys, there go more bitter then sweet simples; what will then the end be? even such a one, as at once (consumit delicias, consummat miserias) makes an end of their short pleasures, and begins their lasting pains. This my Text salutes them, as the Mason was wont to salute the Emperor at his Coronation, with a lap-full of stones:

Elige ab his saxis, ex quo, Augustinism Caesar,

Ipse tibi tumulum, me fabricare velis.

Choose great Emperor, out of this whole heap, what stone thou best likest for thine own Sepulcher. You that crown your days with Rose-buds, and flatter your hearts with a kingdom over pleasures, think of a low grave for your bodies, and a lower room for your souls. It is the subtlety of our common enemy, to conceal this woe from us so long, that we might see it and feel it at once. For if we could but foresee it, we would fear it; if we truly feared it, we would make means not to feel it.

Our most fortified delights are like the child's castle, done down with a fillop: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, nay 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 a shadow, the very dream of a shadow, a rotten post, slightly painted, a paper-tower, which the least puff overturns.

Cuncta trahit secum, vertit{que} volubile tempus.

Time whirls about the world, and makes all inferior things to travel and spend themselves together with him. Sinful and earthly delight is well called, amiable, fragile, flebile, a thing soon loved, sooner ended, but long, very long lamented: a rotten nut, fair but hollow. Though Philosophy saith, there is no vacuity in rerum natura, yet Divinity saith, there is nothing but vacuity in naturae rebus. Nature, as it is not only corrupt of it self, but made more fowl in the evil man's use, hath nothing in it, but vanity: and vanity is nothing: a mere emptiness, a vacuity. Hence, if Aristotle commends the nature of things, the better Philosopher Solomon, discommends the things of nature; especially in their base and bad usage. Only the Devils Feast-house hath a fair bush at the door, (yet if the wine were good, what needs the Iuie?) and therefore his people turn in thither, and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them. But when they are once in, they find themselves deceived, for the dead are there, &c.

Then put no trust in so weak comforts, that will be unto you, as Egypt to Israel, a Reed; which when you lean upon, it will not only fail you, but the splinters shall run into your hand. You shall be ashamed of your weak confidence. The Burden of the beasts of the South. Into the land of trouble &c. I am no Prognosticator. Yet if Cosmographie affirm that we live in a Southerne Climate, and experience testify that we have many beasts among us; methinkes, these words lie as fit for us, as if they were purposely made. How many in our land, by loss of Conscience are become Atheists, and by loss of Reason beasts? who run so fast to this Egyptian feast of wickedness, that he speaks easiest against them that speaks but of a Burden? These having found Satan's temptations true for the daintiness, judging by their own lusts, dare also take his word for the continuance. But if the great Table of this Earth shall be overthrown, what shall become of the dainties that the hand of nature hath set on it? To which purpose saith Jerome. Oh si possemus in talem ascendere speculam, de qua vniuersam terram sub nostris pedibus cerneremus, iam tibi ostenderem totius orbis ruinas, &c. If it could be granted us to stand on some lofty Pinnacle, from which we might behold the whole earth under our feet; how easily persuasion would make these earthly pleasures seem vile in thy opinion? You sa•, your pleasures are, for number manifold, for truth manifest, for dimension great: grant all, though all be false: yet they are for time short, for end sour. Breue est, quod delectat: aeternum, quod cruciat. It is short, that pleaseth them; everlasting, that plagueth them. Pleasure is a channel, and, Death the sea, whereinto it runs. Mellifluus ingressus, fllifluus regressus, yield your joys sweet at the Porch, so you grant them bitter at the Posterne. Securus et Securis must meet. Wickedness and wretchedness must be made acquainted. The lewd man's dinner, shall have that rich man's Supper: Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee. The Devil then you see, is a crafty and cheating host, whose performance falls as short of his promise, as time doth of eternity. Let then the Apostles caveat, be the use of this observation. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things• cometh the wrath of God on the children of disobedience.

The punishments of the wick•d are most usually in the like; proper and proportionable to their offenses. 1. Solomon here opposeth the house of mourning to the house of feasting; as in express terms. Eccle•. 7. for as it is fit in the body, that surfeit should be followed with death: so these that greedily make themselves sick with sin, become justly dead in soul. 2. They have affected the works of hell, therefore it is just that hell should affect them, and that everyone should be granted their •wne place. 3. As they would not know what they did, till they had done it; so they fitly know not the place whither they shall go, till they are in it. Nescit: he knoweth not, &c. 4. For the high places, which their ambition climbed to, Ver. 14. They are cast down, like L•cifer, to the lowest place, the depth of Hell. As Simon Magus would fly with arrogance, so he came dow•e with a vengeance, and broke his neck. See how fitly they are qu•ted. They eat the bread of wickedness, and drink the wine of violence: now they are scanted of both, except they will eat the bread of gall, and drink their own tears.

Thus Pharaoh drowns the Hebrew males in a River. Exod. 1. therefore is drowned himself with his army in a sea. Exod. 14. He had laid insupportable burdens on Israel; God returns them with full weight, number, measure. When Israel had cut off the thumbs and great toes of Adoni-bezek, hear the maimed King confess the equity of this Judgment. Threescore and ten Kings, having their thumbs and great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table: as I have done, so God hath requited me. As proud Baiazeth threatened to serve Tamberlaine, being conquered; to imprison him in a cage of iron, and carry him about the world in triumph: so the Scithian having took that bragging Turk, put him to the punishment which hi•self had lessoned; carrying and carting him through Asia, to be scorned of his own people. Thus Haman is hanged on his own gallows. Perillus tries the trick of his own torment.

The Papists, that would have fired us in a house, were themselves fired out of a house. Gunpowder spoiled some of their eyes, Musket-shot killed others, the Engines of their own conspiracy: and the rest were advanced higher by the head, then the Parliament-house, that would have lifted us higher, of purpose to give us the more mortal •all. God hath •etaliated their works into their own bosoms. They traveled with iniquity, conceived mischief: and loe the birth is their own sorrow. They have digged a pit for us, and that low, unto Hell; and are fallen into it themselves.

— Nec enim lex aequior vlla est

Quàm necis artifices, art• perire sua.

No iuster Law can be deuis'd or made,

Then, that sins agents fall by their own trade.

The order of Hell proceeds with the same degrees; though it give a greater portion, yet the same proportion of torment. These wretched guests were too busy with the waters of sin; behold now they are in the depth of a pit, where no water is. Dives, that wasted so many Tunnes of Wine, cannot now procure water, not a Pot of water, not a handful of water, not a drop of water, to cool his tongue. Desideravit guttam, qui non dedit micam. A just recompense. He would not give a crumb; he shall not have a drop. Bread hath no smaller fragment, then a crumb; water no less fraction then a drop. As he denied the least comfort to Lazarus living, so Lazarus shall not bring him the least comfort dead. Thus the pain for sin, answers the pleasure of sin. Where, now, are those delicate moisels, deep carouses, loose laughters, proud po•t, midnight revels, wanton songs? Why begins not his fellow-guest with a new health? or the Music of some ravishing note? or, if all fail, hath his fool-knauish Parasite no obscene jest, that may give him delight? Alas! Hell is too melancholy a place for mirth. All the Music is round-ecchoing groans: all the water is muddy with stench: all the food anguish.

Thus damnable sins shall have semblable punishments: and as Augustine of the tongue, so we may say of any member. Si non reddet Deo faciendo quae debet, redd•t ei patiendo quae debet. If it will not serve God in action, it shall serve him in passion. Where voluntary obedience is denied, involuntarie anguish shall be suffered. Know this thou swearer, that as thy tongue spets abroad the flames of Hell, so the flames of Hell shall be poured on thy tongue. As the Drunkard will not now keep the Cup of satiety from his mouth, so God shall one day hold the Cup of vengeance to it, and he shall drink the dregs thereof. As the Usurers are tormentors to the Common-wealth, on earth, so they shall meet with tormentors in Hell; that shall transcend them both in malice and subtlety: and load them with bonds and executions; and (which is strangely possible) heavier then those, they have so long traded in. The Church-robber, incloser, ingrosser, shall find worse prolling and pilling in Hell, then themselves used on earth; and as they have been the worst Devils to their Countries wealth, so the worst of Devils shall attend them. The unclean adulterer shall have fire added to his fire. And the covetous wretch, that never spake but in the Horse-leaches language, and carried a mouth more yawning, then the graves, is now quitted with his nunquam satis, and finds enough of fire in the depth of Hell.

The Devil hath feasted the wicked, and now the wicked feast the Devil: and that with a very chargeable Banket. For the Devil is a dainty Prince, and more curious in his diet, then Vitellius. He feeds, like the Cannibal, on no flesh, but man's flesh. He loves no Venison but the Hart, no fowl but the Breast, no fish but the Soul. As the ungodly have eaten up God's people as bread; so themselves shall be eaten as bread: •t is just, that they be devoured by others, that have devoured others. As they have been Lions to crush the bones of the poor; so a Lyon shall crush their bones: they are Satan's Feast, he shall devour them. Thus they that were the guests, are now the Banket: as they have been feasted with evils, so they feast the D•uils.

Make a little room in your hearts, ye fearless and desperate wretches, for this meditation. Behold, now, as in aspeculatiue glass, the Devils hospitality. Once be wise: believe without trial, without feeling. Yield but to be ashamed of your sins, and then I (can with comfort) ask you, •hat fruit they ever brought you? Let me but appeal from Philip of Macedon, when he is drunk, to Philip of Macedon, when he is sober; from your bewitched lusts, to your waked consciences; and you must needs say, that breuis haec, non vera voluptas. All the works of darkness are unfruitful, except in producing and procuring utter darkness. Sin is the Devils earnest-penny on earth, in Hell he gives the Inheritance. Temptation is his press-money: by rebellion, oppression, usury, blasphemy, the wicked like faithful Soldiers fight his battles: When the field is won, or rather lost (for if he conquers, they are the spoil) in the dep•h of he•l he gives them pay. Who then would march under his colors; who, though he promise Kingdoms, cannot perform a Hog? Alas poor beggar! he hath nothing of his own but sin, and death, and hell, and torment. Nihil ad effectum, ad defectum satis. No posit•ue good, enough privative evil.

Even those, that pass their souls to him by a real Covenant, he cannot enrich: they live and die most penurious beggars, as pernicious villains. And they, upon whom God suffers him to throw the riches of this world (as a s•are over their hearts) which he cannot do, but at second hand; have not enough to keep either their heads from aking, or their consciences from despairing. Thus, though God permit him, •o help the rich man to sill his Barns, the Usurer to swell his Coffers, the Luxurious to poison his blood, the malicious to gnaw his bowels, the s•crilegious to amplify his revenues, the ambitious with credit, yet there• is neither will in God, nor willingness in the Devil, that any of these should be a blessing unto them. All is but borrowed ware, and the Customers shall pay for day: the longer they abuse them, the larger arrearages they must return. Only here, I may say, that bona sunt, quae dona sunt; they are goods, that are gifts. God gives his graces freely, the Devil his Iunkets falsely: for the guests must pay; and that dearly; when the least Item in the bill, for pains, is beyond the greatest dish of the Feast, for pleasures.

Solomon's Sermon spends it self upon Two Circumstances, the

- Persons.

- Perdition.

  - Per infirmitatem. By their weaknes to resist soon in.
  - Per Infirmitatem In hell.
  - Per profunditatem. In the depth of Hell.

The person tempting, or the Harlot, is Vice; ugly and deformed Vice; that with glazed eyes, surph•ld cheeks, pyed garments, and a Sirens tongue, wins easy respect and admiration. When the heat of temptation shall glow upon concupiscence, the heart quickly melts. The wisest Solomon was taken and snared by a woman: which foul adultery bred as foul an issue, or rather *progeniem vitiosiore*m, a worse, Idolatri. Satan therefore shapes his Temptation in the lineaments of an Harlot: as most fit and powerful, to work upon man's affections. Certain it is, that all delighted vice is a spiritual adultery.

The covetous man couples his heart to his gold. The Gallant is incontinent with his pride. The corrupt Officer fornicates with bribery. The Usurer sets continual kisses on the cheek of his security. The heart is set, where the hate should be. And every such sinner spends his spirits, to breed and see the issue of his desires. Sin, then, is the Devils Harlot, which being tricked up in tempting colors, draws in visitants▪ praemittendo sua•ia, promittendo perpetua, giving the kisses of pleasure, and promising them perpetual. We may observe in this Strumpet.

1. Prostitution. Pro. 7.13. So she caught him, and kissed him, and with an impudent face said unto him, &c. Shame, now-a-days, begins to grow so stale, that many vices shall vie impudent speeches and gestures with the Harlot. Come, let us take our fill of love: as Putiphars wife to Joseph, without any ambagious or ambiguous circumlocutions or insinuations, come lie with me. Sin never stands to vnty the knot of God's interdiction, but bluntly breaks it; as the Devil at first to the roots of mankind, ye shall not die. The Usurer never looseth so much time, as to satisfy his conscience: it is enough to satisfy his concupiscence. A good Morgage lies sick of a forfeit, and at the Usurers mercy. It is as surely damned, as the Usurer himself will be, when he lies at the mercy of the Devil. These are so far from that old Quare of Christians, quid faciemus, what shall we do? That they will not admit the nouell question of these toyte-headed times, What shall we think? They will not give the conscience leave, after a tedious and importunate solicitation, to study of the matter. But are more injurious and impenetrable to their own souls, then that unjust Judge to the Widow.

A cheat is offered to a Trades-man, an Inclosure to a Landlord, an under-hand Fee clapt in the left hand of a Magistrate, if they be evil, and corruption hath first Marshalled the way, the field is won. They never treat with sin for truce, or pause on an answer, but presently yield the fort of their conscience. No wonder then, if the Devils Harlot be so bold, when she is so sure of welcome. It is our weakness, that prompts the Devil with encouragement: whom if we did resist, he would desist. Our weak repulses harden and provoke his fiercer assaults. He would not show the Worldling his apparent horns, if he did not presume of his covetous desire to be horsed on the back of Mammon, and hurried to Hell. Hence sin is so bold as to say in the wicked heart, Non est Deus, there is no God: and so peremptorily to conclude to it self, I shall not be moved; for I shall never be in adue•sitie. Hence even their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue forever, &c. This is presumptuous and whorish prostitution, to set out Iniquity bare-faced, without the Maske of pretexts, to hide her ugly visage. An impetuous, an imperious Impudence, that not with a feminine rapture▪ but rather with a masculine rape, captives the conscience. You see Follies prostitution.

2. Prodition is the ranckling tooth that follows her ravishing kisses. Judas kissed his Master with the same heart. Iniquitie hath an infectious breath, if a fair countenance. All her delights are like fair and sweet flowers, but full of Serpents. The tempted may give a concluding groan,

Sic violor, violis, oh violenta, tuis.

Thy soft flowers have stung me to death. For indeed it is most true, Nemo ipsum peccatum amat, sed male amando illud quod amat, illaqueatur peccato. No man loves sin for it own sake, but by an irregular and sinister love, to that he doth love, he is snared with sin. The Devil knows, that his Ephesian Harlot, Vice, would want worshippers, if treason and death were written up on the Temple-door: therefore health and content are proclaimed, and as on the Theater presented; but there is Hell under the Stage, there is treason in the vault.

Thus Temptation misleads the Nauigatours with a Pirates light: deceives the living fowls with a dead bird: a Syren, a Judas, a Jebusite, a Jesuit. For were the Jesuit to play the Devil, or the Devil the I•suite on the stage of this world; it would be hard to judge which was the Jesuit, which the Devil; or which played the part most naturally. As Iniquities are Satan's Harlots to corrupt the affections; so Jesuits are his E•gines to pervert the brains: for if the new guest here be heart-sick, so their Pro•elite is brain-sick. Both are made so dissolute, till they become desolate, robbed and destitute of all comfort.

Sin deals with her guests, as that bloody Germane Prince, that having invited many great States to a solemn Feast, flattered and singled them out one by one, and cut off all their heads. As fatal a success attends on the flatteries of sin. Oh then, fuge peccatum exulceratricem hanc: Fly this Harlot, that carries death about her. Go aloof from her door, as they say, the Devil doth by the Cross: but (let that savor of supposition, nay of superstition) do thou in sincere devotion fly from sin, quasi à facie colubri, as from a Serpent. She hath a Sirens voice, a Mermaides face, a Helens beauty to tempt thee: but a Leapers touch, a Serpents sting, a traiterous hand to wound thee. The best way to conquer Sin, is by the Parthian war, to run away. So the Poet.

Sed fuge: tutus adhuc Parthus ab host fuga est.

Tunc peccata fugantur, cum fugiantur. We then put sin to a forced flight, when it puts us to a voluntary flight. That Poetical amoris artifex et medicus, so counsels. Fuge conscia vestriconcubitus, &c. But beyond all exception, the holy Apostle gives the charge, fly Fornication. Shunne the place, suspect the appar•nce of evil. You see her Prodition.

Her perdition follows. She undoes a man; not so much in the estate of his carcass, as of his conscience. The guest is not so much damnified in respect of his goods, as damned in respect of his grace. Every man is not undone, that is beggared: many like Job, Minime pereunt, cum maxim perire videntur, are indeed least undone, when they seem most undone. Nay, some may say with the Philosopher, perieram, nisi peri•ssem, if I had not sustained loss, I had been lost. So David's great trouble made him a good man. Naaman's leprous flesh, brought him a white and clean spirit. But the perdition that vice brings, is not so visible, as it is miserable. The sequel of the Text will amplify this: only now I apply it to the Harlot. The Harlot destroys a man many ways.

1. In his goods. It is a costly sin. Tamar would not yield to Judah without a hire. The hire makes the Whore.

Stat meretrix certo quouis mercabilis aere:

Et miseras iusso corpore quaerit opes.

Compar'd with Harlots, the worst beast is good:

No beasts, but they, will sell their flesh and blood.

The old Proverb conioynes venery and beggary. The Prodigal returned not from his Harlot without an empty Purse. Sin doth no less undo a man's estate. It is a Purgatory to his Patrimony. It is objected: It rather helps him to riches, and swells his purse. Doth not a bribed hand, asycophant-tongue•e, a covetous and griping palm make men wealthy? Yield wealthy, not rich. He is rich, that possesseth what he got justly, and us•th what he possesseth conscionably, other wealthy, are not unlike either the Capuchines, or the Seculars.

Some, like the former, profess beggary, though they possess the Indies: these had rather fill their eye than their belly, and will not break a Sum, though they endanger their healths. The other sort, are like the Seculars, that will fare well, though with a hard farewell. But (as the Harlot, so) often Vice brings a man to a morsel of bread. Prov. 6. Thus Tibi fit damn, vitio lucrosa voluptas: Pleasure is no less, then a loss to thee, then a gain to Sin. It is not amiss, to answer Satan's Inuiters to this Feast, as the vicious Poet his Cockatrice.

Cur si mutatus quaeris? quia munera posis.

Haec te non patitur causa placere mihi.

It is even one reason, to dissuade us from sin, that it is costly.

2. In his good name. No worldly undoing is like this shipwreck. Goods may be redeemed, but this (semel amissa, postea nullus eris) once utterly lost, thou art nobody. It is hard to recover the Set, when a man is put to the after-game for his credit. Though many a man's reputation be but (hypemenium vum) a rotten Egg; while he is a great dealer with other men's goods, and of himself no better then a beggar. And though the most famous are but Astmatici, short-breathed men, and their reputation no better then Ephraim's righteousness, but a morning dew: yet actum est de homine, cum actum est de nomine, when a man's good name is done, himself is undone.

A man, indeed, may lose his good name without cause; and be at once accused & abused; when slanders against him are maliciously excepted, & easily accepted. But God shall bring forth his righteousness as the light, and his Judgment as the noon day. Contrarily, another man hides the ulcers of his sore conscience with the playsters of sound repute! But to be puffed up with the wrongful estimation of our selves, by the flattering breath of others blown praises, is a ridiculous pride. Saepe flagellatur in cord proprio, qui laudatur in or alieno. Many, that are commended in other mouths, are secretly and justly snibbed in their own conscience. Such a one couzens his neighbors, they one another, and all himself. And as originally the deceit came from him, so eventually the shame will end in him. Hence they, whose fames have been carried furthest on the wings of report, have been after (by the manifestation of their hidden wickednesses) more deaded in men's thoughts, then in their own carcass. For the name of the wicked shall rot.

This is the mischief, which sin in general, as whoredom in particular, works to the name; a rotten reputation, an infamous farne, a reproach for a report: that their silent memories are never conjured up from the grave of oblivion, but as the Son of Neba's; for their own disgrace; and for an intimation of terror, to the imitation of their wickedness. It were well for them, if Time, which unnaturally devours his own brood, could as well still their mention, as it hath staid their motion: or that their memorial might not suruiue their funeral. Now, though it be no evident demonstration, yet it is a very ominous and suspicious thing, to have an ill name. The Proverb saith, he is half hanged. A thief before the Judge speeds the worse for his notorious name. Is this all? no; but as he, whose breath is stifled with a cord, is wholly hanged: so he that hath strangled his own reputation, which is the breath of his breath, with a lewd life, is at least half suspended. His Infamy hangs on the Gybbet of popular contempt, till it be recovered. He is half alive, half a corps. It was the plain meaning of the Proverb.

Now, that a bad name is a broad shame, it appears; because no Stews-haunter would be called a Whore-monger. No Papist an Idolater, no Usurer an Usurer. All sinners are ashamed to be accounted, what they have assumed to be. But it is certain that he that is ashamed of his name, his name may be ashamed of him. As thou lovest thy reputation with men, seek the testimony of thine own conscience. It is the best fame, that carries credit with God. Let men say, what they list, Oh Lord thou knowest mine innocence. Yet, because it is hard to do good, unless a man be reputed good, therefore dare not to darken the light of thy name, by the gross clouds of thy Impieties. This is the second destruction that continued Vice brings her Lovers. A wound and dishonor shall he get, and his reproach shall not be wiped away. When he hath done it, he is undone by it. Perdit honorem, perdendo honestatem. The dishonesty in him, shall bring dishonor to him▪ he builds, Haman-like a gallows for his own credit.

3. In his health. The precepts of Wisdom, practiced with obedience, bring health to the flesh, & are life to those that find them. But sin is rottonnesse to the bones. He that committeth fornication, saith Saint Paul, sinneth against his own body. Let it be inevitably true in this sin, it is (at least accidentally) true in all sins. For though God suffers some reprobates to keep some health and to escape common Plagues: that they have fat eyes and clear lungs: merry hearts, and nimble loins: and can stroke their gray hairs: yet often he either puts them on the rack of some terrible disease, or quite puts out their candle. Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days. All sickness originally proceeds from sin, all weakness from wickedness. As Mephibosheth caught his lameness by falling from his Nur•e; so all men their diseasednes by falling from their Christ. The evil disposition of the soul, mars the good composition of the body. There is no disaster to the members, but for disorder in the manners. All diseases are God's real sermons from heaven, whereby he accuseth and punisheth man for his sins.

The Harlot is a plague to the flesh: she is worse then a feauer; more infectious then the püstilence. Every Nation hath his several disease. Irish the Ague, Spanyards the Pip, Dutchmen the dropsy, French their fatal and merited misery; neither do the English go scot-free. All have their special plagues somewhat proper to themselves, except whoredom and sin communicate them. But the Harlot is an universal plague, whereof no Nation is free. she makes the strong man glad of po••on, brings health acquainted with the Pysician: and he that stoutly denied the knowledge of his gate, now stands trembling at his study door, with a bare head, a bending knee, and an humble phrase. She is the common sink of all corruptions, both natural and preternaturall, incident to the conscience or corpse: and hath more diseases attending on her then the Hospital.

The Madianit•sh Harlot, Sin, leads in a train of no fewer nor weaker plagues, Consumptions, Feauers, Inflammations, Botches, Emerods, Pestilences, are (peccati qedisuuae) the observant hand-maids of iniquity. As it is, then, wicked to take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an Harlot; so it is wretched to divorce the affections of the mind from God, and wed them to any impiety. Thus do these pair of Harlots impair the health.

4. They both concur to spoil a man's soul: whiles the Soul of the soul, God's Spirit, (quo agitante calescimus) is by this bereaved us. In him we live, move, and have our being. In illo viuimus: viuimus, per naturam, been viuimus per gratiam. In illo mouemus, vel mouemur potius, ad humana, ad diuina opera suscipienda. 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉; essentiam habemus, quoad esse, et quoad been esse. In him all live naturally, some graciously. In him we move, or rather are moved, to the performance, all of human works, some of divine. In him we have our being; both that we are at all, and that we are well. This better life is the soul spoiled of, when sin hath taken it captive. The Adulteress will hunt for the precious life. She is ambitious and would usurp God's due and claim the heart, the soul. He that doth love her destroyeth his own soul. Which she loves not for it self, but for the destruction of it: that all the blossoms of grace may dwindle and shrink away, as blooms in a nipping Frost: and all our comforts run from us, as flatterers from a falling Greatness, or as Vermin from an house on fire. Nay, even both thy lives are endangered. The wicked man go•h after her, as a fool to the correction of the st•ckes; till a 〈ϕ〉 strike through his liver, as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life. It is as inevitably true of the spiritual Harlots mischief. For the turning away of the simple shall slay them. Save my life and take my goods, saith the prostrate and yielding Traveler to the thief. But there is no mercy with this enemy: the life must pay for it. She is worse then that invincible Navy, that threatened to cut the throats of all (Men, Women, Infants:) but I would to God, she might go hence again without her errand, as they did; and have as little cause to brag of her conquests.

Thus have we described the Temptresse. The Tempted follows, who are here called the Dead. There be three kinds of death, corporal, spiritual, eternal. Corporal, when the body leaves this life. Spiritual, when the soul forsakes, and is forsaken of grace. Eternal, when both shall be thrown into hell. 1. is the separation of the soul from the body. 2. is the separation of body and soul from grace. 3. the separation of them both from everlasting happiness. Man hath two parts, by which he lives; and two places, wherein he might live, if he obeyed God: Earth for a time, Heaven forever. This Harlot Sin, deprives either part of man in either place of true life; and subjects him, both to the first and second death. Let us therefore examine in these particulars, first, what this death is, and secondly, how Satan's guests, the wicked, may be said liable thereunto.

1. Corporal death is the departure of the soul from the body, whereby the body is left dead, without action, motion, sense. For the life of the body, is the union of the soul with it. For which essential dependence, the soul is often called and taken for the life. Peter said unto him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my soul for thy sake. 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉, his soul, meaning as it is translated, his life. And He that findeth his soul, shall loose it: but he that looseth his soul for my sake, shall find it. Here the Soul is taken for the Life. So that in this death there is the separation of the soul and body, the dissolution of the person, the privation of life, the continuance of death: for there is no possible regresse from the privation to the habit, except by the supernatural and miraculous hand of God. This is the first but not the worst death, which sin procureth. And though the special de•nesse of the guests here be spiritual: yet this, which we call natural, may be implied, may be applied: for when God threatened death to Adams sin, in illo die moriris: in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die; yet Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years after. There was, notwithstanding, no delay, no delusion of God's decree: for in ipso die, in that very day death took hold on him; and so is the Hebrew phrase, dying, thou shalt die; fall into a languishing, and incurable consumption, that shall never leave thee, till it bring thee to thy grave. So that he instantly died, not by present separation of soul and body, but by mortality, mutabilitie, misery, yea by sorrow and pain, as the instruments and agents of Death. Thus said that Father. After a man beginneth to be in this body, (by reason of his sin) he is even in death.

The wicked then, are not only called Dead, because the conscience is dead; but also in respect of God's decree, whose inviolable substitution of Death to Sin cannot be evaded, avoided. It is the Statute-law decreed in the great Parliament of Heaven. Statutum omnibus se•el mori. It is appointed unto men once to die. This is one special kindness that sin doth us; one kiss of her lips. She gives her lovers three mortal kisses. The first kills the conscience: the second the carcass: the third body and soul forever. Death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. So Paul schools his Corinthians. For this cause many are weare and sick among you, and many sleep. And conclusiue, peccati stipendium mors. The wages of sin is Death. This Death is to the wicked, death indeed, even as it is in it own full nature, the curse of God; the suburbes of Hell. Neither is this unjust dealing with God, that man should incur the death of his body, that had rejected the life of his soul. nisi praecessisset in peccato mors animae, numquam corporis mors in supplicio sequeretur. If sin had not first wounded the body, death could not have killed the soul. Hence saith Augustine. Men shun the death of the flesh rather then the death of the spirit: that is, the punishment, rather then the cause of the punishment, Indeed Death considered in Christ, and joined with a good life, is to God's elect an advantage: nothing else, but a bridge over this tempestuous sea to Paradise. God's mercy made it so, saith S. Augustine, Not by making death in it self good, but an instrument of good to his. This he demonstrates by an instance. As the Law is not evil, when it increaseth the lust of sinners, s• death is not good, though it augm•nt the glory of su•ferers. The wicked use the law ill, though the law be good. The good die well, though death be evil. Hence saith Solomon. The day of death is better then the day of ones birth. For our death is (not obitus, sed abitus) not a perishing but a parting. Non amittitur anima, praemittitur tantum. The soul is not lost to the body, but only sent before it to joy. Si durius seponitur, melius reponitur. If the soul be painfully laid off, it is joyfully laid up. Though every man that hath his Genesis, must have his Exodus; and they that are borne must die. Yet saith Tertullian of the Saints: Profectio est, quam putas mo•tem. Our dying on earth, is but the taking our journey to Heaven. Simeon departs, and that in peace. In pace, in pacem. Death cannot be eventually hurtful to the good; for it no sooner takes away the temporal life, but Christ gives eternal in the room of it.

Alas! 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : Corpora, cadauera. Our graves shall as surely be Coffins to our bodies, as our bodies have been Coffins to our souls. The mind is but in bondage, whiles the body holds it on earth. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , quasi 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , as Plato affirms. Of whom saith an Anthony; that when he saw one too indulgent to his flesh in high Diet, he asked him; What do you mean to make your prison so strong? Thus, qui gloriatur in viribus corporis, gloriatur in viribus carceris: He that boasteth the strength of his body, doth but brag, how strong the Prison is, wherein he is jailed.

〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . The body is the disease, the grave, the destiny, the necessity and burden of the soul.

Hinc cupiunt, metuunt{que}, dolent, gaudent{que}; nec auras

Respiciunt clausae tenebris et carcere caeco.

Fears, joys, griefs, and desires man's life do share:

It wants no ills, that in a Prison are.

It was a good observation, that fell from that Stoic. Homo calamitatis fabula, infaelicitatis tabula. Man is a Story of woe, and a map of misery. So Mantuan.

Nam quid longa dies nobis, nisi longa dolorum

Colluvies? Longi patientià carceris, aetas?

It appears then, that Death is, to the good, a procurer of good. Mors intermittit vitam, non eripit. Venit iterum, qui nos in lucem reponat dies. Their Death is but like the taking in sunder of a Clock, which is pulled a pieces by the makers hand, that it may be scowred, and repolished, and made go more perfectly. But Death to the wicked is the second step to that infernal Vault, that shall breed either an innovation of their joys, or an addition to their sorrows. Dives for his momentary pleasures, hath insufferable pains. Judas goes from the Gallows to the Pit. Esau from his dissolution in earth, to his desolation in Hell. The dead are there. Though the dead in soul be meant literally, yet it fetcheth in the body also. For as original sin is the original cause of Death, so actual sins hasten it. Men speed out a Commission of Iniquities against their own lives. So the envious man rots his own bones. The Glutton strangles, the Drunkard drowns himself. The male-content dryes up his blood in fretting. The covetous, whiles he Italianates his conscience, and would Romanize his estate, starves himself in plain English: and would hang himself, when the Market falls, but that he is loath to be at the charges of a Halter. Thus it is a Feast of Death, both for the present sense, and future certainty of it. The dead are there.

2. Spiritual death is called the death of the soul: which consisteth not in the loss of her understanding and will (these she can never loose, no not in Hell) but of the truth and grace of God; wanting both the light of faith to direct her, and the strength of Love to incite her to goodness. For to be carnally minded is death: but to be spiritually minded, is life and peace. The soul is the life of the body, God of the soul. The spirit gone utterly from us, we are dead. And so especially, are the guests of Satan, dead. You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins. And the Widow that liveth in pleasure, is dead whiles she liveth. This diuorcement and separation made betwixt God and the soul by sin, is (mors animae) the death of the soul. But your Iniquities have separated between you and your God. But we live by faith: and that in the Son of God. His spirit quickens us, as the soul doth a lump of flesh, when God infuseth it.

Now because these terms of spiritual death are communicated both to the elect and reprobates, it is not amiss to conceive, that there is a double kind of spiritual death. 1. In regard of the Subject that dieth. 2. In regard of the Object whereunto it dieth. Spiritual death in the faithful is three-fold.

1. They are dead to Sin. How shall we that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? A dead nature cannot work. He that is dead to sin, cannot, as he is dead, sin. We sin indeed, not because we are dead to sin, but because not dead enough. Would to God you were yet more dead, that you might yet more live. This is called Mortification. What are mortified? Lusters. The wicked have mortification too; but it is of grace. Matth. 8. They are both jointly expressed. Let the dead bury the dead. Which Saint Augustine expounds. Let the spiritually dead, bury those that are corporally dead. The faithful are dead to sin: the faithless are dead in sin. It is true life to be thus dead. Mortificatio concupiscentiae, vivificatio animae: so far is the spirit quickened, as the flesh is mortified. So true is this Paradox; that a Christian so far lives, as he is dead: so far he is a Conqueror, as he is conquered. Vincendo se, vincitur à se. By overcoming himself, he is overcome of himself. Whiles he over-rules his lusts, his soul rules him. When the outward cold rageth with greatest violence, the inward heat is more and more effectual. When Death hath killed and stilled concupiscence, the heart begins to live. This war makes our peace.

This life and death is wrought in us by Christ: who at one blow slew our sins, and saved our souls. Vna eademque manus vulnus opem tulit. One and the same hand gave the wound and the cure. Vulneratur concupiscentia, sanatur conscientia. The deadly blow to the concupiscence, hath revived the conscience. For Christ takes away as well (dominandi vim, as damnandi vim) the dominion of sin, as the damnation of sin. He died, that sin might not reign in our mortal body, he came to destroy, not only the Devil, but the works of the Devil. Hence if you would, with the spectacles of the Scriptures, read your own estates to God, Reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. This trial consists not in being free from lusts, but in bridling them: not in scaping temptation, but in vanquishing it. It is enough, that in all these things, we are more then Conquerors, through him that loved us.

2. They are dead to the Law. For I through the Law, am dead to the Law, that I might live unto God. Wherein he opposeth the Law against the Law, the new against the old, the Law of Christ, against that of Moses. This accuseth the accusing, condemneth the condemning Law. The Papists understand this of the ceremonial Law: but Paul plainly expresseth, that the Law moral, which would have been to us a Law mor•all, is put under: we are dead unto it. As Christ at once came over death, and overcame death, et super it, e• superat. So we, in him, are exempted from the condemning power and killing letter of the Law; and by being dead unto it, are alive over it. Indeed the Law still abides: as Christ when he rose from the grave, the grave remained still. Peter freed from the Prison, the Palsy from his Bed, the young man from his Coffin, the Prison, Bed, Coffin remain still; the persons are delivered. So the Law abides to mortify our lusts still more and more, but our conscience is freed from the bondage of it. We are dead unto it.

3. They are dead to the world. This Death is double, Active and Passive.

1. Active. The world is dead unto us. The vanity of carnal joys, the variety of vanities, are as bitter to us, as pleasant to the Cosmopolite or worldling. And since we must give our voices either to God or Mammon: when God asketh as Jehu, Who is on my side, who? We stand out for our God. Angustum est stratum pectoris humani, et vtrum{que} operire non potest. Mans heart is too narrow a bed, to lodge both God and the world in at once. Qui vtrum{que} ambit, in vtro{que} deficiet. The Hound that follows two Hares, will catch neither. Nemo potest duobus Dominis, neque dominijs, inseruire. No man can serve two Masters, with true service; especially when they command contrary things. Thus is the world dead to us: For since the world is not so precious as the soul; we leave the world to keep our soul: since both cannot well be affected at once. Therefore we account all things dross and loss for the excellent knowledge of Christ.

2. Passive. We are dead to the world. As we esteem it dross, it esteems us filth. We are made as the filth of the world, and as the off-scowring of all things unto this day. As we, in a holy contempt, tread it under in our works, and villify it in our words, so it looks upon us betwixt scorn and anger, and offers to set his foot on our necks. But vicimus, we have conquered. Whosoever is borne of God, overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Let us rejoice, therefore, in our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to us, and we to the world.

These are good deaths! blessed souls, that are thus dead. Their death is Mortification, and like the Phoenix, they are no sooner dead, but they are new borne. Their old man's Autumn is their new man's Spring-tide. There are none thus dead at this Feast.

The dead, here, have seared consciences, poisoned affections, warped, withered, rott•n souls. Twice dead, faith Saint Jude, and some without hope of growing, plucked up by the roots. Though the Pythagorean error, the transanimation or the departure of the soul from man to man, was brought to the Basilideon heresy: Nay, (which was more gross) though the Poets feigned, that the souls of men departed into beasts. Orpheus into the Swanne, Ajax into the Lyon, Agamemnon into the Eagle, Politicians into Bees and Ants, the luxurious into Hogs, tyrants into Wolves: which were positions for Machiavelli, and Articles of Lucians faith. Yet they might rather, (and that more favorably to their own credits, speaking according to men's lives) have affirmed that the spirits of beasts might rather seem to have entered men: if at leas• the beasts do not preserve their nature better then men. They live whiles they live; men are dead even living. Impie vivere est diu mori. A wicked life is a continual death. And we may say of an old wicked man, not that he hath lived, but that he hath been long. Deus vita, à qua qui distinguitur perit. God is the true life, without whom we cannot live.

The heart of a wicked man thus becometh dead. The Devil works by suggesting, man by consenting, God by forsaking. He forsakes thus. 1. By suffering a hard heart to grow harder. 2. By giving success to ill purposes, which he could have disappointed. 3. By not imparting the assistance of his spirit. Thus he leaves them in darkness, that would not choose the light; and finding their hearts vndisposed to believe, delivers them up to Infidelity. His not willing to soften, is enough to harden: his not willing to enlighten, is to darken. Dei claudare est clausis non aperire. God is then said to shut up, when he doth not open to them that are shut up. God is able to soften the hard heart, open the blind eye, pierce the deaf ear: when he doth, it is mercy; when not, it is Justice. Only our falling is from our selves. Oh Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help. For God is ever foremost in love, but last in hate. He loved us, before we loved him: but we hate him, before he hates us. Multi ne laberentur detenti, nulli vt laberentur impuls. God preserves many from falling, but he thrusteth none down. By his strength we stand, by our own weakness we fall.

As in the sickness of the body, so of the soul, there are critical days, secret to our selves, but well known to God; whereby he sees our recovery unlikely, and therefore turns us over to the danger of our sickness. That now too late Jerusalem knows, what was offered her in the day of her visitation. God blinds the soul blinded before by Satan; and hardens again Pharaohs self-hardened heart: Et quia non faciunt bona quae cognoscunt, non cognoscent mala quae faciunt. Because they would not do the good they knew, they shall do the evil they knew not. Thus is the souls death degreed up. Sin gathers strength by custom, and creeps like some contagious disease in the body from joint to joint; and because not timely spied and medicined, it threatens universal hazard to the whole. It swells like the Sea: Vnda leuis, maiora volumina, sluctus ad coelum. An Egg, a Cockatrice, a Serpent, a fiery flying Serpent. Custom indeed kills the soul. The Curse that the Cretans used against their enemies, was not fire on their houses, nor rottenness on their beasts, nor a sword at their hearts; but that, which would in time treble to them all these mischiefs, that they might be delighted with an evil custom. Temptation assaults the heart: consent wounds it: it lies sick of action: it dies by delight in sin: it is buried by custom. The Bell hath tolled for it, God's word hath mourned: the Church hath prayed for it: but (quid valeant signa precesie?) What good can signs & prayers do, when we voluntarily yield our heart to him that violently kills it? Thus God leaves the heart, and Satan ceaseth on it, whose gripes are not gentler then Death.

Thus the habit of sin takes away the sense of sin; and the conscience that was at first raw and bleeding, as newly wounded, is now seared up with an hot iron. The conscience of a wicked man first speaks to him, as Peter t• Christ, Master look to thyself. But he stops her mouth with a violent hand. Yet she would fain speak with him, like the importunate Widow, to do her justice. He cannot well be rid of her, therefore he sets her a day of hearing, and when it is come, faileth her. She cries yet louder for audience; and when all his corrupt and bribed affections cannot charm her silence, he drowns her complaints at a Tavern, or laughs her out of countenance at a Theater. But if the pulse beats not, the body is most dangerously sick, if the conscience prick not, there is a dying soul. It is a lawless School, where there is an awe-less Monitor. The City is easily surprised, where the watch cannot ring the alarms. No marvel, if numbness be in the heart; when there is drunkenness in the conscience.

These are the dead guests. Dead to all goodness. Deafe ears, lame feet, blind eyes, maimed hands, when there is any employment for them in God's service. Eyes full of lust, void of compassion. Ears deaf to the word, open to vanity. Feet, swift to shed blood, slow to the Temple. Hands open to extortion, shut to charity. To all religion the heart is a piece of dead flesh. No love, no fear, no care, no pain can penetrate their senseless and remorseless hearts. I know, that according to the speech of the Philosopher, Nemo fit repent miser: This is no sudden evil:

they were borne sick, they have made themselves dead. Custom hath inveterated the ulcer, rankled the conscience, and now sin flowtes the Physicians cure, knowing the soul dead. Through many wounds they come to this death. At first they sin and care not, now they sin and know not: The often taken Potion never works. Even the Physic of reproof turns now to their hardening. Oh that our times were not full of this deadness! How many never take the mask of Religion but to serve their own turns! And when piety becomes their advantage, yet they at once counterfeit and contemn it. If a wished success answer the intention of their minds, and contention of their hands, God is not worthy of the praise; either the•r fortune or their wit hath the glory of the deed, and thanks for it. But if they be crossed, God shall be blasphemed under the name of destiny; and he shall be blamed for their ill, to whom they will not be beholding for their good.

God is not thought of but in extremity, not spoken of but in blasphemy. Oh dead hearts! whose funeral we may lament, whose reviuing we may, almost, not hope. But what? will this deadness never be a little wak•ned? True it is, that God must miraculously raise up the soul thus dead, and put the life of his grace into it, or it is d•sperate. The conscience, I confess, will not ever lie quiet in these dead guests: but as they have iayled up that for a while in the darkness of Security; so when God looseth it, it will rage as fast against them, and dog them to their graves. For as there is a Heaven on earth, so a Hell on earth. The dead to sin are heaven'd in this world: the dead in sin are hell'd here, by the tormenting anguish of an vnappeaseable conscience. As Bishop Latimer, in a Sermon, told these guests of a Feast in Hell; which will afford them little mirth: where weeping is served in for the first course, gnashing of teeth for the second. So, after their Feast on Earth, which was no better then Numa's, where the Table swomme with delicate dishes, but they were swimming dishes, spectand• non gustandae dapes; Let them prepare for another Banket, where groans shall be their bread, and tears their drink, sighs and sorrows all their Iunkets; which the Erynnis of conscience, and the Megaera of desperation shall serve in, and no euerlastingnesse of time shall take away.

But these spiritually dead guests do not evermore scape so long: sometimes God gives them in this life a draught of that vial of his wrath which they shall after sup off to the bottom. The wicked man, that had no fear, now shall have too much fear. He that begun with the wanton Comedy of presumption and profaneness, ends with the Tragedie of horror and despair. Before he was so a-sleep, that nothing could waken him: now he is so waking, that nothing can bring him a-sleep. Neither disport abroad, nor quiet at home can possess him: he cannot possess himself. Sin is not so smooth at setting forth, as turbulent at the journeys end. The wicked have their day• wherein they run from pleasure to pleasure, as Job's children from banket to banket: their joys have changes of variety, little intermission, no cessation; neither come they faster, then their lusts call for them. So God hath his day: And woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord: to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness and not light. As if a man did flee from a Lyon, and a Bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the Wall, and a Serpent bit him. Such is the unrest of a conscience brought to fret for his sins. So August. Fugit ab agro in ciuitatem, à publico ad domum, à domo in cubiculum. He runs from the field into the City, from the City to his house, and in his house to the priuatest Chamber: but he cannot fly his enemy▪ that cannot fly himself.

At first the Devils guest pursues pleasure so eagerly, that he would break down the bars that shut it from him, and quarrel, with venture of his blood, for his delights, nay for the conditions of his own sorrow and damnation. Now pleasure is offered him: no, it will not down. Music stands at his Windore: it makes him as mad with discontent, as it did once with joy. No •est can stir his laughter, no company can waken his unreasonable and unseasonable melancholy. Now he that was madder then N•ro in his delights, fear• compasseth him on every side. He starts at his own shadow, and would change firmness with an Aspen leaf. He thinks, like the Burgundians, every Thistle a Launce, every Tree a man, every man a Devil. They fear, where no fear was, saith the Psalmist. They think, they see, what they do not see. This is the wicked man's alteration: time is, he will not be warned; time comes, he will not be comforted. Then he is satisfied with lusts, that thought satisfaction impossible. Riches weary him now to keep them more then they wearied him once to get them; and that was enough. So I have read the oppressers will. Lego omnia bona mea domino Regi, corpus sepulturae, animam diabolo. I bequeath all my goods to the King, my body to the grave, my soul to the Devil. He that did wrong to all, would now seem to do right to some; in giving his coin to the Prince, whom he had deceived; his soul to the Devil, whom he had se•ued. Wherein, as he had formerly injured man, now he in•ures both God and himself too.

3. I have dwelt the longer on this spiritual deadness, because the guests at this banquet have this death in present: the precedent and subsequent are both future; the one naturally incurred by sin, the other justly inflicted for unrepented sin. For all shall die the corporal death, He that feareth an oath, as well as he that sweareth, the •religious as the profane. But this last, which is Eternal death, shall only cease on them, that have before hand with a spiritual death slain themselves. This therefore is called the second death. Blessed and holy is he, that hath part in the first resurrection, (which is the spiritual life by grace:) On such the second death hath no power. He that is by Christ raised from the first death, shall by Christ also scape the second. But he that is dead spiritually, after he hath died corporally, shall also die eternally. This is that everlasting separation of body and soul from God, and consequently from all comfort. Fear him, saith our Savior, that is able to destroy both body and soul in Hell. And many of them, that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. This is that death, that God delights not in. His goodness hath no pleasure in it, though his justice must inflict it.

Man by sin hath offended God an infinite Majesty, and therefore deserves an infinite misery. Now because he is a nature finite, he cannot suffer a punishment infinite in greatness, simul et semel, together and at once: he must therefore endure it (successive sine fine) successively without end. The punishment must be proportioned to the sin; because not in present greatness, therefore in eternal continuance. Christ for his elect suffered in short time sufficient punishment for their sins: for it is all one, for one that is eternal to die, and for one to die eternally. But he for whom Christ suffered not in that short time, must suffer for himself beyond all times, even forever.

This is the last Death: a living death, or a dying life, what shall I term it? If it be life, how doth it kill? If death, how doth it live? There is neither life nor death but hath some good in it. In life there is some ease: in death an end. But in this death neither ease nor end. Prima mors animam dolentem pellet de corpore: secunda mors animam nolentem tenet in corpore. The first death drives the soul unwillingly from the body; the second death holds the soul unwillingly in the body. In those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall fly from them. Their worm shall not die. Thus saith the Scripture, morietur mortem, they shall die the death. Yet their death hath much too much life in it. For there is a perfection given to the body and soul after this life; as in heaven to the stronger participation of comfort, so in hell to the more sensible receiving of torment. The eye shall see more perspicuously, and the ear hear more quickly, and the sense feel more sharply, though all the objects of these be sorrow and anguish. Vermis conscientiam corrodet, ignis carnem comburet, quia et cord et corpore deliquerunt. The worm shall gnaw the conscience, the fire burn the flesh, because both flesh and conscience have offended. This is the fearful death, which these guests incur: this is the Sho at the Devils Banquet. God in his Justice suffers him to reward his guests, as he is rewarded himself, and (since they loved his work) to give them the stipend due to his service. These are the tempted guests: dead.

The vulgar Latin translation, I know not upon what ground, hath interpreted here, for mortui, Gigantes: thus: he knoweth not that the Giants are there. Monstrous men, that would dart thunder at God himself; and raise up mountains of impiety against Heaven. As if they were only great men that feasted at Satan's Banquet, whose riches were able to minister matter to their pleasures. And surely such are in these days: of whose sins when we have cast an inventory account, we might thus with the Poet sum up themselves.

Vi dicam quid sis? magnus es Ardelio.

Thou hast great lands, great power, great sins: and than

Dost ask me what thou art? th'art a great man.

The Giants, in the Scripture, were men of a huge stature, of a fierce nature. The Poets feigned their Giants to be begotten and bred of the Sun and the Earth, and to offer violence to the God's: some of them having an hundred hands, as Briareiu was called centimanus: meaning, they were of great command; as Helen wrote to Paris of her husband Menelaus. An nescis longas regibus esse manus? This word Giants, if the original did afford it, must be referred, either to the guests; signifying that monstrous men resorted to the Harlots table, & that it was Gigantum convivium, a tyrannous feast: or else (and that rather) to the tormentors; which are laid in ambush, to surprise all the comers in, and carry them as a prey to Hell. But because the best translations give no such word, and it is far fetched, I let it fall, as I took it up.

The third person here inserted, is the Attempted: the new guest whom she strives to bring in to the rest. He is described by his ignorance, Nescit: He knoweth not what company is in the house, that the dead are there. It is the Devils policy, when he would ransack and rob the house of our conscience, like a thief to put out the candle of our knowledge. That we might neither discern his purposes, nor decline his mischeefes. He hath had his instruments in all ages, to darken the light of knowledge. Domitian turns Philosophy into banishment. Julian shuts up the School-doors. The barbarous soldiers under Clement the seventh, burned that excellent Vatican library. Their reasons concurred with Julian's prohibition to the Christians. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : least they kill us with our own weapons. For it is said even of Gentile learning. Hic est Goliae gladius, quo ipse Goliath ingulandus est. Hic Herculis claua, qua rabidi inter Ethnicos canes percutiendi sunt. This is that Goliath's sword, whereby the Philistine himself is wounded. This is that Hercules clubbe, to smite the mad dogs amongst the heathen. Habadallus, Muhammad's scholar, that Syrian Tyrant, forbad all Christian children in his dominions, to go to school; that by ignorance he might draw them to superstition. For 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . To be destitute of learning is to dance in the dark. These were all Satan's instruments; yet they come short of the Pope; whose policy to advance his Hierarchy, is to oppress men's consciences with ignorance: teaching that the fullness of zeal, doth arise from the emptiness of knowledge: even as fast as fire flasheth out of a fish-pond.

There are degrees in sin, so in ignorance. It is a sin to be ignorant of that we should know: but a greater sin to be ignorant of that we have means to know. Ignorance may be distinguished into five kinds. Humane, natural, affected, invincible, proud and puffed up.

1 The first is human. This is not sinful, as in Adam, not to know his nakedness, nor Satan's subtlety. So in the Angels, yea even in the head of Angels Christ himself, as man, not to know the latter day. Proprium est naturae humanae futura ignorare. It is a thing simply proper to the nature of man, to be ignorant of future things. No legal injunction binds us to it: no censure shall pass against us for the want of it. This is called ignorantia iusta, an vnfaulty ignorance.

2 The second is natural: called ignorantia inirmitatis vel imperitiae: the ignorance of infirmity, incident to man's nature since his fall. For desiring to know more, he knew less. This is the effect of sin, sin in it self, and the cause of sin. It was bred by transgression, it doth breed transgression, and is no less then transgression of it own nature: for God's law binds us to the knowledge of his law. The blind swallows many a fly: the ignorant cannot be innocent. This is ignorantia simplex, inuoluntaria, priuatiuae, as the School calls it. A sin which the Papists generally, and I fear, many Protestants particularly, never repent of. David doth. It is this, that makes us aliens from God. Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, and through the blindness of their heart. Saint Paull calls his ignorance, the cause of his sins. Et nescius seruus poenas luit, saith Christ: even the ignorant servant shall be beaten with some stripes. Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge. A Prophecy mystically fulfilled in these days, in respect of our spiritual bondage to Satan; The God of this world having blinded the minds of unbelievers. This ignorance cannot excuse, for we are bound to know. The breach of our National statutes cannot go impune by the plea of Ignorance. It may (a tanto not a toto) a little quallifie and allay our punishments, not annihilate them. This is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , Folly; and he that drinks of ollies cup, shall have little cause to lick his lips after it. Nature is a common school-master; and the Gentiles sinning against that monitor, justly perish. For the invisible things of God may be understood by the things that are made: so that they are without excuse. Even the errors of the Jews had their sacrifices, and shall not the ignorances of the Christians cry God mercy? This ignorance is sinful, yea even in those that cannot have the means of knowledge.

3. The third is an affected ignorance. This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. These shut their ears when God calleth; and being housed in their security, will not step to the door, to see if the Sun shines. This ignorance, if I may say so, doth reside rather in their affections than understanding part. They willfully know not, saith S. Peter. They know, but will not know, and run with broad eyes to destruction. Tell them that Christ is at Jerusalem: no, it is too far off. Nay, venit ad limina virtus, the kingdom of Heaven is among you: then if they must needs go to Church, they will go hooded. Prejudice of affections shall muffle the eyes of knowledge. Thus the Devil carries them quietly to Hell; as the Falconer his hooded Hawk, which bare-fac'd would bait, and be too wild to sit on his list. These sometimes have gray hairs, and green affections. Like a man that being borne near a great City, yet never traveled to it: He can direct others the way, he never went. These to avoid that fault, which the Traveler found in England, horologia non bene ordinata, that our clockes were not well kept (he meant, our hours were ill spent) will have no clock at all in their house, to tell them how their time passeth; no informer of their erring ways. And as if a candle would set their house on fire, they live perpetually in the dark. Micah was glad, he had got a Priest; these are glad they are got far from a Priest: and had as lief go to Hell darkling, as with a torch.

4. There is an Invincible Ignorance; when God hath naturally darkened the understanding, by a sore punishment of original sin. Idioticum hoc. No art nor eloquence can put knowledge into that heart which nature hath not opened to receive it: as no mind can be opened, which God hath locked up. He keeps the keys: he openeth and no man shutteth, he shutteth and no man openeth. The door of this mind is so fast barred up, that no help of man can open it. Neither can there be, in this, a complaint against God's Justice: since that our first sin hath deserved a greater punishment.

5. The last, is a proud Ignorance; whereof there is no hope, saith Solomon. The other is invincible, but indeed this more invincible, a fool is sooner taught. So Christ foiled the Pharisees with their own weapons; and proved their weakness by their arguments for their own strength. If you were blind, you should have no sin; but now you say, we see; therefore your sin remaineth. The Pharisees, though blind, will be Seers: Nicodemus a Master in Israel, and yet knew nothing of regeneration. Nihil grauius, quam si id, quod ignorat quis, scire se credat. There is nothing more grievous then that a man should be persuaded he knows that soundly whereof he is totally ignorant. Therefore saith Chrysostom. Praestat proba ignorantia detineri, quam falsa opinione mancipari, It is better to be held in with an honest ignorance, then to run out upon a false opinion. It is hard plowing in the ground not stocked: ill writing in a paper full of lines. These fly from instruction as the Tiger from the trumpet. Others are comprehended of the light; these think they comprehend the light, when, as the Apostle saith, they are held of darkness.

Let us now see which of these ignorances is here meant? I answer; exempting the first, Satan's Harlot, Vice hath guests of all these sorts. Many that go after her, as an Ox to the slaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the stocks. Some •unne to the Banket, and know not: some know and run: all are fools, and destitute (if not of natural, yet) of spiritual understanding. To this purpose she apteth her speech here. Who so is simple, let him turn in hither; and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith, &c. Knowledge is good, yet if disjoined from grace, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, it is nothing. Nihil in esse gratiae, quamuis aliquid in esse naturae. Nothing in grace, though something in nature: knowledge human is a good stirrup to get up by to preferment: Divine a a good gale of wind to wast us to Heaven. But charity is better. Knowledge often bloweth up, but charity buildeth up. Aristotle calls knowledge the Souls eye: but then saith our Savior, if the light be darkness, how great is that darkness?

True it is, that knowledge without honesty doth more hurt. The Unicorns horn, that in a wise man's hand is helpful, is in the beasts head hurtful. If a man be a beast in his affections, in his manners; the more skilful, the more illfull. Knowledge hath two pillars, Learning and Discreation. The greatest Scholar without his two eyes, of Discreation and Honesty, is like blind Sampson, apt to no good, able to much mischief. Prudence is a virtue of the soul, nay the very •oule of virtue. The Mistress to guide the life in goodness. All moral virtues are beholding to wisdom. She directs Bounty what to give, when to give, where to give. And Fortitude, with whom, for what, and how to sight. Knowledge is excellent, to prevent dangers imminent; and to keep us from the snares of this strange woman. But if the Devil in our days should have no guests, but those that are merely ignorant, his rooms would be more empty then they are; and his Ordinary break forwant of Customers. But now a-days (alas, when was it much better? and yet how can it be much worse?) we know sin, yet affect it, act it. Time was, we were ignorant and blind, now we have eyes and abuse them. Tyre and Sidon burn in Hell, and their smoke ascends for evermore, that had no preaching in their Cities: but our Country is sown with mercies, and our •elues fatted with the doctrine of life, who shall excuse our lame, lean, and ill-favored lives? Let us beware Bethsaida's woe. If the Heathen shall wring their hands for their Ignorance, then many Christians shall rend their harts for their disobedience. He that despised Moses Law, died without mercy, under two or three witnesses. He that despiseth, not he that transgresseth; for so do all. He that rejected and departed from the Law & Church of Israel, died without mercy, eternally, for other transgressors died without mercy temporally. Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, &c. that treads under his foot, not Moses but Christ; & counts not the blood of Goats, but of God's Son vnheily; and despiteth, which is more then despiseth, the spirit not of fear & bondage, but of grace? All the learning of the Philosophers was without an head, because they were ignorant of God. Seeing, they were blind, speaking, they were dumb; hearing, they were deaf, like the Idol-God's in the Psalm. We want not an head, but an heart: not the sense of knowledge, but the love of obedience; we hear, and see, and say, and know, but do not.

If you know that God's cheare is so infinitely better; why do you enter commons at Satan's Feast? The School calls one kind of knowledge, Scientia contristans, a sorrowful knowledge. Though they intend it in another sense, it may be true in this: for it is a woeful knowledge, when men with open eyes run to Hell. This is Uriah's letter containing his own death. These tell Christ, we knew thee: Christ tells them, I know not you. These times are sick of Adams disease, that had rather eat of the tree of knowledge, then of the tree of life: speculative Christians, not active & obedient Saints. You cannot plead, that you know not the dead are there; behold, we have told you. Quit yourselves. But many men's Ignorance is disobedience: they will not know that the dead are there, and that her guests are in the depth of Hell. Which now presseth upon us to be considered.

Solomon hath described the persons feasting and feasted. The place remains, the depth of Hell. This is the Banketing house. It amplifies the misery of the guests in three circumstances. 1. their weakness, they are soon in, 2. the place, Hell. 3. the vnrecouerableness of it. The depth of Hell.

1. Per infirmitatem. In regard of their weakness. No sooner come to the Banket, but presently in the Pit: they are in: they are soon in. They would not resist the temptation, when it was offered: they cannot resist the tribulation, when it is to be suffered: They are in. No wrestling, no contending can keep them from falling in. Into the pit they run against their will, that ran so volently, so violently to the brinks of it. As a man that hath taken his careere, and runs full fling to a place, cannot recoile himself, or recall his strength on the sudden. He might have refused to enter the race, or recollected himself in time, but at the last step he cannot stop, nor reuocare gradum, rescue himself from falling. The guests, that hasten themselves all their life to the feast of vanity, and neither in the first step of their youth, nor in the middle race of their discreetest age, return to God, do at last (without Christ's help) precipitate themselves into the depth of Hell. Think, oh think, ye gr•edie Dogs, that can never fast enough devour your sinful pleasures, if in the pride of your strength, the May of your blood, the marrow and virtue of your life, when you are seconded with the gifts of nature, nay blest with the helps of heaven, you cannot resist the allurements of Satan; how unable will you be to deal with him, when custom in sin hath weakened your spirits, and God hath withdrawn his erst afforded comforts? They that run so fiercely to the pit, are quickly in the pit. The guests are in the depth of Hell.

2. Per infernitatem. In regard of the place, it is Hell. The Prophet Isaiah thus describes it. Topheth is ordained of old: he hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord, like a stream of Brimstone doth kindle it. Topheth was a place which the children of Israel built in the valley of Hinnon, to burn their sons and daughters in the fire to Moloch. Which valley was near to Iebusi, afterwards Jerusalem, as appears Joshua. 18. The Council of Jerusalem, whiles their power lasted, used to punish certain offenders in that valley, being near their City: By this is Hell resembled. And that (in Peter Martyrs opinion) for three reasons. 1. Being a bottom, a low valley, it resembleth Hell, that is believed to be under the earth. 2. By reason of the fire, wherewith the wicked are tormented in Hell, as the children were in that valley burnt with fire. 3. Because the place was unclean and detestable, whither all vile and loathsome things were cast out of the City Jerusalem. So Hell is the place, where defiled and wicked souls are cast, as unworthy of the holy and heavenly City.

This place shall begin to open her cursed jaws, when the Judge of all men and Angels shall have given his last sentence. At that day, when, Quaesitor scelerum veniet, vindex{que} reorum, the searcher of all, and punisher of wicked hearts, shall give his double voice of dread and joy; when having spoken peace to his Saints, he shall thunder out condemnation to the wicked, Go ye into everlasting fire.

—dent ocyus omnes,

Quas meruere pati, sic stat sententia, poenas.

And if here on earth, Seiudice, nemo nocens absoluitur, a man's own conscience condemn him for his sins, how much greater shall be the just condemnation of God? Then all murdering Cain's, scoffing Chams, persecuting Saul's, thievish and sacrilegious Achan's, oppressing Ahab's, covetous Nabal's, drunken H•lofernesses, cruel Herod's, blasphemous Rabshakeh's, unjust Pilate's, shall reap the seed in their eternal deaths, which they have sown in their temporal lives. There shall be scorching heat, and freezing cold: Ex vehementissimo calore ad vehementissimum frigus. Without either act of refreshing, or hope of releasing. Every day hath been their Holy-day on earth: every day shall be their workie-day in Hell. The Poets feigned three furies.

—Scindet latus vna slagello.

Altera tartareis sectos dabit anguibus artus:

Tertia fumantes incoquet igne genas.

One brings a Scorpion, which the Conscience eats:

Another with iron whips the black flesh beats:

Whiles the third boils the soul in scalding heats.

Nemo ad id sero venit, vnde nunquam, cum semel venit, poterit reuerti. No man can come too late to those sufferings, from whence, being once come, he can never return.

This is Hell: where darkness shall be their prison, everlastingness their fetters, flames their torments, angry Angels their tormenters. Vbi nec tortores deficiant, nec torti miserimorianur. Where the scourgers shall never be weary of afflicting, nor the scourged fail their suffering. But there shall be always torments for the body, and a body for torments. Fire shall be the consummation of their plagues, not the consumption of their persons. Vbi per millia millia annorum cruciandi, nec in secula seculorum liberandi. Myriads of years shall not accomplish, nor determine their punishments. It shall be their misery, (Semper velle quod nunquam erit, semper nolle quod nunquam non erit) to have a will never satisfied, a nill never gratified.

3. Per profunditatem. The depth of Hell: The Scripture is frequent to testify Hell a deep place, and beneath us. Capernaum shall be cast down to Hell. Solomon so speaks. The way of life is above to the wise, that he may depart from Hell beneath. And of this Harlot. Her house is the way to Hell, going down to the chambers of death. Her feet go down to death, her steps take hold on Hell. Down and beneath do witness the depth of Hell. There are three places: Earth, Heaven, Hell. Earth we all enjoy, good and bad, promiscuously. Heaven is prepared for the good; and it is upwards. If ye be risen with Christ, seek the things that are above. Hell is ordained for the wicked; and it is downward; called here, profundum, a depth. To define the local place of Hell, it is too deep for me: I leave it to deeper judgments. I do not give D•monax answer, being asked where Hell was. Expecta simul ac illuc venero, et tibi per literas significabo. Tarry till I come thither, and I will send thee word by letters. No, I only say this. There is one, we are sure of it; let us by a good life be as sure to scape it.

But to confine my speech to the bounds of my Text, I take it, that by Hell & the depth of it here, is meant the deep bondage of the wicked souls; that they are in the depth of the power of Hell. Satan having by sin a full dominion over their consciences. For Hell is often allegorically taken in the Scriptures, So Jonah cries unto God out of the belly of Hell. David sung de profundis: Out of the depth have I cried unto thee oh Lord. So Christ speaks of the unbeliever, that he is already damned. And the reprobate are here affirmed in the depth of Hell. This exposition I esteem more natural to the words. For as the godly have a Heaven, so the wicked a Hell, even upon Earth: though both in a spiritual, not a literal sense. The reprobates Hell on earth is double; or of two sorts.

1. In that the power of Hell rules in his conscience. He walks according to the course of this world, and according to the Prince of the power of the Air, the spirit, that now worketh in the children of disobedience. He is taken and led captive of the Devil; as hereafter in the chains of damnation, so here in the bands of dominion: which Solomon calls funes peccatorum: as he hath drawn iniquity with the cords of vanity, so he shall be holden with the cords of his sins.

2. There is a Hell in his conscience. So Saint Augustine; Sunt duo tortores anime, Timor et Dolor. The soul hath two tormentors even in this life, grief for evil felt, fear of evil to be felt. Whereof the Poet.

Sic mea perpetuos curarum pectora morsus, sine quibus nullo consiciantur, habent.

These are the fearful terrors whereof the guilty heart cannot be quitted, cannot be quieted; though pleasure it self were his phisitian, and the whole world his minstrell. Domino priuante suo gaudio, quid esse potest in gaudium? when God withholds his music and peace, what can make the heart merry? Polidore Virgill thus writes of Richard the third's dream the night before Bosworth-field. That he thought all the Devils in Hell pulled and hailed him in most hideous and ugly shapes. And concludes of it at last. Id credo, non fuit somnium, sed conscientia scelerum. I do not think it was so much his dream, as his wicked conscience that brought those terrors. When this evil spirit comes on a wicked Saul, let him go to his merriest good fellows, beguile at once the time and himself with plays, and sports, feast away his cares at his own table, or bury them together with his wits, at a Tavern: alas these are pitteous shifts, weaker then walls of paper.

Sleep cannot make his conscience sleep: perhaps the very dreams are fearful. It will not leave thee, till it hath shown thee thy Hell, no nor when it hath shown thee it, will it leave thee quiet. The more thou offerest to damme up this current, the more ragingly it swells, and gusheth over the resisting banks. This wounded Conscience runs like the stricken Deare, with the arrow of death in the ribs, from thicket to thicket, from shelter to shelter, but cannot change her pain with her place. The wound rankles in the soul, and the longer it goes on, the worse still it festers. Thus sin that spake thee so fair at her inviting to the Banket, now presents to thy waked soul her true form; and plays the make-bate betwixt God and thee, betwixt thee and thyself. So long as security hath kept thee sleeping in thy delighted impieties, this quarrel is not commenced. The mortallest enemies are not always in pitched fields one against another.

This truce holds some till their death-beds; neither do they ever complain, till their complaints can do them no good. For then at once, the sick carcass, after many tossings and turnings to find the easiest side, moans his unabated anguish: and the sicker conscience, after trial of many shifts, too late feeleth and confesseth her unappeased torment. So Cain, Judas, Nero, in vain seek for foreign helps, when their executioner is within them. The wicked man cannot want furies, so long as he hath himself. Indeed the soul may fly from the body, not sin from the soul. An impatient Judas may leap out of the private hell in himself, into the common pit below; as the boiling fishes out of the Caldron into the flame. But the gain hath been, the addition of a new hell without them, not the loss of the old hell within them. The worm of Conscience doth not then cease her office of gnawing, when the fiends begin their office of torturing. Both join their forces to make the dissolutely wicked, desolately wretched. If this man be not in the depth of Hell, deeply miserable, there is none.

Loe now the Shot at the Devils Banket. A reckoning must be paid, and this is double. 1. the earnest in this life. 2. the full payment in the life to come. The earnest is, whiles Hell is cast into the wicked: the full satisfaction is, when the wicked shall be cast into Hell. Whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the Lake of fire. I will take leave to amplify both these a little further.

1. The earnest is the horror of an evil conscience; which sparkles with the beginnings of future torments. I know that some feel not this in the pride of their vanities; or at least will not seem to feel it. Some whorish for-heads can out-face their sins, and laugh them out of countenance. Wide gorges, that can swallow perjuries, bloodiness, adulteries, usuries, extortions without trouble. But it may be, the heart doth not laugh with the look. He dares be an hypocrite, that durst be a villain. If he would speak truth of himselfe he would testify, that his thoughts will not afford him sleep, nor his sleep afford him rest: but whiles his senses are bound, his sin is loose. No command of reason can quiet the tempest in his heart. No son of Sceua, no help of the world, can cast out this Devil. The blood of the body, often being stopped in the issue at the nostrils, bursts out at the mouth, or finds way into the stomach. The conscience thus wounded, will bleed to death, if the blood of Jesus Christ do not stanch it.

Think of this, ye that forget God, and are only indulgent to yourselves: the time shall come, you shall remember God, neither to your thanks, nor ease; and would forget yourselves. Happy were it for you, if you, having lost your God, could also loose yourselves. But you cannot hide yourselves from yourselves. Conscience will neither be blinded in seeking, nor bribed in speaking. You shall say unto it as that wicked Ahab to Elias, hast thou found me, oh thou mine enemy? yet alas, all this is but the earnest. A hell, I may call it▪ and a deep hell; and, as I say, a little smoke reeking out of that fiery pit: whereby the afflicted may give a guess at Hell, as Pythagoras guessed at the stature of Hercules by the length of his foot. But else, per nulla figura geh•nnae: nothing can truly resemble Hell.

2. The earnest is infinitely short of the total sum. And his Lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormenters, till he should pay all that was due unto him. The guest must endure a death not dying, live a life not living: no torment ends without the beginning of a worse. The sight afflicted with darkness and ugly Devils: the hearing with shrieks and horrible cries: the smelling with noisome stench: the taste with ravenous hunger and bitter gall: the feeling with intolerable, yet unquenchable fire. Thousands poynting at, not one among thousands pitying the distressed wre•ch. I know this Earth is a dungeon in regard of Heaven, yet a Heaven in respect of Hell, we have misery enough here: it is mercy to what is there. Think of a gloomy, hideous, and deep Lake, full of pestilent damps and rotten vapors, as thick as clouds of pitch, more palpable then the fogs of Egypt; that the eye of the Sun is too dull to pierce them, and his heat too weak to dissolve them. Add hereunto a fire flashing in the reprobates face; which shall yield no more light then with a glimpse to show him the torments of others, and others the torments of himself; yet withal, of so violent a burning that should it glow on mountains of steel, it would melt them like mountains of Snow.

This is the guests reckoning: a sore, a sour payment, for a short and scarce sweet Banket. All his senses have been pleased, now they are all plagued. Instead of perfumes & fragrant odors, a sulphurous stench shall strike up into his nostrils: Instead of his lascivious Delilah's, that fadomed him in the arms of lust, behold Adders, Toads, Serpents, crawling on his bosom: Instead of the Dorian music charming his ears; Man-drakes and Night-ravens still shrieking to them the reuerberating groans of ever and never dying companions, tolling their funeral (not final) knells and yels round about him. Instead of wanton kisses, snakes ever sucking at his breath and galling his flesh with their never blunted stings.

Think of this feast, you riotous feasters in sin. There is a place called Hell, whither after the general and last assizes, the condemned shall be sent, through a black way, (death is but a shadow to it) with many a sigh and sobbe, and groans, to those cursed fiends, that must be their tormentors, as they have been their tempters. Behold now a new feast, a fatal, a final one. To sup in the vault of darkness, with the princes and subjects of horror, at the table of vengeance, in the chair of desperation. Where the difference on earth betwixt Master and Servant, drudge and commander, shall be quite abolished: Except some Atheistical Machiavelli, or traitorous Seminary, or some bloody delegate of the Inquisition, be admitted the upper-end of the table: But otherwise there is no regard of age, beauty, riches, valor, learning, birth. The usurer hath not a cushion more then his broker. There is not the breadth of a bench between Herod and his Parasites. The Pope himself hath no easier a bed, then the poorest Mass-priest. Corinthian Lais speeds no better then her chambermaid. The Cardinal hath not the upper hand of his Pander. There is no priority between the plotter and the intelligencer; between the vestall and the Nun; between the proud Prodigal, and his unconscionable Creditor.

Indeed the greatest sinner shall have the greatest punishment. And he that hath been a principal guest to the Devil on earth; shall (and that on earth were a strange privilege) hold his place in Hell. Reward her, even as she rewarded you: and double unto her double, according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. How much she hath glorified her self, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her. Dives that fed so heartily on this bread of Iniquity, and drunk so deep draughts of the waters of sin, reserves his superiority in torment, that he had in pleasure. Behold, he craves with more floods of scalding tears, than ever Esau shed for the blessing, but one drop of water to cool his tongue, and could not be allowed it. But what if all the rivers in the South, all the waters in the Ocean had been granted him, his tongue would still have withered and smarted with heat, himself still crying in the language of Hell, a non sufficit, It is not enough. Or what if his tongue had been eased, yet his heart, liver, lungs, bowels, arms, legs should still have fried.

Thus he that eat and drank with superfluity, the purest flower of the Wheat, the reddest blood of the Grape; his body kept as well from diseases, as soft linen and fine raiment could preserve it: here finds a fearful alteration. From the table of surfeit, to the table of torment, from feeding on Iunkets, to gnaw his own flesh: from bowles of wine to the want of cold water; from the soft folds of fine silks, to the winding lashes of furies: from chains of gold for ornament, to chains of iron for torment: from a bed of down, to a bed of flames: from laughing among his companions, to howling with Devils: from having the poor begging at his gates, to beg himself; and that as that Rich-man, for one drop of water. Who can express the horror and misery of this guest?

Non mihi si centum linguae sint, ora{que} centum,

Ferrea vox, omnes scelerum comprehendere formas,

Omnia poenarum percurrere nomina possim.

No heart of man can think, no tongue can tell

The direful pains, ordained and felt in hell.

Now sorrows meet at the Guests heart, as at a feast; all the furies of hell leap on the Table of his Conscience. Thought calls to Fear, Fear to Horrour, Horrour to Dispaire, Dispaire to Torment, Torment to Extremitie, all to Eternity; Come and help to afflict this wretch. All the parts of his body and soul leave their natural and wonted uses, and spend their times in wretchedness and confusion. He runs through a thousand deaths and cannot die. Heavie irons are locked on him: all his lights and delights are put out at once. He hath no soul capable of comfort. And though his eyes distill like fountains, yet God is now inexorable: His Mittimus is without Bail, and the Prison can never be broken. God will not hear now, that might not he heard before.

That you may conceive things more spiritual and remote, by passions nearer to sense. Suppose that a man being gloriously roaped, deliciously feasted. Prince-like served, attended, honored, and set on the proudest height of pleasure that ever mortality boasted; should in one (unsuspected) moment be tumbled down to a bottom, more full of true miseries, then his promontory was of false delights: and there be ringed about with all the gory Murtherers, black Atheists, sacrilegious Church-robbers, and incestuous Rauishers, that have ever disgorged their poison on earth, to re-assume it in Hell: Nay add further to this supposition, that this depth he is thrown into, was no better then a vast Charnell-house, hung round with lamps burning blew and dim, set in hollow corners; whose glimmering serves to discover the hideous torments: all the ground instead of green rushes, strewed with fun•rall rosemary and dead men's bones: some corpses standing upright in their knotted winding-sheets; others rotted in their Coffins, which yawne wide to vent their stench: there the bare ribs of a Father that begat him, here the hollow skull of a Mother that bare him. How direful and amazing are these things to sense!

Or if Imagination can give being to a more fearful place, that, or rather worse then that is Hell. If a poor man suddenly starting out of a golden slumber, should see his house flaming about him, his loving Wife and loved Infants brea•hing their spirits to heaven through the merciless fire, himself inringed with it, calling for despaired succor; the miserable Churl his next neighbor, not vouchsafing •o answer, when the putting forth of an arm might •aue him: such shall be their miseries in Hell, and nor an Angel nor a Saint shall refresh them with any comfort. These are all but shadows, nay not shadows of the infernal depth here expressed. You hear it; fear it, fly it, scape it. Fear it by Repentance, fly it by your Faith, and you shall scape it by God's mercy.

This is their (Po•na sensus) positive punishment•• There is also (Poena damni) to be considered, their privative punishment. They have lost a place on earth, whose joy w•s temporal; they have missed a place in Heaven, whose joy is eternal. Now they find thata dinner of green herbs with God's love, is better then a stalled Ox, and his hatred withal. A feast of sallets, or Daniel's pulse, is more cherising with mercy, then Belshazzars Banket without it. Now they find Solomon• Se•mon true; that though the bread of deceit •e sweet to a man, yet the time is come; that the mouth is filled with gravel. No, no: •he blessing of God only maketh fat, and he addeth no sorrow unto it. Waters, the wicked desired, and Bread, they lusted after; behold after their secure sleep, and dreamed joys on earth, with what hungry souls do they awake in Hell?

But what are the Bread and the Waters, they might have enjoyed with the Sain•s in Heaven? Such as shall never be dried up. Ie• thy presence is the fullness of joy: and at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore. Happy is the undefiled soul, who is innocent from the great offense; all whose sins are washed as white as Snow, in that blood, which alone is able to purge the conscience from dead works. He that walketh righteously, &c. he shall dwell on high: his place of defense shall be the munitions of rocks: Bread shall be given him; his Waters shall be sure. His joys are certain and stable; no alteration, no alternation shall impair them. The wicked for the slight breakfast of this world, loose the Lambs supper of glory. Where these four things concur, that make a perfect feast: Dies lectus, locus electus, coetus been collectus, apparatus non neglectus. A good time, eternity. A good place, Heaven. A good company, the Saints. Good cheer, Glory.

1. God himself is the feast-maker: he is Land-lord of the world, and •illesh every living thing with goodness. The Eagles and Lions seek their meat at God. But though all the sons of Jacob have good cheare from Joseph yet Benjamin's mess exceeds. Esau shall have the prosperity of the earth, but Jacob goes away with the blessing. Ishmael may have outward favors, but the inheritance belongs to Izhak. The King favoereth all his subjects, but they of his Court stand in his presence, & partake of his Princely graces. God's bounty extends to the wicked also, but the Saints shall only sit at his table in Heaven. This is that feaster, qui est super omnia, et sine quo nulla sunt omnia. Of him, and through him, and to him are all things: to whom be glory forever.

2. The cheare is beyond all sense, all science. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nether have entered into the heart of man, the things God hath prepared for them that love him. The eye sees much, the ear hears more, the heart conceives most, yet all short of apprehension, much more of comprehension of these pleasures. Therefore enter thou into thy Masters joy, for it is too great to enter into thee.

3. The company is excellent: the glorious presence of the blessed Trinity, the Father that made us, the Son that bought us, the Holy Ghost that brought us to this place. The holy and unspotted Angels, that rejoiced at our conversion on earth, much more at our consolation in Heaven. All the Patriarchs, Prophets, Saints; before the Law, in the Law, in the Gospel: the full Communion of Saints. Here, the more the mirrier, yea, and the better cheare to. Oh the sweet melody of Hallelujahs, which so many glorified voices shall sing to God in Heaven, the hoarcenesse of sin, and the harshness of punishment being separated from us with a bill of everlasting divorce.

4. Admirable is the Banketing place; the high Court of Heaven, where our apparel shall be such as beseemeth the attendants on the King of Kings; even the fashion of the glorious body of Christ. The purest things are placed highest. The earth as grossest is put in the lowest room: the water above the earth: the air above the water: the fire above the air: the spheres of Heaven above any of them: and yet th<sup>e</sup> place where this feast is kept, is above them all; the Heaven of Heavens. Take here a slight relish of the cheare in God's kingdom, where your welcome shall be answerable to all the rest. Eate oh my friends, and make you merry, oh well-beloved. And then (as those that have tasted some delicate dish, find other plain meats but unpleasant, so) you that have tasted of heavenly things, cannot but contemn the best worldly pleasures. As therefore some dainty guest, knowing there is so pleasant fare to come, let us reserve our appetites for that; and not suffer our selves to be cloyed with the course diet of the world. Thus as we fast on the Eues, that we may feast on the Holy-days; let us be sure, that after our abstinence from the surfeits of sin, we shall be everlastingly fed and fatted with the mercies of God. Which resolution the Lord grant us here; which Banket, the Lord give us hereafter. Amen.

He hath no care of his own cure, that declares not to the Physician his grief.

TO THE TRULY-NOBLE KNIGHT S<sup>r</sup>. Anthony Saint-John saving health.

Right Worshipful:

THE sickness of this World is grown so lethargical, that his recovery is almost despaired: and therefore his Physicians, finding by infallible symptoms that his consumption is not curable, leave him to the malignancy of his disease. For the eye of his faith is blind, the ear of his attention deaf, the foot of his obedience lame, the hand of his charity numm'd, and shut up with a griping covetousness. All his vital parts, whereby he should live to goodness, are in a swoon: he lies bed-rid in his security, and hath little less then given up the (Holy) Ghost. It cannot be denied, but that he lies at the mercy of God. It is therefore too late to tolle his Passing-bell, that hath no breath of obedience left in him: I might rather ring out his knell. Yet because there are many in this world, that are not of this world: many sick of the general disease of Sin, whose recovery is not hopeless, though their present state be happesesse; and some, that if they knew but themselves sick, would resort to the Poole of Bethesda, the waters of life, to be cured. I have therefore presumed to take them apart, and tell them impartially their own illness. Oh that to perform the cure were no more difficult then to describe the Maladie, or prescribe the remedy. I have endeavored the latter: the other to God; who can both kill and give life: who is yet pleased, by his word, to work our recovery; and to make me one (unworthy) instrument, to administer his Physic. Now as the most accurate Physicians, ancient or moderne, though they delivered precepts in their faculty, worthy of the worlds acceptance and use; yet they set them forth under some Noble Patronage: so I have presumed, under the countenance of your protection, to publish this (phisicall or rather) metaphysical Treatise: for as the Sickness is spiritual, so the cure must be supernatural. Assuring myself, that if you shall use any observation here, and give it your good word of Probatum est, many others will be induced the more redily to embrace it. My intent is to do good: and if I had any better Receite, I would not (like some Physicians, I know not whither more envious or covetous, with an excellent Medicine) let it live and die with myself. God conserve your (either) health; and give you, with a sound body, a sounder faith; whereby you may live the life of Grace here, of Glory hereafter.

Your Worships humbly devoted THOMAS ADAMS.

THE Sinners Passing-Bell. OR A Complaint from Heaven for Mans Sins. The fifth Sermon.

IEREM. 8.22.

Is there no Balm in Gilead? Is there no Physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?

THIS is a world to make Physicians rich; if men loved not their purse, better then their health. For the world waxeth old, and old age is weak and sickly. As when death begins to ceaze upon a man, his brain by little and little groweth out of order; his mind becomes cloudy and troubled with fantasies; the channels of his blood, and the radical moisture (the oil that feeds the lamp of his life) begin to dry up: all his limbs loose their former agility. As the little world thus decays in the great, so the great decays in it self: that Nature is fain to lean on the staff of Art, and to be held up by man's industry. The signs, which Christ hath given to fore-run the worlds ruin, are called by a Father, aegritudines Mundi: the diseases or sicknesses of the world, as sickness naturally goes before death. Wars dying the earth into a sanguine hew: dead carcasses infecting the airs; and the infected airs breathing about plagues and pestilences, and sore contagions. Whereof, saith the same Father, null magis quam nos testes sumus, quos mundi finis inuenit, none can be more certain witnesses then we upon whom the ends of the world are come. That sometimes the influences of Heaven spoil the fruits of the earth; and the fogs of earth soil the virtues of the Heavenly bodies: that neither Planets above, nor plants below, yield us expected comforts. So God, for our sins, brings the heaven, the earth, the air, and whatsoever was created for man's use, to be his enemy, and to war against him. And all because, omnia quae ad vsum vitae accipimus, ad vsum vitij conuertimus: we turn all things to vices corruption, which were given for natures protection. Therefore, what we have •uerted to wickedness, God hath reuerted to our revenge. We are sick of sin, and therefore the world is sick of us.

Our lives shorten, as if the book of our days were by God's knife of Judgment, cut less; and brought from Folio, as in the Patriarchs, before the flood, to Quarto in the Fathers after the flood; nay to Octauo, as with the Prophets of the Law, nay even to Decimosexto, as with us in the days of the Gospel. The Elements are more mixed, drossy, and confused: the airs are infected: neither wants our intemperance to second all the rest. We hasten that we would not have, Death; and run so to riot in the April of our early vanities, that our May shall not scape the fall of our life. Our great Landlord hath let us a fair house, and we suffer it quickly to run to ruin. That whereas the Soul might dwell in the body, as a Palace of delight, she finds it a crazy, sickish, rotten cabinet, in danger, every gust, of dropping down.

How few shalt thou meet, if their tongues would be true to their griefs, without some disturbance or affliction? There lies one groaning of a sick heart; another shakes his aking head: a third roars for the torments of his reins: a fourth for the racking of his gowty joints: a fifth grouels with the Falling-sickness: a last lies half dead of a Palsy. Here is work for the Physicians. They ruffle in the robes of preferment, and ride in the Foot-clothes of reverence. Early and devout suppliants stand at their study doors, quaking, with ready money in their hands, and glad it will be accepted. The body, if it be sick, is content sometimes to buy (vnguentum areum, with vnguentum aureum) leaden trash, with golden cash. But it is sick, and needs Physic; let it have it.

There is another Pysician, that thrives well too, if not best; and that's the Lawyer. For men go not to the Pysician till their bodies be sick; but to the Lawyer when they be well, to make them sick. Thus whil's they fear an Ague, they fall into a Consumption. He that scapes his disease, and falls into the hands of his Pysician; or from his trouble of suites, lights into the fingers of his Lawyer, fulfils the old verse, Incidit in Scyllam, dum vult vitare Charibdim.

Or is in the poor Birds case, that flying in fear from the Cuckooe, lighted into the tallon of the Hawk. These are a couple of thriving Physicians: Alter tuetur agros, alter tuetur agros: One looks to the state of the person; the other of the purse▪ so the old verse testifies.

Dat Galenus opes, dat Iustinianus honores.

Physic gives wealth, and Law Honor. I speak not against due reward, for just deserts in both these faculties.

These Physicians are both in request: but the third, the Pysician of the soul (of whom, I am now occasioned to show, there is most need) may stand at the door with Homer; and did he speak with the voice of Angels, not to be admitted. The sick Rich man lies patiently under his Physicians hands; he gives him golden words, real thanks, nay (and often) flattering observance: If the state lie sick of a Consumption; or if some contentious Emperick, by new suits, would lance the impostum'd swellings of it: or if (perhaps) it lie sullen-sick of Naboth's Vineyard: the Lawyer is (perchance) not sent for, but gone to; and his help implo•ed, not without a Royal sacrifice at least. But for the Minister of his Parish, if he may not have his head under his girdle, and his attendance as servile as his Liuerie-groomes; he thinks himself indignified, and rages, like the Pope, that any Priest durst eat of his Peacock. How short doth this Physicians respect fall of both the others! Let him feed his Sheep, if he will, with the Milk of the Word; his Sheep will not feed him with the Milk of reward. He shall hardly get from his Patron the Milk of the Vicaridge: but if he looks for the fleeces of the Parsonage, he shall have (after the Proverb) Lanam caprinam, Contempt and scorn.

Haman was not more mad for Mordecais Cap, then the great one is, that as much observance ariseth not to him, from the black coat, as from his own blew coat. The Church is beholden to him, that he will turn one of his cast Seruitours, out of his own into her service: out of his Chamber into the Chancel; from the Buttry-hatch to the Pulpit. He that was not worthy enough to wait on his Worship, is good enough for God. Yield this sore almost healed; yet the honor of the Ministry thrives like Trees in Autumn. Even their best estimate is but a shadow, and that a preposterous one: for it goes back faster then the shadow in the Dial of Ahaz. If a Rich man have four Sons, the youngest or contemnedst must be the Priest. Perhaps the Eldest shall be committed to his Lands; for if his Lands should be committed to him, his Father fears, he would carry them all up to London: he dares not venture it, without binding it sure. For which purpose he makes his second Son a Lawyer: a good •ising profession; for a man may by that (which I neither envy nor tax) run up, like Jonah gourd, to preferment: and for wealth, a Clustre of Law is worth a whole Vintage of Gospel. If he study means for his third, loe Physic smells well. That as the other may keep the estate from running, so this the body from ruining. For his youngest Son, he cares not, if he puts him into God's service; and make him capable of the Church-goods, though not pliable to the Churches good. Thus having provided for the estate of his Inheritance, of his Advancement, of his Carkasse, he comes last to think of his Conscience.

I would to God, this were not too frequently the worlds fashion. Whereas heretofore, Primogeniti eo iure Sacerdotes, the first-borne had the right of Priesthood: now the younger Son, if he fit for nothing else, lights upon that privilege. That as a reverend Divine saith. Younger Brothers are made Priests, and Priests are made younger Brothers. Yet, alas; for all diseases Nature provideth, Art prepareth Medicines. He is fed in this Country, whom that refuseth: An estate lost by Shipwracke on Sea, may be recovered by good-speed on Land. And in ill health, for every sore of the body, there is a salve; for every malady, a remedy: but for the Conscience, Nature hath no cure, as Lust no care. Hei mihi, quod nullis anima est medicabilis herbis! There is no herb, to heal the wounds of the soul, though you take the whole world for the Garden. All these professions are necessary; that men's Ignorance might not prejudice them, either in wealth, health, or grace. God hath made men fit with qualities, and famous in their faculties, to preserve all these sound in us. The Lawyer for thy wealth: the Physician for thy health: the Divine for thy soul. Physicians cure the body; Ministers the Conscience.

The Church of Israel is now exceeding sick; and therefore the more dangerously, because she knows it not. No Physic is affected, therefore no health effected. She lies in a Lethargy, and therefore speechless. She is so past sense of her weakness, that God himself is fain to ring her Passing-bell. Aaron's bells cannot ring loud enough to waken her: God toles from Heaven a sad knell of complaint for her.

It is, I thinke, a custom not unworthy of approbation; when a languishing Christian draws near his end, to tole a heavy Bell for him. Set aside the prejudice of Superstition, and the ridiculous conceits of some old Wives, whose wits are more decrepit then their bodies; and I see not why, reasons may not be given to prove it, though not a necessary, yet an allowed Ceremony.

1. It puts into the sick man a sense of mortality; and though many other objects should do no less; yet this seasonably performs it. If any particular flatterer, or other carnal friends, should use to him the susurrations, that Peter did once to Christ; Master, favor thyself: this shall not be unto thee: though sickness lies on your bed, Death shall not enter your Chamber; the evil day is far off; fear nothing: you shall live many years: or as the Devil to our Grandmother, you shall not die. Or if the May of his years shall persuade himself to the remoteness of his Autumn; or if the love of earthly pleasure, shall deny him voluntary leisure to think of Death: As Epaminondas, General of the Thebans, understanding a Captain of his Army to be dead, exceedingly wondered, how in a Campe, any should have so much leisure as to be sick. In a word, whatsoever may flatter him with hope of life; the Bell, like an impartial friend, without either the too broad eyes of pity, or too narrow of partialitie, sounds in his own ears, his own weakness: and seems to tell him, that in the opinion of the world, he is no man of the world. Thus with a kind of Divinity, it gives him ghostly counsel; to remit the care of his Carkasse, and to admit the cure of his Conscience. It toles all in: it shall tole thee in to thy grave.

2. It excites the hearers to pray for the sick: and when can Prayers be more acceptable, more comfortable? The faithful devotions of so many Christian-neighbors sent up as Incense to Heaven for thee, are very available to pacify an offended Justice. This is S. James his Physic for the sick: nay, this is the Lord's comfort to the sick. The prayer of faith shall save the sick; and the Lord shall raise him up: and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Now (though we be all servants of one family of God, yet) because of particular families on earth; and those so removed, that one member cannot condole another's grief, that it feels not: non dolet cor, quod non nouit. The Bell, like a speedy Messenger, runs from house to house, from ear to ear, on thy souls errand, and begs the assistance of their Prayers. Thy heart is thus incited to pray for thyself, others excited to pray for thee. He is a Pharisee, that desires not the Prayers of the Church: he is a Publican that will not beseech God's mercy for the afflicted. Thy time and turn will come to stand in need of the same succor, if a more sudden blast of Judgment do not blow out thy Candle. Make thy sick Brothers case thine now, that the Congregatio<sup>n</sup> may make thine theirs hereafter. Be in this exigent even a friend to thine enemy; least thou become like Babel, to be served of others, as thou hast served others; or at least, at best, in falling Nero's case, that cried, I have neither friend nor enemy.

3. As the Bell hath often rung thee into the Temple on earth, so now it rings thee unto the Church in Heaven: from the militant to the triumphant place: from thy pilgrimage to thy home: from thy peregrination, to the standing Court of God. To omit many other significant helps, enough to justify it a laudable ceremony; it doth, as it were, mourn for thy sins, and hath compassion on thy passion. Though in it self a dumb nature, yet as God hath made it a creature, the Church an instrument, and Art given it a tongue, it speaks to thee to speak to God for thyself; it speaks to others, that they would not be wanting.

Israel is sick; no Bell stirs, no Balm is thought of, no Prophet consulted, not God himself solicited. Hence, behold, a complaint from Heaven, a knell from above the Clouds: for though the words sound through the Prophets lips, who toles like a Passing-Bell, for Israel, yet they come from the mouth of the Lord of Hosts. The Prophet Ezekiel useth like words; and adds with them, the Lord of Hosts saith it. There is no doubt of his spiritual inspiration: all the question is of his personal appropriation. It is certain, that the Prophet Jeremiah speaks here many things in his own person, and some in the person of God. Now by comparing it, with other like speeches in the Prophets, these words sound, as from a merciful and compassionate Maker. Why is not the health of my People recovered? Mei populi, saith God, who indeed might alone speak possessiually: Mine; for he had chosen and culled them out of the whole world to be his people. Why are not My people recovered? There is Balm, and there are Physicians, as in Isaiah•What could I have done more for my Vineyard?

The words are divided to our hands by the rule of three. A tripartite Metaphor, that willingly spreads it self into an Allegory. 1. God's word is the Balm. 2. The Prophets are the Physicians. 3.

The People are the Patients, who are very sick. Balm without a Physician, a Physician without Balm, a Patient without both, is in fausta separatio, an unhappy disjunction. If a man be ill, there is need of Physic; when he hath Physic, he needs a Physician to apply it. So that, here is misery in being sick, mercy in the Physic.

Not to disjoin or disioynt the Prophets order, let us observe, that the words are spoken. 1. In the person of God. 2. In the form of a question. 3. By a conclusive inference. Only two things, I would first generally observe to you, as necessary inductions to the subsequent Doctrines. Both which may naturally be inferred, not tyrannously enforced from the words. That which first objects it self to our consideration, is the Wisdom of God in working on men's affections; which leads us here from natural wants subject to sense, to supernatural, invisible, and more secret defects: from miseries to mysteries. That, as if any man admired Solomon's House, they would be ravished in desire to see God's House; which transcended the former, so much as the former transcended their expectation. So here, we might be led from man's work to God's work, from things material to things mystical; and by the happiness of cure to our sick bodies, be induced to seek and get recovery of our dying souls. The second is, the fit collation and respondent relation of Divinity and Physic; the one undertaking to preserve and restore the health of the body, the other performing much more to the soul.

1. God leads us by sensible to the sight of insensible wants; by calamities that vex our living bodies, to perils that endanger our dying Consciences. That we might infer upon his premisses, what would be an eternal loss, by the sight of a temporal cross, that is so hardly brooked. If a famine of bread be so heavy, how unsupportable is the dearth of the Word, saith the Prophet. Man may live without bread, not without the word. If a weary Traveler be so unable to bear a burden on his shoulders, how ponderous is sin in the Conscience? which Zechariah calls a talent of Lead. If blindness be such a misery, what is •gnorance? If the night be so uncomfortable, what doth the darkness of Superstition afford? If bodily Disease so afflict our sense, how intolerable will a spiritual sickness prove? Thus all earthly and inferior Objects to a Christian soul, are like Marginall hands, directing his reading to a better and heavenly reference. I intend to urge this point the more, as it is more necessary; both for the profit of it being well observed, and for the general neglect of it; because they are few in these days, that reduce Christianity to Meditation, but fewer that produce Meditation to practice and obedience.

Diseases destined toward Death as their end, that can by Nature, neither be violently endured, nor violently repelled, perplex the flesh with much pain: but if Diseases, which be Deaths capital Surgeons, his preceding Heralds to proclaim his nearness; his Ledgers that usurp his place, till himself comes, be so vexing and full of anguish, what is Death it self, which kills the Diseases, that killed us? For the perfection of sickness is Death. But alas, if the sickness and Death of the body be such, what are Sin (the sickness) and Impenitency (the death) of the soul? What is the dimmed eye to the darkened understanding? the infected members, to the poisoned affections? the torment of the reins, to the stitches, girds, and gripes of an aking Conscience? what is the Childes (caput dolet) my head aches, to Jerusalem's, (cor dolet) my heart aches? The soul to leave the body with her offices of life, is not so grievous, as God's spirit to relinquish the soul with the comforts of grace. In a word, it is far less miserable to give up the ghost, then to give up the holy Ghost. The soul, that enters the body without any (sensible) pleasure, departs not from it without extreme pain. He that is animans animas, the soul of our souls, forsakes not our spirits, but our pain is more, though our sense be less. As in the Wars, the cut of a sword crossing the Fibres, carries more smart with it, though less mortality; then the fatal charge of a Death-thundering Cannon. The soul hath two places, an Inferior which it ruleth, the body; a Superior, wherein it resteth, God! Mans greatest sorrow is, when he dyes upwardly, that GOD forsakes his God-forsaking soul. His greatest sense, when he di•s downwards, and sickness disperseth and dispatcheth his vital powers. Let then the inferior suffering waken us, to see the Superior that doth weaken us.

Thus God draws our eyes from one object to another; nay, by one to another; by that which we love on earth, to that which we should love in Heaven: by the providence for our bodies, to the provision for our souls. So our Savior having discoursed of carefulness for terrene wants, draws his speech to the persuasion of celestial benefits: giving the coherence with a But. But first seek ye the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these inferior things shall be added unto you. Vt ad excellen•iam diuinarum rerum per corporalia homines attollat. That at once he might lesson us to holy duties, and lessen our care for earthly things. Thus, quios homini sublime dedit, cor subli•ius eleuare voluit: He that gave man a countenance lifted high, meant to erect his thoughts to a higher contemplation. For many have such groveling and earth-creeping affections, that if their bodies curuitie was answerable to their souls, incederent quadr•pides, they would become four-footed beasts. It is a course preposterous to God's creation, disproportionable to man's fabric, that he should fixe his eyes, and thoughts, and desires, on the base earth, made for his feet to stand on: and turn his feet against Heaven in contempt, lifting up his heel against God. He, whose ill-balancing Judgment thinks Heaven light, and Earth only weighty and worthy, doth (as it were) walk on his head, with his heels upward. I have heard Travelers speak of monstrous and praeternaturall men, but never any so contranaturall as these.

Christ knew in the days of his flesh, what easy apprehension worldly things would find in us; what hard impression heavenly would find on us: therefore so often, by plain comparisons taught secret Doctrines; by Histories, Mysteries. How, to the life, doth he explain the mercy of God, to the misery of man, in the lost Sheep; in the lost Groat; in the lost Son? How sweetly doth he describe the different hearers of God's Oracles, in the Parable of the Seed; which (howsoever it seemed a Riddle to the self-blinding Jews, yet) was a familiar demonstration to the believing Saints? So the Prophets found that actual applications pierced more then verbal explications. Nathan by an instance of supposition, wrought David's heart to an humble confession. He drew the Proposition from his own lips, The man that hath done this, is worthy of death; and then stroke while the iron was hot, by an inferred Conclusion, Thou art the man. The Prophet Ahijah rent the new garment of Jeroboam in twelve pieces, and bad him reserve ten to himself; in sign, That God had rent the Kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and given ten Tribes to him. Isaiah by going naked and bare-foot, as by a visible sign, lessons Egypt and Ethiopia, that after this manner they should go captive to Assiria. Jeremiah by wearing bands and yokes, and sending them to the Kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, Sidon, Judah, gives them an actual representation, a visible Sacrament of their Babylonish captivity. Ezeikiells pourtraying upon a Tile the City Jerusalem, and the siege against it, is called by God, a sign against them. Agabus took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet; a sign, and that from the holy Ghost, that he who ought the girdle, should be so bound at Jerusalem, and delivered into the hands of the Gentiles. God schooled Jonah in the Gourd, by a lively Apothegme, and real subjection to his own eyes, of his unjust impatience against God and Nineveh.

It was God's usual dealing with Israel; by the afflictions wherewith he grieved them, to put into their minds how they had grieved him by their sins. So Paul, as our Prophet here: For this cause ye are weak, sickely, and many die: drawing them by these sensible cords of their plagues, to the feeling of their sins; which made their souls faint in Grace, sick in Sin, dead in Apostasy. For this cause, &c. This Doctrine affords a double use; particular and general: particular to Ministers; general to all Christians.

1. To the dispensers of God's secrets: It allows them in borrowed forms to express the meditations of their hearts. God hath given us this liberty in the performance of our callings, not only nakedly to lay down the truth; but with the helps of Invention, Wit, Art, to remove loathing of his Manna. If we had none to hear us, but Cornelius or Lidia, or such sanctified ears, a mere affirmation, were a sufficient confirmation. But our Auditors are like the Belgic armies, (that consist of French, English, Scotch, Germane, Spanish, Italian, &c.) so many hearers, so many humors: the same diversity of men and minds. That as guests at a strange dish; every man hath a relish by himself: that all our helps can scarce help one soul to heaven. But of all kinds, there is none that creeps with better insinuation, or leaves behind it a deeper impression in the Conscience, then a fit comparison. This extorted from David, what would hardly have ben granted: that as David slew Goliath with his own sword; so Nathan slew David's sin with his own word. Jotham convinced the Shechemites folly in their approved reign of Abimelech over them, by the tale of the Bramble. Even temporal occasions are often the Mines, to dignity out spiritual instructions. The people flock to Christ for his bread: Christ preacheth to them another bread; whereof he that eats, shall never die. The Samaritan woman speaks to him of Jacob's Well: he tells her of Jesus Well: whose bottom or foundation was in Heaven; whose mouth and spring downwards to the earth: cross to all earthly fountains: containing waters of life; to be drawn and carried away in the Buckets of faith. She thought it a new Well; she found it a true Well: whereof drinking, her souls thirst was forever satisfied. The Creeple begs for an Alms, the Apostle hath no money: but answers his small request, with a great bequest, health in the name of Jesus. Nihil additur marsupio, multum saluti. His Purse is nothing the fuller, his body is much the happier. This course, you see, both Christ and his Apostles gave us in practice and precept.

In practice. When the woman blessed the womb that bare Christ, and the pappes which gau• him suck: he derive• hence occasion to bless them, which conceive him in their faith, and receive him in their obedience. Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it. Even as Mary her self was rather blessed, percipiendo fidem, quam concipiendo carnem Christi; in receiving the faith, then conceauing the flesh of Christ. So the news of his kindred in the flesh standing at the door, taught him to teach, who are his true kindred in the Spirit.

In precept to his Apostles. If they will not receive and believe you, Wipe off the dust of their City, that cleaveth to your feet, against them. If they will not be moved with your words, amaze them with your wonders: Heale the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out Devils. We cannot now work miracles, yet we can speak of miracles. Even we must also, as obey his Documents, so observe his doings: and follow him in due measure, both in his words & works, though (non passibus aequis) not with equal steps. Our imitation must be with limitation; aptly distinguishing, what we must only admire in our minds, what admit in our manners.

2. To all Christians; that we climb up by the stairs of these inferior creatures, to contemplate the glorious power of the Creator. A good Christian, that like the Bee, works honey from every flower, suffers no action, demonstration, event, to slip by him without a question. All Objects to a meditating Solomon, are like wings to rear & mount up his thoughts to Heaven. As the old Romans, when they saw the blew stones, thought of Olympus; so let every Object, though low in it self, eleuate our minds to Mount Zion. A mean scaffold may serve to raise up a goodly building. Courtiers weather-driven into a poor Cottage, (etiam, in caula, de Aula loquuntur) gather hence opportunity to praise the Court. We may no less (even ex hara, de ara dicendi ansam sumere) from our Tabernacles on earth be induced to praise our standing house in Heaven. So, as the Philosopher aimed at the pitch & stature of Hercules, by viewing the length of the print of his foot: We may by the base and dwarfish pleasures on our earth, guess at the high and noble joys in Heaven. How can we cast up our eyes to that they were made to behold, and not suffer our minds to transcend it; passing through the lower Heaven, which God made for Fowls, Vapours, Meteors, to the Firmament wherein he fixed his Stars, and thence meditating of the Emphyreall Heaven, which he created for himself, his Angels, his Saints: a place no less glorious above the visible, then the visible is above the earth. Read in every Star, and let the Moon be your Candle to do it, the provident disposition of God, the eternity of your afterlife.

But if earth be at once nearer to your standing and understanding; and like dissembling Lovers, that (to avoid suspicion) divert their eyes from that cheek, whereon they have fixed their hearts; so you looke one way, and love another; Heaven having your countenance, Earth your confidence: then for Earth; read this instruction in all things, the destruction of all things. For if the rarified and azure body of this lower Heaven shall be folded up like a Scrole of Parchment; then much more this drossy, feculent, and sedimentall Earth shall be burnt.

Vret cum terris, vret cum gurgite ponti.

Communis mundo superest rogas, &c.

The Heavens shall pass away with a voyse, and the Elements shall melt with fervent heat, the Earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. At least quoad figuram, though not quoad naturam. The form shall be changed, though not the nature abolished. Every creature on earth may teach us the fallibillitie of it. It is an Hieroglyphic of vanity and mutabillitie. There is nothing on it, that is of it, that is not rather vitiall, then vital. In all the corrupted parts of this decrepit and doting world, men's best lesson of morallitie, is a lesson of mortality. As it was once said. Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas: so now better; Felix qui poterit rerum cognoscere casus. It is good to know the casual beginnings of things▪ it is better to know their casual ends. It is good to be a natural Philosopher, but better to be a supernatural, a Christian Philosopher. That whiles we intentively observe the creature, we may attentively serve the Creator.

That which is said of pregnant wits, is more true of Christian hearts, that they can make use of anything. As Travelers in foreign Countries, make every slight object a lesson: so let us thrive in grace by every (presented) work of Nature. As the eye must see, and the foot walk, and the hand work, so the heart must consider. What? God's doings: which are marvelous in our (understandings) eyes. God looked upon his own works, saw they were good, and delighted in them: sure it is his pleasure also, that we should look upon them▪ to admire his wisdom, power, providence, mercy, appearing both in their nature and their disposition. The least of God's works is worthy the observation of the greatest Angel. Now what Trewants are we, that having so many Tutours reading to us, learn nothing of them. The Heathen were condemned, for not learning the invisible things of God, from his visible works. For shall we still plod on the great volume of God's works, and never learn to spell one word, of use, of instruction, of comfort to our selves? Can we behold nothing through the Spectacles of contemplation? Or shall we be ever reading the great Book of Nature, and never translate it to the Book of Grace? The Saints did thus. So have I read, that worthy Isaiah sitting among other Divines, and hearing a sweet consort of Music, as if his soul had been borne up to Heaven, took occasion to think and speak thus; What Music may we think there is in Heaven? A friend of mine viewing attentively the great pomp and state of the Court, on a solemn day, spake not without some admiration: What shall we think of the glory in the Court of God? Happy object, and well observed, that betters the soul in grace. But I have been prolix in this point; let the brevity of the next succor it.

2. Physic and Divinity are Professions of a near affinity: both intending the cure and recovery, one of our bodies, the other and better of our souls. Not that I would have them conjoined in one person: (as one spake merrily of him, that was both a Physician and a Minister: that whom he took money to kill by his Physic, he had also money again to bury by his Priesthood.) Neither, if God hath poured both these gifts into one man, do I censure their Union, or persuade their separation. Only let the Hound, that runs after two Hares at once, take heed least he catch neither. Ad duo qui tendit, non vnum nec duo prendit. And let him that is called into God's Vineyard, hoc agere, attend on his office. And beware, least to keep his Parish on sound legs, he let them walk with sickly consciences. Whiles Gal•• & Auicen take the wall of Paul & Peter. I do not here tax, but rather praise the works of mercy in those Ministers, that give all possible come•orts to the distressed bodies of their brethren.

Let the professions be heterogena, different in their kinds; only respondentia, semblable in their proceedings. The Lord created the Physician, so hath he ordained the Minister. The Lord hath put into him the knowledge of Nature, into this the knowledge of grace. All knowledge is derived from the Fountain of God's wisdom. The Lord hath created Medicines out of the earth.

The Lord hath inspired his holy word from heaven. The good Physician acts the part of the Divine. They shall pray unto the Lord, that he would prosper that which they give, for ease & remedy to prolong life. The good Minister, after a sort is a Physician. Only it is enough for the Son of God to give both natural and spiritual Physic. But as Plato spake of Philosophy, that it couets the imitation of God, within the limits of possibillitie and sobriety: so we may say of Physic, it is conterminate to Divinity; so far as a Handmaid may follow her Mistress. The Institutions of both preserve the constitutions of men. The one would prevent the obstructions of our bodies, the other the destructions of our souls. Both purge our feculent corruptions: both would restore us to our primarie and original health: though by reason of our impotency and indisposition, neither is able. Both oppose themselves against our death, either our corporal or spiritual perishing.

When the spirit of God moved on the waters, and from that indigested & confused mixture; did by a kind of Alchemical extraction, separation, sublimation, conjunction, put all things into a sweet consort, and harmonious beauty, he did act a Physicians part. God is in many places a Pysician. Exod. 15. I am the Lord that healeth thee. Deut. 32. I kill, I make alive: I wound, and I heal. Ier. 17. Heale me, O Lord, and I shall be healed: save me, and I shall be saved. Sometimes he is as a Surgeon, to bind up the sores of the broken-hearted; and to stanch the bleeding wounds of the Conscience. Nay, David intreats him to put his bones in course again. So Christ hath sent his Ministers, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, ad coagmentationem, as Beza reads it, to put in joint the luxate members of the Church; that are compacted by joints. And in the period or full stop of time, God will minister to the world the physic of Fire, to purge the sick body of it; as he once gave it a Potion of Water to cleanse it.

Quas olim intulerant terris contagia sordes, vos olim vltrices ablueratis aquae.

At nunc, cum terras, cum totas aequoris vndas

polluerit manus, quàm fuit ante, scelus:

Quiá superest, caelo nisi missus vt ignis ab alto,

Ipsas cum terris deuoret vlter aquas?

Once in God's sight the World so filthy stood,

That he did wash and soake it in a flood.

But now, it's grown so foul and full of mire,

Nothing remains to purge it but a fire.

Which Strabus, writing on the worlds destruction by fire, would seem to gather from those two coulours in the Rainbow, caeruleo et igno, blew and red. The first cataclysm of water is past, the second deluge of fire is to come. So saith the Apostle. The heavens being on fire shall be dissolved; the Elements shall melt with fervent heat: Nouam qualitatem induent manente substantia: All earthly things shall wax old and die. Mors etiam saxis nominibus{que} venit; but the substance shall remain. It is but the fashion of this world that passeth away: 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉, figura, non natura. When all the putrefied fices, drossy and combustible matter shall be refined in the fire, all things shall be reduced to a christaline clearness. Thus (though the heathen profanely made the Pysician a God, yet) the Christian may say truly, Our God is become our Pysician. And his Ministers are his deputies under him, bringing in their lips the saving Medicines, that God hath given them.

You see the willing similitude of these professions. Indeed the Pysician cannot so aptly and ably challenge or make bold with the Ministers office, as the Minister may with his. The Clergy-man may minister medicines: the Pysician may not administer the Sacraments. It is true thus far. Every Christian is a Priest, to offer up prayers for himself and the whole Church; although not publicly and ministerially: and none but a Cain will deny himself to be his Brothers keeper. Though exhortation be the Ministers duty, yet exhort one another daily. And if we serve one another in love, we must carry, everyone, a converting Ministry, though God alone have the converting power. Turn one another and live. Now as this converting work, is a convertible work, I mean, reciprocal and mutual from one to another, the Pysician may apportion to himself a great share in it. Who may better speak to the soul, then he that is trusted with the body? or when can the stamp of grace take so easy impression in man's heart, as when the heat of God's affliction hath melted it? What breast is invulnerable to the strokes of death? The miserable carcass hath then or never, a penetrable conscience.

This conscience is so deafed in the days of our iollitie, with the loud noise of Music, Oaths, Carowsings, Clamours, Quarrels, Sports, that it cannot hear the Prophets cry, All flesh is grass. When sickness hath thrown him on the bed of anguish, and made his stomach too queasy for quaffes, too fine and dainty for even Iunkets; naked him of his silks, paled his cheeks, sunk his eyes, chilled his blood, and stunted all his vigorous spirits; the Pysician is sent for, and must scarce be let out, when the Minister may not be let in. His presence is too dull, and full of melancholy; no messenger shall come for him, till his coming be too late. How justly then should the Pysician be a Divine, when the Divine may not be a Pysician? How well may he mingle Recip• and Resipisce, penitential exhortations, with his medicinal applications, and praescripts.

Thus, memorable and worthy to be our precedent, was that Italian Physicians course: that when dissolte Ludouicus lay desolate in his sickness, and desired his help; he answered him in his own tune: If you shall live, you shall live, though no Physic be given you: If you shall die, you shall die; Physic cannot help you. According to the sick man's libertine and heretical opinion concerning Predestination. If I shall be saved, I shall be saved, howsoever I love or live. If I shall be damned, I shall be damned, howsoever I do or die. The Physicians answer gave him demonstrative conviction, taught him the use of means, as well for his souls as bodies health, and so cured recanting Ludouicus of both his diseases at once. A godly practice, worthy our Physicians imitation.

But, with us, Grac• waits at the heels of Nature; and they dive so deep into the secrets of Philosophy, that they never look up to the mysteries of Divinity. As some Mathematicians deal so much in Jacob's Staff, that they forget Jacob's Ladder: so some Physicians (God decrease the number) are so deep Naturalists, that they are very shallow Christians. The best cure depends •pon God's care. It is poor and enervate help, to which God's blessing hath not added strength. If God doth not hear the heavens for virtue, and heaven hear the earth for influence, and earth the Pysician for ingredients, all their receipts are but deceits, and the paper of their Bills will do as much good as the praescripts in it. Simples are but simple things, and all compounds idle, when they want the (best) ingredient of God's blessing. Let Plato then, hold the candle to Moses, and all Physicians drink at the well of the sons of the Prophets. As their purpose aimeth at our healths, so let them entreat God to level their hands: their direction and success stands in the name of the Lord of Hosts.

The form of the words is Interrogatorie. Is there no Balm at Giliad? are there no Physicians there? It is most true: Balm is not scarce, nor are the Physicians few, yet Israel is sick. God doth convince that by a question, which might be without question affirmed, but would not be (without question) granted. The best insinuation or piercing assertion is ex interrogando, by way of question; not only for explication, but for application of truth. God doth as it were appeal to man's conscience; and fetch evidence from the impartial testimony of his heart. That here, what is true in God's reprehension, may appear true in man's apprehension. The first word that ever God spake to man after his fall, was a question. ADAM, vbi es? where art thou? He continues the same (formam loquendi, normam arguendi) form & method of speech. Who told thee that thou was naked? Hast thou eaten of the Tree, whereof? &c. And to the woman. What is this that thou hast done? Before man fell to sin, God fell not to questioning. All his speeches were to him, either commendatory or commandatory: approbationis non exprobatonis verba; words of approval, not of exception. He createth, ordereth, blesseth man, and all things to him: but when man fell to sliding, God fell to chiding. Because man turned his heart to another object, God turned his voice to another accent.

God's questions are not of the nature of man's, the effects and helps of dubitation: according to the saying 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : Doubting is the Mother of questioning. He that doubteth not, will not ask• no; God's demands are not to satisfy himself, but us: Illations upon our actions. That from the proposition of our sins, and the assumption of his questions, we may conclude against our selves; as David, I have sinned. Neither can we give sollution to his interrogatories. Who dares, who can answer God? he is not as a man, saith Job, that I should answer him. The intent is then, to justify himself; to put into our conscience, a sense, a Science of our own iniquities. God so apposed Jonah: Doest thou well to be angry? And again; Doest thou well to be angry for a Gourd? Art thou discontent for so contemptible a thing, a poor vegetative creature; and doest thou grudge my mercy to so many rational creatures, brethren of thine own flesh? God's question was a manifest conviction, as strong as a thousand proofs. Jonah sees his face in this little Spring, as if he had stood by a full River.

Christ, that had the best method of teaching, and could make hearts of flint penetrable, moved his Disciples minds, removed his adversaries doubts, frequently by questions. He starts Peter, that was (numinis Dei, et nominis sui immemor) forgetful of his God, of himself, with a quid, dormis? what, sleepest thou? He rectified the mistaking judgments of his Apostles, that turned his spiritual dehortation from the Pharisees leaven, to the literal sense of forgotten bread; with a double demand. Obliti ne estis? &c. Do ye not yet understand, nor remember the five loaves of the five thousand? &c. Could so miraculous a Banket, as quickly slip from your minds, as it did from your mouths? So he informed their understandings concerning himself, which so much concerned them to know; Whom do men say that I am? All which impli'd not his own ignorance, but impelled their knowledge. He knew all the former questions so well as the latter; whereof he could no less be ignorant, then of himself. Only he spake in a catechizing form, as the Ministers question succors the Novices initial understanding. His reproofs to his enemies were often clothed in these interrogatorie robes. How say they that Christ is David's Son? When David himself calleth him Lord? confuting that false opinion, that the Jews had of their Messias, whose temporal Monarchy they only gaped for. If he was, only to be the Son of David in the flesh, how doth he call him Lord, and equal him with the Father? A question, that did enforce a conclusion, himself desired, and a confusion of his enemies conceits. The like, ver. 4. He cramped their critical and hypocritical exceptions with a question. The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? which confuted their arrogance, though they would have salued it with ignorance, ver. 7. We cannot tell. This manner of discussing is not more usual with God, then effectual. It converteth the Elect; it convinceth the Reprobate. Wheresoever it is directed, it pierceth like a goad, & is a sharp stroke to the conscience: and howsoever the smart is neglected, it leaveth a print behind it.

If we take the words spoken in the Person of God, they manifest his complaint against Israel. When God complains, sin is grievous. We never read God breaking forth into this compassionate form of speech, but Iniquity is grown proud of her height. She nestles among the Cedars, and Towers like Babel: when he that can thunder it down with fire, doth (as it were) rain showers of complaint for it. It argues no less goodness in the Father, then wickedness in the Children, when he doth plain, that can plague; and breath out the air of pity, before he send the storm of Judgment. So you may see a long provoked Father, that after many chidings lost to his deaf Son; after some gentle chastisements inflicted, and intended to his calling home; he finds his errors growing wilder, his affections madder, his heart more senseless, his courses more sensual; he stands even deploring his wretchedness, that could not amend his wickedness: and whiles Justice and Mercy strive for the mastery, as loath that his lenity should wrong his Integrity, or yet that he should be as an executioner to him, whom he had begotten to be an executour to himself; he breaks out into complaint. With no less pity, nay, with far greater mercy, doth God proceed to execute his Judgments; unwilling to strike home for his mercy; yet willing not to double his blow (but to lay it on sure at once) for our sins, and his own Justice- Or as some compassionate Judge, that must censure (by the law of his Country) an Heretic, strives first with arguments of reason to convert him, that arguments of iron and steel may not be used against him: and finding his refractarie disposition, culpable of his own doom, by willfully not being capable of good counsel, proceeds not without plaints and tears to his sentence: So doth the most just God of Heaven, with the most unjust Sons of men; pleading by reasons of gentle and gracious forbearance, and offering the sweet conditions of happy peace, and (as it were) wailing our refusal, before he shoot his arrows and consume us, or make his sword drunk with our bloods.

God hath Armies of Stars in the sky, Meteors in the air, beasts on the earth, yea of Angels in Heaven; greater Hosts and less: and whither he sends a great Army of his little ones, or a little of his great ones, he can easily and quickly dispatch us: Loe, he stays till he hath spoken with us; and that rather by postulation, then expostulation. He is not contumelious against us, that have been contumacious against him. If his words can work us to his will, he will spare his blows. He hath as little delight in smiting, as we in suffering: nay, he suffers with us, condoling our estate, as if it were (which cannot be) his own. For we have not an high Priest, which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. He feels the griefs of his Church: the head aches, when the members suffer. Persecutors strike Christ through Christians sides. Saul strikes at Damascus, Christ Jesus suffers in Heaven. Mediatly he is smitten, whiles the blows immediately light on us. He could not in the days of his flesh, forbear bitter tears at Jerusalem's present sin and future judgment. How grievous is our iniquity, how gracious his longanimity? He that weeps for our aversion passionately, desires our conversion unfeignedly. How pathetically he persuadeth his Churches reformation? Return, return, oh Shulamite, return, return: How lamentingly deplores he Jerusalem's devastation? If thou hadst known, at least in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace. Let us not think him like either of those Mimicks, the Player, or the Hypocrite, (who truly act the part one of another, but hardly either of an honest man) that can command tears in sport. When Christ laments the state either of our sins or our selves, he shows that one is at the height of rising, the other near casting down. Christ's double sigh over Jerusalem, is (as I may say) fetched and derived from those double woes of her: the immeasurable sin, that killest the Prophets: the unavoidable Judgment, thy house is left unto thee desolate. Ingentia benesicia, ingentia peccata, ingentes poenae. Great benefits abused occasion great sins, and great sins are the fore-runners of great plagues. So that Sin is an ill conjunction copulative, that unites two as contrary natures, as nature it self ever produced, great mercy and great misery. God is pleased in giving the former, but he sighs at the latter. Gaudet in misericordia sua, dolet in miseria nostra. He rejoiceth in his own goodness, he grieueth at our wretchedness.

Horrid and to be trembled at are the sins, that bring heaviness into the Courts of happiness; and send grievance to the very thresholds of joy. That whereas Angels and Cherubims, the coelestiall Choristers, make music before the Throne of God, for the conversion of one sinner: (of one? what would they do at the effectual success of such a Sermon, as Peter preached.) They do (if I may speak) grieve and mourn at the aversion of our souls, (so hopeful and likely to be brought to Heaven) and at the aspiration of our climbing sins.

But it may be questioned, how God can be said to grieve, to complain, to be sorrowful for us. True it is, that there is no passion in God. He that sits in Heaven, hath all pleasure and content in himself. What is here spoken, is for our sakes spoken. He dwelleth in such brightness of glory, as never mortal foot could approach unto: the sight of his face is to us on earth insufferable: the knowledge of the invisible things in the Deity impossible. Therefore to give some aim and conjecture to us, what he is, he appears (as it were) transfigured into the likeness of our nature, and in our own familiar terms speaketh to our shallow understandings. Hominem alloquens humano more loquitur. As an old man speaking to a Child, frames his voice in a childish phrase. Before a great vessel that is full, can pour liquor from it self into a little empty Pot, that stands under it, it must stoop and decline it self. Thus he descends to our capacities; and that man may know him in some measure, he will be known as man. Sometimes by bodily members, Eyes, Ears, Hands, Feet. Sometimes by spiritual affections, Anger, Sorrow, Jealousy, Repentance. By which he signifies, not what he is indeed, but what is needful for us to know of him. For being well acquainted with the use, office, and effect of these natural things in our selves, we may the better guess at the knowledge of that God, •o whom we hear them ascribed by translation. All which he hath per siguram▪ non naturam. Angers effect in us is revenge. Nothing pleaseth a furious man's nature, but wreaking himself on his prouoker. The passion is Anger, the effect Reuenge. Whiles God gives the second, we ascribe to him the first; and call that in him Wrath, which properly is his striking Justice.

Complaints are the witness of a grieved soul: both are sufferings. God is here said to complain. Why? he is grieved at our sins. Can he be grieved indeed? No nor need he complain, that hath such power to right himself. Yet he is often said to be grieved; Grieue not the Spirit of God, by whom you are sealed up to the day of Redemption: And here to complain. To speak properly, God cannot complain because he cannot be grieved: He cannot be grieved, because he cannot suffer. Every blow of ours, though we were as strong and high as the sons of Anak lights short of him. If some could have reached him, it had gone ill with him long ere this. All is spoken per 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . He is sine ira irascens, sine poenitentia poenitens, sine dolore dolens: angry without anger, grieving without sorrow. These passions are ascribed to him, quoad effectum, non quoad affectum: They are perfections in him, what are affections in us. The complaint that once God made against a whole world, as he doth here against Israel, is expressed in more patent and significant terms. It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. God so complains against man's sin, that he is sorry that he made him. This, saith Augustine, non est perturbatio, sed iudicium, quo irrogatur poena: It is no disturbance in God, but only his Judgment, whereby he inflicts punishment. And further; Poenitudo Dei est mutandorum immutabilis ratio: God's repentance is his unchangeable disposition, in things of a changeable condition. It is mutatio rei, non Dei: the change of the thing, not of God. Cum ii quos curat mutantur, mutat ipse res, prout ijs expedit, quos curat: He willeth an expedient alteration of things, according to the alteration of them for whom he provides. So God is said to repent that he made Saul King, or that he threatened evil to Nineveh. In all which he changed (non affectum, sed effectum) the external work, not his internal counsel. For as the School speaks, immutabiliter ignoscit, he unchangeably pardons whom he means to save, though they feel it not till conversion: so immutabiliter non ignoscit, he unchangeably retains their sins in his Judgment-book, which amend not, as Saul▪

The nature of Repentance is Sorrow: the effect of repentance is the abrogation of something determined, or undoing (if it be possible) of something done. Repentance is not in God, in regard of the original nature of it; he cannot sorrow: but is in respect of the eventual fruit; when he destroys that world of people, he had made. Not that his heart was grieved, but his hands: his justice and power undid it. Aliud est mutare voluntatem, aliud velle mutationem: It is one thing to change the will, another thing to will a change. There may be a change in the matter and substance willed, though not in the will that disposeth it. Our will desires in the Summer a lighter and cooler garment, in Winter a thicker and warmer: yet is not our will changed, whereby we decree in our selves this change according to the season. Thus (Quicquid superi voluere, peractum) Whatsoever God would, that did he in heaven and earth, in the sea and all deep places. God is (immutabilis naturae, voluntatis, consilij.) Unchangeable in his nature, will, and decrees. Only these are, verba nostrae paruitati accommodata, words fitted to our weak capacities.

Well; in the mean time they are grievous sins, that make our gracious God thus seemingly passionate. There is great cause sure, if so patient and forbearing a God, be angry, sorry, penitent, grieved, that he hath made such rebellious creatures. It is long before his wrath be incensed; but if it be thoroughly kindled, all the Rivers in the South are not able to quench it. Daily man sins, and yet God repents not, that he made him. Woe to that man, for whose creation God is sorry. Woe to Jerusalem, when Christ shall so complain against her. Stay the Bells, ye Sons of wickedness, that ring so loud peals of tumultuous blasphemies in the ears of God? Turn again, ye wheeling Planets, that move only as the sphere of this world turns your affections; and despise the directed and direct motion of God's Stars. Recall yourselves, ye lost wretches, and stray not too far from your Fathers house, that your seekers come again with a non est inuentus: least God complains against you, as here against Israel; or with as passionate a voice, as once against the world; It repents me that I made them.

If we take the words spoken in the person of the Prophet, let us observe, that he is no good Preacher, that complains not in these sinful days. Isaiah had not more cause for Israel, then we for England, to cry, We have labored in vain, and spent our strength for naught. For if we equal Israel in God's blessings, we transcend them in our sins. The blood-red Sea of war and slaughter, wherein other Nations are drowned, as were the Egyptians, is become dry to our feet of peace. The Bread of Heaven, that true Manna, satisfies our hunger, and our thirst is quenched with the waters of life. The better Law of the Gospel is given us; and our saving health is not like a curious piece of Arras folded up, but spread to our believing eyes, without any shadow cast over the beauty of it. We have a better high Priest, to make intercession for us in heaven, for whom he hath once sacrificed and satisfied on earth: (actu semel, virtute semper: with one act, with everlasting virtue.) We want nothing, that heaven can help us to, but that which we voluntarily will want, and without which we had better have wanted all the rest, thankfulness and obedience. We return God not one for a thousand, not a dram of service for so many talents of goodness. We give God the worst of all things, that hath given us the best of all things. We cull out the least sheaf for his Tyth; the sleepest hour for his prayers: the chippings of our wealth for his poor: a corner of the heart for his Ark, when Dagon sits uppermost in our Temple. He hath bowels of brass and an heart of iron, that cannot mourn at this our requital. We give God measure for measure, but not manner for manner. For his blessings heaven, and shaken, and thrust together, iniquities pressed down and yet running over. Like Hogs we slauer his pearls, turn his graces into wantonness, and turn again to rend in pieces the bringers.

Who versing in his mind this thought, can keep his cheeks dry? Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep night and day, &c. No marvel, if animus meminisse horret. The good soul tremble to think it: especially when all this wickedness ariseth (not from Sodom, and Sidon, and Edom, but (from the midst of) the daughter of Zion. Hinc illae Lachrimae. He that can see this and not sigh, is not a witness, but an agent; and sin hath obstructed his lungs, he cannot sorrow. Forebear then, you captious sons of Belial, to complain against us, for complaining against you. Whiles this Hydra of Iniquity puts forth her still-growing-heads, and the sword of reproof cannot cut them off, what should we do but mourn? Quid enim nisi threna supersunt? Whither can we turn our eyes, but we behold and lament at once; some roving with lewdness, some raving with madness, others reeling with ebriety, and yet others railing with blasphemy. If we be not sad, we must be guilty. Condemne not our passions, but your own rebellions, that excite them. The zeal of our God, whom we serve in our spirits, makes us with Moses to forget our selves. We also are men of like passion with you. It is the common plea of us all: If you ask us, why we show our selves thus weak and naked, we return with Paul: Why do you these things? Our God hath charged us, not to see the funerals of your souls, without sighs and tears. Thus saith the Lord: Smite with thy hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas, for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel: for they shall fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence.

Shall all complain of lost labors, and we brook the greatest loss with silence? Merchants wail the shipwreck of their goods, and complain of Pirates. Shepherds of their devoured Flocks by savage Wolves. Husbandmen of the tired earth, that quites their hope with weeds. And shall Ministers see and not sorrow the greatest ruin (the loss of the world were less) of men's souls. They that have written, to the life, the downfall of famous Cities, either vastate by the immediate hand of God, as Sodom; or mediately by man, as Jerusalem: as if they had written with tears instead of Inke, have pathetically lamented the ruins. Aeneas Syluius reporting the fall of Constantinople, historifies at once her passion, his own compassion for it. The murdering of Children before the Parents faces, the slaughtering of Nobles like beasts, the Priests torn in pieces, the Religious flea'd, the holy Virgins and sober Matrones first ravished and then massacred; and even the Relics of the Soldiers spoil, given to the merciless fire. Oh miseram vrbis faciem! Oh wretched show of a miserable City! Consider Jerusalem, the City of God, the Queen of the Provinces, tell her Turrets, and mark well her Bulwarks, carry in your mind the Idaea of her glories: and then, on a sudden, behold her Temple and houses burning, the smoke of the fire wauing in the air, and hiding the light of the Sun, the flames springing up to Heaven, as if they would ascend as high as their sins had erst done; her Old, Young, Matrons, Virgins, Mothers, Infants, Princes, and Priests, Prophets and Nazarites, famished, fettered, scattered, consumed: if ever you read or hear it without commiseration, your hearts are harder then the Romans that destroyed it. The ruin of great things wring out our pity; and it is only a Nero, that can sit and sing whiles Rome burns. But what are a world of Cities, nay the whole world it self burning, as it must one day, to the loss of men's souls, the rarest pieces, of God's fabric on earth? to see them manacled with the chains of Iniquity, and led up and down by the Devil, as Baiazeth by that cruel Scithian, stabbed and massacred, lost and ruined by rebellious obstinacies and impenitencies; bleeding to death like Babel, and will not be cured, till past cure they weep like Rahell, and will not be comforted: to see this and not pity it, is impossible for any but a Faulx, but a Devil.

1. To make some further use hereof to our selves; Let us avoid sin, as much as we may. And, though we cannot stay our selves from going in, let us stay our selves from going on: least our God complain against us. If we make him sorrowful for a time, he can make us sorrowful forever. If we anger him, he can anger all the veins of our hearts. If instead of serving GOD by our obedience, we make him serve with our sins, he will make us serve with his plagues. If we drive God to call a Conuocation of heaven and earth: Hear oh heaven, hearken oh earth: I have nourished children, and they have rebelled against me: If he call on the mountains to hear his controversy, he will make us call on the mountains to help and hide our misery. And they said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, &c. If we put God to his querelam, controversy, and make him a Plaintiff, to enter his suit against us; he will put us to a complaint indeed. Therefore shall the land mourn, and everyone that dwelleth therein, shall languish. He will force us to repent the time and deeds, that ever made him to repent, that he made us. He will strike us with such a blow, that there needeth no doubling of it. He will make an utter end; destruction shall not rise up the second time. As Abishai would have stricken Saul, at once, and I will not smite him the second time.

We cannot so wrong God, that he is deprived of power to right himself. His first complaint is (as I may say) in tears; his second in blood. I have read of Tamberlaine, that the first day of his siege was honored with his white Colours, the second with fatal red, but the third with final black. God is not so quick & speedy in punishment; nor come his judgments with such precipitation. Nineveh after so many forties of years, shall have yet forty days. He that at last came, with his Fan in his hand, and fanned but eight grains of good corn, out of a whole Barn-full of Chaff, a whole world of people; gave them the space of one hundred and twenty years repentance. If Jerusalem will not hear Christ's words, they shall feel his wounds. They that are deaf to his voice, shall not be insensible to his hands. He that may not be heard, will be felt.

2. If God complains against sin, let us not make our selves merry with it. The mad humors, idle speeches, outrageous oaths of drunken Atheists, are but ill mirth for a Christian spirit. Wickedness in others abroad, should not be our Tabret to play upon at home. It is a wretched thing to laugh at that, which feasts Satan with mirth, laughing both at our sins, and at us for our sins. Rather lament. Make little weeping for the dead, for he is at rest: but the life of the fool is worse then death. Weep for that. When Israel now in Moses absence had turned beast, and Calued an Idolatrous Image; Moses did not dance after their Pipe, and laugh at their superstitious merriment with Tabrets and Harps; but mourned to the Lord for them, and pleaded as hard for their sparing, as he would have done for himself; nay more, Spare thy own people, though thou race my name out of the Book of Life. They are only marked for God's, with his own privy Seal, that mourned for the abominations of Israel: and their mournings were earnest, as the waylings of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddo.

Where are you, ye Sons of the Highest, ye Magistrates, put in power not only to lament our sins, but to take away the cause of our lamenting; cease to beak yourselves, like Jehoiakim, before the fire of ease and rest: rend your clothes with Josiah, and wrap yourselves in sackcloth, like Nineveh's King, as a corps laid out for burial. Do not, Felix-like, grope for a bribe at criminal offenses: sell not your connivance (and withal your conscience) where you should give your punishment. Let not gold weigh heavier than Naboth's wrongs in the scales of Justice. Weep ye Ministers, between the Porch and the Altar. Lament your own sins, ye Inhabitants of the world. England, be not behind other Nations in mourning, that art not short of them in offending. Religion is made but Policies stirrup, to get up and ride on the back of pleasure. Nimrod and Achitophell lay their heads and hands together; and whiles the one forrageth the Park of the Church, the other pleads it from his Book, with a Statutum est. The Gibeonites are suffered in our Campe, though we never clap'd them the hand of covenant; and are not set to draw water and choppe wood, do us any service, except to cut our throats. The Receate (I had almost said the Deceate) of Custom stands open, making the Laws toleration a warrant: that many now sell their Lands, and live on the use of their Monyes? which none would do, if Usury was not an easier, securer and more gainful Trade.

How should this make us mourn like Doves, and groan like Turtles? The wild Swallows, our unbridled Youngsters sing in the warm Chimneyes: the lustful Sparrowes, noctiuagant Adulterers, sit chirping about our houses: the filching Iayes, secret thieves, rob our Orchards: the Kite and the Cormorant, devour and hoard our fruits: and shall not among all these, the voice of the Turtle be heard in our Land, mourning for these sinful rapines? Have whoredom and wine so taken away our hearts, and hidden them in a maze of vanities, that repentance cannot find them out? Can these enormities pass without our tears? Good men have not spent all their time at home, in mourning for their own sins; sometimes they have judged it their work to lament, what was others work to do. That Kingly Prophet, that wept so plentifully for his own offenses, had yet floods of tears left, to bewail his people's. Jeremiah did not only weep in secret, for Israel's pride, but wrote a whole Book of Lamentations: and was not less exact in his method of mourning, then others have been in their Songs of joy. It was God's behest to Ezekiel, Sigh thou Son of man with the breaking of thy loins, and with bitterness sigh before their eyes. He mourned not alone at Israel's we. She had a solemn Funeral, and every Prophet sighed for her. Look away from me, saith Isaiah; I will weep bitterly, labor not to comfort me; because of the spoiling of the daughter of my people: I am payned at my very heart, saith Jeremiah, because thou hast heard, oh my soul, the sound of the Trumpet, the Alarm of war. Our sins are more, why should our sorrows be less?

Who sees not, and says not, that the days are evil! There is one laying secret Mynes to blow up another, that himself may succeed: there is another buying uncertain hopes with ready money: there is another rising hardly to eminence of place, and menaging it as madly. There goes a fourth poring on the ground, as if he had lost his soul in a Muck-heap, and must scrape for it: yet I think, he would hardly take so much pains for his soul, as he doth for his gold, were it there to be found and saved. He that comes to this Market of Vanity, but as a looker on, cannot lack trouble. Every evil we see, doth either vex us, or infect us. The sight and inevitable society of evils, is not more a pleasure to the Sodomites, then a vexation to the righteous soul of Lot. One breaks jests upon Heaven, and makes himself merry with God. Another knows no more Scripture, then he applies to the Theater; and doth as readily and desperately play with God's word, as with the Poets. You cannot walk the street, but you shall meet with a quarrelling Dog, or a drunken Hog, or a blaspheming Devil. One speaks villainy, another swears it, a third defends it, and all the rest laugh at it. That we may take cresset-light, and search with Jeremiah, the streetes and broad places of our Country, and not find a man, or at least not a man of truth. Who can say, it can be worse? Cease complaints, and fall to amendment. Ye Deputies of Moses, and Sons of Levi, sharpen both your swords. Consecrate and courage your hands and voices to the vastation of Jericho-walls. Be not unmerciful to your Country, whiles you are over-merciful to offenders. An easy cost repaires the beginning ruins of a house: when it is once dropt down, with danger about our ears, it is hardly reedified. Seasonable castigation may work reasonable reforming. The rents and breaches of our Zion are manifold, and manifest. Repaire them by the word of Mercy, and sword of Justice. If Jerusalem's roof be cast down, as low as her pavement, who shall build her up? It is yet time, (and not more then) enough. If you cannot turn the violent stream of our wickedness, yet swim against it yourselves; and provoke others; by your precepts, by your patterns. The success to God.

3. The all-wise GOD complains. He doth no more, what could he do less? He doth not bitterly inveigh, but passionately mourn for us. He speaks not with gall, but as it were with tears. There is sweet mercy even in his chidings. He teacheth us a happy composure of our reprehensions. We are of too violent a spirit, if at least we know what spirit we are of, when nothing can content us, but fire from Heaven. He that holds the fires of Heaven in his commanding hand, and can pour them in floods on rebellious Sodom, holds back his arm, and doth but gently loosen his voice to his people. I know, there is a time, when the still voice, that came to Elias, or the whisperings of that voice behind, this is the way, walk in it, can do little good: and then God is content we should derive from his Throne, Thundrings and Lightnings, and louder sounds. The Hammer of the Law must eft-soones break the stony heart of rebellion: and often the sweet Balm of the Gospel must supple the broken conscience. Let us not transpose or invert the method and direction of our Office; killing the dying with the killing letter, and preaching Judgment without mercy, least we reap Judgment without mercy to our selves. Some men's harts are like Nettles; if you touch them (but) gently, they will sting: but rough-handling is without prejudice: whiles others are like Briars, that wound the hard grasping-hand of reproof, but yield willingly to them, that softly touch them with exhortation. One must be washed with gentle Bathes, whiles another must have his ulcers cut with Launcers. Only do all, medentis animo, non s'niensis, not with an Oblique and sinister purpose, but with a direct intention to save. An odious, tedious, endless inculcation of things, doth often tire those with whom a soft and short reproof would find good impression. Such, while they would in intent edify, do in event tedifie. Indeed there is no true zeal, without some spice of anger: only subsit iracundia, non praesit; give thy anger due place, that it may follow as a servant, not go before as a Master.

It is objected, that the thoughts of God are peace. He that is covered with Thunder, and clothed with Lightning, speaks, and the Earth trembles, toucheth the Mountains, and they smoke for it; sharpens not his tongue like a Razor, but speaks by mournful complaint. What then mean our Preachers, to lift up their voices as Trumpets, and to speak in the tune of Thunder against us? We cannot wear a garment in the fashion, nor take use for our Money, nor drink with a good fellow, nor strengthen our words with the credit of an Oath; but bitter invectives must be shot, like Porcupines Quills, at these slight scapes. I answer, God knows when to chide, and when to mourn; when to say, Get thee behind me Satan, as to Peter, and when coolly to tax Jonah, doest thou well to be angry? But he that here mourns for Israel degenerate, doth at another time protest against Israel Apostate; and swears, they shall never enter into his rest. We would fain do so to, I mean, speak nothing but grace and peace to you: but if ever we be Thorns, it is because we live amongst Briars: if we lift up our voices, it is because your hearts are so sleepy, that you would not else hear us.

4. God did thus complain against Israel: where are his complaints, you will say, against us? Sure, our sins are not grown to so proud a height as to threaten Heaven, and provoke GOD to quarrel. Oh ill-grounded flattery of our selves: an imagination that adds to the measure of our sins. Whiles we conceive our wickedness less, even this conceit makes it somewhat more. If we say, that we have no sin, there is no truth in us. Nothing makes our guilt more palpable, then the pleading our selves not culpable. Every drop of this presumptuous Holy-water, sprinkled on us, brings now aspersions of filthiness. It is nothing else, but to wash our spots in mud. Yet speak freely. Doth not God complain? Examine. 1. The words of his mouth. 2. The works of his hand.

1. The voice of his Ministers is his voice. He that heareth you, heareth me. Do not the Jeremiah's of these days mourn like Turtles, as well as sing like Larkes? Do they not mingle with the tunes of Joy, the tones of Sorrow? When did they rejoice ever without trembling? Or lead you so currantly to dance in God's Sun-shine, that they forgot to speak of his Thunder? It is good to be merry and wise. What Sermon ever so flattered you with the fair weather of God's mercies, that it told you not with all, when the wind and the Sun meets there would be rain; when God's Sun-like Justice, and our raging and boisterous iniquities shall come in opposition, the storm of Judgment will ensue. Nay, have not your iniquities made the Pulpit (the Gospels mercy-seat) a Tribunal of Judgment?

2. Will not these mournings, menaces, querulations, stir your hearts; because they are derived from GOD, through us (his Organ-pipes) as if they had lost their vigor by the way? Then open your eyes, you that have dead your ears, and see him actually complaining against us. Observe at least, if not the thunders of his voice, yet the wonders of his hand. I could easily loose myself in this Common-place of Judgments. I will therefore limit my speech to narrow bounds; and only call that to our memories, the print whereof sticks in our sides: God having taught Nature, even by her good to hurt, (as some wash gold to deprave the weight of it) even to drain away our fruits by floods. But alas, we say of these strokes, as the Philosopher in one sense, and Solomon's Drunkard in another, non memini me percussum, we remember not that we were stricken: or as the Prophet, of the Jews. Thou hast smitten them, but they have not grieved: thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: even whiles their wounds were yet raw, and their ruins not made up. Many are like the Stoics in Equuleo; though the punishment lie on their flesh, it shall not come near their heart. God would school our heavy-spirited and coldly devoted worldlings, that sacrifice to their Nets, attribute all their thriving to their own industry: and never enter that thought on the point of their hearts, how they are beholding to God▪ Here, alas, we find, that we are beholding to the Corn and other fruits of the earth, they to the ground, the ground to the influences of Heaven, all to God.

When man hath done all in plowing, tilling, sowing; if either the clouds of Heaven deny their rain, or give too much, how soon is all lost? The Husbandman, that was wont to wait for the early and latter showers, now casts up trembling eyes to the clouds for a ne noceant. For, your Barns full of weeds, rather than grain, testify, that this blow did not only spoil the glory and benefit of your Meadows, but even by rebound your Corn-fields also. Be not Atheists, look higher than the clouds: It was no less, than the angry hand of God. Thus can God every way punish us. It was for a time the speech of all tongues, amazement of all eyes, wonder of all hearts, to see the showers of wrath so fast pouring on us; as if the course of nature were inverted, our Summer coming out in the robes of Winter. But as a Father writes of such a year: Our devotions begun and ended with the shower.

Nocte pluit tota, redeunt spectacula mane.

It rains, and we lament. But the Sun did not sooner break out through the clouds, then we broke out into our former licentiousness. We were humbled, but not humble: dressed of God, not cured. Though God with-hold plenty, we with-hold not gluttony. Pride leaves off none of her vanities. Usury bates not a cross of his Interest. The •ioter is still as drunken with Wine, as the earth was with Water. And the Covetous had still rather eat up the poor as bread, then they should eat of his bread: keeping his barns full, though their mawes be empty: as if he would not let the vermin fast, though the poor starve. No marvel, if heaven it self turns into languishment for these impieties.

Dic, rogo, cur toties descendit ab aethere nimbus,

Grando{que} de coelis sic sine fine cadit?

Mortals quoniam nolunt sua crimina fl•re,

Coelum pro nobis soluitur in lachrym•s.

What mean those aery spowtes and spongy clouds

To spill themselves on earth with frequent floods?

Because man swelling sins and dry eyes bears,

They weep for us, & rain down showers of tears.

God hath done, for his part, enough for Israel. He hath stored their Vials with Balm, their Cities wiith Physicians. It was then their own fault, that their health was not recovered. Oh Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thine help. Let even the inhabitants of Jerusalem and Judah themselves be vmpires, And what could I have done more to my Vineyard, that I have not done in it? God is not sparing in the commemoration of his mercies to us: as knowing, that of all the faculties of the Soul, the memory first waxeth old; and of all objects of the memory, a benefit is soonest forgotten. We write man's injuries to us in Marble, but God's mercies in dust or waters. We had need of remembrances. God hath done so much for us, that he may say to us, as once to Ephraim. Oh Ephraim, what shall I do (more) unto thee? What could Israel want, which God supplied not? If they want a guide, God goes before them in fire. If they lack Bread, Flesh, or Drink, Mercy and Miracle shall concur to satisfy them. Heaven shall give them Bread, the Wind Quails, the Rock Waters. Doth the Wilderness deny them new clothes? their old shall not wax old on their backs. A Law from heaven shall direct their Consciences; and God's Oracles from between the Cherubims shall resolve their doubts. If they be too weak for their Enimies, Fire from heaven, vapors from the clouds, Frogs and Catterpillers, Sun, Air, Waters, shall take their parts. Nay, God himself shall fight for them. What could God do more for their reserving, for their preserving?

If I should set the mercies of our land to run along with Israel's, we should gain cope of them, and out-run them. And though in God's actual and outward mercies they might outstrip us; yet in his spiritual and saving health they come short of us. They had the shadow, we the substance: they candle-light, we noon-day: they the breakfast of the Law, fit for the morning of the world; we the dinner of the Gospel, fit for the high-noon thereof. They had a glimpse of the Sun, we have him in the full strength: they saw per fe•estram, we sine medio. They had the Paschal-Lamb, to expiate sins ceremonially; we the Lamb of God to satisfy for us really. Not a typical sacrifice for the sins of the Jews only; but an euangelicall, taking away the sins of the world. For this is that secret opposition, which that voice of a Cryer intimates. Now what could God do more for us? Israel is stung with fiery Serpents, behold the erection of a (strangely medicinal) Serpent of brass. So, (besides the spiritual application of it) the plague hath stricken us, that have stricken God by our sins; his mercy hath healed us. Rumours of War hath hummed in our ears the murmures of terror; behold he could not set his bloody foot in our coasts. The rod of Famine hath been shaken over us; we have not smarted with the deadly lashes of it. Even that we have not been thus miserable, God hath done much for us.

Look round about you, and whiles you quake at the plagues so natural to our neighbors, bless your own safety, and our God for it. Behold the Confines of Christendom, Hungarie and Bohemia, infested and wasted with the Turks. Italy groaning under the slavery of Antichrist; which infects the soul, worse then the Turk infests the body. Behold the pride of Spine, curbed with a bloody Inquisition. France, a fair and flourishing Kingdom, made wretched by her Civil uncivil wars. Germany knew not of long time, what Peace meant: neither is their war ended, but suspended. Ireland hath felt the perpetual plague of her Rebellions. And Scotland hath not wanted her fatal disasters. Only England hath line, like Gedeons fleece, dry and secure, when the rain of Judgments have wetted the whole earth. When God hath tossed the Nations, and made them like a wheel, and as the stubble before the wind, only England hath stood like Mount Zion, with vnmoued firmness. Time was, she petitioned to Rome: now she neither fears her Bulls, nor desires her Bulwarks. The destitute Britain's thus mourned to their conquering Romans. Aetio ter Consul• gemitus Britannorum. Repell•nt nos Barbari ad mare: Repellit nos mare ad Barbaros. Hinc oriuntur duo funerum genera; quia aut iugulamur aut submergimur. To the Roman Consull the Britain's send groaning, instead of greeting. The Barbarous drive us upon the Sea. The Sea beats us back upon the Barbarous. Hence we are endangered to a double kind of death: either to be drowned, or to have our throats cut. The Barbarous are now unfear'd enemies; and the Sea is rather our Fort, then our Sepulcher. A peaceful Prince leads us, and the Prince of peace leads him. And besides our peace, we are so happy for Balm and Physicians; that if I should sing of the blessings of God to us, this should still be the burden of my Song: What could the Lord do more for us?

There is Balm at Gilead, there are Physicians there: Will there be ever so? Is there not a time to loose, as well as to get? Is whiles the Sanctuarie is full of this holy Balm, God's word if whiles there is plenty of Physicians, and in them plenty of skill, the health of Israel is not restored: how dangerous will her sickness be in the privation of both these restoratives? They that grow not rich in peace, what will they do in war? He that cannot live well in Summer, will hardly scape starving in Winter. Israel, that once had her Cities sown with Prophets, could after say, We see not our signs, there is not one Prophet among us. They that whilome loathed Manna, would have been glad, if after many a weary mile, they could have tasted the crumbs of it. He, whose prodigality scorned the bread in his Fathers house, would afterwards have thought himself refreshed with the husks of Swi•e.

The S•nne doth not ever shine; there is a time of setting. No day of iollitie is without his evening of conclusion, if no cloud of disturbance prevent it, with an over-casting. First, God complains, men sing, dance, are Iouiall and neglectful; at last man shall complain, and God shall laugh at their destructions. Why should God be conjure• to receive his Spirit dying, that would not receive God's spirit living? All things are whirled about in their circular courses; and who knows whither the next spoake of their wheel will not be a blank? Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful, and the end of that mirth is heaviness. If the black stones of our miseries should be counted with the white of our joys, we should find our calamities exceeding in number, as well as they do in nature. Often have we read our Savior weeping, but never laughing. We cannot choose but lament so long as we walk on the banks of Babylon. It is enough to re-assume our Harps, when we come to the high Jerusalem. In Heaven are pure joys, in Hell mere miseries, on Earth both, (though neither so perfect) mixed one with another. We cannot but acknowledge, that we begin and end with sorrow; our first voice being a cry, our last a groan. If any joys step in the midst, they do but present themselves on the Stage, play their parts, and put off their glories. Successiue they thrust upon us; striving, either who shall come in first, or abide with us longest. If any be more dainty of our acquaintance, it is joy. It is a frequent speech, fuimus Troes, we have been happy: Cum miserum quenquam videris, scias cum esse hominem: cum vero gloriosum, sci•s cum nondum esse Herculem. If thou seest one miserable, that's a man: but if thou seest another glorying, yet that's no God. There is no prescription of perpetuity.

It is enough for the Songs of Heaven, where Saints and Seraphim are the Choristers, to have no burden, as no end belonging to them. Let that be the standing house, where the Princes of GOD shall keep their Court, without grief or treason: our Progress can plead no such privilege. We must glad our selves here with the intermission of woes, or interposition of joys: let that place above challenge and possess that immunity from disturbance, where eternity is the ground of the Music. Here, every day is sure of his night, if not of clouds at noon. Therefore mutet vitam, qui vult accipere vitam; let him change his life on earth, that looks for life in heaven.

Tu quamcun{que} Deus tibi fortunauerit horam,

Grata sume manu, nec dulcia differ in annum.

Take the opportunity, which God's mercy hath offered thee. It is fit that God should have his day, when thine is past. Your salvation is now nearer than you believe it: but if you put away this acceptable time, your damnation is nearer, then you fear it. Mourn now for your sins, whiles your mourning may help you. Tha•, is the Mourners mark, yet the last letter of the Alphabet, for an vltimum vale to sin. Every soul shall mourn, either here with repentance, or hereafter in vengeance. They shall be oppressed with desperation, that have not expressed contrition. Herodotus hath a tale of the Pipe•, that coming to the River side, began to play to the fishes, to see if they would dance: when they were little affected with his music, he took his Net, and throwing it among them, caught some: which were no sooner cast on the dry ground, but they fell a leaping: to whom the Piper merrily replied, that since they had erst scorned his Music, they should now dance without a Pipe. Let it go for a fable. Christ saith to us, as once to the Jews; We have piped unto you, the sweet tunes of the Gospel, but ye would not dance in obedience: time will come, you shall run after us, as the Hind on the barren Mountains: but then you may dance without a Pipe, and leap Leuolto's in Hell, that have daunced the Devils Measures on Earth. This is the time, you shall har•lie lay the spirit of ruin, which your sins have rais•d. This World is a Witch, Sin her circle, Temptation her charm, Satan the spirit conjured up: Who comes not in more plausible forms at his first appa•ance, then shows ugly and terrible, when you would have him depart. Have nothing to do with the Spels of Sin, least you pull in Satan with one hand, whom with both you cannot cast out. The door is now open, Grace k•ockes at thy sleepy Conscience: Time runs by thee as a Lackie, the Agents of Nature prof•er their help. If all these concurrences do no good to purge thy soul, thou wilt at last dwell at the sign of the labor in vain, and at once be washed white with the Moore. For, if any will be unjust, let him be unjust: if he will be filthy, let him be filthy still. If any man will go into captivity, let him go. As he in the Comedy, abeat, pereat, profundat, perdat: let him sink, or swim, or scape as he can. God will renounce, whom he could not reclaim.

Lastly observe: there is Balm and Physicians; what is the reason, saith God, that my Peoples health is not recovered? or as the Hebrew phrase is, gone up? The like is used in the second of the Chronicles, 24. where the healing of the breaches of Zion is specified. So the work-men wrought, and the work was perfected by them. Hebr. The healing went up upon the work. When a man is sick, he is in our usual phrase said to be cast down: His recovery is the raising him up again. Israel is cast down with a voluntary sickness; God sends her Physicians of his own, and Drugges from the Shop of Heaven; why is she not then revived, and her health gone up? Would you know, why Israel is not recovered by these helps? Run along with me, both with your understandings and self-applications, and I will show you the reasons, why God's Physic works not on her.

1. She knew not her own sickness. We say, the first step to health, is to know that we are sick. The disease being known, it is half cured. This is the difference betwixt a Fever & a Lethargy: the one angers the sense, but doth keep it quick, tender and sensible: the other obstupifies it. The Lethargiz'd is not less sick, because he complaines not so loud as the Aguish. He is so much the nearer his own end, as he knows not that his disease is begun. Israel was sick and knew it not; or as Christ said of the Pharases, would not know it. There is no surer course for the devil to work his pleasure on men, then to keep them in ignorance. How easily doth that Thief rob and spoil the house of our souls, when he hath first put out the candle of knowledge? That tyrannical Nebuchadnezzar carries many a Zedekiah to his infernal Babel, when he hath put out his eyes. No meruaill, if the Gospel be hid to them that are hid to it: Whose minds the God of this world hath blinded, least the light of the glorious Gospel of God should shine to them. Who wonders, if the blind man cannot see the shining Sun? When Antiochus entered to the spoil of the Sanctuary, the first things he took away, were the golden Altar, and the Candle-stick of light. When the Devil comes to rifle God's spiritual temple, Mans soul, the first boot•e that he lays his sacrilegious hands on, are Sacrifice and Knowledge, the Alter and the Lamp. That subtle Falconer knows, that he could not so quietly carry us on his fist, without baiting and striving against him, if we were not hooded.

Thus wretched is it for a man not to see his wretchedness. Such a one spends his days in a dream; and goes from earth to hell, as Jonah•rom Israel toward Tarshish, fast asleep. This Paul calls the cauterized Conscience; which when the Devil, an ill Surgeon, would do, he first casts his Patient into a mort•ferous sleep: And that all the noise which God makes, by his Ministers, by his menaces, by his judgments, might not waken him, Satan gives him some Opium, an ounce of Security, able to cast Sampson himself into a slumber: especially, when he may lay his voluptuous head on the lap of Delilah. Israel is, then, sick in sin, and yet thinks her self righteous. Every sin is not this sickness, but only wickedness; an habit and delight•ull custom in it. For as to a healthful man, every ach, or gripe or pang is felt grievous; whiles the sickly entertain them with no great notice, as being daily guests. So the good man finds his repentant heart griped with the least offense, whiles great sins to the wicked are no less portable then familiar. Neither doth their strength in sin grow weaker with their strength in age: but preposterously to nature, the older, the stronger. And as it is storied of Roman Milo, that being accustomed a Boy to bear a Calf, was able himself grown a man, to bear the same, being grown a Bull: So those, that in youth have wonted themselves to the load of less sins, want not increase of strength, according to the increase of their burdens. Every sin then may be a stitch or fit to the godly; but that which is mere sickness, is mere wickedness.

2. As Israel did not judge from the cause to the effects, so nor from the effects to the cause. For though she was now grievously pained and pined with misery, she •orgot to go down by the boughs to the root, and dignity out the ground of her calamity. Ill she was, and that at heart. God's sword from heaven had stroke their very flesh and sinews in several judgments: which came on them by short incursions, before God joined the main battle of his wrath. Israel cries out of her bow•ls, she is payned at the very heart. Her children went with clean teeth, lank cheeks, hollow and sunk eyes: Could she not guess at the cause of this bodily languishment? So Paul schooled his Corinthians: For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. There is no weakness, but originally proceeds from wickedness. As Mephibosheth caught his l•m•nesse by falling from his Nurse, so everyone taketh his illness by falling from his Christ. Though sickness may be eventually a token of love, yet it is properly and originally a stroke of Justice. For every Disease God inflicts on us, is a Sermon from Heaven; whereby God preacheth to us, the vileness of our sins, and his wrathful displeasure for them. That those, whom God's vocal Sermons cannot move, his actual and real may pierce. Indeed, all things shall work to their good, that are good. And the rough Rocks of afflictions shall bring them (as Jonathan to the Garrison of the Philistines) by fit stairs to glory. Miseries do often help a man to mercies. So the Leapers incurable Disease brought him to the Pysician of his soul; where he had both cured by one plaster, the saving word of Christ. A weak body is a kind of occasion to a strong faith. It was good for me, saith the Psalmist, that I was in trouble. It was good for Naaman, that he was a Leaper: this brought him to Elisha, and Elisha to GOD. It was good for Paul that he was buffeted by Satan. It is proverbially spoken of a grave Divine, that (as pride makes sores of Salues, so) Faith makes Salues of sores; and like a cunning Apothecary makes a Medicinal composition of some hurtful simples. Of all herbs in the Garden, only Rue is the herb of grace. And in what Garden, the rue of affliction is not, all the flowers of grace will be soon over-run with the weeds of impiety. David was a sinner in prosperity, a Saint in Purgatory. The afflicted soul drives vanity from his door. Prosperity is the Play-house, Adversity the Temple. Raræ fumant foelicibus aræ: The healthie and wealthy man brings seldom Sacrifices to God's Altar. Israel's misery had been enough to help her recovery; if she had gathered and understood her vexation to God, by God's visitation on her; and guessed the souls state by the bodies. She did not: therefore her sickness abides. As Christ to the Pharisees: You say, you see: therefore be blind still.

3. As she did neither directly feel it, nor circumstantially collect it, so she never confessed it. Prima pars sanitatis est, velle sanari. The first entrance to our healing, is our own will to be healed. How shall Christ, either search our sins by the Law, or salve them by the Gospel, when we not acknowledge them? Ipsæ sibi denegat curam, cui Medico non publicat causam. He hath no care of his own Cure, that will not tell the Pysician his grief. What spiritual Pysician shall recover our persons, when we will not discover our sores? Stultorum incurata pudor malus vlcera celat: Lay the guilt on yourselves, if you ranckle to death. It is heavy in thy friends ears, to hear thy groans, and sighs, and plaints forced by thy sick passion; but then sorrow pierceth deepest into their harts through their eyes, when they see thee grown speechless.

The tongue then least of all the loss doth mone,

When the life's soul is going out, or gone.

So, there is some hope of the sinner, whiles he can groan for his wickedness, and complain against it, and himself for it: but when his voice is hoar'd, I mean, his acknowledgement gone, his case is almost desperate. Confession of sins and sores is a notable help to their Curing. As Pride in all her Wardrobe hath not a better garment then humility (many clad with that was respected in the eyes of God.) So, nor humillity in all her storehouse, hath better food than Confession. Dum agnoscit reus, ignoscit Deus. Whiles the unjust sinner repents and confesseth, the just God relents and forgiveth. The confident Pharisee goes from God's door without an Alms: what need the full be bidden to a Feast? tolle vulnera, tolle opus medici. It is fearful for a man to bind two sins together, when he is not able to bear the load of one. To act wickedness, and then to cloak it, is for a man to wound himself, and then go to the Devil for a plaster. What man doth conceal, God will not cancel. Iniquities strangled in silence, will strangle the soul in heaviness.

There are three degrees of felicity. 1. non offendere. 2. noscere. 3. agnoscere peccata. The first is, not sin: the second, to know: the third, to acknowledge our offenses. Let us then honor him by Confession, whom we have dishonored by presumption. Though we have failed in the first part of Religion, an upright life, let us not fail in the second, a repentant acknowledgement. Though we cannot show GOD, with the Pharisee, an Inventory of our holy works: Item for praying: Item for fasting: Item for paying Tythes, &c. Yet (as dumb as we are and fearful to speak) we can write (with Zachary. His name is John.) Grace, grace, and only grace. Meritum meum misericordia tua Domine. My merit, oh Lord, is only thy mercy. Or as another sung well.

Tis vere pius, ego reus:

Miserere mei Deus.

Thou, Lord, art only God, and only good.

I sinful: let thy mercy be my food.

Peccatum argumentum soporis, confessio animae suscitatae. Sinfulness is a sleep, Confession a sign that we are waked. Men dream in their sleeps, but tell their dreams waking. In our sleep of security, we lead a dreaming life, full of vile imaginations. But if we confess and speak our sins to God's glory, and our own shame, it is a token that God's spirit hath wakened us. Si non confessus lates, inconfessus damnaberis. The way to hide our iniquities at the last, is to lay them open here. He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but he that confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy. This is true, though to some a Paradox. The way to cover our sins, is to uncover them. Quae aperiuntur in praesenti, operiuntur in ultimo die. If we now freely lay open our iniquities to our God, he will conceal them at the latter day. Else (cruciant plus vulnera clausa) Sins that are smothered, will in the end enter to death. The mouth of Hell is made open to devour us by our sins; when we open our own mouths to confess, we shut that. Israel is not then restored, because her sickness is not declared.

4. The last defect to Israel's Cure, is the want of application. What should a sick man do with Physic, when he lets it fust in a vessel, or spils it on the ground. It is ill for a man to mispose that to loss, which God hath disposed to his good. Beloved? Application is the sweet use to be made of all Sermons. In vain to you are our Ministries of God's mysteries, when you open not the doors of your hearts to let them in. In vain we smite your rocky hearts, when you pour out no floods of tears. In vain we thunder against your sins, covetous oppressions of men, treasonable Rebellions against God; when no man says, Master is it I? Quod omnibus dicitur, nemini dicitur? Is that spoken to no man, which is spoken to all men? Whiles Covetousness is taxed, not one of twenty Churls lays his finger on his own sore. Whiles Lust is condemned, what Adulterer feels the pulse of his own conscience? Whiles Malice is inquired of in the Pulpit, there is not a N•b••ish neighbor in the Church will own it. It is our common armor against the sword of the spirit; It is not to me he speaks. For which, God at last gives them an answerable plague: they shall as desperate lie put from them all the comforts of the Gospel, as they have presumptuously rejected all the precepts of the Law. They that would particularise no admonition to themselves, nor take one grain out of the whole heap of Doctrines for their own use: shall at last with as invincible forwardness, bespeak themselves every curse in the sacred volume.

Thus easy and ordinary is it for men, to be others Physicians, rather than their own: Statesmen in foreign Common-wealths, not looking into their own doors: sometimes putting on Aaron's Robes, and teaching him to teach: and often scalding their lips in their Neighbors Pottage. They can weed other Gardens, whiles their own is over-run with Nettles. Like that too obsequious Roman Soldier, that digged a fountain for Caesar, and perished himself in a voluntary thirst. But Charity begins at home, and he that loves not his own soul, I will hardly trust him with mine. The Usurer blames his Son's pride, sees not his own extortion. And whiles the hypocrite is helping the dissolute out of the mire, he sticks in deeper himself. The Pharisees are on the Disciples jacket, for eating with unwashen hands, whiles themselves are not blame-worthy, that eat with unwashen hearts. No marvel, if when we fixe both our eyes on others wants, we lack a third to see our own. If two blind men rush one upon another in the way, either complains of others blindness, neither of his own. Thus, like mannerly guests, when a good morsel is carved to us, we lay it liberally on another's trencher, and fast our selves. How much better were it for us, to feed on our own portion?

Go back, go back, thou foolish sinner: turn in to thine own house, and stray not with Dina, till thou be ravished. Consider your ways in your hearts. If thou findest not work enough to do at home, in cleansing thy own heart, come forth then and help thy Neighbors. Whosoever you are, sit not like lookers on at God's Mart; but having good wares profferd you, and that so cheap, grace, peace, and remission of sins for nothing, take it, and bless his name that gives it. Receive with no less thankfulness the Physic of admonition, he sends you: apply it carefully: if it do not work on your souls effectually, there is nothing left, that may do you good. The word of God is powerful as his own Majesty: and shall never return back to himself again, without speeding the Commission it went for. Apply it then to your souls in faith and repentance, least God apply it in fear and vengeance. Lord, open our hearts with the key of Grace, that thy holy word may enter in, to reign in us in this world, and to save us in the world to come.
Amen.

HOSEA 13.9.

Oh Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help.

AUGUST. Serm. de Temp. 145.

Quid de te, tu ipse tam male meruisti, vt inter bona tua nolis aliquod esse malum, nisi teipsum?

How didst thou, oh wicked man, deserve so ill of thyself, that among all thy goods, thou wouldst have nothing bad but thyself?

TO THE VERIE WORTHY GENTLEman, M<sup>r</sup>. John Alleyne, saving health.

SIR,

I have endeavored in this short Sermon, to prescribe to these sick times some spiritual Physic. The ground I have received from the direction of God: the method I submit to the correction of man. In this I might err, in the other I could not. The main and material objects I have levelled at, are. 1. to beget in us a sense of the sins we have done, of the miseries whereby we are undone. 2. To rebuke our forgetfulness of God's long-since ordained remedy, the true intrinsique Balm of his Gospel. In the saving use whereof, we are (like some Countries blessed with the medicinal benefits of Nature, yet) through nescience or negligence, defective to our selves in the application. Inward diseases are as frequent as outward; those by disquiet of mind, as these by disdiet of body. It was a rare age, that had no spiritual plague ranging and raging in it. Ours hath manifold and manifest, vile and vi·ible ones: the World growing at once old and decayed in nature, lusty and active in producing sins. Wickedness is an aged Harlot, yet as pregnant and teeming as ever. It cannot be denied, but that our Iniquities are so palpable, that it is as easy to prove them, as to reprove them. Were our bodies but half so diseased, (and yet this year hath not favored them) as our souls are, a strange and unheard of mortality would ensue. Man is naturally very indulgent to himself, but misplaceth his bounty. He gives the body so much liberty, that it becomes licentious: but his soul is so prisoned up in the bonds of corrupt affections, that she cries of him, as that troubled Princesse of her strict keeper, from such a Jailor good Lord deliver me. The Flesh is made a Gentleman, the Mind a Beggar. Sick we are, yet consult not the Oracles of Heaven for our welfare, nor solicit the help of our great Pysician Christ. He is our Savior, and bare our sicknesses, saith the Prophet: yea, took on him our infirmities. Infirmitates speciei, non indiuidui: Infirmities commune to the nature of mankind, not particularly incident to every singular person. Those he took on himself, that he might know the better to succor us in our weakness. As the Queen sung of her self in the Poet. Non ignara mali miseris succurrere disco. It is most perfectly true of our Jesus, that he learned by his own sorrows to pity ours; though all his sufferance was for our sakes. But how should he help us, if we make not our moan to him? How should we be restored, when God's saving Physic is unsought, vnought, vnappplied? To convince our neglect, and persuade our better use of the Gospel, tends this weak labor. To your protection it willingly flies; and would rest it self under your shadow. The God of Peace give you the peace of God, which passeth all understanding; and afford you many joys in this life to the end, and in the next his joy without end.

Yours in the services of love, THO. ADAMS.

THE Sinners Passing-Bell. OR Physic from Heaven. The sixth Sermon.

IEREM. 8.22.

Is there no Balm at Gilead? Is there no Pysician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?

THE Allegory is Tripartite, and propounds to our considerations 1. What is the Balm, 2. Who are the Physicians, 3. Who are the sick. The Balm is the Word The Physicians are the Ministers. The Sick are the Sinners. For the first.

The Balsam-Tree is a little shrub, never growing past the height of two Cubites, and spreading like a Vine. The Tree is of an Ash-color, the boughs small and tender, the leaves are like to Rew.

Isidore thus distinguisheth it. The Tree is called Basamum, the Roote orilo-Balsamum, the Branches Xylo-Balsamum, the Seed carpo-Balsamum, the Juice opo-Bal•amum.

Pliny saith, the Tree is all medicinal: the chief and prime virtue is in the Juice: the second in the Seed: the third in the Rinde: the last and weakest in the Stock. It comforts both by tasting and smelling. It is most commonly distinguished by Physicians into Lignum, Semen, L•quorem, the Wood, the Seed, and the Juice. This is the nature of the Balsamum.

This holy Word is here called Balm: and (si fas sit magnis componere parua) if we may compare heavenly with earthly, spiritual with natural things, they agree in many resemblances. The vn-erring Wisdom of Heaven hath given this comparison. There is no fear to build on God's ground: whiles the Analogy of Faith limits us. It is the Builders first and principal care to choose a sure foundation. The rotten, moorish, quick-sandy grounds, that some have •et their edifices on, have failed their hopes, and destituted their intents. How many worthy wits have spent their times and studies, to daub up the •ilthy walls of Rome with untempered mortar! How well had they hunted, if they had not mistaken their game! How rich apparel have they woven for a Babylonish Harlot! How well had they sailed, if Rome had not guided their Compass! But every man's work shall be made manifest. For the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire, and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. Happy is he, that hath a rock for his ground, that no gusts, storms, winds, waves may over-turn his house. Though other foundation none can lay, then that is laid, which is Jesus Christ; yet blessed is he, that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, hath built safely upon this ground.

God hath here laid my ground; I will be hold to build my speech on that, whereon I build my faith. Only sobriety shall be my bounds. We may call God's word, that Balm tree, whereon the fruit of life grows. A tree that heals, a tree that helps. A tree of both medicament, and nutriment. Like the Tree of life, which bears twelve manner of fruits, and yieldeth her fruit every month. Neither is the fruit only nourishing, but even the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the Nations. Now though the Balm here, whereunto the Word is compared, is more generally taken for the juice, now fitted and ready for application; yet without pinching the Metaphor, or restraining the liberty of it, I see not why, it may not so be likened, both for general and particular properties. It is not enough to say this, but to show it. Let me say it now, show it anon. For the Balm, you have the Tree, the Seed, the Juice. God's Word will (not unfitly) parallel it in resemblances, transcend it in effectual properties.

The Tree it self is the Word. We find the eternal Word so compared. I am the true Vine, and my Father is the Husbandman. He is a Tree, but arbor inuersa: the root of this tree is in Heaven. It was once made flesh, and dwelt amongst us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth. Now he is in Heaven. Only this Word still speaks unto us by his word: the word incarnate by the word written; made sounding in the mouth of his Ministers. This word of His, is compared and expressed by many Metaphores: to leaven for seasoning: to honey for sweetening: to the hammer for breaking the stony heart Is not my Word like as a fire, saith the Lord? and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? To a sword, that cuts both ways. The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper then a two-edged sword, &c. Another sword can but enter the flesh and pierce the bones, or at most divide the soul and the body; but this the soul and the spirit, where no other sword can come, no not the Cherubims sierre sword, that kept the passage of Paradise.

It is here a Tree, a Balm-tree, a saluing, a saving tree. Albumasar saith, that the more medicinal a plant is, the less it nourisheth. But this Tree (reddit aegrotum sanum, sanum vero santorem) makes a sick soul sound, and a whole one sounder. It is not only Physic when men be sick, but meat when they be whole. Triacle to expel, preservatives to prevent poison. It is not only a sword to beat back our common enemy, but a Bulwark to hinder his approach.

It carries a seed with it, Carmo-bal•amum; an immortal and incorruptible seed, which concurs to the begetting of a new man, the old rotting and dying away: for it hath power of both, to mortife and dead the flesh, to revive and quicken the spirit. That seed, which the sower went out to sow. Happy is the good ground of the heart that receives it. That little Mustard-seed, which spr•ads up into branches, able to give the fowls of heaven harbor. Dis•rim•n hoc inter op•ra Dei et Mundi. This difference is betwixt the works of God and of the World. The works of the world have great and swelling Entrances, but, malo sine clauduntur, they halt in the conclusion. The works of God, from a most slender beginning have a most glorious issue. The word is at first a little seed; how powerful, how plentiful are the effects? how manifold, how manifest are the operations of it; casting down the highest things, that exalt themselves against the knowledge of God; and captiuating every thought to the obedience of Christ.

