They may be good. Christ had his faithful followers even in Caesars family. Bernard indeed complained, that the Court is wont to receive good men, but to make them bad men. Bonos facilius recipere, quam facere: and Plures illic defecisse bonos, quam profecisse malos. The Court doth sooner take good men, then make good men. There moe good are perverted to evil, them evil converted to good. Yet in the Court of Pharaoh was a good Joseph: in the Court of Darius a good Daniel in the Court of Ahasuerus a good Mordecai. Neither is it ever true that, Quo quis corruptior moribus, & corrumpentior muneribus; the more a man is corrupt with vices, and corrupting with bribes, so much the more set by. The Pharisees objection is sometimes false. Have any of the Rulers believed on him? They may be good; yea

They must be good. For they are vnprinted Statutes whereout every man reads his duty. They are Legis factores, & therefore should not be Legis fractores. Aristotle calls them Loquentes Leges; speaking Laws. In ferious often set their eyes, to supply the place of their ears; and rather look to see their duetyes, then to hear it. All should live by Precept, but most will live by Precedent. A Superior therefore should teach men, to take the measure of his greatness, by his goodness. These two should be of an even length, of an equal pace. If honor out-runs honesty, it will hardly be overtaken. Let such a one appear to the people as he would have them be: and be himself such a one as he appears. A great Person is like a great hill; which gives a fair prospect, but is subject to the lightning and thunder of censures.

2, But it may here be objected, that if Riches and Honor be GOD'S gifts, then is he the giver of Judas his wealth, and Haman's honor. Perhaps you would here learn, whether your riches and honors come from God or no: your demand is requisite, and I will strive to give you satisfaction.

First for Riches.

If they come from God, they are

- Honestly gotten.
- Justly disposed.
- Patiently lost.

It is easy for that man to be rich, that will make his conscience poor. He that will defraud, forsware, bribe, oppress, serve the time, use, abuse all men, all things, swallow any wickedness; cannot escape riches. Whereas he, whose conscience will not admit of advancing or advantaging himself by indirect means, sits down with contented Poverty. But Bonus non cito e...sit diues: a good man seldom becomes rich on the sudden. Wealth comes not easily, not quickly to the honest door. Neither let us envy the gravel, that sticks in the throat of injustice. For he that will swallow the bait, which hangs on the Line of another man's estate, shall be choked with it. Of riches let us never desire more, then an honest man may well bear away. Mallem me miserum sanctum quàm prosperum peccatorem. I had rather be a miserable Saint, then a prosperous sinner. When the raising of thy roof, is the raising of another's foundation. The stones shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it. Thus •...on accipimus data, sed arripimus prohibita: we take not things with a beggars hand, but with a Tyrants: they are not God's gifts, but our felonies.

For this cause Riches are called Bona fortunae; the goods of fortune: not that they come by chance, but that it is a chance if ever they be good. Vaeac cumulant non sua. And Woe to him that coveteth an evil covetousness to his house. We think the oppressors avarice evil only to the houses of the oppressed: but God saith, it is most evil to his own. Whether fraud or force bring in unjust gain, it is as a coal of fire put in the thatch of his house.

And to show that God is not the giver of this, he pours a curse upon it; that often they who thus desire most wealth shall not have it: the world being to them like a froward woman, the more woed, the further off. Woe to thee that spoilest, and wast not spoiled: when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled. And Habac. 2. 8. Because thou hast spoiled many nations, all the 〈ϕ〉 of the people shall spoil thee and thou shalt be for booties unto them. Many a great fish in the sea of this world, devours another: and instantly comes a greater, and devours him. As that Emperor suffered his Officers to be like sponges, sucking up the goods of the comminallie: and being once full, he squeezed them into his own coffers. Pharaohs lean kine, that devoured the fat, were yet themselves never the fatter.

Philip was wont to say, that an asse laden with Gold, would enter the gates of any city: but the golden lode of bribes and extortions shall bar a man out of the City of God. All that is so gotten, is like quick silver; it will be running. If the Father leave all to his son, yet the son will leave nothing for his son, perhaps nothing for himself: never resting till.

Quodcumque profunda

Traxit auaritia, Luxu peiore refundat.

Until he hath thrown abroad all with a forke, which his father got together with a rake The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with rauine. But I will be against thee, saith the Lord: and the sword shall devour thy young Lions. The father plays the Lyon for his whelps, oppresseth and consumeth the poor: but his young Lions, which he so provides for, shall be destroyed.

Non habet euentus sordida praeda bonos.

We have seen huge hills of wealth, like mountains of ice, thus suddenly thawed as wax, with the heat of Luxury. But Parum iusto, a little that the righteous man hath, is better than the riches of many wicked. For the arms of the wicked shall be broken: the strength of their state shall be confounded. Their wealth is not God's, therefore he takes no charge of it. But the Riches of the good, is the riches of God, and he will prosper it.

2. These riches are well disposed or used. Piety not lust, rules them. He whom God's blessings hath made rich, gives God his part, man his part, and keeps the thirds to himself. He returns part.

1. To God: it is reason that he who gives all should have part of all. And because thou shouldest not grudge it, he challengeth but a little part, but the tenth part, wretched men, that will not give him one, that gave them ten. As Pilate's wife sent her husband word; Have thou nothing to do with that just man: meddle not with God's portion; lest a voice come to thee, as to Abimelech, Thou art but a dead man. This was good Jacob's resolution; of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto thee. Go too now ye that say, the Gospel hath no law for Tythes; and that they were merely ceremonial. Jacob paid them under nature: they are therefore unnatural men that deny them. You can find no law commanding your payment, but you shall find a law condemning your non payment.

What can then be pleaded for our accursed Impropriations? Did the heavenly Wisdom ever give you those riches? Shew us your Patent, and we will believe you. If ever God did convey his own portion to you show us his hand and seal for it. Where did ever Jesus pass away his royal prerogative, or acknowledge any fine before a Judge; that you say, Haec nostra sunt; these are ours? What money did, you ever pay him for them? where is your acquittance? Shew your discharge. O but you plead prescription! If you were not past shame, you would never dare to prescribe against the eternal God. Nullum tempus occurrit Regi: the king of heaven had these from the beginning, and will you now plead prescription? You may thus undo the poor Minister in these terrene Courts, but your plea shall be damned in the Courts of God. We can produce his act and deed, whereby he separated Tenths to himself: have you nothing to show, and will you take away his inheritance? Go to, you have a Law, and by your own law this proceeding is intolerable. You say, you hold them by your law, by your law you shall be condemned.

Perhaps you think to make amends for all, for you will increase the stipend of the vicar. When the Father hath gotten thousands by the sacrilegious Impropriation, the Son perhaps may give him a Cowes grass, or a matter of forty shillings per annum. Or bestow a little whiting on the Church, & a wainscot seat for his own worship. Yea more; he may chance to found a little Almshouse, and give twelve pence a piece a week to six poor people. O this oppressor must needs go to heaven, what shall hinder him? But it will be, as the by-word is, in a Wheelebarrow: the fiends, and not the Angels will take hold on him.

For is it not a great piece of charity, to get five hundred pound a year from God and to bestow twenty marks a year on the poor? When David providing for the Temples building, saw how bountifully the Princes and people offered; he gives solemn thanks to God, acknowledging that they had all received this first from him. <sup>f</sup> For all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee. The original is, of thine hand. What here the left hand of God gave to them, their right hand returns to God. They did not as our Churchsackers and ransackers do; rob God with the right hand, and give him a little back with the left: take from him a pound, and restore him a penny. Well you would know whether God hath given you your wealth; and he says, whatsoever you have gotten by Tenths was none of his giving: and, besides everlasting malediction, it shall make your posterity beggars.

2. The second rule of using our riches well, is (when God hath his own, in the next place) tribuere cuique suum: to render every man his due. If they be God's gifts, they must be disposed with justice. This is double; Commutative, & distributive Justice. The one Arithmetical, the other Geometricall. Arithmetical is to give everyone alike: Geometricall is to give everyone according to his deserts. 1, Cum res adaequatur rei. 2. Cum res adaequatur personae. There are two rules for him that would be just: a negative, and an affirmative rule. 1. The negative. Do that to no man which thou wouldst not have done to thyself. Quod tibi non vis, alterine facias. 2. The affirmative. Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. Not what every man out of his disordered passions would have another do to him: but what in his composed and deliberate judgment he approves done to himself, let him do that to others. Wouldst thou be relieved? Relieve. Wouldst thou borrow? lend.

If I should follow this point of just distribution, as a mark to discern of your riches whether they are God's goods or not; how distasting would my speech be! How few of your houses are filled with those treasures only, which the heavenly wisdom here disperseth! How little of them is found to come in God's name! It may be some of your wealth was given you of God; but your evil usage alters the nature of it; and it can no more properly be ascribed to him. It is hard to draw this circumstance into a square: it is so confused in your actions, that I cannot tell how to find a method for it in my discourse. You may make your riches none of God's blessings, by using them ill in respect of others, especially three ways.

Or

- Detinendo debita, by detaining things due to others
- Extrudendo vilia, by putting forth base things for good.
- Corrumpendo vtilia, by corrupting with good things others.

1. By detaining those things that are due to others: & these are either

- Debts
- Promises.

1. Debts. Rom. 13. Owe no man anything, but to love one another. Indeed there must be some owing, as there must be some lending: without this mutual commerce we are worse then Savages. But we must pay again. The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again. Debt is not deadly sin when a man hath no means, but when he hath no meaning to pay. There must be votal restitution, if there cannot be actual. Restore Quoad affectum. thought you cannot Quoad effectum. For if their be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, & not according to that he hath not. God reckons that as done which a man vere voluit, tamet si non valuit adimplere; faithfully would, though not fully could accomplish.

There are that will restore some, but not all: to this they have Posse, but no velle: let the creditors be content with one of four. But this little detinie is great iniquity. For a mite is debt, as well as a million. Tam, though not Tantum: so good a debt, though not so great a debt. And he that is faithful in a little, shall be made ruler over much.

What shall we then say of their goods, that break, and defraud others? Come they from God's hand, or from the devils? Surely Satan's right hand gave them, not God's Left. Haec mea sunt, saith the Devil: meae diuitie, mei diuites. These are mine, my riches, and my rich men. O that men would see this damnable sin! me thinks their terrified consciences should fear, that the bread they eat should choke them; for it is stolen; and stolen bread fills the belly of gravel. They should fear the drink they swallow should poison them; being the very blood of good householders, mixed with the tears of widows and orphans. The poor creditor is often undone, and glad of bread and water: whiles they like hogs lurking in their styes, fat and lard their ribs with the fruit of others labors. They rob the husband of his inheritance, the wife of her dowry, the children of their portions: the curse of whole families is against them.

And if this sin lie upon a great man's foul, he shall find it the heavier, to sink him lower into perdition. They are the Lord's of great lands, yet live upon other men's moneys: they must riot and revel, let the poor commoners pay for it. They have their Protections: their bodies shall not be molested, and their Lands are exempted: what then, shall they escape? no, their souls shall pay for it. When the poor creditor comes to demand his own, they rail at him, they send him loden away, but with ill words, not good money. In the Country they set laborers on work, but they give them no hire. Tut they are Tenants, vassals: must they therefore have no pay? Yet those very Land-lords will bate them nothing of their rents. But the riches so had, are not of God's giving, but of the Devils lending; and he will make them repay it a thousand fold in hell.

2. Promises are due debts, and must not be detained. If the good man promise, though to his own hurt, he changeth not. Indeed now Promissis diues quilibet esse potest: men are rich in promises, but they are poor in performance. More respect is had to commodity, then to honesty. Men have their evasions to disannul their promises: either they aequiuocate, or reserve; or being urged plead for getfulness. But the truth is, they have sufficient memory, but not sufficient honesty. It is said that a good name is the best riches; Qua semet amissa, postea nullus eris. But what care they for a name, so long as they save their money? Quid enim saluis infamia nummis?

A Pilate could say, Quod scripsi, scripsi; What I have written, I have written: and shall not a Christian say, Quod dixifaciam, what I have promised, I will perform? Hence it comes that there is so little faith in the world: that scriueners have so much work, that the proverb runs in everybody's mouth; Fast bind, fast find: that there is no hope of good deeds, but Sealed and delivered: that there is more trust to men's seals, then to their souls. For the Law of God holds us not so fast, as the laws of men. There is more awe of judgment in the common Pleas, then of a sentence of condemnation in the Court of heaven. The Sherife is altogether feared, not God: their is no dread of any Execution but his. Is the wealth thus detained, in your own consciences, God's blessing? deceive not your own souls. God requires us to be just in all our words, as righteous in all our ways. A Christians word should be as currant as his coin. Thus you see this first circumstance of Injustice taxed. Therefore Withhold not good from them to whom it is due; when it is in the power of thy hand to do it.

2. By putting forth base things for good. The Prophet Amos speaks of some, thatsell the refuse of their wheat the basest wares: neither do they sell them for base, but for good. If half a score lies, backed with as many oaths, will put off their vile commodities, they shall not lie upon their hands. Not upon their hands, I say; though upon their consciences.

Laudat venales, qui vult extrudere merces.

Their rule for themselves is Vincat vtilitas; for others Caveat emptor. Either they will show you one thing, & sell you another: and this cozenage hath longer arms then all other tricks, and over reaches them. Or they will conceal the insufficiency of the wares; and for this cause they darken their shops, lest the light should reveal their works of darkness. They love darkness more then light: let them take heed, least it be unto them according to their desires: least as they have brought hell into their shops, so their shops send them into hell.

Or if the commodity be discerned bad, you must have that or none. If your necessity forceth you to buy, it shall force you to buy such base stuff. This is a grievous sin in all professions, especially amongst Apothecaries: because with their injustice may be also mixed a spice of murder. But you will say, we compel none to buy our commodities: we but show them, and make the price. But it is craft tendere plagas, etsi agitaturus non sis: to lay snares, though you drive not men into them. Or be it what it will, yet rather then refuse your money, they will protest to give you the buying. Yea rather then fail, they will sell it you cheaper, then before they swore it cost them.

Quis metus aut pudor est properantis auari? What, sell cheaper then they buy? How should they then live? The answer is easy, they live by their lying.

Now doth this wealth come on God's name? is this the blessing of Heaven? Which of your consciences dare think so? Saint Augustine speaks of a certain Iester, that undertook to tell the people what they all did most desire. Multitudes came to hear this: to whose expectation he thus answered. ϕ vultis emere, & chare vendere: You would buy cheap, and sell dear. And this is every man's desire, that desires to be rich, more then to be just.

3. By making others bad with his goods: and here we may fitly proceed to the condemnation of Bribery. A gift blindeth the eyes of the wise. They that see furthest into the Law, and most clearly discern the causes of justice, if they suffer the dusts of bribes to be thrown into their sight, their eyes will water and twinkle, and fall at last to blind connivence. It is a wretched thing, when Justice is made a Hackney, that may be backed for money, and put on with golden spurs, even to the desired journey's end of injury and iniquity.

If the party be innocent, let his cause be sentenced for his innocencies sake: if guilty, let not gold buy out his punishment. If the cause be doubtful, the Judge shall see it worse, when he hath blinded his eyes with Bribes. But the will of the giver doth transfer right of the gift to the receiver. No, for it is not a voluntary will. But as a man is willing to give his purse to the thief, rather than venture his life or limb: so the poor man gives his Bribes, rather than hazard his cause. Thou sayest, the thief hath no right to the purse so given: God saith, nor thou to the Bribe.

And this is sinful in a Justicer, though he pass true Judgment on the cause: but much more accursed, when for this he will condemn the cause he should allow, or allow the cause he should condemn. To justify the wicked, and condemn the innocent, is alike abomination to the Lord. Far be from our souls this wickedness; that the ear which should be open to complaints, is thus stopped up with the ear-wax of partiality. Alas poor truth, that she must now be put to the charges of a golden ear-pick, or she... cannot be heard.

But to show that these riches are not of God's giving, his anger is ho...e against them. Fire shall consume the Tabernacles of Bribery. The houses or tabernacles, the chambers, halls, offices, studies, Benches; a Fire shall consume them. They may stand for a while, but the indignation of the Lord is kindled; and if it once begin to burn, all the waters in the South are not able to quench it. These Riches then come not of God's blessing: but I pray that God's blessing may be yours, though you want those Riches. Time, that severe moderator, chargeth me silence: and I rather choose abruptly to break off my discourse, than immodestly to abuse your tried patience. The Lord send us the gifts of his Left hand at his own good pleasure, but never deny us the blessings of his Right, for Jesus Christ his sake.

Amen.

The second Sermon.

PROV. 3. 16.

Length of days is in her right hand: and in her left hand, riches and honor.

WE are looking into the left hand of Wisdom: and there have found. 1. that Riches and Honor are GOD'S gifts. 2. That every man's riches and honor are not so; that the mouth of wickedness might be stopped. Therefore to satisfy our own consciences, that they are God's blessings to us, I observed that they must be. 1. honestly gotten. 2. justly disposed: and that by rendering sincerely that which is due. 1. to God. 2. to Man. 3. to our selves. Duties to others ended my former discourse, I must now begin at

Our selves.

The third act of disposing our Riches well, when God hath his portion, and Man his portion; is to take the thirds to our selves. It is God's will that with the wealth he hath given thee, thou shouldest refresh and console thyself. Thou preparest a table before me, thou annointest my head with oil, my cup runneth over. Wherefore hath God spread a table before thee, but that thou shouldest eat? Wherefore given thee a cup running over, but that thou shouldest drink? If thou have wine, make thy heart glad: if oil, let thy face shine: if bread, strengthen thy spirits. Weare thy own wool, and drink the milk of thy own flocks. It is a blessing which the Lord gives to those that fear him; Thou shalt eat the labor of thine own hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee. But a curse to the wicked; that they shall plant vineyards, and not taste the fruit thereof. The riches that God truly gives, man truly enjoys. Every man to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labor: this is the gift of God. Now a man may take from himself this comfort in abusing his wealth; and this many ways? especially four:

- Superstition,
- Malice,
- Ryot,
- Miserie.

1. By spending them upon works of Superstition, to the dishonor of God. And this is a high degree of ingratitude; When God hath given them a sword to defend themselves, and they turn the point of it upon his own breast. So God gave Israel sheep and oxen, and they offer them up to Baal. Many in England are beholding to God for great revenues, lands, and Lordships; and they therewith maintain Jesuits and Seminaries, his professed enemies. These use their riches as the Israelites did their ear-rings and jewels: God gave them for their own ornament, and they turn them to an Idol.

2. By malice, in abusing them to unnecessary quarrels & contentions of Law; to the hindrance of God's peace and their neighbors welfare. When men will put out one of their own eyes, to put out both their neighbors: Nay both their own, for one of his. Thus what they get by the happiness of foreign peace, they spend in civil wars. How unnatural is it for one hand thus to beat and wound another! Either of them gets a shell: You know who goes away with the meat.

3. By riot. Quicquid dant, dant vel veneri vel ventri. They spend more upon the Tavern, then upon the Tabernacle: at the house of plays, then at the house of praise: more upon their own hounds, then upon God's poor children. Julius Caesar seeing women carry little Dogs under their arms, asked if they had no children. God asketh you, that give your bread to dogs, if he hath no children for your charity. But they answer all, as the wicked in the 12. Psalm. Our tongues are our own. They stop the mouth of all exhortation to frugal courses, with It is my own: a man may spend his own as he list: I wast none of your goods: and what hath friend in private, or preacher in public to do with it? But they shall find one day, that they were but Stewards, that these Riches were but entrusted to them, and they shall give a strict account. Nothing is properly a man's own, but Peccata sua, his sins. Thy sins are thine own, thy riches God's.

4. By miserable niggardice, in forbearing to take his own portion; and so becometh his own consumption. No marvel if such a miser starve others, when he famisheth himself. Such a one is the worst vermin the land bears: another vermin seeks but to feed it self; but he hoarding up his grain feeds many thousands of them. Let him beware, least they also at last devour himself. As that Germane Bishop, that having great store of corn in a grievous famine, refused to sell it to the poor, and suffered the Rattes to eat it. But by the •...ust judgment of God, the Mice and Rats which he fed with his grain, did also feed upon him; albeit he built a Tower in the midst of the river Rheine to avoid them; which the Germans call still Rattes Tower. How shall they which slander heaven with pretended dearths, be admitted as friends to that place which they have belied!

You see how these riches must be gotten, how disposed; honestly gotten, justly dispensed; now it follows also in the next place, that they must be

3. Patiently lost: When God gives riches to the good, he gives them also a heart to trust in himself: in himself I say, not in them. Trust not in uncertain Riches, but in the living God; who giveth us abundantly all things to enjoy. He gives abundantly, but he forbiddeth trust in that abundance. He commends riches to us, as a great man doth a servant to his friend; work him, but trust him not: put labor to him, not confidence in him. Wealth may do us good service; but if it get the mastery of our trust, it will turn tyrant, Termagant; we condemn our selves to our own gallies.

To the godly riches are never so dear, but they can be content to forgo them. They receive them at God's hands with much thankfulness, and they loose them with much patience. When God takes ought from us, he does us no wrong. Retrahit sua, non abstrahit nostra: he doth but take back his own, not take away ours. So Job. The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away. The Lord giveth, therefore he may take away. Yea faith says; Lord, take all, so thou give me thyself. We have left all, and followed thee; saith Peter. Nos sequamur Christum, caetera sequentur nos. Let us follow Christ, other things shall follow us. But if they do not, it is gain enough to have Christ. He is too covetous whom the Lord Jesus cannot satisfy. We may loose diuitias Dei, but never Deum diuitiarum. We may be forsaken of these riches of God, but never of the God of riches. Amittamus omnia, dum habeamus habentem omnia. Let us loose all, so we have him that hath all.

That was never perfectly good, that might be lost. Of this nature are riches: they have made many prouder, none better. As never man was better, so never wise man thought himself better for them. That wise Prophet would never have prayed against riches, if their want had been the want of blessedness. The Devil indeed says, All those will I give thee: but the two dearest Aposties say, Silver and gold have I none. Who would not rather be in the state of those Saints, then of that Devil? Riches are such things, as those that have them not, want them not: those that have them, want them: they are lost in a night, and a man is never the worse for loosing them. How many Kings (not fewer then nine in our Island) that have begun their glory in a Throne, have ended it in a cell: changing their command of a Scepter, for the contemplation of a Book! Alas silly things, that they should dare ask one dram of our confidence. Non tanta in multis foelicitas, quanta in paucis securitas. There is not so much happiness in the highest estate, as there is content and peace in the lowest. Only then God be our trust, whose mercy we can no more loose, then himself can loose his mercy.

Thus you see this second general point amplified: if Riches be God's good blessings, (not only in themselves, so they are always good, but to us) then they are gotten honestly, disposed justly, lost patiently. As much happily might be said for Honor; wherein I will briefly consider, how and when it is of God.

God indeed gives Honor and Riches; but not all Honor; as you heard before not all Riches. There are four things in an honored person. First his Person, wherein he pertakes of the common condition of Mankind; lives and dies a man. Even the sons of Princes have their breath in their nostrilles. Secondly his Honor and dignity; this simply considered is of God, whosoever he be that hath it, a Joseph or a Haman. Thirdly, the manner of coming to his Honor: and this is no longer of God, then the means are good. If it be God's honor, God must give it, not man usurp it. Fourthly the menaging of this Honor; and this is also of the Lord, if it be right and religious. It happeneth often that Potens, the great man is not of God. They have set up Kings, but not by me: they have made Princes, and I knew it not. The manner of getting dignity is not always of God. Richard 3. came to the Crown of England by blood and murder. Alexander 6. obtained the Popedom, by giving himself to the Devil: Yet the dignity is of God. By me Kings reign: by me Princes and Nobles.

It is a hard question, wherein Honor consists. It is in blood, descending from the veins of noble ancestors? Not so, except nature could produce to Noble parents noble children. It was a monstrous tale that Nicippus his Ewe should yeane a Lyon. Though it be true among irrational creatures, that they ever bring forth their like; Eagles hatch Eagles; and Doves Doves: yet in man's progeny there is often found not so like a proportion, as unlike a disposition. The earthy part only follows the seed, not that whose form and attending qualities are from above. Honor must therefore as well plead a Charter of successive virtue, as of continued scutchions, or it cannot consist in blood. The best things can never be traduced in propagation: thou mayest leave thy son heir to thy lands in thy will, to thy Honor in his blood; thou canst never bequeath <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> him thy virtues. The best qualities do so cleave to their subjects, that they disdain communication to others.

That is then only true Honor, where dignity and desert, blood and virtue meet together: the greatness whereof is from blood, the goodness from virtue. Among Fools dignity is enough without desert: among wise men desert without dignity. If they must be separated, desert is infinitely better. Greatness without virtue laudatur ore alieno, damnatur conscientia sua; is commended by others tongues, condemned in the own heart. Virtue though without promotion, is more comforted in the own content, then dishartned by others contempt. It is a happy composition when they are united: think it your honor ye great men, that you are ennobled with virtues: not that you have, but that you deserve Honor. Let this that hath been spoken teach us some lessons concerning Honor.

1. Take it when God sends it, but be not ambitious of it. Indigni est arripere, non accipere honorem. It is an argument of unworthiness to snatch it denied, not to accept it offered. God resisteth the proud; opposeth himself in a professed war against him; as if he held a sword against his breast, when he would rise up in glory, to n...le him fast down to the earth. But he giveth grace to the humble: like a great & good Prince he gives those servants grace and honor, whom he perceives least ambitious of it. Such men seek not for honor, as for a Jewel they would fain find, but only stumble at it, as Saul sought but his Fathers Asses, when he lighted on a Kingdom. Pride like smoke will surge upward, though it vanish into air: massy virtue like gold keeps below, & is more preciously respected.

He that would mount, cares not what attendance he dances at all hours, upon whose stairs he sits waiting, what enormities he soothes, what deformities he imitates, what base offices he does prostrate himself to, so he may rise. His carriage is alienum a se, quite another thing from himself: he doth glew it on indecently, that he may skrew himself into favor. This man never understood the charge that goes with honor; Which the most wise disposition of God hath coupled together. Charge without some honor would overlay a man. If a man could have honor without some trouble, it would so transport him, that he were continually in danger of running mad. The poor man envies the great for his honor: the great perhaps envies the poor more for his peace: for as he lives obscurely, so securely. He that rightly knows the many public, and more secret vexatitions incident to Honor, would not (as that King said of his Crown) stoop to take it up, though it lay at his feet before him.

2. Live worthy of that Honor thou hast. Greatness not gooded with grace is like a Beacon upon a high hill: Qui conspiciunt, despiciunt: they that behold it, hate it, though perhaps they dare not censure it. The knee may be forced to reverence, but but the mind cannot but abhor so unworthy a Statue. In his pride he stomachs the covered head, or the stiff knee of a good Mordecai, fretting that other men do not think him so good as he thinks himself. But indeed he doth not think himself more honorable then others think bim base. All the poor honor that he hath, is only kept above ground with his body; both corrupt, fall, and rotte together: and if it be coniurd up at the funeral, to present it self, yet it fails not to go back with the Heralds.

3. Forget not your original, ye whose brows the wreathes of honor have (above hopes) engirt. If the Lord hath raised you out of the dust: and lifted you up out of the dunghill: and set you among the Princes of the people; yet forget not your Fathers house, nor the place of your beginning. Miseranda obliuio originis non meminisse. He never truly understands what he is, that forgets what he hath been. Solomon's observation is often true; Folly is set in great dignity: Albeit this be not the right Vbi; Folly in excellency. Now these excellent fools soon forget, de quo surrectio detur; From howe low estate they are risen. They consider not how glad their Carkases would once have been of a warm covering; that are now richer then Lilies, more gorgeous then May: scarce Solomon in all his glory was arrayed like one of these. They consider not, that need once made them trudge through the Mire, even many tedious journeys; that climb by unjust Riches to that dignity, as in their Caroches to be whirled through the popular streets.

It was Jacob's humble acknowledgement of God's mercy to him. With my staff I passed over this Jordan, and now I am become two bands. If blind Ingratitude would suffer many proud eyes to see it, howe justly might diverse say: With my staff came I hither walking, and now I ride in triumph with attendants. To these let me apply the words of the Prophet: Look unto, the Rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged. Remember your poor beginning, that you may bless God for your advancing. Say not only in general, Quis homo! What is man that thou O Lord art so mindful of him? But Quis ego? What am I, and what is my Fathers house, that GOD should thus raise me up!

4. If thou have Honor, keep it, but trust it not. Nothing is more inconstant; for it depends upon inconstancy it self, the vulgar breath. Which is Bellua multorum capitum, a Beast of many heads, and as many tongues, which never keep long in one tune As they never agree one with another, so seldom do they agree long with themselves. Paul and Barnabas come to Lystra, and raise an impotent Creeple: Hereat the amazed people would needs make them God's, and draw Bulls and garlands to the Altars for sacrifice to them. Not long after they draw Paul out of the City, and stone him. They suddenly turn him from a God to a malefactor; and are ready to kill him instead of killing sacrifice to him. O the fickleness of that thing, which is committed to the keeping of vulgar hands. Trust not then popularitie with thy Honor, so it is mutable: but trust virtue with it, so it is durable. Nothing can make sure a good memory, but a good life. It is a foolish dream, to hope for immortality and a long-lasting name, by a monument of brass or stone. It is not dead stones, but living men, that can redeem thy good remembrance from oblivion. A Sumptuous Tomb covers thy putrefied Carkase; and be thy life never so lewd, a commending Epitaph shadows all: but the passenger that knew thee, telles his friends; that these out-sides are hypocritical, for thy life was as rotten as is thy corpse: and so is occasioned by thy presumed glory, to lay open thy deserved infamy. Neither can the common people preserve thy honor whiles thou livest, nor can these dull and senseless Monuments keep it when thou art dead. Only thy noble and Christian life makes every man's heart thy Tomb, and turns every tongue into a pen, to write thy deathless Epitaph.

5. Lastly, if God gives to some men Honor, it is then manifest that God allows difference of persons. He ordains some to rule and others to obey: some masters, others servants; he setteth some up on high, and placeth others in a low degree. To repine at others greatness and our own meanness, is to cavil with God; as if he wanted wisdom and equity in disposing these inferior conditions. It is a savage and popular humor, to malign and inveigh against men in eminent places. That rhyme, When Adam delued, and Eve span, Who was then a Gentleman? seems to be made among Iacke Strawes followers, and to savor of Rebellious discontent. God allows no man to villify, where he hath honored: no scurrilous Libelles disgracing those that live, yea disparaging the very dead; shall pass the Court of God's Justice uncensured. Where the Lord confers and confirms Honor, woe to the tongue that shall traduce it. This second point hath held us long, the brevity of the rest shall ease it.

3. Observe that Solomon in the donation of the left hand, couples together Riches and Honor: as if these two were for the most part inseparable companions. Eccle. 6. God gives to a man Riches and Honor. First Riches, and then Honor: for it is lightly found, so much Riches, so much Honor; and reputation is measured by the Acre. I have wealth enough, saith the worldling. Luke 12. I will turn Gentleman, take my ease, eat, drink, and be merry. Riches are the stairs whereby men climb up into the height of dignity; the fortification that defends it: the food it lives upon: the oil that keeps the lamp of Honor from going out. Honor is a bare robe, if Riches do not lace and flourish it: and Riches a dull Lump, till Honor give a Soul to quicken it. Fifthly then Honor and Riches, Wealth and Worship do bear one another company.

4. Lastly observe, that though riches and honor be God's gifts, yet they are but the gifts of his left hand: therefore it necessarily follows, that every wise man will first seek the blessings of the Right. First seek the kingdom of God, and his righteousness: and these things shall be added to you. Godliness is the best Riches, Riches the worst: let us strive for the former without condition: for the other if they fall in our way, let us stoop to take them up: if not, let us never covet them. It is no Wisdom to refuse God's kindness, that offers wealth: nor piety to scratch for it when God withholds it. When the Lord hath set thee up as high as Haman in the Court of Ahasuerus, or promoted thee to ride with Joseph in the second Chariot of Egypt: were thy stock of Cattle exceeding Job's; seven thousand sheep, three thousand Camels, five hundred yoke of Oxen: did thy Wardrobe put down Solomon's, and thy cup-bord of plate Belshazzars, when the vessels of God's temple were the ornature. Yet all these are but the gifts of Wisdomes left hand; and the possessors may be under the malediction of God and go down to damnation. If it were true, that sanctior qui ditior, that goods could make a man good, I would not blame men's kissing the left hand, and sucking out Riches and Honor. But alas what antidote against the terror of conscience can be chimed from gold? What charm is there in brave apparel to keep off the rigor of Satan? Quod tibi praestat opes, non tibi praestat opem. That which makes thee wealthy, cannot make thee happy.

Jonah had a Gourd that was to him an Arbour: he sate under it secure: but suddenly there was a worm that bitte it, and it died. Compare (secretly in your hearts) your riches to that Gourd: your pleasure to the greenesse of it: your pomp, attendance vanities to the leaves of it: your sudden increase of wealth, to the growing and shooting up of it. But withal forget not the Worm and the Wind; the Worm that shall kill your root is Death, and the Wind that shall blow upon you is calamity. There is a greater defect in this wealth and worship then their uncertainty. Non m...do fallacia quia dubia verum insidiosa quia dulcia. They are not only deceitful through their ticklenesse, but dangerous through their lusho...snesse. Men are apt to surfeit on this luxurient abundance: it is a ba...e to security, a baud to wantonness.

Here is the main difference between the gifts of God's right hand and of his left. He gives real blessings with the left, but he doth not settle them upon us: he promiseth ⟨◇⟩ perpetuity; but with the graces of his right he gives assurance of everlastingness. Christ calls Riches the riches of deceitfulness: but grace the better part that shall never be taken away. David compares the wealthy to a flourishing tree that is soon withered: but Faith stablisheth a man like Mount Zion, never to be removed. He that thinks he sits surest in his seat of Riches, let him take heed least he fall. When a great man boasted of his abundance, (saith Paulus Emilius) one of his friends told him, that the anger of God could not long forbear so great prosperity. How many rich Merchants have suddenly lost all! How many Noblemen sold all! How many wealthy heirs spent all! Few Sundays pass over our heads without Collections for Ship-wracks, fires, and other casualties; Demonstrative proofs that prosperity is inconstant, riches casual. And for honor, we read that Belshazzarius an honorable Peere of the Empire, was forced in his old age to beg from door to door, obulum date Belshario. Fredericke a great Emperor was so low brought, that he should be made but the Sexton of a Church.