The juice is no less powerful to mollify the stony heart, and make it tender and soft, as a heart of flesh. The seed convinceth the understanding: the Juice mollifieth the affections. All is excellent; but still conspicuuum minùs, quod maxim est praeclarum, the root that yields this seed, this juice, is the power of God. A tree hath manifest to the eye, leaves, and flowers, and fruits, but the root (most precious) lies hidden. In man the body is seen, not the purer and better part of him, his soul. The Kings daughter, though her clothing be of wrought gold, is most glorious within. In all things we see the accidents, not the form, not the substance. There are but few, that rightly taste the seed, and the juice; but who hath comprehended the root of this Balm?

The Balsam is a little tree, but it spreads beyond a Vine. The virtue of it, in all respects, is full of dilatation. It spreads 1. largely for shadow. 2. pregnantly for fruit. 3. all this from a small beginning. So that we may say of it, as the Church of her Savior. As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons. I sate down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste.

It spreads. No sharp frosts, nor nipping blasts, nor chilling airs, nor drisling sleete, can mar the beauty or enervate the virtue of this spiritual Tree. The more it is stopped, the further it groweth. Many interdictiones rung peals of menaces in the Apostles ears, that they should speak no more in the name and word of Christ: they did all rather like Bells toll them into the Church, to preach it more fervently. The Princes of the Nations would have hedged it in with their prohibitions: but the Word of Heaven, and edict of God's spiritual Court of glory, scorned the Prohibitions given by their temporal or temporary Laws. They might easier have hedged in the wind, or pounded the Eagle.

The Jews would have cut down this Tree at the root: the Gentiles would have lopped off the branches. They stroke at Christ, these at his Ministers: both struck short. If they killed the Messenger, they could not reach the message. The blood of the Martyrs, spilled at the root of this tree, did (as it were) make it spread more patently. There never died Preacher for Christ his cause, but almost every ash of his burned flesh, bred a Christian. The old Foxes of Rome, that had caliditatis paululum, calliditatis plurimum, little warmth in their bloods, great subtlety in their pates, studied, plotted, acted, by cares, stratagem•, engines, to give a fatal, final subversion to the Gospel: yet they lived to see it flourish, and because it flourished, died, fretting themselves to dust. So, let thine enemies perish, oh Lord, and burst their malicious bowels, that have evil will at Zion, and despite this Balm.

It grew maugre all the adverse blasts and floods, which the billows of earth, or bellows of Hell could blow or pour out against it. Let them loose a Barabbas from prison, whiles they shut a Barnabas in prison: let them give Demetrius liberty, whiles they shackle Paul; and at once, burn the professors, and reward the persecutors of the Word: behold (for all this) this Balm flourisheth, and sends forth his saving odors. The Philistines shut up Sampson in the City Gaza: they bar the gates, watch and guard the passages, and are ready to study for the manner of his death. The Jews shut up Christ in the grave, they bar it, they seal it, they guard it; sure enough thinks the Jew, hopes the Devil, to keep him fast. The Gentiles shut the Apostles in prison, chain them, beat them, threat them with worse, that had felt already their bad usage: now they clap their hands at the presumed fall of the Gospel. Behold, Sampson carries away the gates of Gaza; Christ the bands of death; the Word the bars of the prison.

What shall I say? still this Balm flourisheth. Viuit, viget, liber est, supra hominem est. As Joseph (incipit a vinculis ferreis, finite ad torquem aureum) begins at iron, ends at golden chains: so this Balsam, the more it is struck at with the cudgels of reproach and persecution, the faster, the fuller, the further it groweth. It is like the Vine for this virtue; only the Vine (but only) nourisheth: the Balm both nourisheth the good, and expelleth the evil, that is in man. These two are God's trees. When every God, saith the Poet, chose his several tree; Jupiter the long-lived Oak; Neptune the tall Cedar, Apollo the green Laurell, Venus the white Poplar; Pallas (whom the Poets fain, to be borne of Jupiter's brain, and Mythologists interpret Wisdom) chose the Vine. Our true and only God, that oweth all, hath more especially chosen the Vine and the Balm, one for preservation, the other for restauration of our health. Only the Balm hath both elemental Physic, and alimentall virtue in it.

As it gives boughs spaciously, so fruit pregnantly, plentifully. The graces of God hang upon this tree in clusters. My beloved is unto me as a cluster of Camphire in the Vineyards of Engedi. No hungry soul shall go away from this tree unsatisfied.

It is an effectual word, never failing of intended success. What God's word affirms, his truth performs, whither it be judgment or mercy. Nec verbum ab intention quia veritas, nec factum à verbo quia virtus. His word differs not from his intent, because he is truth: nor his deed from his word, because he is virtue. What he intends he declares, or rather what he declares he intends, he is just: and what he declares and intends, he performs; he is powerful. This is that Delphian sword, that universal instrument, whereby he made, whereby he supports the world. It is not a fruitless and ineffectual word, as man's. Propter nostrum dicere et velle, nihil in re mutatur, saith the Philosopher. Our speaking or willing puts no change into any subject. A man is starved with cold, famished with hunger; we advise him to the fire, to repast: is he ever the fuller or fatter for our word? Not, unless like a Chameleon, he can live by air. But God's word is fruitful, it feeds. Man lives not by bread only, but by God's word. Our word and will is like an Idols power: God's volò is sufficient. Voluntas eius, potestas eius. His will is his power. One fiat of his was able to make that was not, but had else line in everlasting informitie; to constitute nature when it is not, to confirm or change nature when it is. When GOD was in the flesh, and went about doing good, a faithful Centurion, for his servant so desperately sick, desired not the travel of his feet, nor a dram of his Physic, nor so much as the imposition of his hands, but dic verbum tantum: Lord say the word only, and my servant shall be healed. This word is so effectual, that it shall never fail of the purpose it first was sped for. The Sun and Moon shall fail in their motions, day and night in their courses, the earth totter on her props, Nature it self shall apostate to confusion, before God's word fall away vnaccomplished; whither he dispenseth it to affect man's heart, or disposeth it to effect his will. Of so powerful efficacy is that word, which the world despiseth.

As this Balm spreads patently for shadow, potently for fruit, so all this ar•seth from a little seed. God's smallest springs prove at length main Oceans. His least beginnings grow into great works, great wonders. How stately th• world begins, how lame it is at last? The Tower of Babel is begun, as if it scorned Heaven, and scared Earth; how easy a stratagem from God overthrows it, though he never laid finger to it! Nebuchadnezzar begins with, who is God? and anon scarce reserves to himself the visible difference from a beast. Another Nebuchadnezzar exterminates all God's from the earth, that himself might reign (solus Deus in solio, who was rather Daemon in folio) only God: behold a silly woman overthrows him in his great Holophernes. With such proud entrances doth the world begin his Scaenes; with such ridiculous shame do they lagge off. Our God from small beginnings, raiseth mountains of meruailes to us, of praises to himself. Even Joseph, that is in prison, shall ride in the second Chariot of Egypt. Drowning Moses shall come to countermaund a Monarch. Christ, that was buried in a grave, shall bruise the nations, and break them with a rod of iron. Peter a Fisher shall catch whole Countries. A little Balm heal a world of people.

Well, it spreads; let us get under the shadow of the branches. Happy and cool refreshing shall the soul scorched with sins and sorrows find there. Never was shade more welcome to the sweltred Traveler, then this word is to the afflicted conscience.

It is fructuall: let it be so to us in operation. It gives us the fruits of life, let us return it the fruits of obedience. God's word is significatiue to all, operative to his.

It is a powerful voice, whither it give life, or kill. Man and Music have (virtutem vocis) the power of voice: God only reserves to himself (voce[m] virtutis) the voice of power. Loe he doth send out his voice, and that a mighty voice. Ascribe ye strength unto God. I might speak of his thunders in Sinai; but I turn to the Songs of Zion, the sweet voice of his Gospel, whereof I am an (unworthy) Minister: t• voice that speaks Christ and his death, Christ and his life, Christ and his salvation. He that was anointed pro consortibus, and pr• consortibus, for his fellows, and above his fellows. Who is the way, the truth, and the life. Via sine deuio, veritas sine nubilo, vita sine termino. The way without error, the truth without darkness, the life without end. Via in exilio, veritas in consilio, vita in praemio. The way in exile, the truth in counsel, the life in reward. Oh whi•her shall we go from thee? Lord, thou hast the words of eternal life. All the word calls us to Christ. Post me, per me, ad me. Aster me, by me, to me. After me, because I am truth: by me, because I am the way: to me, because I am life. Qua vis ire? Ego sum via. Quo vis ire? Ego sum veritas. Vbi vis perman•re? Ego sum vita, How wilt thou go? I am the way. Whither wilt thou go? I am the truth. Where wilt thou abide? I am the life.

Now, there is no action without motion, no motion without will, no will without knowledge, no knowledge without hearing. Ignoti nulla cupido. There is no affection to unknown objects. God must then by this word call us to himself. Let us come when and whiles he calls us; leaving our former evil loves and evil lives: (for mali amor•s make malos mores, saith Saint Augustine. Bad affects produce bad effects.) And let us show the power of this Balm in our confirmed healths. Solummodo been conuersus est, qui been conversatus est: A good conversion is proved by a good conversation. Perhaps these effects in all, may not be alike in quantity, let them be in quallitie. God hath a liberal, not an equal hand: and gives geometrically, by proportion, not arithmetically, to all alike. Only magis & minus non tollit substantiam: the dimensions of greater or less do not annihilate the substance. Our Faith may be precious, nay like precious, though less and weaker. Sanctification admits degrees, Justification no latitude. Luther saith, we are as holy as Mary the Virgin, not in life, which, is active holiness, but in grace of adoption, which is passive holiness. Come we then faithfully to this Balm; so shall we be safe under the shadow, and filled with the fruits thereof. Thus in general: let us now search for some more special concurrences of the Similitude.

1. The leaves of the Balsam are white: the word of God is pure and spotless. Peter saith, there is sincerity in it. Perfection it self was the finger that wrote it: neither could the instrumental pens blot it with any corruption: the Spirit of Grace giving inspiration, instruction, limitation: that they might say with Paul, Quod accepi a Domino, tradidi vobis: I received of the Lord, that which I delivered to you; neither more nor less, but just weight. It is pure as Gold fined in a seven-fold furnace. Every word of God is pure, saith Solomon. There is no breath or steam of sin to infect it. The Sun is darkness to it: the very Angels are short of it. It is white, immaculate, and so unblemishable, that the very mouth of the Devil could not sully it. Even the known Father of lies thought to disparage the credit of the Scriptures, by taking them into his mouth; he could not do it. They are too unchangeably white, to receive the aspersion of any spot.

2. The Balsam, say the Physicians, is gustu mordax & acro, sharp and biting in the taste, but wholesome in digestion. The holy word is no otherwise to the regenerate palate, but to the sanctified soul it is sweeter then the honey-comb. The Church saith his fruit is sweet unto my taste. It is Folly to the Jews, and a stumbling block to the Gentiles: but to the called both of Jews and Gentiles, the power of God, and the wisdom of God. Saluberrimararo •ucundissima: Relish and goodness are not ever of the same congruence. The Gospel is like leaven, sour to the natural spirit, yet makes him fit for (holy) bread. It is said of the Leaven, to which Christ compares the Word, that •assam acrore grato excitat, it puts into the lump a savory sourness. It is acrore, but gratus, sharp, but acceptable. The Word may relish bitter to many, but is wholesome. There cannot be sharper pills given to the Usurer, then to cast up his unjust gains. The Potion that must scour the Adulterers reins, makes him very sick. He that will let the proud man's Plurisie blood, must needs prick him. To bridle the voluptuous beast, will make him stamp and fret. All correction to our corruption runs against the grain of our affections. He that would bring Mammon to the bar, and arraign him, shall have Judge, Jury, sitters and standers, a whole Court and Sessions against him. These sinneres are as hardly parted with of the owners, as the Eye, Hand, or Foot, necessary and ill-spared members. Forbid the Courtly Herod of his Herodias: the Noble Naaman of his Rimmon: the gallant Sampson of his Delilah: the City-Dives of his quotidian feast: the Country-Nabal of his churlishnesse: the rustically Gergesites of their hoggishnesse: the Popish Laban of his little God's: the Ahabish Landlord of his enclosings: and you give them bitter Almonds, that will not digest with them; like the queasy Mass-Priest, whose God would not stay in his stomach. But let God work the heart with the preparatiues of his preventing Grace, and then this Balm will have a sweet and pleasing savor.

There are too many, that will not open their lips to taste of this Balm; not their ears to hear the Word. But as one mocks the Popish-Priest celebrating the Mass, (who useth one trick amongst other histrionical gestures, of stopping his ears) that he doth it least he should hear the crackling of his Saviors bones.

Digitis tunc obserat aures,

N• collisa crepent Christi, quem conterit, ossa.

So these become voluntarily deaf Adders, and will not hear Christ crucified, the preaching of the cross of Christ, as Paul calls it; which is able to kill our sins, and quicken our souls. I have read it reported, that the Adders in the East and those hot Countries, did so subtly evade the Charmers, thus. When she hears the Pipe, she will couch one ear close to the ground, and cover the other with her tail. So do worldlings: they fill one ear with earth, as much cou•tous dirt as they can cramme into it: the other ear they close up with their lewd l•sts, as the Adder with her winding tail: that they have none left for their God, for their good. And being thus deaf to holy and heavenly incantations, they are easily by Satan oue•reached, over-ruled, over-thrown.

So unwieldy is Christ's yoke to the raging Mule: so heavy his burden to the reluctant horse: so hard his Law to the carnal Capernaite: so sour his Balm to the wicked palate. (Though to the godly his yoke is easy, and his burden light.) Woe unto them, for they call sweet sour, God's Balm distasteful; and sour sweet, the worlds Boleño savory. They are not more propitious to vice, then malicious to goodness. For others, they love a Barabbas better then a Barnabas. For themselves, everyone had rather be a Dives, then a Diuus: a rich sinner, then a poor Saint. No marvel, if the blind man cannot judge of colors, nor the deaf distinguish sounds, nor the sick relish meats. God's word is sweet, how ever they judge it: and their hearts are sour, how ever they will not think it. My ways are equal, but your ways are unequal, saith the Lord of hosts.

3. They write of the Balsamum, that the manner of getting out the juice, is by wounding the tree. Sanciata arbor praebet opobalsamum. Provided, that they cut no further then the •nde: for if the wound extends to the body of the tree, it bleeds to death. I have read no less of Vines, that unjustly pruin'd, they bleed away their lives with their sappes. The issuing Balm is called opobalsamum; as some from the Greek opo, which signifies a Den; or rather of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Juice. A treble lesson here invites our observation.

1. The Balsam tree weeps out a kind of gum, like tears: the word of God doth compassionately bemoan• our sins. Christ wept not only tears for Jerusalem, but blood for the world. His wounds gush out like fountains, and every drop is blood. Ecce in lachrimis, in sanguine locutus est mundo. His whole life was a continual mourning for our sins. Nunquam ridere dictus, flere saepissime. He may adjure us to repentance and obedience, by more forcible arguments, then ever Dido used to Aeneas: Ego vos per has lachrymas, per hos gemitus, per haec vulnera, per corpus sanguine mersum. I entreat you by tears, by groans, by wounds, by a body (as it were) drowned in it own blood: by all these mercies of Christ, whereby we do not only persuade you of our selves, but God doth beseech you through us. If those tears, sighs, wounds, blood, move not our consciences, we have impenetrable souls. If the heart-blood of Christ cannot make thy heart to relent, and thy feet to tremble, when thy concupiscence sends them on some wicked errand; thy hands, tongue, and all parts and powers of thee to forget their office, when thou wouldst sin obstinately; thou art in a desperate case. These were the tears of this Balm tree. The word doth in many places, as it were, weep for our sins, panting out the grievance of a compassionate God. Why will ye die, oh you house of Israel? What Prophet hath written without sorrow? One of them Threnos suspirat, sighs out a book of Lamentations; which Greg. Nazianzen saith, (Nunquam à se siccis oculis lectos esse) that he could never read with dry eyes. The other Prophets also, like Quails, curas hominum gesserunt, took on them the burden of many men's sorrows. Cyprian had so compassionate a sympathy of others evil deeds, evil sufferings, that (cum singulis pectus meum copulo, cum plangentibus plango, saith he) I join my breast with others, and challenge a partnership in their griefs. A Minister, saith Chrysostom, debet esse lugens sua et aliena delicta; should be still lamenting his own sins, and the sins of his people. Monachus est plangentis officium. The office of a Minister, is the office of a Mourner. All these are but as Canes, to derive to our observation the tears of this Balm.

2. The way to get out the juice of Balm from God's word, is by cutting it: skillful division of it, which S. Paul calls 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, rightly dividing the word of truth. It is true that God's word is, panis vitae, the bread of life: but whiles it is in the whole loaf, many cannot help themselves: it is needful for children to have it cut to them in pieces. Though the Spice vnbroken be sweet and excellent, yet doth it then treble the savor in delicacy, when it is pounded in a Morter. All the Balm-tree is medicinal, yet the effectual working is better helped, by cutting the stock, by taking out the juice, and by distributing to every man a portion, according to the proportion of his wants. With no less heedfulness must the word be divided; that some may receive it gentle and mollifying, and others as a sharper ingredient. As there is a double composition in men, pride and humillitie: so there must be a double disposition in preaching the word, of meekness, of terror. Aaron's Bells must be wisely rung: sometimes the Treble of Mercy; sometimes the Tenour of Judgment; sometimes the Counter-tenor of Reproose; and often the Mean of Exhortation. There is no less discretion required to application, then to explication. As Physicians prescribe their Medicines by drammes or ounces, according to the Patients strength or weakness. So Divines must feed some with milk, others with stronger meat. The learned should have deeper points, the simple plainer principles. How easy is it for many a weak stomach to surfeit even on the food of life! (though the fault lies not in any superfluity of the word, but in the deficiency of his understanding.) The absence of sobriety in the speaker is more intolerable then in the hearer. The people must take such meat as their Cooks dress to them. Let none of Eli's Sons slubber up the Lord's Sacrifice or Service. Let not good Balm be mar'd by a fustie vessel. Seasonable discretion must attend upon sound knowledge. Wisdom without Wit is meat without salt: W•t without W•sedome is salt without meat. Some Wells are so deep, that a man can draw no water out of them; these bury their gifts in the grave of sullen silence. Some are shallow pits, that run so long open mouth, till their Springs are quite dry: whiles they w•l be prius Doctors, quam discipuli, Masters that never were Scholars; and leap into Paul's Chair, when they never sate at the feet of Gamaliel. There must be therefore Wisdom both in the Dispensers & hearers of God's mysteries; in the former to distribute, in the other to apportion their due and fit share of this Balm.

3. The Balsam tree being wounded too deep dyes: the word of GOD cannot be marred, it may be martyred, and forced to suffer injurious interpretations. The Papists have made, and called, the Scriptures a nose of wax; and they wring this Nose so hard, that as Solomon says, they force out blood. As Christ once, so his word often is crucified between two Thieves; the Papist on the left hand, the Schismatic on the right. These would ravish the virgin-pureness of the Gospel, and adulterate the beauty of it. They cannot cut, except they cut a pieces; nor distinguish, but they must extinguish. They divide fair, but they leave the Quotient empty. They subdivide, till they bring all to nothing but fractions, but factions. We may observe, that among these, there are as few vnifici in the Church, as Munisici in the Common-wealth. They are commonly most miserable men of their purses, most prodigal of their opinions. They divide the Word too plentifully to their turbulent Auditors: they divide their goods too sparingly to poor Christians. There are too many of such ill Logicians, that divide all things, define nothing. As a moderne Poet well:

Definit Logicus res, non modo diuidit; at nos

Nil definimus, omnia diuidimus.

These pierce the Balm too deep; not to strain out Juice, but blood; and, in what they are able, to kill it.

4. When the Balsam is cut, they use to set Vials in the Dennes, to receive the Juice or sap. When the word is divided by preaching, the people should bring Vials with them, to gather this saving Balm. These Vials are our ears, which should couch close to the Pulpit, that this intrinsique Balm may not be spilled besides. How many Sermons are lost, whiles you bring not with you the vessels of attention We cut and divide, and sluice out Rivers of saving health from this Tree, but all runs besides, and so your health is not recovered. You come frequently to the Wells of Life, but you bring no Pitchers with you. You cry on us for store of Preaching, and call us idle Drones, if we go not double journey every Sabaoth, but still you go home with vnfallowed, with unhallowed hearts. Our Gilead affords you Balm enough, yet you have sickly souls. You hear to hear, and to feed either your humors, or your opinions, or your hypocrisies. You shall hear a puffed Ananias cry, Alas, for his non-preaching Minister; if, at least, he forbears his snarling and currish invectives of dumb dog, &c. When, alas, let many Apostles come, with the holy coniuration of Prayer and Preaching, yet they cannot cast out the deaf Devil in many of them. They blame our dumb Dogs, not their own deaf Devils. They would seem to cure us, that are sent to cure them, if at least they would be cured. We would have cured Babel; nay we would have cured Bethel, but she would not be cured.

It will be said, that most hearers bring with them the Vials of attention: yield it; yet for the most part, they are either without mouths, or without bottoms. Without mouths to let in one drop of this Balm of Grace: or without bottoms, that when we have put it in, and look to see it again in your lives, behold it is run through you, as water through a sieue, and scarce leaves any wet behind it. And (to speak impartially) many of you, that have Vials with bottoms, ears of attention with hearts of retention, and the ground of remembrance, yet they are so narrow at the top, that they are not capable but of drop by drop. Think not yourselves so able to receive at the ear, and conceive at the heart, innumerable things at once. You are not broad glasses, but narrow-necked Vials; and then best receive this Balm of life, when it is stilled from the Lymbecke of Preaching with a soft fire, and a gentle pouring in. So saith the Prophet, Line must be added to line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. When a great vessel pours liquor into a strait-mouthed Vial, the source must be small and sparing, fit to the capacity of the receiver: that in time it may be filled. It is often seen, that when this juice comes with too full and frequent a stream, almost all runs besides. I do not speak this (vel prohibendi, vel cohibendi animo) to curb the forwardness of godly Ministers, or persuade the raritie of Sermons. God still of his mercy, multiply laborers into (and labors in) his harvest. But to correct your obstreperous clamours against us: no• to chill the heat of your zealous hearing, but to inkindle the fire of your conscionable obeying. Do not stand so much upon Sacrifice, that you forget Mercy. Bee not so angry for want of two or three Sermons in a week, when you will not obey the least Doctrine of one in a month. You bless your Samuel's in the name of the Lord, with protestation of your obedience to the will of the Lord: we reply; what means then the bleating of the Sheep, and the lowing of the Oxen in our ears? the loud noise of your Oaths, Injuries, Oppressions, Frauds, Circumventions? You come with books in your hands, but with no book for God's Spirit to write obedience in. A Bible under the arm, with many, is but like a Rule at ones back, whiles all his actions are out of square. The History of the Bible is carried away easier then the mystery.

Philosophy saith, that there is no vacuit•e: no vessel is empty; if of water, or other such liquid and material substances, yet not of air. So perhaps you bring hither Vials to receive this B•lme of Grace, and carry them away full, but only full of wind, a vast, incircumscrib'd, and swimming knowledge is in some a motion, a notion, a mere implicit and confused tenencie of many things; which lie like Corn, loose on the floor of their brains. How rar• is it to see a Vial carried from the Church full of Balm, a Conscience of Grace• I know there are many names in our Sard: I speak not to dishearten any, but to encourage all. Only would to God, we would show less, and do more, of goodness. Yet show freely, if you do godly. I reprehend not showing, but not doing. We preach not to your flesh, but to your spirits: neither is this Balm for the ear, but for the soul. Therefore I sum up this observation with a Father. Quantum vas fidei capax afferimus, tantum gratiae inundantis haurimus: Look, how capacious a vessel of Faith we bring with us to the Temple, so much of this gracious and flowing Balm of life we receive. Consider that this Balm is animae languentis medicina, the Physic for a sick soul. Come to it, like Patients, that desire to be cured. Quidam veniunt vt noua per quirant, & haec curiositas est, quidam vt sciantur, & haec vanitas est: They abuse this word, that search it only for news, and this is curiosity; or to get themselves a name, and this is vanity: or to sell the truth, and this is Simony: or to jest on it, and this is Epicureanism: or to confute it, and this is Atheism.

You do well condemn, first, them that prefer Machiavelli to Moses; Ismaels scoffs to Jeremiah's tears; Jericho to Jerusalem, the tower of Babel to the gates of Bethel: or secondly, those that put away the Ministry as a superfluous Office; and think they know enough to save themselves.

Dux ero, miles ero, duce me, •e milite solus

Bella geram.

They will be their own captains and their own soldiers, and without calling the assistance of man or Angel, Prophet or Apostle, they will band• with the Devil and all his army, hand to hand: or thirdly, those that, like the Collier, dance in a circular measure, and hang all their Faith on the hooks of others belief: exercising all their religion by an exorcising Mass: while they count the Old and New Testaments books of controversy, and that it is peremptory sacrilege to meddle with the scriptures. You do well to abhor these dotages: but still look, that all be well at home. Love the Word; and that with an appetite. Beati esurientes: Blessed are they th•t hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be satisfied. But as you have love to it, so live by it. Non scholae, sed vitae discendum: We learn, not only to know good, but to live well, Audiatis vt sciatis (saith Saint Bernard) sciatis vt aedi•icemini, et hoc integritas est: vt aedisicetis, et hoc Charitas est. Hear to know, know to edify yourselves; this is integrity: to edify others; this is Charity. Bring then to this Balm, vials of sincerity, not of hypocrisy; least God fill them with the vials of his indignation. It is not enough to have ears, but ears to hear. Idle Auditors are like Idol God's, which have members not for use but show: like glass w•ndowes upon stone-walls, to give ornament, not to receive light.

5. The Balsam tree was granted sometimes to one only people, Judea; as Pliny testifies. It was thence derived to other Nations. Who, that is a Christian, doth not know and confess the appropriation of this spiritual Balm, once to that only Nation? He showeth his word unto Jacob; his statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any Nation: and as for his Judgments, they have not known them. Now, as their earthly Balm was by their civil Merchants transported to other Nations: so when this heavenly Balm was given to any Gentile, a Merchant of their own, a Prophet of Israel, carried it. Nineveh could not have it without a Jonah. Nor Babylon without some Daniel's. And though Paul and the Apostles had a Commission from Christ, to preach the Gospel to all Nations, yet observe how they take their leave of the Jews. It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you▪ but seeing you put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, loe, we turn to the Gentiles. Other Lands might brag of their natural and national benefits: only Jury of both the Balms. Non omnis fert omnia tellus. Nihil est ex omni parte beatum.

India mittit ebur: molles dant thura Sabai:

Tota{que} thuriferis Panchaia diues arenis.

Hiram had store of Timber, Moab of Sheep, Ophir was famous for gold, Chittim for Iuorie, Basan for Oaks, Lebanon for Cedars; Flascon had the best Wines, Athens the best Honey, Persia the best Oil, Babylon the best Corn, Tyr• the best Purple, Tharsis the best Ships: the West Indies for Gold, the East for Spices: but of all, Jury bore the Palme, for bearing the Balm. Such grace had Israel for the temporal, much more for the spiritual Balm: that all Nations might make low courtesy to her, as the Queen of the Provinces, and be beholding to her, for the crumbs that fell from her Table; as the Syrophaenician desired of Christ. Yet she, that transcended all in her blessings, de•cended lower then all in her disobedience. And as she lift up her head, and gloried in her special privileges; so she might hang down her head for shame at her special wickednesses.

For it is observed, that there are sins adherent to Nations, proper, peculiar, genuine, as their flesh cleaveth to their bones. That as for the climate of Heaven, their bodies differ; so for the custom of their lives, their dispositions vary from others. So that many Countries are more dangerous, either for sins or calamities. For of necessity, they that live among them must either imitate them and do ill, or hate them and suffer ill: since amicitiae pares aut quarunt aut faciunt; cohabitation of place seeks or makes coaptation of manners. S. Paul notes the Cretans for Lyers: S. Luke the Athenians for news inquirers and bearers. The Grecians were noted for light: the Parthians for fearful: the Sodomites for Gluttons; like as England (God save the sample) hath now suppld, lythed, and stretched their throats. If we should gather Sins to their particular Centers, we would appoint Pride to Spain, Lust to France, Poysoning to Italy, Drunkenness to Germany, Epicureanism to England. Now it was Israel's wickedness and wretchedness, that they fell to Idolatry. Not that other Nations were not Idolaters, but Israel's vilest, because they alone were taught the true worship of God.

Josephus holds, that the Jews were the best Soldiers of the world, both for ability of body, and agility of mind, in strength, in stratagem. Divers people are now excellent fighters one special and singular way. The Romans fight well in their Councils, I had almost said Fence-schools: the Italians in their Shops: the Spaniards in their Ships: the French-men in a hold: the Scot with his Launce: the Irish-man on foot, with his Dart. But the Jews were (saith Josephus) every way expert. Alas; their victory came not from their own strength: the Lord fought for them. So one of them cha•eth ten of his enemies, a hundredth chase a thousand. They had the shield of God's protection, the sword of his spirit, the word of God: defense and offense against their carnal and spiritual enemies: And if ever they received wound to their flesh or spirits, they had here both the soueraine Balms to cure them. But alas! they that were so every-way-blessed, lost all by loosing their Balm, and treading it under feet. For this cause their Balm is given to us: their aversion, their euersion is our conversion. They were God's V•ne, but they lost their sweetness. They were God's Olives, but they lost their fatness. Therefore God took away his Balm.

6. Pliny affirms, that even when the Bal•ame tree grew only in Jury, yet it was not growing commonly in the Land, as other trees either for Timber, Fruit, or Medicine; but only in the Kings Garden. The prepared Juice, or Opobal•amum, was communicated to their wants; but the Trees stood not in a Subjects Orchard. He saith further, that it grew in two Orchyards of the Kings; whereof the greater was of twenty days aring. I force no greater credit to this, then you will willingly give it; (which yet is not improbable) but this I build on, and propound for truth: that this spiritual Balm grows only in the Garden of the King of Heaven. To him that overcometh, will I give to •ate of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God. It grows in the Paradise or heavenly Orchard of God. The root of it is in Heaven: there sits that holy tree, at the right hand of his Father. His fruit, his seed, his Balm he sends down to us, written by his Prophets and Apostles, read and preached by his Ministers.

Mahomet would challenge this Balm to grow in his Garden, and bids us search for it in his Alchoran. The Apostate Jews affirm it to grow in their Sinagogue, and point us to the Talmud. The Russian or Muscovitish turn us over to their Nicol•itan Font; and bid us dive for it there. The Pope pluckes us by the sleeve, (as a Trades-man that would fain take our money) and tells us, that he only hath the Balm, and shows us his Mass-book. If we suspect it there, he warrants the virtue from a general Council. If it doth not yet smell well, he affirms, (not without menacing damnation to our mistrust, that it is even (in scrinio pectoris sui) in the closet of his own breast; who cannot err. Tut, saith he, as it grows in God's Garden simply, it may poison you. As if it were dangerous to be meddled withal, till he had plaid the Apothecary, and adulterated it with his own sophistication. Indeed, he makes it sweet, by his fayning it; and therefore his Shop wants not Customers. But it is deer, when God's is cheap, saith the Prophet. Buy it without money, without price. Wherefore do you spend money? &c.

Well: it can grow in one only Garden, and that is God's. There is but one truth. On• Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, &c. Even they that have held the greatest falsehoods, hold that there is but one truth. Nay, most will confess, that this Balsam tree is only in God's Garden; but they presume to temper the Balm at their own pleasure, and will not minister it to the world, except their own fancy hath compounded it, confounded it, with their impure mixtures. No false Religion, no fundamental Heresy, but give God the appropriation of the Balm; but they take to themselves the ministration, the adulteration of it. So in effect, they either arrogate the Balm to themselves; or take it out of God's Garden (as it were, whither he will or no) to plant it in their own. So they brag every one of this Balm. But who will not suspect the Wares out of a known Couseners Shop? It is unlawful and wicked, to offer to God's Church, Balsamum v•l alterum, velidem alteratum, either another Balm, or after another fashion, then he appoints.

But as Clusius writes of new Balms, Peruvianum et Balsamum de Tolu, from Peru and Tolu; so demonstration is made us of new Balms; some rather Logical, then Theological. Germany knows my meaning. Others produce us Balms of Piety, made up with Pollicie: the coat of Religion put upon the back of State. Where there may be some Balm, but it is so mixed, that it is marred. For to a scruple of that, they put in whole ounces of other ingredients: an ounce of Oleum vulpinu•, Fox-like subtlety, as much oleum viperis, poysonable opinion, and no less oleum tartari, &c. A whole pound of policy, an arm-full of stinking weeds, frivolous and superstitious Relics: all these are put to a poor dram or scruple of Balm. Nay, and all these shall be dash'd and slubberd together by a Mass-Priest, an idle and unskillful Apothecary. And when any conscience is known sore, by auricular Confession, it shall have a plaster of this stuff.

Perhaps this is that they call their Holy-oil, which is said to heal the sick body, if it recovers; or at least to cure the soul of her sins; at least, of so many, as may keep a man from Hell, and put him into Purgatory: where he shall have house-room and fire-wood free; till the Pope with soul-Masses and merits can get him a plat of ground in Heaven, to build a house on. How shameful is it to match their oil with God's Balm? to kneel to it as God, to ascribe events to it, which God works, (and to help the glory of it) to call those works miracles; whereas they might find fitter use for it, about their boots. Though it be newly invented, and every day more sophisticate then other, yet they make their Patients believe, that it is ancient, and derived from holy Scriptures: and enter the lists with the Champions of God's truth, to maintain the purity and antiquity of it.

A great while they kept (God's Balm) the word wholly from the people: now, because the cursings of the people have a little pierced their souls, for ingrossing this Balm, and denying it to their sores; they have stopped their mouths with the Rhemish Testament. But as they erst did curse them for hoarding God's grain; so now their just anger is as sharp against them, for the musty, mill-dew'd, blasted stuff, they buy of them. Their wickedness is no less now in poisoning them, then it was before in starving them. Before no Balm, now new Balm. Before no plaster to their wounds, now that which makes them ranckle worse. So they have mended the matter, as that Pysician did his Patients health; to whom, because he was urged to minister somewhat, he gave him a potion, that dispatched his disease & life at once. Thus the Popish Balm is, as Renodaeus calls one vulgare Balsamum, exoletum, inodorum, vietum, rancidum: stale, unsavory, rammish, lank, vile.

Such is the sophisticate doctrine of superstitious heretics; speaking for God's precepts, their own prescripts: preaching themselves, and in their own names, for ostentation, like the Scribes: delivering falsehoods, and fathering them on the Lord, He hath said it: abusing men's ears with old wives tales, and old men's dreams, traditions of Elders, constitutions of Popes, precepts of men, unwritten truths, untrue writings, either with-holding the truth in unrighteousness, or se•ing the word of God for gain, or corrupting it, and dealing with it, as Adulterers do in their filthiness: as these respect not issue, but lust, so the other, not God's glory, but their own wantonness: ministering Medicines, which God never prescribed to them. How can their feet seem beautiful, when like monsters, they have too many toes on them, as the Giants son; or too few, as Adonibezeck and those whom he maimed: offending either in excess or defect? But it is gods fearful protestation in the end of the Book, summing and sealing up all the curses, that went before it. If they add, he that hath power to add plagues with an everlasting concatenation, will multiply their miseries without number or end. If they diminish, he that can abate his blessings so low, that not the least scruple shall remain, will return them their own measure. And for you, my Brethren, hear the Apostle, Let no man beguile you with Philosophy, and vain deceit, or please you with false Balm. You may say of their natural learning, as Albumazer of Boлено, Henbane; whiles it grows, saith he, in Persia, it is venomous; but if transplanted and growing in Jerusalem, it is not only good medicine, but good meat. Well, if it were possible, that an Angel from heaven should preach another Gospel, then that which God hath delivered, and his Apostles preached, anathema sit, let him be accursed: the true Balm comes only from the garden of the King of heaven.

7. They write of the Balsam tree, that though it spread spaciouly, as a Vine, yet the boughs bear up themselves: and as you heard before, that they must not be pruned, so now here that they need not be supported. God's word needs no vndersetting. It is firmly rooted in heaven; and all the cold storms of human reluctancy and opposition cannot shake it. Nay, the more it is shaken, the faster it grows. The refractory contentions of worldlings to pluck it down, have added no less strength, then glory to it. Nor can the ministerial office of the dispensers of it, be called an aid or vnderpropping to it. It is not the Balm, but you that stand in need of our function. He that owes it, is powerful enough to protect it. You cannot apply it to yourselves without the Physicians help. If you could, or did not more want us, then that doth, you should see it flourish and spread without us. He that supports all by his mighty word, asks no supporter for it self.

The Church of Rome challengeth more, then the Church of God; that she bears up the word: and because she assumes to carry the keys, she presumes that the door of Heaven hangs upon her hindges. They say, the Church is a Pillar: we may join issue with them, and yield it, as a reverend Divine said. For a Pillar as it upholds something, so is upholden of something. If then the Church be a Pillar, Christ is the Rock, whereon it stands: now, take away the Rock, down comes the Pillar. The Rock is well enough without the Pillar, not the Pillar without the Rock. Yet how fondly? They that would build all on their Church, yet build their Church on Peter: and not only on Peter, that was weak, but on his feigned Successor, who is weaker. Now this Heir built on Peter, and this Church built on this heir, must uphold the word, as they say, Atlas did the world. But, alas, if the word do not beare them, they will fall, like water spilled on the ground, not to be saved or gathered up. These are miserable, arrogant, impudent wretches, that think, God's word could not hold up the hands, (like Moses, unless Aaron and Hur helped him) if the Pope and his Councils were not: forcing all our credite to the Gospel for this, because their Church allows it. God's word must then stand or fall at man's approbation or dislike. Oh indignity to the stable ordinance of an eternal Majesty. It is enough for the laws of a temporal Prince, to have some dependence on his Officers promulgation. He that took no man nor Angel to his Council, when he made it, demands the succor of none to preserve it. He is content to propagate the sound thereof through us his Trumpets: if it had never been preached by man, it should not have lost the effect. Heaven and Earth shall sooner run, like scorched skins, to heaps; then any jot, (as small a Character as the Alphabet affords) shall ineffectually perish. If man could deny this Office, God could speak it by Angels, by Thunder, by Lightning, Confusion, Terror; by Frogs, Lyce, Caterpillars, Blasting, Plague, Leprosy, Consumption; as he hath sometimes (holding his peace) preached actually to the World. It is his own Balm, and shall spread to his pleasure, and hath no weakness in it, to need man's supportance. Blessed are we under the shadow of the Branches, and wise if we build our salvations on it.

8. Physicians write of Balsamum, that it is paratu facile et optimum, easy and excellent to be prepared. This spiritual Balm is prepared to our hands: it is but the administration that is required of us, and the application of you. Not that we should slubber it over, as the Sons of Eli; in preaching: nor that you should clap it negligently to yourselves in hearing. A mortal wound is not to beiested withal, though the Pysician hath in his hand, the Balm that can cure it. Your diseases are as different in your consciences, as in your carcasses. Your constitutions of body are not more various, and often variable, then your affections in foul. There must be some wisdom in us, to hit the right box, and to take out that Physic, which God hath made fit for your griefs. We are sure, the shaft that shall kill the Devil in you, is in God's Quiuer; indiscretion may easily mistake it, misapply it. This Balm is ready, soon had, and cheaply: let not this make you disesteeme it. Gallant humors vilpend all things that are cheap. But if in God's Mart, you refuse his Wares, because their price is no greater, you may perhaps one day, when they are gone, curse your withstanding your Markets. And being past obtaining, prize it the higher, because in the days of your sachie you did under-value it. The guests, in the Gospel, bidden to a Supper gratis, make light of it: when the Feast-maker had protested against them, that they should never taste of his Supper, they doubtless would have been glad, if their money could have purchased it: though it cost one his Farm, and the other his Oxen.

9. Balm is, vtilis ad omnium morborum expugnationem, good against all diseases. The Receipt, that Linus, Hercules his Schoolmaster gave him, when he taught him wrestling, was only a Balm. Darius, saith Renodaeus, so esteemed it, that non modo inter pretiosissimam supellectilem reponeret, sed cunctis opibus praeponeret; he did not only lay it up amongst his richest treasures, but even prefer it before them all. This spiritual Balm is far more precious in it self, and fructuous to all men; if they apprehend it in knowledge, apply themselves to it in obedience: possessing it in science, in conscience. Philosophers, Poets, Physicians, Historians have reported someone extraordinary thing, exceeding all the rest in their observations. They talk of Cornucopia, that it supplied men with all necessary food. They hammer at the Philosophers stone, which, they affirm, can turn baser metals into gold. Vulcans Armor, saith the Poet, was of proof against all blows. Physicians tell us, that the herb Panaceas is good for all diseases: and the drugge Catholicon instead of all Purges; as both their names would seem to testify. They come all short of this spiritual Balm. It hath in deed and perfection, what they attribute to those in fiction. Panace is an herb, whereof Pliny thus testifieth. Panace, ipso nomine, omnium morborum remedia promittit. The very name of it, promiseth remedy to all sicknesses. It is but a weed to our Balsam; which is a tree, a tree of life, a complete Paradise of trees of life, flourishing and bearing every month, the fruit being delectable, the leaves medicinal. It is a true purging virtue, to cleanse us from all corruption of spirit, of flesh. Now are ye clean, through the word, which I have spoken unto you. Catholicon is a drugge, a drudge to it. It purifieth our hearts, from all defilings and obstructions in them. A better Cornucopia, then ever Nature (had she been true to their desires and wants) could have produced: the bread of Heaven, by which a man lives forever. A very supernatural stone, more precious then the Indies, if they were consolidate into one Quarry; that turns all into purser gold, then ever the land of Hau•lab boasted. A stronger Armor then was V•l•n's, to shield us from a more strange and savage enemy, then ever Anak begot, the Devil. It is a Panary of wholesome food, against fenowed traditions. A Physicians Shop of Antidotes, against the poisons of heresies, and the plague of iniquities. A pandect of profitable Laws, against rebellious spirits. A treasury of costly jewels, against beggarly rudiments.

The Aromatical tree, hath sometimes good savor in the rind, sometimes in the flower, sometimes in the fruit. So it fareth in the Cinamon, that is a ri•de; the Mace is th• flower, and the Nutmegge the fruit. According as the dry and earthie part, mingled with the subtle watery matter, hath the Masterie in any part' more or less, that part smelleth best. As in common flowers, which savor in the flower, when from the stalk or root ariseth nothing. Only the Balm smells well in every part. So the word is in every respect the sweet savor of life; though to some, through their own corruption, it becomes the savor of death. We may say of the word, as one of the Lamb; it is all good: the fleece to clothe, the flesh to eat, the blood for medicine. Thus, All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. His salubriter, et corriguntur praeva, et nutriuntur parva, et magna oblectantur ingenia. Evil wits are corrected, simple are enlightened, strong are delighted by the word. And In his quotidie proficerem, si eas solas ab ineunte pueritia, usque ad deperitam senectutem, maximo otio, summo studio, meliore ingenio conarer addiscere. In these I should continually profit, if from the first day of my understanding, to the last of my old age, I should be conversant with them.

Other things may have in them (salubritatem quandam) a certain wholesomness but from this Balm (sanitas et ipsavita petitur) health & life it self is derived. Humane writings may, like the Aliptae, put blood in our cheeks; but this is the true Phisick to cherish our spark, to maintain our life. Other herbs, & plants, and roots may be toxica, and poison the broath; this is Elisha's salt, that only sweetens it. Lignum crucis, is lignum vitae, like Moses wood, to put a healthful taste into the bitter waters of human knowledge. These are the two Testaments of God (which no man shall interline without certain judgment) like the two pillars of smoke & fire, one dark like the old, the other bright as the new, only able to conduct us from Egypt to Canaan: and to furnish us with all necessaries by the way, if we depend thereon. The two Cherubims, that look directly toward the Mercy-seat, both pointing to Jesus Christ. The Treasure, that hath both old and new in it, sufficiently able to instruct the Scribe to the Kingdom of Heaven. This is that medicamentum medicamentorum, as Petrus Apponensis saith of the Balm, vbi nihil deficit, quod in salutem sufficit, where, there is no want of anything requisite to salvation. Cuius plenitudinem adoro, whose fullness I reverence and admire.

This is that light, which can justly guide our steps: this is that measure of the Sanctuary, that must weigh all things: this is that great Seal, that must warrant all our actions. This gives at one Sermon, Balm sufficient to heal diverse diseases. Peter had Auditors of diverse Nations: Parthians, Medes, Elamites, &c. Jews and Proselytes, Cretes and Arabians: and no question but their affections were as naturally, as nationally different: yet were three thousand won at one Sermon. So the Multitude, the Publicans, the Soldiers had all their lessons at one time: so many in number, and such manner of men in nature, had their remedies together, and their several diseases healed, (as it were) with one plaster. The people had a doctrine of charity: the Publicans of equity: the Soldiers of innocence. This was prophesied by Isaiah, fulfilled here, and often in Christ's Kingdom. The Wolf is turned to the Lamb, when the Soldiers are made harmless: the Leopard into a Calf, when the Publicans are made just: the Lion and Bear into a Cow, when the Multitude is made charitable.

Water searcheth, and wind shaketh, and thunder terrifieth even Lions, but the word only is strong to convert the heart of man. Some indeed, both in sense and censure, judge it weak; but they, alas, shall find it, (if weak to save them, yet) strong to condemn them. If it cannot plant thee, it will supplant thee. This then is that soueraine Balm, medicinal to all maladies. Physicians ascribe many healing virtues to their Balsam: many, and almost what not? This Metaphysical doth more properly challenge that attribution.

1. They say, that Balm taken fasting, Asthmatics valde confert, is very good against short-windedness. Truly, God's word lengthens and strengthens the breath of grace; which otherwise would be short, the conscience (as the lungs) being soon obstructed with iniquities. For goodness soon faints, where the word is not without the Gospel, the health of obedience looseth, and the disease of sin gathers strength.

2. They say, that Balm taken inwardly, dissolves, and breaks the stone in the reins. But Jeremiah, in God's Physic-book, saith, that our Balm is as a Hammer to break the stone in the heart. The stone in the reins is dangerous, in the bladder painful, but none so deadly as the stone in the heart. This Balm suppleth the stony heart, and turns it into a heart of flesh.

3. They commend their Balm for a special ease to the anger of a venomous biting. But our Balm is more excellent in aculeum Draconis, imo mortis, against the sting of that great red Dragon, nay of Death it self. Oh Death, where is thy sting? Three Serpents give us venomous wounds. Sin first stings us, the Devil next, and Death last. This Balm of Christ fetcheth out all their poisons.

4. Others say of this Balm, that it is the best solution to the obstructions of the Liver. I have heard the Liver in the body, compared with zeal in the soul. The Liver (according to Physicians) is the third principal member, wherein rest the animal spirits. In the soul two graces precede Zeal, Faith and Repentance. I say not this in thesi but in hypothesi, not simply, but in respect; and that rather of order, then of time. For a man is begotten of immortal seed, by the Spirit at once. Now as the Liver calefies the stomach, (like fire under the Pot) and thence succors digestion: so doth zeal heat a man's works, with an holy fervor; which are without that, a cold sacrifice to God. A soul without zeal doth as hardly live, as a body without a Liver. Haly calls the Liver the Well of Moisture: we may say of zeal; it is the very Cistern, whence all other graces, as living there do issue forth into our lives. The Liver is called Hepar and Iecur, because it draweth juice to it self, turneth it into blood, & by vaines serveth the body, as the water-house doth a City by pipes. Nay, it ministereth a surging heat to the brain, to the eyes, to the wits, saith Isidore. The Pagan Nigromancers, sacrificed only Liuers on the altar of their God Phaebus, before his oraculous answers were given. In the soul other graces, as Faith, Hope, Charity, Repentance, did first rather breed zeal; but zeal being once inkindled doth minister nutrimentall heat to all these; and is indeed the best sacrifice that we can offer to God. Without zeal all are like the oblation of Cain.

Now if any obstructions of sin seem to oppress this Zeal in us, this Balm of God's word is the only sovereign remedy to cleanse it. For the zeal is dangerous, as the Liver, either by too much heat, or too much cold to be distempered. To overheat the Liver of zeal many have found the cause of a perilous surfet in the Conscience: whiles like the two Disciples, nothing could content them but fire from heaven against sinners. If ever Bishop was in the time of Popery, away with the office now. If ever Mass was said in Church, pull it down. Though some depopulators have now done it, in extreme coldness, nay frozen dregs of heart, making them either no Churches, or polluted ones; whiles those which were once Temples for God's shepherds, are now coats for their own. Yet they in immeasurable heat wished, what these with unreasonable cold Liuers affected. Such miserable thieves have crucified the Church, one by a new religion in will, the other by a no religion in deed. They would not only take away the abuse, but the thing it self; not only the Ceremony, but the substance. As the Painter did by the picture of King Henry the eight, whom he had drawn fairly with a Bible in his hand, and set it to open view against Queen Mary's coming in triumph through the City: for which being reprov'd by a great man, that •awe it, and charged to wipe out the book; he, to make sure work wiped out the Bible and the hand too; and so in mending the fault, he maim'd the picture.

This is the effect of praeter-natural heat, to make of a remedy, a disease. Thus whiles they dream, that Babylon stands upon Ceremonies, they offer to race the foundations of Jerusalem it self. Well this Balm of God's word, if their sick souls would apply it, might cool this vngentle heat of their livers. For it serves not only to inkindle heat of z•ale in the over-cold heart, but to refrigerate the preposterous fervor in the fiery-hot. This is the saving Balm, that scour's away the obstructions in the Liver, and prevents the dropsy. For the dropsy is nothing else, saith the Philosopher, but the error of the digesti•e virtue in the hollowness of the Liver. Some have such hollownes in their zeal, whiles they pr•tend holiness of zeal; (as was in the iron horns of that false prophet Zedekiah) that for want of applying this Balm, they are sick of the dropsy of hypocrisy.

Innumerable are the uses of Balm, if we give credit to Physicians, vel potum, vel inunctum. It strengthens the nerves, it excites and cherisheth the native heat in any part, it succoreth the paralyticke, and delayeth the fury of convulsions, &c. And last of all, is the most soueragine help, either to green wounds, or to inveterate ulcers. These, all these, and more then ever was untruly feigned, or truly performed by the Balsam to the body; is spiritually fulfilled in this happy, heavenly, and true intrinsique Balm, God's word. It heals the sores of the conscience, which either original or actual sin have made in it. It keeps the green wound, (which sorrow for sin cuts in the heart) from ranckling the soul to death. This is that Balsam tree, that hath fructum vberrimum, vsum saluberrimum, plenteous fruit, profitable use: and is, in a word, both a preservative against, and a restorative from all dangers to a believing Christian. It is not only Physic, but health it self; and hath more virtue, saving virtue, validity of saving virtue, then the tongues of men and Angels can ever sufficiently describe.

You have here the similitudes. Hear one or two discrepancies of this natural and supernatural Balms. For as no Metaphor should of necessity run like a Coach on four wheels, when to go, like a man, on two sound legs is sufficient; so eart•lie things compared with heavenly, must look to fall more short, then Linus of Hercules, the shrub of the Cedar, or the lowest Mole-bank of the highest Pyramids.

1. This earthly Balm cannot preserve the body of it self, but by the accession of the spiritual Balm. Even Angels food (so called, not because they made it, but because they ministered it) cannot nourish without God's word of blessing. For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving: for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. If the mercy of God be not on our sustenance, we may die with meat in our mouths, like the Israelites. If his prouidentia•ll goodness with-hold the virtue, were our garments as costly as the Ephod of Aaron, there is no benefit in them. When many are sick, they trust to the Physicians, as Asa, or to this Balm, fastening their eyes and hopes on that: whereas Balm, with the destitution of God's blessing, doth as much good, as a branch of herb-John in our Pottage. Nature it self declines her ordinary working, when God's revocation hath chidden it. The word without Balm can cure; not the best Balm without the word.

2. So this natural Balm, when the blessing of the word is even added to it, can (at utmost) but keep the body living, till the life taper be burnt out: or after death, give a short and insensible preservation to it, in the sarcophagall grave. But this Balm gives life after death; life against death, life without death. To whom shall we go? Lord, thou hast the words of eternal life. The Apostle doth so sound it, the Saints in Heaven have so found it, and we, if we believe it, if we receive it, shall perceive it, to be the word of life. And as Augustine of God, Omne bonum nostrum vel ipse, vel ab ipso: All our good is either God, or from God: so all our ordinary means of good from God is vel verbum, vel de verbo, either the word, or by the word.

The Prophet derives the Balm from the Mount Gilead; demanding, if Gilead be without Balm. It seems, that Gilead was an aromatical place, and is reckoned by some among the Mountains of spice. It is called in some places of Scripture Galaad; and by an easy varying of the points in the Hebrew writing, Gilead. This Mountain was at first so called by Jacob, by reason of that solemn Covenant, which he there made with his Father in law, pursuing Laban. Though it be called Mount Gilead, before in the chapter. ver. 21.23.25. He set his face toward Mount Gilead, &c. Yet it is by anticipation; spoken rather as the hill was called when the History was written by Moses, then as it was saluted and ascended by Jacob: who abode in it, till Laban over-took him; where the pacified Father and the departing Son made their Covenant. Laban called it Igar-Sahadutha: but Jacob called it Galeed. It signifies a heap of witness, a name imposed by occasion of the heap of stones, pitched for the league between them. La•an said, this heap• is a witness between me and thee this day. Therefore was the name of it called Galeed. There was one Gilead, son of Machir, son of Manasseh; of whom, because it is said, that Machir begat Gilead: and of Gilead •me the family of th• Gileadites; some ascribe the attribution of this name to Mount Gilead. But this Mount had the name, long before the son of Machir was borne. We read of it, that it was.

1. a great mountain.
2. fruitful.
3. full of Cities.
4. abounding with Spices.

1. It was a great Mountain; the greatest of all beyond Jordan, in length fifty miles. But as it ran along by other Coasts, it received diverse names. From Arnon to the City Cedar, it is called Gilead. From thence to Bozra, it is named Seir; and after, Hermon: so reaching to Damascus, it is joined to Libanus. So Jerome conceiteth on those words of God unto the Kings house of Judah. Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: that therefore Lebanon is the beginning of Gilead.

2. Fruitful, abounding with great variety of necessary and delights; yielding both pleasure and profit. This every part and corner thereof afforded, even as far as Mount Seir, which the Edomites, the generation of Esau, chose for a voluptuous habitation. This the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and half the Tribe of Manasseh, when they saw the land of Gilead, that the place was a place for cat•ell, desired of Moses, and of the Princes of the Congregation, that they might possess it: for it is a land for cattle, and thy servants have cattle. The condition, that Moses required, be•ng by them granted, that they should go armed with their brethren, till the expulsion of their enemies had given them a quiet seat in Canaan. Thy seruan•s will do as my Lord commandeth. On•lie our little ones, our wi•es, our flocks, and all our cattle shall be in though Cities of Gilead. The fertillitie of Gilead contented them, though with the separation of Jordan from their brethren. Our Savior describing the beauty of his Spouse Behold, thou art fair, my Love, behold thou art fair (inwardly fair with the gifts of his spirit, and outwardly fair in her comely administration and government:) Thou hast Doves eyes within thy locks, (thy eyes of understanding being full of purity, chastity, simplicity) he adds withal, that her hair (her gracious profession, and appendances of expedient ornaments▪ are as comely to behold) as a Flock of well-fed Goats, grasing and appearing on the fruitful hills of Gilead. Which made them so pregnant, that like a Flock of sheep, everyone brings out Twins, and none is barren among them. The same pra•se is redoubled by Christ, chap. 6. &c.

3. It was full of Cities; a place so fertile, that it was full of Inhabitants. •lair the Gileaedit•, who judged Israel, had thirty sons, that rode on thirty Ass-Colts, and they had thirty Cities, which are called Hau•th•ai• unto this day, which are in the land of Gilead. It was as populous as fructuous; and at once blessed with pregnancie both of fruits for the people, and of people for the fruits. It was before Israel conquered it, in the dominion of the Amorit•s; and more specially, of Og king of Bashan, that remained of the remnant of the Giants: whose bedstead was a bedstead of iron; nine cubits long, and four cubits broad, after the cubite of a man. It was not only full of strength in it self, but guarded with Cities in the plain. All the Cities of the plain, and all Gilead, and all Bashan, &c. So the Inheritance of Gad is reckoned by Joshua. Their coast was lazer, and all the Cities of Gil•ad. It appears then that Gilead was full of Cities. So blessed, as if the Heavens had made a Covenant of good unto it, as Jacob did erst with Laban upon it. A hill of witness indeed, for it really testified God's mercy to Israel. God calls it his own. Gilead is mine, Manasseh i• mine. The principal or first name of Kingdom, that usurping I•bosheth was by Abner crowned over, was Gilead. And he made him King over Gilead, and over the Ashurites, &c.

4. It was (lastly) a Mountain of Spices; and many Strangers resorted thither for that Merchandise. Even when the malicious brethren, having thrown innocent Joseph into the pit, sate down (in a secure neglectfulnesse) to eat bread: Behold (surely the Lord sent and directed) a company of Ishmaelites came from Gilead, with their Camels, bearing Spicery, and Balm, and Myrrh. By which it appears to be mons aromatum, a hill of Sp•ces. Therefore God here; Is there no Balm at Gilead?

The Jew•s were near• to Gilead; it was but on the other side of Jordan. The fetching over their Merchandise was no long nor dangerous voyage. Yet was this spiritual Balm nearer to them: it lay like Manna at their doors. Venit ad limina virtus. The Kingdom of Heaven is among you, saith Christ. There needed no great journey for natural Physic, but less for spiritual comfort. Behold, God himself gives his vocal answers between the Cherubims. Yet alas! as it was once justly proverbed on the Monks, and such spiritual, or rather carnal Couents, in that night of Popery: that the nearer they were to the Church, the further from God. So it was even verified of the Jew•s; that by how much they were of all next to the Sanctuary, by so much of all remotest from sanctity. And therefore, he that once said, Gilead is mine, and of the Temple in Judah, this is my house, called by my name; afterward left both the hill of Gilead, and the Mount Zion, and the holy Sanctuary, a pray to the Romans; who left not a stone upon a stone, to testify the ruins of it, or for succeeding ages to say, This was the Temple of God. Thus saith the Prophet Hosea: Gilead is a City of them that work iniquity, and is polluted with blood. Therefore God turned that fruitful Land into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwelt therein. For not content with the fertility of their soil, they manured it with blood, saith the Prophet. Hence no marvel, if it became at last, like the cursed Mountains of Gilboah, that drunk the blood of Saul and Jonathan.

You have heard the Balm: the next subject that offers it self to our speech, is the Physicians. Is there no Balm at Gilead? is there no Physicians there? The Prophets are allegorically called Physicians, as the word is Balm. So are the Ministers of the Gospel, in due measure, in their place. To speak properly and fully, Christ is our only Physician, and we are but his Ministers, bound to apply his saving Physic to the sickly souls of his people. It is he only, that cures the carcass, the conscience.

1. No Physician can heal the body without him The Woman with the bloody issue was not bettered (by her Physicians, though she had emptied all her substance into their purses) till Christ undertook her cure. The Leper, in the 8. of Matthew, was as hopeless, as haplesse, till he met with this Physician; and then the least touch of his finger healed him. Physicians deal often, not by extracting, but protracting the disease: making rather diseases for their cure, then cures for diseases: prolonging our sicknesses by Art, which Nature, or rather natures defect hath not made so tedious. Therefore as one saith wittily, the best Physic is to take no Physic: or as another boldly; our new Physic is worse then our old sickness. But when our diseases be committed to this heavenly Doctor, and he is pleased to take them in hand, our venture is without all peradventure, we shall be healed. The least touch of his finger, the least breath of his mouth, can cast out the evil in us, that can cast out the devil in us, he can, he will cure us.

2. No Minister, can heal the Conscience, where Christ hath not given a blessing to it. Otherwise he may lament with the Prophet. I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for naught. Or as the Apostle I have fished all night, and caught nothing: yet at thy command, &c. Who then is Paul? or who is Apollo? but Ministers, by whom we believed, when as the Lord gave to every man. I have planted, Apollo watered, but GOD gave the increase. If any be blind, He is the Oculist: if any be lame, He sets the Bones: if any be wounded, He is the Surgeon: if any be sick, He is the Physician.

They write of the Indian Physicians, that they cure the wound by sucking the poison. Christ heals after a manner (I know not whither more) loving and strange; by taking the disease upon himself. Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree. He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities and with his stripes we are healed. And the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. As the scape-goat was said to bear upon him the sins of Israel: so saith the Prophet of his antitype Christ; morbos portavit nostros, he hath borne our griefs: too unsupportable a burden for our shoulders; able to sink us down to hell, as they did Cain and Judas, if they had been imposed. Tullit Jesus. Christ carried our sorrows. Never was such a Physician, that changed healths with his sick Patient. But He was humbled for us. Mans maker is made man, the worlds succourer takes suck, the Bread is hungry, the Fountain thirsty, the Light sleepy, the Way weary, the Truth accused, the Judge condemned. Health it self is become sick, nay dead, for our salvation. For man's sake (such was our weakness) Christ descended, (such was his kindness) took one him to cure us (such was his goodness) and performed it, (such was his greatness.) It was not Abanah nor Pharphar, nor all the rivers of Damascus, not the water of Jordan, though bathing in it 70. times, not Job's now-water, nor David's water of Isope, not the pool of Bethesda, though stirred with a thousand Angels, that was able to wash us clean. Only fusus sanguis Medici, factum medicamentum phrenetici: the blood of the Physician is spilled, that it may become a medicine of salvation to all believers. This is the Pelican, that preserves her young with her own blood. This is the Goat, that with his warm gore breaks the adamant of our hearts. This is that lamb of God, that with his own blood, takes away the sins of the world. When the Oracle had told the king of Athens, that himself must die in the battle, or his whole army perish; Codrus (then King) never stuck at it, but obtruded his own life into the jaws of inevitable death, that he might save his people's. The King of heaven was more freely willing to lay down his, for the redemption of his Saints, when the eternal decree of God had propounded him the choice. Is there no means to recover the sick world, but I must die, that it may live? then take my life, quoth Life it self. Thus pro me doluit, qui non habuit, quod pro se doleret: He was made sick for me, that I might be made sound in him.

This then is our Physician in whom alone is saving health. As Sybilla sung of him.

*He wrought all things with his word, and healed every disease with his power. To Him let us resort, confessing our sores, our sorrows. They that be whole need not a Physician, but they that are sick. Foolish men, because of their iniquities, are afflicted: that their soul abhorreth all manner of meat, and they draw near to the gates of death. Yet they cry unto this Physician, and he delivers them from their distress. So he hath promised in the Testament both of his Law, and of his Gospel. Call on me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee. Come to me all that are laden, and I will give you rest. There never went sorrowful Beggar from his door without a Alms. No marvel, if he be not cured, that is opinionated of his own health. They say, that the Teach is the Physician of Fishes; and they being hurt come to him for cure. All the Fishes that are caught in the Net of the Gospel come to Christ, who is the King of Physicians, and the Physician of Kings. Come then to Him, beloved, not as to a Master in name only, as the Lawyer. Matth. 22. but as to a Savior indeed, as the Leaper. Matth. 8. Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. Non tamquam ad Dominum titularem, sed tanquam ad Dominum tutelarem: as one ellegantly.*

Ministers are Physicians under Christ; sent only with his Physic in their hands, and taught to apply it to our necessities. Neither the Physician of the body, nor of the soul can heal, by any virtue inherent in, or derived from themselves. We must take all out of God's warehouse. God hath a double Box of Nature, of Grace: as man hath a double sickness, of flesh, of spirit.

1. The first box is mentioned. Ecclus. 38. The Lord hath created medicines out of the earth, and he that is wise will not abhor them. God hath not scanted earth of drugs and mineralls, the simples of Physic for such as tread on it. And howsoever our vanity in health transport our thoughts, earth hath no more precious thing in it, then (as sustenance to preserve, so) medicine to restore us. You that have digged into the entralls of the dead earth, and not spared the bowels of the living earth, the poor, for riches: You that have set that at your heart, which was cast down at the Apostles feet, Money; as fit only for sanctified men to tread upon in contempt: You that have neglected heaven, which God hath made your more glorious feeling, and richly stuck it, like a bright Canopy, with burning lights; and doted on your pavement, made only for your feet to tread upon; fixing your eyes and thoughts on that, which God hath indisposed to be your object: for man's countenance is erect, lessoning his soul to a just and holy aspiration: You that have put so fair for the Philosophers stone, that you have endeavored to sublimate it out of poor men's bones, ground to powder by your oppressions: You that have buried your God's, so soon as you had found them out, as Rahab did Laban's in the Litter, and sit down with rest on them, saying to the Wedge, Thou art my confidence. When your heads ache, dissolve your gold, and refine it; wallow your crasie carcass in your silver; wrap it in perfumes and silks, and try what ease it will afford you. Will not a silly and contemptible weed, prepared by a skillful Physician give you more comfort? Doth not the common air, which you receive in, and breath out again, refresh you better? How eager are our desires of superfluities, how neglectful of necessities? This box of treasures hath God given us, and endued some with knowledge to minister them; least our ignorance might not rather prejudice, the succor our healths. No Physician then cures of himself; no more then the hand feeds the mouth. The meat doth the one, the medicine doth the other; though the Physician and the hand be unspared instruments to their several purposes. Thus God relieves our health from the Box of Nature.

2. The other Box is Grace; whence the Divine draweth out sundry remedies for our diseases of soul. This is not so common, as that of Nature. Once one Nation had it of all the world, now all the world rather then that Nation. But it is certain, they have it only, to whom the Gospel is preached. It is indeed denied to none, that do not deny their faith to it. Christ is that Lamb, that takes away (in non-Latin alphabet) : the sin of the world. But many want the Physicians to teach and apply this. And how shall they preach, except they be sent? Now, where these Physicians are, is the people healed by any virtue deputed from them? Is it the Perfumer that gives such sweet odors, or his perfumes? Why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk? Be it known to you all, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth doth this man stand whole before you. Therefore, saith S. Paul, concluding this Doctrine so thoroughly handled, Let no man glory in men, for all things are yours, whither Paul &c. all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's. It is the tidings we bring, that saves you, not our persons. Moses, that gave the Law, could not frame his own heart to the obedience of it. It lies not in our power to beget faith in our own souls. The heart of the King is in the hands of God, as are the waters in the South. The souls of all, Prince and people, Prophets and Nazarites, Preachers and hearers, learned and ignorant, are converted by God, by whom they were created. It was the voice even of a Prophet: Turn us, oh Lord, and so shall we be turned.

This consideration may serve to humble our hearts, whom God hath trusted with the dispensation of his Oracles. It is a sacrilegious sin, for any spiritual Physician, to ascribe God's doing to his own saying; and to make H's glory cleave to earthen fingers. As Menecrates, a natural one, wrote in a certain Epistle to Philip of Macedon. Thou art King of Macedon, I of Physic. It lies in thy power to take health and life from men, in mine to give it. So monstrous was his pride, yet so applauded by the besotted Citizens, that he marched with a train of God's after him. One in the habit of Hercules, another of Mercury, a third in the form of Apollo: whilst himself, like Jupiter, walked with a purple robe, a Crown of gold, and a Scepter; boasting, that by his Art, he could breath life into men. Foolish clay! he could not preserve himself from mouldring to dust. Ostentation in a spiritual Physician is worse, by how much our profession teacheth us to be more humble. It is a high climbing pride in any Pharisee, and injurious to the Throne of God, to arrogate to himself a converting power. As in the fable, the Flye sitting on the Coach-wheel at the games of Olympus, gave out, that it was she, which made so great a dust. Or as that malcontent in a deep melancholy, who hearing the wi•des blow furiously, thought it was only his breath, which made all that blustering. It is God only, that can turn the heart, and tune the tongue, heal the body, and help the soul. Let the Instruments have just respect, God alone the praise. Honor the Physician with the honor due unto him: for the Lord hath created him. And count the well-ruling Elders worthy of double honor. But let God be glorified, as the Author of all, above all, for all.

It hath pleased God to call his Ministers by this title, Physicians: many duties hence accrue to our instruction. I cannot, I need not, dwell much on them. For everyone can lesson us, that will not be lessoned by us. Not that we refuse knowledge from any lips; since nothing can be said well, but by God's spirit: who sometimes reproves a Jonah by a Mariner; a Peter by a silly Damsel, a Balaam by an Ass. But because they, whose lips God hath seasoned, sealed to preserve knowledge, are held contemptible; and their feet foul, that bring the fairest message. So the frantic Patient beats the Medicine about his ears that brings it. The Prophets would have cured Jerusalem, behold Jerusalem killeth them. You kill us still; though not in our natural, yet in our civil life, our reputation. We feel not your murtherings, but your murmurings. Ishmaels tongue made him a Persecutor, as well as Esau's hands. Only our God comforts us, as he did Samuel: They have not cast thee away, but they have cast me away, saith the Lord. A word or two therefore concerning their care of your cure.

1. The Physician must apply himself to the nature of his Patient: so the Minister to the disposition of his hearer: leading the gentle, and drawing the refractarie; winning some with love, and pulling others out of the fire, having compassion on some, and saving others with fear. Medicamenti dosis pro coeli et soli natura mutanda. The prescription of the Medicine must be diuersified, according to the nature of the soil and the air. He shall never cure men's consciences, that looks not to their affections; making a difference. Paul testifieth of himself. I became to the Jews as a Jew, &c. to the weak, as weak; that I might save the weak: I am made all things to all men, that by all means I might save some. We must vary our speech to their weak understandings, Judgment to whom judgment, mercy to whom mercy belongs.

And you, Beloved, must also apply yourselves to us; not scorning your own Preacher, and running with itching ears to others; delighting rather in the variety of Teachers, than in the verity of Doctrines. It fares with Ministers as with Fish, none so welcome, as the new come. Set aside prejudice. The meanest Preacher, whom God hath sent you, can show you that, which if you obediently follow, shall effectually save your souls. The word is powerful, what instrument so ever brings it: and God's strength is made manifest in our weakness. Hear all, despise none. And as we are bound to feed that Flock, whereof the holy Ghost hath made overseers: so do you content yourselves with that Pastor, whom God hath set to feed you. Factions have thus been kindled, (and how hardly are they extinguished?) whiles one is for Paul, another for Apollos, a third for Cephus: or rather (for these preserved one Analogy of truth in their Doctrine, and only differed in plainness and eloquence of speech) when some are for Cephas, and others for Caiaphas; some for Apostles, and other for Apostates; some for sincere Preachers, others for Schismaticall Sectaries. Thus observing rather the diversity of Instructors, than the unity of Truth there arise, in the end, as many minds as men, as many Sects as Cities, as many Gospels as Gossips.

2. The Physician must not commit his Patients health to the Apothecary. God hath trusted thee with his people's welfare, whom he hath purchased with his own blood; thou must not be at thy man, and impose all on him. It was the reason, that the Romans Horse was so ill tended, himself so well. Ego curo meipsum, Status vero equum. I look to myself, but my man looks to my Horse. The like reason, sometimes, makes fat Shepherds, and lean Flocks. God hath placed us, as Mothers to bear children unto him: now as we must not be barren, and bring forth none; so we must not, when we have them, put them forth to nurse. It is not more unkind in a natural, than unnatural in a spiritual Murther. There is a necessary use of the Apothecary, so of the Reader. He that digges the ground is not to be despised, though a more exquisite Gardener draws the knot. But it is dangerous to trust all on him, and do God's business by an Attorney. God hath given thee the milk, that thou shouldest feed his Sheep, and not put them over to an hireling: who suffers the Wolfe to enter, and tear the Lambs, never breaking his sleep for the matter. Not but that preaching may yield to a more weighty dispensation. When the vaunts of some heretical Goliath shall draw us forth to encounter him with our Pennes, against whom we cannot draw the sword of our tongues: when the greater business of God's Church shall warrant our non-residence to the inferior: when one is called from being a Mariner, and running about, to the office of a Pilot, to sit still at the helme: then and upon these grounds, we may be tolerated, by another Physician to serve our Cures; (for so I find our charges, not without allusion to this metaphor, called:) a Physician, I say, that is a skillful Divine; not an illiterate Apothecary, an insufficient Reader. That mere reading of the Scriptures hath, and may save souls, whoever doubted? But that Preaching with Reading is more effectual, can it be denied? Oh then that any of the Sons of the Prophets, whom God hath blessed with knowledge of his heavenly Physic, should sit down on the chair of security, or shut themselves in the cels of obscurity, or chamber themselves perpetually in a College, or graze on the private commons of one man's benevolence (as Micah had his Levite to himself) whiles their gifts are not communicated to the Church of God.

Every spiritual Pysician must keep his right vbi. It is well observed by Aretius, upon the occasional calling of Peter and Andrew, when they were fishing: that God is wont to bless men especially, when they are busied in their proper element: working, as the Father charged his Son, in his Vineyard. Not in the wilderness of the world, nor in the Labyrinth of Lusts, nor in the field of Covetousness, nor in the house of security, much less in the chamber of Wantonness, or in the Tavern of drunkenness, or theater of lewdness, but in God's Vineyard, their general or particular calling. Our vocations must be kept and followed; not making our selves Magistrates in foreign common-wealths, Bishops in others diocesses, scalding our lips in our neighbors pottage. When those Shepherds heard the first glad tidings of Christ, they were attending their flocks by night in the field. Saul going honestly about his Fathers business, met with a Kingdom. And David was at the folds, when Samuel came with the holy oil. We say

Pluribus intentus, minus est ad singula sensus. and

Let none prescribe Phisick, but practitioners in that faculty: none plead at the bar, but Lawyers Let the Shooe-maker look to his boot, the Fisher to his boat, the Scholar to his book. The Husbandman in foro, the Minister in choro, Omnia cum facias miraris •ur facias nil?

Pos•hume, remsolam qui facit, ill facit.

He that would comprehend all things, apprehends nothing. As he that comes to a Corn-heap, the more he opens his hand to take, the less he graspeth, the less he holdeth. Who would in omnibus aliquid, shall in toto nihil scire. When a man couets to be a Doctor in all Arts, he lightly proves a dunce in many. Let the natural Pysician apply his ministering, the spiritual his Ministry. Quid enim in Theatro renunciator turpium, &c. The idle sports of the Theater, the wicked crafts in the Market, the gallant braveries of the Court, must not hinder us, either to say Service in the Temple, or to do service for the Temple. Clericus in opido, piscis in arido, as I have read. Rather, from the words of that Father, if it be God's will that when Christ comes to judgment, inveniat me vel precantem vel praedicantem, he may find me either praying, or preaching his holy word.

Well, we have everyone our own cures; let us attend them. Let us not take and keep livings of an hundred, or two hundred pound a year, and allow a poor Curate (to supply the voluntary negligence of our non-residence) eight, or (perhaps somewhat bountifully) ten pounds yearly: scarce enough to maintain his body, not a doyt for his study. He spoke sharply, (not untruly) that called this usury, and terrible usury. Others take but tenn• in the hundred, these take a hundred for ten. What say you to those, that undertake two, three, or four great Cures, and Physic them all by Attorneys! These Physicians love not their Patients, nor Christ himself; as he taught Peter: which S. Bernard thus comments on. Unless thy conscience bear thee witness, that thou lovest me exceeding much, that is, plus quam tua, plus quàm tuos, plus quàm te, More then thy goods, more then thy friends, more then thyself, thou art not worthy to undertake this Office. God hath made us superintendents of our charges, and bound us, (as Paul adjured Timothy, I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing) to preach the word, and be instant, &c. Many are content with presidence, not with residence. Ac si victuri essent sine cura, cum peruenerint ad curam. As if they had forgotten all care, when they have gotten a cure. This is not (dispensantis, sed dissipantis officium gerere) to be a Steward; but a loyterer in God's family. The Pysician sleeps in his Study; the Apothecary for want of judgment takes a wrong Medicine, or no Medicine for the sick. The Pastor is absent, the •ireling (very often) either preacheth idly, or negligently, or not at all. And thus God's people are not recovered.

3. Physicians must not deal too much, with that they call blandum medicamentum: which Physicians thus describe. Blandum dicitur, quod mediocritantum quantitate sumptum, all•um pigre et benign mouendo, pauca deijcit. Spiritual Physicians must beware, how they give these soothing and supple Medicines, which rather confirm the humors, then disperse the tumours, or purge the crudities of sins in their Patients. Robustum corpus, multis obs•ruc•ionibus imp•ditum, blanda imbecilla{que} medicamenta spernatur. A soul settled, like Moab, on the Lees, or frozen in the dregs of inveterate and obstinate sins; is not stirred by fair and flattering Documents. GOD complains in this Chapter against those. They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly; saying, Peace, peace, when there is no peace. Such are described, Ezek. 13. They have seduced my people, saying, Peace, and there is no peace: and one built up a wall, and loe, others daubed it with untempered Morter. God gives a terrible and universal threatening. ver. 15.16. I will accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered Morter: and will say unto you. The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it. He proceeds to command Ezekiel, to prophecy against the women, that prophecy to Israel. Woe to the women, that sow pillows to all arm-holes, &c. This is shameful in a Preacher, to wink at Idolatry in Bethel, because it is the Kings Chapel; and not to reprove the iniquity of Gilgal, the Country of oppression, because himself feeds at an oppressors Table. Some are so weak, that (as Mulieres, quia molliores, et pueri, quia teneri, et ex longo morbo resurgentes, blandioribus egent medicinis) they cannot digest too strong a potion of reproof. Therefore slecte quod est rigidum, fove quod est frigidum, rege quod est deuium. Bend •he refractary, warm the cold, direct the wandering.

I have read in a Pysician, that among many sophistications of this Balm, sometimes they fain it with water, and then it runs above the water like oil: sometimes with honey, which is thus perceived. If you put a drop thereof into milk, it runneth to curdes! When Ministers shall adulterate God's pure and sacred word, with the honey or oil of their own flatteries, and give it to a sick soul; it is so far from nourishing, as the sincere milk of the Gospel should do; that it curdleth in the stomach, and endangers the conscience worse. It is enough for Physic, if it be wholesome. Not pleasant taste, but secret virtue commends Medicines. The Doctrine, that is sweet to flesh and blood, hath just cause of •spition. It is (without question) harsh to the appetite of either soul or body, that heals either. Not that we should only blow a Trumpet of War, against opposers; but sometimes, yea often also, pipe Mercy and Gospel to those, that will dance the Measures of obedience. We must preach as well liberty to Captives, as captivity to Libertines: and build an Ark for those that desire salvation, as pour forth a Flood of curses against them that will perish, and open the door to the penitent knockers, as keep the gate with a flaming sword in our mouths against the obstinate. If we harp somewhat more on the sad string of Judgment, know that it is, because your sins are riper and riper then your obedient works. We must free our souls, that we have not administered soothing Sermons, least at once we flatter and further you in your follies. You are apt enough to derive authority for your sins, from our lives; and make our patterns, patrons of your lewdness. As I wish that our life were not so bad, so withal, that you would not out-go, out-do it, in evil. You go dangerously far, whiles you make our weakness, a warrant to your presumption. But if you fasten so wickedly on our vices, you shall never find countenance from our voices. We condemn our own ills, and you for adventuring your souls to Satan, on so silly advantage. Stand forth, and testify against us: Did we ever spare your usuries, depopulations, malice, frauds, ebriety, pride, swearing, contempt of holy things and duties? Could any Pharisee ever tie our tongues with the strings of Judas purse; and charm our connivance or silence with gifts? Wretched men, if there be any such, guilty of so palpable adulation; qui purpuram, magis quàm deum colunt. Call them your own common slaves, not God's servants; that to gain your least favors, are favorable to your greatest sins; and whilst they win your credits, loose your souls.

We must follow our Master, who gave us a Commission, and gives us direction to perform it. He came, once with pax vobis, peace be unto you: at another time with vae vobis, woe be unto you. We must be like him, (who was that good Samaritan) putting into your wounds, as well the searching wine of reprehension to eat out the dead flesh, as the oil of consolation, to cheare your spirits. Sometimes with Jeremiah's Hammer, bruising your strength of wickedness; though here with Jeremiah's Balm, binding up your broken hearts.

And for you, my Brethren, know that the things which cure you, do not evermore please you. Love not your palates above your souls. Thou liest sick of a bodily disease, and callest on the Pysician, not for well relished, but healthful Potions: thou receivest them spite of thy abhorring stomach, and being cured, both thankest and rewardest him. Thy soul is sick: God thy b•st Pysician (unsent to) sends thee Physic, perhaps the bitter Pils of affliction, or sharp prescripts of repentance by his word: though• loathest the savor, and wilt rather hazard thy soul, then offend thy flesh; and when thou shouldest thank, grumblest at the Pysician. So far inferior is our love of the soul, to that of our body; that •or the one, we had rather undergo any pains then death; for the other, we rather choose a willful sickness, then a harsh remedy.

Give then your Physician leave to fit and apply his medicines: and do not you teach him to teach you. Leave your old adjuration to your too obsequious Chaplens (if there be any such yet remaining) Loquimini placentia. Prophecy not unto us right things: speak unto us smooth things, prophecy deceits. Get you out of the way, &c. Threaten your Priests no longer with suits and quereles, and expulsions, from their poor Vineyards, which you have erst robbed, because they bring you sour grapes, sharp wine of reproofs. Do not color all your malice against them, with the imputation of ill life to them, when you are, indeed, only fretted with their just reprehension of your impieties. Barre not the freedom of their tongues, by tying them to conditions, this you shall say, and this not say, on pain of my displeasure. (You may preach against sins, but not meddle with the Pope; or you may inveigh against Rome & Idolatry, so you touch not at my Herodias; or you may tax Lust, so you let me alone for Nabaoths Vineyard.) As if the Gospel might be preached with your limitations: and forsaking the holy Ghost, we must come to fetch direction from your lips. Jonah spared not Great Nineveh, nor the great King of Great Nineveh: why should we spare your sins, that would save your souls! You will love us the better, when you once love yourselves better. If any gain were more valuable, then that of godliness: or any means more available, then spiritual Physic, to your salvations, we would hearken to it and you. He that is wisest, hath taught us it, we are rebels, if we not obey it. Your exulcerated sores cannot be healed with incarnatiue salves.

4. Spiritual Physicians (no less then the Secretaries of Nature) must have knowledge and Art. Empirics endanger not more bodies, then ideotish Priests souls. He that cannot pour healthful moisture, and juice of life into the gasping spirit; and fill the veins, that affliction hath emptied; deserves not the name of a spiritual Pysician. Arts have their use; and human learning is not to be despised, so long as (like an obedient Hagar) she serves Sara with necessary help. Only let the Book of God stand highest in our estimation, as it is in God's elevation, and let all the sheaves do homage to it. But Empirics cannot brook Craterus, saith the Proverb: sottish Enthusiastes condemn all learning, all premeditation. This is to tie the holy Ghost to a Pen and Inkhorne, &c. They must run away with their Sermons, as Horses with an empty Cart. But now, he that will fly into God's mysteries with such sick feathers, shall be found to flag low with a broken pineon: or soaring too high, without sober direction, endanger himself. Barbarism is gross in an Orator, Ignorance in a Pysician, Dulness in an Advocate, rudeness in a Minister. Christ chose Fishermen, but made them Fishers of men; gave them a Calling, and virtues for it. Shall therefore any fantastical spirit think, that Christ's singular action is our general pattern? As if men were, the more faultie, the more fit; the more silly, the more sufficient. Christ so furnished •is with knowledge and language, that the people wondered at their wisdom, and knew, or rather acknowledged, that they had been with Jesus.

It is said of Emperickes, that they have but one medicine for all diseases: if that cure not, they know not how to do it: but the Scribe instructed for Heaven, and instructing for Heaven, draws out of his treasure both old and new, which he hath carefully laid up by his former study: high points for forward Scholars, easier •essons for those in a lower form. To children milk; such things as may nourish, not oppress: aptanon alta: to the profound, as Demosthenes said he desired to speak, non modo scripta, sed etiam sculpta, matters of weight and diligence. The truth is, that we must preach Christ, not our selves: and regard the people's benefit, more then our own credit: being content to loose our selves, to win others to God. And to this purpose is required learning: as a Pysician is not less knowing, because he gives an easy and common receipt to a certain Patient; but rather out of his judgment finds that fittest for him. It is no small learning to illustrate obscurities, to clear the subtleties of the School, to open God's mysteries to simple understandings, to build up the weak, and pull down the confident in their own strengths. This shall discharge a man from the imputation of illiterature, as well as to preach Riddles and Paradoxes, which the people may admire, not admit; and make that frivolous use of all, this was a deep Sermon. Learning is requisite, or thou art but an Empericke. How many Paracelsian Mountebankes have been the worst diseases to the Common-wealth they live in; whiles they purge away the good humors, and leave the bad behind them? Your Popish Teachers were such ill Purgers, draying out the good blood of Religion from the vaynes of the Lan•, and pouring in feculent corruptions, ridiculous fopperies, Magicall poisons instead thereof: giving a Mass for a Communion, an Image for the Bible, Stage-apishnesse for a sober Sermon: allowing either no Scripture, or new Scripture; so suppressing the words, and stifling the sense, that hiding away the gold, they throw their people the bag.

5. Good Physicians must not aim more at their own wealth, then their Patients health. Indeed the spiritual Labourer is worthy of his hire; but if he labor for hire only, he may make himself merry with his reward on earth, Heaven hath none for him. That good is well done, that is done of conscience. The Pastor feeds Christ's Sheep for his own gain: the Sheep are fed; Christ gives him no thanks for his labor. Peter made three manner of Fishings: he caught Fish for money, Fish with money, Fish without money. The first was his temporal trade, the second a miraculous and singular action, the last his spiritual function. Some are of all these sorts: the worst now is, to fish for the twenty pence. Piscantur vt adipiscantur, non homines, sed hominum. They labor hard to take, not men, but men's. Peters Successors called (Simon's Successors not doubted) have so fished this many a hundred year, not with the Draw-net of the Gospel, but with the Purse-net of Avarice. There are too many such S•luer-fishers, that angle only for the tributarie Fish: too many of those Physicians, that set up their bills, and offer their service and cure, not where the people are sickest, but where they are most liberal. Some will not practice, except they have three or four Parishes under their Cure at once: these are Physicians, not for Church, but Steeples. Some are wandering Empirics, that when they come to minister, spend all the time in a cracking ostentation of their Cures, or demonstration of their skill in Pictures and Tables, never approving it to their credulous Patients: These are bragging Physicians.

Some minister only opium to their people, and so lull them in their sick security: these are dull Physicians. Some minister Medicines, not to ease their stomachs of the burden of their sins, but to put lightness into their brains, sca•ing Religion out of the wits: these are Schismaticall Physicians. Some minister Antichristian poisons, to breed the plague of Idolatry among the people: these are Seminarie Physicians. Others of this Sect, (living from us by a Sea-division, yet) send over venomous prescripts, binding Princes Subjects to Treasons and Homicides: these are devilish Physicians. Some will sell their knowledge for a meals meat: these are Table-Physicians. Some minister in this place, in that place, in every place, in no place: these are vbiquitary Physicians. Some minister nothing, but what they glean from others prescripts, wanting skill to apply it: these are like Physicians, but are none. Some ring the Changes of opinions, and run a serpentine course, abjuring now, what yesterday they embraced and warranted, winding from error to error, as Dolphins in the water; turning like Fanes on the house-top, with every new blast of Doctrine; Reedes shaken with every Gust, (contrary to that testimony of John the Baptist) these are gadding, madding Physicians. Some will minister nothing, but what comes next into their heads and hands: these are Enthusiasticall Physicians. Some again, I will not say many, practice only for commodity, and to purge others wealth into their own Purses: these are mercenary Physicians.

Avarice, saith a grave Divine, is a sin in any man, Heresy in a Clergy-man. The Papists have an Order, that profess willful poverty: but some of them profess it so long, till they sweep all the riches of the Land into their own Lappes. The Purse is still the White they level at; as I have read them described: the Capuchines shooting from the Purse, the Franciscanes aiming wide of it, the Jesuits hitting it patte in the midst. So with long, or (at least) tedious Prayers, as the Pharisees, they pray upon the poor, and devour their houses. Spiritual Physicians should abhor such covetous desires. Sunt qui scire volunt, vt scientiam suam vendant, et turpis quaestus est. They that get knowledge to sell it, make a wretched gain. Non vitae docent, sed crumenaе. Seneca affirms, that the Common-wealth hath no worse men, quam qui Philosophi, vt vt liquod artificium vaenale, didicerunt. Miserable men, that look to their own good, more then the Churches; serving God in their parts, themselves in their hearts; working, like those builders about the Ark, rather for present gain, then future safety. But as they desire rather nostra quam nos, so they preserve rather sua quam se: winning, like Demas, the world, and loosing, like Iud's, their souls. I have read in the Fable, of a Widow, that being thick-sighted, sent to a certain Physician to cure her: he promiseth it to her, and she to him a sum of money for satisfaction. The Physician comes, and applies Medicines, which being bound over her eyes, still as he departs, he carries away with him some of her best goods: so continuing her pains and his labor, till he had robbed the house of her best substance. At last he demanded of her, being now cured, his covenanted pay. She looking about her house, and missing her goods, told him that he had not cured her: for whereas be•ore she could see some furniture in her house, now she could perceive none: she was erst thick-sighted, but now poor-blind. You can apply it without help. Well, those spiritual Physicians are only good, that propound to themselves no gain, but to heal the broken, recover the lost, and bring home the wandering Lambs to the Sheep-folds of peace; ieoparding a joint to save a sick conscience; with Moses and Paul, not respecting the loss of themselves, whiles they may replenish the Kingdom of Christ.

These are the Physicians. It remains, that I should show who are the Sick; for whose cause God hath prepared Balm, and inspired Physicians with skill to minister it. But the time runs away so fast, and you are as hasty to be gone as it; and this subject is fitter for a whole Sermon, then a conclusion: and lastly, I have evermore declined your molestation by prolixity; therefore I reserve it to another opportunity. If you shall judge this that hath been spoken, worthy your meditation, (laying it affectionately to your hearts, and producing it effectually in your lives) that God, who gave me power to begin this work, will also assist me to finish it: without whom, neither my tongue can utter, nor your ear receive any saving benefit of instruction. A word or two, for exhortation, and then I will leave in your bosoms, and yourselves in the bosom of God. First for us, the Physicians, then for you, the Patients, only so far as may concern you in the former point. For us.

1. We must administer the means of your redress, which our God hath taught us: doing it in dilection, in delectation, with love, with alacrity. Though it be true, that the thing which perisheth shall perish, and they which are ordained to perdition, cannot by us be rescued out of the Wolves jaws. Yet spiritual Physicians must not deny their help, lest dum alios perdant, ipsi percant, whiles their silence damnifieth others, it also damneth themselves. When I say unto the wicked, saith the Lord, Thou shalt surely die, and thou givest him not warning to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand. The Physician knows, that if the time of his patients life be now determined by God, no art can preserve his taper from going out: yet because he knows not God's hidden purpose, he withholds not his endeavor. To censure who shall be saved, who damned, is not (iudicium luti, sed figuli) the judgment of the clay, but of the Potter: Who only hath power, of the same lump, to make one vessel to honor, another to dishonor. We know not this, therefore we cease not to beseech your reconciliation. Nay we are Ambassadors for Christ, as though God doth beseech you by us, and we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. Thus having applied our Physic, we leave the success to God, who alone can make his word the savor of death, or of life, preserving or condemning, destructive to your sins or yourselves, as his good pleasure willes it.

2. The Physician that lives among many Patients, if he would have them tenderly and carefully preserve their healths, must himself keep a good die among them. It is a strong argument to persuade the goodness of that he administers. The Clergy man's strict diet of abstinence from enormities, of fasting and prayer against the surfeits of sin, of repentance for errors, is a powerful inclination to his people, to do the like. Habet, quantacumque granditate dictioni, magis pondus vita dicentis. The preaching of life is made more forcible by the good life of the preacher. An evil conversation is an evil engine to overthrow the walls of edification. Citharisante Abbate, tripudiant Monachi. When the Abbot gives the music of a good example, the Monks dance after him; as was their proverb: Plene dixit, qui bene vixit. He hath spoken fully, that hath lived fairly. There are four sorts of these Physicians.

1. That neither prescribe well to others, nor live well themselves: these are not Physicians indeed, but Italian Quacksalvers, that having drunk poison themselves, minister it to the people; and so destroy the souls, that God hath bought with his blood. Wretched Priests, that are indeed the worst diseases; allowing in precept, and approving in practice the riot of drunkenness, or the heat of lustfulness, or the baseness of covetise, or the frenzy of contention. These, instead of building up Christ's Church, pull it down with both hands: not lux, but tenebrae mundi: not the light, as Ministers should be, but the darkness of the world, as the sons of Belial are. A foolish Shepherd is God's punishment to the flock. Loe, I will raise up a Shepherd, which shall not visit those that be cut off, nor seek the young one, nor heal that which is broken; but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces.

2. That prescribe well in the Pulpit, but live disorderly out of it; so making their patients believe, that there is no necessity of so strict a diet, as they are enjoined; for then sure the Physician himself would keep it: since it cannot be, but he loves his own life, and holds his soul as dear to himself, as ours are to us. Thus like a young scribbler, what he writes fair with his hand, his sleeve comes after, and blots it. This Priest builds up God's Tabernacle with one hand, and pulls it down with the other. Though this Physician can make very good bills, preach good directions, yet (as sick as he is) he takes none of them himself.

3. That prescribes very ill, preacheth seditiously and lewdly, yet lives without any notorious crime, or scandalous imputation. This is an hypocritical trick of heretical Physicians. Beware of falls • Prophets, that comes to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves. Thus the Popish Friars, like the false visionists in Zacharies Prophecy, will wear a rough garment to deceive withal. Their austerity shall be stricter then John Baptists, but not with intent to bring one soul to Christ. This cautelous demurenesse in them so bewitcheth their Patients, that they receive whatsoever these administer, though it poisons them. Thus covered over with the mantle of sobriety and zeal, as a crafty Apothecary vents his drugs, so they their dregs, without suspicion. To keep the metaphor; as an natural Physician, out of honest policy, covers the bitter pill with gold, or delays the distasteful potion with sugar, which the abhorring stomach would not else take. So this mystical one (for he is a servant to the mystery of iniquity) so amazeth the people with a fair show of outward sanctimony; that whiles they gaze at his good parts with admiration, they swallow the venom of his doctrine without suspicion.

4. That teacheth well, and liveth well: prescribeth a good diet of obedience, and keeps it when he is well; or a good medicine of repentance, and takes it when he is sick: thus both by preaching and practice recovering the health of Israel. We require in a good garment, that the cloth be good, and the shape fitting. If we preach well, and live ill, our cloth is good, but not our fashion. If we live well and preach ill, our fashion is good, but our cloth is not. If we both preach well, and live well, our garment is good: let every spiritual Physician weave it, and wear it. This for our selves. For you, I will contract all into these three uses; which necessarily arise from the present or precedent consideration.

1. Despise not your Physicians. You forbear indeed, (as the Pagans at first, and the Papists since) to kill, burn, torture us: (whether it be your good will, or the law, you live under, that prevails with you, God knows:) yet you proceed to persecute us with your tongues, as Ishmael smote Isaac; to martyr us with your scorns in our ciuell life, our good names. In discountenancing our Sermons, discouraging our zeales, discrediting our lives, you raise civil (or rather uncivil) persecutions against us. By these you exercise our papatience, which yet we can bear, whiles the blow given us, by a manifest rebound, doeth not strike our God. But per nostra latera petitur Ecclesia, impetitur Christus: when as through our sides you wound the Church, nay Christ himself, it is stupidity in us to be silent. Christ, when the glory of his Father was interested, and called into question by their calumniations, took on him a just apology. I have not a Devil, but I honor my Father. If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou me?

We have comfort enough, that we can suffer this martyrdom for Christ his sake, being blessed by the peace of our times from a worse. The Courtier cares not so much for the estimation of his fellows, so his Prince approves and loves him. Let God be pleased with our innocence, and your base aspersions of scandals against us, shall not much move our minds. The Ministers of God must approve themselves in much patience, in afflictions, &c. Our war is ferendo, non feriendo. The Miter is for Aaron, not the smiter. We must encounter with Beasts in the shape of men, with Wolves in the coats of sheep, with Devils in the habit of Angels, with unreasonable and wicked men: therefore we have need of patience. Indignities, that touch our private persons, may be dissembled, or returned with Isaac's apology of patience, of silence. As Augustine answered Petilian: Possumus esse in his pariter copiosi, nolumus esse pariter vani. You do in event not so much wrong us, as yourselves. You foam out your own shame; and betray your wretched, I had almost said reprobate, malice: for such are set down in theseat of the scornful, which the Prophet makes a low step to damnation. God shall laugh you to scorn, for laughing his to scorn: and at last despise you, that have despised him in us. In expuentis recidit faciem, quod in coelum puit. That which a man spittes against heaven, shall fall back on his own face. Your indignities done to your spiritual Physicians, shall not sleep in the dust with your ashes, but stand up against your souls in judgment.

2. If your Physician be worthy blame, yet sport not, with cursed Cham, at your Fathers nakedness. Our life, our life is the derision that sticks in your jaws, till you spit it out against us. I would to God, our lives were no less pure, then are (even these our enemies being Judges) our doctrines. Be it freely acknowledged, that in some it is a fault. Our life should be the Counterpaine of our doctrine. We are Vines, and should, like that in Jotham's Parable, cheare both God and man. The Player, that misacts an inferior and unnoted part, carries it away without censure; but if he shall pla• some Emperor, or part of observation unworthily, the spectators are ready to hiss him off. The Minister represents (you say) no mean person, that might give toleration to his absurdities; but the Prince of heaven; and therefore should be holy, as his heavenly Father is. Be it confessed; and woe is us, we cannot help it. But you should put difference betwixt habitual vices, nourished by custom, prosecuted by violence, and infirm or involuntary offenses.

The truth is also, that you, who will not have ears to hear God's word, will yet have eyes to observe our ways. How many of you have surdas aures, oculos emissitios, Adders ears, but Eagles eyes; together with critical tongues, and hypocritical looks! You should (and will not) know, that our words, not our works bring you to heaven. Examples are good furtherances, but ex praeceptis viuitur; we must live by precepts. If you have a Christian desire of our reformation, cease your obstreperous clamours, and divulging slanders, the infectious breathings of your corruption and malice; and reprove us with the spirit of meekness, to our foreheads. If we neither clear our selves from imputed guiltiness, nor amend the justly reprov'd faults, nor kindly embrace your loving admonitions, proceed with your impartial censures. But still know, that we are nothing in our selves; though we be called lux mundi, the light of the world, yet solummodo lex est lux, God's word is the light, that must conduct your believing and obeying souls to the land of Promise. Did we live like Angels, and yet had our lips sealed up from teaching you, you might still remain in your sins. For it is not an ignorant imitation of goodness, but a sound faith in Christ (never destitute of knowledge and obedience) that must save you in the day of the Lord Jesus.

3. Lastly, let this teach you, to get yourselves familiar acquaintance with the Scriptures: that if you be put to it, in the absence of your Pysician, you may yet help yourselves. We store our memories, and (perhaps not trusting them) our Books, with diverse receites for ordinary diseases. Whom almost shall you meet, (whiles you complain of an Ague, of the Tooth-ach, of a Sore) but he will tell you a Salve or a Medicine for it? Alas, are our souls less precious, or their wounds, griefs, sicknesses easilier cured, that we keep the Clossets of our consciences empty of Medicines for them? The Jews were commanded to write the Laws of God on their walls, &c. God writes them on the Christians hearts. So David found it. Thy Law is within my heart. This is true acquaintance with it. It is our Masters charge, if at least we are his servants. Search the Scriptures, for in them is eternal life. We plead, that our faith is our evidence for Heaven: it is a poor evidence, that wants the seal of the Scriptures.

It was the weapon, that the Son of God himself used, to beat back the assaults of the Devil. Many ignorant persons defy the Devil: They will shield themselves from Satan, as well as the best that teach them: the foul •iend shall have no power over them: yet continue an obstinate course of life. As if the Devil were a Babe, to be out-faced with a word of defiance. It is a lamentable way, to brave a Lyon, and yet come within his clutches. He will bear with thy hot words, so he may get thy cold soul. The weapon, that must encounter and conquer him, is the sword of the spirit, the word of God. No hour is free from his temptations, that we had need to lodge with God's Book in our bosoms. 1. Who knows, where he shall receive his next wound, or of what nature the sickness of his soul shall be? 2. The Minister cannot be present with everyone, and at every time. 3. Satan is never idle; it is the trade of his delight to spill souls. Lay all these together, and then (in the fear of God) judge, whither you can be safe, whiles you are ignorant of the Scriptures. This is the Garden of Eden, whence run those four Rivers, of Wisdom to direct us, of oil to soften us, of comforts to refresh us, of promises to confirm us.

As lightly as you regard the word, and as slightly as you learn it, you shall one day find more comfort in it, then in all the world. Lye you on your Death-beds, groan you with the pangs of nature-oppressing Death, or labor you with the throbs of an anguished conscience, when neither natural nor spiritual Pysician stands by you, to give you succor; then, oh then, one dram of your old store, taken from the treasury of the Scriptures, shall be unto you of inestimable comfort. Then well-fare a Medicine at a pinch, a drop of this Balm ready for a sudden wound, which your memory shall reach forth, and your faith apply to your diseased souls, afflicted hearts. Think seriously of this, and recall God's Book from banishment, and the Land of forgetfulness, whither your security hath sent it. Shake off the dust of neglect from the cover, and wear out the leaves with turning: continually imploring the assistance of God's spirit, that you may read with understanding, understand with memory, and remember with comfort: that your Souls Closet may never be vnstored of those heavenly rec•ites, which may ease your griefs, cure your wounds, expel your sicknesses, preserve your healths, and keep you safe to the coming of Jesus Christ. Trust not all on your Ministers, no nor on yourselves, but trust on the mercies of God, and the merits of our blessed Savior. Nothing now remains, but to show you, in what need you stand of this Physic, by reason of your ill he•lths, and the infected air of this world you breath in. Mean time preserve you these instructions, and God preserve you with his mercies. For which let us pray, &c.

FINIS.

THE Gallants Burden.

A Sermon preached at PAVLES CROSSE, THE twenty nine of March, being the fifth Sunday in Lent. 1612.

By THO. ADAMS, Preacher of God's Word at Willington in Bedford-shire.

Published by authority.

LONDON Printed by W. W. for Clement Knight, and are to be sold at his Shoppe in Paul's Church-yard at the Sign of the Holy Lamb. 1612.

TO THE HONORABLE SIR WILLIAM GOSTWICKE Baronet, and his worthy Lady, the Lady IANE GOSTWICKE.

HONorable Sir, I acknowledge freely that the World is oppressed with the Press, and the confluence of Books hath bred a confusion of errors, of Vices; so hard is it to distinguish betwixt profitable and vain Writings; and having culled out the best, so easy is it with much good Meat to surfeit; yet is not therefore Meat unnecessary: It is no sober inference, because both Text and readers have been corrupted with false Glosses, to reject all Expositions, all Applications: both are fit, this latter most necessary; for our Understanding is better than our Conscience: there is some light in our Minds, little warmth in our Affections: So against Nature is it true in this, that the essential qualities of Fire, Light, and Heat, are divided; and to say, whether our light of Knowledge be more, or our heat of Devotion less, is beyond me: Let this (considered) plead for me, that I (do but) rub this sowing Knowledge in us, to bring it back to some life of Obedience: If any feel their thick eyes hence to receive any clearness, or their numbed Affections to gather (the least) Spirit, let them at once, give God the glory, and take to themselves the comfort. Sin hath got strength with age, and against all natural order, is more powerful, subtle, and fuller of active dexterity now in the dotage of it, than it was in the nonage: Both Pulpit & Press are weak enough to resist it. It therefore this small Arrow of Reproof can wound (but even) one of his Limbes, it shall a little enervate his tyranny. Whatsoever this Sermon is, it is wholly yours, and he that made it: whose Patronage, I could not be ambitious of, if I should only fixe my eyes on my own deservings: but in the affiance of your good natures, mature judgments, and kind constructions of my weak endeavors, I have presumed to make you the Patron of my Labors, who was freely the Patron of myself. I know, that God's word can countenance it self, and needs not the shelter of an human arm, not, though it had as many Edomites to deride it, as it hath Patrons to defend it: But I find not only the best Writings of the best Men, but even some of those Holy Books, inspired from Heaven, bearing in their foreheads (as from the pen-men) a dedication. I confess, it is not all for your Protection, somewhat for your use; and you are blessed in favoring that, which shall be best able to favor you: May I therefore entreat your Honors, to give it happy entertainment to your own hearts, favorable protection to the worlds eyes; so shall that, and myself be (yet more) yours. The God of all power and mercy, be as fythfull a shadow of refreshing to your souls, as your kindness hath been free to my wants, who must ever remain.

Your Honors in all faithful observance, Tho. Adams.

THE GALLANT'S BURDEN.

Isaiah 21. ver. 11. 12.

The burden of Dumah. He calls unto me out of Seir, Watchman, what was in the night? Watchman, what was in the night? The Watchman said: The morning cometh, and also the night. If ye will ask, enquire: return, and come.

QVo breuior, •o obscurior: the shorter this Prophecy is, the more mystical. In holy Writ, these two things ever concur: (Sententia breuis• res ampla) a finite Sentence, an infinite Sense: As in a little Map we see a world of Countries, and what the Foot cannot measure in many days, the Eye peruseth in a moment: this is the little Map of Idumea or Edom, (wherein we may survey the state of that whole Region) not much unlike the situation of it, standing in this Chapter betwixt Chaldea and Arabia: The Burdens against them both are heavy, and the Plagues aggravated with more circumstaunces: The burden of Dumah, (though short) shall weigh with them grain for grain.

As you travail with me into this Countrie (by the guidance of that enlightening spirit) tie your considerations to two especial things;the Map, the Moral. In the Map you shall find 1. an Inscription, 2. a Description: In the Inscription observe, 1. the name of the Countrie: 2. the nature of the Prophecy. The Description restes it self on 3. Obiectes; 1. a Mountain, 2. a Watchman, 3. an Edomite: where is shadowed 1. under the Mountain, Security: 2. under the Watchman, Vigilancie: 3. under the Edomite, Scorn. Now, if you ask (as they did the Prophet Ezekil) what these things mean? the Moral directs you 1. by a Q•estion, 2. by an Answer: The Question would know, what was in the Night: the Answer declares it 1. by a Resolution, 2. by an Advice: The Resolution (Venit mane et vespe) The •orning c•mes, and also the night: the Advice, If ye will ask, enquire: return, and come.

In the Inscription, we propounded to be considered 1. the name of the Country, 2. the nature of the Prophecy: For the Country, there is some question what this Dumah should be: some affirm it to be the Country of the Ishmaelites, and to receive the name from Dumah, that son of Ishmaell, mentioned Gen. 25. 14. but that Dumah, with other the sons of Ishma•ll inhabited Arabia, which is burdened in the Prophecy following, distinctly severed from this: this Dumah then was the Countrie of the Idumeans or Edomites, the place where Esa• and his generation dwelt: this is clear by the Mount Seir, which was an Hill of the Ed•mu•s: Ezech. 35. 15.

This Idumea is here called Dumah: thus God insinuates his contempt of that rebellious and accursed nation, by cutting short the name, as unworthy to stand in his Book, graced with the full length: the estimation which the wicked bear with God is here expressed: he thinks the mention of them a blur to his sacred leaves: now, shall their persons sit in his Kingdom with honor, whose names may not stand in his Book without disgrace? Sometimes they are concealed, as Dives: that real Parable gives no other title to the condemned churl: Christ allows the Tyrant Herod no other name then a Fox: Go tell that Fox, &c. God calls those Princes, the Bulls of Bashan on the Mountains of Samaria: they would be blots to his holy Book, if they were expressly named. Sometimes they are named, (but) with abbreviations; Dumah for Id•mae: Thus Aram is called Ram: Ephesdam•im, a coast of the Philistines, never spoken of without contempt, is twice thus curtailed. 1. Cro. 11. it is called Pasdaemmim: and 1. Sam. 17. Dammim.

Let not this Observation slip from us without our use, If God take letters from the name, he intends to take blessings from the person, when Ieconiah's curse is written in the cutting off his Posterity from the throne of David, and himself from the prosperity of the earth, he is called Co••h: the reason is added, He is a despised person, let him have a shortened name: a broken Idol, and an unpleasant Vessel, &c.

Thus God crosseth the worlds fashion, by putting them in his Chronicle, which are not here thought of, and leaving those out, which the world boasts of as her glory: to a soul that hath more Affection in her, then Religion, it seems a great matter of pity: that Plato, Cato, Alexander, & some of those mighty Roman Caesars, honored with the graces of Nature, the bounties of Fortune, & the greatest glory, the fore'd world could yield them, should yet want a name in God's Book, a place in his Kingdom. Greatness is the fairest object to the eye of the world, Goodness to the eye of Heaven: There is a glorious splendor in pompous Honor, to draw the eyes of admiration after it; it little affects the sight of God, if Virtue gives it not a Luster: he that is goodness and greatness it self (when others have it in the concrete, good and great, he hath and deserves it in the abstract) is pleased (to prefer his title of Optimus, before that of Maximus) and first to be called Good, and then Great. His affections should be ours: he is the absolute precedent of our imitation.

There are infinite ways that conduct to seeming Honor, excluding Virtue; the end of them all is shame: since of a natural man it is true, that (Qua•o ornatio•, tanto nequ•or) The more adorned, the more wicked: our Bonnets veil, our Knees bow to many, whom the sight of Heaven and Virtue, scorns: This imparity of men living, is made even by death, who sweepes all (Beggar and Prince) with his impartial Beesome, into one Bagge: and when Judgment comes, they are made odd and unequal again; for then, the least in the worlds estimation, shall sit down with the blessed Kings and Patriarchs in Heaven, when Kings and Patriottes without grace, shall be excluded. If you desire your names to be registered with the pen of Eternity, write them yourselves with the pen of Charity: the Book of Grace, is the counterpaine to the Book of Election: they are written in Heaven first, and there God reads them: We cannot see into this Book through the thick clouds of the Air and Sin; let us write them in the leaves of Obedience, and there read them: they stand sure with God before, not sure to us till now: Write them in the entrails of the Poor, in the ruins of the Church, by you bettered, repaired, maintained, (Non norunt haec monumenta mori,) and you shall one day hear the Judge himself, read them in the audience of all the world, to your joy, crown, eternity of bliss.

Christ diverted his Apostles triumph to another honor: they were little less then proud, that the Devils were subdued unto them through his name whom they served: True (saith Christ) I saw Satan fall from heaven like lightning; nevertheless rejoice not that the spirits obey you, but rejoice that your names are written in Heaven. Rejoice not of your innobled bloods, admired with living praises, & rescued from the jaws of oblivion by sumptuous Sepulchers: there is small matter of joy, that the name lives in bright honor on Earth, when the Soul lies in the rusting miseries of Hell: but rejoice on your assurance of memorial with God: The memory of the just shall be blessed; but the name of the wicked shall rotte. A great name commonly ariseth either from Blood, popular applause, or Golden trappings: the last useth a man like a Counter that stands now for a Million, instantly for a Penny: The first finds Honor, perhaps deserves it not, leaves it by succession: The middlemost is unconstant, as the causes are: the vulgar opinions, whose distracted voices seldom hit on the same tune, or never keep it long. The Monarchs of the world have large and tedious Titles, according to their several Dominions: good luck have they with that Honor, which the hand of God reacheth forth unto them: there is a Title that better all theirs; those are fouled up in time, that perisheth: this brings Honor without end or limits, to be a Christian; such have their names producted in God's book, to show that they stand written with Golden letters in the Lambes book of Heaven: Abram shall be called Abraham: Jacob, Israel. The Hebrews well observe, that God to those he loved, added a letter of his own name (that tetragrammaton) Jehovah: as the letter He, to Abraham's and Sarah's name the letter Iod to Iehoshua's, who was before called Hoshea.

It was happy for Mordecaj that his name stood in the Persian Chronicles, that Ahashverosh might read him: his service shall be found out with rewards, array him with the Kings Robe, set him on the Kings Chariot, and proclaim his name through the popular streets, This is the man, whom the King will honor. It is more blessed to stand in the Chronicles of Heaven, registered by the Pen of that eternal Spirit; we shall one sit with the King in his Throne (Vnicenti dabitur sedere, &c.) and put on his robe of Glory; (Be fashioned like his glorious body,) Such honor have all his Saints. It is the decree and promise of him, whose word is more stable then the foundations of the Earth: Those that honor me, I will honor. Reuolue then his sacred Name in your sanctified mouths: sing Hosanna's to it here, that you may sing Halleuia's hereafter: & having drunk hearty draughts of his Waters of Mercy, bless with David his great and glorious Name: the honor of your own names is attained, nay consists in this: maintain the glory of it with your strengths, sound it with your praises, and (if need be) seal it with your bloods; and God shall write your Names (not shortened like Dumahs,) but at full length, in a Book never to be blotted out.

The nature of the Prophecy follows, being that other branch of the Inscription; A Burden: a matter not easily portable, but will weigh heavy on whom soever imposed: the Burden is in 2. respects: 1. of the Prophet that bear it: 2. of the People that were to suffer it.

1. The Word of the Lord is to the Prophets a heavy Burden till they are delivered of it: there is no rest in the bones to the surcharged Conscience, no more then to the pregnant Woman till she be eased: I confess, that Security, Vanity, abundance of Wealth, setting their shoulders to this Burden, make many a Prophet forgo all sense of the weight: Jonah laden with his Commission for Nineveh, lay as securely in the sides of the Ship, as if the God of Israel had laid no Burden on him: but himself was a Burden to the Ship, and the fury of the Waves, Winds, and his Anger that moves all, was not appeased, till the Ship was disburthened of Jonah, that had disburthened himself of the Message of God. Let me speak it with grief and fear; We are the sons of those Prophets, (I mean) their successors in God's Ministerial work: and the Word of the eternal God is no lighter a Burden to us then it was to them: nay let me add (that, which is not to be thought of without trembling) there is the Burden of a Curse threatened to them that neglect this Burden; Cursed is he that doth God's business negligently. Least I should seem bitter in applying this too generally, let me freely speak what Paul applies to his own person, if he slighted this ponderous charge: A necessity (which is no less then a Burden) is laid upon me, and woe unto me, if I preach not the Gospel.

I know that our Harvest abounds with plentiful and painful Laborers, that bear the heat and burden of the day, and according to their several offices (whether in Ouerseeing, Planting, or Watering) with the sweat of their brows, they labor in God's Vineyard: but to complain o• the evil that is, is no wrong to the good that is: ⟨⟩ excellent things are sp•ken of thee, Oh thou City of God; Oh thou Church of England: Oh might it be no wrong to thy Perfections, no stain to thy Beauty, to condole some wants in thy Sons: It is sin to be silent, where an impartial speech may take good effect: the sweet dews of holy Admonitions may from this place, (as the Liver) spread into all the Vaines of the Land.

The Ministry is a matter of both Honor and Burthen: Are there none, that catch at the Honor, will not meddle with the Burden? whose pined Flocks must either content themselves with a bare Pasture, or else stray forth into neighbouring Commons; whiles they forget to break their Masters Bread; yea perhaps to set the whole Loafe before his guests: Are there none that load their minds with the Burden of Cares, too heavy for a Christian soul to bear? the load of Ambition, the burden of Covetousness so pressing them down, as if they were exonerated of the Burden of the Gospel: But if any soul be sensible of this Burden, (as one, into whose bowels God hath put the compassion of distressed souls,) for Zyons sake he will not hold his peace: yea, let me speak it of him, that Job of himself; He is full of matter, and the spirit within him, compelleth him: the word is in him, like new Wine in Bottles, which must be vented, or will burst forth: And if we slip our shoulders from under this Burden, God can make the whole world too hot for us, and at last impose a Burden of another nature, on our then weaker and more unable souls (the Mountains and Rocks (if weighed in the balance) will be found lighter) the Burden of all their sins, whose souls have bled to death by our negligence: We may, through our impatience and weakness with Jeremiah, curse the days of our Natiuitie, and cry woe worth the time, that ever we were borne, to so troublesome an Office: but a greater woe and curse attends us, if we attend it not: passive Corruptions in our selves, active Reproches, Injuries, Oppositions of others, impulsive temptations of the Devil, may make us weary of our callings: but his Word is in our hearts, as fire shut up in our bones, and we shall be weary of forbearing; we cannot smother the flames of it, but with terms of defiance to the stoutest that bear a forehead, we must declare it: God gives us the provision of this Burden, before hand, that we may stoop the shoulders of patience and zeal to it: Thus to Ezekiel: Son of man, I send thee to Israel; What are they? I will not dissemble with thee: They are a rebellious house: contumelies against thyself, blasphemies against thy maker, the bitings, smitinges, woundinges of tongues, hands, and swords: this is the Burden thou must bear; if any lighter and better things come, let them be (praeter spem) beyond thy expectation: Thus is the Word a burden to the person that bears it.

2. It is no less to them that must suffer it: the Iudgements of God are heavy on whomsoever they light: a Milstone bound to the sinner, & thrown with him into the Sea, will not sooner sink him to the bottom, then these bound to the soul, will sink it to the depth of dephtes; therefore Christ says, Better a Milstone, because lighter. The wrath of the Lamb, at the consummation of the world, is acknowledged more heavy then Rocks and Mountains; and happy were it for those reprobates, if such intolerable pressures could dissolve them into emptiness: These on the body are more sensible, on the soul more miserable. In the infancy of the world, God's blows were most outward; in this ripe (or rather rotten) age of it, they are most inward & spiritual: We have no Bears to devour the Mockers; no fiery Serpents to strike the Murmurers: God's punishments reach most to the Conscience: (T•••plex circa prae••••a ferrum,) a sensual and senseless heart without apprehension of God's incensed anger, (Cor nuliis violabile telis) not made of penetrable stuff: if God's finger touch the body, we groan under the weight; let his whole hand lie on the soul, we feel nothing: If this be not our Burden & Miserie, what is? Like curious Visitors, will ye not believe this age to labor of this Sickness, (unless you behold some Symptoms? Let your eyes take notice (and that not without grief of soul) the deadness of heart among us: We ply the World hard, dallie with Religion: We serve God in jest; our selves, with all respect & earnest: Our Devotions are like Winter, frosty, misty, & windy of many natures, none other then cold: Nothing arms, charms, and confirms our senses with attention, spirits with intention, active powers with contention, but vanity. Are not the Benches in Taverns, and Theaters, often well replenished, when these Seats are thin and almost empty? Are not the Allies in this Temple often fuller of Walkers, then the Choir of Petitioners? Conference with profane ostentation of Clothes; perhaps plottes of mischief, as frequent, as suits to God: (making it little less then a den of Thieves:) If men stumble into the Church, as company, custom, recreation, or (perchance) sleep invites many, they feed their eyes with vanities; if any drops he admitted into their ears, they are entertained under the nature of conceits: Judgments (they think) be none of their lessons, they will not suffer their consciences to apply them: Mercies they challenge and own, though they have no right to them: If this estate be not a misery, judgment, burden, there is none: The fire of the Pestilence is well quenched, the rumors and storms of War are laid, the younger brother of death, Famine, doth not tyrannize over us: But here it is; our sins and God's wrath (for them) meet, and the heart is hardened: this is the sorest judgment. Let me speak a Paradox, but a truth; it is the plague of many, that they are not plagued: even this is their punishment, the want of punishment: & the hand of God is then heaviest, when it is lightest: heaviest on the Conscience, when lightest on the Carcase:

it is true on them, what the Philosopher said of himself (Perieram misi perijissem) they are undone, that they are not undone: God suffers their bodies to possess, and be possessed of rest: they sing to Viols, dance to Measures: their Heades ache not, Much less their Consciences: But (as to Israel, fat with Quails) God withal, sends Lea•nesse into their souls: the present indulgence, gives sufficient argument of future woes: they surfeit on pleasures, till death puts them out of breath: that worthy Father saw this their (self-commended) estate, and prayed against it; Lord, here plague, cut, massacre, burn me, so that forever thou wilt spare and save me. This is (O•u• grauissimum,) the most grievous Burden. Security is the very suburbes of Hell: (Miseri•• nihil est miser•, se non miserante,) there is nothing more wretched, then a wretched man, that reckes not his own miseri•: an insensible Heart is the Devils Anvil, he fashioneth all sins on it, and the blows are not felt.

You wouder at the frequency of Burdens, and that the Turtles of this Land groan out of this place, the sad tunes of woe and misery. Alas, how should we sing the songs of Zion to a strange people? The Pulpit (I confess) should be the Mercy seat; but your sins have made it a Tribunal, or Bench of Judgment: Nothing but the thunders of Sinaj, (and scarce those) can waken us from our dead sleep: this is (Ima S•curitas) deep Security, fitly applied to us, whose is (Sine cura aetas) an Age without care; or rather, if you will, (Se curans •tas) that love none but our selves, and that not enough to seek our own peace: Let me speak it in the tune of Jeremiah (Non habet vltorius, quod nostris moribus addat posteritas) we flow with those sins, to which no following posterity shall be ever able to add; so spreading, an infection of sin is among us, that, as in a great Plague, we wonder not so much at them which die, as at them which scape; so there is nothing a Wonder, a Mirror, a Miracle in Nature, but he that lives unspotted of this world. If you think I speak too bitterly, I would to God, it were not worse then I speak: I would your reformation might convince our shame, and give us cause to recant this in the Pulpitte: this turns the Message of Edom upon us; the Burden of Dumah, the Burden of England: we cast from our shoulders the Burden of the Law, God lays on us the burden of Judgment: we load God with our sins, and press him as a Cart with Sheaves: we pack up a bundle of Lyes, Blasphemies, Adulteries, Periuries, Extortions, Frauds, and then hasten to the Cross of Christ to vnload them; as if pressing our souls to Hell with willful sins, yet Christ on the least warning, must ease us: But the Promise is not to men laden with sin, but with sorrow for sins: It is such a load as must make us weary, or we have no promise to be eased.

But alas, sin (which is Burden enough to sink the world) is made light by custom; as if resting in man's heart, it did (Quiessere in propriam sedem) settle it self in the own natural place: It is a philosophical Axiom (Nullum elementum suo loco pondurat) no element is heavy in the proper place: Though Sin be as weighty as a Talent of Lead, (saith the Prophet) yet it is at the Center, (when) got into the corrupted heart, and weighes light: and except the wrath of God fall upon the naked Conscience, Sin lies at the door, and Cain never cries, It is greater then I am able to bear. Judas had Burden enough of treason, hypocrisy, malice, covetousness, to sink him down; it was no Burden, till the finger of God's wrath touched the tender heart-strings, and then it pressed him down to his own place. How many have in curuate and oppressed souls, bowed down with the spirit of infirmity (nay of rank iniquity) more then 18. years, that are not yet sensible of their own crookedness, nor the cause thereof: for it cannot be, but the de•owred Patrimonies of many Orphans, the ruins and depopulations of Towns, the devastation of Holy things, should be Burd•ns too heavy for a poor crasie Soul to stand under: Piles of V•urie heavier then Ae•na, Burdens of Bribes out balancing the Axeltree, are more then the Giants, Geonaxo, Monsters of Men, and Prodegies of Nature were able to bear. We could not see a corrupted Lawyer, Citizen, Cormorant, go so nimbly, and so bolt upright under such a mass of sin, if they had not some help: Here it is, the strong man Satan (so it pleaseth Christ to term him) puts under his shoulder, and makes the Vessel go tight and easy, with an equal Ballance, which could not else swim upon the Waters without sinking: Pride could not else carry a whole Township on his back, which his father Covetousness had (but newly) deuastate, clambering up to Honor, (as Jonathan to the Garrison of the Phi•istens by the raggednesse of these two Rocks, Bozez and Seneh; so these) by the desolation of our two main Rocks, the Church, and Common-wealth. The unmerciful Monopolies of Courtiers, the unreasonable Prices of Marchantes, the hoordes (if not transportation) of Graine with Cormorantes, the advantages made of the poor's necessities, unconscionable sins, and Rentes, wringing the last Penny from their Purses, and drop of Blood from their Heartes, (Oh durum et importabile pondus) an intolerable weight. These wretches were never able to bear it without the aid of the Devil, who, whiles they draw with him in the same yoke, is content to bear all the Burden.

At last, when Presumption hath left the Stage, and Desperation begins to knit up all with a direful catastrophe, the Pulses beating slowly, the Head akeing vehemently, Body and Soul refusing all proffered comfort, then the Devil castes the whole Load on them, that at once they may despair and die: then that which was lighter then Corke and Feathers, becomes heavier then Lead & Earth: God hath often strove with them by his Word; they would never yield (Avinces) Thou shalt overcome Oh Lord: Now (perhaps with Julian too late) they pant out ( ϕ ) Thou hast overcome: Our cryings in the day, could not wake them; that cry at midnight, shall fetch them up, With the Burden of Envy, Covetousness, Drunkenness, &c. And as it was doomed to Babylon; Look how much her glory and pleasure hath been give be• so much torment and sorrow. Nay, then the De•ill gets up too (like a merciless lay our) with the addition of his own weight, to aggravate their woes. Strive then everyone to abate the Burden of Judgment, by lessening the Burden of Sin: Every repentant Teare that falls, washeth a Talent from this Burden: every remorcefull sigh, and faithful Prayer, diminisheth the Load; that which remains, may press, shall not oppress: Christ will put under his shoulder; Come all ye laden (exonerate animas) vnload your souls: he bore them on his Cross, and our believing souls shall never feel the weight of them: the Cross only is left heavy to blood and flesh, but to a heart (made) spiritual, Thy yoke, Oh Lord, is easy, and thy burden light: our own heavy, but thine light.

We have perused the Map to the end of the Inscription, the Description stands next to our speech; where we have an Edomite standing on Mount Seir and calling to the Watchman, with the voice of derision, What he saw in the night, &c. a proud Edomite securing himself the strength of his own arms, deriding the Prophet of God, which came against him with the burden of Wars: this is the sense I fasten on. I have read other Expositions, as if it was a question of fear: I approve and dwell on the former: from the persuasion then of immunity, impunity, and safe standing out of the reach of Earth, of Hell, of Heaven, proceeds this Question. Edom hath shaken off the yoke of Israel, and begins to crown his days with the Rose buds of Peace, and not to fear the Sword of Egypt, nor Ashur, nor God's himself in Heaven: their conceit was (though faignedly) as strong of this Mount Seir, as the promise of God was really true to Mount Zion, never to be moved, though the battlements of Heaven shot Thunder, and the pillars of the Earth quaked.

There is question about the name of this Seir; some affirm it derived from Esau, as being the place where he and his generation dwelt: Indeed the nature of Esau, and the name of Seir, agrees fitly, for both signify, Brissled, or Hairy: but it had the name of Seir, before Esau came thither. Some Hebrews think the Mountain was called Seir, from the apparition of Devils, who shown themselves in the shapes of hairy men, such as the Fawnes were imagined to be: But most like to take denomination from Seir the Horite, Gen. 36. 20. who inhabited there long before Esau: And the Horites in their mount Seir, unto the plain of Paran; it being the Countrie of the Ho•i•s or Horites: Esau was drawn hither for many reasons; 1. because that corner of Canaan about Hebron, where he and his brother Jacob dwelt, were too scant for their Flocks: 2. because Mount Seir fitted Esau's mind, being a place of excellent hunting: 3. his Wives were of that Countrie: 4. God's providence so disposed of Esau's removal, that Jacob might live in safety: And even in this, God wrought Esau's good, by putting him out of Canaan; for then with the rest of the Canaanites they had been destroyed by Israel; but God made good that temporal blessing upon Esau and his seed, which his father Ish•c gave him. Indeed the Amalekites (though derived from Esau) were destroyed by Israel; but the reason may be thus gathered, because Amalek was the Son of Eliphaz (the son of Esau) by a Concubine: the Idumaeans, that were legitimate successors, were preserved: such was the different respects to the tight, and to the bastard seed; for God is said to give Mount Seir to Esau; I gave unto Esau mount Seir to possess it; therefore the Israelites among their spoils of Canaan, were expressly forbidden to destroy it: Ye shall not provoke them; for I will not give you of their Land, so much as a foot breadth, because I have given mount Seir to Esau for a possession: Such was God's mercy to Esau for his Fathers sake, that his posterity was made great and honorable: But if the Horites first inhabited Mount Seir, how comes the posterity of Esau to enjoy it? It is answered in the 2. of Deutr. The Horims dwelt in mount Seir before-time, whom the children of Esau chased out, and destroyed them before them, and dwelt in their stead: So doth Sin quench the very cinders of natural affection, after it hath put out the flames of Religion, that the children of Esau ceased not till they had extinguished their own kindred: the respect of blood must give way to Rapine and Malice: too weak is Nature to restrain the fury of Sin, when it is stung by that fiery Serpent, the Devil. The Romish Mountain doth claim some kin of this Mount Seir, (at least in the opinion of the Jews;) There is one place in Edom, called Magdiell; this the Rabbin's take for Rome, and say, that of the Idumeans came the Romans: it is not so locally; it may be well spiritually; For, for persecution of the Saints, there is no such Edom in the world, as Rome: But Magdiell signifies, Praising God: Oh blessed were Rome, if in this, she could be called Magdiell. This Seir was a Mountain of great strength, not infertile; and as great probability gives it, graced with either one or many goodly Cities: Who will bring me into Edom, who will lead me into the strong City? Neither may we think, that the offspring of Edom, when once made Dukes, nay Kings, contented themselves to dwell in Tentes.

But what if a Mountain, what if a City, or the strength of Edom, is it able to grapple with the Wrath of God, or buckle with his Iudgements? If any piece of the broad Earth were shot proof against the Anger of God (as they fain the •arden of Hisperides against the Planets) it would not be unsought, vnought: there have been Mountains and Cities before and after Seir, prouder and stronger then she, that have measured their length on the ground, and been dissolved to dust and rubbish; and Edom her self hath daunced the same measure. The world hath gloried in her several ages of many goodly Cities; ϕ the pride of Assyria, Troy the pillar of Asia, Babylon more a Region then a City, Carthage graced with 17. tributarie Kingdoms; and let not Jerusalem be shut from both the glory and sadness of this relation: may we not say of them all now (Etiam periere ruinae) That little of them is dissolved to nothing. Thus God cools and damps the glory of Israel: Go you unto Calneh, and see: and from thence go unto Hamath the great: then go down to Gath of the Philistines: be they better then these Kingdoms, or the border of their land greater then your b•rder?

Constantius spake of old Rome, that Nature had emptied all her forces on that one City: the time came, she was overthrown, and her Walls made even with the ground. The titles of new Rome are greater, not her Privileges: (she is called, Vrbs aeterna,) yet that Eternal Babylon shall fall, and her honor be laid in the Dust: her doom is past, and in the decree of Heaven, she is already fallen for the more surenesse; and all her Merchants (petty Leases taken out of her graund Lease) shall mourn bitterly for her: she shall be made a Cage of unclean Birds, Owls and Vultures; as she is now a Den of unclean Beas•es, Lions and Tigers. If any City on earth might boast her Privileges, let Jerusalem speak; she was called the Holy City, and the City of God: the Temple in her, a figure of the Church militant; as Salom•n the builder of it, was a type of Christ: Behold, her House is left unto her desolate: Sin laid her Pinacles in the dust: At the murder of his Son, God with his own hands, rent the Vail, and after gave the whole Fabric a spoil to the Gentiles: They that have trauayled the lower Provinces, testify, that the rude heaps of ruined Churches, Monasteries, and Religious places, are no less frequent then pitied spectacles: Devotion built them, kept them; Sin polluted them, Hostility subverted them: Sin prepared the way for Ruin and Blood: the Idolatry within overthrew the Walls without: they could plead more then Dumah, they and their pleas are perished.

Let me not speak as a Prophet, but as an Admonisher: Is it impossible for the Sin of England, to have the like effect? We are ready to say in pride, what David spake in the assurance of Faith, I cannot fall thou oh Lord of thy goodness, hast made my Hill ϕ strong: Let us praise God for that we have, and pray that our sins avert it not: Let Dumah speak with his pride; though our Privileges be more, let our Presumption be less: it is wise and safe, to possess more then we boast of: though Nature hath bound up the loins of our Kingdom with a girdle of Waves, & Pollicie raised another fence of wooden Walls, yet God must put about us a third Girdle, the bands or circle of his Providence, or our strength is weaker then the waters. It is an old and sure rule against the Atheist, against the Worldling, that whole cannot be perpetual, whose partes be alterable: If the members of this great body, the World, change, faint and grow old, it argues a creeping decay to the whole: Let the Cormorant know (that would build his nest here forever) that parts of this land are alterable, therefore the whole not permanent. If the Plague takes away men, the fields grow barren; nay, the wearied earth (after much industry) is dull in her fruits; like an unnatural Stepdame, she produceth not good things of her self: if a Deluge over-run us, we and our glory vanish: God hath more means then one, to inflict his judgments. It is with no less admiration then truth reported, that a whole field in England, is turned in one month from a fertile soil, to a most Barren wast: It lies from the danger of innundation, from the reach of the hand of war; what then can turn it to a perpetual barrenness? Thus, God raiseth a mighty wind, that vncoveres a mountain of sande, which ouerspreads the fruitful valley to a great thickness; and it is made worse then Carmell, which God thus threatens: I will turn L•banon into Carmell, and Carmell into a Forest: it lies in the power of man's sins, to make God curse his very blessings.

The Burden of Dumah is war, Mount Seir fears it not: if the book of our hearts lay open to be read, I think our fear of war is less then theirs. God grant our presumption, our security be not as great: We sit under our own Fig-trees, and eat the fruits of our own Vineyards: Our Children go out by flocks and dances, and flourish like the Olive branches round about our tables: Our Oxen are strong to labor, our Sheep bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets: There is no leading into captivity, no dashyng of our Children against the stones, no complaining in our streets. If this one blessing exceed not our thankfulness for all, my observation is deceived; but what a bold inference is this? there is no war, therefore may be none, nor can we be overthrown: It is a speech as common as the stones in our streets, when consideration of war is offered: We need fear no Enemies, if we be true amongst our selves: Vain security, that is built upon if's and and's: Who shall make us true to our selves, that have been false to God? Are there no sons of Belial amongst us, that curse the prosperity of Zion, and gape for the day, to cry Down with it, down with it, even to the ground? we know they have openly and privately with coat of Armor, and coat of Maile, assaulted the peace of Jerusalem, but (praise to our God) received shame in putting of their Harnesse: Let this make us thankful, not secure; as if God could not reach his arm over our narrow Seas: Behold France made a Cock-pit for massacres, by the uncivil civil wars thereof: Think of the unquiet bread long eaten in the Low-countries: and when thou sayest, we lay our heads on the Pillowes of peace, and eat the Bread of plenty, kiss his hand with praises that feeds thee with these blessings, but let not thy own strength make thee careless. The Papists thus re-hearten themselves against all their overthrows given them by this little Island, that our time is not yet come, our sins are not yet full: That Ignatian Sectary Pererius so notes in Gen. 15. The wickedness of the Amorites is not yet full▪ &c. He gives it by way of Comment; but it is a false gloss, I trust, and carries no more truth with it, then other the fictions of Rome; his words are these: Let no man wonder why God suffers the persecution of the Catholics in England, (the sins of the Amorites are not yet full) their wickedness is not yet complete; when it is, the divine revenge shall fall: They expected this day at the last change; God changed their expectation to folly: and as it was our grief, that (Sol o•cubuit) our Sun-set, so it is our joy, wonder, (Nox nulla secuta est) no night followed. I hope his Prophecy is as false for the event, as I am sure his application is for the thing: we are neither those uncircumcised Amorites, vnchristened Pagans, nor do we persecute the Catholics; except to have liberty of Law grow rich, purchase Lands, beard and brave the Ministers of God to their faces, be called Persecution: (Here I cannot but mention, what is well observed by a most reverend and honored Judge of this land, that) whereas have been 300. burnt by Q. Mary for Religion, there have scarce 30. Papists been executed by Q. Elizabeth for Treason: yet, I hope, there is some difference betwixt 300. and 30. Religion, and Treason; betwixt the five years reign of the one, and the 44. of the other. I know their rebellions, treasons, conspiracies, meet with execution, no persecution to their Religion: Happy would our Martirs have thought themselves, if on such terms they might have redeemed their Consciences: no, the iniquities of Babel have filled up their measure rather, and their judgment long ago was not far off, and their damnation sleepeth not. Pererius is his own Prophet against us, we speak not against them of our selves, the Holy ghost speaks for us, Who shall shortly consume that m•n of sin with the breath of his nost•ls: Let their eyes stare for our overthrows, till they fall out of their vnfortunate heads; God hath blessed, and the Balaam of Rome shall never be able to curse: only let not our zeal be wanting to our God, to our Church, to our selves, and God shall not be wanting to us, nor all the hosts, which he fightes with: and once again, if need be, Coniurati venient in classica ven••) the Winds and Seas shall take our part: Let not our Peace make us wanton, nor our Wealth, proud; our help stands, in the name of God, not in Fortes and Swordes.

To speak more particularly, Bee not too confident (who so ever) in thy Mount Seir; every wicked soul hath her Mount Seir to trust in: they that have no assurance of rest in Heaven, have their Refuges and Mountains of help of Earth; David so returns it upon the wicked: In the Lord put I my trust, how then say you to my soul, flee as a Bird to your Mō•taine. Why should I seek to foreign helps, that have settled myself in the bosom of Rest it self? Riches are a Mount Seir to the Covetous, they rest on them, as the Ark on the Mountains of Armenta: Honor is a Mount Seir to the Ambitious, against all the besiegings of rivals: Sensuality to the Voluptuous, against all the disturbances of a clamorous Conscience: Pride, Fraud, Drunkenness, is a Mount Seir to the lovers; but alas, how vnsafe? if stronger against, and further removed from the hand of man, yet nearer to God's hand in Heaven: though we acknowledge no place (Procul a••oe, or, procul a fulmine) far from God, or from his thunder: But we say, it is not safest sailing on the top of the Mast, to land on the mountainous height of a temporal estate, is neither wise nor happy: Men standing in the shade of humble Valleys, look up and wonder at the height of Hilles, and think it goodly living there, as Peter thought Tabor, but when with weary limbs they have ascended, and find the beams of the Sun melting their spirits, or the cold blasts of Wind making their Sinewes stark, flashes of Lightning, or crackes of Thunder, soonest endangering their advanced heads, then they confess (decking their proud Conceit,) the low valley is safest: for the fruitful Deawes that fall first on the Hilles, stay least while there, but run down to the Valleyes: and though on such a promontorie a man further sees, and is farther seen, yet in the Valley, where he sees less, he enjoys more: Take heed then, least to raise thy Mount Seir high, thou deiectest thy soul low: Woe unto them that are at ease in Zion, and trust in the Mountains of Samaria: If we build our Houses by Unrighteousness, and our Chambers without •quitie, though as strong as Mount Seir, they shall not be able to stand in the Earth-quake of Judgment: God so threatens Jehoiakim: Shalt thou reign because thou closest thyself in Cedar? did not thy father eat and drink and prosper, when he executed judgment and justice. &c. Think not your Houses, Fortresses; when your Souls are unarmed of Christian weapons, Faith and Obedience: You had, and shall have peace, whiles you pursue it with righteous lives, whiles your guide all your actions by the line of the Sanctuary, and stir your Attempts by the compass of the Gospel: Plentie shall spread your Tables, whiles Charity takes away, and gives to the Poor. These holy courses, shall make you continue, in despite of Hell and Rome; your Mountain shall be hedged about with the Mercies of God, & your Children shall defy their Enemies in the Gates.

The Person must not be omitted, to whom this scoffing Question is moved; The Watch-man. It seems the Prophet had denounced against Edom, War; they deride his message, as a leafing, and his person under the name of a Watch-man: nay, therefore they scorn him, because a Watch-man. I will not insist on the duties of Watch-men: every common Soldier can school the Watch-man: Many presume to teach us our duties, that will be ranged within no order themselves: that which a Watch-man is to the City, or Sentinel to the Leagure; a Minister is to the People: to Watch over yourselves, is every particular man's duty; to watch over all, (Opus Ministrj) is the work of the Ministry: If our Eyes be blind in descrying Dangers, our Tongues dumb to give Warning, the City or Fort is easily taken: Now, (Quam clamoris vocem daturus est praeco mutus?) What warning shall a dumb Watch-man give? Some will not speak, the Fountain of their knowledge is shut up, like Laban's Well, with a great Stone of security, saturity, stateliness: others will speak too much, making the Pulpit a Pasquill, to ease their spleenes, to traduce superiors: (Medio tutissimus ibis) The mean and honest way, is the safest.

But what say we to Usurpers, Wolves, Tyrantes, that call themselves Watch-men? that (Binominis, bi-linguis) Double-named, double-tongued, double-sworded; and not single hearted. Demi-god of Rome, calls himself sometimes a Watch-man, sometimes a King: the Servant of servants, the King of Kings: as if there was no difference betwixt the serviceable Watch-man, and the commanding Prince; betwixt the Sentinel of the Leagure, and the General of the Army, (Ad duo qui tendit, non vnum, nec duo prendit) Whiles he claims both, usurps one, truth allows him neither: His actions show him no Servant, (Friendo non ferendo agit.) He gives blows, but takes none. To be such a Watch-man as he desires, possibility is denied him, since his eyes cannot look so far, as he would extend his arm; not to watch over Rome only, but so far as the world is Christened: Behold, saith he, I have two Swords; one of them he lets rust, I mean, the sword of the Spirit: the other, he keeps bright with the blood of Saints, and makes it shine with the Gall of Martirs: (Principa•is principatus a triplici corona) the principal principality is from the triple Crown: As the Sun exceeds the Earth, so the Pope all Christian Princes; other Kings are but his Bailiffs. Did you ever hear a Watch-man speak thus? or arrogate to himself such a reign (In foro pol•, in foro pluij, in foro conscient•ae) In the court of Heaven, in the court of Hell, and in the court of every Conscience? If any resist his tyranny, he snatcheth from Christ that his Word, and usurps it: Bring those mine enemies, that would not have meraigne over them, and slay them before me: If he cannot behold it in action, he will see it in picture, as the massacre of Paris on S. Bartholomew's night, was pictured in the Popes Palace, to entertain his holy eye with pleasure: so would the Powder-treason have been, if the matter had hit right: as horred, as the thought of it is to an honest mind, the hoisting up of Buildings, shiuering of Bodies, tearing up of Monuments, dissipation, massacre, murder of old, young, Prince people, Senators and Senate, drawn to the life by the art of a Painter, would have been a contenting spectacle, for so holy an eye to contemplate: sure there is honesty in Hell, if this be Religion: if the Devil can devise more execrable stratagems, let him change Seats with the Pope. Christ meddled with neither Herod, nor Emperor, King nor Caesar; no Emperors held his Stirrop, no Kings kissed his blessed feet; he only fought with the weapons of the Spirit against Sin and Satan. This is a Watch-man indeed; but he watcheth to invade, besiege, enter and spoil the City of God: he liath other Watch-men under him, Unclean birds, fluttring from that Vulture of Babylon, and flying like Bats and Owls under the eues of night, to vomit the poisons of Heresy and Treasons from their swollen gorges: Watch-men like the Chaplens of Mars at Rome in the days of Idolatry, that practiced to toss Fire-brandes from Campe to Campe, to inflame evil affections; that care not whose blood they sacrifice to their Roman God, without distinction of Troian, of Tyrian: nor out of whose Sepulchers they dignity themselves an estate: They watch indeed, for they keep a Register of all our proceedings against them, in these ltaleyon days of ours; and if ever the Sonne of Alteration shine on their faces, they will repay us ten blows for one upon our Burgonets: mean time (our Prayses to Heaven) they watch their own bane: and (as one writes of Parry,) so I may of the end of them all (Itala gens sceleri te dedit, Angla cru•) Italy gives them their villainy, England their Gallows; this is (their malus, but meritus sinis) the evil, but deserved end of them all: England is sinful enough, but she professeth not her self a School-mistris of Sin, as Rome doth of Treason: there it is professed, taught, learned, and (as on the sandy Theator) exercised before it come to the fatal execution.

The Priests of perverted Israel, were but shadows of these of apostate Rome: As Thieves wait for a man, so the company of Priests murder in the way by consent. Hence that Proverb carries no less truth, then antiquity with it: An Englishman Italianate, is a Devil incarnate: these are those Jesuits, Jebusites, Incendiaries, Traitors, and not less then Devils, but that they have bodies. God bless us from such Watch-men: if these be Watch-men, who are enemies?

We see then the vanity of their labors, that would undertake to bring us to a composition: if Heresy can be made Sinceritie, Idolatry true Religion, Treason Obedience, we may be united: but it is a sure rule, Contraries in the abstract, can never be reconciled: God put an vn-appeasable Contention betwixt the two Seedes of the Woman, and Serpent, when he put Enmity between them▪ for an Enemy may be made a Friend, but Enmitie can never be made Friendship: the Air that is dark, may be made Light; but Darkness cannot be made Brightness; a Papist may be converted to a Christian, but Papistry can never be made Christianity, no more then Antichrist can become Christ: our strife with them is not for the extension of Limits, but for the possession of the Inheritaunce, whether Grace or Nature, the Popes Law or God's, shall take place in the Conscience: So I have read of that audacious and sottish Hermit, that would undertake, to make God and the Devil friends: the impossibility of which attempt, the Devil could tell him; God is all Light, and I am all Darkness, that my foul nature cannot be hidden: our affections, seats, persons, are so opposed, that I have no hope of peace. They will not, we may not yield; except the Sheep shall compound with the Wolf, or the Mise with the Catte; which the old tale forbids, though the Catte get on a Monks Cowle, & cries demurely through the creuices, Quod fueram, non suw, fra•er, caput aspice tonsum.

Good broth•r Mouse, creep out thy house, come forth, & let us chat:

Behold my Crown is shaven down, I am now a Priest, •o Cat.

When Cats say Mass, the Myse (alas) must pray against their will:

Kind Pus•e, your pate is smoth of late, your heart is rugged s•ll.

Experience would teach us the answer of the verse, though we had never read it.

V•x tibi •raesto fidem, cor tibi restat id•m.

To leave the incorrigible Watch-men of Rome, since we would have cured Babel, and she would not be cured, let us look home to our selves. The Wolves of Rome have not more honor, then the Watch-men of England scorn: the Edomites of the world cannot abide Ministers: the best is, they are but Edemites, heirs of Esau, and as profane as their Father; that make Religion their Minstrel, to give them sport and sleep, no jest in such laughter, as that which is broken on a Priest; the proof is plain on every Tavern and Theater. We serve indeed contrary Masters; we Christ, they Lust and Satan: and (Hinc illae rixae of theirs, hinc illae laechrinae of ours,) hence their flowts, & our tears: we bite them with the salt of Reproof, hence they storm: we cast Ink and Gall on their Tettters, hence they startle: (Veritatem lucentem multi diligunt, arguentem rejiciunt: dum s• ostendit columus, dum nos ostendit, odio habemus:) The truth shining▪ many love; reproving, they reject: whiles it shows it self, we embrace it; whiles it shows us, we cannot endure it: even in this consists at once, our Happiness, their Damnation: our Happiness, Blessed are ye, when for me porsecuted: their Damnation, That Light being in the world, they embrace and are glad of Darkness: though their wrongs done us, be against the Law of Arms and Nature; for an Ambassador should be (Inter hostium tela incolumis) safe among the Weapons of the Enemies:

But do the Edomites only take up these Weapons of scorn against us? No, I speak it betwixt shame and grief, even the Israelites scorn the Prophets. There are some sick of a wantonness in Religion, so hot about the question, De modo, that the Devil steals the matter of Religion from their hearts: if we cannot wrangle with Forms and Shadows, and show our selves refractarie to established Orders, we shall, Male audire, our Sermons shall be slighted, our persons derided: thus, this is the mischief; men of name, professors of note, when they speak bitterly of us, their credit carries it strong with our scandals: one Arrow of these Israelites, wounds deeper then a hundred Cannon-shot of the Edomites: I confess I speak Stones, but if they hit, as they are intended, they shall heal some, hurt none: (Dicatur veritas, rumpatur invidia) Let Truth be spoken, and Envy burst her Gall: let all these Scorners remember, that the contempt done to us, redowndes to God himself: He that despiseth us, despiseth men: he that Christ, despiseth his Savior: Is all this nothing? But he that d•spiseth me and you, despiseth him thot sent me and you: It comes to somewhat then, and more then ever mortal man shall be able to answer; is it not enough for them, that they have drawn out the life-blood of our Livings, but they must expose our persons to contempt? So the Jews spoiled Christ of his Vestmentes, and then mocked him with baseness. Our poverty of flouted by them that have our Livings: surely, if repentance and restitution prevent it not, they shall have a Tith one day, which they have more right to, the tenth Sheafe of that Harvest, which is reserved for Reprobates in Hell. The Turks lay it is an imputation on our Religion, that we spoil our God's: for shame, do not the Turks, and shall the Christians? David would not have Areunah's Threshing-floor without money; if these men should have no room in the Church, but what they pay for, I think they would quietly suffer themselves to be turned forth of doors.

The last branch of the Map, and first of the Moral, are not unfitly conjoined, the Edomite, and his Question: the Question then calls me from the Watch-man, What is in the night? And to make the Derision fuller and fowler, it is doubled, like Pharaoh's Dream, What is in the night? Did they seek for some prodigie or portent? Some divine Revelation, which should be received by Vision? Were the like Israel, of whom Christ thus testifies; This adulterous generation seeks for a Sign? Thus Dives despayred of his brethren's belief, except one rose from the dead. I confess we have some in the world sick of this disease, a Jewish infection, The Jews require a sign, &c. (Plus ocu•o, quam oraculo:) miseries shall work more on them then mysteries: palpable actions of God's mercy, justice, power, shall convince them, the contemplation of them all in the theory of the word moves them not: astonish them with wonders, heal their diseased, open their blind eyes, raise their dead, and they will believe: Are there none among us, that couch a willing & close ear to the charms of Rome, in admiration of their feigned miracles? lying Apostles, that work strange things by exorcismes? but our Church now is not in the Cradle of her infancy: One cup of wine brought by Christ, is worth all the cups of cold water by Moses: as S. Augustine alluding to that Marriage in Galilee, says: All the adumbrations, tipes, figures, signs, were but that cup of cold Water, Christ reserved the good Wine (of the Gospel) till he came him self: and they that will not believe without a Sign, without a Sign must perish. But I travel no further in this, least it bring me out of my way.

It was no Sign they inquire for, no Prodigy they fear; they are only pleased to make sport with the menaces of God: You talk of a Night, and an hour of Calamitie; but threatened men draw long breathes: You pretend Visions in the night, which portend our ruins; come tell us the tale of the night: What is in the night? There have been in all ages, some of these Frogs, to throat it out against God, so long as the weather was fair, as if he could not send a storm: the tempests of God's Wrath have been derided to the last moment of a calm: the venom of Prosperity so impoysons a carnal mind, (Eilia diuitiarum superbia) the daughter of Riches is Pride: the Philosopher could teach us that (Faelicitas & humillitas diuiduum haebent contubrinium: raro bona men's & bona fortuna homini datur.) Happiness and Humbleness are not chamber-fellows: seldom a good Mind, and a good Estate, is given to the same man: God seemed to mistrust this in Israel, that the increasing of Goodes, and multiplying of Cattle, would lift up their hearts against him: The peaceable days of the Wicked, and their lucky proceedings in this world (by the testimony of Job,) durageth their impudence against Heaven: Who is the Almighty, that we should serve him? depart from us, we will none of thy ways. That of the Psalms is of full strength to this: His ways prosper: thy judgments are far above out of his sight: therefore defyeth he all his enemies: Man only? no, God himself: I shall never be moved. Let Malachi for all the Prophets, Peter for all the Apostles, make up this cloud of witnesses: It is in vain to serve the Lord: and where is the promise of his coming? All things are still (Statu quo) continued in the same course: there is no alteration, no new thing done (Quaecun{que} sub axe) under Heaven. We say, (Non bonum ludere cum sanctis) it is no safe jesting with holy things: It is dangerous for an Edomite to make himself merry with God; this is the way to come short home: thou hadst better have mourned all thy life, then made God thy play-fellow. When the vessel of Dust shall encounter with the arm of Omnipotence (Sive percutiat, sieve percutiatur, frangi necesse est) whether it smite, or be smitten, it is sure to be broken: The Chair of the Scorners, is the seat of Satan, the lowest stair and very threshold of Hell, as David describes it: Blessed is the man that doth not walk, &c. His first plot is, to get us, to walk a turn or two with him: having persuaded this, he moves us to stand still a little; but so long as we are standing, we are going, therefore at last he entreats us (for our ease) to sit down: but if we take our seat in that enchanted Chair, we grow to that impudence to deride God, and his judgments. I will single you out four fortes of these Edomites, Scorners (for I justly parallel them) and propound their natures and conditions to your pity and detestation.

1 Atheists, such as have voluntarily, violently, extinguished to themselves, the Sun-light of the Scripture, Moon-light of the Creature; nay, the sparks and cinders of Nature, that the more securely (as unseen and vnchidden of their own hearts) they might prodigally act the works of darkness; not Athenian-like, dedicating an Altar to an unknown God, but annihilating to themselves, and vili-pending to others, Altar, Religion, God; and suffocating the breath of all Motions, Arguments, manifest Conuictions, that heaven & earth have produced: for the reasons of Hell only shall one day evince it (Deum esse) that there is a God: they affirm it impossible, that flesh should be turned to rottenness, rottenness to dust, and dust to glory: Against whom, well, S. Augustine; He that could form us of nothing, can reform us decayed: it is easier to repair, then prepare. That Atheism in the days of Solomon was the same in opinion, that ours is in practice: we do (not say but) live, as if it was better to a living Dog, then a dead Lyon: which I would yield true among Beasts; but among men, a dead Beast is better then a living Atheist: let them ask Nature, it will tell them, (Insculptum est omnibus esse deum) It is engraven in all hearts, that there is a Deity: let them ask the Creatures, they will witness, they had a Creator: nay, let the Devil speak, to shame and convince the Atheist, who believes a God, and trembles at his own belief: the nature of his essence proveth it: to know there is a Witch, may satisfy us, that there is a God; for if the destroying power were not controuled, manacled, maistred, how stand we vndeouwed? Let them ask (lastly) their own dying hearts; for the eyes that sin hath shut, Damnation shall open.

2 Epicures, that deny not a God, and a day of Judgment; but put it far off, with ( 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ) give me the present, take thou the hope of future joys: these see a night coming, and therefore make haste to be drunk with Pleasures: Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we shall die: (Cras ridendo moriuntur, hodie bibendo sepeliuntur) they will not die till tomorrow, but be buried in Riot today. They sleep on their Beds of Down, rise to their Tables of Surfet, and from thence to their sportes of Mischiefe; sleeping, playing, eating, dancing, drinking, dallying, (Motu circu•••rj) they run round in a Ring: only (Nulla interualla piando) no time must be spared from Satan: they invert the Order God hath disposed to the times preposterously, making the night day, and the day night; at midnight they revel, at noon they sleep: though the day was created for labor, the night for repose: The Sun is scarce beholding to their eyes to look upon him: the Moon and Stars have (only) their attendance; the works and the hour of darkness meet; they will be contrary to all men and all things but themselves, because they will be contrary. If ever they begin any work with the day, they dispose it on this fashion; First, they visit the Tavern, then the Ordinary, then the Theater, and end in the Stews: from Wine to Ryot, from that to Plays, from them to Harlots, Iste dies pulchro distinguitur ordine rerum.

Here is a day spent in an excellent method: If they were Beasts, they could not better sensualize, it would be but lost labor to tell them, that their course shall be so proportioned below: from Snakes they shall turn upon Adders, from both to Scorpions, from all to vnquenched flames; where they shall spend not houresbut ages, nay that eternity of time, in waylinges and howlinges, groans and torments; when for every ounce of Vanity, they shall receive (down weight) a whole pound of Sorrow: Smoakes, blackness, boiling Cauldrons, fiery burnings of Brimstone & Sulphur, kindled and continued by the breath of an offended God, shall have their interchanged courses: oft this torment, and then that, and indeed all, that a soul & body made immortal, can suffer:

Iste dies misero distinguitur ordine rerum.

Here is a day to be spent in a miserable method: Oh how (yet) was it some happiness, if in a day or set time, these woes could be determined: these are the Epicures, not so impudent as to deny the night, not so honest as to part with their sins.

3 Libertines, that neither affirm no Night, nor put it far off; but only the strength of sin prevails over all: and come Sorrow, Death, Grave, Hell, they must have their pleasures: they have a pride in accomplishing their own willes, as she in the Poet;

I see the good, and give allowance to it:

The evil is my choice, I love and do it.

They cannot be noted for Virtuous; but they will be Famous, though for Infamie: as that wicked Church-robber, that to do some memorable act, pulled all the Lead off the Churches roof, and thacked it: they must be mentioned, though like a Traitors name in the Chronicles. These swear away all reproofs, & drink away all the chidings of their own Conscience: it shall be the worse for them, that ever they had a conscience: their Hell shall be the hotter for the multitude of their neglected motions to good: their Mercies have not been more numerous, then shall be their Miseries: their Nurture or Learning (to omit those, that never read any other Book then Vanity) at once makes them better and worse; better in understanding, worse inmanners; whiles their contemplation is a Theater, and their study, new sportes, new fashions: Oh how far better is the simple, honest, innocent Soul without knowledge, then that which is beautified with learning and debauched with vices?

Beatus ill qui procul negotijs,

Paterna rura bobus exercet suis.

More happy are those poor wretches confined and contented with a rurall charge: whiles they know not so much of good, they know less of ill: they skill not what the studying of oaths, the tricks of pride, the policy of Atheism means: they make not sense the rule of their belief with the Gallant, but their Catechism: Religion is their Queen, the Gallants drudge: they have not so much of reason, therefore abuse the less: their sins proceed most from ignorance, the Gallants from knowing willfulness: Now, which of these shall be beaten with most stripes? they work out a poor living with the sweat of their brows and nerves, these can play out a rich one from the quicknes of their wits: they know not the detractions of slander, underminings of envy, provocations, heats, enlurings of lusts: the foul secrecies of Idolatry, hypocrasy, sacrilege, cleave not to their consciences: they have a kind of happiness, in that they are not so miserable: our impudent, imprudent, insolent Youngsters look on these, betwixt contempt and anger, call them Clownes, Idiots, and the dregs of Nature, and think themselves Angels, if these be men; (Quorum prae cordia Titan de priore luto sinxit) as if God had tempered them of a baser mould. But whiles Acteons Bondslave grinds securely (though laboriously) at the Mill, his brave riotous, gallant, Hunting-master is turned to a beast, and for his sensuallity eaten up of his own lusts: you all know the Story, this is the Moral. Thus, this is the proper cause, that the ancient Houses fall; and what the long Industry of the progenitors have gotten, the short Ryot of the Gallant, wastes: We are loath to hear of this; but it is too true, he needs not drink up all the Sea, that will judge of the waste: hence young gentlemen by wild unthriftiness become sports to Theators, and cannot sit on their Fathers seats to do good in the Common-wealth: they abound with the gifts of Nature, but like Fig-trees growing over deep Waters, full of Fruit, but the Iayes eat them: Ruffians, Harlots, vicious Companions enjoy those Graces, that might honor God.

4 Common Profane persons, that will suffer themselves to wear God's Livery, though they serve the Devil: these are they, that make the profession of the Gospel have an evil name: hence that Proverb, Pater noster, set up Churches, Our Father, pulls them down. I will not favor (with a partial connivance) these Scorners, though they nussell themselves in the Churches bosom: nay, I will speak most plainly; these are the worst Edomites, if not to them selves, to us. Let the Atheist deny, the Epicure remove, the Libertine forget, that there is any other Day of peace or sorrow, besides or beyond the present; what is this to believers? We are reedy to brand and howte at them (as they did to the Lepers in Israel,) nay to rain them to death with a shower of Stones, (as they served Idolaters and Blasphemers:) But be our own hands undefiled, that take up these weapons of Death against others, as Christ charged the Jews, that charged the adulterous Woman? If we be sick, our sickness is more dangerous then theirs: The other Diseases are without the body, but this comes near the heart of the Church: we know what it is, to have a Sickness come near the heart: there is more grief to the Mother of the Family, in the miscarrying of one of the Children, then of many Strangers, Edomites, unbelievers, or misbeleeuers: these have learned to speak the language, to scorn the manners of Canaan; for, their lives testify, that they believe not our report.

We have gone the better half of our Journey, let not your attentions fail to the end: We have seen the nature of Edom, and Mount Seir, Atheism, Scorn, Abomination; we are now entering another Mountain, the Hill of Zion, the City of God. The Question of the Edomite was not more perverse, then the Answer of the Watch-man is grave and sober. The Answers of God are not doubtful, like the Heathen Oracles; nor obscure and tetricall, as Muhammad's Riddles; nor ambiguous, like the mixed, the motley, epicaene, equiuocating conclusions of Rome, but plain, sweet, profitable: I call therefore the first part of it, A Resolution: They ask as if they despised to know; he resolves them justly, as if he would force them to know against their willes. They ask him what is spiritually seen in the night of Vision? He tells them, what shall really come in the night of actual Desolation: The Morning cometh, and also the Night, Let your vnderstandings keep pace with me through these 4. Circumstances. 1. The length of their Peace; one whole day, the space betwixt morning and evening: a short time. 2. The Certainty of their Judgment; The night (infallibly) cometh. 3. The quality of it, when it is come; (Nox dicitur) it is called, a Night. 4. The Inuersion of this, to the Righteous.

1. The Happiness of Edom is but a Day; The Morning comes, and the Night follows: It is but the distaunce of the Sun-rising from his setting. There is to all things living, such an alternation decreed; a morne, a noon, a night: a beginning, a strong age, a declination or full point: as the Historians write of certain Flies bred by the River Hispanis, that are generated in the morning, at noon in full strength, at night make their ends, and are gone: Paul says, Our life is but a Tabernacle, it is all, if this stands a year: Isaiah calls it, Grass; which grows but a Summer: David, a Flower; that hath but his month: here it is called, a Day; that hath but the Sun-rising and setting: Nay, Job compares it to a Shadow; that hath (neither Yeare, nor Summer, nor Moneth, nor Day,) but an Hower: Nay, Moses to a Thought; whereof there may be a hundred in an hour: This is none of the shortest Comparisons, (Mane et vespere) the measure of one day.

What then mean those Greedy Dogs in this Prophecy, to bark so madly, Bring more Wine, for tomorrow shall be as today, yea, much more abundant. Mee thinks, I hear the gallant Epicures (the christened Atheists) of this City, knock thus in Taverns, for yet more Wine, crowning the day with Riots, and blessing the morrow with promised Surfeits, as if the Night should never come: alas (Nescis quid serus vesper ferat) thou knowest not what sad news the Euening will bring: thou braggest with Caesar, the Day is come; We tell thee, as Caesars friend, It is come indeed and begun; it is not ended: the Lease of Vanity, is but a Day; it may be not a moment, the tenure of this world is uncertain.

Medio de fonte leporum, surgit amari aliquid:

From out of the midst of the fount of Delicacies, ariseth ever some Bitterness: when you have spent your strengths, your estates, bloods, souls, upon Vanity, all is but (Vnius diej hilaris insanta) the merry madness of a day; which to buy with the eternity of insufferable Torments, is a dear purchase: If they be not short of content and satisfaction, I am sure, they are of continuance: They do not always follow a man living, ever forsake him when he dyes.

2 You have measured the shortness of their day, hear the certainty of their night: The morning comes, and (without prevention) night follows. You shall shake off the yoke of Israel, but put on you the yoke of Persia: The Edomites were long tributaries to Israel, according to Ishae's prophecy and blessing of Esau. Thou shalt be thy Brothers Servant; but it shall come to pass, when thou shalt get the mastery, thou shalt break his yoke from thy neck: The Prophet here assures them of this mastery. (Israel rebels against God, therefore Edom against Israel.) Ishae as God's Prophet, subjects Edom to Canaan, the seed of Esau to the seed of Jacob: (Intemperanti praefecit sobrium) he sets the sober man over the intemperate: and this service of the elder Brother to the younger, lasted in the posterity 700 years. Yet twice after, they shook off this servitude: the first in Iorams time, which liberty they made a troublesome shift to hold till Hircanus, who subdued them, and made them be circumcised: this slavery they overcame again, and held it, even till Herod, the son of Antipater, an Idumaeen borne, obtained to be King of the Jews: here Edom got the full mastrie. The first, was this Morning the Prophet speaks of; this Morning of freedom shall come, but last for a Day, and then be ouerclouded with a Night, a worse Captivity, because to a worse people, (Qui Deum et misericordiam nesciunt) that know neither God, nor Mercy: as those privations are inseparable, there is no Mercy, where no Religion.

Edom is but a particular instance of a general doom, which all the Sons of Adam, as the Daughters of E•e, I mean, all the Glories of this World shall bear; as sure as the Euening succeeds the Morning, Death shall seize on Life, Judgment on Sin: you have the sap of Health in your Bones, the Riches of the world in your Coffers, your Life is in the Noone of pride, but (we say) praise a fair day at Night. (Happy are they, whose life is hid with Christ in God, that this Night may not find them out:) your Sun shall set, Beauty, Riches, Glory, shall decay, as by the inviolable law of Nature, night succeeds day; so by the eternal law of God, Death Sin. If you could indent with the Sun to stand still, as in the days of Joshua; or to go back ten degrees, as to Hezekiah; or with his Orbe to move slowly, yet it shall set: Be the day never so long, yet at last, comes evening-song. The Son of God himself, in this condition of mortal descent, was equal to his Brethren. That great Sun of Righteousness, had his rising and his setting: We must all walk into the West, as well as he; and be our Day longer or shorter, Night must come, our Privileges are not beyond others.

Hear this ye Edomites, that floute our presagings of a Night: you speak of a Night, and hour of Judgment; When comes it? We tell you again, The Morning cometh, and also the Night. You have had a time of Light and delight, and what your hearts could wish; you shall have a time of Sorrow and Darkness: Your Noone shall be turned to Midnight. Tender and delicate Babylon, that boasted her self a Queen, and free from mourning, shall weep in the wydow-hood of her glory; and hear at last, (Aduenit sinis tuus), thy end is come. You that will not set your minds to these things, nor remember the latter end, miseries shall come on you in their perfection: so absolute as the Justice of God, & the Malice of Satan can make them. So Solomon schools the art-les, heart-les, supine courses of vain Youth: Rejoice, O Youngman, &c. Rejoice in your day of Pride, let Pleasure rock you on her indulgent knee, you shall be brought to the night of Judgment: The Surfeits of the old World, the Mirth of the Philistines, (when Sampson was their laughing stock) the carowsinges of that Caldean Monarch in the sacred Bowles of Jerusalem, had their Night: Solomon with his 1000. Wives and Concubines, Belshazzar with his 1000. Princes, Ahashiuerosh with his 127. Provinces, had their Night: High-looking Honor, and pury Riches; the one diseased in his Eyes, the other in his Lungs, shall have their Night: The favor of Noble men, is the favor of movable men; the Ignis fatuus of Riches is long ingendring, soon extinct: let Joab and Job, be our precedentes in both these: the first, was great and evil, the chiefest Captain about David; yet by David designed to execution; The second was great and good; yet behold, the mightiest man of the East, is poor to a Proverb: What ever flourished and had not this night? The rich Churl enlarging his Barns proportionably to his desires, had his Night; he heard that soul knell, Thou fool, this Night, shall they fetch away thy soul. The World it self shall have this Euening: the Morning was in the days of the Patriarchs; Christ boore the heat and Noone of the day, and we are those upon Whom the latter ends of the world are come. The World groweth old, and we grow old with it: the bodies of men in old age, wax cold and want the heat of Nature; the souls of men in this decrepit age, grow cold in zeal, (Deficiente feruore charitatis) the nourishment of old age turns into crudity, through want of heat to concoct, digest, and drive it into the Vaines; the nourishment of our souls turns into Vanity, because we want the heat of Grace to digest it: By all these symptones, you see the Sun of this World ready to set, and the Night drawing on: the declination of Goodness, the fainting of Religion, says, that the World lies bedrid, drawing on, looking for the good hour (to some,) and fetching a thick, sick and short breath: I am no Prophet (or what if I were, yet unable) to define the time: but this I conclude (though more particularly) from the rule of my text; We had our Morning at the first preaching of the Gospel: it now flourisheth with us, as at high Noone; Who shall say, the Euening will not follow, or our Sun is without setting.

3 That it shall come, you hear; hear shortly the quality of it, when it is come: A Night. Miserie is not fitlyer shadowed, then under the name of a Night: Sorrow lasts for a Night, says the Psalmist, but joy comes in the Morning. A sad, heavy, and disconsolate time, full of horror and amazement; when there is no object to withdraw the eye, thereby to divert the mind from the thought and meditation of bitterness. Satan himself is not said to be bound with any other Chaines but these of Darkness: as the Ioyes of Heaven are described by that eternal daylight of glory and Sunshine of the Lamb, and it is added in express words; There shall be no Night there: So the torments of Hell are called by Christ, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , Vtter Darkness: No marvel, if there ensue, weeping and gnashing of teeth, when misery shall be extreme, and no day-hole of hope, to afford one glimpse of comfort: this is that Night of nightes, worse then the palpable Darkness of Egypt, as full of intolerable horror, as Caliginous blackness: I find not only the time of Judgment general, but of temporal and particular calamities, termed by the Night of horror: the downfall of Dumah, a Night: the destruction of Israel, A season of blackness, darkness, clouds and obscurities. Therefore (as Christ to the Jews, Pray that your flight be not in the Night,) pray that your departure out of this life, be not in the Night of your security and ignorance; and then fear not this Night, for you are redeemed from the land of eternal Darkness.

It was the foolish pride of that Roman Emperour, having made a Bridge of grappled Ships over a narrow Arm of the Sea, and triumphing at midnight with innumerable torches, to boast that he had (wrough two Miracles,) made the Sea dry Land, and the Night Day: but our Emperor of Heaven and Earth, did perform it indeed, when he dried up the Redde sea of his Fathers wrath, and changed our present Night of Ignouance, and future of torment, into the eternal daylight of his Grace and Glory.

4 The last part to this Survey, is the inverting of this upon the Righteous: Where, behold the different beginnings and ends of both Holy, and Vnholy: to the children of Disobedience, the Morning is before the Euening; and this is Dumahs woe at Sun-set (Fuisse faelicem) that she had her Day: To the Faythfull, the Euening is before the Morning; as at the Creation, The Euening and the Morning were the first day. The Jews were commanded to begin their Feast of Reconciliation at Even; and, From Euening to Euening, shall you celebrate your Sabbath. It was Christ's comfortable Answer to his Church, intending the date when the profanation of the Temple should cease, to set the Morning of their peace, after the Euening of their troubles, by a sweet and mystical allusion: Unto the Euening, and the Morning, two thousand, and three hundred: then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed: and the vision of the Euening and the Morning is true: The Euening of their sorrow precedes the Morning of their joys. Our Prophet so compares the tempest of the Assyrians rage, to a Storm in the Night, which vanisheth at the rising Sun: Loe, in the Euening there is trouble, but before the Morning it is gone. Our Night lasts during this wretched life: the troubles of Miseries, storms of Persecutions, and rage of that great Leutathan, disturbs our Air, darkens our Day, and makes it a gloomy Night; clouds, tempests, obstacles, stumbling-blocks, temptations, machinations of Enemies, deceiuinges of Friends, through so many dangers and difficulties sail we to our haven of Peace: our assurance is, that joy comes in the Morning, when we shall rise in the East, and behold the Son of Glory shine in our faces. The Morning of the Edomites, Atheists, Reprobates, comes first smiling on their brows; but (Nox sequitur) they have a Night behind.

This disparity consists not only in the counterposition of their order, but in the circumstantial difference of their length and shortness: Our Night is irksome, but short; (Compensatur acerbitas breuitate) What is ill in the bitterness, is eased by the shortness: But our Day is everlasting, from new Moon to new Moon, from Saboth to Saboth, we shall praise the Lord: Myriads of years and ages, shall be expired, and our Sun as far from setting, as at our first entrance; for time and mortality, and distinction of age, shall cease: there is nothing but eternity above: It is not more blessed in being a Day, then in being endless: Their Morning is short, their Night everlasting, their Debt never payde, their Fire never quenched: Here is their unhappines, (Florent ad tempus, pereunt in aeternum: florent fa'sis bonis, pereunt veris tormentis;) They flourish for a time, they perish forever: they flourish with false joys, perish with true and substantial torments: things that are soonest bred, have the shortest continuance: a puff of Wind raiseth the Chaff from the earth, and a puff scatters it away: the Wicked are soon raised, and with like speed depressed: How quickly is Esau's posterity advanced to a Kingdom, how immaturely cast down? The Crown is scarce warm on their temples, their eyes have scarce taken a passing glance of their glories, but all is dispersed: the Godly are long kept under covert; but when they do rise, their elevation is permanent.

Loe, now cast a sober and intelligent eye on this strange opposition, and let the very enemy of Heaven and Grace, judge, whether the vain shadows of Joy, and those for a Day, liable to true and substantial torments, and those forever, be comparable with, or desirable before, a momentary Affliction (and that not without the best of comforts) followed with an excellent and eternal weight of glory. It's confessed; I speak for you, I think your Consciences are convinced: but (Vbi signa?) Where are the signs of it? If this be so, and you so acknowledge it, why lead you so dissonant lives? shall the voice of your own tongues, censure of your own hearts, witness against you? Tacitus reports, that in the civil Wars betwixt Vitellius and Vespasian, a Soldier had killed his own Father, which was of the enemies Army; no sooner was this published, but every man begins to abhor, condemn, execrate that War, the cause of such an unnatural fact; yet how little effect this wrought in their proceedings, that Author describes; for their rage, rapine, cruelty, was not lessened, in spoiling Neighbor, Friend, Kinsman, Brother, Father, when they had slain them. We abhor the miseries and sins incident to this life; we love it still, nay prefer it to Heaven: our condemnation will be easy and just, what need is there of more Witnesses (Ex ore tuo) thy own lips have spoken against thee. For shame let our hearts and tongues be cut out of one piece, that what we allow in opinion, we may prosecute in practice.

You hear how the Day slips from us, and the Night steals on; what remains, but in the Day to prepare for the Night. No marvel, if men sleep in the Night; but in the broad day, to shut our eyes (with the Dormouse) is unnatural. There is a Night, when thou shalt rest, even on thy bed of Peace: only walk, work; loiter not in thy Day. Christ taught and observed the Rule himself, to travel his Day and all his Day; For the Night comes, wherein no man can work. There are things, which if the Night finds undone, we are undone, because we have not done them: if we defer to provide lodging, sustenance, safety, the Night finds and leaves us destitute. How mad is he, that bound to some special designment, confined to his day, and then furthered with light, aid, company, and conueniencie of all things, spendes one hour in catching Flies, another after Feathers, and all the rest in several toys and leasings, that on a sudden the Sun sets, and his chief work is not done, nay not begun.

The work of our day, is the working up our salvation; it is a special work, Heaven & our Souls are upon it, and we have but our day to work it; (Tempus vitae, tempus paenitentiae) The time of life, is the time of Repentance. We spend one piece of our Day in Covetous scrapings, another in adoring that we have scraped; some hours of our Day in working vanity, and some in sleeping security; instantly the Night of death comes, & we have neglected the main chance: our Salvation is not finished like Courtiers, that having light to bring them to bed, play it out at Cardes, and go to bed darkling: Woe to them that go to their last rest thus: How unworthy are we of a Day, thus to spend it? It is pity that ever the Sun of Grace shoone on our faces: Quake and fear, whatsoever thou art, to suffer the sin of thy soul, and the end of thy life to come so near together: If men stumble in the dark, it is not strange; to fall at every stubbe in the day, argues willful neglect, or want of eyes. It is enough for those poor Romanistes, that live under that Egyptian darkness of the inquisition, to fall into grievous absurdities, where the Sun shines, to see men fall in heaps, is astonishing: Oh that every bait of drunkenness, object of covetousness, presented glance of vanity, should make us wander and stumble, stumble and fall, fall and content our selves therein without rying: What (would we? what) will we do, if our Sun sets? For shame cast away the deeds of darkness with the time: Awake and stand up, the light of Jesus Christ shines on thy face. As men from sleep opening their eyes, and seeing day broke, cast away their clothes, wherein they were wrapped warm, and starte up to their several callings; the Sins and Vanities of this world have kept us warm, as Caiaphas kept Peter, whiles we were folded in them; but our main work lay dead for want of execution: Prouide then for this Night, ôh thou whose cheek the Sun of mercy and forbearance, kisseth: The sleep of him that trauaileth, is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the satiety of the rich will not suffer him to sleep. If the Day be well spent, the wearied bones reioyce in their earned repose; and the contented Conscience, applauds it self in the thought of her careful obedience; body and soul receives rest. Whiles the Day is slouthfully spent, Night brings no reioycefull ease to either spirits or corpse: The Day of thy life worn out in the well disposed hours of a religious obedience, thy body shall rest in a perfumed Grave, and thy soul in the bosom of Abraham, when Night comes: but whiles pride, surfeits, oppressions, wantonness, have shared the Day, the Night comes with no less suddenness then sorrow; thy rest shall be unrest, neither easier then smoke and thorns, and flames, nor shorter then the eternity of all these can make it: Oh then, what folly, madness, self-enmity is this, to play out our short Day, and howl under the pressure of working torments for an everlasting Night.

We are come to the last fruit that I shall gather you from this Tree, and it grows on three branches: the whole body of it, being applied to the manner, not the matter of the Question: the matter is first satisfied, The Morning comes, & the Night; the manner is now touched: If ye will ask, enquire, return and come. You ask in derision, keep the Cloth, but reject the Fashion: Ask still, but to repentance: Let your demands manifest your desires of resolution: If ye will ask, and needs be acquainted with your sorrows, Enquire, with humility, reverence, faith: Return from your sins, by repentance, and come home to God by obedience, (Triplex ex arbore fructus) here is a threefold fruit from this Tree; whereon let your souls feed, and then depart to refresh your bodies.

Enquire: We must not look, that God should seek us with his blessings; as Elias was charged to run by the way of the Wilderness, in quest of Hazael to annoint him: No, Seek ye the Lord, whiles he may be found: the rule of the Prophet is just: the Rich man comes not to the Beggars door with relief in his hand; but the Beggar to his for it: there is small reason, to expect it from God, that he should both give, and seek: I confess he doth, as Christ testifies of himself; I came to seek and to save that which was lost; but withal he conueyes into our hearts, a (preventing) Grace to seek him: Hence the Condition is annexed to the Grant, by the giver himself; Ask, and you shall have: Enquire, and you shall be satisfied: But if any will be ignorant, let them be ignorant still.

If you ask me, 1. Where you should Enquire? Our Prophet directs you; To the Law, to the Testimony: Where should a people enquire, but at their God? 2. If how? With Humility, Reverence, and desire of Knowledge: (Inter Iuuenile tuaicium, et senile praeiudicium multa veritas corrumpitur.) There must be in us an equal avoiding of both Rashnes, and Preiudice: Young men apprehend not the necessity of Knowledge; Old men presume of a plerophorie and abundance: hence neither young nor old enquire. 3. If when? The Wiseman answers; Enquire, seek; Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth: Begin this search, in the Morning of thy years: (Mane, is the Lord's Adverb, the Devils Verbe:) the Lord saith, Earely; the Devil saith, Tarry: to whom you hearken, judge yourselves: One thing only, take heed you stay not too long; the Devil is a false Sexton, and sets the Clock too slow, that the Night comes ere we be aware: tarry not then till your piles of Usuries, heaps of Deceites, mountains of Blasphemies, have caused God to hide himself, and will not be found. There is a (Sera nimis hora) time too late, which Esau fell vnluckily into, when he sought the Blessing with tears, and could not find it. It may be the Statues, or the Guides, or thy own Eies, may be denied thee, & then too late thou Enquirest. Whiles the Book of God is not perused, his Temples not frequented, nor his Throne solicited by Prayers, hard heartednesse steals on us, and like Sampson bound by the Philistines, we would break their Bonds, and cast their Cords from us; but our Delilah, our Folly hath beguiled us.

Is this all? no, there is second Fruit growing on this Tree, of equal necessity, greater use. After Enquiring, follows Returning: you are gone wrong, return into the way of Peace; Enquire it first, and having found it, Return, put your feet into it. God warns you by the revelation of his word, (as the Wise-men by the vision of a Dream) to Return into your Country, whither you would arrive, and where only is your rest, another way. If ever this exhortation was necessary for Edom, let me think it fitter for England: (as sin-full as we are, let me yet say, there is more hope of our repentance, then of Edoms;) our Iniquities as great, our Instructions greater then theirs; what remains, but our Repentance? never more need: Our sins are not low, slow, few, or slightly done; negligence sins, security sins, contempt sins, presumption and hard-heartednes sins: here is the Scorners Chair, the Drunkardes Bench, the Idle-man's Cushion, the Usurers Study: Oh where is Repentance, to rouse these? God is angry; we have been smitten, not in the Skirts and Suburbs of our Common-wealth only, our City, Body, and whole unity hath been pierced to the soul, The whole Head hath been sick, and whole Heart heavy: Where is the physic of Repentance? I can show you many Actors presenting themselves on the Theator of this World; I see not Repentance play her part: I can point you to Usury, robbing, grinding, sucking blood, cutting throats, whiles he sits in the Chimney corner, & hears of his Zani's, whelps, underling Thieves ending their days at the Gallows. I can show you Covetousness sweating for gain, crowching, ramping, playing Ape, Lion, or Devil, for Money: I can discover to you Drunkenness, rising early to the Wine, Malice making haste to the death of Ammon, Ambition running after Honor, faster then Peter to the Sepulcher; Pride whirling in her Chariot, Wantonness shutting up the windows; Bribery creeping in at the Keyhole, even when the door of Justice is locked up against her. Among all these I see not repentance: Doth she stay till the last act? I fear the tragedy of many Souls ruin will be done first. This land is full of sins, (let me speak impartially) this City: as many Lines meet at the Center; so all sins by a general confluence to this place: Glomerantur in vnum innumerae pestes Erebj: The mischiefs of Hell are swarmed to one Crowde, and we have it. I know there are some names in Sardj, some that make Conscience of their ways: the same air is drawn by men of as contrary dispositions, as is the opposition of the two Poles: that I may say of the lives of this City, as one doth of Origen's writings: (Vbi been, nemo melius:vbi male, nemo peius.) Those that are good, are exceeding good, and those that are evil, are immeasurable evil: nothing was ever so unlike it self. You are as contrary as fire to water; but all the water of the one's devotion, will not quench the Fire of the others wickedness: This latter is so monstrously grown on us with the times, that it is all, if the Idolatry of Rome, or the Atheism of Turkey can go beyond it. They are rare hearts, that care not more to seem, then to be Holy, if perhaps, they will either seem or be: Rare hands, that are free and clean from either blood or filthiness: rare Tongues, that do not vie Oaths with Words; making scoffs, scorns, flatteries, vain speeches, the greater part of their tongues exercise; that if their Words could be weighed, their Prayers of a year, are not so substantial and ponderous, as their Oaths of one day: It were no wonder to see these abominations in Dumah, Egypt, Babylon; to find them in England is matter of amazement. It was an admirable and astonishing speech (the Prophet him self thought, by his advertisement prefixed,) The virgin Israel hath done filthily. If Harlots and Brothels be unchaste, they do not degenerate from their kind; in so pure a Virgin, no imagination would have dreamed it. It is no news to find the Devil in Hell: to have him thrust into Paradise, tempting and prevailing with our first Parents, is horrible. Let Rome and Turkey swell with the poisons of Satan till they burst, who wonders? to find the sputterings of his venom in the Church is grievous: If we be accused for accusing of sins, let the Physician be blamed for discovering Diseases in the sick body: we must speak; Oh yet—Si nostra sperem prece posse movere, that we could hope with any sayings to move you: If the worst come, I can but speed, as others before me. Be there no Usurers, that say to the Gold in secret, You are my Confidence? (Populus me sibilat, at mihi plaudo ipse d•mi,) the world hisseth at me, but I hug & applaud my own soul, & fat my spirits in the sight of my Bags. Is there never a Broker to comfort this sin of death, in the distress of his Conscience with? Usury is no sin, many learned men are of this opinion: But I ask him, if his Conscience can be so satisfied: would he not willingly give one hundred pound bag, to be secured in this point? Sure, it is (at the least) not safe wading far in a questionable Water; if it could be safe to some, yet how many have been drowned in this Whirlepoole? I confess that flesh and blood puts the Bladders of Wealth and Promotion under their Arm-holes, and the Devil holds them up by the Chinne, till they come to the deepest, and then, as the Priests served Judas, they bid them shift for them selves; and wanting the help of Repentance of swim, down they sink (In profundum inferni) to the bottomless bottom of Hell. These two, are not unfitly compared to two Milstones; the Usurer is the nether Stone, that lies still; he sits at home in his warm Furres, and spendes his time in a devilish Arithmetic, in numeration of hours, days, and moneys, in subtraction from others estates, and multiplication of his own, till they have divided the earth to themselves, and themselves to Hell: The Broker runs round like the upper Mill-stone, and betwixt both these, the poor is grinded to powder.

Usury (you say) is exploded among Saints, I would you would deal no worse with covetousness: But alas, this is too general a fault, to give any hope of amendment: He that railed on Beelzebub pulled all Ekrom about his ears: He that slighted Melchom, provoked the Ammonites: But he that condemns Mammon, speaks against all the world. This is the delight, the love, the solace of many, the God of some: Poverty, sickness, age, are all the Devils they tremble at, and Belial, Melchom, Mammon, Pleasures, Honors, Riches, all the God's they worship: These three usurping Kings, like the three seditious Captains in Jerusalem, or those three Roman Tyrants, Casar, Crassus, and Pompey, have shared the world amongst them, and left God least, who owes all. Lactantius speaks of one Tullus Hostilius, that put Fear & Palenes into the number of God's: It is pity that ever his God's should go from him, it is (not pity, but) justice, that these God's, and the true God too, should forsake such reprobates, that idolatry the honor to Creatures, wherewith they should worship the Creator. But alas, how is Pharaoh's Dream verified among us? The lean Kine eat up the fat: God's lean blessings, riches, and pleasures, deuowre his fat ones, Grace and Religion: How it dishonors God, disparageth our selves, and our creation, to put Lead in a Cabinet of gold, base desires in a fair and precious soul. We never yet attained the top of Mount Zion: He that stands on the Tower of Divine meditation, will judge those Pigmeys, which below he thought Giants: but we desire not Heaven, because we know it not; we never look beyond our Horizon: we live in our contented slavery of Egypt, and never dream of the freedom of Canaan, (Vbi amor, ibi oculus;) where the love is, there is the eye. This S. Augustine shortly and soundly reproveth: (Si sursum os, cur deorsum cor?) hath Nature given us an upright •ace, and a groveling heart? this is a preposterous dissimilitude of the mind and countenance: do but compare (as lifting up thy soul with thy eyes) heaven with earth, and thou wilt change thy opinion: Through want of these meditations, these earthly vanities carry away our enchanted hearts, to neglect those better things of our eternal peace: and by the testimony of our Savior, It is hard for a rich man to get into Heaven: The Proverb saith, There is no earthly Gate, but an Ass laden with Gold can enter: and this only loding, hinders our entering the gates of Glory. A wealthy and great man, served up to God's table in his kingdom, is as rare as Venison at our Boards on earth: there are sometimes such services, not often.

Is this all? no, (Vidi Ebriosorum sitim, & vomentium famem) I have seen Drunkenness reeling from Tavern to Tavern, (and not seldom,) from thence to his Stews. It was the sin, nay the shame of Beggars; it is now the glory, the pride of Gallants: They should daily be transformed to the image of God, they come nearer and nearer to beasts, (let me say) to Devils: For Saint Bernard saith, (Ebrietas est manifestissimus Daemon) Drunkenness is a most manifest Devil: They that are possessed with Satan, or with drunkenness, fall alike into the fire, into the water, they gnash alike, alike they foam: And as all the Disciples could not cast out that one sort of Devils; so nor all the Preachers this.

Gluttony is not much less general, no less evil: Drunkenness makes a man so giddy he cannot stand, and Gluttony so porsy that he cannot go: That old Verse and Rule is forgotten in our Feasts:

Too soon, too fine, too daintily:

Too taste, too much, is gluttony.

There is an appetite natural, when the stomach can extract no more juice from meats received, it couets more: There is an appetite sensual, when the rich says, My Soul eat, not my Body: nay, are not some in this City, like those Horace speaks of? when their estate can reach but to Herrings, they long for fresh Samon. We desire the strength of bodies, and the length of days; our full Dishes forbid it: If ever that Verse was true, now is the time:

Non plures gladio, quam cecidere gula:

The enemies Sword kills not more, then their own Throat.

Swearing and Whoredom I will join together, (as most sins go by couples) so the Prophet, The Land is full of Adulterers, and for Oaths the Land mourneth. Add unto Swearing, (the twin-brone brother of it) Cursing; a sin that makes God (the summum bonum the base executioner of our revenge: How strange? when men grieve us, to turn our teene upon God, and rent him to pieces. Blasphemers against mortal Princes are killed with the sword, and all their estates confiscate: against the Prince of Heaven it is not regarded.

I must not forget my Edomite, the Gallant: If you would see an Impostume conflate and swollen up with all these rank corruptions, all the former mischiefs, reconciling themselves to a wretched unity in one soul, a pack and bundle of sins, snatched from their several owners, (Envy from the Malitious, Haughtines from the Proud, Derision from the Scorer, &c. and engrossed to one heart, an Emblem, a Pageant, a short Commentary of all the Deuilles proceedings, a Map of his walks, plottes, and actions; behold the Gallant: I tax not the generous Spirit, whose birth and accoutrements are worthy and high, his mind humble. Oh how comely are good Clothes to a good Soul, when the Grace within, shall beautify the Attire without; and not gay Ragges, impudently bear out Wicked actions: Far be it from me to think these Edomites, or any other thing, then the Diamondes, that grace our Ring, no, they are the gallant Esauites, the profane Roysters, to whom I speak, and that from a text of Repentance, desiring from my soul, that they may scape the Burden of Dumah, by rejecting the manners, and make more account of their Birth-right, then sell it for messes of Pottage, Lusts, and Vanities: But if they will note themselves with the Cole and Brand of Prophanesse, they must not look to escape our Censures: we cannot hear their Oaths, beating the invulnerable breast of Heaven, not see their Pride, testifying to their face, if they should plead innocence; nor be unwillingly conscious of their Atheistical Iestes, Libertine Feasts, worse then Pagan Adulteries, and charm our tongues with silence; when the glory of our God, the price of their Redemption, and the danger of their own souls lie at the stake.

There are other open, and infinite secret sins, which they think no eye sees: But there are witnesses, the Angels good and bad, the Conscience of the committers, and the judge of the Conscience: Si nemo, non tamen nullus) if no man, yet not none: therefore what thou darest not to do thy fellow servant looking on thee, that dare not to think thy heavenly Master looking in thee. I confess, we have a face of Religion, and looks of profession, making toward Jerusalem; but how many make the noble Livery of our Master, a shelter to these abhorred corruptions? and till the trial comes, it is not known whom many serve: A man that follows two Gentlemen, is not discerned which to serve, till they part company: so long as wealth and religion go together, it is not apparent, to which of them most adhere, till the cross parts them, and then it is plain and easy.

Were these the sins of Edom, and are they not the sins of England? The sins said I? nay, the God's of England: For the Usurer adores his mettalles, the Epicure his Iunketts, the Drunkard his Gallons, the Voluptuous his Lusts, the Adulterer his Harlottes, the Proud and gallant Edomite his gaye Clothes, and studied carriage: And as the Israe•ies cried to their Calf made of golden Eare rings, These are thy God's oh Israel: So we may speak it with horror and amazement, of these foolish, bestial, devilish, sins, These are thy God's oh England: weak, wretched, unhelpful God's: For shame, what, where are we? could Edom ever be worse? Have we devoured so many years of peace, ease, plenty, and saturitie, (if I may so call it) of God's word; and are we still so lame, le•ne, and ill favored in our lives? what shall I say? hath the sweet Gospel, and the sober preaching of it, made us sensual, senseless; impudent, frantic? as the nature of that Country is wonderful, if true, that Rain causeth Dust, & Drought Durt: Have the sweet Deawes of Hermon, made the Hill of Zion more barren? Hath the Sun of Plenty, from the filth of our Security, bred monsters of sins? Have God's mercies made us worse? what shall I say?

Fathers and Brethren, help: Pity the miscarrying souls, that have no mercy on themselves: our Words are thought air, let your Hands compel them to the service of God: The word of Information hath done his best, Where is the rod of Reformation? Let Moses Rodde, second Aaron's Word. The loves of Sinners, the strength of Sins; nay, Principalities and Powers are against us, and we come armed with a few leaves of Paper: The keenest Sword is with us, but it is in our lips only, The sword of the Spirit; and though it can devide the Marrow and the bones, of an awaked Conscience, alas it moves not the stony hearts: it shall sooner double upon our selves, then enter such Mayled Consciences: our blows are filliped back in contempt: be not wanting ye that have the ordinance of God: You are his surrogates, and the Preachers hopes: good laws are made, the life-blood of them is the execution: the Law is else a wooden Dagger in a fair Sheath: when those that have the charge imposed, and the Sword in their hands, stand like the picture of S. George, with his hand up, but never striking: we complain not of the higher Magistrates, from the benches, of whose Judgment, impiety departs not without disgrace, without strokes: the blame lies on inferior Officers, who think their office well discharged, if they threaten offenders: these see, and will not see: Hence Beggars lase themselves in the fields of idleness; hence Taverns and Tap-houses swarm with Vnthrifths; of whom, whether they put more sin into their bellies, or vomit more forth, is a hard question; I mean, whether their oaths, or ebrieties exceed: Hence we look to have Vagrants suppressed, Idleness whipt, Drunkenness spoke withal; but the execution proves too often like the Iuglers feast, the Guests set, the table's furnished, meat in dishes, wine in flagons; but putting forth their hands to take them, they apprehend nothing but air.

The medicine to heal all this, both for Patient and Physician, is repentance; not a iaculatory cry of Lord forgive me, nor the flash of a melancholy passion, but a sound, serious, and substantial repentance. Rome hath an holy water of virtue, they say, to purge and wash away all her spots: England hath her holy water too, which, too many trust in for sufficient, we look up and cry, Lord thy mercy, and wipe our lips, as if we had not sinned: yet by and by to our former vomit. But the repentance, that resolves for Heaven, throws away all impediments▪ if Gold, if pleasure, if a Throne were in the way, she would fling them aside:

she hath an eye bent on the Mercy-seat, and a foot that runs straight to it: she turns not into Samaria, because she is offered lodging there, nor into the Court of Egypt, to be called the Son of Pharos Daughter: the pleasures of Babylon stay her not, the Good-fellows of Sodom make her not look back: she forgets what is behind, and never rests, like the Kine that carried the Ark, till she comes to the fields of Bethshemesh, the harvest of grace and goodness; nor ceaseth lowing with sorrow till she be sped of the mercies of God: she hath felt the weight of sin and sorrow, and abhors the cause of them both: she hates not the devil worse then her former iniquities, and if it were possible, she would never more offend: Thus, this is to return; what you want of this, you come short of repentance.

The third degree follows to make up our perfection: If Returning might serve as a labor of (but) indifferent trouble, we could afford it, but we must come: You have heard the Whence, hear the Whither. Thou hast not done with Enquiring, with Returning; Up and este Elias, thou hast a greater journey to go: strengthen thy heart, ôh Christian, R•stat tibi tertia meta) thou hast a third mark to aim at. Come, home to thy God, by a Chast and Holy life; it is not currant pay with God, to part with our Vanities, except we embrace a Religious conversation. Paul makes it as necessary a part of Christianity, to Put on the New man, as to put off the Old: It is not enough to cease doing evil, but it is damnable not to do well: He that gathers not with Christ, scattereth. It was the threatening doom in John Baptists Sermon, not to the Barren, but to the Euil-fruited Tree. Christ's speech carries the same sense and force against the Pharisees, though spoken to his Disciples: Except your Righteousness, &c. he says not, Unless your righteousness be less then theirs; but, Except your righteousness be more, exceed, you shall not see heaven. He that inquires the way to Heaven, and turns toward it, hath past two degrees of my Text, and his own Pilgrimage; but he gets little of either praise or comfort, except he come home to it: Here is not so much perseverance lessened, as perfection: there is extreme wrong, extreme right and mercy. The 2. first, shall be shut out of Heaven; the last only, hath a promise of entrance. Judgment without mercy, shall be to him that sh•wes no mercy; not to the cruel only, but to him that is but merely just: The want of •ustice is not only damned, but the want of Mercy: the Rich Churl went to hell for not relieving Lazarus, though he wronged him not. If the usurer part with his extortions, the Wanton with his Minions, the Cheater with his Frauds, the Tradesman with his Oaths, he thinks himself by this time a high Christian, and that God must needs bless him, he is so repentant. If the long persuasions of many Sermons, can work this on us, that we abate of our former outrageous licentiousness, we strait spunge up our selves; and with a conceit, that we have done much for God, out-face all reproofs: but he that hath much forgiven him, loves much. The Prodigal does not only turn from his Harlottes and vices, but comes home to his Fathers house: There was no stinte in that sinful Woman's penitence, till she had poured •loods of tears on the feet of our Savior: The conscience of Zacchaeus was not disburdened, by ceasing his extortion, but by restitution to the wronged, commiseration to the distressed, even to one half of his goods, and these are the commended penitents.

How sortes our practice with this Doctrine? show me a sacrilegious Patron, a Pirate of the Church, that (if his hand cease from spoiling God of his Tithes, yet) will repair the breaches, his rapine hath made: show me a Bribe-guilty Officer, seek out with wet eyes, and reward with a full hand, the wronged Suitors: how many are more cruel-hearted then Judas, that neither on repentance nor despair will bring back the price of the Poor's Blood, which they have sucked? Behold the earthly Churl, to make his son a Gentleman, prostituting his honesty, conscience, soul, and forsaking his own mercy: (as the Proverb is vile, if ever true, Happy is that Son, whose Father goes to the Devil;) After he hath mowed Corn, or fatted his Ox, on the very place, ( ⦿ Trotafuit) where the Town stood; nay, kenneled his Dogs within the walls of the Sanctuary; and turned the Hall of Charity into the Parlour of Pride; his Body sinks to the Grave, and (it is to be feared) his Soul to Hell, being rung thither with the peals of Belles and curses. The better instructed Heir, (to omitte those that exceed the tyranny of their Fathers) seeing and detesting his dead Fathers deader courses, withdraws his hand from extortion, from depopulation, but what reasons can make him a restorer? it is enough (he thinks) to cease wronging. But curseye Meroz, saith the Angel of the Lord, curse the inhabitantes thereof, because they came not forth, to h•lp• the Lord in the day of battle: Did they fight against God? No, they helped him not: that Servant was condemned for clayming his own debt: the Prayers and Fastinges of the Jews were despised, for clayming their own debts; and standing upon Sacrifice with men, Whiles they would have mercy with God. Nehemiah threatened the same people with a stricter taxation: They must restore the extorted Lands and Houses of their brethren; nay, remit some part of the debt, or they were cursed with that fearful sacrament, the shaking the lap of his Garment, so to be shaken out of Israel, all the congregation crying, Amen. Lastly, beyond all exception, the manner of the Lambes coming to Judgment, testifies as much; Go ye Cursed: For what cause? Because ye denied the Labourer his hire, or took Bread from the hungry, &c. No, these are crying Sins, and Hasten before unto Judgment: But, You gave them not, therefore, (lie maledictj) Go ye cursed; so Come ye blessed. What, because ye dealt justly, and gave every man his due? no, these virtues may be in moral men that want Faith and Christianity: But, You gave them your own bread; Hungry, and clad them Naked, with your own clothes; therefore, Come ye blessed.

What use you will make of this, I know not; what use you should make, I know: If the Tree without good fruit shall be burned, what shall become of the Tree that hath evil? If Barrenness be cast into the fire, what doth Rapine and Robbery deserve? If it be damnation enough to deny our own Bread, what is it to take away the only Loafe, Coat, or Cottage of our poor brother? Woe to the Back that wears the Garment, to the Bellies that deuowers the Food, they never sweat for; I mean, that by force or fraud, took them from the owners. If Nabal and Dives burn for not giving their own, what shall become of Ahab and Iesabell, for taking away the Vineyard of Naboth? If the righteous be scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

Now if after this Physic given, I should ask many, how they feel the Pulses of their Consciences beat? I presume on this reply: (Notum loq•eris) you but guild Gold, and minister to us such Physic, as we have taken before. All this we know; (we do not evermore ply your vnderstandinges with new things; but lay old, almost dead & forgotten, fresh to the Conscience:) I ask further, how much of this have you practiced? and still look for an affirmative answer, All this, have I kept from my youth.

Let us reason & discuss this matter a little. To Enquire, is hearing, or rather hearkening to the word to Return, is repenting: to Come, is believing, or rather looking more toward perfection, proceeding into the ripeness of Faith. This latter is so necessary, that we cannot come to God with his acceptance; our comfort, if we leave our Faith behind us; without this, impossible to please him, to be rewarded of him: This our Charter whereby we hold all our Privileges, our Title in Capi'e to Earth and Heaven: But (Sub iudice Lis est) the great Judge of Heaven shall one day censure it: mean time, give me leave to help thee, peruse this evidence of thy Faith, whereon thou so presumest. Christ dying, made a Will, sealed it with his own Blood, wherein he bequeathed a certain Inheritance to his brethren: the Conveyance is the Gospel, (this his Testament:) the executor of this Will, is the Holy ghost: our Tenure and Evidence, is our Faith. Now, thou layest title to Jerusalem for a child's part: What's thy title? in Christ's name and right: what conveyance did Christ ever make thee of such a portion? Yees, he conveyed it to me by Will: What, by a special name? no, but by a general title to all believers: That I am one of these heirs, my evidence; my Faith. Let God alone to try thy Faith: If thou comest to me for counsel, saith S. James, thou must show me another evidence: Shew me thy faith by thy works.

If thy heart be corrupt, thy hands filthy, thy tongue false, thy evidence is but counterfeit. Christ gives not title of inheritance in Heaven, to such as have no holiness on Earth: Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived, neither Fornicators, &c. And there shall enter into it no unclean thing, nor anything that worketh abomination, or lies. Perhaps thou wilt yet stand upon it: produce thy witnesses: they are only two, thy Life, thy Conscience: they cannot speak with thee, against their maker and thine. Thy life speaks loud, and plain: Thy pride, drunkenness, oppression, cozenage, lusts, blasphemies, manifest thou hast but a broken title: and Paul pleads against thee, from this clear advantage: Protest to them ye believe in God, that they be careful to show forth good works. They that have the evidence of faith, must have the witness of works: It is a poor deed, without witnesses. Thy conscience speaks plain too, that thy faith is but a carnal persuasion, bred of security; a forged Evidence, made by a false Scrivener the Devil, to deceive thy own eyes and the worlds, not God's. Now where is thy claim? stand upon good assurance, lest when that subtle winnowing Satan, comes to fifth thee grain after grain, thou prouest Chaff: we may come with this carnal persuasion, little better then reprobate hope, to the Temples, to the Pulpittes to the Sacraments, but if we come so to the tribunal of Christ, woe unto us: the too much trusting to a verbal, lean, sick, starved faith, deceives many a Soul: whiles we covet to be solidians in opinion, we prove nullifidians in practice: no matter for wisdom in the Soul, grace in the conscience, honesty in the life, if the profession of faith be in the tongue: but the Poor may say as he in the Comedy: (Oculatae mihi sunt manus, credunt, quod vident:) My hands have eyes, and they believe what they see: we carry the forms and outsides of Christians, and think God beholding to us, for gracing his material, earthly Temples; when in the Temples of our own hearts, we set up the Idols of our own affections, yet are these the Temples, wherein he is best pleased to dwell: But if we be come to God by faith, he is also come to us by grace: The spirit of Christ is in us, if we be not Reprobates. And if this spirit be in us, the body of sin is dead. At least hath his death's-wound: But alas, in how many of us doth sin live, dwell, (I would I might stay there, nay even) reign? as if Christ had come to destroy the Devil, and not the works of the Devil, to free us from the damnation and not the dominion of sin: but he that took from sin the power to condemn us, took also the power to reign in our mortal Bodies. And the second, is but a consequent of the first, postscribed with that word of inference, now then▪ &c. Thus Christ came not only to bind the Devil, but to loose and dissolve his works.

I have read and observed in the History of Scotland, a certain controversy betwixt that Kingdom and Ireland, for a little Island that lay between them; either claims it as their due, and the strife growing hot, was falling from words to blows: but reason moderated both sides, and they put it to the decision of a Frenchman; who thus judged it: he caused lyming Serpents to be put into that Island; if they lived and thrived there, he judged it Scotlands; if they pyned and died, he gave it for Ireland. You can apply it easily: If the venomous Serpents, poisons, and corruptions of our natures batten and thrive in us, we are Satan's; if they languish and consume, we are God's: thus is the title ended for the freehold of our Souls, by what sure rule we may know, whether they belong to Hell or Heaven. If our hearts be vnstabled of these bestial lusts, and trimmed up with Sanctimony to entertain our holy Guest, there shall be a reciprocal and enterchangeable coming of us to Christ, and Christ to us: and we shall as surely sup with him in his Court of glory, as he hath supped with us, in our house of Obedience.

Let us only fear, least our want of Repentance hinder this. I should have erst observed it, as a material instruction from this place, I could not find a fitter time to insert it, then here, to draw your coming with more alacrity. There is a reservation to repentance, even to abhorred Edom: let the sons of the profanest Esau repent, and they shall not be forsaken of mercy: Return and come, and your night threatened, shall be made a joyful warning, though it had as certain & defined a time, as ever had Jonah doom against Nineveh, the set bounds of 40. days, with a Non ultra: yet be you humbled and this judgment shall be dispensed with: If there be such mercy to Edom, let me say boldly, repenting Israel shall not fail of it: the night shall linger, and the Sun be kept from setting, if we will return in our day: the threatenings of God have a condition included; that general, that promised, that never refused interposition of repentance. As absolute as the speech might seem to Abimelech, withholding Abraham's wife, thou art but a dead man, yet it had an implicit condition, except thou restore her undefiled, as appears by the sequel. It is a common Fountain where at every repentant soul may drink, at what time soever, what sinner soever, repent of what sin soever, &c. And if yet any feel themselves thirsty, weak, and not thoroughly resolved, let him forever confute the distrust of his own heart▪ the malice of Satan, the present difficulties, with that of Jeremiah, Where in express words, our repentance is said to make GOD repent, even of his threatened, and intended Plagues.

God hath threatened to all sinners, a Night of sorrow, and it shall as surely come, as ever Euening succeeded day: but there is an Except, that shall save us, a seasonable and substantial repentance: if we turn from those winding Labyrinths of sin, and come home to God, he will save us from this Night, that we perish not: there is no coming to God, but in & by Jesus Christ; through his Son must God look at us, and we at him; that he may be merciful, we hopeful.

Come then beloved, to Jesus Christ: behold him with the eyes of Faith, standing on the Battlements of Heaven, and wafting you to him: come freely, come merrily, come with speed; come betimes, least when you would, you cannot for want of direction, dare not for want of acquaintance with him: he that comes not till the last gasp of extremity, knows not how to come, because he begins but then. How prone are our feet to forbidden paths? the Flesh calls, we come▪ Vanity calls, we flock: the World calls, we fly: Let Christ call early and late, and either we not come, or unwillingly, or late, or with no purpose to stay. How justly may he take up that complaint against us, that against the Jews: after all my Promises, assurances, real performances of Mercies; You will not come unto me, that you might have life: Perhaps, when we are weary of sin and sin of us, then let God take us; he will none of the Devils leauinges. Some would come, but for some impediments; that either Childes Portion to be made up; such a House to be built, such a Ground to be purchased: this same But, mars their coming, as he in the Gospel, But for burying his Father; and that other, But for bidding his Friends farewell: so, But for Mammon, and that we cannot be rich with a good Conscience; But for Pleasures, that we cannot be wanton, yet nourish the hope of salvation: But for these (veruntamens) But's, they would come, (S•d v•x sunt vsi, qui carnere nisi,) we have all one But, one exception or other, to keep us from our Christ: yet Paul countes all these but dross, but dung: And if anything seem fairer in thine eye then Christ, (Detur digniori) give thy soul to the worthier: We can extremely affect no earthly thing▪ but the Devil (at one time or other) will bring it into opposition with Christ, as the Moon and the Sun, to see which of them shall be eclipsed. Alas, how ordinary (yet how vile is it (Post-ponere Christum bonibus, qui nos •qua•it angelis;) to set Christ after our Oxen, that hath made us equal to the Angels: yet all those Friends, whom we so trust, shall soonest fail us, and at our most need run from us, as Vermines from an house on fire. Give me lea•e to show you this indignity offered to Christ by a metaphor; familiar comparisons give the quickest touch, to both understanding and conscience.

A certain Gallant had three Friends: two of them flatter'd him in his loose humors; if in this, I may not rather call them Enemies: The third, lovingly desswaded him from his follies: on the two flatterers, he spent his Patrimony; the third he castes off with contempt: his riot and wealth gone, his Friends went too; for they were friends to the Riches, not to the Rich man: Debt was required, he arrested, and the Prison not to be avoided: in this calamity, he studies refuge; hence bethinks himself of his two Friends, of whom he desires relief: the first's answer is cold and short, Alas, I cannot spare it, you should have prevented this •arst: The other speaks a little more comfort; I have no Money to help you, yet I will bear you company to the Prison-doare, and there leave you: The distressed man finds small satisfaction in all this; therefore as his last refuge, he calls to mind his third Friend, whom he had ever scorned, wronged; and after much wrestling betwixt shame and necessity, he sends to him, with no less earnestness, then humility, discovers his exigence, requires help: the Message scarce delivered, he comes with speed, pays the Debt, sets him at liberty, nay repayres the ruins of his estate. The Rioter, is Man; the two flattering Friends, are Riches and Pleasures; these the soul of man embraceth, spends her strength and time, most precious Riches, on them: The third Friend, that rebukes his sins, is Christ; this because distasteful to blood and flesh, without regard to his saving health, is rejected: at last, all the time of Grace spent, the soul (so far) in God's debt, is arrested by one of God's Serievants, Sickness, or Calamitie, or an afflicted Conscience; then those Friends begin to slinke; Pleasure is gone suddenly, so soon as the Head begins to ache: Riches (perhaps) will offer to go with him to the Prison doare the gates of Death, the preparation to the Grave: the fainting Soul fore-seeing their falsehood, weakness, aggravation of his miseries; with an humbled Heart, remorsefull Conscience, Tears in his eyes, Prayers and Cries in his tongue, sollicites his neglected Savior, to pity his distress, and have mercy upon him: these Messengers have no sooner pierced the Heavens, but down comes the spirit of Grace and Mercy, with Pardon and free Remission, payment of all Debts, & discharge of all Sorrowes.

If ever you meet with Friend more able, more willing, more certain, to do you good, reject this counsel; The breath of all men is in their nostrilles, and there is no help in them, though they were Princes; when not only their material partes, Flesh, Blood, Bones, and Marrow, but even part of the inward man, so far as their worldly intendementes went, Their Thoughtes perish. But GOD was, is, and is to come; not only in Power, but in Mercy, Sweetness, Protection. Jesus Christ yesterday, and today, and the same forever.

That Jesus Christ put into our mouths a tongue to Enquire, into our hearts a purpose to Return, into our lives a grace to Come home to holiness, and himself.

This God grant for his mercies sake, Jesus Christ for his merits sake, the Holy ghost for his names sake, to whom be ascribed all honor and praise, forever and ever. Amen.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR HENRIE MOVNTAGVE, the Lord Chief Justice of ENGLAND, my very good Lord.

Right Honorable, my allegiance to the Almighty King necessitates my endeavours to glorify his Great Name. My Profession hath imposed on me all ministerial services. My filial duty to our blessed Mother the Church, hath taught me to help forward her cause, both with tongue and pen. My thankfulness to your Lo. tyes me to seek your honorable authorising of all these labors. They run to you first, as if they waited your manumission of them to the world. If books be our children, and the masculine issue of our brains; then it is fit that your Lo. who have the patronage of the father, should also vouchsafe a blessing to the childrē. Nor is this all: there is yet a weightier reason why they should refuge themselves under your Lo<sup>s</sup> protection. The world is quickly offended, if it be told of the offenses: men study courses, & practice them; and if the Clergy find fault, yea if we do not justify and make good what they magnify, & make common, they will be angry. It is the most thanklesse service to tell men of their misdeeds. Now a business so distasteful requires a worthy Patron: & whose Patronage should I desire but your Lo<sup>s</sup> whose I am, and to whom I owe all duty & service? whose but your Lo<sup>s</sup> who are in place to reform vice, and to encourage goodness: to make that practical and exemplary, which is here only theoretical and preceptory? God hath entrusted to your hands his Sword of Justice: draw it in his defense against the enemies of his Grace & Gospel. You sit at the common stern, and therefore are not so much your own as your Countries.

Help us with your hands, we will help you with our prayers. The God of majesty & mercy, sanctify your heart, rectify your hand, justify your soul, and lastly crown your head with eternal glory.

Your Lordships observant Chaplain, Tho. Adams.

To the worthy Citizens of Saint Gregory's Parish, sincere lovers of the Gospel, present happiness, and everlasting Peace.

I Owe you a treble debt, of love, of service, of thankfulness. The former, the more I pay, the more still I owe. The second I will be ready to pay to the uttermost of my power; though short both of your deserts, and my own desires. Of the last I will strive to give full payment; and in that (if it be possible) to come out of your debts. Of all I have in this volume given you the earnest: as therefore you use to do with bad debtors, take this till more comes. You see I have venturously trafficked with my poor talent in public, whilst I behold richer graces kept close at home, and buried in silence: liking it better to husband a little to the common good, then to hoard up much wealth in a sullen niggardice. I censure none: if all were writers, who should be readers? if none, idle Pamphlets would take up the general eye, be read and applauded, only through want of better objects. If the grain be good, it doth better in the market, then in the Garner. All I can say for myself is, I desire to do good; whereof if I should fail, yet even that I did desire it, and endeavor it, shall content my conscience. I am not affrighted with that common objection of a dead letter: I know that God can effectuate his own ends, and never required man to appoint him the means. If it were profitable being spoken, sure it cannot be unnecessary being written. It is not unknown to you, that an infirmity did put me to silence many weeks: whilst my tongue was so suspended from preaching, my hand took opportunity of writing. To vindicate my life from the least suspicion of idleness, or any such aspersions of uncharitable tongues, I have set forth this real witness, which shall give just confutation to such slanders. If it be now condemned, I am sure it is only for doing well. I very well know the burden of preaching in this City: we may say of it in another sense, what Christ said of Jerusalem, O thou that killest the Prophets. Many a Minister comes to a Parish with his veins full of blood, his bones of marrow; but how soon doth he exhaust his spirits, waste his vigor! And albeit there are many good souls, for whose sake he is content to make himself a sacrifice: yet there are some so unmerciful, that after all his labor would send him a beggar to his grave. I tell you but the fault of some, quitting your particular selves: I speak not to diminish the credit of your bounty, which I have found, and here with a thankful profession acknowledge it. In testimony whereof I have set to my hand, and sent it you a token of the gratitude of my heart. Receive it from him that is unfeignedly desirous of your salvation: and if he knew by what other means soever he might bring you to everlasting peace; would study it, practice it, continue it; whilst his Organ of speech hath breath enough to move it.

Your unworthy Preacher, Thomas Adams.

THE HAPPINES OF THE CHURCH.

HEBR. 12.

Ver. 22. But ye are come unto Mount Zion, and to the City of the living GOD, the heavenly Jerusalem; and to an innumerable company of Angels:

23. To the general assembly, and Church of the first borne which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect:

24. And to Jesus the Mediator of the new Covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things then that of Abel.

THEY that make comparisons, alteram partem deprimunt, vt res alterius emineant; debase the one part, that they may advance the honor of the other. Our Apostle abates the glory of the Law, that he may give more glory (where it is more deserved) to the Gospel. For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. The sum of the comparison is spent in these three generals. 1. There were, Omnia terrena, et externa: all things outward and savoring of earth: ver. 18. A Mount that might still be touched, &c. Here, all Interna et coelestia, spiritual and heavenly. 2. There are all Obscura et caliginosa, dark and difficult: Blackness & darkness, &c. Here, all Clara et illustria, clear and conspicuous: therefore the Prophet called Christ Solem Iustitiae, The Sun of Righteousness: and John the Baptist styled him That light, which lightens everyone coming into the world. 3. There, all were Terribilia, fearful and amazing: not only to the people, ver. 19. who entreated that the Word should not be spoken to them anymore. But even to Moses, ver. 21. So terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake. Here, all Amabilia et laeta, lovely as Rachel, delightful as Music: the Gospel is called the Message of peace. Our Apostle therefore preacheth a double quantity in the Gospel; Magnitudinem Gloriam, multitudinem gratiam: the greatness of Glory, to work in us reverence: the multitude of Grace, to work in us love & obedience. The Law was given by Moses, but Grace and Truth came by Christ Jesus. The excellency of Christ above Moses, is exemplified in the third Chapter of this Epistle, Moses verily was faithful in all God's house as a servant: But Christ as a Son over his own house, &c.

To the words; the parts are generally two, the Access, and the Object. First, for the Access, Ye are come. What, on your own feet without a Guide? No; Accessistis, hoc est, fide Euangelica perducti estis. Ye are come, that is, ye are brought by the faith of the Gospel. There is one that brings you; God: every person in the blessed Trinity. It is Opus Patris; No man can come except the Father draw him. Opus Filij, Draw me, we will run after thee. Opus spiritus sancti, Let thy good spirit lead me into the Land of righteousness Man is by nature in Zedekiah case, blind and lame: Blind, Non inuenisset viam, nisi via inuenisset eum: unless the way had found him, he could never have found the way. Lame, he may know that the Temple of heaven hath a beautiful gate; Grace: but cannot come thither till God brings him, loo sen his stupefied joints, and put into his hand the Alms of mercy. This done, he may enter into the Temple, walking, and leaping, and praising GOD.

Thus first he gives the Soul eyes, understanding; then feet, gracious affections: and now expects that he should come. God hath not so done all for thee, that thou shouldest do nothing for thyself. A Deo sine te factus, à te sine Deo infectus, A Christo sine te reffectus, non à te sine Christo, nec à Christo sine te perfectus: God did create thee without thyself, thou didst lose thyself without God: without thyself Christ did redeem thee; but neither thyself without Christ, nor Christ without thyself shall perfect thee. Potest Dominus inueniri, adueniri, non praeueniri: There may be a finding of God, a coming to God, but no preventing of God. Have faith. He that cometh to God, must believe: and that of thine own, for there is no coming on another's foot. Thus that we might come to Christ, Christ came to us. Non de coelo merita nostra, sed peccata traxerunt: Not our merits, but our maladies drew that great Physician from heaven to us.

Ye are (not coming, but) come: it is rather a time perfectly past, then expectantly future. Which plainly demonstrates, that this is a description of the Church in her militant estate, so well as triumphant. Indeed either hath a relation to other, a communion to other; and the inestimable privileges of them both are wrapped up together. The connection of Glory to Grace is so infallible, that they often change names: Heaven is called the kingdom of Holiness, and Holiness is called the kingdom of Heaven. Ye are saved by hope: and He that believeth, hath everlasting life, and is passed from death to life. So sure, as if they were already in Heaven. So Paul, Our conversation is in heaven, from whence we look for our Savior Jesus Christ.

The object or place of our arrival is described by many excellent and honorable titles. First, it is called a Mount: but is there so much happiness in that? Ferunt summofulgura montes: the highest Mountains are most danger'd to the violences of Heaven. ver. 18. There was a Mount burning with fire. This is no Mountain of danger, or terror, but Zion: safe, pleasant, delightful Zion; the joy of the whole earth, the beloved of GOD: the John that leaned on the bosom of Christ. The Lord loves the gates of Zion better than all the dwellings of Jacob. But though a Mount, though Mount Zion, yet it might be a solitary and vnfrequented Hill: like that whereunto the Devil took Christ, and shown him the kingdoms of the world: where a man can only see glory, not enjoy it. Or like that mount Nebo, or top of Pisgah, whereon Moses might only stand, and behold the Land of Canaan.

Not so, but on this Mount there stands a City: a populous City, and full of buildings: like that, wherein Christ says there are many mansions. But now whose City is this? For it may be some poor decayed thing, that hath only some ruins of remaining monuments: No, it is the City of GOD. They are superlative things, that have attributed to them the Name of God. Saul's sleep was called Sopor Domini, a sleep of God. Rachel said, With great wrestlings have I wrestled: Hebr. the wrestlings of God. Thy righteousness is like the great Mountains: Hebr. the Mountains of God. Nineveh was an exceeding great City: Hebr. a City of God. This Hebrew dialect our Apostle follows to the Hebrews, and calls this excellent City, the City of God Not that it is only God's •••y way of as•••ription, but even by foundation, and everlasting possession: but to vindicate it from any obscure •••se, it is the City of God. But there were many concei•••ed gods; it may be this belonged to some Idol, as Peor...id to Pa...l, and Ekron to Baalzebub: No, these were all ...ead gods; this is the Living GOD. The Psalmist calls ...hem  $\langle \phi \rangle$  :They did eat the sacrifices of the dead: but this God is called Uiuens, the Living: and Deus viuentium, the GOD of the living. Well, yet what is the name of this City? Is it a City, a City on a Mount, a City of God, and doth it want a name? Not a great man but if he build a fair house, he will give it some name: Perhaps call it after his own name. The name is Jerusalem, famous, blessed Jerusalem; a City of Peace. But there was a Jerusalem on earth, whereof we may only say, Fuit, It was. That was fulfilled on it, which Christ foretold against it; There shall not be left one store upon another. But this City is built with no other stones then Jaspers, Sapphires, Emeralds, and Amathysts. Reue. 21. 19. It is here distinguished from that terrene, by the name of Heavenly; above the wheel of changeable mortality, it is not subject to mutation. The celestial Jerusalem.

But yet, though it be a City on a Mount, though Jerusalem, though heavenly; yet the perfection of all may be impaired through the want, either of Inhabitants, or of good Inhabitants. There be Cities eminent for situation, glorious for building, commodious for traffic: yet have all these benefits poisoned by evil Citizens. When Alcibiades would sell a house, among other conueniences for which he praised it, he especially commends it for this; that it hath a good neighbor. Who be the neighbors in this City? Angels, glorious & excellent creatures, the great Kings Courtiers; here, our Guardians, there, our companions. Yes, you will say, one or two Angels: yea a company; not like David's at Adullam, nor Absalom's in Hebron; but innumerable, Myriads of Angels.

Are there none in this City but Angels? what habitation is there then for men? Yes, there is an Assembly of men: not some particular Synod, nor Provincial Conuocation, nor national Council; but a General assembly. What do you call it? The Church. Of whom con...sts it? Ex Primogenitis, Of the first borne. But then it may seem that younger brothers are excluded: No, the first borne of the world may be a younger brother in Christ, and the first borne in Christ may be a younger brother in the world. Be they younger or elder, all that are written in heaven, if their names be in the Book of life, their souls are in the bundle of life: All they, & none but they. Then shall enter into it no unclean thing: but only they which are written in the Lambes Book of life.

But now is it a City, so pleasant, and peopled with such inhabitants, and hath it no Governors? Yes, God, Iudex vniuersorum  $\langle \phi \rangle$  Judge of all. But here is more matter of fear then comfort: we may quickly offend this Judge, & so be quite cast out of this City: the very name of a Judge implies terror. No, for it is the part of a just Judge, Parcere subiectis, & debellare superbos: to punish obstinate Rebels, and to protect peaceable and obedient subjects.

Somewhat was said of adopted Citizens, such as were strangers borne, and by grace naturalized. What manner of creatures are they, that GOD hath admitted to dwell there? Spirits. Why, Devils are spirits: No, spirits of Men. But many men have wicked spirits, and shall such dwell there? No, the spirits of Just men. Why, Solon, Aristides, Phocion, Scipio, were just men: they were morally just, but not truly justified, not perfected. These are just spirits made perfect.

How came they to be thus perfect? By Jesus, who was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our iustification. What is this Jesus? A Mediator. Man was guilty, God was angry: how should they be reconciled? A Mediator must do it. For this purpose Apparuit inter mortales peccatores, & immortalem iustum, mortalem cum hominibus, iustus cum Deo. He appeared between mortal sinners, and the immortal Judge, mortal with men, just with God: so was a perfect Mediator. Whereof? Noui foederis, of the new Covenant. The old was forfeited, a new one comes by him that renews all. Not Do this and live: but believe on him that hath done it for thee, & live forever. How is this Covenant confirmed? It is sealed with Blood. How is this blood applied? Aspergendo, by sprinkling: as the door-posts sprinkled with the blood of the Paschal Lamb, caused the destroying Angel to pass over the Israelites: So the aspersion of this immaculate Lamb's blood upon the conscience, shall free us from the eternal vengeance. But what's the virtue of this blood? It speaketh better things than that of Abel. That blood cried for vengeance; this cries for forgiveness. The voice of that was, Lord, see and judge: the voice of this is, Father, forgive them, they know not what they do.

Thus briefly have I paraphrased the Text. Now for methods sake, in the tractation we may consider generally these five points. 1. There is a City; Jerusalem, the City of the living God. 2. The situation whereon it is built, Mount Zion. 3. The Citizens, who are Angels and men: an innumerable company of Angels, and spirits of just men. 4. The King that governs it; GOD the Judge of all. 5. The Purchaser that bought it, and gave it us, Jesus, the Mediator of the new Covenant. But now the situation hath the first place in the words, therefore challengeth the same in my discourse. And indeed on good cause should the foundation go before the building: we first seek out a fit ground, and then proceed to edify on it.

Mount Zion.

Not literally that Mount Zion whereon Solomon built the Temple, and David his Palace. That local Zion became like Shiloh: first, exceedingly and superlatively loved, afterwards abhorred and forsaken, like the Tabernacle of Shiloh, the Tent that he pitched among men. This was threatened to that sacred place, as a just punishment of their rebellious profaneness. Therefore will I do unto this house, that is called by my Name, as I have done to Shiloh. It lies in the power of sin, to make the most blessed places accursed. God turns a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of the inhabitants that dwell therein. Ciuitatis euersio morum, non murorum casus. The ruin of a City is not the breach of the walls, but the apostasy of manners. Were our Fences stronger than the seven-fold walls of Babylon, the sins within would hurle down the Bulwarks without. If there be Prauilegium among us, there is no Priuilegium for us.

This Zion then stands not on earthly foundations; for at the general dissolution, the earth with all the works in it, Cities, Castles, Towns, Towres, shall be burnt up. If it were built on a sa...dy foundation, when the rain, the floods, and winds shall conspire against it, it would fall, and the fall of it would be great. But Zion is built on Christ: Behold, I say, in Zion a chief corner stone, elect and precious, he that believeth on him, shall not be confounded. This is conspicuous by the Antithesis of Mount Zion with the Gospel, to Mount Sinai with the Law. The Apostles call that montem 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a mount that might be touched: if this had been upon earth, it had also been contrectabilis, touchable: but it is only spiritual. He alludes to God's Prophecies and Promises, Euangelium proditurum de monte Zion, that the Gospel should come out of Mount Zion. This is manifest to those that will consider and confer these places, Obad. verse. 21. Esa. 2. 3. Mie. 4. 2. Come, let us go up to the Mount of the Lord; for out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the word of God from Jerusalem, Esa. 59. 20. with Rom. 11. 26. There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. Sinai gave thralldom by Moses, Zion gives freedom and salvation by Jesus.

These two words give us two comforts of grace. Fortitudinem quia mons, Beatitudinem quia mons Zion. Security, because it is a mountain; Felicity, because it is Mount Zion.

1. Here is considerable, the validity and strength of grace that comes by Christ: we are not built in a valley, but on a mount. A mountain hath ever been held the place of safety. I said in my prosperity, I shall never be moved. What is his reason? Lord, thou of thy favor hast made my mountain so strong. But alas, what are all the mountains of the earth to mount Zion? Woe to them that trust in the mountains of Samaria. The profane Edomite stands on his mountain, and derides the judgment of God. The Syrians thought God only Deum montium, a God of the mountains. It was vpon the high mountain that Israel played the harlot. Many sit on their mountains, and give defiance to heaven. The covetous man's mountain is his riches, there he thinks himself safe; Soul rest, thou hast much goods laid up for many years. The ambitious man's mountain is his honor, and who dares find fault with so promontorious a celsitude? yes, Every mountain shall be brought low. Sensuality is the voluptuous man's mountain, there he refugeth himself against all reproofs. But when the judgments of God shall come upon the earth, in vain they shall cry to the mountains, Fallon us, and to the hills, Couer us. As neither against the waters in the former Deluge, so nor against the fire in the latter dissolution, shall the mountains defend; only this Mount Zion shall save us.

The mountain of worldly confidence hath not more strength of defending against the assaults of men, then danger of exposing to the violences of heaven. Here is the difference betwixt the worldlings building, and the Christians.

1. They think themselves only to build high, aspiring to an equality with mountains: and as low builders, poor, dejected, and rejected creatures. But indeed they build low, for all sublunary things are low buildings, only he that builds on this Mount Zion, builds high and sure; when all oppositions, and adversary forces have done their worst, he stands firm like Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth fast forever.

The Wise man's mind is ever above the Moon, yea, above the Sun. What turbulencies soever be in the world, all is peace there. In my Fathers house there are many mansions. In domo, it is a house, not a Tabernacle: Of my Father, for if he hath afforded such a house for his enemies, how glorious is that he hath reserved for himself, and his friends! Patris mei, saith Christ, My Father: your Father is able to give you a cottage for your short life: My Father gives a house forever. There are Mansions, à manendo; not movable tents, but mansions. Many, enow for all, none shall be troubled for want of elbow-room. Therefore let all Mountains stoop to this. The mountain of the Lord shall be established in the top of mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all Nations shall flowe unto it. This is God's Mountain, who hath chosen of all Nations, Israel; of all Tribes, Judah; of all Cities, Jerusalem; of all Temples, that of Solomon; of all Mountains, Mount Zion.

2. The worldlings think this Mountain is but a dream, because they cannot see it, nor touch it. But our Apostle says, it is intrectabilis: it cannot be touched with earthly fingers; no profane feet must tread in those holy Courts. Natural men's understandings are led by their senses; Plus oculo quàm oraculo: they will believe no further then they see. Give me good cheare, says the Epicure, this I can see and taste: and tell not me of your spiritual banket in heaven. Give me good liquor, says the Drunkard, the blood of the grape: this gives colorem, saporem, odorem; color to the eye, savor to the palate, odour to the sent: heaven hath no Nectar like this. Give me honor, saith the Ambitious, which may advance me: that from this Mountain of preferment I may overlook the inferior world, and behold vassals prostrate to my Celsitude; this I can feel and see: tell not me of your invisible kingdom, and Such honor have all his Saints. Give me gorgeous apparel, says the proud: this will make me admired, & give me admission among the great ones: tell not me of our Robe of Glory. Give me gold, says the Covetous, this I can see; it is my Sun by day, and my Moon by night. I can spend my time delightfully in telling, feeling, treasuring this: never tell me of your treasure in heaven. Well, if there be no remedy, but Sense must be your Religion, and this world your God; take your choice; these gross & palpable things; trust you in these Mountains: but Lord give us this Mount Zion, which our Lord Jesus Christ hath established for us.

Now, since we are built upon a Mountain, let us know that we are conspicuous; all the world takes notice of us. The faithful are not ordained to live in corners, vnobserved: but are set on a Mountain, as examples of goodness to all. A City that is set on a hill cannot be hid. God meant you notable, take heed you become not notorious. As Mount Zion is the joy of the whole earth, so it is the light of the whole earth. If that light become darkness, how great, & how greatly to be condemned is that darkness? This was that great exception God took against Israel, that through them his Name (which should have been honored) was blasphemed among the Gentiles. You are founded on a Mountain, therefore have your conversation honest among men, that by your good works which they behold, they may glorify God in the day of visitation.

2. The felicity that comes by Christ, insinuated by Zion, which was a place of blessedness. This is either Praemissa, or Promissa: already sent into our hearts, or certainly objected by promise to our faiths. It is either assumed, or assured. Inre, or in spe: either that we have, or that we shall have. The happiness we have already by this Mount Zion, consists in three privileges: the Favor of God; Joy of the holy Ghost; and peace of Conscience.

1. In the Favor of GOD, which is to Zion, as the light was once to Goshen: shining there, and nowhere else. Or as to Gideon, the Fleece on the Mountain is wet with the dew of Heaven, when all the earth is dry besides: This Lux vultus tui, the light of thy Countenance, which puts more gladness into our hearts, then the abundance of earthly fruits rejoice the covetous: The wicked shall never see it, unless so much as may increase their anguish, when they must depart from it forever.

2. In the joy of the Spirit, which is (hilaris cum ponder virtus) a gladness that can neither be suppressed, nor expressed. Sentire est cordis, dicere non est oris: The heart doth feel it, the tongue cannot tell it. It is that Stone with the new Name written in it, which no man knoweth, saving be that receiveth it. There is much rejoicing in the world, but the matter of it is mutable. These lower delights are more sensitive, but more fluid. They sooner cloy us; Magna foelicitas est à foelicitate non vinci. It is a great happiness not to be overcome of happiness. Corporal delights work in us a great hunger till they are attained. But Spiritual, Cùm non habentur sunt in fastidio: cùm habentur in desiderio: Whiles we have them not, we care not for them, but when we have them, we more eagerly desire them. There is no hunger of it, till we taste it. In illis appetitus generat saturitatem saturitas fastidium. In istis appetitus parat fruitione... , fruitio parit appetitum. In carnal pleasures, appetite begets fullness; fullness, loathing; in spiritual, desire prepares fruition, fruition begets desiring. Voluptuous pleasure, is like a blister: it begins first with an itching, but at last it swells, & breaks forth in anguish and putrid corruption. There are two observations able to keep us from over-affecting the joys of this world, and from vilipending the joys of Zion.

1. First, resolve every carnal delight in the first matter and principle of it, and there will be more likelihood of despising, then danger of much desiring. The Covetous makes gold his hope, and says to the Wedge, Thou art my confidence: and what are those precious metals he so worshippeth, but veins of the earth better coloured. T... Ambitious builder, that erects a Babel for the honor of his own Majesty, thinks all eyes standamazed at his magnificence. And what are those sumptuous monuments wherein he so glorieth, but monumental witnesses of his folly, a little hewn timber, some burnt and hardened earth? The Adulterer admires the beauty of his harlot, kneeles to a pledge of her memory, by wanton sonnets Idolises her, turns his soul to an Elephant, and worships this Sun. Now what is that stately building of a human lump, but the same earth his foot treads upon, better tempered, because painted worse; when it wants the guest, the soul that quickens it worst of all? The proud dotes on his costly robes, centers his eye upon himself, as if no second object was worth looking on; the Tailors hand hath made him a man, and his purse makes the Taylor a Gentleman. And what are those curious rags, but such are given of worms; and consumed of moths? Consider the materials of your lower joys, & if you will persist in their dotage, you shall do it without our envy.

2. Observe their Conclusion; look from their beginning to their end. Delectatio vulnerat, & transit: infoelicem reddidit, & reliquit. Pleasure, like an Irish man, wounds with her dart, and is suddenly gone: it makes a man miserable, and so leaves him. Mors in ollâ; behold laughter concluded in tears. The protasis delights, the apodosis wounds. The Conscience receives a long vexation, for a transient delectation: for an imperfect content, perfect torment. This is a hard pennyworth, so little pleasure for so much repentance. He that for a little joy, gives that Christ bought with so much pain, Stultum Christum reputat mercatorem; thinks Christ a foolish buyer; but the event proves him a foolish seller. Esau bitterly repented this bargain.

This for the world: but now the joys of Mount Zion are for matter spiritual, for substance real, for use universal, for continuance eternal.

3. In the peace of Conscience. There is little outward peace in the world; we have either an Esau with his hand, or an Ishmael with his tongue, bent against us. As then he that was borne after the flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the Spirit, even so it is now. So it is, and so it will be to the end of the world. This is the difference betwixt Mount Zion militant, and Mount Zion triumphant. In heaven are all comforts without any crosses: in hell are all crosses without any comforts: on earth comforts and crosses, joy and grief, peace and trouble, misery and mercy are blended together. We may say of a Christian, as Lorinus the Jesuit writes of an Archbishop of Toledo, who weighing the much disputed controversy, whether Solomon was saved or damned, and not being satisfied with the arguments of either side, caused Solomon to be painted on the walls of his Chapel, half in Heaven, and half in hell. So the Christian in respect of his outward calamities, seems to be half in hell, but in respect of his inward comforts, he is the better half in heaven. Howsoever, Being justified by Faith, we have peace with God. And wheresoever we are dispersed, or howsoever distressed, the Peace of God which passeth all understanding, and surpasseth all commending, preserveth our hearts in Jesus Christ evermore.

But all this in Possesso, we have already: there is something more in Promisso, which we shall have: We are now the sons of God, but it appears not yet what we shall be. Hast thou here much peace? there is more: here we have desiderium pacis, there pacem desiderij: Here a desire of peace, there the peace of our desires. Hast thou here some joy? there is more: now joy with sorrow, checkerworke, white and black; roses, but thorns with them: then joy with safety, safety with eternity; such joy as shall never be taken from us. There Rex veritas, Lex charitas, pax foelicitas, vita aeternitas. If one day in lower Zion be better then a thousand days in the tents of wickedness, then one day in upper Zion, is better then a thousand years in this valley of tears. If Peter was so ravished with Mount Tabor, where only Christ was transfigured, what is he with this Mount Zion where all are glorified? How amiable are thy Tabernacles, O Lord! If God's Tabernacles be so lovely, what is his mansion? If there be such joy in the remission of sin, what is there in the abolition of sin? If there be now such sweet peace in thy heart, such music in thy conscience, what mayst thou think there is in heaven? But because non capimus illa, illa capiant nos: we cannot comprehend those pleasures, let those pleasures comprehend us. Good servant, (the joy is too great to enter into thee, therefore) enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

This Mount Zion did God give to Christ, and Christ to us. God to his Son, Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion. The Son to us; A Lamb stood on Mount Zion, and with him 144. thousand, &c. A Lamb in figure, slain from the foundation of the world. A Lamb in fact, led like a Lamb to the slaughter, standeth, sits not idle, nor lies asleep: he that keepeth Israel, neither slumbers nor sleeps: whereon? not as the two beasts his opposites, that rise out of the earth and Sea, but on a Mount. What Mount? not Sinai, but Zion. Other mountains quake at his presence. The hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord. But Zion heard and was glad, and the daughters of Judah rejoiced. Other mountains in homage to this, have skipped and danced about it. The mountains skipped like Rams, and the little hills like Lambes. He stands, therefore is willing to defend; on a Mount, therefore able to defend; on Mount Zion, therefore ready to defend, because he is in the midst of his own, and sees his Church round about him. So that though all the red Dragons on earth, and black Devils in hell, rage against us, yet the Lamb on Mount Zion will defend us. There now he stands, calling us by grace, there we shall one day behold him calling us to glory, until he give this glory to us; yea, then and ever, let us give all glory to the Lamb that stands on Mount Zion.

This is the place which the Lord chose and loves. He refused the Tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the Tribe of Ephraim, but chose the Tribe of Judah, the Mount Zion which he loved. This praise did inherit and inhabit Zion: The Lord hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell, for I have desired it. Let the precedent of God's affection work in all our hearts a zeal to Zion. The Lord that chose Zion, choose us to Zion; he that desired it his habitation, make it the habitation of our desires. It is his rest, let it be ours, that we may rest with him: Here will I dwell, saith he; let us all pray to dwell there. Though it be a hill, a high hill; though pains and toil in getting up, yet let us ascend, for above there is eternal joy.

The City of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem.

I come from the Situation, to the City: you hear where it is, hear now what it is. A City in a Mountain. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the City of our God, in the Mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the North, the City of the great King. God is known in her Palaces for a sure refuge. Here be four circumstances. 1. Quae sit, not a Village, but a City. 2. Cuius, not man's, but God's, not a feigned, but the living God's. 3. Qualis, not earthly, but heavenly. 4. Quo nomine, not Sodom or Samaria, but the City of peace, Jerusalem.

The City.

The Church may be compared to a City for three resemblances; of Safety, Unity, Paucity.

1. For safety: Cities have ever been held the securest places. So Lot said of little Zoar; Let me escape thither, & my soul shall live. Cain fearing the execution of his curse, built him a City for refuge, and called it Enoch. The motive that caused those wicked to build a City, was security, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth. The Israelites had their Cities of refuge, and a Law of their protection. Num. 35. 27. But there is no City of sure refuge, but this City of the living God. It is ordinary with men, to put too much trust, like Israel, in their walled Cities. Except the Lord keep the City, the watchman waketh but in vain. Shalt thou reign because thou closest thyself in Cedar? Thou thinkest thyself secure, because an inhabitant of this famous London. No, thou livest in an Island, therefore in danger of the Sea: in a Christian Island, therefore in danger of the Turk: in a Protestant Island, therefore in danger of the Pope: in a chief City of this Island, therefore in danger of the devil. The City is perilous for pride: the more spectators, the more acclamations: the larger the Theater, the louder the applause. The solemn assembly in Cesaria, puffed up ambitious Herod to his own destruction. The people showed Vox Dei, but the worms confuted their flattery, & his folly. Simon Magus ventured that flight in a City, to which in an obscure Village he had neither been tempted, nor would have attempted. And whether quick comings in of money, make not this City unsafe to many souls, miserable experience hath evinced. Praeceptum locum, princeps damnum:

sudden profit is capital loss. But suppose men care not so much for the safety of their souls, are their bodies secure? Thieues, homicides, fires deny it. But if they scape all these fires, yet not the last fire. Your buckets may quench other fires, not this: no milk nor vinegar can extinguish that wild fire. As in the days of Noah, a Dove could not set down her foot for water, so nor at this day for fire. Let this meditation like a fortunate storm drive you to harbor: the weakness of all Cities in the world to the safety of the City of God.

2. For unity; Familiarity hath the name, Quasi eiusdem familiae, as it were of the same family. Concord and agreement is taught by the Corporation of one City. Jerusalem is built as a City well compacted together. Here is no need of Lawyers, all are at peace. Not a tell-tale, not an Incendiary in it. Inferior Cities have good orders for unity, but all will not embrace the unity of order. Saepe inter ciues turbauerit amnia diues. It must be as the rich will have it, or there is no rule. These Citizens are not Urbani, but Turbani. It was David's care to cut off such wicked doers from the City of GOD. Here they persecute us from City to City, going over the Cities of Israel: not leave us till we are driven to this City, then shall we rest in peace: everyone loving another, and the Lord Jesus loving us all.

3. For Paucitie: indeed a City is great compared with a Village, but what is it in respect of the earth? Are there few that shall be saved? No, there are many: Christ is the first borne among many brethren. Loe, a great multitude which no man could number, of all Nations, and languages, stood before the Throne. Are there many that shall be saved? No, few: Many are called, but few are chosen. Christ's is a little flock. The best courses have the fewest followers: Numerus paucior, numerus melior. God's reservation is a very small remnant: a very Tenth. In it shall be a Tenth, many leaves, the sap is but a Tythe. As the shaking of an Olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough; four or five in the outmost fruitful branches. They are compared to the Gleaning of the Grapes after the Vintage. It was the Churches complaint; Woe is me, for I am as the gleanings. This was God's collection, I will take you one of a City, and two of a family. God is a Shepherd that saves some from the Lyon; taking out of his mouth two legs, or the piece of an ear: rescues a few from that universal Apostasy. Of the 600. thousand that came out of Egypt, but two entered into Canaan, Caleb and Joshua. Even the best is but Titio ereptus ab igne, a brand snatched out of the fire. All flesh had corrupted their way, only Noah escaped. Not one righteous in Sodom, but Lot. Four hundred and fifty Prophets for Baal, but one for the Lord: four hundred flatterers for Ahab, one Michaiah for the truth. Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me, are for signs and for wonders in Israel. So few and rare, that they are gazed on for Monsters. When they sate in council against Christ, none spake for him but Nicodemus. Paul answering before Nero, no man stood with him, but all men for sooke him. But to the Idol all consent, Exod. 32. From young to old given to Sodomy, Gen. 19. Pilate asking what shall be done with Jesus, All cry, Crucify him. There was a general shout for Diana two hours together, Great is Diana of the Ephesians. All, both small and great, rich & poor, free & bond, received the mark of the Beast in their foreheads. The children of Israel are like to little flocks of Kids; but the wicked like the Syrians fill the Country. But those few Innocents speed best. Though the number of Israel be as the sand, a remnant shall be saved. Among us many rob the Church, few add to the dition of it: there are many Usurers, few restorers. Lord, thou hast but a few names in Sardi.

That of Esdras concerning Israel, is true of this mystical City. Of all the trees thou hast chosen thee only one Vine: of all the Lands of the whole world, thou hast chosen thee one pit: of all the flowers, one Lily: of all the depths of the Sea, thou hast filled thee one River: of all built Cities, thou hast hallowed Zion unto thyself. Of all the fowls created, thou hast named thee one Dove: of all the cattle, thou hast provided thee one sheep: Among all the multitudes of people's, thou hast gotten thee one people. If we should divide the world into thirty parts, scarce five of them are Christian. Of those five, the Pope challengeth (at the least) half. He says, I have one Church in Italy, one in Germany, one in Spain, one in France, one in England. One in England? Now the Lord one day convince him, and grant us he may have none in England. Now it is a quarrel betwixt us and Antichrist whether they or we belong to this City, we cannot agree about it. One day it will be a quarrel betwixt Antichrist and the Devil, and they shall agree about it. Now subdiuide all these five parts of the world, whether theirs or ours, and scarce one is truly sincere. Hypocrisy hath one part, Heresy another part, Profaneness a third part, Luke-warmenese a fourth, God hath least that owes all. O the small number sealed up by the Spirit of the living God! Let this teach everyone to suspect himself: when Christ said, One of you shall betray me, they presently all cry, Master, is it I? when he was asked, whether only few should be saved, he tells them of neither many nor few, but charged them to look to themselves, that they might be of the number; Strive to enter in at the straight gate. There is a City built in a broad field, full of all good things, but the entrance thereof is narrow, besides the dangerous passage between a violent fire, and a deep water. Study, strive, pray, that thou mayest pass through the narrow way, by the sweet-guiding hand of Christ.

Of God.

God is the Proprietary of this City. Est vna ciuitas, & vna ciuitas: vnus populus, & vnus populus: vnu... Rex, & vnus Rex: vna Lex, & vna Lex. There are two Cities, two people's, two Kings, and two Laws. For the Cities, there is Babylon the great, and Jerusalem the Mother of us all. For the people's, there is the seed of the woman, and of the Serpent, Corn and Tares, Sheep and Goats, vessels of honor, and vessels of dishonor, Jacob and Esau, Christ and Belial. Nec est tertius, nec ad tertium: there is no third person, nor designment to a third place. For the Kings, there is Christ, Yet have I set my King upon Zion the mountain of my holiness: and Satan the Prince of the power of the Air. The Prince indeed, not Mundi; sed tenebrarum mundi; not of the world, but of the darkness of the world, 2. Cor. 4. 4. you have both these Kings together; The god of this world had blinded the minds of unbelievers, that the light of Christ might not shine unto them. For the Laws, God's Law is, Let every ox that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity. Satan's Law is, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. God's Law is, Thou shalt not swear: Satan's, thou shalt forswear. God's Law, Couet not; Satan's, covet all. Nihil praecipit Deus nisi charitatem, nihil Diabolus nisi cupiditatem. God commands nothing but love, the Devil nothing but lust.

Now these two Cities were begun in Cain and Abel: Cain a Citizen of the world, Abel a Citizen of God. Their names signify their natures: Cain signifies a profession, and he built a City: for the children of this world are wiser in their generation, then the children of light. Iniqui mentem in amore praesentis vita figunt. Wicked men set their whole delight in this present world. What moved Cain to this? Not to be defended against wild beasts, which Plato says first moved men to build Cities; for then Abel would have built so well as Cain. nor because man is animal sociale, a sociable creature; which Aristotle makes a special motive hereof: for then the righteous would also have built. But because Cain was a fugitive, he built for a protection against God's curse; especially because he had no expectation of a better City. Unlike to Abraham, who looked for a City that hath a foundation, whose builder and maker is God. The Greeks say, that Cecropolis built by Cecrops, the Egyptians that Thebes, the Argives that Argos, was the first City. But it is manifest, that this City built by Cain was the first. He called the name of this City Enoch, but Enoch in the righteous line is the seventh; Enoch the seventh from Adam. So the wicked dedicate worldly possessions in the first place, the righteous in the last. Cain and Enoch had their possession and dedication here. But Abel signifies mourning, and he built no City. Our possession is in heaven, this City of God, invisible to the eye, incredible to the faith of the world, but infallible to all believers.

And for Cain, it is not properly translated, Aedificavit, but Erat aedificator, as Junius: erat aedificans, as the Septuagint; he began to build, but he finished not: he was still a runagate. So all worldlings are but aedificantes; like the Babel-erectors, they but began to rear the tower, but never could come to roof it. This man began to build, saith Christ, but could not make an end. They are persuaded, yea, their inward thought is, that they build houses to all ensuing generations; but this their way is their folly. Aedificat mortalis, mors diruit aedificantem: Mortall man builds, and death pulls down both builder and edifice. You have heard it talked of Castles built by day, and still (no man knows how) pulled down again by night. That fabulous report is mystically true of the worldlings hope: what ever he erecteth in the day of his prosperity, the night of his ruin shall overthrow.

Here are the two Cities: Omnis homo vel in coelis regnaturus cum Christo, vel in infernis cruciandus cum Diabolo. Everyone shall either reign with Christ in Heaven, or be tormented with the Devil in hell. But how then is it said, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself? therefore the whole world is reconciled. But Saint John contradicts it, Mundus positus in maligno, the whole world lieth in wickedness: therefore the world is not reconciled to this City. Here qui been distinguit, been doet; a proper distinction doth clear this difficulty. The world is sometimes taken for good, then Denominatio sequitur meliorem partem: often for evil, then Denominatio sequitur maiorem partem. In a word, saith Augustine, Amor Dei constituit Jerusalem, amor mundi Babylonem. The love of God entitles us to Jerusalem, the love of the world to Babylon. Thus may we distinguish the Citizens: for Bonos vel malos mores faciunt boni vel mali amores: Our good or bad loves, make our good or bad lives. There is no man which belongs not to one of these two Cities: No? To which of them belongs the Hypocrite? to Babylon? his face is toward Jerusalem. To Jerusalem? his heart is with Babylon. His misery is great: because he wears God's outside, the world will not be his mother: because he wears the worlds inside, God will not be his Father. He hath lost eart... for Heavens sake, and Heaven for earths sake. We have some such rushers into authority uncalled, vicious correctors of vice, that undertake to cleanse the Augean stables, perhaps somewhat the sweeter till themselves came in: officious Scauengers of iniquity. If with this loam they daub over their own debauchednesse, they are like dung, which is rotten and stinking of it self, yet compasseth the ground, & makes it fruitful. Or like the shepherds dog, that hunts the straggling sheep to the fold, yet is a dog still, and hath his teeth beaten out, lest he should worry them. Will you hear to what City hypocrites belong? The wicked servant shall have his portion with hypocrites, where shall be weeping, and gnashing of teeth. So then the Hypocrites home is the city of weeping and gnashing of teeth.

But in this blessed City God is King, Christ his eldest Son, the elect are his younger brethren, his Viceroy is Kings, Angels his Nobles, Just Judges his Magistrates, good Preachers his Ministers, holiness his Law, the godly his Subjects, Providence his government, Heaven his Court, and salvation his recompense.

Further observe, that if this City be God's, then so are all things in it. Whence I infer, that all sacred things in this City being God's, must not be violated. For the things in heau•...n they are safe enough, out of the Incrochers reach: but the holy things of this militant City are universally abused. Sacrilegium, quasi sacrilaedium, a profaning that is holy. Now holiness is ascribed to Persons, Places, or Things. Sacrilege may be committed, saith Aquinas, 1. Uel in Personam, against a person, when one Ecclesiastical man is abused. He that despiseth you, despiseth me. 2. Vel in locum, against a place, when the Temple is profaned. My house is called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieues. 3. Vel in Rem, when things dedicated to holy uses are perverted. You have robbed me in tithes and offerings. Simon Magus would have bought a power to give the holy Ghost (ϕ) imposition of hands. He would have given money for it, no doubt to have gotten money by it. No Spiritual things are to be bartered for money. Now Spiritual things are of four sorts.

1. Essentialiter, the gifts of God's Spirit, justification, sanctification, love, peace, patience, goodness, faith: Charismata salutis: which make those that have them spiritual.

2. Causaliter, The Word and Sacraments, which are the conduct-pipes to convey our souls those graces, from the fountain of all grace, Jesus Christ: The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.

3. Effectualiter, as power to heal, to work miracles, to excommunicate, to absolve: gifts not imparted to secular hands, but committed with the keys to the Church.

4. Per annectionem, such are spiritual Liuings and endowments: these are not to be profaned in buying and selling. Selling is like the sin of Gehesi; buying, like the sin of Simon Magus. Anathema danti, anathema accipi...nti. There is a curse to the giver, and a curse to the receiver. Now Sacrilege to these holy things of God is committed three ways.

1. Quando ausertur sacrum de sacro: when a holy thing is taken from a holy place: as the consecrated vessels out of the Temple. Felix seeing the costly Chalice Constantine and Constantius had bestowed on the Church, maliciously scoffed, What stately plate is there for the Carpenters Son? But he that had so base a conceit of Christ's blood, did himself nothing night and day but vomit blood, till his unhappy soul was fetched from his wretched carcass. We have too many of those, that like Belshazzar, with the riches of the Church have furnished their cup-boards of Plate.

2. Quando non sacrum de sacro, when a common thing is stolen from a sacred place. As if a thief breaks open a Church to steal some private treasure hid in it. So the Church-wardens may defraud the poor of the money in the box. It is the poor's, not sacred to the Church, yet is it sacrilege to embezzel it.

3. Quando sacrum de non sacro, when a holy thing is taken out of a common place: as when the Church is robbed of her possessions and endowments. O the mercy of God, what shall become of England for thus robbing God's City! Our Patrons are like those Christ whipped out of the Temple; yea worse: for they bought and sold in the Church, these buy and sell the Church it self. It is a snare to the man that devoureth that which is holy. A snare hath three properties. 1. It catcheth suddenly: Uzzah did but touch the Ark, and presently fell down dead. 2. It holds surely, Uzziah will offer Incense, but the Leprosy (which was his plague) held him to his dying day. 3. It destroys certainly, the earth swallowed Corah and his confederates, when the rest escaped.

The Prophet bestows a whole Psalm against this sin, Psalm 83. The Center of it, upon whom all the lines and projections of his invectives meet, are those ver. 12. that say, Let us take to our selves the houses of God in possession. He calls them God's enemies, tumultuous, proud, God-haters, ver. 2. Crafty enemies, with their plots, tricks, subtleties; much like our Impropiators legal▪ iustifyings. ver. 3. Confederate enemies, combining themselves to annihilate a Church; Come, let us cut thē off from being a Nation. ver. 4. endeavoring to extinguish the very Name of Israel; breaking down the pale, that the Bore the depopulator, and the wild beast the corrupt Patron, may waste and devour it. They would plow up the Universities, and sow them with the seed of Barbarism. Now mark how he prays for them. ver. 9. Do unto them, as unto the Medianites: who were by the trumpets and lamps so terrified, that they drew their swords one upon another: so that these by the trumpets of the Law, and lamps of the Gospel, might be awaked. As to Sisera & to Iabin at the brook of Kison: that great Captain, whom God delivered into the hands of a woman. ver. 11. Make their Nobles like Oreb, and like Zeeb: yea all their Princes as Zebah, and Zalmunna. All Princes, yet died violent and ignominious deaths, and became like dung for the earth. Doth he stay here? No, ver. 13. O my GOD, make them like a wheel, and as the stubble before the wind: Infatuate all their plots, turn their brains, and disperse their stratagems. Is he yet satisfied? No, ver. 14. As the fire burneth a wood, and as the flame setteth on fire the mountains; so persecute them with thy tempest. He useth imprecations to open the flood-gates of God's wrath; that like fire it might consume them, either naturally as fire burns the wood, or miraculously, as it enflameth the Mountains. ver. 16. Fill their faces with shame. If this be to take God's houses in possession, who dares lay sacrilegious hands upon them? Yet for all this, those men did not what they desired. Let us take, ver. 12. they said it, they did it not. Perhaps no thanks to thē, they would if they could. We have done it, taken, inhabited, inherited: as Elias said to Ahab; We have killed, & also taken possession. His tithes, his offerings, all his holy rites, yea his very Churches: we have gotten them, and led them captive away, bound in chains of iron, conveyed by deeds, grants, seals, fines, as if you would make sure, they should never return to the owner; God is robbed of them forever.

Shall I not visit for these things, saith the Lord? shall not my soul be avenged on such a Nation? What family, that hath had but a finger in these sacrileges, hath not been ruined by them? They have been more infortunate to the Gentry of England, then was the gold of Tholossa to the followers of Scipio. Remember the Proverb; He that eats the Kings goose, shall have the feathers stick in his throat seven years after. Justinian said; Proximum sacrilegio crimen est quod maiestatis dicitur. Treason is a petty sin in respect of sacrilege. Augustine seems to give the reason: Tanto grauius est peccatum, quanto committi non potest nisi in Deum. It is so much the more heinous, because it cannot be committed, but immediately against God himself. Well then, as the Philistines made haste to send home the Ark; and the Egyptians to rid themselves of God's people; so let us restore to God his dues with all speed. Otherwise, as he smote the Philistines with Emrods secretly, and the Egyptians with plagues publicly: so only himself knows what he hath determined against us. With what face canst thou expect an Inheritance from Christ in heaven, that detainest from Christ his Inheritance here on earth? Let us not so Iewishly with the spoils of Christ, purchase fields of blood.

It is much, if at all this any guilty soul tremble: but howsoever, like Pharaoh, when the thunder and lightning are done, they are where they were. O this is a difficult Devil to be cast out.

Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's. Reddite Deo sua, vt Deus restituat vobis vestra. Return unto God that which is his, that God may allow you that which is yours. We pay to the King Impost, Subsidies, and Fifteenes; so give we all these in a resemblance to God. The Lord's impost for all his blessings, is our gratitude. What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and bless the Name of the Lord. If we forget to pay this Impost, the commodity is forfeit; God will take it back. Our Subsidies are according to our parts. The subsidies of our eyes are our tears: he that pays not this tribute of rain, shall want the sun-shine of mercy. The subsidies of our mouths are our praises. Tibi omne os confitebitur. Lord open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise. The subsidies of our ears are attention to his word. Mary sate at Jesus feet, and heard his word. The subsidies of our heads are meditations of his power, justice, mercy, truth. The blessed man doth meditate in the Law of the Lord day and night. This reduceth Christianity to practice: a rare habit; and yet it is as possible to be good without it, as to swallow and never chew the cudde. A Sermon without consequent meditation may come to be remembered again in hell. The subsidies of our knees are geniculations. I bow my knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Stephen kneeled down & prayed, &c. If our knees be too stout to pay this tribute, heaven gate will be too low for our entrance. The subsidies of our hands are alms to the poor: the due payment of this interest shall bless and increase the principal. Give, and it shall be given you. To the King we pay Fifteenes, to God Tenths: these he hath separated to himself. The honest Pharisee could say, Tyth and be rich: the dishonest Christian says, Tyth and be poor. But what men get by this detinie, shall be their fatal destiny: they shall leave the gold behind them, but carry the guilt with them to everlasting fire. Rob not this City militant, lest God turn you from the City triumphant.

Of the living God.

This hath been an ancient attribute to God; living: and it is added here partly for distinction, partly for demonstration. First, it distinguisheth the owner of this City from other titular gods. For there be gods many, and lords many. The name of gods hath been given to men, to Idols, to lusts. Homines Dij mortals, Idola dij mortui, Libidines dij mortiferi. Men are gods dying, Idols dead, lusts deadly. There are

1. Dij deputati; reputed and deputed gods: such are Magistrates and Princes. I have said, Ye are gods: but these are mortal gods; ye shall die like men. You have your life from this living GOD: both the life of nature common with others, and the life of power superior to others. The powers that be, are ordained of God. Pilate received that power from God, whereby he unjustly condemned the Son of God. Thou couldst have no power against me, except it were given thee from above. We must give to those gods obedience, either active or passive: active when they command well, passive though they command ill. Otherwise we incur damnation for obstinate disobeying, as themselves have damnation for unjust commanding. These are momentary gods, as men are Kings on the stage, till the play is done.

2. Dij fictitij, feigned gods, as Mars the god of war, Neptune the god of the sea, &c. They were strange gods, that ran a whoring after women, made way to their lusts, if not by flattery, by blood. Scarce ranker villainy in the Devils, then was found in those gods. This the Philosophers objected against Paul, that he was a setter forth of strange gods. The superstitious Lystrians took Paul and Barnabas for such gods; Dij descenderunt: the gods are come down to us in the likeness of men. But Paul, verse. 15. points them to the living GOD that made heaven and earth. Those feigned gods are confounded by this living GOD.

3. Dij manufacti, gods made with men's hands; Idols, but these are dead gods. Yea, not only dead, but nothing. An Idol is nothing in the world. It is true that they have matter and form: the gold, brass, wood, or stone whereof they are made, be substances: they have something in esse naturae, nothing in esse vitae: they have stuff, but no life in them. They have eyes and see not, there is no breath in their mouths. S. Paul commends in the Thessalonians this happy conversion, from dead idols to the living God. O that it were as easy to confute Idolaters, as it is to confound Idols. Res hominis conculcat talem Deum. No Idol is so great a god, but the foot of man can kick it down.

4. Dij vsurpantes, usurping gods, devils. So Paul calls Satan the god of this world. Of the whole world? What is then left for God? Not so, he is Deus improborum, not elementorum: God of the wicked, not of the frame, of the world. The Prince of this world is already judged. A goodly god that is already judged! The God of peace shall tread Satan under your feet. Not you, but God shall tread him down (to your comfort) under your feet. Therefore give no place to the Devil: for there is no place for the Devil, but where it is given him.

5. Dij sensuales, sensual gods. Some make their belly their god, and delicate cheare his sacrifices. Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats, but God shall destroy both it and them. Others make gold and silver their gods: worse then Pagan Idolatry: they had gods of corn, and of wine, But These idols of silver, and of gold, which they made for themselves to worship, they shall one day castaway with malediction. Some make their wife a goddess, dote upon her with the extremest Idolatry: a fair coloured piece of clay hath more worship then the Lord of heaven. To some their Patron is a god: they more quake at his frown, then at all the curses in the Bible. These are not only dead, but deadly gods.

For demonstration, the owner of this City is the living God: both formaliter in himself, and effective to others, who only hath immortality. Only? Are not Angels and men's souls immortal? But God gives to them this immortality; only he hath it in himself. Therefore he is called the living God, and the God of life: there be three degrees of life, all given by this living God. 1. Universal, which consists of sense and motion: of this the beasts participate. Thou sendest forth thy Spirit, and they are created. 2. Rationall, a life proper to man, not to other earthly creatures. 3. Supernatural, which belongs only to the faithful. Christ himself is this life in us. Now live not I, but Christ liveth in me. Haec vita reponitur, deponitur nunquam. This life is laid up, but never lost. The world sees it not, because it is hid with Christ in God. We now feel it, live by it. But when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory.

Behold here with comfort the master we serve, the living God. Riches is a flying Master; it hasts away with the wings of an Eagle. Honor is a dying master, it brings a man to the sepulcher, and then goes back with the Heralds. Pleasure is a spilling Master; Woe to them that laugh, for they shall weep. Satan is a killing master, his wages is hell fire. But all in grace is living and enluing. Idols are dead, and never were alive: men are alive, but shall be dead: pleasures are neither alive nor dead: Devils are both alive and dead; for they shall live a dying life, and die a living death. Only the living God gives everlasting life.

Jerusalem.

This is the appellation of the City. As Canaan was a figure of heaven; either of them called the Land of Promise: so local Jerusalem is a type of this mystical City. There are many conceits concerning the denomination of Jerusalem. Jerome thinks that the former part of the word comes from the Greek 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Holy: because Jerusalem is called the holy City: But then there should be a mixture of two several languages, Greek and Hebrew, to the making up of the word. The Hebrews derive it better: they say, Sem called it Salem, Peace: and Abraham Iireh. The place where he attempted the sacrifice of his son, he called Jehovah-Iireh: The Lord will see. Thus put together it is Jerusalem, visiopacis. This is more probable, then from the Greek 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as Jerome: or from Iebus, as Pererius. This is evident from the 76. Psalm. ver. 2. In Salem is his Tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Zion. So that Salem & Zion were both in one place. The Jews have a Tradition; that in one and the same place Cain and Abel offered, in the same place Noah coming out of the Ark sacrificed, in the same place Abraham offered Isaac, in the same place stood Areunah's threshing floor which David bought, in the same place Melchizedek the Priest dwelt, in the same place Solomon built the Temple, and our Lord Jesus Christ was crucified.

But to let go ambiguities, Jerusalem is a City of Peace. This is plain, Melchizedek was King of Salem, that is, King of Peace. God's Church is a Church of peace. That of Plato over his door, is worth our remembrance. Nemo nisi veritatis et pacis studiosus •...trabit. Let none enter, but such as love peace and truth. Saint Paul is bold to his Galatians; I would to God they were even cut off that trouble you. Contra rationem nemo sobrius, contra Scripturas nemo Christianus, contra Ecclesiam nemo pacificus senserit. No sober man speaks against reason, no Christian against the Scriptures, no peaceable man against the Church. He that is not a man of peace, is not a man of GOD. Peace is the effect of patience: if men would bear injuries, and offer none, all would be peace. It is the greatest honor for a man to suffer himself conquered in that, wherein he should yield. Be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace be with you. A just reward; if we have one mind, and live in love and peace, the God of love and peace shall be with us.

Heavenly.

This City is on earth, but not of earth. This is not terrestrial Jerusalem: She is in bondage with her children. She was not only then under the Roman servitude literally: but according to Paul's meaning allegorically, she could not attain the liberty of the Spirit, but abideth under the wrath of God, and horror of conscience. But this Jerusalem is heavenly. I saw the holy City, new Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a Bride adorned for her husband.

Now it is called Heavenly in three respects; Of Birth, of Conversation, of Inheritance. Ortus coelestis quoad originem: progressus coelestis quoad conversationem; finis coelestis quoad translationem. Here is all heavenly. Jerusalem that is above is free, the mother of us all. In hoc quod dicitur sursum, originis altitudo: quod Jerusalem, pacis multitudo: quod libera, libertatis magnitudo: quod mater, faecunditatis amplitudo: quod nostrum omnium, charitatis latitudo. The Church in the Creed hath three properties; Holy, Catholic, knit in a communion. The word Above intimates, she is Holy: the word Mother, that she is knit in a communion: the word Of all, that she is Catholic.

Jerusalem is a type of the Catholic Church, in Election, Collection, Dilection. First for Election, The Lord hath chosen Zion. That out of all Cities, this out of all Nations. Ye are a chosen generation, a peculiar people: enclosed from the Commons of this world, God's own appropriation. 2. For Collection; that was walled with stone, this hedged in with grace. God planted a vineyard in a very fruitful hill: and he fenced it. It is well mounded, and the Citizens of it linked together with the Bond of peace. 3. For dilection; Beautiful for situation, the Palace of the great King: the Sanctuary of his holy worship, his Presence-chamber: the pillar and ground of the truth. There was the seat of David: here the Throne of the <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> Son of David, that openeth and no man shutteth, that shutteth and no man openeth. A heavenly City.

1. In respect of her Birth and beginning heavenly. For the Lord of heaven hath begat her of immortal seed by the word of truth. Art thou a Christian? behold thy honorable birth and beginning. Was it an honorable style, Troianus origin Caesar? Then much more, Coelestis origin sanctus: Every Saint is by his original heavenly. Bear thyself nobly, thou hast a celestial generation.

2. In respect of growth and continuance heavenly. Our conversation is in heaven: We live on earth, yet saith the Apostle, our conversation is expressly in heaven. Our affections are so set on it, that we scarce look upon this world: we so run to our treasure there, that we forget to be rich here: but like the Saints cast our money at our feet. Act. 4. Corpore ambulantes in terris, cord habitantes in coelis. Our bodies walk on earth, our hearts dwell in heaven. To the hating and despising world we answer; Nil nobis cum Mundo, nil vobis cum Coelo. We have small share in this world, you have less in the world to come.

3. In respect of the End. Ideo dicitur coelestis, quia coelum sedes eius. Our souls are never quiet, till they come to their wished home. Thus hath GOD blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places. The Church in her worst part is below, in her best above. Earth is Patria loci, but heaven Patria iuris. As Irishmen are dwellers in Ireland, but Denizens of England. We dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, but are ruled by the Laws of that supernall City. Father, my will is that those thou hast given me, may be with me where I am. Amator mortuus est in corpore proprio, vi...us in alieno. A Lover is dead in his own body, alive in another's. Animus velut pondere, amore fertur, quocunque fertur; saith August. Love waighes and sways the soul, whither soever it be carried. Exi de terra tua, said God to Abraham; Get thee out of thy Country: yea rather de terra non tua, from a Country that is none of thine, unto a Land that I will show thee; thy own Land, the kingdom of Heaven. Though man be called Earth, Earth, Earth; thrice with one breath: (earth by procreation, earth by sustentation, earth by corruption, saith Bernard) yet the Christian is not Habitator, sed accolaterrae; not a dweller, but a passenger on the earth. For here we have no continuing City, but we seek one to come. An Englishman that traffiques in Turkey, and gets wealth in Turkey, yet plants not in Turkey, but transports for England. A Christian what ever he gets on earth, treasures up in heaven. Socrates being asked what Countryman he was, answered, Sum ciues mundi, I am a Citizen of the world. But a Christian must answer, Sum ciues coeli, I am a Citizen of heaven. Forsake we this home-stall with a ready mind, when GOD calls us. And the Lord grant us so to live in this City of Grace, that we may all live forever in the City of Glory, through Jesus Christ.

To an innumerable company of Angels.

Behold one special dignity the Gospel brings us, Consociari Angels; to be made companions with the Angels. The incorporeal spirits are of two sorts; Celestial & Infernal. If we weigh the malignancy of the one with the benignitie of the other, we shall truly meditate this benefit. Infernal spirits are tempters to evil, and tormentors for evil. Homines seducunt, seductos damnant, damnatos torquent. They seduce mortals, seduced they damn thē, damned they torment them. Because they lost being like God, they strive to make men like themselves. The devil enhanceth his own damnation, to procure others. He knows himself irrecoverably lost, therefore is desperate. These are wretched companions; Lord grant us to know no more of them then by hearesay. But the good Angels strive by all means to uphold us in our integrity, to keep us in the fear of that God they know and worship: to preserve us from dangers whilst we live, and being dead to transport us to everlasting joy. Bless us O Lord with the society of these Angels forever.

Here we must consider two circumstances; Quales and Quoti: the Persons what they are, Angels: the number, how many they are, An innumerable company. First what they are, Angels. An Angel is an intellectual and incorporeal substance, free of will, a servant to God, & by his grace immortal in blessedness. Cuius substantiae speciem et terminum solus qui creauit, nouit. We cannot sufficiently know them whiles we are on earth; O may we one day see and know them in heaven. That we may receive comfort by this consorting with Angels, and understand what good they do unto us, let us consider in them these six particulars. Their nature, their knowledge, their power, their dignity, their distinction, their ministry.

1. Their nature; they are not qualities and motions, but spiritual substances, really subsisting. This their actions testify, running on God's commands; executing his hests, &c. They are not flesh and bone, yet sometimes have taken visible forms. Abraham entertaining three Angels, set meat before them, and they did eat. Theodoret says, they did take the meat simulatis manibus, and did put it into simulatum os: they seemed to eat, not in truth. But they had palpable and tractable bodies for the time, as appears plainly, verse. 4. by washing their feet. Thomas, thinks they assumed a true body, but non fuit vera comestura, it was not a true eating. But this is an idle opinion, for there may be a true eating, though the meat be not converted into the substance of the body. So our Savior did eat after his rising from death, yet no man thinks his meat was turned into his substance. It is safe to say with the Text, they did eat, and perform other offices of a body truly. Now this was by divine dispensation for a time, the better to accomplish their enjoined duties. Yet were these bodies no part of their natures, but only as garments are to us. But whence had they these bodies? They were either immediately created of God, or conflate of some presubsistent matter. What became of these induments deposed? Either as they were made of nothing, so resolved into nothing: or else turned into the first matter whereof they were composed: and so was also the meat they did eat. Thus they have been called men: Three men came to Abraham: The women that came to Christ's Sepulcher, found two men standing by them in shining garments. This is their nature, which in it self, saith Isodore, is mutable: for some of them fell from that blessed estate, and left their own habitation. But now for the rest, Seruauit eos incorruptos charitas aeterna: the eternal love of God hath made them unchangeable. For Christ hath reconciled all things to himself, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. This is their excellent nature, inferior to God, superior to man. In the Prophets vision, each of the Seraphim had six wings: with twain he covered his face, and with twain be covered his feet, and with twa... he did fly. They have two wings to cover their faces, as not able to behold the glory of God; and two to cover their feet, because we are not able to behold them in their excellency.

2. Their knowledge. Austin says, They are taught of God, in the eternal contemplation of whose truth, they are most blessed. Quomodo quae scienda sunt nesciant, qui scientem omnia sciunt? How should they be ignorant of such things as are fit to be known, that know him that knows all? Their knowledge is three-fold; Natural, Experimentall, and Reuealed. 1. Natural, received of God in their creation, endued with an extraordinary light above man. 2. Reuealed, as God according to process of time hath manifested to them. God revealed things to the Angels, they to the Prophets. 3. Experimentall, which they have acquired by observation: they mark God's doings. For it is certain, the Angels did not know all things from the beginning, which they know now. They knew not perfectly the manner of man's redemption. That mystery from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God: and is Now made known to the principalities and powers in heavenly places. Great is the mystery of godliness; God is manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of Angels. Res mira Angels, quanta hominibus! A matter worthy the wonder of Angels, much more of men.

There be things which yet the Angels do not know. 1. not the day of judgment. Of that day & hour knoweth no man, no not the Angels of heaven. 2. not man's heart. Thou Lord only knowest the hearts of all men. If Angels knew men's hearts, they were God's. 3. Neither do I think with Saint Augustine, that they know Quanti numeri supplementum de genere humano integritas illius civitatis expectat; what definite number of mankind must concur to the perfection of that heavenly City. Man is circumscribed in place, knowledge, and mortality. Angels are circumscribed in place and knowledge, not in mortality. God is not circumscribed in either place, knowledge, or mortality. Man knoweth much, Angels know more, only God knoweth all.

3. Their Power. Christ suffering himself to be apprehended, said he could command more then twelve Legions of Angels. Whereupon one notes the mightiness of his rescue: for every Angel is stronger then a Legion of men. They are said to excel in strength. Bless the Lord, ...e his Angels that excest in strength. Mighty Angels. The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty Angels. Mighty, but His: the original hath it, the Angels of his mighty power. Innumerable, first borne of Egypt were slain by one Angel. An hundred eighty five thousand Assyrians smitten by one Angel, 2. Sam. 24. Seventy thousand killed by one Angel. Therefore they are called Potestates, Powers. Powerful in themselves, but how mighty, when they are strengthened by the Almighty!

This is wonderful comfort to us; they are not weak that fight for us. Michael and his Angels fought against the Dragon, and the Dragon fought and his angels; but prevailed not. The Devil hath a raging malice, but no prevailing power. One Angel is too hard for many devils. But against the power of Angels it is objected, that a man prevailed against an Angel. Jacob had power over the Angell, and prevailed. Some had a sottish opinion, that this Angel was the Devil in Esau's likeness, and that by the power of a good Angel Jacob overcame. Now lest he should ascribe the victory to himself and his own strength, the Angel smote him on the thigh, so that he halted. But there is no mention made save of one Angel: he that wrestled with him, was the same that blessed him: he that blessed him, was the same that touched him: a good Angel, for an evil would never have blessed him. But indeed this Angel was the Son of God. 1. Because he blessed him, God blesseth, not Angels. 2. It is said, Gen. 32. 28. that he prevailed with GOD; and verse 30. that he saw God face to face: therefore it was God, not an Angel. Whether it were God or an Angel, you may see the power of faith, that it can prevail with mighty Angels, with almighty God. He that wrestled with Jacob, gave him power to overcome. Seipso fortior est, so God is stronger then himself. He could not prevail because he would not: he disposeth his power according to his will, not his will according to his power. Haste thee to Zoar, for I cannot do anything till thou be come thither. Let me alone, that I may consume them. As if Lot and Moses could hinder God. Faith & Prayer are manicles to his hands, whereunto he gives victory against himself.

4. Their dignity consists in two things; In respect of their Place, and of their Grace. 1. For their abode, it is in heaven. Evil Angels dwell below, they are cast down into hell: good above, The Angels do behold the face of my Father in heaven. They are heavenly Courtiers, and heavenly Quiristers, eternally singing Ichouahs praise. 2. In respect of their Grace, so that they are called the Angels of GOD: and are far more excellent then man. It is true that the Son of God dignified man's nature more then theirs: For he took not on him the nature of Angels, but the seed of Abraham. Timet Angelus adorari ab humana natura, quam videt in Deo sublima...am: The Angels refuse to be worshipped of man's nature, which they see GOD himself hath accepted. But though he took not their nature, yet he dignified their office: for he is often called by the name of Angel. The Angel that redeemed me, says aged Israel: the only redeeming Angel is Christ. The Angel that went with the Campe of Israel, is called, ver. 24. The Lord. Paul says expressly, it was Christ. 1. Cor. 10. 4. 9. He is called Angelus foederis, the Angel of the Covenant. I saw an Angel having the key of the bottomless pit: and he bound Satan: but only Christ can bind Satan, and hath the keys of death and hell. Thus Christ hath accepted the name of Angels, yet he took not on him the nature of Angels, but of man: no more then the Angels took on them the nature of man, when they appeared in an human shape.

5. Their distinction. Gregory collects from the Scriptures Nouem Angelorum ordines, nine several orders of Angels. Angels, Archangels, Virtues, Powers, Principalities, Dominations, Thrones, Cherubim and Seraphim. We grant indeed that there be certain distinctions & degrees in the Choir of Heaven: but whether distinguished by nature, gifts, or offices, none can determine. The Papists plead much for the Princedome of Michael above all other Angels. Their ground is Revel. 12. 7. Michael & his Angels fought &c. Bellarmine affirms, that ever since the fall of Lucifer, Michael is head of the glorious Angels: and the Rhemists collect from that place the reason, why Michael is ordinarily painted fighting with a Dragon. But the foolish Painter so well as wise Bellarmino, can tell us how Michael came to be chose in Lucifers room. Jude saith, the wicked Angels that left their habitation, are reserved in chains of darkness: but he tells us not, that such as did not fall are preferred to higher places, but rather continue still in their first estate and dignity. Indeed Jude calls Michael an Archangel, and Daniel Vnum de principibus, one of the principal Angels: but it can never be proved, that he was, is, or shall be Monarch, or head of all Angels. Themselves say, that the greatest Angel is used in the greatest Embassy: but Gabriel, not Michael, was sent for the contracting of that sacred match between the GOD of Heaven and the blessed Virgin. Therefore Gabriel, not Michael, should be supreme both in natural graces, and supernatural prerogatives. Indeed Christ is the Michael there mentioned: for the blessed Angels cannot be said to be any other Michaels Angels, then Christ. So August. Bulling. Marlor. Perhaps in the vision Michael & an host of Angels appeared to John, but they represented Christ and his members. Christus est Ecclesiae suae Promachus, Angeli eius Symachi: It is against the principles of holy belief, to ascribe this victory to Michael or any other Angel whatsoever. They overcame Satan by the blood of the Lamb, not by Michael, or any Angel.

6. Their ministry: from hence, some of the Fathers say, the Angels took their names. So Gregor. Angeli vocabulum nomen est officij, non naturae: Angel is a name of office, not of nature. The Inhabitants of that celestial Country are always Spirits, but cannot always be called Angels. Tunc solùm sunt Angeli, quando per eos aliqua nuntiantur: they are then only Angels, or (it is all one) messengers, when they are sent on some message. Therefore he concludes; Hi qui minima nuntiant Angeli, qui summa nuntiant Archangeli vocantur: They that are sent on business of less moment are called Angels, of greater importance Archangels. August. Ex eo quod est, Spiritus est: ex eo quod agit, Angelus est. They are Spirits in regard of their Being, Angels in regard of their Dooing. Good Angels, saith Isidor, are deputed for the ministry of man's salvation. God hath given man three helps: Sense to see danger near, Reason to suspect danger far off, Angels to prevent that he neither sees nor suspects. Now the ministry of Angels is three-fold; to God, to his Church, to his Enemies.

1. To God, which consists principally in two things. 1. In adoring, and ascribing glory to him. So the Seraphims cried Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts. An Army sung, Glory to God on high. The whole Choir of heaven, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive honor and power. 2. In standing in his presence, ready at his command. They do his commandments, hearkening to the voice of his Word. For this promptnes of obedience we pray, Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Quod oramus, agamus. Thus Angels were messengers, that Christ should be conceived. Luke 1. 31. that he was conceived. Mat. 1. 20. that he was borne. Luke 2. 11. that he was risen. Luke 24. 4. that he was ascended. Act. 1. 11. These were great mysteries, therefore were confirmed with the testimony of Angels.

2. To the Church. Are they not all ministering Spirits, sent forth to minister for them, who shall be heirs of salvation? And by this their ordination to service the Apostle shows, how infinitely far the preeminence of Christ transcends theirs. But did not Christ put upon him the form of a servant? Doth not himself profess, that he came not to be ministered unto, but to minister? The answer is easy; Non esse hoc naturae, sed voluntariae exinanitionis: This was not a natural or enforced, but a willing abasement of himself. Humilitatem non habitam induit, celsitatem habitam non exuit. He put on an humiliation that he had not, he did not put off the glory that he had: But the Angels were created to this end, that they should serve; Totamque conditionem sub ministerio contineri. Istis natural, illi aduentitium. To them it was necessary, to Christ voluntary. Now then ministry to the Church is three ways considerable.

1. In this life, and that to our Bodies, and to our Souls. 1. To our Bodies: for they necessarily tend to the preservation of our temporal estates, even from our Cradles to our Graues. This is true in Doctrine, and in Example. In Doctrine: There shall no evil befall thee, nor any plague come nigh thy dwelling. Why, how shall we be protected? ver. 11. Angels mandabit; For he shall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone. In example: an Angel comforts, directs, feeds Elias. Angels pluck Lot out of Sodom. An Angel adviseth Joseph to fly into Egypt with Jesus. Abraham so encouraged his servant, The Lord will send his Angel before thee. Jacob went on his way, and the Angels of God ...et him. Peter was in prison, and the Angel of the Lord freed him.

2. To our Souls, furthering the means of our salvation. The Law was given by them, saith Stephen. Ye received the Law by the disposition of Angels. GOD makes them instruments to convey knowledge to his Church. It was God's charge; Gabriel, make this man to understand the Uision: it was the Angels performance; Daniel, I am come forth to give thee skil and understanding. Saint John acknowledgeth in his Revelations, that an Angel shown him those things. They preserve us in the true worship of God, and cannot endure any attribution of his glory to a creature, no not to themselves. When John fell down at the Angels feet to worship him, he prevented him; See thou do it not. They rejoice in our conversion; There is joy in the presence of the Angels of God, over one sinner that repenteth. They joy in this for two causes. 1. To behold the glorious fruit of their labors: for it delights a man to see the works of his hands prosper. GOD hath sent them to guide us to good, to gard us from evil: when we follow their guidance, they rejoice. Let us hate to sin, as we would not wish to bring grief to the thresholds of heaven. 2. That their number might be made up again. They lost a number of Spirits, they are glad to have it made up with Souls. The Angels joined company with men, praising God on earth: so they delight to have men made their fellow-Choristers in heaven.

2. At the end of this life to carry our souls to heaven. When the beggar died, he was carried by the Angels into Abraham's bosom. He that in life was scorned of men, and had no companions but the dogs, is so regarded of God, that he is garded by Angels. He that could neither go, nor sit, nor stand, is now carried: not on the shoulders of men, as the Pope the proudest on earth, but he rides on the wings of Angels. He is carried to a glorious Port, by gracious Porters.

3. At the last day, Christ shall send his Angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together the Elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. These are those Reapers, that in the time of harvest must gather the tares to the fire, and the Wheat to God's barn.

This is their ministry to us. But it is the Lord, that ordereth all our steppes: he spreads the gracious wings of his providence over us: and the Lord Jesus Christ is all in all unto us. Now the rule is, Non multiplicanda Entie sine necessitate; and Frustra fit per plura, quod fieri potest per pauciora. It seems then the help of Angels is more then needs. For he that keepeth Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. I answer, that Angelical custody doth not extenuate, but extol God's goodness and Greatness towards us: for this is but the execution of his high & holy Providence. It is the wisdom of the King, that governs all the Cities and Castels in his Dominions: yet he leaves not these unfurnished of men and munition, to withstand the enemies invasion. The devils range and rage against us in every corner, therefore God hath ordained for our gard an Host of Angels. The Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them. True it is that God is able to defend us himself by himself, through that immediate concourse that he hath in all things. But to show that the Almighty God being tied to no means, doth yet work by means, to uphold the weakness of our natures. A Prince sees his little children besieged, and sends his stronger sons, able soldiers to relieve them. Their help to us is certain, though not visible: we cannot describe it, nor prescribe it, but we feel it in the success: they preserve us. Against the Syrian band, the mountain was full of horses, and chariots of fire, to defend Elisha. Neither is this all, but to manifest his abundant goodness to mankind. What is man, O Lord, or the son of man, that thou so (gardest and) regardest him? They are dust and vanity, and rottenness, yet the Lord sends his glorious Angels, his Pages of honor, and Princes of his Court, for their messengers and ministers. As if a King should not only give his subject a charter and Patent of safe conduct, but also sends his own gard to attend him. So the Lord honors us with his own gard royal through Jesus Christ.

3. To enemies; not for their safety, but for the execution of God's judgments on them. The huge Army of Sennacherib was overthrown by an Angel. Indeed they will not the destruction of any man, further then the Justice of God ordains it. But sometimes they are sent out for the protection of the very wicked: so Daniel speaks of the Grecians Angel, and of the Persians Angel. The Romists allot a particular tutelar Angel to every College and Corporation: yea to the generation of flies, fleas, and ants: yea to every Infidel kingdom such an Angel: yea to Antichrist; lastly, even to hell it self. Sure then they will not pinch themselves: they appoint to the Pope two principal Seraphims, Michael and Gabriel, ever attending his Person. For that Michael is the chiefest, Victorellus produceth two very equal witnesses: the Roman Liturgy, and Tasso's Jerusalem: as a worthy Divine observed. To the Conclauē they assign one special assistant Angel. But me thinks, as they Ideate their Hierarchy, this Angel should desire the room, and become a suter to the holy Ghost to name him Pope in the next Conclauē. For by this means he doth wonderfully enlarge his Diocese, having all the lower world under him; all particular Angels of special Societies subject to him: yea all the Archangels and Principalities officed to several Estates, must concur to his gard and assistance.

The truth is, God sometimes allows the help of Angels to the very reprobates: but to this scope & purpose, Populs sui promouere salutem, to further the welfare of his own people. For all the achievements and victories, which come to the heathen by help of Angels, are intended not for their good, but the good of the Saints. It is for the Son of God's sake they minister to us: and to none do they perform these comfortable services, but to the Elect in Jesus Christ.

Thus you see what these Angels are; now let us consider how many. An innumerable company. The original is Myriads. Myrias is ten thousand; innumerable: a finite number is put for an indefinite. Thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him. I heard the voice of many Angels round about the Throuē, and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands. Gregory thinks there are so many Angels, as there are Elect. Super...a illa ciuitas ex Angels et hominibus constat: ad quam tantum credimus humanum genus ascendere, quantos illi... contigit electos Angelos remansisse. Vt scriptum est; statuit terminos Gentium iuxta numerum Angelorum Dei. So many Angels, saith he, as fell from heaven, so many souls shall go up to heaven.

It is a question much disputed, whether besides the protection of Angels in common, every particular man have one particular Angel for his Guardian. I find many of the Fathers allotting everyone a particular Angel. Isidor. Singulae Gentes praepositos Angelos habere creduntur: imo omnes homines Angelos suos. Origen, Basil, Jerome, Chrysostom, Theophylact, Gregory Nyssen, Primasius, Justin Martyr, Augustine, most of the Schoolmen, and some Protestant Divines: all conclude that every man from his birth, or especially from his Baptism, hath a particular Angel. I will not dispute it, yet I must doubt it; because I see no clear ground in the Scriptures to prove it. The two chief places cited are these, Math. 18. 10. Despise not these little ones, for their Angels behold the face of my Father in heaven. This place Cajetan and others expound, not that every little one hath a peculiar guardant Angel, but Omnes omnibus; that all the Angels take care of all God's little ones. As the Scriptures construe it self; All the Angels rejoice at the conversion of one sinner. The other place is, Acts 12. 15. Peter being vnexpectedly delivered out of prison, came to Mary's house where the Saints were gathered together. Rhoda hearing his voice, ran in, and told them how Peter stood at the gate. They said to her, Thou art mad: but when she constantly affirmed it, they said, It is his Angel. I answer that the Disciples amazed at the strange report, spake they knew not what. On the like reason, because Peter transported in beholding Christ transfigured, said, Let us build here three Tabernacles: some might infer that Saints departed dwell in Tabernacles. Because the two sons of Zebede desired to sit one at Christ's right hand, the other on his left in his kingdom; they might have concluded that Christ was to be a temporal King. Or because the Disciples seeing Jesus walking on the Sea, in their troubled minds, said It was a spirit; others might prove that spirits walk. Omne dictum sancti non est dictum sanctum. All are not Christian truths, that true Christians have spoken. Dicunt errores non Christiani, sed homines: they err not as they are Christians, but as they are men.

But it is objected, that they spake after the common opinion of men in that age. We reply, that in that age it was a common opinion that dead men walked: so it appears by Herod hearing the fame of Jesus; This is John the Baptist, he is risen from the dead. Uox populi is not ever vox Dei: common errors are no rules of truth. And if the place were so manifest, as they could wish it, why might it not rather be understood thus? It is his Angel, that is, some Angel that God hath sent for his deliverance. Sometimes many men have but one Angel, other times one man hath many Angels. Exod. 14. 10. There was but one Angel for many people. 2. King. 6. 17. There were many Angels for one man. Let us now make some uses concerning this discourse of Angels. These may be twofold; some for imitation, others for application.

First for imitation; there are three things specially to be observed in Angels: Pureness of substance, Readines of obedience, Feruour of Charity. These are covertly implied from Psal. 104. He maketh his Angels spirits, his ministers flaming fire. Spirits, there is the Purity of their substance: ministers, there's the Readinesse of their obedience: Flame of fire, there's the heat of their Charity. Thus were the Cherubims of the Tabernacle made, figuring these three virtues in the Angels. Exod. 25. First, they were made of Pure gold. ver. 18. This shows the excellency of their substance, for gold is the purest and best of metals. To this God's own Word is compared: We will make thee borders of gold, with studdes of silver. Secondly, they had two wings stretched out, to witness Promptitudinem obedientiae; Gabriel did fly swiftly. Of all creatures the winged are the swiftest. O that I had wings like a Dove, then would I fly away, and be at rest. The most suddenly transient thing, riches is compared to a winged creature: Riches makes it self wings like an Eagle. Thirdly, they were made with their faces one towards another, to manifest the truth of their love; not like proud men turning away their countenance from their brethren. Lastly, though one were toward another, yet both toward the Mercy-seat: beholding him in sight, to whō they were beholden in duty.

Thus we see, 1. that their nature is pure; and this their mansion declares, which is heaven: for into it shall enter no unclean thing. They are shining and singing stars: When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy. Heaven like fire, Similem sibi reddit ingredientem, makes that it receives like it self. 2. That their obedience is ready and swift, their very name imports, Angels. Aquo dominatio, ab eo denominatio: for a name is given from some supereminent quality. He rode upon a Cherub, and did fly. 3. That their Charity is great, appears by their busy protecting us, grieving at our falls, rejoicing at our perseverance in good, & helping us forward to salvation. Let us imitate them in four things.

1. In Purity: nothing is more pleasing to God. It hath the blessing of this life, & of the life to come. Of this life; Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a pure heart. God is good to the whole world with his common benefits, better to Israel with extraordinary blessings, but best of all to the Pure in heart with his saving Graces. Of the life to come: Who shall stand in God's holy place? he that hath clean hands, and a pure heart. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. There is no joy like to this beatifical vision, to see God is the height of happiness. But so shall the wicked; they shall see him whom they have pierced. Divines usually distinguish of that sight: They shall see the Son of man coming in a cloud; they shall see him as man, not as God; as their just Judge, not merciful Savior.

2. In Piety and obedience, wherein the Angels are ready and speedy, resolute and absolute. As they help us to command the creature, so let them teach us to obey the Creator. They fly when God sends them: true obedience hath no lead at the heels. Paul herein was like an Angel; having his Commission, he stood not to confer with flesh and blood. Quantum morae addis, tantum obedientiae detrahis. So much as a man adds to delay, he takes away from obedience. The truly obedient man doth not procrastinate: Sed statim parat aures auditui, linguam voci, pedem itineri, manum operi, cor praecipienti. He instantly prepareth his ear for the message: Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth. His tongue giveth a ready answer to the question: Simon, lovest thou me? Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. His foot is shod for the journey; his feet be shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace. His hand is fit for the work, Abraham stretched forth his hand to slay his son. His heart is pliable to the Commander: Paratum cor: O Lord, my heart is ready.

3. In Charity: Angels look upon and love one another, and all love us: Let this teach us to love them & our selves. Do they seek our peace, and shall we uncharitably war? It was the Angels song, Luke 2. Pax in terris, Peace upon earth: war with none but with Antichrist & the devil. The Angels have no need of our love, we of theirs. Love we that on earth, which shall dwell with us forever in heaven, Charity.

4. In humility: those glorious spirits stoop to do us service, let us not think it bad or base to serve one another in love. No one man can so far exceed another, as the Angels excel the best men: do they abase themselves to our succor, and shall we in a foolish pride soorne our brethren? The haughty piece looks on the poor betwixt scorn and anger; Touch me not, I am of purer mould: yet Mors dominos seruis; blended together in the forgotten grave, none makes the finer dust: we cannot say, such a Ladies rottenness smells sweeter then such a beggars. Come down thou proud spirit, deny not succor to thy distressed brother, lest God deny his high Angels to succor thee. Thus for imitation, now for application, learn we other uses.

1. This is terror to the wicked, who contemn and condemn the righteous. Despise not these little ones, for their Angels are with my Father in heaven. Beware you that scoff at poor Innocents, their Angels may plague you. They for their parts may be content to put up abuses, and to forgive injuries: but their Angels may take vengeance. Herod vexed certain of the Church, killed

James with the sword, and seeing it please the Jews, he took Peter also. They could not help this; but their Angels did: for an Angel of the Lord smote him that he died. Thou mayest have evasion from the executioners of men, but no protection against the Officers of GOD. When they are bidden to strike, they will lay on sure strokes. We will destroy this place, for the Lord hath sent us to destroy it.

2. They teach us devout reverence, so to behave our selves as in the sight and presence of holy Angels. The consideration of so blessed a company, doth not only Confer fiduciam, and afferre deuotionem, but infer reuerentiam; saith Bernard. When to Jacob in his dream was presented that Ladder, and the Angels ascending and descending on it: wakening he says; How fearful is this place! This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. Seneca said, that the conceit of Cato and Plato, & such grave men in our company would restrain us from evil: but what are these to the holy Angels of heaven? We are a spectacle to the Angels: they are observers and witnesses of all our actions. For this cause the woman ought to have power on her head, because of the Angels. This is not to be understood of offense only given to the Ministers of the Church: but to signify that a woman throwing off the veil of modesty, and token of subjection to her husband, doth make even the Angels of heaven witnesses of her dissolute contumacie. The Angels are present with thee when all men on the earth are absent from thee. I ask thee, when thou pollutest the marriage bed, attemptest an homicide, plottest a treason, forgest a writing, wouldest thou then have the Angels present with thee, or absent from thee? If thou desirest them present, why dost thou offend them by thy turpitudes? If absent, thy protectors are gone, and the devils would easily confound thee. Non facias coram Angelis Dei, yea coram Deo Angelorum: Do not that thing before the Angels of God; yea before the GOD of Angels; which thou wouldest shame to do in the sight and presence of an earthly man.

Yet let us mark here by the way, that albeit the Angels deserve our reverence, yet they desire not our adoration. Indeed the evil Angels request it: it was a special boone which the Devil begged of Christ, to fall down & worship him. But the good refuse it; See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow servant; saith the Angel to kneeling John. As we usually come too short in our due reverence to the Angels; so the Papists go too far in undue adoration. They have a set prayer for it: Angele Dei, Custos mei me tibi commissum lege super...a, semper rege, custodi gubernata. This sacrilegious honor those holy spirits refuse: they take no charge of such superstitious souls. Accipiunt commissum, non arripi...nt in concessum. Honorandi, non adorandi sunt Angeli. Let them be honored, but not adored. Love and reverence the Angels, only worship God and Jesus Christ.

3. This declares to us the excellent company that is in heaven. Were the place less noble and majestic, yet the company it affords is able to make the soul right blessed. We are loath to leave this earth for the society of some friends, in whom we delight; yet we are all subject to mutual dislikes. Besides the meeting of those good friends again in heaven, there be also glorious Angels. There is nothing in them but is amiable, admirable: nothing in possibility of changing our pleasures. There thou shalt see and converse with those ancient Worthies, Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, Confessors, Fathers of the Primitive times, all of them out-shining the stars: where our love shall be as eternal, as is our glory. There we shall live familiarly in the sight of those Angels, whom now we receive good from, and see not. Yea there is the fountain of all felicity, that Savior of ours, whose grace only brings us to the blessed vision of the whole Trinity. Neither can there be a higher happiness, then the eternal fruition of Jesus Christ. Let this teach us all to bless our God that hath thus advanced us. Man is corporeal dust; O that this clay of ours should come to dwell with those incorporeal spirits! We shall be as the Angels of God in heaven. Sicut, non ipsi; like Angels, though not Angels in nature. Communicatione spei, non speciei: we have now a communion of hope with them, hereafter of glory. To this place, O thou Creator of men & Angels bring us through Jesus Christ.

To the general assembly, and Church of the first borne which are written in Heaven.

Our Apostle hath spoken of the Churches glory typically, and topically: now he describes it materially. First, the Essence of it, what it is; The Church. Secondly, the Property of it, what kind of Church it is; General or Catholic. Thirdly, what are the parts of it, & of whom it consists; Of the first borne written in Heaven.

The Church. This word is taken in diverse significations. For the material Temple. 1. Cor. 11. 18. When ye come together in the Church, I hear there are divisions among you. For the faithful domestikes of one Family. 1. Cor. 16. 19. Aquila and Priscilla salute you, with the Church that is in their house. For the professors of one Province; The Church of Corinth, of Ephesus, &c. For some famous company of Believers gathered together in one place. 1. Cor. 14. 4. He that prophecieth, edifies the Church. For an Ecclesiastical Senate or Synod. Mat. 18. 17. If he shall neglect to hear them, Dic Ecclesiae, tell it unto the Church. For the whole number of the Elect. Mat. 16. 18. Upon this Rock I will build my Church. Acts 5. 11. Great fear came upon all the Church. 1. Tim. 3. 15. Which is the Church of the living GOD, the pillar and ground of truth. Here first let me premise three circumstances concerning the Church.

1. Though it be a General Assembly, yet it is but one. There be threescore Queens, and fourscore Concubines, and Virgins without number: but my Dove, my undefiled is but one: she is the only one of her Mother. Indeed there be two parts of this One Church: Triumphant in Heaven, and Militant on Earth. The Triumphant part is a company of Justified spirits, triumphing over the flesh, world, and devil: spirits, I say, for bodies are not yet ascended. They have two happy privileges. 1. To rejoice in the conquest over sin and death: the most righteous man living is in praelio, in a continual warfare. But so are the other: for Saint John saith, There was war in Heaven. This must be understood of heaven on earth; where there is no truce with Satan; Pax cum Deo, bellum cum diabolo: We have peace with God, but (on this condition, that) war with the devil. Therefore so run the promises, Uincenti dabitur: To him that overcomes, shall be given Palms: to show that they had been warriors, are now conquerors, 1. To praise God continually, and to sing Amen: Blessing and glory, thanksgiving and honor be unto God forever and ever.

The militant part is a company of men living under the cross, and desiring to be with Christ. They suffer, and this is their way to glory; through much tribulation entering into the kingdom of God. They desire dissolution, being willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord, not simply and absolutely desiring death: but first that they might leave sinning, and so cease to displease God: and then to come nearer to their blessed Savior, whose love hath ravished their hearts. Now this militant Church may have many parts: as the Ocean sea is but one, yet distinguished according to the Regions upon which it lies. So there is the Spanish Ocean, the English Ocean, the German Ocean. There is a Church in England, a Church in France, a Church in Germany: yet there is but one militant Church. Multa Ecclesiae, vna Ecclesia; saith S. Augustine. One Sun, many beams; one Kingdom, many shires; one tree, many branches.

2. We must note, that Christ is the alone head of his Church, and can have no other partner to share with him in this dignity. Jesus Christ is the corner stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together, grows unto an holy Temple in the Lord. He doth not only by his authority govern it, but also by his grace quicken it: so that we live not, but Christ liveth in us. Let us hold the head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, increaseth with the increase of God. He requires no deputy, he needs none. For wheresoever you are gathered together in my name, I am in the midst of you. Now every Commission ceaseth in the presence of him that gives it.

It is therefore as great arrogancy in the Pope to call himself Caput Ecclesiae, Head of the Church; as for a subject to keep himself in commission in the presence of the King. But they distinguish of heads; there is a Principal, and a Ministerial Head. Christ is not so weak in himself, or so respectlesse of us, as to need any Ministerial head. Indeed there be Heads Materialiter, who are no other then principal members. So Saul was called Head of the Tribes, Psal. 18. 43. Thou hast made me the head of the heathen, 2. Sam. 23. 8. The Tachmonite head of the Captains. Nehem. 11. 16. Iozabad head of the Levites. The eldest was called head of the family, Exod. 6. 14. These be the heads of their fathers houses. But there is a Head Formaliter, to give sense, motion, virtue, governance: this none but only Christ.

3. We must know, that there is no salvation out of this Church; such as never become members of it, must eternally perish: they that are true members, shall be saved. If they had been of us, they would have continued with us: but they went out from us, that it might be manifest they were not of us. Without are dogs and scorners, &c. All out of the Ark perished in the waters. The Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved. First, because there is no means of salvation out of it; no word to teach, no Sacraments to confirm. And especially because out of the Church there is no Christ, and out of Christ no salvation. Who have not the Church their Mother, cannot have God their Father. This teacheth us to honor our Mother, and like little children to hang at her breasts for our sustenance. Sucke and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations, milk out and be delighted with the abundance of her glory. Run not to strange nurses for poison, when you may have pure milk of your own mother. Desire like babes, that sincere milk of the Gospel, that ye may grow by it. Qualis nutritio, talis complexio. The complexion of your manners, the disposition of your lives, will witness whose children they are.

The general assembly: this is the property of the Church; General. It is Catholic in three respects; of Time, of Persons, of Place. 1. Of Time, because the Church had a being in all ages, ever since the Promise was given to our first Parents in Paradise. If there had been a time when no Church had been on earth, the world should have then perished: for it stands for the Elects sake. 2. Of persons; for it consists of all degrees and sorts of men; rich and poor, Princes and subjects, bond and free. There is no order nor state excluded, if they exclude not themselves. Christ is the Propitiation for our sins. He may be so indeed for the sins of John, and the Disciples, but how appears it for mine? yes; not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world; every condition of believers. 3. Of Place, it is gathered from all parts of the earth; especially under the New Testament. Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole world. When Christ gave his Apostles their Commission, he gave also the whole world for their Parish. Go teach all nations, and baptize, &c.

Thus we see the property of this Church, Catholic or General. It is one, but not tied to one time, nor one place, nor one person: it is Catholic to all times, to all places, to all persons. Augustine says that the Donatists in his days would have tied the Church to Cartenna in Africa: as the Papists in our days to Rome in Italy. How is it then a General assembly? Thus that Antichristian rabble, which have almost nothing in their mouths but the Church, the Church; yet do mostly infringe the liberties of the Church, and hedge it in. All of them have made the Catholic Church, to be nothing else but the Roman Church; and some of them the Roman Church to be nothing else but the Pope. So in effect Papa virtualiter est •...ota Ecclesia; say they. The Anabaptists imagined a Church like the Ticke, all body and no head: the Papists have made a Church like the Toadstoole, all head and nobody. What a monster is their Pope, that will be all in all; eye and tongue, body and head, & tail too? As Caligula took off the head of Jupiter, and set on another of his own: so they have smitten off Christ's head, and set on the Pope. Let them take their imaginary head: say we only to Christ: Whom have we in heaven but thee? and on earth none besides thee. Our dependence be forever on our Head the Lord Jesus.

Before I leave this point, I desire to express two things: one for distinction, the other for instruction. First for distinction betwixt this General assembly, and particular Churches: then for instruction, to show who be true members of this Catholic Church.

1. The main difference between them consists in this: that the Catholic Church is always invisible, the members thereof only known to God: particular Churches are sometimes invisible, and lying hid; other times manifest in the open profession of Christ's name. As the Moon is oft-soonest eclipsed or clouded, and often shineth in the full.

1. It lies hid through want of the word preached, and public administration of the Sacraments. So it was in the days of Elias, when he wished to die; I only am left. Strange Apostasy, when so notable a Prophet could not discern the Church! yet; verse. 18. I have left seven thousand, that never bowed their knees to Baal. So it was in the reign of Asa; For a long season Israel hath been without the true God without a teaching Priest, and without the Law. The Papists demand where our Church was before the days of Luther: we answer, that an universal Apostasy was over the face of the world, the true Church was not then visible: but the grain of truth lay hid under a great heap of popish chaff. But this invisibility doth not prove a nullity. They cannot impugn the antiquity of our Church, unless they convince themselves. For the Church of England holds no other doctrine then that the Church of Rome primarily did hold, and that which S. Paul delivered to them in sacred writing; Justification only by the blood of Christ. If they be fallen from this, who can blame us for falling from them? It was high time to leave them, when they left the Lord Jesus. So long as we preserve the truths antiquity, we must smile at their fond objection of novelty. The Church of God is Catholic, not Roman Catholic: that's just as foolish a phrase, as the by-word of Kent and Christendom. Particular and universal are contradictories. If we have anything from them, that they had from God; it is our blessing that we have kept it, their woe that they have lost it. Esau's blessing and birth-right is lost to himself, and given unto Jacob. They have not so much reason to boast, as we to rejoice.

Our Church had a substantial being before, but hath gotten a better being by the repurgation of the Gospel: which is maintained by our Christian Princes, justly styled Defenders of the ancient Faith. It was God's Floore before, though full of chaff: but now since he that hath his fan in his hand hath purged it, it is clearer in show and substance. It was before a wedge of pure gold, but usurped by the hands of Impostors: that by their mixtures, and sophistications for gain and sinister respects, augmented it into a huge body and mass. It had the tincture of gold still, but mingled with the dross of traditions, superstitions, will-worships. You ask where was the gold? show us the place. We answer, it was in that mass: now for extracting and purifying it from the dross, God gave us the touchstone of his word, which made it sound, & manifests it to be sound. The Lord doth not then forsake his: the time was that the whole world seemed to groan, factum se videns Arrianum, beholding it self made Arian; yet God had his number. Sardis is said to be dead, thou hast a name that thou livest, but thou art dead: yet there be a few names in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments. When ordinary means fail, by extraordinary the Lord gathers his elect. The Israelites in the wilderness wanted both Circumcision and Passover, yet GOD made supply by Manna, and the Pillar of the cloud.

2. A Church is visible when it flourisheth: not that the faith and secret election of men is seen; but there are apparent signs by frequenting the Sanctuary, and submitting themselves to the Ministry of the Word. Now this visible Church is a mixed company of men professing the faith. I call it mixed, for in it are both believers and hypocrites, corn and tares: it is a band of men, where be some valiant soldiers, and many cowards. It is called a Church from the better, not from the greater part. The ungodly, though they are in the Church, are not of the Church: as the superfluous humors in the veins are not parts of the body, but rather the sickness of it. These profess veram fidem, sed non vere; the true faith, but not truly. Hence it appears, that there be two sorts of members in the Church: members before God, such as beside the outward profession keep a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith unfeigned. Members before men, such as have only the color and husk of Religion, in heart denying the power of godliness: yet these are by us to be esteemed members, according to the rule of charity judging the best.

2. Now for Instruction, what I have to say consists in the examination of two points. First, whether the Church of England be a part of this Catholic Church: then next, whether the Church of Rome have the same prerogative.

For our selves; the most infallible mark of the true Church, is the right ministration of the Sacraments, and sincere Preaching the true Doctrine of the Gospel. That is the true Mother and Spouse of Christ, that brings forth children to him of immortal seed, by the Word of GOD which abideth forever: not of traditions, miracles, dreams; but of this incorruptible seed. And when they are borne anew, feeds them with sincere Milk out of her two breasts, the two Testaments. This you know in your consciences to be true in our Mother: she doth not give us pro lacte venenum, but milk; even the same that Christ himself put into her breasts. When we grow strong, she gives us meat, not bones: troubles us not with the subtleties of the Schools; that have Plus argutiarum quàm doctrinae, plus doctrinae quàm vsus: but Quod accepit a Domino, what she hath received of the Lord; neither more nor less, but just weight. She doth not say, Haec dicit Papa, but Haec dicit Dominus: not thus saith the Pope in his Decretalls, but thus saith the Lord in his Scriptures. She doth say the truth in Christ, and lieth not, her conscience bearing her witness in the holy Ghost. She doth not sophisticate truth, not mingle wine with water, not daub the walls of God's house with untempered mortar: not build upon the foundation straw & stubble: not adulterate the Word; like a lustful man, whose end is not to increase mankind, but to satisfy concupiscence. O then let us hang upon her lips, that preserve this true knowledge: and say with Peter; Lord, to whom should we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life.

Thus we have proved the truth of our Church by Scripture: but our adversaries oppose the sufficiency of this proof, by disabling the Scriptures. They say we cannot know Scripture to be Scripture, but by the testimony of the Church. It is false, for the witness of man subject to error, is nothing to the testimony of GOD that cannot err. Therefore the Scripture is called the Testimony, because it bears witness to it self. Besides, the Church hath her beginning from the Word, for there can be no Church without faith, no faith without the Word, no Word without the Scriptures. So the Church depēds on the Scripture, not the Scripture on the church. The Lawyer that hath only power to expound the Law, is under the Law. But they object, that Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the voice of the Church. Paul intends there not that general faith whereby we believe Scripture to be Scripture: but that justifying faith whereby we attain salvation. And this comes by the voice of the Church, not of it self, but as it is the ministry of God's Word. John is but Uox clamantis, Christ is Verbum clamans. Particular Churches have erred; therefore the best security from error is in the Scriptures.

This is a Lesbian rule, able to decide all Controuersies, and it is vitio hominum, by the fault of bad Interpreters that it doth not. For whether Aliorum incuriâ that despise it, or Aliorum iniuriâ that pervert it, it suffers martyrdom, and may not be heard declare it self. The Papist in expounding Scripture after his own fancy, makes himself Judge, not the Scripture. But all their drift is with God's loss to promoue the Popes gain. He must be Judge, yea he shall be an vnerring Judge. Yet if the Pope have this infallibility, I wonder what need there is of Councils. Here they fly to distinctions, as to familiar spirits. The Pope may err Argumentative, not Definitive: in his chamber, not in his chair: Personaliter, non Formaliter: as man, not as Pope. How prove they such an exposition of the Scripture? Here they fly to the Pope, he so expounds it. How prove they the Pope cannot err? Here straight they fly back again to Scripture; Peter, I have prayed for thee that thy faith shall not fail. These hang gether like a sick man's dream. Insequeris? fugio. Fugis? insequor. Yet thus they conclude against their own wills; whiles they only prove the Pope by the Scripture, spite of their teeth they prefer the Scripture above the Pope.

If this be so, that the truth of the Gospel being professed, believed, obeyed among us, manifest us against all adversaries, to be true members of this General assembly: then two subordinate questions offer themselves collaterally here to be handled. First, whether corrupters of our Truth, and disturbers of our peace are to be tolerated. Secondly, whether for some corruptions of doctrine, or vices in manners, it be lawful for any of us, to make separation from us.

1. Seditious and pestilent seedsmen of heresies are to be restrained. If a little leaven sour the whole lump, what will a little poison do? If Paul to his Galatians could not endure Christ and Moses together: how would he to his Corinthians, endure Christ and Belial together? He sticks not to ingeminate Anathema's to them that preached another Gospel. The Papists cry out against us for persecution: they that shame not to bely the Scriptures, will not blush to bely us. Their prosperity, their riches, their numbers among us, directly prove; that a man may be a Papist in England, and live. But if their religion turn to treason, shall it scape unpunished? A Papist may live, a Traitor may not live. To persuade that a Christian king at the Popes will may, yea must be decrowned or murdered: is this the voice of Religion, or Treason? If this be conscience, there is no villainy: if such an act merit Heaven, let no man fear Hell. I would ask a Papist, whether he be not bound by his religion to execute the Popes doctrinal will: whether if he bid him kill his King, he may refrain from that sacred blood, and not sin. If he refuse treason, he is not constant to his Religion: if he keep his Religion, he must not stick at any act of treason. So that who knows whether this day a mere Papist, may not on the Popes command tomorrow be a Traitor?

But say they, this a supposition as likely as if Heaven should fall: the Pope will never command it. I answer, that Popes have commanded it. But we hope his present Holiness will not: we were in a pitious case, if our security was no better then your hope. God bless our gracious Sovereign from ever standing at the Popes mercy. Why should such Seminaries of heresy, and Incendiaries of conspiracy be suffered? What atonement of affection can there be in such disparity of Religion? when some cry, God help us: others, Baal hear us. They to Angels and Saints, we to the Lord that made Heaven and Earth. But the event hath often proved, which of these could best hear prayers. As in that memorable fight on the Leuant Seas, of five English ships against eleven Spanish; they crying for victory to our Lady, we to our Lord: it seems, the Son heard better then the Mother, for the victory was ours. The Common-wealth that stands upon legs, partly of iron, and partly of clay, is never sure. One womb held Romulus & Remus in peace, one kingdom could not contain them.

But every man's mind is as free as the Emperors: Conscience is a Castle, and there is nothing so voluntary as religion: faith comes by persuasion, not by compulsion. Yield all this: and say with Tertullian; Nihil minus fidei est, quàm fidem cogere. And with Bernard; Suspendite verbera, ostendite vbera. Make a man in error rather blush, then bleed. But if they break the foundation, Non ferendi, sed feriendi. First speak to the Conscience by good counsel: but if that ear be stopped, shake the whole house about it. Speak to the ears of the inheritance, of the liberty, of the body; by mulct, by prison, by exile. Let the Liberty say to the Conscience, For thy sake I am restrained: let the Inheritance say, For thy sake I am empouderished: let the Body say, For thy sake I am afflicted. But because heresy dies not with the particular person, but kills also others: and Centum inficit, dum vnum intersicit. And because it strikes at the life of a Christian, that is his Faith; For the just shall live by his faith. Therefore pereat vnus, potius quàm vnitas. Haretici corrigendi ne pereant, reprimendi ne perimant. Heretics are to be corrected lest they damn themselves, to be restrained lest they damn others. Persecutio facit Martyrs, haeresis apostatas: plus nocuerunt horum togâ, quàm illorum galeae. Persecution made Martyrs, heresy makes Apostates: the Heretics words have done more hurt then the tyrants swords. Aperte sauit persecutor vt Leo: haereticus insidiatur vt draco. Ille negare Christum cogit, iste docet. Aduersus illum opus patientiâ, aduersus istum opus vigilantia. The persecutor rageth like a Lyon, the heretic insinuates himself like a serpent. To deny Christ he compels, this man instructs. Against the former we have need of patience, against the latter of vigilance.

Excommunication, bondage, exile have been thought fit punishments for heretics: fire and fagot is not God's Law, but the Popes Canon-shot. An heretic dying in his heresy cannot be saved: therefore Luther thinks, he that puts an heretic to death is a double murderer; destroying his body with death temporal, his soul with death eternal. But saith Augustine, Diligite homines, interficite errores: Love the persons, kill the errors. Presume on the truth without pride, strive for it without rage. Seueritas, quasi s...ua veritas: but verity and severity do not agree. Fire and sword may put to death heretics, but not heresies. See here the difference betwixt the Papists proceedings against us, and ours against them. They die not among us for refusing our faith: but us they burned (not for denying any article of faith, but) for not believing Transubstantiation. So strange an Article, that Bellarmino himself doubts whether it may be proved from Scripture or no: but that the Church hath declared it so to be. But though faith be above reason, yet it is not against reason. This is my body, saith Christ. Hoc, This bread: this Pronoun demonstrative they will have to demonstrate nothing. Hoc aliquid nihil est. How then? this nothing is my body: not this bread, but this nothing. Others will have something demonstrated to the understanding, nothing to the senses. Some will have a demonstration to the senses, nothing to the understanding: some partly to both: others expound it, This body: then it is thus; This body is my body: others say it is indiuidium vagum. But Quod multipliciter exponitur, communiter ignoratur. That which is so variously expounded, is generally unknown. The most judicious among them cannot explicate it.

Deque modo lis est non habitura modum.

What damnable cruelty then was it in them to burn silly women, for not understanding this their inexplicable mystery? Those gunpowder divines condemned others to the fire for not knowing that, which they never knew themselves. We teach such erring souls be corrected, that they may be converted: not be confounded. Excommunicated for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

2. Whether a separation may be justly made from our Church for some errors or corruptions of life. I know that diverse, who were once among us, never of us, have put out their own lights, indeed excommunicated themselves. What's their plea? that our assemblies are full of enormities. I answer, that the defects and corruptions of a Church must be distinguished: they are either in doctrine or in manners. For doctrine, some errors are Citra fundamentum, some Circa fundamentum, others Contra fundamentum. Errors beside the foundation trouble, errors about the foundation shake, errors against the foundation overturn all. So long then as no foundation is harmed, it is not lawful depart. until the Church separates from Christ, we must not separate from it. In two cases there is warrant of separation. First, when the substance of God's worship is quite corrupted. What agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols? when this is, ver. 17. Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, when Jeroboam had set up Idols in Israel, the Priests and the Levites left their suburbs and possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem. Secondly, when the substance of doctrine is quite corrupted. If any man consent not to the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, &c. From such, verse. 5. withdraw thyself. Paul in the Synagogue at Ephesus preached for the space of three months together. But when diverse were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way, he departed from them, and separated the Disciples. In these two cases lawful, not else.

For corruption in manners, they make not Nullam Ecclesiam, sed malam ecclesiam; not no Church, but a bad Church. Wicked Scribes sitting in Moses chair, and teaching the things he wrote, must be heard. Whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do: but do not after their works. Separate from their private society, not from the public assembly. But they charge us, that we deny Christ. I answer, Denial of Christ is double, either in judgment or in fact. Denial of Christ in judgment, makes a Christian no Christian: denial in fact, the judgment being sound, makes him not no Christian, but an evil Christian. When the Jews had crucified the Lord of life, they remained still a Church, if there were any on the face of the earth: and Jerusalem was still called the Holy City. To them belonged the promise, and to their children. To them pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants. I would to God this bloody issue were stanch'd: but what age hath not complained it? This mischief is intestine. Amara persecutio in cruore martyrum, amarior in pugna haereticorum, amarissima in malis moribus domesticorum. The persecution of Tyrants was bitter, the poison of heretics more bitter, but the evil lives of Christians most bitter of all. Many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, that they are enemies of the cross of Christ. Whereupon saith Augustine; How comes that great Champion to fall a weeping? Could he endure stripes above measure, prisons frequent, shipwrackes, perils by sea and land; among enemies, among false brethren; hunger, thirst, cold, weariness, painfulness: Did he fight with beasts after the manner of men; was he rap'd up among the Angels? Did he bear all these miseries? was he honored with all these mercies? and now does he weep? Yes, sin and sensuality was crept into the Church; and this made that vndanted spirit fall a weeping. Pax a Paganis, Pax ab H...reticis, nulla pax a falsis filijs. We have quiet from the Pagans, quiet from heretics, but no quiet from wicked and exorbitant professors. Our greatest enemies are they of our own house. Lord Jesus heal this plague.

Now we have proved and approved the truth of our own Church at home; let us examine whether the Church of Rome be also a true member of this Catholic Assembly. Errors that annihilate a Church, are of two sorts, some weakening, others destroying the foundation. Weakening error is the building of hay and stubble on the foundation: the stubble burnt, their souls may be saved. A man breaks down the windows of his house, the house stands though defaced: he pulls down the lead or tiles, the house stands though uncovered: he beats down the walls, the house stands though deformed? he plucks up the foundation, the house falls, and ceaseth to be an house. Those which destroy the foundation, are the overthrowing errors; by them a Church ceaseth to be a Church. Yet if an error be against the foundation, we are to consider the persons; whether they err of malice, or of weakness. If of malice, like Iannes and Jambres that withstood Moses, resisting the truth; it is no longer a Church. But if of weakness, we must not so peremptorily conclude: for Paul writes to the Galatians as a Church of God, though they were perverted to another doctrine; embracing a fundamental error of Justification by works. The Church of Rome doth willfully & obstinately destroy the foundation, therefore may be concluded for no Church. If they will be justified by the works of the law, they are fallen from Grace.

Let us hear how they quit themselves. First, they would do it by retorting all this back upon us: they tell us flatly, that we are no Church, and thus they prove it. They say, we have no Bishops, so no Ministers, so no Sacraments, therefore no Church. Here they clappe their wings, and crow, Victory, Victory. As Manasseh against Ephraim, and Ephraim against Manasseh, and both against Judah. So they have set our brothers against us, us against our brothers, Papists against us all. Behold the exigent we are in: the Papists say we have no Ministers, because they are not made by Bishops; the Puritans say we have no Ministers, because they are made by Bishops. Which of these speak true? Neither. First to answer the Puritan; Bishops may make Ministers: Paul chargeth Timothy to lay hands suddenly on no man: therefore he may lay hands on some. To Titus: For this cause I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldest ordain Elders in every City. Now we have true Bishops, therefore in God's name allow us to have true Ministers. For the Romanists, that tell us we have none of these, how strangely do they bely us, and themselves? Oportet mendacem esse memorem. Have they forgot their obrayding us, that we have all our Episcopal rites from them? All our ministerial orders from them? If we have it from them, then we have it. They are Bristo's own words in his Motiues: The Protestants are Apes of the Papists, the Communion-book is made altogether out of the Mass-book. Why then do they not communicate with us? It is not for conscience, but for malice. Let it be granted, that we have this from them: but then they must grant withal, that Jacob by God's disposing hath gotten Esau's Birthright. So the Israelites were fain to go to the Philistines to sharpen their scythes. We abhor not Episcopal ordinations, but Papal. Our substance from them, their circumstances to themselves. Papales ordinationes sunt foedaenundinationes. We have their gold, they have left themselves nothing but Tinkers metal. Let them keep their own, give us ours.

But further they object the continuance of their succession. We answer, the succession of Person is nothing worth without the succession of Doctrine; which they want. If it were by us granted, what never shall be by them proved, that Peter is succeeded by the Pope: Yet as Matthias succeeding Judas was never the worse, so the Pope succeeding Peter is never the better. Perijt dignitas Cathedrae, quando veritas Doctrinae. But they say that in the Roman Church, Baptism is rightly for the substance of it administered; therefore it is a true Church. Indeed they have the outward washing, but quite overthrown the inward; which stands in justification by the imputed righteousness of Christ. But the Samaritans had Circumcision, yet were they not a true Church. Baptism severed from the preaching of the Gospel, is of no more force, then a seal when it is plucked off from the Indenture. Indeed truly, though they have Baptism, yet it belongs not to them, but to a hidden Church among them. For doubtless God hath his chosen and sealed number in the midst of those Apostates. As the light in the Lanthorn belongs not properly to the Lantern, but to the Passenger. That Sacrament in the assembly of Rome, is like a true man's purse in a thieftes hand: it no more proves them a true Church, then that purse proves the thief a true man. The Lord of his goodness, that hath given them the sign of the Grace, give them also the grace of the sign, true washing away of their sins in the blood of Christ.

Some have objected, and they seem to be kind friends to Rome: that Antichrist must sit in the Temple, that is the Church: therefore this sitting of Antichrist in Rome, proves them to be a true Church. But I am sure by this argument what they get in the hundred, they lose in the Shire: they may put these gains in their eye. I hope they will not confess their Pope Antichrist, to have us grant them a true Church. Therefore some of them have affirmed, Hominem non Christianum posse esse Romanum Pontificem. And would not he be a strange Head of Christ's Church, that is not a true member of Christ's Body? But howsoever, their argument holds not: for it is one thing to be in the Church, another thing to be of the Church. Antichrist sits in that place, not as a member of the Church, but as an Usurper. So the Pirate sits in the Merchants ship, yet hath no right to it. All that can be proved hereby is, that among the Papists there is a hidden Church, in the midst whereof Antichrist dominereth, but hath no part of salvation in it. What cause then have we to bless our GOD, that hath brought us from Babylon to Jerusalem, out of darkness into his marvelous light, from the Romish Synagogue to the General Assembly, and Church of the first borne which are written in Heaven? and the Lord of his mercy preserve us in it forever and ever.

To conclude, there be diverse Censures of the Roman Church. Some say it is no Church, but Aequiuoce; as the picture of a man is called a man: or a painted fire, a fire. It is no more a Church, then the carcass of a dead man, that hath on a living man's garments, is a living man, look it never so like him. These look upon it Oculo vero, sed seuero: with a true, but a sharp eye. Others say, It is non sanum membrum, sed membrum: It is not a sound member, but a member. It hath Scriptures, but corrupted with Traditions: but indeed they have nullified the native sense; and so are Lanthornes that show light to others, none to themselves. They have the Articles of the Creed, and make the same general confession of faith: yet overthrow all this another way. Herein they are like a fond Father, that with much indulgence tenders the body of his child, would not suffer the cold wind to blow upon him, yet by secret conveyances inwardly infects the heart, & destroys him. Thus they say, it is still a member, still a Church; as a brain-sick man is a man. The Roman Assembly is Vere Ecclesia, sed non vera Ecclesia: truly a Church, but not a true Church. A leprous man is a man: Adultera vxor, tamen vxor est: an adulterous wife is still a wife. So Duraus. In Papatu est Ecclesia, et Papatus non est Ecclesia. Vt Ecclesia Dei, vt Papalis Diaboli. In Popery is a Church, yet Popery is not the Church. As it is a Church, it is of God; as Popish, of the devil. It is Incurata Ecclesia, an incurable Church, that hates to be reformed: therefore no Church. We would have cured Babel, but she would not be cured. She hath apostated into treason, clipped Regiam monetam, the great Kings coin, the Word of God: turned that pure gold into sophisticate Alchimy: prayer to Christ, into invocation of Saints. These men conclude, that it is not a body diseased, & full of wounds, that hath the throat cut, yet with some life and breath remaining: but a rotten and dead carcass, void of spiritual life. It hath blended Judaism and Paganism together with Christianity, and so sweld up a superstitious worship of God; therefore no Church.

For my part I judge not: GOD reserves to himself three things; The revenge of injuries, The glory of deeds, The judgment of secrets. I will not judge, but like a witness give in my testimony. And here Qui been distinguit, been docet. The best construction is that which inclines to charity: that is, there is no probable salvation in the Church of Rome. Infants dying before they come to these errors, I believe saved: for others, Nescio quid dicere; I know not what to say. They have damnable heresies, as that of Free will, of Merits, &c. yet the persons that of weakness defend them, may be saved. God pardons even willful errors, if they be truly repented. Therefore I believe that many of our forefathers went to Heaven, though through blindness. Now indeed they are more inexcusable, because our sound is gone out among them. There are Seducentes and Seducti: the willful blind lead the woeful blind, until both fall into the ditch. If they will not see, there is no help, no hope. If simple ignorance mislead, there is hope of return: but if affected, it is most wretched. Our office is to help them with our prayers: and let us pray for them as Paul for his Ephesians; That the eyes of our understanding being enlightened, they may know what is the hope of God's calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance is in the Saints. Many of them have ready hearts, but they want eyes: we have open eyes, God grant us ready hearts.

The first borne which are written in heaven. This is a description of the persons, of whom the Church consists. The Church it self is a number of men, which God hath set apart by an eternal decree, and in time sanctified to become real members of it. They are written in heaven, there's their eternal election; and they are the first borne, that is ⟨◇⟩ borne, there's their Sanctification. For the two parts of the description, Their Primogeniture, and Registring in God's book; are but borrowed speeches, whereby God would ratify the everlasting Predestination and salvation of his Church. That as the First borne is not to be defeated of his inheritance; and the Enrolled names are never to be obliterated: so certainly shall they inherit eternal life.

The first borne. Some understand by the first borne not all the Elect; but only the Patriarchs, and such ancient Saints, the noble & primitive parts of the Church. Calvin. Then this should have been referred only to the Church triumphant in heaven; but the Catholic Church is here expressly meant, which cōprehends also the Saints upon earth: therefore they also are first borne. Besides, they are said to be written in heaven, which had been a superfluous speech of those who are already in heaven: they that are there, need no writing. Unusquisque Electus Primogenitus.

But this seems to infringe the Primogeniture of Christ, to whom that Name is by special title and right given. Primogenitus inter multos fratres, saith Paul: he is the First begotten among many brethren. Primogenitus vniuersae creaturae; the first borne of every creature. Primogenitus mortuorum; the first borne from the dead. He is the first borne, as he is the Son of God, and as he is man. As he is the Son of God, in respect of time, before all things, the beginning of all: in respect of dignity, because he is the foundation of all good to his Church. Of his fullness have we all received, and grace for grace. As he is man, he is the first borne, not in respect of time, but of excellency and virtue. In respect of his miraculous conception; the first that ever was conceived without sin, and by the ouershadowing of the holy Ghost. In respect of his birth, he was the first borne of Mary. She brought forth her first borne Son, and called his name Jesus. In respect of his resurrection; when GOD raised him out of the grave, he is said to beget his Son. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And lest the interpretation of birth only should be deduced from that place, Saint Paul expressly applies it to his resurrection. Acts 13. 33. God raised up Jesus again, as it is written in the second Psalm; Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Lastly, in respect of his preeminence: he is the first borne from the dead, that in all things he might have the preeminence. So the privilege of primogeniture is singularly and indiuidually his.

How then are the faithful here called the first borne? To answer this, we must know that God hath sons by nature, and by grace. Christ by nature only, all the elect by grace. Christ is a Son begotten, not made; we are sons made, not begotten in respect of nature. Christ as God is begotten, not borne: as man he is borne, not begotten. We see the privilege of Christ's primogeniture: from his let us look to ours, for from him we have it. The elect are called First-borne in three respects.

1. Because they are united to the first borne. For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren. He that is made vnus cum primogenito, may be well called primogenitus: one with the first borne is a first borne.
2. Because they are culled and called out of the world. Many wicked are created before them, but they are elected in God's decree to life before the other; for the wicked are not chosen at all. Esau was Isaac's first borne, but Jacob was God's first borne. Many of the worlds firstborn have been rejected. Israel laid his right hand upon Ephraim the younger, and his left upon Manasseh the elder. Reuben, thou art my first borne, but thou shalt not be excellent. Cain Adams first borne; Ishmael, Abraham's first borne, were cast off. Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, even my first borne. The Lord had first chosen that nation to be his people, yet afterward rejected them, and accepted the Gentiles: so that the elder serve the younger. But God's first borne are never refused: whom he hath predestinated to be sons, he hath also called to be heirs. So that this primogeniture is not in respect of generation, but of regeneration. Though they be not primo conditi, they are primo reconditi. Flesh and blood hath no work in this birth, nor the will of man; but the will of God. Of his own will begat he us, with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures. The Spirit begets of immortal seed, grace; in the womb of the Church; the means of this Birth being the Word. Except a man be borne again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. Out of that universal apostasy God sent his Son, to beget some first borne to himself.

3. Because the privileges of the first borne are theirs. These were many, as we may find in allusion to the Law. 1. The excellency of strength: Reuben my first borne, my might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power. Man decays, and the children of age are not so strong as the children of youth: therefore the first borne are called the beginning of power, and the excellency of strength. True it is, that there's no decay in God's Spirit that begets: yet because the faithful are first in God's intention of favor, and he gives them that strength of grace to resist sin, and to serve him, which the world hath not; therefore they are called his Firstborne, the excellency of his power. Though we be weak in our selves, yet his strength is glorified in our weakness, his Grace is sufficient for us.

2. The name of the family was given to the first borne. Is not my family the least of all the families of the Tribe of Benjamin, saith Saul? Gilead made his whole family to be called Gileadites. For further exemplying of this privilege, read Numbers. chap. 26. ver. 23. to ver. 52. Is this dignity lost under the Gospel to the first borne in Christ? no, for even the wicked dwelling among the righteous, are for their sakes vouchsafed the name of Christians. The name of the first borne hath christened all the family.

3. Priesthood and the right to sacrifice. Moses sent twelve young men, according to the twelve tribes of Israel, to offer burnt offerings, and sacrifice peace offerings unto the Lord. Those young men are thought to be no other, but twelve of the first borne of the chief of the Tribes: to whom the right of sacrificing & Priesthood did belong, till the Levites were separated for that end. Take the Levites instead of all the first borne among the children of Israel. Neither is this privilege lost by the Gospel: Christ hath made us Kings and Priests unto God his Father; to offer up spiritual sacrifice of thanksgiving to him. Priests, but Priests to God; lest the Schismatic should take advantage thereby to trouble the civil state. The Propitiatory sacrifice is offered for us by our high Priest Jesus: the sacrifices of our Priesthood are only gratulatory.

4. Double portion. If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated, and children by them both: if the first borne son be hers that is hated, yet when he maketh his sons to inherit, though perhaps he would favor the son of the loved, yet he shall acknowledge the son of the hated, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength, the right of the first borne is his. So the elect have a double portion: not only a share in the things of this life, but much more in heaven. Godliness hath the promise both of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. It is a false imagination that God makes none of his children happy in this life. Abraham was rich, David a King. But if he denies them opulency, he never denies them content. This is the chief riches; for we see others Esurientes in popina; as the by-word is, starving in a Cooks shop, wretched in their highest fortunes. The godly have so much share of this world, as may stand with their eternal blessedness in the world to come. And such may be content with a small portion here, that are sure of the inheritance hereafter. Jehoshaphat gave great gifts of silver and gold, and precious things, to all his children: but the kingdom he gave to Jehoram, because he was the first borne. Our Law gives the first borne son the inheritance: God will not deprive his of it. Thus hath Christ promised a double portion to the faithful; He shall receive an hundred fold now in this time, and in the world to come eternal life. And indeed the Birth-right with the Jews was a type of everlasting life. The consideration of this excellent privilege doth teach us three lessons.

1. That we are dedicated to God. Exod. 13. 2. Numb. 3. 13. Sanctify to me all the first borne. So Ha•...nah dedicated her first borne Samuel to the Lord. Mary brought Christ to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord; as it is written in the Law; Every male that openeth the womb, shall be called holy to the Lord. To rob God of his tithes is sacrilege; but to take away from him our souls, this is the highest sacrilege. In this we have a sequestration from common use, we are no longer as we were. They are mine, saith the Lord: not only by a common right, so all things are his. The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness of it. nor only for a grateful acknowledgement, that the increase of all things comes from him. But as the Israelites were God's by a special claim; because he preserved them in Egypt, when the first borne were slain. For whose redemption he accepted the first borne of their beasts: when he might have commanded all, lest this should seem grievous to them, he required but the first part. He only reserved what he preserved. So we were all by nature in as much danger of God's wrath, as were the Israelites of the destroying Angel when the first borne of the Egyptians were smitten dead. But the Lord sprinkled the doors of our hearts with the blood of his holy Lamb Jesus. Hath the Lord spared us? then he challengeth us. To take from man his own is injurious, from God sacrilegious. Glorify God in your body, and in your spirit. why? for they are God's, ye are not your own, saith the Apostle. Thus he confessed himself not his own man: There stood by me this night the Angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve. We are God's possession, the first borne which he hath redeemed by his own First-borne, Christ. This we acknowledge when we present our children to God in Baptism. Yet O strange and forgetful inconstancy! when we have given them to God in baptism, by a foolish indulgence we take them away again in education. A Prince abhors to have his eldest son marry with a harlot; this were to vilify and ignoble that royal blood. And shall God brook his First borne to be contracted with that ugly strumpet, Sin? This were to forfeit and make void the right of primogeniture.

2. Seeing we are God's first borne, let us offer our first and best things to him. The Lord hath deserved the priority of our service: First seek the kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof. Our first studies, our first labors must be consecrated to God. The Law required three properties in the sacrifices offered to God. 1. They must be first borne: vt illi reddamus prima, qui nobis debil omnia: that we should willingly give him the first, that had bountifully given us all. So we must give the first hour of the day, the first work of our hands, the first words of our lips to the Lord. 2. They must be clean beasts, for God abhorred the unclean, maimed, or deformed. Ye offer polluted bread upon mine Altar. If ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? if ye offer the lame & sick, is it not evil? offer it now to the governor, will he be pleased with it? So we must hold up to God clean hands, and send up pure hearts: making straight paths for our feet, lest that which is halting be turned out of the way. 3. The sacrifices must be Males, because the best and most perfect things are to be given to God. Multi homines, pauci viri. Let us offer up our masculine virtues, growing to a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. We must aim at this perfect sacrifice.

Besides in the Law there were three other rules observable in the consecration of the first borne. 1. That they should be seven days with the damme, and the eight day be given to God. Exod. 22. 30. wherein there was not only a response to the rule of circumcision, limited to the eight day, Gen. 17. 12. But to prevent their fraud in offering to God things of no service, being too soon taken from the damme. 2. In voluntary oblations they were forbidden to dedicate to the Lord any of the first borne. The firstling of the beasts which should be the Lord's firstling, no man shall sanctify it. The reason is, because that was the Lord's already. We have such names highly recorded on our Hospital-walls, painted on the windows of our Churches, often engraven in marble the memorable tenent of worthy acts, for excellent benefactors. Yet All their benevolence to God, is not the Tenth of that they have robbed God, & taken from his Church. Fool, give of thine own, if thou wilt have reward in Heaven: first restore justly what thou hast gathered unjustly. To give of that is not Liberaliter dare, sed partialiter retribuere: thou bestowest on God a Lamb of his own Ewe. Doost thou look for thanks for such a gift? Alas, it was God's own before. 3. They were commanded neither to work nor sheare the first borne. Thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thy Bullock, nor sheare the firstling of thy Sheep. To curb their covetousness: though they would not deceive the Lord of his first borne, yet they would take so much profit of it as they could. But they are restrained from diminution; they must not present a worn Bullock, nor a shorn Sheep. Now if the Lord was so ielous of first borne beasts, how is he ielous of first borne souls? Let us not think our choicest and most excellent things too dear for God, that hath made us his first borne in Jesus Christ.

3. Lastly, let us upon no condition part with our Birthright. Hath God advanced us to this honor? (I will make him my first borne, higher then the Kings of the earth) then let us never sell it. Let there be no person profane as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his Birthright. Hath the elder brother Primariam potestatem? Be Lord over thy brethren, and let thy mothers sons bow down unto thee. Let no lust subject us seruire minori, to serve the younger. The enemies rage against them, but saith God to Pharaoh; Let my son go that he may serve me: if thou refuse to let him go, behold I will slay thy son, even thy firstborn. Thus saith the Psalmist; God reproves even Kings for their sakes. Now Omne beneficium petit officium: every benefit is obligatory, and binds to some thankful duty Hath God dignified us with a Priuiledge, he expects that our carefulness should never forfeit. Naboth would not sell his Vineyard: yet his Vineyard was but a part of his Inheritance, & his Inheritance but a part of his birthright. Though Ahab profferd him a better vineyard, or the worth of it in money; yet saith Naboth, The Lord forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee. And shall we for trifles pass away our eternal Birthright? It is a wretched bargain: yet the Blasphemer swears away his birthright, the Epicure feasts away his birthright, the winebibber drinks away his Birthright, the Lauish spends his birthright, the covetous sels his birthright for ready money.

There be some, 1. that sell their Birthright: it is said of the Lawyer that he hath linguam venalem, a saleable tongue: the covetous venalem animam, a saleable soul: the harlot venalem carnem: a saleable flesh. Esau sold his birthright, Ahab sold himself to work wickedness, Judas sold his soul for thirty pieces. There is not a more wicked thing then a covetous man: for such a one setteth his soul to sale, because while he liveth he casteth away his bowels. Others pawn their Birthright: they are not so desperate as to sell it outright, but they will pawn it for a while. They seem to make conscience of their ways generally, and to be good husbands of their talents: but when an opportune temptation comes, with meat in the mouth; a fit advantage of much wealth, of high honor, of secret pleasure; they will embrace and fasten on it, though they pawn their souls for a season. And indeed he that knowingly ventures to sin, doth as it were mortgage his birthright, puts it to the hazard of redeeming by repentance. But it is dangerous to be a Merchant venturer in this case: the birthright is precious, if that infernal Broker get but a color of title in it, he will use tricks to make thee break thy day, and then sue out a Judgment against thee. 3. Some lose their Birthright; profane and negligent wretches, that leave their soul perpetually vnguarded, unregarded. They may be careful about many things, but one thing is necessary, to keep their Birthright. While they sleep, the enemy sows tares: it is a wretched slumber, that sleeps, and slips away the birthright. 4. Others give away their birthright, & these are specially the envious and the desperate. Malice gives it away, and hath nothing for it. The Ambitious bargains to have a little honor for his Birthright, the Covetous to have some gold for his birthright, the voluptuous to have some sensual pleasure for his birthright: but the malicious gives it away for nothing, except it be vexation, that doth anguish him, and languish him. The desperate destroying his body, gives away his birthright: he hath naught for it but horrors within, and terrors without. These men serve the devils turn for nothing. Look O miserable man upon the Purchaser of thy Birthright Christ, & consider the price it cost him: if thou sell that for a little pleasure, that he bought with so much pain, thou thinkest him an idle Merchant. No Lord, as thou hast givē it to us, so keep it for us: that having now the assurance of it in grace, we may have one day the full possession of it in glory.

Written in heaven. This phrase is often used in the Scripture, and is but a metaphor whereby God declares the certainty of some men's eternal predestination, and eternal salvation. Tostatus makes three written books of GOD. 1. The great book, wherein are written all persons, actions, and events, both good and bad. Out of this are taken two other books. 2. The book of Predestination, consisting only of the Elect. 3. The book of God's Prescience, which he calls the Black book, wherein are registered only the Reprobate. But this latter book hath no warrant in the Scriptures: it is true, that as there is a certain number to be saved, so the Lord knoweth them that are ordained to destruction: but the Scripture gives only a name of book to the first, not to the worst. Non quod scribuntur in aliquo libro, sed quod non scribuntur in illo libro. Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, & let them not be written among the righteous. Whose names are not written in the Book of Life from the foundation of the World. Not that they are written in any other book, but that they are not written in that book. Indeed God may be said to have diverse Books.

1. Liber Providentiae, the book of his Providence, wherein God seeth and disposeth all things that are done by himself in the World. Thine eyes did see my substance yet being imperfect: and in thy book were all my members written, when as yet there was none of them. Not a sparrow falls from the house, not a hair from our heads, without the record of this book.

2. Liber Memori..., the book of God's memory, wherein all things done by men, whether good or evil, are registered. A book of remembrance was written before GOD, for them that feared the Lord, and thought upon his Name. The books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of Life. Hence it is plain, that there are other books besides the book of Life. This is that which manifesteth all secrets, whether mental, orall, or actual. Whereby GOD shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, be it good or evil. This Book shall be opened in that day, when God shall judge the secrets of all hearts by Jesus Christ.

3. Liber Conscientiae, the book of every man's conscience: this is a book of Record or testimony; not so much of Iudicature, as of witness. If our heart condemn us, God is greater then our heart, and knoweth all things. There is Conscientiae per...rsa, that doth wholly condemn: there is Conscientiae dubia, that doth neither condemn nor acquit: there is Conscientiae b...e ordinata; such a one had Paul, I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the holy Ghost. Every man's conscience beareth witness: but vbi cogitatio non habet quod accuset, where the thought hath no matter of accusation against a man, that conscience doth bear witness in the holy Ghost. Look well to thy life, for thou bearest about thee a book of Testimony, that shall speak either with or against thee.

4. Liber monumentorum, a book of Monuments; which contains the acts of the Saints for the memory of times to come. Of this nature were the Chronicles, the Acts of the Apostles, that martyrology or golden Legend of the Saints in the Chapter preceding my Text. God threatens the false prophets, that they shall not be written in the writing of the house of Israel.

5. Liber veritatis, the book of Truth: this may also be called the book of Life, because it contains those rules, that lead and direct us to life eternal. As that is called a book of warfare, wherein the precepts of the Military Art are written. Search the Scriptures, for therein ye have eternal life. All these things are the book of the Covenant of the most high God.

6. Liber Vitae, the book of Life it self, wherein only are written the names of the Elect, whom GOD hath ordained to salvation forever. This is to be written in h...uen. Into that holy City shall enter nothing that defileth: but only they which are written in the Lambes book of Life. Paul speaks of his fellow laborers, whose names are in the book of Life. When the Disciples returned said; Lord, even the devils are subject to us through thy Name: true saith Christ, I saw Satan as lightning fall from Heaven. Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you: but rather rejoice because your names are written in Heaven. This is a borrowed speech; Sicut nos ea literis consignamus, As we commit that to writing, the memory whereof we would have kept. So doth God, not that he needs any book of remembrance, but because all things are present with him, as if they were written in a book. They among men which are chosen to any special place or service, are written in a book: so the Roman Senators were called Patres conscripti: and it is called the Muster-book, wherein stand the names of the Soldiers pressed to the wars. To conclude, this writing in heaven, is the book of Election, wherein all that shall be saved, are registered.

Here vnauoydably we come to the main question, that may seem to infringe this happy privilege of the Church. Whether to be written in Heaven be an infallible assurance of salvation: or whether any there registered may come to be blotted out. The truth is, that none written in heaven can ever be lost; yet they object against it, Psal. 69. 28. Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and let them not be written among the righteous. Hence they infer, that some names once there recorded, are afterwards put out. But this opinion casteth a double aspersion upon God himself. Either it makes him ignorant of future things, as if he foresaw not the end of elect and reprobate, and so were deceived in decreeing some to be saved, that shall not be saved. Or that his decree is mutable, in excluding those upon their sins, whom he hath formerly chosen. From both these weaknesses S. Paul vindicates him. 2. Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of GOD standeth sure, having the seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. First, the Lord knows them that are his; this were not true if God's Prescience could be deluded. Then his foundation stands sure: but that were no sure foundation, if those he hath decreed to be his, should afterward fall out not to be his. The very Conclusion of truth is this; Impossibilis est deletio: they which are written in heaven, can never come into hell. To clear this from the opposed doubt, among many I will cull out three proper distinctions.

1. One may be said to be written in heaven simpliciter, and secundum quid. He that is simply written there, In quantum praedestinatus ad vitam, because elected to life, can never be blotted out. He that is but written after a sort, may; for he is written Non secundum Dei praescientiam, sed secundum praesentem iustitiam: not according to God's former decree, but according to their present righteousness. So they are said to be blotted out, not in respect of God's knowledge: for he knows they were never written there; but according to their present condition, apostating from grace to sin. Lyranus.

2. Some are blotted out, non secundum rei veritatem, sed hominum opinionem: not according to the truth of the thing, but according to men's opinion. It is usual in the Scriptures, to say a thing is done, quando innotescat fieri, when it is declared to be done. Hypocrites have a simulation of outward sanctity, so that men in charity judge them to be written in heaven. But when those glistening stars appear to be only Ignes fatui, foolish meteors; and fall from the firmament of the Church; then we say they are blotted out. The written ex existentia, by a perfect being, never lost; but ex apparentia, by a dissembled appearance, may. Some God so writes, In se vt simpliciter habituri vitam; that they have life simply in themselves, though not of themselves. Others he so writes, vt habeant non in se, sed in sua causa; from which falling they are said to be obliterated. Aquin.

3. Augustine says, we must not so take it, that God first writes, and then dasheth out. For if a Pilate could say, Quod scripsi, scripsi; what I have written, I have written; and it shall stand. Shall God say, Quod scripsi expungam, what I have written I will wipe out, and it shall not stand? They are written then Secundum spem ipsorum, qui ibi se scriptos putabant; according to their own hope that presumed their names there. And are blotted out, Quando ipsis constet illos non ibi fuisse; when it is manifest to themselves that their names never had any such honor of inscription. This even that Psalm strengthens, whence they fetch their opposition. Let them be blotted out of the book of the living; and let them not be written among the righteous. So that to be blotted out of that book, is indeed never to be written there. To be wiped out in the end, is but a declaration that such were not written in the beginning.

But how then shall we justify Moses his desire? If thou wilt forgive their sin, fair and good: but if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book, which thou hast written. Did Moses wish an impossibility? Some opinionate, that this was not the book of life that Moses meant: but they err. 1. Some by this understand the book of the Law: as if this were his meaning. If thou destroy the people to whom thou hast given the Law, let not my name be mentioned as the Law giver. But it is answered. 1. that the book of the Law was not yet written; and he could not desire blotting forth of a book that was not. 2. This was in Moses his power when he wrote the Law, to leave out his own name; he needed not to trouble God about it. 3. He opposeth the greatest loss he could sustain, against the greatest benefit the people could obtain: but this was no great loss to be blotted out of that book. 4. Moses speaks of a book that God had written: but the book of the Law, saving only the Decalogue, Moses wrote himself. 2. Jerome understands this desire of Moses for death in this life; Perire in praesentem, non in perpetuum. But if he conceives no more than a temporal death, God's answer confutes it; Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out. ver. 33. Only sinners are raced out of this book; but from the book of terrene life, both sinners and just come to be blotted: for good and bad are subject to temporal death. 3. Cajetan understands it De libro Principatus in hac vita, to be the book of Soueraignty: because it is decreed by God as in a book, quod isti vel illi principentur: that this or that man should have the dominion. But God answers, only sinners are raced out of the book: but in the book of government are bad Kings, so well as good. And for that book, Ezek. 13. 9. as if he wished no more, but not to be counted of Israel; or have his name among the Patriarchs and Prophets. If Israel had perished, the book of his Covenant with Israel had also perished. So for that book of Iasher. Josh. 10. 13. it is thought to be lost; therefore no great matter to be put out of it. It must needs be then the book of life, and how could Moses wish a racing out of that book?