O then let us not adhere to these left hand blessings, but first seek length of days, eternal joys never to be lost. A man may enjoy the other without fault: the sin consisteth praeferendo vel conferendo; either in preferring Riches, or in comparing them with faith and a good conscience. Vtere caducis, fruire aeternis, Thou must necessarily use these transient things, only enjoy and rest upon the everlasting comforts of Jesus Christ. When God hath assured to a Christian spirit the inheritance of Heaven, he joyfully pilgrims it through this world: if wealth and worship salute him by the way, he refuseth not their company; but they shall not stray him out of his path, nor transport his affections: for his heart is where his hope is, his love is where his Lord is; even with Jesus his Redeemer at the right hand of God. Now this man's very Riches are blessed to him; for as from the hand of God he hath them, so from the hand of God he hath to enjoy good in them. Whereas to some (saith Solomon) I have seen Riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt: to this man they shall work to the best; blessing his condition in this life, and enlarging his dition in heaven; as the wise man sweetly. The blessing of the Lord it maketh rich: and he addeth no sorrow with it.

1. That both God's hands are giving: it is enough if man give with one hand; but the Lord sets both his hands a doling his Alms of mercy. Nemo tuarum vnam vincet vtraque manu. No man can do so much with both hands, as GOD with one hand, with one finger. He hath Manum plenam, extensam, expansam; hand full, not empty: so full that it can never be emptied with giving. Innumerable are the drops in the sea yet if one be taken out, it hath (though insensibly) so much the less: but God's goodness can suffer no diminution, for it is infinite. Men are sparing in their bounty, because the more they give, the less they have: but God's hand is ever full, though it ever disperse: and the filling of many cisterns is no abatement to his ever running fountain. Our prayers 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 therefore are well directed thither for blessings; whence though we receive never so much, we leave no less behind. Let this master of Requests in heaven have all our suites: we are sure either to receive what we ask, or what we should ask.

It is extensa, a hand put forth, and stretched out. Stretched out, not to receive, but to give. The Prophet speaks of Rulers that stretch out their hands for bribes and cry Give ye: but the Lord's hand is put forth to offer good things. All day long have I stretched forth my hands to a disobedient people. Indeed God hath a hand; and woe to the man against whom it is stretched.

Homer saith that all the God's could not ward a blow of Jupiter's hand. His hands are not only 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , hands that cannot be sufficiently praised: but 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , hands that cannot be resisted. It is a heavy hand when it lights upon men in anger. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. When revolting Israel fell to serve Baal and Ashtaroth Whethersoever they went out, the hand of the Lord was against them for evil. When the men of Ashdod were smitten with Emerods, it is said the hand of the Lord was heavy upon them. So David in his grievous misery, Thine arrows stick fast in me, & thy hand presseth mesore. It is not this hand that God here stretcheth out. Bernard saith, God hath two hands; Fortitudo and Latitudo. A hand of strength, Qua defendit potenter: wherewith he protects his friends, and confounds his enemies. A hand of Bounty, Qua tribuit affluenter, whereby he disperseth and disposeth the larges of his gifts. This is the hand here put forth, manus regalis, and gives munus regale; a royal hand, full of real mercies; let us humbly kiss it.

It is expansa, not a shut hand, but open, Thou openest thy hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness. God gives richly, saith Paul. Man is poor, because he is a creature: the very nam... of creature infers poverty: it implies a receiving of all. Quid habes quod non accepisti? The Creator hath the possession of all, and the disposition of all, at his own pleasure. Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Lights. Bread in the Lord's prayer is called Ours; Give us this day our daily bread: but ne putetur a nobis, dicimus da nobis: lest we should imagine it our own from our selves, we are taught daily to beg it of our father in heaven, whose it is. It is the Lord's hand that barreth the gates of our cities, that fillet our garners with plenty, that sets peace about our walls, and prosperity in our palaces; that blesseth our goings out, and comings in; even all the works of our hands.

But what speak I of temporal things the gifts of his lest hand, in comparison of length of days, everlasting joys, the treasures of his right? Repentance, humility, charity, and the Lady of all graces Faith come from his hand, and are the fair gifts of God. Ipsium velle credore Deus operatur in homine. The first will to believe is wrought in man by God. If any ask, Cur, illi ita suadeatur, vt persuadeatur; illi autem non ita? Why doth this man believe, & another remain in infidelity? Hic digitus Dei: the hand of God hath been here, working faith in the soul of him that believeth. All comes from this hand of mercy. Quisquis tibi enumerat merita sua, quid tibi enumerat nisi muneratua? He that reckons to God his merits; what doth he reckon, but God's mercies? Quae bo na mea, dona tua: those that are my goods, as God's gifts.

2. Though hands be here attributed to God, yet it is but by way of metaphor; not literally and in a true propriety of speech. To conceive GOD to be as man, with human dimensions, was the heresy of the Anthro pomorphites: and he that thus grossly thinks of God, saith Jerome makes an Idol of God in his heart. But herein God stoops to the quality of our understandings ascribing to himself anger and displeasure, as it were passions to the impassible: whereas Nec Deus affectu capitur, nec tangitur ir...: they are not passions, but perfections. God hath a mouth, by which he teacheth man wisdom: he hath feet, by which he walketh on the earth his footstool: he hath hands, by which he giveth food to all flesh: he hath none of these organically, as men have; but in the variety of effects which he produceth. So Bernard; Per effectum haec habet, non per naturam.

3. Observe that in the left hand there is a double benefit, Riches and Honor: in the right but a single one; Length of days: yet this one far transcends both the other. For if we should restrain it to this world: long life is a great blessing; and more valuable than wealth and worship. But taking it as it is meant, for eternity. (For this life is but a span long; a span then; now scarce the length of a finger) as Psal. 23. I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever: originally to length of days; but fitly translated For ever: the left hand is as far exceeded by the right, as short mortality is by everlastingness. Aged Israel to his grand-children, Ephraim & Manasseh two sons of Joseph, when the father had placed the first borne Manasseh to his right hand, and Ephraim the younger to his left: he crossing his hands, laid the right upon Ephraim, and the left upon Manasseh. When Joseph would have removed his hands, he refused: I know it my son, I know it. Manasseh also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he. The Lord doth bless many Manassehs with his left hand in riches and honors: but blessed be that Ephraim to whom his right hand is commended. Lord, let others enjoy the treasures of thy left hand, but lay thy right upon our souls.

4. I conclude. Since the Lord out of both his hands pours and showers upon us these mercies, what should we do but be thankful? Shall we receive benefits by heaps; and is the incense of our gratitude of so thin a smoke? Et capitur minimo tuis honor Deus? All these blessings seem to say to man; Take, and take heed: Accipe, red, cave: Receive, return, beware. Take warmth from me saith apparel, heat from me f...yth fire, strength from me saith bread. Restore thankfulness to the Giver. Or else beware lest the fire burn thee, water drown thee, air choke thee: lest all give destruction, that should give comfort. Receive in the name of God, Return in the Praise of God, or Beware in the fear of God. To whom for the blessings of both his hands, be glory ascribed from all lips and hearts, forever and ever.

Amen.

THE LOST ARE FOVND.

LVK. 19. 10.

For the Son of man is come to seek, and to save that was lost.

THE first word is Causal, and puts us in mind of some reference. In brief the dependence is this. Little Zacchaeus became great in God's favor: he was. ver. 2. a Publican, a chief Publican, a rich Publican: Yet he hath a desire to see Jesus, and Jesus hath a purpose to see him. A fig tree shall help him to the sight of Christ, & Christ to the sight of him.

Our Savior calls him down, (it is fit they should come down in humility that entertain Christ) and bids himself to his house to dinner. He is made Zacchaeus his guest for temporal food, and Zacchaeus is made his guest for everlasting cheare. This day is salvation come to this house. ver. 9.

This mercy is not without the Pharisees grudging ver. 7. When they saw it, they all murmured, saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Murmuring is between secret backbiting, and open railing: a smotherd malice, which can nether beevtterly concealed, nor dare be openly vented. The cause of their murmuring was, that he was become a guest to a sinner: as if the Sun of righteousness could be corrupted in shining on a Dunghill of sin. No: whiles he did associate the bad, he made them good; feeding them spiritually, that fed him corporally. He did not consent to their sin, but correct it: not infecting himself, but affecting their souls, and effecting their bliss. A man may accompany those, whom he desires to make better, or them to make him better. And that the mouth of all wickedness might be stopped, our Savior says, that his coming into the world was not only to call home Zacchaeus, but even many such Publicans. For the Son of man is come to seek, and to save &c.

We are thus gotten over the threshold; For: let us now look into the house, and suruay every chamber and room in it. The foundation of this comfortable scripture is Jesus Christ and the building may be distinguished into five several Parlours, all richly hung and adorned with the graces and mercies of God: and the midst thereof paved with love for the daughters of Jerusalem. CHRIST is the Buttress or corner stone; and in him consider here

His

- Humility. The Son of man.
- Veritie. Is come.
- Pity. To seek.
- Piety. To save.
- Power. That which was lost.

1. The Son of man. Ecce Humilitatem. He that is the Son of eternal God, calls himself the Son of mortal man.

2. Is come. Ecce veritatem. What God had promised, his Servants prophesied, his Types prefigured, he hath now performed. They all foretold in their kinds that he should come: he makes all good, he Is come.

3. To seek. Ecce compassionem. He knew that we were utterly gone; that we had Nec valentis oculum, nec volentis animum: neither an eye able, nor a mind willing to seek him: in Pity he seeks us.

4. To save. Ecce Pietatem. He seeks us not in ruinam, to our destruction as we deserved: but in salutem, to our salvation as he desired. Amissos quaerit, quaesitos invenit, inventos seruat. He seeks them that were lost, he finds them he seeks, he saves them he finds. To save.

5. The lost. Ecce Potestatem. He is not only able to strengthen us weak, nor to recover us sick, nor to fetch us home offering our selves to be brought: but when we had neither will nor power to procure this; yea when we had a reluctancy against this, for we were his enemies and hated him: he did recall us gone, revieve us dead, seek and save us that were lost.

You see the Chambers, how they lie in order: let me keep your thoughts in this house of Mercy a while, wherein may all our souls dwell forever. In surveying the Roomes, it is fit we should begin with the lowermost: and thither the Text aptly first leads us.

The Son of Man.

Christ is called a Son in three respects. 1. In regard of his Deity, the Son of God, begotten of him from all eternity, coequal and coessential to him. 2. In respect of his flesh, the Son of Mary, naturally borne of her. 3. He calls himself the Son of Man, in regard that he took on him man's nature, and undertook the performance of man's redemption. Man like us in all things, sin only excepted. So that in this circumstance two things are considerable in Christ; the one necessarily involved in the other:

His

- Humanity.
- Humility.

His Humanity.

When the fullness of time was come, God sent his Son made of a Woman. Ex muliere, non in muliere: as Gorran notes against Valentinus, whose heresy was, that Christ passed through the Virgin as water through a Conduit-pipe. But this Preposition Ex, signifies a preexistent matter: as a house is made of timber & stones, bread of wheat, wine of grapes. Christ had therefore the materials of his body from the virgin Mary; though not his Formal principium: for the holy Ghost was agent in this wonderful conception.

Neither is this a thing impossible to God, though wonderful to Man; that this Christ should be the Son of Mary without man. As it was possible to God in the first creation, to make a Woman out of a Man without the help of a Woman: so in this new creation, to make a Man out of a Woman without the help of a man. There is the same reason of possibility. It is as easy to bring fire from a steel without a flint, as from a flint without a steel. But he that could dare essentiam nihilo, can raise a nature ex aliquo.

God had four diverse manners of creating human creatures. 1. The first man Adam was made of no man, but immediately created of God. 2. The second, that was Eve, was made (not of a woman, but) of a man alone. 3. The third sort, all men and women else are begotten of man and woman. 4. Christ the last sort was of a different manner from all these. 1. not of no precedent flesh, as Adam. 2. Not of a man without a woman, as Eve. 3. Not of man and woman, as all we. 4. But after a new way; of a woman, without a man. We are all in this sort opposed to Adam, Christ to Eve, Adam was made of neither man nor woman, we of both man and woman. Eve of a man without a woman, Christ of a woman without a man.

Now as this was a great work of God, so it is a great wonder to man. Three miracles here. Deum nasci, virginem parere, fidem haec credere. That the Son of God should become the Son of woman, a great miracle. That a virgin should bear a child, and yet before, at, after the birth remain still a virgin, a great miracle. That the faith of man should believe all this, Maximum miraculum; this is the greatest wonder of all.

Thus you have Divinity assuming Humanity: a great mystery; God manifested in the flesh. In mundum venit, qui mundum condidit: he comes down to earth, but he leaves not heaven; hic affuit inde non defuit. Humana natura assumpta est, Diuina non consumpta est. He took Humanity, he lost not his Divinity. He abideth Mariae Pater, the Father of Mary; who is made Mariae Filius, the Son of Mary To us a child is borne, to us a son is given. Whereon Emissenus; Natus qui sentiret occasum, datus qui resciret exordium. He was borne that should feel death: he was given that was from everlasting, and could not die. Natus qui & matre esset iunior, datus quo nec Pater esset antiquior. He that was borne was younger then his mother; he that was given was as eternal as his father. He was Son to both God and Mary. Non alter ex Patre, alter ex Virgine: sed aliter ex Patre, aliter ex virgine.

As the flowers are said to have Solem in coelo patrem, solum in terra matrem: so Christ hath a father in heaven without a mother, a mother on earth without a father. Here is then the wonder of his Humanity. The everlasting Father is become a little child. He that spreads out the heavens, is wrapped in swaddling clouts. He that is the Word, becomes an Infant not able to speak. The Son of God calls himself the Son of man.

His Humility.

If your understandings can reach the depth of this bottom, take it at one view. The Son of God calls himself the Son of man. The omnipotent Creator becomes an impotent creature. As himself saith; Greater love hath no man then this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. So greater humility never was then this, that God should be made man. It is the voice of Pride in man, I will be like God: but the action of Humility in God, I will be man. Proud Nebuchadnezzar says, Ero similis altissimo, I will be like the Highest: meek Christ saith, Ero similis infimo I will be like the lowest: he put on him the form of a servant: yea he was a despised Worm. God spoke it in derision of sinful man; Behold, he is become as one of us: but now we may say, God is become as one of us. There the lowest aspires to be the Highest, here the Highest vouchsafes to be the lowest. Alexander a son of man would make himself the son of God: Christ the Son of God makes himself the son of man. God in whose presence is fullness of joy, becomes a man full of sorrow. Eternal rest betakes himself to unrest: having whilst he lived in passive action, and when he died active passion.

The LORD over all things, and Heir of the world, undertakes ignominy and poverty. Ignominy: the King of glory is become the shame of men. Poverty: Pauper in nativitate, pauperior in vita, pauperrimus in cruce. Poor in his Birth, for borne in another man's stable: poor in his Life, fed at another man's table: poor in his Death, buried in another man's sepulcher.

There are saith Bernard, some that are humbled, but not humble: others that are humble, not humbled: and a third sort that are both humbled and humble. Pharaoh was humbled and cast down, but not humble: smitten with subversion, not moved with submission. Gothfrey of Boloigne was not humbled, yet humble: for in the very heat and height of his honor he refused to be crowned in Jerusalem, with a Crown of gold, because Christ his master had been in that place crowned with a crown of thorns. Others are both humbled and humble. When he slew them they sought him: they returned and inquired early after GOD. Our Savior Christ was Passively humbled: he was made lower then the Angels, by suffering death: the Lord did break him. Actively he humbled himself. he made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant: he humbled himself. Habitually he was humbled. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart. Let this observation lesson us two duties.

1. Esteem we not the worse, but the better of Christ, that he made himself the Son of man. Let him not lose any part of his honor, because he abased himself for us. He that took our flesh, is also over all, GOD blessed forever, Amen. There is more in him then humanity: not alia persona, but alia natura: not another person, but another nature. Though he be verus homo, he is not merus homo. And even that Man, that was crucified on a cross, and laid in a grave, is more high then the heavens, more holy then the Angels.

Stephen saw this very Son of man standing on the right hand of God. The blood of this Son of man gives salvation: and to whom it doth not, this Son of man shalladjudge them to condemnation. Under this name and form of Humility our Savior apposed his Disciples. Whome do men say, that I, the Son of Man, am? Peter answers for himself and the Apostles, whatsoever the people thought; Thou art Christ the Son of the living God. He calls himself the Son of man, Peter calls him the Son of God. The Jews see him only a st...mbling block, and the Greeks foolishness: but Christians see him the Power of God, and the Wisdom of God. The wicked behold him without form or comelynesse, or beauty to desire him: but the faithful behold him crowned with a Crown, his face shining, as the Sun in his glory. Therefore Quanto minorem se fecit in humilitate, tanto maiorem exhibuit in bonitate. Quanto pro me vilior, tanto mihi charior. The lower he brought himself in humility, the higher he magnified his mercy. By so much as he was made the baser for us, by so much let him be the dearer to us.

Observe it O man: & quia limus es, non sis superbus: & quia Deo iunctus; non sis ingratus: because thou art dust of thyself, be not proud: because thou art made immortal by Christ, be not unthankfull.

Condemned world, that despisest him appearing as a silly man! The Jews expected an external pomp in the Messias: Can he not come down from the Cross; how should this man save us? They consider not, that he who wanted a Rest for his head, & Bread for his followers, fed some thousands of them with a few loaves: that he which wanted a pillow, gives rest to all believing souls: that he could, but would not come down from the cross; that the dear price of their redemption might be paid.

Many still have such Jewish hearts: what, believe on a crucified man? But Paul determines to know nothing, but this Jesus Christ, and him crucified. They can be content to dwell with him on mount Tabor, but not to follow him to mount Caluary. They cleave to him so long as he gives them bread, but forsake him when himself cries for drink. Oderunt pannos tuos. O Christ, they like well thy robes of glory, but not thy rags of poverty. They love him whiles the people cry Hosanna; but shrink back when they cry, Crucify him. All pleaseth them but the Cross: all the fair way of delights they will accompany him, but at the Cross they part.

They would share with him in his kingdom, but they will none of his vassalage. The Lyon (in a Fable) had many attendants, and he provided for them good cheare. They like well of this, and are proud of their master, to whom all the other beasts gave awe and obedience. But it chanced that the Lyon fell into the danger of the Dragon; who had got him down; ready to devour him. His followers seeing this quickly betake them to their heels; and fell every beast to his old trade of rapine. Only the poor Lamb stood bleating by, and though he could not help, would not forsake his Lord. At last the Lyon gets the victory, and treads the Dragon under his feet to death. Then he punisheth those revolting traitors with deserved destruction, and sets the Lamb by his own side.

The great Lyon of Judah feeds many of the Jews, and at this day profane wretches: whilst his bounty lasts, Christ, and none but Christ. But when the Red Dragon hath got him under, nailed him to the cross, Crucified him dead; away go these runnagates; no more penny, no more Paternoster. If affliction come for Christ his cause, they know where to find a kinder Master. Back to the world: one to his fraud, and he will over-reach others with the sin of deceitfulness, though himself be over-reached with the deceitfulness of sin. Another to his usury; and he chymically projects money out of the poor's bowels. A third to his covetousness; and he had rather that the very frame of the world should fall, then the price of corn. A fourth to his Idols; and he hopes for cakes from the Queen of heaven, as if the King of heaven was not able to give bread. If the Lord pinch them with distress, they run to Rome for succor: expecting that from a block, which they would not tarry to obtain from the God of mercy. Then they cry like the Israelites: Up, make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moses, we know not what is become of him. But at last this Lyon conquers the Dragon; overcomes Satan & his damnation: what shall he then say to those Rebelles that would not have him reign over them? But Bring those mine enemies, and slay them before me. But the poor and pure innocent Lambs that suffer with him, shall reign with him. Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousness sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

⟨◇⟩ . The other use is S<sup>t</sup>. Paul's. Let the same mind be in you, which was in Christ Jesus. What mind is that? Humility. Ver. 7. He that thought it no robbery to be equal with God, humbled himself to become Man: we should have found it no robbery to be equal with Devils, and shall we be proud? What an intolerable disproportion is this; to behold Humilem Deum, & superbum hominem? an humble God, and a proud man? Who can endure to see a Prince on foot, & his vassal mounted? Shall the Son of God be thus humble for us, & shall not we be humble for our selves? For our selves, I say; that deserve to be cast down among the lowest; for our selves, that we may be exalted.

He that here calls himself the Son of man, is now glorified: they that humbly acknowledge themselves to be the Sons of men, that is mortal, shall be made the Sons of God, that is immortal. In the first of King. 19. There was a mighty strong wind, that rent the mountains, and brake the rocks; but God was not in the Wind: the Lord will not rest in the turbulent spirit, puffed up with the wind of vain-glory. There was an earth-quake, but God was not in the earth-quake. He will not dwell in a covetous heart, buried in the furrows of the earth, and cares of the world. There was a Fire, but the Lord was not in the fire. He will not rest in a choleric angry soul, full of combustion and furious heat. There was a still soft voice, and the Lord came with it. In a mild and humble spirit the God of heaven and earth will dwell. The high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, will dwell in the contrite and humble soul.

It is a sweet mixture of Greatness and Goodness; Vt dum nihil in honor sublimius, nihil in humilitate submissius; When the highest in dignity are the lowest in courtesy. Augustine called himself, Minimum non solum omnium Apostolorum, sed etiam Episcoporum; the least not only of all the Apostles, but of all the Bishops: whereas he was the most illuminate doctor and best Bishop of his times. Paul thought himself not worthy to be called an Apostle: and behold, he is called The Apostle; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; not Paul, but The Apostle. Abraham that esteemed himself dust and ashes, is honored to be the Father of all them that believe. David sits content at his sheep-folds; the Lord makes him King over his Israel.

But as Humility like the Bee gathers Honey out of rank Weeds, very sins; moving to repentance. So Pride like the Spider sucks poison out of the fairest flowers, the best graces, and is corrupted with insolence. Vna superbia destruit omnia. Only Pride overthrows all. It thrust proud Nebuchadnezzar out of men's society, proud Saul out of his kingdom, proud Adam out of Paradise, proud Haman out of the Court, proud Lucifer out of heaven. Pride had her beginning among the Angels that fell, her continuance in earth, her end in hell. Poor man; how ill it becomes thee to be proud, when God himself is humble!

Is come.

We understand the person, let us come to his Comming. And herein, Ecce veritatem; behold his Truth. Did God promise a Son of a virgin; Emanuel, a Savior? He is as good as his word; Venit, he is come. Did the sacrificed blood of so many Bulls, Goats, and Lambes, prefigure the expiatory blood of the Lamb of God to be shed? Ecce agnus Dei; Behold that Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. Is the Seed of the woman promised to break the head of the serpent? Behold he breaks the heavens, and comes down to do it. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil. Did God engage his word for a Redeemer to purge our sins? Call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins.

Against unbelieving Atheists, and mis-believing Jews, here is sufficient conviction. But I speak to Christians, that believe he is come. Hac fide credit venturum esse, qua creditis venisse. Believe that he will come again, with the same faith wherewith you believe he is come already. Do not curtall God's word, believing only so much as you list. Faith is holy and catholic: if you distrust part of God's word, you prepare infidelity to the whole. Did God promise Christ, and in the fullness of time to send him? Then since he hath again promised him, and appointed a day wherein he will judge the world by that man, he shall come. As certainly as he came to suffer for the world, so certainly shall he come to judge the world. Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. He that kept his promise when he came to die for us, followed by some few poor Apostles, will not break it when he shall come in glory with thousands of Angels.

Neither did God only promise that Christ should come, but that all believers should be saved by him. As many as received him, to them gave he power to be the sons of God, even to them that believe on his Name. Misit filium, promisit in filio vitam. He sent his Son to us, and salvation with him. Wretched and desperate men that distrust this mercy! Whosoever believes, and is baptized, shall be saved. Whosoever; Qui se ipsum excipit, seipsum decipit. Did not God spare to send his promised son out of his bosom to death, and will he to those that believe on him deny life? No; all his promises are Yea and Amen in Christ: may these also be Yea and Amen in our believing hearts. A yielding Devil could say, Jesus I knew: yet some men are like that tempting devil. Math. 4. Si filiu: Dei sis; If thou be the son of God. Si if; as if they doubted, whether he could or would save them.

Is come.

There is a threefold Comming of Christ: according to the threefold difference of Time, Past, Present, Future. As Bernard.

Venit

- Ad homines
- In homines
- Contra homines.

1. First for the time past, he came among men. John. 1.

1. The word was made flesh, and dwelt among us. 2. For the present, he comes into men; by his Spirit and grace. Reu. 3. I stand at the door and knock, if any open unto me, I will come into him. 3. For the time to come, he shall come against men. Rom. 2. At the day when God shall judgeth the secrets of all hearts by Jesus Christ. Or as it is wittily observed; the Sun of righteousness appeareth in three signs: Leo, Virgo, Libra. 1. In the Law like a Lyon, roaring out terrible things with a voice not indurable. And they said to Moses, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die. 2. In the Gospel he appeared in Virgo, an Infant borne of a virgin. Math. 1. 25. 3. At his last Audit he shall appear in Libra, weighing all our thoughts, words, and works in a balance. Behold I come quickly & my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.

Is come.

He was not fetched, not forced, sponte venit; of his own accord he is come. No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself. Ambrose on these words of Christ; Are ye come out against a thief, with swords and staves to take me? Stultum est cum gladijs eum quarere, qui vltro se off...rt. It was superfluous folly to apprehend him with weapons, that willingly offered himself: to seek him in the night by treason, as if he shunned the light, who was every day teaching publicly in the Temple. Sed factum congruit tempori & personis: quia cum essent tenebrae, in tenebroso tempore tenebrosus opus excercebant. The fact agrees to the time and Persons: they were darkness, therefore they do the work of darkness in a time of darkness. Indeed he prays; Father, save me...e from this hour: but withal he corrects himself; Therefore came I to this hour.

But he is said to fear d...th. Hebr. 5. What is it to us Quod timuit, that he feared: nostrum est quod sustinuit, that he suffered. Christ's nature must needs abhor destructive things: but his Rationall overcame his Natural will. He feared death. Ex affectu sensualitatis, not Ex affectu rationis. He eschewed it secundum se, but did under go it propter aliud. Ex impetu naturae he declined it; but ex imperio rationis; considering that either he must come and die on earth, or we all must go and die in hell; and that the heads temporal death might procure the bodies eternal life; behold the Son of man is come. Neither was it necessary for him to love his pain, though he so loved vsto suffer this pain. No man properly loves the rod that beats him, though he loves for his souls good to be beaten. As Augustine said of crosses; Tollerare iubemur non amare. Nemo quod tollerat amat, etsi tollerare amat. We are commanded to bear them, not to love them. No man that even loves to suffer, loves that he suffers.

Voluntarily he yields himself; saluting Judas by the name of Friend: Amice •...r venis? He suffered not his followers to offend his enemies, nor commands the Angels to defend himself. O blind Jews; was it impossible for him, de paruo slipite ligni descendere, qui descendit a coelorum altitudine? to come down from a piece of wood, that came down from heauē? Nunquid tua vincula illū possunt te...ere, quem c...li non possunt capere? Shall your bonds hold him, when the heavens could not contain him? He came not to deliver himself, that was in freedom: but to deliver us, that were in bondage.

Is come.

Is Christ come to us, and shall not we come to him? Doth the Son of God come to the Sons of men, and do the Sons of men scorn to come to the Son of God? Proud dust, wilt thou not meet thy maker? If any ask; Whether is thy beloved gone? that we may seek him with thee. The Church answers; My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather Lilies. You shall have him in his Garden, the Congregation of the faithful. Wheresoever a number is gathered together in his Name. Behold, Venit ad limina virtus, Manna lies at your thresholds; will you not go forth and gather it? The Bridegroom is come, will you not make merry with him? The nice piece of dust; like Idolatrous Jeroboam, cries, the Church is too far off, the journey too long to Christ. He came all that long way from heaven to earth for us, and is a mile too tedious to go to him? Go too, seed, ede, perde; sit still, eat thy meat, and destroy thyself: who shall blame the justice of thy condemnation.

But for us, let us leave our pleasures, and go to our Savior. Non sedeas sed cas, ni pereas per cas. Come a little way to him, that came so far to thee. Philip tells Nathanael, we have found the Messias: Nathanael objects, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? Come and see, saith Philip. And straitwayes Jesus saw Nathanael coming. Christ hath sent many Preachers to invite us to salvation: We ask, Vbi, where: they say, Come and see: but we will not come; Christ cannot see us coming. Mundus, cura, caro; three mischievous hindrers, we come not. Christ himself calls; yet You will not come unto me; that you might have life. He comes amongst us, Christians; ad suos: He came to his own... , and his own received him not. We say of such things as are unlike;

they come not near one another: many clothes lie on a heap together, yet because of their different colors, we say they come not near one to another. But of things that are alike, we say they come nigh one another. Our coming near to Christ is not in place, but in grace. Not in place; for so the wicked is near to God. Whether shall I fly from thy presence? But in grace and quality; being holy as he is holy. Indeed he must first draw us before we can come. Draw me: we will run after thee. He first draws us by grace, then we run after him by repentance.

To seek.

He is come: to what purpose? Ecce compassionem; to seek. All the days of his flesh upon earth he went about seeking souls. He went to Samaria to seek the woman, to Bethany to seek Mary, to Capernaum to seek the Centurion, to Jericho to seek Zacchaeus. O what is a man, and the Son of man, that the Son of God should thus hunt after him! We sought not him. The wicked through the pride of his countenance will not seek after God. Behold, he seeks us. We would not call upon him, he sends Ambassadors to beseech us. We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. Indeed we cannot seek him, till he first find us. Oportuit viam inuenire errantes, errantes enim nequeunt inuenire viam. If the Way had not found us, we should never have found the Way. I oe his mercy: Non solum redeuntem suscipit, sed perditum quarit. How joyful will he be to find us, that is thus careful to seek us!

Let this teach us, not to hide our selves from him. Wretched men, guilty of their own eternal loss, that will not be found of Christ when he seeks them. How shall they at the last day stand with confidence before him, that at this day run from him? If we will not be found to be sanctified, we cannot be found to be glorified. Paul desires to be found in Christ: in Christ found, for without Christ ever lost Those that thou gavest me, I have kept; and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition. Woe to that man, when Christ shall return with a Non inuentus. What can the shepherd do but seek? nolunt inueniri; they will not be found. What the charmer but charm? Nolunt incantari, they will not be charmed. What the Sutour but woo? nolunt desponsari, they will not be espoused to Christ. What the Ambassador but beseech? Nolunt exorari they will not be entreated. What then remains? He that will be unjust, let him be unjust still: and he that will be filthy, let him be filthy still. If we will not be found of him when he seeks us, he will not be found of us when we seek him. They shall seek me early, but they shall not find me. Quaesitus contemnet, qui quarens contemnitur. He was despised when he sought, and will despise when he is sought to.

Three vicious sorts of men are here culpable. 1. Some sculke when Christ seeks. If there be any bush in Paradise. Adam will thrust his head into it. If there be any hole of pretence, Saul will there borough his rebellion. If Gehe...i can shadow his bribery with a lie, Elisha shall not find him. When the Sun shines, every bird comes forth, only the owl will not be found. These birds of darkness cannot abide the light. because their deeds are evil. Thus they play at All hid with God: but how foolishly! Like that beast that having thrust his head in a bush, and seeing nobody, thinks nobody sees him. But they shall find at last, that not holes of Mountains, nor caves of rocks, can conceal them.

2. Others play at fast and loose with God: as a man behind a tree, one while seen, another while hid. In the day of prosperity they are hidden; only in affliction they come out of their holes. As some beasts are driven out of their borroughes by pouring in scalding water: or as Absalom fetched Joab, by setting on fire his Barley fields. These are found on the Sunday, but lost all the week. Like the Devil, they stand among the Sons of God yet devour the servants of God. As Saul at one time prophesied with the Prophets, and at another time massacred them. Christ calls them to a banquet of prosperity, they cry Hic sumus, We are here: but if Satan (in their opiniō) offer them better cheare; Tibi sumus, We are for thee.

3. Others being lost, and hearing the seekers voice, go further from him. These are Wolves, not sheep. The sheep hears his voice, and comes: the Wolf hears it, and flies. The nearer salvation comes to them, the further they run from it. Because England tenders them the Gospel, they will run as far as Rome for damnation.

Christ came to seek the lost sheep; Luk. 15. he found it, he laid it on his shoulders, and he rejoiced. In his life he seeks the sinner till he find him. In his death he lays him on his shoulders, bearing his sins in his body on the Cross. In his resurrection he rejoiced for him. In his ascension he opens the doors of heaven, & brings him home. Venit & invenit: he comes to seek, and he seeks to save; which is the next point,

To save.

Ecce Pietatem, Behold his goodness. Herod sought Christ ad interitum, to kill him: Christ seeks us ad salutem, to save us. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation: that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. Yield to be found, if thou wilt yield to be saved. There is nothing but good meant thee in this seeking. Vidimus & testamur, &c. We have seen, and do testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world. The Fishermens riddle was, Those we could not find we kept, those we found we lost. But Christ's course is otherwise: Whom he finds he saves; whom he finds not are lost forever. It was a Poetical speech; Amare & sapere vix conceditur dijs. To love and to be wise seldom meet. They are met in Christ: he did love us, suscepit naturam he became man: he was wise, occidit peccatum, he killed sin. In love he seeks us, in wisdom he saves us: here was Amare & sapere. This sweet and comfortable note I must leave to your meditations: my speech must end his saving, though of his salvation there be no end. Paruum est seruare bonos: it is a small thing to save those that are in no danger of spilling; therefore lastly look to the Object;

The lost.

There Ecce Potestatem, behold his power. He is that strongest man, that vnbound us from the fetters of sin and Satan. Fortissimus; for caetera excellit, caetera expellit: he excels the rest, he expels the rest. He had need be powerful, that redeemes so weak man from the hands of so strong enemies. Magnus venit medicus, quia magnus iacebat aegrotus. The whole world was sick: there had need be a great Physician, for there was a great Patient. Loe where wretchedness lies at the foot of Goodness; ecce miserum ante misericordem. What but infinite Miserie should be the fit object of infinite Mercy!

Here was then the purpose of Christ's coming; to seek the lost, to recall wanderers, to heal the sick, to cleanse the Leprous, to revive the dead, to save sinners. He came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. He leaves the nintie nine in the Wilderness, to seek the lost sheep. Whether it be meant of the just Angels in Heaven; as Ambrose, Chrysostom, Hilary, Euthymius think. Or those that thought themselves just, as Bucer and Ludolphus; the Scribes and Pharisees, that presumed they needed no repentance. He embraceth Publicans and sinners, that confess themselves sick, and lacking a Physician; sinful wretches, and needing a Savior.

Those worldlings in the Gospel have better cheare at home; what care they for Christ's supper? It is the dry ground that thinks well of rain, the hungry soul that is glad of sustenance. The mercy of God falls most welcome on the broken spirit. They that feel themselves miserable, and that they stand in need of every drop of his saving blood, to those it runs fresh and sweet. They that feel themselves lost, are found. They are least of all lost, that think themselves most lost: they are nearest to their health, that are most sensible of their sickness. These he seeks, these he saves: to these Nascens se dedit in socium, con...escens in cibum, moriens in pretium, regnans in premium. In his birth he became their companion, in his life their food, in his death their redemption, in his glory their Salvation.

Lost; but where was man lost? There are diverse loosing places.

1. A garden of delights: and there the first man lost himself, and all us: in a Garden therefore our Savior found us again. We were Lost in a garden of rest, we are found in a garden of trouble. The serpent could never take the hare, (he was too light footed for him) till he found him sleeping in a garden of sweet flowers, under which the serpent lay hidden. Whilst man not only surfeits on pleasures, but sleeps in them, Satan that old serpent wounds him to death.

2. A wilderness is a place able to loose us: and that's this world, a wide and wild forest; many lost in it. We read of a rich man, Luk. 12. that lost himself in one corner of this wilderness, his very barns: strange, to be lost in a barn. And yet how many loose themselves in a less room, their Counting house! The usurer hath there lost his soul, and no man can find it. It is so long wrapped up among his bonds, till Satan take the forfeit. The depopulator takes a larger field to loose his soul in; and to make sure work, that grace may never find it, he hedges and ditches it in.

3. Another loosing place is a Labyrinth or Maze. In the Orchard of this world the God of it hath made a Labyrinth; which S<sup>t</sup>. John describes. The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. The entrance hereinto is easy; as you have seen in that Emblem of Suretyship, the Horne: a man goes gently in at the Butte end, but comes hardly out at the Buckall: the coming forth is difficult. It is so full of crooked meanders, windings, and turnings, out of one sin into another; from consent to delight, from delight to custom, from custom to impenitence: that in this Labyrinth men soon grow to a maze, and know not how to be extricated. Labyrinthus, quasi labor intus: the wicked weary themselves in the ways of destruction.

Lust of the flesh, lust of the eyes, pride of life. Haec tr...a pro trino Numine mundus habet. This is the trinity the world worships.

Lust of the flesh. The adulterer looseth himself in the forbidden bed. Inter mammillas perditur: he is lost between the breasts of a Harlot. He that seeks for him, must (as the Pursuivant for the Seminary) not forbear the Mistresses bed to find him.

Lust of the eyes. Ahab casts a covetous eye at Naboth's vineyard. David a lustful eye at Bathsheba. The eye is the pulse of the soul: as Physicians judge of the heart by the pulse, so we by the eye. A rolling eye, a roving heart. The good eye keeps minute-time, and strikes when i... should: the lustful crotchet-time, and so puts all out of tune.

Pride hath lost as many, as any her fellow Devils. They say, she was borne in heaven, and being cast down wandered upon earth, where a woman took her in; and there she hath dwelt ever since. Indeed Isaiah 3. the shop of pride is the woman's wardrobe: in this wardrobe many souls both of women and men too are lost. The common study is new fashions; but it is an ill fashion thus to loose the soul.

If we would get out of this maze, we must (as God warned the Wisemen) depart another way. Out of lust we must wind forth by Chastity, out of covetousness by Charity, out of Pride by Humility. Penitence is the clew to guide us forth: howsoever we came in, we must go out by Repentance.

4. A fourth loosing place is the multitude of new and strange ways: wherein men wander, as Saul after his Asses, and are lost. There is a way to Rome, a way to Amsterdam: a way to the silliness of ignorance, a way to the fullness of arrogance. None of all these is the way to Zion. In the multitude of ways multitude of souls loose themselves.

5. Lastly some are lost in the dark vault of ignorance; applauding themselves in their blindness, and like Bats refusing the Sun-shine. They have an Altar, but it is Ignoto Deo, to an unknown God. Like the Hoast of the King of Syria, they are blind, and lost betwixt Dothan and Samaria. They may grope (as the Sodomites) for the door of heaven: but let not the Pope make them believe, that they can find it blind-fold. Ignorance is not God's Star-chamber of light; but the Devils vault of darkness. By that doctrine Antichrist fills hell, and his own coffers. The light that must bring us out, is Jesus Christ:Which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. And his Word is a la...pe unto our feet, and a light unto our paths.

Thus you see, there are many places to be lost in; but one way to be found; and that is this; The Son of man is come to seek and to save that was lost. O Jesus turn our wandering steps into the narrow way of righteousness. Come to us that we may be sought, seek us that we may be found, find us that we may be saved, save us that we may be blessed; and bless thy name forever.

Amen.

A GENERATION OF Serpents OR The Poison of Wickedness.

PSAL. 58. 4.

Their poison is like the poison of a Serpent, like the deaf Adder that stoppeth her ear.

THis verse spends it self on a double comparison, of

- Persons,
- Conditions.

The Persons compared are Men and Serpents. The Conditions or Qualities upon which the similitude stands, are Poison and Deafness. The former whereof is indefinite; Their Poison is as the Poison of a Serpent, any Serpent. The latter is restrictive; Their deafnesse is like the Adders; one kind of Serpents.

I will begin with the Conditions: for if the same qualities be found in Men, that are in Serpents; there will follow fitly, too fitly, a comparison of their Persons. The first Quality here ascribed to the wicked by the Psalmist, is

Poison.

There is such a thing as Poison; but where to be found; Vbi cum{que} fuerit, in homine quis quareret? Wheresoever it is, in Man who would look for it? GOD made man's body of the dust; he mingled no Poison with it. He inspireth his soul from heaven, he breaths no Poison with it. He feeds him with bread, he convayes no poison with it. Vnde venenum? Whence is this Poison? Didst not thou O Lord, sow good seed in thy field? Vnde Zizaniae? From whence then hath it tares? Whence? Hoc fecit inimicus; the Enemy hath done this. We may perceive the Devil in it. That great Serpent, the red Dragon, hath poured into wicked hearts this Poison.

His own Poison? Malitiam wickedness, Cùm infundit peccatum, infundit venenum. When he pours in Sin, he pours in poison. Sin is Poison. Original pravitie is called Corruption; actual, Poison. The violence and virulence of this venomous quality comes not at first. Nemo fit repent pessimus. No man becomes worst at first dash. We are borne corrupt, we have made our selves Poysonus. There be three degrees, as it were so many ages in sin. 1. Secret sin: an ulcer lying in the bones, but skin'd over with hypocrisy. 2. Open sin, bursting forth into manifest villainy. The former is corruption, the second eruption. 3. Frequented and confirmed sin, and that is rank poison, enveneming soul and body.

When it is impostumated to this ripenes and rankenesse, it impudently justifies wickedness for goodness; venenum pro nutrimento; poison for nutriment. It feeds on, swallows, digests sin, as if it were nourishment. As Hemlocke is good meat for Goats, and Spiders for Monkeys. It despiseth all reproof, sitting in the scorners chair: Which for the poison is called by divines, Sedes Pestilentiae; the Seat of Pestilence. Peccator cùm in profundum venerit, contemnet. When a wicked man comes to the depth and worst of sin, •...he despiseth. Then the Hebrew will despise Moses: Who made thee a Prince, and a Judge over us? Then Ahab will quarrel with Micheah, because he doth not Prophecy good unto him. Every child in Bethel will mock Elisha, and be bold to call him Bald pate. Here is an original drop of veneme swollen to a main Ocean of Poison. As one drop of some Serpents poison lighting on the hand, gets into the veins; and so spreads it self over all the body, till it hath stifled the vital spirits.

In this Poison there is a double pestilent effect Inficit, Interficit. It is to themselves death, to others a contagious sickness.

To themselves

It is an epidemical corruption, dispersing the venom over all parts of body and soul. It poisons the heart with falsehood, the head with lightness, the eyes with adultery, the tongue with blasphemy, the hands with oppression, the whole body with intemperance. It Poisons beauty with wantonness, strength with violence, wit with willfulness, learning with dissension, devotion with superstition, religion with treason. If they be greater gifts, it poisons them with pride; putting Cantharides into the oil-pot. If meaner, it poisons them with hypocrisy, putting Colocinthis into the porridge-pot. And where the Cantharides of Pride, or Coloquintida of hypocrisy are, there is venenum & exitium; Poison and death. This poison, faster than a Gangrene, runs from joint to joint; as an enemy takes Fort after Fort, till he hath won the whole Country.

1. It is in the Thought: the imaginations are full of poison. Every evil thought is not thus poisonous. There is malum innatum, and insemintum, saith Bernard. An evil bred in us, and an evil sown in us. Sins, like Weeds, will grow fast enough without sowing: but Qui sedit in semine, he that sows to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption: he that shall sow this venomous seed, poisons his soul. Clense thy heart from iniquity, that thou mayest be saved. How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? Lodge: he doth not speak of transient; but permanent sins. Such as meditate mischief; study to be naught. Whose imaginations suck poison out of every Object, yea though it be good: as the Spider sucks poison from the sweetest flower.

Vanishing thoughts, that pass through a good man without approbation, not without suppression, are properly Nec mors nec morbus animae, sed deformitas; neither the disease nor death of the soul, but the deformity. They are im...issae; Satan's darts shot through us: in cord, non de cord: in the heart, not of the heart. Which the godly Sentiunt, non consentiunt; feel, but give no liking to. They are our Crosses, not our sins. Such a thought is but morbus mentis, the disease of the mind; the other morsus serpentis; the wound or poison of the Serpent. The allowed filthy cogitation is the poison. Thus are the thoughts poisoned.

2. From thence it runs to the Senses, and sets open those windows to let in the poisonous air of wickedness. The five Senses are the Cinque Ports, where all the great traffic of the Devil is taken in. They are the Pores, whereby Satan conveys in the stinking breath of temptation.

The ear is set wide open to receive in the poison of scurrilous songs, obscene •...ests, seditious libels. It is not only an Atheman ear, nouitatis auida, greedy of news: but a Cretian ear, prauitatis auida, greedy of evil. It listens to hear of civil wars, uncivil treasons: it would fain have heard the great thunderclappe, which the Gun-powder should have made at the blowing up of the Parliament house. Here is an ear for the Devil. Such ears have the Jesuits: they would fain hear of the ruin of kingdoms. What would make others ears tingle, makes their ears tickle. Aures illae in se sentiant, quod audire de alij... cupiunt. Let such ears feel that woe themselves, which they desire so earnestly to hear of others.

The Eye-lid is set open with the gagges of Lust and Envy. A libidinous eye draws in much poison. There be eyes full of adultery, saith the Apostle. They fetch in seeds of poison from the Theater, yea (I tremble to speak it) from the Church of GOD. It beholds beauty, (God's rare workemanshippe on a piece of clay) not to bless the Creator, but to draw a curse on the creature. Like a melancholy distracted man, that drowns himself in a clear Crystal river. O such chaste Beauty is like the Bellows; though it own breath be cold, it makes them burn.

There is another kind of Eye; that derives poison to the heart; the envious eye, that is vexed at the richer furniture, fatter estate, or higher honor of another: thinking his own not good, because his neighbor hath better. Any man's advancement is so capital an offense to his malice, that he could shoot out his own eyes, so they might be balls of Wild-fire to consume him. But his malice sucks up the greatest part of his own venom; and therewith poisons himself, rather than others. A man that sees him, would say, He is poisoned: for his blood looks of a yellowish color, like those that are bitten with Vipers. His gall flows as thick in him, as if he had a poisoned stomach. If he had, as Seneca wished to the Envious, eyes in every place; his vncontainable poison would soon burst him. As he is, he would be another's enemy, but is his own mischief

3. From the Senses it runs to the Tongue; and sets it a swelling, a swearing, that it infects the air, and poisons the very Walls of the house. The excrements of the Jews spet upon the face of our Savior, were not so feculent. Their blasphemies strive to blast, not only the plants of the earth, but even the planets of Heaven; the Sun and Stars: and if it were possible, they would make new wounds in the side of Jesus Christ. If any swearer think, I do his tongue wrong; let him read. Rom. 3. The poison of Asps is under their lips. If you would know what that pestilent poison is, the next verse expounds it. Their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness. They carry worse poison in ...re, in their mouth; then any serpent in caud..., in his tail. Their tongue is full of deadly poison. 1. They have poison. 2. not dead, but deadly; mortal poison. 3. not a little, but saturitie of it; full of deadly poison.

Poison hath thus got from their silent thoughts, to their moving senses; and from thence to their, loud and lewd talking tongues. And this bewrays their venom, as the Serpents Hissing betrays his malice. The heart of fools is in their mouth, but the mouth of the wise is in their heart. Caesar said, he feared not Anthony, whose heart was in his tongue; but Cassius, whose tongue was in his heart. A wicked man's tongue discovers him. A bell may have a crack, though invisible: take the clapper and strike, and you shall soon perceive it. The ungodly may conceal his wickedness by silence: but if the clapper strikes, if his tongue walks, you shall quickly perceive, he is crack'd. A poisoned tongue cannot forbear to sputter abroad his venom.

4. From the Tongue this poison runs to the Hands. Anaxagoras thought Man the wisest of all creatures, because he hath hands: he might have thought him the wickedest of all creatures, because he hath hands. No creature doth so much hurt with his teeth or talons, as the wicked man with his poisoned hands. A man doth greatly express himself by his hands. Paul by beckoning his hand, procured silence. Much is done Maiestate manus, as the Poet; by Majesty of the hand. The wit seems to manifest it self in the hands: as the Italians say of the Duchmen, that their wit dwells in their fingers end. The power in the hands. An nescis longas Regibus esse manus? Yield the hand a principal instrument; yet corruptio optimi pessima. The evil hand doth not so much manifest man's wittiness, as his wickedness, They devise iniquity, and practice it, because it is in the power of the Hand. The poison that was conceived in their thoughts, dilates it self into their hands: cogitant, agitant.

God reproves the Jews, that they had Manus sanguinum, bloody hands. And the same Prophet seems to liken it to a venomous infection: your hands are defiled with blood. And if the tongue can be possibly brought, to smother the in cherished poison, yet manus manifestabit, the hand will discover it. ver. 6. The act of violence is in their hands. The Israelites soon suspected, what a king Rehoboam would be when he threatened Grauitatem manus, to make his hand heavy; yea his finger heavier than his fathers Loynes. Ahab quite disgraced himself for being thought religious, when he laid a violent hand on Naboth's vineyard. Jeroboam makes it plain, that he bore no love to God's Prophets, cum extendit manum; when he put forth his hand to strike one. Many Landlords seem Christians, but they have Rehoboams hand, a heavy hand on their Tenants, many users come to Church, but they have Ahab's hand, to take the forfeit of the poor debtors heritage. Many parishioners seem to love their Prophets, but they have Jeroboam's hand, a hand that strikes them, if not in person, yet in estate; undoing them and their families. This is venenata manus, a poisoned Hand.

5. Lastly this poison having got possession of the thoughts, words, works; it must needs follow that it hath taken the Heart. Cor dolet, the whole heart is sick. These corrupted symptoms prove that the heart is rotten The very meat in their bowels is turned to the gall of Asps. They suck the poison of Asps. If you ask why they feel it not; Paul says; Their sense is lost: They are past feeling. Their whole self is changed into a disease. Their body is no longer Corpus, but Morbus. As Lucan. Totum est pro vulnere corpus. Their whole body is as one wound or sickness. Neither can we say so properly of them, that they are sick, as that they are dead. Nonaegroti, sed defuncti: not diseased, but deceased.

And in all this observe the effect of this Poison in themselves. For it doth not only annoy others, but mostly destroy themselves. And herein their poison is not only Tale and Tantum, such and so much as that of Serpents: but Plus & Perniciosius, more, and more dangerous. Seneca says, Venenum quod serpentes in alienam perniciem proferunt, sine sua continent. The poison which serpents cast out to the damage of others, they retain without their own periudice. But the poison of the wicked, dum alios inficit, seipsos interficit; Whilest it infects others, kills themselves. His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself. Their own wickedness, like poison, hath in themselves these three direful effects.

It makes them

- Swell.
- Swill.
- Burst.

1. It makes them swell with pride, and blows up the heart, as a bladder with a quill. Quis est David? Who is David? and who is the Son of Jesse? Yea Quis est Dominus? Who is the Almighty, that we should serve him? Thus the Spider, a poisonous vermin, Climes up to the roof of the kings palace. If he be in prosperity nothing can hold him to a man. Be he but a Thistle, he sends to the king of Lebanon, for his daughter to be his Sons wife. Though he be but a dwarfe in comparison, he would swell to a son of Anak. Sin hath puff'd him up, & he forgets his maker. The Lord hath fed him to the full, & he rebels against him. We have then good cause to pray with our Church; In the time of our wealth, good Lord deliver us.

2. It makes them swill: the poison of sin is such a burning heat within them, that they must still be drinking. And the devil, their Physician, holds them to a diet-drink: they shall not have the water of the Sanctuary, that would cool them: but the harsh, harish, & ill-brewd drink of damnation. They shall taste nothing but sin; more poison still. Which is so far from quenching their thirst, that it enflames it.

Totis exquirat in agris.

Quas modo poscit aquas, sitiens in cord venenum.

So a man puts out the Lamp by pouring in more oil and extinguisheth the fire by laying on fuel. This may for a small time allay the heat, as cold drink to a burning fever. So Ahab's, fervor was a little delayed, with a draught of wine out of Naboth's vineyard. But Satan holds his guests to one kind of lycour, and that's rank poison; the mud of sin and wickedness. He allows them no other watering place, but this Puddle-wharfe.

3. It makes them burst, here be the three sore effects of sin in the soul, as of poison in the body. Frst it makes a man swell, then it makes him drink, lastly it it bursts him. Judas is houen with covetousness, he drinks the money of treason, and then he bursts. Rumpuntur viscera Iudae.he burst out. This is the catastrophe of a wicked life. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

To others.

You see how fatal the poison of the wicked is to themselves. It doth not only rumperese, but corrumpere alios: burst themselves, but corrupt others. It deprives their own good, it depraues others good. The hurt is doth to others, consists.

- Correptione,
- Corruptione.

in outward harming, in inward defiling them.

Outwardly

Their Poison breaks forth in the injuries of all about them. They spare neither foreigner nor neighbor. There be little snakes in Babylon, that bite only foreigners, and not inhabitants. Pliny writes of Scorpions in the hill Caria, that when they sting, only wound the natural borne people of the Country; but extraneos leuiter mordere, but bite strangers gently, or not at all. These, like fools, not only strike them that are nearest, but between their poison in ruinam omnium, to the overthrow of all. Such a one cannot sleep except he have done mischief: nay he dyes, if others do not die by him. Et si non aliqua nocu...sset, mortuus esset. A man's Land cannot scape the poison of the depopulator: nor his estate the poison of the usurer; nor his children the ravisher: nor his peace the contender: nor his name the slanderer. If their poison cannot prevail ad interitum hominis, they will spend it ad interitum nominis. If they cannot murder, they will murmur. They are the Devils bandogs; as one calls Parsons the Popes Cerb...rus. If they cannot come to bite, they will bark. If their sting cannot reach, their mouth shall sputter out their venom.

Yea some of them do not only this mischief whiles they live, but etiam mortui, even dead. As Herod, that caused the noble Sons of the Jews to be slain post mortem suam, after his death. They write of some serpents, that their poison can do no hurt except it be shot from the live bodies of them: but these leave behind them a still evil-working poison. As we say of a charitable man, that he doth good after he is dead; his alms maintain many poor souls on earth, when his soul is in heaven: Et quamvis ipse sepultus, alit. So these wicked sin perpetually even dead. The incloser of commons sinneth after he is dead: even so long as the poor are deprived of that benefit. He that hath robbed the Church of a tenth, & so leaves it to his heir, sins after he is dead: even so long as God is made to loose his right. Moriente serpente moritur venenum: but here moriente homine viuit peccatum. As one said of a Lawyer that resolving not to be forgotten, he made his will so full of intricate quirkes; that his executors (if for nothing else; yet) for very vexation of law might have cause to remember him. Jereboam's sin of Idolatry out lived him. The unjust decrees of a partial Judge may out live him: even so long as the adjudged inheritance remains with the wrongful possessor. The decrees of diverse Popes; as in curtalling the Sacrament, forbidding marriage, &c. are their still living sins though themselves be dead and rotten.

Inwardly.

Their poison doth most hurt by Infection: their company is as dangerous as the plague: a man cannot come near them, but he shall be contaminated. Like the weed called Gosses, they make the ground barren wheresoever they grow. Their Poison is got

Per

- Contactum
- Contractum

- Compactum
- Conspectum

1. By touching: he that toucheth pitch, shall be defiled. It is dangerous to sport and dally with them: dum ludunt, laedunt. He casteth firebrands, and arrows, and death; and saith, Am I not in sport. As Solomon saith, Their very mercies are cruel: so their very jest is killing earnest.

2. By companying with them: they hurt by sporting, but worse by sorting. Cast in thy lot among us, let us all have one purse. They that will quarter themselves with the wicked, must drink of their poison. If you ask, how happes it that their infection is not smelt: Bernard answers; Vbi omnes sordent, vniusminime sentitur: one is not smelt, where all stink.

3. By Confederacie; which is yet a higher degree of receiving their poison. The first was alight dallying with their humors, the next a society with them in some drunken riots and disorders: but this third is a conspiracy with them in their pernicious and deadly plotts. Thus a Seminary comes from Rome, and whistles together a number of traitors: he brought poison with him in a Bulls horn, and they all must drink it. As they report, that once one scabbed sheep from Spain rotted all the sheep of England.

In this manner is the poison of adultery spread from a Harlot. In selling her flesh she sets pretium peccati, and takes premium peccati: either pretium pacti, or premium facti: she hath her price, and gives her male his reward. This is a damnable combination: he that goeth after her, poisons himself per compactum; he bargains for his own destruction.

4. By Sight; as they that look on ill affected eyes attract some of the anguish by a kind of reflection. So the very beholding of their wicked example, derives corruption to the heart by resultance. Many sins had been unknown, if they had not been learned by precedent. Great men graceless are the devils special factors: they have their new tricks of vanity to teach others. And they often broach these new fashions of damnation, not so much out of affection to the thing it self, as to be talked of. As Alcibiades cut off his dogs tail, that all the people might talk of his curtall. O the unspeakable deal of poison that is thus conveyed into men's hearts: and the innumerable souls, that go to hell by pattern. Thus they hurt others.

But I have been too copious in discovery of their poison: I should come to their Deafnes; but I am loath to speak of deafness till the end of the Sermon. Their poison being thus compared with the poison of Serpents, let us now compare

Their Persons.

They are here said to be Sicut Serpentes; Like Serpents. But Matthew 23. CHRIST calls the Pharisees very Serpents. And John Baptist a generation of Vipers. And GOD telles Ezekiel, that he did dwell among Scorpions. In these places the Sicut is left out, and the wicked are called very Serpents. Not that the frame and form of their bodily constitution was Serpentine.

It was a foolish opinion among the Heathen, that there were Ophiogenes, or Anguigenae. They write of Ophion, the companion of Cadmus, and builder of Thebes, that he was made by Pallas, of a Dragons tooth. So Ephesus was once called Colubraxia: and the people thereof Ophiussa.

I have read of one Exagon, an Ambassador to Rome, being at the Consuls command cast into a Tunne of snakes; that they licked him with their tongues, and did him no harm. But to conclude hereon that these were of Serpents brood; we might as well say, Daniel was borne of Lions, because they did not hurt him.

They are mystical Serpents, I mean. And if wicked men think scorn to be called Serpents, let them abhor the qualities of Serpents. Sin is of that power, that it can work metamorphoses, and transform men into beasts and serpents. Let us now see what Serpents we have among us.

1. We have the Salamander, the troublesome and litigious neighbor; whoever loves and lives in the fire of contention. Whatsoever they talk that the Salamander is nourished by the fire; yet Galen and Dioscorides affirm, that if it tarry long in it, it will be burnt, when the humiditie is wasted. Whatsoever a man gets by the fire of vexation, at last his humor will be wasted, his wealth spent, and himself consumed in his own flames. Let no man think to get by his troublesomenesse, as if he could be fed with fire. They talk of a Net at Rome (wherein Christ's napkin is preserved) that it is washed in nothing but fire. And Paulus Venetus speaks of a kind of earth in Tartaria; which being spun into a thread, and woven into cloth, is only purged from all spots by washing it in the fire. But if ever any man grow rich by his contentiousnes, I will believe that fire is nourishment.

Some make the Emblem of Strife the Snake. Alecto sent a Snake to move contention in the family of Amata.

Vnum de crinibus Anguem

Conijcit, in{que} sinum praecordia ad intima subdit.

Let the unquiet man, that is still vexing his neighbors with suits and quarrels, here take his choice: whether he will be a Snake or a Salamander.

2. We have the Dar•...; and that's the Angry man. This is the Serpent that is thought to leap on Paul's hand. Iaculum vocat Africa. It gathers it self into a heap on the top of a tree, and so flies at a man, tanquam Sagitta; as a Dart. Such a Serpent is the hasty furious man; he flies upon another with a sudden blow. Some conjecture (I know not how probably) that these were the fiery Serpents in the Desert.

3. There is the Dipsas, the Drunkard. This Serpent lives altogether in moorish places: the serpent in the fennes, the man at the alehouse. Ovid writes of an old drunken woman. Est quaedam nomine Dipsas anus. Ex re nomen habet. Her name did agree with her nature. It is ever dry saith Lucan. Medijs siti•...bant Dipsades vndis. If this Serpent wound a man, it turns all his blood into poison. So the Drunkard turns his blood to water, his bread to drink, his reason to poison, his very soul to froth.

4. There is the Crocodile, the Hypocrite. He will sobbe, and sigh, and weep, to get a man into his clutches. If his hypocrisy can get him into a good house, he will devour the Patron that breeds him, the maintainer that feeds him: he undoes the family where he once sets a foot into their doors, or puttes a finger into their purses. Pliny saith, the Crocodile is so delighted with the Sun-shine, that it lies on the earth immovable, as if it were stark dead. Let the Hypocrite be frank'd up with prosperity, and he sleeps as securely, as if earth had lost all winds, and heaven the thunder. His pamperd body grows so fat, that his soul lies soft in it, at great ease, and is loath to rise.

5. The Cocatrice, that is said to kill with the eyes. Illius auditos expectant nulla susurros. The reason why it kills by sight, is thus given; because the beams of a Cockatrices eye corrupt the visible spirits of a man; which corrupted, corrupt the other spirits coming from the brain, and life of the heart. Our common Phrase hath found out creatures to match this kind of Serpents; Whores, usually called Cockatrices. I would to God they were believed as dangerous as they are, and are named.

The Cocatrice is a very hot creature; and therefore made with spiraments and breathing places all over the body: least the compage and iuncture of the whole composition should be dissolved. The intemperate heat of harlots is worse, and in some kind a very reflection from the fire of hell. There is an old tale, that England was once so pestered with Cockatrices, that a certain man found out one only trick to destroy them: which was by walking up and down in glass before them; whereby their own shapes were so reflected upon their own faces, that they died. But it is idle, for it is more likely that the man should die by the corruption of the air from the cocatrice, then the cocatrice by the resultance of it own similitude from the glass. As the harlot will sooner pervert a man, then he shall convert the harlot. Indeed they say, if they first see us, they kill us: if we first see them, they die. So if we first see the damnation of a Courtesan, we save our selves: if they first see & wound us, we die of it.

6. There's the Catterpillar; you all know this to be the Covetous. I confess that other Serpents are also fit emblemes of the covetous: as the Toad, that eats sparingly of the very earth for fear it should be all wasted & no food left for her. The Germane Painters to signify Covetousness, do picture an old woman sitting upon a toad. Or the Earth-worm: these worms eat up the fatt of the earth, toads eat up those worms, and dragons eat up those toads. So lightly petty userers eat up the fat of the Country, great oppressors devour those little extortioners, and at last the great red dragon swallows those oppressors.

But▪ here I especially liken them to Catterpillars. Pline saith, that little worms bred in the green leaves of plants, prove in three days catterpillars & eat up those plants. The Country breeds, these covetous wretches, and they devour her. He writes also that Catterpillars are bred by a dew, incrassated and thicked by the heat of the Sun. It is the warmth of prospertie, that breeds and feeds our userers. Others say, that they come of butterflies eggs, the which heat of the Sun hatcheth, working so fit a passive matter to the form of a catterpillar. So commonly your usurer hatcheth, his riches out of the Butterflies eggs, laid abroad by prodigal young galläts. The Scripture calls them great deuourers Eracam vix pascit hortus vnam. A whole country will not content one avarice catterpillar. At last the catterpillars perish of themselves (as ours do willfully) through famine, & are transformed into a bare & empty bag or case. If they perish in summer, out of their rind being broken comes forth a butterfly. Just as we see often from the ruins of a dead usurer, that was a Catterpillar; springs a prodigal Heir, that is a painted Butterfly.

7. We have also the Asp... that's the traitors Seminary. Lucan writes, that the original of Asps was Africa, and that merchants translated them into Europe.

Sed quis erit nobis Lucripudor! Inde petuntur

Huc Lybicae m...tes, & fec...mus Aspida merces.

But what is our gain, saith he? We have made the Aspos a merchandice. So these our Asps are bred in Italy, and ship'd over into England as a precious merchandice. They speak themselves so gentle, that a sucking child may play  $\langle \phi \rangle$  the hol... of these Asps: but we have found their boroughs the holes of treason, and their vaults the vaults of gunpowder. There is feud betwixt the Ichneumon and the Asp: they oft fight: if the Asp bite first, the Ichneumon dyes: if the Ichneumon first, the Asp dyes. Let us strike them with punishment, lest they strike us with death. These Asps kill many souls in our Land.

Aspidis & mersu Loesum dormire fatentur

In mortem, antidotum nec valuisse ferunt.

If the be witched people once receive their poison, they sleep to death: and no help prevails, for they will not come to Church to be cured.

8. There is also the Lyzard, the Emblem of the Slothful. As is also the Slow-worm, or the serpentine Tortoise. They write of the Lyzard, that having laid eggs, she forgets the very place where she laid them. She will lie still till you cut her in pieces: and then the forepart runs away upon two Legs, and the hinder part on other two: living apart till they meet again, and then are naturally •...onioyned. If the Lazy will follow the qualities, let them take the name of Lisards.

9. There is also the Sea-Serpent, and that's the Pirate: a thief cross to all kind of thieves. For other thieves first fall to robbery, and then are cast into prison: but he first casts himself into a prison, and then falls to robbery. In a little vessel, a very iayle, with a large grave round about it, he does all mischief. At last when he grows great, he ruins himself. They write of a Sea-dragon, that grows to a huge vastnesse: but then the winds take him up into the air, and by a violent agitation shake his body to pieces. A noble part of God's providence; to tame that himself which his creatures cannot.

10. There is the Stellion, and that is the Extortioner. Extortion and Cossenage is proverbially called Crimen Stellionatus; the sin of Stellature. When the Stellion hath cast his skin, he greedily devours it again: which saith Theophrastus, he doth in envy, because he understands that it is a noble remedy against the falling sickness. So in malice it lines the guts with that covered the back: & eats that in summer wherewith it was clothed in winter. It destroys the honey of Bees Stellio saepe fauos ignotus adedit. So the extortioner spoils the hives, & deuours all the honey of pooremens gathering. It is a beast full of spots. Aptumque colori.

Nomen habet, varijs stellatus corpore guttis.

The spots that stick upon an Extortioner are more innumerable. Cosonage is called Stellature. It were well if such Extortioners were served, as Budaus relates a history of two Tribunes, Qui per Stellaturas militibus multum abstulissent; whom the Emperor commanded to be stoned to death.

11. The last is the great Serpent of all, Draco the devil; who is called the Great red Dragon. In idolatrous times and places dragons have been worshiped. The common distinction is, Angneb, (ϕ) Serpentes terrarum, Dracones Templorum. Snakes of the water, serpents of the earth, dragons of the Temple. There are too many wicked worldlings, that still worship this God of the world, the red Dragon. The dragons haunt principally trees of frankincense: Satan loves to have men sacrifice to him: he tempted the son of God to fall down & worship him. Nothing but the smoke of Styrax can drive away dragons: not holy water, not crossings, but only faith in the Lord Jesus can put the devil to flight. Serpens serpentem de...rando fit Draco. The devil at first was but a Serpent; now by devouring many millios of these serpēts, the wicked; he is become a Dragon.

I should here show you two things.

1. The remedy to draw out this poison, and to cure the soul; which is only Sanguis medici, the blood of our Physician. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilder nesse, so was Christ lifted up us a serpent; that what eye of faith soever looks on him, he may be healed of the sting of those fiery serpents, and have the damnable poison of sin drawn out.