Some say, that by sin a man may come to be blotted out of that book, wherein he thought himself written. But if it could not be done without sin, this construction were to make Moses Petere peccare mortaliter; to beg power to sin mortally, that he might be blotted out. Neither doth God for unrighteousness race out any, but indeed they race out themselves. Some take it to be a parabolical speech, to show the intention of his desire. As Rachel said to Jacob, Give me children, or else I die. Yet she had rather live and have no children, then have children and presently die. As if one should say; Do this, or else kill me: yet he had rather have the thing omitted, then himself killed. Tostat. But this were to make Moses speak one thing, & mean another: whereas he desired it from his heart. Others think Moses spake affirmatively, after this sense: that if God would not pardon the people's sin, it would follow that himself should be blotted out. Rupert. But this had been against the justice of God, that one should be damned for the sin of another. Again this had convinced Moses of wavering and doubtfulness of his salvation: but the faithful have confidence, that though thousands should perish, yet they are sure of eternal bliss.

Some say, Moses wished this after the disposition of the inferior part of his soul; and not in voluntate rationem superiorem sequente; not in that will which is governed by reason. They exemplify it in Christ, who desired the cup to pass from him, yet simpliciter vellet pati, simply he would suffer. But there is great difference in the example. 1. Christ eschewes death, Moses ensues death: the object of their desires was unlike. 2. Christ by his office was to bear the sin and punishment of his people: Moses was never called to such a mediatorship. 3. Christ prayeth there as a man: for as God he prayeth not, but is prayed to. There is Duplex affectus, Mentis & Sensus. Christ in the affection of his mind was willing to suffer, but in his affection of Sense he desired the cup to pass. So that in Christ to escape death, was a natural desire: in Moses to wish death, yea an eternal death, was a contranaturall desire: it proceeded not from the sensual part, but from his inward feeling and meditation.

Others think he prayed, quia turbatus erat, being troubled: not considering at that instant whether that was possible that he begged. ...x impetu passionis, saith Lyranus, vehementia fuisse abreptum, vt loquatur quasi ecstaticus; saith Calvin. But this accuseth him of rashness: for it is fit he that prayeth, should be of a calm and composed spirit. Others conclude, that Moses preferred the safety of the people before his own soul. Calvin. He thought of nothing, but vt s...luus sit populus, that the people might be saved. But this is against the rule of charity: for though another's soul be dearer to me then my own body: yet my own soul ought to be dearer unto me then all men's souls in the world. yea if all the souls of the Saints; yea of the Virgin Mary her self, should perish, except my soul perished for them: saith Tostatus: Citius deberem eligere omnes illas perire quàm animam meam. I ought rather to choose to save my own soul, then all theirs.

Lastly, the most and best rest upon this sense. Because the salvation of Israel was joined with the glory of God: both in respect of the promises made to the Fathers, which was not for his honor to frustrate: and to prevent the blasphemies of the enemies insulting on their ruin; God hath forsaken his people: Moses ante omnia gloriam Deispecta...t: He respected the glory of God above all: in regard whereof, he was careless of his own salvation. Precious to us is the salvation of others, more precious the salvation of our selves, but most precious of all is the glory of God. Such a wish as this great Prophet of the old Testament, had that great Apostle of the new. I could wish my-self accursed from Christ, for my brethren my kinsmen according to the flesh. They say, to clear both these desires from sin, there is no other solution but this: that both of them for God's glory in Israel's safety desired a separation from glory for a time, not damnation of body and soul forever. Howsoever, there was some difference in their wishes. Chrys. Moses wished Perire cum caeteris, Paul perire pro caeteris. Moses cum pereuntibus, Paulus ne pereant. Moses desired to perish with them that perished: Paul desired to perish, that they might not perish. But the aim of both was the Lord's glory, and the people's safety. Their zeal was ineffable, their example inimitable, their affection unmatchable. Yet thus far desirable, that all Ministers, like Moses and Paul, zealously seek their people's salvation. And I am persuaded, that a Parent doth not more earnestly desire the welfare of his child, then doth a good Minister the saving of his flock. What we desire for you, do you labor for yourselves, and the Lord Jesus work for us all.

There be some that would have it granted, that Moses and Paul did sin in those wishes; and the concession thereof doth safely end all controversy. I see no prejudice in this answer, for the best Saints living have had their weaknesses. But if you please after all these, to admit also the hearing of my opinion. Mine I call it, because I never read or heard any yet give it: I call it an opinion, because vnusquis{que} abundat sensu suo, and may take which his own judgment best liketh. By this Book I think he means God's favor: as we usually say, to be in a man's favor, is to be in his books. We speak of one that dissemblingly cousoned us, such a man shall never come in my books. For you will not enter that man into your book, whom you do not both trust and favor. To be blotted out of God's book, is to be liable to his displeasure, subiectuall to his judgments. Now I cannot be persuaded, that Moses ever imagined God would eternally destroy Israel: therefore nor did he beg eternal destruction to himself. He wished no more to himself, then he feared to them. But it is expressly set down, ver. 14. that God would not cast away Israel to everlasting perdition. The Lord repented of the evil, which he thought to do unto his people. But thus; Lord, if they must needs undergo thy wrath and severe punishment for their sin, so punish me in the same measure that have not sinned. If thou wilt not favor them, forget to favor me: let me feel thy hand with them. It was not then everlasting damnation, that he either feared to them, or desired to himself: but only the desertion of God's present love and good pleasure to him, together with subjection to his judgments; whereof they should taste so deeply, as if God had never booked them for his own. This seems to be the true sense by God's answer; Those that have sinned, I will blot out of my book. The offenders shall smart, they that have sinned shall be punished. So David and other Saints felt grievous impositions, though they never perished, but were ordained to eternal life.

To conclude, they that are written in heaven can never be lost. Woe then to that Religion, which teacheth even the best Saint to doubt of his salvation while he liveth. Hath Christ said, Believe: and shall man say, Doubt? This is a rack and strappado to the conscience: for he that doubteth of his salvation, doubteth of God's love: and he that doubteth of God's love, cannot heartily love him again. If this love be wanting, it is not possible to have true peace. O the terrors of this troubled conscience! It is like an Ague, it may have intermission, but the fit will come and shake him. An untoward beast is a trouble to a man, an unto ward servant a great trouble, an untoward wife a greater trouble, but the greatest trouble of all is an untoward conscience. Blessed is the man whose sins are forgiven: where there is no remission of sins, there is no blessedness. Now there is no true blessedness but that is enjoyed, and none is enjoyed unless it be felt, and it cannot be felt unless it be possessed, and it is not possessed unless a man know it, and how does he know it, that doubts whether he hath it or not?

All souls are passengers in this world, our way is in the middle of the sea: we have no sure footing: which way soever we cast our eyes, we see nothing but deep waters, the Devil and our own flesh raising up against us infinite storms. God directs us to Christ, as to a sure Anchorhold, he bids us undo our Cables, and fling up our Anchors in the veil, fasten them upon Jesus: we do so and are safe. But a sister of ours passing in the ship with us, that hath long taken upon her to rule the helme, deals unkindly with us; she cuts in pieces our Cables, throws away our Anchors, and tells us we may not presume to fasten them on the Rock, our Mediator. She rouse and roues us in the midst of the sea, through the greatest fogs, and fearefullest tempests: if we follow her course, we must look for inevitable shipwreck. The least flaw of wind will overturn us, and sink our souls to the lowest gulf. No, they that are written in the eternal leaves of heaven, shall never be wrapped in the cloudy sheets of darkness. A man may have his name written in the Chronicles, yet lost: written in durable marble, yet perish: written on a monument equal to a Colossus, yet be ignominious: written on the Hospital-gates, yet go to hell: written on his own house, yet another come to possess it. All these are but writings in the dust, or upon the waters; where the characters perish so soon as they are made. They no more prove a man happy, then the fool could prove Pontius Pilate a Saint, because his name was written in the Creed. But they that be written in heaven, are sure to inherit it.

Now to apply all this usefully to our selves; some perhaps would be satisfied how we may know our names written in heaven. It is certain that no eye hath looked into God's book, yet himself hath allowed certain arguments and proofs, whereby we have more then a conjectural knowledge. The principal is the Testimony of God's Spirit concurring with our spirit. Rom. 8. 16. But of this I have liberally spoken in some later passages of this book; together with the most pregnant signs of our election. Here therefore I am straightened to insert only some (there omitted) effects. Which are these four; If our hearts be on God's book, If the poor be in our book, If we well order the book of our conscience, Lastly, if we can write our selves holy in earth, then be bold we are written happy in heaven.

1. If our heart be on God's book; and this we shall find e conuerso, if God's book be in our heart. Mary laid up Christ's words in her heart. It must not lie like loose corn on the floor, subject to the pecking up of every fowl; but it is ground by meditation, digested by faith: manet alto cord repostum. God says, My son, give thy heart to me: do thou pray, My Father, first give thyself to my heart. I ask not whether this book lies in thy study, but whether the study of it lies in thy heart. The life of the Scriptures is not in verborum folijs, sed in medulla cordis; not in the letters and leaves, but in the inwards of the heart. It is not lectio, nor relectio, but dilectio: not reading, but leading a life answerable, that assures us. If we sincerely love this book, we are certainly in God's book. Mary zealously loving Christ's word, is said to choose the better part, that shall never be taken from her.

2. If the poor be in thy book: and this is reciprocal, then thou art in their book: and the conclusion is infallible, thou art in the book of Life. For the relieved poor by their prayers, entertain, or make way for thy entertainment into everlasting habitations. And Christ at the last day calls them to himself, that have been charitable to his members; Come ye blessed, receive the kingdom prepared for you. Your works have not merited this kingdom, for it was prepared for you: but as that was prepared for you; so your charity hath prepared you for it: Come and take it. Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth: Do thou write it in the dust, the poor will write it in their hearts, GOD finds it in their prayers, their prayers prevail for thy mercy, & mercy writes thy name in heaven. Thy prayers and thy alms are come up for a memorial before God. Therefore Cast thy bread upon the waters, drown it in those watery eyes: it is not lost in that River; like Peter thou throwest in an angle, & bringest up silver; enough to make thee blessed. Via coeli est pauper: si non vis errare, incipe erogare. The poor is the highway to heaven: if thou wouldest not wander in thy journey, show mercy. Non potes habere nisi quod acceperis: non potes non habere quod dederis. Thou canst have nothing unless thou receive it: thou canst keep nothing unless thou give it. Him that the poor writes not charitable on earth, nor doth God write saueable in heaven.

3. If thy name be written Christian in the book of thy Conscience, this is a special argument of thy registering in heaven For if our heart condemn us not, we have boldness and confidence towards God. Ang. What if man's ignorance and unmerciful ielousie blot thee out of the book of his credit; Si de libro viventium nunquam propria delet conscientia: so long as thy own conscience doth not blot thee forth the book of blessedness. If the good spoken of us be not found in our conscience, that glory is our shame. If the evil spoken of us be not found in our conscience, that shame is our glory. Therefore it is that Hugo calls the conscience Librum signatum et clausum, in die Indicij aperiendum, a book shut and sealed, only at the Resurrection to be opened. Conscientiam, magis quàm famam attend: falls saepe poterit fama, conscientiae nunquam. Look to thy Conscience more then to thy credit: fame may often be deceived, conscience never. The beams that play upon the water, are shot from the Sun in heaven: the peace and joy that danceth in the conscience, comes from the Son of righteousness, the Lord Jesus. If a hearty laughter dimple the cheek, there is a smooth and quiet mind within. Upon the wall there is a writing; a man sitting with his back to the wall, how should he read it? but let a looking-glass be set before him, it will reflect it to his eyes, he shall read it by the resultance. The writing our names in heaven is hid, yet in the glass of a good conscience it is presented to our eye of faith, and the soul reads it. For it is impossible to have a good conscience on earth, except a man be written in heaven.

4. If the book of Sanctification have our names written, then surely the book of Glorification hath them, and they shall never be blotted out. For God hath chosen us in Christ before the foundation of the world; that we should be holy and without blame before him in love. Now as we may reason from the cause to the effect, so certainly from the effect to the cause. Election is the cause, Holiness the effect: as therefore everyone written in heaven, shall be holy on earth, so everyone holy on earth, is written in heaven.

This sanctity is manifested in our obedience; which must be Ad totum; I had respect to all thy commandments. Per totum; I have inclined my heart to keep thy statutes Always, even to the end. De tote; to keep thy precepts with my whole heart. In Rome the Patres conscripti were distinguished by their robes: and they of the Livery in London have a peculiar habit by themselves, to differ from the rest of the Company. Is thy name enrolled in that Legend of Saints? thy livery will witness it; thy conversation is in heaven. A Senator relating to his son the great honors decreed to a number of Soldiers, whose names were written in a book: the son was importunate to see that book. The father shows him the outside; it seemed so glorious that he desired him to open it: No, it was sealed by the Council. Then saith the son, tell me if my name be there: the father replies, the names are secreted to the Senate. The son studying how he might get some satisfaction, desired him to deliver the merits of those inscribed Soldiers. The father relates to him their noble achievements, and worthy actions of valor, wherewith they had eternized their names. Such are written, and none but such must be written in this book. The son consulting with his own heart, that he had no such trophies to show; but had spent his time in courting Ladies, rather then encountering Knights; that he was better for a dance then a march: that he knew no drumme but the tabret, no courage but to be drunk. Hereupon he presently retyr'd himself, repented, entered into a combat with his own affections: subdued them, became temperate, continent, valiant, virtuous. When the Soldiers came to receive their wreathes, he steps in to challenge one for himself. Being asked, upon what title; he answered, If honors be given to Conquerers, I have gotten the most noble conquest of all. Wherein? These have subdued strange foes, but I have conquered myself: and indeed this is judged the greatest victory. The application is familiar: thou desirest to know whose names are written in blessedness, it shall not be told thee, This or that individual person: but generally thus, men so qualified: faithful in Christ, and to Christ: obedient to the truth, and for the truth: that have subjected their own affections, and resigned themselves to the guidance of the heavenly will: these men have made noble conquests, and shall have Princely Crowns: find in thyself this sanctimony, and thou hast a sure testimony: thou art written in heaven.

But all men challenge this: they believe and obey, and do good deeds: and therefore some to be sure of putting in themselves, constantly affirm all men are written. But infinite numbers will be deceived at the last. For if there were universal inscription, there should follow vniuerfall Election: if universal election, then universal salvation. If the former were true, then were not election any such name. If the latter, to what purpose did God make hell? God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son: What, that all should be saved? no, but that Whosoever believes, might have everlasting life. Not all; for he that takes all cannot be said to choose. Let this stir us up to get security that our names are written there. Benefits common to all, as light of the Sun, dew of heaven, are little regarded: but quae rarissima, carissima: things hard to come by, are much set by. Because God doth not give riches to all men; but isti multum, illi paruum, huic nullum: much to one, little to another, none at all to a third: hereupon men debase themselves to moiling slaves, yea to earth-rooting beasts, to get them. For the race of this world, where onel the first obtains the goal, gets the money; all truss up their loins, run apace, none will be hindmost. For heaven, where all that run well, shall speed well, and have for their prize a Crown of righteousness; men are so courteous, they will give another leave to go before them. But let thy grace in this life, witness thy hope of glory in the life to come.

To God the Judge of all.

We have considered the Citizens, let us now look upon the glorious majesty of the King that governs them. Where first let us observe in general, that there shall be a day of Judgment, otherwise to what purpose is there a Judge? If there were no such scoffers, as to say: Where is the promise of his coming? For since the Fathers fell asleep: all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation: this observation might well have been spared. The reason to prove it is derived from the justice and goodness of God. It is a just thing with God, to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you. And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty Angels. This for the honor of the faithful, and for the horror of reprobates. Here the good man finds the sharpest misery, the evil man sweetest felicity: therefore it is just that there should be a time of changing turns and places. The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright. The rich man's table stood full of delicates, Lazarus lacks crumbs: therefore they must change states; He is comforted, and thou art tormented. There is a time to get, and a time to lose: Woe to you that laugh, for you shall mourn: Blessed are you that mourn, for you shall rejoice. God shall give the one Fletum pro ris... , the other Risum pro fletu: wiping away all tears from their eyes. Rejoice thou irrefragably dissolute, follow the lusts of thy own heart: but remember for all these things thou must come into judgment. It is a deer pennyworth, to buy the merry madness of one hour, with ages of pangs, infinite and eternal. If there were no judgment, how should God be just? But the righteous shall see the vengeance: So that a man shall say, Verily there is a reward for the righteous, verily there is a God that judgeth the earth. otherwise where is our hope? For if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we of all men are most miserable. But it is objected:

1. That the whole world consists of believers or unbelievers: now there is no last judgment for either of these. none for believers, for He that believeth hath everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment. None for unbelievers, for He that believeth not, is condemned already. I answer, first for the latter: the vnbelieuer is condemned already in effect three ways. 1. By the purpose of God, who did foresee and appoint his condemnation, as a punishment for his sin, and execution of his Justice. 2. By the word of God, where his condemnation is set down. 3. By his own conscience, which every hour doth judge and condemn him. Yet all this hinders not, but that he may also pass the judgment of Christ at that general Assizes: which is the manifestation and completion of that inchoate judgment. To the former I answer; it is not said The believer shall not come into judgment; but he shall not come into condemnation. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; even the very faithful, absoluendicausa, that Christ may publicly acquit them.

2. That Conscience is a sufficient judge, what needs more? I answer, properly Conscientia testis, non iudex: the Conscience is a witness, rather than a judge. Indeed it hath a great office here, and so it shall-have there. It is felt now, but then more sensibly. Now many are so borne away with the precipices and streams of their sensual pleasures; vt cogitationes accusatrices non audiant. Lyranus. That they hear not the accusation of their thoughts: but then it will be heard and felt. Now it may pluck a man by the sleeve, and crave audience, but it is drowned with the noise of good fellowship. Besides Hactenus est ...cultus testis, it is hitherto a secret witness, only known to him that hath it: but then the book that is now sealed, shall be opened, and all the world shall read it. As the seal leaves a print in the wax behind it; so the conscience an impression of past sins in the thoughts; indelible characters, which death it self shall not eat out. Conscience here doth witness, accuse or excuse: but Christ shall there judge the secrets of all hearts.

God the Judge of all: let us now look into the particulars; Quis, Qualis, Quorum. Deus, Iudex, vniuersorum. The three words answer to three questions. Who? God. What is he? A Judge. Of whom? Of all.

God. It is manifest that this honor belongs to Christ, therefore Christ is God. God hath appointed a day, wherein he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained. He hath given him authority to execute judgment, because he is the Son of man. To this consents that article of our faith in the Creed; that he who suffered under Pilate, shall come to judge quick and dead. But it is objected, that to judge is the action of the whole Trinity: true, it is commō to all, but the execution of it pertains to one. God judgeth, but by the Son: so distinctly. Rom. 2. 16. God shall judge the secrets of all hearts by Jesus Christ: God by Christ.

But it is further objected, that the Saints shall judge. Ye shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Israel. Know ye not, that the Saints shall judge the world? This truly is a great honor to the Apostles and Saints. To be Judge of a Circuit is an honorable office, what is it then to judge the world? But there is great difference, they have potestatem accessoriam; an accessory power; Christ imperatoriam, a principal and imperial power. All power is given to me in heaven and in earth. He hath Honorem Primarium, the prime honor; they subordinatum, derived from his. Christ gives Sententiam iudicatoriam, they only appr...batoriam: he the sentence of judgment, they of approbation. As the Justices on the bench are in some manner Judges: not in giving the sentence, but in approving the sentence given. The Saints therefore may be said to judge; Vel exemplo, vel testimonio, vel ...ffragio. 1. By their example: for their lives shall condemn the wicked, as Noah's handy work did the old world. So the Apostles shall judge Israel, because their faith shall take frō Israel all excuse. Such a judgment Christ speaks of: The Niniuits shall rise in judgment with this generation, & shall condemn it. The Queen of the South shall rise up in judgment with it, and shall condemn it. The goodness of the one shall judge & condemn the badness of the other. So Christ stops the blasphemous mouths of the Jews; accusing him to work by Beelzebub. If I do it by him, by whom do your children cast out Devils? Therefore they shall be your Judges. 2. By their Testimony, who can witness that the means of salvation was offered them in the Gospel, which they not accepting are justly condemned? He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him. The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. So shall Babylon be judged by those that would have cured her, but she would not be cured. 3. By their suffrage and approval of Christ's righteous sentence. Thus shall the Elect judge the world, yea even the Angels. Know ye not that we shall judge the Angels? By world we must understand the wicked, and by the Angels Devils. And certainly the Saints have some place in this judgment. They shall judge the Nations, and have dominion over the people, & their Lord shall reign forever. Christ shall set all his adversaries before his own face, and the face of his Church: where they shall behold those become their Judges, whom they once esteemed and used as their slaves. This is he whom we sometimes had in derision: now he is numbered among the children of GOD, and his portion is among the Saints. But why is the execution of this judgment committed to the second person in the Trinity; to Christ?

1. It is fit that he, who came to be judged, should also come to judge. Tunc manifestus veniet inter iustos iudicaturus iuste, qui occulte venerat iudicandus ab iniustis injust. He that came in humility to be judged by the unjust unjustly, shall come in glory to judge all justly.

2. As it is for the honor of Christ, so is it for the horror of his enemies; when they shall see him wh...m they have pierced: entreating the Rocks and mountains to hide them from the presence of him that sits on the Throne. In maiestate visuri sunt, quem in humilitate videre noluerunt. Vt tanto districtius virtutem sentiant, quanto contemptius infirmitatem d...riserunt. They shall behold him in Majesty, whom they would not daigne to look upon in humility. The baser they esteemed his weakness, the heavier they shall find and feel his mightiness. Then Christ stood like a Lamb before Pilate a Lyon: now Pilate like a malefactor shall stand before Christ his Judge. Crucify him, crucify him, was the sentence of the Jews: Bind them hand and foot, and throw them into utter darkness, will be the sentence of Christ. We will not have this man reign over us, was their sentence. Bring those mine enemies which would not that I should reign •...uer them, & slay them before me; this is Christ's sentence. The ungodly conspire, Let us break his bonds afunder, and cast away his c...rds from us: therefore, verse. 9. he shall break them with a rod of iron, and dish them in pieces like a potters vessel. Thus he that was once made the footstool of his enemies, shall reign till he hath made all his enemies his footstool. As Joshua dealt with the five Kings hid in the Cave of Makkedah, brought them out, caused his Captains of war to set their feet on the necks of them, then slew them, and hanged them on trees. So shall Christ triumph over his enemies; their necks subjected to the feet of the Saints, and their substances cast into endless torments.

3. For the comfort of his chosen ones, he is their Judge, that is their Savior. He that gave the blood of mercy to save them from the hand of Justice, will not now condemn them. O blessed mercy, that so triumphs against Judgment! yea Justice and Mercy are met together in this Judge: Justice upon them that despised him, mercy to them that feared him. Happy faith that shall not be ashamed at that day! Abide in him, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. The heavens shall be on fire, the elements melt with the flame; the earth be burnt, Castles, Cities, Towns and Towers be turned to one pile: the Devils shall make a hideous noise, the reprobates shriek and howl like Dragons: all because this Judges wrath is kindled. But the faithful shall rejoice: I will see you again, and your hearts shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you. The music of Saints and Angels shall be joined in one Choir; and all sing, Blessing, honor, glory and power be unto him that sits on the Throne, and to the Lamb forever.

The Judge. This is his authority: now there are certain properties required in a just Judge; some of them are found in some Judges, many in few Judges, all perfectly in no Judge, but this Judge of all, Jesus Christ.

1. Perspicacitas ingenij: sharpness of apprehension, and soundness of understanding. Ignorance in a private person is a weakness, in a Judge a wickedness. Ignorantia Iudicis, calamitas innocentis. A Judge ignorant, makes wretched the innocent. It was a curse; I will give children to be their Princes, and babes shall rule over them: that is, Governors of a childish discretion. It is a woe; Woe to thee, O Land, when thy King is a child. Justice was anciently painted blind, to show that no favor be given to persons: but it was not meant so blind, as not to discern causes. It is woeful when Judges are so blind, that they are fain to feel the right. No man would have his body come under the cure of a foolish Physician. nor his estate under an ignorant Judge. But this Judge of heaven and earth is so wise, that he knows the very secrets of men's hearts. All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him, with whom we have to do. The wicked can have no hope, that a bad cause flourished over, should pass vnconstrued, uncensured. His eyes are as a flame of fire, clear to search and find out all secrets. Accordingly, he hath now put in his interlocutory, then will give his definitive sentence.

2. Audacitas animi; boldness of courage: a timorous Judge looseth a good cause. In the fable, when the Hart is made Judge between the Wolf and the Lamb; it must needs go on the Wolves side. The fear of displeasing Greatness is a sore Remora to the vessel of Justice. Therefore the poor complain; If the foundations be cast down, what can the righteous do? Quis metuet offender, cum Iudex metuat abscindere? Who will fear to do mischief, when he knows the Judge dares not punish him? Therefore when GOD made •...oshua Judge of Israel, observe how he doubles this charge. Josh. 1. ver. 6. 7. 8. 9. Be strong, and of a good courage. And the people again. ver. 18. We will obey thee, only be thou strong, and of a good courage. But this Judge will not be danted with faces of men. The Kings of the earth, the great men, the rich men, the chief Captains, and the mighty-men, hid themselves in the dens, & in the rocks of the Mountains. Those terrors of slaves, and mirrors of fools; that made the underlings tremble, & hide themselves in caves: now for all their puissance are glad to run into a hole, and cowardly shroud themselves. Adducetur cum suis stultus Plato discipulis, Aristotelis argumenta non proderunt: Hero...is maiestasdeijcietur: cum filius pauperulae venerit iudicat...rus terram. Then foolish Plato shall appear with his scholars, Aristotle shall be confuted with all his arguments, Herod... pomp shall be turned to shame, when that Son of the Virgin shall come to judge the world.

3. Honestas conscientiae, honesty of conscience. The Judge that will be corrupted, dares corrupt the truth. Woeful is that judgment which comes from him, who hath vaen...lem •...nimam, a saleable soul. F...lix was such a Judge, who hoped that money should have been given him of Paul. Qui vendit iustitiam pro pecuniae, perdit pecuniam cum anima. He that sells justice for money, shall lose mercy and his soul. You afflict the just, you take a bribe, and turn aside the poor in the gate from their right. They have built them houses of •...ewen stone. ver. 11. How? By bribes. What shall become of them? They shall not dwell in them: for fire shall consume the Tabernacles of bribery. If any Iusticers think so to raise themselves, it is but vt lapsu grauiore ruant; that they may have the sorer fall. There are certain rich stuffs forbidden by the Statute: but to wear clothes cut out of bribes, and laced with exactions; is specially forbidden by the Statute of heaven. When money can open the lock of Justices door, the worst cause is first heard. This pocket-key is fitted for all doors. One spake unhappily: I have a key in my pocket, saith he, that will pass me in all Countries: he meant his purse. In Italy it can open the door of life: Do you hate a man? for money you may have him pistold or poisoned. In Fr...nce it can open the door of love: lust you for such a woman? money makes her your harlot. In Spain it opens the door of Justice: the case shall go on the rich man's side. In England it can open the door of honor; money makes a Gentleman, and reputation swells with the Barns. In Rome it can open the door of heaven, for they sell Claues, Altari...s, Christum; peace, and pardon, and heaven, and Christ himself. Gra...s lacerantur paupers à prauis Iudicibus, quàm à cruentissimis hostibus. Nullus praedo t...m cupidus in alienis, quàm Iudex iniquus in suis. The robes of peace covering corruption, are worse to the poor then hostile invasion. But this Judge of heaven will take no bribes: other Judges may procrastinate, put off, or pervert causes. Saepe non finiunt negotia, quousque exhauriant marsupia: they will often see an end of the Clients money, before the Clients see an end of their cause. They often determine to hear, but seldom hear to determine. But Christ shall judge those Judges. Be instructed ye Judges of the earth: kiss the Son lest he be angry, and ye perish. At that day Plus valebunt pura corda, quàm as...taverba: conscientia bona, quàm marsupia plena. Pure hearts shall speed better then subtle words: a good conscience better then a full purse. Iudex non fallitur verbis, nec flectetur donis. That Judge will neither be moved with our gifts, nor deceived with our shifts. Happy soul, that forsaking the love of money, hath gotten a pure heart to appear before Jesus Christ.

4. Impartialitas Iustitiae, impartial Justice. Tully tells us of a Proverb. Exuit personam Iudicis, quisquis amici induit: He hath put off the person of a Judge, that puts on the person of a friend. The good Judge neither hath his right hand filled with love, nor his left with hatred: the scale of Justice is not swayed. Indeed tamdiu Iudex, quamdiu Iustus: he is so long a Judge, as he is just. Nomen quod ab ...quitate sumitur, per praeuaricationem admittitur. Zeleucus was commended, that when (according to his Law for adultery, which took frō the offender both his eyes) his son was deprehended in that fact; put out one of his own eyes, and one of his sons. Duo lumina cacantur iuxta legem, duo supersunt iuxta misericordiam. Two eyes are lost according to justice, and two remain according to mercy. A marvelous temper Inter iustum Iudicem, & misericordiem Patrem: between a just Judge, and a kind Father. But GOD is so just, that because sin would let him save none of us, he slew his Son to save all of us. God commendeth his love to us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. God commends his love; indeed he might justly commend it: and to us by this token, that being rebels he bought us with the blood of his own Son. He will ever continue so just, in punishing traitors, in crowning his faithful subjects. Iudex damnatur, cū nocens absolvitur. Sen. He that justifies the guilty, transfers the guilt to himself. But Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Yes, we have all sinned, but Thou continuest holy, O thou worship of Israel.

5. Aequitas Sententiae; the equity of Sentence; it shall be given upon good testimony. Ambrose says, It is not the part of a Judge to condemn any man without an accuser. Christ did not cast away Judas, though he knew him a thief, because he was not accused. When that adulteress was left alone before Christ, he said Woman where are thine accusers? Hath no man condemned thee? She said, No man, Lord. Then said Jesus; Neither do I condemn thee: go and sin no more. But here shall be no want of accusers; their own conscience, all the creatures, all the Elements, Angels, men, devils shall accuse: then Christ shall judge. Heu miser! sic deprehensus quo fugias? Latere erit impossibile, apparere intolerabile. Whither wilt thou fly, O wretch thus accused? To lie hidden it will be impossible, to appear, insufferable. Every man shall receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or evil. The same, neither more nor less, but just weight. The wicked wrought their pleasure while God did suffer: therefore God will work his pleasure while they suffer.

Of all; both good and evil, Elect and Reprobates, men and Angels: but of these in a different manner. To show how this shall be done, I must lead your attentions orderly through five passages; a Citation, Separation, Probation, Sentence, and Retribution.

1. The Citation: there is a summons sent out to make all appear before Christ's Tribunal. This citing is done by the voice of Christ. All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth. The power of this voice is unspeakable: to empty earth, sea, air, heaven, and hell: and presently to fill earth, air, heaven and hell. To empty all upon his summons, and to fill all upon his Sentence. Therefore it is compared to a Trumpet, the loudest of all musical instruments. The Trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised. Vere vox tub... terribilis, cui omnia obediunt elementa. Petras scindit, Inferos aperit, portas aereas frangit, vinculae mortis dirumpit, et de profund... abyssi animas liberatis corporibus assignat. A terrible voice, that shall shake the world, rend the rocks, break the mountains, dissolve the bonds of death, burst down the gates of hell, and unite all spirits to their own bodies. There shall be no concealing, no keeping back from this voice. Now Christ calls; Come unto me all that labor: yet you will not come unto me that you might have life. Then he shall call, Come you that must labor in torments, and be laden forever; then they must come to receive the doom of death. Now awake thou that sleepest, & Christ shall give thee light: but they will not rise. At that day awake thou wicked that art dead, and Christ shall send thee to darkness: and then they must rise. This is that general day, that shall congregate all: they shall come from the four winds, and corners of the world, to make an universal apparance. But if this be the voice of Christ, how is it then said, the Archangel shall sound the Trumpet of collection? He shall send his Angels with a great sound of a Trumpet, and they shall gather all together. The Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trumpe of God. I answer, the voice is originally Christ's, ministerially the Angels. As now he speaks to us by men, so at that day by Angels. O what a glory of our Savior shall then appear, when he is set on his Throne, before so full a Court, as all the reasonable creatures GOD ever made! Uideat nosiam in sanctimonia, vt tunc videamus eum in gaudio. Let him now behold us in holiness, that then we may behold him in happiness.

2. The Separation: we have thus brought all together, now we must separate one from another. The form hereof is given by Christ himself. Before h...m shall be gathered all Nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a Shepherd diuideth his sheep from the goats. This full and final separation is reserved for Christ, and not performed till that day. For Si...ite crescere; Let them grow both together, corn and tares, until the harvest. This world is the floor, fan while you will there will be some chaff: fish never so discreetly, you shall meet with some sturdy dog-fish that will rend the net. In Heaven are none but Saints, in Hell none but reprobates, on earth they are both promiscuously blended together.

Do you wonder that the Lambes cannot live in quiet? consider the number of goats among them. Ezek. 34. 18. They eat up the good pasture, and tread down the residue with their feet: they drink of the fountains, and foul the residue with their feet. My flock are fain to eat that they have trodden, and to drink that they have fouled with their feet. But GOD shall judge and separate. ver. 20. Behold, I, even I will judge between the fat cattle, and the lean cattle. Because they have thrust with side and shoulder, and push'd all the diseased with their horns: therefore I will save my flock, and they shall no more be a prey, and I will judge between cattle and cattle. The goats will annoy till they be quite separated. Too many among us have these goatish conditions: they climb up ambitiously to the mountres of preferment, like goats: they pill and bark the Common-wealth, like goats: they lust after women as hot as goats: they trouble the waters of Israel, the peace of the Church, like goats: they tread under feet God's blessings; like goats: they smell of impiety, as rank as goats: and therefore they must be separated, as goats.

We have all from Adam the nature of the goat: let us weep away, and keep away such goatish qualities. And let us put on the properties of sheep: which Christ John 10. gives to be three; Audire, obedire, sequi: to hear Christ's word, to obey Christ's will, to follow Christ's steps. Search thy soul for these brands and marks of a sheep, or else thou wilt prove a goat. Hast thou fidem agni, the faith of a Lamb reposed in the Lamb of God? Hast thou innocentiam agni, the innocence of a Lamb, free from wrong? Vellus agni, the fleece of a Lamb, to warm the poor? humilitatem agni, the humbleness of a Lamb, a stranger to pride? patientiam agni, the patience of a Lamb, ready to lay down thy life for Christ? then thou shalt have gloriam agni, the reward of a Lamb, assured salvation in heaven.

Thus the goats and the sheep be like in external fashion: they feed both in one pasture, lie both in one fold, all their life time: but Christ will put them asunder at the last day. Like two travelers that go together to one Town, take up one Inn, feed together at one board, sleep together in one bed: but in the morning their ways part. The sheep and goats eat together, drink together, sleep together, rot together, but at this day there shall be a separation. The goats may deceive man both in life and death, they may be taken for sheep, but Christ can discern between cattle and cattle. God judgeth by the Liver, man by the Livery. If the Liver be rotten, look the flesh never so fair, the good marketman will not buy it. If Christ find not the heart sound, he will none of the carcass.

3. The Probation; every man must undergo his trial. From the prison of the grave; they are set before the Judge, and there suffer discussion or trial. There are certain books to be opened for this probation: some rolles or Records filled up in the Court of Heaven. There is Liber praeceptorum secundum quem, & liber conscientiae ex quo iudicamur. Quicquid praecipitur scriptum in illo, quicquid delinquitur in isto. Here is Diuina scientia, & humana conscientia met together. We may forget our sins, but God keeps a true Register. If the sufferings of the Saints be recorded, then sure their violences by whom they suffer are not forgotten. Now the book of the Law whereby men are judged contains three leaves: Nature, the Law written, and the Gospel. Some must be tried by the first only, some by the first and second, others by all three.

First, that some shall be judged only by the Law of Nature, it is clear. As many as have sinned without the Law, shall perish without the Law. Here two things are considerable, two things; one, what this Law of nature is: the other, whether the breach of it be sufficient to condemn.

1. It is a knowledge of certain principles tending to live well; and of conclusions thence necessarily inferred, agreeable with the eternal rule of Truth, planted by God in man, and teaching him to worship his maker. Thus Melancthon defines it. The matter of it is Principles with conclusions directing to a good life. Parents are to be honored; this is a principle engrafted: therefore I must honor my Parents, this is a conclusion deducted. The form of it is an accordance with the rule of truth, God's moral Law: for the Law natural is the summary abridgement of the Law moral. The Author of it is God, who hath written it in man's heart. Ambros. Deus omnium Creator singulorum pectoribus infudit. The end is, that it might be a testimony of that Divine providence whereby God now ruleth, and of that Justice whereby he will judge men. This agrees with the Apostles definitiō. Rom. 2. 15. Which show the work of the Law written in their hearts, their conscience bearing witness, and their thoughts excusing or accusing.

The work, there's the matter of it: of the Law, there's the form: written, there's the Author that imprints it: the conscience accusing or excusing, there's the end. In this inward testimony arising from nature, are these two principal things: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , a comprehension of practical principles, and natural discerning between just and unjust. And 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , conscience chideing for choosing evil, and approving for doing good. The one makes the proposition, the other the assumption.

2. The other point to be discussed is, whether the breach of this Law doth condemn. Some object, that it is quite blotted out of man, therefore cannot bind him. No question, it is much obscured in respect, both of intellectual and effectual faculties. For understanding it gropeth, ifhaply it might feel after God. Adam had the knowledge of good by experience, of evil only by contemplation: but falling he had also an experimental knowledge of evil. For affection, man's will is so perverse, that when as naturally he desires to be happy, yet he willingly commits those things against his first intendment, that make him most unhappy. As a thief steals, to keep himself from famine, and so from misery: thus Ne miser fit, malus fit: & ideo miserior, quia malus. Lest he should be wretched, he becomes wicked: and is so much the more wretched by being wicked. Beatus vult esse h...mo, etiam non sic viuendo vt possit esse. Man seeks for blessedness in all places, but where it is. Yea, custom brings this will to contempt of sin. Peccata quamuis ho...renda, cum in consu...tudinem venerint, creduntur parua, aut nulla. Aug. Sins horrid and uncouth at first, become trivial and familiar by practice.

Thus is this natural light dimmed and ouercast by the corruption of prosperous lusts: yet ne ipsa quidem delet iniquitas: sin doth not quite race it out. 1. Because there are certain principles reviving in the most dissolute. As the desire of happiness; and everyone would attain that end, though they err in the means. Yea they know that evil is to be avoided, which appears in that they would not have any wrong offered to themselves. These general rules all know, albeit in the particular applications they are blinded. Hence it came, that some gross sins were not condemned of them: as robbery among the Germans, lust of males among the Grecians. Rom. 1. 27. Indeed God did punish malitiam per duritiam: yet still remain some sparks and cold sinders of that primary and original fire. 2. That the light of nature is not quite extinct, appears by the force and working of the conscience; for this doth vex and sting the most obstinate soul. By this Cain was driven to confess the monstrosnesse of his sin. 3. The practice of natural men evinceth it, who by force of nature performed some things agreeable to equity. The Gentiles having not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law. The very Gentiles had many excellent political Laws, and positive constitutions. This seems to clear the meaning of Plato's two assertions: Legem esse inuentionem veritatis, that was the Law of Nature: Legem esse imitationem veritatis, such were the positive decrees grounded upon the other. But what precepts doth this Law contain, and what remnants of it doth man retain?

The Law of nature commands man, to live religiously to God above him, justly to man with him, soberly to things under him. To deal justly with men nature gives him two rules: one affirmative, What thou wouldst have others to do to thee, so do to them: the other negative, Quod ...ibi fieri non vis, alteri ne feceris: Do not that to others, which thou wouldst not have them do to thee. Even nature Instructs a man how to rule his affections. So Tullie; Animus imperat corpori, vt Rex ciuibus: ratio libidmi, vt seruis dominus. The mind governs the body, as a King reigns over his subjects: the reason lust, as a master over his servants. Whence had he this, but from nature? There is vis rationis, orationis, adorationis. By the virtue of reason man loves man, by the power of discourse man regards himself, by the power of worship man respects God. If we should examine the particular commandments. 1. They acknowledged one God: T...lly protested, that when he wrote seriously, he mentioned but one God: and he did but ludere, play the Poet when he spake of more. Moses called this God 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and Plato 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. 2. Numa Pompilius judged it unlawful to ascribe any form to God invisible. 3. They durst indeed play with their puppets, imaginary gods; Uenus and Cupid, &c. But for the Deity, O may not the reverence of his unknown name condemn us! They cry out, Great is their Diana: this vindicates them from vilipending the name. If they had known a greater God, they would have given greater reverence to his Name. 4. Divers of the Gentiles had their Sabbaoths, mingled with strange superstitions: but they were taught by nature to set apart some time for worship. 5. They commanded and commended honor to Parents: Solon ordaining no law for Parricides, answered there were none so unnatural for to attempt it. 6. That murder was held abominable, appears by their punishing it, according to God's Law, with death. 7. That Adultery was odious, it is manifest by Pharaoh. Why saidst thou, She is my sister? so I might have taken her to me to wife. By Abimelech to Abraham; What have I offended thee, that thou hast brought on me, and my kingdom a great sin? By Abimelech to Isaac; What is this thou hast done unto us? one might have lain with thy Wife, and thou shouldest have brought guiltiness upon us. 8. Theft some punished with death, other with double restitution. Cato being asked, Quid foenerari? what it was to practice usury; answered, Quid hominem •...ccidere? the same, that to kill a man. 9. They so hated and avoided falsehood and lying, that they would not suffer a man to be witness against his enemy. 10. They thought it unlawful to covet other men's goods. One of them said, Concupiscere alien•..., sit à me alienat•...

But now their natural knowledge being so obscured, shall yet the Law of nature condemn? yes, for the invisible things of God might be understood by the things that are made: so that they are without excuse. God could not be apprehended by them any other way then by nature: yet sinning against him they are without excuse. Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not: and upon the kingdoms that have not called on thy name. He shall come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God. By this shall many millions of men be condemned. Inexcusabilis oft omnis peccator, vel reat•... originis. Original guilt makes us inexcusable, without voluntary additament. Ignorantia •...ius qui •...oluit intelligere, est peccantis culpa: Ignorantia eius qui no•... potuit intelligere, est peccati p•...na. In virisque non est iusta •...xcusatio, sed est iusta dam•...atio. His Ignorance that would not understand, is the wickedness of sin: his ignorance that could not understand, is the punishment of sin. Doth not this latter excuse? Yes a Tanto, but not a Toto: from so much guiltiness, but not from all guiltiness. Ignorance can be no plea, for all are bound to know: it serves not a malefactors turn, to plead Ignor•...tiam iuris, that he knew not the Law of his Prince which he hath broken. I know that simple nescience is minoris culpae, but not nullae; a less fault, not no fault. The knowing servant disobedient shall have many stripes: the ignorant is not spared, though less punished. To the ignorant are two wants, knowledge and a good will: but he that sins wittingly, hath but one want, only a good will. He that fails on knowledge, hath voluntatem facti & peccati, a will both to the deed, and to the sin. He that fails in ignorance, hath only voluntatem facti non peccati, a will of the deed not of the sin, though the deed be a sin. Perer. Ignorantia duplex; vna quae est causa culpae, altera cuius causa culpa est. There is an ignorance that is the cause of sin; and there is a sin that is the cause of ignorance. No ignorant hath his sin mitigated; but Is solùm qui non habuit vnde discere, saith August. He only that had no means of learning. For Christ is a just Judge, and would not condemn without fault. We have all good means of knowledge, GOD keep us from the condemnation of ignorance.

The next book is the Law: that others shall be judged by this, it is clear without question. As many as have sinned in the Law, shall be judged by the Law. The Jews shall be thus judged rather than the Gentiles, who had not the Law written. The Law of Moses did only bind the Hebrews, the Prophets were not commanded to publish it to the Gentiles. Paul calls the times before Christ, the times of ignorance; and the Gospel a mystery kept secret since the world began. Now to object, first that the Jewish Merchants taught other Nations the Law, is vain: for they were generally more apt discere religionem alienam, quàm docere suam; to learn false religions, then to teach the true. And many of them did not even by their own types and sacrifices, perfectly understand the sacrifice of Christ. Then to say, their books were manifest, is false: for the Jews kept them. Unto them were committed the oracles of God. They were first d...positarij, then oeconomi, dispensers. For out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. He showeth his word unto Jacob, his statutes unto Israel, he hath not dealt so with any Nation. So Christ to the Samaritan woman; Salvation is of the Jews. Now as this crediting facit ad honorem persona cui confidimus. Ambr. makes to the honor of the person whom we credit. This was a great credit to the Jews; so it brings them to a strict account: exigendum cum us...is; as in the Talents; God looks for his own with usury. Some of them kept them in their hands, but not in their hearts; alijs magis profu...ura quàm ipsis. Erasm. for the benefit of other, more then of themselves.

Now this book is the Touchstone or trial of our works: whatsoever we have either thought, said, or done; is either with or against this Law of God. How we wrangle here to justify many things, which there will not abide the trial? How many arguments doth a contentious man produce, to countenance his wrangling Law-suites? Defensio iuris, Intentio legis, retardatio iniuriarum. The defending of his right, the purpose of the Law, the keeping back of injuries; forbear one wrong, and provoke more: and Correctio iniustorum, the punishing of evil doers: and be not these smooth colors? who can now say, Peccasti in litigando? thou hast done ill in going to law? but still we reckon without our Oast: thou thinkest thy penny good silver, as the fool thought his pebble a diamond: bring it to the test. There is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another. Whether will God judge thee according to thine own humor, or according to this precept? Alas he will then try thee Secundum legem suam, non secundum legem tuam; after his law, not after thy lust. It is opus carnis, and will not abide tentationem ignis. Contention, strife, variance, are works of the flesh: & they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Hell fire will confute alreasons.

So among others, an angry word calls on a challenge: they have plausible reasons for it. Their credit lies upon it: and better lose life then reputation. If being wronged they challenge not, or being challenged they answer not; the world condemns them cowards. So they fight not so much against another's life, as against their own reproach. This were somewhat if it were tam been, quàm magne propositum: if the project were as Christian, as it is Roman. Now they must go to the field, pray, embrace, forgive; then fight and kill. But is this the Law that God will judge by? no, that Law is, Thou shalt not kill. But perhaps they purpose not to kill; yet saith God; Return not evil for evil: how doth this agree with thy color & humor? Yet more peremptorily. A...enge not yourselves, but give place unto wrath. For vengeance is mine, saith the Lord. Will you steal this from him in a glorious theft? hazard your soul more then your body? thrusting one upon an enemies sword, the other on God's sword? Will you meet together in so bloody a design; wherein vterque letaliter peccat, saepe alter aeternaliter perit, both sin deadly, often one or both perish eternally▪ Thus your pretences may blanch it over with the name of honor: but the law you must be tried by, will find it homicide.

For Usury, how is it bedaubed with arguments, probabilities, patronages, examples! Books have been written to justify it: But none of these is that law whereby the Usurer must be judged. They do not only reason thus; I must give to the poor, therefore I must take usury of the rich: an argument of Stand-gate hole: I may rob some, that I may give to others. But they defend it by Scripture. If thou lend money to the poor, thou shalt not lay upon him usury. Not on the poor; therefore they infer, we may lay it on the rich. Rob not the poor, because he is poor, faith Solomon, therefore we may rob the rich, because he is rich, and can spare it. Is not this a goodly strong argument? So because it is said, Exo. 22. 22. Ye shall not afflict the widow, or fatherless child: it must needs follow, that they may trouble a woman married, or a child that hath a father. There are infinite excuses: but the Law of trial is; Thou shalt not lend upon usury: study an answer to that question. As much may be said for Impropriations: what shall become of all our legal pleas, our Alienations, Prohibitions, Customs, Fines? all fine excuses? when Christ shall set the sacrilegious before him, and read this Law; Thou shalt not rob God of his tithes and offerings? Where now are all reasons and excuses? This spiritual Court will admit of no corrupt customs, no devices: Mee thou hast robbed, by me thou shalt be condemned. Lord, enter not into judgment with us: who shall be justified in thy sight? We cannot answer ex millibus vnum, one of a thousand. Help us, O thou Judge and Savior: let thy mercy as Jesus, help us against thy Justice as Judge. We must come under probation, defend us from reprobation, and let us find approbation; not for our works, but thy mercies, O blessed Redeemer. Amen.

Lastly, others are to be judged by the Gospel: and this certainly bindeth our conscience he...e, for it shall judge us hereafter. He that believeth not on Christ, is condemned. Now the Gospel requires of us two things, Faith and Obedience. Faith; Repent and believe the Gospel. Obedience; Ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine. Which obedience must be Prompta, ye have obeyed: voluntaria, from the heart: discreta, that true form of doctrine. Lyranus. Indeed Obedientia Euangelica est ipsa fides. Many think they are not bound to believe the Gospel; but by this they shall be judged.

True it is, that all are not bound to it: they to whom Christ never spoke, was never spoken, have an excuse; not of every sin, but of this sin, that they have not believed on Christ. It is objected, The Law bound all, therefore the Gospel binds all. No, for the Law was given to man's nature: so though the knowledge was lost by man's default, yet the bond remains on God's part. The Gospel was never given to man's nature, but after the fall, and is above nature. Adam was the root of mankind in respect of nature, not in respect of grace. When God gave the Law to him, he bound him and all his posterity to keep it. When he gave the Promise to him, & faith to believe it, he did not withhold it to all mankind. Neither if Adam had afterwards fallen from faith, should all mankind have fallen with him. The first Adam was not the root of the Promise, but the second.

But now to our selves; we must all stand before the Tribunal of Christ: to the Statutes of the former books who can answer? All our help is in this latter book, we fly to the Gospel. We behold the Lamb of GOD, that taketh away the sin of the world: and comfort our selves, that if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins. Now as Festus said to Paul. Hast thou appealed unto Caesar? unto Caesar shalt thou go. So, hast thou appealed to the Gospel? thou shalt go to the Gospel for thy trial. Vel te totaliter absolute, vel te capitaliter damnat. It shall either thoroughly justify thee, or extremely condemn thee. The Spirit shall convince the world of sin, saith Christ; Because they believe not on me. Now what is the holy Ghosts judgment here, will be Christ's hereafter. But why are they condemned of sin for not believing? 1. Because other sins are condemned by nature and Law; as murder, adultery: both among Jews and Gentiles: but not to believe is the proper sin of Christians; and it is a grand sin, because they have the doctrine of faith. 2. Because infidelity is the root of all sins, as faith is of all good works: the want of faith leads from transgression to presumption, from presumption to despair. 3. Especially, because faith takes away the guilt of all sins, and freeth from condemnation: but infidelity retains the guilt of it self and others. Omnia peccata per infidelitatem retinentur, per fidem remittuntur. Aug. Luther hath it out of Augustine. Nullum peccatum nisi infidelitas, nulla iustitia nisi fides. There is no sin but infidelity, no righteousness but faith. Not that Adultery, Intemperance, Malice are no sins: but Infidelitate manente, manet omne peccatum: eadem decedente absolute...tur, omnia quoad reatum. Unfaithfulness remaining, every sin remains, that departing, every sin is pardoned, and quite taken away in respect of the guiltiness. Peccata sunt, tua peccata non sunt. After thou becomest a Believer, the sins thou dost are sins; but not thy sins, because they are forgiven thee. This appears by the purpose of Christ's coming; which was to dissolve the works of the devil: believe on him, & thy sins are dissolved, absolved: thou art as if thou never hadst offended. Non quod peccatū omnino non erit, sed quod non omnino imputatum erit. Not that sin altogether should not be, but that it shall not be imputed. How quick a riddance penitent faith makes with our sins! They are too heavy for our shoulders, faith presently turns them over to Christ. Whereas there would go with us to judgment a huge kennel of lusts, an Army of vain words, a legion of evil deeds: faith instantly dischargeth them all, kneeling down to Jesus Christ, beseeching him to answer for them.

Therefore make we much of faith: if our souls be ballaced with this, they shall never shipwreck. As...asuerus had many virgins, none pleased him like Ester: none pleaseth God but faith; all the rest for her sake. She is that Judith, that saveth the life of all thy good works, by cutting off the usurping head of Satan. Thou canst not be unwelcome to God, if thou come with confidence: nothing more offends God, then the not taking his word. Sin offends his Law, but unbelief offends his Gospel. Though we do not what he bids us, yet let us be sure he will do what he tells us. It is good to obey the former, better to believe the latter: because he is more able, and more good then we. Well now, after this Gospel we must be judged: so Paul writes to his Romans; GOD shall judge the secrets of all hearts by Jesus Christ, according to my Gospel. Thou canst not satisfy the Law, therefore study thy soul an answer to this book. Otherwise, saith Christ, The word that I have spoken, the same shall iudgethee in the last day. The Sermons thou hast heard, shall rise up in judgment to condemn thee. Hence arise three conclusions.

1. It is no presumption for a Christian to believe the pardon of his sins in Christ: for to do the will of God is not to presume. If we do not believe this, Christ shall judge us damnably by the Gospel: therefore if we do conscionably believe this, he shall acquit us by the Gospel. Non est praesumptio credentis, vbi est autoritas iubentis. There is no presumption in man to believe it, when there is the authority of God to command it. Of all things in a Christian, God doth not love a nice dainty, and maidenly faith. He loves to have a man's modesty bashful, his humility fearful, his penitence sorrowful, his patience joyful, his compassion pitiful: but he loves a faith that hath boldness in it. That is not afraid to trouble God with a...iance, or suppliance: but is confident ruat •...rcus et ortus. Without faith it is dangerous pressing into the Presence Chamber; as it was to the marriage without the wedding garment: but in faith Sequere et consequere; qui cupit, capit; speak and speed. Whatsoever you shall ask the Father in my Name, he will give it you. It is no sin to trust God with thy soul: Paul teacheth it by example. I know whom I have believed, that he will keep that I have committed to him against that day. Peter by counsel, Commit your souls to God in weldoing. It is no sin to call God Father; for he hath sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba Father. It is no sin to trouble him with our suites: Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith. Not to do this faithfully, is against the Gospel; therefore to be judged of that sin.

The infallible certainty of a true Christians salvation, is known to himself, and cannot be doubted without sin. For if it be sin to distrust this, it is then righteousness to believe it. The sum of the Gospel is man's salvation by Christ: he that believes not this, believes not the Gospel: and he that knows the Gospel, and believes it not, shall by it be condemned. Now God in the Gospel doth not require that absolute perfection, which he did in the Law, under the peril of damnation: but qualifies the rigor of the Law by the satisfaction of a Mediator. So that the Gospel accepts the intent and endeavor for the act; as the will to repent for penitence, and the will to believe for faith. It is then not only a weakness, but a wickedness to distrust God's mercy in thy salvation; let not this faultiudge thee before Jesus Christ.

3. The Gospel requires probation of faith by a good life. Norma fides, forma vitae: as we believe we must live. Do we believe Christ hath redeemed us? We must live like such as are redeemed: if freed, let us demean our selves as children of freedom. It is nothing at this judgment to say, I have believed, when the life shall witness the contrary: thy lips affirm, but thy works deny. As our Savior said, Opera testantur de me; my works bear witness of me, that I am Christ: so thou must say, Opera testantur de me, my works bear witness of me, that I am a Christian. Thou shalt be saved for thy faith, not for thy works: but for such a faith as is without works thou shalt never be saved. Works are disjoined A iustificando, non a iustificato; from the act of justifying, not from the person justified. If this Judge for his own merits give us salvation, we must show him the fair copy of our conversation. Quicquid Christus operatur pro nobis, operatur in nobis. Whatsoever Christ works for us, he also works in us. If he hath freed us from the damnation of sin, he hath also freed us from the dominion of sin. Albeit in our justification Fiet nobis secundum fidem nostram; Be it unto us according to our Faith: yet in salvation Reddetur vnique secundum operasua; Every man shall be rewarded according to his works. Let not that which is a word of comfort to us, be a bill of inditement against us.

4. The Sentence. As there be two sorts of men to be sentenced, so there is a double sentence: one of Absolution, the other of Damnation. With Absolution our Savior begins in action, with that let us begin in meditation. He begins with favor, O he is ready to show mercy: and comes slowly to wrath and judgment. In the Absolution are considerable four circumstances; A Calling, a Commending, a Reply, and an Answer. First, the calling is set down. Math. 25. 34. Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. In which gracious speech we may perceive six gradations.

1. Amabilis vocatio; Come. This was the voice of Christ generally to all in the day of Grace, is particularly to the Elect in the day of Glory. Now he calls more then will come, then he will not call all that would come. Now he gives many Venite's. Come to me all that labor. If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink. The Spirit and Bride say, Come, and let him that heareth say, Come: and let him that is athirst come. Send not others, but come yourselves. Come to no others, either Saints or Angels, but come to me. Let us take heed of that Discedite, quia nol...stis venire; Depart from me; good reason, for you would not come unto me. You declined my call when I was humbled. Is not this the Carpenters Son? I will decline you now I am exalted; None of those men that were called shall taste of my supper. But such as have obediently heard his Come in holiness, shall also graciously hear his second Come in happiness.

2. Su...is Benedictio; Ye Blessed. Never man was, is, or shall be, but desires secundum sensum suum, after his own sense to be blessed; saith Aristotle: though the most have sought it out of the right vbi, where it was not to be found. In Christ only it is found, who is indeed the Father of blessedness. Mat. 3. 3. Blessed are the poor in spirit. The first word of the first lesson of Christ's first Sermon is Blessed. So he begins, so there he continues, so here he concludes, Come ye blessed: a word able to make a man blessed.

3. Patris dilectio, Of my Father: to be blessed of God, is to be surely blessed. Parents do well in blessing their children, Princes in blessing their people: here's the difference, Benedicunt, but not Beatificant: they may wish them blessed, but not make them blessed. But saith God to Abraham; In blessing I will bless thee: I have blessed him, and he shall be blessed. All blessedness springs from that fountain: the Lord hath blessed us, and requires us to bless him; who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen. This the universal song of all creatures gives him; Blessing, honor, &c.

4. Foelicitatis Possessio, Inherite. Inheritance is of Birth, not industry: the younger brother is often of more desert then the elder, yet cannot this make him his Fathers Heyre. This is of Inheritance, therefore not of merit. It differs from an earthly Inheritance in three things. 1. In that the Testator must be dead, and the successor living: in this God the Testator is ever living, and his heirs before they can fully possess it, must be dead. Ambr. A temporal inheritance divided, is diminished: one is of so much land shortened, as is to another shared. The heirs here are without number; of all nations, kindred and languages; yet though the inheritance be imparted, it is not impaired. Tanta singulis, quanta omnibus. Everyone hath as much as any one. Ardens. 3. The partition of an earthly inheritance breeds among the coheires envy & grudging: but in this the joy of one is the joy of all. Dispar gloria singulorum, tamen communis laetitia omnium. Aug. One star may excel another star in glory, but none shall envy another in glory. There shall be no repining at another's more glorious clearness, where remains in all one gracious dearness. Inherite.

5. Haereditatis Perfectio; a kingdom. The top of man's desires is a kingdom; nil nisi Regna placent. Yet if they be earthly kingdoms, they will not satisfy: Alexander is not content with his universal Monarchy. But here is a kingdom will satisfy: you will say, there are many Kings, & but one kingdom; therefore not room enough: yes, for the bounds of the least are not narrower then heaven it self.

6. Regni Paratio; Prepared for you: Not merited in your times, but prepared before all times. It had no beginning in respect of God's intention: it shall have no end in respect of your possession. God's decree to give it us had no beginning, but shall have an end: our fruition of it shall have a beginning, but no end: God's mercy in both hath neither beginning nor end; but is from everlasting to everlasting. Had the Lord such care to provide a kingdom for his children before they were; then sure he will give it them at the appointed time. So certain are they of blessedness, that it is prepared for them from the foundation of the world. For you: not for all: there is no universal election, God decrees not all to be saved. Then Christ should have said thus, Inherit the kingdom; Paratum omnibus, Datum vobis: prepared for all, and given to you: but he saith, Prepared for you, therefore not purposed to all. Seeing there is so good cheare prepared for us, let us prepared for us, let us prepare our selves for that: like some dainty guest, who knowing there is such delicate fare behind, keeps his stomach for it. Let us disdain the course diet of this world, that dangers us to the dropsy of covetise, or the surfeits of riot. We use to fast on the Eves, that we may feast on the Holy-days: let us here abstain from the table of sin, that we may hereafter banquet in the Kingdom of Heaven.

This is matter of comfort to us: here the world condemns the godly: therefore they shall have a time of absolving. When that General Session comes, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nye. There is no mercy to be had in this world, for the wicked themselves are accusers, witnesses, judges: but at that day a poor man's case will be heard. Therefore the poor committeth himself unto thee, for thou art the helper of the fatherless. Christ will take the cause into his own hand. The souls under the Altar cry with a loud voice; How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth! Yes, it is fit everyone should have a day of hearing. This is theirs, that shall be ours: The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance. Rejoice? yes, they have no charity to us on earth, we must have no charity to them in hell.

2. The Commendation follows the calling, Mat. 25. 35. For I was hungry, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink, &c. Christ witnesseth their faith from the effects: they brought forth fruits of mercy. Thus it is evident, that not according to the internal habit of faith and charity, but according to the external acts proceeding from them, is the reward bestowed. Christ before justified them by their faith, apprehending his merits: now he justifies them by testimony (of that faith) arising from their works. The point Christ insists in, is their works of mercy; which are six, visito, poto, cibo, redimo, tego, colligo fratres. Giving them meat, drink, harbor, clothing, visitation in sickness, redemption from bondage.

Where observe, that the main point Christ will scanne at the last, is the point of mercy. Not how wise, nor how learned, nor how just, but how merciful. Ambr. Now if a Scholar standing for preferment, knew directly that one question wherein he should be opposed; he would study a full and ready answer to it. We all know that one and main question wherein Christ will examine us, what works of mercy have we done: if we have gotten no demonstration of mercy, we are worthily condemned. Now their mercy is commended, partly in respect of the object, and partly in respect of the act. For the object, it is done to Christ: happy mercy that is done to the Lord Jesus; it shall never pass unrewarded. Joash forgot the kindness of Jehoiada; but the King of heaven will remember all the good done unto him. Says that good malefactor; Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. I will not forget thee, answers Jesus; To day thou shalt be with me in Paradise. I was hungry, and ye fed me. I, and me, saith Christ.

In regard of the act, the thing they distribute and contribute, is not bare words, but actual mercies; food, clothing, &c. This is the effect of a true faith, not a verbal, but a real working faith. A faith, not like that the Psalmist seems to mention, (though in another sense) I believed, & ideo locutus sum, and therefore I spake: but such as the Apostle speaks of; I believed, & ideo operatus sum, and therefore I wrought a faith working by love. It is easy to mistake Saint Paul, Rom. 14. 22. Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. unless we expound him by S. James, I am. 2. 18. Hast thou faith? show thy faith by thy works. If we will be the children of Abraham, who is the Father of them that believe: we must be so by Sara, who is the mother of them that obey. They that will be trees of righteousness in God's garden, must not be like the fig-tree in the Gospel, that had only leaves, no fruit: but like the tree that brings forth her fruit in due season. Or like Aaron's rod, that of a dead stick, having life and sap put into it; presently bare Almonds; fruit, no leaves spoken of.

Some give words enow; contrary to Moses, who was a man of few words. The Papists will rather loose a penny than a Paternoster: these will give ten Paternosters before one penny. They give the words of Nepthali, pleasant words; but no meat. As if the poor were like Ephraim, fed with the wind. Or as if their word were verbum Domini, the word of God, that men might live by it. Solomon says, Wisdom is good with an inheritance, so good counsel is good with an alms. If a famished man beg bread of thee, and thou only fallest to instruct his soul, but deniest food to his body: he may reply, as Hushai said to Absalom of Ahithophel's counsel. The counsel that Achitophel hath given is good, but not at this time. Martial demands of Gaius a small piece of silver; Quod vel donanti non grave. Gaius blamed him for his idle profession of Poetry, counseled him to study the Law, that would enrich him. To him Martial; Quod peto da mihi tu, non peto consilium. Give me that I ask thee, I do not ask thee counsel. Many are like S. Peters fish; it had money in the mouth, but not a hand to give it. Or like Dives his dogs; they can lick a poor man with their tongues, else give him no relief. Diogenes a witty beggar would usually walk in a place where earthen Statues were erected, in honor of some that died for their country. To them he would pray, to them reach out his hand, bow, and beg: being asked the reason, he answered; Nihil aliud quàm repulsam meditor. I think of nothing, but a repulse and denial. We have many such living Statues, mere Idols: that have mouths and speak not, eyes and pity not, hands and give not: the poor are sure of nothing but a repulse.

3. The reply, or question upon this commendation made by the Saints. Math. 25. 37. Then shall the righteous answer him; Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? &c. This is no denial of that truth Christ hath avouched. But 1. to magnify Christ's mercy, who takes these works as done to himself, which are done for his sake. Let no covetous Churl plead, he wants subjects upon whom to exercise his mercy; Pauper vbique iacet: which way can he walk, and not behold one hungry, another thirsty, &c? 2. To testify their humility, that albeit these things are true, yet they acknowledge no merit in them: they have not done so much of these as they ought. Besides, they might have an after-consideration of their sins past; which valued with their good works, they find one to outweigh a thousand. The Papists ostent their merits on earth, the Saints dare not do so even ready for heaven: but cast down their crowns before the Throne: saying, Thou, O Lord, art only worthy to receive glory and honor. They have nec boni inopiam, nec in bono superbiam. They are not poor in good works, nor proud of good works. They wrote their charity in the dust, therefore did God write it in Marble. They seem to forget the works of mercy they have done, therefore are they remembered by Jesus Christ.

4. The answer of Christ, Mat. 25. 40. In as much as ye have done it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. The miseries of my brethren are my own miseries. We have an high Priest touched with the feeling of our infirmities. That invulnerable and glorified breast, is still touched with the sense of our wounds. Saul, thou persecutest me: he says not mine, but me: me in mine. He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye. Surely he will pity the misery of everyone, that is afflicted with the sorrows of all. Quis recusabit pro Christo pati, quando Christus compatitur patienti? Who would refuse to suffer for Christ, when he is sure that Christ suffers with him?

Here is excellent direction for our works of mercy: that no sinister end draw them from us, but sincere love to Christ. If any fish for the applause of men, his bait shall be his own hook, to snare himself. Da Christo; look on the poor man, and in that member behold the Head, Christ. He that shall give a cup of cold water to one of these little ones, in the name of a Disciple, he shall in no wise lose his reward. A cup of water is but a small gift, yet done in that Name, and for that cause, it is rewarded, as an excellent work of mercy. It is the true note of a child of God, to show mercy to a Christian, because he is a Christian. Natural men have their private ends, and advantageous respects, in their beneficences. Such a one shall do me service, flatter my addiction, bring intelligences to mine ear; I will make him my property: my charity shall bind him to me. Moral men will sometimes give, even for pitie's sake: but the true Christian doth it for Christ his sake, and looks no further. Doing good unto all, especially to them that are of the household of faith. Some think, that the best work is to build Temples and Monasteries: but indeed the best work is to relieve (not the dead, but) the living Temples of Christ's mystical Body. It was an ancient complaint; Fulget Ecclesia in parietibus, •...get in pauperibus. The Church flourisheth in her glorious buildings, but mourneth and pines away in her poor members. Deny not due cost to the dead walls, but first satisfy the living bowels; that Christ may say, Come ye blessed.

I come now to the sentence of Condemnation, Math. 25. 41. Then shall he say to them on the left hand; Depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels. In this form of damnatory judgment, are four points considerable. A Rejection of the wicked, a Reason of that rejection, an Objection against that reason, a Confutation of that objection. In the Rejection are many particulars gradually enhancing their judgment. They are partly Priuative, & partly Positiue. Depart from me ye cursed, there is Poenadam•...i: Into everlasting fire, there is Poenasensus. As there be two kinds of sin: Delictum and Peccatum. Delictum est desertio boni, Peccatum perpetratio mali: the one a forsaking of that is good, the other a committing of that is evil. So there is a like proportion of punishment; a depriving of joy, and a giving over to torment. Here is

1. A grievous refusal; Depart. This seems nothing to the wicked now, such is their dead security. Depart? Why they are content to be gone. Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore their heart is fully set in them to do evil. But as when a Prince opening his long locked up Treasury, graciously takes some in with him, and saying to other ill-meriting followers, Depart: it will be a disgraceful vexation. So when the glory of heaven, and those invaluable treasures shall be opened, and dealt about to the faithful; what horror will it be to the Reprobates to be cast off with a Depart? Blessed are the eyes that see the things which ye see: saith Christ to his Saints. For Kings have desired to see them, and were not suffered. If it were such a Blessedness to see Jesus in humility, what is it to see him in glory? But from this the wicked are bidden, Depart.

2. The loss of Salvation; From me: your Savior that was wounded for you; that offered my blood to you, which was offered for you. And if from me, then from all that is mine; my mercy, my glory, my salvation. Consider here, what an excellent thing it is to have familiarity with Christ on earth, that he may not cast us off as strangers from heaven. He that would have Christ know him there, must not be a stranger to Christ here. He must have some fellowship with GOD: How? If we walk in the light, we have fellowship with God, and with his Son IesusChrist. To walk in the dark, is to have fellowship with the Prince of darkness: to walk in the light, is to have fellowship with the Father of lights. Will a Reprobate that hath always turned his back upon Christ, here press into his company? Upon what acquaintance? Yes, We have eat and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets: as if they should say, We have fed at thy Communion table, and heard thee preach in our Pulpits. Still this proves no acquaintance: for in the one you did eat Panem Domini, non Panem Dominum; the bread of Christ, but not Christ with the bread. In the other you have heard Uerbum Domini, not regarded Dominum verbi. Your ear hath been open, but your conscience shut. Therefore, ver. 25. Non noui vos; as familiar as you presume, yet you are such strangers to me, that I know you not. They never willingly came near Christ but to persecute him; therefore he shall then cast them far enough off forever.

3. The deserved Malediction; Ye cursed. He is cursed, that being borne in sin, lives in it, and dyes in it, without seeking recovery. I call this curse merited, because they love it. As he loved cursing, so let it come unto him. Hath he loved it? Let him take his love. As he clothed himself with cursing as with a garment: so let it come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones. ver. 18. It was his outside, let it be his linings: it was his outward stuff, let it be his inward stuffing. Everyone that hath not first a pardon by Christ, must hear this curse pronounced against him from Christ. O then suffer not thine eyes to sleep, till Christ hath sealed thee a Quetus est. Give no peace to thyself, till thou have peace with GOD. Quamdiù imp...nitentia manet, maledictio imminet. So long as vnrepentance abides in us, Cursednesse hangs over us. He that willfully goes on in known wickedness, hazards himself to inevitable cursedness. Go ye cursed.

4. The horror of the pains; Into everlasting fire. Fire; of all elements the most violent, therefore fittest to describe those pangs. The pile thereof is ...ire and much wood: the breath of the Lord, like a river of bri...stone, doth kindle it. Euerlasting; the torments thereof are ever frying, never dying. Where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. Aug. Vermis corrodet conscientiam, ignis comburet carnem; quia & cord & corpore deliquerunt. The fire shall torture their flesh, the worm their spirit: because both in flesh and spirit they have sinned. The reprobates shall be packed and crowded together, like •...rickes in a fiery furnace, having not so much as a chinke where any wind may enter in to cool them.

5. The preordinance of their torments; Prepared for the Devil and his Angels: ordained beforehand. Origen held that the Devil and his angels should one day be released from their tortures: and that these words of Christ were spoken Minaciter, potiùs quàm veraciter; rather by way of threatening, then true meaning. But Augustine answers, that the Scripture hath confuted him plenissime ac planissime. For the fire prepared for Satan is not temporary, but everlasting: where though floods of tears be continually raining upon it, yet can it not be put out.

Prepared: to the terror of wicked men, that covenant with hell: alas they are deceived, it was made for some purpose. That fire was prepared for some, and some have prepared themselves for it. Burning in lusts, in malice, in revenge; until themselves, their lusts, malice and revenge, and all burn in hell. The Devil was crafty, yet he could not scape hell: be as wily as you can, yet beware hell. It is not policy, but piety, that must escape this fire. Now as this brings to the wicked much terror, so it helps to preserve the godly against error. And this was one principal cause of the penning this sentence. The wise master of the family will chide his servants, vea and upon desert correct them, in the presence of his child, that he may learn by it to stand in awe of his Father. So deals God; Minatur quod faciet improbis, ne faciat quod minatur sanctis. He threatens the wicked what he will do to their sins, that the godly may avoid what he threatens for sins. Omnis minatio amica monitio: every threatening is a fair warning. The Lord give us mutare sententiam nostram, vt ipse mutet sententiam suam; to change our mind, that God may change his menace. Let us now come humbly to him in repentance, that we may never depart from him into vengeance. The other circumstances I will but touch.

2. The reason of this rejection, Mat. 25. 42. For I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink. They are not judged Ex malis commissis, sed ex bonis omissis; not by the evil deeds they have done, but by the good things they have not done. Christ says not, Ye took away my meat when I was hungry: but you gave me not your meat. You did not strip me of the clothes I had, but you gave me no clothes when I had not. The axe cuts up the tree which brought not forth good fruit; though it be not accused for bringing forth bad fruit. Innocency is good, but not enough: we see that not to have relieved, is an unanswerable inditement at that day. How heavy will this sentence fall upon many among us! What heaps have many in this City; perhaps some got without a tender conscience, yield it no worse: yet would to God it were so well: for it is hard Bonum cito •...uadere diuitem; for an honest man to become rich on the sudden. They have it, and now may they not keep it? is it not their own? But O it is fearful, when for this keeping they shall be condemned. It is not a groat weekly, or monthly to the poor, and a small pension to the much-robbed Church, that can discharge you: but you must give proportionably. Plead what you can to the poor, Christ will not be so answered. Who can force me to give? none: but because thou wilt not give vnforced, thou shalt justly be condemned.

3. The objection against this reason, Math. 25. 44. Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, &c. and did not minister unto thee? They have a kind of impudence still adhering to their foreheads: they would seem to justify themselves, though they be deservedly punished. When did we see thee? Often. When this poor widow hath departed without thy mercy, that orphan without thy help, that blind or lame without thy alms. When? when not? every occasion shall be a bill of inditement against thee. Who will wonder to see a Romish Pharisee sooth and flatter himself on earth, when he is not ashamed to do it in judgment •...efore the Lord Jesus Christ? Sed nulla defensio absolute reum, nulla infensio dissoluet iudicium. Plead they whether subtly, or angrily, as if some wrong were done them; it is Equity it self that doth sentence them.

4. The confutation of their objection. Math. 25. 45. Insomuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. This one distinction takes away all their arguments: here is a full answer to their Quando: a declaration of their death-deserving wickedness: that would have no pity on the Lord Jesus. Judgment merciless shall be given to them that show no mercy: you know this. Dives was denied a drop, because he would not give a crumb: you know this: He that stoppeth his ear at the cry of the poor, shall cry himself and not be heard. Did not I tell you thus? The poor you had ever, this mercy you shown never: therefore Go ye cursed.

5. Lastly the Retribution: this is set down in brief; but the matter it contains, is long and everlasting. All shall come forth; they that have done good, to the resurrection of life; they that have done evil, to the resurrection of condemnation. These shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal. An estate soon versed: never to be reversed. The voice of Christ shall speak it; and the power of Christ shall effect it. No Angel shall speak against it, no devil shall withstand it.

How should this teach Saint Paul's use; who considering that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust; resolved with himself to have always a good conscience void of offense toward God, and toward man. Let it instruct us all to watch for this day; a decayed charge, then which nothing was more current in the mouth of Christ. Let me conclude with that sigh from his soul; Could ye not watch with me one hour? It will not be long ere the glass be run, the hour out; Judas is at hand, judgment is not far off: then may you sleep and take your rest. This day is nearer you now, then when you first entered the Church. Twice have the blasted ears eat up the full corn: twice have the lean kine devoured the fat: Pharaoh's dream is doubled for the certainty and expedition. Yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come and will not tarry. If we shall have comfort in this day when it is come, we must long for it before it do come. What comfort shall the Usurer have? he desires not this day: for then the Angel swears there shall be no more time; and his profession is to sell time. He sells it dear, very costly to another's purse, but most costly to his own soul. Such as bribe for Offices, farm Monopolies, contract an usurious rent for life; do they desire it? Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord: to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light. The soul groaning under sin desires it. Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? The suffering soul may desire it. Come Lord Jesus. The faithful Spouse wedded to Christ desires this coming of her Husband: she is now espoused, that is the plenary consummation of the marriage. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and the Bride hath made her self ready. Blessed are they that be called to this marriage supper.

To the ungodly it will be a fearful day. Ignis vbique ferox ruptis regnabit habenis: there shall follow an universal dissolution. Downwards go Satan, his angels, and reprobates; howling, and shrieking, & gnashing of teeth: the effect of a most impatient fury: to be bound hand and foot with everlasting chains of darkness. Where fire shall torture, yet give no light: worms gnaw the heart, yet never gnaw in sunder the strings: eternal pains punire, non finire corpora. Small sorrows grow great with continuance: but O misery of miseries, to have torments universal, and withal eternal: not to be endured, yet not to be ended. Upwards goes Christ, the blessed Angels and Saints, singing with melody as never mortal ear heard. The only song which that Choir sung audible to man, was that which the Shepherds heard: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men. Yet Christ was then coming to suffer: what may we think are those Hallelujahs everlastingly chanted in the Courts of Heaven! we know not, yet we may know one special note, which an universal Choir of all nations, kindred, and tongues; Angels, Elders, All shall sing; Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might be unto our God forever and ever. Amen.

To the spirits of just men made perfect. The Citizens of heaven are of two sorts; by Creation or Adoption. Created and natural Citizens are the Angels, Adopted are Men. Of these be two kinds, some Assumed, and others Assigned. The Assigned, such as are decreed in their times to be Citizens; said before to be written in heaven. The Assumed, such as are already possessed of it, here Spirits of just men made perfect. But how then is the Apostles meaning cleared? How are the militant on earth said to be come unto these just spirits in heaven? Yes, we have a Communion with them, participating in Spe, what they possess in Re. Now we are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-Citizens with the Saints, and of the household of GOD. Only our apprenticeship of the flesh is not yet out; but they have their freedom. But as we have all an union with Christ, so a Communion with Christians: the combatant on earth, with the triumphant in heaven.

Spirits: this word hath diverse acceptions. It is taken 1. Pro animo, for the Mind. Luke 10. 21. Jesus rejoiced in spirit. 1. Chron. 5. 26. God stirred up the spirit of the King of Assyria. 2. Pro seed rationis, et 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, 1. Cor. 2. 11. What man knows the things of man, save the spirit of man which is within him? 3. Pro Affectuvel Afflatu, for the motion of the mind, whether good or bad. Luke 9. 55. Ye know not what manner spirit ye are of. So there is called the spirit of lust, the spirit of pride, &c. 4. Pro donis spiritus sancti, for the gifts of God's Spirit. Act. 8. 15. Peter and John prayed for the disciples at Samaria, that they might receive the holy Spirit; meaning the graces of the holy Spirit. Gala. 3. 2. Receiued ye the Spirit by the works of the Law, or by the hearing of faith? 5. Pro efficacia Euangelij, for the effectual working of the Gospel; and so it is opposed to the letter. 2. Cor. 3. 6. The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. 6. Pro spiritualibus exercitijs; for spiritual exercises. Gala. 6. 8. He that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap everlasting life. John 4. 23. True worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit & truth. 7. Pro regenerata parte: for the regenerate part of a Christian, and so it is opposed to the flesh. Gala. 5. 17. The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit lusteth against the flesh. 8. Lastly, Pro anima immortal..., for the immortal soul. Eccl. 12. 7. Dust shall return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return to God who gave it. This spirit did Stephen commend into the hands of Christ. Act. 7. 59. And Christ into the hands of his Father. Math. 27. 50. yielding up the spirit. Thus it is taken here.

Spirits, he doth not say bodies: they lie in the dust under the hope of a better resurrection. Spirits: We find here what becomes of good men's souls when they forsake their bodies: they are in the heavenly City. There are many idle opinions, what becomes of man's soul in death. Some have thought, that the souls then, though they die not, yet are still kept within the body (as it were asleep) until the last day. But the Scripture speaks expressly the contrary: for Dives his soul was in hell, and Lazarus his soul in Abraham's bosom. I saw under the Altar the souls of them that were slain for the Word of God. Some have imagined a transmigration of souls forsakē of their own bodies, into other bodies. Herod seems to be of this opinion: when news was brought him concerning the fame of Jesus, he said to his servants; This is John the Baptist, he is risen from the dead. He thought that the soul of John was put into the body of Jesus. It is alleged, that Nebuchadnezzar living and feeding with beasts, until seven times were passed over him; had lost his own soul, and the soul of a beast was entered in the room. But this is a frivolous conceit: indeed God had bereft him of common reason, yet he had still the soul of a man. Do not many among us, that have the souls of men, live like debauched beasts? The lustful like a goat, the covetous like a wolf, the drunkard like a hog, the Politician like a fox, the rayler like a barking cur. Others think, that the soul neither dieth nor sleepeth, nor passeth out of one body into another, but wandreth up and down here on earth among men: and often appeareth to this man, often to that: whence came that fabulous opinion that dead men walk. For this purpose they allege the Witch of Endor, who made Samuel appear to Saul, and answer him. But the truth is, that was not Samuel indeed, but an apparition, the mere counterset of him. For not all the Witches in the world, nor all the Devils in hell can disquiet the souls of the faithful: for they are in God's keeping. Dying, their souls are immediately translated to blessedness: there are the spirits of just men made perfect: and there to abide, until the general Resurrection shall restore them to their own bodies. For the souls of the Reprobates, departing in their sins, they go directly to hell, and are kept there as in a sure prison.

Let this instruct all such as have a Christian hope, to let their souls depart with comfort. Emittuntur, non amittuntur: death doth not lose them, but loosen them, & set them free from the bondage of corruption. Howle and lament if thou think thy soul perisheth. There are some that fear not so much to die, as to be dead: they know the pang is bitter, but it is short: it is the comfortless estate of the dead that is their dread. They could well resolve for the act of their passage, if they were sure to live afterwards. Animula vagula blandula, Whither goest thou, said that Heathen Emperor on his death-bed? lamenting the doubtful condition of his soul after the parture. Very not being is abhorred of nature; if death had nothing else to make it fearful. It is woeful to lie rotting in the silent grave, neither seeing, nor seen. Here the Christian lifts up his head of comfort; Lord, into thy hands I commend my spirit. I lose it not, because thou hast it: thou wilt keep it in peace, and g...ue it me back again in eternal joy.

Of just men. Justice is ascribed to a Christian two ways: There is 1. Passiua iustitia, a passive justice, Christ's righteousness imputed to him: and hereby he stands perfectly just before God. This the Apostle calls The righteousness of GOD, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all. Christ is made unto us righteousness. This justice is attained by faith; Noah became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. Abraham believed GOD, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Without this no spirit shall appear just before God in heaven. Our own righteousness is a covering too short to hide our nakedness: Christ's garment is a long robe, that covers all.

2. Actiua iustitia, active righteousness, an effect of the former: which is indeed a testimony that we are justified by Christ. Let no man deceive you: he that doth righteousness, is righteous. Therefore saith James, A man is justified by his works: if his meaning had been that our own works simply acquit us before GOD; it could never be reconciled to that of his master; when we have done all we can, we must call our selves unprofitable servants. Nor to that of his fellow; I see a law in my members, warring against the law of my mind: nor to that of himself; In many things we sin all. Now this justice effective from God, active in us, is taken two ways; Late and Stricte.

In a larger sense it is taken for all Piety, and so justice and holiness are all one. Properly taken, Justification is imputed, Sanctification inherent: but understanding our justness an effect of Christ's justice imputed to us, so Iustus and Sanctus are convertible terms. They are

Just spirits, that is, they are Saints. Now if we desire to come ad Sanctos, to the Saints: we must live sancte, a holy life. God by telling us who are in heaven, teacheth us who shall come to heaven; none but Saints. They are set before us as examples: Vt eorum sequamur gratiam, et consequamur gloriam: that steering their course, we might come to their Haven. The Scripture teacheth us Quid agendum, what is to be done: the Saints Quo modo, how it is to be done. Uita sanctorum, interpretatio scripturarum. The lives of holy men is a kind of Commentary or interpretation of the holy writ. Let us as we do by good copies, not only lay them before us, and look on them, but write after them. For it is not sufficient Legere, sed degere vitam sanctorum: not to read, but to lead the lives of Saints. Papists in this go too far, as evil men come too short. Good men imitate the Saints, but do not worship them: Papists worship the Saints, but do not imitate them: lewd men do neither. Perhaps they will imitate their infirmities: as if only for that they liked them, for which only God disliked them. The Saints are to be held as Patterns, not as Patrones of our life. But the Papists praise not God in his Saints, nor the Saints for God, but as God. Only let us reverently walk in their grace, that we may joyfully come to their place.

In a stricter sense it is taken for that moral virtue, which gives to every man his own. This virtue hath been highly commended in the heathen: but one saith truly, Iustitia ethnicorum miranda potius, quàm laudanda: their Justice deserved more admiration, then commendation: they wanted him that should make them just. They so affected this justice, that they took Surnames from it; Aristides was called Iustus: Scipio, Iustus: Fabius, Iustus. Their justice was no virtue, but a shadow of virtue. They neither knew the Lord Deum virtutis, nec Christum virtutem Dei; the God of virtue, nor Christ the virtue of God. Only Jesus is Iustus. Christ suffered for sins, the just for the unjust. Ye denied the Holy one, and the Just. There was another Jesus called Iustus, a helper of the Apostles: but Christ is Dominus Iustitia nostra; The Lord our Righteousness. By him we are only made just: In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and glory.

Being thus justified, let us be just: not doing that to others, which we would not have others do to us: and doing that to others which we desire to be done to our selves. Some are just in small matters: so the Pharisees pay tithe of mint, & annise, and cummine; but omit weightier things. This is Pharisaica Iustitia, a Puritan righteousness: not to endure an hours recreation on the Sunday, yet to rob the Church by usurpations, to exact interests and forfeits; these be nothing. So the money might not be put into the Treasury, that might hire Judas to betray his master. The ten brethren were so just, as to return the money in their sacks; yet stuck not to sell their brother Joseph.

Some are just in great things, not in small. As the other strain at a gnat, and swallow a camell: so these are like the net, that takes the great fishes, and lets go th... little frie. Wantonness is no fault with them, if it extend not to adultery. They stick not to swear, so long as they swear not to a lie. Maliciously to hate, or peeishly to quarrel, is trivial; if they proceed not to blows and blood. So long as they are not drunk, swallow down wine, and spare not. De minimis non curat Lex; the Law takes no notice of small faults. But indeed Eadem ratio rotunditatis, there is the same respect of roundness in a penny, that is in a platter; though not of largeness. To steal the bridle, as to steal the horse, is Tam, though not Tantum:

such a sin, though not so great a sin. Thou sayest minimum est, minimum est; it is little, it is little. Sed in minimo fidelem esse magnum est: to be faithful in a little is a great virtue. Whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven. Erit minimus, that is Nullus: he shall be least in heaven, that is, he shall not be there at all. But well done good servant: Because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten Cities. Bene vtere paruo, fruere magno: the just dispensation of a little, shall bring thee to be entrusted with much. Whether great or small we must be just, if we look ever to reign with these just spirits. Ad societatem iustorum non admittuntur nisi iusti.

I wonder what place the defrauder expects; that wraps up his conscience in a bundle of stuffs, and swears it away. The buyer thinks he is just, and he is just cousoned, no more. The Usurer would storm and stare, as if had seen a spirit, if he were taxed for unjust. Presently he consults (his Scriptures) his bonds, and (his Priest) his Scrivener: and there the one swears, the other shows in black and white, that he takes but ten in the hundred. Is he then unjust? Yes, Thou hast taken usury and increase, and hast greedily gained of thy neighbors by extortion. He takes hire for that should be freely lent: is not this unjust? Besides, the people curse it, and they curse not but for injustice. I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent me on usury, yet everyone doth curse me. Insinuating, that if a man lend upon usury, it is no wonder if the people curse him. Where must the Lay-Parson sit, that fattes himself with the Tyth-grain, & will not give the poor Minister the straw? Is this just? He takes the tenth of his neighbors profits, and never so much as reads him an Homelie for it: is this just? He lays sactilegious hands on God's sanctified things, and never asks him leave: is this just? Where shall the Engrosser appear, that hoards up commodities bought with ready money, and when he vents them, makes the poor pay treble usury for it: is this just? What shall become of that unspeakably rich Transporter, who carries out men and money, to the impouerishing of the Land, and brings home gawdes and puppets, fit for no bodies use but prides? Surely, as heaven is for Just spirits, so there is some other place for the unjust. Know ye not that the unjust shall not inherit the kingdom of God? If not God's kingdom, then the kingdom of darkness; downwards, hell. I do not say, that every unjust deed throws a soul thither: Iniustum esse damnat, non injust semel agere; to be unjust is damnable, not one thing unjustly done: the habit, not the act. But for others; Qui injust dominantur, i...ste damnantur. They have unjustly lived, but they shall be justly condemned.

Made perfect. This is a passive quality; non qui se perficiunt, sed qui perficiuntur: not such as have made themselves perfect, but are made perfect. The other property is actively expressed; Just, it is not said Justified: not that they made themselves just, but that Christ's righteousness hath justified them; so both they are, and are reputed just. But here passively, Perfected: which plainly shows that all is from God: for omne maius includit minus. If only Christ make them perfect; then only Christ doth make them •...ust. For it is nothing so difficult for a just man to become perfect, as for an evil man to become just. As it is easier for a man healed and directed the way, to come to the goal; then for him that lies lame in darkness. Qui dedit ingressum, must also dare progressum: conficere & perficere; to make and to make up, to do and to perfect, are both the works of God. We could never be just, unless Christ justify us: never come to perfection, unless he perfect us. He that begun this good work, must also finish it.

Made perfect. In heaven are none but the perfect. Talis sedes expectat talem sessorem: such a house requires such an inhabitant. On earth there is a kind of Perfection: all the faithful are perfectly justified, but not perfectly sanctified. The reprobates are perfect imperfecti: the godly imperfecte perfecti: those perfectly imperfect, these imperfectly perfect. They are so perfect that they are acquitted in Christ, and there remains no judgment for them, but only a declaration of their pardon. Justification admits no latitude, in it nec magis nec minus, for none can be more than just. But the perfection of sanctity is wrought by degrees: non plenam induimus perfectionem, donec totam exuimus infectionem: all the stains of our infection must first be cleansed, and quite washed away; before this full perfection be given us. Christ's blood doth now wholly take from us the guiltiness of sin, not wholly the pollution of sin: that blessedness is reserved only for heaven.

Let us therefore be perficientes, going and growing up, that at last we may be Perfecti, made perfecti. This is not wrought on a sodain; a child doth not presently become a man. Even the Lord Jesus had his time of growing, and can any member grow faster then the Head? Indeed the malefactor on the cross shot up in an hour; but this was miraculous, and God seldom works by such miracles. God neither sends Angels from heaven, nor the dead from hell, to give warning to men upon earth. If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. But repentance hath the promise of a Qandocunque; whensoever a sinner repents, &c. I will not limit God's infinite mercy; but only advise thy sick soul, who after a desperate and inveterate wound lookest for a sudden cure by repentance: it is better to make this thy diet, then thy physic. Repent every day, that thou mayest have remission one day. Melior medicus qui excludit morbos, quàm qui curat. He is a better Physician that keeps diseases off us, then he that cures them being on us. Preuention is so much better then healing, because it saves the labor of being sick. Thou allowest not a Surgeon unnecessarily to break thy head, to try his skill, and the virtue of his plaster. Sprindges were better taken away quae non prosunt, because they do no good: then the setting of watchmen by them to warn travelers, ne noceant; that they be not hurt by them. Take away thy lusts quite, this is the way to be sure: for repentance may be like Baal, so fast asleep that all thy cries are not able to waken her.

To conclude, he that will wear a crown in heaven, must be all his life on earth preparing the gold to make it. Not that thy own virtues crown thee, but that GOD without thy virtues will never crown thee. The robe of glory that is worn there, must be spun and woven here: spun out of the side of Christ by faith, and embroidered with our good works. That eternal light ariseth from this internal life. Lay up in store for yourselves a good foundation against the time to come, that you may lay hold on eternal life. The ground work of salvation is made here: that high Tower of glory that is built for thee in heaven, hath the foundation of it laid upon earth.

How should a man be Perfectus, that was never factus, well begun? I wonder what perfection a wine-bibber looks for; sure to be a perfect drunkard. What perfection expects the luxurious prodigal: sure to be a perfect beggar. What perfection hopes the covetous Churl; that allows himself a race of fourscore years; and sets God at the latter end of it: and he hath that place too with this condition, that he trouble not his mind about it till the last day comes. Surely to live vnblest, and to die vn-pittied: but that some now bless God he's gone; and other say, it's pity he died no sooner. All his projections have aimed at this perfection, to make himself a perfect slave. What perfection dreams the Jesuit to himself, but to become a perfect traitor? What perfection is likely to the incontinent adulterer, but to be a perfect Lazar. What the malicious, but a perfect villain: what the proud, but a perfect fool: what the blasphemous, but a perfect Devil?

They say, early holiness proves ripe corruption: but I am sure, habituated profaneness proves rank damnation. Alas, how should they make an end, that never begin? This man began to build, saith Christ, but could not make an end: how should they finish that never began? you that spend your days in a lazy forgetfulness of religion, examine your own consciences: do you ever think to be perfect? Are you content still to be abortive, and shall you be perfected in the womb of the grave? God hath given you time and means: he did not say, Sumite & consumite: take it, and spend it at your pleasure. O begin, that you may continue and end: hear to learn, learn to do, do to continue, continue to be perfect. Begin betimes, lest God's end come before your beginning. Enter into the way of Piety, and follow it: striving with all your powers to grow up to a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

And to Jesus the Mediator of the new Covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things then that of Abel. We have considered the glory of the City, the felicity of the Citizens; we are lastly come to the Mediator, who brings both these together, and without whom they had been everlastingly asunder. We are all by nature belonging not to Mount Zion, but to the valley of Hinnon: not to the celestial Jerusalem, but to the infernal Babylon: not to the society of glorious Angels, but of afflicting Devils: not to the Church of the first borne, but to the assembly of abortive reprobates: we had no reference to God as a kind Father, but as a severe Judge: not to just spirits made perfect from sin, but to lost spirits made perfect in sin. Thus were we by nature, but Jesus hath brought us to Mount Zion, &c. How blessed a thing will it be to come unto this Jesus! It was Saint Augustine's special wish, to have seen Christ in the flesh. If there were such comfort in seeing Christ humbled, if such admiration in seeing him transfigured, what joy is it to behold him in heaven glorified! How glorious a matter do some think it to stand in the Court of an earthly Prince, to receive a gracious look, to hear a royal word, or to be commanded some honorable service! what is it then to stand in the Court of heaven, to have the King of Kings speak peaceably to us, to behold our Lord Jesus crowned with that immortal Diadem, to sing his praises as free from flattery, as from inconstancy, and to live in that Paradise forever! Vbicunque fueris Domine Jesus: wheresoever thou art O blessed Savior, give us no more happiness then to be with thee. If thou be in the earth, we will travel day and night to come to thee; if on the sea, with Peter we will swim to thee: if on the Cross, we will stand weeping by thee: if riding in triumph, we will sing Hosanna to thee: if transfigured on Tabor, we will be ravished with thee: but if sitting in thy heavenly Throne, how blessed even to look upon thee! It is his will, that we should be with him where he is, and behold his glory. We are now come to him by a conjunction mystical, we shall then have a vicinity local, and eternal.

The Mediator, not a Mediator, but The, That Mediator, that only one. For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. God was angry, man was guilty, Christ is the Mediator betwixt them: who being God, could satisfy God, and being man, could suffer for man. We are lost, and desire something to recover us: what shall that be? Mercy? No, God is just: he that hath offended must be punished. Shall it be Justice? No, we have need of mercy: that he who hath offended might be spared. Here, to be so merciful as not to wrong his justice, to be so just as not to forget his mercy; there must be a Mediator. This must not be the world, that was God's own before, he made it: not Angels, for they are engaged for their own creation; and being finite, cannot satisfy an infinite Majesty by infinite punishment for infinite sins.

God's Son must do it: now if he come to satisfy for pride, he must put on humility: if for rebellion, he must put on obedience: if for stubbornness, he must put on patience: he must serve if he will deserve: this God alone cannot do: if to die, he must be mortal, this only God cannot be. Therefore this Mediator is made man, to be himself bound; as he is GOD to free others that are bound. Man to become weak, God to vanquish. Man to die, God to triumph over death. This is that sacred Ladder, whose top in heaven reaching to the bosom of God, expresseth his Divinity: & his foot on earth close to Jacob's loins, witnesseth his Humanity. We are bankrupt debtors, God is a sure Creditor, Christ sets all on his score. We are ignorant Clients, God is a skillful Judge, Christ is our Advocate to plead our cause for us. God is a just Master, we are unfaithful, unfruitful, unprofitable servants, this Mediator takes up the matter between us.

Of the new Covenant. For Moses may seem to be a Mediator of the Old Covenant. I stood between the Lord and you at that time, to show you the Word of the Lord. This Mediatorship of the New covenant is a high office, competent to none but the Lord Jesus. Who should appear between a just God, and sinful men; but he that is mortal with men, and just with God? It is a Covenant, for there is something agreed on both sides: we covenant to believe, and God to forgive. A New covenant; there was cold comfort for us in the old. A man reading, Fac hoc et vines, Do this and thou shalt live: thinks of it as if he were bidden to catch a star from the firmament, & take it for his labor. But in the New, Crede et vine; believe & live forever. The condition on man's part is believing, the covenant on God's part is Saving. Now, though it be true, that it is as easy for man of himself to fulfill the Law, as it is to believe the Gospel, yet the New covenant, Dat credere, gives a man power to believe: for faith is the fair gift of God. Praecipit non adiuvat Lex, offert et affert Euangelium. The Law gives commandment, but not amendment: the Gospel brings salvation to our hearts, & our hearts to salvation. As it chargeth us, so it aideth us. As this Mediator gives Fidem quam credimus, the faith which we believe, mercy and remission: so also Fidem qua credimus, the faith whereby we believe, grace to apprehend this mercy. Christ hath obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the Mediator of a better Covenant, which was established upon better promises.

Briefly here consider the excellency of this New and Evangelical Covenant, above the Old and Legal. In the beginning God made man righteous: for he created him in his own Image, which the Apostle says consisted in righteousness and the holiness of truth. But man soon defaced this goodly and godly picture. This I have found, that God made man righteous, but he sought out many inventions; waves to make himself wicked and wretched. Hence it followed that our restitution was a greater work then our constitution. The house was with more ease built up new, then repaired being old and ruinous. That was done per verbum enuntiatum, this per verbum annuntiatum. There he spake the word, and all things were created: here the Word was made flesh: Fecit mira, tulit dira: passus dura verba, duriora verbera. There it was done by saying, Dic verbum tantum: here by doing, yea by dying: suffering grievous words, more grievous wounds: Factus in terris, fractus in terris. There all begun in Adam, who was Terrae filius, a son of the earth: here all in Christ, who is Coeli Dominus, the Lord of Heaven. Spiritual life is better then natural, firmer, surer. There man had only a power to stand, but with it a power to fall, according to his own pleasure: here he hath a certainty of inseparable conjunction to Christ. He so stands as never to fall, so lives as never to die, so is loved as never to be hated. There Adam and Eve were married to propagate filios carnis, children of the flesh: here Christ is married to his Church, to beget filios spirituales, children in the Spirit: and that with a bond never to be divorced. Thus at first God commanded that to exist, which was not before: now he makes one contrary to be changed into another: flesh into spirit, darkness into light, corruption into holiness: greater miracles, then changing stones into bread; Dignus vindice nodus, a knot worthy the finger of God to untie. Here is the wonderful work of the New Covenant: we were made Ex spirituoris, redeemed ex sanguine cordis: created by the breath of God's mouth, but saved by the blood of his heart. Therefore not six Cherubims as in the vision of Isaiah, nor four and twenty Elders, as in the Revelation of John; but a royal Army of heavenly soldiers were heard praising GOD at the birth of Jesus Christ.

In sum, there is but one Mediator of the New Covenant: neither Saint nor Angel hath any part in this dignity. Melancth. Idem est multos Deos fingere, ac sanctos mortuos inuocare: to worship old Saints, is to make new God's. He that shall pray to dead men, dishonors the living Mediator. Saint Paul saith expressly, There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. Whence it is manifest, that it is the same blasphemous presumption to make moe Mediators then one, that to make moe God's then one. Here the Romanists distinguish; Christ is the sole Mediator of Redemption, not of Intercession. Opus est mediatore ad mediatore Christum. We must have a Mediator of intercession to this Mediator of redemption. A blind answer: for Paul directly there speaks of prayers and Intercession. ver. 1. &c. But say they, Our prayers are to be made to God alone, tanquam per cum implenda; because our desires are fulfilled only by him: but unto the Saints, tanquam per eos impetranda; because they are obtained by them. As if Christ were so busy that he could not tend to hear us: or so stately, that he would not bend to hear us: or so unjust, as to deny his own Venite, and not to perform his promise; Come unto me all that labor.

We oppose against them that comfortable saying of S. John. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous. They answer, Indeed Christ is our chief Advocate, Saints and Angels secondary or subordinate Advocates. But the word Advocate is borrowed of the Lawyers, & signifies him only that doth plead the justice of his clients cause. A stranger in the court may become a petitioner to the Judge, & entreat favor for the person guilty: but Advocates are Patrons & Proctors of their Clients. Angels in heaven, & Saints on earth, are suitors in our behalf to God: but Christ alone is our Advocate. And upon good cause, for who but he can so well plead his own righteousness whereby he hath justified us? Therefore the Apostle calls him there our Propitiation: he that will be our Advocate, must also be our Propitiation: no Saints or Angels can be a Propitiation for us; therefore no Saints or Angels can be our Advocates. Augustine says, that if S. John had offered himself to this office, he had not been Apostolus, sed Antichristus.

We object further Christ's promise. Whatsoever you shall ask the Father in my Name, he will give it you. Not in Mary's, or Peters, but in my Name. Bellarmino answers, that there may be a Mediator between disagreeing parties three ways. 1. By declaring who hath the wrong; and so there is no controversy; for all agree that GOD is the party grieved. 2. By paying the Creditor for the Debtor; so Christ is alone Mediator. 3. By desiring the Creditor to forgive the Debtor; and in this sense, he says Angels and Saints are Mediators. But this distinction is no other than Bellarmino's mincing; who indeed seems to be ashamed of the blasphemous phrases in their Missals. As Maria mater gratiae: Sancte Petre miserere mei, salua me, &c. These, saith he, are our words, but not our meanings; that Mary or Peter should confer grace on us in this life, or glory in the life to come. Yet both their School and Practice speaks more. For Aquin says, our prayers are effectual by the merits of Saints; & that Christ's intercession is gotten by the patronage of Apostles, by the interuention of Martyrs, by the blood of Becket, and merits of all Saints. And the practice of the people, is to hold Angels and Saints immediate Mediators, able to satisfy and save. But as one hath well observed; if every Saint in the Popes Calender be received as a Mediator, we shall worship unknown men, as the Athenians did unknown gods. For the best Papists doubt whether there were ever any S. George, or S. Christopher.

But say they, The Virgin is a known Saint: she can and may by the right of a Mother command her Son Christ. Their whole Church sings, O foelix puerpera, nostra p...ans scelera, inre matris impera. And Maria consolatio infirmorum, redemptio captiuorum, liberatio damnatorum, salus uniuersorum. They have given so much to the Mother, that they have left nothing for the Son. Ozorius the Jesuit says, Caput gratiae Christus, Maria collū: Christ 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 is the Head of grace, but Mary is the Neck: no grace can come from the head, but it must pass through the neck. They invoke her their Advocate: but of Christ's mediation the medium or better half is taken from him: as if he were still a child, in subjection to his Mother. But as he is Mariae filius, so he is Mariae Dominus: the Son and the Lord of his Mother. Therefore the first words that we read Christ ever spake to his Parents, were rough, and by way of reproof. According to Saint Luke, these were his first: How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be about my Fathers business? According to Saint John more sharply, Woman, what have I to do with thee? Quaquàm locuta est iure matris, tamen duriter respondet. Where was then their Monstra te esse Matrem? Though at the command of his Mother he spake, yet he spake roughly. Whereas God's kingdom consists of his Justice and Mercy; the Papists attribute the greatest part, which is his Mercy, to Mary: making her, as one noted, the Lady high Chancellor, & Christ as it were the Lord chief Justice. As we appeal from the Kings-Bench bar to the Chancery, so a Papist may appeal from the Tribunal of God to the Court of our Lady. So they make her Domina fac totum: when one flatteringly wrote of Pope Adrian; Traiectum plantavit, Louanium rigavit, Caesar autem incrementum dedit. Traiectum planted, Louaine watered, but the Pope gave the increase: one wittily vnderwrites; Deus interim nihil fecit; God did nothing the while. So if Mary be the comfort of the weak, the redeemer of captives, the deliverer of the damned, the salvation of all, the Advocate of the poor, the Patronesse of the rich; then sure Christ hath nothing to do. No beloved; Abraham is ignorant of us, the blessed Virgin knows us not; but the Lord Jesus is our Redeemer. Prayer is not a labor of the lips only, but an inward groaning of the spirit, a pouring out of the soul before God. Now Saints and Angels understand not the heart: it is the righteous God that trieth the heart and the reins. Christ is the master of all Requests in the Court of Heaven, there needs no porter nor waiter. It is but praying, Lord Jesus come unto me: and he presently answers, I am with thee. Hear me O Christ, for it is easy to thy power, and usual to thy mercy, and agreeable to thy promise. O blessed Mediator of the new Covenant, hear us.

To the blood of sprinkling. Aspersionis, Hebraico more pro aspersione. Two things are implied in the two words; Sacrificium and Beneficium. Blood, there is the sacrifice of Sprinkling, there is the benefit.

To the blood. To speak properly, it is the death of Christ that satisfies the Justice of God for our sins: and that is the true material cause of our redemption. Yet is this frequently ascribed to his blood. The blood of Christ purgeth the Conscience from dead works. Out of his pierced side came forth blood and water. As God wrote nothing in vain, so what he hath often repeated, he would have seriously considered. Non leuiter praetereat lectura nostra, quod tam frequenter insculpsit Scriptura sacra. There are some reasons why our salvation is ascribed to CHRIST'S blood.

1. Because in the blood is the life. Flesh with the blood thereof, which is the life thereof, you shall not eat. Leu. 17. 14. The soul of a beast is in the blood, and in the blood is the life of every reasonable creature on earth. The effusion thereof doth exhaust the vital spirits, and death follows. In Christ's blood was his life; the shedding of that was his death: that death by the loss of that blood is our redemption.

2. Because this blood answers to the types of the legal sacrifices. This our Apostle exemplifies in a large conference. The first Testament was not dedicated without blood. Moses sprinkling the book and all the people, said, This is the blood of the Testament. Almost all things are by the Law purged by blood, and without shedding of blood is no remission. No reconciliation, no remission without blood. All directed us to this Lamb of GOD, whose blood only vindicates us from eternal condemnation. Not that the blood of a mere man could thus merit; but of that man who is also God: therefore it is called the Blood of God.

3. Because blood is fitter for applyment to the heart of man; who is so weak in apprehension that GOD is fain to lead him as it were by the senses? Not that there is a necessary receiving of Christ's material blood by everyone that shall be saved: so it might sprinkle upon the soldiers that crucified him, who yet might go to hell. But it is received Mentaliter &

Sacramentaliter; there is a mental and a sacramental application. Thus we are said to drink his blood, that receive it spiritually by faith. The Papists in their opinion are fed orally with the very material blood of Christ: but then surely none of them can go to hell; for he that eats the flesh, and drinks the blood of the Son of Man, hath eternal life. But now the Priests, for fear belike lest too many of the people should be saved, and so Purgatory the Popedomes pillar be quite overthrown, have taken away the Cup from them; and turned Christ's Bibite omnes into Bibite non omnes; Drink ye all, into drink ye only Priests, not the rest. When they had given this blood so high an honor, they thought it too good for the common sort. First they said, it is really in the Cup; there they gave it too much: then they took it from the people, there they gave them too little. First they strained it, and then they restrained it. But they answer, the people have this blood in the bread; for that is flesh, and can there be flesh without blood? If so, why then do themselves take the Cup? Either it is necessary for the people, or superfluous for the Priests. Unless they value a Clergy man's soul at a higher rate than a Laymans: as if Christ's blood were not shed for the one, so well as for the other.

But to let go their sacrilegious absurdities, let us content our selves spiritually to receive this blood, shed for us, and communicated to us. This blood is ready for application, if our hearts be ready for apprehension. To us it is, though not elementally, yet alimentally profitable. There is a blood that nourisheth, as the Pelican her young ones with her own blood; Christ so feeds our souls to salvation with this blood. There is a blood that mollifies; as the warm blood of a goat softens the Adamant: we have obdurate hearts if Christ's blood cannot melt them. There is a blood that purgeth as the Kids; so the blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin. There is a blood that colors, as the Deeres; so doth Christ's blood give a pure color to his Church; Thou art all fair my love. These are they which have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. This blood is Semen vitae, substantia gratiae, fundamentum iustitiae, aedificium meriti, magna charta coeli. A fluxe of blood in the head is stanch'd by opening a vein in the foot: but here to save all the members from bleeding to death, blood must be drawn from the Head. As Eve came out of Adams side sleeping, so the Church is taken out of Christ's side bleeding. Thus God disposed it in mercy; Ut effundatur sanguis Christi, ne confundatur anima Christiani: that Christ's blood should be spilled, to save our souls from spilling.

Of Aspersion; in relation to the typical manner. Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people. To this alludes Paul here; and Peter calling it the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. In the Passover the doors were sprinkled with the blood of the Paschal Lamb; and the destroying Angel passed over them. All those whom the eternal judgment shall pass over, must have their hearts thus sprinkled. We have many spots, had need of many drops. For a spot of avarice a drop of this blood: for a spot of lust a drop of blood: for a spot of drunkenness a drop of blood: for a spot of oppression a great drop of 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 blood: for the wounds and gashes of oaths, execrations, blasphemies, many drops of blood to stanch them. Yea we are not only sinners, but saith Micah, Sins: therefore must be sows'd and drench'd in this blood, that we may be clean.

That speaketh better things than that of Abel. This is a Metaphor, to show the force of Christ's blood, so prevailing with God as if it had a tongue. The comparison is between Abel's blood and Christ's: now Abel's is said to cry; The voice of thy brothers blood crieth unto me from the ground. Clamitat in coelum vox sanguinis. So Christ's blood is said to speak; Quot vulnera, tot voces; so many wounds, so many words.

There is great response of Christ to Abel. Abel was slain by his brother, Christ by his brethren; the voice of the Jews was Crucify him. Abel was slain because he sacrificed; Christ was slain that he might be sacrificed. Cain envied Abel because he was accepted; the Jews hated Christ because he was good. Abel might say to his brother; For my sacrifice dost thou kill me? Christ did say to the Jews; For which of my good works do you stone me? Abel was so slain, that his blood was abundantly shed, and that in many places; for it is said Vox sanguinum; the voice of bloods. So Christ's blood was let out with thorns, scourges, nails, spear. As Cain sustained a threefold punishment; he was cursed in his soul, a vagabond on earth, vnprosperous in his labors. So are the Jews plagued; they have no place they can call their own; when they have heaped up riches, some other takes them away; they cannot see their own City but they must pay for it; they are cursed in their obstinate blindness: thus according to their own request, the blood of Christ is upon them and upon their children.

But now Christ's blood speaks better things: Abel's cried vindictam, Christ's speaks miserordiam. That, Lord see and revenge; this, Father, forgive them, they know not what they do. God hath an ear of mercy, so well as of Justice. If he heard that blood speaking for confusion, then he will hear this speak for remission. If he heard the Servant, he will much rather hear the Son: if he heard the servant for spilling, he will much more hear the Son for saving. Postula à me, saith God to his Son: Ask of me, and I will give thee: the Father will deny the Son nothing. Thus hath he saved us Prece & Pretio, by his blood, and that a speaking blood: if that blood speak for our safety, nothing shall confound us. Now the blood of this Mediator our Lord Jesus speak for us to the Father of mercy, that the Holy Ghost may seal us up to eternal redemption. To whom, three persons, one blessed God, be praise forever.

Amen.

THE WORLDS GREAT RIDERS: OR, The rage of Oppression.

PSALM. 66. 12.

Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads: we went through fire and through water: but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.

THIS verse is like that Sea, Math. 8. 24. So tempestuous at first, that the vessel was covered with waves: but Christ's rebuke quieted all, and there followed a great calm. Here are cruel Nimrods riding over innocent heads, as they would over fallow lands; and dangerous passages through fire and water: but the storm is soon ended, or rather the passengers are landed. Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.

So that this strain of David's music or Psalmodie consists of two notes; one mournful, the other mirthfull: the one a touch of distress, the other of redress: which directs our course to an observation of Mise...e, Mercy; of grievous misery, of gracious Mercy. There is desolation, and Consolation in one verse: a deep dejection, as laid under the feet of beasts; a high erection, brought out into a wealthy place.

In both these strains God hath his stroke: he is a principal in this Consort. He is brought in for an Actor, Author; an Actor in the Persecution, an Author in the deliverance. Thou causest, &c. Thou broughtest &c. In the one he is a causing worker, in the other a sole-working cause. In the one he is joined with company, in the other he works alone. He hath a finger in the former; his whole hand in the latter.

We must begin with the Miserie, before we come to the Mercy. If there were no trouble, we should not know the worth of a deliverance. The passion of the Saints is given by the hearty and ponderous description, for very grievous: yet it is written in the forehead of the Text, The Lord caused it. Thou causedst men to ride, &c.

Hereupon some wicked Libertine may offer to rub his filthiness upon God's purity; and to plead an authentical derivation of all his villainy against the Saints from the Lord's warrant: He caused it. We answer to the justification of Truth it self, that God doth ordain and order every persecution, that striketh his children; without any allowance to the instrument that gives the blow. God works in the same action with others, not after the same manner. In the affliction of Job were three Agents: God, Satan, and the Sabaeans. The Devil works on his body, the Sabaeans on his goods: yet Job confesseth a third party. The Lord gives, and the Lord takes away. Here Oppressors trample on the godly, and God is said to cause it. He causeth affliction for trial: (so ver. 10. and 11. Thou hast tried us, &c.) they work it for malice: neither can God be accused, nor they excused.

In a sinful action there be two things: the Material, and the Formal part: which we commonly distinguish into the act and defect. The Material part is of GOD; from whom is all Motion: the Formal is from the pravity of the agent. Persecutors could not accuse us maliciously, if GOD gave not motion to their tongues; nor strike us wrongfully, if he denied strength to their hands. Thought, sight, desire, speech, strength, motion are God's good gifts: to turn all these to his dishonor, is the wicked persons fault.

God hath another intent, then man hath, even in man's work. The Chaldeans steal Job's wealth, to enrich themselves: the Devil afflicts his body, in his hatred to mankind: God suffers all this for the trial of his patience. Man for covetousness, the devil for malice, God for probation of the afflicted's constancy, and advancing his own glory. In the giving of Christ to death, as Augustine observes; the Father gave the Son, the Son gave himself, Judas betrayed him, and the Jews crucified him. In one and the same tradition, God is to be blessed, and man condemned. Quia in re vna quam fecerunt, causa non vna ob quam fecerunt. Because in that same thing they all did, there was not the same cause why they all did it. God's end was love, Judas his avarice, the Jews malice.

The covetous Extortioner taketh away the goods of his neighbor; that robber spoileth. He could have no tongue to plead, nor wit to circumvent, nor hands to carry away, without God: from him he hath those creatures, that notion and motion. But to pervert all these to damnifie others, and to damn himself, ariseth from his own avarice and rancorous pravity.

His intent is wicked; yet not without God's wisdom to raise profit from it. Perhaps the oppressed had too good a liking to the World, and began to admit a little confidence in their wealth: the Lord hath benefited them, in taking away these snares, to save their souls.

Yet without toleration, countenance, or help to the wicked. The Usurer hath done thee good: by making thee poor in purse, helped thee to the riches of grace; yet he goes to hell for his labor. They that do GOD service against their wills, shall have but shrewd wages. It cannot be denied, but the devil did God service; in trying Job, winnowing Peter, buffeting Paul, executing Judas: yet shall not all this ease the least torment of his damnation. For trial here, are these oppressors suffered to ride over the godly's heads, and to drive them through fire and water: when these have like furnaces, purged them from dross & corruption, themselves shall be burnt. For it is usual with God, when he hath done beating his children, to throw the rod into the fire. Babylon a long time shall be the Lord's Hammer to bruise the Nations, at last it self shall be bruised. Judas did an act, that redounds to God's eternal honor, and our blessed salvation, yet was his wages the gallhouse. All these hammers, axes, rods, sawes, swords, instruments, when they have done those offices they never meant, shall for those they have meant, be thrown to confusion.

I will now leave God's justice to himself; and come to the injustice of these Oppressors, and the passion of the sufferers. And because the quality of these latter shall add some aggravation to the cruel malice of the former; I will first set before your eyes the Martyrs. The Psalm being written by David, and the sufferers spoken of in the first person plural; We, Vs, and Our: it follows, that it was both David, and such as David was; beloved of God, holy, Saints.

And whom doth the world think to ride over, but Saints? Psal. 44. 22. Who should be appointed to the slaughter, but Sheep? The Wolf will not prey on the Fox, he's too crafty: nor on the Elephant, he's too mighty: nor on a dog, he's too equal: but on the silly Lamb, that can neither run to scape, nor fight to conquer. They write of a Bird, that is the Crocodiles toothpicker, and feeds on the fragments left in his teeth whiles the serpent lies a sunning: which when the unthankful Crocodile would devour, God hath set so sharp a prick on the top of the Birds head, that he dares not shut his jaws till it be gone. And they speak of a little Fish, that goes bristling by the Pike, or any other ravenous water-creature, and they dare not for his pricks & thorns, touch him. Those whom Nature or Art, strength or sleight, have made inexposable to easy ruin, may pass unmolested. The wicked will not grapple upon equal terms: they must have either local or ceremonial advantage. But the godly are weak and poor; and it is not hard to prey upon prostrate fortunes. A low hedge is soon trodden down; and over a wretch dejected on the base earth, an insulting enemy may easily stride. While David is down, (or rather in him figured the Church) the plowers may plow vpon his back, and make long their furrows.

But what if they ride over our heads, and wound our flesh, let them not wound our patience. Though we seal the bond of conscience with the blood of innocence; though we lose our lives, let us not lose our patience. Lactantius says of the Philosophers, that they had a sword, and wanted a buckler: but a buckler doth better become a Christian, then a sword. Let us know, Non nunc honoris nostri tempus esse; sed doloris, sed passionis; that this is not the time of our joy and honor, but of our passion and sorrow. Therefore, let us with patience run the race, &c.

But leave we our selves thus suffering; and come to speak of that we must be content to feel, the oppression of our enemies. Wherein we will consider the

- Agents,
- Actions.

The Agents

Are Men. Thou hast caused men to ride, &c. Man is a sociable living creature, and should converse with man in love and tranquility. Man should be a supporter of man, is he become an ouerthrower? He should help and keep him up, doth he ride over him, and tread him under foot? O Apostasy, not only from divinity, but even from humanity. Quid homini inimicissimum? Homo. The greatest danger that befalls man, comes whence it should least come; from man himself. Caetera animantia, saith Pliny, in suo genere, probe degunt, &c. Lions fight not with Lions: Serpents spend not their venims on serpents: but Man is the main suborner of mischief to his own kind.

It is reported of the Bees, that •...grotante vna, lament•...ntur omnes: when one is sick, they all mourn. And of Sheep, that if one of them be faint, the rest of the flock will stand between it and the Sun, till it be revived, only man to man is most pernicious. We know that a bird, yea a bird of rapine, once fed a man in the Wilderness: that a beast, yea a beast of fierce cruelty, spared a man in his den. Whereupon saith a learned Father, Ferae parcunt, aues pascunt, homines saeuunt. The birds feed man, and the beasts spare him; but man rageth against him. Wherefore, I may well conclude with Solomon, Prov. 17. Let a Bearrobbed of her whelps meet a man, ratherthen a fool in his folly.

God hath hewn us all out of one rock, tempered all our bodies of one clay, and spirited our souls of one breath. Therefore saith Augustine, Since we proceed all out of one stock, let us all be of one mind. Beasts molest not their own kind; and birds of a feather fly lovingly together. Not only the blessed Angels of heaven agree in a mutual harmony; but even the very devils of hell are not divided, lest they ruin their kingdom. We have one greater reason of unity and love observed, then all the rest. For whereas God made not all Angels of one Angel: nor all beasts of the great Behemoth: nor all fishes of the huge Leviathan: nor all birds of the majestical Eagle: yet he made all men of one Man. Let us then not iarre in the dispensation of our minds, that so agree in the composition of our natures. You see how inhumane and unnatural it is, for man to wrong man; of his own kind, and as it were, of his own kin. Thus for the Agents.

The Action

Is amplified in diverse circumstances; climbing up by rough stairs to a high transcendancy of Oppression. It ariseth thus;

In

- Riding.
- Riding over us.
- Riding over our Heads.
- Driuing us through fire and water.

1. They ride. What need they mount themselves upon beasts, that have feet malicious enough to trample on us? They have a Foot of Pride, Psalm. 36. from which David prayed to be delivered. A presumptuous heel, which they dare lift up against God; and therefore a tyrannous toe, to spurn dejected man. They need not horses and mules, that can kick with the foot of a revengeful malice.

2. Ouer us. The way is broad enough wherein they travel, for it is the Devils roade; they might well miss the poor: there is room enough besides, they need not ride Ouer us. It were more brave for them to juttle with champions, that will not give them the way: we never contend for their path: they have it without our envy, not without our pity: why should they ride Ouer us?

3. Ouer our heads. Is it not contentment enough to their pride to ride? to their malice, to ride over us? but must they delight in bloodiness, to ride over our heads? will not the breaking of our arms and legs, and such inferior limbs, satisfy their indignation? Is it not enough to wrack our strength, to mock our innocence, to prey on our estates; but must they thirst after our bloods and lives? Quo tendit saua libido? whither will their madness run?

But we must not tie our selves to the latter. Here is a mystical or metaphorical gradation of their cruelty.

Their Riding Ouer us Ouer our heads is Proud Malicious Bloody Oppression.

They Ride.

This phrase describes a vice compounded of two damnable ingredients; Pride, and Tyrannie. It was a part of God's fearful curse to rebellious recidiuation, Deut. 28. that their enemies should ride and triumph over them; and they should come down very low, under their feet. It is delivered for a notorious mark of the great Whore of Babylons pride, that she rides upon a scarlet-colou'rd Beast. Saint Paul seems to apply the same word to oppression. 1. Thes. 4. That no man oppress his brother. The original 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; to go upon him, climb on him, or tread him under foot.

O blasphemous height of villainy; not only by false slanders to betray a man's innocence, nor to lay violent hands upon his estate; but to trip up his heels with frauds, or to lay him along with injuries, and then to trample on him! And because the foot of man, for that should be soft and favoring, cannot dispatch him, to mount upon beasts, wild and fauage affections, and to ride upon him.

Ouer us.

This argues their malice. It were a token of willful spite for a horseman, in a great rode, to refuse all way, and to ride over a poor traveler. Such is the implacable malice of these persecutors. Esa. 59. Wasting and destruction are in their paths: yea, wasting and destruction are their paths. They have fierce looks, and truculent hearts: their very breath is ruin, and every print of their foot vastation. They neither reverence the aged, nor pity the sucking infant: Virgins cannot avoid their rapes, nor women with child their massacres. They go, they run, thy stride, they ride over us.

The language of their lips, is that which Babylon spake concerning Jerusalem: Down with it, down with it, even to the ground. Rase it, rase it, even to the foundation thereof. Desolation sits in their eyes, and shoots out through those fiery windows, the burning glances of waste, havoc, ruin: till they turn a land into solitude; into a Desert, and habitation for their fellow-beasts, and their worse selves. O unmerciful men! that should be to men kind as God; but are more ragingly noxious then wolves. They have lost the nature, let them also lose the name of men.

Uix repperit vnum,

Talibus e multis, hominem consultus Apollo. But it is ever true: Optimi corruptio pessima. The fairest flowers putrefied, stink worse then weeds: even an Angel falling became a Devil: and man debauched, strives to come as near this Devil as he can. They should put their hands under our falling heads, and lift us up: but they kick us down, and ride over us.

Ouer our heads.

This notes their bloodiness, vnpacifiable but by our slaughters. The pressing, racking, or breaking of our inferior limbs contents not their malice: they must wound the most sensible and vital part, our heads. The Lord be blessed, that hath now freed us from these bloody ridings; and sent us peace with Truth. Yet can we not be forgetful of the past calamities in this Land; nor insensible of the present in other places. The time was when the Bonnors and butchers rode over the faces of God's Saints, and made the earth with their bloods; every drop whereof begot a new believer. When they martyred the living with the dead; burnt the impotent wife with the husband; who is content to die with him, with whom she may not live; yea, rejoicing to go together to their Savior. When they threw the new-born (yea scarce-borne) infant, dropping out of the mothers belly, into the mothers flames: whom, if they had been Christians, they would first have Christened, if not cherished. This was a fiery zeal indeed; set on flame with the fire of hell. They love fire still: they were then for fagots, they are now for powder. If these be Catholics, there are no Cannibals. They were then mounted on horses of authority, now they ride on the wings of policy.

Our comfort is, that though all these, whether persecutors of our faith, or oppressors of our life, ride over our particular heads, yet we have all one Head, whom they cannot touch. They may massacre this corporal life, and spoil the local seat of it, whether in head or heart: but our spiritual life, which lies and lives in our Head Jesus Christ, they cannot reach. No hellish stratagems, nor combined outrages; no human powers, nor devilish principalities can touch that life: for it is hid with Christ in God.

Indeed this Head doth not only take their blows, as meant at him; but he even suffers with us. Saul, why persecutest thou me? Saul strikes on earth, Christ Jesus suffers in heaven. There is more lively sense in the Head, then in other members of the body. Let but the toe ache, and the head manifests by the countenance a sensible grief. The body of the Church cannot suffer, without the sense of our blessed Head. Thus saith Paul, The sufferings of Christ abound in us. These afflictions are the showers that follow the great storm of his passion. We fill up that which is behind, of the affliction of Christ in our flesh. We must be content for him, as he was for us, to weep, and groan, and bleed, and die, that we may reign. If we sow not in tears, how shall we look to reap in joy? how shall we shine like stars in heaven, if we go not through this fiery trial? or land at the haven of bliss, if we pass not the waves of this troublesome water?

You see the Riders: but you will say, What is this to us? we have no such riders. Yes, many; too many; even so many as we have Oppressors, either by tongue or hand. Shall I name some of them?

The malicious slanderer is a perilous Rider; and he rides like death upon a pale horse, Envy. Thus were the Pharisees mounted, when they rode over Christ, even the Head of our heads. If Jesus will not be a Pharisee, they will nail him to the Cross. These venomous Cantharides light upon God's fairest flowers: and strive, either to blast them with their contumelious breaths, or to tread them under their malicious feet.

The griping Usurer is a pestilent Rider; and he is mounted on a heavy Iade, Mammon or love of money. Every step of this beast wounds to the heart, and quasheth out the life-blood. O that this sordid beast of usury, with all his ponderous and unwieldy trappings; bills, obligations, pawns, mortgages, were thrown into a fire temporal; that the riders converted soul might be saved from the fire eternal. If any Alcibiades had authority and will, to kindle such a fire in England as was once at Athens, I believe that no tears would be shed to quench it: but the music of our peace would sound merrily to it: and the rather, because there would be no more groans to mollify it.

The destructive depopulator is another pestiferous Rider. He is a light Horseman; he can leap hedges and ditches, and therefore makes them in the midst of plain fields. He loves to ride in his own ground; and for this purpose expelleth all neighbors. Though Solomon says, that the King is served by the field that is tilled: ye he, as if he were wiser then Solomon, promiseth to serve him better with grass. He posteth after the poor, and hunts them out of his Lordship. He rides from town to town, from village to village, from land to land, from house to house; à doloso fur to ad publicum latrocinium, and never rests till he hath rid to the Devil.

And there is a fourth Rider gallops after him amaine, as if he had sworn not to be hindmost, the oppressing Landlord: and he rides upon a horse that hath no pace but racking; for that is the Masters delight, racking of rents: and he hath two Lacquays or Pages run by him, Fines, and Carriages. Thus ascended, & attended, twice a year at least, he rides over the heads and hearts of the poor Tenants: that they can no more grow in wealth, then corn can that is scattered in the high way: for they as that, are continually over-ridden by their merciless Landlords. Let these riders take heed, lest the curses of the poor stumble their horses, and break their necks.

The churlish Cormorant is a mischicuous Rider: he sits on a black Iade, Covetousness; and rides only from market to market, to buy up grain, when he hath store to sell: and so hatcheth up dearth in a yere of plenty. Our Land is too full of these riders: they repine & complain of the unseasonableness of the weather, of the barrenness of the earth: but they conceal the true cause, whereof their own souls are conscious, their uncharitableness. The earth hath never been so frozen as their consciences: nor is the ground so fruitless of plenty, as they of pity. This is not mala terra, bona gens; but mala gens, bona terra: we have bad minds, good materials. The earth hath not scanted her fruits, but our concealings have been close, our enhancings ravenous, our transportations lavish. The Lord sends grain, and the devil sends garners. The imprecations of the poor shall follow these •...iders, and the ears of God shall attend their cries.

There is the proud Gallant, that comes forth like a May-morning, decked with all the glory of Art; and his adorned Lady, in her own imagination a second Flora: and these are Riders too, but closer riders: the world with them runs upon wheels; and they hastening to overtake it, out-run it. Their great revenues will not hold out with the year: the furniture on their backs exceeds their rent-day. Hence they are fain to wring the poor spundges of the Country, to quench the burning heat of the City. Therefore say the Country-men, that their Carts are never worse employed, then when they do service to Coaches.

There is the fraudulent Tradesman; that rides no further then between the Burse and the shop, on the back of a quick-spirited hobby called Cheating; and whereas greatness presseth the poor to death with their weight, this man trips up their heels with his cunning. They have one God at the Church, another at their shops: and they will fill their coffers, though they fester their consciences. This Rider laughs men in the face, whiles he treads on their hearts; his tongue knows no other pace, but a false gallop.

The bribe-groping Officer, in what Court soever his dition lies, is an oppressing Rider: they that would have their suites granted, must subject their necks to his feet, and let him ride over them. He confutes the old allegory of Justice, that is usually drawn blind; for he will see to do a Petitioner ease by the light of his angels. Nothing can unlock his lips but a golden key. This Riders horse, like that proud Emperors, must be shod with silver: and the poor man must buy of him, and that at a dear rate, his own treading on.

I come to him last, whom I have not least cause to think upon, the Church-defrauder; that rides upon a winged horse, as if he would fly to the devil, called Sacrilege. He may appear in the shape of a Protestant, but he is the most absolute Recusant; for he refuseth to pay God his own. He wears the Name of Christ, for the same purpose the Papists wear the Cross; only for a charm. These are the Merchants of souls, the Pirates of God's Ship the Church, the vnderminers of Religion; that are still practicing trains to blow it up. They will not pay their Levites, their Levites must pay them. They will not part with their Cures, whereof they have the donation, but upon purchase. But it is no wonder if they sell the Cures, that have first sold their souls. The charitable man dreams of building Churches, but starts to think that these men will pull them down again.

There is yet one other Rid•...r, though he spurs post, must not pass by me vn-noted: the Truth-hating Jesuit, that comes trotting into England on a red horse, like Murder; dypit and died in the blood of souls; and if he can reach it, in the blood of bodies too. Neither doth he thirst so much after ordinary blood, that runs in common veins, as after the blood-Royal. There is no discase, saith one, that may so properly be called the Kingseuill. He is the devils make-bate, and his chief Officer to set Princes together by the ears. He sits like the Raven, on a dead bough; and when the Lyon and Leopard come forth to fight, he sounds out a point of wa•...re; hoping which soever falls, his carcass shall serve him for a prey to feed on. His main study is to fill the Schools with clamours, the Church with errors, the Churchyard with corpses, and all Christian states with Tragedies. The Seminaries were once, like that strange weed, Tobaccho at the first coming up; but here and there one entertained in some Great man's house; now you may find them smoking in every cottage. They have deservingly increased the disgrace of that Religion: so that now in the common censure, A Papist is but a new word for a Traitor. They received their errand at Tyber, and they deliver it at Tyburne.

There are many other Riders, so properly ranking themselves in this number, and assuming this name; which for modesties sake, I bury in silence. Considering, that Quaedam vitia nominata d•...centur: some sins are taught by reprovng their names.

But I perceive a prevention: I have not time enough to end our misery, much less to enter the speech of our mercy. The journey they make us take through fire and water, requires a more punctual tractation, then your patience will now admit. Two short uses shall send away our Oppressors with fear; our selves with joy.

1. For them; let all these tyrannous Riders know, that there is one rides after them; a great one, a just one; even he that rides on the wings of the wind, and the clouds are the dust of his feet. He that hath a bridle for these Senacheribs, and strikes a s•...affle through their jaws; and turns their violence with more ease, then the wind doth a fane on the house-top. Then a horse shall be but a vain thing to save a man, saith the Psalmist. Horse and Master shall fall together.

Then the covetous Nimrod, that rode on the black beast Oppression, shall be thundered down from his proud height; and the Iade that carried him shall dash out his brains, and lie heavier then a thousand talents of lead on his conscience. His oppression shall damn himself, as before it did damnifie others. It was to them a momentary vexation, it shall be to him an eternal pressure of torment.

Then the blood-drawing Usurer, that rode so furiously on his Iade Extortion, shall (if timely deprecation and restitution stay him not) run full butt against the gates of hell, and break his neck. And he that at the bars of temporal Judgments, cried out for nothing but Justice, Justice, and had it: shall now cry louder for mercy, mercy, and go without it.

And let the Cormorant, that rides ever on the back of Engrossing, whose soul is like Erisichthons bowels in the Poet,

Quodque vrbibus esse,

Quodque satis poterat populo, non sufficit vni.

that starves men to feed vermin; know, that there is a Pursuiuant flies after him; that shall give him an eternal arrest, and make him leave both Horreum and hordeum, his barn and his barley; to go to a place, where is no food but fire and anguish.

And the lofty Gallant, that rides over the poor with his Coaches and Caroches, drawn by two wild horses, Pride and Luxury; let him take heed, lest he meet with a wind that shall take off his Chariot-wheels, as Pharaoh was punished; & drown horses, and chariots, & Riders; not in the Red-Sea; but in that infernal Lake, whence there is no redemption.

Let all these Riders beware, lest he that rides on the wings of vengeance, with a sword drawn in his hand, that will eat flesh, and drink blood; that will make such haste in the pursuit of his enemies, that he will not bait or refresh himself by the way; lest this God before they have repented overtake them. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty; and in thy majesty ride prosperously, &c. and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Then shall the Lord remember the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem; and reward them, as they served us. Loe now the end of these Riders: There are the workers of iniquity fallen: they are cast down, and shall not be able to rise. Zach. 10. The riders on horses shall be confounded.

2. For us, though passion possess our bodies, let patience possess our souls. The law of our Profession binds us to a warfare: patiendo vincimus our troubles shall end, our victory is eternal. Hear David's triumph, Psalm 18. Ihaue wounded them that they were not able to rise: they are fallen under my feet. Thou hast subdued under me, those that rose up against me. Thou hast also given me the neck of mine enemies, &c. They have wounds for their wounds: and the treaders down of the poor, are trodden down by the poor. The Lord will subdue those to us, that would have subdued us to themselves: and though for a short time they rode over our heads, yet now at last we shall everlastingly tread upon their necks. Loe then the reward of humble patience, and confident hope. Speramus et Superamus. Our God is not as their God, even our enemies being judges. Psal. 20. Some put their trust in Chariots, and some in horses. But no Chariot hath strength to oppose, nor horse swiftness to escape, when God pursues. They are brought down, and fallen: we are risen, & stand upright. Their trust hath deceived them; down they fall, and never to rise. Our God hath helped us; we are risen; not for a breathing space, but to stand upright forever.

Tentations, persecutions, oppressions, crosses, infamies, bondage, death; are but the way wherein our blessed Savior went before us; and many Saints followed him. Behold them with the eyes of faith, now mounted above the clouds, trampling all the vanities of this world under their glorified feet; standing on the battlements of heaven, and wafting us to them with the hands of encouragement. They bid us fight, and we shall conquer; suffer, and we shall reign. And as the Lord Jesus, that once suffered a reproachful death at the hands of his enemies, now sits at the right hand of the Majesty in the highest places, far above all Principalities and Powers, Thrones and Dominations, till his enemies be made his footstool. So one day, they that in their haughty pride, & merciless oppressions, rode over our heads, shall then lie under our feet. Through thee will we push down our enemies: through thy Name will we tread them under that rise up against us. At what time yonder glorious sky, Coelum stellatum, which is now our seeling over our heads, shall be but a pavement under our feet. To which glory, he that made us by his Word, and bought us by the blood of his Son, seal us up by his blessed Spirit.

Amen.

THE VICTORIE OF PATIENCE: With the expiration of Malice.

PSALM. 66. 12.

We went through fire, and through water: but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.

I DID not, in the former Sermon, draw out the oppressing cruelty of these Persecutours, to the utmost scope and period of their malice: nor extend their impium imperium to the furthest limit and determination thereof. There is yet one glimpse of their stinking candle, before the snuff goes out; one groan ere their malice expire. We went through fire and water.

The Papists, when they hear these words, went through fire and water; startle, and cry out, Purgatory: direct proofs for Purgatory. With as good reason, as Sedulius, on that dream of Pharaohs Officer, Gen. 40. 10. A vine was before me; and in the vine were three branches: says that the Vine signifies S<sup>t</sup>. Francis; and the three branches the three Orders derived from him. And as a Pope on that of Samuel: Behold, to obey is better th<sup>n</sup> sacrifice: and stubbornnesse is as Idolatry: infers, that not to obey the Apostolic See of Rome, was Idolatry by the witness of Samuel. Or as one writes of S<sup>t</sup>. Fra<sup>n</sup>cis; that because it is said, Unless you become as little children, you cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven; he commanded one Massaeus to tumble round like a little child, that he might enter. Or as, when the contention was betwixt the Seruices of Am<sup>b</sup>rose and Gregory, which should take place; by the common consent both the Mass-books were laid on the Altar of S. Peter; expecting some decision of that doubt by revelation. The Church doors being opened in the morning, Gregory's Missal-book was rent and torn into many pieces; but Ambroses lay whole, and open upon the Altar. Which event, in a sober exposition, would have signified the Mass of Gregory cancelled and abolished: and that of Ambrose authentical and allowed. But the wise Pope Adrian expounds it thus: that the renting and scattering of Gregory's Missal intended, that it should be dispersed over all the Christian world, and only received as Canonical. Or as that simple Friar, that finding Maria in the Scripture, used plurally for Seas; cried out in the ostentation of his lucky wit, that he had found in the old Testament the name of Maria, for the Virgin Mary.

But I purpose not to waste time in this place; and among such hearers, in the confutation of this ridiculous folly. Resting myself on the judgment of a worthy learned man in our Church; that Purgatory is nothing else but a Mythologie; a moral use of strange fables. As when Pius the second had sent abroad his Indulgencies, to all that would take Arms against the Turk; the Turk wrote to him, to call in his Epigrams again. Or as Bellarmino excused Prudentius..., when he appoints certain holy-days in hell, that he did but poetize. So all their fabulous discourse of Purgatory is but Epigrams & poetry; a more serious kind of jest. Wherein they laugh among themselves, how they cozen the world, and fill the Popes coffers. Who for his advantage, Ens non esse facit, non ens fore. So that if Roffensis gather out of this place, that in Purgatory there is great store of water; We went through fire and water. We may oppose against him Sir Thomas More; who proves from Zacharias 9. that there is no water at all. I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit, wherein is no water. Set then the frost against the rain, and you may go in Purgatory dry-shod. If there be nothing left but fire, I make no question, but there is not a spark difference betwixt Purgatory and Hell.

I should narrow up the scope and liberty of God's spirit, if I should here tie my discourse to the letter. We went through fire, and through water. It is an effect of our persecution; and may thus be resolved: we were by their malice driven to great extremity. Fire and water are two elements, which (they say) have no mercy: yet either of them more then our oppressors. The time was that a red Sea divided the waters; and gave dry passage to the children of Israel and of God. Whereof the Psalmist here sings, verse. 6. He turned the Sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot, there did we rejoice in him. And the fire in an Oven, whose heat was septupled, touched not those three servants of the Lord. But these more incensed and insensible creatures have no mercy; nor can they invent a cruelty, which they forbear to execute.

Some translations have it: We went into fire, and into water: which extends their persecution to our deaths, and comprehends the latitude of mortal martyrdom. And thus understood, the next words, of the deliverance (Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place) must be meant of our glory in heaven. But the evident circumstances following deny that interpretation: therefore I adhere to the last and best Translation; We went through fire and through water.

Wherein two things may seem to be imported, and imparted to our consideration. 1. We went. They went so conveniently as they might, and so conscionably as they durst, from the hands of their persecutors. 2. The hard exigence they were driven to; when to pass through fire and water, was but a less evil compared with that they eschewed.

Per mare mactantes fugimus, per saxa, per ignes.

1. From the former observe, that it may be lawful in time of persecution to fly. This was granted, yea in some respects enjoined by Christ. But must be warily understood; and the rule in a word may be this. When our suffering may stand the Church of God in better stead then our flying; we must then lose our lives, to save God's honor and our own souls. To deny God this fealty and tribute of our bloods, when his glory hath use of such a service at our hands, is not only to deny him that is his own by many dear titles; of creation which was ex spiritu oris, by the breath of his mouth; and of redemption which was ex sanguine cordis, by the blood of his heart. But to withdraw this justly required testimony, is to betray and crucify him; and scarce inferior to their perjury, whose false witness condemned him.

In this we restore to God his talent with profit; not only our own soul he gave us, but as many more as our example works upon, and wins to him. When the people admired the great bounty of John, called Eleemosynarius, he answered them; O brethren, I have not yet shed my blood for you, as I ought to do for my masters sake and testimony. In the early morning of the world, did Abel dedicate Martyrdom, without example: and the Lord did approve it by accepting Abel's sacrifice, and Abel for a sacrifice. I have read that a worthy Martyr of ours, D<sup>r</sup>. Rowland Taylor, wrote first▪ with ink, & after with his blood; that it is not enough to profess the Gospel of Christ ad ignem exclusiue; but we must cleave to it ad ignem inclusiue. This was an honor that Christ accepted presently after his birth, the Holocaust or Heccatomb of many innocent infants, murdered and martyred for his sake.

So that suffering for Jesus, is a thing to which he promiseth an ample reward. No man shall for sake parents, or friends, or inheritance, or living, or life for my sake; but he shall have in exchange a hundred fold so much comfort in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting. But all times and occasions yield not warrant for such a service. Much less can the Seminaries, dying in England for treason, arrogate to themselves the glory of Martyrdom; though a vicious affectation of it hath heartened and hardened them to such a prodigality of their bloods. They come not to maintain the verity of Scriptures, but the vanity of Traditions; the entangling perplexities of Schoolmen, the obscure, tetricall, and contradictory assertions of Popes: who commands them to steal that with their lives, which not only is in inuolued being, but in future contingency; whatsoever the Roman Church, that is the Pope, shall hereafter constitute or declare.

2. From the latter words; Through fire and water, observe; that the children of God must not expect a gentle and soft entertainment in this world, but hard exigence; when to fly from their enemies they are fain to pass through fire and water. Affliction for the Gospel is called by Paul, the marks of the Lord Jesus. The world often sets a man, as those three servants of God were set in Daniel's Prophecy. On the one side a harmony of sweet music, the Cornet, Flute, &c. on the other side a burning furnace, hette above ordinary seven times. Worship the Idol, and enjoy the delight of music: not worship it, and be cast into the fiery oven. Join with the world in his ungodly customs, and the world will love, feast, tickle your ears with music. Separate yourselves, and it will hate you, John. 15. If you were of the world, the world would love his own: but because I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Thou shalt be like Abraham's Ram, tied in a bush of thorns; from which thou canst not extricate thyself, till thou be made a sacrifice.

I have read that Caligula the Tyrant being dead, there were found in his Closet Duo libelli; one called a sword, the other a dagger; wherein many were by name prick'd for death, and destin'd to it in the Emperors bloody intention. Presumptuous enemies so cast lots on a Nation before they have it; and talk of dividing a spoil ere they come at it. Judge. 5. Have they not sped? have they not divided the prey? So the proud adversary in that wonderful year, 88.; that came with an Invincible Navy, and implacable fury; the Ensigns of whose ships we...e victoria, victoria; brought ready with them instruments of torture; as if the Land of peace and mercy had in it no such engines of cruelty; and swallowed down an abundant hope of our desolation. They threw at dice for our wives and daughters, lands and vineyards, houses and heritages, shires and kingdom. They purposed to drive us through fire and water, but fire and water was their destruction. Fire broke the sinews of their combination, and the waves devoured both their hopes & themselves. The godly at last shall be as mighty men, Zach. 10. 5. treading down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle: and they shall fight, because the Lord is with them.

The grievousness of these afflictions must teach us two useful lessons:

- Patience.
- Prayer.

1. Patience, Acts. 5. The Apostles departed from the presence of the Council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for the name of Christ. A true Christian rejoiceth in his tribulation: especially when it is for his Saviors sake; and takes greater pleasure in his iron fetters, then a proud Courtier doth of his golden chain, Reu. 14. Blessed are they that die in the Lord. But if it be so blessed a thing to die in the Lord; what is it to die for the Lord! Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints. It was Hardings invective against our reverend, learned, and precious Jewel; that Protestants were worse then the Devil: for whereas bread and water and the cross could scar away Devils; Princes could be rid of them by no means, but Fire. To whom that excellent Bishop answers; that though it pleased his malicious humor, to make but a ieast of the blood of God's Saints; yet it was no more ignominy for Lambes to suffer what Christ suffered; then it was praise and credit for wolves to betray him, as Judas did.

Our patience is our crown, and others conversion. Eusebius from Clement reporteth, that when a wicked accuser had brought S. James to condemnation; seeing his Christian fortitude, he was touched in conscience, confessed himself a Christian, and so was taken to execution with him. Where earnestly beseeching S. James to forgive him, he after a little pause kissed him, and said, Peace be to thee, brother; and they were beheaded together. O blessed Patience! which not only gets honor to our selves, but brings other to salvation; and in all glorifies God.

2. Prayer. This was the Apostles refuge in the time of affliction, Act. 4. 24. Bernard in a Fiction doth excellently express this necessity, enforce this duty. He supposeth the kings of Babylon and Jerusalem (by whom he means the world and the Church) to be at war one against the other. During this hostility, a soldier of Jerusalem was fled to the Castle of Justice. Siege was laid to this Castle, and a multitude of enemies environed and entrenched it round. There lies near this Soldier a fainthearted coward, called Fear: this speaks nothing but discomfort: and when Hope would step in to speak some courage, Fear thrusts her out of doors. Whilst these two opposites fear and hope stand debating, the Christian Soldier resolves to appeal to the direction of sacred Wisdom; who was chief Counselor to the Captain of the Castle, Justice. Hear Wisdom speak. Dost thou not know, faith she, that the God whom we serve is able to deliver us? Is he not the Lord of hosts? even the Lordmighty in battle? we will dispatch a messenger to him with information of our necessity.

Fear replies, What messenger? Darkness is on the face of the world: our walls are begirt with an armed troupe; which are not only strong as Lions, but also watchful as Dragons. What messenger can either scape through such an host, or find the way into so remote a Country? Wisdom calls for Hope, and chargeth her with all speed to dispatch away her old messenger: Hope calls to Prayer, and says, Lo here a messenger speedy, ready, trusty, knowing the way. Ready; you cannot sooner call her then she comes. Speedy; she flies faster then Eagles, as fast as Angels. Trusty; what embassy soever you put in her tongue, she delivers with faithful secrecy. She knows the way to the Court of Mercy; and she will never faint till she come to the chamber of the royal Presence.

Prayer hath her message, away she flies, borne on the sure and swift wings of faith and zeal: Wisdom having given her a charge, and Hope a blessing. Finding the gate shut, she knocks and cries; Open, ye gates of righteousness, and be ye open ye everlasting doors of glory: that I may enter, and deliver to the King of Jerusalem my petition. Jesus Christ hears her knock, opens the gate of mercy, attends her suite, promiseth her infallible comfort and redress.

Back returns Prayer, laden with the news of consolation: she hath a promise, and she delivers it into the hand of Faith: that were our enemies more innumerable then the Locusts in Egypt, and more strong then the Giants, the sons of Anak: yet Power and Mercy shall fight for us, and we shall be delivered. Passe we then through fire and water, through all dangers and difficulties, yet we have a messenger, holy, happy, accessible, acceptable to God, that never comes back without comfort, Prayer.

And here fitly I will end our Misery, & come to God's Mercy. Desolation hath held us long, but our consolation is eternal. But thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.

The Song, you see, is compounded like Music: it hath acutum and grave, high and low, sharp and flat. Thou causedst men to ride over us. But thou broughtest us out. Sorrow and joy, trouble and peace, sour and sweet, come by vicissitudes. Inuicem cedunt dolor et voluptas. This discord in Music hurts not, but graceth the song. Whiles grief and pleasure keep this alteration in our life, they at once both exercise our patience, and make more welcome our joys. If you look for the happiness of the wicked, you shall find it in primis, at the beginning: but if you would learn what becomes of the righteous, intelliges in nouissimis, you shall know it at last. Mark the upright man, and behold the just: for the end of that man is peace. We were sore oppressed, but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.

Every word is sweetly significant, and amplifies God's mercy to us. Four especially are remarkable; the Deliverer, the Deliverance, the Delivered, and their felicity or blessed advancement. So there is in the	Deliverer	aliquid	Celsitudinis, Thou

Deliverer	Certitudinis, Broughtest out
Delivered	Solitudinis, us,
Happiness	Plenitudinis, Into a wealthy place. There is highness and lowness; sureness and fullness. The Deliverer is great, the Deliverance certain; the Distressed grievous, their exaltation glorious. There is yet a first word, that like a key unlocks this golden gate of mercy; a veruntamen;

But

This is vox respirationis; a gasp that fetcheth back again the very life of comfort. But thou broughtest, &c. We were fearfully endangered into the hands of our enemies; they rode and trode upon us, and drove us through hard perplexities: But thou, &c. If there had been a full point or period at our misery; if those gulfs of persecution had quite swallowed us, & all our light of comfort had been thus smothered and extinguished; we might have cried, Perijt spes nostra, yea perijt salus nostra; our hope, our help is quite gone: He had mocked us that would have spoken, Be of good cheer. This same But is like a happy oar, that turns our vessel from the rocks of despair, and lands it at the haven of comfort. But, &c.

Thou.

Thou only, without help or succor of either man or Angel; that art able to save with a few, as well as with many; that art A man of war. Exod. 15. and comest armed against thine enemies, with a spear of wrath, and a sword of vengeance. Thou, of whose greatness there is no end, no limits, no determination. Thou, O Lord, without any partner, either to share thy glory, or our thanks. Thou broughtest us out.

Thou of thy own goodness, so well as by thy own greatness, hast delivered us. No merit of ours procured, or deserved this mercy at thy hands: but our freedom comes only by thy Majesty, of thy mercy. Here were no arms of flesh, nor Armies of Angels, in this work of our Redemption: but Thou hast brought us out, that we might praise thy Name. Therefore we say: Bless the Lord, O our souls: O Lord, thou art very great, thou art clothed with honor and majesty.

Eduxisti: Broughtest out.

Great works become a great God. Opera testantur de me, saith our Savior. My works bear witness of me. I heal the sick, cleanse the Leprous, give sight to the blind, raise the dead, cast out devils. Will you not believe, O ye carnal eyes, unless you see? will you trust your five senses above the four Gospels? verse. 5. Come then, and see the works of God. See works: not a fancy, speculation, or deceiving shadow; but real, visible, acted, accomplished works. Eduxisti. Sensus assensus. Let demonstration convince you: the Snare is broken, and we are delivered. The Lord works potenter and patenter. There is not only manifold mercy, but manifest mercy in his doings. He brought us out.

When the ungodly see us so low brought, that persecutors ride over our heads; they are ready to say; Where is now their God? Behold, hîc est Deus; our God is here, where there was need of him: opus Deo, a work fit for the Deity to perform. Misery had wrapped and entangled us; the wicked hands had tied us, as the Philistines did Samson with the bands of death. Here then was Dignus vindice nodus; a knot worthy the finger of God to untie. He looked down from the height of his Sanctuary: from heauendid the Lord behold the earth. For what purpose? To hear the groaning of the prisoner: to loose those that are appointed to death. Behold, the waters went over our soul, yet we were not drowned. Malice had doomed us to the Fire; but our comfort is, Nihil potestatis in nos habu...sse ignem, that the fire had not power over us. They trode us under their cruel insultations, but the Lord hath lifted us up. The Lord of Hosts was with us: the God of Jacob was our refuge.

Vs.

To this act of God, if we tie the Subject wherein he works; and knit to Eduxisti, Nos: which I called verbum solitudinis, a word of former wretchedness and calamity: we shall find our misery a fit object for GOD'S mercy; Especially if you set the others malice against our meekness; their wickedness against our weakness: the persons whom God delivers, & the persons from whom, will greatly commend the mercy of our deliverance.

It is a pleasure to God, to have his strength perfected in our infirmity. When the danger is most violent in its own nature, and our sense, then is his helping arm most welcome. Esa. 17. In the day of grief, and of desperate sorrow, the harvest shall be great; a plentiful crop of joy. Qui Deus est noster, Deus est salutis. He that is our God, is the God of salvation: and unto God the Lord belong the issues from death. He delights to have us say in this deep extremity; Eduxisti. Thou hast brought us out. When Jonah was taken up by the Mariners, put from the succor of the Ship; no help in any Rocks, nor mercy in the waters; neither means nor desire to escape by swimming; for he yields himself into the jaws of death with as mortified affection, as if a lump of lead had been thrown into the sea: a man would have thought that salvation itself could not have saved Jonah. Yet Jonah shall not die. Here is now a delivery fit for God, a cure for the almighty hand to undertake.

Mans extremity is God's opportunity. Distressed desire is importunate. It is time that thou have mercy upon us: yea the time is come. But if God do not presently answer, we are ready to pant out a groan of despair, The time is past. If our importunity prevail not, we think all opportunity is gone. But God says, Tempus nondum venit; the time is not yet. God waits the maturity of the danger, the more to increase his honor. As Alexander cheered himself when he should fight with men and beasts; haughty enemies, and huge Elephants. Tandem par animo meo periculum video. I see at last a danger somewhat equal to my mind. Will you hear when this time is come, John 11. Martha tells Christ: Master, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. Christ knew this before, verse. 15. Lazarus is dead and I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, that you might believe. Observe the different thoughts of God and man. Martha is sorry, Christ is glad. She thought that the time of help was past: Christ thought that the time was not opportune till now. Jairus his servant comes and tells him, Thy daughter is dead; trouble the master no further. This was the word Christ expected to hear. And now he says, Be not afraid, only believe. Hear the Israelites desperate complaint. The waters of the Sea roar before their faces; the wheels of the Chariots rattle behind their backs: hereon they cry to Moses, Were there no graves in Egypt, that thou hast brought us hither to die? Now saith Moses; Fear not, stand still, and see the salvation of God.

From that hath been spoken, and that which follows, we may observe two works of God's mercy. Which consist Remouendo Promouendo: the one removing away much evil, the other preferring to much good. Eduxisti, shows his kindness in freeing us from calamity; In locum opulentum, his goodness in exalting us to dignity. The former is an act of deliverance, the latter of advancement. So there is Terminus à quo, from whence we are freed; and Terminus ad quem, to which we are exalted.

For the former, we have God here Educentem, bringing out of trouble. Sometime we find GOD Ducentem; leading, guiding, directing. Wilt not thou, O Lord, go forth with our hoastes? And He led them through the wilderness, by the hand of Moses and Aaron. Sometimes Inducentem, verse. 11. Thou broughtest us into the net: thou hast laid affliction upon our loins. Sometimes Adducentem. Thou, O Lord, hast brought us home to thyself, &c. Sometimes Reducentem, Psalm. 126. 4. Turn again our captivity, O Lord, as the streams in the South. Often Educentem, Psalm. 105. 43. He brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness. Never Seducentem; beguiling, deceiving, causing to err: for that is opus Diaboli, who is the Accuser and Seducer of men.

For the latter: Into a wealthy place. The greatness of our felicity doth far transcend the grievousness of our past misery. The dimension of our height exceeds that of our depth: neither did affliction ever bring it so low, as our elevation hath advanced us high. Hereon S. Paul Rom. 8. The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory, which shall be revealed in us. whether we compare or their

- Strength,
- Length.

For their vigor or strength: the affliction of man, in the greatest extremity, that he can lay it on man, is but finite as the afflicter. The blow comes but from an arm of flesh, and therefore can wound but flesh. Yield the extension of it to reach so far as any possible malice can drive it: yet it can but rack the body, distend the joints, sluice out the blood, and give liberty to the imprisoned soul. Which soul they cannot strike. Therefore saith Christ, Fear not him that hath power over the body only, not over the soul. And even in the midst of this dire persecution, God can either quite deliver us, that the storm shall blow over our heads, and hurt us not: or if he suffers us to suffer that, yet he will so qualify the heat of it, that the cool refreshing of his blessed spirit inwardly to the Conscience, shall in a manner extinguish the torment. But now this wealthy place; the spring of joy that succeeds this winter of anguish, is illimited, insuppressible, inexpressible, infinite. So strongly guarded with an almighty power, that no robber violently, nor thief subtly, can steal it from us. Some pleasure is mixed with that pain, but no pain is incident to this pleasure. There was some laughter among those tears, but there shall be no tears in this laughter: For Tears shall be quite wiped from our eyes. By how much then the power of God transcends man's; yea God's mercy man's malice; by so much shall our rejoicing exceed our passion. By how much the glorious City of heaven, walled with Jasper and pure gold, shining as brass, is stronger then the vndefensed and naked cottage of this transient world: our future comforts arise in measure, pleasure and security, above our passed distress. Thus for Strength.

If we compare their Length, we shall find an infinite inequality. Paul calls affliction momentary, glory eternal. Time shall determine the one; and that a short time, a very winters day: but the other is above the wheels of motion, and therefore beyond the reach of time. For a moment in mine anger, saith the Lord, I did hide my face from thee; but with everlasting mercy I have had compassion on thee. Nothing but eternity can make either joy or sorrow absolute. He can brook his imprisonment, that knows the short date of it: and he finds poor content in his pleasure, that is certain of a sudden loss. We know that our pilgrimage is not long through this valley of tears, and miserable Desert; but our Canaan, home, Inheritance is a wealthy place; glorious for countenance, blessed for continuance: wealthy, without want; stable, without alteration; a constant Mansion, an immovable Kingdom. Unto which our Lord Jesus in his appointed time bring us. To whom, with the Father and Spirit of consolation, be all praise and glory forever.

Amen.

GOD'S HOUSE: OR, THE PLACE OF PRAISES.

PSALM. 66. 12.

I will go into thy House, with burnt offerings: I will pay thee my vows.

THE formerverse connected with this, demonstrate with words of life

David's

- Affliction
- Affection.

His Affliction, to be over-ridden with Persecutors: his Affection, to bless God for his deliverance. Great misery, taken away by great mercy, requires great thankfulness: I will go into thy, &c.

Before we put this Song into parts, or derive it into particulars, two general things must be considered.

- The Matter
- The Manner
- the Substance

- the Form

The matter and substance of the verse is Thankfulness: the manner and form, Resolution. The whole fabric declares the former: the fashion of the building the latter. The Tenor of all is Praising God: the key or tune it is set in Purpose: I will go into thy house, I will pay thee my vows. So that first I must entreat you to look upon a Solution, and a Resolution: a debt to be paid, and a purpose of heart to pay it.

The Debt

Is Thankfulness. This is the matter and substance of the words. God having first by affliction taught us to know our selves, doth afterwards by deliverance teach us to know him. And when his gracious hand hath helped us out of the low pit, he looks that (like Israel, Exod. 15.) we should stand upon the shore, and bless his name. David that prayed to God de profundis; (out of the depths have I called unto thee) doth after praise him in excelsis, with the highest Organs and instruments of laud.

General mercies require our continual thanks; but new favors new praises. O Sing unto the Lord a New Song, for he hath done marvelous things. There is a fourfold life belonging to man, and God is the keeper of all. His natural, civil, spiritual, and eternal life. Eloudie man would take away our natural life. Psal. 37. The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him. GOD keeps it. The slanderous world would blast our civil life, God blesseth our memory. The corrupted flesh would poison our spiritual life, God hides it in Christ. The raging Devil would kill our eternal life; God preserves it in heaven. Vnworthy are we of rest that night wherein we sleep, or of the light of the Sun that day wherein we rise, without praising God for these mercies. If we think not on him that made us, we think not to what purpose he made us. When I consider the works of GOD, saith Augustine, I am wonderfully moved to praise the Creator; Qui prorsus ita magnus est in operibus magnis, vt minor non sit in minimis: who is so great in his great works, that he is not less in his least. But when we consider his work of Redemption; about which he was (not as about the Creation, six days, but) above thirty years. Where non sua dedit, sed se; he gave not his riches, but himself; and that non tam in Dominum, quàm in seruum et sacrificium: not to be a Lord, but a servant, a sacrifice. We have Adamantine hearts, if the blood of this salvation cannot melt them into praises.

But special favors require special thanks, whether they consist in

- Eximendo
- Exhibendo;

either in redeeming us from dangers, or heaping upon us benefits. Our Prophet in five instances, Psal. 107. exemplifieth this duty. Of Travelers, Captives, sick-men, sea-men, & others subject to the manifold varieties of life.

For Travelers; They wander in the Wilderness in a solitary way: hungry and thirsty, their soul fainting in them. They cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivers them out of their distresses. For Captives; They sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death; fast bound in affliction and iron. Their prayers find a way out of the prison to God, and God delivers them out of the prison to liberty. For Sick, Because of their transgression they are afflicted: their soul abhorreth all manner of meat, and they draw near unto the gates of death. The strength of their prayers recovers the strength of their bodies. For Mariners, They reel to and fro, staggering like a drunken man; and are at their wits end. They by their prayers appease the wrath of God, and he appeaseth the wrath of the waves and winds.

Now the burden of the Song to all these deliverances is this; O that men would therefore praise the Lord for his goodness; and for his wonderful works to the children of men. And because these four dangers are short of the innumerable calamities incident to man's life; therefore in the end of the Psalm, much misery is heaped up, and the Lord is the scatterer & dissoluer of that heap: that all flesh might sing; Salvation is of the Lord.

And because these mercies are infinite; so that what Christian may not say with David? Thy goodness hath followed me all the days of my life. Therefore I infer with Paul, In all things give thanks. So our Psalmist, My mouth shall be filled with thy praise all the day long. What is meant by All the day, saith Augustine, but a praise without intermission? As no hour slips by thee without occasion, let none slip from thee without manifestation of gratitude. I will praise thee, saith he, O Lord, In prosperis, quia consolaris, in aduersis, quia corrigis: In a prosperous estate, because thou dost bless me; in affliction, because thou dost correct me. Fecisti, refecisti, perfecisti: Thou madest me when I was not, restoredst me when I was lost; supplyest my wants, forgiest my sins; and crownest my perseverance. But as, Quo acerbior miseria, eo acceptior misericordia: the more grievous the misery, the more gracious the mercy. So the richer benefit requires the hartier thanks. Great deliverances should not have small gratitude: where much is given, there is not a little required. To tell you what God hath done for us, thereby to excite thankfulness, would be to lose myself in the gates of my Text. I told you this was the ground and module of the Psalm. But I know, your curious ears care not so much for plain-song; you expect I should run upon Division. Hear but the next general point, and I come to your desire: reserving what I have more to say of this, to my farewell, and last application.

I come from the Debt to be paid, to his Resolution to pay it. I will go into thy house, I will pay, &c. Though he be not instantly Soluendo, he is Resoluendo. He is not like those Debtors, that have neither means, nor meaning to pay. But though he wants actual, he hath votall retribution. Though he cannot so soon come to the place, where this payment is to be made; yet he hath already paid it in his heart. I will go, I will pay. Here then is the Debtors

Resolution.

There is in the godly a purpose of heart to serve the Lord. This is the child of a sanctified spirit, borne not without the throbs and throws of true penitence. Not a transient and perishing flower, like Jonah's Gourd, Filius noctis; oriens, moriens: but the sound fruit, which the sap of grace in the heart sends forth. Luke 15. When the Prodigal Son came to himself, saith the Text; as if he had been formerly out of his wits: his first speech was, I will arise and go to my Father: and will say unto him; Father, I have sinned. And what he purposed, he performed: he arose and went.

I know, there are many that intend much, but do nothing: and that earth is full of good purposes, but heaven only full of good works: and that the tree gloriously leaved with intentions, without fruit, was cursed: And that a lewd heart may be so far sinnitten and convinced at a Sermon, as to will a forsaking of some sin. Which thoughts are but swimming notions, and vanishing motions; embrions, or abortive births.

But this Resolution hath a stronger force: it is the effect of a mature and deliberate judgment; wrought by God's Spirit, grounded on a voluntary devotion; not without true sanctification: though it cannot, without some interposition of time and means, come to perform that act which it intends. It is the harbinger of a holy life: the little cloud, like a hand, that Elijah's servant saw, pointing to the future showers of devotion.

Well, this is but the beginning, and you know, many begin, that do not accomplish: but what shall become of them that never begin? If he doth little, that purposeth, and performs not: what hope is there of them that will not purpose? It is hard to make an Vsnrer leave his extortion, the unclean his lusts, the swearer his dishallowed speeches: when neither of them saith so much, as I will leave them. The habit of godliness is far off, when to will is not present: & we despair of their performance, in whom cannot be wrought a purpose.

But to you of whom there is more hope, that say, we will praise the Lord; forget not to add David's execution to David's intention. God loves the present tense better then the future: a Facto, more then a Faciam. Let him that is President over us, be a precedent for us. Hebr. 10.

〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 Behold, I come: not I will come, but I do come, todoe •...y will, O GOD.

You have heard the matter and manner of the Song: the Substance is Gratitude; the Form, a Resolution to give it. To set it in some

Division or Method.

That every present soul may bear his part; here be three strains, or stairs, and gradual ascents: up which our contemplations must mount, with David's actions.

1. An entrance into God's house: I will go into thy house. It is well that David will bring thither his praises, himself. But many enter God's house, that have no business there: that both come and return empty-hearted: that neither bring to God devotion, nor carry from God consolation.

2. Therefore the next strain gives his zeal; he will not come empty-handed; but with burnt offerings. Manifold and manifest arguments of his hearty affection. Manifest, because burnt offerings; real, visible, actual, and accomplished works. Manifold, because not one singular oblation, but plurally offerings, without pinching his devotion.

3. But yet diverse have offered Sacrifices and burnt sacrifices, that stunke like Balaam's in God's nostrils: tendering Bullocks and Goats, not their own hearts. Therefore the third strain affirms, that David will not only offer beasts, but himself. I will pay thee my vows. So that in his Gratitude is observable

Quo

- Loco
- Modo
- Animo.

In what place, God's house: after what manner, with burnt offerings: with what mind, I will pay thee my vows. His devotion is without exception: all the labor is to work our hearts to an imitation.

I will go into thy house.

The first note hath two strains,

- Place,
- Entrance.

The place he purposeth to enter, is described by the - Property, Domus.

- Proprietary, Dominus.

This house was not the Temple, for that was after built by Solomon: but the Tabernacle, or Sanctuary. GOD had his house in all ages; as the wise Creator of all things, he reserved to him a portion in all things; Non propter indigentiam, sed in re cognitionem: not that he had need of them, but that he might be acknowledged in thē. Though he be Lord of all Nations in the world, because the Maker of all men, yet he reserved a particular number of men, & appropriated them to himself: and these he called Suum populum, His people.

Though thousands of Angels stand before him, and ten thousand thousands of those glorious spirits minister unto him: yet he culleth and calleth out some particular men to celebrate his service: sanctifying, or setting thē apart to that office: & these he calls Suos ministros; His Priests, his Ministers.

Though he be a Spirit, immortal, most rich; and Lord of all things: the earth is his and the fullness thereof; yea heaven and the glory thereof: If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, &c. yet he reserveth to himself a certain share of these inferior things: and this he calls Suum sortem: his portion: His tithes, his offerings.

Though he be Eternal, first and last: without beginning, without end: God of all times, and yet under no time: with whom a thousand years is but as one day: and everlastingly to be honored. Yet he reserveth to himself a certain time, wherein he looks for our general worship: & this he calls Suum Diem; his day, his Sabbaths.

Though he be the High and Lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity, whose Name is Holy: though infinite and comprehended in no place. Yet he sets apart some special place, wherein his great name shall be called on: and this he calls Suam Domum; His house. So Math. 21. My house shall be called the house of prayer. Here, I will go into Thy House.

God never left his Church destitute of a certain sacred place, wherein he would be worshipped. Adam had a place, wherein he should present himself to God, and God did present himself to him; Paradise. God appeared to Abraham in a place, and sanctified it: and there Abraham built an Altar; for it was holy. When he commanded him to sacrifice his Son Isaac, he appointed him a place; on a mountain. And on this very mountain was afterwards Solomon's Temple built. 2. Chron. 3. Jacob according to the several places he dwelt in, built several Altars to serve God on. The Israelites were translated out of Egypt for this very cause, that they might have a place to sacrifice to the Lord. When they were come into Canaan, God commanded and directed Moses, to make a Tabernacle: which was but mobile Tabernaculum, to be dissolved when Solomon's glorious Temple was finished. Now all these particular places were consecrated to the service of God; and called Loca Dei, God's Places; as David calls this Domum Dei, God's House.

This is the first note of the strain, the Place. The next is his Entrance; wherein observe;

1. That David's first care is to visit God's house. It is very likely that this Psalm was written by David, either in exile under Saul, or in persecution by Absalom, or in some grievous distress: whereout being delivered, he first resolves to salute God's House. Chrysostom in Opere imperfect. or whosoever was the Author of that book; notes it the property of a good Son, when he comes to town, first to visit his Fathers house, and to perform the honor that is due to him. We find this in Christ. Math. 22. so soon as ever he came to Jerusalem, first he visits his Fathers house, He went into the Temple. What the Son and Lord of David did there, the same course doth the Servant of his Son take here: First, I will go into thy House.

Oh for one dram of this respect of God's house in these days. Shall that place have a principal place in our affections? we would not then think one hour tedious in it, when many years delight us in the Tents of Kedar. This was not David's opinion. One day in thy Court is better then a thousand. Nor grudge at every penny that a Leuy taxeth to the Church: as if Tegumen parietibus impositum was enough: bare walls and a cover to keep us from rain: and aliquid ornatus was but superfluous; except it be a cushion and a wainscot seat, for a Gentleman's better ease. The greatest preparation usually against some solemn feast, is but a little fresh straw under the feet; the ordinary allowance for hogs in the sty, or horses in the stable. For other cost, let it be Domus opportuna volu...m, a cage of unclean birds: and so it must be so long as some sacrilegious persons are in it. It was part of the Epitaph of King Edgar.

Templa Deo, Templis Monachos, Monachis dedit agros. He gave Temples to God, Ministers to those Temples, and maintenance to those Ministers. But the Epitaphs of too many in these days may well run in contrary terms. They take Tenths from good Ministers, good Ministers from the Churches, yea and some of them also the Churches from God. But here Quicquid tetigero, vlcus erit: that which I should touch is an ulcer: and I will spend no Physic in immedicabile vulnus, upon an incurable wound; but leave it Enserecidendum Domini; to be cut off with the sword of God's vengeance.

2. Observe the reason why David would go into God's house; and this hath a double degree. To give him. 1. Praise. 2. Public praise*

1. Praise. Might not David praise God in any place? Yes, David might and must bless the Lord in any place, in every place: but the place that is principally destin'd to this purpose, is Domus Dei; God's House. The name which God imposed on his house, and by which, as it were, he Christened it; was Domus orationis, the house of prayer. As Christ, Math. 21. derives it from Esa. 56. My house shall be called the house of prayer. Therefore those houses were called in the Primitive times, Dominica, the Lord's houses; and Oratoria, houses of prayer, devoted to the praise of God.

I might here take just cause to tax an error of our times. Many come to these holy places, and are so transported with a desire of hearing, that they forget the fervency of praying and praising God. The End is ever held more noble than the means, that conduce unto it. Sin brought in ignorance, and ignorance takes away devotion. The Word preached brings in knowledge, and knowledge rectifies devotion. So that all our preaching is but to beget your praying, to instruct you to praise and worship God. The most immediate & proper service and worship of God, is the end, and hearing but the means to that end. And the rule is true; Semper finis excellit id quod est ad finem: the end ever excels that which leads to the end.

Scientia non est qualitas actiua, sed principium quo aliquis dirigitur in operando. Knowledge is not an active quality, but only a means to direct a man in working.

Non tam audire, quàm obedire requirit Deus. God reckons not so much of our audience, as of our obedience: not the hearers, but the doers are blessed in their deed. Indeed Christ saith, Blessed are they that hear the Word of God; but with this condition, that they keep it. The worship of GOD is the fruit of hearing, show me this fruit. Our Oratoria are turned into Auditoria, and we are content that God should speak earnestly to us, but we will not speak devoutly to him. I hope that no man will so ignorantly and injuriously understand me, as if I spake against hearing of Sermons frequently. God forbid: you must hear, and we must preach Acts. 6. The Apostles gave themselves continually to prayer, and to the preaching of the Word. Where yet Prayer is put in the first place.

I complain not that our Churches are Auditories, but that they are not Oratories: not that you come to Sermons, (for God's sake come faster) but that you neglect public prayer. As if it were only God's part to bless you, not yours to bless God. And hereof I complain with good company. Chrysostom saith, that such a multitude came to his Sermons, that there was scarce room for a late comer: & those would all patiently attend the end of the Sermon: But when prayers were to be read, or Sacraments to be administered, the company was thin, the seats empty. Uacua, desertaque Ecclesia reddebatur.