2. That our next course is Repentance for our sins. That as the oil of Scorpions is the best remedy for them that are stung with scorpions: so repentance for sin, is the best remedy within us to expel the poison of sin. Think of the Wise man's counsel; Fly from sin as from the face of a serpent: if thou comest too near it, it will bite thee: and follow it.

Their Deafnesse remains to be spokē & must remain unspoken. How should they be cured, that are deaf to the counsel of their Physician? Though there be poison in us, even the poiso of dragōs, yet God bless us from the deafnesse of the Adder. Let us hear our remedy, & embrace it: pray to God for it, and receive it: and The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all our sins. To this Savior let all that are saved, give praise and glory forever and ever.

Amen.

HEAVEN MADE SVRE OR The Certainty of Salvation.

PSAL. 35. 3.

Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

THE words contain a Petition for a Benediction. The Supplicant is a king, and his humble •...te •...s to the king of kings: the king of Israel prays to the king of heaven & •...arth. He doth beg two things. 1. That God would save him. 2. That God would certify him of it. So that the Text may be distributed accordingly; In salutem Dei, & cortitudinem rei: into Salvation and Assurance of it.

The Assurance

Lies first in the words, and shall have the first place in my discourse. Wherein I conceive two things; the Matter and the Manner. The Matter is Assurance: the Manner how assured, Dic anima; Say unto my soul. From the matter or Assurance observe;

1. That Salvation may be made sure to a man. David would never pray for that, which could not be. Nor would S. Peter charge us with a duty, which stood not in possibility to be performed. Make your election sure. And to stop the ba•...ng throats of all cavilling adversaries, Paul directly proves it. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates? We may then know that Christ is in us: if Christ be in us, we are in Christ: if we be in Christ, we cannot be condemned: for There is no damnation to them which are in Christ Jesus.

But I leave this point, that it may be sure, as granted: and come to our selves that we may make it sure. The Papists deny this, and teach the contrary▪ that Salvation cannot be made sure: much good do it them with their sory and heartless doctrine. If they make that impossible to any, which God hath made easy for many; Into their secret let not my soul come.

2. That the best Saints have desired to make their Salvation sure. David that knew it, yet intreats to know it more. Psal. 41. I know thou fauourest me: yet here still, Dic anima, Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation. A man can never be too sure of his going to heaven. If we purchase an inheritance on earth, we make it as sure, and our tenure as strong, as the brawn of the law, or the brain of Lawyers can devise. We have conveyance, & bonds, and fines; no strength too much. And shall we not be more curious in the settling our eternal inheritance in heaven? Even the best certētie hath often in this thought it self weak Here we find matter of consolation, of Reprehension, of Admonition. Comfort to some, reproof to others, warning to all. 1. Of Cosolation. Even David desires better assurance: to keep us from dejection, behold they often think themselves weakest, that are the strongest. Sum Peccatorum maximus, dicit Apostolorum non minimus. He calls himself the Chiefest of sinners, that was not the least of Saints. Indeed sometimes a dear Saint may want feeling of the spirit of comfort. Grace comes into the soul, as the morning Sun into the world: there is first a dawning, then a mean light, and at last the Sun in his excellent brightness. In a Christian life there is Professio, Profectio, Perfectio. A profession of the name of Christ wrought in our conversion: not the husk of religion, but the sap: a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith vnf•...ned. Next there is a profection or going forward •...n grace; working up our salvation in fear and trembling. Last a perfection or full assurance, that we are sealed up to the day of redemption.

And yet after this full assurance there may be some fear: it is not the commendation of this certainty to be void of doubting. The wealthiest Saints have suspected their poverty: and the richest in grace are yet poorest in spirit. As it is seen in rich misers; they possess much, yet esteem it little in respect of what they desire: for Plenitudo opum non implet hiatum mentis: the fullness of riches cannot answer the insatiable affection. Whence it comes to pass, that they have restless thoughts, and vexing cares for that they have not, not caring for that they have. So many good men, rich in the graces of God's spirit, are so desirous of more, that they regard not what they enjoy, but what they desire: complaining often that they have no grace, no love, no life. God doth sometimes from the best men's eyes hide that saving goodness, that is in their hearts.

1. To extend their desires, and sharpen their affection. By this means he puts a hunger into their hearts after righteousness; whereas a sensible fullness might take away their stomachs. Deferred comforts quicken the appetite.

2. To enlarge their joys, when they shall find again the consolation, which they thought lost. Defiderata diù <math>\langle \diamond \rangle</math> veni...t. What we much wished before it came, we truly love when it is come. Our Lady had lost our Lord. Luk. 2. three days: who can express the joy of her soul when she found him! She rejoiced not only as a Mother finding her Sun; but as a sinner finding her Savior. Iucunde obtinetur, quod diù detinetur. What was detained from us with grief, must needs be obtained of us with joy.

3. To try, whether we will serve God gratis; and be constant in his obedience, though we find no present recompense. Satan objects that against Job, Pro nihilo? Doth Job fear God for naught. Thus put to the Test, whether our service proceed from some other oblique respect; or merely out of love to God: when nothing but smart is presented to our instant sense.

4. That our care may be the greater, to keep this comfort when we have it. Quod lachrymanter Iugemus ademptum, vigilanter seruamus adeptum. If we so sorrowfully lamented the loss, sure we will look well to the possession.

In all this; Deus dona sua non negat, sed commendat. God intends not to deny us his comforts, but to instruct our hearts how to value them. Cito data viliscunt. If we might have them for the first asking, their worth would fall to the opinion of cheapness and contempt. We shall have it, though we stay for it. And to comfort us, let us assuredly know, that this mourning for God's absence, is an evident demonstration of his presence.

2. Of Reprehension to others, that say they are sure of the purchase, before they ever gave earnest of the bargain. Presumption is to be avoided so well as despair. For as none more complain that they want this assurance, then they that have it: so none more boast of it then they that have it not. The fond hypocrite takes his own presumption for this assurance: he lives after the flesh, yet brags of the Spirit. This false opinion ariseth partly from his own conceit, partly from Satan's deceit.

1. From his own Conceit: he dreams of the Spirit, and takes it granted that it ever rests within him: but when his soul awakes, he finds there no such manner of guest; the holy Spirit never lodged there. There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes: yet are not washed from their filthiness. These pure people so vaunt the... assurance of salvation; that they will scarce change places in heaven with S<sup>t</sup>. Peter, or S<sup>t</sup>. Paul without boot. The infallible mark of distinction which the Apostle sets on the Sons of God, is this: they are led by the Spirit. Rom. 8. So many as are led by the Spirit of God, 〈ϕ〉 sons of God. The holy Ghost is their God, and their guide... and this Spirit 〈ϕ〉 them into all truth: and guides them into the land of righteousness. But these men will Spiritum d...ere, lead the Spirit. They are not ductible; they will not be led by the Spirit into truth and pence; but they will lead the Spirit, as it were, over-rule the holy Ghost to patronize their humors. Let them be adulterers, userers, bribe-corrupted; sacrilegious, &c. yet they are still men of the Spirit. But of what Spirit? Nes...tis: we may say to them, as Christ to hit two hot disciples; ye know not of what Spirit you are. It is enough, they think, to have oculos in coelo, though they have manus in fundo, animos in profund... It is held sufficient to have eyes fixed on heaven, though covetous hands busy on earth, and crafty minds deep as hell. This over-venturous conceit, that heaven is theirs how base and debauched lives so ever they live, is not assurance, but presumption.

2. This ariseth from Satan's Deceite: who cries like Corah. Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation is •...ily, everyone of them. You are holy enough, you are sure of heaven: what would you more? You may sit down, and play: your work is done. Hereupon they sing peace and Requiems to their souls; and begin to wrap up their affections in worldly joys: But Tranquilitas ista tempestas est: this calm is the most grievous storm. This is carnal security, not heavenly assurance. As the Jews went into captivity with Templum Domini, the Temple of the Lord, &c. in their lips: so many go to hell with the water of Baptism on their faces, and the assurance of salvation in their mouths.

3. Of Instruction, teaching us to keep the even-way of comfort: eschewing both the rock of presumption on the right hand, and the gulf of desperation on the left. Let us neither be Tumidi, nor Timidi: neither over bold, nor over-fainting. But endeavor by faith to assure our selves of Jesus Christ: and by repentance to assure our selves of faith: and by an amended life to assure our selves of repentance. For they must here live to God's glory, that would hereafter live in God's glory.

3. In the next place observe the means how we may come by this assurance. This is discovered in the text: Dic animae; Say unto my Soul. Who must speak? God. To whom must he speak? to the Soul. So that in this assurance God and the Soul must meet. This S<sup>t</sup>. Paul demonstrates: The Spirit it self beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. The word is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, contestari, to bear witness together. Neither our spirit alone, nor God's spirit alone makes this Certificate; but both concurring.

Not our spirit alone can give this assurance: for man's heart is always evil, often deceitful. At all times evil. Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart is only evil continually. At sometimes deceitful. The heart is deceitful above all things; and desperately wicked: Who can know it? Non noui animam meam; saith Job. I know not my own soul; though I were perfect. And Paul concerning his Apostleship. I know nothing by myself, yet am I not hereby justified. And if David's soul could have made a sufficient testimony alone, what needed he pray Dic animae? say Thou to my soul? Some have a true zeal of a false Religion, and some a false zeal of a true Religion. Paul before his conversion had a true zeal of a false Religion. I was exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my Fathers. The Laodiceans had a false or rather no zeal of a true Religion. I know thy works, that thou art neither hot nor cold. So that when about this certificate a man deals with his heart singly, his heart will deal with him doubly.

No nor doth God's spirit alone give this Testimony: least a vain illusion should be taken for this holy persuasion. But both God's spirit and our spirit meeting together are Concordes, and Contestes; joint witnesses. Indeed the principal work comes from God's spirit: he is the primary cause of this assurance. Now he certifies us by word, by deed, and by seal. By word, terming us in the Scripture God's children; and putting into our mouths that filial voice, whereby we cry Abba Father. By deed; the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, &c. By these is our Election made sure, saith Saint Peter. By Seal; Grieve not the holy spirit of God, by whom you are sealed to the day of redemption. Now our spirit witnesseth with him from the sanctity of our life, faith and reformation. He that believeth on the son of God, hath the witness in himself.

4. Lastly, this is the sweetest comfort that can come to a man in this life; even an heaven upon earth, to be ascertained of his salvation. There are many mysteries in the world, which curious wits with perplexfull studies strive to apprehend. But without this, he that increaseth knowledge, increaseth sorrow. Vnum necessarium; this one thing is only necessary: whatsoever I leave unknown let me know this that I am the Lord's, Qui Christum discit, satis est, si caetera nescit. He may without danger be ignorant of other things, that truly knows Jesus Christ.

There is no potion of misery so embittered with gall, but this can sweeten it with a comfortable relish. When enemies assault us, get us under, triumph over us, imagining that salvation it self cannot save us: what is our comfort? Novi in quem credidi, I know whom I have believed; I am sure the Lord will not forsake me. Deficit panis? thou wantest bread; God is thy bread of life. We want a pillow: God is our resting place. We may be Sine veste, non sine fide; sine cibo, non sine Christo: sine Domo, non sine Domino. Without apparel, not without faith: without meat, not without Christ: without a house, never without the Lord. What state can there be, wherein the stay of this heavenly assurance gives us not peace and joy?

Are we clapt up in a dark and desolate Dungeon: there the light of the Sun cannot enter, the light of mercy not be kept out. What restrained body, that hath the assurance of this eternal peace, will not pity the darkness of the profane man's liberty; or rather the liberty of his darkness? No walls can keep out an infinite Spirit: no darkness can be uncomfortable, where the Father of lights, and the Sun of righteousness shineth. The presence of glorious Angels is much, but of the most glorious God is enough.

Are we cast out in exile; our backs to our native home, all the worlds our way. Whether can we go from God? Whether shall I go from thy face? or whether shall I fly from thy presence? If I ascend, &c. That exile would be strange, that could separate us from God. I speak not of those poor and common comforts; that in all Lands and coasts, it is his Sun that shines; his elements of earth or water that bears us, his air we breath. But of that special privilege, that his gracious presence is ever with us: that no sea is so broad, as to divide us from his favor: that wheresoever we feed, he is our host: wheresoever we rest, the wings of his blessed providence are stretched over us. Let my soul be sure of this, though the whole world be traitors to me.

Doth the world despise us? We have sufficient recompense, that God esteems us. How unworthy is that man of God's favor, that cannot go away contented with it, without the worlds! Doth it hate us much? God hates it more. That is not ever worthy which man honors; but that is ever base which God despises. Without question the world would be our friend, if God were our enemy. The sweetness of both cannot be enjoyed; let it content us, we have the best.

It may be, poverty puts pale leannes into our cheeks: God makes the world fat, but withal puts leanness into the soul. We decay in these temporal vanities, but we thrive in eternal riches. The good man laughs at destruction and dearth. Doth sickness throw us on our weary beds? It is impossible any man should miscarry, that hath God for his Physician. So Martha confessed to Jesus; Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. Thy body is weak, thy soul is strengthened: dust and ashes is sick, but thy eternal substance is the better for it. It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes.

Lastly doth the inevitable hand of death strike thee? Egredere anima mea, egredere. Go forth my soul with joy and assurance; thou hast a promise to be received in peace. Happy dissolution, that parts the soul from the body, that it may knit them both to the Lord. Death like the proud Philistine comes marching out in his hydeous shape, daring the whole Hoast of Israel to match him with an equal combatant. The Atheist dares not die, for fear (non esse) that he shall not be at all: the covetous usurer dares not die, for fear (male esse) to be damned: the doubtful conscience dares not die, because he knows not (an sit, an non sit, an damnatus sit) whether he shall be, or be damned, or not be at all. Only the resolved Christian dares die, because he is assured of his election: he knows he shall be happy; and so lifts up pleasant eyes to heaven, the infallible place of his eternal rest. He dares encounter with this last enemy, trample on him with the foot of disdain, and triumphantly sing over him; O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? He conquers in being conquered; and all because God hath said to his Soul; I am thy Salvation.

The poor Papist must not believe this: such an assurance to him were Apocryphal, yea heretical. He must lie on his death-bed, call upon what Saint or Angel he list; but must not dare to believe he shall go to heaven. O uncomfortable doctrine, able to loose the soul! What can follow, but fears without, and terrors within; distrustful sighs, and heart-breaking groans! Go away he must with death; but whither he knows not. It would be presumption to be confident of heaven. How should Purgatory stand, or the Popes kitchen have a Larder to maintain it, if men might be sure of their salvation? Herefore they bequeath so great sums for masses and Dirge's, and Trentals, to be sung or said for them after they are dead: that their souls may at the last be had to heaven; though first for a while they be reezed in Purgatory. If this be all the comfort their Priests, Jesuits, and Confessors can give them; they may well say to them, as Job to his friends; Miserable comforters are ye all.

But he that hath Stephens eyes, hath also Paul's heart, and the Saints tongue. He that with Stephens eyes can see that Son of man standing on the right hand of God; as if his arms were open to well-come and embrace him: must needs with Paul desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ: and with the Saints cry; Come Lord; how long! Amen, even so come Lord Jesus.

Thus much for the matter of the Assurance; let us now come to the manner. Dic Anima.

Say unto my soul.

Say: but is God a man? hath he a tongue? how doth David desire him to speak? That God who made the ear, shall not he hear? he that made the eye, shall not •...e see? he that made the tongue, shall not he speak? He that sees without eyes, and hears without ears, and walks without feet, and works without hands, can speak without a tongue. Now God may be said to speak diverse ways

1. God hath spoken to some—by his own voice. To Adam; vocem audiuerunt: they heard the voice of God &c. To Israel. The Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words but saw no similitude: only you heard a voice. To Christ: I here came a voice from heaven, saying: I have both glorified it, and I will glorify it. This S. Peter testifies. There came a voice from the excellent glory; This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased.

2. To omit visions, and dreams, and clouds and Cherubims and Angels, vrim and thummim: God speaks also by his works. The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handy work. M•...nus loquuntur; his works have a tongue. Opera testantur de me, saith Christ: my works bear witness of me. We may thus understand God ex operibus; his actions preach his will.

3. God speaks by his Son. Hebr. 1. God who at sundry times, and in diverse manners, spake in t•...me past unto the Fathers by the Prophets; hath in these last daves spoken unto us by his Son. He is therefore called the Word. John. 1 The sacred Scriptures, and sayings of the Prophets, given by the inspiration of God; (for no prophecy is of private interpretation: it came not by the will of man; but holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.) are called Verbum Domini, the word of the Lord. But to distinguish God the Son from those words, he is after an eminent sort called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, The word, or That excellent word. As also he is called (not a light, but) That light: (not a lamb, but) •...hat lamb. Not a vocal word formed by the tongue beating the air; for he was before either sound or air. But the mental and substantial word of his Father; but

〈◇〉, effigies lumen{que} a lumine vero.

According to that of Paul. The brightness of his glory, and express image of his person.

4. GOD speaks by his Scriptures. Whatsoever things were written aforetime, are written for our learning: that we through patience, and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. Scripta sunt, they are written. Things that go only by take, or tradition, meet with such variations, augmentations, abbreviations, corruptions, false glosses; that as in a Lawyers pleading, Truth is lost in the Quaere for her. Related things we are long in getting, quick in forgetting. Therefore God commanded his law should be written. Litera scripta manet.

Thus God doth effectually speak to us. Many good wholesome instructions have drop'd from human pens; to lesson and direct man in goodness. But there is no promise given to any word to convert the soul, but to God's word.

Without this Antiquity is novelty, Noueltie subtlety, Subtletie death. Theologia Scholastica multis modis sophistica. School Divinity is little better then mere Sophistry. Plus argutiarum quam doctrine, plus doctrina quàm vsus. It hath more quickness then soundness, more fauce then meat, more difficulty then doctrine, more doctrine then use.

This Scripture is the Perfect and Absolute rule. Bellarmino acknowledgeth two things requireable in a Perfect Rule; Certainty, and Evidence. If it be not certain, it is no Rule: if it be not evident, it is no rule to us. Only the Scripture is both in truth and evidence a perfect rule. Other writings may have canonical verity, the Scripture only hath canonical authority. Others like oil may make cheerful man's countenance; but this like Bread strengthens his heart. This is the absolute Rule; And as many as walk according to this Rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.

O that we had hearts to bless GOD for this mercy, that the Scriptures are among us, and that not sealed up under an unknown tongue. The time was when a devout Father was glad of a piece of the New Testament in English: when he took his little Son into a corner, and with joy of soul heard him read a chapter: so that even Children became Fathers to their Fathers, and begat them to CHRIST. Now as if the commonness had abated the worth, our Bibles lie dusty in the windows: it is all if a Sunday-handling quite them from perpetual oblivion. Few can read, fewer do read, fewest of all read as they should. God of his infinite mercy lay not to our charge this neglect.

5. GOD speaks by his Ministers, expounding and opening to us those Scriptures. These are Legati a latere; dispensers of the mysteries of heaven. Ambassadors for CHRIST: as if God did beseech you through us, so we pray you in Christ's stead, that you would be reconciled to God. This voice is continually sounding in our Churches, beating upon our ears; I would it could pierce our consciences, and that our lives would echo to it in an answerable obedience. How great should be our thankfulness!

God hath dealt with us as he did with Elijah. The Lord passed by, and a great strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind. After the wind came an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake. After the earthquake, a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire. And after the fire, a still voice: and the Lord came with that voice. After the same manner hath God done to this Land. In the time of K. Henry 8. there came a great and mighty Wind, that rent down Churches, overthrew Altarages, impropriated from Ministers their livings: that made Lay-men substantial Parsons, and Clergy men their vicar-shadows. It blew away the rights of Levi, into the lap of Issachar: a violent wind: but God was not in that wind. In the days of King Edward the sixth there came a terrible Earthquake, hideous vapors of Treasons and conspiracies, rumbling from Rome, to shake the foundations of that Church, which had now left off loving the Whore, and turned Antichrist quite out of his saddle. Excommunications of Prince and people, execrations and curses in their tetricall forms with Bell, Book, and Candle; Indulgences, Bulls, Pardons, promises of heaven, to all traitors that would ext•...rpate such a King and kingdom: a Monstrous earthquake; but GOD was not in the Earthquake. In the days of Queen Mary came the Fire, an unmerciful fire: such a one as was never before kindled in England, and (we trust in Jesus Christ) never shall be again. It raged against all that professed the Gospel of Christ: made bonfires of silly women for not understanding that their ineffable mystery of Transubstantiation; burnt the mother with the child: Boner and Gardener those hellish bellows that set it on flaming. A raging and insatiable fire; but God was not in that fire. In the days of Queen Elizabeth of blessed memory, came the still voice, saluting us with the songs of Zion, and speaking the comfortable things of Jesus Christ: and GOD came with his voice. This sweet and blessed voice is still continued by our Gracious Sovereign: GOD long preserved him with it, and it with him, and us all with them both.

Let us not say of this blessing, as Lot of Zoar; Is it not a little one? nor be weary of Manna with Israel: lest GOD'S voice grow dumb unto us, and (to our woe) we hear it speak no more. No, rather let our hearts answer with Samuel; Speak Lord, for thy servants hear. If we will not hear him say to our souls, I am your salvation: we shall hear him say, Depart from me, I know you not. So saith wisdom; Because I have called, and ye refused: I will therefore laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh. The gallant promiseth himself many years, and in them all to rejoice: he thinks of Preachers, as the Devil said of CHRIST; that we come to torment him before his time. Well then, Rejoice saith GOD: Let thy heart cheare thee in the days of thy youth. But ironice, he mocks when he says so. Now quod Deus loquitur ridens, tu lege lacrymans: What God speaks laughing, do thou read lamenting. If God once laughs, it is high time for us to weep: They will not hear God when he preacheth in their health: God will not hear them when they pray in their sickness. They would not hearken to him in the Pulpit, nor he to them on their death bed.

6. God speaks by his Spirit: This spirit beareth witness with our spirit &c. Perhaps this is that voice behind us; as it were whispering to our thoughts? This is the way, walk in it. This is that speaking Spirit: It is not ye that speak; but the Spirit of your Father, which speaketh in you. It is this Spirit that speaks for us, and speaks to us, and speaks in us. It is the Churches prayer; Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth. Sanctus Spiritus osculum Patris. The holy Ghost is the kiss of God the Father. Whom God kisseth, he loveth.

Now by all these ways doth God speak peace to our consciences, and say to our souls, that he is our Salvation.

1. He may speak with his own voice: and thus he gave assurance to Abraham; Fear not, I am thy shield, & thy exceeding great reward. If God speak comfort, let hell roar horror. 2. He may speak by his works: actual mercies to us demonstrate that we are in his favor, and shall not be condemned. By this I know thou faourest me, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me. 3. He may speak by his son; Come to me all that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will ease you. 4. He may speak by his Scripture this is God's Epistle to us, and his letters Patent, wherein are granted to us all the privileges of salvation. An universal Siquis: Whosoever believes, and is Baptized, shall be saved. 5. He may speak by his Ministers to whom he hath given the Ministry of reconciliation. 6. He doth speak this by his spirit: he sendeth forth the spirit of his son into our hearts, crying Abba Father. By all these voices God says to his elect, I am your salvation.

To my Soul.

Many hear God speaking comfort to the corporal care, that hear him not speaking this to the soul. They hear him, but they feel him not. The best assurance is from feeling. Come near, let me feel thee my Son, said Isaacto Jacob: let me feel thee, my Father; say we to God. The thronging Jews heard Christ, but Zacchaeus that believing Publican felt Christ. This day is salvation come to thy house.

My Soul.

There is no vexation to the vexation of the soul: so no consolation to the consolation of the soul. David in this Psalm calls it his Darling. Rescue my soul from their destructions, my Darling from the Lions. The same Prophet complained of a great unrest, when his soul was disquieted within him. Jonah of a grievous sickness, when his soul fainted. Joseph had a cruel bondage, when The iron entered his soul. So no comfort to the comfort of the soul. In the multitude of my thoughts within me, Thy comforts have refreshed my soul. The wicked hear tell of God's mercies: communitur audimus verbum salutis: but God speaks not to their souls. Therefore they cannot say with Mary; My soul rejoiceth. This joy, when God speaks peace to the soul, is ineffabile gaudium: a iubilation of the heart, which a man can, neither recitare, nor reticere: neither suppress, nor express. It gives end to all •...arres, doubts, and differences; overcomes the world, non-suits the devil; and makes a man keep Hilary Terme all his life.

To my Soul.

Mine; I might here examine whose this Mea is; who is the owner of this my? A prophet, a king, a man after God's own heart; that confessed himself the beloved of God; that knew the Lord would never forsake him; holy, happy David owns this meae: he knows the Lord loves him, yet desires to know it more; Dic animae Mea; say to My soul.

But let this teach us to make much of this My. Luther says, there is great divinity in pronounes. The Assurance that GOD will save some is a faith incident to Devils. The very Reprobates may believe that there is a book of Election; but GOD never told them, that their names were written there. The hungry beggar at the Feast-house gate smells good cheare, but the Master doth not say; this is provided for thee. It is small comfort to the harbourlesse wretch, to pass through a goodly City, and see many glorious buildings; When he cannot say; Haec mea domus, I have a place here. The beauty of that excellent City Jerusalem, built with Sapphires, Emeralds, Chrysolites, and such precious stones: the foundation and walls whereof are perfect gold; affords a soul no comfort; unless he can say, mea ciuitas, I have a Mansion in it. The all sufficient merits of Christ do thee no good, unless tua pars & portio: he be thy Savior. Happy soul, that can say with the Psalmist. O Lord thou art my portion. Let us all have oil in our Lamps; lest if we be then to buy, beg, or borrow; we be shut out of doors like the fools not worthy of entrance. Pray Lord say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

I am thy salvation.

The Petition is ended: I will but look into the Benediction: wherein I should consider these four circumstances; Quis, quid, Cui, quando. Who, What, to Whom, When.

Who.

The Lord: to the Lord David prays. He hath made a good choice, for there is salvation in none other. Thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help. The world fails, the flesh falls, the Devil kills, only the Lord saves.

What.

Salvation; a special good thing: every man's desire: who would not be saved? Every man would go to heaven, though perhaps he runs a course directly to hell. Beatus vult homo esse, etiam non sic viuendo vt possit esse. Man would be blessed, though he takes the course to be cursed. I will give thee a Lordship, saith God to Esau. I will give thee a kingdom, saith God to Saul. I will give thee an Apostleship, saith God to Judas. But I will be thy salvation, he says to David, and to none but Saints.

Indeed this voice comes from heaven, comes unto earth: but only through the mediator betwixt heaven and earth, Jesus Christ. He is the alone Savior. Worldlings possess many things, but have right to nothing, because not right to him, that is the heir of all things, Christ. The soul is the perfection of the body, Reason of the Soul, Religion of reason, Faith of Religion, Christ of faith. A man can warrant us upon earth, that our land is ours, our garment ours, our money, servant, beast ours: and that he is a thief who robs us of these. But all the men in the world cannot warrant us our Salvation, but only Jesus Christ. Therefore that we may have assurance, that all these are ours, and that we shall never answer for every bit of bread we have eaten, and for every drop of wine we have drunk; that our possessions are our own, our gold, robes, rents, revenues are our own; let us be Christ's. Whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, or the World, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours: and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's. Be sure of salvation, and be sure of all. For he that spared not his own son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

To whom.

My salvation; not others only, but Mine. A man, and a Christian are two creatures: he may be a man, that hath reason and outward blessings; he is only a Christian, that hath faith, and part in the salvation of Christ. God is plentiful salvation, but it is not ordinary to find a Cui; to whom. Much of heaven is lost for lack of a hand to apprehend it. All passengers in this world presume they are going to heaven, but we may guess by the throng, that the greater part take the broader way. Christ leaving the earth in respect of his bodily presence, left there his Gospel, to apply to men's souls the virtue of his death and passion: Ministers preach this Gospel, people hear this Gospel, all boast of this Gospel: yet himself foretells, that when he comes again, he shall scarce find faith upon earth. No doubt he shall find Christians enow, but scarce faith. Salvation is common, as S<sup>t</sup>. Jude speaketh. When I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation: but few make it proper to themselves. That God is my salvation, and thy salvation, this is the comfort.

When.

In the time present, I am. Sum, non (sufficit, quod) ere. It is comfort to Israel in captivity, that God says, Ero tua redemptio, I will redeem thee. But the assurance that quiets the conscience is this, I am thy salvation. As God said to Abraham; fear not, I am with thee. Deferred hope faints the heart. Whatsoever God forbear to assure us, O pray we him not to delay this; Lord say to our souls, I am your salvation.

To conclude; it is salvation our Prophet desires: that God would seal him up for his child, then certify him of it. He requests not Riches: he knew that man may be better fed then taught: that wealth doth but frank men up to death. He that prefers Riches before his soul, doth but sell the horse to buy the saddle, or kill a good horse to catch a hare. He begs not honor: many have leapt from the high throne to the low pit. The greatest commander on earth hath not a foot of ground in heaven, except he can get it by entitling himself to Christ. He desires not Pleasures: he knows, there are as great miseries beyond prosperity, as on this side it. And that all vanity is but the indulgence of the present time: a minute begins, continues, ends it: for it endures but the acting, & knows no solace in the memory. In the fairest garden of delights, there is somewhat, quod in ipsis floribus angat; that stings in the midst of all vain contents.

In a word, it is not momentary, variable, apt to either change or chance, that he desires; but eternal; salvation. He seeks like Mary, that better part which shall never be taken from him. The wise man's mind is ever above the moon, saith Seneca: let the world make never so great a noise, as if it all ran upon Coaches, and all those full of roarers; yet all peace is there. It is not sublunary, under the wheel of changeable mortality, that he wishes, but salvation. To be saved is simply the best plot: beat your brains, and break your sleeps, and wast your marrowes, to be wealthy, to be worthy; for riches, for honors: plot, study, contrive; be as political as you can: and then kiss the child of your own brains, hug your inventions, applaud your wits, doat upon your advancements or advantagements: yet all these are but dreams. When you awake, you shall confess that to make sure your salvation was the best plot and no study shall yield you comfort, but what hath been spent about it. What should we then do, but work and pray? work, saith Paul; Work up your salvation with fear and trembling: and then pray with our Prophet; Lord say to our souls, thou art our salvation with comfort and rejoicing.

THE SOULS REFUGE.

1. PET. 4. 19.

Let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

ATRVE Christians life is one day of three meals, and every meal hath in it two Courses. His first meal is Nasc... & renasci; to be borne a sinner, to be new-borne a Saint. I was borne in iniquity, and in firm did my mother conceive me; there is one Course. Except a man be borne again, he cannot see the kingdom of God; there is the other Course. His second meal is Bene agere, & male pati; to do well, and to suffer ill. Do good unto all; but especially to those that are of the household of Faith; there's one Course of Doing. <sup>c</sup> All that live godly in Christ I...sus, shall suffer persecution; theres the other Course of Suffering. His third meal is Mor... & viuere; to die a temporal death, to live an eternal life.

The first is his Break-fast, and herein he is naturally Natus & da...; borne in sin, and condemned for sin spiritually  $\langle \phi \rangle$  &  $\langle \phi \rangle$  ; borne again in righteousness, and justified from sin. The last is his Supper: wherein there is one bitter dish; Death. Statutum est omnibus semel m...ri; It is appointed to all men to die once. Omnibus semel, plorisque bis: to all once, to many twice; for there is a second death And that is truly a d...th, because it is mors vita, the death of life: the other rather a life, for it is mors m...rtis, the death of death: after which mors non erit vltra; there shall be no more death. Therefore rise, that you may not fall: rise now by a righteous life, lest you fall into an everlasting death. If the soul will not now rise, the body shall one day be raised, and go with the soul to Judgment. The second Course is incomparably sweet; vinere post mortem, to live after death. I say after death, for a man m...st die that he may live. So that a good supper brings a good sleep: he that lives well, shall sleep well. He that now apprehends mercy, mercy shall hereafter comprehend him. Mercy is the vltimus  $\langle \phi \rangle$  ; no hope be...nd it and this is th... time for it, the next is of Justice. The middle meal between both th...se is our Dinner; and that consists patiendo malum, and faciendo bonum; in doing good, and suffering evil. And on these two Courses, my Text sp...nds it self. First, they that suffer according to the wit of God; there's the Passion. Secondly, they may trust God with their souls in well doing, there's the Action.

More particularly in the words we may consider five Graduall Circumstances.

- 1. The Sufferance of the Saints. They that suffer.
- 2. The Integrity of this Sufferance. According to the will of God.
- 3. The Comfort of this Integrity. May commit their souls to God.
- 4. The Boldness of this Comfort. As unto a faithful Creator.
- 5. The Caution of this Boldness In well doing.

1. The Sufferance of the Saints.

They that suffer. All men suffer: Man is borne unto trouble, as the sparks she upward. This life is well compared to a throng in a narrow passage: he that is first out, finds ease: he that is in the midst, is in the worst place and case; for he is hemm'd in with troubles: the hind-most drives out both the former; and if he have not the greatest part in suffering evil, lightly he hath the greatest share in doing it. Outward things happen alike to good and bad. There is one event to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: to him that sweareth, and to him that feareth an oath. They are both travelers in the thoroughfare of this world, both lodge in one Inn, both have the same provision; perhaps the wicked have the better cheare: but in the morning their ways part. There are common evils, as there are common goods. Poverty, sickness, death spares not the greatest: health, wealth, prosperity is not denied to the meanest. All have three Mans•...ns. 1. This earth; there (as in No•...s Ark) are the clean and unclean, righteous and wicked promiscuously confused. 2. The Grave: this is a common house; a very Pest-house: where all lie together under the Surgerie of death. It is a cheap and universal house; we pay no rent for it. 3. But after all are come to this place, there is then a way of parting. Est locus bis partes vbi se via findit in ambas. Some go to hell, others to heaven. They shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life: and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation. Some to immortal honor, others to immortal horror.