Beloved, mistake not. It is not the only exercise of a Christian to hear a Sermon: nor is that Sabbath well spent, that dispatcheth no other business for heaven. I will be bold to tell you, that in Heaven there shall be no Sermons; and yet in Heaven there shall be Hallelujahs. And this same end, for which David came to God's house, shall remain in glory; to praise the Lord. So that all God's service is not to be narrowed up in hearing; it hath greater latitude; there must be prayer, praise, adoration, and worship of God. Neither is it the scope of Christianity to know, but the scope of knowledge, is to be a good Christian. You are not Heathen, to ask Quid credendum, What must we believe? nor Catechists to demand Quid faciendum, What must we do? You know what to believe, you know what to do. Our preaching hath not so much need monere, as monere: though you also need instruction, yet more need of exhortation: for you have learnt more then ever you have followed. Come then hither, both to hear God, and to praise God. As David was not only here a Praiser, but ver. 16. a Preacher. Come and hear all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what he hath done for my soul.

2. Which fitly brings me to the further exemplyfying of this cause, moving David to enter into God's house. Which was not only to praise him, but to praise him publicly. Otherwise, he might have muttered his orisons to himself: no, he desires that his mouth should be a trumpet of God's glory; as frequently in the Psalms; I will praise thee before the great congregations. There are some, that whatsoever service they do to God, desire many witnesses of it: others desire no witnesses at all.

The former are hypocrites; who would have all men's eyes take notice of their devotion: as if they durst not trust God without witness, for fear he should deny it. Such were the Pharisees; they gave no alms without the proclamation of a trumpet: and their prayers were at the corners of streets; such corners where diverse streets met, & so more spectable to many passengers. To these Christ, Math. 6. Do thy devotion in secret; and he that see... insecret, shall reward thee openly.

The other have a little desire to serve GOD, but they would have no witnesses at all. They depend upon some great man, that will be angry with it. And these would fain have God take notice of their devotion, and nobody else. So Nichodemus stole to Christ by night: and many a Papists servant would come to Church, if he were sure his Master might not know of it. For he fears more to be turned out of his service, then out of God's service. To these Christ, Luke 12. Be not afraid of them that can killthe body, and no more; but fear him that hath power to cast into hell; yea I say unto you, fear him. A man may better lose his Landlords favor, then the Lord's favor: his Farm on earth, then his manor or mansion in heaven.

David was neither of these. His thankfulness shall not be hidden timore minantium; nor yet will he manifest it amore laudantium. Neither for fear of Commanders, nor for love of commenders. He is neither Timidus, nor Tumidus: not fearful of frowns, nor luxurious of praises: but only desires to manifest the integrity of his conscience in the sight of God. It is the manner of the godly, not only to ruminate in their minds God's mercies, but to divulge them to the bettering of others. When we yield thus to the world a testimony of our faith, & thankfulness in God's public honor; we provoke others to hearken to religion, and inflame their hearts with a fervent desire to partake the like mercies. The fame of Alexander gave heart to Julius Caesar, to be the more noble warrior. The freedom of our devotion gives an edge to others.

Beneficium qui dedit, taceat: narret qui accepit. Let him that gives a benefit, be silent: let him speak of it, that hath received it. There is that law of difference (saith that Philosopher) betwixt the doer of a good turn, and the receiver of it. Alter statim obliuisci debet. dati, alter accepti nunquam. The one ought quickly to forget what he hath given: the other ought never to forget what he hath received. We are the receivers, and must not forget. God gave the Law to Israel, and the Custom of the Saints observed it. What we have heard and known, and our Fathers have told us: we will not hide from our children, showing to the generations to come, the praises of the Lord.

Indeed there was a time, when Christ forbad the publishing of his benefit. Mark. 1. to the Leper; See thou say nothing to any man of it. But he went out, and began to publish it much, & to blaze abroad the matter. I know, diverse Divines, by curious distinctions, have gone about to excuse the matter; by making this an admonitory, not an obligatory precept. But I subscribe to Calvin and Marlorat, who tax it for an offense, and manifest breach of Christ's commandment. And Jerome on that place says, that Non erat necesse vt sermon iactaret, quod corpore praeferebat. His tongue might be silent, for his whole body was turned into a tongue to publish it. The act was good, but not good at that time. Disobedient he was, be it granted: yet of all disobedient men commend me to him. Let not then any political or sinister respects tie up our tongues, from blessing him that hath blessed us. Suffocate not the fire of zeal in thy heart by silent lips, lest it prove key-cold. But say with our Prophet, My foot standeth in an even place: in the congregations will I bless the Lord.

We perceive now the motive cause that brought David into God's house: I would take leave from hence in a word, to instruct you with what mind you should come to this holy place. We are in substance inheritors of the same faith, which the Jews held: & have instead of their Tabernacle, Sanctuary, Temple; Churches, places set apart for the Assembly of God's Saints. Wherein we receive divine Mysteries, and celebrate divine Ministries; which are said by Damascene; Plus participare operationis & gratiae diuinae. There is nothing lost by the Gospel, which the Law afforded; but rather all bettered. It is observable that the building of that glorious Temple, was the maturity and consummation of God's mercy to the Jews. Infinite were his favors betwixt their slavery in Egypt, and their peace in Israel. God did, as it were, attend upon them to supply their wants. They have no guide: why, God himself is their guide, and goes before them in a pillar of fire. They have no shelter: the Lord spreads a cloud over them for a Canopy. Are they at a stand, and want way? The Sea shall part and give them passage, whiles the divided waters are as walls unto them. For sustenance, they lack bread: heaven it self shall pour down the food of Angels. Have they no meat to their bread? A wind shall blow to them innumerable Quails. Bread and flesh is not enough without drink: behold, a hard rock smitten with a little wand shall pour out abundance of water. But what is all this, if they yet in the wilderness shall want apparel? their garments shall not wax old on their backs. Do they besiege? Jericho walls shall fall down before them: for want of engines, hailestones shall brain their enemies: Lamps, and pitchers, and dreams shall get them victory. The Sun shall stand still in Gibeon, and the Moon in the valley of Aialon; to behold their conquests. Lacke they yet a Land to inhabit? the Lord will make good his promise against all difficulties, and give them a land that flows with milk and honey.

But is all this yet short of our purpose, and their chief blessedness? They want a House to celebrate his praise, that hath done all this for them: behold, the Lord giveth them a goodly Temple, neither doth he therein only accept their offerings, but he also gives them his Oracles; even vocal oracles between the Cherubims. I might easily parallel England to Israel in the circumference of all these blessings: but my center is their last and best, and whereof they most boasted: The Temple of the Lord, and the Law of their God. To answer these we have the Houses of God, and the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We have all, though all in a new manner. 2. Cor. 5. Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. They had an Old Testament, we have the New Testament. They had the Spirit, we have a new Spirit. They had Commandments, we have Nouum mandatum; the New commandment. They had an Inheritance, Canaan; we have a new Inheritance promised. Vids nouum coelum, & nouam terram; I saw a new heaven, and a new earth. To conclude, they had their Temple, we have our Churches: to which as they were brought by their Sabbath, so we by our Lord's day: wherein as they had their Sacraments, so we have our Sacraments. We must therefore bear the like affection to ours, as they did to that. We have greater cause. There was the shadow, here is the substance: there the figure, here the truth: there the sacrifices of beasts, here of the Lamb of God, taking away the sin of the world.

I find myself here occasioned to enter a great sea of discourse; but you shall see, I will make but a short cut of it. It is God's house you enter; a house where the Lord is present; the place where his honor dwelleth. Let this teach us to come.

1. With Reverence. Ye shall hallow my Sabbaths, and reverence my Sanctuary: I am the Lord. The very mention of this Reverence, me thinks, should strike our hearts with our self-known guiltiness. How few look to their feet, before they enter these holy doors? Eccl. 5. and so they offer the Sacrifice of imprudent and impudent fools. If they are to hear, they regard Quis, not Quid: anything is good that some man speaks, the same in another trivial. If the man likes them not, nor shall the Sermon. Many thus contend, like those two Germans in a Tavern; One said he was of Doctor Martins religion, the other protested himself of Doctor Luther's religion: and thus among their cups the litigation grew hot between them: whereas indeed Martin and Luther was but one man. Others, when they come first into the Church, they swappe down on their seats, clappe their hattes before their eyes, and scarce bow their knees; as if they came to bless God, not to entreat God to bless them. They would quake in the presence of an offended King; who are thus impudent faced in the house of God. But saith the Lord, whose Throne is the heaven, and the earth his footstool; I will look to him that trembleth at my word. So Jacob, Gen. 28. was afraid; and said, How fearful is this place! This is none other then the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. Whereupon Bernard, Terribilis plane locus, &c. A fearful place indeed, & worthy of all reverence: which Saints inhabit, holy Angels frequent, and God himself graceth with his own presence. As the first Adam was placed in Paradise to keep it; so the second Adam is in the congregation of his Saints, to preserve it. Therefore enter not without Reverence. I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercies; and in thy fear will I worship toward thy holy Temple.

2. With Joy. None but a free-will offering is welcome to God. It is a common opinion in the world, that Religion doth dull a man's wits, and deject his spirits: as if mirth and mischief were only sworn brothers. But God's word teacheth, and a good conscience findeth, that no man can be so joyful, as the faithful: nor is there so merry a land, as the holy Land: no place of joy like the Church. Let the wicked think, that they cannot laugh if they be tied to the Law of Grace, nor be merry if God be in the company. But the Christian knows, there is no true joy, but the good joy: and if this be anywhere, it is in the Temple. I was glad when they said unto me: Let us go into the house of the Lord. Indeed therefore we are not merry enough, because we are not enough Christians. Can you wish more joy to be received, then that Rom. 14 Peace of conscience, and joy of the holy Ghost? Hilaris cumpondere virtus; a joy that can neither be suppressed, nor expressed. Or more joy to be communicated, then Colos. 3. in Psalms, Hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. Think, think, thy God is here. The Angels of heaven rejoice in his glorious presence, and crown it as their chief felicity: and shall not poor man rejoice in his gracious presence; as it were, his most blessed society? yes; the light of thy Countenance, O Lord, shall put more gladness into our hearts; then into the worldlings their abundance of corn and wine. Cast away then your dullness, and unwillingness of heart; Come merrily and with a joyful soul into the house of God.

3. With Holiness. It is holy ground; not by any inherent holiness, but in regard of the religious use. For that place, which was once Bethel, the House of GOD; proved afterwards Bethaven, the house of iniquity. But it is thus God's Sanctuary, the habitation of his Sanctity: Procul hinc, procul este profani. Put off thy shoes; d' off thy carnal affections; the place where thou standest is holy ground. wash thy hands, yea thy heart in innocence, before thou come near to God's Altar. Bee the Minister never so simple, never so sinful; the word is holy, the action holy, the time holy, the place holy; ordained by the most Holy, to make us holy; said a reverend Divine: God's house is for godly exercises: they wrong it therefore that turn Sanctuarium into Promptuarium, the Sanctuary into a Buttery; and spiritual food into belly-cheer. And they much more, that pervert it to a place of Pastime; making the house of praise, a house of plays. And they most of all, that make it a house, not laudis, but fraudis: My house is the house of prayer; but ye have made it a d...nne of thieves: robbing, if not men of their goods, yet God of the better part, sincerity of conscience.

What a horrid thing would it be, Beloved; if you should depart from this Church, where you learn to keep a good conscience, but into the market; and there practice deceit circumventiō, oppression, swearing, drunkenness! O do not derive the commencement of your sins from God's house. What a mockery is this, and how odious in the sight of heaven, if you should begin your wickedness with a Sermon •...as the Papists begin their treasons with a mass: I tax no known person; but for the facts and faults, Non ignota cano, I do not speak of things unknown. I would to God your amended lives might bring me with shame again hither, to recant and unsay it.

But it often so falls out, that as those conspirators met at the Capitol, so the Church is made the Communis Terminus, where many wickednesses have appointed to meet. What agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols? Begin not the day with God, to spend all the rest with Satan. Your tongues have now blessed the Lord: let not the evening find them red with oaths, or black with curses. Let not that saying of Luther be verified by you; that In nomine Domini incipit omne malum; in the name of God begins all mischief. Whatsoever your morning Sacrifice pretend, look to your afternoon. You have done so much the worse, as you have made a show of good: and it had been easier for your profane hearts, to have missed this admonition. This Caveat, before I leave God's house, I thought to commend to your practice, when you leave it.

I have held you too long in the Church, speaking of the Church. It was the most material point I propounded to my discourse: forgive the prolixity; the brevity of the rest shall make amends. The first strain or stair was his entrance into GOD'S house: now he is in, 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 what doth he? what bringeth he? we find

Burnt Offerings.

I have three dissuasions from punctual tractation of this point. 1. The poor remnant of the fugitive time. 2. I have liberally handled it on former occasions. 3. The necessity is not great of discoursing the Sacrifices of the Law, in these days of the Gospel we have the light; and therefore need not trouble our selves to call back the shadows.

Sacrifices are of great Antiquity: not only the Book of God, but even the Law of nature hath imprinted in man's heart, that Sacrifices must be offered. It is written in the conscience, that an homage was due to the superior power, which is able to revenge it self of dishonor and contempt done it; and to regrantie them with kindness that served it. But David's Sacrifice was the earnest of a thankful heart. I might amplify it, and perhaps pick up some good gleanings after others full carts.

I could also observe, that David came not before God empty-handed; but brought with him some actual testimony of his devoted affection; Burnt offerings. To the confusion of their faces, who will no longer serve God, if he grows chargeable to them. If they may receive from God good things, and pay him only with good words, they are content to worship him. But if they cannot be in his favor, but it must cost them the setting on; they will save their purses, though they lose their souls. If he requires ought for his Church, poor Ministers, or poor members; they cry with Judas, Ad quid perditio haec? why is this waste? They are only so long rich in devotion, as they may be rich by devotion: and no longer.

But for our selves, be we sure that the best Sacrifice we can give to God, is obedience: not a dead beast, but a living soul. The Lord takes no delight in the blood of brutish creatures; a spirit in bodies; the impassible in saviors arising from Altars. It is the mind, the life, the soul, the obedience, that he requires: To obey is better then sacrifice. Let this be our burnt offering, our Holocaust: a sanctified Body and Mind given up to the Lord. First the heart. My Son, give me thy heart. Is not the heart enough? no, the hand also; wash the hands from blood and pollution. Is not the hand enough? no, the foot also: Remoue thy foot from evil. Is not the foot enough? no, the lips also; Guard the doors of thy mouth; Refrain thy tongue from evil. Is not the tongue enough? no, the ear also; Let him that hath ears to hear, hear. Is not the ear enough? no, the eye also; Let thine eyes be toward the Lord. Is not all this sufficient? No, give body and spirit. Ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify GOD in your body, and in your spirit, which are GOD'S. When the eyes abhor lustful objects, the ears slanders, the foot erring paths, the hands wrong and violence, the tongue flattery and blasphemy, the heart pride and hypocrisy: this is thy Holocaust; thy whole burnt offering.

I will pay thee my vows.

The third and highest degree of this Song is, Uowes; I will pay thee my vows. And here among vows, I might sooner then with Burnt offerings, lose the time, your patience, and myself. This vow was no meritorious or supererogatory work in David. But though the Law generally binds him to God's service, yet to some particular act of God's service, he may newly bind himself by a vow. So Jacob vowed a vow, saying; If God will be with me, &c. This stone that I have set for a pillar, shall be God's house; and of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the Tenth unto thee. Our Prophet did vow performance of that duty, to which without vowing he was obliged. Psal. 119. I have vowed or sworn, and will perform it: that I will keep thy righteous judgments.

There are many cautions in vows, which I must now vow to omitte. Only Solomon's rule excepted, Eccles. 5. When thou vowest a vow to God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools, pay that thou hast vowed. Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin. Let nothing be vowed that is not Penes vonentem, in the power of the vower: and then the thing being good, and thou enabled to perform it, this vow must be kept. For thy vows are a heavy charge, Psalm. 56. Thy vows are heavy upon me, O God.

The Papists have strange, and often impossible vows; of Pouerty, Virginity, Pilgrimage. I will teach thee to make these vows too, God enable thee to keep them. If thou wilt vow poverty, let it be in spirit. Vow thyself not in the world a beggar, but a beggar to Christ. Many blessed Saints have served GOD with their wealth, and thought not that religion was only in them that begged. If thou wilt vow virginity, vow thyself a Virgin to Christ: whether thou be married or single, keep the bed undefiled; that thou mayest be presented a pure Virgin to Christ. If thou wilt vow Pilgrimage, let it not be to our Lady of Loretto, or of Halle and Zichem, indeed not to our Lady, but to our Lord: vow thyself a Pilgrim to Christ: Loade not thyself with the luggage of this world, lest it hinder thy journey; and cease not traveling till thou come to thy Home; the place of peace and eternal rest. These are lawful, lawdible vows: the Lord send us all to make them, and to keep them.

You see, I am quickly got up these two latter stairs: Some more special use remains only to be made, and so give way to conclusion. I will take from these three branches, a just reproof of three sorts of people: Refusers, Intruders, Back-sliders. Refusers to come, being called. Intruders, that come being not prepared. And Back-sliders, that make vows, but not keep them. The first say not, We will go into thy house. The second say, We will go into thy house, but not with burnt offerings. The last deny not both the former: We will go into thy house, and with burnt offerings; but non soluent vota; they will not pay their vows.

1. Refusers or Recusants are of two sorts; Papists, and Separatists, or Schismatikes.

1. Papists; and they have so much recourse ad transmarina Iudicia; to beyond-sea Judgments; that they dare not come into God's house, because of the Popes interdiction. And the Popes have so wrought and brought it about now, that they will not only in abstracto be had in reverence; but in concreto be feared with observation. Though at first thirty Bishops there successively yielded their heads to the block for Christ: yet afterwards, by change of Bishops in that See, and of humors in those Bishops, such alteration hath followed; that Rome is no liker to what Rome was, then Michals Image on a pillow of goats hair, was like David. The cause therefore of their not communicating with us, is awe of the Popes Supremacy. For some of their greatest Writers have justified our Communion book, to contain all doctrine necessary to salvation. The not suffering them to come to God's house, is then rather a point of Popish policy and state, then of Christian devotion. But indeed they are the Satanical Jesuits that set them afoot. The common people, like the Mare mortuum, a dead Sea, would be quiet enough, if these blustering winds did not put them into tumult. And so long as those dogs can bark against God's house, the poor affrighted people dare not come there. So that England may have their bodies, but Rome hath their hearts; and the danger is fearful, lest Satan also come in for his share, and take possession of their souls.

2. Schismatikes; who, because their curious eyes (looking through the spectacles of opinion) spy some Morphew of corruption on the Churches face, will utterly forsake it. There are some that refuse peaceable obedience, as the Poet made his Plays, to please the people; or as Simon Magus was Christened; for company. The Separatists are peeuishly wretched: discontent drives them from God; and though they say, they fly for their conscience, indeed they fly from their conscience: leaving all true devotion behind them, and their wives and children upon the Parish.

2. Well, they are gone, and my discourse shall travel no further after them: but fall upon others nearer hand. There are some so far from Refusers, that they are rather Intruders. They will come into God's house, but they will bring no burnt offerings with them: no preparation of heart to receive benefit in the Church. They come without their wedding garment, and shall one day hear that fearful and unanswerable question; Friends, how came you in hither?

These are the utterly profane, that come rather with a lame knowledge, then a blind zeal. For some of them, good clothes carry them to Church: and they had rather men should note the fashion of their habits, then God the habit of their hearts. They can better brook ten disorders in their lives, then one in their locks. Others are the secure semi-atheistical Cosmopolites; and these come too: and none take a truer measure of the Sermon: for their sleep begins with the prayer before it, and wakens just at the Psalm after it. These think, that God may be served well enough with looking on. And their utmost duty, but to bring their bodies a little further living, then they shall be brought dead: for then perhaps they shall come to the Church-yard, now they will bring them to Church. Devotion and they are almost strangers, and so much as they know of it, they dishonor by their acquaintance. Their burnt offerings are nothing else, but a number of eyes at utmost lift up to heaven; their heart hath another center. They bring as many sins with them every day to Church, as they have been all their lives in committing. Their hands are not washed from aspersions of lust and blood: their eyes are full of whoredom, their lips of slander, their affections of covetousness, their wits of cheating, their souls of impiety. If there were no Saints in the Church, how could they hope, the roof would not fall on their guilty heads! But I will leave them to the Lord's reproof. Jer. 7. Will ye steal, murder, commit adultery, and swear falsely: and come and stand before mee in this house, staring me in the face, as if you were innocent? Behold, even I have seen it, saith the Lord.

3. There is yet a last-sort; that will come into God's house, and bring with them burnt offerings, a show of external devotion; but they will not pay their Vowes. Distress, war, captivity, calamity, famine, sickness, brings down the most elate and lofty spirits. It turns the proud Gallants fether into a kercheffe, pulls the wine from the lips of the drunkard; ties up the tongue of the swearer, whom thunder could not adjure to silence: makes the Adulterer loath the place of his sin, the bed. And though the Usurer stuff his pillow with nothing but his bonds and morgages, softer and sweeter in his opinion then Down or feathers; yet his head will not leave aking.

This misery doth so sting, terrify, and put sense into the dead flesh of the numbed conscience; that (all worldly delights being found like plumme•...s of lead, tied about a man while he is exposed in this Sea; so far from helping him to swim, that they sink him rather) the eye looks about for another shore, and finds none but God. To this so long forgotten God, the heart begins to address a messenger, and that is Prayer. God (the wicked see) must be called on, but they know not how. They have been so mere strangers to him, that they cannot tell how to salute him. Like beggars that are blind, they are forced to beg, but they see not of whom. Or if their eyes are so far open; Vident quasi e longinquo salutem, sed interiacente pelago: vident quo eundum, non quà: They see health a far off, as it were beyond the Sea: they see whither they would go, but not which way.

If any inferior thing, or created prop could uphold them, God should not be solicited. If friends will, if Physic will, if money will, if all the delicate objects for any sense will ease or appease their grief, they will not seek to heaven. Yea, if Beelzebub the God of Ekron can cure them, they will not trouble the GOD of Israel. But all lower pleasures to one thus sick, is but like a sweet harmony of music to a deaf man. There is no hope of comfort but from above the clouds. Health & prosperity is but as a Coach to carry our desires to heaven, but sickness is the post-horse. Only this Sub poena can bring us to put up a supplication in the high Court of Requests and Mercy. Now loe, they pray, they beseech, they sigh, they weep, they bleed, and lastly they vow.

What vow they? Either some new act to be done, or some old act to be left undone. Now the drunkard vows abstinence, the lustful vows continence, the swearer vows to leave his blasphemy: the Incloser vows to throw open his taken in commons: the proud vow to leave their gaudy vanity: the worldling vows to be charitable, and to relieve the poor. And perhaps at such a pinch or dead lift, one Usurer in a thousand years may vow to forsake his usury, and to restore all that he hath so gotten. Now they say, Lord, remove from me this malady, this extremity; and I will hereafter serve thee better, love thee more, believe thy Gospel, relieve thy poor, give something to an Hospital, or do some such act as may testify my thankfulness.

Well, God hears and grants; health comes, strength is recovered, the danger is over, they are well. Now vbi vota? Where be their vows? Alas, we rise from our beds of sickness, and leave our vows behind us.

Aegrotus surgit, sed pia vota iacent.

Physicians have a rule among themselves, concerning their Patients: Take whiles they be in pain. For whatsoever they promise sick, when they are well, they will not perform it. So God had need to take what devotion he can get at our hands in our misery; for when prosperity returns, we forget our vows. You have often heard that old verse:

D...mon languebat, tunc monachus esse volebat.

Daemon conn...luit, daemon vt ante suit.

And as wittily Englished:

The Devil was sick, the devil a Monk would be,

The Devil was well, the devil of Monk was he.

The moral of it suits full to our present purpose. It is reported of Constantinople, that a terrible Earthquake had over thrown many houses, slain much people. Hereupon the remaining Inhabitants affrighted, fell devoutly to their prayers and vows: privately in their chambers, publicly in their Churches: the poor were relieved, justice administered, their lives much amended. But afterwards when God held his hand, they held their tongues: he forbore plaguing, and they forbore praying: the rod ceased, and their piety withal; they forgot their vows.

When the Lord hath stricken us by famine; in withholding the rain frō us; or in pouring down too much too fast upon us: Or by a grievous plague, turning our popular streets into a Desert: we straight grow penitent; Zeal carries up our cries to heaven; we pray, we sigh, we weep. Sorrow sits in our eyes, devotion on our lips, God hath at that time more hearty prayers in an hour, then ordinarily in a year. But as the Poet spake,

Nocte pluit tota, redeunt spectacula mane.

The Lord no sooner takes off the burden of misery; but we also shake of the burden off piety; we forget our vows. O the mercy of God, that such forgetfulness should possess Christian hearts! This was unthankful Israel's fault, Psalm. 106. They soon forgot his works: they forgot, yea soon: they made haste to forget: so the Original is; They made haste, they forgot. Like men that in sleep shake death by the hand, but when they are awake will not know him.

It is storied of a rich Merchant, that in a great storm at Sea, vowed to Jupiter if he would save him and his vessel, to give him a Hecatomb. The storm ceaseth, and he bethinks himself that a Hecatomb was unreasonable; he resolves on seven Oxen. Another tempest comes, and now he vows again the seven at least. Delivered then also, he thought that seven were too many, and one Ox would serve the turn. Yet another peril comes, and now he vows solemnly to fall no lower: if he might be rescued, an Ox Jupiter shall have. Again freed, the Ox sticks in his stomach, and he would fain draw his devotion to a lower rate; a Sheep was sufficient. But at last being set ashore, he thought a Sheep too much; and purposeth to carry to the Altar only a few Dates. But by the way, he eats up the Dates, and lays on the Altar only the shells. After this rate do many perform their vows. They promise whole Hecatombes in sickness; but they reduce them lower and lower still, as they grow well. He that vowed to build an Hospital; to restore an Impropriation to the Church; to lay open his inclosures, and to serve God with an honest heart: brings all at last to a poor reckoning; and thinks to please the Lord with his empty shells. There was some hope of this man's souls health, whiles his body was sick: but as his body riseth to strength, his soul falls to weakness.

It is the reproach of Rome; No penny, no Pater noster: let it not be our reproach and reproof too; No plague, no Pater-noster; no punishments, no prayers. Thy vows are God's debts, and God's debts must be paid. He will not (as men do desperate debtors) dismiss thee on a slight composition. No; Iuste exigitur ad soluendum, qui non cogitur ad vouendum. He is justly required to pay, that was not compelled to vow. Non talis eris, si non feceris quod vouisti, qualis mansisti, si nihil tale vouisses: Minor enim tunc esses, non peior. Thou remainest not the same having vowed, and not performed; as thou hadst been, hadst thou not vowed. Thou hadst then been less, thou art now worse.

Well then Beloved; if we have vowed a lawful vow to the Lord, let us pay it. Let it not be said of us, that we do Aliud sedentes, aliud stantes: one thing sitting in our chair of sickness, another thing standing in our stations of health. The Lord doth not deliver us out of the bond of distress, that we should deliver our selves out of the bond of obedience. Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap. The next blow of his hand will be heavier, because thou hast soon forgotten this. Who can blame justice, if he strike us with yet greater plagues; that have on our deliverance from the former, so mocked him with the falling fruits of our vowed devotion? Come we then whose hearts the mercy of God, and blood of Jesus Christ hath softened; and say with our Psalmist; We will go into thy house, O Lord, we will pay thee our vows.

You see all the parts of this Song: the whole comfort or harmony of all is Praising God. I have shown you Quo loco, in his house: Quo modo, with burnt offerings: Quo animo, paying our vows. Time hath abridged this discourse, contrary to my promise and purpose.

In a word, which of us is not infinitely beholding to the Lord our God: for sending to us many good things, & sending away frō us many evil things? O where is our praise, where is our thankfulness? What shall we do unto thee, O thou preserver of men? What? but take the cup of salvation, and bless the Name of the Lord? O let us enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his Courts with praise: let us be thankful unto him, and bless his Name. And let us not bring our bodies only, but our hearts; let our souls be thankful.

Mans body is closed up within the Elements; his blood within his body; his spirits in his blood, his soul within his spirits; and the Lord resteth in his soul. Let then the soul praise the Lord: let us not draw near with our lips, and leave our hearts behind us: but let us give the searcher of the hearts, a hearty praise. Ingratitude is the devils Text; oaths, execrations, blasphemies, & lewd speeches are Commentaries upon it. But thankfulness is the language of heaven; for it becometh Saints to be thankful. As therefore we would give testimony to the world, and argument to our own conscience, that we serve the Lord; let us promise and perform the words of my Text: We will go into thy house with burnt offerings: we will pay thee our vows. The Lord give thankfulness to us, and accept it of us; for Jesus Christ his sake.

Amen.

MANS SEED-TIME AND HARVEST: OR, *Lex Talionis.

GALAT. 6. 7.

Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

THESE words have so near alliance to the former, that before we speak personally of them, we must first find out their Pedegree. To fetch it no higher, then from the beginning of this Chapter, the line of their Genealogy runs thus. 1. Supportation of the weak, verse. 1. and 2. 2. Probation of our selves, verse. 4. 3. Communication of duties to our Teachers, verse. 6. The first is an action of Charity: the second of Integrity: the third of Equity.

This last is the Father of my Text: and it is fit, that we being to speak of the child, should first look a little into his Parentage. Patrique simillima proles. It is this. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate to him that teacheth in all good things.

This, one would think, should stand like the Sun, all men blessing it: yet Mammon hath suborned some dogs to bark against it. Will they say, Let him is only permissi•...e? They shall find it was imperatiue; Let there be light, and there was light. Though their sensible hearts want the obedience of these insensible creatures. Or will they except against Taught; as if they that will not be taught, were not bound? Indeed many are bet•...er fed then taught; otherwise they would not deny food to his body, that does not deny food to their souls. Or perhaps they will plead Indignitatem docentis, the unworthiness of the Teacher. And what Paul shall be worthy if every Barbarian may censure him? But non tollatur diuinum debi•...um, propter humanam debilitatem. Let not God lose his right, for man's weakness. You have robbed me, saith God; not my Ministers.

Will not all this quarrelling serve? yet still Paul's proposition must have some opposition. Though we must give something to our Teachers, yet this charge doth not fetch in Tithes.

This, this is the point: prove this, and you shall find many a great man's soul, as his Improprations cannot be, in a damnable Lapse. I would say something of it; but me thinks I hear my friends telling me, what Sadolet said to Erasmus. Erasmus would prove, that worshipping* of Images might well be abolished. I grant (quoth Sadolet) thy opinion is good: but this point should not be handled, because it will not be granted.

I am sure, God's law gives tithes to his Church: but say they, that Law is abolished; repealed by a new Act of Parliament. Paul in his Epistle frees us from the old Law. Indeed Paul speaking of our Sanctification and Salvation; notes our deliverance from the Lusts of the Flesh, and from the lists of the Law. From the Ceremonial Law wholly, from the Moral only so far as it shall not condemn those in Christ. But who, save an Advocate of Mammon, will limit Tenths to Ceremony? God requires a portion of our Time, of our Goods: the Seuenth of our time, the Tenth of our goods: and we have those, that turn both into Ceremony. Such make the Sabbath it self a mere Ceremony. But be not deceived, God is not mocked.

This same 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, In all good things, is of some latitude. Many will allow some of their goods, but they snarl at Paul's In omnibus. The Minister shall have the Easter-book, perhaps some other trifles: it may be (against their wills) wool and lambes: but shall the black coat carry away the Tith-shock? The gumm'd Taffata Gentleman would fret out at this. They plead to their Vicar, We give what the Law allows. What their Law, not what the Gospel. And yet they hope not to be saved by the Law, but by the Gospel.

The Apostle saith, Part of all; why then not the tenth part, which God at the first commanded, and custom in all ages commended? That part once assigned of God, should prevent all arbitrary disposing of men. What Landlord leaves it to his Tenant, to pay him what rent he list? If Mammon must set out God's portion, he is sure to have but a little. It was never well with the Church, since it was at the worlds finding. No man fears to surfeit, whiles he is at his enemies feeding.

I think the purest and precisest Reformers (deformers I should say) of Religion, can hardly order this matter, better then God hath done. Every plummet is not for this sound: nor every line for this level: nor out of many such blocks can a man carue Mercury. The Canon Law says, that Si Princeps causam inter partes audierit, & sententiam dixerit; lex est in omnibus similibus. If the Prince hear a cause betwixt parties, and give a definitive Sentence, that is a •...awe to decide all controversies of the same nature. But we have the Prince of heavens Sentence for paying of Tithes; before the Law to Abraham, under the Law to the Jews; therefore small reason that it should not hold under the Gospel among Christians. Be not deceived, God, &c.

They were the Churches, why are they not? Plead what you will, God hath a grievous Quare impedit against you. You say, they were taken away from idle drones, and fat bellied Monks. So Rapiuntur ab ind...gnis, (ð) à dignis. From the unworthy they were taken, and from the worthy they are detained. But to whom are they given? Possidebant P...pistae, possident Rapistae. Those kept some good hospitality with them, these keep none. So that as Comin...us observes upon the battle of Montlch...y: some lost their livings for running away; and they were given to those that ran ten mile further. Idleness lost, and oppression hath gained. But let me say with the Psalmist, Psalm. 11. The foundations are cast down: but what hath the righteous done? The foundations of the Church, which should hold up the Gospel, tents & maintenance, are cast down, because of superstitious abusers; but what hath the righteous done, that these things should be taken from them? A Bishop coming to a Town, because the Bells rang not, suspended the Organs. A strange kind of revenge, because the Bells rang not in the Steeple, to suspend the Organs in the Choir. So because those Bells, not of Aaron, but of Antichrist, did not ring to God's glory: you have suspended the Organs and means of living from them that take pains; and in your own consciences preach to you the sincere Gospel of Christ. But be not deceived, God is not mocked.

Or perhaps you say, you must have these Church-livings for Hospitalities sake, that you may keep the better houses. So you make the Clergy poor, that you may make the poor rich.

I have read, that the Sophy of Persia, being to send a great sum of money for an offering to Mahomet in Arabia, would send none of his own coin; for that he said was gotten by ill means: but exchanged it with English Merchants, because theirs was gotten honestly, and with a good conscience. So it may be, you think that your own unjust moneys, and extorted comings in by the ruin of your Tenants, is no good offering to GOD. But the Church-man's living comes honestly, and with a good conscience; and therefore you will take that, to offer your sacrifice of alms to God. But herein you come short of the Persian: you do not give your own Lordships and lands in exchange. Yet me thinks, if spiritual livings must be given to the poor, you might suffer the Church to give her own. I could never find either in Albo Praetorum, or in Rubrica Martyrum, how the Laity was deputed to this stewardship. Sure they intrude themselves into this Office, and will be God's Almoners, whether he will or no. If they will give to the poor; let them give that is theirs. Dona quaerit, non spolia Deus. God expects and respects gifts of thine own, not spoils of others. Be not deceived, God is not mocked.

But where is your Hospitality after all this? you can tell me; nay I can tell you. Bestowed amongst Silk-men, Mercers; yea, upon Tailors, Players, Harlots; and other insatiable beggars of the same rank. In the reign of Alexander Seuerus, the Tipplers, & Alehouse-keepers complained against the Christians, that they had turned a place of ground to some religious use, which belonged to them. But the very heathen Emperor could answer (upon hearing the cause) that it was honest and fit, God to be served before Alehouses. Who would not judge, that Tithes are fitter to be given to God, then to hounds, harlots, sycophants, inuenters of fashions, and such bauds of pride and notorious iniquity?

This I will speak boldly, and justify; that Hospitality was at the same time impropriated from the land, that spiritual livings were impropriated from the Church. You have not robbed Peter to pay Paul, but to pay Judas. And hence misery sets her black foot... into so many fair doors: all comes to beggary at last. They that swallow Churches, like dogs that eat knot-grass, never thrive after it. Be not deceived, God is not mocked. I have rubbed this sore enough, and conclude with that saying of Chrysostom: Moneo vt reddatis Deo sua, vt Deus (d) vobis vestra. Restore to God his own, that God may restore to you your own.

Thus as he that had pulled one of Solomon's Curtaines, the rest would follow; though in the first there were work enough for his admiration. So in this coherence, pardon me, if I have been somewhat plentiful. It was the induction to my Text: and the door thus opened, let us enter in to suruay the building. Be not, &c.

The whole may be distinguished into a

- Caution.
- Reason.

The caution, Be not deceived, God is not mocked. The Reason; For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. The Caution is partly

- Disswasive: Be not deceived.
- Persuasive: God is not mocked.

You may deceive yourselves, you cannot deceive God. These two circumstances make against two defects

- Error. Be not deceived.
- Hypocrisy. God is not mocked.

The Disswasion: Be not deceived.

This is the voice of a friend, studying Aut praeuenire errori, aut reuocare errantem; either to prevent a man, before he errs, or to recall him erring. A phrase often used by our Apostle, Ephes. 5. Let no man deceive you withvaine words. Nihil facilius est, quàm errare. There is nothing easier, then to err. There is no man but errs; sometime•...in via pedum; often in via morum. This provision then is necessary. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Deceits lie as thick upon the earth, as the Grashoppers did in Egypt; a man can scarce set his foot besides them.

But to prevent the deceiuings of sin is our Apostles intention, Hebr. 3. Lest any of us be hardened, through thedeceitfulness of sin. Sin is crafty, and full of delusion: there is no sin but hath his couzonage. Usury walks in Alderman Thrifty's gown. Pride gets the name of my Lady Decency. Idolatry, as if it dwelt by ill neighbors, praiseth it self; and that for the purest Devotion. Homicide marcheth like a man of valor; and Lust professeth it self Natures Scholar. Covetousness is goodman Nabal's husbandry: and Enclosing, Master Oppressors policy. We were wont to say, that black could never be coloured into white: yet the devil hath some Painters that undertake it. Euills are near neighbors to good. Errore sub illo, Pro vitio virtus crimina saepe tulit. By that means virtue hath borne the blame of vices faults: yea, and more then that; Vice hath had the credit of Virtues goodness. But be not deceived.

When men's wits, and the devils to help, have found out the fairest pretexts for sin; God's justice strikes off all, and leaves Sin naked and punishable. Many pretences have been found out for many sins: besides distinctions, mitigations, qualifications, extenuations, colors, questions, necessities, inconveniences, tolerations, ignorances. But when man hath done, God begins. One argument of God's now, is stronger then all ours. Thou shalt not do this. Go study to persuade thyself, that thou mayest: yet at last GOD takes away all thy distinctions, when he pours his wrath on thy naked conscience. Then where is thy paint? If it prevail not against the Sun, what will it do against the fire?

God charged our first Parents, that they should not cate of the forbidden fruit: If you do, you shall die. The devil comes first with a flatte Negative; Non mori...mini: Ye shall not die. Then with subtle promises; Ye shall be as God's, knowing good and evil. But what is the event? They eat, and they die; are instantly made mortal, and should have died forever, but for a Savior. GOD bids Saul slay all in Amalek, 1. Sam. 15. Smite Amalek, utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not. Yet Saul spares Agag, and the fat cattle. Why is this a fault? I spared the best of the cattle for Sacrifice to the Lord. Will not this serve? No: God rejects Saul from being King over Israel; who had rejected God from being King over Saul. Be not deceived, God is not m...ked.

Consider we here the examples of Uzzah, and Uzziah. For Uzzah; God had charged, that none but the consecrated Priests should touch the Ark.... Uzzah seeing the Oxen shake the Ark, put forth his hand to stay it up. Was this a sin to stay the Ark of God from falling? Yes: God proves it; he lays him dead by the Arks side. For Uzziah, God had charged, Numb. 18. that none should invade the Priests office. The stranger that commethnigh, shall be put to death. Uzziah will come to the Altar with a Censor in his hand to offer Incense. Why, is this an offense to offer to the Lord? Yes: GOD makes it manifest; Uzziah is a Leper to his dying day. God had commanded the Prophet sent to Bethel; Thou shalt eat no bread, and drink no water there. Well, he is going homewards; and an old Prophet over-takes him, & persuades him to refresh himself. No says the other, I must not; For so was it charged me in the Word of the Lord; Thou shalt eat no bread, &c. But says the old Prophet; An Angel spake to me, saying, Bring him back, that he may eat bread. Well, he goes: Is not a Prophets word? an Angels word authority enough? No, the Lord proves it; he gives a Lion leave to slay him. Bee not deceived, God is not mocked.

The Jews knew, that they ought not to despise their Messias. He is come: Loe now, they study arguments against him. John 7. We know this man whence he is: butwhen Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is. And Search and look; for out of Galilee ariseth no Prophet. Be these their cauills against God's express charge? He answers all, when he leaves their house unto them desolate. I hope I may take a little, says ...ehazi: but enough took him for it, a continual Lepro...e. The evil Servant hath his plea, Math. 25. I knew that thou wert a hard man, &c. Therefore I hid thy talent in the earth: loe, there thou hastthat is thine. But what follows, ver. 30? Cast ye that unprofitable servant into utter darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of...eeth.

To come from example to application. It is God's command concerning Princes; Touch not mine Anointed. The Papists will touch them with the hand of death? Why, they have warrant from the Pope. God's Word says not so, either in precept or precedent. If any King in God's book had been deposed by a Priest, all the Schools and Pulpits would have rung of it: we should have had no rule with the Church of Rome. But it falls out happily; Ut quod praecepto non iubetur, etiam exemplo careat. That as it is not commanded by charge, so nor commended by examples. But will they still argue for this shedding of the blood-royal? The gallhouse confutes them here; but their worst confutation will be confusion hereafter.

God says thou shalt not put thy money to usury: thou hast found out many distinctions to satisfy thy conscience, or rather thy covetousness. God's word & thy will are at odds. He says, Thou shalt not: thou sayest, thou may est. On these and these terms, Hell fire shall decide the question. Relieve the poor, saith the Lord. Thou suckest their bloods rather: but howsoever wilt give nothing. Why, may we not do with our own what we list? Well, this same Ite maledict...; Go ye cursed, is a fearful and unanswerable argument. Thus flesh and blood speedes, when it will deal with God on terms of disputation. If God's own reason, Thou shalt not do this, be not stronger then all ours now; it shall be one day. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for, for these things, the wrath of God shall come upon the children of disobedience. Be not deceived.

As every particular Sin hath the particular color: so there are general pretexts for general sins; whereby many souls are deceived. I find this doctrine, though plain, so necessary, that I must be bold to pursue it. You may easily forgive all good faults. There are seven general pleas for sin.

1. Predestination is pleaded. If I be written to life, I may do this: for many are saved that have done worse. If not, were my life never so strict, hell appointed is not to be avoided. These men look to the top of the Ladder, but not to the foot. God ordains not men to iump to Heaven, but to climb thither by prescribed degrees. Non per saltum, sed scansum. Qui ordinavit finem, ordinavit media ad finem. He that decreed the end, decreed also the means that conduce to it. If thou take liberty to sin, this is none of the way. Peter describes the rounds of this ladder, faith, virtue, knowledge, tēperance, patience, godliness, charity. Thou rūnest a contrary course, in the wild paths of unbelief, profaneness, ignorance, riot, impatience, impiety, malice: this is none of the way. These are the rounds of a Ladder that goes downward to hell. God's predestination est multis causa standi, nemini labendi: helps many to stand, pusheth none down. Look thou to the way, let God alone with the end. Believe, repent, amend, and thou hast God's promise to be saved. Be not deceived, God is not mocked.

2. It is God's will I should do this wickedness: he saw it, and might have prevented it. It is unjust to damn a man for that he will... him to do.

Answ. This is a blasphemous and most sacrilegious •...uill. Where did God ever will thee to lie, to swear, to oppress, to adulterize? His will is his word: and where findest thou his word commanding sin? And shall God's prescience make him guilty of thy evil? Then must thy memory make thee guilty of other men's evil. As thou by thy memory, dost not cause those things to have been done, that are past: So God by his foreknowledge doth not cause those things to be done, which are to come.

3. Ignorance is pleaded; I knew not the deed to be evil, or if evil, not so dangerous. Indeed Ignorance may make a sin Minus, not Nullum; a less sin, but not no sin. I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly, in unbelief: saith our Apostle. And Peccata scientium peccatis ignorantium praepo...ntur. The sins of them that know, are more heinous then the sins of them that know not. But if thou hadst no other sin, thy ignorance is enough to condemn thee; for thou art bound to know. (ϕ) ea que sunt Domini nesciunt, a Domino nesciu... They that will not know the Lord, the Lord will not know them. But I speak to you that may know: your ignorance is affected. Some of you have not the knowledge of God, I speak this to your shame. Mul... vt liberiùs peccarent, libenter ignorant. Many that they may sin the more securely, are ignorant willfully. Thus you may go blindfold to hell. Be not deceived, God is not mocked.

4. A fourth saith; I have many good deeds to weigh with my evils. Indeed I am an Usurer, an Adulterer, a Swearer; but I keep a good house, I give alms; and I will do more when I am dead. Indeed these are good works; Bona accipientibus, non facientibus. Good to the receivers, not to the Giuers. So a man may be borne for the good of many, not for his own. They write that the Pyramids of Egypt was built for that great Pharaohs Tomb; but the Red Sea disappointed him. Many think by good works to build up a heaven for themselves, but leading unsanctified lives, hell prevents their purpose. And such a man, as robs many hundreds to relieve some, may at last for his charity go to the Devil. The Papists indeed stand extremely for building Abbeys, Colleges for Jesuits, and augmenting the revenues of Monasteries, that Masses and Dirige's may be sung for their souls: they give full absolution to such a man, and seal him a general acquittance of all his sins. They make the besotted Laity, especially some rich Burger believe, that without anymore ado, it is impossible for a man to be damned that lives in such a Profession; and which is strange, here they equiuocate truly; so long as a man lives in it; but if he dyes in it, there is the danger. But we know▪ the poison must be justified, or else the work is not sanctified. Be not deceived, GOD is not mocked.

5. But say some, God is merciful. Comfortable truth: else woe, woe to miserable man. But shall God show mercy to those that abuse his mercy? He will not be so merciful to thee, as to be unjust to himself. God will be just, go thou on and perish. God shown mercy to the relenting, not to the railing thief. Wouldst thou have him merciful to thee, that art unmerciful to him, to thyself? Misericordia amplectenti, non tergiuer santidatur. They that will lead a wicked life, sub spe misericordiae, in hope of mercy: shall meet with a fearful death, sub terrore Iustitiae, in the horror of Justice. Kiss the mercy of God, abuse it not. Where is Praesumptio veniae, will follow Consumptio poen...: a presuming of favor shall be punished with a consuming wrath. Be not deceived, &c.

6. Others allege; Christ died for our sins, and his satisfaction is of infinite price. This is the door of hope, from which the profanest wretch is angry to be driven. The most presumptuous sinner flatters his soul with this comfort: as if the gates of Heaven were now set open, and he might enter with all his iniquities on his back. Indeed there is no want in Christ; but is there none in thee? In him is plenteous redemption; but how if in thee there be scarce faith? whatsoever Christ is, what ar... thou? God so loved the world, that he gave his only be...otten Son. He did not let, or lend, or sell, but give: not an Angel, nor a servant, but a Son: not another's, but his own: not his adoptive, but natural, his begotten Son: not one of many, but his only begotten Son. Many degrees of love: but what of all this? That whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. But thou hast no faith, therefore no privilege by this gift. I am the good shepherd, saith Christ. Why? I give my life: but for whom? for my sheep. Not for lustful goats, or covetous hogs, or oppressing Tigers. If thou be such, here is no more mercy for thee, then if there were no Savior. If there be no careful observation of the Law, there is no conservation by the Gospel. No good life, no good faith: no good faith, no Christ. Be not deceived, God is not mocked.

7. Well, yet Repentance makes all even wheresoever it comes; or God is not so good as his word. Yes; God will be so good as his promise; but here's the doubt, whether thou wilt be so good as thy purpose. Thou canst charge God no further then to forgive thee, repenting; not to give thee repentance sinning. Promisit Deus poenitenti veniam, non peccanti poenitentiam. He hath made a promise to Repentance, not of Repentance. This is God's treasure. what is the reason, the malefactor went frō the cross to heaven! Dedit poenitentiam, qui dedit & Paradisum. God gave him repentance, that also gave him Paradise. Art thou sure God will put this alms into thy polluted hand? It is dangerous ventring the soul on such an uncertainty. He that sins that he may repent, is like one that surfeit•... that he may take Physic. And whether this Physic will work on a dead heart, is a perilous fear. Alas! what tears are in flint? what remorse in a benu•...ed conscience? Tutum est poenitenda non committere, certum non est commissa deflere. It is safe not to do what thou mayst repent: it is not certain to repent what thou hast done. It is the fashion of many to send repentance afore to threescore: but if they live to those years, they do not then overtake it, but drive it before them still. Be not deceived, God is not mocked.

You see now what trust is in colors: how easily you may deceive yourselves, how vnpossibly mock GOD. Leave then excuses to the wicked, that will be guilty and God shall not know of it. Bernard reckons up their mitigations. Non feci, &c. I have not done it: or if I have done, yet not done evil; or if evil, yet not very evil: or if veryeuill, yet not with an evil mind: or if with an evil mind, yet by others evil persuasion. Be not deceived, God is not mocked. If we cry with that servant; Have patience, and I will pay thee all; the Lord may forbear in mercy. But if we wrangle, I owe nothing; and God is too hasty to call me from my pleasures; he will require the uttermost farthing.

I have held you long in this Disswasiue part of the Caution. The Persuasive was also much included in it, and therefore I will but touch it.

God is not mocked.

God is often in the Scripture called the Searcher of the heart. Jer. 17. The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it? Who? Ego Dominus; I the Lord know the heart. So Solomon in his prayer: Thou only knowest the hearts of all the children of men. So the Apostles about the election of one in Judas room, Thou Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men. Now he that knows the heart, cannot be mocked. It is hard to beguile the eye of man looking on us, how much more to deceive the eye of God looking in us? Therefore Quod non audes facere aspiciente conseruo, hoc ne cogites inspiciente Deo.

How vain a thing then is it to be an Hypocrite? As if God had not a window into the heart, to discern it. Hypocrites, saith Augustine, have Christianum nomen ad iudicium, non ad remedium: The name of Christians to their condemnation, not comfort. Their words are like an Echo, they answer God's call, but never come at him. Good company they will admit, to better their credit, not their conscience. Like crafty Apothecaries, they have one thing written in their papers and marks, another thing in their boxes. But because every man is as hasty to condemn an Hypocrite, as David was to condemn the Oppressor in the Parable, when the Tu es homo lies in his own bosom, I will touch two or three particulars.

If we look into Popery, we shall find it universally a professed study to mock GOD. They make show by their abundant prayers of an abundant zeal: when (as if God saw not the heart) they think the work done is sufficient. Those keep number and tale; no matter with what mind: no nor yet to whom; whether to this Angel, or that Saint; to our Lord, or to our Lady. Yea it is recorded that the Papists in Scotland (about Henry the 8. his time of England) used to say the Lord's Prayer to Saints. Insomuch that when a little knowledge came into some men's hearts of this absurdity, there arose great Schism. And one Friar Toit... was gotten to make a Sermon, that the Pater noster might be said to Saints. So were the people divided, that it was a common question; To whom say you your Pater-noster? Call you these zealous prayers? Be not deceived, God is not mocked.

Qui filo insertis numerant sua murmura baccis,

As much might be said for their unclean Celibate. Their single life makes show of great pureness, as if their adulteries, Sodomity, experimental brothelry, unmatchable uncleannesses were not known. They ostent their Chastity, when Vrbs est iam tota Lupanar. What would they, but mock God?

No less for their fastings. How deadly a sin is it to eat flesh on a Friday! yet is it no sin with them to be drunk on a Friday. A poor laborer plows all day, at night refresheth himself with a morsel of Bacon: he is an Heretike. A gallant Gentleman hawks all day, at night sits down to his variety of fishes, curious wines, possets, junkets; O he's a good Catholic. An Hypocrite he is rather. Famam quaerunt abstinentiae in delicijs. They seek the credit of temperance among full tables, full pots. Famam quaerunt, but Famem fugiunt. They desire praise, but they refuse hunger. But God is not mocked. For our selves.

If there be any here, (because my Text depends on that occasion) that robs his Minister of temporal food, and yet makes show to hunger after his spiritual food; though he may cozen man unseen; either by his greatness, or craftiness: Let him know, that God is not mocked.

If there be any fraudulent Debtor, that deceives his brother of his goods, and then flatters his conscience that the merits of Christ shall acquit him: so packes all upon Christ, let him pay it: let him know that God is not mocked. The blood of Christ was not shed to pay men's debts, but God's debts. It hath virtue enough, but no such direction. Thou iniurest Christ to lay such reckonings on him. No, Vende, solue, viue de reliquo. Sell that thou hast, pay that thou owest, live of that thou reseruest.

If there be any Usurer, that deals altogether in letting out: that lets out his money to men, his time to Mammon, his body to pining, his mind to repyning, his soul to Satan: Though he comes to Church, and sits out a Sermon; let him know that his mind is then bound to his obligations; and he creeps into the Temple for the same end, the Serpent crope into Paradise. Wretched men, that are bound to his mercy: for like a common hackney Iade, he will not bear them one hour past his day. But let him know, God is not mocked.

If there be any Oppressor, that comes to Church in the shape of Knight or Gentleman: & thinks to cover all his exactions of his poor Tenants, all his wringings of his neighbors; with going three or four miles to a Sermon: let him know, that God is not mocked. He prefers Mercy before Sacrifice; and would not have thy profession countenance thy evil deeds, but thy good deeds commend thy profession.

Baldwin an Archbishop of Canterbury boasted often, that he never eat flesh in his life. To whom a poor lean widow replied, that he said false; for he had eaten up her flesh: He demands how: She replies, by taking away her Cow. Never pretend your earnest zeal, fasting or praying, or traveling to Sermons; when you devour widows houses, enclose Commons, and so eat up the very flesh of the poor.

If there be any that allows sometimes the Church his body, when the Pope always hath his heart; who though he be in Domo Dei; in God's house; is Pro Domo Antichristi, is for Antichrists kitchen. Or that keeps a Lady at home, that will not come two furlongs to Church: whereas our Lady trauelld as far as Jerusalem. Luke 2. Who must needs be a Papist, because her Grannam was so: and grows sick if you but talk of the Communion. And all this to save his Lands on earth, though he lose his Land in Paradise: Let him know, God is not mocked.

If there be any here, that hath given no Religion yet a full persuaded place in his heart: but because he sees diverse shadows, resolves on no substance. And is like the Bat, that hath both wings and teeth, and so is neither a bird nor a beast. His mind being like a puff of wind, between two religions, as that between two doors, ever whistling. Protestants, he says believe well, Puritans say well, and Papists do well: but till they all agree in one, he will be none of them all. To quite him in his own fantasie; let him then take from the one good faith, from the other good words, and from the last good works, and he may be made a very good Christian. But why then comes he to Church? By the mere command of the positive Law: as he comes to the Assizes when he is warned of a Jury. But let him not be deceived: God is not mocked.

If there be any luxurious, that serves God in the Temple, his flesh in the Chamber. Any covetous, that (as if his soul was diuisible) strives to serve two masters; though he doth it diversely: God with his art, the world with his heart. If any blasphemmer that here sings Psalms, and abroad howles oaths and curses. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiueth his own heart, this man's religion is in vain. If any seem < in non-Latin alphabet › , whē they are ‹ in non-Latin alphabet › , seruers of the Lord, when they are observers of the time. Let them know to their horror, Non deluditur Deus, God is not mocked.

Gold cannot hide a rotten post from GOD'S eye. If men will be Humiles sine despectu, and Pauperes fine defectu; he sees it. Hypocrisy is like a burning fever, which drinks fervent heat out of cold drink. The Hypocrite is nothing else but a player on this worlds stage: the villains part is his; and all his care is to play it handsomely and cleanly. He maliceth any man that would take his part from him; not unlike to him that being requested to lend his clothes, to represent a part in a Comedy; answered; no, he would have nobody play the fool in his clothes but himself. He thinks to cozen all the world with the opinion of his purity; but there is one above sees him. God is not mocked.

I have ended the Caution; let us come to the Reason. For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. wherein observe

The

- Manner.
- Matter.

In the Manner there is a twofold generality of the - Thing.

- Person.

There is a Whatsoever, and a Whosoever: for the whole speech is indefinite.

The Person is indefinite. A Man, any man,

Every man. This is the first Generality. For Country, be he Jew or Gentile, Turk or Christian. For degree; high or low, Prince or subject, the greatest Lord, and the basest Groome. For estate; be they rich or poor, the wealthiest Burger, and the wretchedst Begger. For Sexe, be they male or female. For condition; be they bond or free. What a man, any man, sows, that, &c.

The Thing is indefinite. Whatsoever.

This is the other Generality. Be it good or evil, blessing or cursing, charity or injury, equity or iniquity, truth or hypocrisy, deceit or honesty. Whatsoever a man soweth, &c. Evil is of the flesh: and verse. 8. He that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption. And chap. 5. 21. The works of the flesh are manifest; adultery, &c. they which sow such seed, shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Good is of the Spirit: and he which soweth to the Spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting. chap. 5. 22. The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, &c. And To those that walk afterthis spirit, there is no condemnation. Whatsoever. There are no more sorts of men, but good and evil: nor more sorts of ends, then Poena et Praemum; Reward and punishment. Therefore Whatsoever whosoever soweth, the same shall he also reap.

You see the manner. In the matter we must also consider two things.

A Seeding. Harvest. Whatsoever a man soweth in his Seed-time; that shall he also reap in his harvest. They that sow grace, shall reap glory: they that sow corruption, must reap confusion.

To begin with the wicked; he that sows evil, shall reap evil: he that soweth malum culpae, the evil of sin, shall reap malum poen..., the evil of punishment. So Eliphaz told Job that he had seen, Job 4 8. They that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same.

And that either in Kind or Quality. Proportion or Quantitie. In Kind, the very same that he did to others, shall be done to him; or in Proportion, a measure answerable to it. So he shall reap what he hath sown in Quality or in Quantity: either in Portion the same, or in proportion the like.

In Kind.

The Prophet cursing Edom and Babel, saith thus, Psal. 137. O daughter of Babylon: happy shall he be that rewardeth thee, as thou hast served us. The original is; That recompenseth to thee Thy De...de, which thou didst to us. So Zion rejoiceth over Edom, Obad. As thou hast done, it shall be done to thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head. So the Lord to Mount Seir, Ezek. 35. As thou didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel when it was desolate: So will I do unto thee: thou shalt be desolate, O Mount Seir. Yea verse 14. When the whole earth rejoiceth, I will make thee desolate. Prov. 1. Wisdom crieth, fools laugh: therefore saith she; I will also laugh at your calamity...y: I will mock when your fear cometh. This is verse 31. to be filled with their own devices, to eat the fruit of their own way; to reap of their own sowing.

Thus was God's Law; Eye for eye, tooth for tooth; Lex talionis. Blood for blood. So ...bells blood spilled on the earth, cries for the blood of Cain, that runs in his murderous veins. Nature is offended and must be pacified: and no pacification can wash the Lamb from blood, but their blood that shed it. Justice must cause them that have sowed blood, to reap blood. The example of Adoni-bezek is most observable, Judges 1. Judah and Simeon warring against the Canaanites, surprised Adoni-bezek; and cut off his thumbs and his great toes. And Adoni-bezek said, Three score and ten Kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my Table: as I have done, so God hath requited me.

Thus is wickedness recompensed suo genere, in it own kind. So often the transgressor is against the transgressor: the thief robs the thief; Proditor is proditor. As in Rome many vnchristened Emperors, and many christened Popes; by blood and treason got the Soueraignty, and by blood and treason lost it. Evil men drink of their own brewing, are scourged with their own rod, drowned in the pit which they digged for others. As Haman was hanged on his own Gallows: Perillus tormented in his own Engine. Nec enim lex iustior vll... est; Quàm necis artifices art perire sua. Thus they reap in kind. Now

In Proportion,

The Punishment is apted to the quality of the Sin. Adam at first did eat in wantonness: Adam shall therefore eat in pain. He excuseth his offense with a bold forehead, therefore in the sweat of his forehead he shall eat his bread. The woman's eye lusted, therefore in her eye tears. She longed then against Grace, she shall long now against Nature. She over-ruled her husband before, he shall over-rule her now. Man hath the preeminence: and her desire shall be subject to him. Should be, though in all it is not: but lightly when Eve over-rules Adam, the Devil is in the business.

To trace along the passages of holy Scriptures in this point: about Proportion. The ambition of Babel-builders was punished with ridiculousnesse. Cha... offending against natural reverence, was damned to servitude. As it was but an easy judgment upon *H...*ricus 5. Emperor of Germany; that had deposed his natural Father, to have no natural Son. Sodom was burned with fire unnatural, that had burned with lusts unnatural. Lots wife abusing her sense, lost her sense: became a senseless Pillar. She would look back, therefore she shall not look forward: she turned before, therefore now shall not stir. (ϕ) , ibi re...sit.

Thus Absalom's folly was the recompense of David's adultery. He had slain Uriah with the sword, and the sword shall not depart from his house. Solomon devides God's Kingdom, his own Kingdom shall be divided. Because Pharaoh drowned the male children of the Hebrews in •...iuer, himself and his Egyptian Host shall be drowned in a Red Sea. Dives would not give Lazarus a crumb: Lazarus shall not bring Dives a drop. Desider (ϕϕ) , qui non dedit micam. There is fit Proportion, betwixt a crumb of bread and a drop of water. The tongue of that Rich man, that had consumed so much belly-cheer, and turned down so many tunnes of wine; shall not now procure one pot of water, not a handful, not a drop. In his tongue he sinned, in his tongue he is torm...d. Judas was the instrument of his Masters death, Judas shall be the instrument of his own death. Insolent (ϕ) vowed to enprison conquered Tamberlaine, in a cage of iron, and to carry him up and down the world in triumph. But Tamberlaine conquering that Turk, triumphed over him just in the same fashion. Those two monsters of the age Pope Alexander 6. and his darling Borgias, that had bathed their hands in so much blood; were at last by the error of a cup-bearer, poisoned themselves out of those very bottles wherewith they would have poisoned the Cardinals. Behold the Proportion; punishments respondent to the sins.

Here is sufficient cause to make the wicked tremble; God hath proportioned out a judgment for their sins. Man by his wickedness, cuts out a garment of confusion for his own back. I know that this kind of punishing is not always executed in this world. God's temporal Judgments are (like our Quarter Sessions) kept here and there. Some; much; yea most is reserved for another world. If all sin were punished here, we should look no further. But Tophet is ordained of old: the pile thereof is fire and much wood, the breath of the Lord like a stream of brimstone doth kindle it. If no sin were punished here, man would not believe God's power. But some is; So that a man shall say; Verily there is a reward for the righteous, Verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth.

Think of that lower future place, ye wicked; and the heavy Proportion that must there be measured you. Here you have sown in your Seed-time, there you must reap your harvest. Let the Idolater think of this: he hath thrust God out of his throne, God will thrust him out of his Kingdom. The drunkard that abuseth so •...uch wine, must there want a little water. The Usurer shall be there bound faster with the bonds of torment, then he hath formerly bound poor men with his obligations. The Covetous that had no pity, shall not be pitied, He shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shown no mercy. The Lustful shall burn with a new fire: The Malicious shall find no further cause of envy. Uaeridentibus; they that laughed, shall now weep; and that as Rachel, for their joys never to be comforted. He that soweth iniquity, shall reap vanity.

I list not to enter discourse of those infernal horrors. I may say with the Poet; if I had a hundred tongues, and a voice of iron; Non

Omnia p•...narum percurrere nomina pos•....

I could not run through the names of those endless torments. It is a fearful place: God send us all never to know more of it, then by heresay. Where Spirits are the tormentors, Damnation the fire; the breath of an offended God the bellows; shrieking and gnashing of teeth the music; the effect of impatient fury. And all these terrors perfected by their eternity, we commonly say in misery; If it were not for hope, the heart would burst: here is no hope and yet the heart must hold. The wretchedness is, it cannot burst. Poena gehennales torquent, non extorquent: puniunt, non finiunt corpora. It is called by Augustine, Mors sine morte, sinis sine fine, defectus sine defectu.

But some will say; Your Text speaks of Proportion: how can eternal vengeance be proportionable to a momentary offense? Yes; first an infinite God is offended, and a finite man is the offender. Because he cannot be capable of an infinite wrath at once, he must have it in eternity: the short dimensions of his Essence, must have a long extension of his punishment: what wants in place, must be supplied in time. Christ indeed suffered enough in a short time, because he was infinite: man cannot do so, and therefore must be forever in suffering.

Secondly, he that delights in sin, desires it may always continue: and velle peccatum, est peccatum: so that an infinite desire, must needs have an infinite punishment. Qui moritur sine poenitentia, si semper viueret, semper peccaret. He that dies without repentance, if he should ever live, would ever sin. So Gregor. It is God's just judgment, Vt nunquam mortu•...s care•...t supplicio, qui nunquam v•...uus voluit carere peccato. That he dead should have eternal punishment, who living would have been eternally wicked. Vt nullus detur in•...quo terminus vltionis; qui quamd•... valui•..., habere noluit terminum criminis. That no end should be allowed to his vengeance, that would have allowed himself no end of wickedness. As the good man, if he should ever live, would ever do well. If thou wilt therefore offend in aeterno tuo, God must punish i•... aeterno suo. Thy injustice would put no date to thy sins; God's Justice shall set no date to thy sufferings. Thus ye have plowed wickedness, and ye have reaped iniquity.

You see the wicked's Seeding and Harvest: God keep us from sowing such seed, that we may never reap such a crop. The godly have also their Seeding and their H•...uest. All their sowing may be distinguished

Into

- Piety, towards God.
- Charity, towards men.

For Piety.

They sow in Faith; and God will bless that Seed: it shall grow up to heaven, for it is sown in the side of Jesus Christ who is in heaven. He that believeth on God; there is the seed; shall have everlasting life: there is the Harvest. Qui credit quod non videt, videbit quod credit. He that believes what he doth not see; there's the Seed: shall one day see what he hath believed; there is the Harvest.

They sow in obedience: this is also a blessed Seed, that will not fail to prosper wheresoever it is cast. If ye keep my Commandments, there's the Seed: ye shall abide in my Love; there's the Harvest. Rom. 6. Ye are the servants to God, and have your fruit unto holiness; there's the sowing: and the end everlasting life; there's the Reaping. Obedientia in terris, regnabit in coelis. He that serves God on earth, and sows the seed of Obedience; shall in heaven reap the harvest of a kingdom.

They sow in Repentance; and this seed must needs grow up to blessedness, Psalm. 126. They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed; there's the sowing; shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him; there's the Harvest. Many Saints have now reaped this crop in heaven, that sowed their seed in tears. David, Marie Magdalene, Peter; as if they had made the Proverb; No coming to heaven with dry eyes. Thus nature and God differ in their proceedings. To have a good crop on earth, we desire a fair Seed-time: but here a wet time of sowing shall bring the best Harvest in the Barn of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn; there's the seeding: for they shall be comforted; there's the Harvest.

Lastly, they sow in renouncing of the world, and adherence to Christ; and they reap a great Harvest. Behold, saith Peter to Christ, we have forsaken all and followed thee; there's the Seeding. What shall we have therefore? what? You shall sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel: all that you have lost shall be centupled to you; and you shall inherit everlasting life; there's the Harvest. Sow to yourselves in righteousness, and reap in mercy.

For Charity.

He that sows this seed, shall be sure of a plentiful crop. Whosoever shall give to drink to one of these little ones, a cup of cold water only, a little refreshing, in the name of a Disciple; verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward. But if he that giveth a little shall be thus recompensed; then He that soweth bountifully, shall reap bountifully. Therefore spare abroad with a full hand, like a Seedsman in a broad field, without fear. Doth any think he shall lose by his charity? No worldling when he sows his seed, thinks he shall lose his seed: he hopes for amendment at harvest. Darest thou trust the ground, and not God? Sure God is a better paymaster than the earth: Grace doth give a larger recompense than nature. Below thou mayest receive forty grains for one: but in heaven (by the promise of Christ) a hundredth fold: a measure heapen, and shaken, and thrust together, and yet running over. Blessed is he that considereth

the poor: there's the Seeding; the Lord shall deliver him in the time of trouble: there's the Harvest. Is this all? No; Math. 25. Ye fed me when I was hungry, and gave me drink thirsty, comforted me in misery: there's the sowing. Veni beati, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you: there's the Harvest. I shut up this point with the Apostles Blessing. Now he that ministereth seed to the sower; both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness. God send you a good Harvest.

I conclude. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. O that this Text might be true upon all us at this time. The Lord hath sown the seed of his Gospel, O that he might reap your souls to his glory. But shall we hope for that which the Prophets found not? I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for naught, saith Isaiah. Nor the Apostles? I have fished all night and caught nothing, saith Peter. No, nor Christ himself? who spake as never man spake. Yet himself telleth us, Math. 13. that of four sorts of ground, wherein the seed was sown, three were barren, and returned no fruit. Alas! how much seed is sown among thorns, rocks, and high-way grounds! you come to receive this seed, but it fructifies not. You bring forth hedge-fruit, like the Heathen; scarce so good. We hear often, and as often forget.

Yet still Beloved, this Text shall be true. God hath sown, and he will reap: sown his Word, and will reap his Glory. His glory either in your instruction or destruction, conversion or conviction, life or death. O why should that be to your horror, that is meant to your comforts. Turn not that to your desolation, which God sends to your consolation. Pray you then with me, everyone to the Lord, that this seed now sown may bring forth fruit in us all; in some thirty, in some sixty, in some a hundred fold: To the glory of his holy name: and the eternal salvation of our souls, through Jesus Christ.

Amen.

HEAVEN-GATE: OR, THE PASSAGE TO PARADISE.

REVELAT. 22. 14. in fine.

And may enter in through the Gates into the City.

IF we supply these words with the first word of the verse; Blessed; we shall make a perfect sentence of perfect comfort. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may haueright to the tree of life, And may enter in through the gates into the City.

In the whole there be

- Premises.
- Promises.

The Premises qualify us; we must be such as are Blessed; and who are they? Qui praestant mandata; that do his commandments. The Promises crown us, and these are two. 1. That we may have right to the tree of life; even that which, Reu. 2. is in the midst of the Paradise of God. From whence the Angel with a flaming sword shall keep all the reprobate. 2. Et per portas ingrediantur ciuitatem; And may enter in through the gates into the City. When without shall be dogs, and scorners, &c. whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

To the last words of the verse, I have bound & bounded my discourse. Wherein I find three points readily offering themselves to be considered

- Motus, Motion. Enter in.
- Modus, Manner. Through the gates.
- Terminus. Place. Into the City.

So there is a threefold circumstance.

- Quid. What, an Entrance,
- Qua. How, through the gates.
- Quo. Whither, into the City.

The Motion. Enter in.

They are blessed that enter in: Perseverance only makes happy. Our labors must not cease, till we can (with Stephen) see these Gates open, and our Savior offering to take us by the hand, and welcome our entrance. We know who hath taught us, that only continuers to the end shall be saved. It is observable, that in the holy Spirits letters sent to those seven Churches, in the second and third chapters of this Book; all the promises run to Perseuerers; Uincenti dabitur, To him that overcomes shall it be given. Nec paranti ad praliim, nec pugnanti ad sanguinem, multo minus tergiuersanti ad peccatum, sed vincenti ad victoriam. Nor to him that prepares to fight, nor to him that resists to blood, much less to him that shows his back in cowardice; but to him that overcomes to conquest. Demas seeing this war, ran away; fell back to the security of the world. Saul made himself ready to this battle, but he durst not fight, glory and lusts carried him away. Judas stood a boat or two, but the High Priests money made him give over; and the Devil took him captive. But Paul fought out this combat even to victory; though he bore in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Therefore now there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me.

This is a good life, saith Bern. Mala pati, et bona facere; et fic vsque ad mortem perseuerare. To suffer evil, to do good, and so to continue to the end. Some came into the Vineyard in the morning, some at noon, others later: none received the Penny, but they that stayed till night. Augustine affirms this to be almost all the contents of the Lord's Prayer; Hallowed be thy Name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done. Wherein we desire that his Name may always be sanctified, his Kingdom always propagated, his will always obeyed.

Indeed this grace perfects all graces. We believe in vain, if our faith hold not out to the end. Wee loue in vain, if our charity grow cold at last. We pray in vain, if our zeal grows faint. We strive in vain at the strait gate, if not till we enter. Venire ad religionem est vera deuotio; sed non religiose viuere vera damnatio. To come to the truth of religion is true devotion; not to live religiously, is true damnation. Man is naturally like a horse that loveth short journeys; and there are few that hold out. Whence it comes, that the last are often first, and the first last. Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all; but one receiveth the prize? He that hath a good horse can go faster up a hill, then down a hill. He that hath a good faith, doth as quickly ascend the Mount Zion, as the wicked descend to the valley of Hinnon. If men would as strongly erect themselves upwards, as they direct their courses downwards, they might go to heaven with less trouble, then they do go to hell.

But he that at every sleppe, looks at every stop, and numbers his perils with his paces, either turns aside faintly, or turns back cowardly. They that go wandering & wondering on their journey, are at the gates of Samaria, when they should enter the gates of Jerusalem. God saith, I will not leave you, Heb. 13. Will you then leave GOD? One told Socrates, that he would fain go to Olympus, but he distrusted his sufficiency for the length of the journey. Socrates told him; Thou walkest every day little or much, continue this walk forward thy way, and a few days shall bring thee to Olympus. Every day every man takes some pains; let him bestow that measure of pains in traucelling to heaven; and the further he goes, the more heart he gets; till at last he enter through the gates into the City.

Bernard calls Perseverance the only daughter of the highest King, the perfection of virtues, the storehouse of goodworks; a virtue without which no man shall see God. There is a last enemy to be destroyed, Death: we must hold out to the conquest even of this last adversary. Which if it conquer us by the Sting of our Sin, shall send us to the doors of hell: if we conquer it by our Faith, it shall send us to the gates of this City, Heaven. Lauda nauigantem cum peruenerit ad portum. All the voyage is lost through the perilous Sea of this world, if we suffer shipwreck in the Haven; and lose our reward there, where we should land to receive it. What get we, if we keep Satan short of ruling us with his force many hours, when at our last hour he shall snatch our bliss from us? The runner speeds all the way, but when he comes at the races end to the goal, he stretcheth forth his hand to catch the prize. Be sure of thy last step, to put forth the hand of faith then most strongly; Ne perdatur premium tantis lob...ribus quaesitum; lest the reward be lost, which thou with much labor hast aimed at.

It is not enough Quaerere coelum, sed acquirere; non Christum sequi, sed consequi. To seek heaven, but to find it; not to follow Christ, but to overtake him, not to be brought to the gates, but to enter in. Many will say to Christ in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy Name? But the Master of the house is first risen, & hath shut to the door. Either they come too soon, before they have gotten faith and a good conscience; or too late, as those foolish Virgins, when the gate was shut. If then we have begun, let us continue to entrance. Cuiusque casus tanto maioris est criminis, quanto prinsquam caderet, major iser at virtutis. Every man's fault hath so much the more discredit of scandal, as he before he fell had credit of virtue. Let us beware that we do not slide; if slide, that we do not fall: if fall, that we fall forward, not backward. The just man often slips, and sometime falls. And this is dangerous; for if a man, while he stands on his legs, can hardly grapple with the devil: how shall he do when he is fallen down under his feet? But if they do fall, they fall forward, as Ezekiel; not backward, as Eli at the loss of the Ark: or they that came to surprise Christ, John 18. They went backward and fell to the ground.

Cease not then thy godly endeavours; until Contingas portum, quo tibi •...ursus erat. Say we not like the woman to Esdras, whether in a vision, or otherwise, when he bade her go into the City. That will I not do: I will not go into the City, but here I will die. It is a wretched sin, saith August. after tears for sin not to preserve innocence. Such a man is washed, but is not clean. Quia cōmissa flere definite, et iterum flenda committit. He leaves weeping for faults done, and renues faults worthy of weeping. Think not thyself safe, till thou art got within the gates of the City. Behold thy Savior calling, thy Father blessing, the Spirit assisting, the Angels comforting, the Word directing, the glory inviting, good men associating. Go cheerfully, till thou enter in through the gates into the City.

The manner. Through the gates.

Not singularly a Gate, but gates. For Chap. 21. the City is said to have twelve gates. On the East three gates, on the North three, on the South three, and on the West three. To declare that men shall come from all the corners of the World, from the East, and from the West, from the North, and from the South; and shall sit down in the Kingdom of GOD. These Gates are not literally to be understood, but mystically; Pro modo intrandi, for the manner of entrance. The gates are those passages, whereby we must enter this City.

Heaven is often said to have a Gate. Strive to enter in at the strait Gate, saith Christ. Lift up your heads, O ye Gates, and be ye lift up ye everlasting doors; saith the Psalmist. This is none other but the house of God, and this is the Gate of Heaven, saith Jacob. There must be Gates to a City: they that admit us hither, are the Gates of Grace. So the analogy of the words infer; doing the commandments is the way to have right in the tree of Life: obedience and sanctification is the Gate to this Citis of salvation. In a word,

The	Gate	is	Grace.
City	Glory.

The Temple had a gate called Beautiful. Act. 3. But of poor beauty in regard of this Gate. Of the gates of the Sanctuary spake David in diverse Psalms with love and joy. Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise. This was God's delight. The Lord loveth the gates of Zion, more then all the dwellings of Jacob. This was David's election to be a Porter, or keeper of the gates of God's house; rather then dwell in the Tents of wickedness. This his Resolution; Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem. Solomon made two docres for the entering of the Oracle: they were made of Olive trees, and wrought upon with the carnings of Cherubims. The Olives promising fatness, and plenty of blessings; the Cherubims holiness and eternity. These are holy gates; let everyone pray with that royal Prophet, Open to me the gates of righteousness:

I will go into them, & I will praise the Lord. This is the Gate of the Lord, into which the righteous shall enter.

In brief, we may distinguish the gates leading to this City, into two; Adoption and Sanctification. Both these meet in Christ, who is the only gate or door, whereby we enter Heaven. I am the door, saith our Savior; Ianua vitae, the gate of life: by me if any enter in, he shall be saved.

Adoption

Is the first Gate. We have received the spirit of Adoption. Without this passage no getting into Heaven. The inheritance of glory cannot be given to the children of disobedience: they must first be converted, & adopted heirs in Christ. The Grace of God is twofold. There is Gratia gratis agens; and Gratia gratum faciens. This second grace, which is of Adoption, is never in a reprobate: not by an absolute impossibility, but by an indisposition in him to receive it. A spark of fire falling upon water, ice, snow, goes out: on wood, flax, or such apt matter, kindles. Baptism is the Sacrament of admission into the Congregation; of Insition and Initiation, whereby we are matriculated, and received into the motherhood of the Church. Therefore the sacred Font is placed at the Church-door, to insinuate and signify our Entrance. So Adoption is the first door or gate, whereby we pass to the City of glory.

This is our new Creation, whereat the Angels of heaven rejoice. Luke 15. At the creation of Dukes or Earls, there is great joy among men: but at our new creation, Angels and Seraphim rejoice in the presence of GOD. Our Generation was A non esse, ad esse: from not being, to be. But our Regeneration is A male esse, ad been esse, from a being evil, to be well; and that forever. Through this gate we must pass to enter the City; without this, death shall send us to another place. No man ends this life well, except he be borne again before he ends it.

Now if you would be sure, that you are gone through this gate; call to mind what hath been your Repentance. The first sign of Regeneration is throbbes and throws: you cannot be adopted to Christ without sensible pain, and compunction of heart for your sins. The Christian hath two Births, and they are two gates: he can pass through none of them but with anguish. Both our first and second Birth begin with crying. Our first birth is a gate into this world: our second is a gate into the world to come. There is some pain in both. For this world but little joy after the pain; for the other, after short sorrow eternal glory.

Sanctification

Is the second gate. Make your calling and election sure, saith Peter by a holy life: For so an Entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. But there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth; neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie. Therefore Paul prays the God of Peace to sanctify us wholly. Holiness is the way to Happiness; Grace the gate of Glory. But some may object frō that of Paul, that this Sanctification must be total and perfect: but who can come so furnished to the gate? therefore who can enter the City? I answer; There is required only Sanctificatio viae, non Patria; such a Sanctitie as the gate can afford, though far short of that within the City. The School distinguisheth well. It must be communiter in toto, & vniuersaliter in singulis partibus; but not totaliter et perfect. This Sanctification must be communicated to the whole man, and universally propagated to every part: though it have in no place of man a total perfection. Indeed Nullum peccatum retinendum est spe remissionis. No sin is to be cherished in hope of mercy. But we must strive for every grace we have not, and for the increase of every grace we have. Quaerendum quod deest bonum, indulgendum quod adest. Let us make much of that we possess, and still seek for more; striving to the mark. And yet when all is done, Profectio haec, non Perfectio est: We have made a good step forward, but are not come to our full home. But still, Lord be merciful to me a sinner. And Enter not into judgment with us.

Now since this gate stands in our own Heart, give me leave to describe it: and that briefly, by

The	Properties.	The properties are 2. It is	Lowe.
Parts.	Little.

Lowe.

Heaven is well called a Building not made with hands: for it differs both in Matter and Form from earthly edifices. For matter, it is Eternal, not momentary: for manner, fabricked without hands. Great Mannors on earth, have large answerable Porches. Heaven must needs be spacious; when a little star fixed in a far lower Orbe, exceeds the earth in quantity: yet hath it a low gate, not a lofty coming in.

They must stoop then that will enter here. He hath filled the bungry with good things, and the rich he hath sent empty away. The rich in their own conceits, and proud of their own worth, shall be sent empty from this gate. Zacchaeus climes up into a Sycamore tree to behold Jesus: but when Jesus beheld him got up so high, he said, Come down Zacchaeus, Luke 19. Make haste, and come down. Whosoever will entertain Jesus, must come down. The haughty Nebuchadnezzar, that thinks with his head to knock out the stars in heaven, must stoop at this gate, or he cannot enter. Be you never so lofty, you must bend. God's honor must be preferred before your honors. It is no discredit to your Worships to worship GOD.

Little.

Christ calls it a narrow gate. They must be little that enter; little in their own eyes, slender in the opinion of themselves. Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. Samuel to Saul; When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the Head of the Tribes of Israel? When Jesse had made all his Sons pass before Samuel, he asked him if none remained yet; Jesse answers, Yes a little one tending the flocks. Fetch that little one, saith Samuel: for we will not sit down till he come. That little one was he. Says the Angel to Esdras, 2. Esdras 7. A city is built, and set upon a broad field, full of all good things. Yet the Entrance thereof is narrow. This is spatiosa & speciosa Ciuitas; A city beautiful and roomthy; yet it hath but a narrow wicket, a little Gate.

Alas, how will the surfeited Epicure do to enter: whose gluttonous body is so deformed, that it moves like a great Tunne upon two pots? What hope hath an Impropiator with four or five Churches on his back, to pass this little gate? The bribing Officer hath a swollen hand; it will not enter; and the gowtie Usurer cannot thrust in his foot. The factious Schismatic hath too big a head: the swearer such forked blasphemies in his mouth, that here is no entrance. Pride hath no more hope to get into the gates of that City above; then there is hope to cast it out the gates of this City below. Much good do it with earthly Courts: for it must not come into the Courts of Heaven.

Think, O sinners; you cannot go with these oppressions, with these oaths, frauds, bribes, usuries; with these wickednesses into the gates of this City. You must shift them off, or they will shut you out.

You hear the Properties; the Parts are now to be considered; and these are four. The foundation, the two sides, and the roof. The Foundation is Faith. One of the sides, Patience. The other, Innocence. The Roofe, Charity.

Faith

Is the foundation. Coloss. 1. Be ye grounded and settled in the Faith. Credendo fundatur, saith Augustine. It is grounded in faith. All other graces are (as it were) built on this foundation. Credimus quōd speramus: quod credimus & speramus, diligimus: quod credimus, speramus, & diligimus, operamur. What we hope; we believe: what we believe and hope, we love: what we believe, hope, and love; we endeavor to attain. So all is built on Faith.

Hope on faith; Nulla spes increditi: it is impossible to hope for that we believe not to be. Charity on faith: why should a man give all to the poor, unless he believed an abundant recompense? Repentance on faith: why else suffer we contrition for sin, if we believed not remission of sin? Temperance on faith: why forbear we the pleasing vanities of the world, but that we believe the transcendent joys of eternity, whereof these harlots would rob us? Patience on faith: why would we endure such calamities with willing quietness and subjection, if we believed not an everlasting peace and rest to come? All obedience on faith; that God would accept it in Jesus Christ. If all be built on faith, I may call it the basis and foundation of this Gate. Without faith it is impossible to please God: for he that cometh to God, must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. Faith is the passage-way to God: not one of that holy ensuing Legend, entered the City of life without this. He that hath faith shall enter: yea he is entered. <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> John 5. He hath everlasting life; and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death to life.

Patience

Is one of the Pillars. Hebr. 10. Ye have need of Patience: that when you have done the will of God, ye might receive the Promise. That when you have suffered before the gates, ye may enter the City. There be three Enemies that assault the soul, before she enter the gates; a Lyon, a Leopard, and a Fox. The Lion is the Devil, who roareth with hideous cries, and bloody jaws. The Leopard is the world, which hath a gay spotted hide; but if it take us within the clutches, it devours us. The Fox is our Concupiscence, bred in us; which craftily spoils our grapes, our young vines, our tender graces. Patience hath therefore an armed Soldier with her, called Christian Fortitude; to give repulse to all these encounters. And what he cannot conquer feriendo, by smiting: she conquers ferendo, by suffering. Uincit etiam dum patitur. She overcomes, even while she suffers. Patience meekly bears wrongs done to our own person: Fortitude encounters courageously wrongs done to the Person of Christ. She will not yield to sin, though she die. She hath the spirit of Esther to withstand things that dishonor God; If I perish, I perish.

Innocence

Is the other Pillar. As Patience teacheth us to bear wrongs, so Innocence to do none. Patience gives us a Shield, but Innocence denies us a sword. Our selves we may defend, others we must not offend. Innocence is such a virtue; Quae cum alijs non nocet, nec sibi nocet. Which as it wrongs not others, so nor itself. He that hurts himself, is not innocent. The Prodigal is no man's foe, but his own; saith the proverb: but because he is his own foe, he is not innocent. Triumphus Innocentiae est non peccare vbi potest. It is the triumph of Innocence, not to offend, where it may.

No testimony is more sweet to the conscience then this: Remember, O Lord, how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart. So Job: My heart shall not condemn me for my days. Blessed soul thus comforted: it smiles at the frowns of earth, and dares stand the thunder. Though there be no Innocency, but rejoiceth to stand in the sight of Mercy: Yet thus in the midst of injuries it cheers it self: O Lord, thou knowest my innocence. The wicked cover themselves with violence as with a garment: therefore confusion shall cover them as a cloak. But Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth. That part of the earth they live in shall afford them quiet: and their part in heaven hath no disquiet in it. Si amoveant... admouentur in locum, à quo non remouentur in aeternum. If they be moved, they are moved to a place from whence they shall never be removed. I will wash mine hands in Innocency: so will I compass thine Altar, O Lord. If Innocence must lead us to the Altar on earth; sure that must be our gate to the glory of heaven.

Charity

Is the Roofe. Diligendo perficitur; lo•... makes up the building. Now abideth faith, hope, and charity: but the greatest of these is charity. It is a grace of the loueliest Countenance, and longest Continuance. For Countenance, it is amiable; all love it. The poor respect not thy faith so much as thy charity. For Continuance; faith and hope takes their leaves of us in death: but charity brings us to heaven-door, & vsuers us in to glory. I know not what to say more in thy praise, O charity; then vt Deum de coelo traheres, & hominem ad coelum eleuares. Then that thou didst bring down God from heaven to earth, and dost lift up man from earth to heaven. Great is thy virtue, that by thee God should be humbled to man, by thee man should be exalted to God.

You have the Gates described: Let us draw a short conclusion from these two former circumstances; and then enter the City.

The Sum.

There is no entrance to the City but by the Gates: no passage to Glory, but by Grace. The wall of this City is said to be great and high. High; no climbing over: Great, no breaking through. So Christ saith; No thief can break through and steal. Therefore through the gates, or no way. Corruption doth not inherit incorruption. This corrupted man must be regenerate, that he may be saved: must be sanctified, that he may be glorified. Babel-builders may offer fair for h•...uen, but not come near it: the Giants of our time, I mean the monstrous sinners, may imponere Pelion Ossae, lay rebellion upon presumption, treason upon rebellion, blasphemy upon all: as if they would sink heaven with their loud and lewd ordinance, and pluck God out of his Throne: but hell gapes in expectation of them. This Gate is kept, as the gate of Paradise, with a flaming sword of Justice, to keep out Idolaters, Adulterers, thieves, covetous, drunkards, revilers, extortioners, and other dogs of the same litter; from the kingdom of God.

Some trust to open these gates with golden keys; but bribery is rather a key to unlock the gates of hell. Let Rome sell what she list, and warrant it like the Seller in the Proverbs; It is good, it is good. Yet it is naught; but were it good, God never promised to stand to the Popes bargains. Others have dreamed of no other gate, but their own righteousness. Poor souls, they cannot find the gate, because they stand in their own light. Others think to pass through the gates of other men's merits: as well one bird may fly with another birds wings. For all those hot promises of the works of Saints for their ready money, they may blow their nails in hell.

Only grace is the gate. Per portam Ecclesiae intramus ad portam Paradisi. We must be true members of the Church, or the door of life will be shut against us. Heaven is a glorious place, therefore reserved for gracious men. Admittuntur ad spiritus iustorum, non nisi iusti. To those spirits of just men made perfect must be admitted none, save they that are justified. Kings are there the Company: none of base and ignoble lives can be accepted. Heaven is the great White Hall, the Court of the high King; none are entertained but Albi, such as are washed white in the blood of Christ; and keep white their own innocence. Vngracious offenders look for no dwelling in this glory. You that have so little love to the gates, are not worthy the City. If you will not pass through the gates of holiness in this life, you must not enter the City of happiness in the life to come. Thus we have passed the gates: and are now come to

The City.

Now if I had been with Paul wrapped up to the third heaven; or had the Angels Reed, wherewith he measured the wall: I might say something to the description of this City. But how can darkness speak of that light? or the base Country of Earth describe the glorious Court of Heaven? Glorious things are spoken of thee, O City of God. Glorious Cities have been, and are in the world. Rome was eminently famous; all her Citizens like so many kings: yet was it observed, Illic homines more, that men did die there. But in this City, there is no dying. Mors non erit ultra. There shall be no more death. I will narrow up my discourse, to consider in this City only 3. things.

The

- Situation.

- Society.
- Glory.

The Situation.

It is placed above, Gal. 4. Jerusalem which is above is free, the mother of us all. Heaven is in excelsis. His foundation is in the holy mountains. So was Jerusalem seated on earth, to figure this City; built on the Quarry of heaven, Dan. 2. On Sapphires, Emeralds, and Chrysolites, Reu. 21. There is a heaven now over our heads, but it shall wax old as a garment. It is corruptible, and so combustible. This City is eternal; Mount Zion, never to be moved: a kingdom never to be shaken. We are now under this lower heaven, then this shall be under us. That which is our Canopy, shall be our Pavement.

The Society.

The King that rules there, is one Almighty God in three distinct persons. He made this City for himself. In his presence is the fullness of joy, and pleasures at his right hand for evermore. If he gave such a house as this world is, to his enemies: what may we think, hath he provided for himself, and his friends? But will GOD dwell there alone? He is never alone: himself is to himself the best and most excellent company. Nevertheless he vouchsafes a dwelling here to some Citizens, and these are either Created so, Assumed, or Assigned.

1. Created Citizens are the blessed Angels; who from their first creation have enjoyed the freedom of this City. They stand always in the presence of God: they can never lose their happiness.

2. Assumed; those whose spirits are already in heaven. Hebr. 12. There are the spirits of just men made perfect. They are already in soul taken up, and made free Denizens of this City.

3. Assigned; the Elect that live in the militant Church, waiting for the day of their bodies Redemption; crying still, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. These are Conscripti, written in the Lambes book of life. Now though we are not already in full possession; because our apprenticeship of this life is not out; yet we are already Citizens. Ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow Citizens with the Saints; and of the household of God. And we have three happy privileges of Citizens.

1. Libertas; Freedom from the Law; not from obedience to it, but from the curse of it. Praestemus quod possumus: quod non possumus, non damnabit. Let us keep so much of it as we can: what we cannot keep, shall not condemn us. Liberty in the use of these earthly things: heaven, earth, air, sea, with all their creatures, do us service. Whether things present, or things to come, all are yours: and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

2. Tutela Imperij; The Kings protection, Psalm. 91. Angels mandavit. He hath given his Angels charge over us, to keep us in all our ways. Is this all? No. verse. 4. He covers us with his feathers, and under his wings do we trust: his truth is our shield and our buckler. Our dangers are many in some places, and some in all places: we have God's own Guard royal to keep us. They are sent from God to minister for their sakes, which shall be heirs of salvation. I need not determine, whether every particular person hath his particular Angel. Saint Augustine hath well answered, Quando hoc nesciatur sine crimine, non opus est vt definiatur cum discrimine. Since our ignorance is no fault, let us not trouble our selves with curious discussion. Bernard directs us a good use of it. Quantamdebet hoc tibi infer reuerentiam, afferre deuotionem, confer fiduciam. The consideration of the guard of Angels about us, should put into our minds reverence, into our hearts devotion, into our souls confidence.

3. Defensio Legis, the defensive protection of the Law. Christ is our Advocate. Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. We are impleaded: Paul appeals to Caesar, we to Christ. The Devil accuseth us, we are far remote: behold, our Counselor is in heaven; that will not let our cause fall, or be overthrown. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous.

Thus are we Citizens in present, shall be more perfectly at last. We have now right to the City: we shall then have right in the City. We have now a purchase of the possession, shall then have a possession of the purchase. Father; I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory. This is our Saviors Will & Testament, and shall not be broken.

The Company then adds to the glory of this City. We are loath to leave this world for love of a few friends, subject to mutual dislikes: but what then is the delight in the Society of Saints? where thy glorified self shall meet with thy glorified friends, and your love shall be as everlasting as your glory. There be those Angels that protected thee: those Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, that by doctrine and example taught thee: yea there is that blessed Savior that redeemed thee. Often here with groans and tears thou seekest him, whom thy soul loveth: loe, there he shall never be out of thy sight.

The Glory.

The glory? Non mihi si centum linguae. If I had a hundred tongues, I was not able to discourse thoroughly the least dram of that inestimable weight of glory. The eye hath seen much, the ear hath heard more, and the heart hath conceived most of all. But no eye hath seen, nor ear heard, nor heart apprehended the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. Augustine after a stand; Deus habet quod exhibeat. God hath something to bestow on you. If I say, we shall be satiate, you will think of loathing: if, we shall not be satiate, you will think of hunger. But Ibi nec fames, nec fastidium: there is neither hunger, nor loathing. Sed Deus habet quod exhibeat. No sooner is the soul within those gates, but she is glorious. Similem sibi reddit ingredientem. Heaven shall make them that enter it, like it self; glorious: As the air by the Suns brightness is transformed bright. Quanta falici tas, vbi nullum erit malum, nullum deerit bonum! How great is that blessedness, where shall be no evil present, no good absent! This is a blessed City.

Men are ambitious here, and seek to be free of great Cities: and not seldom buy it dearer than the Captain bought his Burgeship. But no such honor as to be Denizens of this City: whereof once made free, how contemptibly they will look at the vain endeavors of worldly men! Think, Beloved, yea know; how sweet soever the gains of this lower City be: it is yet far short of the gains of heaven. And you will one day say; There is no City to the City of GOD. Where shall be no more death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor anymore pain. Death with all his Apparitors, that cite the whole world to his Court, sorrow, crying, pain, shall be no more. They shall persecute you from City to City, saith Christ: till at last we come to this City, and then out of their reach.

O that this clay of ours should come to such honor! Well may we suffer it to endure the Worlds tyranny, and to be afflicted by the Citizens thereof: alas, we are but Prentises, and they will use us hardly till our years be out. When that day comes, we shall be free possessors of this City.

You hear now the gate and the City, what should you do but enter? Passe through the gate of grace; a holy & sanctified life; and you shall not fail of the City of glory. Whither once entered, you shall sing as it is in the Psalm, Sicut audi...imus ita et vidimus. As we have heard, so have we seen in the City of our God. We see that now which was preached to us; yea and ten thousand times more then ever could be uttered. You shall say to Christ, as the Queen of Sheba to Solomon; I heard much of thy glory; but behold, the one half was not told me. You saw Jerusalem before in a Map; now you shall walk through the streets, and observe the towers and bulwarks; fully contemplate the glory. But my discourse shall give way to your meditation. The joys are boundless, endless: the Lord make us free of this City.

Amen.

SPIRITVALL EYE-SALVE: OR, THE BENEFIT of Illumination.

EPHES. 1. 18.

The eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that •...ou may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance is in the Saints.

THE special grace that here Paul prays for his Ephesians, is Illumination. wherein is described to us an Eye. Object. The eye is spiritual, the object celestial. The Instrument is •...gracious, the spectacle glorious. The eye enlightened; there is the organ: the hope of God's calling, and the rich inheritance of the glorified Saints; there is the object.

The Eye is described by the

- Situation.
- Qualification.

The Site is the Understanding; the Qualification is Inlightned.

The Eye

Is the most excellent organ of sense. Saint Augustine applies Seeing to all the senses. Hear and see, touch and see; and the Psalmist hath, Taste and see how gracious the Lord is. Other senses discern only things near them: this, remote and distant objects. Some say the roundness of the Eye resembles the Unity of the Deity; which is one and perfect: and the triangular sight, the Trinity of persons. This is too curious: happy is that intellectual eye, whose object is the blessed Unity in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity; whose delight is good, yea God.

In a clear eye the looker sees his own image: so God in a sanctified understanding sees a limited resemblance of his infinite self. And as some Physicians say, that if looking in a sick man's eyes, they see their image, there is hope of life: but the want of this resultance is held an argument of instant death: whereby they give themselves a prognosticke sign, whether the Patient will die of that sickness, or recover it; by the reflection of his eyes. But it is certain, if God's image be not in the understanding, instat mors animae, the soul is in danger: if it shine there, there is comfort of life, yea life of comfort. Hence it is that the God of this world doth so strive to blind the minds of them that believe not; ne imago Dei▪ &c. that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the Image of GOD, should not shine unto them.

God hath set two liddes, to defend the corporal eye from annoyances. So he hath given the understanding duas palpeb•...; Faith and hope to shelter it. For the eye is not more tender to the body, then the understanding is to the soul. And therefore Satan seeks by all means to hurt it: either by offering it violent blows, which the shield of Faith bears off; or by throwing dusts into it, (gifts blind the eyes) which the other lidde of hope for better riches, keeps out.

The Situation

Of this spiritual eye is in the Soul. God framing man's soul, planted in it two faculties: the Superior, that is the Understanding, which perceiveth and judgeth: the Inferior, that is the will, which being informed of the other, accordingly follows or flies, chooseth or refuseth. The Scripture favoring the simplest capacity, compares these two powers of the soul, to two known parts of the body. The understanding to the Eye; the Affections to the Foot: the eye directing, the foot walking. Every man is naturally borne blind and lame: as Zedekiah captivated to the King of Babylon; first they put out his eyes, and then they lamed his feet with fetters of brass. So is every man by nature; and therefore easily made a slave to the king of infernal Babylon, if the mercy of Christ should not redeem him. This consideration reacheth forth to us two uses: the one of Instruction, the other of Reprehension.

1. This teacheth us to desire in the first place, the Inlightning of our eyes; and then after, the strengthening of our feet. So that sweet Prophet ordereth his prayers, Psal. 25. First Shew me thy ways, O Lord: teach me thy paths. Then Lead me in thy truth. First, clear my eyes, then enable my feet, Psal. 119. Make me to vnderstand the way of thy precepts. And then I will run the way of thy Commandments. He that would sail safely, must get a good Pilot, before good rowers. Swift horses without a skillful waggoner, endanger more. He that labors for feet before he hath eyes, takes a preposterous course: for of the two, the lame is more likely to come to his journey's end, then the blind. Could he run as swift as Hazael, and outstrip the young Hart on the mountains; yet being blind, he would hardly hit the way to Heaven. There is but one way thither; by-paths innumerable: it is a thousand to one against him, that he misseth the right. If he be set into it, yet there are so many blocks, rubs, obstacles put before him by the Devil, and the world; that he can no more go into the true way, then he could discern it from the false. But if a man hath eyes, there is hope he will creep to heaven, though on lame feet. He sees where Jerusalem stands, and hath direction for the way; (as travelers in scroles; from such a village to such a city, &c.) so the word of God prescribes his journey; From Faith to virtue, from virtue to knowledge, from knowledge to temperance, from temperance to patience, &c. till he comes to enter into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Hence we see, there is somewhat more hope of a vicious person, that hath a good understanding; then of an utterly dark and blind soul, though he walks upon zealous feet. Let them know, that they will come to heaven without eyes, when the wicked come out of hell without feet.

Which lets us see the kind love of the Popish Clergy to their people, and how unfeignedly they desire their going to Heaven; when they pluck out their eyes, & send them thither. So they may grope for it, as the Sodomites did for the door of Lots house. That which they call the Mother of Devotion, Ignorance; Augustine calls Pessimā matrem, the worst Mother. Pessimae matris Ignorantiae, pessimae itidem duae filiae sunt: scilicet falsitas, et Dubietas: illa miserior, ista miserabilior: illa perniciosior, ista molestior. There are two evil daughters of the most evil Mother, Ignorance, Falsehood and Doubting: the former is more miserable, the latter more pityable: that more pernicious, this more troublesome. Let them that plead so impetuously, their Religion authentical from the Fathers, (not cum Patribus reijci...) read the opinion of a great Father, concerning a main point of their doctrine, Ignorance. Chrysostom says; Praeedit scientiae virtutis cultum: knowledge of virtue must ever go before devotion: For no man can earnestly affect the good he knows not: and the evil whereof he is ignorant, he fears not. So that true love to good, and hatred to evil, cannot occur to a heart nescient of them both. For Scientia conscientiam dirigit, conscientia scientiam perficit. Knowledge rectifies conscience, so well as conscience perfits knowledge. Con must ever be in composition: and so kindly uniting knowledge to devotion, there ariseth Conscience.

If they allow not then their people eyes, they may as well lame their feet; and so send them like the Syrian band, instead of Dothan, to Samaria. They say, This is not the way to heaven, nor is this the City of life: follow me, & I will bring you to the man (Jesus Christ) whom ye seek. But he led them to Samaria.

2. This reprehends a common fashion of many Auditors. When the Preacher begins to analyse his Text, and to open the points of doctrine, to inform the understanding; they lend him very cold attention. That part of the Sermon is spent in slumber; as if it concerned us not. But when he comes to apply his conclusions, and to drive home the use of his inferences by application; then they begin to rouse up themselves, and lend an ear of diligence. As if they had only need to have their hearts warmed, and not to have their minds warned, & enlightened with knowledge. But alas! no eyes, no salvation. Your affections are stirred in vain, without a precedent illumination of your souls. You must know to do, before you can do what you know. And indeed he that attends only to exhortation, and not to instruction, seems to build more upon man's zeal, then God's Word. Both do well together: attend to the Doctrine, and suffer also the Word of exhortation; that you may have both clear eyes, and sound feet: those which God hath joined together, let no man put asunder.

I come from the Situation, to the

Qualification

Of this spiritual eye: enlightened. For this blessing the Apostle prays to the Father of lights; from whom comes every good and perfect gift: from him, and from him only, comes this grace of Illumination. Mans mind is not only dark, but darkness, till the Spirit of knowledge light on him, and lighten him. Though Zedekiah was in Nebuchadnezzar's Court, that great Monarch, newly deliuerd of his monstrous ambition; to whom all the glories and pleasures of the world came a gossiping: yet he saw none of this pomp and magnificence; his eyes were wanting. So blind Samson among the merry Philistines, saw none of their rich apparel, costly cheer, and glorious triumphs. When the natural man comes into the Temple, among the Cōgregation of God's Saints, his soul is not delighted with their prayers, praises, psalms, and service: he sees no comfort, no pleasure, no content in their actions. True, he doth not, he cannot; for his understanding is not enlightened, to see the hope of their calling, and the glorious riches which the Spirit of grace and consolation sheds into them. He sees no whit into the awful Majesty of God, filling all with his glorious presence, and ruling all events with his providence; even disposing evil to his glory. Nothing of the beauty, mercy, pity of his Savior, sitting at the right hand of his Father: not his Highness being in heaven, nor yet his Nighnesse to his brethren on earth. Nothing of Mount Zion, the City of the living God, the celestial Jerusalem; not of the company of innumerable Angels; nor of the general assembly, and company of the first borne which are written in Heaven; not of God, the Judge of all; nor of the spirits of just men made perfect; nor of Jesus the Mediator of the New Testament; nor the blood of sprinkling, that speaks better things then that of Abel.

What more then a world of happiness doth this man's eye not see! Hereupon we call a mere fool a natural. The worldlings have esteemed, and misnamed Christians God's fools: but we know them the fools of the world. The greatest Philosopher is but a sot to the weakest Christian: therefore Philosophy (unbaptized with grace) is said to be monocular, to have but one eye, and that is of natural Reason; a left eye of the soul. But the Christian hath two eyes: the left eye of Reason, whereby he may see into the secrets of nature, as far as the Philosopher: and the right eye of faith, which the other wanting cannot conceive the mystery of godliness. This mystery to him, is but like a high candle to a blind man. God only then must give Solomon wisdom; and to his Father, a knowledge above his Teachers. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God. The first Character our forefathers taught us, was Christ's Cross. Our first spelling lesson; In the Name of the Father, &c. To teach us, that even all human knowledge, much more divine, is derived from God's fountain. There are two reasons, why we must all beg of God for our selves, as Paul did for his Ephesians, this grace of Illumination.

1. Our spiritual blindness came upon us by God's just curse for our sins. As the Philistines put out Samsons eyes, for his many mischiefs done them: so GOD on far greater cause blinded Adam, and his perpetual issue. He had pure and good knowledge; but because his ambition was appetere prohibitum, to desire that was forbidden: his punishment was perdere concessum, to lose that he had. Now the same hand that laid on this penalty, must take it off. The blind men in the Gospel, recovered not their sight till Christ came. They were as types to us; to teach us that only the Spirit of Christ can restore our spiritual eyes. Therefore of this Spirit are we counseled to buy eye-salve, to anoint our eyes, that we may see.

2. This original defect is increased by actual transgressions. We were borne ignorant, we have made our selves blind; putting out even that remaining spark of nature. We mind earthly things: setting not only our affections, but even fixing our whole knowledge on this World. And it is impossible that man's eye should look on earth and heaven also at one instant. It is a rule in Philosophy; Nothing receives anything, but that is empty of all other things of a contrary nature. The ear must be empty of all sounds, the taste of all savors, the eye of all colors; before there can be entertainment given to a new object. The smell possessed with Rew, cannot sent the Rose: the taste infected with gall, imagines all morsels bitter: and a green glass held before the eyes, presents all things looked on, green. So if the souls eye be taken up with the gaudy vanities of this py'd world, it cannot discern the things, that concern everlasting peace. The understanding then must be with-drawn from earth, that it may contemplate heaven. This confutes their practices, that have vowed a Monkish life, addicted to speculation & eying of heaven; yet are perpetually raking in the mud of the earth to get money; with an impossibility of reconciling these two opposite objects to their eyes at once. In vain they lift up ceremonial eyes of a forced devotion; for the eye of their heart is fixed downwards: Unless they have squint-ey'd souls, that can look two ways at once. But I rather think, that like watermen, they look one way, and row another: for he must needs be strangely squint-ey'd, that can at the same instant fasten one of his lights on the light of glory, & the other on the darkness of iniquity. The riches above and below are remote things; Quorum dum aliud contemplatim aspicimus, aliud contemptim despiciamus: whereof whiles we admire the one, we vilipend the other. This blindness then being both hereditarie to our natures, (and hereditary diseases are not easily cured) and, augmented by our willful disorders; can be taken away by no hand but God's. Since the World began was it never heard, that any man (not man, but God) opened the eyes of one that was borne blind; and had increased this caecitie by his own accessive and excessive wickedness.

He that would desire inspection into others blindness, had need of clear eyes himself. Cast out the beam in thine own eye, that thou mayest pull out the mote in thy brothers; saith our Savior. Let us take with us then the eyes of grace, that we have; that we may the better look into that blindness of nature, we had. There is in this blind eye diseases and defects. The diseases are double, so are the defects.

The Diseases.

1. The Cataract, which is a thickness drawn over the eye, and bred of many causes: this especially, either from the rheum of vain-glory, or the inflammation of malice. From this eye there is no reflection, or returning the own beams, whereby a man may contemplate himself. But even the optic nerves, and the visory spirits are corrupted: the memory cannot reuolue, nor the mind present it self, what it is; nec in se descendere tentat. This dark mind is the vault, where Satan keeps his Seminarie, and sits hatching a black brood of lusts.

The means to expel this disease, is to take God's Law into thy hand and heart, and through that glass to look into thyself. Consider your own ways in your hearts, saith the Prophet.

Teipsum

Concute: tecum habita: te consule, dic tibi quis sis.

Plumbe-deep into thy own breast: Animi tui abyssum intra. A man offends less, by searching sin with too deep, then with too short an instrument. Though this be, saith Abselme, grauis angustia; a hard exigent. Si me inspicio, ...ipsum non tolero; si non inspicio, nescio. Si video, horror; si non videro, mors est. If I look into myself, I cannot endure myself; if I look not, I cannot know myself. If I see myself, there is horror: if I see not, there is death. This inspection is difficult. Difficile est se nosse, sed beatum. It is a hard, but a happy thing to know ones self. Private sins are not easily spied out. Difficilius est inuenire, quàm interficere; as Casar said of the Scythians. It is harder to find them out, then to root them out. Innumerable sins are in a man; if not in actual and ripe practice, yet in growing seeds. Qui indulget vno vitio, amicus est omnibus. He that is partially indulgent to one sin, is a friend to all. It is a pains well taken, to study thyself. How sweet a rest doth that night bring, whose sleep is prevented with a recognition of our selves!

Bernard teacheth man a three-fold consideration of himself: Quid, quis, qualis fit. What by nature, who in person, what kind of man in conversation. Which particulars when he casteth up, he shall find in sum; Himself a miserable sinner. Si cupis bonus fieri, primùm creed quod malus fis. If thou wouldest be good, first know that thou art evil. Chrysostom amplifies this self knowledge, by teaching a man to consider; what he is in himself, dust and ashes: what is within him; much wickedness: what above him, an offended Justice: what below him, a burning lake: what against him, Satan and sin: what before him, vain pleasure: what behind him, infallible death.

But alas! what is all this that hath been said of the eye, if God enlighten not that mental eye to see it? He must open our eyes, to behold the wonderful things of his Law. Otherwise man's sight to these objects, is but as oculus noctuae ad lumen solis. Spiritual joys he cannot perceive; and what he conceives of death and hell, he thinks of them senselessly like a beast, or desperately like a Devil. If his conscience begins to wake, he sings her asleep again. And as in some, the fuliginous vapors arising from the lower parts of the body, blind the eyes: so in him the fumous euaporations of the flesh's lusts, have caused absolute blindness. The spirit of God, with the saving instrument of grace, can only take away this Cataract.

2. There is another disease, called the Pearl in the eye; a dangerous disease, and hereof are all worldlings sick: for earthly riches is such a pearl in their eye, that they cannot see the pearl of the Gospel, which the wise Merchant sold all he had to purchase. By distrusting and distracting cares of the world, this intellectual eye is not only depraved, but deprived of light. Affectio mundi, infectio animi: our souls are affected, infected with this contagion. We are easily inclined, and declined from our supernall bliss, by doting love of these transient delights. And vbi amor, ibi oculus: the eye follows the heart, with more diligence then a servant his Master. Now it is no wonder if that eye be blind, which the Devil hath daubed up with the dirt of this world! Covetousness is an Engrosser, wheresoever it dwells: and as it would engross the whole Vniuerse to it vnsatiate self, so it takes up the whole soul, with all the affections and desires of it. It gives every member and faculty press-money, and binds all their contention to get riches. It leaves not so much as an eye for our selves, not a thought for God. Quicquidde se intrinsecus agatur oblitus est animus, dum extrinsecus occupatur. Whiles the mind is externally busied, it forgets what is done in it self, what shall become of it self. This pearl then must be cut out of the worldlings eye, with the sharp knife of repentance; otherwise he is likely never to see heaven. For it may be well said to them, as the Philosopher answered to some, that asked him curious questions of the world; whether it had a soul, whether it were round, &c. Vos de mundo solliciti estis, & vestram immunditiam non c...atis. You are busy examiners concerning the world, but idle neglecters of your unclean selves. These are the Diseases: there is also a double defect in this natural Eye.

1. It perceives only natural and external things; qua ante pedes sunt; which lie at their feet, 2. Pet. 1. For It cannot see a far off. It beholds only the barque or rind; but not the inward virtue. It can perceive what thy riches are, thy house adorned, thy lands tilled, thy grounds stocked: but not those spiritual blessings, and celestial privileges, that belong to thee as thou art a Christian. It judgeth the Cabinet by the Lether and cover, not by the costly jewels in it. It may see Job's outward affliction, not his inward consolation. If God swells their garner with plenteous fruits, and fills their bones with marrow, this they see: but the hope of God's calling, the comforts of the Gospel, the saving health of Jesus Christ, and the promises of eternal life, they not see. The world is their circumference; other things Nec capiunt, nec cupiunt; neque tenent manibus, nec cernunt oculis; they neither comprehend nor covet; neither hold, nor behold them.

A beast hath one kind of eye, a natural man two, a Christian three. The beast hath an eye of Sense, the natural man of Sense and Reason, the Christian of Sense, of Reason, and of Faith. Each of these hath his several objects, several intentions. The eye of sense regards only sensual things: the eye of reason only sensible and natural things: the eye of faith, spiritual, supernall, and supernatural things.

The eye of sense doth not extend to intelligible things, and matters of discourse. Tell a brute beast of Philosophy, and the conclusions of nature, he understands you not. The belly of Sense hath no ears for such instructions. Let it be fed, nourished, have the appetite delighted: of further felicity it hath neither notion, nor motion. Nec noscit, nec poscit.

The eye of Reason sees further then that of Sense; and hath (more then common Sense) a rational and discursiue apprehension of intelligible objects. For the bodies of creatures, the brutes see them as well as man, and perhaps some better: but in these bodies he perceives hidden virtues, objectual to the scope of understanding, which the beast cannot see. I confess that many a man is defective in the gradual ascents of reason. Tell a rusticke or mechanicke that the Sun is greater then the whole earth, or that a little star is larger then his car-wheel; and he derides thy boldness, and thinks thou wouldst be admired for telling alye. Though this by the eye of mature reason is discerned perfect truth.

The eye of Faith sees further then both the former; for it looks into the hope of our calling, and the glorious inheritance of the Saints. The Christian hath not only an eye of Sense common with beasts; nor an eye of reason common with men; but also an eye of faith proper to his profession. Wherein he goes beyond the natural man, further then the natural man goes beyond the beast. The unregenerate liues all his days in a mist: he cannot look up to heaven; in comparison whereof that world he sees, is but a base moale-hill; and himself is like a blind moale, digging in it. Yea in this very world, his own proper element, how little doth he truly perceive! There is no herb or flower he treads on, that he truly knows. Yea he is a stranger at home, and is ignorant of what is in his own bosom. But for things that concern a better world, he hath no insight. The natural man perceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness vnto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. Those things are incredible, impossible to him, which we build our faiths on. Happy then are their eyes that see these things. In matters of the world our simplicity moves pity, or makes sport: let it content us, that these losses are requited by our spiritual knowledge, seeing further into better matters. That wherein we are ignorant, is transient & contemptible: that which we know, is glorious and eternal. The ignorance of the former shall not hinder our blessedness; the knowledge of the other shall accomplish it.

2. The second defect in this eye is an in solid levity: it is roving, like Dinah's, and ravished abroad; but wants selfinspection. Two things exceedingly move men; Similitude and Example. When men judge others very evil, they begin to think themselves good. Nothing doth sooner blind us then comparisons. He that would mount to a high opinion of his own worth, by comparing it to the base wickedness of another; Perinde est, ac si quis ad claudos respiciens, s...am miretur velocitatem: is like one that observing a Cripples lameness, wonders at himself that he is so swift. The curious man goes abroad, Et exterius omnia confiderat; qui sic interna despicit: and is so intentiue upon foreign businesses, that he forgets his own. They are common questions; Quid ill fecit? What hath he done? and Quid ill faciet? What shall he do? But not What have I done? not What shall I do that I might be saved? They are like Tailors, that have taken measure of many men, never of themselves. Such a man doth not smite his own bosom with the Publican, but breaks his neighbors head with the Pharisee. It is good for a man to keep his eyes at home, and set them about the domestical business of his own heart: lest at last Omnibus notus, ignotus moritur sibi; he that lived known to all, dyes in ignorance of himself.

I cannot leave this excellent Organ, the eye; till I have shown you two things. 1. The danger of spiritual blindness. 2. The means to cure it.

Spiritual blindness shall appear the more perilous, if we compare it with natural. The bodies eye may be better spared then the souls. As to want the eyes of Angels, is far worse then to want the eyes of beasts. The want of corporal sight is often good, not evil: evil in the sense, good in the consequence. He may the better intend heavenly things, that sees no earthly to draw him away. Many a man's eye hath done him hurt. The sons of Godsaw the daughters of men. David from the roof of his Palace saw Bethshabe. Per oculorum beneficium intrat cordis veneficium. The lightning of lust hath scorched the heart through those windows. Malus oculus, malus animus. An evil eye makes an evil mind. The Apostle speaks of eyes full of adultery: it is a fearful thing to have an eye great with whoredom. And there be eyes full of covetousness, lusting after the grounds and goods of other men: as Ahab's eye was full of Nabaoth's vineyard. But non tutum est conspicerere, quod non licitum est concupiscere. Let not thine eye be enamored of that, which thy heart must not covet. You see therefore, that sometimes the loss of corporal sight doth the soul good: and the eye of faith sees the better, because the eye of flesh sees not at all.

Besides, the bodily blind feels and acknowledgeth his want of sight: but the spiritually thinks that none have clearer eyes then himself. He that wants corporal eyes, blesseth them that see: this man derides & despiseth them. Their blindness is therefore more dangerous, Qui suam ignorant ignorantiam; that know not they are blind, as Laodicea, Reue. 3. This conviction Christ gave to the Jews. If ye were blind, ye should not have sin: but now ye say, We see, therefore your sin remaineth. The blind in body is commonly led either by his servant, or his wife, or his dog: there may be yet some respect in these guides. But the blind in soul is led by the world, which should be his servant, is his traitor: or by the flesh, which should be as a wife, is his harlot: or by the devil, which is a dog indeed, a crafty cur, not leading, but misleading him. He that is blind himself, and led by such blind, or rather blinding guides, how should he escape the rubs of transgression, or the pit of destruction!

Now the means to clear this Eye, is to get it a knowledge of God, of our selves. That the eye may be cured, this knowledge must be procured.

Now God must be known by his

- Works.
- Word.
- Spirit.

1. By his Works. The book of Nature teacheth the most unlearned, that there is a Deity. This may be called natural Theologic. For his invisible things may be understood by his visible works. Praesentemque refert qualibet herba Deum. Not a pile of grass we tread on, but tells us there is a GOD. Ask the beasts and they will tell thee; the fowls of the air the fishes in the Sea; the earth will declare unto thee, that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this. When an Eremite was found fault with, that he wanted books; he answered, that there could be no want of books, when Heaven and Earth stood before his eyes. The heavens declare the glory of GOD: and the firmament showeth his handy work. Day unto day uttereth speech: and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. All these creatures speak GOD; in whom is the act of all powers, & from whom the power of all acts: whether thou have a carnal affection, filled with vanity; or a curious head, filled with variety; or a Christian heart, filled with verity; despise not the paedagogie and manuduction of the World, leading thee to know God.

2. But this book reads only to us, (that ask An sit) Deus est; that there is a God. If we ask further, Quis sit, Who this God is, or how to be worshipped; it cannot expound it. It brings us only like that Athenian Altar, Adignotum Deum; To the unknown God. We must turn over a new leaf, search another book to take out this lesson. Search the Scriptures; for they give this testimony. So Zacharias. Ten men out of all languages of the Nations shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew; saying, We will go with you, for we have heard that GOD is with you. In the former, the book is the World, the school Natures light; the scholar man, quatenus homo; as he is man. But here the Book is the Scripture, the School the light of grace, and the scholar Christian man, as he is a Christian. There was the eye of Reason exercised; here of faith. There was taught GOD in his creatures; here God in his Christ.

3. But this Scriptural knowledge (common to the wicked) is not sufficient; there must be a spiritual knowledge: whereby, though he sees not more then is in the Word, yet he sees more then they, that see only the letter of the Word. The annointing which you have received, teacheth you all things. Call we then earnestly upon the Spirit of Illumination for this knowledge. For it is not obtained per rationem, sed per orationem; not by reason, but by prayers. For this cause I bow my knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. That you may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, & depth, and height: & to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge.

Now we must learn to see our selves, and this selfecontemplation must be made by a Natural glass by a Moral glass by a Spiritual glass.

1. Naturally, by looking into the constitution & composition of our own persons; as Paul distinguisheth us into Body, Soul, Spirit. For thy Body, it was not only fashioned beneath on the earth, but of the earth. Our first Parents were made of the earth: of the earth was their meat: of their meat their blood: of their blood their seed: of the seed our bodies. Corrupta et corrumpentia corpora; bodies corrupt of themselves, and corrupting the souls. For thy Soul, it is a real, spiritual, invisible, and induisible substance; diffused by God into thy body. Who by placing this soul in thy flesh, hath set thee in the mid-way, betwixt the bodiless Spirits above, and the mindlesse bodies below. This soul is preserved by neither element nor aliment, but by him only that made her; and to whom, she resteth not, till she returns. For thy Spirit, it is called vinculum and vehiculum, a bond and a Chariot. It is a bond to unite a divine and heavenly soul, to an earthly elementary body; both these extremes meet friendly by this Tertium, a firmamentall Spirit. It is called a Chariot, because it carrieth the souls faculties to all organs and parts of the body, and that with wonderful speed.

2. Morally, by considering how frequently we have transgressed those virtues, to which the very Heathen gave a strict obedience. Where is our justice, temperance, patience? We have idle designs, and idler desires; and give way to all evil that may be either thought or wrought: and what we dare not act, we dare like. We loath (like fond sheep) the good pastures of fit benefits, and bleat after the browse of vanities. Like erring Planets, we keep not the eccllyptike line of virtuous mediocritie. As God hath all good in himself, all evil only in knowledge: so we on the contrary, have much good in knowledge, all evil in our selves.

3. Spiritual knowledge goes yet further; even in medullas, et penetralia cordis. It searcheth the heart; and if in that most inward Chamber, or in any cabinet thereof, it can find an Idol, it brings it forth. It sees when the torrent of time bears thee down the stream of custom; what faintness is in thy faith, what coldness in thy zeal, when the awe of man gives the fear of God a check-mate. It sounds the lowest depth of the Conscience; and spyeth blemishes in the face of whitest innocence. So it brings the best soul down on her knees; teacheth her the necessity of humbleness; and puts this prayer in her mouth; Lord be merciful to me a sinner.

We have now done with the Organ of Seeing; the understanding or Souls Eye: let us come to the object to be seen, The hope of his calling; and the riches of the glory of God's inheritance in the Saints.

The Object

Is clear and transparent to a sanctified Eye. The Philosophers propound six necessary occurrences to our perfect Seeing; and you shall see them all here met.

1. Firmnesse or good disposition of the Organ that seeth. A rolling eye beholds nothing perfectly. A Dinah's eye is the prologue to a ravished soul. This must be a composed eye, steadfastly settled on the divine object: saying with David, My heart is fixed, O Lord, my heart is fixed. The proposed glory is so infinite, that it may well take up the whole eye; for it shall one day take up the whole man. Enter thou, good servant, into thy masters joy: it is too great to enter into thee. This Object is so immense, that we cannot well look besides it.

2. The Spectacle must be objected to the sight: the eye cannot pierce into penetralia terrae, or sublimia coeli: nor can the understanding see into these supernatural joys, unless the Lord object them to it. Hence it is that many neglectfully pass by (  $\langle \phi \rangle$  lumine lumen) the light, for want of eyes to regard it. But God here produceth the wardrobe of his glory to the sanctified eyes; as if he said, Uenite & videte, Psal. 46. Come, and see. So Moses; Stand still, and see the salvation of God. So Christ to his Apostles. It is given to your eyes to see these things, to others but by parables.

3. That there be a proportional distance betwixt the organ and the object: neither too near, nor too far off. A bright thing held too near the sight, confounds it: be it never so bright, if too far off, it cannot discern it. God hath sweetly ordered and compounded this difference. Those everlasting joys are not close by our eyes, lest the glory should swallow us up: for mortal eyes cannot behold immortal things; nor our corruptible sight see steadfastly that eternal splendor. Who can see God, and live? And though you say, it is the soul that sees; yet even this soul, whiles it is prisoned in this muddy veil, or rather Jail, the flesh, hath by reason of the others impotency and passibleness, a thick cloud cast between it self and glory. For now we see through a glass darkly: but then face to face. Now I know in part, then shall I know, even as also I am known. The best eye upon earth looks but through a glass, a lattice, an obscuring impediment. Now on the other side, lest this object should be too far off, that the intellectual eye could not reach it, behold, God hath given it the first fruits; Righteousness, peace of conscience, and joy of the holy Ghost; a prelibation of glory. It sees the earnest of the Spirit, sealing us up to the day of redemption; a pledge of those joys, which otherwise no eye hath seen, no ear heard, nor heart on earth conceived.

4. It is required that the objected matter be substantial; not altogether diaphanous & transparent, but massy, and of a solid being. Otherwise the sight cannot perceive, nor the mind well conceive, the nature which is so subtle & sublim'd: but intends it self still further, till it can acquiescere in materiam visibilem; rest it self on some visible object. But this Object here proposed, is no empty Chimera, or imaginary, tralucent, ayery shadow, but substantial: the hope of God's calling, and a glorious inheritance: which though natures dull eye cannot reach, faiths eye sees perfectly. For Hac est fides, credere quod non vides.

And the subject of this spectacle is by demonstration proved solid and substantial: because▪ nothing but that can give this intellectual eye firm content and complacency. How go the affections of man in a rolling and ranging pace from one creature to another! now thy heart is set upon wealth; thou wilt have it, though thou dignity for it in visceribus both matris & filiorum; in the bowels of the earth, and of the sons of the earth. Say wealth is come, thou art then for honor: thy riches are a ladder, whereby thou wouldest climb to dignity. Dedecet diuitem esse ignobilem. Nobility gotten hath not settled thee: thou art traversing new desires. Thy lust presents thee a beauteous paramour: unclean desires now fill up thy scene; and thou playest, like that Germane, many parts thyself; a golden Ass, a proud Lyon, a luxurious Goat. Wealth and greatness commands thy pleasure; thy lust is answered: then thou art for music, and so actest a fourth part; thou art thine own fiddler. Now thy blood is to be heated with delicates; thou must be indulgent to thy throat with lust-provoking meats; and so playest yet another part, a Cater to uncleanness. When all is done,

Non contenta quies; non est sedata libido.

When thou hast thus wandered, and begged of every poor creature a scrap of comfort, yet thou art but clawed, and cloyed with variety, with vanity; not contented. It is all but one little crumb to one half dead of hunger. Couldst thou pass over the vast Vniuerse, from the conuexe superficies of heaven, to the center of hell: yet the immense capacity, rapacity of thy desires will not be satisfied.

Well then did Augustine confess: Fecisti nos ad te, & inquietum est cor nostrum donec requiescat in te. O Lord, thou didst make us for thee; and our heart cannot be quiet till it rest in thee. Nothing but the Trinity of persons in that one Deity, can fill the triangular concaue of man's own heart. The fire flieth to his sphere, the stone falleth to his center, the rivers run to the sea, as to their end and rest; and are but violently detained in any other place. The needle touched with the Loadstone, stands ever trembling and quiuering, till it enjoy the full aspect of the Northern Pole. Thus the Lord is only our Center; the very life of satisfaction; full of perfect and infallible comfort; and he alone can content the boundless apprehension of this intellectual eye. All other are but shadows and vanities, but this matter objected in my Text, satisfies. The world cannot, but this can; the hope of God's calling, and his glorious inheritance, &c.

5. Clearnesse of space betwixt the Organ and the object. For the interposition of some thick and gross body, prevents the faculty of the Eye. The quickest eye cannot see through hills; and a crasse cloud is able to hide the Sun from us at noon day. On necessity, that we may behold with our understandings eyes, this celestial object; the hope of our calling; there must be a removing of all thick and impenetrable obstacles.

1. Some have whole mountains betwixt their eyes and heaven: the mountains of vain-glory hinder their sight. They are ravished with the bravery of earth: they think there is no heaven but at Court; no further scope of ambition, then to be great in this world. If you tell them of the glory of God's Inheritance given to his Saints, alas, they believe not your prattle: they cannot see it. They cannot indeed; for who can see through mountains?

2. Others, to make surer prevention against their sight of heaven, have rolled the whole earth betwixt that and their eyes. These are the covetous, who are rooting down to the Center. If you tell them of this hope, &c. they answer, Non videmus nisi terram; we see nothing but earth. Well may they say so: for what eyes can see through the vast and condensed body of the earth?

3. Others yet have interiected such obscure and pitchy clouds, between their sight and this Sun of glory, that they cannot see. Whether of errors, that darken the light of the truth: Or of affected ignorance, that blinds their own eyes: Or of blasphemous Atheism; they will see nothing, but what they do see. Where is the promise of his coming? Since the Fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. Nil noui video; I see no new thing: it was so, and it is so. Non aliud vidēre patres, aliudue nepotes Aspicient. Or of rude and crude impie...ies, which both blear their own eyes, and shadow heavens graces from them. Thus the Devil deals with thē, as the Pharisees servants dealt with Christ: first they blind him, and then buffet him, and bid bim prophecy who smote him. First he puts out their eyes with their own iniquities, and then leads them about to make himself sport. They cannot see the way to bliss, they have blinded themselves; interposed such clouds betwixt them and heaven, that this glorious light cannot shine unto them. There must be then a clearer space: and this God grants to faith. Stephen full of the holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of GOD, &c. Behold, I see the heavens open, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God. Though this be taken for more then a spiritual sight; yet hence we have this comfort; that our eyes of Faith shall see God now in Grace, and our eyes of flesh hereafter in glory.

6. Lastly, the object must be stable and firm, for if it move too swiftly, it dazeleth the eye, and cannot be truly (according to the perfect form of it) beholden. An oar in the river often seems to the passengers as if it were broke... by reason of the swift and violent motion of the water. An arrow cuts the air with such quickness, that we can scarce discern it; which lying at the mark is easily seen. God hath therefore answered our desires, and fitted our understandings with a stable object: which Paul calls an exceeding & eternal weight of glory. A weight; substantial and permanent: not a light transient matter, nor a swift voluble nature; but weighty. Therefore let us not look on the things which are seen, but on the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. It is here called an Inheritance, which none can take from us: that subtle Lawyer Satan, shall never be able to pick cavils against it.

You must not expect, that I should enter into a particular resolution of our objected comforts: I must reserve that to a more liberal time. Only now let us set them in our meditation, and settle our selves to attain them. Contemne we, condemn we the foolish choice of worldlings, in regard of our portion and better part, never to be taken from us. Why should I dislike my gold, because he prefers his copper? The least dram of these joys shall outwaigh all the pleasures of earth. And as one torment in hell shall make the reprobate forget all earthly vanities: so the least drop of this pleasure shall take from us the remembrance of our former miseries. We shall not think on our poverty in this world, when we possess those Riches: and forget our contemptible baseness, when God shall give us that Glory of Saints. He shall not much remember the days of his life, because God answereth him in the joy of his heart. God give us to see these things now in grace, that we hereafter may see them in glory.

Amen.

THE COSMOPOLITE: OR, WORLDS FAVOVRITE.

LUKE 12. 20.

But God said unto him; Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?

THIS is the Covetous man's Scripture; and both (like an vnflattering glass) presents his present condition, what he is: and (like a fatal book) premonstrates his future state, what he shall be. And because; as no man would be thought of others, or will think himself a worldling; so nor apply to himself the terror of this Text: therefore this Scripture doth both indigitate and single him out, with a Tu es h...mo; and when it hath set himself before himself, it tells him how he shall stand before the Tribunal of God: with a lost name, with a lost soul, with a lost world, with a lost and never to be recovered heaven.

We shall perceive more plainly the Cosmopolites fearful judgment, if we take a precursory view of the Parables former passages.

First we have the Rich man, verse. 16. prospering in his wealth: not only in the usurious gains, which his money, fraud, oppression, or unjust dealing might get: but even in those things which God by the hand of nature did reach forth to him. For his ground brought forth plentifully. So deep a draught have the wicked often drunk in the common cup of blessings. Their Bull gendreth and faileth not: their Cow calueth and casteth not. They spend their days in wealth. Yea, will you hear yet a larger exhibition? They are not in trouble as other men, neither are they plagued like others. There they have exemption from misery. Their eyes stand out for fatness: they have more then heart could wish. There they have accumulation of felicity.

Secondly, we have him caring what to do, verse. 17. He had so much gain, so much grain; that his rooms could not answer the capacity of his heart. What shall I do, because I have no room, where to bestow my fruits? Care is the inseparable companion of abundance. Vnâ recipiuntur diuitiae & sollicitudo. They, to whom is given most wealth, are most given to carking, sharking, and solicitous thoughtfulness, with a little inversion of our Saviors meaning; Where is much given, there is much, yea more required. Those hearts whom the world hath done most to satisfy, are least of all satisfied: still they require more, and perplex themselves to get it. A reasonable man would think, that they who possess abundant riches, should not be possessed with abundant cares. But care not for tomorrow, saith Christ. Cuius enim diei spatium te visurum nescis, quam ob causam illius sollicitudine torqueris? Why shouldst thou disquiet thyself with thought of prouisiō for that day, whose evening thou art not sure to see?

Thirdly, we have his resolution; which in his purpose, hath a double succession (though no success) for their disposed order and places. This will I do, verse. 18. what? 1. I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. He thinks of no room in visceribus pauperum, in the bowels of the poor: which the Lord hath proposed to him, a fit receptacle of his superfluity. He minds not to build an hospital, or to repair a Church; either in cultum Christi, or culturam Christiani: to the worship of Christ, or education of orphans, or consolation of distressed souls: but only respects Horreum suum, and Hordeum suum: his Barn and his barley. The want of room troubles him: his harvest was so great, that he is crop-sick. The stomach of his Barn is too little to hold that surfeit of corn he intends it; and therefore in anger he will pull it down, and make it answerable to his own desires. 2. This he takes as granted, and upon the new building of his Barn, he builds his rest, ver. 19. Then I will say to my soul; Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. He dreams his belly full, and now his pipes go: he sings requiem, and lullabies his spirit in the cradle of his barn. This sweet news he whispers to his soul. Though he had wearied his body with incessant toyles, and made it a gally-slave to his imperious affection: yet his soul had been especially disquieted, and therefore he promiseth his soul some ease. In this indulgent promise, there is a Preface, and a Solace.

1. The Preface assures his soul much goods, and many years; multas diuitias, multos annos. He knew that a scant and sparing proffer would not satisfy his boundless desires: there must be show of an abundant impletion. It is not enough to have an ample rock or dista...e of wealth, unless a longeuall time be afforded to spin it out. Philoxenus his wish coupled with his pleasant viands a long throat, (Crane-like); to prorogue his delight: for shortness doth somewhat abate sweetness. Rex horae, a king of one hour can scarce warm his throne: it keeps a Christmass-lord flat, that he knows his end. If this man had been his own Lord, how excellent an estate would he have assured himself▪ His Farm should have been so large, and his lease so long, that I doubt whether Adam in Paradise had a greater Lordship, or Metbushalem a longer life. The last of his desires is of the longest size: give him much goods, and much time, abundance of joys, and abundance of days; and you hit or fit the length of his foot.

2. The Solace is a dance of four paces; Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. The full belly loves an easy Chair; he must needs join with his laborious surfeits the vacation of sleep. He hath taken great pains to bring death upon him; and now standing at his door, it hears him talk of ease. He promiseth himself that, which he traueils to destroy, life: and even now ends what he threatens to begin. So worldlings weary and wear out their lives to hoard wealth: and when wealth comes, & health goes, they would give all for life. O fools! in continual quest of riches, to hunt themselves out of breath; and then be glad to restore all at once for recovery. The next pace is, Eate: his bones must not only be pleased, but his belly. It is somewhat yet, that this man resolves at last no more to pinch his guts: therefore what before he was in their debt, he will pay them with the usury of surfeits. He purposeth to make himself of a thin starueling, a fat Epicure; and so to translate Parcum into Porcum. The third pace is, Drink: where gluttony is bid welcome, there is no shutting out of drunkenness. You shall not take a Nabal, but he plies his gobblet, as well as his trencher. And this is a ready course to retire himself from his former vexation; to drown his cares in Wine. The last pace is a Leualto; Be merry: When he hath got junkets in his belly, and wines in his brain, what should he do, but leap, dance, revel, be merry, be mad! After feasting, must follow jesting. Here be all the four passages: he sleeps care away, he eats care away, he drinks care away, and now he sings care away. His pipes be full, and they must needs squeak, though the name of the good, yea the name of GOD be dishonored. But to such a madmerry scoffer might well be applied that verse, which was sounded in the ear of a great Rimer dying: Desine ludere temere, nitere propere surgere, de puluere. Leave playing, & fall to praying: it is but sorry jesting with death. Thus his dance was like Sardanapalus; Ede, bibe, lude: Eate, drink, and be merry: but there is one thing mars all his sport; the bringing of his soul to judgment. He promiseth a merry life, and a long life; but death says nay to both. He gratifies his soul, & ratifies his state; but couzens himself in all. It may be said of him, as King John of the fat Stag dying; See how easily he hath lived, yet he never heard Mass. This was the sweet, but the sour follows. Qui gaudebit cum mundo, non regnabit cum Christo. He rejoiceth with the World, but must not live in glory with Christ.

Thus far the Rich man acts; now comes in God's part: which turns the nature of his play, from Comike purposes to Tragike events. He behights all peace and joy to himself; But God said; Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be taken from t...e, &c.

The words contain an

- Agent,
- Patient,
- Passion,
- Question.

The Agent is God; But God said. The Patient is the rich Fool. The Passion. This night shall thy soul be required of thee. The Question which God puts to him, to let him see his folly; Then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?

The Agent, God.

The Rich man was purposing great matters, but he reckoned without his host: he resolves thus and thus; But God said to him. Hence two observations.

1. That the purposes of men are abortive, and never come to a happy birth, if God bless not their conception. Man purposeth, and God disposeth. The horse is prepared to the battle, but the victory is of the Lord. It is a holy reservation in all our purposes; Si Deo placuerit: If it shall please the Lord. Go to now ye that say, To day or tomorrow we will go into such a City, and continue there a year, & buy and sell, and get gain. Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. Ye ought to say, If the Lord will. For neither tongue can speak, nor foot move, if the Lord shall enervate them: as he did Zaobaries tongue in the Temple, and Jereboam's arm, when he would have reached it out against the Prophet. In vain man intends that, whereagainst God contends. Sisera resolves on victory, GOD crosseth it with overthrow. Yet thinks Sisera, Iael will succor me, For there is peace between Iabin King of Hazor, and the house of Heber the Kenite. No, even there •...he arm of the Lord is ready to encounter him; a draught of milk shall be his last draught, and the hand of a woman shall kill him, that hath escaped the hand of an Army.

The Jews may say, We will fly away (◊) swift horses. But God saith, Your Persecutors shall be swifter. Sennacherib purposeth to lick up Israel as the Ox grass; and though he found the Land before him as an Eden, to leave it behind him as Sodom; But God said, He shall go home without his errand: An hook in his nostrils shall reine him back. The King of Babylon says in his heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: and I will be like the most High. But God said, Thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit. H...d made himself so sure of Christ, that rather than to fail of cutting off the prophesied King, he slays his own son: He might so, but he shall not touch God's Son. With what lavish promises do the Spaniards flatter themselves, when they baptized their Nauie with the name of Inv...nsible? England is their own, they are already grasping it (warm with gore) in their clutches. But God said, Destruction shall inherit their hopes: and the remainder of ruin shall be only left to testify, what they would have done.

Men's thoughts promise often to themselves, Multa magna; many things, great things: they are plotted, contrived, commenced; yet die like Jonah's Gourd, when we should expect their refreshing: Quia non fort...it Deus, because God hath not blessed them. Ambition may rear turrets in emulation of heaven: and vain-glory build Castles in the air; but the former shall have no roof, as the latter hath no foundation. Philip threatened the Lacedemonians, that if he entered their Country, he would utterly extinguish them. They wrote him no other answer but Si, If: meaning, it was a condition well put in, for he never was like to come there. Si SI non esset, perfectum quidlibet esset. But in the menaces of angry Tyrants, and purposes of hasty intenders, there is an If, an included condition, that infatuates all. Let our lesson hence be this.

That our purposes may be sped with a happy success, let us intend in the Lord, for the Lord.

1. Let us derive authority of our intentions from his sacred Truth; which gives rules not only to live well, and to speak well, but even ad been c...gitandum, to think well. It is a wicked purpose to fast till Paul be killed; to wreake malice, to satifie lust. Inauspicious and without speed are the intents, whose beginning is not from God. Let no purpose pass currant from thy heart, till God hath set on it his stamp and seal of approbation: Let his Word give it a Fiat: Whatsoever ye do, yea or intend to do, let both action of hand, and thought of heart be all to God's glory.

2. Let us in all our purposes reserve the first place for God's helping hand. Without me ye can do nothing, saith Christ. But it is objected that Paul spake peremptorily to his Corinthians. I will come unto you when I shall pass through Macedonia. And David, I will go to the house of the Lord. I answer, Cor tenet, quod lingua tacet: they that had so much grace in their hearts, wanted not this grace; et noscere et poscere facultatem Domini, to know and desire the Lord's permission. You shall never take men so well affected to good works, that do not implore God's assistance. Though they do not ever express in word, yet they never suppress in thought, that reservation; If it please God, as Paul doth afterwards in that place; If the Lord permit. If any will dare to resolve too confidently, patronizing their temerity from such patterns; as if their voluntates were potestates, let them know that like Taylours, they have measured others, but never took measure of themselves: that there is great difference betwixt a holy Propet or Apostle, and a profane Publican.

2. Observe, that God now speaks so to the Covetous, that he will be heard: he preacheth another kind of Sermon to him then ever he did before: a fatal, final, funeral Sermon, a Text of Judgment; This night shall they fetch away thy soul. For this is God's Lecture, himself reads it; But God said. He had preached to the worldling often before; and those Sermons were of three sorts.

1. By his Word. But cares of the world choke this Seed: the heart goes after covetousness; even whiles the flesh sits under the pulpit. This is the devils three-wing'd arrow, (wealth, pride, voluptuousness) whereby he nails the very heart fast to the earth. It is his talent of lead, which he hangs on the feet of the soul, the affections; that keeps her from mounting up into heaven: with the printed beauty of this filthy Harlot he bewitcheth their minds, steals their desires from Christ, and sends them a whoring to the hot Stews of hell. Thus is God's first Sermon quite lost.

2. By Judgments on others, whose smart should amaze him. For God, when he strikes others, warns thee, Tua res agitur, &c. When the next house is on fire, thy cause is in question. God hath smitten Israel, that Judah might fear. Though Israel play the Harlot, yet let not Judah offend. Ephraim is joined to Idols: let him alone. When the plague knocks at thy neighbors door, it tells thee, I am not far off. God's judgment on the Galileans, and men in Sil...e is thus applied by Christ, to draw others to repentance, lest they likewise perish. But what if thousands fall on the worldlings right hand, & ten thousands about him, he dreams of no danger: his own gold gives him more content, then all this terror. The Devil hath hood-wink'd him with gain; and so carries him quietly (like a hooded hawk) on his fist without baiting to hell. This Sermon is lost also.

3. By crosses on himself; and this Sermon comes a little nearer to him; for it concerns his feeling. The first was objected to his ear, the second to his eye, this last to his sense. But as the first Sermon he would not hear, the next not see, so this he will not feel: he is stricken, but he hath not sorrowed. He imputes all to his ill luck, that he loseth the game of his worldly desires: he looks no more up to heaven, then if there was none. God is not in all his thoughts. All these Sermons are lost.

But now God will be heard: He said; he spoke home; a word and a blow. He will be understood, though not stood under. Uociferat, vulnerat: per dictum, per ictum. This is such a Sermon, as shall not pass without consideration. So he preached to Pharaoh, by frogs, flies, locusts, murraine, darkness: but when neither by Moses vocal, nor by these actual lectures he would be melted, the last Sermon is a Red Sea, that drowns him and his army. The Tree is bared, manured, watered, spared in expectancie of fruits: but when none comes, the last sermon is the Axe: it must be hewn... down and cast into the fire. This kind of argument is unanswerable, and cannot be evaded. When God gives the Word, innumerable are the Preachers: if the lower voices will not be heard, death shall be feared. God knocks long by his Prophets, yea stands at the door himself; we will not open. But when this Preacher comes, he opens the door himself, and will not be denied entrance. All the day long have I stretched forth my hands unto thee; manum misericordiae, the hand of his mercy: it is not embraced. Now therefore he stretcheth out manum Iustitiae, the hand of his Justice; and this cannot be avoided. All that long Day is past, and now the worldlings Night comes. This night shall they require thy soul. The Rich man must hear this Sermon; there is no remedy. But GOD said. We are come from the Dooer, to

The Sufferer, or Patient;

And his title is, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Thou fool. What? If this had come from a poor Tenants mouth, it had been held a petty kind of blasphemy. Is the rich man only held the wise man, at all parts; and doth God change his title with such a contradiction? Is the worlds gold become dross? the rich Idol a fool? It is even a maxim in common acceptation; He is wise, that is rich. Dives and Sapiens are voces conuertibiles; Rich and wise are convertible terms, imagined to signify one thing. When the rich man speaks, all the people give (bare-headed) silence and attention. As if no argument could evince such a necessity, as the chief Priests to Judas; Tantum dabo: So much will I give thee. Tantus valor in quatuor syllabis. Such force is there in four syllables, and but two words. It is not only eloquence, but enchantment; and they that use it, prevail like Sorcerers; unless perhaps they light upon (multis e millibus vnum) a Peter, Thou and thy money be damned together. If he that can plead by the strongest arguments, be the wisest man, how doth God call the Rich man Fool? If a man should travel through all conditions of the World, what gates would not open to the rich man's knock!

In the Church surely Religion should have the strongest force; yet riches thrusts in her head even under Religions arm, and speaks her mind. Money once brought the greatest Preacher of the Gospel, even the Author of the Gospel, Christ himself, to be judged before an earthly Tribunal. Now the Servant is not greater then his Lord: no wonder if money plays the rex still, and disposeth places to men of the greatest worldly (not the best heavenly) gifts. For a gift prospereth which way soever it goeth. It were somewhat tolerable, if money did only hinder us from what we should have; but it wrings from us also what we have.

In the Courts of Justice, Law should rule: yet often money over-rules law and Court too. It is a lamentable complaint in the Prophecy of Isaiah: Judgment is turned away backward, and Justice standeth a far off: for truth is fallen in the street; and equity cannot enter. If there must be contention, judgment should go forward; and is it turned backward? Justice should lay a close ear to the cause of the distressed; and must it stand a far off? Truth is fallen in the street. O the mercy of God! in the street? Had it fallen in the wilderness, it had been less strange; but in the street, where everybody passeth by, and nobody take it up! miserable iniquity. Equity cannot enter; what, not equity? Are they not called Courts of Equity? and must that which gives them denomination, be kept out? Now all this perversion, eursion of Justice is made by money. This turneth Judgment to wormwood, poisons a good cause: or at least into vinegar; as wine that stands long, becomes sour. And you are beholding to that Lawyer, that will restituere rem, get you your right, though he doth it cunctando; by delays. There is many one of whom that old verse may be inverted, Talis homo nobis cunctando diminuit rem.

In the wars valor bears a great stroke, yet not so great as money. That Macedonian Monarch was wont to say, He would never fear to surprise that City, whose gates were but wide enough for an asse laden with gold to enter. How many Forts, Castles, Cities, Kingdoms hath that blown up, before ever gunpowder was invented! I need name no more. What quality bears up so brave a head, but money gives it the check-mate! It answereth all things, saith Solomon. A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but Money answereth all things. By all this it appears, that Riches is the greatest wisdom: but we must take out a writ, Ad melius inquirendum.

If wealth be wit, what means Christ here to call the Rich man Fool? yes, good reason. God hath made foolish the wisdom of this world. If God calls him so, he gets little to have the world esteem him otherwise. Not he that commendeth himself, nor whom the world commendeth, is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth. An ounce of credit with God, is worth a talent of men's praises. Frustra commendatur in terris, qui condemnatur in coelis. The world commends, but God condemns; which of these judgments shall stand?

I might here infer doctrinally, that all Covetous men be fools: and that in his censure, that cannot deceive, not be deceived. but I should prevent the issue of this Text, to say and show this now. I therefore content myself to say it now, to show it anon. It may be cavil'd, that Folly is rather a defect in the understanding, Covetousness in the affections. (For so they distinguish the soul, into the intellectual and affectionate part.) How then is this attribution of fool, proper to the worldling? The truth is, that the offense of the will & affections doth mostly proceed from the former error of the mind. Our desire, fear, love, hatred, reflecting on evil objects, arise from the deceived understanding. So there is a double error in the covetous man's mind, that makes him a fool.

1. He conceives not the sufficiency of God's help; and therefore leaves him, that will never leave his. He thinks God's treasury too empty to content him: he sees not his glory, and therefore will not trust him on bare promises. The good man sweetens his most bitter miseries with this comfort: The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance. But all God's wealth cannot satisfy him. O nimis auarus est, cui Deus non sufficit: He is unmeasurably covetous, whom God himself cannot satisfy. Here is one argument of his folly.

2. Having left God, who (rested on) would not have left him, he adheres to the world which cannot help him. The mind of man, like the Elephant, must have somewhat to lean upon: and when the Olive, Fig▪ tree, Vine are refused; he must put his trust under the shadow of the Bramble. When the Israelites had forsaken the King of Heaven, they make to themselves a Queen of heaven: Moses is gone, up, make us gods which shall go before us. Admiratur mundum, reijciens Dominum. He falls off from God, and falls in with the world. Here be both the parts of his folly: He hath committed two evils; forsaken the fountain of living waters, and hewed himself a broken cesterne. We see the Patient; let us come to

The Passion or suffering.

This is the point of war, which my Text sounds like a Trumpet, against all worldlings: This night shall thy soul be required of thee. Favor them in this, and they think all well; but in this of all they must not be favored. This suffering is aggravated by four circumstances

- Quid. What; the Soul
- A quo, of whom: of thee
- Quomodo, how: shall be required
- Qando, when; this night.

What.

The Soul, thy soul: not thy Barns, nor thy crop; neither the continent, nor content: not thy gods, which thou holdest dear; not thy body which thou prizest dearer; but thy soul, which should be to thee dearest of all. Imagine the whole conuexe of heaven for thy Barn, (and that were one large enough) and all the riches of the world thy grain, (and that were crop sufficient:) yet put all these into one balance, and thy soul into the other; and thy soul out-weighes, out-values the world. What is the whole world worth to him that loseth his soul? The Soul is of a precious nature.

One in substance like the Sun, yet of diverse operations. It is confined in the body, not refined by the body, but is often most active, when her Jailor is most dull. She is a careful hous-wife, disposing all well at home; conseruing all forms, and mustering them to her own serviceable use. The senses discern the outside, the circumstance, the husk of things: she the inside, the virtue, the marrow; resolving effects into causes; compounding, comparing, contemplating things in their highest sublimity. Fire turns coals into fire: the body concocts meat into blood; but the soul converts body into spirits; reducing their purest forms within her dimensiue lines. In man's composition there is a shadow of the Trinity. For to make up one man, there is an elementary body, a divine soul, and a firmamentall spirit. Here is the difference: In God there are three persons in one essence, in us three essences in one person. So in the Soul there is a trinity of powers, vegetable, sensitive, rational: the former would only be; the second be, and be well; the third be, be well, and before ever well. O excellent nature, in whose cabinet ten thousand forms may sit at once; which gives agitation to the body, without whom it would fall down a dead and inanimate lump of clay. This Soul shall be required.

Thy Soul which understands what delight is; and conceives a tickling pleasure in these covetous desires. But to satisfy thy soul, thou wouldst not be so greedy of abundance: for a little serves the body. If it have food to sustain it, garments to hide it, harbor to shelter it, liberty to refresh it, it is contented. And satiety of these things doth not (reficere, sed interficere) comfort, but confound it. Too much meat surfeits the body, too much apparel wearies it, too much wine drowns it: only Quod conuenit, conseruat. It is then the soul that requires this plenitude, and therefore from this plenitude shall the Soul be required.

Thy Soul, which is not made of a perishing nature, as the body; but of an everlasting substance: And hath by the eternity thereof a capableness of moreioy, or moresorrow: it must be ever in heaven, or euerin hell. This night must this Soul receive her doom; thy Soul shall be required.

That Soul which shall be the bodies perpetual companion, saving a short divorce by the hand of death in the grave: but afterwards ordained to an everlasting re-union. Whereas all worldly goods being once broken off by death, can never again be recovered. The soul shall return to the body, but riches to neither; and this Soul must be required.

This is a loss, a cross beyond all, that the worldlings imagination can give being to. How differ the wicked's thoughts dying, from their thoughts living! In the days of their peace they forget to get for the soul any good. Either it must rest it self on these inferior props, or despair of refuge. The eye is not scanted of lustful objects, the ear of melodious sounds, the palate of well rellishing viands. But the souls eye is not fastened on heaven, nor her ears on the Word of God: her taste savors not the bread of life; she is neither brought to touch, nor to smell on Christ's Vesture. Animas habent, quasi inanimata vivunt: regarding their flesh, as that pampard Roman did his; and their souls as he esteemed his horse: who being a spruce, neat, and fat Epicure, & riding on a lean scragling Iade, was asked by the Censors the reason. His answer was, Ego curo meipsum, stitius vero equum: I look to myself, but my man to my horse. So these worldlings look to their bodies, let who will take care of their souls.

But when this night comes, with what a price would they purchase again their Souls, so mortgaged to the devil for a little vanity! Now curare non volunt, then recuperare non valent. With what studious and artificial cost is the body adorned, whiles the beggarly soul lies in tottered rags! The flesh is pleased with the purest flower of the Wheat, and reddest blood of the grape, the soul is famished. The body is allowed liberty, even to licentiousness, the Soul is under Satan's lock and key, shackled with the fetters of ignorance and impiety. At this night's terror, to what bondage, hunger, cold, calamity, would they not subject their bodies; to free their souls out of that friendless and endless prison! Why cannot men think of this before it be too late? It will sound harshly in thine ear, O thou riotous or avarice worldling, when this Passing-bell rings; Thy soul shall be required. If the Prince should confiscate thy goods, which thou lovest so dearly, this news would strike cold to thy heart: but here thy soul is confiscated. The devil prizeth this most: he says, as the King of Sodom to Abraham, Da mihi animas, caetera sumetibi: Give me the Soul, take the rest to thyself.

Of whom.

Of thee; that hadst so provided for thy soul in another place: for though earth be a dungeon in regard of heaven, yet is it a Paradise in respect of hell. This world was his selected and affected home; and from thence shall death pluck him out by the ears.

If this news of the Souls requiring had come to a faithful Christian, he would have welcomed it; and judged it only the voice of the Feast-maker, finding him in the humble room of this base earth; Friend, sit up higher. Or that voice of heaven that spake to John; Come up hither. Sit no longer in the vale of tears, but ascend the mountain of glory. A trumpet calling him to Mount Tabor, where he shall be transfigured forever. This time would be to him, the non ultra of his joys and desires: he fought all his combat for this, that he might receive the end of his faith, the salvation of his soul. He is content to live here till God call him; but his desire is to be dissolved, and to be with Christ. Bonus vitam habet in patientia, mortem in desiderio. He is patient to live, but willing to die. To him the day of death is better than the day of his birth. Job cursed the day of his birth. And Jeremiah said, Let not the day wherein my Mother bare me be blessed. But blessed is the hour of death: So saith the Spirit; blessed are they that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors. Both Philosophers and Poets could so commend the happiness of this time, that they thought no good man truly happy till it saluted him.

Dicique beatus

Ante obitum nemo, supremaque funera debet.

The Ethnikes ignorant of a better life future, honor'd this with great solemnities, and kept prodigal feasts on their Birth-days; as Herod when he was served with the Baptists head for his second course. But the Christians were wont to celebrate the funeralls of the Martyrs; as if we did then only begin truly to live when we die. For though the soul is gotten when man is made, yet it is (as it were) borne when he dies: his body being the womb, and death the Midwife, that delivers it to glorious perfection. The good man may then well say, Mors mihi munus erit, with a Poet; or rather, Death shall be my advantage, with an Apostle. His happiest hour is, when In manus tuas Domine, he can say, Into thy hands, Lord, I commend my soul. For Anima nō amittitur, sed praemittitur.

But this Of thee is terrible. Thou that never preparedst for death; were at a league with hell, securely rocked asleep in the cradle of thy Barn, that didst put far away from thee the evil day, & given it a charge de non instando: thou that cryedst Peace, peace, on thee shall come sudden destruction: thou that saidst Soul be merry, to sorrow shall Thy soul be required. Thou that never esteemedst thy soul so dear as thy wealth, but didst set that after thy stables, which might have been equal to Angels; Thy soul. Thou that wert loath to hear of death, as having no hope of future bliss; that wouldest not give thy possession on earth, for thy expectation in heaven: as that French Cardinal, that said; He would not give his part in Paris for his part in Paradise. Of thee shall a soul be required. This point is sharp, and makes up his misery.

How. Required.

The original is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, They shall require it. This is such a requiring, as cannot be withstood. GOD requires thy obedience, thou deniest it: the poor require thy charity, thou deniest it: the World requires thy equity, thou deniest it. But when thy soul shall be required, there must be no denying of that; it cannot be withheld. Who shall require this soul?

Not God; he required it in thy life, to sanctify it, and save it, thou wouldest not hearken to him; now he will none of it. What should God doewith a drunken, profane, covetous, polluted, sensual soul? He offerd it the Gospel, it would not believe; the blood of Christ, it would not wash and be clean: it is foul and nastie, God requires it not. Or if he require it, it is to judge and condemn it, not to reserve and keep it. Recusabit Deus iam oblatum, quod negabas illi requisitum. God will refuse thy soul now offered, which thou deniedst him whiles he desired.

Not heaven; those chrystalline walks are not for muddy feet, nor shall lust-infected eyes look within those holy doors. In no wise shall enter into that City anything that defileth, or worketh abomination. There is a room without for such, Chap. 22. 15. a black room for black works. What should a worldling do in heaven? his heart so full of envy and covetise, would not brook another's felicity. If there be no gold there, he cares not for coming at it. But he shall be fitted; for as he requires not heaven, so heaven requires not him. It will spare him no place; not that it wants room to receive him, but because his heart wants room to desire it. The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. But because this general menace doth not terrify him, read his particular name in the bill of inditement, ver. 10. Nor the Covetous. Heaven is for men of an heavenly conversation. It was but Nebuchadnezzar's dream, Dan. 2. GOD will not set a golden head upon earthen feet; give the glory of heaven, to him that loves nothing but the baseness of this world.

The Angels require it not; those celestial Porters, that carry the souls of the Saints, as they did the soul of Lazarus, into the bosom of Abraham, have no commission for this man's soul. This rich man might be wheeled and whirled in a Coach, or perhaps Pope-like, be borne on men's shoulders; but the poor beggar, whose hope is in heaven though his body on earth, that could neither stand, go, nor sit, is now carried in the highest state, by the very Angels; when the other dying, hath no better attendance then devils.

And so if you ask, who then require his soul; since neither God, nor heauē, nor the blessed Angels will receive it; why, devils: they that have right to it by God's just decree, for his unjust obedience. God's justice so appoints it, for his sins have so caused it, Satan challengeth his due, his officers require it. Thou hast offended, oh miserable Cosmopolite, against thy great Sovereigns Law, Crown, and Majesty; now all thou hast is confiscate; thy goods, thy body, thy soul. Thou, whose whole desires were set to scrape all together, shalt now find all scattered asunder: thy close congestion meets with a wide dispersion. Everyone claims his own: the world thy riches, the worms thy carcass, the devil thy soul. Lust hath transported thine eyes, blasphemy thy tongue, pride thy foot, oppression thy hand, covetousness thy heart; now Satan requires thy soul. Not to give it ease, rest, or supply to the defects of thy insatiate desires; no, dabit in cruciatum, he shall deliver it over to torment.

When. This night.

In this dark Quando lie hid two fearful extremities; Sadness, and Suddenesse. It is not only said, In the night, but in This night.

1. In the Night; this aggravates the horror of his judgment. The night is a sad and uncomfortable time: therefore misery is compared to the Night, and joy said to come in the Morning. Pray that your flight be not in the night, saith Christ to the Jews; as if the dismal time would make desperate their sorrow. The night presents to the fantasie, which then lies most patient of such impressions, many deceiving and affrightful imaginations. Well then may a true (not fantasied) terror work strongly on this wretches heart, whiles the night helps it forward. All sickness is generally stronger by night, then by day: this very circumstance of season then aggravates his misery; making at once his grief stronger, himself weaker.

But what if we look further then the literal sense; and conceive by this night the darkness of his soul? Such a blindness as he brings on himself, though the day of the Gospel be broke round about him. The cause of night to a man, is the interposition of the earth betwixt him and the Sun. This worldling hath placed the earth, the thick and gross body of riches, between his eyes and the Sun of righteousness. And so shine the Sun never so clear, it is still night with him. There is light enough without him, but there is darkness too much within him. And then darkness must to darkness; inward to outward, as Christ calls it, utter darkness. He would not see whiles he might, he shall not see when he would. Though he shall forever have fire enough, yet it shall give him no light: except it be a little glimmering, to show him the torments of others, and others the torments of himself.

2. This night, the sadness is yet increased by the sodainnesse. It will be fearful, not only to be surprised in the night, but in that night when he doth not dream of any such matter; when there is no fear, nor suspicion of apprehension. His case is, as with a man that having rested with a pleasing slumber, and been fed with a golden dream; suddenly waking finds his house flaming about his ears, his wife and children dying in the fire, robbers ransacking his coffers, and transporting his goods, all lovers forsaking, no friend pitying, when the very thrusting in of an arm might deliver him. This rich man was long asleep, and been delighted with pretty wanton dreams, of enlarged barns, and plentiful haruests; (as all worldly pleasures are but waking dreams) now he starts up on the hearing of this Soul-knell, and perceives all was but a dream; and that indeed he is everlastingly wretched.

The suddennes increaseth the misery. The rich man hath no time to dispose his goods, how shall he do with his soul? If in his health, wealth, peace, strength; succoured with all the helps of nature, of opportunity, preaching of the Gospel, counsel of ministers, comfort of friends, he would not work out his salvation: what shall he do when extreme pangs deny capableness to receive them, and shortness of his time prevents their approaching to him? He hath a huge bottom of sin to vnrauell by repentance, which he hath been many years winding up by disobedience: now a great work, and a little time do not well agree. This sudden call is fearful, This night shall thy soul be required. Yet before I part from this point, let me give you two notes.

1. There is mercy in God, that it is hac nocte, this night; not this hour, not this moment. Hac nocte was sudden, but hoc momento had been more sudden; and that this larger exhibition of time is allowed, was God's mere mercy, against the worldlings merit. He that spared Nineveh many forties of years, will yet allow her forty days. He that forbore this wretch many days, receiving no fruit worth his expectation, will yet add a few hours. God in the midst of justice remembers mercy: much time he had received, and abused; yet he shall have a little more. When the Lord's hand is lifted up to strike him, yet he gives him some lucida interualla monitionis, warning before he lets it down. But let not the worldling presume on this: sometimes, not an hour, not a minute is granted. Sword, Palsy, Apoplexy, Impostume makes quick dispatch: and there is no space given to cry for mercy. But what if a paucity of hours be permitted? ancient wounds are not cured in haste, the plaster must lie long upon them. There was one man so saved, to take away desperation: and but one so saved, to bar presumption. Conversion at the eleventh hour is a wonder, at the twelfth a miracle. All thieves do not go from the gallhouse to glory, because one did; no more then all Asses speak, because God opened the mouth of one. Flatter not thyself with hope of time. Nemo sibi promittat, quod non promittit Euangelium. Let no man promise himself a larger patent, then the Gospel hath sealed to him.

2. The day of the wicked turns at last to a night. After the day of vanity, comes the night of judgment. Now is the time, when the rich man's Sun sets; his light and his delight is taken from him. His last sand is run out; the clock hath ended his latest minute, his night is come. His day of pleasure was short, his night of sorrow is everlasting. Extremum gaudij luctus occupat. Vexation treads on the heels of vanity. Mans life is compared to a Day.

This day to some may be distinguished into twelve hours. The first gives us natiuity; even in this hour there is sin; an original pravity, indisposition to good, proneness to evil. Secondly, Infancy; God now protects the cradle. Thirdly, Childhood; and now we learn to speak and to swear together; the sap of iniquity begins to put out. Fourthly, Tender age, wherein toys and gawdes fill up our scene. Fifthly, Youth: this is a madding, a gadding time. Remember not the sins of this time, prays David: their remembrance is bitter, says Job. Sixthly, Our high noon. God that could not be heard before for the loud noise of vanity, now looks for audience, for obedience. Seventhly, This is full of cares & crosses; the dugs of the world taste bitter; it is full time that this hour should wean us. Eighthly, Brings us to a sense of mortality, we feel our blood decaying. Ninthly, Our bodies go crooked and stooping, to put us in mind that they are going to their original earth. Tenthly, We are even as dying: we do die by degrees: our senses first fail us, our eyes are dim like old Isaac's, our ears deaf, our taste dull: our grinders are done, our stilts unable to support us. Eleventhly, We are a burden to our selves, to our friends: we long for death, if any hope of a better life hath possessed our hearts. The twelfth hour it comes. Which of these hours pass over us without God's mercies, without our voluntary unthankfulness; unless those first hours wherein our ignorance is incapable of such observance? All thy day long have I stretched out my hands unto thee, saith God. If none of these hours reclaim us, our day is spent, and the night comes; that night wherein no man can work; actively to comfort, though passively he work forever in torment. I know, that God cuts many one short of most of these hours, and often shuts up his day-light, before he comes to his noon. But howsoever man pass from Infancy to childhood, from childhood to youth, from youth to age: yet senectutem nemo excedit; none can be more then old. Though tam senex nemo, quin putet se annum posse vivere; no man is so old, but still he thinks he may live another year. And therefore lightly the older, the more covetous; and Quo minus viae restat, eo plus viatici qu...ritur: the less journey men have, the more provision they make.

God allows this liberal time to some: but what enemies are we to our selves, that of all these twelve hours, allow our selves not one! Many post off their conversion from day today, sending Religion afore them to thirty, and then putting it off to forty; and not pleased yet to overtake it, promise it entertainment at threescore: at last death comes and allows not one hour. In youth men resolve to allow themselves the time of age to serve God: in age they shuffle it off to sickness; when sickness comes, care to dispose their goods, loathness to die, hope to escape martyrs that good thought; and their resolution still keeps before them the length of Gracious street at least. If we have but the lease of a Farm for twenty years, we make use of the time and gather profit. But in this precious Farm of Time we are so ill husbands, that our Lease comes out, before we are one pennyworth of grace the richer by it. Take heed; it is dangerous trifling out thy good day, lest thou hear this message in the evening; This night shall thy soul be required of thee:

Then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided? This is the Question.

It were somewhat if thou mightest perpetually enjoy them thyself: if thou couldst fetch down eternity to them. As those in the 49. Psalm; whose inward thought is, that their houses shall continue forever, and their dwellingplaces to all generations: they call their lands after their own names. But there is a Quamdiù, and a Quousque. How long! Hab. 2. How long? Thou that lodest thyself with thick clay? How far? Esa. 14. How far? Thou that madest the earth to tremble, and didst shake the Kingdoms. Here is a Non vltra to both: thy power is confined, thy time is limited: both thy latitude and extension are briefed up; heeres thy period; a full stop in the midst of the sentence. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Whose shall those things be which thou hast provided? He that should read thy history (being ignorant of thy destiny) and find so plentiful a happiness in the first page of the book: grounds so fertile, cattle so prospering, house so furnished, possibilities stro... king thy hopes, hopes milking thy desires, desires dancing to the tune of thy pleasures; promises of larger barns, more opulent fruits; and all this with ease, yea with hearts-ease: Soul be merry: and coming now to the end of the page, but not of the sentence; turning over a new leaf, thinking there to read the maturity and perfection of all, should find a blank, an abrupt period, an unlooked for stop, would surely imagine, that either destiny was mistaken, or else some leaves were torn out of the book. Such a Cuius erunt haec omnia would be a terrible dash in a story of happiness so fairly written, and promising so good an Epilogue. But here is his end, you must read him no further: He, whom you have seenthis day, you shall see him again no more forever. Whose shall these things be, O worldling? Were thy grounds as Eden, and thy house like the Court of Jehoiakim: yet dost thou think to reign, because thou closest thyself in Cedar? no; aduenit finis t...us; Thy end is come; Whose shall these things be?

It were something yet, if thy children might enjoy these riches. But there is a man that hath no child; yet is there no end of his labor, neither is his eye satisfied with wealth. And he saith not, For whom do I travel, and bereavemy soul of this good? The prodigal would be his own heir and Executor: but this covetous man bequeaths neither legacy to himself, nor to any known Inheritour. The other desires to see en end of all his substance: this man to see only the beginning. He hunts the world full cry, yet hath no purpose to overtake it: he lives behind his wealth, as the other lives beyond it. But suppose he hath children, and then though he famish himself to feed them fat; though he be damned, yet if his son may be made a Gentleman, there is some satisfaction. But this Cuius erunt is a scattering word, and of great uncertainty. Whose shall they be? perhaps not thy children's. They say, Happy is that son, whose father goes to the Devil; but thou mayest go to the Devil, and yet not make thy son happy. For men make heritages, but God makes heirs. He will wash away the unholy seed, and cut off the generation of the wicked. Solomon had a thousand wives and concubines, and consequently many children; yet at last he wants one of his seed to sit upon the throne of David, or to bear rule in Judah: and S. Luke derives Christ from Nathan the younger brother. For thus saith God of C...oniah, whom he calls Coniah; cutting short at once his name, his life, his hope of posterity. Write this man childless. It often so falls out, that to a man exceeding wealthy, is denied a fuccessour of his own loins. Let him have children, he is not sure those children shall possess his riches. But those riches perishby evil travel: and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand. A scatterer succeeds a gatherer: auari heres dissipans: the father loved the world too well, and the son cares not for it. The sire was all for the rake, and the son is all for the pitchforke. So Whose shall these be? even his that will one day pity the poor. He will love the poor so well, that he will not rest til he be poor with them for company. This is the portion of the wicked,& the heritage which oppressors shall receive of the Almighty. If their children be multiplied, it is for the sword, and their offspring shall not be satisfied with bread.

Children are a great plea for Covetousness, for Oppression. Art thou covetous because thou hast children? Remember to make Christ one of thy children. If thou hast one, make him the second: if two, make him the third; if three, the fourth: how many soever thou hast, let Christ be one; let the poor have a childes part. This is the way to get a blessing to all the rest: when Christ is made a brother to thy children, and hath a legacy bequeathed him; he will bless the portions of the other; the seed of the righteous shall not beg their bread. It is a sweet verse of the Psalm, worthy of observation, as it is full of comfort. The good man is ever merciful, and lendeth, and his seed is blessed. The world thinks, the more a man giveth away, the less should be left to his children: but the Lord witnesseth otherwise: let a man lend to the borrower, give to the beggar, be merciful to the distressed, and this is the way to make his Seed blessed. Charitable works do not hinder the children's wealth, but further it: what thou givest to the poor, will be a sure vndecaying portion to thy posterity. Duplicatum erit filijs iusti, quod iustus dedit filijs Dei. GOD will double that to thy children, which thou hast given to his children. Men flatter themselves, and cozen their consciences, with a tolerableness of usury; when monies be put out for their children's stocks. Alas, saith a man, I can leave my children but a little: but by that they come to age of discretion to use it, it will be iollily increased. I may be quickly gone, & when I am dead, they have no skill to employ it; I will therefore safe-bind it for them, by good bonds with allowance of interest.

God often in the Scriptures hath promised to be a Father of the fatherless, and to provide for those, whom the Parents faith have left to his protection. By this promise did Christ commend himself to his Disciples, I will not leave you Orphans: we translate it comfortless, the original is Orphans, or fatherless children. The Lord relieueth the fatherless, and the widow. You may read 2. Kin. 4. that God would work a miracle; rather than a poor widow, with her two fatherless children, should want. Hath God made himself their Guardian, and must their means be secured by usurious contracts? Surely GOD hath just reason to take this the most unkindly of all the rest. Leave not thy children the inheritance of thy sin, turn not the providence of God from them by iniquity, who hath promised to protect them, if committed to him. Loe the wit of a worldly man! he takes thought to make his children rich, and yet takes the only course to undo them. No casualty shall fall upon their stocks, (so they plot) by an act of God or man: but here certain loss falls presently upon their souls; and a final ruin shall impartially at last consume their estates. For God will blast the stocks and branches, that are planted in the moorish and muddy ground of usury. The dependence on God is abandoned, and how justly may the Lord forsake them, that forsake him! Neither is this sin only damnable to the Parents, but also dangerous to the children: who are by this means died in the very wool of their youth, with the scarlet wickedness of Usury.

There was a Devil, whom the Disciples of Christ could not cast out: and when Christ expelled him, the spirit tare the man, and he fell on the ground wallowing and foaming. Christ then asked, How long is it ago since this came unto him? To which the Father answered; Of a child. If Usury be hardly thrown out of the affections, the wonder is little; seeing that devil hath possessed him of a child. The new mortar, wherein Garlike hath been stamped, will not a great while lose the smell. It is a fearful advantage, that thou givest Satan over thy children, when thou bringest them up in Usury.

As much might be said for Oppression; thy depopulations pull down the Country, that thou mayest build up thy posterity. Which way canst thou turn thine eyes from beholding the infatuation of such hopes? One generation is thus raised up high; and the next comes down as low, even to contempt and beggary.