God gives not all outward prosperity to the wicked; least they should ascribe it to their own wits, or worths: least they should sacrifice to their net, and burn incense to their drage. Nor all affliction to the good, least they should fall to some sinister and unwarrantable courses. The rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; least the righteous put forth their hands to iniquity. There is a mixture of good and evil: prosperity and adversity have their vicissitudes. Praesentis vita nec prosperitas innocentiam testator, nec acerbitas miseram animam indicat. Neither do the crosses of this world witness a man's guiltiness, nor the blessings of the world his innocence. But the good have a larger share in sufferings, then the reprobates. Impius non percutitur nisi a Domino, not ab I•...s. None strikes the wicked but God; but all the wicked strike and vex us. This world, like the earth, is a mere stepdame to good herbs, an own mother to weeds: no marvel if she starves us; all is too little for her own children. Omnes patiuntur plurim•..., quidam patiuntur omnia. All suffer many kinds of miseries; many suffer all kinds of miseries.

Christi•... est (ϕ) : it is the part of a Christian to suffe•... wheresoever he is, let him expect it. Adam was see upon in Paradise, Job in the dunghill: Job fortior in st•...oore, quàm Adam in Paradise. Job was more strong to resist temptations in the miserable dust, then was Ad•... in that glorious Garden. The Jews were commanded to eat four herbs with their sweet Passover: bitterness ever treads on the heels of pleasure. Jacob hath a Son, and looseth his Wife: Benjamin is borne, Rachel dies. Our Lady coming from that great Feast, lost her son Jesus three days. Seven days she had eaten sweet bread: here followed three days sour bread for it. Good things are to be taken with much thankfulness, evil with much patience.

Let this teach us two duties; First, to prepare for evils before they come: next to make them welcome, when they are come. So they shall neither meet us with fear, nor leave us with sorrow.

1. Preparation to suffer is specially necessary. Sudden crosses find weak souls secure, leave them miserable, make them desperate. Expectatum malum l•...uius mordet. A looked for evil smarts more gently. Repentina bona sunt suauiora; sed repentina mala sunt grauiora. Vnexpected joys are more gracious, but vnexpected evils are more grieuous. Mischiefes come most commonly without warning.

They do not allow, as Jonah did to Nineveh, forty days respite: not so much as an Hac nocte, this night: which was allowed to the worldling; This night shall they fetch away thy soul from thee. Happy man that gives himself warning: he that conceits what may be, arms himself against what must be. Thou art in health, eatest, digestest, sleepest; Quid si morbosio iaceant tua membra cubili? What if sickness shall cast thee down on thy weary couch? Though riches allow thee meat for thy stomach, what if sickness allow thee not stomach to thy meat? How if the very smell, if the very thought of thy best dishes should offend thee? How if after many tossed sides, and •...fted places; nullo poteris requiescere lecto? thou couldst find no corner to give thee ease? How couldst thou take this distemper? Thou art rich: thy throat tastes it; thy belly feels it, thy back wears it: how if from no fear of want thou shouldst come to no want of fear? to care for to morrows provision, with extreme sweat of brows not to earn bread enough to keep life and soul together; nakedness exposing thy body to the violences of heaven, scorching heat of the Sun, cold storms of the air? How couldest thou brook the difference Inter tantam refectioem, & talem defectionem; between that abundant opulency, and this distitute penury? Thou art at home in peace, singing in thy own vineyards; thou sittest in a shock secure, whilst thy reapers fell down the humble corn at thy foot, and fil thy barns. What if for religion thou shouldst be sent to exile: where thou mayest weep with Israel to thy deriding enemies demanding a Song of Zion; How shall I sing the song of joy in a strange land? How canst thou digest the injuries, and brook the contempt of strangers?

These be good thoughts to prearme our souls: nothing shall make them miserable, that have this preparation. Agabus told Paul, having first bound his hands and feet with his girdle; Thus saith the holy Ghost: so shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that oweth this girdle. Hereupon the rest of the Saints besought him with tears not to go up to Jerusalem. But observe that blessed Apostles resolved answer; Paratus sum, I am ready. What mean ye to weep, and to break my heart? I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus. The account is past, I am prepared. Men that want this fore-resolution are like a secure city, that spends all her wealth in furnishing her chambers, and furbishing her streets; but lets her bulwarks fall to the ground. Here is provision for peace, none for war: something for content of friends, nothing for defense against enemies. It is usual for young-men with wooden Wasters to learn how to play at the sharp: they are taught with foils how to deal with points. He is desperate that ventures on a single combat in the field, and was never lessoned at the Fence-school. We shall be unable to fight with evils themselves, if we cannot well encounter their shadows.

Mischiefes are like the Cockatrices eye,
If they see first they kill, foreseen they die.

What our foresight takes from their power, it adds to our own: it enervates their strength and corroborates ours. For by this both they are made less able to hurt us, and we are more strong to resist them. Since therefore we must pass through this fiery trial, let us first prove our strength in a gentle meditation: as that martyr tried his finger in the Candle, before his body came to the fire.

2. They must be made welcome, when they are come. Non vt hosts sed vt hospites admittendi. They must not be entertained as enemies, but as guests. Their feet are beautiful, that bring good tidings: but crosses bring good news. They assure us, that we are no bastards. If you endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with Sons. But if you be without correction, then are ye bastards. Non timeas flagellari, sed exhaeredari. Fear not to be scourged, but to be disinherited. There is so much comfort in sorrow, as makes all affliction to the elect, Carmen in nocte; a song in the night. Adversity sends us to Christ, as the leprosy sent those Ten. Luk. 17. Prosperity makes us turn our backs upon Christ, & leave him; as health did those Nine. David's sweetest songs were his lacrymae. In misery he spared Saul his great adversary: in peace he killed Uriah his dear friend. The wicked sing with Grashoppers in fair Weather: but the faithful (in this like Sirens) can sing in a storm.

It is a question whether the Sun or the Wind will first make a man throw off his cloke: but by all consent the Sun will first vncloke him. Imagine by the Sun the warm heat of prosperity; by the Wind the blustering cold of calamity; by the cloke Christ's livery, a sincere profession. Now which of these will first uncase thee of thy zeal. The boisterous wind makes a man gather his cloke closer about him: the hot silent Sun makes him weary of so heavy a burden; he soon does it off. Secure plenty is the warm Sun, which causeth many to discloke themselves, & cast off their zeal, as it did Demas, who left Christ to embrace this present world. But the cold wind of afflictio gathers it up closer to him, & teacheth him to be more zealous. When a man cannot find peace upon earth, he quickly runs to heaven to seek it.

Plutarch writes, that Antigonus had in his army a valiant soldier, but of a sickly body. Antigonus observing his valor, procured his Physicians to take him in hand; and he was healed. Now being sound, he began to fight in some fear, to keep himself a good distance from danger, no more venturing into the vanne or forlorn place of the battle. Antigonus noting and wondering at this alteration, asked him the cause of this new cowardice. He answers, O Antigonus, thou art the cause. Before I ventured nothing but a diseased corpse, and then I chose rather to die quickly, then to live sickly: I invited death to do me a kindness. Now it is otherwise with me, for I have somewhat to loose. A poor and afflicted life makes a man bold in his religio: it is nothing to part with hunger, thirst, cold contempt. But when prosperous fortunes flow upon him, he dares not stick so constantly to Christ. Would you have the rich Merchant find fault with Idolatry, & stand to justify God's truth? No he hath somewhat to take to; and although he ventures much, he would be loath to be a venturer in this Yet this somewhat is nothing in regard of what he looeth, because he will not loose his riches. Affliction sometimes makes an evil man good, always a good man better. Crosses therefore do not only challenge our patience but even our thanks. Thy soul is sick, these are thy Physic. Intelligat hom•... Deum esse medicum: sub medicamento positus vreris, secaris, clamas. Non audit medicus ad voluntatem, sed audit ad sanitatem. Understand God thy Physician, he ministers to thee a bitter, but wholesome potion: thy stomach abhors it: thou liest bound under his hand, whiles he works upon thee: thou criest to be delivered; he hears thee not according to thy will, but according to thy weal. We are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. Thou payest the Physician of thy body though he cannot heal thee: wilt thou not thank the Physician of thy soul that hath healed thee? The child cries for the knife, the parent knows it can but hurt him; though he weep for it, he shall not have it. Such children are we to think God doth not use us kindly, unless he give us every vanity we affect. Instead of these toys that would make us wanton, God lays on us the rod of correction to make us sober. Our flesh is displeas'd, our soul is saved; we have no cause to complain. I come now from the Sufferance of the Saints, to

The Integrity of that Sufferance.

According to the will of God. We have sufferd enough, except it be according to his will. The manner commends the matter. To go no further, this point is sufficiently directed by our Apostle, Vers. 14. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are you; for the Spirit of glory resteth upon you. But let none of you suffer as an evil-doer. For Chap. 2. 19. This is thank-worthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. This our Savior taught us. Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousness sake, (non qui patiuntur, sed qui patiuntur propter iustitiam) for theirs is the Kingdom of heaven. Non mortes, sed mores faciunt martyres. It is not the death, but the cause, that gives the honor of Martyrdom.

Indeed there is no man that suffers contrary to the will of God, but many suffer not Secundùm, not according to the will of GOD. In his conceal'd will he allows the sufferings of the Reprobates: this is his just judgment. They are smitten, but for their faults. Moerent, & merentur: they lament, and deserve to lament. When the Adulterer is wounded for his lust, he cannot think himself a patient secundum beneplacitum Dei, according to the will of God. When the usurer is fetched over for his extortion, the depopulator for his enclosing, the slanderer for his libelling, all these suffer, but not for conscience toward God, not according to his will. They only are said to suffer according to his will, that suffer first innocently, then patiently.

1. Innocently; for the wicked suffer: mali male sed merito. Evil men bear evil things, but after their deserts. The Pope hath made many Saints from this kind of suffering. Straw-saints, such as Garnet was. If they be first drench'd at Tyber, and after hanged at Tyburne, Martyrs sunt; they can be no less then Martyrs. Not seldom their names are put into the Rubric: but they stand there in those red letters for nothing else, but to remember their red & bloody actions. They may pretend some show of religion, as if for cause thereof they suffered: but it is not a meene, but a mixed cause: not for faith, but for faction: not for truth, but for treason. It is observed, that as the Physicians say, none die of an ague, nor without an ague: so none of them suffer for the Romish religion, nor without the Romish religion. Therefore as Aristides dying of the bite of a Weasell, exceedingly lamented that it was not a Lyo•...so these Seminaries may greatly lament that they die not for the Lyon of Judah, but for the Weasell of Roe. Not secundum voluntatem Dei, but secundum voluptatem Antichrists: not according to the will of Christ, but according to the lust of Antichrist. But he can make them amends with Saining them: men shall kneel to them, pray to them, climb to heaven by the ladder of their merits. Alas! poor Saints: the Pope sends them to heaven, but how if they were in hell before? May we not say of them, as Augustine did of Aristotle: woe unto them, they are praised, and prayed unto where they are not, and condemned where they are. Unless as the vision was to Ormus; that among the Apostles and Martyrs there was a vacant place left in heaven, which saith he, was reserved for a Priest in England, called Thomas Becket: and this revelation was full twelve years before Becket died. So except the Pope can make them Saints before they die, I fear his authority can do little afterwards. Yet indeed the Pope is a great Saint-maker, and hath helped abundance of men to heaven. For he sent them thither through the fire, for the cause of Christ: he condemned, cursed, burnt them to ashes: and thus spite of his teeth, he hath helped to make them martyrs and Saints. For our selves, if we suffer any wrong of men, let us be sure we have not deserved it. Our Innocence c6mends our suffering; for this is according to the good will and pleasure of God.

2. Patiently; a murmuring mind evacuates the virtue of thy sufferings. For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently: but if when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye then take it patiently, this is acceptable to God. Let me therefore help your patience by two considerations.

1. What Christ our head suffered for us; bitter words, and more bitter wounds. Observe him; Look to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, and despised the shame. So let us run with patience the race that is set before us. If we cannot endure an angry word from our brothers mouth, how would we suffer boiling lead, & boiling coals, as the Martyrs did? How to be crucified as our Lord Jesus was? What would we do then? Shew me now one dram of this patience. Among gallants a word and a blow: among civil men a word and a writ. The back of Patience can bear no load. But ought not Christ first to suffer these things, and then to enter into his glory? First he was crowned with thorns, & then crowned with honors. Caput spinosum in terris, si sit gloriosum in coelis. That head must first wear a wreath of sorrow on earth, that shall wear a wreath of joy in heaven. Hereunto are we called: because Christ suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his steps.

2. That all this is according to the will of God. Our blows come at least mediately from the hand of God. And this hand is guided with providence, & tempered with love. Distressed worldlings cry out, it was my own folly that ran me into this danger, or the malice of mine enemy undid me, or surfeit on such meat made me sick. So the cur bites the stone, which could never have hurt him but from the hand that threw it. Look up to the first mover, O mad man, and discharge the means. The Instrument may be unjust in thy wrongs, but the cause is just from him that inflicted it. What rod soever beats thee, consider it according to the will of God, and be patient. His hand sets theirs on work: I hope thou wilt not dispute with thy maker. The medicine of thy passion is composed by God himself: no evils nor devils shall put in one dram more then his allowance: no man nor Angel can abate one scruple. The impatient man wants either wisdom or obedience. Wisdom, if he be ignorant from whom his crosses come: obedience, if he knows it, and is not patient. This is the Integrity of the Suffering: now follows

The Comfort of this Integrity.

Let him commit the keeping of his soul to God. Every man cannot with this confidence: but qui patitur propter Deum, recurrit ad Deum. He that suffers for Christ's testimony, is confident of God's mercy. Let us come therefore unto the throne of grace boldly, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in the time of need. Here let us observe three circumstances; Quis, Quid, Cui; Who, What, to Whom.

Who

They that suffer according to the will of God. Felicitie thinks, it hath no need of God. But God is more dainty of spiritual comforts, then to give them to such as are confident in worldly comforts. The Balm of the Spirit shall not be sophisticated, or mixed veneno mundi, with the poison of this world. Give strong drink to the heavy, saith Solomon. God will not give his consolations to those that are drunk with prosperity, mad-merry with the world: but his wine to the heavy heart. He will comfort them that mourn. Let them that suffer commit, &c.

What.

The Soul, and the keeping thereof. The Soul is a very precious thing; it had need of a good keeper. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and loose his own soul. We trust the Lawyer to keep our Inheritance; the Physician to keep our body, the coffer to keep our money, shepherds to keep our flocks: but the Soul had need of a better keeper. Howsoever it goes with thy liberty, with thy love, with thy land, with thy life; be sure to look well to thy soul: that lost, all is lost.

The body is not safe, where the Soul is in hazard. Non-anima pro corpore, sed corpus pro anima factum est. The soul is not made for the body, but the body for the Soul. He that neglects the better, let him look never so well to the worse, shall loose both. He that looks well to the keeping of the better, though he somewhat neglect the worst, shall save both. The Body is the instrument of the soul: it acts, what the other directs: so it is the external, actual, and instrumental offender: Satan will come with a Habeus corpus for it. But I am persuaded, if he take the Body, he will not leave the Soul behind him.

To whom.

To God; he is the best Keeper. Adam had his Salvation in his own hands, he could not keep it. Esau had his Birth-right in his own hands, he could not keep it. The Prodigal had his Patrimony in his own hands, he could not keep it. If our Soul were left in our own hands, we could not keep it. The world is a false keeper; let the soul run to riot, he will go with it. The Devil is a Churlish keeper, he labors to keep the soul from saluatiō. The Body is a brittle & inconstant keeper; every sickness opens the door, and lets it out. God only is the sure keeper. Your life is hid with Christ in God. This was David's confidence; Thou art my hiding place, thou shalt keep me. The Jewels given to thy little children, thou wilt not trust them with but keep them thyself. O Lord keep thou our only one, do thou Rescue our soul from destructions, our Darling from the Lions. Trust us not with our own souls: we shall pass them away for an Apple, as Adam did: for a morsel of meat, as Esau did: for the love of a harlot; as that Prodigal did. Lord do thou keep our Souls.

Now the Christian patient must commit the keeping of his Soul to God both in - Life.

- Death.

1. Living; the Soul hath three places of being. In the body from the Lord, in the Lord from the body, in the body with the Lord. The two last are referred to our salvation in heaven: either in part, when the Soul is glorified alone: or totally, when both are crowned together. Now the soul must be even here in the Lord's keeping, or else it is lost. If God let go his hold it sinks. It came from God, it returns to God, it cannot be well one moment without God. It is not in the right vbi, except the Lord be with it. It is sine sua domo, if sine suo Domino. Here be four sorts of men reprobable. 1. They that trust not God with their souls, nor themselves, but rely it only upon other men. 2. They that will not trust God with their souls, nor others, but only keep it themselves. 3. They that will trust neither God with their souls, nor others, nor keep it themselves. 4. They that will neither trust others with their souls, nor themselves, but only God, yet without his warrant that he will keep it.

1. They that trust their souls simply on the care of others: they are either Papists or profane Protestants. The Papist trusts Antichrist with his soul; he's like to have it well kept. If Masses & Asses can keep it, (for so the Jesuits term their secular Priests) it shall not be lost. The devil fights against the soul, the Pope interposeth an armoury of Agnus Dei's, sprinklings, crossings amulets, prayers to Saints. But surely if this Armor were of proof, S. Paul forgot himself in both these places, where he describes that Panoply, or whole armor of God. He speaks of a plate of righteousness for the breast, shoes of patience for the feet, the shield of Faith, the helmet of salvation, & the sword of the Spirit. To the Thessalonians indeed he somewhat varies the pieces of armor; but in neither place doth he mention Crosses, Crucifixes, aspersions, vnctions, &c. Or they will trust the Saints in heaven with their souls. Sancta virgo Dorothea, tua nos virtute bea, cor in nobis nouum crea. What that Prophet desired of God; they as if they were Ioth to trouble the Lord about it, and could have it nearer hand; beg of their Saint Dorothy; to create a new heart within them. Such a rithme have they to the VirginMary. Virgo mater, maris stella, Fons hortorum; verbi cella, ne nos pestis aut procella, peccatores obruant. But the Saints are deaf: non audiunt. They would pray them to forbear such prayers, they abhor such superstitious worship. They that were so jealous of God's honor on earth, would be loath to rob him of it in heaven. So our carnal professors only trust the Minister with their soul: as if God had imposed on him that charge, which the Prophet gave to Ahab. keep this man if by any means he be missing, then shall thy life be for his life. But indeed if he do his duty in admonishing: If thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it: if he do not turn from his way; he shall die in his iniquity: but thou hast delivered thy soul.

2. They that will not trust others with their soul, but keep it themselves. They wrap it warm in the nest of their own presumptuous merits: as if good works should hatch it up to heaven. But the soul that is thus kept, will be lost. He that will go to heaven by his own righteousness, and climbs by no other ladder than his own Just works, shall never come there. The best Saints, that have had the most good works, durst not trust their souls with them. I know nothing by myself, yet am I not hereby justified. In many things we sin all: All in many things, many in all things: And the most learned Papists, whatsoever they have said in their disputations, reserve this truth in their hearts: otherwise speaking in their deaths; then they did in their lives. Now non merita mea, sed misericordia tua? not my merits, but thy mercies, O Lord. All our life is either unprofitable or damnable: therefore O man, what remains. Nisi vt in tota vita tua deploras totam vitam tuā: but that during all thy life thou shouldst lament all thy life, works cannot keep us, but grace: let them boast of perfection, we cry for pardon: they for merits, we for mercies: they for justifying works of their own, we only for our sweet Savior Jesus Christ.

3. They that will neither trust others with their soul nor keep it themselves: but either do sell it for ready money, as Esau sold his Birthright & Judas  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  Jesus. Or pawn it for a good bribe, some large temptation of profit pleasure or honor, they will not sell it out-right, but mortgage it for a while, with a purpose (that se...dome speeds) to redeem it Or loose it; walking negligently through the streets of this great City the world, their soul is gone, & they are not aware of it. Or give away their soul, as do the envious and desperate & have nothing in lieu of it but terrors without, & horrors within: they serve the devils turn for nothing 4. They that will trust God with their soul, but have no warrant that God will keep it. They lay all the burthē upon the shoulders of Christ, & meddle no more with the matter. As if God would bring them to heauē; even whilst they pursue the way to hell: or keep that soul for the body when the body had quite given away the soul. He never promised to save a man against his will. As he doth save us by his Son so he comands us. to work up our salvation with fear & trembling. He that lies still in the myrie pit, of his sin & trusts to heaven for help out, without his own concurring endeavor may hap to lie there still. 2. Dying; there is no comfort but to trust the soul with God So David, Lord into thy hands I commit my spirit, So Stephen; Lord Jesus receive my spirit, with these words our Lord Jesus himself gave up the Ghost. It is justice to restore, whence we receive. It is not presumption, but faith to trust God with thy spirit. The soul of the king, the soul of the beggar, all one to him: David a king; Lazarus a beggar God receives both their souls. From giving up the Ghost the highest is not exempted; from giving it into the hands of God the poorest is not excepted. There is no comfort like this: when riches bring aut nequam, aut nequicquam, either no comfort, or discomfort; when the wardrobe, furniture, junkets, wine offend thee, when thy money cannot defend thee: when thy doctors feed themselves at thy cost, cannot feed thee: when wife, childrē, friends stand weeping about thee: where is thy help, thy hope? all the world hath not a dram of comfort for thee; this sweetens all, Lord into thy hands I commend my soul; Thou hast redeemed me, O thou God of truth.

Our Spirit is our dearest jewel: howl and lament if thou think thy soul is lost. But let thy faith know, that is never lost which is committed to God's keeping. Spiritum emittis, non amittis.

Durius seponitur, sed melius reponitur. That soul must needs pass quietly through the gates of death, which is in the keeping of God. Woe were us, if the Lord did not keep it for us whiles we have it, much more when we restore it. While our soul dwells in our breast, it is subject to manifold miseries, to manifest sins: temptations, passions, misdeeds distemper us: in heaven it is free from all these. Let the soul be once in the hands of God, nec dolore pro peccato, nec peccato prae dolore torquetur; it is neither disquieted with sorrow for sin, nor with sin which is beyond all sorrow. There may be trouble in the wilderness, in the land of promise there is all peace. Then may we sing, Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped. Inuadit Satanus, euadit Christianus. It is there above the reach of the devil. There is no evil admitted into the city of heaven, to wrestle with the citizens thereof. Death is ready at hand about us, we carry deaths enow within us: we know we shall die, we know not how soon: it can never prevent us, or come too early, if our souls be in the keeping of God. Man was not so happy when God gave his soul to him, as he is when he returns it to God. Give it cheerfully: and then like a faithful Creator, that thou givest to him in short pain, he will give thee back with endlese joy. And so we come fittly from the Comfort of our Integrity.

The Boldness of this Comfort.

As unto a faithful Creator. Wherein our confidence is heartened by a double argument: the one drawn ex maiestate, the other ex Misericordia: from Majesty, from mercy. His greatness, a Creator: his goodness, a Faithful Creator.

1. Creator; not a stranger to thee, but he that made thee. It is natural to man, to love the work of his own hands. Pygmalion dotes upon the stone, which himself had carved. But much more natural, to love his own Images, his children, the walking Pictures of himself, the divided pieces of his own body. God loves us as our Creator: because his own hands have fashioned us. But creauit & vermiculos: he also made the worms: yield it, and therefore non odit vermiculos, he hates not the very worms. Creauit & Diabolum: he made the devil: no; God made him an Angel, he made himself a devil. God loves him (vt naturam) as he is a nature, hates him (vt Diabolum) as he is a corrupted nature, an evil, a devil. But we are not only his creatures, the workmanship of his hands; but his children; so Adam is called The son of God. His own Image; fecit hominem in similitudinem suam: he made man after his likeness, in his Image. We are more then opus Dei, the mere work of God: for Imago Dei, the very Image and similitude of God. We may therefore be bold to commend our souls to God, as a faithful Creator.

Diuerse men have that for their God, which never was their Creator. The proud man makes his Honor his god: the covetous makes his gold his God: the voluptuous makes his belly his God now whereas God not only charged in the first Precept, Thou shalt have no other God's before me: but added further in the next, Thou shalt not make to thee any Image or Similitude of anything, whether in heaven above, or earth beneath, or water under the earth, &c. These three sins seem to cross God in these three interdicted places. For the proud man hath his Idol as it were in the air: the covetous man hath his Idol in the earth: the drunken Epicure hath his Idol in the water. Let them take their God's to themselves: let no Rachel that hath married

Jacob, steal away Laban's Idols. Our Creator is in heaven, boldly give thy soul to him: who should better have it, then he that made it?

2. The other argument of our comfort, is that he is Fidelis, a Faithful Creator, He is faithful to thee, how unfaithful soever thou hast been to him. He made thee good, thou madest thyself naught? he doth not there yet leave thee, as man his friend in misery; but sent his Son to redeem thee. Here was great faithfulness. He sends his holy Spirit into thy heart, to apply this redemption of Christ: here is great faithfulness. Thou often turnest thy back upon him, and following sin leavest him: he leaves not thee. I will not leave thee, nor for sake thee: here is great faithfulness. He hath promised Poenitenti veniam, credenti vitam to him that repenteth pardon, to him that believeth salvation: here is faithfulness. Now hath he promised? he is faithful to perform it. What man or devil dares stand up, to challenge God with unfaithfulness?

This infalibilitie Christ knew, when to his Fathers faithful hands he gave up the Ghost. You will say, who might better do it; the Son might well be confident of the Father. Not he alone the servants have been faithful also in this emission, and found God as faithful in acception. So David, Stephen, &c. God is faithful, there is no distrust in him; all the fear is in thyself. How canst thou trust thy Jewel with a stranger? God is thy Creator, and a Faithful Creator; but how if thou be an unfaithful creature? Thou wilt frequent the doors of thy Patron, present gifts to thy Landlord, visit thy friend: but how if to him that made thee, thou makest thyself a stranger? How often hath God passed by thee, without thy salutation! In the temple he hath called to thee, thy heart hath not echoed, and sent out thy voice to call upon him. There hath he charged thee, Seek my face; thou hast not answered, Thy face O Lord, I will seek. By his Spirit he hath knocked at thy door, thou hast not opened to him. Now upon some exigent thou bequeatest thy soul to him: upon what acquaintance? Will this sudden familiarity be accepted?

It is our own ignorance or strangenes or unfaithfulness that hinders us. The reprobates think Christ a stranger to them; When did we see thee hungry &c. But indeed they are strangers to Christ, and he may well say, when did I see you visit me? I was sick and in prison, and ye came not at me. Would you have God cleave to them, that leave him? Doth a man all his life run from God, and shall God on his death-bed run to him? No, you would not know me; and therefore now non noui vos, I know not you. But the faithful creature knows God a faithful Creator. I know whom I have believed. Thou mayst say with that good father; Egredere anima mea, quid times? Go forth my foul, go forth with joy, what shouldst thou fear? Yea it will go without bidding, and fly cheerfully into the arms of God, whom it trusted as a faithful Creator. I have served thee, believed on thee, now I come unto thee; saith Luther. I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, says Paul. These are not the voices of worldlings, but of Saints. God will be a faithful Creator to receive and preserve their souls. I have served thee, saith man: I have preserved thee, saith God. In me credis, ad me venis: thou believest on me, thou comest to me. Here is now the Boldness of our comfort: there is yet

A Caution of this Boldness.

In well doing. The wicked man may commit his soul to God's keeping, but how is he sure God will take the charge of it? what should God do with a fowl and polluted soul? The soul must at last be committed to some: now he only is the receiver of it in death, that was the keeper of it in life. If Satan have always ruled it, GOD will not embrace it. As Ieptha said to the Elders of Gilead: Did ye not hate me, and expel me out of my fathers house? and why are ye come unto me now, when you are in distress? Did you thrust God out of your hearts, out of your houses, out of your barns, out of your closets; and shall God open heaven to your souls? They that thus commit their souls to God, God will commit their souls to Satan. It must be delivered up in Patiendo malum, but in faciendo bonum; in suffering that is evil, but in doing that is good. Otherwise if we thrust God from us, God will thrust us from him.

Thus is God even with man. They say now to the holy one of Israel, Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways. Hereafter God shall say to them, Depart from me, I know you not. Mans soul is but an inmate to the bosom, sent to lodge there for a time; but must not take it up for a dwelling; God is the Lord of the Tenure, to him it must be surrendered. We have a soul within us, but it is not ours; (and yet what is ours if our soul be not) it must be committed to God; either in evil doing as to a Judge, or in well doing as to a faithful Creator. Some live as if they had no souls; more belluino, like human beasts. The vicissitude of drunkenness, whoredom, sleep, share all their time. Others live as if they should never part with their soul. Therefore Reppnunt in mu...tos annos they lay up for many years: this was the Cosmopolites self flattery. Luk. 12. Soul be merry, thou hast much goods laid up for many years. Yet others live as if their soul was not merely their own, but given them to spend at their pleasure, without ever being accountable for it.

But the good live, as if their soul was God's: to him they commend it in a sweet conversation with God: corporaliter mouent in terris, animaliter viuunt in coelis. Their bodies move on earth, their souls live in heaven. To him they may boldly commend their spirits: for they that fit their souls for God in health, shall never find the offer of their death-bed refused. If a man had no soul, if a mortal one, if his own, if never to be required, he might without wonder be induced to live sensually: he that knows the contrary, will live well that he may die well; & commit his soul to God in well doing. Here further observe;

A man may do good, yet come short of this comfort, it is given been facientibus, to them that do well. It is not doing good, but doing well, that gets God to keep the soul. You have served me, says God to Israel, but after your own lusts. To serve God is doing good, but after their own lusts is not doing well. To build a Church is a good work; yet if the foundations of it be laid in the ruins of the poor, their children come not to pray for, but curse the builder. Great and good were the works of the Pharisees, yet all spoiled for want of a Bene. Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, you cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. Therefore Saint Paul's council directs us; So (not only run, but so) run that you may obtain. Schismatics run, but they run out of the Church: they love the truth, but not in peace. Secure people run, but they run beside the church: they love peace, but not in truth: Others follow the truth in peace, but not for the truth: Dum quaerunt cam, non quaerunt ipsam. They sails in their Sic, they miss this same Well. Prosunt alijs, sibi neutiquam. They do good to others, but not well to themselves. But we have almost lost both Bonum and Bene; Good and Well. It is an ill disjunction, that our fathers had so good works, and wanted our faith: and we have the true faith, but want their works. This Well is the very form of a good work: and Forma dat esse rei, it cannot be good without it. Let me take here just cause to reprove two sorts of people.

1. Some there are that trust God with their souls, and destroy their own bodies. But God will take no charge of the soul but in well doing. Those virgins that would kill themselves to prevent rauishments are reprov'd by just censure. Satius incertum adulterium in futuro, quàm certum homicidium in praesenti. Better an uncertain adultery to be endured, then a certain self-murder to be acted. How can they hope for God's hand of mercy, that lay on themselves a hand of cruelty. Rhasis in the Maccabees, falling upon his own sword, and throwing himself down from the wall, yet committed himself to God's keeping, calling upon the Lord of life and spirit, &c. The Text says twice (with little credit to the own Judgment) that it was done Manfully. But it was magne, potius quàm been factum: done with desperate valor; with more venture then wisdom, temerity then honesty. This was that the Devil left out, when he cited Scripture to Christ; In all thy ways; he made that a parenthesis, which was essential to the Text. This the original testified. Psal. 91. 11. Custodient in vijs tuis: but this was none of his ways down from the pinnacle, to show the people a tumbling trick, and to break his neck. So the Devil labors to secure men of God's providence generally, though they be quite out of the way. He bids men be confident that God will keep their souls, howsoever they walk: so under color of God's protection, he brings them to destruction. He tells a man of predestination, that he is sure of an eternal election to life, therefore may live at his own pleasure: so from God's decree draws encouragement to a secure life. He tells him of Justification, that he is acquitted by the blood of Christ; so emboldens him on the back of presumption to ride post to Hell, whereas Predestination & Justification are only made known to us by well-doing.

2. It is impossible for a man of an ill life, to hope that God will keep his soul. He that lives ill, and hopes well, teacheth his ignorance to deceive his wickedness, and them both to deceive his soul. Your iniquities have separated between you and your God. But separate yourselves from the unclean thing, and I will receive you. Take away the bar, your sins: break off the partition by repentance; then I will keep you saith God. Commit your souls to the Lord's trust in well-doing, or not at all. If Christ had come down from the pinnacle headlong, and not by the stairs; he had neglected the way, and so been out of the compass of God's promise to keep him. It is an over-bold presumption, to charge God to keep thy soul, whilst thou doest willfully loose it. Wilt thou clippe the wings of thy soul, and then bid it fly to God? It is all one, as if thou shouldest cut off a man's leg, and then send him on an arrand. Our presumption is able to tie up God's arms, that he cannot help us. He that will walk in profaneness, and commit his soul to God; is like him that throws himself into a deep pit, to try whether God will help him out, and save him from drowning. Man is timorous where he should be bold, and bold where he should be timorous.

God bids us cast our care upon him for this life: Take no thought for your life, what you shall eat, or what you shall drink, or wherewith you shall be clothed: your heavenly Father knows ye have need of all these things. Yet we dare not trust God without a pawn: unless we have bread, we think we shall starve. Here we fear, where we ought not. God tells us, the bread of heaven must feed our spirits; more necessary to maintain life in the soul, then is bread to preserve life in the body: we never hunger after this, yet presume we have sound souls, and trust God to keep them. Here we do not fear where we ought. We are so sottish, that we dare trust God with the soul, the more precious part without well doing, the means to have it saved: yet dare not trust him with our bodies, unless we can see our barns full, or at least our cupboards.

But in vain thou committest thy soul to God, except thou obeyest God. There is still a Commandment with the promise: if thou keep not the precept, thou hast no interest in the promise. If thou wilt not perform thy part, God is discharged of his part: if thou refuse to do well, he will not keep thy Soul. The protection of God extends not to us in lewd courses: we are then out of our way, and the Devil may take us up as Vagabonds. If thou do well, shalt thou not be accepted? if thou do evil, sin lieth at the door. If thou do evil, Sin is thy keeper, not God. There was a Temple, called the Temple of Trust: God will not be to them a Temple of Trust, that had no trust in their Temples.

It is a good thing to have God keep the soul, but the wicked cannot have this hope. He that hath money, lays it up in his coffers; or if he sends it abroad, like a stern laylor, he suffers it not to go without a keeper; sound bonds. He that hath lands makes strong conveyances to his desired heirs, that they may be kept. If children, he provides to have them safely kept. He keeps his goods from the thief, his chickens from the kite, his lamb from the wolf, his fawn from the hound, his dove from the vermin: yet he keeps not his soul from the Devil. O wretched man that must die, and knows not what shall become of his soul. The world would have it, but he knows it must not: himself would keep it, but he knows he cannot: Satan would have it, and he knows not whether he shall: he would have God take it, and he knows not whether he will. O miserable man, that must part with his soul he knows not whether.

We see what it is to lead an evil life, and to be a stranger to God. He knows his sheep, but the goats are not written in his book. The foundation of God standeth sure, having the seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his. It is a goodly thing to be famous and remarkable in the world. Est pulchrum digito monstrari, & dicier hic est. It is a goodly thing to be said, this is the man whom the world honors: but perhaps this is not he whom God honors. He that suffers and does according to the will of God, the Lord will take that man into his bosom... Such honor have all his Saints, It is no great matter for men to be known to kings and nobles, if the Lord know them not: nothing to ride in the second Coach, as Joseph; to be next to the Prince, if they be strangers to the Court of heaven.

Therefore let us all lay hold on well-doing, that we may have comfort in well-dying. We desire to shut up our last scene of life, with In manus tuas Domine commendo spiritum meum; Lord, Into thy hands I commend my spirit. Behold while we live GOD says to us, In manus tuas homo, commendo spiritum meum; Man, into thy hands I commend my spirit. As we use God's Spirit in life, God will use our Spirit at death. If we open the doors of our hearts to his Spirit, he will open the doors of heaven to our Spirit. If we feast him with a supper of Grace, he will feast us with a supper of Glory. If we grieve his Spirit, he will grieve all the veins of our hearts. When such shall say; Lord, into thy hands we commend our souls: no saith God, I will none of your Spirit, for you would none of my Spirit. You shut him out when he would have entered your hearts, he shall shut you out when you would enter heaven. Let us therefore here use God's Spirit kindly, that hereafter he may so use our spirits. Let us in life entertain him with Faith, that in death he may embrace us with mercy. So Lord, into thy hands we commend our souls; keep and receive them O thou faithful Creator, and God of truth, through Jesus CHRIST.

Amen.

To the Inhabitants of Wood-Church in Wirral-Hundred in Cheshire.

Dear Countrymen and Friends!

WHiles in my retired condition, I was lately devising, how I might do some good to the place of my Nativity, I had a strong apprehension, from the affections many of you have expressed to my Fathers Family, that some of the Labors of my dear Brother Mr. Thomas Adams, now with God, would be very acceptable to you, for the edification of your souls; and thereupon as most generally useful for you: I resolved to be at the charge of Printing this Catechetical Explanation of His. 'Tis well known amongst you, that my Grandfather Mr. Richard Adams was Rector of your Church, and then by his purchase Patron of the perpetual Advowson, Six of his Line and Name since all devoted to the Ministry of the Gospel, viz. Mine honored Father Mr. Charles Adams, and Uncle Mr. Randal Adams (yet I hope alive in Ireland), myself, and three Brothers, Peter, Thomas, and Charles Adams were born in the Personage-house . My dear Mother (who also bore two other of my Brothers, viz. James and John there too) the Daughter of a worthy Gentleman was likewise born in your Parish. My Reverend Father and Uncle did some short part of their time exercise their Ministry amongst you; and all of us Brethren in the Ministry, have preached an occasional Sermon or more to you, though none of us could be settled with you, to spend ourselves and be spent amongst you. However, we that are alive and at a distance from you, do often bear you upon our hearts, and earnestly desire that you may be saved in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. Some of you cannot but remember, whiles my dear Father had the charge of your Souls, he did preach the Gospel to you, both in season and out of season, beseeking you to be reconciled to God, who soon took him off from that work with you, to his eternal rest. And I do assure you, my Brother (whose sound and wholesome fruit you may here taste) was very solicitous, and so are those who yet survive, that you may be acquainted with the truth as it is in Jesus. In order whereunto, I do now present and heartily recommend to you, this short Manual of Christian Doctrine. I pray you be pleased to receive it kindly, and entertain it friendly; not only out of love to the Author or Donor, but to the Truth. It is proverbially said amongst you [Cheshire Chief of Men], there having anciently been valiant ones born and bred there: Let not now any Prophet of the Lord have occasion to complain of you, that none are valiant for the truth; which none can be as they ought, unless well-trained, instructed, or Cateehised (as Abraham's brave ones were for the war) in the mysteries of the Gospel; for lack of knowledge wherein, a professing people will be destroyed Being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart. He that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will show them no favor. To prevent this mischievous ignorance, and help your understandings that you may rightly know God and do his will. Such as I have, give I you. Let none then despise this small token of my love, which I do in the name of Jesus Christ send to you. Others of their plenty have formerly given to the meaner sort of you Milk and Bread for the body, and lately Means for the instructing the Minds of your Children in the Rudiments of Learning; now I do offer a Mite out of my penury, to establish your hearts in Religion; spiritual milk, and bread, which I know you have need of. It comes not to eat your Bread, but to distribute something of the bread of life to every Family. I expect you should bid it welcome, and not distaste it, as the Gaderens for the sake of their Hogs, did the company of Christ himself, wishing him to leave their Coasts. Lest coming in kindness to you all at this day, it should be a Testimony against any of you at the great day. Believe me! I would not have it as the Flying Roll in the Prophets Vision, to consume any House whereinto it doth enter; but to warn every person and every family of you, in this crooked generation, to flee from the wrath to come, and meet God by repentance. I confess it would trouble me to come into any of your Houses (or have tidings thereof) and find this little Book, designed for your good, to be carelessly thrown up and down, and given to little ones to play with, and tear in pieces; or the leaves cut out with a knife, and burnt, as the Book that Baruch wrote from the mouth of the Prophet Jeremiah was misused; and mostly for the sake of those careless and untoward ones. Yet if one sinner be reclaimed by it from the error of his ways, built up in faith, and love, and brought really to obey the Gospel, that will answer all my cost, and be abundant matter of much joy. But if our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost. However I may in some sort say with the Apostle for his Countrymen, Brethren, my hearts desire and prayer to God for you, is, that you may be saved. I shall therefore take the freedom upon this occasion to enlarge something under these three following heads, viz.

- 1. Concerning the necessity of instructing, and being instructed in the Doctrine which is according to godliness.
- 2. The import and advantage of this Book before you, and how you may particularly use and improve it.
- 3. Some general Rules consonant to Scriptures, and the Materials of this Book grounded thereon, to help you all in your Practice.

I. The necessity of instructing, or Catechising, both as it respects those who Teach, and those who are Taught, is evident from the Injunction of the supreme Lawgiver, who doth frequently charge Superiors to teach, and Inferiors to learn . Which strongly obligeth those who have others under their authority, to do it as they are able; and (if they cannot read themselves) to put those who have learned to read upon the work, and see them do it to the utmost of their power for edification. To strengthen this charge of so great and useful importance, the Spirit of God doth highly commend the practice according to it, as that wherein he much delighteth; and therefore makes it necessary to us, who should be solicitous to please him; yea in the Families wherein we live, as well as in the Congregation; as a part of that solemn service he hath appointed in his word, with Prayers and Praises. Unless persons learn the Principles of Christian Doctrine, they will not be able to hear Sermons with profit, nor understand clearly and distinctly the nature of Faith, Repentance, Justification, &c. nor to give a reason of the hope that is in them, which they are required to do. And the rather that they may withstand fundamental errors, as well as resist evil practices; which was memorably seen in the very Children of Merindol, who made a solemn Confession of their Faith from Scripture, amazing and confounding their persecuting adversaries. That shining Star Luther, in the dawning of the Reformation, used to say his Catechism was parva Biblia, the little Bible, meaning a short sum of that heavenly Doctrine which the very Son of God did publish from the bosom of his eternal Father, and which the Holy Spirit did reveal by the Prophets and Apostles for the salvation of our souls. This might move him, reforming the Church from the dregs of Idolatry and Superstition, to carry his Catechism always along with him, to read and peruse it almost every day, as he did; affirming seriously, that he always learned something from it, which he did not (at least so practically) know before. Agreeable whereunto, in our age, said laborious, holy, and zealous Mr. Joseph Alleine concerning Catechism, If any think themselves above it, 'tis from their pride or ignorance, for my part I account myself a learner. And therefore a Sum of Christian Principles, methodically digested and explained, ought to be sought after and embraced by us, as a precious treasure, yea for the elder to have recourse to; but more especially for the younger, who almost from their very Cradles may learn something of it as the Apostle speaks , that as new-born Babes they may receive the sincere milk of the word, that they may grow thereby . Upon this account I earnestly entreat you who can justly claim a superiority in your own houses, that you would bethink yourselves what an authority you are entrusted with from God, who requires you to exercise it with an holy zeal, and maintain it with all Christian prudence, without Lordliness and rigor, endeavor to be well skilled in the Scripture ; consult the several tempers of those within your doors; allot fit and stated seasons for the getting of these Principles by heart; and watch over them daily with care, both as to their set task, and practice answerable to these Principles; keeping them seriously to mind both the business of Religion in their general Calling, and of their distinct worldly employments in their particular Callings. Suffer not yourselves and houses to go hurrying to Hell, by opposing God's most wise government of the world, which he carries on orderly for the safety and comfort of his Servants, by well-instructed Families (such as Abraham's was) who became instrumental to carry down the knowledge of God in all peaceableness to posterity; so as to leave an expectation of God's blessing upon them, whose welfare Nature itself doth move us to promote. The truth is, My Friends, if we did but remember ourselves, as we are Christians, dedicated to God by Baptism, expecting benefit by the purchase of Christ, we should consider we are not our own, but bought with a price, under the greatest obligation to live to him that hath bought us; and should take all possible care that we and ours might be His. Do then I beseech you, all you can to save yourselves and others. Oh! pity their poor souls defiled by sin, and exposed to misery. Oh! let them not perish through your carelessness, lest any of them say in Hell, as Cyprian brings in Children saying, their Parents were their Murderers; 'Tis long of you that we lie in easeless torments. Bewail the corrupted sad estate of your Children, as descending and deriving pollution from you. Let them timely know the only remedy; bring them to reverence the holy God, and read his word with greatest awe; showing them the danger of breaking his Commandments, the benefit of ordering their lives according to his mind, that they may truly glorify and enjoy him. Charge them to take heed they be not carried away with an inordinate love to the profits, pleasures, and honors of this life; but learn the great lessons of self-denial and cleaving to the Lord Jesus with full purpose of heart, bearing patiently whatever he is pleased to try them with. And be sure you neglect not seasonably and duly, to admonish and correct them, that their iniquities be not their ruin. Do you who are Inferiors willingly submit. Oh! take heed of refusing instruction, or opposing the means which is used to bring you acquainted with God and your selves; lest you be found guilty of shutting out the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, that it may not shine into your hearts.

II. Concerning the import and usefulness of this small Book I do here put into your hands and houses; praying the spiritual matter of it may reach to, and abide in your hearts. You see here be under four chief Heads or Chapters an 107 short Articles (which also are Answers to the Questions in the Margin) now generally received. These A.'s are as so many entire Sentences, or distinct Propositions and Aphorisms (the Commandments are Ten of them) without depending for their sense upon any Question; containing the fundamentals of Christian knowledge and practice; so that the Learner may by committing them to memory, lay up in his heart the Sum of Christianity; and make a profession, confession, or repetition of it when called, in a continued speech, or else answer to any part of it, particularly when the Questions in the Margin are used by another, making enquiry into his knowledge. These several Articles you find have plain proofs from Scripture at large, to show that these necessary matters of Faith and Obedience are surely founded upon the never-failing word of God; whose supreme authority should be of force to awe our consciences, and engage our hearts to the practice of those things which do appear to be our indispensable duties. Unto Divine warrant, for further illustration and confirmation, here are the Testimonies brought from the authentic Records of Reformed Religion amongst us, I mean the Articles and Homilies of the Church of England, as agreeing with, and clearing or strengthening of the several Propositions; yea and very consonant to the main body of the materials in the short Catechism which is in the Common Prayer Book, to be learned by every Child, before he be confirmed, or admitted to receive the Holy Communion. For the four chief heads there, are the Creed, or things to be believed; the Ten Commandments, showing our duty to God and our Neighbors; the Doctrine of the Sacraments; the things contained in the Lord's Prayer. And there they who present Children at Baptism, are charged to call upon them to hear Sermons, and chiefly provide that they may learn the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments in the English tongue, and all other things which a Christian man ought to know and believe to his Souls health. All which are (as in so short a room can be well expected) methodically presented to you in this Book. Wherein lastly you have our departed Friend's endeavors in a short and easy Explanation, to make the Principles plain to be understood. Now for the use and improvement of it, and the advantage you may have by it (supposing you will first read this Epistle of mine to you), I would advise you who have the charge of Families especially, and can read, or have those in your house or neighbourhood who will do it for you; unless your own prudence dictate somewhat better for any of you in your circumstances: (1) Distinctly and treatably to read over, the Articles or Answers, without taking any notice then of the Questions; and require those under your charge to attend diligently thereunto. I suppose you may go over (if not all) one half of the A. s (which are printed in a large letter) at one solemn reading; then the next time the rest, beginning where you left. But if any of you think the Task too large for once or twice, divide it into four or three Readings. If according to Chapters, you may read each day (that you set apart for this purpose) one; if into three, according to Chapters, or chief heads, for distinction of matter, you may the first one day, the second another, and the two last on the third. If according to Articles for five days, on the first day read Nineteen Articles, on the second Nineteen more, ending with the Thirty-Eighth Article, on the third twenty A. s more, ending with Article Sixty-two, on the fourth Twenty-two A. s more, ending with A. Eighty-five, on the fifth Twenty-two A. s more, to the end. (2) Your next reading of these Principles or Articles over, should be with the Texts of Scripture that prove them, and the Testimonies of the Reformed Church of England, attesting and in a sort opening, or some way clearing each Proposition. (3) The last reading (if not dispatched at once with the second) should be the Explanations of the Author, enlarging more upon each Article, and so making it more plain and clear, even to the meanest understanding, who will be attentive and considerate. To which purpose, those who govern in each Family, should be always watchful to see there be an attendance to it without noise. But you should at the beginning, after the first Reading, set in with those under your charge to get the Articles or Answers without book; (and if by Friends I understand the poorer sort will in good earnest learn them by heart, likely I may procure the A. s printed in one sheet by themselves to give to them; those who are more able will I suppose buy them). Then you may hear them repeat what they have learned; and proceed those days you Catechize them, especially every Lord's-day (you who have not better helps) to read some portion of the Explanation, so much at least as was learned the week before, engaging them by small rewards and punishments, to hearken with all seriousness, and to do that with all their might which is evidently proved to be their duty. This conscientiously and constantly performed, will I hope through God's blessing turn to a good account for you and me. 'Tis only for the sakes of some I am thus minute. Give me leave then particularly to mind those who have not yet exercised themselves to Prayer (as they should have done), how this Book may be helpful, and improved to a solemn performance of that duty, and an attainment of a gift therein; by having variety of orderly and fit matter upon all occasions, from a distinct knowledge of our sins and wants. As for instance, A. 98. you have the nature of Prayer described, which you will do well to read, pause upon, and consider how it is proved by Scripture-Testimony, and how attested by our Forefathers; then read our Authors Explanation of it, whereby you will come to understand the parts of Prayer; and in whose name it is to be offered to God, for which see also A. 21, 25. Now for you who are a Learner, to frame yourself to pray orderly and pertinently, you may look into, and meditate upon A. 4. compared with A. 100, 101. for a Preface. Then pass on to confess your original sin, by considering (and if you will you may take your Pen and write out particulars prayer-wise) A. 14, 15, 16. compared with A. 13. Then you may particularize your actual transgressions, by considering what is forbidden in every Commandment of the Law, and acknowledging those sins, which by looking into that glass you find your hearts to upbraid you with, A. 47, 51, 55, 61, 65, 69, 72, 75, 78, 81. Then you may see their aggravations, A. 83, 84. with their Explanations. Then the consequents or punishments due to transgressors, A. 17, 18, 19. Hereupon consider the Gospel requires Faith and Repentance, A. 86, 87. Then come to the next part of Prayer, viz. Petition. Here you may have directions to pray for the Spirit, working in Effectual Calling, A. 29, 30, 31. Pleading Christ's mediation, A. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. and seeking particularly, that God would give what he requires in his holy Commandments, A. 46, 50, 54, 57, 64, 68, 71, 74, 77, 80. compared with A. 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, and A. 33, 34, 35, 36. still collecting and compacting such materials out of these Articles, and the Scriptures proving of them, with what follows (where it is needful) in the Explanation more briefly or largely, as every ones present condition and circumstances require. Now for the remaining part of Prayer, which is Thanksgiving, you will better know what you are to give thanks for, by seeing what sins or evils God hath kept you from; and what good things he hath bestowed upon you. And this you will materially discern, by considering well what you have confessed and petition'd; then it will be further helpful to meditate upon A. 9, 10, 12, 20, 21, 22, 31, 32, 85, 88, 89. For Conclusion read A. 107. with the Scriptures and Explanation. Turn to these Articles, as you see them noted here thus minutely for the sake of you (who need such direction) and yours, some of whom possibly you may engage to write what you show them in this order, or when you read to them, for the teaching of them to be more methodical, in learning to pray, and that longer or shorter, as occasion requires, for their own and others edification. But still remember, It is the Spirit likewise that helpeth our infirmities, Rom. 8.26. So that our prayers through Christ may be truly acceptable to God, and a means of our sanctification. I do not urge you in every prayer to insist on every head here, or restrain you to these, only show you a way how to use these; neither would I tie you to this way, but advise you to exercise your spiritual senses to discern, and have regard to your own occasions, and the enlargement of your own hearts, that out of the abundance of them, in faith and humility you may express your minds to God in Scripture-language, from a feeling of our own wants. Thus I have took the freedom to suggest something of help in this kind, to those who may either desire or need it. But I impose nothing upon any one, which God hath left free. I hope none that know me well, will judge me to be so narrow-spirited. I have only offered a guide to the weaker, for to bring to their mind needful matter, under the three main parts of Prayer, viz. Confession, Petition, Thanksgiving. It may be some will begin with Petition or Thanksgiving, and then Confession, or vary and use them interchangeably, as in prudence they think best for that season, or are moved by the holy Spirit to omit, or but touch on one, or the other part, and slay most on the third, which may do well. The great care to be took, is that the party praying perform this necessary duty with hearty and sincere devotion. But I humbly conceive, it were of great advantage, for one or more serious persons in a Neighbourhood, who have better understanding (after the reading this I now write to you) to show unto those of meaner abilities, the import of this advise for the use and improvement of this small token for their knowledge and practice. Perhaps the School-Master may think it expedient to do it for some of his Scholars in the highest Form. However I could persuade myself some unexperienc'd in praying (especially towardly young ones) will rejoice to be directed. I have latele known some who have been much changed and wrought upon by the serious reading of such a Book as this, given and heartily recommended to them. It would do well in your Family-reading of it, if some of the House would turn to the Bible, and find out the Texts, that you may with your own eyes see them there as cited. I doubt not but you will find them, unless possibly by the error of the Printer (which yet I know not) there may be somewhere a failure; but then you having the words, a little searching of the Scripture will soon amend that (if it should be so). But I fear in being thus particular for your profit (which I aim at) I shall run myself beyond my projected bounds. It remains I should subjoin something of, IIIIdly, Some short general Rules, consonant to Scripture, and grounded mostly upon these cited in this little Book which may be of concernment to all; to help both superiors, inferiors, and equals, in the practice of godliness. Wherefore that you may by this Mannual grow better, which I humbly beg of our good God.

(1) Keep your end in your eye, and think much on the means prescribed to attain it, and how you may best use them. You must make Religion your business; and that requires you to aim at the glorifying of God, and the enjoying of him, the saving of your own souls, according to the Rule God hath given you in his word. In all your employments, whether in your general or particular Calling; and all your enjoyments, whether spiritual or temporal, magnify the Name of God, extol his excellency and perfection in thought, word, and deed. Endeavour to carry yourselves so agreeable to his mind, that you may please him, and be accepted of him. 'Tis a small matter then how you are censured in man's judgment.

(2) Bethink yourselves, who God is, and that you yourselves are dependants upon him. Oh! labor to have right notions of him who is wholly a spiritual, invisible, independent being of himself infinite in all perfection, as none else is or can be, a most gracious and merciful rewarder of all those that diligently seek him. Who is but one, yet distinguished into three persons, or subsistents, all equal in power and glory; and doing all things most wisely and powerfully. Remember by him you were made and are governed; in him you live, move, and have your beings; and can do nothing without him, who is every-where, and will every-where be worshipped in spirit and truth.

(3) Consider well what an happy state man was in, when he came first out of God's hands; and into what a sad plight of sin and misery you and all other mere men and women are fallen. Be sure no blessing can be expected, but a curse, so long as you abide in a state of corrupt nature, unregenerate; tribulation and anguish do attend every mothers child of you, both here and hereafter. Yet,

(4) Hearken attentively to what is done and offered by our gracious Redeemer for your restoration. What offices he hath of Priest, Prophet, and King, both in his estate of Humiliation and Exaltation. Oh be affected with the glad tidings he brings, who came to save his people from their sins; and is the great Peace-maker, and only Mediator betwixt God and man, ready to save to the uttermost all poor sinners that come unto God by him, in that new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say his flesh.

(5) Ponder thoroughly upon, and readily receive what help the Holy Spirit is pleased to afford in working of effectual grace, and see the necessity of it. He is a most free agent, and stands ready to enlighten the mind, and convince of sin, righteousness, and judgment, to incline the will, soften the heart, and put a principle of grace within it, or else it would remain strong under all the rebukes and exhortations of the word.

(6) Look yourselves often in the glass of God's holy Law, and therein take notice of your own deformities. See how much you fall short of what God calls for, and how much you do of that which he forbids. This will be a means to come to a distinct sight of your own vileness and sinfulness; as also if you are renewed, how you ought to walk; but that you can never merit God's favor by the best works of the Law. Yet you ought mightily to oppose the first motions and risings of any corruption in your hearts, and carefully to avoid all such occasions as are likely to give advantages to those corruptions, and betray you into their hands.

(7) Hereupon, Enter into your Closets, be convinced of, sigh and mourn over your own impotency, inability, and unwillingness to come to Christ, till you are effectually drawn. Alas! you find by comparing yourselves with the Law, that you are neither able nor willing of yourselves to keep the Commandments, but do daily break them in thought, word, and deed; yea and with aggravating circumstances in the sight of God, deserving his wrath and curse both in this and the future world: Which may make you sit down and bemoan your low estate, and cry out, What shall we do to be saved? Then,

(8) Look up to Christ by an eye of faith, trust to him alone, and repent of your sinfulness, which keeps you from God. Consider him who hath satisfied Divine Justice, as he is offered in the promises; and give credit unto them, which are in him Yea and Amen. Put your affiance in him alone, who is the Savior, for acceptance of your persons, remission of your sins, and obtaining of eternal life. God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself; your great concern then is, to receive him who saves his people from their sins; resign up yourselves unto him as Mediator, and through him unto God. Be sorrowful after a godly sort, for all that which offends him, which is not only an outward forbearance of sin, but a particular inward loathing and hatred of all sin as sin, striving against it, and endeavoring to mortify it.

(9) Be careful to observe the institutions of Christ, and all his Ordinances as he hath prescribed. Hear, Read, Receive the Sacraments as he hath appointed, waiting for the Spirit, who makes all means effectual. Oh! delight to meet God in public Ordinances, and give up yourselves to be ruled and directed by him therein. And therefore take a very especial care for the due observance of the Lord's-day, which is appointed for the more solemn worshipping of God, and the benefit of man to refresh him with heavenly things. This you should spend in the Lord's-work, and not in worldly pleasures or profits. I can assure you, the Author of this Explanation did make great conscience hereof, and expressed much distaste of those who did sleight or profane it. The last Sermons he preached were to urge a due observance of the Lord's-day. And on the Lord's-day-morning a little before he departed hence, He told us, He was going to keep a Sabbath in heaven, and here strangers did not intermeddle with his joy.

(10) And lastly, Be much in prayer to God, through Christ, in the Spirit; which indeed should go before, accompany, and follow after daily mercies, other duties and enjoyments. You should constantly perform this Duty with all intention of mind, and heartiness both in public, and your Families at all praying-seasons, and more especially in secret; which if you rightly do, from a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith unfeigned, according to the Rule to measure our requests by, to the honor of God, in the Name of his beloved Son; will keep up the life of Religion, and be prevalent for a blessing upon all you take in hand and enjoy.

Thus, My Friends! I have as briefly as I could, laid before you these Ten Directions, to help you in your Christian practice, agreeable to the materials more largely spoken to in the Book itself. I earnestly entreat you, to work them upon your hearts, and set in heartily to practice by the prudent use of these Helps. I have unto them affixed Texts of Scripture, which do abundantly prove them. It may be some of you will not only turn to them in your Bibles, and read therein the proofs confirming each direction, (grounded for the main upon the Articles, as these are upon Scripture), but will take the pains to write out the Scriptures at large in a Paper-book, as they fall under the general heads, which would be a notable means to imprint them in your minds, and deeply affect your hearts with the things, and engage you to do as God in his word requires That you may all consent to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the Doctrine which is according to godliness. Fear God and keep his Commandments. Be happy in knowing and doing of these things is that I aim at. And believe it, Friends! If I myself do not in some measure endeavor, through Christ enstrengthening me, to live agreeable to these Directions I have now given to you, I must expect the wrath of God should abide upon me. And if you remain heedless and careless after you have received or rejected this Token of my love to your Souls, it will be a Witness against you. But Beloved! I am persuaded better things of you. That the God of Heaven may make you all wise unto salvation, and bless these and all other endeavors for your spiritual, temporal, and eternal welfare, is the unfeigned Prayer of

Your Friend and Remembrancer from, and unto God, Ri. Adams.

To the Reader.

Christian Reader!

TO promote that knowledge without which the mind is not good, and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord, I acknowledge myself to lie under the greatest obligations. In order whereunto, considering the necessity and usefulness of instructing souls distinctly, in the Principles of Christian Doctrine, i. e. those fundamental Truths on which life or death doth depend, and wherein the very essentials and vitals of Christianity do consist; and having by me this short and easy Explanation of those Catechetical Articles of Religion most generally received amongst us, I thought good to publish it. More especially for the sakes of some in a remote Corner (whose souls welfare I greatly desire) where they want those helps some others enjoy; many are poor, others unacquainted with, or loath to buy good books; and where this particularly for the sake of the Author (who drew his first breath there) may likely be received with greater kindness, and read with better care. I am not ignorant that others have done well before, both formerly and lately, in one and another way, for the explication of these common, but greatest matters, collected out of Holy Scripture, and laid together in a small room by men of skill in the truest method, that the weak may soon understand and remember them, which I heartily rejoice in: Yet had I been more timely considerate enough, this might have appeared abroad ere some of those larger and much commended, were published. However now it cannot be unseasonable in this debauching age, to contribute a further aid, for the sound principling of hopeful youth. Here likely will be some advantage either for matter or manner suggested, which others have not took notice of, for the opening or evidencing of Truth, and recommending particulars as at one sight to our prospect. Besides, some may receive satisfaction, and take pleasure to see here the Harmony and fair agreement of these Principles with those our Forefathers zealously professed to hold at the beginning of our Reformation from Popery in King Edward the Sixth and Queen Elizabeth's days. 'Tis plain, from a view of what is here annexed, and presented to us, as attesting these several Aphorisms or Propositions; that the Articles and Homilies of the English Church under the particulars speak the same things. These then are such Institutions of a Christian man, as are consonant to Holy Writ, the sober and wholesome Doctrines of those Protestants who lived in these Kingdoms before us, and I hope will find entertainment with our posterity when we go to rest with our Fathers. For I suppose it is easy to discern through all disingenuous aspersions; that whoever drew them up in our age, and by what warrant, they are so far from being Novelties to Reformed English men, that they materially had in the former age the Authority of a Convocation and an Act of Parliament. Be sure the most learned and godly Primate Usher soon after their first publication did highly value them thus digested by several learned Divines in the order they be here explained. And another very reverend and holy person yet alive, in the Confession of his Faith, printed twenty years ago, cap. 2. S. 3. did declare, He heartily approved of this Form of sound words, and of all therein contained; affirming, that He took it for the best Catechism that ever he saw, and the A. s contained for a most excellent sum of the Christian Faith and Doctrine, and a fit Test to try the Orthodoxness even of Teachers themselves. Such Testimonies might perhaps occasion this labor in the Explanation of them. Which I do here present to you, as the Author lest it pen'd for his own private use in his Catechetical teaching of those committed to him. I liked not to make any addition or alteration; though had he lived, and ever thought of publishing it, (as it is not unlikely he might have done, for the same charitable use it is now designed) no question but it would have been all better proportioned, enlarged, and altered, yea and (if needful) put into a more comely dress. This I conceive was the only draught of it; which I the rather intimate, that if any defects or mistakes be found in this Explanatory Comment, there may be no unkind reflection made upon him who went to Heaven some time since. And whiles upon Earth showed himself, both in the University and elsewhere, to be one of good learning, and true holiness, a fervent preacher and real practiser of the Duties herein explained, and particularly of so sweet and peaceful temper that his moderation was known unto all those who did familiarly converse with him. There be other Notes of his (with these, left to my disposal) and some of those practical Sermons upon some Texts of Scripture, on which I find not any in the late printed Catalogues, or but few to have treated; which as they are desired earnestly by some, so if they are by more thought useful, may in time come abroad. This, such as it is, will I hope be no disparagement to him that is gone, but give us to understand, he had clear Notions of the main points of Religion, which he made his own business, and which if they (peculiarly young ones) into whose hands it shall come, be inclined cordially to embrace, by the heedful reading and perusing hereof, it will help to perpetuate the memory of the just deceased; and be matter of rejoicing to his surviving Brother, who is really desirous to serve you in love,

Principles of Christian Religion, in an 107 Articles, with a short and easy Explanation.

CHAP. I. Of things to be believed, comprehended in the Apostles Creed: Or a brief Sum of Christian Doctrine, which ought to be received or believed.

Articles of Religion, 1562. Artic. 8.

For they may be proved by most certain warrant of Holy Scripture.

A. 1. MAn's chief End, is to glorify God , and to enjoy him forever .

Homil. 3. Of Salvation.—Above all things, and in all things to advance the glory of God, of whom only we have our sanctification, justification, salvation, and redemption.

Expl. 1. In which A. there are these four things to be explained: (1.) What we are to understand by a man's end. And the Answer is, That by a man's end we mean that which a man doth intend or aim at in all his actions; or that which he does propose to himself as the reason of what he does; ex. gr. when you see a man building a House, if you ask him the reason why he builds a House, or what he intends in so doing; his answer will be, to dwell in it: And here, his dwelling in his House, when he hath built it, is his end in building his House. So again, when you see a man going to Church, if you ask him what he goes to Church for; he will presently tell you, to hear a Sermon: Now this being that which he does design in going to Church, sc. to hear a Sermon, it may very well be called his end in going to Church. But then 2dly, It is next to be explained, what is meant by a man's chief end: Now a man's chief end, is that which he doth principally aim at in all his actions. As to keep to the last instance, though it be a man's end (in going to Church) to hear a Sermon; yet that is but a lower end, and that which he does only design in order to his chief end, which is to glorify God, and to enjoy Communion with God, by hearing his word: This Question therefore (What is the chief end of man?) is (q. d.) what is man's chief errand into the world? or what did God make man for? or what is the great business that should take up the greatest part of a man's time, thoughts, cares, affections, and endeavors, whilst he lives in the world? or what is it that a man is principally to drive at in all his words, thoughts, and actions, in all his duties both to God and man, and in all his dealings with the world? Now this is that which should be his general drift in all, sc. To glorify God, and to enjoy God both in this world and a better. And this is the plain meaning of those Scriptures which are here made use of as proofs. But (alas) is it not sadly to be lamented, that the corrupt generality of people, have quite forgotten what errand they were sent about into the world; whilst some make worldly honors and preferments their chief end, as the ambitious; others make worldly gain and profit their chief end, and that which they mainly drive at, as the covetous; and others do make their carnal pleasures, delights, sports, and pastimes their chief end, as if God had put them into the world, as the Psalmist reports of the Leviathans being put into water, to play therein: and this is the case of the younger sort generally of vain and wicked people, who either do not know, or will not consider, that the end of their Creation was to honor and enjoy their Creator, both here and hereafter. 3dly, What it is to glorify God, may be thus explained; namely, it is to live according to his will revealed in his word; or, it is to think, speak, and do according to the Rule of his word. (1.) We glorify God in our thoughts, or in our hearts, when we dare not allow ourselves to think anything that is not stamped with God's authority and allowance; and more particularly, when our thoughts of God, of his works, words, and all that relates to him, are such as do become his excellent Greatness. So when we fear, love, admire, trust, and desire him above all. (2.) We glorify him in our words, when our speech is not corrupt, vain, and idle, but seasoned with grace. (3.) In our actions, when we make his word our rule, and his glory our great and general end in all our actions. 4thly, What it is to enjoy God; we may best conceive of it, by what it is to enjoy a friend: Now this is, we know, to have his presence, company, and converse, and to take delight in his society. So to enjoy God, it is to converse with God, to be well-pleased with his gracious presence, and not only to have him to be our Friend, or Father, but to entertain this King of glory in our hearts and affections. Or as wicked men do look upon the greatest part of their enjoyment to consist in (that which they miscall) good-fellowship; so the Christians enjoying of God, is to have fellowship with him: Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. And to maintain and keep up this fellowship with God forever, it is to enjoy him forever; which in reference to a Christians enjoyment of God in glory, is called a being forever with the Lord, 1 Thes. 4.17.