But perhaps if thou hast no children, yet thou hast a brother. There is one alone, and there is not a second: yea, he hath neither child nor brother, yet is there no end of his labor. Say thou hast a brother, yet is not Christ thy brother in Heaven, dearer to thee than any son of thy mother? Is not he that hath adopted thee coheire to his eternal purchase, an inheritance of glory, worthy of some part of thy earthly possessions? Never brother did so much for thee as he hath done. Nature made a man thy brother in thy Parents blood; he made thee his brother by his own blood. Remember then his needy brethren, and in him thine. He is nearest in blood, that is dearest in good: but if thou hast any faith, none did thee ever so much good as Christ. And to take away all plea from the heart of uncharitableness, Christ calls the poor his Brethren, affirms their releeuers Blessed, and invites them to an everlasting kingdom. In as much as ye have done it to the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. But thou hast a brother in the flesh: wilt thou therefore covet, extort, oppress, and so go to hell for thy brother? It is ill done in any to divert amorem fratris, in odium sui; the love of his brother into hate against himself. Yet is not this all, but when thou hast purposed most for thy brother, God shall disappoint him of all. Whose shall these things be? no not thy brothers. To the sinner the Lord gives travail, to gather and to heap up: but at last he bestows that heap of treasure upon him that is good before God. Thou bequeathest it to thy brother, but God dispose•...h it to his children. But thou hast no brother; Yet thou hast kindred and friends; and to help thy Couzens to wealth, thou wilt cozen thy own soul. Alas! it is a mystery of knowledge, to discern friends. Wealth maketh many friends: they are friends to the wealth, not to the wealthy. They regard not Qualis sis, but Quantus: not how good thou art, but how great. They admire thee to thy face, but inwardly consider thee only as a necessary evil, yea a necessary devil: and when thou diest, are ready to sing thy soul a Dirige to hell. If thine eyes be ever opened, thou wilt hate such suborners of bastard thoughts to thy heart: as a recovered man, having drunk a loathsome potion in his sickness, doth ever after hate the very cruse it was brought him in. But say, thy friends stick truer to thee, and one holds thy aking head, another runs for Physic, a third, by helping thee to change sides, seeks to mitigate thy pains; yet still thou complainest of vnremedied torments. Oh then hadst thou not better make the God of comfort thy friend; who would neither be wanting in his presence, nor scanting in his consolations?

Worldly friends are but like hot water, that when cold weather comes, are soonest frozen. Like Cuckooes, all Summer they will sing a scurvy note to thee, but they are gone in July at furthest: sure enough before the fall. They flatter a rich man, as we feed beasts, till he be fat, and then feed on him. A true friend reproves thee erring, though perhaps not suddenly. Iron is first heat, then beaten: first let him be heat with due and deserved praise for his good, then cool and work him with reprehension for his evil. As Nurses when their children are fallen, first take them up, and speak them fair; and chide or correct them afterwards. These friends love not thy souls good, but thy bodies goods: let them not carry away thy heart from Christ. But if thou so resoluest, that these friends shall enjoy thy riches: yet God saith, Cuius erunt, whose shall they be? Thy kindred or friends shall not eat the grapes of thy planted vineyard: no, a stranger shall eat thereof. God giveth not thee power to eat thereof; no nor him thou desirest; but a stranger eateth it. Dabitur digniori, it shall be given to one good in God's sight. Perhaps to such a man's posterity, whom thou now scornest. The wicked heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay. They may prepare it: but the just shall put it on, & the innocent shall divide the silver.

Now see thy folly, O covetous Churl, whose desires were all set on a Nunquam satis; Whose shall those things be? Not whom thou chooseth, but whom God appointeth. Thy children are God's charge, if thou wilt faithfully trust him with them: otherwise, couldst thou bind thy lands, and bequeath thy goods; settle thy whole estate, so sure as either strength of Law, or wit of Lawyers can devise, yet Cuius erunt; whose shall these things be? Lo, now thou hast enough: thy head aches, thy conscience pricks, death requires thy body, Satan thy soul: couldst thou not wish that thy Barns had been less, and thy charity more? That as GOD blessed thy store, so thou hadst returned some liberal testimony of thankfulness to his Church & poor again? Especially, when neither thyself, nor thy Assigns shall enjoy these things. Whose shall they be?

All these particulars suruaied, give the covetous Cosmopolite three brands. He is branded in his Soul, in his riches, in his good name. In his Soul, Thy Soul shall be fetched away. In his riches, Whose shall these things be which thou hast provided? In his name, Thou fool.... Whereupon we may justly infer this Conclusion; as the

Sum

Of all: that abundant wealth can bring no good, either to Soul, Body, or Name. Man is said to have three lives; Spiritual, Corporal, and Civil, as the Lawyers call it: the life of his good name. Neither to this, nor to the life of his Soul or Body, can multitude of riches confer any good. This Text shall prove it in all the particulars.

1. To the Soul can opulency procure no benefit. All Christians know that good for the Soul is the passion and merits of Christ; faith to apprehend these; repentance to mortify sins: sanctification to give us celestial lives; and salvation to glorify our persons. But can any of these be bought with money? Thou and thy money perish together, that thinkest the gifts of God may be purchased with money. God will not barter away his graces (as the Indians their gold) for thy gawdes and rattles. He will not take the morgage of a Lordship for the debt thou owest him. The smoke of thy sacrifice smells never the sweeter, because thou art clothed in silks; or canst sit down to tell thy Michaelmasse thousands. Thy adulteries cannot be commuted for in heaven, nor thy usuries be answered by a fine before the Tribunal of the highest. Thou mayest as soon and easily mount up to heaven with wings of lead, as by feathers of wealth. Indeed they can do a man as much good in distress of conscience, as to have his head bound with a wet cloth in a cold morning can cure the headache. If wealth could keep a man from hell, how few rich men would be damned? But he is not sanctior quiditior; nor is salvation vendible to a full purse. The doctrine of Rome may affirm it; but the decree of God will not afford it. This Cosmopolite had barns and bars, but these cannot hedge in his Soul; that is required.

2. To the body perhaps there is some more expectation of good; but no more success. Thou art anguished; will thy wealth purchase health? Sleep is denied thy senses, and after many changed sides and places, thou canst find no rest: go now, empty thy coffers, and try what slumber the charms and chimes of gold can ring thee. Thy stomach loathes meat; all thy riches are not sufficient sauce, to get thee an appetite. Couldst thou drink Cleopatra's draught, it will not ease thy head-ache. The Physician will take thy money, and give thee Physic: but what Physic will give thee infallible health?

But the rich man hath a fire, when the poor sits cold: the rich an harbor, attendance, and delicate provision, when the poor wants both house and home, meat and money, garments and company. For though riches gather many friends; the poor is separated from his neighbors. No part of my Sermon hath denied, but the competency of these earthly things is a blessing: neither dare I infer, that the want of these is a curse; for the best have wanted them, not the Savior of men himself excepted. But what is this to abundance? Is not he as warm that goes in russet, as another that russles and ruffles in his silks? Hath not the poor laborer as sound a sleep on his flock-bed, or pad of straw, as the Epicure on his downebed, with his rich curtains and coverings? Doth not Quiet lie oftener in Cottages, then in glorious manners? The sleep of a laboring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep. And for a good appetite, we see the toiling servant feed sauourly of one homely dish, when his surfeited master looks lothingly on his far-fetched, and dearebought dainties: sitting down to his second meal in a quandary whether he should eat of his best dish or nothing: his stomach being such a coward, that it dares not fight with a chicken. This Gentleman envies the happiness of his poor Hind, and would be content to change states with him, upon condition he might change stomachs. It is not then the plenitude, but competency of these things, that affords even the rich content. So that a man's estate should be like his garment, rather fit then long: for too much troubles him; and the satiety of these earthly riches doth rather kill, then conserve the Body.

3. The name perhaps hath some hope of luxurious share in this abundance, and thinks to be swelled into a Colossus; over-straddling the world. Indeed here's the Center: for I persuade myself, few worldlings can propound to themselves any well-grounded expectation of good to their souls, or help to their bodies, by their accumulation of treasures. Only in his nomen potius quàm omen quaeritur; there is more hope of a great name, then of good content. And now for the Name; what's the event? Come his riches ill, his credit is the Commons curse. Populus sibilat, the world rails at him living; and when he dyes, no man says, It is pity; but It is pity he died no sooner. They shall not lament for him, with Ah Lord, or Ah his glory. But he shall be buried with the burial of an Ass; that hath lived the life of a Wolf. His glorious Tomb erected by his enriched heir, shall be saluted with execrations: and the passengers by will say, Here lies the Devils Promoter. Come his wealth well, yet what is Credit, or how may we define a good Name? Is it to have a Pageant of crindges & faces acted to a taffaty Iacket? To be followed by a world of hang-byes; and howted at by the reeling multitude, like a bird of Paradise, stuck full of py'd feathers? To be dawb'd over with court-mortar, flattery; and set up as a Butte, for whores, panders, drunkards, cheaters, to shoot their commendations at? To be licked with a sycophants rankling tongue; and to have poor men crouch to him, as little dogs use to a great mastiff? Is this a good name? Is this credit? Indeed these things may give him a great sound: as the clapper doth to a bell; makes it have a great sound, but the bell is hollow. They are empty gulls, whose credit is nothing else but a great noise, forced by these lewd clappers. A rich worldling is like a great Cannon, and flatterers praises are the powder that charge him; whereupon he takes fire, and makes a great report; but instantly goes off, goes out in stench. He may think himself the better, but no wise man, no good man doth: and the fame that is derived from fools, is infamy.

That which I take to be a good Name, is this: Laudari a Lande dignis; to be well esteemed of in Christian hearts; to find reverence in good men's souls. Bonum est laudari, sed praestat esse laudabilem. It is a good thing to be praised, but it is a better to be praise-worthy. It is well that good men commend thee in their consciences, but it is better when thy good conscience can commend thee in it self. Happy is he, whose own heart doth not condemn him. This credit wealth cannot procure, but grace: not goods, but goodness. The poorest man serving God with a faithful heart, finds this approbation in sanctified affections, when golden asses go without it. I confess, many rich men have had this credit, but they will never thank their riches for it. Their greatness never helped them to this name, but their goodness. They have honored the Lord, and those the Lord hath promised that he will honor. So that all the reputation which wealth can procure a man in God's judgment, is but Thou fool. In that parabolical history, Luk. 16. mention is made of a rich man, but none of his name; as if it were unworthy to stand in the Lord's book. Here is all the credit of the wicked; their very memories shall rotte; and their great Name shall either not be remembered, or remembered with detestation.

Loe now the benefit of worldly wealth; & the brands which disfigure the Soul, Body, Name of covetous men. For his Reputation, Folly challengeth it: for his riches, uncertainty devours it: for his Soul, Satan claims it. He is gone in all respects; and now there is nothing left of him, but his infamy in the thoughts of men, his goods in the keeping of the world, his body in the prison of the grave, and his soul in the hand of hell. Abijt, he is gone: a tempest hath stole him away in the night; saith Job. The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered: he openeth his eyes, and he is not. Therefore it is said, Luk. 16. There was a certain rich man; Erat, non est, there was, there is not, he is now gone. I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green Bay tree. Yet he passed away, and he is not: yea I sought him, but he could not be found.

To conclude, it may yet be objected; that though much wealth can procure to soul, body, or name, no good; yet it may be an antidote to prevent some evil, or a medicine to rid them all of some malady. The insufficiency of such a promise in riches, is punctually also confuted in this Text. For neither the Rich man's Soul, body, nor estate is secured by his abundance. Infernal spirits fetch his soul: temporal men possess his wealth: eternal censures blast his good name: and the worms prey upon his carcass. What evil then can riches either prevent or remove from man?

1. Not from the soul: all evil to this, is either Poenae, or Culpa; of sin, or of punishment for sin.

For Sin, what vice is euacuated by riches? Is the wealthy man humbled by his abundance? no, he is rather swelled into a frothy pride; conceiting himself more then he is, or at least imagining, that he is either ( < in non-Latin alphabet > ) or ( < in non-Latin alphabet > , ) the man or somebody. And as pride is radix omnis peccati; the root of all sin; so riches is the root of pride, Diuitiarum vermis superbia, saith S. Augustine. When the sum of prosperity heats the dunghill of riches, there is engendered the snake of pride. Wealth is but a quill, to blow up the bladder of high-mindedness. Saint Paul knew this inseparable consequence, when he charged Timothy, to Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded. And do we think that the heat of malice will be slaked by riches? no, it is fired rather into combustion; and now bursts forth into a flame, what before was forced to lie suppressed in the embers of t...e heart. Is any man the more continent for his abundance? No. Stat quaeuis multo meretrix mercabilis auro: whores are led to hell with golden threads. Riches is a warm nest, where lust securely sits to hatch all her unclean brood. From fullness of bread, the Sodomites fall to unnatural wantonness. Ceres et Liber pinguescunt Venerem. Oppression is not abated by multiplication of riches; but rather Longiorem & magis strenuam reddit manum; gives it a longer and stronger arm. For as the poor cannot withstand, so the rich will not restrain the tyranny of great oppressors. They covet fields, and take them by violence: how? Because their hand hath power.

For Punishment, what security is in money? Doth the Devil balk a Lorldly house, as if he were afraid to come in? Dares he not tempt a rich man to lewdness? Let experience witness, whether he dare not bring the highest Gallant both to sin & shame. Let his food be never so delicate, he will be a guest at his table; and perhaps thrust in one dish to his feast, drunkenness. Be his attendance never so complete, yet Satan will wait on him too. Wealth is no charm to conjure away the Devil: such an amulet & the Popes holy-water, are both of a force. Inward vexations forbear not their stings, in awe of riches. An evil conscience dares perplex a Saul in his Throne, and a Judas with his purse full of money. Can a silken sleeve <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> keep a broken arm from aking? Then may full Barns keep an evil conscience from vexing. And doth hell fire favor the Rich man's limbs more then the poor's? Hath he any servant there, to fan cold air upon his tormented joints? Nay, the nameless Dives goes from soft linen to sheets of fire, from purple robes to flames of the same color, purple flames: from delicate morsels, to want a drop of water. Herod, though a King on earth, when he comes to that smokie vault, hath not a cushion to sit on, more then the meanest Parasite in his Court. So poor a defense are they for an oppressed Soul.

2. Nor from the body can riches remove any plague. The lightning from heaven may consume us, though we be clad in gold: the vapors of earth choke us, though perfumes are still in our nostrils: and poison burst us, though we have the most virtual Antidotes. What judgment is the poor subject to, from which the rich is exempted? Their feet do as soon stumble, and their bones are as quickly broken. Consumptions, Fevers, Gowtes, Dropsyes, Pleurisies, Palseys, Surfeits; are household guests in rich men's families, and but mere strangers in cottages. They are the effects of superfluous fare and idleness; and keep their Ordinary at rich men's tables. Anguish lies oftener on a Down-bed, then on a pallet: diseases wait upon luxury, as close as luxury upon wealth. These frogs dare leap into King Pharaohs chamber, and forbear not the most sumptuous palace. But money can buy medicines: yet what sick man would not wish, that he had no money, on condition that he had no malady. Labor and moderate diet are the poor man's friends, & preserve him from the acquaintance of Master Doctor, or the surfeited bills of his Apothecary. Though our worldling here promiseth out of his abundance, meat, drink, and mirth: yet his body grows sick, and his soul sad: he was before careless, and he is now cureless: all his wealth cannot retain his health, when God will take it away.

3. But what shall we say to the Estate? Euills to that are poverty, hunger, thirst, weariness, seruillitie: We hope wealth can stop the invasion of these miseries. Nothing less: it rather mounts a man, as a Wrastler does his combatant, that it may give him the greater fall. Riches are but a sheeld of Wax, against a sword of power. The larger state, the fairest mark for misfortune to shoot at. Eagles catch not after flies: nor will the Hercules of ambition lift up his clubbe, but against these Giants. There is not in poverty that matter, for a Great man's covetous fire to work upon. If Naboth had had no Vineyard to prejudice the command of Ahab's Lordship, he had saved both his peace and life. Violent winds blow through a hollow willow, or over a poor shrub, and let them stand: whiles they rend a pieces Oaks and great Cedars, that oppose their great bodies to the furious blasts. The tempests of oppressing power meddle not with the contemptible quiet of poor Laborers, but shake up rich men by the very roots; that their blasted fortunes may be fit timber for their own building. Who stands so like an eye-sore in the tyrannous •...ight of Ambition, as the wealthy? Imprisonment, restraint, banishment, confiscation, fining, and confining are Greatnesses Intelligencers; instruments and stairs to climb up by into rich men's possessions. Wealth hath four hindrances from doing good to the State.

1. God usually punisheth our over-loving of riches with their loss. He thinks them unworthy to be rivals with himself: for all height and strength of love is his due. So that the ready way to lose wealth, is to love it. Et delectatio perdet.

2. The greatness of state, or of affection to it, opens the way to ruin. A full and large sails gives vantage to a Tempest: this pulled down, the danger of the gust, and of shipwreck by it, is eluded: and it passeth by with only waves, roaring as if it was angry for being thus prevented. He that walks on plain ground, either doth not fall, or riseth again with little hurt. He that climbs high towers, is in more danger of falling; and if he fall, of breaking his neck.

3. We see the most rich Worldlings live the most miserably; slaued to that wealth, whereof they keep the key under their girdles. Esuriunt in popina, as we say, they starve in a Cooks shoppe. A man would think, that if wealth could do any good, it could surely do this good; keep the owner from want, hunger, sorrow, care: No, even these evils riches do not avoid, but rather force on him. Whereof is a man covetous, but of riches? when these riches come, you think he is cured of his covetousness: no, he is more covetous. Though he hath received desiderium animi, yet he keeps still animum desiderij. The desires of his mind granted, abolish not his mind of desires. So a man might strive to extinguish the Lamp, by putting oil into it; but this makes it burn more. And as it is with some, that thirstily drink harish and ill-brewed drinks, have not their heat hereby allayed, but inflamed: So this worldlings hot eagerness of riches is not cooled, but fired by his abundance.

4. That which makes a man easy to hit, makes also his wound grievous. The Poet tells us, that when Codrus his house burns, (a little cottage in the Forest) he stands by and warms himself at the flame: he knows that a few sticks, straw and clay, with a little labor, can rebuild him as good a Tabernacle. But if this accident light upon the Usurers house, distraction seizeth him withal: he cries out of this Chamber, and that chest, of his Closet and Cabinet, of his bonds & mortgages, money and plate; and is so much the more impatient, as he had more to lose.

In a word, here is all the difference betwixt the rich and poor: the poor man would be rich while he lives, and the rich would be poor when he dies. For it is small grief to leave hunger, cold distress, bondage, hard lodging, and harder fare: but to forsake full Barns, full purses, music, wine, junkets, soft beds, beauteous women, and these lust-tickling delights; and to go with death to the Land of forgetfulness, this is the terror.

I end then as Paul concludes his counsel to rich men, Lay up for yourselves a good foundation against the time to come, that you may lay hold on eternal Life.

THE BAD LEAVEN: OR, THE CONTAGION OF SINNE.

GALAT. 5. 9.

A little Leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

THIS Epistle was written with S<sup>t</sup>. Paul's own hand: chap. 6. 11. Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with my own hand. It is for quality excellent, for quantity large. He wrote not so long an Epistle to any other Church with his own hand. Indeed he wrote a letter to Philemon with his own hand, verse. 19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand: but it was short. He wrote longer Epistles to the Romans and Corinthians, but not with his own hand, but by Scribes. We have cause therefore to regard it more: as his pains were greater in writing, so let our diligence be greater in observing.

The main purpose of it is to discover: 1. That ill conjunction of Moses and Christ, the ceremonies of the Law, with the sanctimony of the Gospel. 2. The free Grace and Justification by the blood of Christ without the works of the Law. In this the Galatians had received a beginning, but now had admitted a reciduation. For this cause the Apostle chides, verse. 7. Ye did run well: who did hinder you that you should not obey the Truth? Where there is a Concession, and a Conuiction: a step; and a stop. The Concession or Step, ye did run well. The Conuiction or Stop; Who did hinder you that you should not obey the truth?

In the former he compares Christianity to a race: all men must first be viatores in this valley of tears, before they can be Assess...res, and sit with Christ in his kingdom of glory. Only as it agrees with a Race in many things; as labor, it's no idle thing to be a Christian; shortness, it is a Race, the perplexity is recompensed with the brevity: continuance, the runner must hold out the last step, if he will obtain the prize. So there are some differences. 1. In other races many run, only one wins the goal: but in this all that run faithfully, shall reign triumphantly. Though they cannot run so fast as others, nor so far as others; yet even they that came at the eleventh hour into the Vineyard, received they penny, so well as they that came at the third. For the Lord regards not Quantum, but ex quanto: not how much, but how well. What ever hour they are called, let them spend the aftertime in a zealous diligence. 2. In other races one hinders another, but in this journey one helps another. The more the merrier: no envy or grudging, either in the way or the goal. Dispar gloria singulorum, sed communis latitia omnium. There may be different glory of some, yet there is a common joy of all. Every good man is a spurr to his brother. Peter and John ran to Christ's Sepulcher: John out-ran Peter unto the grave, Peter out-went John into the grave. But we run together unto Christ's Throne; some come before, some after, all meet in the Communion of Saints. 3. In other races the runner obtains a prize that shall perish; all the runners here get an incorruptible crown. They run for a little prize, a little praise; we for eternal glory. Run we then cheerfully; behold, a kingdom lies at the stake. God give us all eyes of faith to see it, and hearts of obedience to run to it, through the power of Jesus Christ.

In the latter the Apostle may seem to put a superfluous question; Who did hinder you? For there are many adversaries. As first Satan, the General of that damned crew that hinder our passage to heaven. Paul excuseth himself to the Thessalonians: We would have come unto you once and again, but Satan hindered us. Zach. 3. Joshua the high Priest stood before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan stood at his right hand to resist him. Where God hath his Church, Satan hath his chapel. So also wicked men; such as have taken the Devils oath of Allegiance. What the Devil cannot do immediately by himself, he does mediately by his Instruments. To err Humanum, is the weakness of a man; but to seduce diabolicum, is the part of a Devil. It is ill to play the woman, worse to play the beast, worst of all to play the Devil. But what special hinderers the Apostle means, we shall have precise occasion in some future passages to demonstrate.

Only I must not omit, that the Apostle gives a direct resolution by way of negation, verse. 8. This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you. God is no ways the Author of error and sin. He that wills the death of no sinner, will not lead him into the ways of destruction. Indeed he suffes Satan to temptal, but to a diverse purpose: the good to try them, the reprobate to destroy them. The temptations of the godly are for their instruction; of the wicked for their destruction. James tells us, that every good gift comes down from the Father of lights: is it evil? it cometh not from God. The Apostle telling the Ephesians of lusts, blindness, wantonness, obstinacy; concludes piercingly, Non sic didicistis Christum. Ye have not so learned Jesus Christ. Art thou perverted? thou never learnedst this of Christ. Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God tempteth no man. In him we live, move, and have our being. A Gentile Poet sung it, a Christian Apostle sanctified it, all the creatures in heaven and earth cry Amen unto it. Life is his, whether we live well or ill: motion is his, whether we lift up our hands to prayer or murder: but the pravity and corruption of these is none of his. Is any part of body, or power of soul depraved? This cometh not from him that calleth us. What is then the cause of sin?

I answer, properly nothing: it hath indeed a deficient cause, but no efficient cause. It is a defect, privation, or orbity of that God made; the thing itself he never made. Will you ask what is the cause of sickness? I answer, the destitution of health. If what's the cause of darkness; the absence of the Sun: if of blindness, the deficiency of seeing. What is the cause of silence? no cause: there are causes of speech, organs, air, &c. take away these, what follows but silence? you see the light: whoever saw darkness? you hear speech: whoever heard silence? Man forsook grace: sin came in at the backdoor. It is a bastard brought into God's house by stealth. Woe to them that shall root their filthiness in the deity. If they be seduced, to cry, Lord, thou hast deceived us. No, destruction is of thyself, O Israel; in me is thy ‹ † ‹ . We have all gotten this sin from Adam; Mulier quam tu, &c. The woman which Thou gavest me; as if GOD had given him a woman to tempt him. Haec est ruina maxima, Deum putare causam ruinae: This is the greatest destruction that can be, to charge God with the cause of our destruction. No, O Father of heaven, be thou justified, and the faces of all men ashamed. Let us look home to our own flesh; from thence it cometh that destroyeth. Me, me, adsum qui feci. The Lord put not only this confession in our mouths, but this feeling in our hearts; that all our evil cometh from our selves, all our good from Jesus Christ.

Of him that called you: He hath called you to liberty, will you entangle yourselves in new bondage? who pities him that being redeemed from prison, willfully recasts himself into it? Or that saved from the fire, will run into it again? Art thou Titio ereptus, and yet hast a mind to be burned? He hath called you not to the ceremonies, but to their Antitype; not to those legal Lambes, but to that Evangelical Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world. Will you be directed by Lamps, when the Sun is risen? no, he hath called you to the truth and comforts of the Gospel; obey that call: And then he that hath persuaded you to virtue, by calling you to grace, shall crown you with eternal glory.

Now one argument whereby the Apostle deterres them from blending Judaism with Christianity, is derived from the danger of corrupting the doctrine of the Gospel: A little Leaven leaveneth the whole lump. One ceremony of the legal rites observed with an opinion of necessity, soureth all that sweetness of redemption that cometh by Christ. This Divine Aphorism may thus logically be resolved; into a Predicate, Subject, and Copula. The Predicate, leaven: the Subject, lump: the Copula, leaveneth. Or thus there is a

- Active; Leaven.
- Factiue, soureth
- Passive, the lump.

But because the whole speech is allegorical, let us first open the metaphor with the key of proper analogy; and then take out the treasure, such observations as may be naturally deduced from it. Most properly our Apostle by leaven understands false doctrine, and by lump the truth of the Gospel: so the sense is this; one heresy infects a mass of truth. Or if we restrain it to persons, by leaven he meaneth false Teachers, and by lump the Church of Galatia: and so a teacher of the bondage to the Law, sours the liberty of the Gospel. Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. Or if yet we will look upon it with more general view, we may by leaven understand sin, by lump man, by leauening infection. Here are three respondences, and all worthily considerable.

First taking leaven for false Doctrine, so we find in the New Testament four sorts of leavens, Math. 16. Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the Sadducees; there be two of them; the Pharisical, and the Sadducean leavens. Mark. 8. Beware of the leaven of Herod, there's the third. The fourth is my Text, the leaven of mingling Mosaical ordinances with Christ's Institutions. It will not be amiss to take a transient view of these Leavens: for though former times had the originals, we ha•...e the Counterpaines: we have parallel leavens.

1. To begin with the Pharisees; to these I may well liken our Seminaries; one egg is not liker another. Even a Jesuit wrote in good earnest, Non male comparari Pharisaeos Catholicis; Papists are fitly compared to the Pharisees. Whether he spake it ignorantly or unwittingly, or purposely; I am sure Caiaphas never spoke truer when he meant it not. Shall we take a little pains to confer them? The Pharisees had corrupted, yea in a manner annulled the Law of God by their Traditions: and for this Christ complains against them. Now for the Papists, this was one of their Tridentine decrees; With the same reverence and devotion doe we receive and respect Traditions, that we do the books of the old and new Testaments. Shut thine eyes and hear both speak, and then for a wager which is the Pharisee, which the Seminary? Indeed to some traditions we give locum, but locum suum; a place, but their own place. They must never dare to take the wall of the Scripture.

Again, the Pharisees corrupted the good Text with their lewd Glosses. The law was, that no Leper might come into the Temple; their traditional Gloss was, that if he were let down through the roof, this was no offense. As that drunkard, that having for sworn going to a certain Tavern, yet being carried thither every day on men's shoulders, thought he had not broken his oath. Their Sabbath days journey was a thousand Cubits; their Gloss understood this without the walls, and walking all day through the city no sin. The Papists are not behind them in their foul interpretations, not shaming to call that sacred Writ a nose of wax, formable to any construction. Paul subscribes his two Epistles to the Thessalonians thus; Missa fuit ex Athenis; a Papist cries out strait, Heres a plain text for the Mass. Psal. 8. Omnia subiecisti pedibus eius; Thou hast put all things underhis feet: This is spoken of the beasts subjection to man: their Gloss construes it of men's subjection to the Pope. So Esa. 49. They shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet. Here saith their Gloss, is a plain proof for kissing the Popes feet. Our Savior says; Except ye become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven: Hereupon Saint Francis commands one Massaeus to tumble round on the earth like a little child, that he might enter. If thy foot offend thee, saith Christ, out it off. Hereupon when the penitent confessed to S. Anthony that he had kicked his mother, he urged him with that Text: the man went and cut off his foot, but S. Anthony (honestly to make him amends) set it on again. Were these not goodly constructions? So the new elected Pope in his solemn Lateran Procession, must take copper money out of his Chamberlaines lap, and scatter it among the people, saying, Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have I give unto you. And is not this a probable truth, a praise-able bounty? Seven years penance is enjoined to a deadly sin; because Miriam was separated seven days for her leprosy; and God saith to Ezekiel, chap. 4. I have given thee a day for a year. Oh genuine and most neighborly concurring of Scriptures! When God's word subjects Priests to Kings, their Gloss subjects Kings to Priests, at least to Popes. But as when they determined to kill the Emperor Henry the seventh, that they might be sure to poison him, they stuck not to poison their own God in the Sacrament. So purposing to tear the honor, and deface the majesty of Kings, they first offer violence to the sacred word of God. In these damnable Glosses it is hard to decide; whether Pharisee is beyond Papist, or Papist beyond Pharisee. But Dum haec male construunt, seipsos male destruunt. Their evil construction of the Scriptures brings a worse destruction to themselves. They make that serve the turn of their policy, which God meant to serve the turn of his glory.

The Pharisees cleaved to the letter, but despised the Spirit: so do Papists. Hoc est corpus must be materially there: for this they wrangle, fight, burn the contradicters; yet few of them care to find it spiritually there. Dabo claves, I will give thee the keys; therefore none can enter heaven except the Pope open the doors. Whereas Peters two keys, one of knowledge, the other of power, are fitted to two locks, Ignorance, and Induration. But we know who keeps the keys, and lets in many thousands to heaven without the Popes leave. These things saith he that is holy and true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth, that shutteth, and no man openeth. Some of the Rabbins affirmed that God requires two things concerning his law, Custodie and Work: custody in heart, work in execution. The Pharisees thought it enough to have it in their frontlets, not in their hearts. So the Romist hath his opus operatum; prayers numbered on beads, fastings, pilgrimages, &c. and then cries like Saul; Blessed be thou of the Lord; I have performed the commandment of the Lord.

The Pharisees justified themselves by their works, and would not stick to say of the Law, All this have I kept from my youth. Do not the Papists so? do they not climb to salvation by their own works, & justify themselves? Those thought it not only easy to fulfill the Law, but possible to do more then they were bound to. They thought it not worth thanks to perform what they were bidden. God's Law was too little for their holiness. They plyed God with unbidden oblations, gave more then they needed, then was commanded. I pay tithes of all, said that Pharisee: of all? it was more then he needed. If God would have a Sabbath kept, they over-keep it: let a house be on fire, that day they would not quench it. And what other is the boasting opinion of the Romanists? it is nothing with them to content God, they can earn him, supererogate of him. Yea these Jewish Papists have done more then enough for themselves, many good works to spare for others: this they call the Churches Treasure, & they sell them for ready money. But Christ taught us all to say, We are unprofitable servants; intimating, that do what we can, yet God is a loser by the best of us.

To omit the miserable penances of the Pharisees, pricking themselves with thorns, and wounding their flesh with whips; wherein it is not possible for a Papist to go beyond them. If the misvsing, macerating, lacerating their own bodies be a means to come into heaven, surely the Pharisees should enter far sooner then the Papists. Yet were those kept out, and shall these enter? Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of Heaven. The people were so besotted on them, that they thought if but two men should go to heaven, the one must be a Scribe, the other a Pharisee. But here was strange news; neither of them both shall come there. So the Papists think, that if but two men be saved, one must be a Friar, the other a Jesuit. He that should say, neither of them both was likely to speed so well, should have the whole multitude stare upon him for such a Paradox.

The Pharisees bragged much of Moses Chair; just so do our Papists of Peters Chair. The Pharisees justified it that there was no error in theirs: the Papists affirm that there's no possibility of error in theirs. The Pharisees thundered against the poor people, This people who knoweth not the Law, are cursed. So the Pope thunders his curses and excommunications against us: but (we bless God) his thunder cannot reach us. I would other places had no more cause to fear his thunder. Then would they answer him, as Gregory the fourth was answered, when he purposed peremptorily to proceed against Lewys le Debonayre; the French Bishops answered in flat terms; Si excommunicaturus veniret, excommunicatus discederet: If he came to excommunicate, he should be sent back excommunicated.

The Pharisees compassed Sea and Land to make Proselytes; and when they had made one, they make him twofold more the child of hell then themselves. Do not our Seminaries so? Yes they are Compassers too, like their grand Master. Job. 2. much like those Circulatores, and Circumcelliones, a limb of the Donatists. They creep into Ladies houses, I had almost said into their Chambers: the Pursuiuant in modesty hath forborne the Gentlewomans bed, and missed him. Confession and Penance are the principal wheels, whereupon the Engine of their policy runs. By the first they find out men's secret inclinations; by the other they heap riches to their Tribe. They will not lead a Nouice into the main at first, to make him believe the Popes infallibility of Judgment, authority to decrowne Kings, to make Scripture no Scripture, and no Scripture Scripture, &c. This meat is too tough, it will not down: therefore they court his affections with pleasing delights, smooth semblances, and moderate constructions; as near to the religion from which they would pervert him, as possibly may be afforded. So by degrees they gain him, God and the Truth loseth him. In their own Countries, places of freedom, they visor their hearts, in England they visor their faces too.

The Pharisees made difference of oaths. Whosoever shall swear by the Temple, it is nothing: but whosoever shall swear by the Gold of the Temple, he is a debtor. Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gold or the Temple that sanctifieth the gold? That was their doctrine, this was Christ's reproof. So the Papists have their distinctions betwixt a material and a formal oath: one to bind the conscience, the other not. Out of such an unlucky copulation of fraud and malice, was that monstrous stigmatic Equiuocation engendered. A damned egg, not covered by any fair bird, but hatched as the Poets fain of O sprayes, with a thunderclap. A mere bastard, whosoever was the Father, Jesuits keep the child, and bring it up as their only darling. But they have their Bulls of dispensation for it: fit, they should all speed, as some did once with their bulls. Two Seminaries came into England with their two Bulls, but being apprehended, those two Bulls called in a third Bull, which was Bull the hangman, to dispatch them both.

Lastly, the Pharisees used to devour widows houses, & for a pretence to make long prayer. It is evil to devour a man's house, worse to devour a widows house, worst of all when their lips seemed to pray, to be chewing that morsel. Jerusalem had never worse Pharisees then Rome: these were mere bunglers to the Jesuits. The new Pharisees have made very Proselytes and Novices of the ancient.. A widows cottage filled the pauch of an old Pharisee. Large Patrimonies and fair revenues will not stop the throat of the Jesuit. They devour the Land as Pharaohs lean kine, and yet look hunger-starved still. You shall have them first fall in with the wife, as the devil did with Eve: but they cozen the husband of his inheritance, as the devil couzoned Adam. Even other Orders among them, cry shame upon the Jesuits: they prole away all with a face of sad piety and stern mortification. Forgive my unseasonable prolixity; you see one dangerous Leven.

2. The next is the Leven of the Sadducees: hear their doctrine, Math. 22. They say there is no resurrection. Act. 23. The Sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither Angel, nor spirit. I would we had no matches for them, but we have too many; that either deny futurum aliquid post mortem, that any further thing is to be done or suffered, or enjoyed after death: or else affirm faeliciter fore vniuersis, that every man shall be happy. They have studied reasons against the Resurrection. The flesh turns into rottenness, rottenness to dust, &c. But S<sup>t</sup>. Aug. cuts them off with reason: Qui potuis formare nouum, non poterit reperare mortuū? He that could make man of nothing, surely can revive him of a small thing. Facilius est restituere, quàm constituere: It is far easier to repair then to prepare. They tell us, It is better to a living dog, then a dead Lion: which is true among beasts, like themselves: but among men a dead beast is better thē a living Atheist. Like dogs they bark at heaven, but they cannot bite it: it is out of their circumference. Though they build up reasons and treasons like Babel; yet they prove but Confusion. They would pull God out of his Throne, if it were possible: but he is safe enough out of the reach of their malice, else it had gone ill with him before this. Their song is; Let us eat and drink, (they think of no reckoning to pay) for tomorrow we die. They promise tomorrow, yet kill themselves today. This is their song, but the Holy Ghost adds the burden: After death cometh the Judgment. It is appointed unto men once to die; to all men once, to Atheists twice, for there is a second death. Their first death makes way to their last Judgment. They are in some respect worse then the Devil; he knows and acknowledgeth a Deity; these say, There is no God. The devils believe and tremble; these have neither faith nor fear. The devil quakes at the day of Judgment; these deride it. Art thou come hither to torment us before th...ime? There's their terror. Where is the promise of his coming? For since the Fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the Creation. There's their derision. The devils say, Jesus we know: these are like that doubting spirit, Si filius Dei, If thou be the Son of God; as if they made question whether he was so or not. Strange •...even the father of sins cometh short of his sons: and there be Atheists upon earth when as there are none in hell. But they profess some religion among us; it may be so; but they fit and square it to their own humors: as that Giant dealt with his guests, for all whom he had but one bed; if they were too short for it, he rack'd them out longer; if too long, he cut them shorter.

But Insculptum est omnibus esse Deum: it is written in all hearts by the pen of nature that there is a God. It is not possible to get out these indelible characters. Say what they will, they would give much to be sure that the Scripture was not true. The discourse of reason confutes them. Ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee: the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee. Who knoweth not in all these, that the hand of GOD hath wrought this? Praesentemque refert qualibet herba Deum. The little pile of grass tells us, there is a God that made it. Besides, they have a conscience within them, God's deputy in the soul, which will speak for the Maker and Master, and be heard too. Qui negat esse Deum, mihi negat, et tibi, non sibi. He that denies there is a God, denies it to me, and to thee, but never to himself. You may sooner pull his heart out of his breast, then this conception out of his heart. Thus is their leaven tossed back into their own teeth: they will not now acknowledge this; they shall one day feel this. Oculos quos culpa clausit, poena aperiet: the eyes which Atheism hath shut, damnation shall open. This is a cursed Leaven.

3. The next Leaven is that of the Herodians: here crafty and dissembling hypocrites might be thought their fittest and most suitable parallels: because Christ calls Herod a Fox. Go and tell that Fox. But the Herodians were rather noted for profane fellows; and so we must seek out other matches. Such as carry in their gestures a tepidity of religion, a looseness of life: that turn the grace of God into wantonness: and make that which brings salvation to all, a means of confusion to themselves. This disease is Interius, within: and quickly becomes Interitus, a violent destruction. Profest Atheists, and open Heretics, are through the manifestation of their malice prevented: these are bosom Serpents, that sting in silence. Aristotle says, that Extreme is less hurtful, which is nearest to the medium, and doth communicate with it in something. Prodigality is less noxious then Avarice, because it hath this common with liberality, to give: which the other hath not. Fiery zeal is dangerous: by this Paul persecuted Christ, by this the Jews crucified Christ. But profane coldness is worse, because it is further from the mean, which is zeal in religion.

By these wretches lewdness among us, the Romish adversaries take advantage to slander our Religion. They say our Profession is a doctrine of liberty, that we preach for faith, and against works: but Wisdom is justified of...er children. Thus we preach, Tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doth evil: but glory and peace to every man that worketh good. And every man that hath hope in Christ, purifieth himself. And this is Pure religion, and undefiled before God; to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep our selves unspotted from the World. Our faith is not an 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, imagined in the brain; but an 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, seen in our life. We teach that Justification and Sanctification are inseparable friends. If men will not be reformed, we conceal not from them God's renunciation; If any man will be filthy, let him be filthy still. Our dissolute conversation cannot annihilate the truth of our doctrine. Howsoever the Samaritan, not the Jew, relieved the wounded man, yet the Jews religion was true, and not the Samaritans. How polluted soever we are, yet their hands are not clean enough to take up stones against us. If they rejoice and triumph in men's wickedness, they profess imitation of the devil in a cursed mirth. Good Christians have learned to mourn for abominations, not to laugh at them. To return to those dissolute wretches; they sing not with the Church a Tenebo t... Domine, I held him, and I would not let him go: all their delight is in a Nunc dimittis, they are glad to be gone. It were not amiss if we were well rid of them, being thus incorrigible. Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump. What leaven the Apostle there means, he declares ver. 13. Put away from among yourselves that wicked person. When Jonah was cast out of the Ship, the Sea ceased from her raging: when Zimri was slain, the plague stayed: when Baal was destroyed, Israel had peace. If these cursed Levens of Superstition, Atheism, and Profaneness were purged, how sweet a lump would the Church of England be! We cannot hope it, yet let us pray for it; Miserere Deus, cleanse us from these levens for the merits of thy Son our blessed Savior Jesus Christ.

4. There is a fourth Leaven, to which Saint Paul hath principal respect in this place; and that is the mixing of Law with Gospel; I mean Ceremonial and legal rites with the truth of Jesus Christ. This leaven might well die in forgetfulness, and have molded away, if there had not been a late generation of Thraskites to devour it as bread. They must abstain from Swines flesh, and from blood, and that upon conscience to the Ceremonial law. But he that thus abstains from blood and flesh, the flesh and blood of Christ shall do him no good. What is this but to lick up the Galatians vomit? to swallow that hard and indigestible leaven, which Saint Paul took so much pains about, to get out of their stomachs. But let it sleep with them in the dust: it is dead and buried, let us not disquiet the grave to revive it.

Now to the second way of considering these words, taking leaven personally, for Leueners, false Teachers, indeed Heretics: I will only note two things, one of doctrine, another of discipline. For doctrine out of my Text, that they sour the whole lump: for discipline, that therefore the Church should restrain and correct them.

The leaven of Heresy spreads far. Their word will eat as doth a canker; or a Gangrene. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, is an Option, or Election, of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to make choice. A laudable word at first among Philosophers, taken for a right form of learning. In Divinity it is a word of disgrace, and intends a stubborn deviation from the received Truth. It is more than Error. Aug. Errare possum, Haereticus esse non possum. I may err, I cannot be an Heretike. Qui sua pestifer a dogmata defendere persistunt, h...retici sunt. They that willfully go on to maintain their pestilent opinions, are Heretics. It hath the right property of a Gangrene, it frets as it goes; vires acquirit eundo: Heresies in the soul are like vlcera depascentia in the body, they eat up the parts about them.

Of this God is the deficient cause, who suffers it. 1. In respect of the wicked, that their just condemnation might not be hindered. For this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should b...leeue a lie. 2. In regard of the faithful, that their temptation might assure them God's: There must be heresies, (or schisms) that they which are approved, may be made manifest among you. With this premonition God prepared Israel, that when a false Prophet or Dreamer should come unto them, God doth prove you, to know whether you will love the Lord with all your heart. For this cause are Heresies, Vt fides habendo tentationem, haberet etiam probationem; that faith admitting a trial, might receive an approval.

Of this Satan is the efficient cause: the father of lies never lou'd the Father of Truth. Wicked and perverse men are the instrumental causes: they are so over-wise, that the curdle of their wit procures a breaking out into faction. Cùm discipuli veritatis non erunt, magistri erroris sunt. Refusing to be the scholars of Truth, they become the Schoolemasters of error. So the precedent cause in such, is self-love, the cause that grows out of the other, and nearer to the main effect (or rather defect) is discōtent. If the Church forget them in dealing her legacies of preferment, they will tear her bowels for it. If their mother pleaseth not their humors with an expected indulgence, they will be so bold as kick her sides. Pride steps in for a third cause: unless I forget her place, for she disdains an inferior room; and yet of all sins, as none presumes higher, so none is thrust lower, even to the bottomless pit. Saint John doth witness thus much of Diotrephes. I wrote unto the Church, but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the preeminence among them, receiveth us not. He is called by Beda, Haeresiarcha superbus. Hypocrisy must needs be admitted for a fourth motive to heresy. Applause must be had, if not by being good, yet by seeming so. Omnes haeretici sunt hypocrite..., saith Jerome, Every heretic is an hypocrite. Like Vipers they never come to light, but with some rupture to the womb of their mother.

Thus heresy creeps in at a little hole, but infects, infests the whole house: like a plague that comes in at the windows; and then propagates it self beyond all measure. Erroris non est finis: there is no termination of error. Therefore the only way to refute heresies, is to fetch them back to their original. H...reses ad sua principia refer, est refell...re. If you can reduce them to their first, you see their last. As if a man would dry up a stream, he cannot do it in the main; but goes first to the Springhead, stops up that: the river will fail of it self.

As in the bodily Gangrene the part affected grows tumid and cadauerous, the color fades and becomes blackish: So in the spiritual, the mind grows tumid & swelling: Vainely puffed up with a fleshly mind: the fair color of profession gone: walking as enemies to the cross of Christ. We know how the heresy of Arius did spread, when totus orbis ingemuit factum se videns Arrianum: the whole world groaned, feeling it self made (not Christian, but) Arian. There was a long disputation about two words; little differing in sound, much in sense, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. The Arians holding Christ like God in substance; the orthodox Christians holding him one with God in substance. O the world of ink and blood that was spent about this! The Pope rose by degrees: first above Bishops, then above Patriarchs, then above Councils, then above Kings, then above Scriptures, now last of all above GOD himself. So the Apostle speaks of Antichrist: He exalteth himself above all that is called God. From so poor a beginning he hath risen prettily for his time. Thus Popery crept up in the dark: like a thief putting out the lights, that it might more securely rob the house. Whiles it broached opinions, that like to sweet wines pleased the palate, it led many liquorish affections to hell; not unlike the Butcher, who claws the Ox till he cuts his throat. Thus the leaven of heresy spreads.

But the Church must take care lest it spread too far: Let them alone in quiet (yet what quiet can they have that disturb themselves?) and then Evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. Augustine says of Arius his schism in Alexandria; Una scintilla fuit: That it was at first but a little spark: but because not, Statim suppressa, totum orbem eius flamma populata est: the flame of it sindged the whole world, not being extinguished in time. The kindling fire is easily quenched: when it possesseth the Town, it rageth and rangeth like a tyranny, scorning the offers of suppression. Now therefore, I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses, contrary to the doctrine that ye have learned, and avoid them. The malice of an heretic, Uel dolenda tanquam hominis, vel cauenda tanquam hostis, vel irridenda tanquam imprudentis: is either to be lamented, as a man's, or avoided, as a foes, or derided, as a fools. When proud Marcion said to Polycarpus, Non me agnoscis? Dost thou not know me? Yes, replied that good Saint; Agnosco te Primogenitam Satanae: I acknowledge thee the devils eldest son. If it prove an incurable Gangrene, Ense recidendum, ne pars sincera ...rahatur; cut it off to save the rest. Pereat vnus potius quàm vnitas. Better lose one of the whole, then the whole for one. It is Hippocrates maxim: Quae ferro non curantur, ignis curet: where the knife can do no good, fire must. How-ever heretics escape fire temporal, let them beware fire eternal. For our-selves, bless we God, that hath cleared the way of truth among us; and thrust this leaven out of our coasts. Whiles the plague rode circuit in our streets, we prayed: when it ceased, we praised God. No plague so dangerous as Heresy: whiles that ranged in our Church, as Syluius said of ruined Constantinople, O miseram vrbis faciem! So we of our Church, O miseram Ecclesiae faciem! This leprosy gone, she is now fair in the eyes of her Beloved: Christ now kisseth her lips, and for this, let us kiss the feet of Jesus Christ.

A little leaven, leueneth the whole Lump.

Now let us resolve this Allegory another way: and conceive

By

- Leaven, Sin.
- Lump, Man.
- Leuening, Infection.

In effect; a little sin makes the whole man in body and soul, unsavory to the Lord. For method in proceeding; first, we will view the Metaphor, the Similitude of sin to leaven: then examine how a little of this can sour the whole lump. The similitude holds in many respects, albeit one be here principally intended, the souring quality; yet may the rest be justly considered.

1. Leaven is not bread, but the corruption of that which maketh bread. Sin is not a created quality, but the corruption of a created quality. God made not sin: Who then? the devil begot it on man's lust: This I have found, that God made man upright: but they have sought out many inventions: Tricke enow to make themselves miserable. That which rottenness is in the Apple, sourness in the Wine, corruption in the flesh, such is sin in the Soul: Fetida qu...dam qualitas, a thing never good since it took being, only usurps the place of good, and occupies the seat where a happy and perfect quality stood. It is like a Jehoiakim that sits in the Throne of a Josiah: as that bad son of so good a father gave the silver and the gold of the Temple to

Pharaoh Necho: so this, gives the endowments of nature, of reason, of affection, to the black Prince of darkness. Or as the Pope pretends, that he sits in the chair of Peter▪ yet what that blessed Saint attributed to Christ; Why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us? as if we by our own power or holiness had made this man to walk. Be it known to you, that by the name of Jesus of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, this man now stands whole before you. This the Pope attributes to relics and blocks: there is no disease, but he hath appointed some puppet to cure it. Prohpudor? quis, cui? Such is the practice of sin: the bounty of God gives corn, and wine and oil, multiplies silver and gold; and even these, sin gives to Baal. It is depranatio boni, and depriuatio boni: one is active, the other passive: the latter a necessary consequent of the former. It depraves our power of obedience to God actually; it deprives us of God's good grace and blessing passively. The one is inseparable to the other: For he that forfeits Bonum vnde, shall lose Bonum inde. They that spoil that grace whence they might do good, shall lose that glory whence they expect good. The first breach of one Law took away all power to keep any: and by it we are disabled to all.

2. The very same substance of meal that would make bread, by addition of salt becomes leaven: The very same work that might be good and acceptable to God, by addition of our pravity becomes evil. Thus the best actions of an vniustified person, are so leuened with his own corruption, that God abhors them. Your new Moons and your appointed Feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble to me, I am weary to bear them; when ye make many prayers, I will not hear you. What is the reason? Your hands are full of blood. Even sacrifices and supplications (good services in their own nature) are made displeasing by the leaven of sin: He that killeth an Ox, is as if he slue a man; he that sacrificeth a Lamb, as if he cut off a dogs neck. Sacrifices God commanded, and often commended: yet victimae impiorum: the oblations of the wicked are abominated. Non speciosalaus in ore peccatorum. Praise becometh not the mouth of a sinner.

Every unregenerate man Claudicat in rectis, halts in the straitest path. Omnia naturalia bona polluta, omnia supernaturalia amissa; His portion of natural good is defiled; but of supernatural good all share is vanished. Peccauit, was David's voice, after his sinful Arithmetic: the same was Judas his voice, after his damned treason. Similis sonus, non sinus; there was the same sound, but not the same heart. Esau wept as much after the loss of the blessing, as Peter after the denial of his Master: Similes lacrimae, non animae: like tears, but unlike souls. The Pharisee went to Church so well as the Publican: but the Publican came home rather justified then the Pharisee. The Pharisees threw bounteously into the Treasury: the poor widow two Mites: yet Christ commends the poorer gift, for the richer charity. That work which seems the same, In identitate operis, yet differs much Ration agentis, in respect of the workers. Many Heathen excelled us in moral virtues, yet the ignorance of Christ did shut heaven against them. Vae tibi, Aristoteles: laudaris vbi non es, & damnaris vbi es: Woe to thee, O Aristotle, who art commended where thou art not, and condemned where thou art: yea even in a justified man's works, though pure from the Spirit, yet passing through his hands, there is some tang of this leaven, enough to keep them from being meritorious. Look then well both to the justification of thy person, and the sanctification of thy works. Thou indeed confessest sin to be damnable, but it would grieve thee to go to hell for thy good deeds. Though a man should give all his goods to the poor, yet wanting Faith and Love, he may for his charity go to the devil. Pray then, that thy defects may be supplied by Christ; Who gave himself a sacrifice for us to God of a sweet smelling savor: perfuming us with the pleasant odour of his merits.

3. By Leaven soured we make relishable bread for the use of man: so by the ungodly's most cursed sins God will advance his glory. Will Pharaoh harden his heart? I will get me honor upon him, saith God. That Leaven of malice which so wred the souls of those Brethren against poor Joseph, the Lord made use of to his glory. From that ungracious practice he raised a pedigree of blessings. Otherwise there had been no provision in Egypt, no bread to spare for Israel, no wonders wrought by Moses, no Manna from heaven, no Law from Sinai, no possession of Canaan. So from the vnnaturallest murder that ever the Sun beheld, yea, which the Sun durst not look upon; God glorified himself in saving us. The Oppressor impouerisheth the righteous; God sees and suffers: and from his villainy effectuates their good, by taking away those snares to save their souls. The Lord will glorify himself in the vessels of destruction: and the groans in hell shall honor his Justice, so well as the songs in heaven honor his mercy. How much better is it to glorify God in faithfulness, that will preserve thee: then in wickedness, which will destroy thee!

4. A man cannot Live by bread only, much worse by Leaven. No man can live forever by his righteousness and good works, much less by his sins. Sin is no nourishment to the soul: unless as some Mithridates-like have so inured their bodies to poison, that Venenum nutrit; even venom doth batten them: so others their souls to sin, that they cannot keep life without it. And indeed we say of some things, that they nourish sickness, and feed death. Omne simile nutrit simile: inward corruption is fed & maintained by outward action. Covetise in Judas is nourished by filching his masters money. Murder in Joab is heartened and hardened with blood. Theft is fatted with booties: pride with gay rags: usury battens by extortion: Sacrilege by Church-robbing. Pascitur Libido conuiuijs, nutritur delicijs, vino accenditur, ebrietate flammatur. Banketting is the diet of lust, Wantonness her Nurse, Wine kindles a heat in her blood, and Drunkenness is the powder that sets her on fire. Thus sin feeds upon this leaven: but with the same success that Israel upon quail: they fatted their carcasses, but made them lean souls.

Though this leaven pass the swallow, yet sticks in the stomach: sin may be devoured, but lies heavy on the conscience: Bread of deceit is sweet to a man: but his mouth shall be filled with gravel. It may be sweet in his mouth, but it is the gall of Asps in his bowels. Putrid meat is apt to breed and feed worms, so this Leaven the worm of conscience: when they once come to feel it work, then ready to cry, This is my death: unless God give them a good vomit of repentance, to put it off their souls, and the sober diet of sanctification to amend and rectify their lives.

5. Lastly, Sin and leaven are fitly compared for their sourness. There is a Leaven sharp and sour, but sanatiue. The Kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven. But this leaven here is far sower, yet hath nothing but death in it. It is sour to God, sour to Angels, sour to Saints, sour to the sinner. Sin is sower then any Leaven.

1. Sour to God, who hates nothing but sin. He made man, and man made sin: He loves his own creature, but he hates man's creature. Sin is sower to him then the devil: For, Non odit peccatum Diaboli cansa, sed Diabolum peccati causa: He hates not sin for the devils sake, but the devil for sins sake. It is so sour to him, that for one sin he...e plagued a world of men: how will he plague one man for a world of sin! So sour, that he could relish no man for it, till he had killed it in the sides of Jesus Christ. We are all so sour, that but for this sweetening and perfume, we could never have been endured. The Scripture, for our understanding, ascribes senses to God: and we find every sense displeased with sin.

1. It is offensive to his smelling: He tells the Jews that their sins did stink in his nostrils. So did the old World offend him, that he washed & sowed in a deluge: and then after Noah's sacrifice, is said to Smell a savor of rest. For this cause they had their Altar of Incense; and God commanded a Perfume to be made to him. The Lord said to Moses, Take unto thee sweet spices, Stacte, and Onicha, and Galbanum, with pure frankincense: and thou shalt make it a Perfume, pure and holy. Both signified that we all stunke by nature, and are only perfumed by the Incense of Christ's prayers and righteousness.

2. It is offensive to his Tasting: I looked (after all my pains and kindness) for good grapes, and the Vine brought forth wild grapes. When he comes to taste the vintage of our sins, they are sour grapes. Ye turn judgment into wormwood: Justice is pleasant unto the Lord, but injury bitter as wormwood. So the Jews served Christ, instead of wine they gave him vinegar to drink. He turned their water into wine, they turn his wine into vinegar. Good works of faith and obedience are that best wine, which we should give our Beloved: that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep, to speak. But evil deeds are sour to his palate.

3. It is offensive to his Feeling: so sharp, that the Spear, Thorns, Whips, and Nails, were blunt to it: Our iniquities were so heavy to his sense, that he plains himself burdened under them, as a Cart is pressed with sheaves. The Lord of heaven lay groveling on the earth: and as if he were cast into a furnace of his Fathers wrath, sweating drops of blood. They are so harsh still to his feeling, that he challengeth Saul for wounding himself. Why strikest thou me? Saul strikes at Damascus, Jesus Christ suffers in heaven.

4. It is offensive to his Hearing. The cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, because their sin is very grievous. Our dissensions and quarrels are as iarring in God's ears: as if diverse distracted Musicians should play upon diverse <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> bad Instrument so many several tunes at one time. The confusion of sins brought the confusion of languages: God's ear could not endure the distraction of their harts, therefore their own ears shall not distinguish the dissonance of their voices. The cry of blood and oppression makes so grievous a noise to heaven, that vengeance must only quiet it. Our murmurings, our oaths, blasphemies, slanders, are like the croking of frogs, howling of dogs, and hissing of serpents in God's hearing.

5. It is offensive to his Seeing. Though thou wash thee with Nitre, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord. Our oppressions are like running ulcers, our adulteries as most sordid and filthy things. The Prophet compares it to the most feculent defilement, & loathsome turpitude, that can be uttered. Thou art of purer eyes then to behold evil: and canst not look on iniquity. O let us abhor that filthiness, which will turn the face of God from us. Neither are they displeasing only to his senses, but grievous to his mind. Is it a small thing for you to grieve men, but you will grieve God also? It is dangerous to anger him, that can anger all the veins of our hearts. It was the Prophet Isaiah's complaint of Israel: They rebelled and vexed his holy Spirit. Yea they are offensive to his very soul. Your new Moons and appointed feasts, my soul hateth. This he protesteth against reciduation, Heb. 10. 38. If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. This is an emphatical speech, and an argument of God's hearty detestation. The wicked, and him that loveth violence his soul hateth. Therefore he is said to bend his Soul to revenge. Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

2. Sour to the Angels: for if they rejoice at our conversion, then they grieve at our perversion. How sour is that sin, which brings grief unto the thresholds of joy! They blush at our falls, rejoice at our integrity. Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth for them who shall be the heirs of salvation? Let us then feast them with integrity, not with the leaven of iniquity.

3. Sour to the Saints: the Church is our Mother, and she laments to see any child of her womb averse from goodness. Therefore as a loving Mother, whose husband was slain for the safety of her self & children; if she sees any child transgress the rules, and break her husbands Testament; she tells them of their Fathers kindness: she describes his deadly wounds and gastly looks: and to make their facts more odious, she showeth some garment of his embrued with blood. So the Church often offers to our considerations, how Christ her dear Love and Lord was betrayed, condemned, crucified: tells us, our sins have done this; that they were the Judas betraying, the Herod mocking, the Pilate condemning, the Longinus wounding, the band of Jews re-crucifying Christ. Now as D...do adjured departing Aeneas; Per ego te has lacrymas, &c. Per si quid vnquam Dulce fuit nobis, horum miserere laborum. So our Mother intreats us, (yet entreating is too low a phrase for a Mother) per talem cruorem, per tantum amorem; by so precious blood, and by so gracious love, to sin no more; at least to abhor such precipices of sin; and forbear (as it were) to choke him with such cursed Leauens.

4. Sour to the sinner himself: for it ever leaves behind it a sting of conscience. It may taste pleasing and palatable at first, but Leaven is not sower at last. Perhaps our judgments may be out of taste; as men in fevers: or Satan (that crafty Apothecary) hath mingled the potion cunningly: yet though saporem amisit, venenum retinet: poison is poison though it come in a golden cup. Esau's pottage went down merrily, but the loss of his birthright was a bitter farewell. Whatsoever service sin doth us, it shows us but an ill-favored trick at the last. It brings us to the door of Terror, and then bids us shift for our selves. It is like Lysimachus his draught of cold water, that refreshes him for a moment, and captives him forever. By Solomon's rule, vexation is entailed to vanity A hedgehogge must dwell in Babylon: a pricking Conscience in a profane breast. Thy way an... thy doings have procured these things unto thee: this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thine heart. Solomon hath the like promotion: Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, &c. but know that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment. The verse begins with pleasure, but ends with terror. Sin will be sour at the last.

The Allegory thus opened, the special treasure or Instruction remains yet to be drawn out. We perceive what the Leaven signifies, and what the Lump. Now we must consider the relation betwixt modicum and totum: a little Leaven, and the whole lump. A little Leaven leueneth the whole lump.

A little sin infecteth a great deal of righteousness. Whosoever shall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. He hath broken T...tam Legem, though not Totum Legis. I speak not here of the absolutely (dissolutely) wicked: whose life is like Elreds reign; Praua in principio, peior in medio, pessima in vltimo: bad in the beginning, worse in the midst, worst of all in the end. But of those that have some good measure of grace, and stand in the state of adoption: yet may admit of Paul's prayer, to be sanctified throughout. And upon good reason: for there is an universal corruption, therefore should be an universal sanctification. That young man, that profeseth himself to have kept the Commandments; (and Christ began to love him) yet there was a little leaven spoiled all, Covetousness. Vnum restat, one thing was wanting; Sell that thou hast, and give to the poor. No, he was costie, and could not abide such a purge. Herod, though he heard many Sermons of John's preaching gladly, (and it is some good thing to hear Sermons with joy) yet the leaven of Herodias marred all. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth him in all his goods. This was the Apostles Canon; an ordinance that will kill where it lights; yet a world of arguments hath been invented to stop it up. We will give of charity; but anything of duty? yes, of duty. Well, we will give somewhat of duty: but part of all? yes, part of all. Put out this 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and we will compound with you: though we take away a talent of your duties, we will return a mite of benevolence.

I will tell you a tale: a Seignior came with his servant to one of our Ladies Images: (no matter which, for they do not scant her of number.) he threw in an angel of gold; the humble picture in gratitude made a curtsy to him. The servant observing, and wondering at her Ladyship's plausible carriage, purposed with himself to give somewhat too, that he might have a curtsy. So he puts into the basen six pence, and withal takes out his masters angel: the Image makes curtsy and seems to thank him still. It is common with this City to take away the Cleargies angel, and to lay down six pence in the stead: yet look they for curtsy too, but I think no honest man will give them thanks.

This little leaven undoes all goodness. You shall walk in all the ways which the Lord your God commands you. All? put out in omnibus, in All, and we will say something to it. But as Deus remittit omnia peccata, aut nulla. God forgives all sins, or none: so we must faithfully resolve against all sins, or we repent of none. As is God's remission, such must be our contrition. Every man is an Adam, a good conscience his Paradise, lust the forbidden fruit: one lust is able to turn him out of all his comforts. Hast thou kept thy hands from injury? yet if thy tongue have offended, thou shalt be judged of thy idle words. Suppose thou hast preserved Castitatem linguae, sobriety of speech (yet if any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man) but thy thoughts have welcomed a pleasing lust, those thoughts have leuend thy soul. For God will (not only) bring every work into judgment, but every secret thought, whether it be good or evil. Men have brought that opinion into a proverb; Thought is free: no, thy Thought is God's bond-slave. As thou canst not think a good thought but by his suggestion, so nor an evil thought but by his permission. If but thy thought harbor this leaven, the whole lump is soured. Actions men see, thy thoughts only God and thyself. Ille liber inter accusators, quem propria non accusat conscientia. That man needs fear no accusers, that is freed from the condemnation of his own conscience. There are six motives that infer and enforce a caution of little sins.

Little sins are dangerous; because they are

- Mortalia, they are deadly.
- Plurima, they are numerous.
- Insensibilia, not easily felt.
- Materialia maximorū; they are the materials or seeds of gross sins.
- Maximas inficiunt virtutes, they leaven the best virtues.
- Facilius perdunt, they more cunningly destroy the soul.

1. Minima mortalia; even the least offense is mortal in its own nature, culpable of transgression, and liable to malediction. The wages of sin is death. It was a strange gloss of Haymo upon that Text: Hoc non de omnibus peccatis intelligendum est, sed de criminalibus. This is not meant of all sins, but only of such as are criminal: such (saith he) as S. John speaks of; There is a sin unto death, I say not that thou shouldst pray for it. So S. Paul's indefinite speech of all sins, he restrains to S. John's particular sense of one sin; that sin (which shall never be forgiven) against the Holy Ghost. For otherwise if S<sup>t</sup>. John should intend it of all criminal sins, then it would follow that we should not pray for heretics, adulterers, homicides; which were directly cross to the rule of charity. Certainly Paul in that general rule admitted of no exception; it is an Aphorism wherein no sober judgment can find distinction. The Apostle thought of no venial, when he called all mortal. The wages of sin (not of this or that sin, as sacrilege, robbery, blasphemy, &c. but of sin, any sin, every sin: though men deem it trivial, they shall find it mortal) is death.

I know there is a just distinction of sins, of greater & less. Purity and equality of all transgressions is an idle dream. It was a worse murder to kill Zachariah at the Altar, than Uriah in the field. To steal Sacra de Sacro, holy things out of a holy place, is worse theft than to steal profana de profano, common things out of a profane place. The difference of the punishments manifests a difference of the sins. As in heaven one star excels another star in glory: so in hell, one firebrand exceeds another in burning; though all feel the fire hot enough. Christ tells the Pharisees, that they make their Proselitetwofold more the child of hell than themselves. Tolerabilis erit Sodomae: It shall be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of Judgment, than for Capernaum: and yet the Sodomites were then in hell. They that devour widows houses under the color of long prayers, shall receive greater damnation. As they have been more wicked, they shall be more wretched. This distinction of sins we take up and justify: yea we dare go further, and say there are some sins mortal, and some venial, but not in their own nature. The difference is not ration Peccatorum, sed Peccantium; not in respect of the sins, but of the Sinners. To the faithful and penitent all sins are venial: to the unbelievers and impenitent, all sins are mortal. It is miser cordia remittentis, not natura transgressionis; the mercy of the forgiuer, not the quality of the sin, that maketh it venial. All transgressions are mortal in themselves, and by repentance all venial in Christ. The least sin legally considered, is mortal: the greatest sin Evangelically considered, is pardonable.

This difference we approve: yea we say, that small sins are more easily pardoned: and great sins, when they are remitted, are more hardly remitted. For certainly offenders are more or less punished, according to the quality of the offense. An eye with an eye, but blood with blood, and life with life. Yet still say we not, that a sin is in its own nature venial. For even the least is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the transgression of the Law. It is for the doctrine of Rome, to lessen sin, and to extenuate punishment: and that for two reasons. First that they might please the people with some liberty: and next, that hereby they might build up their Purgatory. For they assign mortal sins to hell, and venial to that purging fire. They offer herein a double wrong, both to their own modesty, and to God's mercy. To their own modesty, for they extenuate their faults in sinning: to God's mercy, for they disparage his goodness in forgiving. They affirm that sins of omission, weakness, forgetfulness, and ignorance, be Praeter legem Dei, but not contra legem Dei: that they be Besides the Law of God, not Against the law of God. This doctrine, like the lips of that strange woman, drop as an honey-comb, and are smooth as oil. But their end is bitter as worm-wood, sharp as a two-edged sword. This is a dangerous delusion; for hence they come so to neglect those less sins, that Peccata minima, be at last thought Nulla. As they have certain Orders among them, Friars Minorites, Friars Minim's, and then Nullani, Nullans. So sin bates and dwindles, from a Minorite or less sin to a Minim or least sin, and from a Minim to a Nullan, to be no sin at all. Thus Incipit esse licitum, quod folet esse publicum. The commonness takes away the haynousnesse: from being generally practiced, it comes to be universally allowed.

Every sin is committed against God, Against thee, thee only have I sinned. Look upon the infinite Majesty offended, and by that judge the quality of thy offense. There be sins of weakness, sins of ignorance, and sins of malice. Those of weakness, are said to be committed against God the Father, whose special attribute is Power. Those of Ignorance against God the Son, whose special attribute is wisdom. Those of malice against God the Holy Ghost, whose special attribute is love. Whether then they be of weakness, of ignorance, or of malice, they offend either the Power of God, or the Wisdom of God, or the Love of God: therefore acknowledge Secundum magnitudinem Dei, magnitudinem peccati: confess the least sin great and bad, that hath offended a Majesty so Great and Good.

2. Minima plurima, sins less heinous, are the most numerous. Many littles make a mickle. Small drops of rain commonly cause the greatest floods. Quo minus violentum, eo magis perpetuum: the less violence, the longer continuance. The drisling sleete, that falls as it were in a mist, fills the channels, they swell the rivers, the overcharged rivers send forth their superfluous waters over the containing banks: now the meadows are polluted, the Corn-fields spoiled, the Cattle drowned; yea even houses, and towns, and inhabitants endangered; and firm continents buried under a deluge of waters. Many little sands gathered to an heap, fail not to swallow a great Vessel. De paruis grandis aceruus erit. You have Eagles, Hawkes, Kites, and such great fowls of rapine, flying always alone: but the sparrows and pigeons, that devour the grain, by innumerable troupes. There were not more grievous plagues to the Egyptians, then came by the contemptiblest creatures: as frogs, lice, flies, locusts: by reason of the monstrous swarms, covering the face of the earth, and darkening the Land, and devouring the fruit of the whole Country. Yea even killing the people, that there was no remedy found for their life. Thus great destruction ariseth from little causes: therefore, Non contemnenda quia parua, sed metuenda quia multa. Let us not despise our sins because they are little, but fear them because they are many, saith Augustine. The small drops of sin, continually falling, have drowned many souls. As they have been our Arms to fight against GOD, so God will make them his Armies to confound us. Timenda ruina multitudinis, etsi non magnitudinis. Let us fear them for their number, though we slight them for their nature.

A pace is but a little space of ground; yet a thousand paces make a mile, and many miles bring to hell. Si negligis quia non pessima, caueas quia plurima. If they be not the worst, they are the most: and is it not all to one purpose, whether one Goliath, or a thousand Philistines overcome thee? The bird brings so many little staws as makes up her nest: the reprobate so many little sticks, as makes up his own burning pile. Augustine saith, there is in Sin both weight and number. Et si non timeas quando expendis, time quando numeras. Judge them by tale, and not by weight. Put a wanton speech, a loose gesture into the balance, (though Christ found it heavy, & every soul shall, for whom he did not bear it, yet) it is censured vix culpa, a little faulting, a little failing: so little, that were it less, it were nothing. But now leave thy Geometry, & come to Arithmetic: begin to number thy wanton works, and unchristian gestures, and carnal thoughts; now loe, they come in by troupes and herds, thicker then the frogs into Egypt, miraris numerum: thou standest amazed at their number, and now criest, Miserere mei Deus; Lord have mercy on me a most wretched sinner. Yet when thy recognition hath done the best, and thy memory represented those swarms of sins to thy conscience, thy view is as far short, as will be thine answer: neither can extend ad millesimam, vel minimam partem. Thou hast not seen one of a thousand. Who can understand his errors? O Lord, cleanse thou me from my secret faults.

Thus it is not Trutina, but Scrutinū, that will teach thee the danger of these little sins. Thou didst never steal thy neighbors goods by breaking into his house, therefore pleadest not guilty to that Law, Thou shalt not steal. Examine, thou shalt find past from thee so many covetous wishes, as make up a robbery. Thou art no swearer, yet through the door of thy lips have scaped out so many idle words, as being put together will make up a blasphemy. Thou never madest the member of Christ, a member of a harlot by uncleanness: yet thou hast given indulgence to as many lustful thoughts and desires, as being summed, will make up a great adultery. I fear that many who have forborne the forbidden bed, have yet by their lusts scatteringly and forgetfully admitted, framed up an adultery as great as David's. Some that have made a conscience of grand oaths, and impudent blasphemies; yet have eiaculated so many loud, lewd, and false attestations, as have conflated a blasphemy no less impious then Rabshakeh's. A tradesman disdains to lie, abhors to oppress: yet hath uttered so many commodities of dissimulations, concealments, false warrantings, cunning frauds, as make up an oppression equal to Ieconiah's. A Protestant abominates sacrilege, and down-right robbing the Church: yet hath so long been bold to make use of this Impropriation: or if in a meaner condition, with his Compositions, Customs, detinies, legal alienations, leasses and fines, as make up a sacrilege not inferior to Achan's. Put my money to Interest? No, saith another, I defy all usurious contracts: yet by his pawns, morgages, forfeits, couznages, and such tricks known best to GOD his Judge, the Devil his Enginer, his Scrivener, and himself, he puts down unconverted Zacchaeus for usury. Oh the incredible souls lost in the Labyrinth of these unsuspected, (and in their imagination justifiable) sinners!

3. Minima Insensibilia; these little sins are not so easily felt, therefore most pernicious. If a man hath died his hand in blood, irrequieta conscientia; a peaceless conscience haunts him with vnceslant vexation: let him hate his brother, this little murder he feels not. The devil like a roaring Lyon is soon heard: forming himself to a fox, his insinuation is not perceived. He roars in monstrous iniquities, in treason, murder, sacrilege, oppression: these be thundering sins, that will waken the soul if it be not lethargiz'd. But creeping like a silent Fox, he devours the grapes without disturbance. Take us the Foxes, the little foxes: for they spoil the Vines. If Satan hew at the timber, and knock at the foundation of the house, we hear the noise, and preserve the building. They are those small Teredines, little sins, that in sensibly eat it to dust, and it is ruined ere we are aware. So long as Sin comes not in thunder, it never wakens men: if it do not enter into Theomachie, and denounce open war against GOD, they make but a tush of it. To abuse the good creature is nothing, so long as they are not drunk: to give nothing to the poor is no sin, so long as they take not from the poor: to sleep out the Sermon is but a little drowsiness, all is well so long as they break not the Sabbath in absence from Church. These and such like are the common thoughts, and so trivial an estimate they bear of these sins, that they think God should do them wrong to call them to any reckoning for them.

Thus they sow sins, as that enemy did tares, here a little, and there a little: but grown up, the whole field was overgrown with them. A sin that cannot be committed, Sine grands corruptione sui, graui laesione proximi, magno contemptu Dei: without his own notorious depravation, his brothers grievous oppression, God's manifest contempt and provocation; this quickly amazeth a man, and he starts back from the devils first offer. If the devil at first had come to Judas, here's a hundred pieces, betray thy Master: none, he was not yet hardened enough in villainy: let Satan first work him to hypocrisy, then to covetousness, and lastly he shall prevail him with him for treason too. He might refuse a hundred pieces before, now he will take thirty.

When that good Prophet wept upon Hazael, he asked; Why weepeth my Lord? He answered, Because I know the evil that thou wilt do to the children of Israel. Their strong holds wilt thou set on fire, slay their young men with the sword, dash their children against the stones, and rip up their women with child. He replied, What, is thy servant a dog, that I should do this great thing? He thought it impossible, that the devil should ever work him to so horrid a mischief. But he did it: ambition brought him to a kingdom, a kingdom brought him to tyranny, tyranny to insolence, insolence not only to oppression of his own, but to invasion of other Countries:

among which Israel felt the smart, in the burning of her Cities, and massacring her Inhabitants. Thus by degrees he was wrought to this self-incredited mischief: as impossible as at first he judged it, at last he performed it. Doubtless there be some that would shudder at the temptation to perjury: yet pedetentm, by insensible steppes they arrive at it: by lying they come to swearing, by swearing to forswearing. If the Usurer had an oppressed man's widow, and orphans lying and crying at his doors, perhaps shame, if not remorse, would seize on him: but let him exact, inhaunce, oppress, excoriate the Common-wealth, and not hear it in a public clamour, he never wincheth for the matter. A fact that looks at the first blush horrid and intolerable, is presently either avoided, or within some modest limits restrained: but another Dum paruum creditor, securius in vsu retinetur: the opinion of paruitie abates the opinion of pravity: that which is weakly censured, is strongly retained. Our officious lies, soothing adulations, amorous wishes, wanton songs, scoffing at Ministers, censuring of Sermons; being reprov'd, we laugh them out. But these laughing sins, will be one day found crying sins. And if we cry not to God for mercy by repentance, they shall cry to God against us for vengeance.

4. Minima materialia maximorum: little sins are the materails of great sins. The seeds of all sins are naturally in us: not so much as treason, homicide, perjury, but are in us Quoad potentiam, yea Quoad naturam et propensionem: there is in our nature a proclivity to them. Now the heart is so apt ground to produce and mature these Innata mala, inbred seeds to actuals, that without the preventing Grace of GOD we cannot avoid them. Thou art a Christian, and fearest not that ever thou shouldst apostate into the denial of thy Savior: yet let me say thou hast the materials of this sin within thee, timorousness and self-love. Thou sayest, Sure I shall never be a drunkard, that belluine folly shall never apprehend me: yet thou hast the materials of this within thee, and that naturally and hereditarily from thy first Grandmother Eve: a sweet tooth in thy head, a liquourish appetite to delicate meats, and intoxicating wines.

Thou canst not be a traitor, nor admit of conspiracy against thy Sovereign, yet the material of this wickedness is within thee. That which we call Gunpowder, is made of the falt & fatter earth: in the ground are the materials, which when Art hath concocted, chimed, prepared, charged, and discharged, it overturns towers and towns, forts and cities. We were once too near justifying by a woeful experience the violence of it: but the goodness of our good Lord Jesus averted it. So in thy earth, thy heart, there is this salt and spumy matter, the mineral of treason; unless the reason of a man, and Religion of a Christian keep it from eruption. Thou art resolved never to think highly of thine own worth, yet thou hast the seed of pride within thee: thou art naturally (as Luther said) borne with a Pope in thy belly: there's the material, to be too well affected to thy own doings It is impossible, thou thinkst, for thee to be made an usurer, now thou hast no money: yet thou hast the seed of usury within thee; and Crescit amor nummi quantum ipsa pecunia crescit: all the sons of Adam love earth too well. Who shall ever persuade thee to bow down before an Idol? yet a dainty feast persuades thee to worship thine own belly: this is no Idolatry. It was but a little Cloud, that Eliahs servant saw, rising out of the sea like a man's hand: yet it portended a great shower. Sin seems at first like a little cloud, but it prognosticates a deluge of ensuing wickedness. The careless Gallant by many trifles often fetched, runs so far in the Mercers books unawares, that he cannot endure to hear of a reckoning. These little arrearages, taken up on trust, runs our souls so deep into God's debt, that if the blood of Christ do not pay it: though we be sold wife and children, and all we possess; non habentibus unde, we can never discharge it.

5. Minima peccata maximas in ficiunt virtutes: a little sin infects a great deal of righteousness. The Leprosy infected the garments, and the very walls of the house; but Sin hath infected wood and wool, and walls, earth, air, beasts, plants, & planets: and stuck a scar on the crystal brow of nature it self. For we know that the whole creation groaneth, and travaileth in pain together until now. If the great world groan for man's sin, shall not the little world, man, groan for his own sin? Send a little temptation in at the ear, or eye; it will not rest working, till it run like poison to the heart. David let in a little leaven at his eye, it quickly wrought to his heart, gangrened to adultery, to blood; hardly cured.

A little Coliquintida spoils all the broth: a spot in the face blemisheth all the beauty. Naaman the Syrian is plentifully commended: He was captain of the host, a great man with his master, and honorable, because the Lord by him had given deliverance to Syria: he was also a mighty man of valor: but he was a Leper. This same But mars all; But he was a Leper. So in the soul, one vice disgraceth a great deal of virtue. When he was cured and converted by Elisha, first he's charitable, offers gold & garments, but he excepts bowing in the house of Rimmon: he is devout, and begs earth for sacrifice, but excepts Rimmon: he is religious, and promiseth to offer to none but the Lord, but he excepts Rimmon. This little leaven, this But Rimmon, soured all. Dead flies cause the ointment of the Apothecary to send forth a stinking savor. The Apothecaries unction is a thing praised in the Scriptures, compounded of many excellent simples, made (not so much for medicine, as) for Odor: yet the flies of death putrefy it. So doth a little folly him that is in reputation for Wisdom and Honor.

When one commended Alexander for his noble acts, and famous achievements; another objected against him, that he killed Calisthenes. He was valiant, and successful in the wars: true, but he killed Calisthenes. He overcame the great Darius: so, but he killed Calisthenes. He made himself master of the world: grant it, but still he killed Calisthenes. His meaning was, that this one unjust fact poisoned all his valorous deeds. Beware of sin, which may thus leaven the whole lump of our soul. Indeed we must all sin, and every sin sours: but to the faithful and repentant Christian it shall not be damnable. There is no damnation to them that are in Jesus Christ. There is in all corruption, to most affliction, to none damnation, that are in Christ. Our leaven hath soured us, but we are made sweet again by the all-perfuming blood of our blessed Savior.

6. Minima peccata facilius destruunt: the least sins are the most fatal to men's destruction. Anima est tota in toto: so that if the toe aches, the head feels, the eye lets fall a tear, the very heart mourns. So let but the eye lust, the soul is in danger to be lost. Mors per fenestras, faith the Prophet. Death comes in at the windows, then enters into the Palaces, to cut off the children without, and the young men (ϕ) the streets. Is it but an unclean thought? Mors in illâ; as the children of the Prophets cried Mors in ollâ: there is death in it, and for it. A dram of poison diffuseth it self to all parts, till it strangle the vital spirits, and turn out the soul from her

Tenement. How great a matter a little fire kindleth! It is all one whether a man be killed with the prick of a little thorn, or with the he wing of a broad sword, so he be killed. We have seen a whole arm impostumated with a little prick in the finger: if Satan can but wound our heel, (as the Poets fain of Achilles) he will make shift to kill us there; even from the heel to send death to the heart. Therefore Christ calls Hatred murder, a wanton eye adultery: besides the possibility of act, they are the same in the intention of heart. The hornet is a little fly, yet it stings deadly.

I know that heavier sins shall have a heavier weight of punishment: yet is the least heavy enough to sink the soul to the bottomless pit. Greater fury of iniquity shall have the hotter fire, but O let us never feel the heat of one. A little leak sinks a great vessel. Pope Marcelline being accused for Idolatry, answered for himself; I did but cast a few grains of Incense into the fire; that was little or nothing. Yes, it was manifest offering to Idols, is that nothing? Christ would not obey Satan in his minimis: he would not answer his desire in the smallest suit he could request; of turning stones into bread, even while he was so hungry as forty days fasting could make him. Teaching us to deny Satan in his best motions; lest custom of having them granted make him so impudent, as to take no repulse in his greatest temptations.

This is the Devils method of working, as it is in the first Psalm: Blessed is the man that hath not walked, &c. First he gets a man to walk a turn or two with him in sin, as it were to confer and debate the matter. After some walking, lest he should be weary, he prevails with him to stand in the way of sinners; after admission of the thought, to commission of the act. Lastly, he persuades him for his ease to fit down in the seat of the scornful; falling to despise God, and deride all goodness. Thus he brings him from walking to standing, from standing to sitting still: and this is limen inferni, the very threshold of hell. We judge of sin, as of the Sun; little because far off: yet indeed it is bigger then the earth. The nearer we come to the sense of iniquity, the greater it appears. Was it such a sin for Adam to eat a forbidden Apple? Yes, the greatness is remonstrable in the event, it brought destruction upon himself and his posterity. Is it such a heinous offense for David to know the number of his people? Do not Princes make good their Muster-books by such a Quare, and numeration? The plague witnessed the greatness of it, and himself cries, Peccaui, I have done wickedly. Look on the least sin in Satan's false glass, and it seems contemptible: behold it in the true glass of God's Law, and it appears abominable. The Devil stands betwixt wicked men and their sins all their life: but placeth their sins betwixt heaven and themselves in death: writes them in Text letters on the Curtaines, that their amazed souls cannot choose but read them. Thus he that led them living by sin to presumption; now drives them dying by sin to desperation.

Satan seems modest, and will be contented with a little, when he can get no more: he will play at small game, before he sit out. Wilt thou not cut throats? yet quarrel and appoint fields: not so, yet hate thine enemies: not profess hatred, yet watch occasions to hinder his good: if thou wilt not iniure his estate, yet at least scandalize his good name. He will take little, rather then nothing. The Israelites in the Desert had no rich and costly sacrifices to offer to Baal Peor. They had not such store of beasts, but the oblations to God took them up. I cannot see what they should have fit for this sacrifice to Baal, except Manna and water: (too good for the Devil) but he •...s content with this. Yet it is evident that they committed Idolatry. Neither be ye Idolaters, as were some of them: as it is written, The people sate down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. Rather than want their custom, Satan will take such as they had. Will Naaman worship God? yet let him worship Rimmon too: no, he will not do so, yet let him bow to Rimmon: no, nor so much: yet let him bow before Rimmon: the Devil is glad of this, where he can get no more. Thus Pharaoh minceth and limits with Moses concerning the dismissal of Israel. God's charge was; Let my people go three days journey in the wilderness, to celebrate a feast to the Lord. Now mark how Pharaoh would compound it. First Sacrifice to God in this land: no, saith Moses, we must go into the wilderness. Then saith Pharaoh, If there be no remedy, Go, and go to the wilderness, and sacrifice to your God; but go not far: nay, we must go three days journey. Then Pharaoh; Go ye the men, but leave your children behind you: nay we must go old and young, sons and daughters. Then Pharaoh; Go ye men, women, and children, so far as your feet can measure in three days: but your flocks and your herds shall be stayed: nay, we will not leave a hoof behind us. So when the Devil perceives no remedy, he falls to indenting with niggardly grants and allowances.

Somewhat hath some savor; give him at least a thought, a word, a look (as Lots wife) and it something pleaseth him. Among the Heathen they used to join together Epula and Sacrificia: with solemn sacrifices to their gods, solemn bankets among themselves. So the Apostle delivers the custom of the Moabites, 1. Cor. 10. 7. In the midst of their Idolatry, they sate down to eat & drink. So the Psalmist writes of that cursed commixtion of Israel with Moab; that they had Idolatrous feasts. They joined themselves to Baal-Peor: and did eat the sacrifices of the dead. One nation had a custom in these superstitious feasts, to sacrifice to their Idol Capita, some Noble men's heads according as it fell to their lots, together with their hearts and their livers. It came to the turn of the Kings special favorite, thus to lose his life: the King resolving both to keep the custom, yet to save his friend, objected that God was no murderer, nor delighted in the blood of men. That if he were a God, he was certainly good, and goodness stood not in the desire of his own creatures destruction. Therefore instead of the man's head, he offered the head of an onion: and for blood, heart, and livers of men, all these of birds or beasts. The Devil must be pleased with this: he saw that this little homage was some acknowledgement of his sovereignty.

Satan can hold a man's soul in by a little, as a bird that hangs in the net by a claw. Perhaps shame & fear keeps some from eruption into scandalous things: the appearance is vizarded, the affection is not mortified. Like an Eunuch, he doth not beget palpable & gross turpitudes: yet hath a lust, itch, and concupiscence: this little serves the Devils turn. Satan would keep away the light of the Truth from a man; well, he is so seated that he will have it; by knowledge he seems to cast out Satan. Yet if he can but insinuate into his affection, this little cord will pull him in again with ease. Must he lose the Sconce of thy understanding? Let him hold the Cittadell of thy desires: this little gate will let him in at his pleasure.

I draw to conclusion; let this teach us all to make a scrutiny in our souls, and seriously to repent of this little leaven. Little in quantity, great in quality: little in estimation, powerful in operation. Little in the sight of men, judging, by outward appearance, great in the sight of God judging in truth. Lot said of the City of Zoar; Is it not a little one? and my soul shall live: thou sayest of thy sin; Is it not a little one, and why should my soul die? A little Posterne opened, may betray the greatest City. Jonathan tasted but a little honey on the top of his wand, and hardly he escaped death for it. A little leaven makes the head heavy, and the heart sick. Eschew this little, if thou wouldst be great in heaven. For whosoever shall break one of these least Commandments, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven. Minimus, that is indeed Nullus: the least there, because he shall not be there at all. Let no tang of corruption come to thy least part, if thou desirest to preserve body and soul blameless to the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Repentance must be to all dead works: sanctification takes liberty in no sin. Nullum peccatum retinendum spe remissionis. No evil must be reserved under the hope of forgiveness. God gave a Law, but no dispensation for any breach of it: his General rules have no exceptions, unless it please the Divine Oracle to dispense with it. Thou shalt not worship an Idol: no, not to save my life? Not to save life, as those three servants of God professed to Nebuchadnezzar. If the God we serve will not deliver us, yet we will not serve thy gods, nor worship thy golden image. Thou sayest, Minimum est, it is little: but in minimis fidelem esse, magnum est: to be faithful in a little, is no little virtue. Well done, good servant: thou had been faithful in a little, therefore I will make thee ruler over much. He that is not careful in a little, is not to be trusted for more. If any man will corrupt his conscience for a pound, what would he do for a thousand? If Judas will sell his Master for thirty pence, about some 22. shillings of our money; what would he have sold for the Treasury? God never gave a Non obstante for sin. The Pope indeed gives Bulls and Indulgences, & Pardons for cursed works before their perpetration: but God never allows leave to do ill. The Pope says, Kill an heretical King. God says, Touch him not: woe to that soul who takes the Popes word, before the Lord's word. God charged a Prophet, that he should eat no bread, nor drink water in Bethel. Another Prophet came; saying, An Angel spake to me (blessed Angels speak truth: nay more, he spake) by the word of the Lord. Bring him back, that he may eat bread, and drink water. He did so, but mark the event: returning home, a Lyon slew him by the way. Believe not a man, believe not a Pope, believe not a Prophet, believe not an Angel against the word of the Lord.

Let us refuse iniquity in what extenuation of quantity, or color of quality soever it be offerd us. For sin is like a bemired dog; if it fawnes on us, it fowls us. And the least sin is like a little leak in a ship, which if it be not stopped, will sink the whole vessel. The Frenchmen have a military Proverb; The loss of a nail, the loss of an Army. The want of a nail looseth the shoe, the loss of a shoe troubles the horse, the horse indangereth the rider, the rider breaking his rank molests the company, so far as to hazard the whole Army. From slender and regardless beginnings, grow out these fatal and destructive effects. The doors are shut, the thief cannot enter: a little boy is put in at the window, and he opens the door for the great thief; so the house is robbed. A charm is cast in at the window, eye, or ear; that quickly unlocks the door of the heart, till all the rooms be ransakit, not a piece of virtue, or one gemme of grace left.

Pompey marching to the wars, requested to lodge his Army in a certain City, by whose borders he must needs pass: the Governor answered that he would not trouble his City with so numerous and dangerous a guest. Pompey then desired but entertainment and relief for his sick soldiers, who were perishing for want of succor: the Governor thought, sick men could do them no mischief; this was granted, they admitted. Being there a while, they recovered their health, opened the gates to the rest, so became strong enough to take the City. If Satan cannot get leave for his whole Army of lusts, yet he begs hard for his weak ones, as sins of infirmity: but those sickly soldiers soon get strength to surprise the soul.

The trees of the Forest held a solemn Parliament, wherein they consulted of the innumerable wrongs which the Axe had done them: therefore made an Act, that no tree should hereafter lend the Axe a helme, on pain of being cut down. The Axe travels up & down the Forest, begs wood of the Cedar, Oke, Ash, Elme, even to the Poplar; not one would lend him a chip. At last he desired so much as would serve him to cut down the briars and bushes; alleging that those shrubs did suck away the juice of the ground, hinder the growth, and obscure the glory of the fair and goodly Trees. Hereon they were content to afford him so much; when he had gotten his helme, he cut down themselves too. These be the subtle reaches of sin; give it but a little advantage, on the fair promises to remove thy troubles; and it will cut down thy soul also. Therefore Obsta principijs: trust it not in the least. Consider a sin (as indeed it is) a crucifying of Christ; wilt thou say, I may crucify Christ a little? I may scourge his flesh, wound his side, pierce his heart a little? What man loves the Lord Jesus, who would either say it, or do it? Consider thy falling into sin, a hurling of thyself down from some high pinnacle: wilt thou say, I may break my neck a little? Consider it a casting thyself into unquenchable fire; wilt thou say, I may burn my soul and body a little! As suffering we think the least misery too great, so sinning let us think the least iniquity too great. So avoiding also little sins, we shall find great favor with Jesus Christ.

Amen.

FAITHS ENCOVRAGEMENT.

LUKE 17. 19.

And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole.

THESE words were spoken by our Savior Christ to the penitent and faithful Leper. For induction I will observe two remarkable circumstances, preceding my Text. First, that Christ did mend him, and then commend him: he did purge him, and praise him.

1. He mended him, curing first his body, then his soul. His body of the Leprosy, a disease not more loathsome to endure, then hard to cure. The difficulty of healing it, appears by the answer of the King of Israel, upon the receipt of the King of Syria's letters: Am I God, to kill and make alive, that this man doth send unto me, to recover a man of his Leprosy? intimating that only God is able to cure the Leprosy. His soul of the spiritual Leprosy: and this was the perfection of health. For this cure the Prophet so earnestly prays; Sana animam; Lord, be merciful unto me, heal my soul, for I have sinned against thee. This is a supernatural cure, fit only for the great Physician of souls to perform: the more difficult, Quo minus in natura sit, quod profit: because nature hath no influence in her stars, no minerals in her earth, no herbs in her garden, that can heal it.

2 He commends him: of all the ten cleansed, there are none found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger. God had his Tythe there, whence he might least expect it. Now what doth Christ commend him for? For his thankfulness, for his humility, for his faith: why these graces were Christ's own; doth he praise him for that himself had given him? Yes, this is God's custom; Sua dona coronat; he crowns his own graces, he rewards his own gifts. Which teacheth how we should understand Reward in the Scripture. Call the laborers, and give them their hire. Whosoever gives a cup of cold water to a Disciple, shall not lose his reward. This hire and reward, is not the stipend of our labors, but of God's love. He gives us the good of grace, and then rewards it with the good of glory. It is a reward Secundum quid, a gift simpliciter. Compare eternal life to the work, looking no farther, it is a reward. Rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven. But examine the Original from whence it proceeds, then it is the gift of God. Eternal life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ. He is said to Shew mercy to them that keep his Commandments: the very keeping the Commandments is not merit, it hath need of mercy. Lo thus the Lord gives grace, then praiseth it, blesseth it, rewards it. Christ clotheth his Spouse with his own garments, the smell of Myrrh, Aloes, and Cassia; A white robe of his perfect righteousness imputed; with his golden merits, and inestimable Jewels of graces; and then praiseth her; Thou art all fair, my Love: there is no spot in thee. When God made the world, with all creatures in it, he beheld it, and Euge bonum; behold, it is exceeding good: so when he makes a Christian (Maiorem, meliorem mundo) and hath furnished him with competent graces, he turns back and looks upon his own workmanship; Ecce bonum, it is exceeding good: he forbears not to commend it.

Now what doth he specially commend in this converted Leper? his praising of God. The Leper praiseth God, God praiseth the Leper. He praiseth in his praising two things; the Rightnesse, and the Rareness. 1. The Rightnesse, that he gave praise to God; directed it thither where it was only due. He returned to give glory to God: non mihi sed Deo, saith Christ: not to me, but to God. Perhaps his knowledge was not yet so far enlightened, as to know him that cured him, to be God: therefore bestowed his praise where he was sure it should be accepted, where only it is deserved; on God. I seek not my own praise, saith Jesus, but mittentis, the praise of him that sent me. If I honor myself, my honor is nothing. 2. The Rareness, and that in two respects. 1. That he alone of ten, blessed God, God had but his Tenth: it is much if the tenth soul go to heaven. The godly are so rare, that they are set up for marks, and signs and wonders; as if the world stood amazed at them. 2. That he only was the Stranger; a Samaritan.

Many great virtues were found among the Samaritans; Faith, Charity. Thankfulness: First, Faith; Many of the Samaritans of that City believed on him. Secondly, Charity; It was the Samaritan that took compassion on the man wounded between Jerusalem and Jericho. The Priest and the Levite passed by him without pity, but the Samaritan bound up his wounds. Thirdly, Gratitude exemplified in this Samaritan Leper: none of the Jews gave God praise for their healing, but only the Samaritan. It was strange that in Gentiles should be found such virtue, where it was least looked for. Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel. The least informed did prove the best reformed. Samaritan was held a word of reproach amongst the Jews; as appears by their malicious imputation to Christ. Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a Devil? They were esteemed as dogs: It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs. And at the first promulgation of the Gospel, the Apostles received a manifest prohibition; Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any City of the Samaritans enter ye not. It was therefore rare to reap such fruits out of the wild Forest, cursed like the mountains of Gilboa; Let there be no dew, neither rain upon you, nor fields of offerings. To be good in good company is little wonder: for Angels to be good in heaven, Adam in Paradise, Judas in Christ's College, had been no admirable matter: to apostate in these places so exemplary of goodness, was intolerable weakness. But for Abraham to be good in Chaldee, Noah in the old world, Lot in Sodom: for a man now to be humble in Spain, continent in France, chaste in Venice, sober in Germany, temperate in England; this is the commendation. Such a one is a Lily in a Forest of thorns, a handful of wheat in a field of cockle. Let me not here omit two things, worthy my insertion, and your observation.

1. God's judgment and man's do not concur: the Samaritans were condemned of the Jews, yet here nine Jews are condemned by one Samaritan. They that seem best to the world, are often the worst to God: they that are best to God, seem worst to the world. When the Moon is lightest to the earth, she is darkest to heaven: when she is lightest to heaven, she is darkest to the earth. So often men most glorious to the world, are obscurest to the divine approbation: others obscure to the worlds acknowledgement, are principally respected in God's favor. Man would have cleared the Pharisee, and condemned the Publican, when they both appeared in the Temple together; the one as it were in the Choir, the other in the Belfry. But Christ's judgment is, that the Publican departed rather justified. The Jews thought, that if but 2. men in the world were saved, the one should be a Scribe, the other a Pharisee: But Christ saith, neither of them both shall come there. You shall see others in the Kingdom of heaven, and you yourselves thrust out. Some like the Moon are greater or less by the Sun of men's estimation. Samuel was mistaken in Eliab, Abinadab and Shammah: for the Lord had chosen David. Isaac preferred Esau, but God preferred Jacob: and made the father give the blessing to that son, to whom he least meant it. All this justifies that, my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, •...aith the Lord.

2. Learn we here from Christ, to give men their due praise to them that deserve praise. God •...aches of vices with commination, of virtues wit•...•...endation. Let us speak of others sins with grief, of their good works with praise and joy. Of others sins with grief: so did S. Paul. Many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, that they are enemies of the cross of Christ. So David: Rivers of waters ru•... down mine eyes, because men keep not thy Law. Our Savior wept over apostate Jerusalem: he wept over the people, beholding them as scattered sheep without a shepherd. Who can forbear weeping to see souls muffled & miss-led by ignorance: like the babes of Niniuch, not able to distinguish the right hand from the left? Alas, there are innumerable souls, that know not their own estate; O pity them. Because thou wilt not hear this, my soul shall weep in secret for thy pride.

But let us mention others virtues and good actions with praise. It is the argument of a sullen and proud disposition, not to commend them that do well. Yet there is no ointment so sweet, but there will be some dead flies to corrupt it. There be certain dogs that will bark at the Moon: Critics, that spend the larger part of their time seeking knots in a bulrush. The Snow is not so white, but there is an Anaxagoras to make it black. It was God's commendation of Job, that, there was none like him in the earth: he had no fellow, yet the devil picks quarrels, and inuenteth slanders against him. Traducers of their brethren, I call not Damones, but Damonis agunt: I do not say they are devils, but they do the work of devils.

This mischief of depraving, hath also infected the Church: Many a Preacher thinks his own glory eclipsed, if the next Orbe be lightened with a brighter Star. Hence they fall to faulting and inueighing; as if there were no way to build up their own credits, but by the ruins of another's disgrace. God doth otherwise; The Lord commended the unjust Steward, because he had done wisely. Though he had many faults, yet Christ praiseth him for what was worthy praise: his policy. S. Paul found gross errors in the Corinthians; In this I praise you not, that you come together, not for the better, but for the worse. But wherein they did well, he commends them, ver. 2. I praise you brethren, that you remember me in all things. Thus Ezekiel commends Daniel, a Prophet of his own time, and thought it not any derogation from himself. Behold, Art thou wiser than Daniel? As Solomon saith of beggars: A poor man oppressing the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food behind it. So a Minister disparaging a Minister, is a breach, whereby the devil comes out; and many souls go into hell. Now to the words: Arise, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole.

The verse may be distinguished into a Passport, and a Certificate. Arise, go thy way, there is the Passport: Thy faith hath made thee whole, there is the Certificate. He gives him first a Dismission, leave to depart: then a Testimony, or Assurance, both to certify the Church actually, that he was cleansed of his leprosy; but especially to certify his own conscience that he was converted, and that the faith of his soul brought health to his body. In the Passport, or Dismission, there are two words considerable: Surge and Vade; Arise, Go: Surge ad incipiendum, vade ad perficiendum. First, let us speak of them secundum sonum, then secundum sensum. First, according to the History, then according to Mystery. Allegories are tolerable when they be profitable: Nor can it be much from the Text, by occasion of those two words spoken to the ears of the Lepers body, to instruct your souls how to Arise from the Seat of Custom, the couch of sin: and to Go on in the way of salvation.

Arise.

The Leper casts himself down, and Christ bids him arise. Humility is the Gentleman Usher to Glory. God (that sends away the rich empty from his gates) loves to fill the hungry with good things. The air passeth by the full vessel, and only filleth that is empty. This is the difference between the poor and beggars: both agree in not having, differ in craving. The proud are Pauperes Spiritus, the humble are, paupers spiritu: Blessed are (not the poor spirits, but) the poor in spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of heaven. Such as felt their wants, sought, and besought God for supply. Every Valley shall be filled, and every Mountain be brought low. The lowly mind shall be exalted, the high-towering ambitious shall be thrown down. How should God say to the Merchant that glories in his wealth, to the Usurer that admireth his monies, to the Gallant, that wonders that his good clothes do not prefer him: Arise! alas, they are up already, they were never down. A dwarfe in a great throng seeming low on his knees, was bidden by the Prince to stand up: alas, he was before at his highest. God cannot be so mistaken, as to encourage their standing up, who never yet had the manners to cast themselves down. Descendite vt ascendatis ad Deum: cecidistis enim ascendendo contra eu.... Descend, that ye may rise up to God: for you have fallen by rising up against God. He that is a Mountebank, must level himself even with the ground: if humbleness hath once thrown him down, and brought him on his knees, he shall hear the Patron and pattern of humbleness, comforting him with a Surge; Arise.

The guest that sets himself down at the lower end of the Table, shall hear the Feast-maker kindly remove him; Friend, sit up higher. If Hester fall at Asuerus feet, he will take her by the hand, and bid her arise. When Peter fell down at Jesus knees, saying, Depart from me, I am a sinful man, O Lord: He presently was raised up with; Fear not, from henceforth thou shalt catch men. Zacchaeus is gotten up on high to see Jesus; see him he may with his eye of flesh: but he must descend, that he may see him with his eye of faith. Come down, Zacchaeus; this day is salvation come to thy house: Descend to the ground, that thou mayest be raised above the clouds. Pride even in good things, Non ditio, sed perditio; is no argument of possession, but destruction. The haughty-minded looks always beyond the mark, and offers to shoot further then he looks; but ever falls two bows short, humility and discretion: who is heard to say with Paul, Quorum ego sum primus; I am the chief of sinners: such an humble confession scarce heard of: But Christ had given him a Surge, on his former humbling: Arise, and bear my name before Gentiles and Kings, &c. Let us all thus cast our selves down in humility, that the Lord may say to us in mercy, Arise.

G...e.

This was the word of Dismission, wherewith Christ sends him away. Though he were healed, therein had his hearts desire; what could he expect more of Christ? why is he not gone? No, he has not yet his Vade, he will not go till he is bidden. He found such sweetness in the Lord Jesus, that could you blame him though he were loath to depart? From another man's house, we say, after some small tarrying, Let us save our credits, and go before we are bidden: but from the Lord let us not depart without a dismission. The hearts of the people were so set on Christ, that he was fain to send them often away, Mat. 14. 22. He sent the multitudes away, Math. 15. 39. He sent the people away. As Simeon, that Swanne, which sung his own funeral: Nunc dimittis; Lord, now thou lettest thy servant depart in peace.

This makes to the shame of their faces, that without other cause then of weariness, waywardness, or wantonness, will not tarry for their Discedite, but depart the Church without the blessing: they will not stay till Christ bids them Go. They venture therein wretchedly and dangerously, if they could so conceive it, to depart without the Peace of God. It is an usual complaint of man in distress; Quare direliquisti me, Domine? Why hast thou forsaken me, O Lord? God justly answers, Quare direliquisti me, Home? Why didst thou forsake me first, O man? Would you needs depart when you should not? you therefore shall depart when you would not. Discedite, Depart, indeed a woeful rejection. Depart from me, ye cursed: why cursed? good reason, you would not tarry for a blessing. Thus is God even with the wicked, Recedistis à me, recedam à vobis: You left me, I therefore leave you. Will you go without bidding? Abite, get you gone. He that will go into captivity, let him go. Deus prior in amore, posterior in odio. God loved us before we loved him, he doth not actually hate us, till we first hate him. Nunquam deserit, nisi cum deseritur: He forsakes not us, till we forsake him: no man can take Christ from thy soul, unless thou take thy soul from Christ. God complains of the Jews, that they had left him: My people have forsaken me. Forsake thee, O Lord, living Father of mercies, and God of all comfort? Will a man forsake the snow of Lebanon, and the old flowing waters that come from the Rocks? If any will do so, then hear the curse: O Lord, the hope of Israel, all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from thee shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the Lord, the fountain of living waters. But let them that cleave to the Lord, hear the blessing, I will not leave thee, nor forsake thee. Let us hang on the mouth of God for decision of all our doubts, direction of all our ways: like the Centurions servants, Going when he bids us, coming when he calls us, doing what he commands us. At his Word let us arise and go on earth; at his Call we shall arise and go to heaven. He that obeys the surge in grace, shall have the surge in Glory: He that goes in the ways of Holiness, shall go into the courts of Happiness. Hethat goeth forth weeping, bearing with him precious seed, shall come again rejoicing, and bring his sheaves with him. They that have done well, shall go into everlasting life.

Thus much of these two words, as they belonged to that person, the Leper: Now let us usefully apply them to our selves. First, let us observe from this

Arise,

1. It is Christ that gives the Surge which reuiueth us: we can never stir from the seat of impiety, till he bids us Arise. No man can come to me, except the Father draw him. The Spirit of Christ must draw us out of the black and mirie pit of iniquity; as Ebedmelech drew Jeremiah out of the dungeon: We cannot arise of our selves; Nature hath no foot, that can make one true step toward heaven: That which is borne of the flesh, is flesh: not fleshly in the concrete, but flesh in the abstract. We cannot speak, unless he open our lips. God says to the Prophet, Cry. What shall I cry? the Spirit must give the word; All flesh is grass, &c. We cannot stand, unless he gives us feet: Son of man, stand upon thy feet: alas, he cannot, but ver. 2. The Spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet. We cannot see except he gives us eyes. Intelligite, insipientes, Bee wise, O ye fools: Alas, they cannot: but Da mihi intellectum, do thou, O Lord, give them wisdom. Bee ye not conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of your mind, that you may prove, &c. There are first two verbs Passive, then an Active: to show that we are double so much Patients, as we are Agents. Being moved, we move. Acta fit actiua voluntas: when God hath inclined our will to good, that will can then incline us to perform goodness.

If we cannot speak without lips from him, nor walk without affections from him, nor see, except he give us eyes; then neither can we arise except he takes us by the hand: as Peter took the Creeple, and lift him up, and immediately his feet and ancle bones received strength. If the spirit of our Lord Jesus give us a Surge, our lame souls shall grow strong and lively in the nerves of graces, we shall Arise and walk; leaping, and singing, and praising God.

2 We must arise, for we are naturally down. By nature a man lieth in wickedness: by grace he riseth to newness of life. Nature and Religion are two opposites: I mean by nature, corrupted nature; and by Religion, true Religion: for otherwise, the accepting of some Religion, is engrafted to every Nature. It is Nature, to be dead in sins: it is Religion, to be dead to sin. It is Nature, to be Reprobate to every good work: Religion, to be ready to every good work. It is nature, to be a Lover of ones self, 2. Tim. 3. 2. Religion, to deny ones self, Luk. 9. 23. It is nature for a man to seek only his own profit: Religion, to Serve others by love. Nature esteems Preaching, folly: Religion, the power of God to salvation. There are two lights in man as in heaven, Reason and Faith: Reason, like Sara, is still asking; How can this be? Faith, like Abraham, not disputes, but believes. There is no validity in Moral virtues: Civil men's good works are a mere carcass, without the soul of Faith.

They are like that Roman, that having fortunately slain his three enemies, the Curiatij: coming home in triumph, and beholding all the people welcome him with acclamations, only his sister weep, because he had slain her love: he embittered his victories with the murder of his own sister. Carnal men may do glorious deeds, flourish with brave achievements: but they mar all, by killing their own sister, the dear soul. Thus we are down by Nature, Grace can only help us up, and make us arise. If you ask how Nature hath dejected us: how we came originally thus depraved: I answer, We know not so well how we came by it, as we are sure we have it. Nihil ad pr...dicandum notius, nihil ad intelligendum secretius: Nothing is more certainly true to be preached, nothing more secretly hard to be understood. Therefore, as in case of a Town on fire, let us not busily enquire how it came, but carefully endeavor to put it out. A Traveler passing by, and seeing a man fallen into a deep pit, began to wonder how he fell in: to whom the other replied; Tu cogita quomodo hinc me liberares, non quomodo huc ceciderim quaeras: Do thou, good friend, rather study how to help me out, then stand questioning how I came in. Pray to Christ for this Surge: Libera nos Domine, we are naturally down, do thou, O Lord, graciously raise us up.

3. We must Arise before we can Go. First arise, then go thy way, saith Christ. He that is down, may creep like a serpent, cannot go like a man. Thou art to fight with cruel enemies; Not flesh and blood, but Principalities and Powers, wicked spirits in high places: Thou wilt perform it poorly whiles thou art along on the ground: The flesh will insult over thee with vnderdenied lusts. Quicquid suggeritur, caeteris aggeritur: there is not a sinful motion suggested, but it is instantly embraced, and added to that miserable dunghill of iniquity. And is not this wretched, to have Chams curse upon thee, to be a slave to slaves? The world will hold thy head under his girdle, whiles he tramples on thy heart: thou shalt eat no other food then he gives thee; he will feed thee with bribes, usuries, injuries, perjuries, blasphemies, homicides, turpitudes: none of these must be refused. The devil will tyrannize over thee: thou canst hardly grapple with that great Red Dragon, when thou art mounted like Saint George on the back of faith; Alas, how shouldst thou resist him, being down under his feet? Arise therefore, and take the whole armor of God, that you may both Stand, and Withstand.

Arise, lest God coming, and finding thee down, strike thee lower. From him that hath not, shall be taken away that he seemed to have. Pauper vbique tacet, is a Proverb more plentifully true in a mystical, then temporal poverty. We say, Qui iacet in terris, non habet unde cadat: he that lies on the ground, hath no lower a descent to fall to: yes, there is a lower place. Judas found a lower fall then the earth, when he departed In locum suum, into his own place. Such was that great Monarchs fall, How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer? how art thou cut down to the ground? This was a great descent, from heaven to earth. But, ver. 15. Thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit: This was a greater descent, from heaven to hell. We esteem it a great fall (ceremonially) from a Throne to a Prison: and the devil meant it a great fall (locally) from the Pinnacle to the ground: But there is Abyssus inferna, a lower precipice. David begins a Psalm of prayer, De profundis; Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Lord. But there is a depth of depths; and out of that deep there is no rising. Arise now, lest you fall into that deep then.

Arise, for if thou wilt not, thou shalt be raised. Si non surrexeris volenter, suscitaberis violenter. If thou refuse to rise willingly, thou shalt be roused against thy will. If thou wilt not hear the first Surge, which is the Ministers voice; thou shalt hear the last Surge, which is the Arch-angels voice. Dicis, Surgam, thou sayest, I will rise; but when! Modo Domine, modo: Anon Lord, all in time. Will not this be a silly excuse at the day of Judgment, I will rise anon? Thou must rise in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last Trump. Though thou cry to the Mountains, Fall on me, and to the Rocks, Hide me: yet Nulla euasio, thou must arise and appear. There are two voices that sound out this Surge: one Evangelical, and that is of mercy; yet we drown this, as Italians do thunder; by Drums, Bells, Cannons. The other Angelical, and that is of Justice, a voice impossible to be avoided. This is that last Sermon, that all the world shall hear: Arise ye dead, and come to judgment.

Arise; let us now raise up our selves from corruption of soul, that we may one day be raised from corruption of body; They that will not rise, their souls must, must, and carry their bodies to judgment. This world was made for man, not man for this world: therefore they take a wrong course that lie down there. He that lies down when he should arise and go, shall rise and go, when he would lie down. He that sleeps in the cradle of security all his life, sins soundly without starting: when he once starts and wakes, he must never sleep again. The devil and mischief are ever watching: and shall man, whom they watch to hurt, sleep? He that would deceive the devil, had need to rise betimes. The Lyon is said to sleep with one eye open, the Hare with both: the worldling with both eyes of his soul shut. He never riseth till he goes to bed: his soul wakens not, till his body falls asleep on his death-bed: then perhaps he looks up. As sometimes they that have been blind many years, at the approaching of death have seen: (whereof Physicians give many reasons) so the death-bed opens the eyes of the soul. Indeed at that time there is possibility of waking, but hazard of rising. That poor winter-fruit will hardly relish with God. Miserum incipete viuere, cum definendum est. It is wretched for a man then to begin his life, when he must end it. It is at the best but morosa et morbosa panitentia; a wearish and sick repentance: whereas God requires a quick and lively sacrifice; this is as sick as the person that makes it. This indeed is not a Conversion, but a Reuersion, or mere refuse.

To raise the secure from their unseasonable, unreasonable sleep, God doth ring them a peal of five Bells.

1. The first Bell is Conscience: this is the treble, and doth somewhat trouble: especially if the hand of GOD pulls it. Many think of their consciences, as ill Debtors do of their Creditors; they are loath to talk with them. Indeed God is the Creditor, and Conscience the Seriant, that will meet them at every turn. It makes a syllogisticall conclusion in the mind: Reason, like David, draws the sword, and Conscience, like Nathan, knocks him on the breast with the hilts. David made the Proposition, The man that hath done this, shall dnee the death: Nathan the Assumption, Thou art the man: Conscience the Conclusion, Therefore thou must die. If you hear not, yea feel not the sound of this bell, suspect your deadness of heart: for that City is in danger, where the Alarm-bell rings not.

2. The second Bell is the Stint, or certain to all the rest; Uox Euangelij, the voice of the Gospel. This Bell of Aaron is so perpetually rung amongst us, that as a knell in a great mortality, (quia frequens, non terrens) so common that no man regards it. Indeed, if some particular clapper ring melodiously to the ear, we come to please that rather than the soul. Luxurient wits think the Scripturephrase gross: nothing delights them but a painted and meretricious eloquence. There are some that will not hear this Bell at all: like Jeroboam, they will not travel to Jerusalem for a Sermon, but content themselves with a Calf at home. Others look that the Preachers tongue should incessantly walk, but let their own hearts lie still. Thus often our Lecturer shall preach, we will give the hearing when we list. Thus many Ministers come to a Parish with their bones full of marrow, veins full of blood: but all is soon spent, and the people never the better. We ring, but you do not rise.

3. The third Bell is the Mean; and this is Suspiria gemitusque morientium; the cries & groans of the dying. Another's Passing-bell is thy warning-bell. Death snatcheth here and there about us, thousands on our left, ten thousands on our right: yet as if we had a Supersedeas, or Protection against it, we neither relent nor repent. Our security is argued of the more madness, because we have so common motions and monitions of death. Yet Nonerimus memores esse necesse mori. How horrible is it to be drunk in a charnell house? As Christ spake, Let the dead bury the dead: So we bring to the Church dead bodies with deader souls.

Forma, favor populi, fervor inuenilis, opesque,

Surripuere tibi noscere quid sit homo.

We confess our selves mortal, yet we live as if death had no quarrel against us. This Bell is the Mean, but it is too mean to wake us.

4. The fourth Bell is the Counter-tenor: vox pauperum, the cry of the poor. This bell rings loud, either to us for mercy, or against us for cruelty. Let us know, that if it cannot waken us, it shall waken God against us. Their cries are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabbath. Set not thy soul in danger of the people's curse: by inhauncings, ingrossings, oppressions, &c. But thou sayest they are wicked men that will curse, and God will not hear the wishes of the wicked. I answer, it is often seen that the curse of the undone waster, lights upon the head of the vndooing Usurer. The imprecation of one evil man may fall upon another: God so suffers it, not because he cursed thee, but because thou hast deserved this curse. Let this Bell make Oppressors arise to show mercy, that God may rise to show them mercy. Otherwise the poor man is ready to pray, Arise, O Lord, in thine anger; lift up thyself, because of the rage of our enemies: awake for us to the judgment thou hast commanded. Yea, though they pray not for it, God will do it. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord. I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at it. If this Bell sound mournfully to thee for bread to the hungry, arise to this sound, as that neighbor rose at midnight to relieve his importunate friend. If it cannot waken thy covetous soul to show mercy to Christ tempore suo, in his time of need; nor will Christ arise to show mercy to thee tempore tuo, in thy time of need.

5. The last Bell is the Tenor, the Bow-bell; able to waken all the City. But though that material Bell can teach us when it is time to go to bed, yet this mystical bell cannot teach us the time to arise. This is the abuse of the creatures: The rust of the gold cries against the hoarder: the stone out of the wall against the Oppressor: the corn and wine against the Epicure. This is a roaring and a groaning Bell. The whole creature groans, and traueils in pain under us. This is the creatures ordinary Sermon: Accipe, red, cave; use us without abusing; return thankfulness without dissembling; or look for vengeance without sparing. They seem to cry unto us: We desire not to be spared, but not to be abused: Necessitati subseruire non recusamus, sed luxui: we would satisfy your natural necessity, not intemperate riot. We are the nocent creatures, that cause their innocence to become miserable. And but that the Divine providence restrains them, it is marvel that they break not their league with us; and with their horns, and hoofs, and other artillery of nature make war upon us, as their unrighteous and tyrannical Lord's.

Let some of these Bells waken us: lest as God once protested against Israel, that seeing they would not when it was offered, therefore they should never enter into his rest: so a renunciation come out against us; If any will be filthy, let them be filthy still: if they will not arise, they shall lie still forever. If this peal cannot effect it, yet God hath four things more to rouse us.

1. A Goad, that pricks the skin, and smarts the flesh; Affliction: he hath Crosses and Curses; those gall, these deeply wound: they are able to make any but a Pharaoh arise. It was affliction that waken'd David: It is good for me that I was troubled. The Leprosy brought Naaman to the Prophet; the Prophet brought him to God. It is strange, if bloody sides put not sense into us. Yet such was the obduracy of Israel; Thou hast stricken them, but they have not sorrowed: thou hast consumed them, yet they refused to return. Insensible hearts! The people turneth not to him that smiteth them: neither do they seek the Lord of Hosts. Hast thou been wounded, and wilt thou not be wakened? beware lest God speak to thy soul, as in another sense Christ did to Peter; Sleep on now, and take thy rest.

2. He hath to rouse us Thunder of heavier Judgments: perhaps the light scratches which some adverse thorns make, are slightly reckoned; scarce change countenance for them. But he sleeps soundly, whom thunder cannot wake. Humanas motura tonitrua mentes. When God thundered that menace in the cares of Nineveh, it waked them. Let Absalom fire Joab's barley fields, and he shall make him rise. Shake the foundations of the Prison, and the stern Jailor will rise a converted Christian; Sirs, what shall I do to be saved? This thundering of judgments should cleanse our air, awaken our sleepy minds, purge our unclean hearts. If the Lyon roar, who will not fear? If the Lord thunder, what man will not be afraid?

3. He hath an Ordinance to shoot off, Death. Statutum est omnibus mori. It is a Statute-Law of heaven, an Ordinance from the Court of Justice, Every man shall die. When this Canon is discharged at thy paper-walls, then let thy soul rise, or never. The shooting off this Ordinance made Belshazzar stagger before he was drunk. His knees smote one against another, when that fatal hand wrote his destiny on the wall. Indeed most do slumber on the Couch of health, they are quiet, no sickness stirs them: they are at a covenant with the grave: Sed cito finitam datur istam cernere vitam. Praeceptis mortis iter: Death makes a headlong progress. This Ordinance carries death in the mouth: it is an even hand that shoots; one that will never miss the mark: let this rouse us.

4. God hath a Trumpet to sound. The Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the Trump of God. Altisona, grandisona Tuba: the loudest Instrument of war; every ear shall hear it. As it was in the days of Noah, and Lot; So shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed. From eating and drinking, building and planting, buying and selling, marrying and dancing, shall this Trump call them. It shall fetch the Drunkard from his Ale-bench, the Harlot from her luxurious bed, the Epicure from his riotous table, the Usurer from his Charnell house of men's bones, and beasts skins, his study: now Surgendum est vndeque; there must be an universal rising. Well, let us waken before this last Trumpets last summons, lest then we rise only to judgment, and be judged to lie down again in torments. God long expects our rising; Quanto diutius nos expectat vt emendemus, tanto districtius iudicabit sineglexerimus. With how much patience he waits for our neglected conversion; with so much vengeance he will punish our continued rebellion. The Lord of his mercy, give us the first resurrection to Grace, that we may enjoy the Rising to Glory. Arise, and

Go.

Being got up, it is not fit we should stand still, we must be going. The main work was to raise us; now we are up, I hope an easy matter will set us a going. And to help forward our journey, let our meditations take along with them these three furtherances; the Necessity, the Conueniency, the End. The Necessity, we must go: the Conueniency, how we must go: the End, whither we must go.

1. The Necessity, all that have hope of heaven, must be going. The servants of God under the Law, Exod. 12. 11. the sons of God under the Gospel, Ephes. 6. 15. are commanded to have their Feet shod: to witness their preparation of Going. God doth not only charge Elijah with a Surge, Arise; but also with a Vade, Go. The sitting bird is easily shot; so long as she is flying in the air, the murdering piece is not levelled at her. There were two principal occasions of David's sin, Otium & Oculus: Idleness and his Eye. The one gives Satan opportunity, the other conueniency to iniection his temptation. Otia si tollas, periere Cupidinis arcus. David, hast thou nothing to do? Come, walk with me on thy Palace roof, I will show thee beauty; a snare able to take a Saint. It is necessary therefore to be going; for so we are not so fair a mark for Satan. Adam, so long as he was at his work in the Garden, was safe enough: when he became lazy, and fell a dallying with Eve, Satan shot him. It was Jerome's counsel to Rusticus; Be ever doing, vt quando diabolus veniat, inueniat occupatum: that when the Devil comes with his business, he may find thee at thine own business. So thou shalt answer him knocking at thy door; I am busy; I have no time to talk, with you, Satan. Do you think the Devil could be so sure to meet his friends at the Theater, Tavern, Brothel-house; but that mistress Idleness sends them thither? Yea by this he takes a worldling by the hand at Church: well met; you are so full of business all the week, that you break your sleeps, cannot take your rest: come, here be two Sermons on the Sunday, sleep out them. The Sabbath seems tedious to some, they have nothing to do? Nothing? Alas, they know not a Sabbath's days work. To pray, to hear, to read, to meditate, to confer, to visit, to pray again: is all this nothing? Because they labor not in their worldly calling, they think there needs no labor about their Christian calling: the working out their salvation they hold no pains; indeed they take no pains about it. If they did perform these duties, they should find the right spending the Sabbath, not Nullum laborem, sed alium: not no labor, but another kind of labor then ever they conceived. And this not Opus taedij, sed gaudij. Think on that sweet vicissitude of works and comforts; And Breue videbitur tempus tantis variet atibus occupatum: that time must needs seem short, that is spent in such variety of delights. It was the principal of those three faults, whereof Cato professed himself to have so seriously repented. One was, passing by water, when he might go by land: another was, trusting a secret to a woman: but the main one was, spending an hour unprofitably. How many hours, not only on common days, but even upon the holy Sabbath, that concerns the business of our souls, have we unprofitably laished, and yet never heartilie repented them?

2. The Conueniencie; if we Go, we must have feet. All our Preaching is to beat the bush, put you from your couerts, and set you a going: but now Quitus pedibus? on what feet must you go? The Foot is the Affection or Appetite, saith S. Augustine. Eô feror, quocun{que} feror: that carries me, whither soever I go. The foot moves the body, the affection moves the soul. The regenerate soul hath three principal faculties, as the natural body hath three semblable members: the eye, hand, and foot. In the soul the Eye is Knowledge, the Hand is Faith, the Foot is Obedience. The soul without knowledge is like Bartimaeus, blind: without faith, like the man with a withered hand: without obedience, like Mephibosheth, lame.

True Christians are not Monopodes, one-footed: the Apostle speaks in the plural number, of their feet. Stand, having your Feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace. He meant not corporal feet: the soul must therefore have spiritual feet, like the bodies,

- Number,
- Nature.

For Number, the body hath two feet, so hath the Soul: Affection and Action, desiring and doing. The former, that puts forward the soul, is a hopeful affection. One said, Hope is a foot; Pes Spes: but hope is rather a nerve that strengthens the motion of this foot, then the foot it self. The latter is Action, or operative obedience; that rightly walks in the blessed way of holiness. I desire to do thy will, O my God; there's the foot of affection. I will run the way of thy Commandments; there's the foot of action. I have longed after thy precepts; there is the foot of desiring: I turned my feet unto thy testimonies; there's the foot of obeying.

For nature, they are fitly compared to feet, and that

Ration	Situs	for	Placing
Transitus	Passing.

For Site or placing, the feet are the lower parts of the body, so are affections of the soul. The head is the directer, the foot the carrier: the feet help the head, the head guides the feet. The understanding and affection, are like the blind man and the lame: the lame hath eyes but no feet; the blind hath feet but no eyes. But whiles the blind carries the lame, and the lame directs the blind, both may come to their journeys end. The understanding sees well, but of it self cannot go; the Affection is able to go, but of it self cannot see: let the one direct well, the other walk after that direction, and they will bring the soul to heaven.

For Transition or Passing, as the feet corporally, so these spiritually, move and conduct the man from place to place. Indeed none can come to the Son, unless the Father draw him: but when he hath given us feet, he looks we should go. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear: he that hath hands, let him work: he that hath feet, let him go. Hence is that exhortation; Draw near to God, & he will draw near to you. In this foot-manship there is Terminus à quo recedimus, Terminus ad quem accedimus, motus per quem procedimus: From the ways of darkness, from the wages of darkness: to the fruition of light, to the counersation in light. From darkness exterior, interiour, inferior. Outward; this land is full of darkness, fraught operibus tenebrarum, with the works of darkness. Inward, Having the understanding darkened, being alienated frō the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, & because of the blindness of their heart. Outer darkness, that which Christ calls 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : or lower darkness. He hath reserved the Lost angels in ever lasting chains under darkness. Unto light external, internal, eternal. Outward Light; Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. Inward light; In the hidden parts thou shalt make me to know wisdom. Euerlasting Light, They shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars forever and ever. Blessed feet that carry us to That light which lightneth every man that cometh into the world: and to the beams of that Sun, which gives light to them that sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death: happy feet, they shall be guided into the way of peace. Look to thy foot wheresoever thou treadest: beware the gardens of temporal pleasures: Est aliquid quod in ipsis flori... angat. It is worse going on fertile ground, then on ba...: the smooth ways of prosperity are slippery, in rough •...fflictions we may take sure footing. Let your feet be •...od, saith Paul; your affections restrained: bar lust of her vain objects, turn her from earth to heaven. Set her a traveling, not after riches, but graces. Keep the foot of desire still going, but put it in the right way, direct it to everlasting blessedness. And this is

3. The End, whither we must go, to perfection. Thou hast done well, yet go on still. Nihil praesumitur actum, dum superest aliquid ad agendū: nothing is said to be done, while any part remains to do. No man can go too far in goodness. Nimis iustus, et nimis sapiens potes esse, non nimis bonus. Thou mayest be too just, thou mayest be too wise, but thou canst never be too good. Summae religionis est, imitari quem colis. It is a true height of religion, to be a follower of that God, of whom thou art a worshipper. Come so nigh to God as possibly thou canst, in imitation, not of his power, wisdom, majesty, but of his mercy. Be holy, as the Lord is holy. Be merciful, as your heavenly Father is merciful. The going on forward to this perfection, shall not displease him, but crown thee. Give not over this going, until with Saint Paul thou have quite finished thy course.

Aime at perfection, shoot at this mark, though thou cannot reach it. When the wrestling Angel said to Jacob, Let me go, for the day breaketh; he answered, I will not let thee go except thou bless me: happy perseverance! When I caught him whom my soul loved, I held him, and would not let him go. O sweet Jesus, who would let thee go? Qui tenes tenentem, apprehendentem fortificus, fortificatum confirmas, confirmatum perficis, perfectum coronas. Thou that holdest him that holdeth thee, that strengthenest him that trusteth thee, confirmest whom thou hast strengthened, perfectest whom thou hast confirmed, and crownest whom thou hast perfected. In the behalf of this continuance, the Holy Ghost gives those exhortations; Hold fast, Stand fast. Hold that thou hast, that no man take thy crown. The same to the Church of Thyatira; Tene quod habes, Reu. 2. 25. Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free. It is an ill hearing, Ye (not do, but) did run well. The Prophet in his threnes weeps, that they which were brought up in scarlet, embrace dunghills. It is just matter of lamentation, when souls which have been clad with zeal, as with scarlet, constantly forward for the glory of God, fall to such Apostasy, as with Demas to embrace the dūghil of this world, and with an avarice hausture to lick up the mud of corruption.

Joseph had a coat reaching down to his feet: our religion must be such a garment, neither too scant to cover, nor too short to continue ad vltimum, to the last day of our temporary breath. Be thou faithful unto the death, and I will give thee the crown of life: this crown is promised to a good beginning, but performed to a good ending. Strive to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height. If we can comprehend with the Saints, not only the height of hope, the depth of faith, the breadth of charity, but also the length of continuance, we are blessed forever. Even the tired horse, when he comes near home, mends his pace: be good always, without weariness; but best at last: that the nearer thou comest to the end of thy days, the nearer thou mayest be to the end of thy hopes, the salvation of thy soul. Omnis coelestis Curia nos expectat, desideremus eam quanto possumus desiderio. The whole Court of heaven waits for us, let us long for that blessed society with a hearty affection. The Saints look for our coming, desiring to have the number of the elect fulfilled: the Angels blush when they see us stumble, grieve when we fall, clappe their wings with joy when we go cheerfully forward: our Savior Christ stands on the battlements of heaven, and with the hand of help and comfort wafteth us to him. When a noble Soldier in a foreign Land hath achieved brave designs, won honorable victories, subdued dangerous adversaries; and with worthy Chivalry hath renowned his King and Country: home he comes, the King sends for him to Court, and there in open audience of his Noble Courtiers, gives him words of grace, commendeth and (which is rarely more) rewardeth his Valour, heaps dignities, preferments, and places of honor on him. So shall Christ at the last day, to all those Soldiers that have valiantly combated and conquered his enemies; in the sight of heaven and earth, audience of men and Angels, give victorious wreathes, crowns and garlands, long white robes, to witness their innocence, and Palms in their hands, to express their victory: and finally he shall give them a glorious kingdom to enjoy forever and ever.

Now yet further to encourage our going, let us think upon our company. Four sweet associates go with us in our Journey; good Christians, good Angels, good works, our most good Savior Jesus Christ.

1. Good Christians accompany us even to our death. If thou go to the Temple, they will go with thee. Many people shall say, Come and let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob. If thou say, Come, let us build up the walls of Jerusalem: they will answer, Let us rise up and build. So when Joshua protested to Israel; do what you will, but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord: they echoed to him; God forbid that we should for sake the Lord, to serve other gods: we also will serve the Lord. Thou canst not say with Elias, I am left alone; there be seven thousand, and thousand though...sands, that never bowed their knee to Baal.

2. Good Angels bear us company, to death in our guarding, after death in our carrying up to heaven. Angels mandavit; He hath given his Angels charge over us: There are malicious devils against us, but there are powerful Angels with us. That great Majesty whom we all adore, hath given them this commission. Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them, who shall be heirs of salvation? An Angel counsels Hagar to return to her Mistress; an Angel accompanies Jacob in his journey; an Angel feeds Elias; an Angel pluckes Lot out of Sodom. Gaudent Angeli te conuersum illorum sociari consortijs. The Angels rejoice at our conversion, that so their number might have a completion.

3. Good works bear us company: Good Angels associate us, to deliver their charge; good works to receive their reward. Though none of our actions be meritorious, yet are none transient, none lost. They are gone before us to the Courts of joy; and when we come, they shall welcome our entrance. Virtutis miseris dulce sodalitiū. What misery soever perplexeth our voyage, virtue, and a good conscience are excellent company.

4. Lastly, Jesus Christ bears us company. He is both Via and Conuiator; the way, and companion in the way. When the two Disciples went to Emaus, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them. If any man go to Emaus, which Bernard interpreteth to be Thirsting after good advice; he shall be sure of Christ's company. If any man entreat Jesus to go a mile, he will go with him twain. None can complain the want of company, whiles his Savior goes along with him. Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. There we find two Persons of the blessed Trinity, our Associates, the Father and the Son: now the Holy Ghost is not wanting.

The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion (or fellowship) of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.

Go we then comfortably forward, and God will bring us to our desired Haven. But Pauci intrant, pauciores ambulant, paucissimi per...nt. Few enter the way, fewer walk in the way, fewest of all come to the end of the way; their salvation. Men think the way to heaven broader then it is: But strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. All say, they are going to glory, but the greater number take the wrong way. A man somewhat thick-sighted, when he is to pass over a narrow bridge, puts on spectacles to make it seem broader: but so his eyes beguile his feet, and he falls into the brook. Thus are many drowned in the whirl-pool of sin, by viewing the passage to heaven only with the Spectacles of flesh and blood: They think the bridge broad, so topple in. Happy eyes that well guide the feet, and happy feet that never rest going, till they enter the gates of heaven. Thus much for the Passport: now we come to

The Certificate.

Thy faith hath made thee whole. Wherein Christ doth comfort and encourage the Leper. First, he comforts him, that his faith was the means to restore health to his body: then thereby he encourageth him that this faith increased, would also bring salvation to his soul.

I might here observe, that as faith is only perceived of God, so it is principally commended of God. The Leper glorified God, and that with a loud voice; there was his thankfulness: he fell down at Christ's feet, there was his humbleness. The ears of men heard his gratitude, the eyes of men saw his humility: but they neither heard, nor saw his faith. But how then, saith Saint James, Shew me thy faith? Himself answers, By thy works. It cannot be seen in habitu, in the very being; yet may easily be known in habente, that such a person hath it. No man can see the wind as it is in the proper essence; yet by the full sails of the ship one may perceive which way the wind stands. The sap of the tree is not visible, yet by the testimony of leaves and fruits we know it to be in the tree: Now Christ sees not as man sees: man looks upon the external witnesses of his gratitude and humility, but Christ to that sap of faith in the heart, which sent forth those fruits. Thy faith hath saved thee.

The words distribute themselves into two principal and essential parts:

The

- Means, Thy faith.
- Effects, Hath made thee whole.

The means is partly Demonstratiue; Faith; partly Relatiue, Thy faith. The Quality and the Propriety: the Quality of the means, it is Faith; the Propriety, it is (not another's, but) Thy faith.

Faith.

This is the demonstrative quality of the means of his healing. But what was this Faith? 1. There is a faith that believes veritatem historiae, the truth of God's word: This we call an Historical Faith; but it was not this faith. King Agrippa, believest thou the Prophets? I know that thou believest. 2. There is a faith that believes Certitudinem Promissi, the certainty of God's promises: that verily is persuaded, God will be so good as his word: that he will not break his covenant with Israel, nor suffer his faithfulness to fail unto David: yet applies not this to it self: but it was not this faith. 3. There is a faith that believes Potestatem Dicentis, the Majesty and Omnipotence of him that speaks: so the devil, that God is able to turn Stones into br...d: so the Papist, that he can turn bread into flesh, and cause one circumscribed body to supply millions of remote places at once: But it was not this faith. 4. There is a faith believes se moturam Montes, that it is able to remove Mountains: a miraculous faith; which, though it were specially given to the Apostles, In my name shall they cast out devils, take up Serpents, cure the sick by imposition of hands; say to a Tree, Pluck thyself up by the roots, and plant thyself in the sea, and it shall obey them: yet reprobates also had it; for even they that are cast out with a Discedite à me, plead this; In thy name have we cast out devils, and done many wonderful works. But it was not this faith. 5. There is a faith that believes to go to heaven, though it bend the course directly to hell: that thinks to arrive at the Jerusalem of blessedness, through the Samaria of profaneness: a presumption: but it was not this faith. 6. There is a faith that believes a man's own mercy in Jesus Christ, and lives a life worthy of this hope, and becoming such a possession: and it was this faith that our Savior commendeth.

When Samuel came to anoint one of the sons of Jesse, Eliab was presented to him, and he said, Surely the Lord's Anointed is before him. He was deceived, he might have a goodly countenance and a high stature: but it was not he: Then passed by Abinadab; nor is this he: then Shammah; nor is this he: Then seven of his sons were presented; The Lord hath chosen none of th...se. Be here all, saith Samuel? Jesse answered, No, the youngest is behind, and he keepeth the sheep. Then said Samuel, Send and fetch him, for we will not sit down till he come. When he was come, he was ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look on: And the Lord said, Arise, and anoint him, for this is he. If we should make such a quest for the principal Grace: Temperance is a sober and matronly virtue, but not she: Humility in the lowest is respected of the Highest, but not she: Wisdom is a heavenly grace, similisque creanti, like the Maker, but not she: Patience a sweet and comfortable virtue, that looks cheerfully on troubles, when her breast is red with the blood of sufferance, her cheeks are white with the pureness of innocence, yet not she: Justice hath a hand spotless as the brow of heaven, a heart transparent as Crystal, a countenance able to daunt temptation it self, yet not she: Charity is a lovely virtue, little innocents hang at her breasts, Angels kiss her cheeks; Her lips are like a thread of scarlet, and her speech is comely, her Temples are like a Pomegranate within her looks; all the ends of the earth call her blessed: yet not she. Lastly Faith appears, beautified with the robe of her Saviors righteousness, adorned with the jewels of his graces, and shining in that fairness which he gave her: I am Regina venit, now comes the Queen of Graces: This is she.

Now as Faith excels all other graces, so there is a special degree of faith that excels all other degrees. For every faith, is not a saving faith. The King of Syria commanded his Captains, <sup>y</sup> Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the King of Israel. How should they know him? By his Princely attire, and royal deportment. Perhaps they met with many glorious personages, slew here and there one; none of them was the King of Israel. Setting upon Jehoshaphat, they said, Surely this is the King of Israel; no, it was not. One drew a bow at a venture, smote a man in his Charet, and that was the King of Israel. The faith that believes God's Word to be true, is a good faith, but not Illa fides, that saving Faith. The faith that believes Christ to be the worlds Savior, is a true faith, but not that faith. The faith that believes many men shall be saved, is vera fides, non illa fides, a true faith, but not that faith. The faith that believes a man's own soul redeemed, justified, saved by the merits of Jesus Christ; not without works answerable to this belief: this is that faith. That was the King of Israel, and this is the Queen of Isra•...: all the other be but her attendants.

There is Fides Sentiends, Assentiendi, and Appropriandi: a man may have the first, and not the second: he may have the first and second, and yet not the third: but if he have the third degree, he hath all the former. Some know the truth, but do not consent to it: some know it, and assent to it, yet believe not their own part: they that believe their own mercy, have all the rest. As meat digested turns to juice in the stomach, to blood in the liver, to spirits in the heart: so faith is in the brain knowledge, in the reason assent, in the heart application. As the child in the womb hath first a vegetative life, then a sensitive, last a rational. So faith, as mere knowledge, hath but a vegetation: as allowance, but sense: only the applying and apportioning the merits of Christ to the own soul by it, this is the rational, the very life of it.

But thus we may better exemplify this Similitude. The vegetative soul is the soul of plants, and it is a true soul in the kind, though it have neither sense nor reason. The sensitive soul is the soul of beasts, a true soul; includes vegetation, but is void of reason. The rational soul is the soul of man, a distinct soul by it self, comprehends both vegetation and sense, having added to them the perfection of reason. So there are three kinds or degrees of Faith. 1. To believe there is a God; this is the faith of Pagans, and it is a true faith, though it neither believe the Word of God, nor mercy from God. 2. To believe that what God says is true: this is the faith of devils and reprobates, and a true faith; including the faith of Pagans, and going beyond it; yet it apprehends no mercy. 3. To believe on God, to rely upon his mercy in Christ, and to affie their own reconciliation; this is the faith of the Elect; comprehends both the former, yet is a distinct faith by it self.

This faith only saves; and it hath two properties. 1. It is a repenting faith: for Repentance is Faiths Usher, & dews all her way with tears. Repentance reads the Law and weeps. Faith reads the Gospel and comforts. Both have several books in their hands; Poenitentia intuetur Mosem, Fides Christum. Repentance looks on the rigorous brow of Moses, Faith beholds the sweet countenance of Christ Jesus. 2. It is a working faith: if it work not, it is dead: and a dead faith no more saves, then a painted fire warms. Faith is a great Queen, her clothing is of wrought gold: the virgins her companions that follow her, are good deeds: Omnis fidelis tantum credit, quantumsperat & amat: & quantum credit, sperat, & amat; tantum operatur. A Christian so far believes, as he hopes and loves: and so far as he believes, hopes and loves, he works. Now as Moses is said to see him that is invisible, because he saw his back-parts: and as when we see the members of the body moving to their several functions, we know there is a soul within, albeit unseen: so faith cannot be so invisible, but the fruits of a good life will declare it.

Thus by degrees you see what is the right saving faith. As a Lapidary that shows the buyer an orient pearl; and having a little fed his eye with that, outpleaseth him with a Saphyre; yet out-values that with some Ruby or Chrysolite: wherewith ravished, he doth lastly amaze him with a sparkling Diamond transcending all. Or as Drapers show diverse clothes of excellent colors, yet at last for a Master-piece exceed all with a piece of Scarlet. So there are diverse virtues like Jewels, but the most precious Jewel of all is Faith: And there are diverse degrees of faith, as diverse coloured clothes; but the saving faith is arrayed in the Scarlet robe, hath dipped and died her self in the blood of her Savior Jesus: yet is she white, pure white as the snow of Lebanon: so are all that be washed in that red fountain. They have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Thy Faith.

This is the property of that faith that healed him; his own faith. But how could Christ call it His faith, when as faith is God's gift? It is indeed Datum, so well as mandatum. Commanded, This is his Commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ. So also given, To you it is given in the behalf of Christ to believe on him. And This is the work (so well as the will) of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent. But this is not given without means, as the woman of Tekoah said to David; GOD doth devise means. What's that? Faith comes by hearing. Now when God hath given a man Faith, he calls it his; Thy faith; for what is freer then gift? So the Prophet calls it their own mercy; They that wait on lying vanities, for sake their own mercy. As the water in the Cistern is said to be the Cesternes, though it have it from the fountain.

But yet how doth Christ call it his faith? had he a faith by himself? There is one faith: therefore not more his, then others. In regard of the Object upon whom our faith reflects, there is but one faith: in regard of the subject wherein faith resides, everyone must have his own faith. There is no salvation by a common faith: but as all true believers have one and the same faith, so every true believer hath a singular and individual faith of his own. Thy faith: thine for two reasons; to distinguish

- Person from common men.
- Faith from common Faiths.

1. To distinguish his person from others: the Nine had not this Faith. They believed not, but thou believest. Thy faith; this declares him to be out of the common road. Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil: that B...llua multorum capitum must not lead thee. Some were devoted to Christ, but they could not come nigh him for the prease. It was the multitude that rebuked the blind man's prayers. As a river leads a man through sweet meadows, green woods, fertile pastures, fruit-loden fields; by glorious buildings, strong Forts, famous Cities; yet at last brings him to the salt Sea: So the stream of this world carries along through rich commodities, voluptuous delights, stately dignities, all possible content to flesh and blood: but after all this brings a man to death, after death to judgment, after judgment to hell.

Hear one of the Romists authentical pleas for their Church falls to the ground, universality. They plead Antiquity; so a homicide may derive his murder from Cain. They plead unity: so Pharisees, Sadducees, Herodians combined against Christ. They plead universality: yet of the ten Lepers but one was thankful. The way to hell hath the greatest store of passengers: Company is good, but it is better to go the right way alone, then the broad with multitudes. It is thought probably, that at this day Mahometisme hath more under it then Christianity; though we put Protestant, and Papist, and Puritan, and Separatist, and Arminian; and all in the scale to boot: and that mere Paganism is larger then both. Where many join in the Truth, there is the Church: not for the many's sake, but for the Truths sake. Saint Augustine teacheth us to take Religion, not by tale, but by weight. Numbers make not a thing good, but the weight of truth. Some are so mannerly, that they will not go one step before a great man; no not to heaven. Many say with Hushai, Whom the people, and all the men of Israel choose, his will I be. But they leave out one principal thing, which Hushai there put in as the prime ingredient; Whom the Lord chooseth: they leave out the Lord. But Joshua was of another mind: Choose you what gods soever you will serve; I and my house will serve the Lord. The Inferior Orbes have a motion of their own, contrary to the greater: good men are moved by God's Spirit, not by the Planetary motions of popular greatness. Let us prize righteousness highly, because it is seldom found. The pebbles of the world are common, but the pearls of graces rare. The vulgar stream will bring no vessel to the land of peace.

2. To distinguish his faith from the common faith. Thine; another kind then the Pharisees faith. To believe the Word, but traditions withal, vera fides, non pura fides; is a true, but not a pure faith. To believe the Major of the Gospel, not the Minor, Vera, non sana fides; is a true, not a sound faith. To believe a man's own salvation, how debauchedly soever he lives, nec vera, pura, sana, nec omnino fides; is neither a true, pure, sound faith, nor indeed a faith at all: but a dangerous presumption. To believe thy own reconciliation by the merits of Christ, and to strengthen this by a desire of pleasing God; is a true, found, saving faith: and this is Fides tua, Thy Faith.

Whosoever will go to heaven, must have a faith of his own. In Gedeons Campe every soldier had his own pitcher: among Solomon's men of valor, everyone wore his own sword: and these were they that got the victories. The five wise Virgins had everyone oil in her own lamp: and only these enter in with the Bridegroom. Another's eating of dainty meat makes thee never the fatter. Indeed many have sped the better for other men's faith: so the Centurions servant was healed for his masters sake. As thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. But for the salvation of the reprobates; Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, saith the Lord, yet my mind could not be toward, such people. Though Noah, Daniel, and Job interceded, yet they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness. Pious men's faith may often save others from temporal calamities: but it must be their own faith that saves them from eternal vengeance. Lut... was wont to say, There is great Divinity in Pronounes. Thy faith. One bird shall as soon fly with another birds feathers, as thy soul mount to heaven by the wings of another's faith.

It is true faith, and thy faith: true with other men's faith, but inherent in thy own person that saves thee. True, not an empty faith; Nuda fides, nulla fides. Inseparabilis est bona vita à fide, imo vero ea ipsa est bona vita, saith Augustine. A good life is inseparable from a good faith; yea a good faith is a good life. So Irenaeus; To believe, is to do God's will. Thine, therefore we say Credo, not Credimus; I believe, not we believe. Every man must profess, and be accountant for his own faith. Thus much of the Means; now to

The Effect.

Hath made thee whole, or saved thee: It may be read either way; It hath saved thee, or It hath salued thee. First, of them both jointly, then severally.

Faith is the means to bring health to body, comfort to soul, salvation to both. I call it but the means; for some have given it more. Because the Apostle saith, that Abraham obtained the promise Through the righteousness of faith: therefore say they, Fides ipsa Iustitia; Faith is righteousness it self. But let S. Paul answer them, and expound himself: I desire tobe found in Christ, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, (whose is that?) the righteousness which is (not of us, but) of GOD by Faith. Thus faith is said to save us, not of it self: the hand feeds the mouth, yet no man thinks that the mouth eats the hand, only as the hand conueyes meat to the body, so faith salvation to the soul. We say the Ring stancheth blood, when indeed it is not the Ring, but the stone in it. There are many that make faith an almighty Idol; it shall save: but thus they make themselves idle, and trust all upon nothing. That faith is a meritorious cause of justification; this a doctrine that may come in time to trample Christ's blood under feet.

Now these speeches rightly understood; Faith adopteth, faith justifieth, faith saveth; are not derogatory to the glory of God, nor contradictory to these speeches, Christ adopteth, Christ justifieth, Christ saveth. One thing may be spoken of diverse particulars in a different sense. God the Father adopteth, the Son adopteth, the holy Spirit adopteth, Faith adopteth: all these are true, and without contrariety. They be not as the young men that came out of the two armies before Joab and Abner: everyone thrust his sword into his fellows side, and fell down together. But like David's Brethren, dwelling together in peace. God the Father adopteth as the Fountain of adoption; God the Son as the Conduit; God the holy Ghost as the Cistern; Faith as the Cock whereby it runs into our hearts.

Faith brings justification, not by any special excellency it hath in it self, but only by that place and office which God hath assigned it: it is the condition on our parts. So the Apostle instructed the Iailour, Believe ...n the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. God's ordinance gives that thing the blessing, which it hath not in the own nature. If Naaman had gone of his own head, and washed himself seven times in Jordan, he had not been healed: it was God's command that gave those waters such purging virtue. If the Israelites stung with these fiery serpents in the Desert, had of their own devising set up a brazen Serpent, they had not been cured: it was neither the material brass, nor the serpentine form, but the direction of God which effected it. It was not the Statue, but the Statute, that gave the virtue. So Faith for its own merit brings none to heaven, but for the promise which the God of Grace and Truth had made to it.

In common speech we say of such a man; His Lease maintains him: is there any absurdity in these words? No man conceives it to be a parchment lined with a few words, accompanied with a waxen Label, that thus maintains him: but that House or Land, or rents so conveyed to him. So Faith saveth: I ascribe not this to the Instrument, but to Jesus Christ whom it apprehends, and that inheritance by this means conveyed.

But now wouldest thou know thyself thus interested? look to thy faith, this is thy proof. If a rich man die, and bequeath all his riches and possessions to the next of blood; many may challenge it, but he that hath the best proof carries it. To Christ's Legacy thou layest claim, look to thy proof: it is not, Lord, Lord, I have prophesied in thy Name: nor, We have feasted in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets: but I believe, Lord, help my unbelief; and then thou shalt hear, Bee it unto thee according to thy faith. And this a little faith doth, if it be true. There is a faith like a grain of mustard seed; small, but true: little, but bite it, and there is heat in it: faith warms where ever it goes. In a word, this is not the faith of explication, but of Application, that is dignified with the honor of this conveyance.

Hath made thee whole. Faith brings health to the body. There was a woman vexed with an uncomfortable disease twelve years, she suffered many things of Physicians; some torturing her with one medicine, some with another, none did her good, but much hurt, She had spent all her living upon them, and herein, saith Erasmus, was bis misera: her sickness brought her to weakness, weakness to Physic, Physic to beggary, beggary to contempt. Thus was she anguished in body, vexed in mind, beggared in estate, despised in place, yet faith healed her. Her wealth was gone, Physicians given her over, her faith did not forsake her, Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole. There was a woman bowed down with a spirit of infirmity eighteen years; yet loosed: there was a man bedrid eight and thirtiety years, a long and miserable time, when besides his corporal distress, he might perhaps conceive from that, Eccl. 38. 15. He that sinneth before his Maker, let him fall into the hand of the Physician; that God had cast him away, yet Christ restored him.

Perhaps this Leprosy was not so old, yet as hard to cure; yet faith is able to do it; Thy faith hath made thee whole. But it was not properly his faith, but Christ's virtue that cured him: why then doth not Christ say, Mea virtus, and not Tua virtus: My virtue, not thy faith hath made thee whole? True it is, his virtue only cures, but this is apprehended by man's faith. When that diseased woman had touched him, Jesus knew in himself that virtue had gone out of him, and he turned him about in the prease, and said, Who touched my clothes? Yet speaking to the woman, he mentioneth not his virtue, but her faith; Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole. Faith in respect of the Object, is called in Scripture, The faith of Jesus Christ: in respect of the subject wherein it is inherent, it is my faith, and thy faith. Thy faith hath made thee whole.

Hath saved thee: made whole, not thy body only, that's but part, the worst part: but thy soul also, Totum te, thy whole self: saved thee. The other nine had whole bodies, this tenth was made whole in soul too; saved. The richest Jewel Christ left to his Church, is Salvation. My he...rts desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. Not their opulency, not their dignity, not their prosperity, was Saint Paul's wish; but their Salvation. If the devils would confess to us the truth, they would s...y, The best thing of all is to be saved. That rich man would fain send this news out of hell; Let Lazarus testisi... to my brethren, lest they also come into this place of torment. The te...timony of salvation was blessed news, from the mouth of him that gives Salvation, Jesus Christ. The vessel of man's soul is continually in a Tempest, until Christ enter the Ship, and then follows the calm of peace.

It is remarkable, that God gives the best gifts at last. Christ gave this Leper health: bonum, this was good: For Vita non est viuere, sed valere: It is more comfortable to die quickly, then to live sickly. He gave him a good name, that he returned to give glory to God; melius; this was better. But now lastly he gives him salvation, Thy faith hath saved thee; Optimum this is best of all. Vltima optima.

Hath God given thee wealth, bless him for it: hath he given to thee health, bless him for it: hath he given thee good reputation, bless him for it: hath he given thee children, friends, peaceable days; bless him for all these. But hath he given thee Faith? especially bless him for this: he hath given thee with it, what we beseech his mercy to give us all, Salvation in Jesus Christ.

I conclude, there is a faith powerful to justify the soul by the righteousness of Jesus Christ: but it never dwelt in a bosom that lodgeth with it lust and dissoluteness. If while we seek to be justified by Christ, we our selves are found sinners, is therefore Christ the Minister of sin? God forbid. Which verse may not unfitly be distinguished into four particulars. Quod sit, Si sit, An sit, Absit. There is a Concession, a Supposition, a Question, a Detestation. 1. The Concession, Quod sit; that is so: he takes it granted that all true Christians seek their only Justification by Christ. 2. The Supposition Si sit; if it be so, that in the mean time we are found sinners. 3. The Question or discussion, An sit; is it so? is Christ therefore the Minister of sin? 4. The Detestation, Absit, God forbid.

Where let us behold what the Gospel acquireth for us, and requireth of us. It brings us liberty: the Law gendereth to bondage: and that, saith Aquinas, Quantum ad Affectum, and Quantum ad Effectum. 1. The Law begets an affection of fear, the Gospel of Love. Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father. Breuissima & apertissima du...rum Testament...rum differentia, Ti...or & Amor. There is a short and easy difference betwixt the old Testament and the new; Fear, and Love. 2. The Law brought forth only servants, the Gospel sons. Jerusalem above is free, which is the mother of us all. Libera, quod liberata, free because she is freed. For if the Son make you free, you shall be free indeed.

This it brings to us, it also challengeth something of us; that we use not our liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. All things are free to us by faith, yet all things serviceable by charity. Vt simul stet seruitus libertatis, & libertas seruitutis: that the service of liberty, and liberty of service, might stand together. A Christian for his Faith is Lord of all, for his love servant to all. That therefore we might not abuse our freedom, nor turn the grace of God into wantonness; the Apostle, after the reins given, pulls us in with the Curbe: though justified by Christ, take heed that we be not found sinners: a check to over-iocund looseness, a corrective not so much libertatis, as liberatorum; of our freedom, as of our selves being freed. In vain we plead that Christ hath made us Saints, if our own evil lives prove us sinners. Indeed, as God covenants by the Gospel to remit our sins, so we must condition by the law to amend our lives. For that faith to which the promise of Justification and eternal life is made, is a faith that can never be separated from charity. Wheresoever it is, there is love joined with it, bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ unto the glory and praise of God. This is that faith to which all the promises of God are yea and Amen in Christ to the glory of God by us.

The Lord that hath made them Yea and Amen in his never-failing mercies, make them also Yea and Amen in our ever-believing hearts, through our blessed Savior Jesus Christ.

Amen.

THE SAINTS MEETING, OR Progress to Glory.

Ephes. 4. 13.

Till we all meet in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

The first word of the Text, is a gate to let in our considerations, to contemplate this goodly city which indeed is like Jerusalem, a city of <...> of the Lord, unto the <...> : to give thanks unto the name of the Lord. And when we are in, let us number and ponder the towers & powers of it: for every pin and pinnacle shall afford us comfort. But we must first pass by this Portall; Until: and this very entrance will give us two observations.

1. Teacheth us, that God hath ordained the Ministry of the Gospel to last to the end of the world. Christ hath given Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Teachers: To perfect the Saints, and to edify his body: to continue Till we all meet in the unity of faith &c. So was his promise after his Charge. Math. 28. His charge, Go teach all nations: his promise; Loe I am with you always, unto the end of the world. God will send Shepherdes, till every lost sheep be brought to the folds of peace. The Ministers voice shall sound, till it be overtaken by the Archangels Trump. The ministration of the Law had an end; but there is none to the ministration of the Gospel, before the end of the world. Hereof may be given a double excellency to the Gospel: and prelation above the Law. It is more

- Gracious.
- Glorious.

1. The Gospel is more gracious. God hath made us able Ministers of the New Testament, not of the letter, but of the Spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. The proper office of the Law was to threaten, terrify, condemn. Lex non damnans est ficta & pictalex, saith Luther. That law that doth not condemn, is a feigned and a painted law. But the power of the Gospel is to convert, and save. The Lord hath anointed me, (saith the Prophet in the person of Christ) to preach good tidings unto the meek, to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the capti•...es, and the acceptable year of the Lord, to comfort all that mourn. The law was called the Ministration of death; but the Gospel, like John the Baptist points us to Christ a Savior; Behold the Lamb•... of God, t•...king away the sin of the world. The law menaced death; but the Gospel assures us; There is no damnation to them which are in Christ. When the law, like a stern Seriant, arresteth thee; Pay that thou owest; the Gospel produceth an acquit•...ance, •...ealed in the blood of Jesus; and says to thy faith, All is paid. Quod lex operum minando imper•...t, lex fidei credendo impetr•...t. What the law of works commanded threatening, the new law of faith obtaineth by believing.

2. The Gospel is also more glorious: and that both in regard of the Countenance, and Continuance. For beauty more glorious: because it is more honorable to be the messenger of mercy and life, then to be the minister of terror and death. A deathsmen is accounted base, but their feet are beautiful that bring tidings of peace and pardon. If the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For Continuance; Moses glory is done away; but the glory of Moses his Lord remains forever. The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Christ Jesus. The type is vanished, banished; but the substance abideth ever. When that which is perfect comes, that which is in part is done away. There was a second Testament to succeed the first; but after the second shall succeed none. So that if any man shall willfully and finally euacuate to himself the virtue of this new Covenant, there remaineth no more sacrifice for his sins. Therefore the Apostle concludes; If that which is done away, was glorious; much more that which remaineth is glorious. The blood of Christ doth mystically run fresh to the end of the world; therefore the Gospel must be preached, that this blood may be applied. The Gospel is that Star that must bring us to Christ: therefore shall shine till our souls come to him in glory. The very subject of the Gospel is everlasting life: therefore it shall not leave us, till it hath brought us thither.

2 This Until gives matter of exhortation; instructing us to wait with patience for this blessed time; to be content to stay for God's Until. It is a sweet mixture of joy in trouble, the certain hope of future •...ase. Thou art captived, thou shalt be freed: thou art persecuted, shalt triumph: thou art fought against, shalt reign: thou art derided, but thou shalt shine in glory. Only quietly expect this Until. Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. But Until this recompense of reward comes, ye have need of patience. Labor not a violent extrication of thyself; abide and wait Till we all meet in the unity of faith, &c.

We are got through the gate, let us now enter the City: wherein we shall find fi•...e principal

Passages or Streets

- What; there shall be a•...ting.
- Who; We, yea we All; all the Saints.
- Wherein; In Unity; that unity; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .

- Whereof; Of the Faith & knowledge of God's Son.
- Whereunto; To a perfect man, Unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

What; Mee...e.

The meeting of friends is e...er comfortable. When the brethr...n heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appi... forum: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God and to...ke courage. They have sullen and tetricall spirits, whom the sight of good friends cannot cheare. Fraternum vere ﴿ ﴾ .Ec... qu...m bonum, &c. Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity▪ Some things are good but not pleasant; as afflictions; they are not sweet yet pro...table It was good for me that I have be...e afflicted▪ that I might learn th... statutes. Other things are pleasant but not good: The wicked take delight in sin, which s...ayeth the soul. But this is both Bonum, and Iu...undum; good and pleasant also.

There is a threefold meeting of the godly.

- 1 In this life, with their souls in their bodies.
- 2 After death, of their souls without bodies.
- 3 At the last day, of both together in glory.

1. In this life; and here the communis terminus of their meeting is God's house. Where always Christ himself is one of the number. Wheresoever two or three of you be gathered together in my name▪ I will be in the midst of you. But to have his blessed society, we must not only bring our bodies, but our minds with them. Quomodo erit Christus in medio nostrum, •...i nobiscum non erimus? How should Christ be with us if we be not with our selves? Plus valet consonantia voluntatum qu...m vocum. The harmony of our voices is not so pleasing to God, as of our hearts. This is the happiest meeting in this world. The denial of this comfort made the soul of David sick, cast down & disquieted within him. And his reuiuall was, that he might go unto the altar of God, unto God his exceeding joy. Indeed the ungodly think not thus: they are more delighted with the tabernacles of Meshek and the taverns of K...der. In the 2. of Luke, when Joseph & Mary had lost Jesus, coming from Jerusalem; they sought him among their kinsfolke and acquaintance. But they found him not till they came to Jerusalem; & there he was in the Temple. The children of God, when they seek Christ, find him not in the world, among their kindred & friends in the flesh; but in Domo Dei, in the house of God. It is dangerous to be absent from these holy meetings, least we miss of our Saviors company. God did not promise to meet thee here; thou usurer at the Bank, thou drunkard at the alehouse, thou sluggard on thy unseasonable couch; but at the Church. Christ comes to appear to us, and we are gone; some about our farms of covetousness, others about carnal pleasures. In vain we seek God if not in his right Vbi, where he hath promised to be found. Fugienti bonum consortium, obuenuit corruptum & corrumpens sodalitiu. He that eschewes Christian meetings, shall be met withal, either by the Devil when he is lazy, or by the Devils friends when he is busy.

2. When death shall manumit and set free our souls from the prison of the body, there shall be a second meeting. Many have come from east & from west, far remote in place, and have met with Abraham and Isaac, and the holy Patriarchs, which lived long before them in this world, in the kingdom of heaven. So already in Mount Zion are the Spirits of just men made perfect. The purer part is then glorified, and meets with the triumphant Church in bliss. This meeting exceeds the former in comfort. 1. In respect that our miseries are past, our conflict is ended, & tears are wiped from our eyes. The very release from calamity is not a little felicity. So Austin meditates of this place negatively. Non est ibi mors, non luctus: &c. There is no death nor dearth, no pining nor repining, no sorrow nor sadness, neither tears nor fears, defect nor loathing. No glory is had on earth without grudging & emulation; in this place there is no envy. Non erit aliqua invidia disparis claritatis, quum regnabit in omnibus vnitas charitatis. None s...all malice another's glorious clearness, when in all shall be one gracious dearness. God shall then give rest to our desires. In our first meeting we have Desiderium quietis: in this second Quietem desiderij. Here we have a desire of rest, there we shall have rest of desire. 2. In regard, that we shall see God; behold him whose glory filleth all in all. This is great happiness: for in his presence is the fullness of joy, & at his right hand are pleasures forever. We shall not only meet with the spirits of just men made perfect, but also with him that made them just and perfect; Jesus the mediator of the new covenant: even God himself.

3 Our last meeting, which is called the General assembly and Church of the first borne written in heaven is the great meeting, at the end of the world. When our re-united bodies & souls shall possess perfect glory, and reign with our Savior forever. When as no mountain or rock shall shelter the wicked from doom & terror; so no corruption detain one bone or dust of us from glory. We shall be caught up together in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we be ever with the Lord.

Who; We.

There is a time when the elect shall meet in one universality. Though now wear scattered all over the broad face of the earth; dispersed and distressed; yet we shall meet. There is now a Communion of Saints 1. As of all the members with the Head; all have interest in Christ. For he is not a garden flower, private to few; but the Rose of Sharon, and the Lily of the valleys; common to the reach of all faithful hands. So Jude calls this our common salvation. 2. So of one member with another: even of the Church triumphant with this militant. They sing Hosanna's for us, & we Halleluia's for them: they pray to God for us, we praise God for them. For the excellent graces they had on earth, and for their present glory in heaven. We meet now in our affections, to solace one another, and serve our God: there is a mutual sympathy between the parts. If one member suffer, all suffer with it. But this meeting shall be void of passion, and therefore needless of compassion; though love shall remain forever.

This Instruction is full of comfort. We part here with our parents, children, kindred, friends: death breaks off our society; yet there shall be a day of meeting. Comfort one another with these words. Hast thou lost a wife, brother, child; you shall one day meet: though not with a carnal distinction of sex, or corrupt relation which earth afforded. No man carries earth to heaven with him: the same body but transfigured, purified, glorified. There shall be love hereafter, not the offals of it. A wife shall be known, not as a wife; there is no marriage, but the Lambes. Thou shalt rejoice in thy glorified brother, not as thy brother according to the flesh, but as glorified. It is enough, that this meeting shall afford more joy, then we have knowledge to express.

This gives thee consolation dying; with grief thou leavest those, thou dearly lovest. Yet first thou art going to one, whose love is greater then Jonathan's; that gave his life to redeem thee. And well pondering the matter, thou art content to forsake all, to desire a dissolution, that thou mayest be with Christ. Yet this is not all; thou shalt again meet those, whom thou now departest from; and that with greater joy, then thou hast left in present sorrow.

This comforts us all: if it be a pleasure for friends to meet on earth, where Satan is still scattering his troubles of dissention; what is it to meet in heaven, where our peace is free from distraction, from destruction! where if there be any memory of past things, meminisse iunabit; it shall rather delight us, to think of the miseries gone, and without fear of returning. It is some delight to the merchant, to sit by a quiet fire, and discourse the escaped perils of wrackes and storms. Remoue then your eyes from this earth; whether you be rich, for whom it is more hard; or poor, for whom it is easier: and know, it is better living in heaven together, then on earth together. So then run your race, that in the end you may meet with this blessed society; the Congregation of Saints in glory.

We, yea All we.

In this world we must never look to see an universal Church; but at that general day we shall All meet. In heaven there are none but good: in hell none but bad, on earth both good and bad, mingled together. I confess, that the Church militant is the Suburbs of heaven, yea called the Kingdom of heaven; because the King of heaven governs it by his celestial laws; but still it is but heaven upon earth. In God's floor there is chaff mixed with the wheat: in his field cockle with corn: in his net rubbish with fish: in his house vessels of wrath with those of honor. The Church is like the moon, sometimes increasing, sometimes decreasing: but when it is at the full, not without some spots. Now this mixture of the ungodly is suffered for two causes; either that themselves may be converted, or that others by them may be excercised. Omnis malus aut ideoviuit vt corrigatur: aut ideo vt per illum bonus excerceatur.

1. For their own emendation, that they may be converted to embrace that good, which they have hated. So Saul a persecutor becomes Paul a professor. Mary Magdalene, turpissima meretrix fit sanctissima mulier; a putrefied sinner, a purified Saint. Zacchaeus, that had made many rich men poor, will now make many poor men rich; when he had paid every man his own; (and that now he judged their own, which he had fraudulently got from them) Behold half my goods I give to the poor. The thief after a long lewd life, hath a short happy death; and goes from the Cross to Paradise. If these had been rooted up at the first, God's Garner had wanted much good wheat. He that is now cockle, may prove good corn.

2. For the excercise of the godly. For the reprobate do not only fill up the measure of their sins; that so not believing the truth, they might be damned for their unrighteousness; making their condemnation both just and great. But they serve also for instruments to exercise the faith and patience of the Saints. Babylon is a flail to bruise the nations, at last it self shall be threshed. They are but the rubbish, where with the vessels of honor are scowred: the vessel made bright; the scowring stuff is thrown to the dunghill. They are Apothecaries to make us bitter potions, for the recovery of our spiritual health: but so that they cannot put in one dram more then their allowance: and when they come to be paid for their bills, they find the sum total their own vengeance. They are like shepherds dogs, that serve to hunt the lambes of Christ to the sheepfolds of peace, but their teeth are beaten out, that they cannot worry us. Fr...mit lupus, tremit agnus; the wolf rageth, and the Lamb quaketh, but fear not little flock; he is greater that is with you, then all they that are against you. Illorum malitia, est ve...ra militia: their malice is your warfare; but in all you shall conquer. They shall make you better, not worse. Hence let us learn.

1. Not to fly from the Church, because there are some wicked men in it. Non propter malos boni sunt deserend... sed propter bonos mali sunt tolerandi. Forsake not the good because of the evil, but suffer the evil because of the good. when we can brook no imperfection in the Church, know then Diabolum nos tume...acere superbia, that the Devil doth blow us up with pride; saith Calvin. I hold the Church, saith Augustine; full of both wheat and chaff: I better whom I can, whom I cannot I suffer. Fugio paleam, ne hoc sine non aream, ne nihil sim. I avoid the chaff, least I become chaff: I keep the floor, least I become nothing. We sin all in many things: and many in all things: let us fly from all sins, not from all sinners; for then we must go out of the world; out of our selves. But I believe the holy catholic Church; I believe it, though through the shadow of infirmities I cannot see it. Intelligit fides, quae non vides. If it was perspicuous to sense, there was no place to faith, no use or exercise of believing. But here we walk by faith, not by sight. All the glory of the Kings daughter is Intus, within. Psal. 45. she is glorious within. wretched are they that forsake her, and when they speak of her, bless themselves that they are fled out of Babel. Blind fools, that will not know Jerusalem from Babel. Their fault is the more heinous for two causes. 1. They seemed our most zealous professors: and a lewd servant is easilier brooked then an undutiful son. 2. They know so much, that their own conscience tells them; Ignorance cannot excuse their separation. An ignorant injury is in more hope, both of amends and mercy. All their hot urging, was our purging; not from our vices, but our good order: which when they could not effect, they purged themselves out of our company. And their very malice did us good; for I am sure, we have been ever since the cleaner.

They send us word of many unreformed, uncensured evils among us, for which they separate. It cannot be denied, it cannot be avoided, but that among so many millions of men there will be some lepers: but what? must their uncleanness needs infect all? Certe nullius crimen inficit nescientem. Let me not participate of their sin, not shun the Church because they are in it. yea, I am commanded to come, though they be there. If a man will come unworthy, the sin is his: but if I come not because he comes, the sin is mine. God says to the wicked guest, How camest thou in hither? not to the prepared, How came you in with such a guest? His fault cannot dispense with my duty: nor shall my duty be charged with his fault. But our evils are innumerable; I would to God they were less: yet I am sure the Gospel is fair, though our lives be fowl: Our profession is good, though many men's conversation be full of evil. And yet the number of our evils is somewhat abated by their absence: we cannot complain of all evils, whiles we want them. To the unclean, they say; all things are evil; yet they are content to take some evil from us. They will eat victuals, yea and eat them up; as if for anger, rather than hunger. They will purse up our moneys; take advantages of their forfeited bonds; and plead a providence in it; their own providence they mean: and so, though not pray with us, yet pray upon us. If all our things be evil, I perceive they love some of our evil. Let them go: they from us, not us from our selves. But rather

2. Seeing there are wolves among the Lambes, let us be wise to save our selves, and patient to suffer others. The good are for thy comfort, the wicked for thy exercise: let thy life be good, to the consolation of the one, and conviction of the other. Non valde laudabile est, bonum esse cum bonis, sed bonum esse cum malis. For as it is a wretched fault not to be good among the good: so it is a worthy praise to be good among the evil. Let your light so shine, that others may glorify God for your good; and be ashamed of their own evil. You are the light of the world; if there be any dimness in your shining, the whole Country is full of snuffers. In the Temple were golden snuffers; we have not many of those, to make us burn brighter: but base stinking ones, that would rather put us out.

3. Let us abhor wicked societies, knowing that they shall be conuented again in hell. There must be some acquaintance with them, must be no familiarity. A meare commerce with them is not utterly in it self unlawful, but dangerous. Factum licitum prohibetur, propter vicinitatem illiciti. Thou hadst better lose a good bargain at a worldlings hand, then purchase some of his wickedness. The second Chariot of Egypt taught Joseph to swear by the life of Phara...h. Let them see thy good life, hear thy gracious words: thy true detestation, and wise reprehension of their wickedness. God's servants would have all serve their master, that they might have the more company with them to heaven. But let thy delight be with the Saints on earth, and with those that excel in virtue. Let us meet now in sincerity, that hereafter we may meet in glory. I am a companion of all them that fear thee, and keep thy precepts. Death may break off for a while this gracious meeting, but our glorious second meeting shall triumph over death: it shall be General; it shall be eternal.

Wherein; In the unity.

A perfect unity is not to be expected in this life; it is enough to enjoy it in heaven. Indeed the Church is ever but one. There are threescoreQueens, and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number: My dove, my undefiled is but one, she is the only one of her mother. Though a kingdom have in it many shires, more Cities, and innumerable Towns; yet is it self but one; because one King governs it, by one law. So the Church though universally dispersed, is one kingdom; because it is ruled by one Christ, and professeth one faith There is one body, one spirit, one Lord, one faith. So much Unity now.

But that unity which is on earth may be offended, in regard of the partes subiectuall to it. What family hath not complained of distraction? What fraternity not of dissention? What man hath ever been at one with himself? There must be divisions, saith Paul: are and must be, by a kind of necessity. But there is a twofold necessity. One absolute and simple: God must be just; a necessity of infallibility. The other exhypothesi, or of consequence; as this, there must be heresies. Satan will be an adversary, man will be proved; a necessity upon presupposition of Satan's malice, & man's wickedness. But woe unto them by whom offenses come: we know not the hurt, we bring by our divisions. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts. Zach. 8. Love the truth, and peace. Some love peace well, but they care not for truth. These are secure worldlings: let them alone in their sins, and you would not wish quieter men. Pacem quaerunt, Pietatem fugiunt: they seek peace, but they fly righteousness: as if they would disvnte those things which God hath joined together, righteousness and peace. Righteousness and peace shall kiss each other. Others love truth well, but not peace. Let them fabric a Church out of their own brains, or rather a discipline to manage it; and they will keep within verges of the main truth. They cannot be content to have good milk, but they must choose their spoone to eat it with. They are wanton children, and worthy the rod of correction: let them be whipt, only discipline may mend them.

I would our eyes could see, what hurt the breach of unity doth us. Scilurus his arrows taken singly out of the sheaf, are broken with the least finger: the whole vnseuered bundle fears no stress. We have made our selves weaker, by dispersing our forces. Even the encouraged Atheist walks to Church in the lane of our divisions; and is still no less an Atheist, then the devil was a devil when he stood among the sons of God. It is the nature of our controversies to fight peremptorily at both ends, whiles truth and piety is left in the middle, and neglected. Whiles men have contended about the body of Religion, some have thought it quite dead: as no doubt Moses body was, when the Archangel disputed with the Devil about it. As one said of his Donatists; Betwixt our Licet, and your Non licet, many souls stagger: and excuse their irresolution by our want of peace. Indeed this is eventually one good effect of many controverted points; the way is cleansed for others, though not for themselves. Thieves falling out, true men come by their goods. Two flints beaten together, sparkles out fire: and by the wrestling of two poisons, the health is preserved. So are some united to the truth, by these divisions of peace. But others are more unsettled: they condemn all for the dissension of some: our comfort is, God doth not so. The divisions of a few, and that about the husk of Religion, Ceremony; cannot redound to the condemnation of a whole Church. In God's judgment it shall not; we must care little, if in theirs. Do not we know, that Satan by his good will, would allow us neither Truth nor Peace? but if we must have one, will he not labor to detain the other? If he can keep us from Truth, he cares not much to allow us peace. The wicked have security, the devil lets them alone. What fowler sets his ginnes for tame birds, that will come gently to his hand? But if we embrace the truth, then have at our peace. Shall the Prince of darkness be quiet, when his Captives break loose from him? The good are soonest tempted. Invidia fertur in magnos. It was the king of Syria his command to his 32. captains; Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the King of Israel. It is the Devils charge to his soldiers; fight against none, but the godly, that fight against me. David was safe among his sheep, and Moses leading a private life. No man lays snares for his own birds; nor the Devil for such as are taken captive by him at his will. But pax conscientiae is bellum Satanae: and this just war is better then an unjust peace.