A 2. The Word of God (which is contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament ), is the only Rule to direct us how we may glorify , and enjoy him .

Artic. vi. In the name of the Holy Scripture we do understand those Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament, of whose Authority was never any doubt in the Church. Homil. 1. Unto a Christian man there can be nothing either more necessary or profitable, than the knowledge of holy Scripture; for as much as in it is contained God's true Word, setting forth his glory, and also man's duty. — As many as be desirous to enter into the right and perfect way unto God, must apply their minds to know holy Scripture, without the which they can neither sufficiently know God and his Will, neither their office and duty. — Let us willingly search for the well of life in the Books of the Old and New Testament, and not run to the stinking Puddles of men's Traditions, (devised by men's imagination) for our justification and salvation.

Expl. 2. When the written Word of God is here called a Rule, we may understand it thus; That as an Artificer, suppose a Mason or Bricklayer, in raising a Wall, or a Carpenter in squaring a piece of Timber, makes use of his Rule, and by applying this to his work, comes to know whether it be straight or crooked: So the Christian, who would order his spiritual Building or Conversation aright, so as to glorify and enjoy God, he must lay every stone in this spiritual Building by this Rule; he must square all his thoughts, words, and actions by this Line and Level, and thereby he may come to know what is right and what is wrong, what is sin and what is duty, what is true and what is false; and so accordingly may cease to do evil, and learn to do well; believe that which is true, and reject that which is false; nor is the Old Testament alone this Rule, nor the New Testament alone, but both together; and both together they are the only Rule of Christianity; neither is there any other ordinary, sufficient Rule to direct a Christian, either how he may serve God acceptably, or enjoy God eternally, but this written Word. (1.) The Pagans Rule, or Light of Nature, or what may be known of God by the things which are made, is not sufficient to this end, because it cannot discover Christ to us, which is the only means of salvation. (2.) The Papists Rule of Tradition is no good Rule, because fallible and contradictory in many things to the Rule of Scripture. And (3.) for the very same reason, the Quakers Rule is no good Rule, I mean their Light within, because opposite to the light of the Word without; and therefore it remaineth that the written Word is the only Rule.

A. 3. The Scriptures principally teach, what man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requireth of man .

Artic. vi. Holy Scripture contains all things necessary to salvation; so that whatever is not read therein, or proved thereby, is not to be required of any man that it should be believed as an Article of Faith, or be thought necessary or requisite to salvation.

Homil. 1. In holy Scripture is fully contained what we ought to do, and what to eschew; what to believe, what to love, and what to look for at God's hand at length.

Expl. 3. There are two things principally which man is to believe concerning God, and they are the two main foundations of the Christian Religion, in the practice of it: (1.) That God is, or that there is such a being who is in and of himself absolutely perfect, and who gives Being to all his Creatures. (2.) That he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him, namely, in and through Christ, Heb. 11.6. or that it is not in vain to love, serve, and obey this God. And there is but one thing, in the general, which God requires of man, namely, a free and full compliance with his will, whether in the doing or suffering part of Religion.

A. 4. God is a Spirit , Infinite , Eternal , and unchangeable , in his Being , Wisdom , Power, Holiness , Justice, Goodness, and Truth .

Homil. xvij. It passeth far the dark understanding and wisdom of a mortal man to speak sufficiently of that Divine Majesty which the Angels cannot understand. Considering the unsearchable nature of Almighty God,— to reverence and dread his Majesty,—excellent Power, —incomparable, Wisdom, —inestimable Goodness,—to take him for God Omnipotent, Invisible.

Expl. 4. A Spirit] (i. e.) A Being which has not flesh and bones as we have, Luk. 24.39. has not hands, or feet, or any bodily parts, no nor any bodily properties neither, as length, breadth, height, depth, thickness, shape, or color; such a Being as is not, cannot be (as God) the object of any of the Five Senses; for no man has seen God at any time, &c. but is invisible, and absolutely perfect, because he does not depend upon anything else, either for what he is, or for what he does. Infinite] i. e. without any limits or bounds to his perfection, an unconfined Essence, absolutely free from all measure or determination of time, place, or degrees. Eternal] i. e. without beginning or end of days, or succession of duration; always the same, before and after time, ever present, infinitely above all circumscription of motion, according to former and latter. Unchangeable] (i. e.) he can never cease to be what he is, (the true God) nor can he alter at all, so as to be more or less God than he is, nor more or less perfect; for saith he, I am God, I change not. In his Being] for when the Son of God, who is very God, became man, he did not cease to be God. In his Power] for this being infinite, it is not capable of an alteration, either by adding to it, or taking from it. And the same may be said concerning his Wisdom, for the very same reason; for how can he be more or less wise than he is, who is infinite in Wisdom and Knowledge? In his Holiness] i. e. he cannot be more or less holy than he is; or be more or less inclined or obliged to act suitably to the perfection of his own nature, than he is already. In Justice, Goodness, and Truth) i. e. he cannot be more just, good, and true than he is, nor less just, good, and true than he is, because he is Justice, Goodness, and Truth itself; and is all these, and has all these in infinite and absolute perfection, and therefore he is unchangeable in these.

A. 5. There is but one only , the living and true God .

Artic. I. There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without Body, Parts, or Passions; of infinite Power, Wisdom, and Goodness, the Maker and Preserver of all things, both visible and invisible.

Expl. 5. (i. e.) There is but one only absolutely supreme and perfect Being, who is the Maker and Governor of all things; for as for Magistrates, though they be called gods, I have said ye are gods, Psal. 82.6. yet they are so only by way of representation, only because they do represent God in his Authority and Government: And for Idols, though they be called gods, as there be of this sort gods many, yet these gods of the Heathen they are false gods, and upon that account are everywhere disparaged in Scripture. And though the Devil himself be called the god of this world; yet 'tis only because he is God's Ape, ruling and working in the children of disobedience, Eph. 2.2. (but by God's permission) as God does in his own children. So that it still holds good, that to us there is but one God, of whom, and by whom are all things, 1 Cor. 8.6.

A. 6. There are three persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost , and these three are one God, the same in substance, equal in power and glory .

Artic. I. And in unity of this Godhead there be three persons, of one substance, power, and eternity, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Expl. 6. In this A. there are three things to be explained; as, (1.) The meaning or nature of a Divine person. (2.) How they are said to be three persons. (3.) How distinguished from each other. For the understanding of the first, we are to know, that by a person in the general we mean a substantial complete Being (whether visible or invisible), having understanding, will, and subsistence by itself, and distinguished from anything else by some peculiar property that belongs to it, and to nothing else besides itself; as there is something peculiar in everyone man to distinguish him from another; this for a person in general: But now for a Divine person, (or a person in the Godhead), 'Tis a substance that is undivided, and absolutely perfect in Being, Understanding, Will, and manner of Subsistence; yet actually, really, and eternally distinguished from any other person, by some relative property that belongs to it, and not to that person. (2.) For the number of the persons in the Godhead, they are three; not only in the reckoning of man, or according to human apprehension, but also in reality, and in God's account; whether men should reckon them so or no, and are therefore called a Trinity of Persons. Yet (3.) though they be so distinguished one from another, as that the Father is not the Son, and the Son not the Father, and the Holy Ghost neither Father nor Son; yet they are not, cannot be divided or separated one from another, because the whole and single Godhead is wholly, coequally, and coessentially in all three, by virtue whereof 'tis said, these three are one, (i. e.) one God.

A. 7. The Decrees of God, are his eternal purpose, according to the counsel of his own will, whereby for his own glory, he hath fore-ordained whatsoever comes to pass .

Artic. xvij.—Everlasting purpose of God, whereby (before the foundations of the world were laid) he hath constantly decreed by his counsel, secret to us, &c.

Expl. 7. In this A. we have (1.) the nature and properties of God's Decrees, they are like Himself from everlasting; whatever God did purpose and determine to do, or permit to be done, he did thus purpose from eternity. (2.) Here is the Rule of God's Decree, the counsel of his own Will; and yet nothing that he decrees can be any other than reasonable and good, because by reason of the infinite perfection of his Nature, his Will is essentially just and holy, and cannot be otherwise. (3.) The matter of his Decrees, is, whatsoever comes to pass, though there be never so much of that which we call hap-hazard in them. (4.) The end of his Decrees, for his glory; for God neither does nor designs anything but for the highest end, and that is his own glory.

A. 8. God executeth his Decrees, in the Work of Creation , and Providence .

Homil. xvij.—Praise of Almighty God,—in the consideration of the marvelous Creation of this world, or—Conservation and Government thereof, wherein his great Power and Wisdom might excellently appear, to move us to dread and honor him.

Expl. 8. Here is showed, how God doth bring to pass, what he hath purposed. (1.) In the work of Creation; by which we are to understand, not only God's making the world and all things therein in six days, but also God's producing or bringing into Being everything else that came into Being since that time to the worlds end, whether it became a Being in an ordinary way, and by means, as in the natural generation of things; or in an extraordinary way, by the immediate or miraculous power of God. (2.) In the work of Providence, which is not only to be restrained to what is naturally good, as every creature of God is, but also reaches to what is naturally evil, as affliction, and to what is morally evil, as sin.

A. 9. The work of Creation, is God's making all things , of nothing, by the word of his power , in the space of six days, and all very good .

To. 2. Hom. viij. God through his Almighty power, wisdom, and goodness, created in the beginning Heaven and Earth, the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, the Fowls of the Air, the Beasts of the Earth, the Fishes in the Sea, and all other Creatures for the benefit and use of man. Hom. xii. Among all the Creatures that God made in the beginning of the World, most excellent and wonderful in their kind, there was none (as the Scripture beareth witness) to be compared in any point almost unto Man, who in Body and Soul exceeded.

Expl. 9. By the work of Creation, we are to understand God's making of the world in time (or in the beginning) according as he had purposed from eternity, or before all beginning of time: and here it is observable, (1.) That this work is ascribed only to God, the true God, in opposition to Idols; yet is not so to be ascribed to any one person in the Godhead as to exclude the other; for all the three persons, sc. Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, being one in Essence or Godhead, they must necessarily be one in working, or as it were join hand in hand in all external works, whether of Creation or Providence. And therefore when the Creation is ascribed (in the Apostles Creed) to the Father Almighty, it doth not exclude the Son or Holy Ghost from being Almighty, or from joining with the Father in the work of Creation; but only because the Father is the first in order of the three persons when we conceive of them, and because there might be in the Church an outward distinction made (but no real separation) among the three persons, in those works which are more eminently and peculiarly affirmed of each person, as that the Father creates, the Son redeems, and the Spirit sanctifies. (2.) That he did not, as an Artificer, begin his work upon or out of materials, which is beyond the skill of art and power of nature. (3.) Without any instrument or help; for (1.) There was nothing then in Being when he began his work, therefore no instrument. (2.) He needed none, being infinite in power. (3.) To have used any, would not have been so consistent with the glory of his Wisdom and Power. (4. Obs.) That he did his work in six days, that we might see it was a work of Wisdom and Counsel, and not of Chance; and to set us an example, to work six days, and rest the seventh. (5*lie,*) That he made all very good, in their nature, in their order and in their end.

A. 10. God created man, male and female, after his own image , in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness , with dominion over the creatures .

Homil. xii. He was made after the similitude and image of God, endued with all kind of heavenly gifts; he had no spot of uncleanness in him, was sound and perfect in all parts, both inwardly and outwardly, his reason was uncorrupt, his understanding was pure and good, his will was obedient and godly; he was made altogether like unto God, in righteousness and holiness, in wisdom and truth; to be short, in all kind of perfection. —God made him Lord and Ruler over all the works of his hands.—Homil. viij. Whom also he had created to his own image and likeness, and given him the use and government over them all, to the end he should use them in such sort as he had given them in charge and commandment, and also that he should declare himself thankful, &c.

Expl. 10. God created man male and female (i. e.), in both Sexes; man out of the dust of the earth, and the woman of the Rib that he took out of the man's Side; which creation is to be understood concerning the bodies of both, not of the soul of either of them, for the soul was not made of any materials at all, but the reasonable soul was immediately infused into their bodies when God breathed into them the breath of life; so that the soul is, q.d. the breath of God. There is a twofold image of God, (1.) That which is in God, and so Christ the Second person in the Trinity is said to be the express image of the person of God the Father, because in him the fullness of the Godhead dwells bodily. (2.) There is the image of God which is out of God, or external to him; and such an image of God was man in his first Creation. (1st,) In respect of his soul, and that more generally, in the nature of it, God is a Spirit, and so is man's soul; God's immortal, so that: But more particularly, (1.) In knowledge of what was necessary to be known by him in order to God's glory or his own happiness. (2.) In righteousness or uprightness, (i. e.) his will did freely and fully comply with the will of God, the Law of God being written in his heart. (3.) In holiness, or with a power to do God's will perfectly. (2dly,) In respect of his body, wherein he did resemble the majesty (not the spirituality of God) for there was so much of majesty especially in man's countenance, that the inferior creatures did stand in awe of him. (3.) In respect of the whole man, because in his dominion over the creatures, he did resemble his Creator in his dominion over the world.

A. 11. God's works of Providence, are his most holy , wise , and powerful preserving , and governing all his creatures, and all their actions .

Homil. xvij.—Conservation and governance of the world,—of liberal goodness, which he daily bestoweth on us his reasonable creatures, for whose sake he made the whole universal world, with all the commodities and goods therein.—Take him for God omnipotent, invisible, having rule in Heaven and Earth, having all things in subjection, and will have none in counsel with him, nor any to ask the reason of his doing; for he may do what liketh him, and none can resist him, Dan. 11. For he worketh all things in his secret judgment to his own pleasure, yea even the wicked to damnation, saith Solomon, Prov. 16.—God hath not so created the world that he is careless of it, but he still preserveth it by his goodness; he still stayeth it in his creation.—To make our humble suits in prayers to his fatherly Providence.

Expl. 11. By God's actual Providence we are to understand his ordering of all things in time, according to his eternal purpose, or the counsel of his own will; or in plain English, 'tis his doing what he will in the world, whether it be in Heaven or Earth. For further explanation of this matter, we are to know, (1st,) That (according to our apprehension) there are these distinctions and kinds of Providence, (1.) We have his eternal Providence, or his decreeing, purposing, designing Providence, which is nothing else but that frame, method, or order of government which was in the mind of God from everlasting, before there was a world, or any creature in it to be governed, (and of this was spoken before). (2.) His actual Providence, which he hath exercised ever since he made the world; as, (1.) In the conservation of things in their beings, so that of all the species or kinds of creatures which he made he has lost none. Individuals indeed do die and perish, and return to their dust, but the species or kinds of creatures do not; men die, (this and that and the other individual person) in reference to their bodies; but man does not, or rather mankind does not. (2.) In the actual government of all things by his wisdom, which he doth preserve by his infinite power; for God does not do by the World as the Ship-Carpenter by the Ship, build and leave it, and never look after it more; but he doth look after the preservation of it as the Owner, and the government of it as the Pilot. Other distinctions there are of Providence; as, (2.) That it is either mediate and ordinary, as where God makes use of means and second causes, and therein does observe the order which he has set in nature, as Hos. 2.22. and this order in nature is called the Law of nature: Or else immediate and extraordinary, when in the works of Providence, as well as of Creation, he works without means, as in the preserving of Daniel in the Lions Den. (2dly,) For the matter and extent of Providence, it reaches to all creatures, even to the Sparrows, and to the hair of the head. (3dly,) For the manner; and this (1.) Holy, or most perfect, or in a way suitable to the perfection of his nature. (2.) Wise, for he does not only do all in the best way, but for the highest end. (3.) Powerful, for he brings to pass what he will have done with an almighty easiness, and without any difficulty to himself.

A. 12. When God had created man, he entered into a Covenant of life with him, upon condition of perfect obedience, forbidding him to eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, upon pain of death.

To. 2. Homil. xxi. God, as soon as he had created man, gave unto him a certain Precept and Law, which he (being yet in the state of innocence, and remaining in Paradise) should observe as a pledge and token of his due and bounden obedience, with denunciation of death, if he did transgress and break the said Law and Commandment.—In the which obedience if man had continued still, there had been no poverty, no diseases, no sickness, no death, &c.

Expl. 12. The wise and gracious Creator having made man a reasonable creature, and having also stamped his own image upon him, and thereby rendered him fit for and capable of happiness in the enjoyment of himself; and there being no other way to this enjoyment, but by union and communion with himself, he was most graciously pleased in order thereunto, to make a Covenant with man, (giving a Law to him as soon as he had made him,) and in him with all his posterity; wherein he promised life to him, and in him to all mankind, upon condition of perfect and personal obedience. And that God might try him, how he would carry it, being now brought within the bounds of this Covenant, he was pleased to lay this particular positive Precept upon him, That he should not eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, &c. upon pain of death; which Precept he having broken, became liable unto death, or to the curse of the Law. This Covenant which God entered into with the first Adam was in Paradise, a Covenant or Law of Works, Do this and live: But that Covenant which God hath established in Christ the second Adam with all Believers (since the Fall) whether in the Old or New Testament, 'tis a Covenant of Grace; and the grand Condition of this Covenant on man's part, or the qualification whereby he is fitted and capacitated to receive the benefit of this Covenant, 'tis the righteousness of Faith; for it runs thus, Believe and live; not that the Covenant of Grace (whether in the Old or New Testament) does not require new obedience, but that it does not require this in order to justification; for this new obedience, or this obedience of Faith, it is rather the fruit or effect, than the instrumental cause, means, or condition of justification. But more distinctly, amongst those many differences which are wont to be assigned by Divines betwixt the Covenant of Works and the Covenant of Grace, we may take notice of these: (1.) The Covenant of Works was made with man before the Fall, before he had sinned against God; the Covenant of Grace, afterward. (2.) The Covenant of Works did not promise pardon upon repentance; the Covenant of Grace does, because Christ the Mediator of this Covenant has purchased pardon for all penitent sinners, who have but a hand of Faith to receive it. (3.) The Covenant of Works was without a Mediator, for till man had sinned he needed none to mediate peace betwixt God and him; but the Covenant of Grace is established in the hands of a Mediator, sc. Christ Jesus, perfect God and perfect man, that he might make a reconciliation betwixt God and Man. (4.) In the Covenant of Nature (or Works) Adam was only the Son of God by Creation; but in the Covenant of Grace, those who were children of wrath, do through Faith become the Children of God by Grace and Adoption. (5.) The Covenant of Works had for its Seals of confirmation, or for the Sacraments of it, the Tree of life, so called because it did sacramentally confirm the promise of life upon condition of perfect obedience; and the Tree of knowledge of good and evil, which was so called from the event, because man having sinned in eating the forbidden fruit, he presently came to know by a sad experiment, what an infinite good he had lost in losing God's favor, and what misery and mischief he had brought upon himself. But now the Seals or Sacraments of the Covenant of Grace were under the Old Testament Circumcision and the Paschal Lamb, and now under the New Testament, Baptism and the Lord's Supper. (6.) In the Covenant of Works there was no place at all for God's further exercising of his patience, grace and mercy; but in the Covenant of Grace his mercy most is signally displayed; yea and that which is a mystery as well as a miracle of Divine Wisdom, here we may see mercy and justice kiss each other, in the satisfaction that Christ has made. And as the Covenant of Grace and the Covenant of Works do differ in the foregoing particulars; so doth the Covenant of Grace under the Old Testament differ from the Covenant of Grace under the New Testament (though these are not two but one Covenant in substance) in clearness; for till the Law, or from Adam to Moses, the Promise of Grace was more obscure; under Moses more clear; from Moses to the Prophets, yet more clear; from them to John the Baptist, yet more clear; and from him to Christ, yet more clear; and under the preaching of Christ, whilst he was fulfilling the Promises, yet abundantly more clear than under John; but most clear of all when Christ had finished the work of Redemption by price, and was ascended into Heaven, and had sent down his Spirit upon his Apostles, in that plentiful effusion of the Spirit at the time of Pentecost, Act. 2.

A. 13. Our first Parents being left to the freedom of their own will, fell from the state wherein they were created, by sinning against God

To. 2. Hom. xiiij. Par. 2. When our great Grandfather Adam had broken God's Commandment, in eating the Apple forbidden him in Paradise, at the motion and suggestion of his wife, he purchased thereby not only to himself, but also to his posterity forever, the just wrath and indignation of God, who according to his former Sentence pronounced at the giving of the Commandment, condemned both him and all his to everlasting death, both of body and soul.

Expl. 13. Here, for explanation sake, we may observe: (1.) That our first Parents were created with freedom of will; (i. e.) if they would have continued in their obedience they might, for they had a power to obey God perfectly; and if they would sin they might, God left them (and that very justly) to themselves, he being not bound to hinder them (though he could) from sinning against him. (2.) That by their sinning against God they lost this freedom, and with it all that happiness which did belong to a state of innocence and integrity; for by their fall they were so bruised in all their powers and faculties, that they became unable to serve God; and so bemired with the guilt and pollution of sin, that they were altogether unfit to enjoy God.

A. 14. Sin is any want of conformity unto, or transgression of the Law of God.

Expl. 14. This description of sin doth agree to sins of all sorts, original or actual; and these whether in thought, word, or deed, whether of omission or commission, of ignorance or of knowledge, of infirmity or presumption; and to sins of all degrees and sizes, whether great or small; for in all sin whatsoever (whether it be of men or Devils) there is a want of conformity to the Law of God, and a violation of his just will, as well as a repugnancy to the holiness of his nature. Neither is it improper to place the nature of sin in a privation or want of conformity; for it is that which doth deprive and rob the rational creature of the rectitude or moral perfection of his own nature, which doth consist in his being like to God, and in being conformable to his will.

A. 15. The sin whereby our first Parents fell from the estate wherein they were created, was their eating the forbidden fruit .

Homil. xii. This first man Adam, who having but one Commandment at God's hand, namely, that he should not eat of the fruit of knowledge of good and evil, did notwithstanding most unmindfully, or rather most willfully break it, in forgetting the strait charge of his Maker, and giving ear to the crafty suggestion of that wicked Serpent the Devil.

Expl. 15. In this A. there are two things remarkable, (1.) That our Parents by sinning lost that state of perfection which they had in Paradise; and (Christ only excepted, whatever some Quakers dream) there was never any man perfectly innocent, or free from sin, since the fall. Now that state of perfection which our first Parents lost (and we in them) did consist; (1.) In their conformity to God, or in having his image stamped upon them, in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness. (2.) In their perfect capacity and fitness to enjoy God their Creator. (2dly,) That the sin whereby they fell was direct disobedience, in eating the forbidden fruit (whether an Apple, or whatever else), and that against a particular positive express Precept, thou shalt not eat of it; which sin of theirs was a big-belly'd sin, and carried in it, (1.) Pride and Ambition, to be as God's in the Devils sense, (i. e.) in knowledge, or know as much as God himself. (2.) Ingratitude, for their privilege and liberty to eat of all other trees of the Garden. (3.) Infidelity, not giving that credit and belief to God which he did to Satan. (4.) This forbidden tree was the Seal of the Covenant of life, and therefore to eat of it was to tear off the Seal.

A. 16. The Covenant being made with Adam not only for himself, but for his Posterity , all mankind, descending from him by ordinary generation, sinned in him, and fell with him in his first transgression .

Homil. xii. The judgment of everlasting death,— fell not only on him, but also on his posterity and children forever; so that the whole brood of Adams flesh should sustain the self-same fall and punishment which their fore-father by his offense most fully had deserved.

Exp. 16. We have here two things to be considered: (1) That Adam was not only the root of all mankind descending from him by ordinary generation, he being the first that God created of that species; but also the representative of mankind, and did as a public person stand for all his posterity in that Covenant of life which God made personally with him; hence that common phrase, that we were all in his loins, (i. e.) naturally, as descending from him; and legally, as represented by him. Not but that we were also in the loins of Eve▪ but that man being first created, and of the more noble Sex, is principally taken notice of both in the Covenant and in the Transgression. For (2dly.) we are here to observe, that all mankind (Christ the Son of God only excepted) did sin in Adam; By one sin entered into the world upon all, for as much as all have sinned. Some explain this by the example of Levi, who is said to pay tithes in Abraham, though Levi was not born some hundred years after Abraham did thus pay tithes: So all Adams posterity (which proceed from him in the ordinary course of nature) may be said as well to sin in Adam, though some of them might not be born some hundreds or thousands of years after him. We know that the bonds and compacts of Parents may reach the Children; else they could not be liable nor capable of enjoying their estates, to pay their debts; and the treason of the Parent doth legally taint the Son, till it please the Prince to take it off. And then further, as the righteousness of Christ the second Adam, and his obedience, is imputed to all that believe; so the disobedience of the first Adam is reckoned to the score of all his posterity, because they were legally in him, and one with him when he sinned.

A. 17. The fall brought mankind into an estate of sin and misery .

Homil. ii. p. 1. Job having in himself great experience of the miserable and sinful estate of man, doth open the same to the world, Chap. 14.

Expl. 17. In this A. 'tis observable, that the fall did not only put our first Parents actually under misery, but it did instate all his posterity in misery, and did entail sin upon them, as Ancestors do entail their Lands upon their posterity; and if the second Adam had not by an act of infinite grace and wisdom cut off this entail in the behalf of believers, all mankind must forever have continued not only heirs and children of wrath (as we are all by nature,) but also actually under the wrath of God forever. For this was all the estate that our first Parents left to their posterity, sc. sin and misery.

A. 18. The sinfulness of that estate whereunto man fell, consists in the guilt of Adams first sin , the want of original righteousness , and the corruption of his whole nature, which is commonly called original sin , together with all actual transgressions, which proceed from it .

Artic. IX. Original or birth-sin is the fault and corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original Righteousness, and is of his own nature inclined to evil.

Expl. 18. There are four Particulars in this A. (which do all suppose that Adam sinned as a common Representative of all Mankind.) As, (1.) That the guilt of that single act of disobedience which Adam was guilty of, is very justly imputed to all the degenerate and sinful race of Adam; for that Covenant which was made with him being made with us also in him, when he transgressed by eating the forbidden fruit, we his posterity are to be looked upon as Accessaries, and consenting to the fact; and when he thus sinned, it was as much as if all his posterity had sinned in their own persons. (2) The want of original righteousness, or the want of power and ability to do the will of God which man had by Creation; for God made man upright, that is, in a capacity and with ability to do the whole will of God; which ability was not taken away from man till he had foolishly and willfully thrown it away. (3.) The corruption of the whole nature of man, and that in every mothers child of us (the Child Jesus only excepted). For everyone of us may truly say with David, one by one, Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me: It being impossible that a clean thing should come out of an unclean. Now because this corruption of nature is the fountain of all manner of sin, both in thought, word, and deed, therefore it is called original sin. And then, (4.) All those corrupt streams which do proceed from this corrupt fountain, are called actual sins; by which I understand any action of a man, whether it be an internal action of the mind and soul; or external, of the body, which is not conformable to the Law of God; as also the neglect and omission of any action (whether internal or external) which the Law requires.

A. 19. All mankind by their fall, lost communion with God , are under his wrath and curse , and so made liable to all miseries in this life, to death itself, and to the pains of hell forever .

Homil. xii. As in Adam all men universally sinned; so in Adam all men universally received the reward of their sin, i. e. they became mortal, and subject unto death, having in themselves nothing but everlasting damnation both of body and soul.—O what a miserable and woeful state was this, that the sin of one man should destroy and condemn all men, that nothing in all the world might be looked for, but only pangs of death, and pains of Hell.

Expl. 19. Concerning this A. 'tis observable in the general, That man's losses by the fall, do reach as far as the guilt of that first disobedience whereby he fell, namely, to all mankind; yet more particularly, (1st,) Adam lost (and we in him, and with him) communion with God; and the loss of this is a treble loss, (1.) Of God's sweet and gracious presence and company, and that in a most immediate manner, as one friend is personally present with another. (2.) Of converse with God; for whilst God and man were together in Paradise, and man continued innocent, their society was not like that of the Quakers in their Silent-Meetings, but there would have continued such familiarity betwixt them, as is betwixt two loving friends, they would have walked together, and talked together; for if God did use that familiarity with Moses, Exod. 33.11. since the fall, much more would he have continued it with Adam and his posterity, if they had never fallen. (3.) From this sweet company and converse would have sprung up in the heart, a continual satisfaction and delight to the soul of man; for man yet continuing like God, he could not but love him, and delight himself in this sweet intercourse. (2dly,) The sinful posterity of Adam (till interested in Christ) are actually under the wrath of God, for God is angry with the wicked every day; and actually under the curse, because under the Law, not under Grace. (3dly,) Man in this state is continually liable to have the curse executed upon him every moment, and has no protection at all either against the miseries of this life, or the pains of hell.

A. 20. God having out of his mere good pleasure, from all eternity, elected some to everlasting life, did enter into a Covenant of Grace, to deliver them out of the estate of sin and misery, and to bring them into an estate of salvation by a Redeemer.

Artic. xvij. Predestination to life is the everlasting purpose of God, whereby (before the foundations of the world were laid) he hath constantly decreed by his counsel secret to us, to deliver from curse and damnation those whom he hath chosen in Christ out of mankind, and to bring them to everlasting salvation, as vessels made unto honor. Homil. xii. Behold the goodness and tender mercy of God,—he ordained a new Covenant, and made a sure promise thereof, namely, that he would send a Messias or a Mediator into the world, which should make intercession, and put himself as a stay between both Parties; to pacify the wrath and indignation conceived against sin, and to deliver man out of the miserable curse, and cursed misery whereinto he was fallen head-long, by disobeying the will and commandment of the only Lord and Maker.

Expl. 20. In which A. we have (1st,) God's eternal purpose, and absolute decree, whereby he hath singled out or chosen some of mankind, upon whom he is resolved to bestow eternal life, and that out of his mere free grace, without any foresight of faith, obedience, perseverance, or any other condition, as a cause or motive inducing him to make this choice; nay, the decree itself is not founded in the merits of Christ, but purely in the love of God; though as for all the blessed effects of this decree (as reconciliation, pardon, justification, adoption, sanctification, salvation, &c.) are actually received and enjoyed, by the elect, only upon the consideration of the merits, righteousness, and satisfaction of Christ. Yet more distinctly, and for order sake, we may conceive of these two things in God's decree of Election, (1.) God's most wise design, to advance the glory of his free grace, in bringing many sons to glory. (2.) That God of his free grace had singled and culled out a certain distinct number of persons for the enjoyment of this glory. Now this very act of God's picking and culling out those particular persons whom he designed to save, is that we call very properly Election. Neither did this grace of God only appear in making this choice, and then in leaving his chosen ones to get eternal life and heaven as they could; but (2dly,) He did also pitch upon an effectual means, or contrive a way whereby his chosen people should effectually and infallibly obtain eternal life; and this was by entering into a Covenant of Grace, with Christ the second Adam, and the Mediator of the new Covenant; and in Christ with all believers, that whosoever should believe on the Son of God, he would give unto them eternal life; and that they should never enter into condemnation. Hence I infer, (1.) That it is the free grace of God, and not the free will of man that maketh one man to differ from another, Paul from Judas. (2.) That the praise and glory of this difference is to be ascribed not unto man, but unto God, Not unto us, O Lord, &c.

A. 21. The only Redeemer of God's Elect is the Lord Jesus Christ , who being the eternal Son of God, became man , and so was, and continueth to be God and man, in two distinct natures, and one person , forever .

Artic. xvij. They also are to be had accursed, who presume to say that every man shall be saved by the Law or Sect which he professeth, so that he be diligent to frame his life according to that Law and the light of Nature. For the holy Scripture doth set out unto us only the name of Jesus Christ, whereby men must be saved. Hom. x. p. 2. — Reprobates perish through their own default — Christ Jesus as he is a rising up to none other than those who are God's Children by Adoption; so is his word, yea the holy Scripture, the power of God to salvation to them only that do believe it.

Expl. 21. There are three things to be noted in this A. (1.) That the Redeemer of God's Elect is God as well as Man. (2.) Man as well as God. (3.) Both God and Man in one person. (1.) He is God, for he is the Son of God, not by Creation; as Adam was; nor by natural generation, as we are all the Children of Adam; but by eternal generation, so as that God the Father, who begat him, was not before him in time: And he was God, that his Godhead might keep his human nature from sinking under infinite wrath when he suffered for our sins, that he might have power to raise himself from the grave, and rescue himself out of the jaws of death, that the dignity of his person might render his sufferings, obedience, intercession, and satisfaction of infinite value and efficacy, for the procuring of eternal life for his people, and that he might be in a capacity to bestow his Spirit upon them, and to conquer all their enemies for them. (2.) He must be Man as well as God, that he might perform obedience, suffer, satisfy, and intercede for us in our nature; that he might be a merciful High Priest, and have a fellow-feeling of our infirmities. (3.) Both God and Man in one person, that he might be a fit Mediator betwixt God and man, to make up the difference betwixt them, which sin had made. For as sin is the only make-bate, so Christ having taken our nature into union with the Godhead, is the only person that is in a capacity to make peace betwixt an offended God and offending man; and that he might perform (in the great work of Redemption) whatever was requirable of both natures jointly in one person; or whatever he was to do as head of the Church.

A. 22. Christ the Son of God became man, by taking to himself a true body , and a reasonable soul , being conceived by the power of the Holy Ghost, in the womb of the Virgin Mary, and born of her , yet without sin .

Artic. xv. Christ in the truth of our nature was made like unto us in all things, sin only except, from which he was clear void, both in his flesh and in his spirit. Artic. II. The Son, which is the Word of the Father, begotten from everlasting of the Father, the very and eternal God, of one substance with the Father, took man's nature in the womb of the Virgin

Mary, of her substance: So that two whole and perfect natures▪ that is to say, the Godhead and Manhood, were joined together in one person, never to be divided; whereof is one Christ, very God and very man, who truly suffered, was crucified, dead and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a Sacrifice not only for original guilt, but also for actual sins of men. Homil. xii. As truly as God liveth, so truly was Jesus Christ the true Messiah and Savior of the world, even the same Jesus which was born of the Virgin Mary, without all help of man, only by the power and operation of the Holy Ghost.