Let all this give condemnation to peace-haters, and commendation to peace-lovers. There are some quite gone, not diverse but adverse to us; with these war, and no peace: for they have no peace with Christ. Sinewes cut in sunder can never be knitte, nor can there be Integralis vnitas in solutione continui. They will be gone, let them go. I would we were as well rid of all those, whose souls hate unity. The Christians of of the first age were nether Albinians, nor Nigrians: the report of faction was scarce heard. Athanasius, on whose shoulder our mother the Church leaned, in her sharpest persecution to take her rest; rejoiced, that though the adversary hate was violent, the love of brethren was sound. Peter was commanded to put up his sword, even when Christ was at his elbow, to heal the greatest wound he could make: why do we smite and hurt, that have not such means of cure? King Richard the holy warrior having taken a Bishop in coat-armor, in the field; was requested by the Pope (calling him his Son) to release him. The King sent not him, but his coat to the Pope; and asked him; An haec esset Filij sui tunica? whether this was his sons coat: alluding to the coat of Joseph, which his brethren brought to their Father. The ashamed Pope answers; Nec 〈1 line〉 his Sons 〈1 line〉 undertakes, wit 〈1 line〉 conscience prepares, scrup•... 〈1 line〉 , and Peace suffers. And now 〈◇〉 •...hey 〈◇〉 , 〈◇〉 〈◇〉 vnum, but 〈◇〉 ; not to 〈◇〉 out 〈◇◇〉 •...ache their malice on, but to dissolve and undo the united strength of all. •...her the sce•...r must stoop to the miter, or no peace.

Between the roots of Judah and Levi, by Moses law, the separations and distances were 〈◇〉 •...de, that neither need to cross another's walk, nor 〈◇〉 •...clipse another's dignity. The rod of Mose•... was once 〈◇◇〉 serpent, to give terror: 〈◇◇〉 of 〈◇〉 was preserved; not in campo 〈◇〉 , in a 〈◇〉 of wa•...e and sedition; but Testimony tabernaculo; sprow•...ng forth green leaves of Truth, and sweet blossoms of Peace. Well let our enemies cry;

Non Pacem petimus Superi, date gentibus iram.

Our voice be for Peace.

Nulla salus bello, Pacem te poscimus omnes•

Peace was that last and rich Jewel, which Christ departing to his Father, leaft his Spouse for a legacy. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you. This Peace be with us forever.

Whereof.

This unity hath a double reference. 1. to Faith. 2. to Knowledge. And the Object to both these, is the Son of God.

Of the faith.

Faith is taken 2. ways: either passively, or actively Vel pro •...o Quo creditor. Quod creditor. Either for that whereby a man believes, or for that which a man believes. So it is used both for the instrument that apprehends, and for the object that is apprehended.

If we take it for the former, we may say there is also an unity of faith; but by distinction. Faith is one Ration obiecti, non ration subiecti: One in respect of the Object on which it rests, not one •...n respect of the Subject in which it resides. Every man hath his own faith; every faith resteth on Christ. The just shall live by his own faith. Nulla fides pro te, nisi quae in te. Every man must see with his own eyes, reach with his own hand, have oil ready in his own Lamp, that he may enter in with the Bride-groome. He must labor in the vineyard himself, that would have the penny: he shall not have another's pay. It is a happy perfection of faith, when we shall all believe in one Christ, after one manner. Not one with a Grecian faith, another with a Roman, a third with an Arian, a fourth with an Anabaptistical; but all meet in the unity of one holy Catholic faith.

But if we rather take it Pro obiecto quod creditor, for Christ in whom we have believed, we shall all meet in the unity of those joys & comforts which we have faithfully expected. Some believed before the law, some under the law, others under the Gospel: all shall meet in the unity of faith:Receiuing the end of their faith, the salvation of their souls. Whether some believed in Christ to come, or others in Christ already come, or we in Christ come and gone to glory: Venturus & venit, diuersa sunt verba, eadem fides; To come, or come, are diverse words, but there is but one faith. One Lord, one Faith.

Now since faith must bring us to our Beloved, and by that we shall come to the Son of God, how precious should it be unto us! Let the great worldlings possess their preposterous wishes; Epicurus his pleasure, Alexander his honor, Midas his gold. Be our delight, desire, prayer, O Lord •...ncrease our faith: I believe, Lord help my unbelief. There is nothing more honorable, more rich, more pleasant, then to be a true believer: for against this no evil on earth, no devil in hell shall be ever able to prevail.

Of the knowledge.

That knowledge which we now have is shallow in all of us, and dissonant in some of us. There is but one way to know God, that is by Jesus Christ: and but one way to know Christ, and that is by the Gospel. Yet there are many that go about to know him by other ways; they will know him by traditions, images, revelations, miracles, deceiveable fables. But the Saints shall meet in the unity of the knowledge of the Son of God: there shall be union and perfection in their knowledge at that day.

But it is objected, that Paul saith; knowledge shall vanish away. The manner, not the matter of our present knowledge shall vanish: we shall not know by schools, tutors, or arts in heaven: so the manner of knowing ceaseth. But the matter remains: for this is eternal life to know God. Now we know Christ in some manner & measure here; but through a window or lattesse. My beloved looketh forth at the window, showing himself through the lattesse. Thus the Apostle Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face. When a man sees a map of Jerusalem, wherein is presented the Towers and Bulwarks, he presently conceives what manner of City it is: but imperfectly; as a man that only reads the description of foreign Countries: but when he comes thither, beholds all the streets, palaces, beauty, and glory, he esteems his former knowledge poor, in respect of his present satisfaction. We are now pilgrims, and know no more of our celestial Country, then we can see through the spectacles of faith, in the glass of the Scriptures. In this map we read Jerusalem above described to us: a city of gold, whose walls are Jasper, and her foundations Crystal. We read, that this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. That there is blessedness in the fountain; joys in show beautiful, in sense wonderful, in weight excessive, in dignity without comparison, and in continuance without end. And that in Christ we are chosen before all worlds, to be Burgesses of this incorporation.

But when we shall have white garments put on our backs, and palms in our hands; and shall sit with him in his throne, feasting at his table of glory: we shall then say as that noble Queen to Solomon: It was a true report of thy glory, O king; that I heard before; but now loe I see, one half was not told me. As worldlings about a purchase, enquire what seat, what delight, what commodities are appertinent to it; except like that fool in the Gospel, they will buy first, and see afterwards. So we may sweetly consult of our future happiness, without curiosity, without presumption: like those that never yet were at home, now after much hear-say traveling thitherwardes, we ask in the way; what peace, what delight, what content will be found there: and how much the benefit of our standing house transcends our progress!

There are three things buyed about Christ; Faith, Hope, and sight. By the two former we now live without the latter: by the latter we shall then live without the former. Now we live by faith, not by sight: then we shall live by sight, not by faith. But for our faith, the world would tread us down: for this is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith, But for our hope, we were of all men most miserable: the worldlings were far happyer. When these two have done their offices, sight comes in. We are now the sons of God, it doth not appear yet what we shall be: but we know, that when he shall appear, we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is. Here is the benefit of sight. These three are like 3. members of the body, the hand, foot, eye. Faith, like the Hand, lays vnremoued hold on Christ, Hope, like the Foot, walks toward him in an holy expectation, patiently enduring all wrongs, in hope of sweet issue. Sight, which belongs to the Eye, shall fully apprehend him, when it is glorified. In this bright knowledge we shall all meet.

Our present knowledge shall be excelled by our future, in 5. differences.

1. In quality: this is an abstracted knowledge of Christ absent, that a plenary knowledge of Christ present. Ex abstractiua fit intuitiua notitia. The light of a lamp vanisheth, when the glorious sun appeareth. If our knowledge were mundus eruditionis, a world of learning, yet is it but eruditio mundi, the learning of the world; of narrow bounds in regard of the knowledge in heaven.
2. In quantity; even that we know now, shall be known then in a greater measure. The orbs, elements, planets, plants; the herbs of the field, parts of our own bodies we know now; but alas weakly in regard of that perfection which this future life shall give us. Indeed the Christian, for his own saving health, knows so much as is able to make him everlastingly blessed: for he knows Christ his Savior, and that is eternal life. But then he shall know him in a higher measure, and perfectly see those things, now vnconceauable. Paul heard unspeakable words in his rapture above, which below he confesseth not possible for man to utter.
3. In perfection or maturity. Our knowledge here grows from degree: there it shall be one and the same, receiving or requiring no augmentation. They go from strength to strength: how long? till they appear before God in Zion.

4. In continuance. Earthly knowledge is momentary, all skill in tongs and arts is like the authors, mortal, and shall come to an end. The most famous Artists have often either met with a derogate name, or been buried in oblivion. The study of Christ is only eternal, and shall not be abrogated, but perfected: we shall know then, as we are known.

5. In unity; various, dissonant, and not seldom repugnant is human knowledge: indeed not worthy the name of knowledge; for it is Opinion. Man is contrary to man, yea man to himself: this same vnum sentireto be of one mind, is difficult, if not impossible to be found. Though we aim our knowledge at one mark, yet some shoot on the right hand, some on the left; some short, & others shoot over; having a knowledge that puffeth up. Whose learning hath in it some poison, if it be let go without the true corrective of it. But at this expected day, we shall all meet in an unity of knowledge.

Of the Son of God.

That eternal Son of God, who in the fullness of time became for us the Son of man, shall then be more clearly known to us. We now believe his truth of perfection, we shall then see his perfection of truth. We shall brightly apprehend the inconceivable mystery of him: who is Filius Dei sine matre, filius hominis sine patre: the Son of God without mother, the son of man without father.

If any ask, whether our knowledge shall extend no further then to Christ our Savior. There is no doubt, but as we know our elder brother set in his throne above all the powers of heaven, so we shall also know the rest of our fraternity. Love is a grace that never fades, and therefore shall have knowledge to make way before it. We shall love the Saints, I may infer we shall know them. Peter knew Moses and Elias on the Mount, whom yet before he never saw: why then should we not know them in heaven! and if them, why not other of our glorified friends! If nothing but that which is earthly, and savors of corruption shall cease, and fall off like Elijah's mantle; then knowledge must needs remain, being a divine grace, pure and everlasting as the soul. But seek we to know the Son of God here to be our Savior; and without doubt hereafter we shall know him to be our glorifier.

Whereunto.

To a perfect man. Before he speaks in the plural number of a multitude, We shall All meet: now by a sweet kind of Solaecisme he compacts it into the singular; all into one. We shall All meet to a perfect man. Here lie three notes, not to be balked.

1. This shows what the unity of the Saints shall be; one man. Here they are sometimes said to have one heart, one soul; there they shall be one man. That not a carnal, corruptible, sinful man, for he may dissent from himself, but a perfect man. Not materially, for there shall be distinct bodies and souls still; as here, but metaphorically in regard of the never-iarring harmony. Oh sweet music, where the symphonie shall exceedingly delight us, without division, without frets.

2. The whole Church is compared to a man: we have often read it compared to a body, here to a man. As in other places to a Body, cuius Cap... est Christus; whose Head is Christ; so our Apostle here. ver. 16. speaketh of our growing to the Head which is Christ. So in this place to a Man, cuius anima est Christus, whose soul is Christ. Now the soul in the body increaseth not augmentatively, but secundum vigorem, transfusing into the body her virtual powers & operations more strongly. Christ is ever the same. Heb. 13. Jesus Christ yesterday, and today, and the same forever. In this soul there is no mutation; but the body increaseth with the increase of God. For as Christ increaseth the strength of his grace in us, so we grow to perfection.

3. Full perfection is only reserved for heaven, and not granted till we meet in glory; then shall the Church be one perfect man. We may be now mundi, saith Aug. clean, yet still mundandi, to be cleansed. Not so perfect, but still glad of mercy. Our purity is not in facto, but in fieri; inchoate; not finished though begun. All our righteousness consists in the not imputation of our sins. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity. Summa perfectio imperfectionis confessio. Our greatest cleanness is the free acknowledging our vileness. The other immunity shall be when there are no passions in men, no lusts capable of sin: now it is well if we live without scandal: without eruption, though not without corruption. Non sine culpa...ed sine querela. And so the commendation of Zechariah must be understood; which calleth him righteous, walking in all the commandments of the Lord, blameless. He lived blameless in the worlds eye, not in the Lord's. If thou shouldest mark iniquity, O Lord, who shall stand? Especially when his eye of justice only shall look upon it. Vae etiam laudabili vitae hominum, si remota misericordia discutiatur. Woe to the most commendable life of man, if mercy be removed when it is examined. It is enough to prove Zechariah a sinner, in that he was a Priest. For it was imposed on the Priest first to offer for his own sins, and then the sins of the people: which had been needless, if the Priest had not been guilty of sin, and liable to condemnation.

The justification of David seems to rise higher Psal. 17. Thou hast tried me, and shalt find nothing. What! hath God tried him, the searcher of the hearts, that sees into all the inward cabbins, and hidden concaues of the soul! and shall he find nothing! not great impieties, not less infirmities? nothing! This phrase seems general, yet is not totally exclusiue; nothing against Saul, no treachery or injustice against the Lord's anointed. So it is by Euthymius, and must be restrictiue considered. Otherwise David had many sins: original, I was conceived in sin: actual and public, in slaying not a Philistine, but an Israelite, an Israelite his subject, his honest and worthy subject; and that by the sword of the uncircumcised; and yet more by a wile, sending for him home, and making him drunk. And to ripen this blister, he adulterizeth with his wife: he hath had many wives, robs his poor neighbor of his singular comfort, only wife. These were apparent, vniustifiable impieties; which makes him fall to a Psalm of mercy. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, have mercy upon me: heal my soul, for I have sinned against thee.

These were known to the world; no doubt diverse others were known to his own heart; and yet more, which neither the world nor his own heart knew: who can tell how oft he offendeth? O cleanse thou me from my secret faults. Yet in the matter of Saul, thou canst find nothing. As Bishop Latimer once said in his Sermon before King Edw. 6. For sedition, me thinks for ought I know, if I may so speak, I should not need Christ. David was no traitor, but David was an adulterer. He was in many personal faults an offender: but as a subject he was a good subject; as a King, an excellent Prince.

No less is the praise of Job; a perfect and upright man; none like him in the earth. Which yet is not to be taken for a positive, but comparative commendation. There was none like him in that part of the earth: and he was perfect in regard of those vicious times. Hear himself speak; How shall a man be just with God? and ver. 28. I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent. Let then the Pelagian drink never so deep in this justifying cup of their own righteousness; and let the Papist as deeply pledge him: yet perfection is reserved for another world, when we shall meet to a perfect man. Here we may have it partially, there gradually: here so much as belongs Ad viam, to our way. Phil. 3. Let us, as many as are perfect, be thus minded: there only that is proper Ad patriam, to our country: ver. 12. not as though we were already perfect; but following after, &c. Let us, 1. be humble in acknowledging our own wants and sins; who cannot to God contending with us, answer one of a thousand. Nec millesimae, nec minimae parti, saith Bern. 2. Labor to perfection, in forgetting those things which are behind, and reading forth unto those things which are before. 3. Comfort our endeavoring hearts with this sweet encouragement; we shall one day meet to a perfect man.

To the measure of the stature

The word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, before translated Age, is now better by our New, and according to Beza, Stature. If any will here ground, that in heaven we shall live in that measure of Christ's age and stature, wherein he died, I subscribe not, but am silent. It is not safe wading without a bottom. Only thus much: there shall be nothing wanting to make our glory perfect: and whether you conceive the 33 year of a man's age, to be the beauty and complete perfection, I dispute not. This implies a spiritual stature, whereunto every Saint must grow. Whence infer.

1. That we must grow up so fast as we can in this life; joining to faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, &c. We must increase our talents, enlarge our graces, shoot up in talenese, grow up to this stature. For God's family admits no dwarfs: stunted profession was never found. If the sap of grace be in a plant, it will shoot out in boughs of good words, and fruit of good works; always expected the winter of an afflicted conscience. If a table and consumption take our graces, they had never good lungs, the true breath of God's Spirit in them.

2. God will so ripen our Christian endeavours, that though we come short on earth, we shall have a full measure in heaven. We have a great measure of comfort here, but withal a large proportion of distress: there we shall have a full measure, heaped and shaken, and thrust together, and yet running over; without the least bitterness to distaste it. This is a high and a happy measure.

Regard not what measure of outward things thou hast, so thou get this measure. Trouble not thyself with many things, this one is sufficient, the better part, the greater measure, never to be lost or lessened. Open both thine eyes of Reason and Faith, and see first the little help that lies in great worldly riches. As the partrich sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not: so he that getteth riches and not by right shall leave them in the  $\langle \phi \rangle$  of his days, and at his end shall be a f...e. A bird that steals young ones from other birds, and tenderly nourisheth them, is mocked for her motherly kindness when they are fligge. Even now she had many running after her, by and by they give her the slip, & are all gone: pleasures, delights, riches are hatched and brooded by the wicked as their own. But when God, at whose command they are, calls them away, they take them to their heels; like fugitiues they are gone, and no officer can bring them back. The rich man may shut up his wealth for a season; but as a bird in a cage, if it spy a hole open, it is gone, and flies far enough beyond recovery; towering like an Eagle, even up toward heaven. were thy measure never so ample, as full as his Barns. Luke. 12. yet but a night, a piece of a night, & all is gone. The first borne of death shall devour his strength, saith Bildad: and it shall bring him to the King of terrors. what help is in weakness? never talk of helping thee with fine flour, and the best grapes, & the richest excrements of worms, silken garments: thou wilt one day say, this is no succor. No: that is succor which will help thee in anguish of thy soul, and distress of thy consience; calm the troubles of thy spirit, and heal the wounds of thy broken heart, when the horror of death, and terrors, of sin, sharpened with a keen edge of God's Justice shall besiege thee: now let the thing be praised that can help thee. No measure of earthly things can give thee ease; but this measure of grace, that shall bring thee to the full measure of glory. Grow thou as high in this world as Jonah gourd: a worm shall smite thee, and thou shalt wither. Grow up to this stature of Christ, so fast as thou mayest, and so far as thou canst: and what is here wanting to thy holy endeavours, God shall make up with his happy mercies.

Of the fullness of Christ. Adulti Christi.

It is not meant the full growth of Christ in the flesh: which was as other children. Luk. 2. The child grew, and waxed stronger. We read him a babe sucking, at 12. years old disputing, at 30. preaching, and about 33. dying. His increasing was not habitualiter, sed effectualiter. But here we must consider Christ as Head of his Body the Church; and so said to have mensuram staturae adultae, the measure of full stature, when his body is Perfected: now some predestinated members of this Body are yet unborn; which must concur to the perfection, and making up of this stature of the fullness of Christ. Whence we have a sweet and comfortable observation offered us.

Till the church be fully gathered together, there is in some sort a want to the perfection of Christ. But we must consider Christ two ways; Personally, and mistically. Personal or abstractively in himself, he is not only perfect, but perfection it self. Colos. 1. For it pleased the Father, that in him should all fullness dwell. And. chap. 2. In him dwelleth (not passeth by) the fullness (not a good reasonable measure; and this not only a sufficient fullness, but) all the fullness (not of any created nature, but) of the Godhead (and that not fantastically, but) bodily. Mistically, or in relation to his Body the Church: now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And Christ's will is, that where he is, his members may be there also. So that till the whole Body be gathered to the Head, the head is in some sort not perfect. And in this sense may that Cant. 3. be understood. Behold King Solomon with the Crown, wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his espousalls. where the Church is said to set a Crown on Christ's head; as if his full and perfect coronation were not come till the day of his espousalls and marriage in heaven, when his whole Church shall be crowned together with him. Time was that the other Disciple out ran Peter to the Sepulcher, and Peter out went that other Disciple into the sepulcher: but at this day, they that are alive shall not prevent them that sleep. For God hath provided better for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. We shall all go together to glory.

What a treasure of joy and comfort is here opened us! Our Savior so loves us, that he thinks not himself perfect without us. What is man, O Lord, or the son of man, that thou soreckonest of him? Thou hast Saints the spirits of just, blessed and obedient Angels, thy own infinite self to delight thee; Quid opus vermiculo? What need hast thou of a worm? What am I, O Savior, that thou shouldest not think thyself perfect without me? Well may this sweeten all our poverty, misery, disgrace and ignominy, that the world casts upon us. A great Gallant blusheth to see thee take acquaintance of him, looks upon thee betwixt scorn and anger, thinks himself disparaged by thy company: be content, the God of heaven and earth thinks himself not perfect without thee. He that can break thy contemners to pieces, respecteth thee. Thou art unworthy of the favor of Jesus Christ, if thou canst not content thyself with it, without the worlds.

What a terror shall this be to the wicked, to see those men crowned Kings with Christ, to whom they disdained to give notice in the world. Dives looks with pitiful eyes on glorified Lazarus, who once lay at his gates without the release of crumbs. It shall be no small aggravation to the ungodly's torments, to say of the Saint, This was he whom we had sometimes in derision, and a proverb of reproach. We fools accounted his life madness, and his end without honor. Now he is numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the Saints.

I conclude.

Every Saint shall enjoy this full measure of glory: there shall be no scanting, no limitation. None shall complain of lack: there is the fountain, drink thy fill; there is the heap, take as much as thou wilt. There shall be in all an equality, though not of quantity, yet of proportion: which ariseth not from the object, wherein is plenitude; but from the subject, which is not alike capable. A vessel thrown into the sea can be but full; another is but full, though it contain a greater measure. Everyone shall possess this fullness; and being full there is no want, therefore no envy. But let us take no thought, who shall sit highest in this kingdom, with the sons of Zebedee: it is enough that we shall be crowned kings. Trouble not thyself for order, only strive for admission. We cannot desire to be more then blessed. Let us get into the City of glory, and let God appoint us a room.

Here we see the great difference betwixt this life and the next. In this life we grow up to our full Stature; and then we decrease till we decease; we decline and die. In the other, we come at first to a perfect stature, and so continue forever. We are here subject to sorrows and sins; the first grievous to us as we are men, the other as we are good men: loe we shall one day be freed, be perfect. It is a sweet meditation that fell from a reverend Divine; that many vegetable & brute creatures do exceed men in length of days, and in happiness in their kind;

as not wanting the thing they desire. The Oak, the Raven, the Stork, the Stag fill up many years, in regard of whom man dies in the minority of child-hood. This made the Philosophers call Nature a Stepdame to man, to the rest a true mother. For she gives him least time, that could make best use of his time; and least pleasure, that could best apprehend it, and take comfort in it. But here divinity teacheth & reacheth a large recompense from our God. Other creatures live long, and then perish to nothing; man dies soon here, that hereafter he may live forever. This shortness is recompensed with eternity. Dost thou blame Nature, O Philosopher, for cutting thee so short that thou canst not get knowledge! Open thine eyes: perfect knowledge is not to be had here, though thy days were double to Methushalems. Above it is. Bless God then rather for thy lives shortness: for the sooner thou diest, the sooner thou shalt come to thy desired knowledge. The best here is short of the least there. Let no man blame God for making him too soon happy. Say rather with the Psalmist; My soul is a thirst for the living God: O when shall I come to appear in the glorious presence of the Lord? who would not forsake a prison for a palace, a tabernacle for a City, a sea of dangers for a firm land of bliss; the life of men for the life of Angels? In the bed of this joy let me repose your souls for this time; meditating of that eternal glory, whereof you shall have a perfect and full measure, thinking that the full coronation of your Savior carries for you; and lifting up your eyes of sorrow from the valley of tears, to the mount Zion of blessedness, whereon the Lamb of GOD standeth to gather his Saints about him to a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of his own fullness. To which place himself for his own merits and mercies sake in due time bring us.

Amen.

PRESVMPITION running into DESPAIRE.

Revel. 6. 16.

They said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb.

This verse may be distinguished into

- Error.
- Terror.

The error of the reprobate, the terror of the Judge.

Their error is manifested in their Invocation: in which we may observe

- To what; Mountains & rocks.
- For what
  - To fall on them.

- To hide them.

Thus their amazed error and ignorance is expressed in their Prayer. For the terror, the Judge is described by his

- Omniscience; from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne.
- Omnipotence; from the wrath of the Lamb.

Every circumstance serves to aggravate their folly, and desperate fear. 1. They fear God, but too late. 2. They open their lips to confess the invincible power of Christ: before they were either dumb in silence, or blasphemous in contumelies. 3. They pray to the Mountains and rocks, which hear not. 4. To fall on them, which they dare not. 5. To hide them, which they cannot. 6. They beg to be concealed from him that is all eye; from the face of him that sits in the Throne. 7. To be protected from him that is all power; from the wrath of the Lamb.

Before we come to their Error, and matter of their invocation, let us examine two things.

What they - were.

- did.

The Persons.

Thus amazed with error, and amazed with terror, are described in the precedent verse. The Kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, the bond, and the free, hid themselves in the dens and rocks of the mountains. The greatness of man, when it comes to encounter with God, is weakness and vanity. Is the reprobate a king? the crown on his head is not thunder-proof: lift he his scepter never so high, there is a scepter of justice shall smite it down.

Is he Great in his country, that (as they write of the Sea about the castle of Mina) the currant goes ever with the wind of his will: be he never so high, there is one higher than he, and the highest of all regardeth it: and will subject it.

Is he Rich? were he the eldest son of Mammon, and sole heir to all the userers in the world, can his gold save him? Is vengeance afraid to strike his vessel, because his sails be of silk, and it is ballaced with refined aure? Shall he buy out his damnation with coin? No; the Samuel of heaven will never take bribes.

Is he a Chief Captain? Be his looks never so stern, his speech never so imperious, impetuous; he may command here, and go without. Were he General of Xerxes army, yet he shall find the words of the Psalm truth: Man is not saved by the multitude of an Heast.

Is he mighty? were he as Alexander thought himself, till he saw his own blood, the Son of Jupiter Hammon; yet woe to man when he shall wrestle with his maker. Proud worm, he may dare to lift up his head, but shall quickly be trodden into slime. When the Lord of hoastes is angry, whose wrath shakes the earth, and burns to the bottom of hell; who shall proudly without confusion look him in the face? Silly Giant of men, that thou shouldst dare to grapple, to parle, yea so much as to look at God! Loe greatness!

Time was, when if a friend in the Court shall say to thee, as Elisha to the Shunamite. What is to be done forthee? Wouldst thou be spoken for to the King, or to the Captain of the host; It would have seemed as high a gratifying, and ratifying of his love to thee; as thou couldst have desired, or he expressed. What favor will it be at this day, to be spoken for to all the Kings of the earth, great men, rich men, mighty Captains? Alas they have need to be spoken for themselves. The greatest Potentate, if reprobate, hath now his honor laid in the dust; & from a public Throne, he creeps into a hole. As ambitious Herod received his pride and glory (with derogation to God; Vox Dei.) in a Theater: so now his shame & confusion is in the sight of the whole world; of good and bad Angels, of good and bad men. Zenacherib in his ruffe could once say; Where is the King of Hamath, and the King of Arphad; the King of the City of Sepharvaim, Zena, and Iuah? But now where is the King of Ash...r? Thus Godleadeth Princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty. For their wickedness he poureth contempt upon Princes. Then shall be manifest the irresistible power, and unblameable justice of God: Who sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers: stretching out the heavens as a curtain, & spreading them as a tent to dwell in. He bringeth the Princes to nothing, and maketh the Judges of the earth as vanity.

What privilege then doth these inferior authorities bring with them? That the bondman should thus strive to be free: the freeman to be mighty: the mighty to be a chief Captain: the chief Captain to be rich: the rich to be great: the great to be Kings: till in their opinion nil restat quod praestat, nothing remains to be aspired to. Whereas to these men, Omnia in praesenti parua, in fine nulla, post finem mala: all is for the present little: for Vt Luna, sic sublunaria: as the moon itself, so all things under it are subject to eclipses and changes. In the end they are nothing; death when the game is done, shuffling King and Pawn into one bag. After the end found evil things; for & perduntur & perdunt: they are both lost themselves, and make lost their owners.

These so popular wonders, the terror of slaves, and mirror of fools, on whom the eye of the world was fixed with admiration; are glad to hide themselves in holes. where are you, ye great men; that were so ambitions of fame, and made human praise stand in competition with conscience; as if it were the better mistres and worthy of more servants? alas, glad to be shrowded in holes. your Greatness now wisheth it self so little, that it might not be seen. You insatiate covetous, that never ceased joining house to house, land to land; and possessing whole countries, yet whined for lack of elbow-room: loe, you shall at this day be glad of a hole; a dark hollow cave in a rock for your parlor: or more glad if you might be dissolved into nothing.

They said.

We have described the Persons, What they were: let us see what they did. They said: They open their lips to confess the invincible and inevitable power of Christ. whence derive we two observations.

1. The sense of present misery takes away Atheism. Before their mouths were either shut by silence, or opened by blasphemies; possessed either with a dumb or a roaring devil. God was not in all their thoughts: or if in their thoughts, not in their lips: or if in their lips, but to his dishonor; not named but in their oaths. Now loe, they speak, and make a desperate acknowledgment of that power, they erst derided. The day of judgment, when it comes, shall find no Atheist. What those degenerate creatures would not believe, they shall see: they would not acknowledge their maker, they shall find their Judge: and cry to the mountains, Fall one us, &c.

Consider this, ye that forget God, lest you be torn in pieces when there is none to deliver you. You may forget him during your short pleasure, you shall remember him forever in torture. Proceed to speak of him wickedly, and like enemies to take his Name in vain; you shall one day fall low before his footstool, not with a voluntary but enforced reverence. You that have denied God on earth, the first voice that shall come from your lips, shall be a hopeless acknowledgment of his majesty.

2. The saying that comes from them is desperate: whence note, that in God's just punishment Desperation is the reward of Presumption. They that erst feared too little shall now fear too much. Before they thought not of God's Justice, now they shall not conceive his Mercy. Consciences, that are without remorse, are not without horror. It is the kindness which presumptuous sin doth the heart to make it at last despair of forgiveness. They say.

Behold, God accuseth not, they accuse themselves. God loves to have a sinner accuse himself: and therefore sets his deputy in the breast of man: which though it be a neuter when the act is doing, is an adversary afterwards. The conscience is like the poise of a clock: the poise being down, all motion ceaseth, the wheels stir not: wound up, all is set on going. Whiles conscience is down, there is no noise or moving in the heart; all is quiet: but when it is wound up by the justice of God, it sets all the wheels on working: tongue to confess, eyes to weep, hands to wring, breast to be beaten, heart to ache, voice to cry; and that, where mercy steps not in, a fatal cry; to the hills, Fall on us, and hide us.

Sin, and judgment for sin, make the most cruel men cowardly. Tyrants whose frowns have been death; oppressors that have made their poor Tenants quake at their looks; now tremble themselves: & would change firmness with an aspine leaf. They that care not for the act of sin, shall care for the punishment. Tumidi faciendo, timidi patiendo. Nero that could not be tired in cutting throats, is soon weary of his own torment. They that have made others weep, shall desperately howl themselves. Cain, that durst kill the fourth part of the world at a blow, even his own brother; dares afterwards not look a man in the face, lest he should be slain. Who durst be more impudently bold with God then Judas, when he betrayed his only Son to murderers? yet after the treason who more cowardly then Judas? he becomes his own hangman. The curse that follows sin makes Presumption it self to shudder. But what madness is it, not to complain till too late. If our foresight were but half as sharp as our sense, we should not dare to sin. The issue of wickedness would appear a thousand times more horrible, then the act is pleasant.

Let this teach us now to think of the Justice of God as well as his mercy, that hereafter we may think of his mercy as well as his Justice. The mercy of God is abused to encourage lewdness: and wretched men by Christ's merits are emboldened to commit that, for which he died: but so men may run with mercy in their mouths to hell. They that in life will give no obedience to the law, shall in death have no benefit by the Gospel. When they gave themselves over to lying swaring, coveting &c. they were wont to cry, Mercy, mercy: now loe, they feel what those sins are, and cry nothing but Justice, Justice; they cannot think on mercy. They that have abused mercy, must be quitted with vengeance. The good now sing; With thee, O Lord, is mercy; therefore thou shalt be feared. The reprobates sing at last, with thee O Lord, is judgment; with thee is storm and tempest, indignation & wrath, confusion and vengeance, and therefore art thou feared.

These necessary occurrences, thus considered; let us pass to their Invocation, wherein is exemplified their Error. Here we must observe To what, For what, they call.

To what.

They are Mountains and rocks; unreasonable, yea insensible creatures: whence we may deduce two inferences; a negative, and an affirmative.

1. Negatively; it is clear, that they have no acquaintance with God, therefore know not how to direct their prayers unto him. If their trust had been in God, they needed not to fly to the M...aines. So David sweetly. Psal. 11. Is the Lord put I my trust: how then say you to my soul, Fly as a bird to your mountain? It is God's charge. Call upon me in the day of trouble: and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. But, Rom. 10. How shall they call on him, in whom they have not believed? Or believe in him they have not known? and how should they know him but by his word? Alas those mutual passages, and intercourse of means they have ever barred themselves. They would neither suffer God to trouble them by his word, nor would they offer to trouble him by their prayers. They will not call upon him, nor will they hear him calling upon them.

Therefore as those that never were in the company of God, they know not how to address themselves to him; but rather to rocks and mountains. As extremity discerneth friends; Vere amat, qui miserum amat: so it distinguisheth a man in himself. A sudden disturbance gives a great try all of a Christians disposition. For as in a natural man at such an affrightment, all the blood runs to the heart, to guard the part that is principal: so in a good man at such an instance, all the powers and faculties run to the soul, to save that which is principal. The blood and spirits strive to save the life of the body: faith & hope to save the life of the soul. So that at the sudden assault of some danger, a man shall best judge of his own heart. It may be at other times a dissembler; for man's heart is false, who can know it? yet at such time it will manifest it self, and cannot deceive.

If God hath been our familiar friend, and accustomed helper; danger doth not sooner salute us, then we salute him by our prayers. The first thought of our hearts is Jesus Christ: the first voice of our lips is Peters on the sea in such an extremity; Lord save me: our faith is reposed on his wonted mercy and protection; We know whom we have believed. Daniel calls on GOD, ere he falls to the Lions; this stops their mouths.

The wicked in such misery, are either heavy and heartless, as Nabal; whose heart died within him, and he became as a stone. Or desperate as Julian, throwing his blood up into the air, with a blasphemous confession. Or sottish, as these here; running to the mountains, unprofitable, impossible helps. When the blow of vengeance strikes the covetous, he runs to his counting house; if his bags can give him no succor, he is distracted. If any broken reed be their confidence, in these overwhelming woes, they catch drowning hold of that; so they and their hopes perish together. There are some whose tongues are so poisoned with blasphemy, that in an unexpected accident, the very first breath of their lips is a curse, or an oath. As if they would swear away destruction, which every ungodly speech draws on nearer. If these men had been acquainted with God in fair weather, they would not forget him in a storm. But they that will have no familiarity with God in peace, shall have him to seek in extremity.

When therefore some sudden peril hath threatened thee with terror, note seriously how thou art affected. Though the danger came unlooked for, let it not pass vnthought of: but as thou blessest God for delivery, so examine the good or ill disposedness of thine own heart. If thou find thyself courageous and heavenly minded, on thy confidence in God; take at once assurance of thy faith and God's mercy. He that now stood by thee, will never leave thee. If otherwise, lament thy sins which darken thy souls way to the mercy-seat; and beseech Jesus Christ to store thy heart with better comforts. If thy treasure be in heaven, and thy soul hath been used to travel often thither; when danger comes, it knows the way so well, that it cannot miss it.

2. Affirmatively this presents a soul amazed with fear and folly. They call to the Mountains, that can neither hear nor answer. When the world was destroyed with water, men climbed up to the tops of the Mountains: when it shall be dissolved with fire, they will desire the holes of the rocks, and to lie under the hills. The mountains are but swellings of the earth, and the rocks are surd things; that have no ears: can they hear? or if they hear, can they answer? or if they answer, can they save? when the graves must vomit up their dead, shall the rocks conceal the living? Those five Kings could not be hid in the cave of Makkedah from Joshua; and shall any cave hide from Jesus?

Whiles guilt and fear consult of refuge, how vain shifts they imagine! Adam would hide his disobedience in the bushes: Saul his rebellion in the crowd of the people. So the hood-wink'd fool seeing nobody, thinks nobody sees him. Helplesse evasions! when Adoniah heard the trumpets sounding at Solomon's coronation, he quaked and fled to the horns of the Altar. When the ungodly shall hear the Archangels Trump proclaiming the coronation of Christ, they have no Sanctuary, (they never loved it in all their lives) but fly to the rocks and mountains.

The grave is a dark and privative place: yet as a prisoner that comes out of a sordid and stinking dungeon, into the open air for his trial in a desperate cause, had rather keep the prison still. So these reprobates newly raised from the earth, cry to it to receive them again; glad to remain (though not on the face of it with pleasure) in the bowels of it with rottenesse and solitude; rather then in the open light to come before the judgment seat of Christ. The grave is a drown-bed to hell. They suddenly start out of their sleep, and meet with gastly amazedness at the mouth of their sepulchers: beholding on the one side sins accusing, on another side hellish fiends vexing; an anguished conscience burning within, heaven & earth without; above them the countenance of an angry Judge, below them a lake of unquenchable fire; round about howling and bitter lamentations: no marvel then if at the worlds end they be at their wits end; and cry to the mountains, Fall on us.

Let all this declare to men the vanity of their worldly hopes. God is the Preserver of men, not hills & rocks. The rich man is brought in upon a Premunire, can his gold acquit him in this Star-chamber? The Epicure thinks to drown sorrow in lusty wines: the oppressor mistrusts not the power of his own hand: the proud refugeth his troubled heart in his trunks: the lustful in his punkes: what is this but running to rocks and mountains? Thus madly do men commit two errors. Ier. 2. They forsake the creator which would never forsake them; and adhere to the creatures, which can never help them. O Lord; the hope of Israel; all that forsake thee shall be ashamed; and all that dep...t from thee shall be written in the earth. Now at this day perhaps they would seek to the Lord: but they are answered; Go... to the gods whom ye have served. Loe then of these gods they shall be weary; as in the 2. of Isaiah. where these very words of my Text are deliuerd. ver. 19. They shall go into the holes of the rocks, &c. it is immediately added; In that day a man shall cast his Idols of silver, and his Idols of gold, which he made for himself to worship, (ϕ) the moules and to the bats. Even the spiritual Idolater, the Covetous, shall throw his Images, golden or silver shrines for the Diana of his avarice; his damned coin to combustion, with a vae, Woe unto it, it hath lost my soul. As the sick stomach loathes the meat, whereof it surfeited.

Well, let us leave invocation to these Rocks, worldly refuges: and remember that there is one to be called on, who is only able to defend us: a spiritual, holy and happy Rock, Jesus Christ. David often calls God his Rock and his refuge. A rock that bears up the pillars of the world. Their Rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges. He that builds his house of assurance on this rock, shall stand immovable to wind or weather: he needs not the shelter of mountains; for he shall stand like Mount Zion, that a hideth fast forever. They that despise him, shall find him a Rock also: if they fall on it they shall be broken: if it fall on them, it will grind them to powder. He is a Stone, the Stone, the head-stone of the corner; cut out of the Quarry of heaven without hands. Of whom we are made living stones. He is strong without all things: all things weak without him: trust in him, and you shall have no need to fly to rocks and mountains.

For What

The benefit that they would have the Rocks and the Mountains do them, is to Fall on them, & hide them. Whence we derive three observations. 1. Despair is ever wishing for death: often impatiently snatching at it in this world; but when the last day comes, so greedily longing for it; that to be sure of it, they desire the mountains to dispatch them. Death by the wicked is now most feared; death at the last shall be the thing most wished: They shall desire death, and shall not find it. They that sit in the warm nest of riches, hatching up their brood of lusts, quake at the hearing of death. There are some fear to die, others not so much to die as to be dead. The former are cowardly, the other unbelieving souls. Some fear both, to whom nothing in life then life is more desireable. But when th's last extremity comes, m...ricupiunt, they desire to die. And that death, like a merciles executioner, might not have too many strokes at their lives, they beg help of the Mountains: that they might be thoroughly dispatched at once, without need of a second blow. Cain at his arraignment for his brother would needs live: God grants it; as if it were too much favor for him to die. But he yields it for a curse; as if he heard his prayers in anger. He lives, but banished from God, carrying his hell in his bosom, and the brand of vengeance in his forehead. God rejects him, the earth repines at him, and men abhor him. Loe now Cain would die: himself now wisheth the death he feared, and no man dares pleasure him with a murder. As Nero in the like case; Nec amic...m, nec mimicum h...beo; I have neither friend nor enemy: or as Sau... found in his Armor-bearer, not a will to kill him, though he had a will to be killed by him. Death these reprobates feared, and only death is now desired. They cry to the mountains; Fall on us. 2 Observe, that rocks and mountains are far lighter then sin. Zacharias compares it to a Talent of lead: Isaiah calls it a Burden. Such a weight bore our Savior, that he groaned under it. I am pressed under you, as a cartis pressed that is full of sheaves. The wicked that like Babel-builders think to aspi...e to heaven by multiplying of earth, would be glad if ...umulitumuli; their bodies might be buried under their heaps of wealth, where their souls had been buried long before. But what is a load of earth, a mountain huger then Aetna, under which Jupiter was said subter fulminare Gigantes; what is the whole massy body of the earth to the weight of sin?

Think of it ye Theomachor, that strive in your rebellions imponere Pelio... Ossae: ye rapacious covetous, that load yourselves with thick clay: you lay heavy burdens on the poor, heavier on your own consciences. Sin may seem light for a season; as a pack made up, but not assayed with one of your fingers: when Satan shall lay it on you, it will break your backs. You bear it now like corke and feathers: at that day you shall judge it heavier then rocks and mountains.

Now in contempt of law and Gospel, honesty, and conscience, earth and heaven; they call to pride, ambition, blasphemy, ebriety, luxury, oppression, Fall on us and cover us; wearing pride as a chain, and covering themselves with cruelty as with a garment. Si... lies at the door, and they have no sense to take it up. The devil puts his shoulders under the weight, and thus supported they feel it not. But when God's justice shall reprove them, and set their sins in order before their (ϕ) ; yea impose them on their weak and yielding consciences; howe different will their cry be▪ (ϕ) f...ll (ϕ) , ...ockes cover us. The swearer saying to these heavy creatures, you are lighter then my oaths▪ the ...uetous, you are not so ponderous as my oppressions, the adulterer, the whole earth is a gentle pressure ...o the burden of my lusts.

Custom in sin obstupefies a ...sense: and still like that Romaine Milo, his strength e...creasing with his burden: he that first carried sin a wanton Calf, can at last bear it a goaring Ox▪ Menlocke up their iniquities, as the usurer his money, in a Chest; where the light of reproof may not find them out. They pack all their iniquities upon H..., that will bear them for none but His. Or reserve them to an hours repentance; setting them a day of cancelling, but they break it: as if their last breath could dispel and scatter them all into air. But alas, sins then are found heaviest of all: and here like malefactors pressing to death, they cry out for more weight, the accession of rocks and mountains to dispatch them. Loath they are to come before the Judge, therefore would be pressed to death by these ponderous and massy creatures.

The mountains have not been more barren, then they of goodness: the rocks not so hard as their hearts. The cross of Christ hath been held too heavy; repentance too troublesome a guest for their houses: faith and obedience have been cast off as poor friends: all godliness too weighty; now rocks and hills are light. Christ's yoke was not for their shoulders, Satan's must: His law might not be borne it was so heavy; his wrath must be borne, and that is heavier. Oh then thrice blessed they! whose sins God bindeth up in a bundle, and sinks them in the whirlpool of forgetfulness; that they may never be imposed; for they are too heavy to be borne.

3. Observe that before these wicked were Lord's of nations and Countries; (for they are said to be Princes, Captains, Conquerors; rich men) now they would be glad of one to hide them. Of all their dominions they beg but the barrenest parcel, a rock or mountain: and that to do them a poor office, to conceal them. How much doth man's avarice and ambition covet here; how little contents him hereafter! In death the wickedest Potentate must be content with a grave: after death he would be content with a grave still; yea glad, if in the bottom of a mountain he might be hidden.

Hear this ye covetous, that join house to house, and land to land; by disioyning the societies of men: as if you would leave the whole earth to your babes. Excudit natura redeuntem, sicut intrantem. Nature shall as strictly examine your going out, as it did your coming in. Nonne telluris tres tantum cubiti te expectant? do not only three cubits of ground allot themselves to receive you? Only a grave remains; and all you that boast of your great lands, shall at that day say, haec terra... mea, and terra tua: this is all my land, this is all thy land: even so much room as thy dusts will take up; & all the remainder of mighty Hercules, will scarce fill a little pitcher. A little quantity of ground hath nature proportioned thee, dost thou possess as much as ever the Tempter shown Christ. When certain Philosophers intently beheld the Tomb of Alexander; saith one: Heri fecit ex auro thesaurum; body aurum exeo facit thesaurum. Yesterday he treasured up gold, today gold treasures up him. Another; Yesterday the world did not content him; today ten cubits contain him. Socrates carried Alcibiades bragging of his lands to a map of the world, and bad him demonstrate them: Alcibiades could not find them: for alas, Athens it self was but a small and scarce discernible point. A wiser man spake otherwise of his lands. O Ager, quàm multorum fuisti & eris! nunc meus, & postea mescio cuius. O Land, how many men's hast thou been and shalt be! now mine, and hereafter I know not whose. So little ground contents us when we are dead.

But when the wicked shall rise again, would it not serve them still with all their hearts? Had they not rather lie in rottenness then combustion? Were not a cold grave more welcome, then a hot furnace? Yes; rather had they be dead without sense, then alive in torment. Now they beg not a city, though a little one as Zoar: not a house, though poor and bleak as Codrus his: not an open air, though sharp and irksome; scorched with the Indian Sun, or frossen with the Russian cold: there is no hope of these favors. Give them but a mountain to fall on them, and a rock to hide them, and they are highly pleased. Here is a strange alteration for the wicked; When they shall go from a glorious mansion to a loathsome dungeon: from the table of surfeit to the table of vengeance: from fawning obseruants to afflicting spirits: from a bed of down to a bed of fire: from soft linen and silken couerings, to wish a rock for their pillow, and a mountain for their couerlet. Nay, and yet they that commanded so far on earth, cannot command this piece of earth, to do them such a kindness. They could in the days of their pride speak imperiously enough; this land is mine, this town is mine: as Nabal said, Shall I take my meat and my drink &c. but now they feel, it was none of theirs; not one hole must shelter them, not one hillocke do them service.

Nothing helps when God will smite: mountains and rocks are no defense when God pursues. Doest thou think to reign because thou cloathest thyself in Cedar? What, is Cedar against thunder? GOD hath a hand that can strike through Forts, Rocks, and Bulwarks. The seuenfold walls of Babylon cannot defend the Tyrant within them. The heavens melt at the presence of the Lord: if he touch the mountains, they smoke for it. The of-spring of the revived world offer to build a Tower, whose top might reach to Heaven. What security could be in it? Are not things nearer to heaven more subject to the violences of Heaven; lightning, thunder, and those higher inflammations? Feriant summos fulgura montes. In se magna ruunt, summis{que} negatum est stare diu. God soon made it a monument of their folly and his power. He gives confusion of their voices and their work at once. When God reigned from heaven that greatest shower, that ever the earth did or shall sustain, you know their shifts. They think to over-climb the judgment; and being got up to the highest mountains, look down with some hope on the swimming valleys. When the water began to ascend up to their refuged hills, and the place of their hope became an Island, loe now they hitch up higher to the tops of the tallest trees; till at last the waters overtake them half dead with hunger and horror. The mountains could not save them in that day of water, nor shall the mountains in this day of fire. It is not then the defense of forts or ports, the secrecy of caves or graves, the bottom-burroughes of hills, or vaultie dens of rocks; not a league with all the elements of the world, beasts of the earth, stones of the street, that can secure them.

Be hidden they cannot, what should they then wish but death: they that once trembled to die, do now more quake to live: they would be glad of a riddance, and kiss the instrument of their annihilation. They would prize and embrace it as the best happiness that ever saluted them, if like beasts they might perish to nothing. Here they envy the storke, stagge, rauen, oake for long life, and chide nature for their own shortness. But at this day they would change with any flower, though the continuance thereof were not so much as Jonah's Gourds: and think not to be, was to be happy. The pangs of the first death, are pleasures, in respect of the second.

But what hope is there of their security or refuge in mountains; when ver. 14. The very heaven shall departa s...roll that is rolled up together, and every mountain and Island shall be moved out of their places. Heaven is expansum tanquam linteum, & diducta la...ina; but shall then be folded up like a garment; whose beauty is not seen: or rolled together like a volume, whose large contents are as it were abridged: not that the matter of the world shall be quite abolished. For as we say now of grace; Adolet non abolet naturam gratia: so we may say of glory: Perficit non perdit mundum gloria. Corruption shall be taken away, not all the matter that was corrupted. But if all things be thus narrowly searched, how shall the ungodly hope to lie hidden?

We have now considered the horror of the Reprobates; let us look to the Judge, from whom they desire to be hidden. From the presence of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the lamb. In whom we find an omniscience, and an omnipotence. which circumstances the time allows me but to mention. First for his all knowing Wisdom.

From the face.

It was ever the fashion of guiltiness, to fly from the presence of God. Adam had no sooner sinned, but he thrusts his head in a bush. Sins inevitable effect is Shame. Though impudence bear it our for a time. Ier. 6. They were not ashamed when they had committed abomination: yet they shall one day bear the reproach of their sins, and be ashamed, yea even confounded. Shame must come; either first to repentance. Rom. 6. whatfruit had you then in those things, whereof you are now ashamed: or at last in vengeance; let them be ashamed that transgress without a cause. Let this teach us how to judge rightly of sin, that drives us from the face of God.

But doth not the glory of the Lord fill all the earth? Whither then shall they go from his face: whither fly from his presence? we shall find the Prophet concluding in that Psalm; that there is neither heaven, nor hell, nor uttermost part of the sea; nor day nor night, light nor darkness, that can hide us from his face. Our sitting, lying down, rising up, the words of our tongues, ways of our feet, thoughts of our heart, our reins, bones and mothers wombs, wherein we lay in our first informitie, are well known to him. Let us not flatter our selves, as if we would pluck out the eye of knowledge; God hideth his face, he will never see us. For there is neither couch in chamber, nor vault in the ground; neither bottoms of mountains, nor holes of rocks; neither secret friend, nor more secret conscience; neither heaven nor hell that can conceal us.

Of him that sitteth.

Christ now sits in glory. Whiles he was on earth <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> how little rested he! He dearly earned that voice, before he heard it; Sitte thou at my right hand: now behold he sits. Good rest is the reward of good labor: the week of our days spent, we shall have an eternal Sabbath; enter into God's rest; Apoc. 14. rest from our labors. Hast thou labored, thou shalt have ease: hast thou traveled in the ways of grace, thou shalt sit on the seat of glory.

On the throne.

Christ at this day shall appear in his true Majesty: on earth he would not be crowned; the reason of his refusal was; my Kingdom is not of this world; now he sits in his Throne. He hath a Kingdom here, but it is secret in the conscience: then it shall be conspicuous; sitting in his Throne. His majesty hath been despised; but now Bring those mine enemies that would nothave me reign over them, and slay them before me.

Thus differs Christ's first coming and his second. Then in humility, now in glory: then with poor shepherds, now with mighty Angels; then the contempt of nations, now the terror of the world: then crowned with thorns, now with majesty: then judged by one man, now judging all men: then in a cratch, now in a Throne. You see his All-knowledge; now for his Almightiness.

From the wrath.

The wrath of Christ is his Justice: Attributor ira Deo per effectum. As man offended seeks revenge: so when God executes judgment, it is called his wrath. But passion in us, perfection in him. He hath long been provoked; give him now leave to stricke. You that made so light to trample his blood under your sensual feet, shall now find what his wrath is. Let us now think of this wrath, that we may escape it. The commination of hell doth not less commend God's providence, then the promise of heaven. Nisi in...ntata esset gehenna, o...es in gehennam C...beremur. Now or never is this wrath to be escaped: therefore, Kiss the Son lest he be angry, and so ye perish from the way; if his wrath be kindled, yea but a little, Blessed are all they that put their trustin him.

Of the Lamb.

Christ was called a Lamb in his passion; so here in his coming to judgment; not that he should suffer anymore; but to show that the same Lamb that was slain shall give sentence on his murderers. The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son. And hath given him authority to execute judgment, because he is the son of man. It shall aggravate their vexation, that the Lamb who offered his blood for their redemption, shall now censure them for despising. He that would have been their mediator to pray for them, & their advocate to plead for them, must now be their Judge to sentence them. The Lamb that saveth the sheep on the right hand, shall cast off the goats on the left. The Lamb they have contemned, by this Lamb they shall be condemned. Woefull men, whom the wrath of the Lamb lights on: for he shall give them an Ite maledicti. What shall then become of them, but to knock at the gates of heaven whiles those gates are standing, and cry forever to God but to no purpose!

I have no will to end with a terror; yet no time to sweeten your thoughts with those comforts which faith might suck from this last word the Lamb. I say no more: the godly shall find him a Lamb indeed; as willing now to save them, as before to suffer for them. He hath purchased, promised, and prepared a kingdom: & they shall Rain mith him that sits on the Throne, and with the Lamb for evermore. To whom be eternal glory.

Amen.

MAIESTIE IN MISERIE OR The power of Christ even dying.

MATH. 27. 51.

And behold, the veil of the Temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent: and the graves were opened, and many bodies of Saints which slept, arose.

IN the lowest depth of Christ's humiliation, GOD never left him without some evident and eminent testimony of his divine power. He hangs here on the cross dying, yea dead; his enemies insulting over him, whereis now his God? If he be able to save us, let him save himself. He bears not only the wrath of God, but even the reproach of men. Yet even now shall his Divinity appear, and break like a glorious Sun through these clouds of misery: he rents the veil, shakes the earth, breaks the stones, raiseth the dead.

These two verses stand gloriously adorned with four miracles.

1. The veil of the Temple was rent in twain. You will say perhaps, the substance of it was not so strong, but an easy force might rend it. But ver. 50. Christ was dead before, or died at that very instant. It was above nature, that a dying, yea a dead man, crucified in so remote a place from it, should rend the veil within the Temple.

2. The earth did quake. Say the veil was of less substance, yet the huge body of the earth will try a man's strength. In vain should silly man contend with that, which shall devour him. He cannot move the earth, the earth shall remove him; from walking alive on it, to lie dead in it. Behold the power of Christ; Terram mouet; he makes the vast body of the earth to tremble.

3. The rocks rent. Will any yet say, natural causes can shake the earth? then let their malicious cavil be choked with this third miracle beyond exception; he breaks the stones; not little stones, but huge massy rocks.

4. Lastly to stop the mouth of all adversaries to his divine power; he raiseth up the dead. Suscitare mortuos esepulchro, is only proper to God. No man can give a ransom to God for his brother, that he should live forever, and not see corruption. How much less when he is dead, recover him to life again. Here was the finger of God. Now to proceed in order with the miracles.

1. Miracle.

The Vail of the Temple, &c. This Vail was the partition betwixt the Sanctum Sanctorum, & the Sanctum; as it might be the upper part of the Choir. Into this went the high Priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. By the renting this Vail were many things presignified.

1. This serves for a confirmation of that Christ spoke on the Cross; It is finished. The renting of the Vail doth actually echo to his words, and indeed fulfils them. Here is an end put to all the Sacrifices and Ceremonies of the law. In the New Testament one only real and royal Sacrifice, Christ crucified. This was that object whereto all those legal rites looked; & to them all there is now given a Consummation est. So that now Coremonia mortua, Lex mortifera: Ceremonies are dead, and the typical law deadly. Nouum Testamentum latet in veteri, Vetus patet in nouo. The Gospel lay hidden under the law, the law is complete in the Gospel. Now after that you have known God in his Gospel, how turn you again to the weak and beggarly Elements, whereunto you desire again to be in bondage? God's service is now simple and plain; in spirit and truth.

Christ is said to be the end of the law: the moral law he kept himself sincerely, and satisfied for us soundly. The Ceremonial was referred to him, performed of him, fulfilled in him, extinguished by him. They had all Vig... a Christo, relationem ad Christum, consummationem in Christo. He gave them their beginning, he hath also given them their end. The Vail rent, to witness the cancelling of that ritual obligation. Christ hath blotted out the hand-writing of ordinances that was againstus, nailing it to his Cross. That moment was their last gasp; they expired with Christ. But did all Ceremonies then utterly die? No: some were typical prefiguring Christ: those are dead. Some are for decency and order, adminicula deuotionis, these are not dead. The law of Jewish ceremonies is abolished: but some must be retained. Christ came not to dissolve order. Men consist of bodies as well as souls; and God must be served with both: now bodies cannot serve God without external rites: the Spouse of Christ cannot be without her borders and laces. On necessity there must be some outward observances; but thus qualified. That they be for number few, for signification plain, for observation simple: far from ostentation, farther from superstition. Christ his Spouse must not flaunt it like an harlot, but be soberly attired like a grave matron. Ceremoniae quasi caremoniae, wants a carendo; as it were ordained to supply the defects of our nature. Because we could not serve God in that simplicity we ought, therefore we have these helps. Hence it is, that the nearer to perfection, the fewer ceremonies; as it were the more light, the less shadow. In the law were abundant ceremonies, in the Gospel far fewer, in heaven none at all.

This condemns the Church of Rome for a glorious Harlot, because she loads her self with such a heap of gaudy ceremonies: and their mass for mere Idolatry, which they believe to be a real propitiatory Sacrifice of Christ, made by the Priests for the sins of quick and dead. This is to build up the veil here rent in pieces, and to accuse Christ of falsehood in his Consummation est. Is an end put to them, and shall they still retain them, yea obtrude them as principal partes of God's service; yea worship them, yea bind men's consciences to them on pain of damnation? Therefore they are liable to Augustine's censure; who calls such Impios sepulturae viol...tores; Diggers into the graves of the dead for putrefied and rotten relics. Yea to the Judgment of God; who saith, If ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world: why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to Ordinances? after the commandments and doctrines of men? They will say, Dicit Papa, sanxit Concilium; thus saith the Pope, thus decrees the Council: but we, Dixit Dominus, non Donatus: we hear what the Lord says, in his Scripture concerning the law of ceremonies.

2. The second thing signified by the renting the veil is this. The holy of holies figured the third heaven; where GOD showeth himself in glory and majesty to his Saints. Solomon's Temple had in it three Courts; an utter court whereinto the people were admitted: an inner Court wherein only the Priests and Levites entered: an inmost of all, whereinto the high Priest alone, and that but once a year; and this was called Sanctum Sanctorum. So there is a threefold Heaven: Coelum elementarium, Stellatum, Gloriosum. First the Elementarie heaven, wherein are clouds, winds, rain, dew: and the birds are called the birds of heaven, that is of this elementarie heaven. The second is the Starrey heaven: So the Sun is said to go from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it. The last is the Glorious, heaven, the habitation of God himself: and this was signified by the Holy of holies. The veil signified the flesh of Christ: the renting of the veil, the crucifying of Christ: by this is made an entrance into that Sanctum Sanctorum, the heaven of glory. So expressly. Heb. 10. Having therefore boldness to enter into the Holiest by the blood of Jesus; By a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His Flesh. Heaven gate was shut up by our sins; none but our highest and holiest Priest had passage there: but he rent the veil, suffered his body to be torn by death, that he might give us an entrance. Paul speaking of the legal use of that Holiest place in the Temple, saith thus. Heb. 9. The holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the Holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first Tabernacle was yet standing. But now by Christ his renting the veil, Patet alti ianua Coeli, the way of salvation is opened. Let this reach forth to us two comforts.

1. There is no fear to be shut out of heaven, if thou have faith in Christ: for to thee is the veil rent, the separation is abolished, Christ is crucified. For So, saith Saint Peter, an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Indeed to unbelievers and hypocrites, to worldly wolves and luxurious goats the veil is up still. How should they enter the Sanctum sanctorum, that never approached the Sanctum? How shall they see the glory of God, who would never entertain the grace of God? No: to these there are inaccessible bars, and Cherubims with flaming swords, to forbid their entrance. But to every good and faithful Servant the veil is taken away; and Christ says; enter thou into the joy of the Lord.

2. By this means we have in this world a free access to the Throne of grace by our prayers: the veil and separation of sin and wrath is rent asunder by Christ, and a clear way made for our supplications. The Propitiatory and Mercy-seat, the Cherubims of glory shadowing it, the very presence of God, were within the Holiest: and the people might not approach it, but stood without a far off: Our Savior hath torn away this veil, and opened our petitions a free passage to the Seat of mercy in heaven. Having such an high Priest over the house of God; (saith Paul immediately after the clearing our way through the veil) Let us draw near with a true-heart, in full assurance of faith, &c. We see how far our prerogative excels that of the Jews. They were servants, we are sons, and cry Abba Father: they had Priests, we are Priests: they had a bar, to us that veil is rent away. Let us therefore come boldly unto the Throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. This is singular comfort, that poor subjects may be sure of access to the King with their petitions; yea more, be heard in all their desires: yea most of all, have an Advocate at the Kings right hand to plead their cause. But then remember the Psalmists caution. If I regard wickedness in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. Let the servants of Baal cry never so loudly, if lewdly; their prayers are not heard. To the cries of unfaithful sinners the veil is up still; and like a thick cloud reuerberates & beats back their orisons; that they cannot ascend to the Throne of grace. Only faith makes a free passage, and a clear conscience hath a clear voice, that can pierce heaven.

3. The breaking down of this veil did make the Holiest and the other part of the temple all one. Whereby was signified, that of two was made one, Jews and Gentiles one Church. He is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us. So that now those, the Jews called dogs, eat the bread of the children; yea they are the children: and Japheth is persuaded to dwell in the tents of Sem. She is also Beloved that was hated; even the Church of the Gentiles is the Spouse of Christ. The veil that hindered, Paul calls the Law of commandments, contained in ordinances: this he abolished for to make in himself, of twain, one new man. Heaven gate is no wider open to a Jew, then to a Grecian. In Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God: The Sum of the Gospel, as of the world, is not confined to lighten Judea only, but shines universally. There is not one privilege, wherein the Gentile hath not as frank a share, as the Jew: the sons of Hagar are adopted the sons of God; and the free Jerusalem above is the mother of us all. All this did our blessed Savior work for us by renting the veil; That he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby.

Oh then let us keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Christ hath made us at one, let us not make our selves twain. The veil is rent, why set we up new; schisms in doctrine, jars in conversation? The bill of diuorcement is cancelled: let us love our husband Christ, and for his sake every man his brother. Let us set up no more veils, least we do it with the curse of building more Jericho's. There is no bond so sure as Religions; no ligaments so strong, as faith and a good conscience. Wretched man, that breakest these t...es, and rentest thyself from them to whom thou art by Christ united: A mothers, yea a Fathers blessing forsakes thee: and thou buildest up a new veil, which thou must look for no more Christ's to come rent asunder.

4. The renting of the veil teacheth us; that when men sin rebelliously against God, no prerogative shall do them good. The Temple was one of their principallest privileges, their glory, their crown. The Temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord. It was a figure of the Church militant as Solomon the builder was a figure of Christ. For this Temples sake God often spared them. So Daniel prays; Cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary, that is desolate. Yet when they fall away from God, and crucify their Messias, this prerogative helps not. For here God's own hand rents the veil, and after gives the whole fabric a spoil to the Gentiles. If ye will not hear, if ye will not lay it to heart, I will send a curse upon you, I will curse your blessings: yea I have cursed them already, because you do not lay it to heart. It lies in man's sin, to make God curse his very blessings: and to punish the nocent in the innocent creatures.

We see the way, how we may loose Temples, and peace, and Gospel, and all privileges; by running the courses of disobedience. Who can number the blessings we have enjoyed by the Gospel? Let us beware, least our ungracious and ungrateful lives rob us not of that, with all the appertinent comforts. They that have traveled the Belgic Provinces, can witness the miserable footsteps of war, and the tyranny of desolation. Churches and Cities have no more monuments, but the ruined foundations to testify that they were. Sin made way for blood and massacre; Idolatry pulled down those walls, which otherwise the most sacrilegious hand should have forborne. If there had been no enemy to rase them, they would have fallen alone, rather then covered so blasphemous impiety under their guilty roofs. Peace is within our walls, & prosperity within our palaces; blessed forever be our God of peace for it. Yet we have a subtle adversary, Sacrilege, that incroacheth sore upon us, and hath taken many of God's houses in possession. We cannot say, They have burnt up all the Synagogues in the land: but they have done very wickedly to the Lord's Sanctuaries. The walls stand, and it is well if in many places they do so: but there is not a Levite to feed the people; alas, how can there when there is nothing left to feed a Levite? Covetousness would do as much hurt with us, as war hath done with our neighbors: it would, but I trust in the Lord Jesus, it shall not. Though they have rent away God's right, Tithes and offerings: they shall never rent away God's Truth and Gospel: rent themselves from it indeed they are likely to do.

5. Lastly, The Vail was rent. By renting the part God did threaten the subversion of the whole. If he spare not the Holy of holies, then much less the rest. Ezek. 9. When God had comanded; Slay utterly old & young, maids and children; he adds withal, And beginat my Sanctuary. If God begin at his Sanctuary, he will not fail to end with the rest: if that shall not scape being profaned, how much less houses built for riot & disorder, pride & ambition! If the Temple of prayers, then surely the dens of thieves. For loe, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, & shall ye go unpunished? saith God to the Heathen. If the sacredst things defiled by Idolatry shall be subverted, never think that your fair houses shall stand, when they are made couerts of oppressions, and convents of superstition! when the better things are not favored, the worst have small hope. So Peter reasons; If Judgment shall begin at the house of God, what shall be the end of them that obey not the Gospel? If the strong Cedars in Lebanon be rooted up, woe to the rotten-rooted poplars. If the dragons tail swoope stars from heaven, what shall become of squalid earthy vapors? The Temple was one of the worlds greatest wonders; as curious a workmanship as six and thirty years could make it: it wanted not the art of man, yea the blessing of heaven was added to it. Yet now loe, Etiam periere ruinae; this goodly building by sin was brought to ruin, yea even the very ruins are perished. Shall then your Forts and Palaces, worldlinges Paradises: full of rapine, empty of charity; stand against all weathers and storms of judgment? No, stone shall fall after stone; and ruin shall one day tell the passengers, as GOD threatened of Jerusalem; Here stood a goodly Manner, a sumptuous edifice, a royal Palace. Or if they fall not down in themselves, they shall fall to the owners; whose iniquities have defiled them.

God punisheth by certain degrees; first he rents the veil, then rents away the Temple: As by David's hand he first rent Saul's garment, and then rent away his kingdom. God at first toucheth men lightly; in their goods, quiet, health: if these stir not to repentance, he proceeds against the whole Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God? If you set up in this Temple Idols, lusts, and evil affections, God first rents the veil, toucheth you with some gentle afflictions: but if you still continue to make this Temple a den of thieves, the Temple it self will be destroyed.

You have heard the first miracle, the renting of the veil. As the Jews were wont to rend their garments when they heard blasphemy against God: so it may seem the Temple tore his garments, rent his veil in pieces, when it heard those execrable blasphemies against the Son of God.

2. Miracle.

The earth did quake. The Philosophers have given diverse natural causes of earth-quakes: as by hot and dry exhalations shut up in the bowels of the earth, and laboring for vent resisted by the earths solidnes, there ensueth terrae motus, a shaking of the earth, &c. But this was an extraordinary earth-quake; for it happened exactly at the very instant of Christ's death.

It might be to set forth the glory of the New Testament, and to vindicate it from inferiority to the old. The law was both given and renewed with an earthquake. Giuen. Exod. 19. to the hand of Moses. The wholemount quaked greatly. As at the giving mount Sinai, so at the renewing mount Horeb quaked. As Elijah stood upon the Mount, there passed by a strong wind, and after the wind an Earth-quake. So when the Lord of the Gospel died, the earth shook: that the ministration of righteousness might not be less glorious, then the ministration of death. This miracle shall give us a threefold instruction.

1. To consider the fierceness of God's wrath against sins and sinners. For God by shaking the earth did no less then threaten the utter subversion of those desperate and bloody wretches. Corah and his confederates were swallowed up of the earth, for rebelling against Moses the Lord's servant. Of much how sorer punishment were these worthy, that had crucified (not the servant, but) the Son of God! If the mercies of God had not been greater then their iniquities, they had not escaped.

By this we see how able God is to punish sinners: he shows what he can do; it is his mercy, that he forbears. Some of these were to be converted, therefore concussi, non excussi; moved not removed, shaken but not destroyed. Ostendisti populo grauiam, saith the Psalmist. Thou hast shown thy people hard things. Showed, not imposed: shook the rod, not laid it on. This forbearance of God should lead us on to repentance: if not, it is but the forerunner of vengeance. Though now by moving the earth he scare and spare these Jews, yet after the earth spewed them out, as an offense to her stomach. O obstinate hearts, that quake not, when the senseless ground quakes that bears so unprofitable a burden. Cannot the earth admonish thee? it shall devour thee. Si non mouebit. mouebit. If the almighty's hand stirring it, hath not stirred thee to repentance; a Sextons hand shall cover thee with moulds; a weak shaker shall do it. Think when God moves the earth, he preacheth to thy soul: if thy heart (so little in comparison of that great vast body) will not tremble, know God hath one thing that shall shake thee to pieces; death.

2. The nature of sin is here considerable; so heavy that it makes the very earth to quake. The Jews sins were such a burden, that the earth could not bear them without trembling. The earth is fixed, and standeth fast saith the Psalmist; as the Center of the world: it is strange that to be moved; even so strange is the cause that moves it. It must needs be a monstrous weight of iniquity, that totters the earth on her foundations. But why is the earth so quiet now? Do not innumerable wretches daily crucify Christ; by their oaths, blasphemies, and rebellions in his head; by their persecutions & oppressions in his members? Is not his word derided, his Sacraments despised, his good creatures abused? Why doth not the earth shrink and shake at these horred impieties? Be still: he that holds his hand from miracles, will not hold it from plagues: They are for borne, not forgiven. God keeps silence, but he sleepeth not: the earth may spare them, but Desolation in a moment shall swallow them. To the Jews the earth moved, and they stood still: to these the earth shall stand still, and themselves shall be moved.

3. There is nothing on the earth that is not movable, if the earth it self be movable. God hath laid the foundations of the earth that it should not be moved. Yet so, that he who laid it, can shake it. If the earth, then whatsoever is built upon it. The earth shall be burnt, saith Peter. What alone? no, the earth with the works that are therein shall be burnt up. The works of men's hands, the works of their brines, their very thoughts shall perish. The Lord's voice shook the earth, and he hath said, yet once again I will shake not the earth only, but also heaven. O blessed place that is not subject to this shaking: whose joys have not only an amiable countenance, but a glorious continuance. The things that are shaken shall be removed, but the things that are not shaken remain forever. All the terrors of this world move not him that is fixed in heaven. Impavidum ferient ruinae. They that put their trust in the Lord, shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever. But the Tabernacles and hopes of the wicked shall perish together. For the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth ever. Whereon saith August. Quid vis? Vtrum amare temporalia, & transire cum tempore! an amare Christum, & vivere in aeternum? Whether wilt thou love the world, and perish with it? or love Christ, & live forever?

3. Miracle.

The rocks rent. A wonderful act, to break stones and rend rocks. This gives us two observations.

1. This did foreshow the power and efficacy of the Gospel, that it should be able to break the very rocks. As the death and passion of Christ did cleave those solid and almost impenetrable substances: so the publishing of his death and passion shall rend and break in pieces the rocky hearts of men. So John the Baptist said; God is able of stones to raise up children unto Abraham. The hearts of Zacchaeus, Mary Magdalene, Paul, were such rocks; yet they were cleft with the wedge of the Gospel. This is that Rod of Moses, able to break the hardest Rocks; till they gush out with floods of penitent tears. This is Jeremiah's hammer, powerful to bruise the most obdurate hearts. The blood of the Goat sacrificed, of force to dissolve Adamant. There is power in the blood of Jesus, to put sense into stones. Blessed are you, if you be thus broken-hearted for him, whose heart was broken for you. For the broken heart the Lord will not despise.

2. Observe the wonderful hardness of the Jews hearts. The stones rent and clave in sunder at the cruel death of Jesus: but their hearts more stony then stones, are no whit moved. They rend not their garments, much less their hearts: when as the earth rent the Stones her bones, and the rocks her ribs. The flints are softer then they: the flints break, they harden. They still belch their malicious blasphemies, the rocks relent: the stones are become men, and the men stones. O the senselessness of a hard heart: rocks will sooner break, than that can be mollified. Even the hardest creatures are flexible to some agents: flints to the rain, iron to the fire, stones to the hammer: but this heart yields to nothing; neither the showers of mercy, nor the hammer of reproof, nor the fire of Judgments: but like the stithy, are still the harder for beating. All the plagues of Egypt cannot mollify the heart of Pharaoh. It is wondrously unnatural, that men made the softest hearted of all, should be rigidiores lupis, duriores lapidibus; more cruel than wolves, more hard than stones. I would to GOD all hard-heartedness had died with these Jews; but it is not so. How often hath Christ been here crucified; in the word preaching his Cross to your ears, in the Sacraments presenting his death to your eyes; think, think in your own souls, have not the stones in the walls of this Church been as much moved? God forbid our obdurateness should be punished as theirs was: since they would be so stonyhearted, Jerusalem was turned to a heap of stones; and the conquering Romans dashed them pitifully against those stones, which they exceeded in hardness.

Here let the wicked see their doom: the stones that will not be softened, shall be broken. There is no changing the decree of God, but change thy nature, and then know thou art not decreed to death. Stony hearts shall be broken to pieces with vengeance: do not strive to alter that doom, but alter thy own stony heart to a heart of flesh, and so prevent it in the particular. Wolves and goats shall not enter into heaven: thou mayest pull stars out of heaven before alter this sentence; but do it thus. Leave that nature, and become one of Christ's sheep, and then thou art sure to enter. No adulter... nor covetous person, saith Paul, shall inherit the kingdom... of heaven: this doom must stand; but not against thee, if thou be converted. Such were ye, but ye are washed, &c. You are not such. Had the Jews ceased to be stones, they had been spared. God will root thorns and briars out of his vineyard: if thou wouldst not have him root out thee, become a Vine: and bring forth good grapes. God threatens to break the hairy scalp of him that goes on in sin; yet mayest thou ward this blow from thyself; Go no further on in sin. When God comes in judgment to visit the earth, to shatter rocks, and break stones in pieces; thou hast a heart of flesh, mollified with repentance. Let the earth quake, and the rocks tear; thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace.

4. Miracle.

The graves were opened, and many bodies of Saints which slept, arose. Concerning this two questions are moved.

1. Where their souls were all this while before. I answer, where the scripture hath no tongue, we should have no ear. Most probably thus: their souls were in heaven, in Abraham's bosom; and came down to their bodies by divine dispensation, to manifest the power and Deity of Christ.

2. Whither they went afterwards. I answer by the same likelihood, that they died no more, but waited on the earth till Christ's resurrection; and then attended him to heaven. But these things that are concealed, should not be disputed. Tutum est nescire quod tegitur. It is a safe ignorance, where a man is not commanded to know. Let us then see what profitable instructions we can hence derive to our selves. They are many, and therefore I will but lightly touch them.

1. This teacheth us, that Christ by his death hath vanquished death, even in the grave, his own chamber. That giant is subdued, the graves fly open, the dead go out. This bears ample witness to that speech of Christ. I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. The bodies of the Saints, what part of the earth or sea soever holds their dusts, shall not be detayned in prison; when Christ calls for them: as the members must needs go, when the Head draws them. He shall speak to all creatures, Reddite quod deuorastis: restore whatsoever of man you have deuoured: not a dust, not a bone can be denied. The bodies of the Saints shall be raised, saith August. Tanta facilitate quanta faelicitate: with as much easynes, as happiness. Desinunt ista, non pereunt: mors intermittit vitam, non eripit. Our bodies are left for a time, but perish not: death may discontinue life, not conclude it. Intermittit... non interimitur: it may be paused, cannot be destroyed.

2. Observe, that all the dead do not rise, but Many, and those Saints. The general resurrection is reserved to the last day: this a pledge or earnest of it. Now who shall rise with this comfort? none but Saints: as here Christ takes no other company from the graves, but Saints. The dead in Christ shall rise first. Christ is called The first borne from the dead: He hath risen, and his shall next follow him. Every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's, at his coming. Wormes and corruption shall not hinder: he that said To Corruption, thou art my mother: and to the worms, you are my brethren and sisters: said also, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and one day with these eyes I shall behold him. The wicked shall also be raised, though with horror, to look upon him whom they have pierced. But as Christ did here, so will he at the last, single out the Saints to bear him company.

3. This showeth the true operation of Christ's death in all men. We are all dead in our sins, as these bodies were in their graves: now when Christ's death becomes effectual to our souls, we rise again and become new creatures. From the grave of this world we come into the Church, the holy City. But thou complainest of the deadness of thy heart: it is well thou complainest; there is some life or thou couldst not feel the deadness. The hour is coming & now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear it shall live. If this word hath raised thee from death, and wrought spiritual life in thy heart, thou shalt perceive it by thy breathing, words glorifying God; & by thy moving, in the ways, & to the works of obedience.

4 Observe that these Saints which arose, are said to have Slept. The death of the godly is often called a Sleep. So it is said of the Patriarchs and Kings of Judah, they slept with their fathers. So Paul saith, they sleep in Christ. The Coffin is a couch; In quo mollius dormit, qui been in vita laborauit, wherein he takes good rest, that hath wrought hard in the work of his salvation before he went to bed. Felix somnus cum requie, requies cum voluptate, voluptas •...um aeternitate. It is a sweet sleep that hath peace with rest, rest with pleasure, pleasure with everlastingness. So the godly sleep, till the Sound of a Trumpet shall waken them, and then eternal glory shall receive them.

5. Lastly observe that Jerusalem is called the Holy city, though she were at this time a sink of sin, and a debauched harlot. Either as some think, that she is called holy, because she was once holy. So Rahab is called the harlot, because she was a harlot. Simon is termed the Leper, for that he was a leper: and Matthew the Publican, for that he was a Publican. Or else she was called holy for the covenants sake; in regard of the Temple, sacrifices, service of God; and of the elect people of God that were in it. Whence we may infer, how unlawful it is to separate from a Church because it hath some corruptions. Is apostate Jerusalem that hath crucified her Savior, called still the holy City: and must England that departeth in nothing from the faith and doctrine of her Savior, for some scarce discernible Imperfections be rejected as a foedifragous strumpet? But there be wicked persons in it: what then? She may be still a holy City. Recedatur ab iniquitate, non ab iniquis. Let us depart from sin, we cannot run from sinners.

Thus we have considered the Miracles; let us now look into the causes, wherefore they were wrought.

These may be reduced into five. In respect of

- The Sufferer dying.
- The Creatures obeying.
- The Jews persecuting.
- The Women beholding.
- The Disciples forsaking.

1. In regard of Christ; to testify not only his Innocence, but his Majesty. His Innocence, that he was as Pilate's wife acknowledged, a Just man. His Majesty as the Centurion confessed, Seeing the earth quake and the things that were done; Truly this was the Son of God. He seemed a worm, no man: the contempt and derision of the people, forsaken of his confidence: in the midst of all God will not leave him without witnesses; but raiseth up senseless creatures as Preachers of his deity. Est aterni filius, qui illic pendet mortuus. He that hangs there dead on the Cross, is the Son of the eternal God. Rather then the children of God shall want witnesses of their integrity, God will work miracles for their testimony.

2. In regard of the Creatures, to show their Obedience to their Creator: they are not wanting to him, that gave being to them. These demonstrate, it was their Lord that suffered; and that they were ready to execute vengeance on his murderers. The heaven that was dark would have rained fire on them: the earth that quaked, shook them to pieces: the rocks that rent, tumbled on them: and the graves that opened to let out other prisoners, have swallowed them quick. They all waited but his command to perform this revengeful execution. Who shall now dare to persecute Christ in his members? The stones are thy enemies, the earth gapes for thee, hell it self enlargeth her jaws: if the Lord but hiss to them, they are suddenly in an uproar against thee. Go on in your malice ye raging persecutors: you cannot wrong Christ, no not in his very members, but you pull the fists of all creatures in heaven, earth, and hell about your ears: flies from the air, beasts from the earth, poison from sustenance, thunder from the clouds; yea at last also (though now they help you) the very devils from hell against you. All creatures shoot their malignancy at them, that shoot theirs at Christ.

3. In respect of the Jews, his enemies; to shame and confound them. The rocks and graves are moved at his passion, not they. Lapides tremunt homines fremunt. The stones rent, the huge earth quakes with fear; the Jews rage with malice. We see how difficult it is to mollify a hard heart: harder then to remove a mountain, raise the dead, cleave a rock, shake the whole earth. It is a great myracle to convert a wicked man; greater then rending of rocks. Moses rod stroke a Rock thrice and did it: ministers have stroke men's rocky harts three hundredth times, and cannot. The graves sooner open, then the sepulchers of sin and darkness: the vast earth sooner quakes, then men's hearts at God's judgments.

4. In respect of the women that stood by; that their faith might be confirmed. For seeing him on the Cross, at their mercy, whose bowels never knew the softnes of such a nature: exposed to all the tyranny of their hands and tongs: hands that like cruel Surgeons searched every part of his blessed body: tongues that ran nimbly through all the passages of obloquy, till they had overtaken reproach it self, and cast it on him: His body at the full will of the tormenters, and his soul not without intolerable terrors; as they might judge by strange speech that came from him; My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Doth man triumph over him, and doth God forsake him? This might breed in their hearts a suspicion: either that he was a deceiver, or else utterly cut off. To stifle this doubt in the very birth, he shakes the earth, and rends the rocks; that as they knew him dying Hominem v...rum, so they might perceive him doing these miracles not Hominem merum; but the everliving God. These wonders; blow the spark of their faith, almost dying with Christ; and root in their hearts a deep and infallible persuasion of their Savior. Something there is to keep the faith of the elect from quenching, though Satan reign on it showers of discomforts. Though no object greets the eye of flesh but discouragement yet there is a secret Sp...it within, that will never suffer the faith to fail.

5. In regard of the Disciples; to shame and convince them for leaving him, Christ had said before, Luk. 19. Si hitacerent, loquerentur lapides. If these (speaking of his Disciples) should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out. Loe, this saying is here come to pass: the Disciples hold their peace, the stones speak: they forsake Christ, the rocks proclaim him. Such a shame is it for Apostles and ministers of Christ to hold their peace; that if they be silent, the very stones shall preach against them. The walls, windows, pavements of Churches shall cry out against such Pastors, that undertake the office of a sheep-heard, and feed Christ his flock with nothing but air. And even you that come to hear; if no remorse can be put into your hearts at the relation of our Saviors death: if you have no feeling of his sorrows, no apprehension of these mysteries, no repentance of your sins, no emendation of your lives; know that the very seats whereon you sit, the walls of your Temples, the very stones you tread on, shall bear witness against you.

Now the Lord Jesus, that at his death brake the Rocks; by the virtue of his death break our rocky hearts; that being mollified in this life they may be glorified in the life to come. Grant this O Father for thy mercies sake, O Christ for thy merits sake, O holy Spirit for thy names sake: To whom three persons, one only wise and eternal God, be glory and praise forever.

Amen.

THE FOOLE And His Sport.

PROV. 14. 9.

Fools make a mock at sin.

THE Proverbs of Solomon are so many select aphorisms, or divinely moral Says, without any mutual dependence one upon another. Therefore to study a coherence, were to force a marriage between unwilling parties. The words read spend themselves on a description of two things: the Fool, and his Sport. The Fool is the wicked man: his Sport, pastime, or babble is Sin. Mocking is the medium or connection, that brings together the Fool and Sin: thus he makes himself merry; they meet in mocking. The fool makes a mock at sin.

Fools.

The fool is the wicked: an ignorant heart is always a sinful heart: and a man without knowledge, is a man without grace. So Tamar to Ammon under his ravishing hands; Do not this folly. If thou doest it, Thou shalt be as one of the Fools in Israel. Ignorance cannot excusare a toto; willful not a tanto. Christ shall come in flaming fire rendering vengeance to them that know not God. The state of these Fools is fearful. Like hooded Hawkes, they are easily carried by the Infernal Falconer to hell. Their lights are out, how shall their house scape robbing? These Fools have a knowledge, but it is to do evil. They have also a knowledge of good, but not scientiam approbationis: they know, but they refuse it. So God justly quites them: for though he know them ad scientiam, he will not know them ad approbationem. But gives them a Discedite, nescio vos. I know you not: depart from me ye workers of iniquity.

A man may be a Fool two ways; by knowing too

- Little
- Much.

1. By knowing too little; when he knoweth not those things, whereof he cannot be ignorant, and do well. I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. But every man saith he knows Christ. If men knew Christ his love in dying for them, they would love him above all things: how do they know him, that love their money above him? Nemo vere nouit Christum, qui non vere amat Christum. No man knows Christ truly, that loves him not sincerely. If men knew Christ, that he should be Judge of quick and dead, durst they live so lewdly. Non nouit Christum, qui non odit peccatum. He never knew Christ, that doth not hate iniquity. Some attribute too much to themselves, as if they would have a share with Christ in their own salvation. Nesciunt & Christum & seipsos: they are ignorant of both Christ and themselves. Others lay too much on Christ, all the burden of their sins, which they can with all possible voracitie swallow down, and blasphemy vomit up again upon him. But they know not Christ, who thus seek to divide Aquam a sanguine, his blood from his water; and they shall fail of justification in heaven, that refuse sanctification upon earth.

2. By knowing too much; when a man presumes to know more then he ought. His knowledge is apt to be pursy and gross, and must be kept low. Mind not high things, saith the Apostle. Festus slandered Paul, that much learning had made him mad. Indeed it might have done, if Paul had been as proud of his learning, as Festus was of his honor. This is the knowledge that puffeth up. It troubles the brain, like undigested meat in the stomach: or like the scum that seeths into the broth. To avoid this folly, Paul forbids us to be wise in our own conceits. Whereof I find woe readings; Be not wise in yourselves; and Be not wise to yourselves.

Not in yourselves; conjure not your wit into the circle of your own secret profit. We account the simple Fools, God accounts the crafty Fools. He that thinks himself wise, is a Fool ipso facto. It was a modest speech that fell from the Philosopher. Si quando fatuo delectari volo, non est mihi longe quaerendus; me video. Therefore Christ pronounced his Woes to the Pharisees; his doctrines to the people. The first entry to wisdom, is Scire quod nescias: to know thy ignorance. Sobriety is the measure for knowledge, as the Gomer was for Manna, Curiositie is the rennet, that turns our milk into curds.

Not to yourselves; Let thy fountains be dispersed abroad, saith the wisest king: communicate thy knowledge. Math. 5. Christians must be like lights, that wast themselves for the good of those in God's house. Scire tuum nihil est, nisi te scire hoc sciat alter. He that will be wise only to himself, takes the ready way to turn fool. Non licet habere priuatam, ne priuemur eâ. The closer we keep our knowledge, the likelier we are to loose it. Standing water soon puddles; the gifts of the mind, if they be not employed, will be impaired. Every wicked man is a fool by comparing their properties.

1. It is a Fools property Futuranon prospicere, to have no foresight of future things. So he may have from hand to mouth, he sings care-away. So the grasshopper sings in harvest when the Ant labors: and begs at Christmas when the Ant sings. The wicked takes as little care what shall become of his soul, as the natural fool what shall become of his body. Modo Potiar, saith the Epicure: Let me have pleasure now; It is better to a living dog then to a dead Lyon. They do not in fair weather repair their house against storms: nor in time of peace provide spiritual armor against the day of war. They watch not; therefore the day of the Lord shall come upon them as a thief in the night, and spoil them of all their pleasures. The main business of their soul is not thought of; nor dream they of an Audit, till they be called by death away to their reckoning.

2. It is a Fools property to affect things hurtful to himself. Ludit cum spinis; he loves to be playing with thorns. Neither yet Quod nocuit, docu...t; hath that which hurt him, taught him caution, but he more desperately desires his own mischief. The wicked do strongly appropriate to themselves this quality. Cum illis ludunt, quae illis laedunt: they love to dally with their own vexation, who else would do at on the world; and hover like wasps about the galley-pot, till for one lick of the honey they be drownd in it! What is your ambition, O ye world-affecters; saith August: but to be affected of the world? what do you seek, but per multa pericula peruenire ad plura? per plurima ad pessima? but through many dangers to find more; through easier to find the worst of all? Like that dotting Venetian, for one kiss of that painted harlot, to live her perpetual slave? The world was therefore called the Fools Paradise; there he thinks to find heaven, and there he sells it to the devil. Noxia quaerunt improbi; they hast as a bird to the snare: the devil doth but hold vanity as a sharp weapon against them, and they run full breast upon it. They need no enemies; let them alone, and they will kill themselves. So the envious pines away his own marrow: the adulterer poisons his own blood: the prodigal lauisheth his own estate: the drunkard drownds his own vital spirits. Wicked men make war upon themselves with the engines of death.

3. It is a Fools property to prefer trifles and toys, before matters of worth and weight. The fool will not give his bable for the kings Exchequer. The wicked prefers bodies of dust and ashes to their souls of eternal substance: this sin corrupted and time-spent world, to the perfect and permanent joys of heaven: short pleasures to everlasting happiness: a puff of fame before a solid weight of glory. What folly can be more pitiable: then to forsake corn for acorns: a state of immortality for an apple, as Adam did: a birthright with all the privileges for a mess of pottage, belly-cheare, as Esau did: a kingdom on earth, yea in heaven too, for asses as Saul did: all portion in Christ for bacon, as the Gergesites did: a royalty in heaven, for a poor Farm on earth as the bidden guest did. This is the worldlings folly. Villa, bones, vxor &c.

Mundus, cura, caro caelum clausere vocalis. To esteem grace and glory less then Farms, oxen, wives: manna then onions, mecrie then vanity: God then Idols. They may be fitly paraleld with the Prodigal. He forsook 1. His Fathers house for a strange country: these the Church, God's house, for the world; a place wherein they should be strangers: and wherein I am sure, they shall not be long dwellers. 2. His Fathers inheritance for a bag of money: so these will not tarry for their heritage in heaven, but take the bags which Mammon thrusts into their hands on the present. Who but a Fool will refuse the assured reversion of some great Lordship, though expectant on the expiration of three lives: for a ready sum of money not enough to buy the least stick on the ground? This is... the worldlings folly, rather to take a piece of... p-coin in hand, then to trust God for the inualuable mass of glory. 3. He forsakes his loving friends for harlots, creatures of spoil and rapine: so these the company of Saints. For the Sons of Belial: those that sing praises, for those that roar blasphemies. 4. Lastly the bread in his Fathers house, for husks of beans: so these leave Christ the true bread of life, for the draffe which the swine of this world puddle in. Here is their Folly to fasten on transient delights, and to neglect the pleasures at the right hand of God for evermore.

4. It is a Fools property, to run on his course with precipitation. Yet can he not out-run the wicked: whose driving is like Jehu's the son of Nimshi: he driveth as if he were mad. As if he had received that commission, salute no man by the way. The wise man seeth the plague and hideth himself, but the fool runneth on and is punished. He goes, he runs, he flies; as if God that rides upon the wings of the wind should not overtake him. He may pass a pace, for he is benefited by the way: which is smooth, without rubs: and down a hill, for hell is a bottom. Facilis descensus Auerni. Hast might be good if the way were good, and good speed added to it. But this is Cursus celerrimus praeteruam. He needs not run so fast: for numquamsero ad id venitur, a quo nunquam receditur: the fool may come soon enough, to that place, from whence he must never return. Thus you see the correspondency of the spiritual to the natural Fool, in their qualities. Truly the wicked man is a Fool: so Solomon expounds the one by the other. Eccl. 7. Be not overmuch wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldst thou die before thy time?

Fools. Observe, this is plurally and indefinitely spoken. The number is not small; Stultorum plena sunt omnia. Christ's flock is little; but Satan's kingdom is of large bounds. Plurima possima; vile things are ever most plentiful. Wisdom flies like the Rail, alone: but fools, like Partridges, by whole coueys. There is but one Truth, but innumerable errors. Which should teach us

1. Not to follow a multitude in evil. In civil actions it is good to do as the most; in religious, to do as the best. It shall be but poor comfort in hell, Socios habuisse doloris. Thou pleadest to the Judge; I have done as others: the Judge answers; And thou shalt speed as others.

2. To bless God, that we are none of the many: as much for our Grace, whereby we differ from the fools of the world; as for our Reason, whereby we differ from the fools of nature.

Now as these fools are many, so of many kinds. There is the Sad fool, and the Glad fool: the Haughtie fool, and the Naughtie fool.

1. The Sad or melancholy fool is the Envious; that repines at his brothers good. An enemy to all God's favors, if they fall besides himself. A man of the worst diet; for he consumes himself; and delights in pining, in repining. He is ready to quarrel with God, because his neighbors flock scape the rotte. He cannot endure to be happy, if with company. Therefore envy is called by Prosper; De bono alterius tabescentis animi cruciatus: the vexation of a languishing mind, arising from another's well-fare. Tantos Inuidus habet iustae poenae tortores, quantos inuidiosus habuit laudatores. So many, as the envied hath praisers, hath the envious tormentors.

2. The Glad fool, I might say the Mad fool, is the dissolute; who rather than he will want sport, makes goodness it self his Minstrel. His mirth is to fully every virtue with some slander; & with a ...est to laugh it out of fashion. His usual discourse is filled up with boasting Parentheses of his old sins: and though he cannot make himself merry with their act, he will with their report; as if he roued at this mark, to make himself worse then he is. If repentance do but proffer him her service, he kicks her out of doors: his mind is perpetually drunk; and his body lightly dies, like Anacreon, with a grape in his throat. He is stung of that serpent, whereof he dies laughing.

3. The Haughtie fool is the ambitious: who is ever climbing high Towers, and never forecasteth how to come down. Up he will, though he fall down headlong. He is weary of peace in the Country, and therefore comes to seek trouble at Court: where he haunts great men, as his great spirit haunts him. When he receives many disappointments, he flatters himself still with success. His own fancy persuades him, as men do fools, to shoot away another arrow, thereby to find the first: so he looseth both. And lastly, because his pride will admit of no other punisher, he becomes his own torment: and having at first lost his honesty, he will now also loose his wits; so truly becomes a fool.

4. The Naughtie fool is the Covetous. This is the Folly that Solomon saw under the Sun. You heard before of a merry fool; but the very fool of all is the avarice: for he will loose his friends, starve his body, damn his soul, and have no pleasure for it. So saith the Prophet. He shall leave his riches in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a Fool. He wastes himself, to keep his goods from wast: he eats the worst meat, and keeps his stomach ever chiding. He longs like a fool, for everything he sees; and at last may habere quod voluit, non quod vult: have what he desired, never what he desires. He fears not the day of judgment; except for preuēting the date of some great obl...gatio. You would think it were petty treason to call a rich man fool; but he doth so that dares justify it. Luk. 12. Thou fool, this night shall they fetch away thy soul from thee: then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?

We have anatomized the Fool, let us behold his Sport. He maketh a mock at sin.

The Fathers call this Infimum gradum, and Limen inferni; the lowest degree of sin, and the very threshold of hell. It is Sedes pestilentiae, the Scorners chair. Psal. 1. wherein the ungodly sits, blaspheming God and all goodness. Nemo fit repent pessimus. No man becomes worst at first. This is no sudden evil. Men are borne sinful, they make themselves profane. Through many degrees they climb to that height of impiety. This is an extreme progress, and almost the journeys end of wickedness: Improbo laetari affectu. Thus Abner calls fighting a sport. Let the young men arise, and play before us. They glory in their shame, saith the Apostle; as if a condemned malefactor should boast of his halter. Fools make a mock at sin.

We shall the more clearly see, and more strongly detest this senseless iniquity, if we consider the object of the Fools Sport; Sin.

1. Sin, which is so contrary to goodness: and though to man's corrupt nature pleasing, yet even abhorred of those sparks and cinders, which the rust of sin hath not quite eaten out of our nature, as the Creation left it. The lewdest man, that loves wickedness as heartily, as the devil loves him; yet hath some obiurgations of his own heart: and because he will not condemn his sin, his heart shall condemn him. The most reprobate wretch doth commit some contraconscient iniquities: and hath the contradiction of his own soul, by the remanents of reason left in it. If a lewd man had the choice to be one of those two Emperors, Nero or Constantine; who would not rather be a Constantine then a Nero? The most violent oppressor that is cruel to others, yet had rather that others should be kind to him then cruel. The bloodiest murderer desires that others should use him gently, rather then strike, kill, or butcher him. Nature it self prefers light to darkness: and the mouth of a Sorceresse is driven to confess, Video meliora, probóque. The most rigid usurer, if he should come before a severe Judge, would be glad of mercy; though himself will show none to his poor bond-men.

In been viuendo requiem natura fateri.

Cogitur. It is then first a contra-natural thing to make a mock at sin.

2. Sin, which sensibly brings on present judgments Thou art made whole: sin no more, least a worse thing come unto thee. Sin procured the former, and that was grievous; 38. years bed-rid: Sin is able to draw on a greater punishment; Least a worse thing come unto thee. If I should turn this holy book from one end to the other; if I should search all Fathers, yea all writers whether divine or human; I should evince this conclusion; that Sin hales on Judgment. Pedisequis sceleris supplicium. If there be no fear of impiety, there is no hope of impunity. Our Machiauellian Politicians have a position: that Summa scelera nicipiuntur cum periculo, peraguntur cum praemio: the greatest wickedness is begun with danger, gone through with reward. Let the Philosophers stop their mouths: Scelus aliquis tutum, nemo securum tulit. Some guilty men have been safe, none ever secure.

This every eye must see. Let adultery plead that nature is encourager and directer of it; and that she is unjust to give him an affection, and to bar him the action: yet we see it plagued. To teach us that the sin is of a greater latitude, then some imagine it: unclean, fedifragous, perjured. Broad impudence, contemplative Bauderie, an eye full of whores are things but jested at: the committers at last find them no jest, when God pours vengeance on the body, and wrath on the naked conscience.

Let drunkenness stagger in the robes of good fellowship; and shrowdit self under the wings of merriment; yet we see it have the punishment, even in this life. It corrupts the blood, drowns the spirits, beggars the purse, and enricheth the carcase with surfeits: a present judgment waits upon it. He that is a thief to others, is at last a thief also to himself; and steals away his own life. God doth not ever forbear sin to the last day; nor shall the bloody Ruffian still escape but his own blood shall answer some in present, and his soul the rest eternally. Let the Seminary pretend a warrant from the Pope to betray and murder Princes; and build his damnation on their tetricall grounds; which have Parum rationis, minus honestatis, Religions nihil; Little Reason, less Honesty, no Religion. Yet we see, God reveals their malicious stratagems, and buries them in their own pit. Piercies head now stands Sentinel, where he was once a Pioner.

If a whole land flow with wickedness, it escapes not a deluge of vengeance. For England; have not her bowels groaned under the heavy pestilence? If the plague be so common in our mouths, how should it not be common in our streets? With that plague wherewith we curse others, the just God curseth us. We shall find in that Emperiall state of Rome, that till Constantine's time almost every Emperor died by treason or massacre: after the receiving of the Gospel, none except that reuolter Julian: Let not sin then be made a sport or jest, which God will not forbear to punish even in this life.

3. But if it bring not present Judgment, it is the more fearful. The less punishment wickedness receives here, the more is behind. God strikes those here, whom he means to spare hereafter; and corrects that son which he purposeth to save. But he scarce meddles with them at all, whom he intends to beat once for all. The Almond tree is forborne them, who are bequeathed to the boiling Potte. There is no rod to scourge such in present; so they go with whole sides to hell. The purse and the flesh scapes, but the soul pays for it. This is Misericordia puniens, a grievous mercy: when men are spared for a while, that they may be spilled forever. This made that good Saint cry; Lord here afflict, cut, burnt, torture me; Vt in aeternum parcas; that forever thou wilt save me. No sorrow troubles the wicked, no disturbance embitters their pleasures: But remember saith Abraham to the merry-liu'ed rich man, Thou wert delighted, but thou art tormented. Tarditas supplicij grauitate pensatur: and he will strike with iron hands, that came to strike with leaden feet. Tuli, nunquid semper feram? no; their hell-fire shall be so much the hotter, as God hath been cool and tardy in the execution of his vengeance. This is a Judgment for Sin that comes invisible to the world, insensible to him on whom it lights. To be given over to a reprobate mind; to a hard and impenitent heart. If anything be vengeance, this is it. I have read of plagues, famine, death come tempered with love and mercy: this never but in anger. Many taken with this spiritual lethargy sing in Taverns, that should howl with dragons: and sleep out Sabbaths and Sermons, whose awaked souls would rend their hearts with anguish. Fools then only make a mock at sin.

4. Sin that shall at last be laid heavy on the conscience: the lighter the burden was at first; it shall be at last the more ponderous. The wicked conscience may for a while lie a sleep: but Tranquilitas ista tempestas est: this calm is the greatest storm. The mortallest enemies are not evermore in pitched fields, one against the other: the guilty may have a seeming truce, true peace they cannot have. A man's debt is not paid by 〈◇〉 bring: even while thou sleepest, thy arrearages run on. If thy conscience be quiet without good cause, remember that Cedat iniustissima pax iustissimo bello: a just war is better then unjust peace. The conscience is like a fire under a pile of green wood, long ere it burn; but once kindled it flames beyond quenching. It is not pacifiable whiles sin is within to vex it: the hand will not cease throbbing so long as the thorn is within the flesh. In vain he striveth to feast away cares, sleep out thoughts, drink down sorrows; that hath his tormentor within him. When one violently offers to stop a source of blood at the nostril, it finds a way down the throat not without hazard of suff...cation. The stricken deer runs into the thicket, and there breaks off the arrow: but the head sticks still within him, and rankles to death. Flitting and shifting ground gives way to further anguish. The unappeased conscience will not leave him, till it hath shown him hell; nor then neither. Let then this Fool know, that his now feared conscience shall be quickened: his death-bed shall smart for this. And his amazed heart shall rue his old willful adjournings of repentance. How many have there raved on the thought of their old sins; which in the days of their hot lust they would not think sins. Let not then the Fool make a mock at sin.

5. Sin, which hath another direful effect, of greater latitude; and comprehensie of all the rest. Diuinam incitat iram. It provokes God to anger. The wrath of a king is as messengers of death; what is the wrath of the king of kings. For our God is a consuming fire. If the fire of his anger be once thoroughly incensed, all the rivers in the South are not able to quench it: What pillar of the earth, or foundation of heaven can stand, when he will wake them? He that in his wrath can open the jaws of earth to swallow thee, sluice out floods from the sea to drown thee, rain down fire from heaven to consume thee; Sodom, the old world, Corah, drunk of these wrathful vials. Or to go no further, he can set at iarre the elements within thee, by whose peace thy spirits are held together: drown thee with a dropsy bred in thy own flesh: burn thee with a pestilence begotten in thy own blood: or bury thee in the earthly grave of thy own melancholy. Oh it is a fearful thing, to fall into the hands of the living God. It is then wretchedly done, thou Fool, to jest at sin that angers God, who is able to anger all the vaines of thy heart for it.

6. Sin, which was punished even in heaven. Angeli detruduntur propter peccatum. 2. Pet. 2. God spared not the Angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell. It could bring down Angels from heaven to hell; how much more men from earth to hell! If it could corrupt such glorious natures, what power hath it against dust and ashes! Art thou better or dearer than the Angels were? Dost thou flowt at that which condemned them? Go thy ways, make thyself merry with thy sins; mock at that which threw down Angels. Vnles God give thee repentance, and another mind, thou shalt speed as the lost Angels did. For God may as easily cast thee from earth as he did them from heaven.

7. Sin, which God so loathed, that he could not save his own elect because of it, but by killing his own Son. It is such a disease, that nothing but the blood of the Son of God could cure it. He cured us by taking the receipts himself which we should have taken. He is first cast into a Sweat; such a sweat as never man but he felt; when the bubbles were drops of blood. Would not sweating serve? he comes to incision, they pierce his hands, his feet, his sides; and set life it self abroach. He must take a potion too, as bitter as their malice could make it; compounded of vinegar & gall. And lastly he must take a stranger and stronger medicine than all the rest; he must die for our sins. Behold his harmles hands pierced for the sins, our harmful hands had committed. His undefiled feet, that never stood in the ways of evil, nailed for the errors of our paths. He is spitted on, to purge away our uncleanness: clad in scornful Robes to cover our wickedness: whipped, that we might escape everlasting scourges. He would thirst, that our souls might be satisfied: the Eternal would die, that we might not die eternally. He is content to bear all his Fathers wrath; that no pang of that burden might be imposed upon us: and seem as forsaken a while, that we by him might be received forever. Behold his side become bloody, his heart dry, his face pale, his arms stiff; after that the stream of blood had ran down to his wounded feet. O think if ever man felt sorrow like him; or if he felt any sorrow but for Sin.

Now is that Sin to be laughed at, that cost so much torment? Did the pressure of it lie so heavy on the Son of God, and doth a son of man make light of it? Did it wring from him sweat, and blood, and tears, and inconceivable groans of an afflicted spirit; and dost thou O fool, jest at it? Alas that which put our infinite Redeemer God and man, so hard to it; must needs swallow up and confound thee, poor sinful wretch. It pressed him so far that he cried out to the amazement of earth and heaven; My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me? Shall he cry for them, and shall we laugh at them? Thou mockest at thy oppressions, oaths, sacrileges, lusts, frauds; for these he groaned. Thou scornest his Gospel preached, he wept for thy scorn. Thou knowest not, O fool, the price of a Sin: thou must do, if thy Savior did not for thee. If he suffered not this for thee, thou must suffer it for thyself, Passio aeterna erit in te, si passio Aeterni non erat pro te. An eternal passion shall be upon thee, if the Eternals passion were not for thee. Look on thy Savior, and make not a mock at Sin.

8 Lastly Sin shall be punished with Death: you know what death is the wages of it: not only the first, but the second death. Inexpressible are those torments: when a reprobate would give all the pleasures that e...er he enjoyed, for one drop of water to cool his tongue. Where there shall be vnquencheable fire to burn, not to give light; save a glimmering; ad ag grauationem, vt videant vnde doleant: non ad consul...ionem, ne videant vnde gandeant: to show them the torments of others, and others the torments of themselves.

But I cease urging this terror; and had rather win you by the love of God, then by his wrath and Justice. Neither need I a stronger argument to dissuade you from sin, then by his passion that died for us being enemies. For if the agony, anguish, and heart-blood of Jesus Christ shed for our sins, will not move us to repentance, we are in a desperate case. Now therefore I fitly leave Paul's adjuration, so sweetly tempered in your bosoms: commending that to your consciences, and your consciences to God. I beseech y... brethren, by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto GOD.

THE FIRE OF CONTENTION OR The trouble that follows the Gospel.

Lvk. 12. 49.

I come to send fire on the earth; and what will I, if it be already kindled?

BEfore I run upon Division, (and yet Division is the subject of my Text; and for methods sake I must use some division in my discourse) I must let you understand, what this Fire is that is sent; and how innocent our Savior is that sendeth it.

1. There may be Dessention betwixt the good and the good: and hereof is the Devil the author. It is the Enemy that sows those Tares. This is one of the abominations that the Lord abhorreth: A false witness that speaketh lies, and him that soweth discord among brethren. God is never the immediate cause of that, which he abominates. If any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom, neither the Churches of God. To clear Christ and his Gospel from causing this; the tenor of all Scriptures admonisheth us with Saint Peter. Be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous.

Unity is the badge of Christianity: we are all the members of one body. The eye cannot say to the hands, I have no need of you, &c. We are all stones of one building, therefore must not iarre one with another, least we ruin the whole house. Christ saith, that a kingdom divided cannot stand. The Soldiers would not divide the vnseamed coat of Christ: far be it from us to rent his body. There are three grounds of love; virtue, pleasure, profit. Virtue all consent to be the surest and best. That then which is grounded on the best virtue, is the best unity: and this is Faith. Love issuing from Faith is a bond able to tie God to man, man to God: and therefore man to man. This knot is tied so fast, that the powers of hell cannot undo it. All other vanities, but the Communion of Saints may be broken.

There is no peace so indissoluble, as the peace of faith. So contrarily there is no Contention so violent and raging, as that is enflamed by erroneous Religion. Cyprian writes of Nouatus, that he would not so much as allow his own Father bread whiles he lived, nor vouchsafe him burial being dead: that he spurned his own wife, and killed his own child within her body. O the unmatched cruelty, that some men's religion, (if I may so call it) hath embloudied them to! What treasons, conspiracies, massacres, did or durst ever show their black faces in the light of the Sun, like to those of Papists; all vizarded under pretended Religion? The Pope hath a Canon, called Nos sanctorum Predecessorum, &c. We observing the statutes of our holy Predecessors, do absolve those that are bound by fidelity and oath to persons excommunicated from their oaths; and do forbid them to keep their fealty towards them, Quousque ipsi ad satisfactionem veniant: till they come to yield satisfaction. What malicious stratagems against suspended Princes, have not been kindled from this fire? Against what nation hath not this Canon shot the fury? Yea the more to embolden subjects to such pernicious attempts, the Pope makes them believe that the very Apostles take their partes. For so it is manifest by the form of Gregory's sentence; that he commandeth S. Peter and S. Paul, as if they were his bailiffs errant, to execute the writtes of his pontifical and privative authority.

Malice in humor is like fire in straw, quickly up, and quickly out: but taking hold of conscience, like fire in steel; Quod tarde acquisiuit, diù retinet; what was long in getting, will be longer in keeping. Religion is the greatest enemy to religion; the false to the true. Fausos etiam vespae faciunt: wasps also make combs, though instead of honey we find gun-powder. Of dissension among professors of the Gospel, Christ is not author: he never gave fire to burn his Church. Yet he hath his hand in it There must be heresies among you that they which are approved may be made manifest. He draws good out of evil; and makes a good Shall of the evil must: so raising a virtue from a necessity. From contentions begot by Satan, he so sweetly works, that the profession of his but darkly glowing before, shall be made to shine brightly. In Q. Mary's time, when persecution wrung the Church, Martyrdom gave a manifest approbation of many (unknown) Saints. The virtues of diverse had been less noted, if this fiery trial had not put them to it. God's glory and power are more perspicuous, in strengthening his against their enemies, then if they had none. Christ came not to send this fire; yet he wisely tempers it to our good.

2. There may be Dissention betwixt the wicked and the wicked; and hereof also is Satan author. He sets his own together by the ears, like cockes of the game to make him sport. Hereupon he raised these great Heathen wars, that in them millions of souls might go down to people his lower kingdom. Hereupon he draws ruffian into the field against ruffian: and then laughs at their vainly spilled blood. All the contentions, quarrels, whereby one evil neighbor vexeth another; all slanders, scoldings, reproaches, calumnies, are his own damned fires. Thus sometimes the ungodly massacre the ungodly, oppressors devour oppressors. I will set the Egyptians against the Egyptians: and they shall fight everyone against his brother, and everyone against his neighbor; City against city, and kingdom against kingdom. The Pharisees against the Sadducees: the Turk against the Pope: the Transgressour against the transgressor. Covetousness shall be against prodigality: baseness against pride: temerity against dastardie. The drunkard spils the drunkard, the thief robs the thief: Proditorisproditor: the Traytour shall be betrayed, and the cosener shall be cheated. They shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm; Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh. It is impossible, that any true peace should be amongst the wicked, whiles they want the soilder that should glew them together, faith. Agreement in evil is not peace, but conspiracy. Wicked men's combining themselves may be a faction, no unity, no amity: for they have but metum & noxam conscientia prosoedere: terror and guilt of conscience for their league. But some may question; doth not Satan in setting reprobates against reprobates, overthrow his own kingdom? I answer.

1. The Devil is political, and will not divide his subjects, when by their holding together he may divide the Church. So the Pharisees though they hate the Sadducees; and the Herodians that despise them both: shall all join forces shake and take hands against Christ. Papists are enemies to Truth, Schismatics to Peace; yet both the Church: which suffers, as her Savior did, in medio ini...orum, in the midst of adversaries; not only to her now, but at other times also to themselves. Herod and P...te, were of enemies reconciled friends, that their united rancours might meet against Jesus. The Jews and the Lystrians, so diuersely religion'd, the devil can make agree, to stone Paul. Thus Satan holds them under colors and pay, whiles they can do him any service: but when they can no longer vex others, he falls to vexing of them: and enrageth their thirst to one another's blood, when they have done quaffing the blood of the Saints.

2. The Devil in raising seditions and tumults among his own, intends not the destruction, but erection of his kingdom. Perhaps his forces on earth are weakened, but his Territories in hell are replenished: wherein he takes himself to reign most surely. For Satan, during a man's life, knows not certainly, whether he belongs to God, or to him. Predestination is too mystical and secret a book for his condemned eyes to look into; and repentance hath often stepped in betwixt old age and death: frustrating the hopes of Satan. Therefore he hastens a wicked man, with what speed he can, to hell; for till he came within those smoakie gates, Satan is not sure of him; he may start out of his clutches. For this cause he precipitates witches with much suddenness to their ends: whom, one would think, he should let live, that they might do more mischief. No; such is his malicious policy, he would be sure of some: and rather take one soul in present, then hazard all on the vain hope of more gains.

3. There is a Dissention between the wicked and godly; nor yet is Christ the proper and immediate cause of this. For Rom. 12. If it be possible, as much as liethin you, live peaceably with all men.

4. There is an Emnitie betwixt Grace and Wickedness; a continual combat between sanctity and sin: and this is the Fire that Christ came to send. He is to some a living stone, whereupon they are built to life: to others a stone of offense, whereat they stumble to death. Now because the local seat of holiness on earth is in the hearts of the Saints; of wickedness in the Devil and his Iustruments: therefore it follows, that the evil will persecute the good, and the good may not partake of the vices of the bad. What agreement hath the temple of God with Idols! Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. Out of the Egypt of this world hath God called his Sons. We are forbidden all fellowship with the unfruitful works of of darkness; not altogether with the workers: For then we must needs go out of the world. It is commanded Ierem 15. that the precious be separated from the vile: yet so that they may return to the good, though the good may not turn to them. It is good for the good to sunder themselves from the incorrigible wicked; as being the first stair of the ladder that leaves the earth; and sets the first step of our journey to heaven. God in his eternal decree separated the elect from the Reprobate: in his Vocation, he sequesters them from nature and sin. When he executes particular judgment, he takes Israel from the Tabernacles of Corah: when he will give the general, he will sever the Sheep from the Goats.

Christ then, who is the Prince of Peace, causeth not quarrels between man and man, as they are creatures; but betwixt goodness and evil, as they are contrary natures. That the sons of Belial hate the sons of God, Christ is not the cause, but the occasion. For when the Gospel separates us from the world, the world then bends his malicious forces against us. So that Peace in sin. Ver. 51. Christ came not to send; but Peace of conscience. Phil. 4. The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, &c. Which because the wicked will not embrace, therefore Five in one house shall be divided: the Father against the Son, and the S...nne against the Father, &c. The Gospel doth not otherwise work this division, then the Law is said to make sin; because it made sin known. Or the Sun is said to cause moths, because it causeth their appearance. Let Paul continue a Pharisee, and the Pharisees will love him: convert he to a Christian, and they will hate him. Whiles we live after the world, we have peace with the world, none with God: when we are turned to Christ, we have peace with God, none with the world.

This ground laid, we will consider, for the better exposition of the words five circumstances.

The

- Fire.
- Fewell.
- Kindlers.
- Smoke.
- Bellows.

Wherein we shall find Christ's willing, and the fires kindling. Who wills goodness to his chosen, which he is sure, will enrage the wicked to their persecution. The cause thus given, the fire is left to be kindled by others. For though Non sine Deo patimur, yet non a Deo petimur. The instruments of our affliction will be found ungodly; who, though they plead, we have done the will of the Lord, shall go to hell for their labor.

The Fire.

Is discord, debate, contention, anger, and hatred against the godly. Every man is composed of four elemental humors, whereof one is Choler, resembled to Fire. In whom this Choler is most adust, & puissant, they are usually most hot, furious, fiery. But I speak here of nature; for grace can alter nature, and purge this corruption. Regeneration is the best physic to purge Choler. Many medicines hath Philosophy prescribed against this spiritual disease; but in vain. The Philosophers servant could scoff his Master: He inueighes against anger, writes volumes against it, & ipse mihi irascitur; and yet he is angry with me. Only grace can (more then give rules) give power to master this madness. Fire and Contention have some resemblances.

1. Debate is like Fire; for as that of all elements, so this of all passions, is most violent. The earth is huge, yet we walk quietly on it; it suffers our ploughes to rend up the entrails of it; to teach us patience. The air is copious, yet admits our respiration. The waters boisterous, yet sail we upon them, against them. But Fire, especially getting the upper hand, is unmercifully raging: it left nothing behind, to witness the former happiness of Sodom. The worlds last destruction, shall be by Fire: and God useth that, of all elements, to express the very torments of hell; adding Brimstone to it. To this is the anger of God likened; Our God is even a consuming fire. So doth debate exceed all passions: floods of correction, can quench the turbulent an fiery spirit which is set on fire of hell. Only one extreme may drive out another; as we hold our burnt finger to the fire, by a new heat to extract the former. So the fire of grace only must draw out the Fire of debate; or send it to the everlasting fire to purge it.

2. Contention is like Fire; for both burn so long, as there is any exustible matter to contend against. Only herein it transcends fire: for fire begets not matter, but consumes it; debate begets matter, but not consumes it. For the wicked study cause of contention, as Benhadad against Ahab 1. king 20. So when the Pope could find no just exception against Fredericke the Emperor; he quarrel'd with him for holding the wrong stirrup; when the great Prelate should mount his palfrey; and thought he might easily mistake, for Emperors are not used to hold stirrops, yet he was persecuted almost to excommunication, for it. It is woeful dwelling amongst debatefull men, whose souls hate peace: that are 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, without natural affection; which Paul makes a reprobates mark: striking all that stand in their way; and not ceasing to burn, till all matter cease to feed them. Solomon discribes such with a fiery comparison. First. ver. 17. he calls him a Busi-body he passeth by, and meddleth with strife belonging not to him: he thrusts himself into impertinent business; and is like one that taketh a dog by the ears; which he can neither hold, nor well let go. ver. 18. He notes his political villainy. As a mad-man, who casteth firebrands, arrows, and death; and saith, Am I not insport? he scattereth abroad mortal mischiefs under the color of jest. And ver. 20. lest the fire should go out, he administers fuel himself. Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out. ver. 21. when he hath kindled this flame, he strives to spread and disperse it; and is as coals to burning coals, and wood to the fire. The words of a tale-bearer are wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly. They penetrate and cruciate the most tender and sensible places.

3. As a little spark grows to a great flame so a small debate often proves a great rent. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth. The wind at first a small vapor, yet gets such strength in going, that it over-turns trees and towers. A back-biting tongue hath pulled down strong cities, and overthrown the houses of great men. War is compared to fire. Numb. 21. A fire is gone out of Heshbon, and a flame from the city of Sihon: it hath consumed Ar of Moab, and the Lord's of the high places of Arnon. But contention runs like wild-fire; so furious a pace, that nothing but blood can extinguish it.

4. As fire is proverbially said to be an ill master, but a good servant: so Anger where it is a Lord of rule is a Lord of mis-rule; but where it is subdued to reason, or rather sanctified to grace, it is a good servant. That anger is holy, that is zealous for the glory of God.

This is Division; a raging fire: and able, whether it take hold of civility or religion, of Burse or Church, to overthrow the common good of both.

For civility, the breaking of relations, is the ruin of substantives. We stand not of our selves, but upon reference. Want of justice in magistrates, of instruction in governors, of obedience in subjects, of charity in neighbors, destroys the common wealth. Some gather thus much from the fifth Commandment, by good consequence. Honor thy Father and thy Mother, that thy days may be long in the Land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. For if Princes rule well and subjects obey well; if masters command right, and servants do right: if Parents instruct children in the fear of God, and children obey parents in that fear; this happy harmony shall preserve the land. If this relation, and reciprocal duty be neglected, all runs to ruin: and the blessing of long life shall be with-drawn. For it is not fit they should have long life, that rebel against those from whom they had, and by whom they hold their life.

Begin with the least ascendently. The overthrow of a house is Division. When the husband and wife draw not evenly in the yoke; when the one brings fire & the other hath no water to quench it: when the children are refractarie, the servants wasters; there must needs be a decay of this family. Whereof consists a City, but of many households? If the particulars be ruined, what will become of the general? When the members are gone where is the Body? If the Magistrates are unjust, the people disobedient, if one profession quarrel with another, and deny mutualitie: the head refusing to give guidance, the eyes their sight, the feet to walk, the hands to work; the body of that City dissolves. The dissolution of cities and towns, must needs ruin the Kingdom. When the members fell out with the stomach, that it devoured all, and took no pains; hereon the eye would not see for it, nor the hand work for it, nor the foot walk for it, &c. so the stomach wanting meat, the eyes, hands, feet, and all members faint and languish. Tributes & subsidies are but the dues and duties of the members to the Prince; who, as the stomach, returns all to their welfare and benefit.

Dissention in religion doth no less hurt, doth more. It divides a house. Here. Ver. 52. Five in one house shall be divided: two against three, and three against two. And Math. 10. A man's foes shall be they of his own household. It divides a city. How many cities have been destroyed by their own mutinous distractions, whom foreign inuasions could not subdue! It divides a Kingdom; whereof France hath long been a bleeding witness: neither hath England been insensible.

Ac velut in magno populo, cùm saepe coorta est

Seditio, saeuit{que} animis ignobile vulgus:

Iám{que} faces & saxa volant, furor arma ministrat.

It overthrows propinquitie: the mutual succor of lending, borrowing, giving, relieving is lost. Yea it overturns Nature it self, setting children at variance against their own parents. There are three very near; Superior, equal, inferior; Parent, wife, children: yet we must separate from them, rather than from Jesus Christ. Yea it is enough to extirpate all; Regem, legem, gr...gem; Prince, law and people. No wonder then, if the busy devil seeks so studiously to kindle this fire! So Eusebius observes; The subtle Serpent, when persecutions gave the Church breathing space, began to vex her with her own divisions.

The Fewell.

Whereon this fire works, is the good Profession of the godly. So the rulers against Daniel in causa Dei sui: because of his Religion. Psal. 59. The mighty are gathered against me, not for my transgression, nor for my sin, O Lord. They persecuted us, not because they find evil in us, but because they cannot find evil in us. They run and prepare themselves against me, without my fault. Without fault? it is fault enough in their judgment, because we serve the Lord. They speak evil of us, because we run not with them to the same excess of riot. If we will not communicate with their vicious customs, we shall participate of their raging cruelties. Against Israel, yea because it is Israel, do they consult: Come let us cut off them from being a Nation: that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance. For this cause was the Babylonian fire kindled against those three servants of God; and the same cause moved mystical Babylon to burn our Martyrs in England. If they would have turned to Idols and Images, the fire had been put out. We would not, could not yield to their superstitions, therefore the Fire burned.

But that which is the occasion of evil, cannot be perfectly good. Indeed that simply and of it self causeth evil, is evil it self. But that may be good, which indirectly and by consequence, in man's corrupt nature occasioneth it. The Gospel, and integrity of professing it, is not the efficient but accidental cause; or rather properly no cause, but an occasion of this feud. The bright Sun, shining on mud and filth, is said to cause stench: yet is not the Sun the true cause, but the former putrefaction of the subject reflected on, when a corrupt vapor comes into the fiery region, it is soon enflamed. Their rancorous filth had line quiet, as mucke in a dunghill, had not the Sun of the Gospel, shone on it, and stirred it, now howsoever the Gospel is not the direct cause of this, yet surely the occasion. For Athens is quiet enough till Paul comes: and till Christ is borne, Jerusalem is husht in peace. Many parishes stick not to say, we had rest and security enough before: but now since preaching came in, and the Pulpets have been warmed, there is nothing but disturbance and unquietness. How else could this Text be true, that Christ came to send fire on the earth? The deluge of sin was universal, and the waters of iniquity stood untroubled, and all was a Mare mortuum: but when Christ puts fire to this water, no marvel if they wrestle. The devil stirs not till God rouse him; as the wild boar sleeps till he be hunted. Let darkness cover men's impieties, and their slumber is unmolested: produce them to the light and they cannot endure it. The ulcerous side full of dead flesh, feels not till you touch the quick. But let Elias tell Ahab of his Idolatries, John the Baptist Herod of his lusts; and then, Thou art mine enemy. The ungodly may pretend other causes, but this is the true one. The Pope refused to confirm an Archbishop elect, when no insufficiency could be found against him, only because of his age: not considering, that himself being older did manage a greater place. But if the Archbishop was able to travel to Rome and back again to England, sure he was able to have sate in the Chair of Canturbury. Age was the exception; but the truth was the Archbishops honesty; that he carried not with him to Rome a golden bottle to quench the Popes thirsty soul: as many others did, who returned home with as much wit as they went forth, but not with so much money. Such was the Popes pretense against Reimundus the good Earl of Toulouse, that he was an Heretic: but when his just purgation and justifying of himself would not pacify his unmerciful Holiness; nor get peaceable possession of his own lands: it was evident to all eyes, that the Popes desire was not so much to have the Earl part from his Heresy, as from his Heritage. Persecutors plead castigation of errors, but they mean subersion of truth.

But great peace is prophesied to the Gospel. Esa. 11. The Wolf shall dwell with the Lamb; and the Leopard lie quietly by the kid &c. And Mica.... 4. They shall beat their swords, into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war anymore. I answer, God will either restrain the fury of these savage beasts, and turn Esau's threats into mildness when he meets Jacob. He that sits in heaven laughs at their combinings. Or many Tyrants shall be converted to the faith of Christ; subjecting their Crowns, and laying down their Scepters at the feet of the Lamb. Or it may intend that outward universal peace which was through all the world, when Christ was borne in the days of Augustus. But most specially that peace of conscience, and Communion which shall be among the Saints; who shall lay aside all querelous differences, and be made one by the blood of Jesus.

But when the Gospel came to us in Queen Elizabeth's days of so blessed memory, we also had much peace. We had with Gloria in excelsis Deo, sung also Pax in terris. The iron gates of war were shut up; and the long tossed Ark of our Church had an Olive branch of flourishing peace bestowed on it. The fury of an Adversary was not known; but Righteousness and peace kissed each other. Yet was not this peace without great Fires.

1. There was a great fire of Anabaptism; a gross, perverse, and sottish sect, that had washed off their Font-water, as unclean: and thought it not enough to run out of Babylon, unless they ran also out of themselves, out of their wits. This combustion could not be well quenched; only we were happily rid of it by the shifting ground. For when the flames were suppressed in England, they burst out beyond Sea.

2. There was a great fire of Brownism; an Ignis fatuus, fastening on abundance of crude and squalid matter, could not easily be extinguished. It was blown up with the Bellows of pride; and because it might not have the own swinge, it fell to direct railing. They say the Church of England may be their mother, but is none of God's wife: why do they not call her plain Whore? For such is a mother that hath children; and no husband. But these the whiles are brave Sons, who care not to prove themselves bastards, that their mother may be noted for an Harlot. But the shame be their own, Integrity hers; who hath not defiled her bed, though they have shamed her womb. But whiles they call her Saint John's Beast in the Revelation; let them beware, lest they prove themselves Saint Paul's Beast; to the Phil. chap. 3. ver. 2. Dogs. Surely God never will leave peaceable spirits in England, to go dwell with railers at Amsterdam.

3. There was a raging fire of the Papists; who to mainetaine their spiritual fire of superstition, made use of material fire to set a whole land in combustion. How unspeakable were their treasons against that gracious Princess: which yet if we gather up into one volume, we shall find their last equalling all; which should have been a fire, a fire indeed; such a one as hell it self could only belch out. But bless we our God, that with sweet showers of mercy rained it out.

These fires have been kindled in a Land of peace, though many tears have been showered upon them, & earnest prayers sent up to heaven, for their quenching. Yea, and will be still, so long as that crown-shorn generation can transport their burning quilts into England; and their great Antichrist, the Successor not of Peter, but of Romulus, sits on that fiery Chair. So long as he is suffered to tyranize over nations, to depose Kings, and dispose Kingdoms: who prays Peter and Paul, (as if they never had taught subjects to obey their Sovereigns) to eradicat and cast out an Emperor from his royalty. Whereupon he conferred the Empire upon Rodolphus, with this blasphemous verse.

Petra dedit Petro, Petrus diadem... Rodolpho.

All Kingdoms were to Peter given by Christ:

And Peter may dispose them as he list.

But as Cardinal Benno affirms, that when this Hildebrand would needs solmly excommunicate the Em perour, his Chair burst in pieces, being but newly made of suff•...cient timber: so if it were thoroughly broken to fitters never (like Jericho) to be rebuildd then (and not till then) Princes may reign in peace. From all this we may observe.

1. That this fire was kindled in Christ's time, and hath burned ever since. For if this rage stroke at the head, it will not favor the members. If the saucy Devil durst meddle and encounter with the Captain, he will not fear to set upon a mean soldier. Remember, saith Christ the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater then the Lord: if they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you. We cannot expect that immunity, which our Savior never found. In the securest and most quiet state of the Church we have found this: that sedition hath trode on the heels of peace; and persecution been borne into the world, with the feet forward for hast.

2. That the godly must maintain this fire; for there must be in them no deficiency of fuel. They must hold fast integrity, though this be the matter whereupon this fire works. No peace must be had with them, that have no peace with God: I deny not peace in civil affairs, but in conforming our manners to theirs. For righteousness must not yield to iniquity: Christ must be borne, and being borne must reign, though Herod rage, and the Devil foam, and all Jerusalem be troubled at it. Dagon must yield to the Ark, not the Ark to Dagon: the ten Tribes come to Judah, not Judah go to them: Ishbosheth to David, not David to Ishbosheth.

The Gospel must be preached though hell break out into opposition: and we must keep faith & a good conscience, though persecutors print in our sides the marks of the Lord Jesus.

3. That the fruit of the Gospel is so far from allowing carnal peace, that it gives Dissention. It hath ever been the destiny of the Gospel to bring commotion, trouble, and wars; though no doctrine teacheth so much peace. Math. 10. I came not to bring peace, but a sword. Not that the Gospel of it self causeth wars; for it maketh peace between God and man, man and man, man and his inward soul: but it overturneth the tables of the money-changers, spoileth the Bank of userers, will not let Herod keep his Herodias, bars Demetrius of his idolatrous shrines, pulls the cup from the mouth of the drunkard, denounceth confusion to the oppressor, vnuzardeth painted hypocrisy, and discovers the ugly face of fraud to the world; therefore it hath enemies, even to the effusion of blood, and endeuour'd extirpation of all that profess it. So that partly this proceeds from our own corruption; that cannot endure the light, because our deeds are evil; and partly from the malice of Satan, who by the growth of the Gospel looseth his Jurisdiction. For look how much ground Christianity gets, that bloody infernal Turk looseth. So that neither can the Devil so vncontrollably lead men to quiet damnation; neither can the evil heart be so securely evil. For the Gospel informs the understanding, the understanding tells the conscience, and the conscience will not spare to tell men their wickedness. Though God's hand forbears to strike outwardly, the conscience smites inwardly; and the former unjust peace is broken by a new just war. Men shall by this means know hell before they salute, it and discern themselves in that broad way that leads to damnation. Safe they may be, they cannot be secure. Thus the Gospel begets all manner of enemies, foreign, civil, domestical. Forraigne, the Devil who now makes apparent his horns, as if it were high time to bestir himself. He sees, he cannot lead souls to his black kingdom in a twine-thread, as he was wont without reluctancy: he must clap irons upon them, and bind them with his strongest temptations. Civil, the world which erst ticed us on, as a bait doth the fish, not knowing that there is a hook so near the jaws we took it for a kind and familiar friend; but now it is descried and described for a very adversary. Domestical, thy own bosom is disquieted, and thou must muster up all the forces of thy soul, to take the Traytour that lurkes within thee, thy own flesh. This is a near and a dear enemy, yet we must fight against it, and that with a will to subdue it; denying our selves, and forsaking our delighted lusts and pleasures. The godly must be fain to sit, like the Nightingale, with a thorn against their breast. If they scape conflicts abroad, they are sure to have them at home: and if foreign and professed adversaries should give over their inuasions, yet this domestical rebel, lust, must with great trouble be subdued. After which spiritual combat, our comfort is that in the end the victory shall be ours. It shall not have rule over them that fear God, neither shall they be burnt with the flames thereof. Hence we learn five useful lessons.

1. That we have need of Patience: seeing we know that the law of our Profession binds us to a warfare; and it is decreed upon that all that will live godly in Christ, shall suffer persecution. When Fire, which was the God of the Chaldeans, had devoured all the other wooden deity, Canopis set upon him a Caldron full of water, whose bottom was full of holes artificially stopped with wax: which when it felt the heat of that furious Idol, melted and gave way to the water to fall down upon it, and quench it. The water of our patience must only extinguish this Fire: nothing but our tears moderation and sufferance can abate it. But this patience hath no further latitude, then our proper respect: for in the cause of the Lord we must must be jealous and zealous. Meam iniuri...m patienter tuli, iniuriam contra Sponsam Christi ferre non potui. Our own injuries we must bury in forgetfulness, but wrongs to the Truth of God, and Gospel of Jesus Christ, we must strive to oppose and appease. Patience is intolerable, when the honor of God is in dangerous question. Otherwise we must consider, that by troubles God doth try and exercise our patience. Ideo Deus misit in terram bonam separationem, vt mal...m rumperet coniunctionem. Therefore God sent on earth a good separation, that he might dissolve an evil conjunction.

2. That we must not shrink from our profession, though we know it to be the fuel that maintains this fire. Daniel leaves not his God, though he be shown the Lions; nor those three servants their integrity and abomination of the Idol, though the heat of the fire be septupled. Let the Pope spew out his execrations, interdictions, and maledictions (for his holy mouth is full of curses) yet keep we our faith: it is better to have the Pope curse us, then God. His curse is but like Domitians thunder: if you give care to the crackes and noise, it seems a terrible and hideous matter, but if you consider the causes and effects, it is a ridiculous jest. Reuolt not from the Gospel, from thy faith and innocence, and though he curse, the Lord will bless. Balaam could say; Quomodo maledicam ei, cui non maledixit Dominus? How shall I curse him, whom the Lord hath not cursed? Rash and headlong judgment hurts not the person de quo temere iudicatur, against whom it is denounced; but him that so indiscreetly judgeth. Qui conantur per iram aliena coereere, gra uiora committunt. To correct other men's errors in anger, is to commit a greater error then theirs. Let not the thunders of malignant opposers dishearten thy zeal The just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

3. That we think not much of the troublous fires, that are thus sent to wait upon the Gospel. He that gave us that blessed Covenant, meant not that we should stick at these conditions. It is enough to have this Passover though we eat it with sower herbs: to enjoy the Lily, though among thorns. Let the Jews fret and Devils run mad; and many give ground to these persecutions: yet say we with Peter.Master, whether shall we go from thee? thou hast the words of eternal life. He is unworthy of God's favor, that cannot go away contented with it, unless he may also enjoy the favor of the world. It is enough to have the promise of a Crown, albeit we climb to it by the Cross. The ancient Christians used to have Crucem Coronatam pictured, a Cross with a Crown on the top of it. Tolle crucem, si vis et babere coronam. Their Hieroglyphic taught men to attain the Crown; by bearing the Cross. Though the friends and factours of hell compass us round, yet we have heaven within us, would we have it within us, and without us too? that is only the privilege of glory. Cannot Paul endure the thorns and buffets of Satan? Let him quiet his heart with God's encouragement. My grace is sufficient for thee. It is enough to have the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, though we lack the (ill condition'd) peace of the world. Murmure not that the world denies her wanton solace... to tickle thee with vain pleasures: thou hast the joy of the holy Ghost. God is thy portion. Though the lot fall short in earthly means, wealth and worship: yet he is well for a part, that hath God for his portion. Content thyself; this fire must go with the Gospel; and thou art unworthy of the immortal gold of grace, if thou wilt not endure it to be tried in the Fire Your faith is much more precious then gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire: and shall be found at last to praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

4. That we esteem not the worse of our Profession, but the better. It is no small comfort, that God thinks thee worthy to suffer for his Name. This was the Apostles joy (not that they were worthy, but) that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for Christ. He refused not to be our Savior for the shame he was put to: he brooked a purple robe to cover his white innocence; his face, which is worshipped by the Angels in heaven, to be spit on; his soul in the midst of all his unutterable pangs, to be derided and jested at; some wagging their heads, others moving their tongues to blasphemy: and if the manner of death could add to his ignominy, he suffered the most opprobrious: yet saith Paul, for our sakes, he endured the Cross, and despised the shame; this, all this shame, that he might bring salvation to us, and us to salvation. And shall we be ashamed of his profession; that was not ashamed of our protection? If we be, we have read his judgment; He will be ashamed of us before his Father in Heaven. The King doth not cast away his Crown, though it be the occasion of many treasons. Loose not thy hope and hold of a royal Inheritance, because this Title hath many enemies. He was never worthy to wear a wreath of victory, that cowardlike ran out of the bloody field. The unthrifty soul is justly starved, that will not reap and gather his corn, because there be thistles amongst it. He never knew how precious a metal gold is, that will rather throw away his oar, then take pains at the furnace. It is pity that ever the water of Baptism was spilled upon his face, that forsakes the Standard of Christ, because he hath many enemies. Israel had never gotten that promised Canaan, had they been afraid of the sons of Anak. It is honor enough to be a Christian though others that are contemptible do cast contempt upon it. Our Savior hath armed us with a sweet prediction. These things have I spoken unto you, that in me you might have peace: in the world you shall have tribulation; but be of good cheare, I have overcome the world.

5. Seeing the fuel is our integrity; and this they specially strike at; let us more constantly hold together: confirming the Communion of Saints, which they would dissolve. Let us more strongly fortify our unity, because they so fiercely assault it: and cling faithfully to our Head, from whom their sacrilegious hands would pull us, Lord, whether shall we go from thee? thou hast the words of eternal life. Where those words are found, woe be to us if we are not found. Multitudo inimicorum corroborat unitatem a micorum. Let not brethren fight with themselves, whiles they have enough foreign enemies. It is enough that foes strike us; let not us strike our friends. No nor yet part with our friends and Christ's, because some adversaries are scattered among them. What though the miscellane rabble of the profane: as the Brownists term them, be admitted among us: shall the lewdness of these disannul God's Covenant with his? Yes say they: this is their mercy: God's is more. He still held Israel for his, when not many in Israel held him for theirs. The desert was a witness of their mutinous rebellion against God and his Minister; yet the pillar of protection by day and night left them not. Moses was so far from rejecting them, that he would not endure that God should reject them, though for his own advantage. In all companies there will be evil intruders: Satan among the Angels, Saul among the Prophets, Judas among the Apostles, Nicholas among the Deacons, Demas among Professors. Yet though Thiatira retains a Iezebell, the good are commanded but to hold their own.

But we reserve the ceremonies of a superstitious Church: but we reserve no superstition in those ceremonies. We have both abridged their number, and altered their nature. As it was a pains not amiss undertaken of late, to reduce the feast of Christ's nativity, as near to the right Quando and period of time, as art and industry could devise: by taking up the loose minutes which in tract of time, and multiplication of degrees, had drawn out a wider distance by certain days, then was congruent to the first Calendar. So hath our Church so near as she could abridged the rank superfluities, and excrescent corruptions, which the Traditionall ceremonies, and ceremonial Traditions of Rome had brought in, (and thereby removed her, from that nearness to her Savior, which she formerly enjoyed) striving to reduce her self concerning Ceremonies; for their number to paucity, for their nature to purity, for their use to significancie.

Separate we not then from the Church, because the Church cannot separate from all imperfection. But keep the Apostles rule. Follow the truth in love: not only the Truth, but the truth in love. Diuerse follow the truth, but not truly.

- 1. Some there are that embrace the truth, but not all the truth: those are Heretics.
- 2. Some embrace the truth, but not in unity; and those are Separatists.
- 3. Others embrace the truth in unity and verity, but not in heart: and those are hypocrites.

Therefore the Apostle so often urgeth it: Be ye all of one mind: have the same affection. As children of one house have most usually one and the same education: so all God's children must be like affected to God, to Christ, to the Church, and one to another. To God in obedience and piety, to Christ in faith and sincerity, to the Church in peace and unity, to their own sins in hatred and enmity, to one another in love and charity. Employing the graces of God bestowed on us, to the edification and consolation of others: spending our selves, like torches, to give others light. A Christian, though he be the freest man of all, yet he is servant to all: to Christ for himself, to others for Christ: serve one another in love. Let this affection of unity be increased by considering three inconveniences of dissension.

1. A great advantage is given to the enemy. They boast the goodness of others errors, whilst we agree not in our truth. They take opportunity to shuffle in their counterfeit coin, whiles we consent not in our gold; I say not so much for the weight or pureness of substance, as for the fashion. Is it not a shame for the children of God to dissent, when the children of hell are at peace? It is a military principle; Tempt not an enemy, by giving him the advantage. What is this, but to harden their malignant opposition to assault us, when they spy in the City a Breach? Qui vnionem rumpit, vnitatem ruit: He that dissolves the union of parts, overthrows the unity of the whole.

2. Sin by this means steals up: nor is there an advantage given only to our adversaries of Rome, but to our enemies of hell. Wickedness is a crafty thief; which spying a town on fire, and all hands laboring to quench it, takes his advantage of booties; and what others redeem, he steals. Whiles we are busy about this Fire, the devils factors come abroad, like Nicholas Clarkes, and steal away souls. Whiles so many disagree about Christ's descending into •...ell, Satan gathers many thither.

3 Our souls by this means often become 〈◇〉, & gather corruption for want of scowring them by repentance. Whiles we are careful and curious about mint and cummin, Justice and Piety go away neglected. We at once grow hot in contention, and cold in devotion. The fire of the Altar goes out whiles this fire of sedition is fewelled. It was the comparison of a worthy Divine. The means whereby the shepherds take the Pelican, is to lay fire near her nest: which she, in a foolish pity to save her young ones, offers to flap out with her wings, and so is burned her self. So many in a fond compassion to quench this fire, burn their own wings, rather than help others. If our ashes could quench it, we should not grudge them: but since it increaseth with part-takings, let us either quench it with our tears, or by our prayers move God to put it out. Howsoever neglect we not the estate of our own souls; nor suffer our hearts over-grown with the rust of corruption, or moss of security. So thou mayest be like the gold-finer that is all day purifying of metals, till himself be reezed, smooted, and soiled all over. Take heed, thou mayest be so long about the fire, till thou be made black with the smoke.

We have brought together the Fire, and the Fewell; now we must look for Kindlers.

The Kindler.

Of this fire is principally Satan: it is he that brings the fuel of good men's sanctity, and the fire of evil men's iniquity together; and so begets a great flame. This he doth perform either by his Instruments, or by himself. He is the great Bustuary himself, and hath other deputed inflamers under him.

Sometimes immediately by himself. Reu. 12. That great red Dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, and seven Crowns on his heads: stands before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child so soon as it was borne. When he perceived that the Great Light (Christ) was come into the world, by throwing down his oracles of darkness, he begins to bustle and howsoever he speeds, he will fight two or three bouts with him, in a monomachie or duel, person to person. He durst not trust this battle to an instrument, or fight by Attorney: this fire he will kindle himself. As proud as he is, rather than he will hazard the escaping of a soul from his black kingdom, he will in his own proper person take the pains, to hamper him with his strongest temptations.

Sometimes by his instruments, which are many thousands: for if we compare numbers: he hath more helpers on earth to kindle this fire, then Christ hath servants to put it out. Therefore he is called the God of thisworld: where sub nomine mundi are meant mundani, worldlings. Reu. 12. He is said to deceive the whole world. He labors to deceive all that are in the world, but he doth deceive all that are of the world. It was he that stirred up covetousness in the Sabaeans, and covetousness stirred up their hearts against Job. He incenseth Haman, and Haman Ahashueroch against the Jews. He provoked Judas, & almost all Judah against Jesus. He kindleth malice in their hearts that kindle these damnable fires: & shall burn in unquenchable fire for his labor. It is he that provoketh the Magistrate to tyranny, the people to disobedience & treachery, the learned to heresy, the simple to security, all to rebellion and impiety. Men little think, whose instruments they are, & whose business they go about, when they put their finger in this fire. It is the devil, that puts slander in their tongues, malice in their hearts, & mischeefe in their hands: whereby they labor either seducere or abducere, to corrupt men's souls, or to cut their throats. For Satan's whole intent is to draw men a cultu Dei debito, ad cultu... suimet indebitum; from worshiping the God of light, to worship him that is an Angel of darkness. Oh that men would consider what eternal fire is prepared for them, by whom this mystical fire is kindled!

Now Satan kindleth two sorts of fires; General, or special. And either of these is double. The general are extended either to error, or terror.

1. He kindles the fire of open war. He is the great general of that army. Psal. 2. that do band themselves against the Lord's anointed. The Dragon and his angels fight against Michael and his Angels: There is no fighting against the Saints, but under his colors. He was the captain in that Parisiā massacre; the Pilot to that invincible nauie: 88. He is the great master of the inquisition: the grand Cair of all confederacles abroad; the Machiavelli of all conspiracies at home. There was no treason, but was first hammer'd in his forge & took the damned fire from his breath. The Pope hath been his applauded Instrument many years, to kindle these belluine & Belial fires. Innumerable seditions of wars have been sent from the ingenious study of his holy breast to vex Christian Emperors and kings: wherein continually the Pope gave the battle, but the Lord gave the victory: and that where his vicar least intended it Hildebrand (Hell-brand rather) promised Rodolphus, whom he incensed against his liege-Emperor Henricus, assured conquest: but it seems the Bishop had small power in heaven, whatsoever he pretended on earth: for Rodolphus his overthrow gave Henricus direct proof to the contrary. It appears in a certain letter of Benno to the Cardinals, that this Hildebrand preaching in the Pulpit did so promise and prophecy the death of Henricus, that he bid his auditors no more to take him for Pope, but to pluck him from the Altar: if the said Henry did not die, or were not dejected from his kingdom, before the feast of Saint Peter then next ensuing. But the event proved the Pope a liar in the Pulpit; and therefore I hope took from him all impossibilitie of lying in Cathedra, Indeed he labored tooth and na...le, by policy and sorcery, by his friends and fiends to ...ect this: innumerable were the plots of his treason. One among the rest is observable in the letter of the said Cardinal Benno. that he had hired a villain, observing the place in the Church where th... Emperor used to pray, to carry up to the roof of the Church a great number and weight of stones; with purpose to let them fall down on the Emperors head at his devotion, and to knock out his brains▪ but the traitor being busy to remove a stone of an unwonted hugenes to the place, the planke whereon he stood broke; down they come both to the floor of the Church, & the stone (for it seems his own impiety made him the heavier to fall first to his center) fell on him, and quash'd him to pieces.

But what speak I of their particular treasons? a private treachery was but like the French Torney at Chalons. Parvum bellum; a little war: we are to consider their great Fires, which they have kindled in the Christian world: when the Princes would never have broke mutual peace had not the Devil set on the Pope, and the Pope set on them to this eger contention. But lightly as Mars and money made them Popes; so Mars and Symonie held them rich Popes. And now through Satan's help they have brought it about; that as at first no Pope might be chosen without the Emperor, so now no Emperor must be chosen without the Pope. Both the swords are their claim; and they will have them both, or they will lift them up both against the deniers: and where the sword spiritual may not be admitted, they will make way for it with the sword temporal. It is fit, they say, that they should bear temporal rule, that follow nearest to God: but the Pope and his Clergy follow nearest to God: therefore are the fittest men to rule. It is answered, if God be here taken for that God, which S. Paul speaks of, the Belly: they follow nearest indeed. From the other and only true God, they are far enough. If they were not, they would use only spiritual war against the kingdom of Satan; and not meddle with temporal war against the kingdoms of Christian Princes. Plead what they can from the wrested Scriptures, and misunderstood Fathers; yet Frustra Apostolica autoritas pratenditur, vbi Apostolica Scriptura contemnitur: in vain is Apostolic authority pretended, where Apostolic Scripture is despised, or perverted. Non cripit mortalia, qui regna dat coelestia. That God warrants not the taking away of earthly kingdoms, that gives the kingdom of heaven.

2 The second general fire he kindles, is error and Heresy; a burning river of poison: that Cup of abomination, which he reacheth out to the world in the hand of that great Babylonian Whore. To maintain this fire, he calls Councils, enacts laws, teacheth many Parliaments the promulgation of bloody Statutes: and whereas other laws of Princes (tending to the ruin of iniquity) are ever neglected, those that are made against Christians, have been most severely executed. And least the Devil in this should appear like himself, the Prince of death and darkness; he sits thundering in the Popes mouth like an Angel of light, and so directs him; that under In Dei nomine: Amen; he unmercifully condemneth his brother. So that the usurpation of a divine dispensation, must burn the poor members of Christ at the fiery stakes. Now this fire he kindleth by two malicious courses.

1. By obscuring the light of the Gospel from men's eyes; and hartning their affection to darkness. So that the children of the night have so doted upon Ignorance, that they hate and persecute all the means and messengers of illumination. Shine the Sun never so bright, the Papists will see by nothing but Candlelight. Therefore it may be, they are permitted tapers, torches, and candles, to content their carnal devotion; that they might not spiritually desire the Light of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the image of God. And if ever their caliginous minds spy the least glimmering of zeal, or feel a little turning from their former impieties; the shrine, picture, or Image of some Saint hath the glory of their conversion. A very block shall have the praise, rather than God. But we can hardly believe, they are converted from darkness to light, that fetch their illumination out of a stone. It is recorded, that at Amesbury, when Queen Alinor the wife of King Henry, 3. Lay there; a man that feigned himself to have been long blind, came to her, and told her that he had now his sight restored again at the tomb of King Henry her deceased husband. The mother easily believed it; but her son Ed•...rd the first knowing this man, that he had been ever a dissolute wretch and vile impostor, diswaded her from giving faith to it: protesting that he knew so well the justice of his Father; that if he were living, he would sooner pull out both the dissemblers eyes, then restore sight to any one of them. So certainly those Saints, to the virtue of whose dead bones these hypocrites attribute the glory of their conversion and enlightening; would (if they were living) rather say these men had no eyes of grace at all, then that any light was given them out of their dead dusts, or painted resemblances. This is Satan's first project, to cast a thick cloud of invincible ignorance, between men's eyes and the clear Sun.

2. By hindering all those that have a commission to preach it. Zach. 3. He shown me Joshua the high Priest standing before the Angel of the Lord; and Satan standing at his right hand to resist •...m. A door is opened, but there are many adversaries: saith •...he Apostle. Will you hear the principal adversary? We would have come unto you (even I Paul) once and again: but Satan hindered us. The good minister hath no adversary in his calling, but he is of the devils raising. And herein he is either a wolf or a fox; effecting this either by open prevention, or secret perversion.

1 Openly he opposeth not only his Principalties infernal, but also Powers terrestrial against it. What preacher ever began to sing with a clear breast, the songs of Zion; for many hundred years under the Popes reach: but instantly, Pope, Cardinals, Friars, Devils cursed him with belles and candles, and were ready to burn him in flames! Saeuit mundus, cum oftenditur immundus. The world is mad, that his dominion and damnation should be spoken against.

2. Secretly he hinders the free preaching of the Gospel, by corrupting their hearts that are deputed to that office. And this he effecteth by infusion of these four hellish ingredients: Heresy against truth: Schism against peace: Popularitie against simplicity; and covetise against Charity.

1. He poisons some hearts with heretical points of doctrine; which being lightly most pleasing to the flesh, are drunk with thirsty attention. Heresy is (thus defined) humanosensu electa, Scripturae sacrae contraria, palam docta, pertinaciter defensa: begot of man's brain, contrary to the holy Scriptures, openly taught, and peremptorily defended. By this, so far as the flesh in man prevails against the Spirit, Satan prevails against the truth. So that if they must needs have any of the pure gold of God's word, it shall be so sophisticated, adulterate, and mingled with the dross of human Traditions, that they shall not be able to perceive or receive it.

2. Those whom he cannot corrupt against truth, he incenseth against peace. Division shall accomplish that mischief, which error failed in. Whom he cannot transport to Rome, he ferries over to Amsterdam. He will either keep men on this side the truth, or send them beyond it. Error on the right hand shall cast away souls, if error on the left cannot. Some run so far from Babylon, that they will not keep near Jerusalem: as men that run so eagerly from a Lyon, that they refuge themselves in the hole of a Serpent. The Schismatic meets with the Romanist, in superstition another way. Thus Quibus nequit tollere veritatem, negat permittere vnitatem: It he cannot deprive us of truth, he will not permit us peace.

3. By persuading men to be temporizers, and to catch at the favors of great men. Thus when a Preacher must measure his Sermon by his Lord's humor, the truth of the Lord of Hosts is smothered. Against oppression he dares not speak, because it is his Lord's fault: not against pride because it is his Ladies: not against riot, because it is his young Masters: nor against drunkenness because they favor it whom his Great-one favors. He must not meddle with those ulcers, which he sees to stick on his Patrons conscience. That were the way to loose both present benefit, and future benefice; he dares not do it. Whiles he is their servile chaplain, he must learn Turkey-work; to make thrum'd cushions of flattery for their elbows. It seems, it was not God's business that such a one made himself Minister for; but his own or worse. He hath three Masters: he serves his Lord, he serves himself, he serves the Devil; which of these will pay him the best wages? Thus if Satan can neither take away the truth, nor peace, yet he labors against simplicity: that for fear of men, and hope of men's, they forbear to speak against wickedness. What his kingdom looseth one way, it recovers another.

4. By infecting their hearts with covetousness, and extending their desires to an insatiable wealth. With this pill he poisoned Demas; and Judas before him, and thousands after him. The Chair of Rome is filled with this pestilence. England hath found it, though many Princes will not find it. When the revenues of the Crown amounted not to half the Popes yearly taxes. But we are well eased of that unsupportable burden: Edward the 3. begun it, for he first made the Premunire against the Pope: and our succeeding Christian Princes have quite thrown him out of the saddle. God did not make his law so long, but man might easily remember it; comprising it all in ten Commandments. But the Pope hath curtailed it, & made it far shorter; abridging the ten commandments into two words; Da pecuniam Give money. And for this the whole law shall be dispensed with. Experience hath still proved, that money was the Apostolical arguments of Rome. An Emperor paid for his absolution 120000. ounces of gold: a dear reckoning for those wares, that cost the Pope nothing.

In the reign of Hen. 3. The Pope required the tenths of all the moueables in England, Ireland, & Wales: and because he feared, that such moneys could not be speedily enough collected, he sent over many userers into the land, which were then called Caursini: who would lend money to those of the Clergy that wanted, but on so unreasonable extortion, that the debtors were still beggared. So that what by his violent exaction, & subtle circumvention by his own userers (for all they had was the Popes money) he desired only the tenth part, but he got away also the other 9. And indeed the Pope had reason to maintain usury, for usury maintained the Pope. Neither is this infection bounded up with that Bishop, but dissipated among all his Clergy. Not so much as the very Mendicant Friars, that profess willful poverty, but have a willful desire to be rich. They have more holiness in their hands, then in their hearts: their hands touch no money, their hearts covet it. But the great Belphegor sometimes gives them a purge. Wherupon said W. Swinderby; If the Pope may take from the Friars to make them keep Saint Frances rule; why may not the Emperor take from the Pope, to make him keep Christ's rule? But whosoever gets, the poor Laity looseth all. There was a book called Poenitentiarius Asini, The Asses Confessor; wherein is mentioned this Fable. The wolf, the fox, and the asse come to shrift together, to do penance. The wolf confesseth himself to the fox, who easily absolveth him. The fox doth the like to the wolf, and receiveth the like favor. After this the asse comes to confession, and his fault was, that being hungry he had taken out one straw from the sheaf of a Pilgrim to Rome; whereof he was heartily repentant. But this would not serve, the law was executed severely upon him, he was slain and devoured. By the wolf is meant the Pope: by the fox his Cardinals, Jesuits, Priests: these quickly absolve one another, how heinous ever their offenses were. But when the poor Ass, that's the Laity, comes to shrift, though his offense be not the weight and worth of a straw; yet on his back must the law be severely executed; and the holy Father the wolf makes a great matter of it.

Immensum scelus est, iniuria quam peregrin•...,

Fecesti, stramen surripiendo sibi.

O the insatiable gulf of that Sea! God grant, that none of that infection ever come over amongst the ministers of the Gospel. There is nothing more absurd, then that those which teach others to seek the kingdom of heaven, and to despise the world; should be found to embrace the world with the neglect of heaven.

These are the general fires this malicious Incendiary kindles. There are also too particular and special, which he enflameth in private men's hearts: whereby he prepossesseth them with a prejudicial dis•...mation of the Gospel, for causes either direct, or oblique. Directly for it self, or obliquely and by consequence for private ends.

1. First he begets in a man's mind a dislike of the word for it self. This man esteems preaching but folly: he sees no good it doth, to have one prattling an hour or two in a Pulpit. He is a parishioner to two parishes: to the Congregation he lives with, Quoad corpus; to the Synagogue of Satan, Quoad animam. 1. Cor. 1. The preaching of the Cross is to them that perish, foolishness: but unto us which are saved it is the power of God. It is horrible when man, dust and ashes, mere folly; shall censure the Wisdom of God. Let them have their wills, be it in their account folly; yet it pleaseth God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. And without this they must live in error, and die in terror: hell fire will make them change their opinions.

2. Others are wrought to hate it only for second and sinister respects. The Masters of that Damsel Act. 16. Possessed with a spirit of divination, seeing the hope of their gains gone, brought Paul and Silas to scourging; and never left them, till they saw them in prison. When Demetrius perceived the ruin (not so much of the Ephesian Diana, as) of his own Diana, gain and commodity in making of silver shrines; he sets all Ephesus in a tumult. The loss of profit or pleasure by the Gospel, is ground enough of malice and madness against it. Cannot a tyrant be bloody, cannot an oppressor depopulate, an usurer make benefit of his money, a swearer brave with blasphemies, a drunkard keep his tavern-session but the Pulpets must ring of it? Down shall that Gospel come, if they can subject it, that will not let them run to hell untroubled. Non turbant Evangelium, •...um ab Evangelio non turbentur: let them alone, and they will let you alone. But if you fight against their sins with the sword of the Spirit, they will have you by the ears, and salute you with the sword of death. You see the fires that the Devil Kindleth. It is objected.

1. Satan knows that he can do nothing but by the permission of God. Ans. Therefore not knowing God's secret will, who are elect, who reprobate, he labors to destroy all. And if he perceive, that God more especially loves any, have at them to choose. If he can but bruise their heels, O he thinks he hath wrought a great spite to God.

2. He knows that though with his tail he can draw stars from heaven, discover the hypocrisy of great Professors; yet he cannot wipe the name of one soul out of the book of life, which the Lamb hath written there. Answ. It is the Devils nature to sin against his own knowledge. Contra scientiam peccabit, qui contra conscientiam peccavit.

3. He knows, he shall receive the greater damnation, and the more aggravated torments. And the Devil that deceived them, was cast into the lake of fire & brimstone, where the beast & the false prophet are, & shall be tormented day & night, forever & ever. Ans. He sins always with purposed malice of heart, proudly against God, and blasphemously against the holy Ghost: though he receive the smart himself.

We perceive now the Fire, the Fewell, and the Kindler; let us look to The Smoke.

There goes lightly a Smoke before this Fire. Reu. 9. He opened the bottomless pit, and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace, and the Sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit. And there came out of the smoke, Locusts upon the earth, When we see smoke we conclude their is fire. Christ will not quench the smoking flax; for the smoke without shows a spark of faith within. When Abraham saw the smoke of the country going up as the smoke of a furnace. He knew that the fire was begun in Sodom. This smoke is the sign of persecution ensuing; and it is either Public or Private Public is twofold.

1. The threatening of Tyrants; this smoke came out of the mouth of Saul. Act. 9. And Saul yet breathing out threatenings. Such were the Romish vaunts of the Spanish ships: but God quenched that fire in water; and it was but a smoke. He that could forbid the fire to burn, can also forbid the smoke to become a  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  . Only the massacre at Paris was a fire without a smoke unless it be smoke enough (as indeed it is) for Papists to live among Protestants.

2. Security is a public Smoke: when men cry Peace, peace; this is the smoke of war. The careless lives of the old world and Sodom, were portentuous smoakes of their enkindled destruction. Our secure and deadhearted conversations are arguments of the like to us. God both avert that, and convert us. We feast reuel, dance, sin, and sing like swannes the prognostickes of our own funerals. We are not circumspect to look up on those, which watch us with the keen eyes of malice our sleep... gives them hope & our selves danger. Neglect of defense hartens on a very coward enemy. Our comfort only is; He that keepeth Israel doth not slüber nor sleep, The private Smoke, particularly laid to a Christian, is a gentler & more soft tētation. But if this Smoke prevail not, Satan coms with a fiery trial. If he cannot pervert lo seph with his tempting mistres, a kind smoke: he will try what a Jail can do. If the devil can draw thee to his purpose with a twine thread, what needs he a Cable rope! If Sampson can be bound with green withes, the Philistines need not seek for iron chains. But Satan knows, that some will not, like Adam and Esau be won with trifles: that some will stick to Christ whiles the weather is fair, and there is peace with the Gospel; yet in time of persecution start away. When he comes with tempests and floods, then the house not built on a rock, falls. If our foundation be straw and stubble, we know this fire will consume it: but if gold, it shall rather purge and purify it.

He will not go about, that can pass the next way. If a soft puff can turn thee from Christ, Satan will spare his blustering tempests: if a smoke can do it, the fire shall be forborne. If Io... could have been brought to his bow, with killing his cattle, servants, children; perhaps his body had been favored. So that after gentle temptations look for storms; as thou wouldst after smoke fire. Inure thy heart therefore to vanquish the least, that thou mayst foil the greatest: let the former give thee exercise against these latter; as with wooden Wasters men learn to play at the sharp. Be thy confidence in him that ever enabled thee; and affie his promise, that will not suffer thee to be tempted above thy strength. Only handle this weapon with more heedful cunning: and when thou perceiuest the dallyings of the Devil, play not with his baits. Corrupt not thy conscience with a little gain, so shalt thou withstand more. Think the easiest temptations a Porcpose before a tempest, smoke before fire, signs and prodigies of a fearful conflict to come.

There remains nothing now to be considered but the Bellows; that help to maintain this fire.

The Bellows

Are double; Passive and Active. Some blow because they cannot, others because they will not avoid it.

1. The Passive Bellows are the godly; for they must have no peace with wickedness; No fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. We must love their persons, and pray for them as Christ for his crucifiers. But if they will not be converted, if they cannot be suppressed, we may desire either their conversion or confusion: as God willes none to perish as a creature, but as a sinful creature; not of his own making, but of their own marring. So we must hate not virum, but vitium; reproving and condemning evil works, both by our lips and lives; though our good conversation be the passive Bellows to blow this fire.

2. The Active are the wicked; who do profoundly hate the good, in regard of both their actions and their persons. To this their own forwardness is helped by the devils instigation. If thou blow the spark it shall burn: if thou spitte upon it, it shall be quenched: and both these come out of thy mouth.

But all men love good naturally. No, not all: for some have not only extinguished the flames of religion, but even the very sparks of nature in their hearts.

But some wicked men have loved the godly: True, but not for their actions, not for their persons, not of their own natures. But 1. either because God snafles the horses and mules, and curbs the malicious rage of Tyrants. Or 2. converts them to the faith and obedience of his truth; as he took Saul from his raging cruelty, and made him ready to die for him, whose servants he would have killed: so turning a Wolf into a Lamb. Or 3. else they love the good for some benefit by them: and therein they love not them, so much as themselves in them. So Ahasuerus loved Hester for her beauty; Nebuchadnezzar..., Daniel for his wisdom:  $\langle \phi \rangle$  , Joseph because his house prospered by him: and for this cause did the former Pharaoh affect him.

But otherwise with blood-red eyes, and faces sparkling fire they behold us; as Haman did Mordecai. They plot like Machiauels, rail like Rabshace's, and conspire like Absalom's. These are the Devils Bellows here, to blow quarrels among men: and shall be his bellows in hell to blow the fire of their eternal torments. A man that is great both in wealth and wickedness, cannot be without these bellows, Intelligencers, Informers, Tale-bearers. Let these seditious spirits understand their employment; they are the Devils bellows; and when their service is done, they shall be thrown into the fire.

I conclude▪ All this trouble and calamity shall be but upon the earth: so saith our Savior. I came to send fire on the earth: In heaven shall be no distraction to break our peace. We should be too well affected to the world, if it had this privilege and exemption: but in vain we seek it, where it is not to be found. In heaven only we shall find it, in heaven only let us seek it. Here we may have desideriu... pacis, but there only pacem desiderij: here the desires of peace, there peace of our desires. Now then the Peace of God which passeth all understanding, keep your harts and minds through Christ Jesus.

Amen.

THE CHRISTIANS WALK OR The Kings high-way of Charity.

EPHES. Chap. 5. Ver. 2.

Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us; and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor.

OUR blessed Savior is set forth in the Gospel, not only a Sacrifice for sin, but also a direction to virtue. He calleth himself the Truth, and the Way: the truth in regard of his good learning the way in respect of his good life. His Actions are our Instructions, so well as his Passion our Salvation. He taught us both Faciendo, and Patiendo; both in doing, and in dying.

Both sweetly propounded and compounded in this verse. Actively he loved us: Passively he gave himself for us. And so is both an ensample for virtue, and an offering for sin. He gave himself, that his Passion might save us: he loved us, that his Actions might direct us. Walk in love, as Christ, &c.

We may distinguish the whole verse into a sacred

- Canon.
- Crucifix.

The Canon teacheth us What: the Crucifix, How.

In the Canon we shall find

A	Precept	It is partly	Exhortatory
Precedent	Exemplary.

The Precept, Walk in love: the Precedent or Pattern; As Christ loved us. The Precept holy, the Pattern heavenly. Christ bids us do nothing to others, but what himself hath done to us: we cannot find fault with our example.

The Crucifix hath one main stock: He gave himself for us. And two branches, not unlike that crossepeece whereunto his two hands were nailed. 1. An offering or Sacrifice. 2. Of a sweet smelling savor to God.

To begin with the Canon, the method leads us first to the Precept; which shall take up my discourse for this time. Walk in love. Here is

- 1. The Way prescribed.
- 2. Our Course incited.

The way is Love: our Course Walking.

Love is the Way.

And that an excellent way to heaven. Our Apostle ends his 12. Chapter of the 1. Corin. in the description of many spiritual gifts. Apostleship, Prophecying, Teaching, Working of Miracles, healing, speaking with tongues. All excellent gifts; and yet concludes. Ver. 31. ...ut covet earnestly the best gifts: And yet show I unto you a more excellent Way. Now that excellent, more excellent Way was Charity: and he takes a whole succeeding Chapter to demonstrate it: which he spends wholly in the praise and prelation of Love.

I hope, no man, when I call Love a Way to God, will understand it for a justifying way. Faith alone leaning on the merits of Christ, doth bring us into that high Chamber of Presence. Love is not a Cause to justify, but a Way for the justified. There is difference betwixt a Cause and a Way. Faith is Causa iustificandi: Love is Via iustificat.... They that are justified by faith, must walk in Charity. For Faith worketh, and walketh by love. Faith and love are the brain and the heart of the Soul: so knit together in a mutual harmony and correspondence, that without their perfect union the whole Christian man cannot move with power, nor feel with tenderness, nor breath with true life. Love then is a path for holy feet to walk in. It is A Clear Way A Neare Way A Sociable Way.

Clear.

There be no rubs in Love. Nec retia tendit, nec laedere intendit. It neither does nor desires another's harm: it commits no evil; nay, it thinks no evil, saith our Apostle. For passive rubs, it passeth over an offense. It may be moved with violence, cannot be removed from patience. Charity covers a multitude of Sins: saith Peter: All sins, saith Solomon. Couers them partly from the eyes of God, in praying for the offenders: partly from the eyes of the world, in throwing a cloak over our brothers nakedness: especially from it own eyes, by winking at many wrongs offered it. Charity suffereth long: the back of love will bear a load of injuries.

There be two graces in a Christian, that have a contrary quality. The one is most stout & stern: the other most mild and tender. Love is soft and gentle; & therefore compared to the bowels. Viscera Misericordiae. Faith is austere and courageous, carrying Luther's motto on the Shield. Cedo nulli, I yield to no enemy of my faith. So said our precious Jewel; I deny my living, I deny my estimation, I deny my name, I deny myself: but the Faith of Christ, and the Truth of God I cannot deny. But love is mild, longsuffering, merciful, compassionate; and so hath a Clear way to peace.

Neare.

Love is also a very near way to blessedness; and as I may say, a short cut to heaven. All God's law was at first reduced to ten Precepts. The laws of nations, though they make up large volumes, yet are still imperfect: some statutes are added as necessary, others repealed as hurtful. But the law of God, though contained in a few lines, yet contains all perfection of duty to God and man. There is no good thing that is not here commanded: no evil thing, that is not here forbidden. And all this in so short bounds, that those ten precepts are called but ten Words. Yet when Christ came he abridged this Law shorter, and reduced the Ten into Two. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart: and thy neighbor as thyself. S. Paul yet comes after and rounds up all into one. God reduceth all into Ten, Christ those ten into Two; Paul those two into one. Rom. 13. Love is the fulfilling of the law. Which is Compendium, non dispendium legis; saith Tertullian: an abridging, not enervating of the law of God. So Augustine, God in all his law Nihil praecipit nisi Charitatem, nihil culpat nisi cupiditatem: commands nothing but Love, condemns nothing but lust. Yea it is not only the Complement of the Law, but also the Supplement of the Gospel. John. 13. Novum mandatum; A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. All which makes it manifest, that Love is a Neare way to heaven.

Sociable

It is also: for it is never out of company; never out of the best company. The delight thereof is with the Saynts that are in earth, and with the excellent. The two main objects of Envy are Highness, and Nighnesse: the envious man cannot endure another above him, another near him: the envious man loves no neighbor. But contrarily love doth the more heartily honor those that are higher, and embrace those that are nigher: and cannot want society, so long as there is a Communion of Saints. Love is the way you hear; our

Course is Walking.

As clear, near, and sociable a way, as love is, yet few can hit it: for of all ways you shall find this least travel'd. The way of Charity, as once did the Ways of Zion, mourns for want of passengers. This path is so uncouth and vnbeaten, that many cannot tell, whether there be such a way or not. It is in their opinion, but Via serpentis; the way of a serpent on the earth, or of a bird in the air; which cutteth the air with her wings, and leaves no print or tract behind her. But some Chim...ra, or mathematicall imaginary point; an Ens rationale, without true being. Viam dilectionis ignorant; as the Apostle saith, Uiam pacis; The way ofpeace they have not known.

Others know there is such a way, but they will not set their foot into it. Their old way of malice and covetousness is delightful; but this is Ard...a & praerupta via, a hard and a harsh way. Indeed Artis tristissima ianua nostrae: the entrance to this way is somewhat sharp and unpleasant to flesh; for it begins at repentance for former uncharitableness. But once entered into this Kings high-way, it is full of all content and blessedness; Adlaetos ducens per gramina fluctus.

Walk in Love.

He doth not say, talk of it, but walk in it. This precept is for course, not discourse. Love sits at the door of many men's lips, but hath no dwelling in the heart. We may say truly of that charity; it is not at home. A great man had curiously engraven at the gate of his Palace, the image of Bounty, or Hospitalitie. The needy Travelers with joy spying it, approach thither in hopeful expectation of succor. But still silence or an empty Echo answers all their cries and knocks: for hospitality may stand at the gate, but there is none in the house. One among the rest (his hungry trust thus often abused) resolves to pluck down the Image. With these words; If there be neither meat nor drink in the house, what needs there a Sign? Great Portals in the Country, and coloured Post...s in the City, promise the poor Beggar liberal relief; but they are often but Images: Muta &...utila signa; dumb and lame signs: For Charity is not at home: only the shadow without Spe...illectat ina...i gives fair and fruitless hopes.

We are too much wearied with these shadows of Charity. Ambrose makes two parts of Liberalitie; Benevolence and Beneficence. Many will share the former, but spare the latter. They will wish something, but do nothing. They have open mouths, but shut hearts: soft words, but hard bowels. To these S. John gives advise Let us not love in word, nor in tongue, but indeed and in truth. Opposing works to words, verity to vanity. Verball complements are not real implements: and with a little inversion of the Philosophers sense; The belly hath no ears. The starved soul delights not to hear Charity, but to feel it. Oculate mihi sunt manus: the poor's hands have eyes; what they receive, they believe. The gowtie usurer hath a nimble tongue: and though he will not walk in love, he can talk of love: for of all members the tongue Postrema senescit; waxeth old last. Let a distressed passenger come to some of their gates, and he shall have divinity enough, but no humanity; wholesome counsel, but no wholesome food. They can afford them exhortation, but not compassion; charging their ears, but in no wise over-charging their bellies. They have scripture against begging, but no bread against famishing. The bread of the Sanctuary is common with them, not the bread of the Buttery. If the poor can be nourished with the Philosophical supper of good moral sentences, they shall be prodigally feasted: but if the bread of life will not content them, they may be packing. But saith S. James; If you say to the poor, Depart in peace, be warmed, be filled: yetgive them nothing needful to the body, your devotion profits not; neither them, nor yourselves. There is difference betwixt breath and bread, between wording & working, between mere language, & very sustenance.

The Apostle chargeth us to walk, not to talk of love: One step of our feet, is worth ten words of our tongues. The actions of pity do gracefully become the profession of piety. It is wittily observed, that the ouerprecise are so thwartingly cross to the superstitious in all things, that they will scarce do a good work, because an Heretic doth it. That whereas a Papist will rather loose a penie then a Pater-noster: these will rather give a Pater-noster then a penny. They are devout and free in anything, that toucheth not their purses. Thus with a show of spiritual counsel, they neglect corporal comfort: and overthrow that by their cold deeds, which they would seem to build up by their hot words. That the poor might well reply; More of your cost, and less of your counsel would do far better.

Walk in Love.

Do not step over it, nor cross it, nor walk besides it, nor near it, but walk in it. The doctrine in full strength directs us to a constant embracing of Charity. The whole course of our living, must be loving: our beginning, continuance, end, must be in Charity. Two sorts of men are here specially reprocable. Some that seem to

- Begin in Charity, but end not so.
- End in Charity, that never walked so.

Some have had apparent beginnings of love, whose conclusion hath halted off into worldliness, whiles they had little, they communicated some of that little: but the multiplying their riches, hath been the abatement of their mercies. Too many have verified this incongruent and preposterous observation; that the filling their purses with money, hath proved the emptying their hearts of Charity. As one observes of Rome; that the declination of piety, came at one instant with the multiplication of metals. Even that Clergy, that poor cared only to feed the flock; once grown rich studied only to fil the paille. Ammianus Marcellinus saith of them, that Matronarum oblationibus ditabantur, they were enriched by Ladies gifts. And heruepon, together with that unlucky separation of the Greek head from the Latin body, the Empire began to dwindle, the Popedom to flourish. Now plenty is the daughter of prosperity, ambition of plenty, corruption of ambition. So Diuitiae veniunt, Relligioque fugit. Religion brings in wealth, wealth thrusts out Religion.

To this purpose, and to prevent this ready evil, was God's charge by the pen of David. If riches increase, set not your heart upon them. For till they increase, there is less danger. But saith one; Societas quaedam est, etiam nominis, vitijs & diuitijs. Wealth and wickedness are near of kin. Nimia bonorum copia, ingens malorum occasio. Plentie of goods, lightly occasions plenty of evils. Goodness commonly lasts till goods come: but dition of state; alters condition of persons. How many had been good, had they not been great! And as it was said of Tiberius; He would have made a good subject, was a very ill King: so many have died good servants, that would have lived bad masters. God that can best fit a man's estate here, that it may further his salvation hereafter; knows that many a man is gone poor up to heaven, who rich would have tumbled down to hell. We may observe this in Peter; who being gotten into the High Priests Hall, sits him down by the warm fire, and forgets his master. Before Peter followed Christ at the hard heels, through cold & heat, hunger and thirst, trouble and weariness; and promiseth an infallible adherence. But now he sits beaking himself by a warm fire, his poor Master is forgotten. Thus his body grows warm; his zeal, his soul cold. When he was abroad in the cold, he was the hotter Christian; now he is by the fire-side he grows the colder. Oh the warmth of this world, how it makes a man forget Christ! He that wants bread, pities them that be hungry: and they that want fire have compassion of the poor cold and naked: but the warmth and plenty of the world starves those thoughts. When the Princes are at ease in Zion, they never grieve for the affliction of Joseph.

Whilst usury can sit in furs; ambition look down from his lofty turrets: lust imagine heaven in her soft embracings; Epicureanism study dishes and eat them: pride study fashions & wear them: the down-trodden poor, exposed to the bleak air, afflicted, famished, are not thought on. So easily are many that begun in love, put by riches out of the way: and made to forbear Walking in Charity, even by that which should enable their steps. Thus avarice breeds with wealth, as they speak of toads that have been found in the midst of great stones. Though the man of mean estate, whose own want instructs his heart to commiserate others, say thus with himself; If I had more goods, I would do more good: yet experience justifies this point, that many have changed their minds with their means: and the state of their purse hath forsoken the state of their conscience. So they have begun in the charity of the Spirit, and ended in the cares of the Flesh.

Every man hath a better opinion of himself, then to think thus. As Hazael answered Elisha; when the good Prophet told him with tears, that he should burn the cities of Israel with fire, slay the inhabitants, rip up the women with child, and dash the infants against the stones Am I a dog that I should do this horred thing? So you will not think, that being now mean, you relieve the distressed; if you were rich, that you would rob, spoil, defraud, oppress, impoverish them. O you know not the incantations of the world. It is a Pipe, that (beyond the Sirens singing) makes many sober men run mad upon it. I have read of an exquisite musician, of whom it was reported, that he could put men into strange sits and passions, which he would as soon alter again with varying his notes: inclining and compelling the disposition of the hearer to his strains. There was one, that would make trial how he could affect him; daring his best skill to work upon his boast...d composedne... and resolution. The Musician begins to play; and gave such a Lacrymae, so sad and deep a lesson that the man fell into a dumpish melancholy; standing as one forlorn, with his arms wreathed, his hat pulled over his eyes, venting many mournful sighs. Presently the Musician changeth his stroke into mirthfull & lusty tunes: and so by degrees into ligges, crotchets, and wanton airs: then the man also changeth his melancholy into spritely humors, leaping, and dancing, as if he had been transformed into air. This passion lasting but with the note that moved it; the Musician riseth into wild raptures, maskes and Anticks. Whereupon he also riseth to showing, holloing, and such frantic passages, that he grew at last stark mad. Such a charming power, said a worthy Divine, hath the music of money and wealth, and such fittes it works in a man's heart. First it takes him from peaceful settlednes, and from great content in his little, and puts him into dumps; a miserable carking thoughtfullnes, how to scrape together much dirt. Next when he hath it, and begins with delight to suck on the dugges of the world; his purse, his barns, and all his, but his heart, full: he falls to dancing, and singing requiems; Soul take thine •...ase, eat, drink, and be merry. Then shall his table standfull of the best dishes, his cup of the purest wine, his back with the richest robes: and he conceits a kind of immortality in his coffers: he denies himself no satiety, no surquedrie. But at last the worlds bedla•...-music puts him into frenzi•...: he grows rampant. Runnes into oppressions, extortions, depopulations, rapes, whoredoms, murders, massacres: spares not blood or friendship, authority nor v•...ssalage, widow nor orphan, Prince nor subject: Nec 〈ϕ〉, nec Ar•...; neither poor man's co•...tage, nor Churches altar, Yea, if the Common wealth had but one throat, as Nero wish ed of Rome, he would cut it. O the vnpacifiable madness, that this worlds music puts those into, which will dance after his Pipe. For this cause saith our Apostle, continue in the Charity thou hast begun; Walk in loveYe did run well, who did hinder you? Doth wealth keep you from charity? This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you. God never meant when he gave you riches, that you should then begin to be covetous. He did not for this purpose show new mercy to you, that you should take away your old mercies from his.

There are other, that seem to end in Love, who never all their days walked in this heavenly path. They have a will lying by them, wherein they have bequeathed a certain legacy to the poor; something to such a Church, or such an Hospital. But this will is not of force till the testator be dead, so that a man may say, though the will be ready, yet to will is not ready with thē: for God shall not have it, so long as they can keep it. These can wish with Balaam, to die Christians, but they must live Pagans. Having raised thousands out of their sacrilegious and inhospitable Impropriations; they can bestow the dead hope of a little mite on the Church. In memorial whereof the heir must procure an annual recitation; besides the monumental sculpture on the Tomb. Be his life never so black, and more tenebrous then the vaults of lust, yet said a Reverend Divine, he shall find a black prophet, for a black cloak, that with a black mouth, shall commend him for whiter then snow and lilies. Though his unrepented oppressions, vnrestored extortions, and blood-drawing usuries, have sent his soul to the infernal dungeon of Satan; whose parishioner he was all his life; yet money may get him cannonizd a Saint at Rome, and robe him with spotles integrity and innocence. So diverse among them, that lived More Latronū yet in death affected Cultum martyrum. Hence Epitaphs and funeral orations shall commend a man's charity, who never all his days walked two steps in Love.

But it is in vain to write a man's charity in a repaired window; when his tyrannous life is written in the bloody and indelible characters, of many poor men's ruin and overthrow. Nor can the narrow plaster of a little poor benevolence, hide and cover the multitude of gaping wounds, made by extortion and unmercifulness. No, God hates the Sacrifice of robbery; their drink offerings of blood will I not offer; said David. The oblation that is made up of the earnings of the poor, is an abomination, offending God's eye, and provoking his hand. First restore the lands and goods of others, injuriously or vsuriously gotten: let not an unjust penny lie rotting on thy heap and heart: and then build Hospitals repair ruined holy places, produce the fruits of mercy, walk in Love. Otherwise it is not smooth marble, and engraven brass, with a commending epitaph; that can anymore preserve the name from rotten putrefaction, then the carcase. But for all that, the memory shall stink above ground, as the body doth under it. It is a desperate hazard, that a wicked man by a charitable will shall make amends for all: whereas commonly an users Testament is but a Testimony of his lewd life. There is small hope, that they end in charity who would never walk in Love.

There be others that cannot walk in Love, through a double defect, either of eyes, or of feet. Some have

- Feet, but want eyes.
- Eyes, but want feet.

1. Some have the feet of affections, but they lack eyes; and so cannot descry the true and perfect way of Love. Indeed no man can find it without God Shew me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths. For it is he that directs *sinner*s & wandrers to the way. These want him, that should Lead them by the way that they should go. They think that by building up a ladder of good works, their souls shall on meritorious rounds climb up to heaven. They cannot distinguish between Viam regni, and causam regnandi. They suppose, if they relieve Seminaries, fast Lents, keep their numbredorisons, prodigally sacrifice their bloods in treasons for that Romaine Harlot; this is via dilectionis; the way of Love. So the silly servant, bid to open the gates, set his shoulders to them, but with all his might could not stir them whereas another comes with the key, & easily unlocks thē. These men so confidēt in their good works, do but set their shoulders to heaven-gates: alas! without comfort: for it is the key of faith that only opens them. These have nimble feet, forward affections, harts workeable to charity, and would Walk in Love if they had eyes. Therefore Let us prayfor them. Cause them to know the way, O Lord, wherein they should walk.

2. Other have eyes, but they want feet: they understand the way of love, but they have no affection to walk in it. They know that false measures, forsworn valuations, adulterate wares, smooth-checked circumventions, painted cosenages, malicious repinings, denied succors; are all against Love. Noscunt & poscunt. They know them, but they will use them. They know that humbleness, kindness, meekness, patience, remission, compassion, giving and forgiving; actual comforts, are the fruits of Love. Norunt & nolunt, They know it, but they will none of it. These know but walk not in Love. It is fabled, that a great king gave to one of his subjects, of his own mere favor, a goodly city; happily replenished with all treasures and pleasures. He does not only freely give it, but directs him the way; which keeping, he should not miss it. The rejoiced subject soon enters on his journey, and rests not till he comes within sight of the City. Thus near it, he spies a great company of men digging in the ground: to whom approaching, he found them casting up white and red earth in abundance.

Wherewith his amazed eyes growing soon enamored, he desires a participation of their riches. They refuse to join him in their gains, unless he will join himself in their pains. Hereupon he falls to toiling, digging & deluing, til some of the earth falls so he uie upon him, that it lames him; and he is able to go no further. There he dies in the sight of that City, to which he could not go for want of feet: & looseth a certain substantial gift, for an uncertain shadow of vain hope.

You can easily apply it. God of his gracious favor, not for our deserts, gives man his creature a glorious City: even that whose foundations are of Jasper, Saphyre and Emerald &c. He doth more, directs him the way to it; Go on this way, Walk in love. He begins to travel, and comes within the sight of heaven: but by the way he spies worldlings toiling in the earth and scraping together white and red clay; silver and gold, the riches of this world. Hereof desirous, he is not suffered to partake, except he also partake of their covetousness, and corrupt fashions. Now Mammon sets him on work, to dignity out his own damnation: where after a while this gay earth comes tumbling fo fast upon him, that his feet be maimed, his affections to heaven lost: and he dyes short of that glorious City, which the king of heaven purchased with his own blood, and gave him. Think of this, ye worldlings; and seeing you know what it is to be charitable, put your feet in this way; Walk in Love.

There be yet others, whose whole course is every step out of the way to God; who is Love; and they must walk in Love, that come unto him.

1. There is a path of Lust: they err damnably, that call this the way of Love. They turn a spiritual grace into a carnal vice: and whereas Charity and Chastity are of nearer alliance then sound; these debauched tongues call uncleanness Love. Adultery is a cursed way, though a much coursed way for a whore is the high-way to the Devil.

2. There is a path of malice, and they that travel it, are bound for the Enemy. Their evil eye is vexed at God's goodness: and their hands of desolation would undo his mercies. Other men's health is their sickness, others weal their woe. The Jesuits and their bloody Proselyts are pilgrims in this way. We know by experience the scope of their walks. Their malice was strong, as Sauire in saxa; but they would turn Jerusalem in aceruum Lapidum; into a heap of stones. Yea such was their rage: that Nil reliqui fecerunt, Vt non ipsis elementis fieret iniuria; they spared not to let the elements know the madness of their violence. They could not draw fire from heaven, (their betters could not do it in the days of Christ on earth) therefore they seek it, they dignity it from hell. Flectere cùm nequeunt Superos, Acheronta movebunt. Here was a malicious walking.

3. There is a counterfeit path; & the Travelers make as if they walked in love, but their love is dissimulation. It is not dilectio vera, true love, which S. John. speaks of. nor dilectio mera, as Luther; not a plain-hearted love. They will cosen you unseen, and then like the whore in the Proverbs, wipe their mouths, and it was not they. Their art is Alios pellere aut tollere; to give others a wipe or a wound: & Judas-like they salute those with a kiss, against whom they intend most treason.

4. There is a way directly cross to love: which neither obeys God, for love keeps the commandments; nor comforts man, for love hath compassion on the distressed. These have feet swift enough, but swift to shed blood. Destruction and misery are in their ways. They are in Zedechiahs case: both their eyes are put out, and their feet lamed with the captive chains of Satan; so easily carried down to his infernal Babylon.

These are they that devour a man and his heritage. Therefore Christ calls their riches, not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, but 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉; things without them, as if they had swallowed them down into their bowels. The phrase is used by Job He hath swallowed down riches, & he shall vomit them up again: God shall cast them out of his belly. When this vomit is given them, you shall see strange stuff come from them. Here the raw and undigested gobbets of usury; there the mangled morsels of bloody oppressions: here five or six improprie Churches, there thousand acres of decayed tillage: here a whole casket of bribes, there whole houses and patrimonies of undone orphans; here an Inclosure of commons, there a vastation of proper and sanctified things. Rip up their consciences, and this is the stuffing of their hearts.

These walk cross to the Cross of Christ; as Paul saith, they are Enemies, cursed walkers. Whereupon we may conclude with Bernard. Periculosa tempora iam non instant, sed extant: the dangerous times are not coming, but come upon us. The cold frost of indevotion is so general, that many have benūmed joints; they cannot walk in love. Others so stiff and obdurate, that they will meet all that walk in this way, and with their turbulent malice strive to juttle them out of it. Therefore David prays: Preserue me from the violent men, that have purposed to overthrow my goings. Let us then upon this great cause, use that deprecation in our Let any. From pride, vain-glory, & hypocrisy; from envy, hatred, malice & all vncharitablenes; Good Lord deliver us.

I am loath to give you a bitter farewell, or to conconclude with a menace. I see I cannot, by the times leave, drink to you any deeper in this cup of Charity. I will touch it once again, and let every present soul that loves heaven, pledge me. Walk in love

The way to life everlasting is love; and he that keeps the way is sure to come to the end. We know that we have passed from death to life, because we love the brethren. For this are the works of mercy, charity piety, and pity so much commended in the Scriptures, & by the Fathers, with so high titles: because they are the appointed way, wherein we must walk, and whereby we must work up our own salvation. Therefore the Apostle claps in the neck of good works; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. Thereby we lay the ground of salvation in our consciences and take assured hold of eternal life. He that goes on in love, shall come home to life.

This comforts us; not in a presumption of merit, but in confident knowledge, that this is the way to glory: wherein when we find our selves Walking, we are sure we are going to heaven: and sing in the ways of the Lord: Great is the glory of the Lord. Now therefore Put on (as the elect of God, holy, and beloved) bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, &c. As you claim any portion in those gracious blessings, Election, Sanctification, and the love of God; as you would have the sweet testimony of the Spirit, that you are sealed up to the day of Redemption: Put on mercy, kindness, meekness, long suffering: let them be as robes to cover you all over. Yea bowels of mercies; let them be as tender and inward to you as your most vital parts. Lay forbearance and forgiveness as dear friends in your bosoms. Depart from iniquity: for the high way of the upright is to depart from evil: and he that keepeth his way, preserveth his soul. And above all these things put on Charity, which is the bond of perfectness; Walk in love. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.

Amen.

LOVES COPIE OR The best Precedent of Charity.

EPHE. 5. 2.

As Christ loved us.

WE distinguished the whole verse into a Canon, and a Crucifix. The Canon consisted of a Precept, and a Precedent. Love is the Subject: and it is both commanded and commended. Commanded in the Charge, which you have heard. Commended in the Example, which you shall hear. I determined my speech with the Precept; Walk in love. The Precedent or Pattern remains to be propounded and expounded; As Christ loved us. Every word is emphatical: and there be four, signifying four several natures.

Here	1 As	is a word of	1 Quality
2 Christ	2 Majesty
3 Loved	3 Mercy
4 Vs	4 Miserie.

Two of these words be Vincula or Media; that join and unite other things; Sicut and Dilexit: As and Loved. As directs our love to God and Man, by the exemplified rule of Christ loving us. Walk in love to others, As Christ loved us. Loved is that blessed reconciling nature; whereby God's good Greatness descends to our bad baseness; and the Just gives to the unjust Salvation. For what other nature but Mercy, could reconcile so high Majesty, and so low Miserie!

As

According to Zanchius his observation on this place, is a note of Quality, not Equalitie; of Similitude not of Comparison. We must love others As Christ loved us; As; for the manner, not for the measure. His love was strong as Death; for to the death he loved us. It was a bright & clear fire; many matters could not quench it; yea water and blood could not put it out. God so loved the World: so freely, so fatherly, so fully; as no tongue can tell, no heart think. The love of Christ passeth knowledge. To think of equalling this love, would be an impossible presumption.

Our love is inconstant, weak; a mingled, and often a mangled love, mingled with self love, and mangled with the wounding affections of the world. Our love is fain, his strong: ours fickle, his constant: ours limited, his infinite. Yet we must follow him so fast as we can, and so far as we may; Walking in love, as he loved us.

His Walking in love was strange and admirable: he took large steps; from heaven to earth, and from earth to heaven. As Bernard on that speech of the Church concerning her Beloved. Behold! he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills. He leaps from heaven to the Virgins womb, from the womb to a manger, from the manger to Egypt, from Egypt to Judah, from thence to the Temple, from the Temple up to the Cross, from the Cross down to the grave, from the grave up to the earth, and from the earth up to the highest glory. And he shall yet have another leap, from the right hand of his Father to judge quick and dead.

These were great iumpes, & large paces of love. When he made but one stride from the clouds to the cradle, and another from the Cradle to the cross, and a third from the cross to the crown. To come from the bosom of his immortal father, to the womb of his mortal mother, was a great step. From the lowest hell, or depth of his humiliation; to the highest heaven or top of his exaltation was a large pace.

We cannot take such large steps, nor make such strides. These leaps are beyond our agility, our ability. Yet we must follow him in love; stepping so far as we can, and walking so fast as we may. Follow we carefully and cheerfully; though non passibus aequis. The Father, that takes his young son into the field with bows & shafts, and bids him shoot after him, doth not expect that the child should shoot so far as he, but so far as he can. Though we cannot reach Christ's mark, yet If there be a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, not according to that he hath not. Now this particle

As, is not barely similitudinary, but hath a greater latitude: and serves

To	Confine	the	Measure	of our Imitation.

1. This Sicut Confines

Our imitation, and limits it to that circumference, which the present rule or compass gives it. We may not follow Christ in all things, but in this thing; Love, As he loved us. Our imitation hath a limitation, that it may not exorbitantly start out of the circle. There are special works, which God reserves to himself; and wherein he did never command or commend man's following; but rather strikes it down as presumption. His Power, his Majesty, his Wisdom, his Miracles, cannot without a contumacious ambition be aimed at. When Lucifer aspired to be like God in Majesty, he was thrown out of heaven. When Adam contended to be like God in knowledge, he was cast out of Paradise. When Nebuchadnezzar arrogated to be like God in Power, he was expulsed his kingdom. When Simon Magus mounted to be like God in working Miracles, and to fly in the air, he was hurld down, and broke his neck. God must not be imitated in his Finger, in his Arm, in his Brain, in his Face; but in his Bowels. Not in the Finger of his Miracles; nor in the Arm of his Power; nor in the Brain of his Wisdom; nor in the Face of his Majesty; but in the Bowels of his Mercy. Be ye merciful, as your heavenly Father is merciful. And saith Paul; Put on the Bowels of mercy; as Christ put them on: Forebear, forgive; Walk in Love; As he loved us. Neither Angel nor Man did ever, or shall ever offend, in coveting to be like God in Love, Grace, Mercy, Goodness. So that this Sicut excludes his Miracles, and directs us to his Morralls. Walk in Love, <math>\langle \phi \rangle</math> &c.

2. This Sicut Defines.

What our Love should be; As Christ was to us. Now his love to us had an infinite extension; and is past the skill of men or Angels to describe. Yet because this is the perfect Copy of our imitation; and the infallible Rule whereby we must square our Charity; I must according to my shallow power wade a little into this infinite and boundless Sea. I will only note four sweet streams of life in his Love. It was	Holy	Sine	Merits.

Hearty	Mode.
Kind	Despect•....
Constant	Defect•....

1. Holy.

The Love of Jesus to us was Sancta & sanctificans dilectio: a Love holy formaliter, in itself: and holy effective, in making those holy on whom it was set. He gave himself to us, and for us: and gave us a faith to receive and embrace him. Sine quo nec dil...cti, nec diligentes fuissetus. Without whom we neither could have received love, nor returned love. Now his love did not only extend to our bodies health, but to our souls bliss. So he loved us, that he saved us.

Our love should likewise be holy & whole: desiring not only our brothers external welfare; but much more his internal, his eternal blessedness. He that pities not a famished body, deserves justly the name of an unmerciful man: but he that cōpassionates not an afflicted conscience, hath much more a hard heart. It is an usual speech of compassion to a distressed man; Alas poor Soul: but this same, alas poor Soul, is for the most part mistakē. Neither the pittier, nor the pitied imagins the soul pittiable. Very humanity teacheth a man to behold an execution of thieves & traitors with grief: that men to satisfy their malicious or covetous affections, should cut off their own lives with so infamous a death. But who commiserates the endangered Soul, that must then ventor and enter on an eternal life or death?

The story of Hagar with her Son Ishmael, is set down by so heavenly a pen, that a man cannot read it without tears. She is cast out of Abraham's house with her child that might call her Master father. Bread & water is put on her shoulder, and she wanders into the wilderness: a poor relief for so long a journey, to which there was set no date of returning. Soone was the water spent in the bottle: the child cries for drink, to her that had it not; and lifts up pitiful eyes, every glance whereof was enough to wound her soul: vents the sighs of a dry & panting heart; but there is no water to be had; except the tears that ran from a sorrowful mothers eyes could quench the thirst. Down she lays the child under a shrub: and went as heavy as ever mother parted from her only son: and sate her down upon the earth, as if she desired it for a present receptacle of her grief, of her self: a good way off, saith the Text, as it were a bow-sho...e that the shricks, yellings, & dying groans of the child might not reach her ears: crying out; Let me not see the death of the child. Die she knew he must: but as if the beholding it would rent her heart, and wound her soul; she denies those windows so sad a spectacle; Let me not see the death of the child. So she lift up her voice and wept. Never was Hagar so pitiful to her Son Ishmael, as the Church is to every Christian. If any son of her womb will wander out of Abraham's family, the House of Faith; into the wilderness of this world; and prodigally part with his own mercy; for the gaudy transient vanities thereof. She follows, with entreaties to him, and to heaven for him. If he will not return, she is loath to see his death: she turns her back upon him, and weeps. He that can with dry eyes, and vnrelenting heart, behold a man's Soul ready to perish, hath not so much passion and compassion, as that Egyptian bondwoman.

2. Hearty.

The love of Christ to us was hearty; not consisting of shows, and signs, and courtly complements; but of actual, real, royal bounties. He did not dissemble live to us, when he died for us. Exhibitio operis, probatio amoris. He pleaded by the truest and vndenyable argument, demonstration. I love you: wherein? I give my Life for you. Tot ora, quot vulnera; tot verba, quot verbera. So many wounds, so many words to speak actually his love: every stripe he bore gave sufficient testimony of his affection. His exceeding rich gift, shows his exceeding rich love. This heartines must be in our Love; both to our Creator, and to his Image.

1. To God: so he challengeth thy love to be conditioned; with thy Heart, with all thy heart. And this saith Christ, is Primum & Maximum mand...tum the First and the greatest Commandment. The first; Quasi virtualiter continens reliqua; as mainly comprehending all the rest. For he that loves God with all his heart will neither Idolatrize, nor blaspheme, nor profane his Sabbaths; no nor wrong his creatures. The greatest; as requiring the greatest perfection of our love. This then must be a hearty love; not slow, not idle, but must show it self Et properando, & operando: in ready diligence, in fruitful & working obedience. There are many •...otent to love God alittle, because he blesseth them much. So Saul loved him for his kingdom. These love God Pro seipsis, not Prae seipsis; For themselves, not before themselves. They will give him homage, but not fealty: the calves of their lips, but not the calves of their stals. If they feast him with venison, part of their Imparked Riches, which is deer to them: yet it shall be but rascall deer, the trash of their substance: they will not feast him with the heart, that is the best deer in their Park.

2. To man: whom thou art bound to love as thyself: where say some, As is but a Tam, not a T...ntum. As thyself, not As much as thyself: As for the manner, not for the measure. But this is certain; true love begins at home; and he cannot love another soundly, that primarily loves not himself. And he that loves himself with a good heart, with the same heart will love his brother: In qu... seipsum, & propt...r quod seipsum: In that manner, & for that cause that he loves himself. This then cōmands the same love, if not the same degree of love, to thy brother, that thou bearest to thyself.

This hearty love is hardly found. More is protested now than in former times, but less done. It is wittily served, that y<sup>e</sup> old manner of saluting, was to take & shake one another by the hand: now we lock arms & join breasts, but not hearts. That old hand full was better than this new armful. Our cringes and complemental bowings promise great humilitic: but the smotherd venom of pride •...es within. We have low looks and lofty thoughts. There are enough of those Which speak peace to their neighbors, but mischief is in their hearts. Whose smooth habits do so palliate, and ornamentally cover their poison; as if they did preserve mud in Crystal. The Romans usually painted Friendship, with her hand on her heart: as if she promised to send no messenger out of the gate of her lips, but him that goes on the hearts arrand. Now we have studied both textures of words, and pretextures of manners, to shroud dishonesty. But one ounce of real charity is worth a whole talent of verbal. He loves us best, that does for us most. Many Politicians, (and the whole world now runs on the wheels of policy) use their lovers as ladders, their friends as scaffolds. When a house is to be erected, they first set up scaffolds, by which they build it up: the house finished, down pull they the scaffolds, and throw them into the fire. When the covetous or ambitious man hath his turn served by others; either for his advancing or advantaging; for gain or glory: he puts them off with neglect and contempt. The house is built, what care they for the scaffold? The feate is wrought, let the wise and honest helpers be prison'd or poisoned, sink or swim, stand or perish. Nay it is well, if they help not those down, that helped them up.

3. Kind.

The Apostle makes Kindnesse one essential part of our love; deriving it from Christ's example: who was Kind to us, both in giving us much good, and forgiving us much evil. And God commendeth, yea commandeth the inseparable neighbourhood of godliness and brotherly kindness. Add to your godliness brotherly kindness. For there is no piety towards God, where there is no kindness to our brother. Now Christ's kindness to us consisted in 2. excellent effects Corrigendo. Porrigendo.

1. In correcting our errors, dir•...cting and amending our lives. Non minima pars dilectionis est, reprehendere dilect...m, It is no small part of kindness, to reprove him thou lovest. Therefore God saith; Th... shalt reprove thy brother; and not hate him in thy heart. A loving man will chide his erring friend: and he that does not, hates him in his heart. Sic vigilet tolerantia, vt non dormiat disciplina. So let patience watch, that discipline sleep not. This was David's desire. Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove •...e, it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head. Our Savior took this course, but he was pitiful in it: notbreaking the bruised re...d, nor quenching the smoking flax. He was not transported with passion, but moved with tender compassion, and merciful affection. He was moved with compassion toward the people, seeing them as sheep without a shepherd. As a Father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. And children are Vicera parentum, saith Jerome: the very bowels of the parents. Therefore his bowels earned within him, when he saw the weakly blind led by the willfully blind, and he instructed them. It is no small mercy in a Father, to correct his erring child.

This is one office of love almost quite forgotten in the world. Our eyes and ears are conscious of many horridsinnnes, whereof we make also our souls guilty by our silence. Like Cameleons, we turn to the color of our company. Oppressions that draw blood of the Common-wealth, move us not. Oaths that totter the battlements of heaven, wake us not. O where is our kindness! whilst we do not reprove, we approve these iniquities. He is conscious of secret society, that forbeareth to resist open iniquity. Thou sayest, it is for loves sake thou sparest reprehension: why, if thou love thy friend, thou wilt gently rebuke his faults. If thou love thy friend never so dearly, yet thou oughtst to love truth more dearly. Let not then the truth of love prejudice the love of truth.

2. In  $\langle \phi \rangle$ , reaching •...orth to us his ample mercies: Giving •...ichly •...l things to enjoy. Where the Apostle describes God's bounty; that he

Giues

- Freely.
- Fully.
- Vniuersally.
- Effectually.

1. Freely; he gives without exchange: he receives nothing for that he gives. Ungodly men have honor, wealth, health, peace, plenty: their bellies are filled with his treasure, and they do not so much as return him thanks. His Sun shines, his rain falls on the unjust and ungrateful man's ground. Man when he gives, & respicit & recipit gratitudinem; both expects and accepts thanks, and a return of love: God hath not so much as thanks. For the good, they are indeed grateful: but this Gratia grati is Gratia gratificantis: God gives them this grace, to be thankful: and they may bless him, that he stirs them up to bless him.

2. Fully and richly, as becomes the greatest King. A Duke at the wedding Feast of his daughter, caused to •...e brought in thirty Courses; and at every Course gave so many gifts to each guest at the Table, as were Dishes in the Course. And I have read of a Queen, that feasted her guests with wines brewed with dissolved precious stories; that every draught was valued at a hundred crowns. Here was royal entertainment; but this was but one Feast. Such bounty continued would quickly consume the finite means of any earthly Prince. Only God is rich in mercy: his treasury fills all the world, without emptying, yea empairing or abating it self.

3. Vniuersally; all things. The king hath his Crown, the great man his honor, the mighty his strength, the rich his wealth, the learned his knowledge, the mean man his peace: all at his Gift. He opens his hand wide, he sparseth abroad his blessings, and fills all things living with his plenteousness.

4. Effectually: he settles these gifts upon us. As he gave them without others, so others without him shall never be able to take them away. As he created, so he conserueth the virtues; strength in bread, and warmth in clothes; and gives wine and oil their effective cheerfulness.

Be •...ou so kind as this holy and heavenly pattern, not aiming at the measure which is inimitable, but leuelling at the manner which is charitable. Like Job, who used not to eat his morsels alone: neither to deny his bread to the hungry, nor the fleece of his flock to the cold and naked. Let thy stock of kindness be liberal, though thy stock of wealth be stinted. Give Omni petenti, though not Omnia petenti; as that Father excellently.

4. Constant.

For with Christ is no variableness, no shadow of change. But Whom he once loves, he loves forever. Ficklennesse is for a Laban, whose countenance will turn away from Jacob: and his affection fall off with his profit. I have read of two entire friends, well deserving for their virtues; that when the one was promoted to great wealth and dignity, the other neglected in obscurity: the preferred, though he could not divide his honor, yet shared his wealth to his old companion. Things so altered that this honourd friend was falsely accused of treachery, and by the blow of suspicion thrown down to misery: & the other for his now observed goodness raised up to a high place where now he requites his dejected friend with the same courtesy: as if their minds had cōsented & contended to make that equal, which their states made different. O for one dram of this immutable Love in the world! Honors change manners: & we will not know those in the Court, who often fed us in the country. Or if we vouchsafe to acknowledge them as friends, we will not as Sutors. Hereon was the verse made.

Quisquis in hoc mundo cunctis vult gratus haberi:

Det, Capiat, Quaerat, Plurima, Pauca, Nihil.

He that would be of worldly men well thought:

Must always Give, Take, Beg, Much, Little, Nought. Men cannot brook poor friends. This inconstant charity is hateful; as our English phrase premonisheth; Love me Little, and Love me Long.

3. This Sicut Refines

Our love; Walk in love, as Christ loved us. Where As is not only similitudinary, but causal. Love because Christ loved us: for this cause, as after this manner. Which serves to putrefy our love, to purge it from corruption, and to make it perfect. Dilectio Dei nos facit & diligibiles & diligentes: both such as God can love, and such as can love God. For it is the love of Christ to us, that works a love to Christ in us. A man will ever love that medicine, that hath freed him from some desperate disease. Christ's Love hath healed us of all our sores and sins: let us honor and love this medicine, compounded of so precious simples, water and blood. And let us not only affectionately embrace it our selves, but let us invite others to it Come and hearken all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul.

Christ.

I have been so punctual in this word of Quality, that I can but mention the rest. The word of Majesty is Christ; who being almighty God, coequal and coeternal with the Father and the Spirit; took on him our nature: and was factus homo, vt pro homine pacaret Deum. God was made man, that for man he might appease God. Thus did so great a majesty stoop low for our love; Non exuendo quod habuit, sed induendo quod non habuit: not by loosing what he had, but by accepting what he had not; our miserable nature. Ipsa dilexit nos & Tantus & tantum, & gratis tantillos & tales. He that was so great loved so greatly, us that were so poor and unworthy freely.

Loved

Is that word of Mercy, that reconciles so glorious a God to so ungracious sinners. The cause which moved Christ to undertake for us, was no merit in us, but mere mercy in him. He Loved us, because he loved us: in our Creation when we could not love him: in our Redēption, when we would not love him. Loved us, not but that he loveth us still. But the Apostle speaks in this time, to distinguish the love wherewith he now loveth us, from that whereby he once Loved us. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by his death: much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. Though it be also true, that from everlasting he Loved us.

Vs

Is the word of Miserie: Vs he loved, that were so wretched. The word is indefinite; Us, all us. Vs be we never so unworthy: All us, be we never so many.

1. Vs that were unworthy of his love, from whom he expected no correspondence. That he loved the blessed Angels was no wonder, because they with winged obedience execute his hests and do his word. Yea that he loved his very reason-less and insensible creatures, is not strange: for fire and hail, snow and vapor, stormy wind and tempest fulfill his word. But to love us, that were weak, ungodly, sinners, enemies. Rom. 5 weak, no strength to deserve: ungodly, no piety to procure: sinners, no righteousness to satisfy: enemies, no peace to atone: for we hated him, and all his ye shall be hated of all men for my names sake. To love such us, was an vnexpectable, a most merciful Love. He that wanted nothing, loved us, that had nothing. Immortal eternity loved mortal dust and ashes. O if a man had Ora mille fluentia melle, yea the tongues of Angels, he could not sufficiently express this love. So God loved the world: Mundum immundum, the unclean world; that not only not received him; but even crucified and killed him.

2, All of us, without acception of persons. This is the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. The Gospel proclaims an universal Si quis; Whosoever believes, and is baptized, shall be saved. Qui seipsum excipi... se ipsum decipit. He that excepts himself, beguiles his own soul. Hence I find three inferences, observable, which I will commend to your consciences, and your consciences to God.

Dilecti	diligamus.
Dilectos
Diligentes

1. We are loved our selves, therefore let us love. He that bids us love, loved us first This is my Commandment, that ye love one another. Why? As I loved you. Non aliud iussit, quam gessit: he chargeth us with nothing in precept, which he performed not in practice. Therefore Si tardi su...us ad ...andum, non tardi simus ad redamandum. Though we have not been forward to love first, let us not be backward to return love. Dilecti diligite If God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. Magnes amoris amor: and the sole requital which God requires for his rich love, is our poor love; that only may love him, but have nothing to give him, that is not his.

2. They are beloved whom thou art charged to love. He that bids us love others, loves them himself. It is fit we should love those whom Christ loves. If thou love Christ, thou art bound to love others, because he loves them: yea with that very same love, wherewith he loves thee. Therefore Dilectos diligamus.

3. They also love God, whom God commands thee to love. The love of Christ is so shed abroad into all Christian hearts, that they unfeignedly affect Jesus their Savior. They love him, whom thou lovest, therefore love them. It is fit, we should love them highly, that love God heartily. Therefore Diligentes diligamus.

Thus you have heard Loves Walk, or Race: now then saith Paul; So run that you may obtain. I will end with an Apologue, an Epilogue, a Parable. Charity, and certain other her rivals, or indeed enemies would run a race together. The Prize they all ran for, was Felicitie; which was held up at the Gaoles end by a bountiful Lady, called Eternity. The runners were Pride, Prodigality, Envy, Covetousness, Lust, Hypocrisy, and Love. All the rest were either diverse or adverse, neighbors or enemies to Charity. I will, Herald-like, show you their several equipage; how they begin the Race and end it.

1. Pride, you know, must be foremost; and that comes out like a Spanyard, with daring looks and a tongue thundering out braves: mounted on a spritely Iennet named Insolence. His Plumes and Perfumes amaze the beholders eyes and nostrils. He runs as if he would overthrow Giants and Dragons: yea even the great Red-Dragon, if he encountered him: and with his lance burst open heaven gates. But his Iennet stumbles, and down comes Pride. You know how wise a king hath read his destiny; Pride will have a fall.

2. The next is Prodigality; and because he takes himself for the true Charity, he must be second at least. This is a young Gallant, and the horse he rides on, is Luxury. He goes a thundering pace, that you would not think it possible to overtake him: but before he is got a quarter of the way, he is spent, all spent; ready to beg of those, that begged of him.

3. Envy will be next, a lean meager thing, full of malicious mettle, but hath almost no flesh. The horse he rides on is Malcontent. He would in his journey first cut some thousand throats, or powder a whole kingdom, blow up a State; and then set on to heaven. But the hangman sets up a Galowse in his way, wherat he runs full butt, and breaks his neck.

4. Then comes sneaking out Co...eteousnes; a hungerstaru'd usurer, that sells wheat, and eats beans: many men are in his debt, and he is most in his own debt: for he never paid his belly and back a quarter of their dues. He rides on a thin hobbling Iade called vnconscionablenes which for want of a worse stable he lodgeth in his own heart. He promiseth his soul to bring her to heaven: but tarrying to enlarge his barns, he lost opportunity and the prize of salvation: and so fell two bows short; Faith and Repentance.

5. Lust hath gotten on Loves cloke, and will venture to run. A leprous wretch, and riding on a trotting beast, a he-goat; was almost shaken to pieces. Diseases do so crampe him, that he is fain to sit down with Vae misero: and without the help of a good Doctor or a Surgeon, he is like never to see a comfortable end of his journey.

6. Hypocrisy is glad that he is next to Charity; and presumes that they two are brother and sister. He is hors'd on a halting hackney (for he does but borrow him) called Dissimulation. As he goes, he is offering every man his hand, but it is still empty. He leans on Charities shoulder, and protests great love to her: but when she tries him to borrow a little money of him for some merciful purpose; he pleads, he hath not enough to serve him to his journeys end. He goes forward like an Angel, but his trusted horse throws him, and discovers him a Devil.

7 The last named, but first and only that comes to the prize at the goales end, is Charity. She is an humble virtue, not mounted as the other racers, but goes on foot. She spares from her own belly, to relieve those poor Pilgrims that travel with her to Heaven. She hath two Virgins that bear her company; Innocence, and Patience. She does no hurt to others, she suffers much of others; yet was she never heard to curse. Her language is blessing, and she shall forever inherit it. Three celestial Graces, Glory, Immortality, and Eternity, hold out a Crown to her. And when Faith and Hope have lifted her up to heaven, they take their leaves of her; and the bosom of everlasting Mercy receives her.

A CRVCIFIXE OR A Sermon upon the Passion.

EPHES. 5. 2.

He hath given himself for us, an offering and a Sacrifice to God for a sweet swelling savor.

THis latter part of the verse is a fair and lively Crucifix, cut by the hand of a most exquisite caruer: not to amaze our corporal lights with a piece of wood, brass, or stone curiously engraven, to the increase of a carnal devotion. But to present to the eye of the conscience, the grievous Passion, and gracious compassion of our Savior Jesus Christ; Who gave himself for us, &c. This Crucifix presents to our eye seven considerable

Circumstances

- Who, Christ.
- What, Gaue.
- Whom, Himself.
- To whom, To God.
- For whom, For us.
- After what manner, An offering & Sacrifice.
- Of what effect. Of a sweet savor.

The points, you see, lie as ready for our discourse, as the way did from Bethany to Jerusalem: only fail not my speech, nor your attention, till we come to the Journeys end.

Who.

The Person that gives is Christ: the quality of his person doth highly commend his exceeding love to us. We will ascend to this consideration by 4. stairs or degrees and descend by 4. other. Both in going up, and coming down, we shall perceive the admirable love of the giver. Ascendently.

1. We will consider him Hominem; a man. Behold the man, saith Pilate. We may tarry and wonder at his lowest degree; that a man should give himself for man. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die. But this man gave himself for unrighteous man to die; not an ordinary, but a grievous death, exposing himself to the wrath of God, to the tyrannie of men and Devils. It would pity our hearts to see a poor dumb beast so terrified, how much more Hominem, a man, the Image of God!

2 The second degree gives him hominem innocentem, an Innocent man. Pilate could say. I have found no fault in this man. No nor yet Herod. No nor the Devil, who would have been right glad of such an advantage. So Pilate's Wife sent her husband word. Have thou nothing to do with that just man. So the Person is not only a man, but a just man, that gave himself to endure such horrors for us. If we pity the death of malefactors, how should our compassion be to one Innocent!

3. In the third degree, he is not only Homo, a man; and Iustus homo, a good man; but also Magnus homo a great man: royally descended from the ancient Patriarchs and Kings of Judah. Pilate had so written his Title, and he would answer▪ not alter it; Quod scripsi, scripsi. And what was that? Jesus of Nazereth, the King of the Jews. Now as is the Person, so is the Passion: the more noble the giver, the more excellent the gift. That so high a King would suffer such contempt and obloquy to be cast upon him; when the least part of his disgrace had been too much for a man of mean condition! That a Man, a Good man, a Great man bore such calumny, such calamity for our sakes; here was an unmatchable, an unspeakable love.

4. This is enough, but this is not all: there is yet a higher degree in this Ascent: we are not come to our full Quantus. It is this; he was Plus quam homo, more than man: not only maximus hominum, but mator hominibus; the greatest of men, yea greater than all men. Not mere filius hominis, but vere filius Dei: he was more than the Son of man, even the Son of God. As the Centurion acknowledged Truly this man was the Son of God. Here be all the four stairs upwards; a Man, a Harmeles man a Princely man; and yet more than man, even God himself. Solomon was a great king; but here is a Greater than Solomon. Solomon was Christus Domini; but here is Christus Dominus: he was the anointed of the Lord; but this is the Lord himself anointed. And here all tongues grow dumb; & admiratio seaeth up every lip. This is a depth beyond sounding. You may perhaps drowsily hear this and coldly be affected with it; but let me say, Principalities and Powers, Angels and Seraphim stood amazed at it.

We see the Ascent; shall we bring down again this consideration by as many stairs?

1. Consider him Almighty God taking upon him Mans nature: this is the first step downwards The word was made flesh, and dwelt among us. And God sent forth his Son made of a woman. And this was done Naturam suscipiendo nostram, non mutando suam: by putting on our nature, not by putting off his own. Homo Deo accessit, non Deus a se recessit. He is both God and man, yet but one Christ: one not by confusion of substance but by unity of person. Now in that this Eternal God became man, he suffered more, then man can suffer either living or dead. That man should be turned into a beast, into a worm, into dust, into nothing; is not so great a disparagement as that the glorious God should become man. He that thought it not robbery to be equal with God, was made in the likeness of man. He that is more excellent than the Angels, became lower than the Angels, that he might advance us as high as the Angels. Even the brightness of God's glory takes on him the baseness of our nature: and he that laid the foundations of the earth, and made the world, is now in the world made himself. This is the first descending degree.

2. The second stair brings him yet lower. He is made man: but what Man? Let him be universal Monarch of the world: and have fealty and homage acknowledged to him from all kings and Emperors, as his viceroyes: Let him walk upon Crowns and scepters, and let Princes attend on his Court: and here was some Majesty, that might a little become the Son of God. No such matter. Indust formam serui; He took upon him the form of a servant. He instructs us to humility by his own example The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. O Israel, thou hast made me to serve with thy sins. He gave himself for a Minister, not for a Master; ad seruitutem, non ad dominationem. He that is God's Son, is made man's servant. Proudly blind, & blindly poor man, that thou shouldst have such a servant, as the Son of thy maker. This is the second step downwards.

3. This is not low enough yet. I am a worm no man; saith the Psalmist in his Person. Yea the shame of men, and contempt of the people. He is called. Psal. 24. the King of glory. Be ye open ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in. But Esa. 53. He is despised and rejected of men:

we hid as it were our faces from him: he was despised, and we esteemed him not. O the pity of God, that those two should come so near together, the King of glory, and the shame of men. Quo celsior maiestas, eo miserior humilitas. Thus saith the Apo stle, he made himself of no reputation. He that requires all honor as properly due to him, makes himself (not of little, but) of no reputation. Here was dejection; yea here was rejection. Let him be laid in his poor cradle, the Bethlehemites reject him; the manger must serve, no room for him in the Inn. Yea He came to his own, and his own received him not. All Israel is to hot for him; he is glad to fly into Egypt for protection. Come he to Jerusalem? which he had honoured with his presence, instructed with his Sermons, amazed with his miracles, wet and bedewed with his tears▪ they reject him. I would, and ye would not. Comes he to his kindred? they deride & traduce him, as if they were ashamed of his alliāce. Comes he to his Disciples? They go back & will walk no more with him. Will yet his Apostles tarry with him? So they say ver. 6. 8. Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life. Yet at last one betrays him, another forswears him, all forsake him: & Jesus is left alone in the midst of his enemies. Can malice yet add some further aggravation to his contempt? Yes, they crucify him with malefactors. The quality of his company, is made to increase his dishonor. In medio Latronum, tanquam Latronum immanissimus: In the midst of thieves, as it were the Prince of thieves; saith Luther. He that thought it no robbery to be equal to the most holy God, is made equal to thieves and murderers; yea tanquam Dux; as it were a Captain amongst them. This is the third step.

4. But we must go yet lower. Behold now the deepest stair, and the greatest rejection. Affligit me Deusthe Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger It pleased the Lord to bruise him: he hath put ⟨◇⟩ to grief. No burden seems heavy, when the comforts of God help to bear it. When God will give solace, vexation makes but idle offers and assaults. But now to the rejection of all the former, the Lord turns his back upon him as a stranger: the Lord wounds him as an enemy. He cries out; My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? How could the Sun and stars, heaven and earth stand, whiles their maker thus complained! The former degree was deep; he was crucified with evil doers; reckoned amongst the wicked. Yet thieves fared better in death then he. We find no irrishio, no insultation, no taunts, no invectiues against thē. They had nothing upon them but pain; he both contempt & torment. If scorn and derision can vex his good soul, he shall have it in peals of ordinance shot against him. Even the basest enemies shall give it: Jews, Soldiers, Persecutors yea suffering malefactors spare not to flowte him. His blood cannot appease them without his reproach. But yet the disciples are but weak men, the Jews but cruel persecutors the Devils but malicious enemies: all these do but their kind, but the lowest degree is; God forgets him, and in his feeling he is forsaken of the highest. Weigh all these circumstances, and you shall truly behold the Person, that gave himself for us.

What

We come to the Action, Dedit. Giving is the argument of a free disposition. John. 10. I Lay down my life. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. He that gives life to us, gave up his own life for us. He did not sell, set, let, or lend, but give. Oblatus est, quia ipse voluit. He was offered, because he would be offered.

No hand could cut that stone from the quarry of heaven: no violence pull him from the bosom of his Father; but Sua misericordia, his own mercy: he gave. He cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills. He comes with willingness and celeritie: no human resistance could hinder him; not the hillockes of our lesser infirmities, not the mountains of our grosser iniquities, could stay his merciful pace towards us.

He gave his life; who could bereave him of it? To all the high Priests armed forces he gave but a verbal encounter; I am he: and they retire and fall backward. His very breath dispersed them all. He could as easily have commanded fire from heaven to consume them, or vapors from the earth to choke them. He that controllles Devils, could easily have quailed men. More then twelve Legions of Angels were at his beck; and every Angel able to conqur a Legion of men. He gives them leave to take him; yea power to kill him: from himself is that power, which apprehends himself. Even whiles he stands before Pilate scorned, yet tells him; Thou couldst have no power against me, nisi datam desuper; unless it were given thee from above. His own strength leads him, not his adversaries. He could have been freed, but he would not. Constraint had abated his merit: he will deserve, though he die.

The loss of his life was necessary, yet was it also voluntary. Quod amittitur necessarium est, quod emittitur voluntarium. Therefore he gave up the Ghost. In spite of all the world he might have kept his soul within his body; he would not. The world should have been burnt to cinders, and all creatures on earth resolved to their original dust; before he could have been enforced. Man could not take away his Spirit, therefore he gave it. Otherwise if his Passion had been only Operis, and not voluntatis; material and not formal; it could not have been meritorious, or afforded satisfaction for us. For that is only done well, that is done of our will.

But it is objected out of Hebr. 5. that he offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, untohim that was able to save him from death. Hence some blasphemers say, that Christ was a coward in fearing the natural death of the body. If he had so feared it, he needed not to have tasted it. Christ indeed did naturally fear death; otherwise he had not been so affected as an ordinary man. Yet he willingly suffered death, otherwise he had not been so well affected as an ordinary Martyre. But he prays thrice; Let this cup passe. Divines usually distinguish here: the Sententiaries thus. That there was in Christ a double human or created will: the one voluntas vt natura; a natural will; the other voluntas vt ratio, a reasonable will. Christ according to his natural will trembled at the pangs of death; and this without sin: for Nature abhorreth all destructive things. But in regard of his rational will, he willingly submits himself to drink that cup. Not as I will O Father, but as thou wilt. Aman, saith Aquinas, will not naturally endure the lancing of any member: yet by his reasonable will he consents to it, for the good of the whole body: reason masters sense, and cutting or cauterizing is endured. So Christ by the strength of his natural will feared death: but by his Reason perceiving, that the cutting, wounding, crucifying of the Head, would bring health to the whole Body of his Church; and either he must bleed on the Cross, or we must all burn in hell: behold now he willingly and cheerfully gives himself an offering and Sacrifice to God for us.

But was it a mere temporal death that our Savior feared? No, he saw the fierce wrath of his Father, and therefore feared. Many resolute men have not shrunk at a little: diverse Martyrs have endured strange torments with magnanimity. But now when he that gave them strength, quakes at death; shall we say he was a Coward? Alas! that which would have overwhelmed man, would not have made him shrink: that which he feared, no mortal man but himself ever felt. Yet he feared. The despair of many thousand men was not so much, as for him to fear. He saw that which none saw, the anger of an infinite God. He perfectly apprehended the cause of fear; our Sin and torment. He saw the bottom of the Cup; how bitter and dreggish every drop of that vial was. He truly understood the burden, which we make light of. Men fear not Hell, because they know it not. If they could see through the opened gates, the insufferable horrors of that pit; trembling & quaking would run like an ague through their bones. This insupportable lode he saw: that the sponge of vengeance must be wrung out to him; and he must suck it up to the last and least drop. Every talent of our iniquities must be laid upon him, till as a cart he be lodenwith sheaves. And with all this pressure he must mount his Chariot of death, the Cross; and there bear it, till the appeased God gave way to a Consummatum est; It is finished.

The Philosopher could say, that Sapiens miser magis est miser, quàm stultus miser: a wise man miserable, is more miserable then a fool miserable; because he understands his misery. So that our Saviors pangs were aggravated by the fullness of his knowledge. No marvel then if he might justly take David's words out of his mouth; Thy terrors have I suffered with a troubled mind. This thought drew from him those tears of blood. His eyes had formerly wept for our misdoings: his whole body now weeps; not afaint dew, but he swett out solid drops of blood. The thorns, soourges, nails fetched blood from him; but not with such pain as this Sweat. Outward violence drew on those: these the extremity of his troubled thought. Here then was his cause of fear. He saw our everlasting destruction, if he suffered not: he saw the horrors which he must suffer to ransom us. Hinc illae lachrymae: hence those grons, tears, cries, and sweat: yet his love conquerd all. By nature he could willingly have avoided this cup: for loves sake to us he took it in a willing hand. So he had purposed, so he hath performed. And now to testify his love, saith my Text, he freely Gaue.

Whom?

Himself. This is the third circumstance, the Gift; Himself.

Not an Angel: for an Angel cannot sufficiently mediate between an immortal nature offended, and a mortal nature corrupted. The glorious Angels are blessed, but finite and limited: and therefore unable to this expiation. They cannot be so sensibly touched with the feeling of our infirmities; as he that was in our own nature; in all points tempted like as we are, sin only excepted.

Not Saints; for they have no more oil then will serve their own Lamps. They have enough for themselves, not of themselves; all of Christ: but none to spare. Fools cry, Give us of your cyle. They answer, Not so, least there be not enough for us and you: but ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. They could not propitiate for sin, that were themselves guilty of sin; and by nature liable to condemnation. Wretched Idolaters, that thrust this honor on them against their wills: how would they abhor such sacrilegious glory!

Not the riches of this world. We were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold. Were the riches of the old world brought together to the riches of the new world; were all the mineral veins of the earth emptied of their purest metals: this pay would not be currant with God. It will cost more to redeem souls They that trust in their wealth, and boast in the multitude of their riches: Yet cannot by any means redeem their brother, nor Give to God a ransom for him. The servant cannot redeem the Lord. God made a man master of these things: he is then more precious then his slaves.

Not the blood of Bulls or Goats. Hebr. 9. Alas, those legal sacrifices were but dumb shows of this tragedy, the mere figures of this oblation; mystically presenting to their faith, that Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. This Lamb was prefigured in the sacrifices of the law, & now presented in the sacraments of the Gospel: slain indeed from the beginning of the world Who had power. Prodesse, to profit us; before he had Esse, a being himself. None of these would serve.

Whom Gaue he then? Seipsum, Himself; who was both God and man: that so participating of both natures, our mortality, and God's Immortality, he might be a perfect Mediator. Apparuit igitur inter mortals peccatores & immortalem iustum, mortalis cum hominibus, iustus cum Deo. He came between mortal men and immortal God, mortal with men, and just with God. As man he suffered, as God he satisfied: as God and man he saved. He gave himself;

Se	Totum	Himself	Wholy
Solum	Only

1. All himself, his whole Person, soul and body. Godhead and manhood. Though the deity could not suffer, yet in regard of the personal union of these two natures in one Christ, his very passion is attributed in some sort to the Godhead. So Act. 20. It is called the blood of God. And 1. Cor. 2. 8. The Lord of glory is said to be crucified. The Schools distinction here makes all plain: He gave Totum Christum, though not Totum Christi: All Christ, though not All of Christ. Home non valuit, Deus non voluit. As God alone he would not, as man alone he could not make this satisfaction for us. The Deity is impassible; yet was it impossible without this Deity for the great work of our salvation to be wrought. If any ask how the manhood could suffer without violence to the God-head; being united in one Person: let him understand it by a familiar comparison. The Sun-beams shine on a tree; the axe cuts down this tree, yet can it not hurt the beams of the Sun. So the God-head still remains vnharmed, though the axe of death did for a while fell down the man-hood. Corpus passum est dolore & gladio. Anima dolore non gladio. Diuinitas nec dolore nec gladio. His body suffered both sorrow and the sword: his soul sorrow not the sword: his Deity neither sorrow nor the sword. Deitas in dolente, non in dolore. The God-head was in the Person pained, yet not in the pain.

2. Himself only; and that without a

- Partner
- Comforter.

1. Without a Partner, that might share either his glory, or our thanks: of both which he is justly jealous. Christi passio adjutor non equit. The sufferings of our Savior need no help. Upon good cause therefore we abhor that doctrine of the Papists: that our offenses are expiated by the passions of the Saints. No, not the blessed Virgin hath performed any part of our iustificatiō, paid any farthing of our debts. So sings the Choir of Rome. Sancta virgo Dorothea, tua nos virtute bea, cor in nobis novum crea. Wherein there is pretty rime, petty reason, but great blasphemy: as if the Virgin Dorothy were able to create a new heart within us. No; but the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. His blood, and his only. O blessed Savior, every drop of thy blood is able to redeem a believing world. What then need we the help of men? How is Christ a perfect Savior, if any act of our redemption be left to the performance of Saint or Angel? No, our souls must die, if the blood of Jesus cannot save them. And whatsoever witty error may dispute for the merits of Saints; the distressed conscience cries, Christ, and none but Christ. They may sit at Tables and discourse, enter the Schools and argue, get up into the Pulpits and preach; that the works of good men is the Churches treasure, given by indulgence, and can give indulgence; and that they will do the soul good. But lie we upon our deathbeds, panting for breath, driven to the push, tost with tumultuous waves of afflictions, anguished with sorrow of spirit; then we sing another song: Christ & Christ alone: Jesus and only Jesus: Mercy, mercy: pardon, comfort for our Saviors sake. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other Name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.

2. Without a Comforter: he was so far from having a sharer in his Passion, that he had none in compassion; that (at least) might any ways ease his sorrows. It is but a poor comfort of calamity, Pity; yet even that was wanting. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Is it so sore a sorrow to Christ, and is it nothing to you? a matter not worth your regard, your pity? Man naturally desires and expects, if he cannot be delivered, eased; yet to be pitied. Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends: for the hand of God hath touched me. Christ might make that request of Job, but he had it not: there was none to comfort him, none to pity him. It is yet a little mixture of refreshing, if others be touched with a sense of our misery; that in their hearts they wish us well, and would give us ease if they could: but Christ hath in his sorest pangs not so much as a Comforter. The Martyrs have fought valiantly under the banner of Christ, because he was with them to comfort them. But when himself suffers, no relief is permitted. The most grievous torments find some mitigation in the supply of friends and comforters. Christ after his monomachie or single combat with the devil in the desert, had Angels to attend him. In his agony in the garden an Angel was sent to comfort him. But when he came to the main act of our redemption, not an Angel must be seen. None of those glorious spirits may look through the windows of heaven; to give him any ease. And if they would have relieved him, they could not. Who can lift up, where the Lord will cast down? What Surgeon can heal the bones, which the Lord hath broken? But his mother, & other friends stands by, seeing, sighing, weeping. Alas! what do those tears, but ease his sorrow? might he not justly say with Paul. What mean ye to weep, & to break mine heart? Of whom then shall he expect comfort? Of his Apostles? Alas they betake them to their heels. Fear of their own danger drowns their compassion of his misery. He might say with Job; Miserable comforters are ye all. Of whom then? The Jews are his enemies, and vie vnmercifullnes with devils. There is no other refuge but his Father, No, even his Father is angry: & he that once said; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; is now incens•...d. He hides his face from him, but lays his hand heavy upon him; & buffets him with anguish. Thus Solus patitur: he gave himself; & only himself, for our redemptiō.

To whom?

To God; and that is the fourth circumstance. To whom should he offer this sacrifice of expiation, but to him that was offended? and that is God. Against thee, thee only have I sinned; and done this evil in thy sight. Father I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight. All sins are committed against him: his justice is displeased, and must be satisfied. To God: for God is angry, with what, and whom? with sin and us, and us for sin. In his just anger he must smite; but whom? In Christ was no sin. Now shall God do like Annas or Ananias. If I have spoken evil, saith Christ, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou me? So Paul to Ananias God will smite thee thou whited wall: for Sittest thou to Judge me after the Law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the Law? So Abraham pleads to God shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Especially right to his Son? and to that Son which glorified him on earth, and whom he hath now glorified in heaven? We must fetch the answer from Daniel's Prophecy The Messiah shall he cut off, but not for himself. Not for himself? For whom then? For solution hereof we must step to the first point; and there we shall find.

For Whom;

For us. He took upon himour person, he became surety for us. And loe, now the course of Justice may proceed against him. He that will become a Suertie, and take on him the debt, must be content to pay it. Hence that innocent Lamb must be made a Sacrifice: and he, that know no  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  in himself, must be made sin for us; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Seven times in three verses doth the Prophet Isaiah inculcate this. We, Our, us. We were all sick, grievously sick; every sin was a mortal disease. Quot Vitia, tot febres. He healeth our infirmities, saith the Prophet: he was our Physician; a great Physician. Magnus Venit medicus, quia magnus iacebat agrotus. The whole world was sick to death, & therefore needed a powerful Physician. So was he; and took a strange course for our Cure. Which was not by giving us physick, but by taking our Physick for us. Other patients drink the prescribed potion; but our Physician drunk the potion himself, and so recovered us.

For us. Ambr. Pro me doluit, qui pro se nihil habuit quod doleret. He suffered for me, that had no cause to suffer for himself. O Domine Jesus, doles non tua, sed vulnera mea. So monstrous were our sins, that the hand of the everlasting Justice was ready to strike us with a fatal and final blow: Christ in his own person steppes between the stroke and us; and bore that a while, that would have sunk us forever. Nos immortalitate male vsi sumus, vt moreremur; Christus mortalitate been vsus est, vt viueremus. We abused the immortality we had to our death: Christ used the mortality he had not to our life. Dilexit nos; he loved us; & such us, that were his utter enemies. Here then was love without limitation, beyond imitation. Vnspeakable mercy, says Bernard; that the king of eternal glory should yield himself to be crucified, Protam despiciatissimo vernaculo, immo vermiculo: for so poor a wretch, yea a worm and that not a loving worm, not a living worm: for we both hated him and his; and were dead in sins and trespasses.

Yea for All us; indefinitely: none excepted that will apprehend it faithfully. The mixture of Moses Perfume is thus sweetly allegorized God cōmands him to put in so much frankincense as Galbanum, and so much Galbanum as frankincense. Christ's Sacrifice was so sweetly tempered: as much blood was shed for the peasant in the field, as for the Prince in the Court. The offer of salvation is general: whosoever among you •...areth God, and worketh righteousness; to him is the word of this salvation sent. As there is no exemption of the greatest from misery, so no exception of the least from mercy. He that will not believe and amend, shall be condemned be he never so rich: he that doth, be he never so poor shall be saved.

This one point of the Crucifix, For us requires more punctual meditation. Whatsoever we leave vnsaid, we must not huddle up this. For indeed this brings the Text home to us, even into our consciences, & speaks effectually to us all: to me that speak, and to you that hear; with that Prophets application, Thou art the man. We are they, for whose cause our blessed Savior was crucified. For us he endured those grievous pangs for us that we might never taste them. Therefore say we with that Father Toto nobis figatur in cruce, qui totus pro nobis fixus in cruce. Let him be fixed wholly in our hearts who was wholly for us fastened on the Cross.

We shall consider the uses we are to make of this, by the ends for which Christ performed this. It serves to Save us. It serves to Moue us. It serves to Mortify us.

1. To save us. This was his purpose & performance•...l he did, all he suffered, was to redeem us. By his stripes we are healed: by his Sweat we refreshed: by his sorrows we rejoiced: by his death we saved. For even that day, which was to him Dies Luctus, the heaviest day that ever man bore; was to us Diessalutis, the accepted time, the day of salvation. The day was evil in respect of our sins & his sufferings: but eventually in regard of what he paid, and what he purchased; a good day, the best day; a day of joy and Iubilation.

But if this Salvation be wrought for us, it must be applied to us; yea to everyone of us. For that some receive more profit▪ by his passion than others, is not his fault▪ that did undergo ⟨◇⟩ , but theirs that do not undertake it; to apply it to their own conscience•... But we must not only believe this Text in gross; but let everyone take a handf•...ll out of this sheaf, & put it into his own bosom. So •...rning this F•...r us into For me. As Paul. Gal. 2. I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, & gave himself for me. Blessed faith, that into the plural Vs puts in the singular soul. Me. Se dedit pro me. Everyone is a rebel, guilty & convicted by the supreme Law; death waits to arrest us, and damnation to receive us. What should we do but pray, beseech, cry, weep, till we can get our pardon sealed in the blood of Jesus Christ: and everyone find a sure testimony in his own soul, that Christ gave himself for me.

2. This should move us: was all this done for us, and shall we not be stirred? Have ye no regard? Is it nothing to you, that I suffer such sorrow as was never suffered? All his agony, his cries, and tears, and groans, and pangs were for us: shall he thus grieve for us, and shall we not grieve for our selves? For our selves I say; not so much for him. Let his passion move us to compassion, not of his sufferings, (alas our pity can do him no good) but of our sins which caused them. Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children. For our selves: not for his paeynes▪ that are past, but for our own that should have been, and (except our faith sets him in our stead▪) shall be. Shall he •...eepe •...o us, for us, and shall we not mourn? Shall he drink so deeply to v•... in this cup of sorrow, and shall we not pledge him? Doth the wrath of God make the Son of God shri•...ke o•...t; and shall not the servants for whom he suffered t•...mble? Om•...s creatura compatitur Christ•... 〈◇〉. Every creature seems to suffer with Christ. Sun, earth, rocks, sepulchers: Solus miser 〈◇〉 non compatitur, pro quo solo Christus patitur. Only man suffers nothing, for whom Christ suffered all. Doth his passion tear the Uaile, rent the stones, cleave the rocks, shake the earth, open the graves; and are our hearts more hard then those insensible creatures, that they cannot be penetrated? Doth heaven and earth, Sun and elements, suffer with him, and is it nothing to us? We, wretched men that we are, that were the principals in this murder of Christ: whereas Judas, Caiaphas, Pilate, Soldiers, Jews, were all but accessories and instrumental causes. We may seek to shift it from our selves, & drive this heinous fact upon the Jews: but the exe•...utioner doth no•... properly k•...l the man. 〈◇〉 peccatum 〈◇〉 est. Sin, our sins were the murderers. Of us he suffered, and for us he suffered: unite th•...se in your thoughts and tell me if his passion h•...th no•... cause to move us.

And yet so obdurate are our hear•...s; that we cannot endure one hours discourse of this great business. Christ was many hours in dying for •...s, we cannot sit one hour to hear of it. O that we should find fault with heat or cold in hearkening to these heavenly •...isteries; when he endured for us such a 〈◇〉, such a sweat, such agony; that through his flesh and skin he sweat drops of blood. Doth he weep tears of gorebloud for us, and cannot we weep tears of water for our sel•...es? 〈◇〉 how would we die for him, as he died 〈◇◇〉 we are w•...ry of hearing, what he did fo•... us▪

3. This should 〈◇〉 〈◇〉 Christ delivered 〈◇〉 to death for ou•... 〈◇〉, 〈◇◇◇◇〉 us from death, and 〈◇◇〉. H•... 〈◇◇◇〉 de•...troy the devil, but to 〈◇◇◇◇◇◇〉. Neither doth he take only from 〈◇◇〉 〈◇◇〉, the power to condemn•... 〈◇〉 but 〈◇〉 〈◇◇〉, the power to rule and 〈◇〉 〈◇◇〉 Chri•... death, as it answers the Iusti•... of 〈◇〉 for 〈◇◇〉, so it must kill in 〈◇〉 the will of 〈◇〉. Christ in •...ll parts suffered, that •...e in all parts might 〈◇〉 mortified. His •...fferings were so abundant, that men c•...not know the•...r number, nor Angels their na•...ure, nei•...her 〈◇〉 nor Angels their measure. His Passion •...ound an end, our thoughts cannot. He Suffered At all times In all places In all senses In all members In body and soul also All for Vs

1. At all times: in his childhood by poverty and Herod: in the strength of his days by the powers of earth, by the powers of hell, yea even by the powers of heaven. In the day he lacks meat, in the night a pillow. Even that holy time of the great Passover is destined, for his dying. When they should kill the Paschal Lamb...be in thankfulness, they slay the Lamb of God in wickedness. They admire the shadow, yet condemn the substance. All for us; that all times might yield us comfort. So the Apostle sweetly He died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

2. In all places: in the cradle by that Fox: in the streets by revilers: in the mountain by those that would have thrown him down headlong: in the Temple by them that to...ke up stones to cast at him. In the high Priests hall by buffe...rs, in the garden by betrayers: by the way laden with his cross. Lastly in Calvary, a vild and stinking place, among the bones of malefactors, crucified. Still all for us; that in all places the mercy of God might protect us.

3. In all Sense.... For his taste, loe it is •...icted with gall & vinegar; a bitter draught for a dying man. His touch felt more; the nails driven into his hands and feet: and in those places wounded lies the greatest pain, being the most sinewy parts of the body. His Ears are full of the blasphemous contumelies, which the savage multitude belc...ed out against him. Not him, but Barabbas, they cry to Pilate; preferring a murderer before a Savior. Will you read the speeches objectual to his hearing! See Math. 27. ver. 29. 39. 42. 44. 49. In all consider their blasphemy, his patience. For his Eyes, whether can he turn them without spectacles of sorrow? The dispiht of his enemies on the one side showing their extremest malice: the weeping and L...menting of his mother on the other side; whose tears might wound his heart. If any Sense were less afflicted it was his Smelling: & yet the putrefied bones of Caluarie could be no pleasing savor.

Thus suffered all his Senses. That Taste that should be delighted with the wine of the vineyard,that goeth down sweetly, is fed with vinegar. He looks for good grapes, behold Sower grape...: he expects wine, ⟨ϕ⟩ receives vinegar. That Smell that should be refre...hed with the odor...ferous sent of the beds of spices, the piety of his Saints; is filled with the stence of iniquities. Those hands that sway the Scepter of the heaven...▪ ⟨ϕ⟩ faineto carry the Reed of Repr..., & end... the •...ailes of death. Those eyes that were as, a ⟨ϕ⟩ of Fire; in respect of whom the very Sun was darkness, must be hold the afflicting objects of shame and tyranny. Those •...ares, which to delight, the high Quorillers of heaven sing their ⟨ϕ⟩ notes, must be wearied with the taunts and ⟨ϕ⟩ of blasphemy.

And all this for us: not only to satisfy those sins which our Senses have committed; but to mortify those senses, and prese...e them from those sins. That our eyes may be no more full of adulteries, nor throw covetous looks on the goods of our brethren. That our •...ares may no more give so wide admission and welcome entrance to lewd reports, the incantations of Satan. That sin in all our senses might be done to death: the poison exhausted, the sense purified.

4. In all members. Look on that blessed Body conceived by the Holy Ghost, and borne of a pure Virgin: it is all over scourged, martyred, tortured, manacled, mangled. What place can you find free? Caput Angelic...spiritibus tremebundum densitat... spinarum pungitur: facies pulchrapr... filijs hominum Iud...orum sp...t is det...rpatur: Oculi ⟨ϕ⟩ sole in ⟨ϕ⟩ caligantur &c. To begin at his head: that head which the Angels reverence is crowned with thorns. That face, which is fairer them the sons of men, must be odiously spit on by the filthy Jews. His hands that made the heavens, are extended & fastened to a cross. The feet which tread upon the necks of his and our enemies, feel the like smart. And the mouth must be buffe...ed, which spake as never man spake.

Still all this for us. His head bled for the wicked imaginations of our heads. His face was besmeared with spittle, because we had spit impudent blasphemies against heaven. His lips were afflicted, that our lips might henceforth yield savory speeches. His feet did bleed, that our feet might not be swift to shed blood. All his members suffered for the sins of all our members: and that our members might be no more ser uants to sin: but servants to righteousness, unto holiness. Cōsp...i voluit; vt nos Lauaret: velari voluit, vt velamen ignorantia a mentibus nostris ⟨ϕ⟩ : in capite percuti, vt corpori sanitatem restitueret. He would be polluted with their spittle, that he might wash us: he would be blindfolded, that he might take the veil of ignorance from our eyes. He suffered the head to be wounded, that he might renew health to all the body.

Six times we read, that Christ shed his blood. First when he was circumcised: at eight days old his blood was spilled. 2. In his agony in the garden; where he swett drops of blood. 3. In his scourging, when the merciles tormentors fetched blood from his holy sides. 4. When he was crowned with thorns: those sharp prickles raked and harrowed his blessed head, and drew forth blood. 5. In his crucifying; when his hands & feet were pierced, blood gushed out. 6. Lastly after his death One of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side and forthwith came there out blood and water. All his members bled, to show that he bled for all his members. Not one drop of this blood was shed for himself: all for us; for his enemies, persecutors, crucifiers, our selves. But what shall become of us, if all this cannot mortify us? How shall we live with Christ, if with Christ we be not dead? Dead in deed unto sin, but living unto righteousness. As Elisha revived the Shunamites child: he lay upon it; put his mouth upon the childes mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands, and stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm: So the Lord Jesus, to recover us that were dead in our sins and trespasses, spreads and applies his whole Passion to us: lays his mouth of blessing upon our mouth of blasphemy: his eyes of holiness upon our eyes of lust: his hands of mercy upon our hands of cruelty: and stretcheth his gracious self upon our wretched selves, till we begin to wax warm, to get life, and the (holy) Spirit returns into us.

5. In his Soul. All this was but the outside of his Passion; Now is my Soul troubled, and what shall I say? Father save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour. The pain of the body is but the body of pain; the very soul of sorrow is the sorrow of the soul. All the outward afflictions were but gentle prickings in regard of that his soul suffered. The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity: but a wounded spirit who can bear? He had a heart within that suffered unseen, unknown anguish. This pain drew from him those strong cries, those bitter tears. He had often sent forth the cries of compassion: of passion and complaint not till now. He had wept the tears of pity, the tears of love; but never before the tears of anguish. When the Son of God thus cries, thus weeps, here is more then the body distressed; the soul is agonized.

Still all this for us. His Soul was in our souls stead: what would they have felt, if they had been in the stead of his. All for us; to satisfaction, to emendation. For thy drunkenness and pouring down strong drinks, he drunk vinegar. For thy intemperate gluttony, he fasted. For thy sloth, he did exercise himself to continual pains. Thou sleepest secure, thy Savior is then waking, watching, praying. Thy arms are inured to lustful embracings, he for this embraceth the rough Cross. Thou deckest thyself with proud habiliments, he is humble and lowly for it. Thou ridest in pomp, he journeys on foot. Thou wallowest on thy down beds, thy Savior hath not a pillow. Thou surfeist, and he sweats it out; a blood... sweat. Thou fillest and swellest thyself with a 〈ϕ〉 of wickedness; behold incision is made in the Head for thee; thy Savior bleeds to death. Now judge, whether this point (For us) hath not derived a near application of this▪ Text to our own consciences. Since then Christ did all this for thee and me, pray then with August. O D... Ies...; da cordi 〈ϕ〉 t... de...derare, 〈ϕ〉 q...rere, qu...rendo inuen...; i...enien do 〈ϕ〉, am...do 〈ϕϕ〉 redempta 〈ϕ〉 ...rare. Lord give me a heart to desire thee, desiring to seek thee, seeking to find thee, finding to love thee, loving no more to offend thee.

There are two main parts of this Crucifix yet to handle. I must only name them; being sorry that it is still my hap to trouble you with prolixity of speech.

6. The next is the Manner; An offering and Sacrifice. His whole life was an Offering, his death a Sacrifice. He gave himself often for us an Eucharisticall oblation, once an explator...Sacrifice. In the former he did for us all that we should do: in the latter he suffered for us all that we should suffer. Who his own self bare our sins in his own 〈ϕ〉 on the tree. Some of the Hebrews have affirmed, that in the fire which consumed the legal Sacrifices, there always appeared the face of a Lyon. Which mystery they thus resolve, that the Lyon of Judah should one day give himself for us, a perfect expiatory Sacrifice. Thus Once in the end of the world, hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

7. The last point is the Effect; Of a sweet smelling savor. Here is the fruit and efficacy of all. Never was the Lord pleased with sinful man till now. Were he never so angry, here is a pacification, a sweet savor. If the whole world were quintessenced into one per...ume, it could not yield so fragrant a smell. We are all of our selves putida & putrida cad...vera; dead and stinking carcases, the pure nostrils of the most holy cannot endure us: behold the per...ume that sweetens us, the redeeming blood of the Lord Jesus. This so fills him with a delightful sent, that he will not smell our noisome wickedness.

Let me leave you with this comfort in your bosoms. How unsavory soever our own sin... have made us, yet if our hand of faith lay hold on this Savior's censor, God will sent none of our corruptions; but we shall smell sweetly in his nostrils. Be...d for all. O dear Jesus, Mori deb...; & tusolvit: 〈ϕ〉 peccavi...us, & tu ...uis. Opus sine exemplo gratia sine merito, ch...as sine ...do. We should die, & thou payest it, we have offended, & thou art punished. A mercy without example, a favor without merit, a love without measure. Therefore I conclude my Sermon, as we all shut up our prayers, with this one clause; Through our Lord Jesus Christ. O Father of mercy accept our Sacrifice, of Prayer and Praise, for his Sacrifice of pain and merit; even for our Lord Jesus Christ his sake. To whom with the Father & blessed Spirit be all glory forever.

Amen.

THE GOOD POLITICIAN DIRECTED.

MATTH. 10. 16.

Be ye wise as Serpents, and harmless as Doves.

OV... of every creature (simply considered) there is some good to be learned. The divine Poet sweetly.

The World's a School, where in a general si...rie,

God always reads dumb l...ctures of his glory.

It is a three leave'd book, Heaven, Earth, and Sea: and every leaf of this book, every line of every leaf, every creature in this universe, can read to man, for whom they were made, a Divinity lecture. In a speaking silence they preach to us that Deity, which made both them and us, and them for us. Secul...m Speculum: the world is a glass, wherein we may behold our Creators Majesty. From the highest Angel to the lowest worm, all instruct us somewhat. For one and the same almighty hand, that made the Angels in heaven, made also the worms on earth. Non superior in illis, non inferior in istis.

Besides this general lecture, they have all their particular school. Solomon sends us to the A...t to learn Providence. Isaiah to the Ox, to learn thankfulness Many beasts do excel Man in many natural things.

Nos aper auditu praecellit, a...anea tactu,

Vultur odoratu, Lynx visu, simia gustu.

The Bore excels us in hearing, the spider in touching, the Vulture in smelling, the Lynx in seeing, the Ape in tasting. Some have observed, that the art of curing the eyes was first taken from the Swallows. The E...gles have taught us architecture: we received the light of Phlebotomie from the Hippopotamas. The Egyptian bird Ibis first gave to Physicians knowledge, how to use the Glister. The Spider taught us to Weaue. Here the Serpent instructs us in Policy, the Dove in simplicity.

Now we are fallen among Serpents, stinging serpents, enemies to man: can we fetch away any good from them? Yes, those very venomous and malicious creatures shall afford us Documenta, not Nocumenta: they shall teach us, not touch us. I may say of them, as it is said of the Jews. Hosts sunt in cordibus, suffragatores in codicibus. They are our enemies in their hearts, our friends in their books. The malice of Serpents is mortal, their use shall be vital. So it may, so it shall, if our sobriety keep the allowed compass. For our imitation is limited & qualified. We must not be in all points like Serpents, nor in all respects like Doves; but in some, but in this; Be ye wise as serpents, harmless as doves. Perhaps other uses might be accommodated. As the Serpent might teach us how with wisdom to dwell below on the earth: and the Dove with wings of innocence to fly up to heaven above. We may in earthly matters keep a serpentine and winding motion, but to heaven with the Dove we must have a strait course. But I confine myself to the pith of the Text, and our Saviors meaning. Be wise as Serpents, innocent as Doves.

The words may (not unfitly) be distinguished into a

- Perhibition.
- Cohibition:

as it were the Raines, and the Curbe. The Perhibition, allowance, or Raines; Be wise as serpents. The Cohibition, corrective, restraint, or Curbe; Be harmless as Doves.

They must go hand in hand without disjunction. Vnited they are commodious, parted dangerous. There is a necessity of their union to our peace: divide them, and you loose yourselves. Wit without innocence will offend others: Innocence without wit will not defend our selves. Prudentia sine simplicitate malitia: simplicitas sine prudentia stultitia. Wit without innocence is wickedness: innocence without wit is foolishness. Whosoever hath the one and wants the other, must needs be either guilty of folly, or of dishonesty. Least we be too crafty, and circumvent others, let us keep the innocence of the Dove: least we be too simple, and others circumvent us, let us keep the wisdom of the Serpent.

Let us first see from the Serpent, how we should be wise: and then go to the Dove for innocence. Six principal Lessons of Wisdom the Serpent may teach us.

1. Their first policy is by all possible means to defend their head. If they must encounter with danger, they expose their whole body to it; but howsoever they will safeguard their head. They write of them, that though all a serpents body be mangled, unless his head be cut off, (which he cunningly hides) by a kind of attractive power and vigor one part will come to another again.

This is to us a singular document of Wisdom, to look well to our Head. Christ is our Head; and the sinews and nerves that knitte us to him, is our Faith and Hope: let us preserve these indanted, indamaged. We fight against an enemy, that seeks especially to wound us there. He strikes indeed at every place: he hath, saith Jerome, no...ina mille, mille nocendi arts: therefore Paul chargeth us to Put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against all the w...les of the Devil: but especially the head. Above all take the shield of Faith, and the Helmet of salvation: save the Head. Protect all parts, if it be poss...le: let not oppression wound thee in the hand, nor blasphemy in the tongue, nor wantonness in the eye, nor covetousness in the heart: but howsoever shield thy head: loose not thy hope of salvation, thy faith in Jesus Christ.

Homo qui habet se, habet totum inse; said the Philosopher. He that hath himself, hath all in himself. But ill habet se, qui habet Christum, & ill habet Christum, qui habet fidem. He hath himself that hath Christ, and he hath Christ that hath faith. Whatsoever you loose, loose not this: though you loose your loves, though you loose your lives▪ keep the faith. I will trust in thee, though thou kill me, saith Job. I have kept the faith, saith Paul; though I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus. If insatiate death be let alone, to cut us into pieces with the sword, to grind us into the mawes of beasts, to burn us in the fire to ashes: yet so long as our head Christ is safe, he hath the Serpents attractive power to draw us to him. Father, I will that they whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am. The more we are cut off, the more we are united: death, whiles it strives to take us from him, sends us to him. Keep faith in the Head. With what mind soever Seneca wrote it, I know to good use I may speak it. Malo mihi successum deesse, quam-fidem. I rather want success, then faith. Fidem qui perdidit, nil habet ultra quod perdat. He that hath lost his faith, hath nothing else to loose. But it is the Lord, that preserves the head. O God the strength of my salvation: thou hast covered my •...ead in the day of battle.

2. The next Policy in Serpents is to stop their •...ares against the noise of the charmers. This is one of the similitudes which the Psalmist gives between the wicked and Serpents. Their poison is like the poison of a Serpent: they are like the deaf adder that stoppeth her •...are. Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so Wisely. This charming as they write, was invented in the Eastern countries, where they were pestered with abundance of serpents. Which music the Serpent hearing, wisely distrusting his own strength▪ thinks it the surest course to stop his •...ares. This he doth by couching one •...are close to the ground and covering the other with his voluminous tail.

The incantations of this world are as often sung to us, as those charms to the Serpents: but we are not so wise as Serpents to avoid them. Sometimes a Siren sings us the charms of lust; and thus a weak woman overcomes him that overcame the strong Lyon.

Lenam non potuit, potuit superare Leaenam.

Quem fera non valuit vincere, vicit hera.

Says the Epigrammatist. He goeth after her straight way: though her house•... the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death. Sometimes Satan comes to us like a gold-finch, and whistles us a note of usury, to the tune of ten in the hundred; we are caught presently, and fall a dancing after his pipe. Sometimes like Alecto, he charms us a Madrigall of revenge for private wrongs: instantly we are caught with malice, destruction sits in our looks. Not seldom he comes to a man with a drunken caroll (lay thy penny to mine, and we will to the wine) he is taken suddenly; he runs to it though he reels from it. He sings the slothful a Dormi secure and he will sleep, though his damnation sleepeth not. Yea there are not wanting, that let him sing a song of blasphemy, they will swear with him. Let him begin to rail, they will libel with him. Let his incantation be treason, and they will answer him in gunpowder. Yea let him charm with a Charme, awitlesse, senceles sorcery; and if a tooth aches, or a hog groans, they will admit it, admire it. Of such folly the very serpents shall condemn us.

But as open •...ar'd as men are to these incantations of the Devil and sin; let the musical bells of Aaron be rung, the sweet songs of Zion sung, they will not listen: they will not be charmed, with all our cunning. So that we shall be faint to send them to the Judgment seat of God, with this scrole on their forehead; Noluerunt incantari: Lord, we have done our best; but this people would not be charmed.

3. Their third Policy. They fly men's society, as known enemies; and rather choose a wilderness; seeking peace among briars and thorns. And may they not herein teach us, with Moses, rather to choose affliction in a wilderness with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleasure of sin for a season. Much hath been, and may be said, to lessen men's dotage to the world; and yet one word I must add; Non quia vos nostra sperem prece posse moveri.

Did ever any of you know what the peace of conscience, and joy of the holy Ghost is? whiles that comfort and iubilation dwelt in your heart, I ask you how the world stood in your sight? Stood it not like a deformed witch, devils sucking on her breasts; a shoale of ugly sins sitting like screechowles on her head; blood and massacres besmearing her face; lies, blasphemies, perjuries waiting at her back; extortion and oppression hanging on her arms; wickedness and wretchedness filling both her hands; the cries, groans, and imprecations of widows and orphans sounding in her ears; heaven thundering vengeance on her head; and the enlarged gates of the infernal pit yawning to entertain her.

Is this your Paramour, O ye worldlings? Is this the beauty you hazard a soul to get? O munde immunde; evil favored world, that thou shouldst have so many lovers! Ecceruinusus est mundus, & si... amatur: quidsi perfectus esset? Quid for...osus faceret, quum deformis sic adoratur? If the world being ruinous so pleaseth men, what would it do if it were sound and perfect? If it were fair and beauteous how would we dote on it, that thus love it deformed? But how rare a man is he, Qui nihil habet commune cum seculo! that hath no communion with this world! That retires himself, like the Serpent; and doth not intricate his mind in these worldly snares! who does not watch with envy, nor travel with avarice, nor clime with ambition, nor sleep with lust under his pillow•

But for all this Vincet amor mundi: money and wealth must be had, though men refuse no way on the left hand to get it. We may charge them Nummos propter Deum expendere, to lay out their wealth for God's sake: but they will Deum propter nummos colere, worship God for their wealths sake. We say let the world wait upon religion: they say, let religion wait upon the world. You talk of heaven & a kingdom; but Tutius h... c...lum, quod br...uis •...ca tenet. That heaven is surest, think they, that lies in their coffers. As those two Giants bound Mars in chains, and then sacrificed to him: so men first coffer up their wealth, & then worship it. Or if they suffer it to pass their lock & key, yet they bind it in strong chains and charms of usury to a plentiful return.

Enough is a language they will never learn, till they come to hell: where their bodies shall have enough earth, their souls enough fire. There are four adverbs of quantity: Parum, Nihil,

Nimis, Satis. Little, nothing, Two much, Enough. The last that is the best is seldom found. The poor have Little: the beggar nothing: the rich two much: but Cui satis? who hath Enough? Though they have too much, all is too little; nothing is enough. Quid satis est▪ si Roma parum? What is enough, if all Rome be too little; said the Poet. But the world it self could not be enough to such. Aestuatur in foelix angusto limite mundi. The covetous man may habere quod voluit, nunquam quod vult, he may enjoy what he desired, never what he desireth: for his desires are infinite. So their abundance, which God gave them to help others out of distress▪ plungeth themselves into destruction: as Pharaohs Chariot drew his master into the sea. In the Massilian sea, saith, Bernard, scarce one ship of four is cast away: but in the sea of this world scarce one soul of four escapes.

4. Their next Policy. When they swim, though their bodies be plunged down, yet they still keep their head above the water. And this lesson of their wisdom I would direct to the Riotous, as I did the former to the Covetous. Which vicious affections, though in themselves opposite: (for the covetous think Prodigum Prodigium, the Spender a wonder: and the prodigal think Parcum Porcum, the niggard a hog) yet either of them both may light his candle at the lamp of the Serpents wisdom: and learn a virtue they have not.

Though you swim in a full sea of delights, yet be sure to keep your heads up for fear of drowning. It is natural to most sensiti•...e crea•...res to bear up their heads above the floods: yet in the stream of pleasures foolish man commonly sinks. If I had authority, I would here bid Gluttony & Drunkenness stand forth; & hear themselves condemned by a Serpent. If the belly have any ⟨ϕ⟩ let it hear & not suffer the head of the body •...ch ⟨ϕ⟩ the head of the soul Reason, to be drowned in a puddl•... of riot. Multafercula, multos ⟨ϕ⟩ . Many dishes many diseases. Gluttony was ever a friend to ⟨ϕ⟩ . But for the throa•...s indulgence. Paracelsus for all his Mercury had died a beggar. Intemperance lies most commonly sick on a down bed; not on a padde of straw. Ay me's, and groans are soonest heard in rich men's houses. Gowtes Pleurisies, dropsies, fevers, surfeits, are but the consequents of epicurisme.

Qu•... nisi diuitibus nequeunt conting•...re ⟨ϕ⟩ .

A Divine Poet morrally.

We seem ambitious, God's whole work t' vndo•....

Of nothing he made us, and we strive two,

To bring our selves to nothing back: and we Do what we can, to do it as soon as he.

We complain of the shortness of our lives, yet take the course to make them shorter.

Neither is the corporal head only thus intoxicate, and the senses drowned in these deluges of riot: but Reason the head of the Soul, and Grace the head of Reason is over whelmed. Rarum ⟨ϕ⟩ •...ine vitio ⟨ϕ⟩ convitio. Reuellers and Reuilers are wonted companions. When the belly is made a Crassus, the tongue is turned into a Caesar, and taxeth all the world. Great feasts are not without great danger. They serve not to suffice nature, but to nourish corruption. Luk. 2. Joseph and Mary went up to Jerusalem to the feast with Jesus: but there they lost Jesus. Twelve years they could keep him, but at a feast they lost him. So easily is Christ lost at a feast. And it is remarkable there. ver. 46. that in the Temple they found him again. Jesus Christ is often lost at a banquet: but he is ever found in the temple Jude speaks of some, that feast without fear. They suspect not the loss of Christ at a banquet. But Job feared his children at a feast. It may be my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts. Let us suspect these riotous meetings; lest we do not only swim, but sink. Let us be like the Deere, who are ever most fearful at their best feeding. <sup>d</sup> Let us walk humbly as in the day: not in rioting and drunkenness, that were to feast the world: not in chambering and wantonness, that were to feast the flesh: not in strife and envying, that were to feast the devil.

I know there be some, that care not what be said against eating, so you meddle not with their drink. Who cry out like that German, at a great Tourneament at Court, when all the spectators were pleased: Valeant Ledi (∞) : farewell that sport, where there is no drinking. I will say no more to them; but that the Serpents head keeps the upper hand of the waters, but drink gets the upper hand of their heads. How (∞) is this: Sobrij serpentes, homines! Sober serpents, and drunken men. The Serpent is here brought to teach wisdom: and to be sober, is to be wise. The Philosopher so derives wisdom in his Ethick's. ( in non-Latin alphabet ) . . . .st quasi ( in non-Latin alphabet ) . Or as another, quia ( in non-Latin alphabet ) .

5. The fifth instance of their wisdom propounded to our imitation, is vigilancy. They see a little: and then hasten, when they suspect the (∞) of danger. A prudent woe out following: See that ye walk circumspectly; not foolishly, but as wise Carry your eyes in your own heads; not like those in a box. Nor, like a Prince, that is not suffered to see but through spectacles. Be watchful, saith our Saviour: ye know not when your master will come. 1. Pet. 5. 8. Be vigilant, because your adversary the Devil, as a roaring Lyon walketh about, seeking whom he may devour.

These are two main motives to watchfulness. First our Landlord is ready to come for his rent. Secondly our enemy is ready to assault our fort. And let me add; the Tenement we dwell in is so weak and ruinous, that it is ready to drop down about our ears. He that dwells in a rotten house, dares scarce sleep in a tempestuous night. Our bodies are earthly decayed, or at least decaying Tabernacles: every little disease like a storm, totters us. They were indeed at first strong cities: but we then by sin made them forts of rebels. Whereupon our offended Liege sent his Sariant death, to arrest us of high treason. And though for his mercies sake in Christ he pardoned our sins, yet he suffers us no more to have such strong houses: but lets us dwell in thack'd cottages▪ paper walls, mortal bodies.

Have we not then cause to watch; least our house, whose foundation is in the dust, fall; and the fall thereof be great? Shall we still continue sine motu, perhaps sine dormitantes? It is a fashion in the world to let Leases for three lives: as the Divine Poet sweetly.

So short is life, that every Tenant strives,
In a torn house or field to have three lives.

But God lets none for more then one life: and this expired, there is no hope to renew the lease. He suffers a man sometimes to dwell in his T•...nement threesc•...re and ten years; sometimes fourscore: till the house be ready to drop down, like mellow fruit. But he secures none for a month, for a moment. Other farmers know the date of their leases, and expiration of the years: man is merely a Tenant at will; and is thrust often sedibus adibus, at less then an hours warning.

We have then cause to watch. I sleep, but mine heart waketh: saith the Church. If temptation do take us napping, yet let our hearts wake. Simon, Dormis? Sleep•...st thou, •...eter? Indeed there is a time for all things: and sometimes sleep and rest is Dabile and Laudabile; necessary and profitable. But now Simon, when thy Lord is ready to be given up into the hands of his enemies, when the hour and power of darkness is instant, when the great work of salvation is to be wrought; Simon sleepest thou? Thou that hast promised to suffer with me, canst thou not watch with me? Quomodo morieris, qui sp•...ctare & expectare nonpotes? Beloved, let us all watch; that Jesus, who was then when Peter slept, ready to suffer: is now, though we all sleep, ready to judge quick and dead.

6. The last general point of Wisdom we will learn from them, is this. As they once a year slip off their old coat, and renew themselves: so let us cast off the old man, and the garment spotted of the flesh (more speck led with lusts then the skin of any Serpent) and be renewed in our mind, to serve God in the holiness of truth.

The Grecians have a fabulous reason of this renovation of serpents. Once mankind strove earnestly with the God's by supplication, for Perpetual youth. It was granted; and the rich tr•...sure being lapped up, was laid upon an Ass to be carried among men. The silly beast being sore thirsty came to a fountain to drink: the keeper of this fountain was a Serpent; who would not suffer the Ass to drink, unless he would give him his burden. The Ass, both ready to faint for thirst, and willing to be lighted of his lode, condescended. Hereby the Serpent got from man perpetual youth. Indeed the serpent changeth his age for youth, and man his youth for age. And the Ass for his punishment, is more tormented with thirst then any other beast. The serpent may thus get the start of a man for this world; but when he dyes, he dies for e•...er; life never returns. But we shall put off, not the skin, but this mortal body: and so be clothed with im•...ortalitie and eternal life above: we shall be young again in heaven.

Only death adds t'our strength: nor are we grown:

In stature to be men, till we are none.

Let this answer the Poet.

Anguibus exuitur tenui cum pelle vetustas:

Cur nos angust a conditione su...us?

Why do serpents repair themselves, and man decay? The answer is easy and comfortable when there shall be new heavens and new earth, we shall have new bodies. They have here new bodies, and we old bodies: but there we shall have new bodies when they are no bodies.

But to our purpose. They write that the Serpent gets him to some narrow passage, as between two sticks, & so slips off his skin. And this is called Sp...lium serpentis, or v...rnatio serpentis. If we would cast off our old coat, which is corrupt according to deceitful lusts, we must pass through a narrow gate; as it were two trees; faith and repentance. Heaven is called new Jerusalem: you cannot creep through those new doors with your old sins on your backs. Be no Gibeonites: God will not be cozened with your old Garments. Put them off, saith Paul: put them off, and cast them away: they are not worthy mending. None are made of Satan's slaves, God's sons; but they must put off their old livery, which they wore in the Devils service; the cognizance of Mammon. Let him that is in Christ be a new creature. Old things are passed away: behold, all things are become new. I saw, saith S. John, Nouum Coelum &c. a new heaven, and new earth. For whom provided? for new creatures.

Envy this ye worldlings, but strive not in your lower pomps to equal it. Could you change robes with Solomon. and dominions with Alexander, you could not match it. But quake at your doom, ye wicked Top... is ord...ed of old. Old hell for old sinners. But which way might a man turn his eyes to behold this Renouation. Nil ...i vid... , nil n...ui audio. The hand is old, it extorts: the tongue is old, it swears. Our usuries are still on foot to hunt the poor: our gluttonies look not leaner: our drunkenness is thirsty still: our security is not waked. Old Idols are in our inward and better temples. Our iniquities are so old and ripe; that they are not only alb... ad messem, white to the harvest: but even sicca ad ignem, dry for the fire.

Not only Serpents, but diverse other creatures have their turns of renewing. The Eagle reneweth her bill, saith the Prophet: our Grand-mother earth becomes new: and to all her vegetative children the Spring gives a renovation. Only we her ungracious Sons remain old still. But how shall we expect hereafter new glorified bodies, unless we will have here new sanctified souls? In Christ Jesus neither Circumcision availeth any thi...g, nor  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  ; but a new creature. And as many as w...like according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.

I have taught you, according to my poor meditations, some Wisedo... from the Serpent. Augustine gives 6. or 7. other instances, worthy your observation, and imitation; which I must pesse over in silence. The  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  challengeth some piece of my discourse: for I dare not give you the Raynes, and let you go without the Curbe. And yet I shall hold you a little longer from it: for as I have shown you some good in Serpents, that you may follow it: so I must show you some evil in them, that you may eschew it. The vicious and obnoxious affections of Serpents, have more followers then their virtues. These instances are of the same number with the former.

1. The Serpent, though creeping on the dust, hath a lofty spirit; reaching not only at men, but even at the birds of the air. And here he is the Ambitious man's emblem. He was bred out of the dust, yet he catcheth a... Lordships and honors: ransackes the City, forredges th... Country, scowres it through the Church; but his arrand is to the Court. He is the maggot of pride, begot out of corruption: and looks in an office, as the Ape did when he had got on the robes of a Senator.

2. Their flattery or treachery: they embrace, whiles they sting. They lie in ⟨◇⟩ green grass, and under sweet flowers, that they may wound the suspectless passenger. Here I will couple the Serpent with the Flatterer; a human beast, and of the two the more dangerous. And that fitly; for they write of a Serpent, whose sting hath such force, that it makes a man die laughing. So the fla...erer tickles a man to death. Therefore his tears are called Crocodile lacrimae; the Crocodiles tears. When h... weeps, he wounds. Every frown he makes, gives his Patron a vomit: and every candle of commendation a purge. His Church is the Kitchen, his tongue is his Cater; his young Lord his God; whom at once he worships, and worreys. When he hath gotten a lease, he doth no longer fear his master: nay more, he fears not God.

3. Their ingratitude; they kill those that nourished them. And here I rank with Serpents those prodigies of nature, unthankful persons. Seneca says they are worse. Venenum qu...d serpentes in alienam pernici...m proferunt, fine s... continent. No... ita vitium ingr...itudinis continetur. The poison which a Serpent casts out to the danger of another, he retains without his own. But the vice of ingratitude cannot be so smothered. Let us hate this sin, not only for others sake, but most for our own.

4. Their voracitie; they kill more then they can eat. And here they would be commended to the Engrossers: who hoard more then they can spend, that the poor might st...ue for lack of bread. Such a man (if he be not ⟨◇⟩ a Serpent, a Devil then man) makes his Almanac his Bible: if it prognosticate rain on Swithi...s day, he loves and believes it beyond the Scripture. Nothing in the whole Bible pleaseth him, but the story of Pharaohs dream; where the seven lean Kine did eat up the seven fat ones. He could wish that dream to be true every year; so he might have grain enough to sell. He cries out in his heart for a dear year, and yet he is never without a dear year in his belly. Solomon says, the people shall curse him: and I am sure God will not bless him: but he fears neither of these so much as a cheap year.

5. Their hostility and murderous minds: they destroy all, to multiply their own kind. And for this I will bring the depopulator to shake hands with serpents. For he cannot abide neighbors. If any man dwells in the Town besides himself, how should he do for elbow room? There are too many of these Serpents in England: I would they were all exild to the wilderness; where they might have room enough, and none to trouble them, except of their own generation, Serpents. They complain eagerly against our negligence in discovering new parts of the world: but their meaning is to rid this land of Inhabitants. They have done their best, or rather their worst: when as in my memory from one town in one day were driven out above threescore souls: harbourlesse, succorless, exposd to the bleak air and unmerciful world: besides those that could provide for themselves. But the Lord of heaven sees this: the clamours of many poor debtors in the Dungeon, of many poor laborers in the field, of many poor neighbors crying and dying in the streets, have entered the •...ares of the Lord of hosts, & he will judge it. Thou hast seen it, for thou beholdest mischief and spite, to requite it: the poor committeth himself unto thee, thou art the helper of the f...herlesse.

6. Lastly, their en•...itie against Man, whom they should reverence▪ which we sorely found, and cannot but think of, quoti•...s ⟨ϕ⟩ •...picati p•...i: as often as we remember that •...ieapple. Aelia•...s and Pl•...e report, that when a serpent hath killed a man, he can never more cover himself in the earth: but wanders up and down like a forlorn thing: the earth disdainig to receive into her bowels a man murderer. The male doth not acknowledge the •...ale, nor the female the male, that hath done such a deed. Since therefore they rebel against Man whom they should honor let me yoke with them Traitors, Seminaries, and Renegates, that refuse allegiance to their Lieges & So•...alnes. Will they say▪ ⟨ϕ⟩ Prince may loose Ius regni, the right of his kingdom, per ⟨ϕ⟩ regnandi, by reigning with injustice & ⟨ϕ⟩ ? and so they are absolved of their obedience? But how haps it that the Scripture never knew this distinction? Saul though guilty of all sins against the first Table yet exsolo ⟨ϕ⟩ •...is ch•...ctere, might not be deposed: but David calls him Christum Do•..., the Lord's Anointed. If the Prince be an offender, must they punish? Who gave them that authority? No •...cit ⟨ϕ⟩ in ⟨ϕ⟩ , quod Deum expect•... ⟨ϕ⟩ . It is eno•...gh for him, that he look for God to be his Judge. O but when the Popes excommunication thund•...rs, it is no sin to decrowne Kings. So super st•...tiously they follow the Pope, that they forsake Christ; and will not give C•...sar his due. They are the fire brands and bustuaries of Kingdoms; Serpents hidden in Ladies and Gentlewomens chambers: in a word▪ long spoones for traitors to feed with the Devil.

You see also now Quid ⟨ϕ⟩ . There is poison in Serpents now told you, leave that: there is Wisdom to be learned from Serpents before shown you, study that. Every vice you nourish, is a venomous stinging serpent in your own bosoms. If you will have hope of heaven, ⟨1 page duplicate⟩ ⟨1 page duplicate⟩ expel those Serpents. I have read of a contention between Scotland and Ireland, about a little Island: either challenging it theirs. It was put to the decision of a French-man: who caused to be put into the Island living Serpents. Arbitrating it thus; that if those Serpents lived and prospered there, the ground was Scotlands: if they died, Irelands. If those serpentine sins, lusts, and lewdness, live •...d thrive in your hearts, Satan will challenge you for his dominion. If they perish and die through mortification, and by reason of the pure air of God's holy Spirit in you, the Lord seals you up for his own inheritance.

I have given you the Raines at large: let me give but one pull at the Curbe, and you shall go. The Cohibition is, Be harmless as Doves. In Doves there be some things to be eschewed, many things to be commonded: one thing to be followed. The Dove is a timorous and faint hearted creature. Ephr•... is like a silly Dove, without heart. Be not ye so. In Doves there are many things commendable; but I will but name them, regarding the limits of both my Text and Time.

1. Beauty▪ By that name Christ praiseth the beauty of his Spouse. Thou art fair my L...e, my Dove, &c. Thou ...ast Doves 〈ϕ〉 within thy l...kes. And the Church praiseth her Savior. His eyes are as the eyes of Doves by the rivers of water, washed with milk, ...d fitly set; as a precious stone in the foil of a Ring. A white dove is a pleasing sight, but not like a white soul.

2. Chastity. Nescit adu...erij fla...am inte...erata Columba. The Dove knows not the luxurious pollution of an adulterate bed. Who ever saw Dove sick of that lustful disease. Happy body that hath such continency: and blessed soul which shall be presented a pure virgin to Jesus Christ. They are virgins; and follow the Lamb whether s...ever he goeth.

3. Fruitfulness. Most months in the year they bring forth young. The faithful are in this respect Doves: for faith is ever pregnant of good works, travels with them, and on all occasions brings them forth.

4. Amitie. They love their own mates; not changing till death give one of them a bill of divorce. G...mit ...urtur: the turtle groans when he hath lost his mate. Nature teacheth them, what Reason above nature, and Grace above Reason, teacheth us; to rejoice with the wives of our youth.

5. Unity. They live, feed, fly by companies. Many of them can agree quietly in one house. Even teaching us, how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. That as we have one hop..., so to have one heart. Therefore the holy Ghost came down in the likeness of a Dove, of all birds: and it was the Dove that would not leave Noah's Ark.

But these are but circumstances; my C...nter is their Innocence. Columba simplex est animal, felle caret, rostro non l...dit. Other fowls have their talons and beaks, whereby they gripe and devour, like userers and oppressors in a Common-wealth. The Dove hath no such weapon to use, no such heart to use it. They write that she hath no gall; and so free from the bitterness of anger. Talem Columbam audi...imus, non talem hominem. We have heard of such a Dove, not of such a Man. Who can say, he hath innocent hands, and a simple heart? Indeed none perfectly in God's sight: yet some have had, and may have this in part, by the witness of their own consciences. Samuel could challenge the Israelites to accuse him; Whose ...xe have I taken? Whom have I defrauded? Of whose h...d ha...e I received any bribe? And Job sweetly; My heart shall not condemn me for my days. If I have lift up my hand against the fatherless let it be broken. If I rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me. (For that is true Innocence, saith Augustine, quae nec inimico nocet; that hurts not our very enemy. If my land cry against me, or the furrows thereof complain. Let thistles grow instead of wheat, and cockles instead of barley. How few amongst us dare thus plead! So David. O Lord, thou knowest mine innocenc....

O blessed testimony. This is Munus a...eneus, a wall of brass about a man. In 〈ϕ〉 sper...re bonum, nisi innocens, n... potest. To hope for good in the midst of evils, no man can but the Innocent. He goes fearless of danger, though not secure. Impavidum ferient ruinae. Ne... suspectus est pa..., quod se non 〈ϕ〉 fecisse. He cannot look to suffer that wrong, which he knows he hath not done. Innocence▪ saith Chrysoft. is free in servitude, safe in danger, joyful in bonds. Cum humiliatur, erigitur: •...um pugnat, vincit: cum occiditur, coronatur. When it is cast down, it is raised up: when it fights, it conquers: when it is killed, it is crowned.

This is that •...elesnes which must be joined with the Serpents Wisdom. So Paul to his Romans. I would h•...ue you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. This is an excellent mixture, saith Gregor. Vt simplicitatem (ϕ) ast•...ia▪ serpentis instrueret: vt serpentis astut•... simplicitas colu•...•...emperaret. That the wisdom of the Serpent might instruct the simplicity of the Dove: that the Doves simplicity might temper the Serpents policy. So •...eda on the first of Job. Job is said to be simple and upright: simple in innocence, upright in discreet equity. Simplex quia alijs non l•...dit, rectus quia se ab alijs non corrumpi (ϕ) . Simple in that he did not hurt others, upright in that he suffered not himself to be corrupted by others. Non mul•...ùm distat in vitio, aut decipere, aus decipiposse. There is small difference in that vice, which either deceives. or may be deceived. The one is weakness, the other wickedness.

This is that grace, to which the gates of heaven stand open, Innocence. But alas▪ where shall the robbers and workers of violence appear?

What shall become of the usurer? No creature in heaven or earth shall testify his innocence. But the sighs, cries, and groans of undone parents, of beggared widows and Orphans shall witness the contrary. All his money, like Heme seed, is sowed with curses: and every obligation is written on earth with ink and blood, and in hell with blood and fire.

What shall become of the Encloser of Commons? Who shall plead his innocence? Hedges, ditches, fields, and towns; the weeping of the poor, the very lowings of beasts shall witness against him.

Where shall fraud, cozenage, racking of rents, injury, perjury, mischief appear? You may conceal your craft from the eyes of man; defraud the minister, beguile your neighbor, impoverish the Common-wealth, vnperceiued, unpunished: but know that the Lord will not hold you innocent.

I conclude; Make you the picture of Innocence, and hang it in your houses: but especially draw it in the table of your hearts. Let it be a Virgin fair and lovely, without any spot of wrong to blemish her beauty. Let her garments be white as snow, and yet not so white as her conscience. Let the tears of compassion drop from her eyes, and an Angel holding a bottle to catch them. Let her weep, not so much for her own afflictions, as for the wickedness of her afflictors. Let the ways be milk where she sets her foot, and let not the earth complain of her pressure. Let the Sun offer her his beams, the clouds their rain, the ground her fruits, every creature his virtue. Let the poor bless her: yea, let her very enemies be forced to praise her. Let the world be sommoned to accuse her of wrong, and let none be found to witness it. Let peace lie in her lap, and Integrity between her breasts. Let religion kiss her lips, and all Laws reverence her. Patience possess her heart, and humility sit in her eyes. Let all Christians make her the precedent of their lives; and study the doctrine that her mouth teacheth. Let the Angels of heaven be her guardians; and the mercy of God a shield of defense unto her. Let her tread upon injury, and stamp the Devil and violence under her feet. Let her greatest adversaries, Oppression and Hypocrisy, fly from her presence. Let rapine, malice, extortion, depopulation, fraud, and wrong, be as far removed from her, as hell is from heaven. Let the hand of mercy dry her eyes, and wipe away her tears. Let those glorious spirits lift her up to the place of rest. Let heaven add to her beauty, Immortality set her in a throne of joy, and Eternity crown her with glory. Whether may all her children follow her, through the blood and merits of that most innocent Lamb Jesus Christ.

Amen.

THE WAY HOME.

MATTH. 2. 12.

And being warned of God in a dream, that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own Country another way.

WHen these Wise men had presented to Christ their gifts; (which indeed he first gave them; for the earth is his, and the fullness thereof: yet) he rewards them. They emptied their Treasures of Gold, Myrrh, and Frankincense. and he filled the treasure of their hearts with heavenly graces.

For their Gold, he returns them pure wisdom. They were called Wise men before; but their wisdom was infernal, downwards to hell, perhaps consulting with Devils. Now he gives them Wisdom from above, pure and refined as gold.

For their Frankincense, he purgeth them of their former superstitious Idolatries, from sacrificings to Satan: and instructs them to whom frankincense is due, and all other offerings of piety; to their Creator and Savior.

For their Myrrh, he gives them Charity, a true love to him, that so truly loved them; and for his sake a love to others. They made then a blessed exchange with Christ; when for Gold, Frankincense, Myrrh, they received Wisdom, Devotion, Charity.

Now to testify how highly the Lord favored them, he speaks to them in a dream, and reveals his mind for the safety of his Son; that they should not return to Herod. And to witness how truly they served the Lord, they gave obedience. They departed into their own country another way.

The whole may be distinguished into

An	Informing	into a	word
Performing	work

God gives the word, the Magi do the work. God doth inform, and they perform. He instructeth, and they execute. He gives direction, they obedience. His word, informance, instruction, direction is. He warned them in a dream, that they should not return to Herod. Their work, performance, pliable obedience.

They departed into their country another way.

In the direction or monition Informing are considerable these three circumstances:

The

- Men, Wise men, Magicians.
- Manner, In a dream.
- Matter, That they should not return to Herod.

The Persons to whom God gave this admonition, are expressly called Wise men. Some say, they were also Great men. If so, then was this revelation made

- Potentibus.

1. To great men. It is the opinion of some, that these magi were kings: & that the Evangelist in calling them wise men, gave them a more honorable title, than if he had called them kings. So Ludolphus says, that Magus was in those days more noble than Magnus. But we must know, who they are that thus style them: Friars & Jesuits, such as can by no means endure the superiority of Princes. That are Derisores hominum maxim potentū. Hereon some of them have mooted strange problemes able to fill whole volumes. An Sacerdotes Regibus praeferendi. Whether Priests be not above kings. But still the conclusion is against Princes. Some more moderate on that side have confessed them not Reges, but Regulos, little kings, petit Princes. Like those one & thirty kings, that conspired against Joshua. Or those fifty that met at Troy. There is a kind of king in France, whom the common people call, Le Roy Dlynetot. But that these were but three in number, and kings in power, it may be painted in a popish window, is not in Catholics bible, therefore needs not be in a Christians creed.

2. Howsoever these Magi were Potentis, or no, they were Potentis. Though they were great men, yet they humbly seek the greatest of men, yea the great God, Jesus. And behold, graciously the Lord offers himself to their search: according to his infallible promise, that he will be found out of all that seek him Dedit aspicientibus intellectum, qui praestitit signum: & quod fecit intelligi, fecit inquiri. So he offers himself to all faithful searchers. But we cannot find him we seek, unless he find us first: that came to seek & to save that which was lost. We seek in vain, unless we seek him: & we seek him in vain, unless he find us. Nos ad se quarendum suscitatur ad inveniendum porrigit. He stirs up our hearts to seek him, & offers himself to be found. There was never faithful heart sought the Lord Jesus, but he found him whom his soul loved. His patience might be exercised, his fidelity tried, his desires extended, by God's hiding himself for a season. In the night of obscurity, security, ignorance, he may miss him. ver. 1.

Though he enquire among the deepest Philosophers, & honestest worldlings. ver. 2. he may not find him. But. ver. 3. the watchmen will bring him to him: yea ver. 4. Christ himself will appear in gracious mercy. He may say for a while, as the Poet of Anchises.

Quaregio Christum? quis habet locus? Illius ergo Venimus. Where is Christ! in what country may I find him? But the Lord Jesus will reveal himself: yea meet him half way, as the merciful father met his unthrifty Son when he returned. We shall conclude with joy: We have found the Messias: even him of whom Moses in the Law, and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth.

You hear the Persons to whom this admonition was given: the next Circumstance is

The Manner. In a dream.

I might here enter into a cloudy and confused discourse of Dreams, till I brought you all asleep. But I love not to fetch any boats, when there is a nearer way. Herein I may say with Augustine. I would to God I could discern between dreams.

Some are

- Natural.
- Preternaturall.
- Supernatural.

1. Natural: and such arise either from

- Complexion
- Affection

1. From complexion or constitution. The Sanguine hath merry dreams: the melācholy sorrowful dreams the Cholericke dreams of fire, and such turbulent thoughts: the Phlegmatic, of rain, of floods; and such warry objects. And as these elemental humors do abound in a man, the dreams have a stronger force, and more violent perturbation.

2. From Affection: what a man most desires, he soonest dreams of.

Omnia quae sensu voluuntur vota diurno,

Men's tamen ad silvas & sua lustra redit.

Gaudet amans furto: permutat nauit a merces:

Et vigil elapsas quarit a...arus opes.

So Augustine. S... nascitur ex studi...s praeteritis. what man desires in the day, he dreams in the night. The hunters mind is in the forest, whiles his wearied bones are reposed on a soft bed.

The soldier dreams of batteries, assault•..., encounters: the Lawyer of quirkes and demurs: the citizen of tricks and frauds: the musician of crotchets, the Seminary of equivocations. The glutton Epicure dreams of dainty dishes and fat morsels. The thirsty drunkard dreams of his licour, and behold he drinketh; but awake, his thirst is not satisfied. The usurer dreams of his trunckes, & that he is telling his gold: and starts, as if every rat were a thief breaking in upon him. The timorous dream that they are flying before ouertaking danger. The Lustful imagines his desired embracings. The angry that he is fighting killing, spoiling. The secure, that they are wilstling, singing, dancing. The ielous man dreams of his wives errors, when she lies chastely by his side. The ambitious, that he is kissing the kings hand, and mounted into the saddle of honor. The overcharged mind dreams of his employment. For a dream cometh through the multitude of business.

2. Preternatural: and these are either Ad

- Errorem
- Terrorem

Whereof the first is wrought by Satan Permittente Deo God suffering it. The second by God mediante Diabolo, Satan being a mediate instrument.

1. There are Dreams for Error, wrought by the mere illusion of Satan: whom God once suffered to be a lying Spirit in the mouth of 400. Prophets. He working upon man's affections, inclinations, and humors, causeth in them such dreams, as seduce them to wickedness, and induce them to wretchednes. They write of one Amphiaraus, an Argive Soothsayer, that by a dream he was brought to the Theban voyage; where Hiatu terrae absorbetur; he was swallowed up of the earth. So Pharaohs Baker was encouraged to hopeful error by a dream. So was that monstrous host of Midian overthrown by a Dream of a Barley cake, that hit a Tent, and overwhelmed it: which was interpreted the Sword of Gideon.

2. For Terror. Job says, that Deus terret per somnia, & per visiones horrorem incuiit. God strikes terror into the hearts of the wicked by Dreams. As a Malus genius is said to appear to Brutus the night before his death: or as the face of Hector was presented to Andromache. Polydore virgil records the dream of that bloody tyrāt, Richard 3. that in a dream the night before the battle of Bosworth field, he thought all the devils in hell were haling and tugging him in pieces: and all those whom he had murdered, crying & shricking out vengeance against him. Though he thinks this was more then a dream. Id credo non fuisse somnium, sed conscientiam seelerū He judged it not so much a dream, as the guilty conscience of his own wickedness. So to Robert Winter, one of the powder-traitors, in a dream appeared the gastly figures and distracted visages of his chief friends and confederates in that treason; not unlike the very same manner, wherein they after stood on the pinnacles of the Parliament house.

3. Supernatural; such as are sent by divine inspiration, and must have a divine interpretation, Such were the dreams of Pharaoh expounded by Joseph: the dreams of Nebuchadnezzar declared by Daniel. Of these were two sortes.

1. Some were mystical: such as those two kings dreams; and Pharaohs two officers: whose exposition is only of God. So Joseph answers; Are not interpretations of the Lord? So Nebuchadnezzar to Daniel. Thou art able, for the spirit of the holy God is in thee. The Sorcerers and Astrologers dearly acknowledged their ignorance with their lives. Thus Pharaoh may dream, but it is a Joseph that must expound it. It is one thing to have a representation objected to the fantasie: another thing to have an intellectual light given to understand it.

2. Others are demonstrative: when the Lord not only gives the dream, but also withal the understanding of it. Such were Daniel's dreams, & these Wisemens, & Joseph's in this chapter. Wherein was a Vision & Provision: a vision what to do: a provision that no harm might come to Jesus. These dreams were most specially incident to the New Testament: when God at the very rising of the Sun, began to expel the shadows of dark mysteries. And it shall come to pass in the last days (saith God) I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons & your daughters shall prophecy, & your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. Now the Sun is gotten up into the midst of heaven the Gospel into the full strength, these shadows vanish: the more light, the less shadow.

So that now to expect revelation of things by dreams were to entreat God to lend us a candle whiles we have the bright Sun. The superstitious Papists are still full of these dreams: and find out more mysteries in their sleep, then they can well expound waking. The Abbot of Glastenbury, when Ethelwold was Monk there, dreamt of a tree, whose branches were all covered with Monks cowles: & on the highest bough one cowle that ouertop'd all the rest: which must needs be expounded the future greatness of this Ethelwold. But it is most admirable, how the Dominic Friars make shift to expound the dream of Dominickes mother; which she had when she was with child of him: that she had in her womb a wolf with a burning torch in his mouth. Say what they will, a wolf is a wolf still: & that order hath ever carried a burning torch to scorch their mother, the Church. But there is no dream of theirs without an interpretation, without a prediction. And if the event answer not their foretelling, they expound it after the event. If one of them chance to dream of a green garden, he goes presently and makes his will. Or if another dream that he shakes a dead friend by the hand, he is ready to call to the Sexton for a grave; takes solemn leave of the world, and says he cannot live.

Beloved, God hath not grounded our faith upon dreams nor cunningly devised fables; but on the holy Gospel, written by his servants in books, and by his spirit in the tables of our hearts. They that will believe dreams and Traditions above God's sacred word, let them hear and fear their judgment. For this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie. That they all might be dāned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. Banish from your hearts; this superstitious folly, to repose any confidence expectant on dreams.

But if you desire to make any use of dreams, let it be this. Consider thyself in thy dreaming, to what inclination▪ thou art mostly carried: and so by thy thoughts in the night, thou shalt learn to know thyself in the day. Be thy dreams lustful? examine whether the addictions of thy heart run not after the bias of concupiscence. Be they turbulent, consider thy own contentious disposition. Be they revengeful, they point to thy malice. Run they upon gold and riches, they argue thy covetousness.

Thus God may be said to teach a man by his dreams still; non quid erit, sed qualis est: not what shall be, but what he is. Not future events, but present condition may be thus learned. Neither day nor night escapes a good man without some profit: the night teacheth him what he is, as the day what he should be. Therefore said a Philosopher, that all waking men are in one common world: but in sleep every man goes into a world by himself. For his dreams do signify to him those secret inclinations, to which he thought himself a stranger, though they were home-dwellers in his heart. Even those fancies are speaking images of a man's disposition. And as I have heard of some that talk in their dreams, and then reveal those secrets, which awake they would not have disclosed. So may thy dreams tell thee when thou wakest, what kind of man thou art. The hypocrite dreams of dissimulation: the proud woman of paint and colors: the thief of robbery and booties▪ the Jesuit of treasons. Let them ask their very sleep, quale... sint; what manner of men they ar•.... For so lightly they answer temptations actually waking, as their thoughts do sleeping. Thus only a man may make good use of his dreams.

Here let us observe, that God doth sometimes draw men to him suis ipsorum ⟨◇⟩ ; by their own delights and studies. No doubt these Magi were well acquainted with dreams: it being amongst Ethnics and Peripatetic a special object of divination. Therefore there is a book bearing the name of Aristotle; De diuina...ne p...r somnium. Many •...ors these men had swallowed by dreams; now behold, in a dream they shall receive the truth. So God called them by a Star, whose profession was to rely too much on the Stars. Quare per Stellam? vt per Christum ipsa materia erroris, fieret salutis occasio. Why by a Star? that through Jesus Christ the very matter of their error might be made a means of their salvation. Per ⟨◇⟩ ill...s vocat, qu... familia...ria illis cons...tudo fecit. God calls them by those things, which custom had made familiar to them. They that are stung with Scorpions, must be cured by the oil of Scorpions. Thus God allures men to him, as Fishermen ⟨◇⟩ , with such baits as may be somewhat agreeable to them. Paul is occasioned by the Al... ⟨◇⟩ the vnknow... God, to make known the true God, the ⟨◇⟩ Jesus. Doth David love the Sheep-folds? he shall be a Shepherd still. From following the e...s great with young, he brought him to feed Jacob his people, and Isr...ll his ...ritance. Doth Peter love fishing? he shall go a fishing still, though for more noble creatures; to catch soul•.... Do these Magicians love Stars and Dreams, behold a Star and a Dream shall instruct them in the truth of God. Old Is... takes occasion by the smell of his Sons garments, savoring of the field, to pronounce a spiritual blessing. The smell of my Son is as the smell of a field, which the Lord hath blessed. Jerome notes of Amos, that he begins his Prophecy with roaring. The Lord shall roar from Zion. Because he being a field-man, kept the woods, where he was wonted to the roaring of Lions. Iudaei signa quaerunt? Do the Jews seek a sign? Why Christ will there even among them work his Miracles. Doth Augustine love eloquence? Ambrose shall catch him at a Sermon. All things shall work to their good, that are good: Omnia, etiam peccata. All things, even their very sins, saith Augustine•.... ⟨◇⟩ in his Essays writes, that a libidinous gentleman sporting with a Courtesan in a house of sin, chanced to ask her name; which she said was Mary. Whereat he was stricken with such a remorse and reverence, that he instantly not only cast off the Harlot, but amended his whole future life.

Well-beloved, since this is God's mercy, to allure us to him by our own delights, let us yield our selves to be caught. What scope doth thy addiction level at, that is not sinful, which God's word doth not promise and afford? What delight can you ask, which the Sanctuary gives not? Love you hunting? learn here to hunt. the Foxes, the little Cubbes, those crafty sins sculking in your bosoms. Would you dance? let your hearts keep the measures of Christian joy; and leap, like John the Baptist in Elizabeth's womb, at the salvation of Jesus. Delight you in running? Paul sets you a race. So run that ye may obtain. You shall have good company. D...id promiseth, that he will run the way of God's commandments. Peter and John will run with you to Jesus. Love you Music? Here are the Bels of Aaron still ringing; the treble of Mercy, and the tenor of Judgment; Levi's Lute, and David's Harp. There are no such songs as the songs of Zion. Would you be merry? Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say rejoice. If ever you found joy like this joy; the peace of conscience, and joy of the holy Ghost; back again to the world. Louest thou dainty cheare? here be the best cates, the body and blood of thy Savior, the bread of life: no hunger after it. Wilt thou drink much. Drink my wine and my milk: drink, yea drink abundantly, O Beloved. Bib...e & ⟨ϕ⟩ : as the original imports; drink, and be drunken with loves: pledge the health that Christ begun; even asaving health to all nations. Are you ambitious? there is no preferment like that to be had here, in the Court of the King of Kings. David judged it no little thing to be Son in law to a King: but what is it then to be a King? Desire you stately buildings? Alas, the whole world is but a Cottage, a poor transient Tabernacle, to the Mansions promised by Christ. Lastly, are you covetous? Yet I need not ask that question, but take it as granted. Why then here is gold; more precious then that of Arabia, or of Hauilah: rust or thief may distress that; this is a treasure can never be lost. What should I say more? What can win you? Which way soever your desires stands, God doth allure you. The best things in earth or in heaven are your bait. With these doth the Lord seek you; not for any need that he hath of you, but for your own salvation. When the fairest of all Beloved's doth thus woo us, let him win us: and espouse us to himself in grace, that we have the plenary marriage in glory. You see the Manner of their Warning.

The Matter.

That they should not return to Herod. Why not to Herod? Because the Lord now lets them see his hypocrisy. For howsoever he pretended. Ver. 8. to come and worship him; yet he intended not seruire, but s...uire: not to honor him, but to murder him. He calls the Wisemen privily, as if he quaked at the propagation of this news, for it came upon him like the pangs of death. He commands them to inquire de infante, not de rege; of the babe, not of the King; for that title galled him to the heart. That I may worship him. Dirum facinus tingit color pietatis. It is a monstrous wickedness, which he would die in the colors of godliness.

The Lord doth disappoint the purposes of Tyrants: though their Bows be bent, and their swords whet...ed, yet the mark shall be removed: and they shall rather wound themselves, then their hated object. Though they be great with child of iniquity, and conceive mischief, yet they shall bring forth but falsehood. Though those Jews had bound themselves under a curse, neither to eat nor drink till they had killed Paul. Yet if they had kept their vow, they had fasted to death. Though Sennacherib purposed to swallow up Jerusalem at a morsel; yet the Lord mocked his menaces. He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor cast a bank against it.

Herod made himself sure of Christ, but the Lord deceived him again and again. First he stroke him with extreme sottishnes: that learning by the Wise men the birth of Christ, yet (though the matter in his thought touched his Crown) he sends none of his Courtiers with them under pretence of gratifying them: which might so have seised on that innocent Lamb; and not worshipped, but worrey'd him. But the Lord so confounded his wits with the spirit of giddines, that the Magi go alone. Next, now that his bloody hopes depend upon their return, behold they are sent home another way. So that he saw that he was mocked. Herod mocked the Wisemen, and God shall direct the Wisemen to mock Herod. He pretended to adore, whom he did abhor: and they do eum vulp... vulpinara; beguile the Fox: yea rather ...vicula lupum fallit: the Lamb deceives the Wolf. Simplicitie goes beyond subtlety. A cane non magno saepe tenetur aper. Here was Herod's folly, that he would not suffer the King of the whole world, to be King in Jury: that in fear of a Successor, he would kill his Savior. Nay further: for fear of a strange heir, he kills his own heir. Which occasioned Augustus to say, that it was better being Herod's Hog then his heir. Here then see his cruelty: if his strength cannot take Jesus, he will try his cunning: and last when his cunning fails, he falls to open violence again: sending forth men of war. Thus when Tyrants fail in their Politicians Rhetoric, they fall to the Carters Logic.

You see the Informance, let us look upon their Performance. They departed into their own Country another way. All which (wanting time to prosecute the history) I will apply to our selves. Their course home, shall teach us a course to our home: even to heaven and glory. Wherein I desire to observe these #### Circumstances

- Our selves naturally lost:
- Our finding of Christ.
- Our charge not to return to Herod: But to go to our own Country; And that by another way.

1. Let it be granted, that we have all wandered from the way of life. All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned everyone to his own way. I would to God, everyone would sentire, feel this in particular; and not only consentire, consent to it in general. I am not come to call the righteous, saith Christ, but sinners to repentance. And Luke 15. he leaves the hypocritical <math>\langle \diamond \rangle</math> to their own high-conceited purity, and seeks the lost sheep. We may here pause, and wonder, at our misery, at his mercy. We were so lost, that we could never find him: ...e is so good, that he sought and found us Inuenit non quaerentes, non p...rdet inue...s. He found v... not seeking him, being found he will not loose us. Come to me all that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. The proud sinner who doth not find his sin; the careless, who doth not feel his sin; is not called. Only sentsentibus morbum promittitur medicina. Health is promised to those that feel their sickness.

2. Christ calls us, but how shall we come? Behold he sends us a Star for direction, his holy Word. Lord to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. Would you come to him that is vita, the life? You must come by him that is via, the Way. It is he Quo eundem, whether we would go: it is he Qua eundem, by which we must go. To his word then let us come with an honest heart: not to sleep, not to carpe, not to gaze: but to observe attentively, to remember faithfully, and to practice obediently, what is there taught us. Neither must God only for his part afford us a Star for guidance; but we must also for our part bring feet to walk to him. These are three.

1. Contrition▪ a heart truly sorrowful for our former iniquities. He that is cast down by repentance, shall be raised up with joy. It is not possible to walk to God without this foot. He that goes to heaven, must wash his steps with tears. And he that hath this foot, shall make large paces to glory. Though he hath long lingered, he will now hast: as the malefactor stepped by this foot from the Cross to Paradise.

2. Faith. Sorrow may cast down too fast, too far. Though the head have leave to ache, yet let not the hand of faith be wanting to hold it. Though the eye be blubbered with tears, yet must it look through all that water to the clear Sun, Jesus Christ. When the Law hath done the office in making thy sin manifest; thank it, and take thy leave of it: as thou wouldest do of a friend that hath done thee a good turn, but now grows troublesome. Put Moses behind thee, saith Luther: and fixe thine eyes upon Christ; that Lamb of God which takes away the sins of the world. Without this foot thou shalt step short of comfort. Faith must bring thee to the fountain of that Blood, which shall wash away all thy sins.

3. Obedience: this foot must be continually used: all the days of thy life must thou travel in the ways of God with this foot. It knows and keeps Celeritie, Integrity, Constancy.

Celeritie. I will run the way of thy commandments. It makes hast, knowing that God will not be pleased with halting obedience: or with that zeal, that only goes a Parliament-pace. The Creeple was carried to the Temple: God loves not such limping zeal, that is carried to Church on two Crutches, Law & Custom: but that which with Peter and John, runs to the place where Christ is. But it is God, that maketh our feet like the feet of hinds.

Integrity: it turns not to the right hand, nor to the left, but goes straight on: running with patience the race that is set before it. Therefore saith the Apostle. Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way: for all false ways the Lord doth utterly abhor. The wicked walk on every side: they have circular goings, on every side of the truth, but the true way they cannot find. But Integrity is not so light heeld, to skip out of the way of righteousness, at every dog that reproachfully barks at it, nor at every Siren that temptingly would call it aside. The Devil, with all his force of terror or error cannot seduce it.

Constancy: it is ever traveling, though through many hindrances. It hath a heavy load of flesh to burden it, and make every step tedious, yet it goes. Cares for family, troubles of contentious neighbors, frowning of great adversaries, malicious turbulency of the world; all offer to stay it, but it goes on. As if it had received the Apostles Commission, Salute none of these Remora's by the way; it resteth not till it see the salvation of God. The Lord delivers the feet from falling, that it may walk before God in the light of the living.

3 We must not return back to Herod. Why not to Herod? He was a fit type of the Devil: and they that are recovered and escaped from him, should not fall back into his clutches. The Devil is like Herod, both for his subtlety and cruelty. The Herod's were all dissemblers, all cruel. There was Herod Ascalonita, Herod Antipas, and Herod Agrippa: all cruel in the butchering of God's Saints.

Ascalonita necat pueros, Antipa Iohannem,

Agrippa Iacobum, mittit{que} in carcere Petrum.

Ascalonite makes an earnest show of zeal to Christ: but he desired not subijcerese Christ..., sedsib... Christum: not to become subject to Christ, but to make Christ the sub iect of his fury. Antipas seemed to love John the Baptist, but he suffers a dancing foot to kick off his head. The cruelty of the other Herod was monstrous. He slew all those whom he could suspect to issue from the line of David: all the Infants of Bethlehem under two years old, at one slaughter. He slew his kindred, his sister, his wife, his son. He cut the throats of many noble Jews, whiles he lay on his death bed. Yea made it in his will, that so soon as ever the breath was out of his body, all the sons of the nobler Jews shut up into a safe place, should be instantly slain to bear him company. By this means he resolved, that some should lament his death, which otherwise would have been the cause of great joy. A wretched Testament, and fit for such a devil to make.

That Devil we are charged not to return to, exceeds this both in subtlety and cruelty: even as much as a father may his Son. Herod was not so perfect a Master of his art. The wise men deceived Herod; he must be a wise man indeed that over-reaches Satan. Herod was a bungler to him: he trusted to instruments to destroy Christ; the Devil looks to that business himself. He can transform himself into an Angel of light: and rather than not draw men to hell, he will dissemble a love to heaven. He will speak good, that he may work evil: and confess the truth, that thereby he may procure credit to greater falsehood. He can stoop to the reprobate, like a tame horse till they get up and ride him: but when he hath them on his back, he runs post with them to hell.

When he hath thus excercised his policy, will he spare his power? when his Foxes part is done, he begins his Lions. Blood, massacre, destruction are his softest embraces: horror and amazement are the pleasures of his Court: kill, kill, burn, burn, is the language of his tongue; to those miserable wretches, which must ever be burning, never consumed; ever killing, and never die. Oh then let us never return to Herod, nor venture on his mercy. The poor bird, that hath escaped the hawks talons, is careful to avoid his walk. The strayed Lamb, fallen into the wolfes cave and delivered by the Shephard, will no more straggle out of the flock. If the Lord Jesus hath sought and brought us to himself by the Star of his Gospel, let us no more go back to Herod: flying the works of darkness, and serving the living God with an upright heart.

Indeed they that are truly freed from his servitude, will never more become his vassals. Many seem escaped, that are not. If the adulterer return like the Hog to the mire, and the drunkard like the Dog to his vomit; it is likely that they love Herod well, for they go back to him. The minister may desire to offer them up a living sacrifice to the Lord; but like wild beasts, they break the rope, and will not be sacrificed. But we being delivered by Christ out of the hands of our enemies, must serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life.

4. We must go to our own Country. In this world we are but strangers: though perhaps we think too well of these vanities, yet they are but foreign things, we have another home. We may be ravished with this earth, as Peter with Tabor, Bonum hic; it is good being here: but if we look up to that heaven which is our Country, Mundi calcamus inutile pondus. Behold, the very outside is fair: the outmost walls are beautified with glorious lights everyone as a world for greatness, so a heaven for goodliness. All those spangles be as radiant stones, full of Luster; pure gold to the dross of earthly things. What may we then think there is within?

Yea whatsoever the wicked think, yet this world is but the through-fare: and it is not their home neither, though indeed they have their portion in this life. It is said of Judas going to hell, that he went to his own place: therefore that, and not this, is their own country; as sure as they think themselves of this world. In heaven there is all life, no death: in hell all death, no life: on earth men both live and die; passing through it as the wilderness, either to Egypt or Canaan. This earth as it is between both, so it prepares us for both: and sends everyone to their own country; eternal joy, or everlasting sorrow.

He that here dies to sin, shall hereafter live in heaven: he that lives in sin, shall hereafter die in hell. All sojourne, either with GOD, feeding on his graces, or with Satan surfe•...ing on his iniquities. They that will have Satan for their host in transgression, shall afterwards be his guests in perdition. But they that obey God as their master, shall also have him their father, and that forever.

Contemne we then this world: what though we have many sorrows here, & a still succession of miseries: we are not at home. What stranger looks for kind usage amongst his enemies? As well might the captive Jews expect quiet among the Babylonians. Thou art sure of a country wherein is peace. In that heaven the wicked have no part, though here much pleasure. When thou considerest this truly, thou wouldst not change portions with them. Let it be comfort sufficient, since we cannot have both, that we have by many degrees the better

Their own country. Heaven is our own country. 1. Ours, ordained for us by God the Father. Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit ye the kingdom. 2. Ours, purchased for us by God the Son. We have boldness to enter into the Holiest by the blood of Jesus. 3. Ours sealed to us by God the holy Ghost. The Spirit of God seals us up to the day of redemption. The Spirit it self beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.

Ours thus, though we are not yet fully entered into it. Habemus ius ad rem, nondum in re. We are heirs to it, though now we be but wards. Our minority bids & binds us to be as servants. The heir as long as he is a child differs nothing from a servant, though he be Lord of all. When we come to full years, a perfect growth in godliness, in mensuram staturae adulti Christ's, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, we shall have a plenary possession.

It is ours already, not in re, but in spe; as Aug. Our common Law distinguisheth between two manner of freeholds. A freehold in deed when a man hath made his entry upon lands, and is thereof really seised. A freehold in law, when a man hath right to possessions, but hath not made his actual entry. So is this Country ours: ours Tenore iuris, though not yet iure tenoris: ours in the inheritance of the possession, though not in the possession of the inheritance. To this country, our country, let us travel: and that we may do it the better,

5. The last circumstance shows us how; Another way, we must change the whole course of our inordinate conversation, and walk another way: even the Kings high-way to Paradise. Immutatio vi... emendatio vitae. The changing of the way, is the amending of our life. Repentance must teach us to tread a new path. To man truly penitent, Optimus portus est mutatio consi...y: The best haven is the change of his life: not to turn again by the same way that he came. Thus must we renounce our own wills, & old ways: and being made new creatures, take new paths. So Gregory. ° We departed from our country by pride, disobedience, doting on visible delights, and pleasing the lusts of the flesh: we must therefore return by humil...e, obedience, contemning the world, and condemning the flesh. Quia Paradisi gaudijs per delectationem recessimus, ad h...c per poenitentiam, tanquam per nouam viam, reuoca...ur. We that departed from Paradise by sin, must return thither, by a new way, Repentance. Hast thou walked in lust? take another way; by purity and chastity. Didst thou travel with pride? there is another way to heaven, humility. Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Wert thou given to avarice? there is a new way to heaven; by charity. Ye have fed me hungry &c. therefore come ye blessed. Didst thou trudge with contention, and molesting thy neighbors with suits? this is the way to Westminster hall, there is another way to heaven. Blessed are the peace makers, for they shall be called the children of God. Didst thou trade in usury? this is the way to the Exchange: thou must exchange this way if thou wilt come to glory. Hast thou forredged with oppression? Thou must with Zacchaeus seek out another way. If I have taken anything from any man by false dealing, I restore him fourfold. Let the drunken epicure, malicious repiner, seditious incendiary, dissembling hypocrite, unjust oppressor, leave their wretched paths: & seek another way to happiness. God give us all grace to find this way of Repentance, that we may come at last to our own Country, peace and rest with Jesus Christ.

Amen.

SEMPER IDEM OR The Immutable mercy Of Jesus Christ.

HEBR. 13. 8.

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever.

BY the name of Jehovah was God known to Israel; from the time of the first mission of Moses to them, and their manumission out of Egypt: and not before. For saith God to Moses I appeared unto Abraham, and unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the Name of God Almighty; but by my Name JEHOVAH was I not known to them. This (I Am) is an eternal word, comprehending three times; that was, that is, and is to come.

Now to testify the equality of the Son to the Father, the Scripture gives the same Eternity to Jesus, that it doth to Jehovah. He is called Alpha and Omega, Primus & nouissimus, the First and the Last: which is, which was, and which is to come. Revel. 1. and here the same yesterday, and today, and forever. Therefore he was not only Christus Dei, the Anointed of God; but Christus Deus, God himself Anointed. Seeing that Eternity which hath neither beginning nor ending, is only peculiar and proper to God.

The words may be distinguished into a

- Center
- Circūference
- Mediate

Line, referring the one to the other. The immovable Center is Jesus Christ. The Circumference that runs round about him here, is Eternity: Yesterday, today & forever. The Mediate line referring them is. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , The same▪ Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever.

The Center is Jesus Christ.

Jesus was his proper Name, Christ his appellatiue. Jesus a name of his nature, Christ of his Office and dignity; as Divines speak.

Jesus a Name of all sweetness. Mel in ora, Melos in a...re, iubilus in cord. A reconciler, a Redeemer, a Savior. When the conscience wrestles with Law, Sin, Death; nothing but horror and despair without Jesus. He is the way, the Truth, and the Life: without him Error, Me...dadium, Mors. Si scribas, non placet, nisi legam ibi Iesum: saith Bernard. If thou writest to me, thy letter doth not please me, unless I read there Jesus. If thou conferrest, thy discourse is not sweet, without the name of Jesus. The blessed restorer of all, of more then all that Adam lost▪ for we have gotten more by his regenerating grace, then we lost by Adams degenerating Sin.

Christ is the Name of his Office: being appointed and anointed of God, a King, a Priest, a Prophet.

This Jesus Christ is our Savior: of whose names I forbear further discourse, being unable, though I had the tongue of Angels, to speak ought worthy •...anto Nomine, Tanto Numine. All that can be said, is but a little: but I must say but a little in all. But of all names given to our Redeemer still Jesus is the sweetest. O•...er, saith Bern. are names of Majesty, Jesus is a name of mercy. The Word of God, the Son of God, the Christ of GOD, are titles of Glory: Jesus a Savior, is a title of grace, mercy, redemption.

This Jesus Christ is the Center of this Text: and not only of this, but of the whole Scripture. The Sum of Divinity is the Scripture: the Sum of the Scripture is the Gospel, the Sum of the Gospel is Jesus Christ. In a word, Nihil continet verbum Domini, nisi verbum Dominum. There is nothing contained in the word of God, but God the Word.

Nor is he the Center only of his Word, but of our rest and Peace. I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. Thou hast made us for thee. O Christ; and our heart is unquiet till it rest in thee. It is natural to everything appetere centrum, to desire the Center. But our life is hid with Christ in God. We must needs amare, where we must animare. Our mind is where our pleasure is, our heart is where our treasure is, our love is where our life is: but all these, our pleasure, treasure, life, are reposed in Jesus Christ. Thou art my Portion, O Lord, saith David. Take the world that please, let our Portion be Christ. We have left all, saith Peter, and fellowed thee: you have lost nothing by it, saith Christ; for you have gotten me. Nimis auarus est, cui non sufficit Christus. He is too covetous, whom Jesus Christ cannot satisfy. Let us seek this Center, saith August. Qu...ramus inueniendum, quaeramus inuentum. Vt inueniendus qu...ratur, paratus est: vt inuentus qu...ratur, immensus est. Let us seek him, till we have found him: and still seek him when we have found him. That seeking we may find him, he is ready: that finding we may seek him, he is infinite. You see the Center.

The referring Line proper to this Center, is Semper Idem.

The same. There is no mutability in Christ: no variableness, nor shadow of turning. All lower lights have their inconstancy; but in the Father of lights there is no changeableness. The Sun hath his shadow; the the Son of righteousness is without shadow: that turns upon the Diall, but Christ hath no turning. Whom he loves, he loves to the end. He loves us to the end; of his love there is no end. Tempus crit consummandi, nullus consumendi misericordiam. His mercy shall be perfected in us, never ended. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee, for a moment: but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy upon thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. His wrath is short, his goodness is everlasting. The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed: but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee. The mountains are stable things, the hills steadfast: yet hills, mountains, yea the whole earth shall totter on the foundations; yea the very heavens shall pass away with a noise, and the elements shall melt with heat; but the Covenant of God shall not be broken. I will betroth thee unto me forever; saith God. This marriage-bond shall never be canceled; nor sin, nor death, nor hell shall be able to divorce us. Six & twenty times in one Psalm that sweet singer chants it: His mercy endureth forever. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever.

As this meditation distilles into our believing hearts much comfort, so let it give us some instructions. Two things it readily teacheth us; a

- Diswasieue caution.
- Persuasive lesson.

1. It diswades our confidence in worldly things because they are inconstant. How poor a space do... they remain 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , the same! To prove this, you have in the first of Judges. Ver. 6. a Jury of threescore and ten Kings, to take their oaths upon it. Everyone had his throne, yet there licks crumbs under another Kings table: and shortly even this King, that made them all so miserable, is made himself most miserable. Solomon compares wealth to a wild fowl. Riches make themselves wings, they fly away, as an Eagle toward heaven. Not some tame house-bird or a hawk that may be fetched down with a lure, or found again by her bells: but an Eagle, that violently cuts the air, and is gone past recalling.

Wealth is like a bird: it hops all day from man to man, as that doth from tree to tree; and none can say, where it will roust or rest at night. It is like a vagrant fellow, which because he is big boned & able to work, a man takes in a doors, and cherisheth; and perhaps for a while he takes pains: but when he spies opportunity, the fugitive servant is gone, and takes away more with him then all his service came to. The world may seem to stand thee in some stead for a season, but at last it irreuocably runs away, and carries with it thy joys; thy gods, as Rachel stole Laban's Idols: thy peace and content of heart goes with it, and thou art left desperate.

You see how quickly riches cease to be the same: and can any other earthly thing boast more stabillitie? Honor must put off the robes when the play is done: make it never so glorious a show on this worlds stage, it hath but a short part to act. A great name of worldly glory is but like a peal rung on the bells: the Common people are the clappers: the rope that moves them is popularitie: if you once let go your hold & leave pulling, the clapper lies still, and farewell honor. Strength, though like Jeroboam, it put forth the arm of oppression, shall soon fall down withered. Beauty is like an Almanac: if it last a year, tis well. Pleasure like lightning: •...ritur, moritur: sweet, but short: a flash and away.

All vanities are but butter-flies, which wanton children greedily catch for: and sometimes they fly besides them, sometimes before them, sometimes behind them, sometimes close by them; yea through their fingers, and yet they miss them: and when th•... have them, they are but butterflies; they have painted wings, but are crude and squalid worms. Such are the things of this world, vanities, butter-flies. Vel sequendo labimur, vel assequendo l•...dimur. The world it self is not unlike a Hartechoke: nine parts of it are unprofitable leaves, scarce the tythe is good: about it there is a l•...ttle picking meat, nothing so wholesome as dainty: in the midst of it there is a coare, which is enough to choke them that devour it.

O then set not your hearts upon these things: calcanda sunt, as Jerome observes on Act. 4. They that sold their possessions, brought the prises, and laid them downat the Apostles feet. At their feet, not at their hearts: they are fitter to be trodden under feet, then to be waited on with hearts. I conclude this with Augustine. Ecce turbat mundus, & amatur: quid si tranquillus esset? Formoso quomodo h•...reres, qui sic amplecteris soedum? Flores eius quàm colligeres, qui sic a spinis non reuocas manū. Quàm confideres •...terno, qui sic adh•...res caduco? Behold, the world is turbulent and full of vexation, yet it is loved; how would it be embraced if it were calm and quiet? If it were a beauteous Damsel how would they doat on it; that so kiss it being a deformed stigmatic. How greedily would they gather the flowers, who will not forbear the thorns? They that so admire it being transient and temporal; how would they be enamored on it if it were eternal? But the world passeth, and God abideth. They shall perish, but thou remainest: they all shall wax old as doth a garment: and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art The Same..., and thy years shall not fail. Therefore trust not in uncertain riches, but in the living God. And then they that trust in the Lord; shall be as M...unt Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever. Jesus Christ the Sa... yesterday, and today, and forever.

2. This persuades us to an imitation of Christ's Constancy. Let the stables of his mercy to us, work a stables of our love to him. And howsoever like the lower Orbes, we have a natural motion of our own from good to evil: yet let us suffer the higher power to move us supernaturally from evil to good. There is in us indeed a reluctant flesh; a Law in our members warring against the Law of our mind. So August. confesseth. Nec plane nolebam, nec plane volebam. And Eg... era... qui volebam, ego qui nolebam. I neither fully granted, nor plainly denied: and it was I myself, that both would, and would not. But our ripeness of Christianity must ouergrow fluctuant thoughts.

Irresolution and unsteadiness is hateful, and unlike to our master Christ, who is ever The Same. A double minded man is unstable in all his ways. The inconstant man is a stranger in his own house: all his purposes are but guests: his heart is the Inn: if they lodge there for a night, it is all; they are gone in the morning. Many motions come crowding together upon him: and like a great prease at a narrow door, whiles all strive, none enter. The Epigrammatist wittily.

Omnia cùm facias, miraris cur facias nil:

Posthume, rem solam qui facit, ill facit.

He that will have an oar for every man's boat, shall have none left to row his own. They, saith Melanchthon, that will know aliquid in omnibus, shall indeed know nihil in toto. Their admiration or dotage of a thing is extreme for the time, but it is a wonder, if it out-live the age of a wonder, which is allowed but nine days. They are angry with Time, and say the times are dead, because they produce no more innovations. Their inquiry of all things is not Quàm bonum, but Quàm novum! They are almost weary of the Sun for continual shining. Continuance is a sufficient quarrel against the best things: and the Manna of heaven is loathed, because it is common.

This is not to be always the same, but never the same: and whiles they would be everything, they are nothing: but like the worm Pliny writes of, multipoda; that hath many feet, yet is of slow pace. A while you shall have him in England, loving the simple truth: anon in Rome groveling before an Image: soon after, he leaps to Amsterdam: and yet must he still be turning, till there be nothing left but to turn Turk. To winter an opinion is too tedious: he hath been many things; what he will be, you shall scarce know, till he is nothing.

But the God of Constancy would have his to be constant. Stedfast in your faith to him. Colos.
1. Continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the Gospel. Stedfast in your faithfulness to man, promising and not disappoynting. Do not aliud stantes, aliud sed...tes: least your changing with God, teach God to change with you. Nemo potest tibi

Christum •...uferre, •...isi t•... illi auferas. No man can turn Christ from thee, unless thou turn thyself from Christ. For Jesus Christ the same yesterday, &c.

We come now to the Circumference; wherein is a distinction of three times; Past, Present, Future. Tempora mutantur: the times change, the Circumference wheels about; but the Center is the same forever.

We must resolve this Triplicity into a Triplicity. Christ is the same according to these three distinct terms, three distinct ways.

- Obiectiue, in his Word.
- Subiectiue, in his Power.
- Effective, in his gracious Operation.

Obiectiue.

Jesus Christ is the same in his word; and that

- Yesterday in Preordination.
- To day in Incarnation.
- For ever in Application.

Yesterday in Preordination.

So Saint Peter in his Sermon tells the Jews, that he was delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. And in his Epistle; that he was verily preordained before the foundation of the world. Revel. 13. He is called the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Priuspr•...fuit, quamfuit. His Prophets did foretell him, the Types did prefigure him, God himself did promise him. R•...tus or do Dei: the decree of God is constant.

Much comfort I must here leave to your meditation. If God preordained a Savior for man, before he had either made man, or man marred himself: (as Paul to Timothy; he hath saved us according to his own purpose a•...d grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began.) then surely he meant that nothing should separate us from his eternal love in that Savior. Quos  $\langle \phi \rangle$  increated, rede•...it perditos, non deseret redemptos. Whom he chose before they were created, and when they were lost redeemed, he will not forsake being sanctified.

To day in Incarnation.

When the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a Woman. The word was made flesh: which was, saith Emissenus, Non deposita, sed seposit•... maiestate. Thus he became younger than his Mother, that is as eternal as his Father. He was Yesterday God before all worlds, he is now made man in the World. Sanguinem, qu•...m pro matre •...btulit, antea de sanguine matris accepit. The blood that he shed for his Mother, he had from his Mother. The same Eusebius on the 9. of Isaiah acutely. Unto us a child is borne, unto us a Son is given. He was Datus ex

Diuinitate, natus ex virgins. Datus est qui erat; natus est qui non erat. He was Giuen of the Deity, Borne of the virgin: He that was given, was before: he as borne, was before. Donum dedit Deus •...quale sibi, God gave a gift equal to himself.

So he is *the same yesterday, and today, obiectiue*ly in his Word. Idom qui velatus in veteri, reu•...latus in none. In illo praedictus, in isto praedicatus. Yesterday prefigured in the Law, today the same manifested in the Gospel.

For ever in Operation.

He doth continually by his Spirit apply to our consciences the virtue of his death and passion. As many as receive him, to them gives •...e power to become the Sons of God, even to them that believe on his Name. By one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. This is sure comfort to us: though he died almost 1600. years ago, his blood is not yet dry: his wounds are as fresh to do us good, as they were to those Saints that beheld them bleeding on the Cross. The virtue of his merits is not abated, though many thousand hands of Faith have taken large portions out of his treasury. The river of his Grace, which makes glad the city of God, runs over the banks, though infinite souls have drunk hearty draughts, and satisfied their thirst. But because we cannot apprehend this for our selves of our selves; therefore he hath promised to send us the Spirit of truth, who will dwell with us, and apply this to us. forever. Thus you have seen the first Triplicity; how he is the *Same Obiectiue*ly in his Word. Now he is *Subiunctiue*ly in his Power the Same; and that

- Yesterday, for he made the world.
- To day, for he governs the world.
- For ever, for he shall judge the world.

Yesterday in the Creation.

All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. By him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him. All things; even the great and fair book of the world; of three so large leaves, Coelum, Solum, Salum; Heaven, Earth, and Sea. The Prophet calls him the Everlasting Father: Daniel, Ancient of days. Solomon says that, the Lord possessed him in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. So himself told the unbelieving Jews: Before Abraham was, I am.

We owe then our selves to Christ for our creation, but how much more for our redemption? Si totum me debeo pro ine facto, quid addam iam pro me refecto? In primo opere me mihi dedit: in secundo se mihi dedit. If I owe him my whole self for making me, what have I left to pay him for redeeming me? In the first work he gave myself to me, in the second he gave himself to me. By a double right we owe him our selves: we are worthy of a double punishment, if we give him not his own.

To day in the Gouerning:

He upholdeth all things by the word of his power. He is Paterfamilias; and disposeth all things in this universe, with greater care and p...ence, then any house-holder can menage the bu...nesse of his private family. He leaves it not, as the Carpenter having built the frame of a house, to others to perfect it; but looks to it himself. His Creation and Providence is like the Mother and the Nurse: the one produceth, the other preserveth. His creation was a short providence, his providence a perpetual creation. The one sets up the frame of the house, the other keeps it in reparation.

Neither is this a disparagement to the Majesty of God, as the vain Epicures imagined, curare minima, to regard the least things: but rather an honor, curare infinita, to regard all things. Neither doth this extend only to natural things, chained together by a regular order of succession: but even to casual and contingent things. Oftentimes cùm aliud volumus, aliud agimus; the event crosseth our purpose. Which must content us though it fall out otherwise then we purposed, because God purposed as it is fallen out. It is enough that the thing attain the own end, though it miss ours: that God's will be done, though ours be crossed.

But let me say; Hath God care of fo...les and flowers, and will he not care for you, his own Image? Yea let me go further; Hath God care of the wicked? Doth he pour down the happy influences of heaven on the unjust man's ground? And shall the faithful want his blessing? Doth he provide for the Sons of Belial, and shall his own children lack? He may give meat and raiment to the rest, but his bounty to Benjamin shall exceed. If M...b his Wash-pot taste of his benefits, then Judah the signet on his finger cannot be forgotten. The King governs all the Subjects in his Dominions, but his servants that wait in his Court, partake of his most Princely favors. God heals the sores of the very wicked: but if it be told him, Lord, he whom thou lovest, is sick <math>\langle \diamond \rangle</math> enough, he shall be healed. The wicked may h...utward blessings without inward, and that is Esau's pottage without his Birth-right: but the elect have inward blessings though they want outward, and that is Jacob's inheritance without his pottage.

For ever, because he shall judge the world. GOD hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that M...n whom he hath ordained. In the day that God shall judge the secrets of m...n by Jesus Christ. Let the wicked flatter themselves, that all is but talk of any coming to Judgment: non aliud videre patres aliudve n... p...tes aspice...nt: all is but terriculamenta nutricum, mere scar-babes. Scribar...m pe... mendaces: they have written lies; there is no such matter. But when they shall see that Lamb, whom they have pierced and scorned, they shall cry to the mountains and rocks, Fall upon us and cover us. Now they flatter themselves with his death: mortuus est, he is dead and gone: and Mortuum Caesarem quis ...etuit? Who fears even a Caesar when he is dead? But he that was dead, liveth: behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen. Jesus Christ yesterday, and today, and forever. Qu...sitor sc...erum veniet, vindexque reorum.

Here is matter of infallible comfort to us. Lift up your heads, for your Redemption draweth nigh. Here we are imprisoned, martyred, tortured: but when that great Assise, and general goal-delivery comes; M...s non ...rit ultra: there shall be no more death, nor sorrow; but all tears shall be wiped from our eyes. For it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you. And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty Angels. We shall then find him the Same: the same Lamb that bought us, shall give us a venit... beati; Co...e ye blessed, receive your kingdom. Surely I come quickly, A...on. Even so, Come Lord Jesus.

Effectually in his Grace and Mercy; so he is the Same

- Yesterday to our fathers.
- To day to our selves.
- For ever to our children.

Yesterday to our Fathers.

All our Fathers, whose souls are now in heaven, those Spirits of just men made perfect. Hebr. 12. were, as the next words intimate, saved by Jesus the mediator of the new Covenant, and by the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things then that of Abel. Whether they lived under Nature, or under the Law, Christ was their expectation; and they were justified credendo in venturum Christum; by believing in the Messias to come. So Luke 2. Simeon is said to wait for the consolation of Israel.

To day to our selves.

His mercy is everlasting: his truth endureth from generation to generation. The same gracious Savior, that he was Yesterday to our Fathers, is he To day to us, if we be today faithful to him. All catch at this comfort, but in vain without the hand of Faith. There is no deficiency in him, but is there none in thee? Whatsoever Christ is, what art thou? He forgave Mary Magd. many grievous sins; so he will forgive thee if thou canst shed Mary Magdalens tears. He took the malefactor from the Cross to Paradise; thither he will receive thee if thou have the same faith. He was merciful to a denying Apostle: challenge thou the like mercy if thou have the like repentance. If we will be like these, Christ assuredly will be ever like himself. When any shall prove to be such a sinner, he will not fail to be such a Savior.

To day he is thine, if today thou wilt be his: thine tomorrow, if yet tomorrow thou wilt be his. But how if dark death prevent the morrows light? He was Yesterday, so wert thou: he is today, so art thou: he is tomorrow, so perhaps mayest thou not be. Time may change thee, though it cannot change him. He is not (but thou art) subject to mutation. This I dare boldly say; He that repents but one day before he dyes, shall find Christ the same in mercy and forgiveness. Wickedness it self is glad to hear this: but let him be faithful on his part, as God is merciful on his part: let him be sure that he repent one day before he dies: whereof he cannot be sure except he repent every day. For no man know... his last day. Latet vltimus dies, vt obseruetur omnis dies. Therefore (saith Augustine) we know not our last day, that we might observe every day. To day therefore hear his voice.

Th... hast lost yesterday negligently, loosest today willfully, and therefore moist loose forever inevitably. It is just with God, to punish two days neglect, with the loss of the third. The hand of faith may be withered, the spring of Repentance dried up, the Eye of Hope blind, the Foot of Charity lame. To day then hear his voice, and make him thine. Yesterday is lost, To day may be gotten, but that once gone, and thou with it; when thou art dead and judged, it will do thee small comfort, that Jesus Christ is the S...e forever.

For ever to our Children.

He that was yesterday the God of Abraham, is today ours, and will be forever our children's. As well now the light of the Gentiles, as before the glory of Israel. I will be the God of thy seed, saith the Lord to Abraham. His mercy is ⟨ϕ⟩ them that fear him, fr... generation to generation.

Many parents are •...ollicitously perplexed, how their children shall do when they are dead. Yet they cosider not, how God provided for them when they were childrē. Is the Lor... ⟨ϕ⟩ shortened Did he take thee from thy mothers breasts; and wh... thy •...errants for sooke thee, as the Psalmist saith, became thy Father? And cannot this experiēced mercy to thee, persuade thee, that he will not for• sake thine? Is not Jesus Christ the s... yesterday, & today, and forever? I have been young, saith David, and ⟨ϕ⟩ now old: yet have I not s...ne the right...s forsaken: (that is granted; nay) nor his seed begging bread.

Many distrustful Fathers are so carking for their posterity; that whiles they live, they starve their bodies, and hazard their souls, to leave them rich. To such a Father it is said justly. Di... es h...di, pauper i...psque tibi. Like an over-kind Hen, he feeds his Chickens, and famisheth himself. If usury, circumvention, oppression, extortion, can make them rich, they shall not be poor. Their folly is ridiculous: they fear least their children should be miserable, yet take the only course to make them miserable. For they leave them not so much heirs to their goods, as to their evils. They do as certainly inherit their Fathers sins, as their lands. God layeth up his iniquity for his children: and ⟨ϕ⟩ •...spring shall wa... a •...sell of b...d.

On the contr•...ry. The good ⟨Ϟ⟩ a...d l...ndeth: and his seed i... bl...ssed. That the worldling thinks shall make his posterity poor, God saith shall make the good man's rich. The Precept gives a promise of mercy to Obedience; not only confined in himself, but extended to his s...d, and that even to a •...sand generations. Trust th... Christ with thy children: when thy friends shall ⟨ϕ⟩, usury ⟨ϕ⟩ no dat•..., oppression be condemned to hell, thyself ro•...en to dust, the world it self turned and burned into Cinders▪ still Jesus Christ is the same Yesterday, and today, and for ⟨ϕ⟩. Now then. Reu. 1. ⟨ϕ⟩ Grace and Pea... are from him Which is, and Which ⟨ϕ⟩, and Which is to come. So Glory and ⟨Ϟ⟩ him, Which i... , Which was, and Which is to come: even to Jesus Christ the sa... Yesterday, & today, and for e...r.

GOD'S BOUNTY OR The blessings of both his hands.

Prov. 3. 16.

Length of days is i... her right hand: and in her left hand, riches and honor.

BY Wisdom, here the consent of Diuin... understandeth the Son of God, the Savior of Man. In the first to the ⟨ϕ⟩ he is called the Wisdom of God. In ⟨ϕ⟩ are hid all the treasures of Wisdom and Knowledge.

Wisdom is formerly commended for her Beauty, here for her Bounty. Length of days is in her right hand; in her left riches and honor. Conceive her a glorious Queen sitting in ⟨ϕ⟩ throne of M...iestie, and •...lling her children about her, to the participation of those riches, which from everlasting she had decreed them.

Not to travel far for distribution, the parts of this Text are as easily distinguished, as the Right hand from the Left. Here be two Hands, and they contain two sorts of treasures. The Right hand hath in it Length of days: the Lest, riches and honor.

⟨1 page duplicate⟩ ⟨1 page duplicate⟩

The right hand

Is upon good reason preferred; both for it own worth whereby it excelles, and for the worth of the treasure which it contains. It hath ever had the dignity as the dexterity.

Length of days

Is the treasure it holds. This cannot be properly understood of this mortal life: though the sense may also stand good with such an interpretation. For by me, saith Wisdom, thy days shall be ⟨ϕ⟩ : and the years of thy life shall be increased. Wisdom is the mother of abstinence, and abstinence the Nurse of health. Whereas voluptuousness and Intemperance, (as th... French Proverb hath it) Digges the own g...e with the teeth.

But all a man's Wisdom cannot keep him still alive. The wise man dieth, as the fool, saith Solomon. And the Father of Solomon excludes it from having power to keep a man. That he should live still for e...r, and not see •...rruption. Me...ushalem lived nine hundred sixty and nine years; yet he was the Son of E...ch, who was the son of •...ared, who was the son of ⟨ϕ⟩, who was the son of Cainan, who was the son of ⟨ϕ⟩, who was the son of Seth, who was the son of A..., who was the son of dust. The best constitutions, that communicate in the sanguine of the Rose, and Snow of the Lily, have this parentage; they are the sons and daughters of dust.

This ⟨ϕ⟩ ⟨ϕ⟩ i... not ⟨ϕ⟩ to the Poles, nor are these days measured by the Sun in his Zodiac: all is pitched above the Wheel of changeable mortality. It is Eternity that fills the Right hand of Wisdom.

Length of days.

- Days for the Claritie.
- Length for the Eternity.

Days.

Mans life in this world is called a Day: a short day, a sharp day. Short, for instat vesper: it is not sooner morning, but it is presently night. The Sun of life quickly sets, after it is once risen. Sharpe; for misery is borne with life, brought up with life, and to the good dies with life: to the wicked remains in death. Like Hippocrat... twins, inseparable in their beginning, process, end. So that aged Patriarch to Pharaoh. My days have been few and evil. So. Job. Man is of few days, and many troubles. Animal •...vi breuissimi, solicit...dinis infinitae. And Paul calls it the evil day. It is somewhat to comfort, that though it be sharp, Evil: yet it is but short, a Day. Redeem the time, for the days are evil. But howsoever Semper mali dies in seculo, yet semper boni dies in Domino: as Augustine sweetly. Though the world hath always evil days, yet God hath always good days.

And this Day shall have no night. Nox non erit illic. There shall be no night. The Sun that enlightens it; cannot be eclipsed. That city hath no need of the Sun, neither of the Moon, to shine in it: for the Glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the light of it. No clouds shall draw a veil of obscurity over it. Here the light of the Sun darkens the Moon, and the Moon obscures the luster of the Stars: Sometimes half the earth is in light, the rest in darkness.

But in these Days, Albeit there is one glory of the SVNNE, another of the MOONE, and another of the STARRES; and one star differeth from another star in glory: yet the light of one increaseth the light of another: and the glory of one, is the glory of all. Dispar est glo... ⟨ϕ⟩, sed ⟨ϕ⟩ Latitia omnium. So in sum, here we live but a short day; Give us this day our daily bread. But in that world we shall have Daies, & those good days, and great days; days of eternal length, for they shall have no night.

Length.

As the glory is clear for the Countenance, so it is long for the Continuance. Nullus erit defectus, nullus •...erminus. There shall be ⟨ϕ⟩ charit..., chara •...rnitas God's eternal decree to choose v... in Christ had no beginning, but it shall have an end: when the elect are taken up to glory. The possession of this decreed Inheritance shall have a beginning, but no end We shall e...er be with the Lord. God's mercy in both hath neither beginning nor end; for it is from everlasting to everlasting.

Here then is both the Countenance; it is a clear day: and the Continuance, it is of length; the very same Length that Euerlastingnesse it self. Hezekiah's day was a long day, when The shadow of the sun went ten degrees backward in the dial of Ab... Joshua had a long day; when the Sun stood still in Gibeon, and the Moon in the valley of ⟨ϕ⟩. And there was no day like that before it, or after it. But both these days had their nights; and the long forbearing sun at last did set. Here the days are so long, that it shall never be night. You see the clearness and the length: both are expressed. Dan. 12. They that be •...ise, shall shine as the firmament, and they that turn many to righteous...es, as the stars; there is the Claritie: and that forever and ever, there is the Eternity.

There is nothing made perfectly happy, but by Eternity; as nothing but eternity can make perfect misery. Were thy life a continued scene of pleasures, on whose stage grief durst not...uer set his unwelcome foot: were the spoil of Noah's Ark the cates of thy table: hadst thou king Solomon's wardrobe and treasury: Did the west Indie send thee all her gold, and the East her spices: and all these lying by thee whiles a late succession of years without care..., snowes white upon thy head: thou we... ever indulgent to thyself, and health to thee. Yet suddenly there comes an impartial Purseuant, death; and he hath a charge to take thee away  $\langle \phi \rangle$  de  $\langle \phi \phi \rangle$  , bathing thyself in thy delights. Alas; what is...  $\langle \phi \rangle$  thy glory but a short play, full of mirth till the last act, and that goes off in a tragedy. Couldst thou not have made death more welcome, if he had found thee lying on a padde of straw, feeding on cr...s and water gruell? Is not thy pain the more troublesome, because thou wast well? Doth not the end of these temporary joys a...ict thee more, then if they had never been? Only then eternity can give perfection to pleasure: which because thi... world cannot afford, let us reckon of it as it is, a me...e Through  $\langle \phi \rangle$  : and desi... our Home, wh... we shall be happy for  $\langle \phi \rangle$  .

In her Left hand, riches and honor.

The gift of the right hand is large and eternal, of the left▪ short and  $\langle \phi \rangle$  . Yet you see, I am short in the long part, give me leave to be long in the short part. Herein we have many things considerable.

- 1. That Riches and H...r are God... gifts.
- 2. That all are not so, but some: and therefore it is necessary for us to learn, whether God gave unto us that riches and honor which we have.
- 3. That albeit they are his gifts, yet but the gifts of his left hand.
- 4 That wealth and worship are for the most part companions; for both those gif... lie in one and the same hand.

1. Riches and honor are God...gifts, therefore is... themselves not evil. Sunt Dei  $\langle \phi \rangle$  , ...rgo is... se bona. Saith Augustine▪Ne p...tentur ...a,  $\langle \phi \rangle$  &  $\langle \phi \phi \phi \phi \rangle$  b...na,  $\langle \phi \rangle$  & ...lis. That they may not be thought evil, they are given to good men: that they may not be thought the best good, they are given also to evil men. A rich man may be a good man, and a poor man may be wicked. Christ sanctified  $\langle \phi \rangle$  as well as  $\langle \phi \rangle$  ; and that in

- $\langle \phi \rangle$
- Life
- Death.

1. In his Birth: he sanctified Pouerti..., when hi... chamber of presence was a Stable, his cr...dle a manger, his royal robes course rags. He sanctified Ric..., when he rec...ed of the wise men precious...  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  Gold, Frankincense, and Myrrh, Que  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  ipsissim...la, dedignatus ess...t. Which if they had been simply evil, he would not have accepted.

2. In his Life: he sanctified  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  when he was maintained  $\langle \diamond \rangle$ , having no garment to put on; and the good women kept him by their contributions. He was glad to borrow an Ass colt, when he was to ride: and to angle for money in the sea, when he paid tribute. And ( $\langle \diamond \rangle$  if he wanted a bed) to complain; Th... Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests: but the Son of  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  hath not wh...re to rest his head. He sanctified Riches, when he called Zacchaeus a wealthy usurer, and raised Lazarus a wealthy citizen, had his S...d which gave alms to the distressed, and bo... his p...se. And like a Prince, feasted thousands at one banquet.

3. In his Death. He sanctified P...ertie, when he had not a Grave of his own, but was buried in another man's Sepulcher: nay, not a sheet to wrap him in, but was beholding to another for his linen. And even dying converted a poor malefactor on the Cross by him. He sanctified Riches, when he accepted the kindness of Joseph, (whom Matthew calls a rich man, Mark an honorable) for his sepulture: and Nichodemus his costly unction, even an hundredth pound weight, mixed with myrrh, and aloes.

Though riches be to some pernicious; a fuming wine which turns their brains: yet to others they are a vessel, wherein they may with more speed sails to heaven: though no compass, star, or cause, to bring them thither. Others are called by David, ...iri diuitiarum, Men of riches: because they possess not their riches, but their riches have subjugated them. We have a kind of presage, though we conceive it not, in saying of such a one; He is a man of wealth. The speech signifies him a slave to his riches: the wealth is not the man's, but the man the wealths.

But otherwise a rich man may be a good man: for wickedness is not bound to wealthiness, as heat is to fire: and arrogancy or lewdness may be incident to poverty and baseness. Pauper superbus: a poor man proud, was one of Cyprians twelve abuses. A rotten log will yield as much saw-dust, as a piece of good timber: & a peasant ill nurtured, is also ill natured. A great gentleman will show more humble courtesy, then a thrashing hind, or a toiling ploughmā. Hagar was but a Gipsee, a bondwoman yet was her excellent mistress Saradespised in her eyes. As Ier...m reprov'd the Monks. Quid facit sub t...ica p...nitentis regimus animus? So not seldom a ...sset coat shrowds as high a heart, as a silken garment. You shall have a pal...rie cottage send up more black smoke, then a goodly manor. It is not wealth therefore, but vice that excludes men out of heaven.

The Friars and Jesuits have very strongly & strangely backbited Riches: but all their railing on it is but behind the back: secretly and in their hearts they love it. When they are out of the reach of eyes, then Gold is their Sun by day, and silver their Moon by night. Some of them for enforced want, like the fox dispraise the grapes they cannot reach. Or as Eusebius notes of Licinius the Emperor; that he used to rail at learning, & to say, nothing worse became a prince, because himself was illiterate. So they commend nothing more then Poverty, because they are, & must be poor, against their wills.

Others of them find fault with Riches, whereof they have great store; but would that none should covet it beside themselves. So the cosening Epicure made all his fellow guests believe, that the banquet was poisoned; that all they refusing, he might glut himself alone. These often cheat themselves, and work their own bane: whiles they so beat off others from the world, and wrap themselves up in it to their confusion. The fox in the fable, with diverse other beasts, found a rich bootie of costly robes and jewels. He persuades the Lyon that he needs not trouble himself with them, because he is king, and may command all at his pleasure. He tells the Stag, that if he should put them on, they would so molest him that he could not escape the huntsmen. For the Boar, he says they would evil favouredly become him: and the wolf he shuffles off with the false news of a fold of Lambes hard by, which would do him more good. So all gone he begins to put on the robes himself, and to rejoice in his lucky fraud. But instantly came the owners, and surprised him: who had so pursued himself in these habiliments, that he could not by flight escape: so they took him, and hanged him up.

The subtle foxes, Jesuits and Friars dissuade kings from coveting wealth, because of their power to command all: and Great men, because it will make them envied and hunted after for their trappings. Country men it will not become they say: and all the rest, that it will hinder their journey to heaven. So in conclusion they drive all away, and get the whole world for their master Pope, and themselves. But at last these foxes are caught in their own noose: for the devil finds them so wrapped & hampered in these ornaments, and their hearts so besotted on money and riches, that he carries them with as much ease to hell, as the chariot drew Pharaoh into the red sea.

For us beloved, we teach you not to cast away the bag, but covetousness. Non facultatem, sed cupiditatem reprehendimus. We bid you use the world, but enjoy the Lord. And if you have wealth make you friends with your riches: that they (so made friends by your charity) may receive (and make way for) you into everlasting habitations. It is not your Riches of this world, but your riches of grace, that shall do your souls good. Not my wealth, nor my blood, but my Christianity makes me noble: quoth that noble Martyr Romanus. And though the Philosopher merrily, when he was asked whether were better, wisdom or Riches, answered, Riches: for I have often, said he seen poor wise men at rich fools doors; but never rich fools at poor wise men's doors. Yet wealth may be joined with wisdom, goodness with greatness. Mary and Martha may be sisters: righteousness and riches may dwell together.

Chrysostom on that aphorism of Christ, Ye cannot serve God and Mammon observes: that he doth not say, Ye cannot have God and Mammon; but ye cannot serve God and Mammon: for he that is the servant of God, must be the master of his wealth. The Lord Jesus is able to sanctify and save the rich man's soul as well as the poor's: and to send poor Lazarus into the bosom of rich Abraham. Where consider not only Qui sublatus, but Quo sublatus. Poor, but good Lazarus, is carried into Rich, but good Abraham's bosom: to signify that neither Poverty deserves heaven, nor Riches hell. Diuitiae non iniquae, sed iniquis. Riches are not unrighteous, but to the unrighteous. Nec culpabile est habere ista; sed harere istis. It is not a sin to have them, but to trust them.

As much might be said for Honor. It is the Lord that advanceth. Those that honor me, I will honor saith God. It is God, saith Job, that putteth on the kings girdle that fasteneth his honor about him. Promotion cometh neither from the East, nor from the West: nor from North, nor South: but only from the Lord. Hence it follows that Great men may be good men: yea hence it should follow, that great men ought to be good men.