Expl. 22. When it is here said, that Christ the Son of God became man, we are not to imagine that Christ did then lay down his Godhead, or that he did cease to be God, when he honored man's nature so far as to take that upon him: for though he then began to be what he was not before, man; yet he did not cease to be at his Incarnation what he was before, namely, God; it being impossible altogether that the Godhead should admit of any change, because of its infinite perfection; for every change is either for the better or for the worse, but the Godhead was infinitely (as well as independently) perfect, and consequently without all variableness or shadow of changing; so that all the change which was in Christ at his Incarnation, it was in his human nature only; and that change was indeed for the better, for it was for the highest advancement, honor, and perfection that our nature was capable of. But Christ, though the Son of God, and therefore truly God, became man, (1.) Not by being like unto man only in outward appearance, and to the outward senses, as a Phantasm, an Apparition, or a Ghost that doth appear in man's shape, as those Heretics of old called the Marcionites did fancy: No, he became man, (2.) By taking the real body of man, or by taking flesh, blood, bones, nerves, sinews, hands, feet, and all other integral parts of the very same kind with those of man's body. His body was such, that it did grow in stature from that of a child to that of a man, and was subject to the touch or feeling. (3.) By taking a reasonable soul, or a soul furnished with the very same powers and faculties that ours have, for the kind, as understanding, will, affections, memory, &c. and was capable of the improvement of these, as of growing in wisdom and knowledge, according to his human nature. (4.) By being conceived of the Holy Ghost, i. e. in a manner supernatural, or above nature, and not in an ordinary way of natural generation, but by the immediate and omnipotent operation of the Spirit the third person in the Trinity, who did in a way altogether inexpressible by man, and without the help of man, frame the body of the holy Child Jesus in the Virgin Mary's womb, wherein this blessed Babe continued the space of Nine Months, as other children do in their mothers womb, and then was born into the world in fullness of time, as they are; but yet without sin, as they are not.

A. 23. Christ as our Redeemer, executeth the offices of a Prophet , of a Priest , and of a King , both in his estate of Humiliation and Exaltation.

Expl. 23. By this word Redeemer, we are to understand the same with Mediator, and by both the second Person in the Trinity, as he was (upon Covenant and Contract made with the Father) to mediate peace betwixt God and man, and to manage the whole work of Redemption, in order to the justification, sanctification, and salvation of the Elect; and that not only whilst he was here upon earth to be our King, Priest, and Prophet; but now that he is in heaven, he ever lives to make intercession for us, and doth still guide, and teach, and govern his Church by his Word and Spirit.

A. 24. Christ executeth the office of a Prophet, in revealing to us , by his Word , and Spirit , the Will of God for our Salvation.

Hom. xvij. By this our heavenly Mediator do we know the favor and mercy of God the Father, by him know we his will and pleasure towards us, for he is the brightness of his Fathers glory, and a very clear image and pattern of his substance. It is he whom the Father in heaven delighteth to have for his beloved Son, authorized to be our Teacher, whom he charged us to hear, saying, Hear him.

Expl. 24. When Christ is here called a Prophet, we are not to restrain this part of his Office only to his foretelling all such things as should befall his Church, or the enemies thereof, though this he has done in Prophetical Scriptures, so far as he thought necessary for the good of his Church: But he is principally called a Prophet (and that Prophet) because of that power, commission, and ability which he has, and doth exercise, in revealing and declaring (both outwardly by his Word, and inwardly by his Spirit) the whole mind and will of God, which was necessary to be known by man in order to salvation. And for this reason he is called in Scripture the Word (and the Word was made flesh), and his name is [the Word of God], because that as a man does make known what his mind and will is by his words, either written or spoken; so God the Father doth make known unto man by Christ what he would have men to believe and do in order to salvation; and that either mediately, by committing the word of Christ unto writings, as in the Scripture; or immediately, by the Spirit of Truth, as he did communicate and speak his mind to Moses, the Prophets, and Apostles.

A. 25. Christ executeth the office of a Priest, in his once offering up of himself a Sacrifice to satisfy Divine Justice , and to reconcile us to God , and in making continual intercession for us .

Homil. xx. p. 1. We having nothing of ourselves to present us to God, have need of a Mediator for to bring and reconcile us unto him, who for our sins is angry with us. The same is Jesus Christ, — to pacify his wrath.—For he alone did with the Sacrifice of his Body and Blood, make satisfaction unto the Justice of God for our sins. To. 1. Hom. III. p. 2. We must trust only in God's mercy, and that Sacrifice which our High Priest and Savior Christ Jesus the Son of God once offered for us upon the Cross, to obtain thereby God's grace, and remission as well of our original sin, as of all a •••all sin, — if we truly repent and turn unfeignedly unto him. To. 11. Hom. xi. Reconciled to God's favor, we are taught to know what Christ by his intercession and mediation obtaineth for us of his Father, when we be obedient to his will; yea, attributeth that unto us and to our doings, that he by his Spirit worketh in us, and through his grace procureth for us.

Expl. 25. In this A. we have both the parts of Christ's Priestly Office, as, (1st,) Satisfaction, and this twofold, (1.) To the whole Law, in fulfilling all righteousness, in the perfect performance of what the Law required from him. (2.) To the Justice of God, in undergoing the Curse of the Law, for the Elect; and this he did by his sufferings, but especially when his Soul was made an offering for sin, or when he was sacrificed for sinners. In which Offering he was, (1.) The Priest, for he offered up himself, or he laid down his life of himself; and he was the Priest as God-man. (2.) He was the Altar, principally according to his Divine nature, because the Altar was to sanctify the gift offered, and therefore was to be more excellent than the Sacrifice itself. (3.) He was also the Sacrifice, for he offered the Sacrifice of himself, (i. e.) according to the human nature properly, and this therefore is called the Sacrifice of his Body and of his Blood; and all this, that there might be some kind of compensation made, or satisfaction given to God, for that wrong which we had done to him. (2dly,) We have the intercession of Christ, which is the other part of Christ's Priestly Office, whereby Christ doth present himself continually before the Father, pleading his blood and merit for the satisfaction that he has made to Divine Justice, and for the reconciliation of God to the sinner. And his intercession is rather by way of plea at the Bar of Justice, than by way of prayer and supplication at a Throne of Grace; and therefore it is that he is called our Advocate.

A. 26. Christ executeth the office of a King, in subduing us to himself, in ruling and defending us, and in restraining and conquering all his and our Enemies.

To. 2. Homil. xiv. He sitteth on the right hand of his heavenly Father, having the rule of heaven and earth; reigning as the Prophet saith, Psal. 17. from Sea to Sea, — he hath overcome the Devil, Death, and Hell, and hath victoriously gotten the better hand of them all, to make us free and safe from them. Homil. xvij. p. 3. To this our Savior and Mediator hath God the Father given the power of heaven and earth, and the whole jurisdiction and authority to distribute his gifts committed to him, — and thereupon to execute his authority committed, after that he had brought sin and the Devil to captivity, to be no more hurtful to his members, he ascended up into heaven again, and from thence sent liberal gifts to his well-beloved Servants, and hath still the power to the worlds end, to distribute his Fathers gifts continually in his Church, to the establishment and comfort thereof.

Expl. 26. Yet more fully Christ doth execute his Kingly Office, (1st,) By his authority, in setting up a government in his Church, which in the outward form or administration thereof is to be managed by such Officers, and according to such Laws, Ordinances, and Censures as he hath appointed in his word. (2dly,) By his Power, as (1.) That of his Almightiness, whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself, and to make his very enemies his footstool. (2.) Of his Grace, whereby he doth subdue the hearts of his chosen people to himself, and makes them a willing people in the day of his power. (3.) Of his Spirit, whereby he doth sanctify his people, and fit them for heaven, as also support, guide, and comfort them under all the afflictions they meet with on earth. (4.) By his Justice, in punishing his and his Churches adversaries.

A. 27. Christ's Humiliation consisted in his being born, and that in a low condition, made under the Law, undergoing the miseries of this life, the wrath of God, and the cursed death of the Cross, in being buried, and continuing under the power of death for a time.

Hom. III. p. 3.—Hath given his own natural Son' being God eternal, immortal, and equal unto himself in power and glory, to be incarnated, and take our mortal nature upon him, with the infirmities of the same, and in the same nature to suffer most painful and shameful death for our offenses, to the intent to justify us, and restore us to life everlasting. Hom. xii. He did hunger and thirst, eat and drink, sleep and wake, —preach his Gospel,—weep and sorrow for Jerusalem, pay tribute for himself and Peter, suffer death.

Expl. 27. In the general, Christ's Humiliation doth consist, in all that which did befall him from the first moment of his conception in the Virgins womb, to the very time of his resurrection from the grave: (1.) He was humbled in his conception; that he who was God equal with the Father, should according to his human nature have a body framed for him in the womb of a Virgin, and should continue ••ose Prisoner there for the space of about nine months, whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain. (2.) Humbled in his birth, in that he was born of a woman, and that not an Empress or Princess, but a woman of a mean rank and low estate, though a Virgin; that he who was the Son of God, and the Father of eternity, or himself the everlasting Father, should in fullness of time be born in the form of a servant, made under the Law, not only in a state of subjection to the commands of it, but also liable, to the curse of it, which was due only to us, and not to him, but only as he was our Surety, and all this that we might receive the adoption of Sons, who deserved not to be called Servants. That he who was Heir of all things, and made this great house the World, should be so unfurnisht with household goods, as to have no better Cradle than a Manger. (3.) In his life he humbled himself to the infirmities of our nature, as hunger, cold, nakedness, poverty, &c. to undergo with admirable patience, the unkindnesses and forsakings of his friends, the reproaches, indignities, and persecutions of his enemies; yea and to be tempted by that great enemy of mankind the Devil. (4.) In his death, that he should die at all, who is the Author of natural, spiritual, and eternal life; and besides, could he not, if he would, have translated himself from earth to heaven (as Enoch was translated) without dying at all; but then that the King of Glory should die the •ost shameful death, that of the Cross, and in the basest company, betwixt two Thieves. (5) After death, in having his body laid in the earth, who had before made the heavens, and laid the foundation of the earth. And last of all, that he should continue under the power of death & the grave for three days, who could (if he would) within less than three moments, yea in less time than a moment have raised his body from the grave. O incomprehensible humiliation! and that which should fill us all with grateful and astonishing admiration at it, that all this was for sinful man!

A. 28. Christ's Exaltation consisteth in his rising again from the dead on the third day , in ascending up into heaven, and sitting at the right hand of God the Father , and in coming to judge the world at the last day .

Artic. IV. Christ did truly rise again from death, and took again his body, with flesh, bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature, wherewith he ascended into heaven, and there sitteth until he return to judge all men at the last day. To. 2. Hom. xiv. After this world Judge as well of the living as of the dead, to give reward to the good, and judgment to the evil. Hom. xvij. p. 3. By him hath Almighty God decreed to dissolve the world, to call all before him, to judge both the quick and the dead; and finally, by him shall he condemn the wicked to eternal fire in hell, and give the good eternal life, and set them assuredly in presence with him in heaven forever more.

Expl. 28. Christ is here exalted, (1st,) In his resurrection; and here (1.) The glory of his power was exalted, for he raised himself by his own Almighty power, and thereby declared himself to be the Son of God. (2.) The glory of his truth, for he raised himself, as he had foretold, within three days. (3.) The glory of his authority, for he rose as a public person, and thereby declared himself Head of the Church. (4.) The glory of his mercy, for he rose again for our justification; for if he had not received a discharge from his Father, and had he not been released from the prison of the grave, it would have been an evidence against us, that our debt was not paid. (2dly,) He was exalted by his ascension, (1.) If we consider the manner of it, it was with glorious triumph over hell and death. (2.) His ascension was into heaven, namely, into the heaven of heavens, that which is called Paradise and the third Heaven, whether Enoch and Elias went. (3.) In his bounty and grace, he ascended that he might give gifts to men. (3dly,) Exalted in his sitting, &c. for his Session at the right hand of the Father, doth declare him to be supreme Head of the Church. (4thly,) In judging the world, he will be exalted, (1.) In his authority. (2.) In his righteousness.

A. 29. We are made partakers of the Redemption purchased by Christ, by the effectual application of it to us, by his holy Spirit.

Artic. xvij. —They which be endued with so excellent a benefit of God (viz. Election) be called according to God's purpose, working in due season; they through grace obey the calling; be freely justified, &c.

Expl. 29. In this A. is plainly laid before us the manner how, and means whereby all that Christ has done and suffered for sinners (as Mediator), and all that he is now doing in heaven for them, doth become effectual to the complete redemption, and eternal salvation of all true Christians, sc. by the real and actual application of all this unto them. For though Christ, the great Physician of value, has made the healing Plaister of his Blood sufficiently broad enough both to cover and to cure all the wounds that sin hath made in all the men in the world; yet the far greater part of the world do die and perish of their wounds, because they will not suffer this sovereign Plaister to be applied to them, in the sound preaching of the Gospel, neither will they abide to have their wounds searched in order to cure: Now for the manner how, and the means whereby this Plaister is applied; I answer, (1.) It is outwardly, by the Ministers of the Gospel, unto all those that do believe, as when they preach this Doctrine, that whosoever believeth shall be saved. (2.) Inwardly, by the Holy Spirit, who does not only lay on the Plaister in a work of conviction, but doth make it become effectually healing in a work of conversion and sanctification. For the means, see the next A.

A. 30. The Spirit applieth to us the Redemption purchased by Christ, by working faith in us; and thereby uniting us to Christ in our Effectual Calling.

Homil. II. Of the Passion. As it profiteth a man nothing to have S•lve, unless it be well-applied to the part infected; so the death of Christ shall stand us in no force, unless we apply it to ourselves, as God hath appointed. Almighty God commonly worketh by means; and in this thing he hath also ordained a certain mean, whereby we may take fruit and profit to our Souls health. Homil. xvi. p. 2. The Holy Ghost is a Spiritual and Divine Substance, the Third person in the Trinity, distinct from the Father and the Son, and yet proceeding from them both,—doth regenerate; which the more it is hid from our understanding, the more it ought to move all men to wonder at the secret and mighty working of God's holy Spirit which is within us: For it is the Holy Ghost, and no other thing, that doth quicken the minds of men, stirring up good and godly motions in their hearts, which are agreeable to the will and commandment of God, such as otherwise of their crooked and perverse nature they should never have.—Who is the only worker of our sanctification, and maketh us new in Christ.

Expl. 30. Here we have the particular means or instrument which the Holy Spirit makes use of for the applying of the Redemption purchased by Christ, to all those whom he has redeemed by his blood. Not that the Spirit may be said to believe in the elect, but that he doth work that faith in them whereby they (as Members) are united to Christ their Head, and so do mystically and spiritually (but really) become one with him, for they that are thus joined to the Lord, are one spirit; and so being one with Christ, what was done for them by Christ as their Mediator, Head, and Husband, is accounted as done by themselves; he having pay'd their debt as their Surety, they receive their discharge, and shall never come into condemnation, or be cast into Prison, after they are once thus one with Christ, and effectually called by the Spirit.

A. 31. Effectual Calling is the work of God's Spirit, whereby convincing us of our sin and misery, enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Christ, and renewing our wills, he doth persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Christ freely offered to us in the Gospel.

Artic. X. The condition of man after the fall of Adam is such, that he cannot turn and prepare himself by his own natural strength and good works to faith, and calling upon God: Wherefore we have no power to do good works pleasant and acceptable to God, without the grace of God by Christ preventing us, that we may have a good will, and working with us when we have that good will. Hom. II. Of Alms, p. 2. The good deeds of man are not the cause of making him good, but he is first made good by the Spirit and grace of God, that effectually worketh in him, and afterward he bringeth forth good fruit. — God of his mercy and special favor towards them whom he hath appointed to everlasting salvation, hath so offered his grace especially, and they have so received it fruitfully, that though by reason of their sinful living outwardly, they seemed before to have been the children of wrath and perdition, yet now the Spirit of God mightily working in them, unto obedience to God's will and commandments, they declare by their outward deeds and life, in the showing of mercy and charity, which cannot come but of the Spirit of God, and his especial grace, that they are the undoubted children of God, appointed to everlasting life.

Expl. 31. That we may the better know what effectual Calling is, we are to consider of a double Call, which doth many times prove ineffectual; as, (1.) Outward, in the preaching of the Word, and the voice of the Rod, or any Providence whatsoever, which doth call men to repentance, faith, and holiness; but notwithstanding all these outward Calls, there are Millions in the world who turn the deaf ear to God, and will not return to him by repentance, nor come to Christ by faith. (2dly,) There is an inward Call, which is no less ineffectual than the former, and it is the Spirit's Call, as when he proceeds no further than that which Divines call a common work; as (1.) Common illumination, or some kind of floating knowledge in the head, concerning the word of God, and spiritual matters; and no doubt but many men who have wicked hearts, and lead bad lives, may be well stored with gifts of this kind; as Judas for one. (2.) Some kind of flashy affections excited and stirred up in the Soul towards good things, called foretastes of the powers of the world to come; and such was in Herod and Balaam. (3.) Some kind of faint languishing inclinations in the will to obedience, such as Herod had when he did many things. (4.) Some kind of sense of sin, both in its guilt and horror, such as Judas had; and yet notwithstanding all this inward work of the Spirit, his Call may be ineffectual. And if all this may be without success, then no wonder if the Arminians Call, that of moral suasion, or of arguments, do prove no better. But then (2dly,) There is another inward Call of the Spirit, which is effectual to the Elect; sc. that whereby the Spirit doth not only call, but enable them to come at his call, as when he doth renew the mind, and change the will, sanctify the heart, purify the conscience and affections; and doth work a lively faith in such persons, and repentance from dead works.

A. 32. They that are Effectually called, do in this life partake of Justification , Adoption , Sanctification, and the several benefits which in this life do either accompany, or flow from them .

Artic. xvij.—They through grace obey the Calling; they be justified freely, they be made Sons of God by Adoption; they be made like the image of his only begotten Son Jesus Christ; they walk religiously in good works, and at length by God's mercy they attain to everlasting felicity.

Expl. 32. Into the nature of these particular Benefits of Effectual Calling, there will be occasion to enquire hereafter; but as to the certainty of the thing, that all that are effectually called shall partake of these, is evident from these grounds: (1.) In that Christ did purchase these benefits, not for himself, but for them; nay, he had never laid down such a price in his Fathers hands, but for the sake of Believers. (2.) The tenor of the Covenant of Grace doth ascertain this, for when God the Father and Son did treat together concerning the redemption of the Elect, it was upon these terms, sc. That upon the Sons undertaking to satisfy both the Law and Justice of God, and upon the full performance of this undertaking, all those that do believe in Christ (though by nature they had been children of wrath as well as others) should upon their believing, be justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved. (3.) Upon their believing they do receive Christ, and he gives himself freely to them; and how shall they not with him, have all things else they stand in need of.

A. 33. Justification is an Act of God's free grace, wherein he pardoneth all our sins , and accepteth us as righteous in his sight , only for the righteousness of Christ imputed to us , and received by faith alone .

Artic. II. We are accounted righteous before God only for the merit of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ by faith, and not for our own works or deservings. To. I. Hom. III. Because all men be sinners and offenders, and breakers of his Law and Commandments, therefore can no man by his own acts, works, and deeds (seem they never so good) be justified and made righteous before God; but everyone is constrained to see for another righteousness—and this which we so receive of God's mercy and Christ's merits embraced by faith, is taken, accepted, and allowed of God for our perfect and full justification. Part 3. Our works do not merit or deserve remission of our sins, and make us of unjust, just before God: but God of his own mercy, through the only merits and deservings of his Son Jesus Christ, doth justify us. Nevertheless, because Faith doth directly send us to Christ for remission of our sins, and that by faith given us of God, we embrace the promise of God's mercy, and of the remission of our sins (which thing none other of our virtues or works properly doth) therefore the Scripture useth to say, that faith without works doth justify; or only faith doth justify. —Not through the merit of any virtue that we have within us, or of any work that cometh from us; therefore in that respect,—we forsake (as it were) altogether again faith, works, and all other virtues. For our own imperfection is so great, through the corruption of Original sin, that all is imperfect that is within us, faith, charity, hope, dread, thoughts, words, and works, and therefore not apt to merit and deserve any part of our justification for us. Tom. 2. Hom. IV. It is of the free grace and mercy of God, by the mediation of the blood of his Son Jesus Christ, without merit or deserving on our part, that our sins are forgiven us, that we are reconciled and brought again into his favor, and are made heirs of his heavenly Kingdom.

Expl. 33. This word [justification] doth signify, not only to make just or righteous, but also to make a man appear so; (yet not by infusing or working grace or righteousness in the Soul, for this is the meaning of that word sanctification), or it signifies the believing sinners being reputed or accounted righteous in the sight of God, in and through the righteousness of Christ imputed to the sinner, or accounted as his own; for as condemnation doth suppose a man guilty, because the just God doth not condemn men for nothing; so justification doth suppose a man discharged from guilt, and so not obnoxious to the penalty or curse of the Law; now because the sinner cannot expect to receive this discharge by virtue of his own personal righteousness, because all his righteousness is imperfect, or as a menstuous rag; therefore he must be found not having on his own righteousness for his justification, but the righteousness of Christ. But more particularly in this A. we have (1.) The principal Author, or prime efficient cause of justification, and this is God; Who is he that condemneth? it is God that justifieth. God the Father, as accepting of what Christ has done for sinners; and God the Son, as procuring our discharge; and God the Holy Ghost, as applying the merits of Christ to us, and working faith in us, whereby we receive so great a benefit. (2.) The inward moving cause, free grace; and not any foresight of faith or obedience in the sinner, to move him to it. (3.) The matter of justification, or in reference to what the sinner is justified; namely, the guilt of sin and curse of the Law. (4.) The manner, which consists in a legal discharge of the sinner from his former obligation to punishment, here called the pardon of his sins, and accepting of him as righteous. (5.) The meritorious cause, only for the righteousness of Christ imputed to the believing sinner. (6.) The instrumental cause, or condition, sc. faith; for the sinner through the means of his faith, or upon the condition of his believing, is thus justified.

A. 34. Adoption is an Act of God's free grace, whereby we are received into the number, and have right to all the privileges of the Sons of God.

Tom. 1. Hom. III. p. 3.—So making us also his dear children, brethren unto his only Son, our Savior Christ, and inheritors forever with him of his eternal Kingdom of Heaven. Hom. X. p. 2. He is a rising up to none other than those which are God's children by adoption. Hom. xi. p. 2. By their obedience they declare openly unto to the sight of men, that they are Sons of God, and elect of him unto Salvation.

Expl. 34. More plainly, Adoption, it is God's taking of those into his care and Family, as his children by grace, who were by nature the children of wrath, and by practice the children of disobedience; and all that they may enjoy the honor, advantages, and privileges of his children; as (1.) They bear their Fathers Name and likeness, or his badge and cognizance, whereby they are known to belong to him, and that is their holiness. So that those who are afraid to be accounted godly, they are afraid to be God-like, and so disown their Father, as if ashamed of him. (2.) They are all heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ their elder Brother, to an heavenly Inheritance. (3.) They have the Spirit of his Son given to them, whereby they are enabled to call God Father, and to come to a throne of grace with the boldness of children. (4.) They are under God's fatherly protection, so that nothing can harm them. (5.) They are provided for by him, and therefore can want no good thing. (6.) They have a sanctified use of the creatures, and of all temporal good things, yea afflictions themselves are for their good.

A. 35. Sanctification is the work of God's free grace , whereby we are renewed in the whole man, after the Image of God , and are enabled more and more to die unto sin, and live unto righteousness .

Hom. II. p. 2. The holy Apostle calleth us Saints, because we are sanctified and made holy by the blood of Christ through the Holy Ghost. Hom. xvi. p. 1.—It is he which inwardly worketh the regeneration and new birth.—The more it is hid from the understanding, the more it ought to move all men to wonder at the secret and mighty working of God's holy Spirit which is within us. For it is the Holy Ghost, and no other thing, that doth quicken the minds of men, stirring up good and godly motions in their hearts, which are agreeable to the will and commandment of God; such as otherwise of their own crooked and perverse nature, they should never have. That which is born of the spirit is spirit. As who should say, man of his own nature is fleshly and carnal, corrupt and naught, sinful and disobedient to God, without any spark of goodness in him, without any virtuous or godly motion, only given to evil thoughts and wicked deeds As for the works of the Spirit, the fruits of Faith, charitable and godly motions, if he have any at all in him, they proceed only of the Holy Ghost, who is the only worker of our sanctification, and maketh us new men in Christ Jesus. —Such is the power of the Holy Ghost to regenerate men, and as it were to bring forth a-new, that they shall be nothing like the men they were before.

Expl. 35. As for sanctification, it is no less a work of free grace than justification and adoption; and in Scripture-phrase it is the new man, new creature, and a man's being created a-new in Christ Jesus unto good works; in which and the like expressions is plainly set before us, the large compass, extent, and comprehension of this work; for herein all things must become new; the nature renewed, or changed from its corrupt and carnal state, to a state of real and true holiness, though imperfect in this life; the mind renewed in saving-knowledge; the will renewed, by being subdued and made pliable to the will of God; the affections renewed, by being spiritualized, or fixed upon spiritual good objects; and so the memory, conscience, fancy, &c. as also the life, because in this change a man becomes a new man. The particular parts of which sanctification are, (1.) Mortification, or a Believers being dead unto sin, (i. e.) in his inclinations, thoughts, cares, affections, endeavors, all which were before lively and strong towards sin. (2.) Vivification, or a living unto righteousness, (i. e.) being holy in all manner of conversation.

A. 36. The benefits which in this life do accompany or flow from Justification, Adoption and Sanctification, are assurance of God's love, peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, increase of grace, and perseverance therein unto the end.

To. 1. Hom. ix. p. 2. All those therefore have great cause to be full of joy, that be joined to Christ with true faith, steadfast hope, and perfect charity, and not to fear death nor everlasting damnation.— But rather contrariwise, their godly conversation in this life, and belief in Christ, cleaving continually to his mercies, should make them so long sore after that life that remaineth for them undoubtedly after this bodily death. To. 2. Hom. xii. Released from the burden of sin, justified through faith in his blood, and finally received up into everlasting glory, there to reign with him forever.

Expl. 36. By this [first privilege of assurance] we are to understand, not merely a believers probable guess or conjecture, or his hope and expectation to be saved; but an infallible certainty, or that which is called in Scripture the full assurance of faith, concerning the love of God, and the believers eternal salvation; which certainty is built, (1.) Upon the infallible certainty of God's promise to save those who do believe or accept of Christ, as he is tendered in the Gospel. (2.) Upon the unquestionable evidence of the truth and reality of those graces unto which the promise of salvation is made. (3.) Upon the necessary connection which there is betwixt the means and the end, betwixt true and saving-grace and salvation itself. (4.) And upon the sure testimony of the Spirit of Adoption, witnessing with the spirit or conscience of this or that particular believer by name, that he is a Child of God. Concerning which assurance these three things are to be noted, (1.) That there may be a true saving-faith, where there is not the full assurance of faith. It doth belong to a believer only, but not to every believer. (2.) That it is every believers duty to look after this assurance, to use his utmost endeavors to make his Calling and Election sure. (3.) Though this assurance may be darkened, diminished, and interrupted through sin or temptation, yet it is ever accompanied with so much secret support to the soul, as that it does keep the soul from total and final despair. And so there is room left still for [the second benefit, sc.] peace of conscience; in which there is, (1.) Something privative, sc. a very comfortable freedom (not perfect and universal) from that which Divines call trouble of mind, arising from the apprehension of guilt and of the wrath of God; and though in one who has this assurance, the peace of his mind may be disturbed, yet it is but disturbed, and not absolutely lost; as the peace of a State is not lost by every tumult whereby it is disturbed. (2.) There is something positive in this peace, sc. that sweet calm and satisfaction which there is in the mind upon the attaining of this assurance. [Third benefit, sc.] Joy in the Holy Ghost, sc. a joy springing up in the soul from the comfort and certainty of his testimony, and for the sweetness of his presence. [Fourthly, growth of grace] If not so observably in the leaf and fruit, yet in the root, like a plant in winter. [Perseverance in grace] Not depending upon the mutability of man's will, but upon the immutability of God's decree and purpose to save the believer, upon the unchangeableness of the Fathers love; upon the purchase, merit, and intercession of the Son; upon the abiding presence of the Holy Ghost, together with the victorious efficacy of his grace in the soul; and upon the stability of the Covenant of grace, which is ordered in all things and sure.

A. 37. The Souls of Believers are at their death made perfect in holiness , and do immediately pass into glory , and their bodies being still united to Christ , do rest in their Graves , till the Resurrection .

Artic. xxij. The Romish Doctrine concerning Purgatory, Pardons, — is vainly feigned, and grounded upon no warrant of Scripture, but rather repugnant to the word of God. Hom. vii. Of Prayer, p. 3. The soul of man passing out of the Body, goeth straightways either to Heaven or else to Hell; whereof the one needeth no prayer, and the other is without redemption. — The Scripture doth acknowledge but two places after this life; the one proper to the elect and blessed of God, the other the reprobate and damned souls.

Expl. 37. At death Believers are made perfect in holiness, (1.) Negatively, i. e. they sin no more from that very moment, but are freed from sin forever. (2.) Positively, (1.) The image of God is then perfect in the believers soul; and the full bent of his will is to do the will of God as the Angels do it in heaven, perfectly, and without all reluctancy. (2.) It doth immediately enter into eternal life, when it leaves the body, and not into any middle state, as that of Purgatory. (3.) Their bodies, though separated from their souls for a time, yet they do still remain unseparated from Christ, and therefore do remain under his care whilst they sleep in the grave, so that he will not lose any one member of them.

A. 38. At the Resurrection, Believers being raised up in Glory , shall be openly acknowledged and acquitted in the day of judgment , and made perfectly blessed in full enjoying of God , to all Eternity

To. 2. Hom. xiv. The truth of this most Christian Article (of the resurrection) which is the ground and foundation of our whole Religion.— O most comfortable word, evermore to be born in remembrance; he died (saith St. Paul, 1 Cor. 15.) to put away sin, he rose again to endow us with righteousness,— by his resurrection hath he purchased life and victory for us,—opened the gates of heaven, to enter into life everlasting,—to enjoy an inheritance immortal, that never shall perish, which is laid up in heaven for them that are kept by the power of God through faith,—set with himself among the heavenly Citizens above.—If thou hast received Christ in true faith, with repentance of heart, and full purpose of amendment, thou hast received him for an everlasting gage, or pledge of thy salvation.— Rising with him by our faith, we shall have our bodies likewise raised again from death, to have them glorified in immortality, and joined to his glorious body, having in the mean while his holy Spirit in our hearts, as a seal and pledge of our everlasting inheritance.

Expl. 38. At the resurrection of a Believer, (1.) There is a re-union of a soul which is free from corruption or sin, to a glorified body that is incorruptible. (2.) These two parts being thus re-united, in the very same individual person to whom they did belong before death, will be actually capable, at the resurrection, of all that eternal bliss which Christ hath purchased and prepared for them. (3.) Then Christ will openly acknowledge, own, and approve every true Christian to be a part of his body mystical, and that before his Father and all the holy Angels. (4.) The Believer then shall receive his general discharge and acquitment in a most solemn, public, and triumphant manner, from all manner of guilt whatsoever, so as that none shall be able to lay anything to the charge of God's elect. For though a Believer does receive his private discharge from all his sins at his death, and as it were under the privy Seal; yet his discharge is ratified, confirmed, and as it were entered into the public Records at the day of Judgment.

CHAP. II. Of things to be done in the Ten Commandments; with a short Explanation of 46 A. from 38 to 85.

A. 39. THE duty which God requireth of man, is obedience to his revealed Will.

To. 1. Hom. V. The good works God hath commanded his people to walk in, are such as he hath commanded in the holy Scripture; and not such works as men have studied out of their own brain, of a blind zeal and devotion without the word of God: And by mistaking the nature of good works, man hath most highly displeased God, and hath gone from his Will and Commandments. To. 2. Hom. X. p. 3. Mark diligently what his Will is you should do, and with all your endeavor apply yourselves to follow the same.

Expl. 39. By obedience to the revealed Will of God, we are in the general to understand, the conformity of our wills, affections, words, and actions to the preceptive or commanding Will of God; for all this is comprehended in that one Scripture, Fear God, and keep his Commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. It is the will of God's command which doth declare and require what is our duty; but as for the secret will of God's eternal purpose, though it be a rule to himself, whereby he acts, yet it neither is nor can be the rule of our actions, because not known to us, nor indeed curiously to be inquired after; nor is it barely the revelation of God's will that makes it our duty to observe it, but the revelation of it to this very end and purpose, that man do willingly conform to it.

A. 40. The Rule which God at first revealed to man for his obedience, was the Moral Law .

To. 2. Hom. X. Let us esteem the holy Table of God's Word, — appointed by him, to instruct us in all necessary works, so that we may be perfect before him in the whole course of our life. To. 1. Hom. 1. p. 3. Such hath been the corrupt inclination of man, ever superstitiously given to make new honoring of God of his own head, and then to have more affection and devotion to keep that, than to search out God's holy Commandments and to keep them.—Which we should know, to separate or sever God's Commandments from the commandments of men.— In keeping the Commandments of God, standeth the pure, principal, right honor of God, and which wrought in faith, God hath ordained to be the right trade and pathway to heaven.

Expl. 40. When it is here said, that the Moral Law was at first, i. e. in a state of innocence, revealed to man, i. e. to our first Parents in Paradise; we are not to understand, that this revelation was visible to the eye, as afterwards the writing of it was in two Tables of Stone; nor to be heard by the ear, as when it was first given by God in Mount Sinai: But it was at first revealed inwardly. i. e. it was imprinted in the hearts and minds of our first Parents, (except that positive prohibition of eating the forbidden fruit); yet being in a great part blotted out, was afterwards written in two Tables of Stone.

A. 41. The Moral Law is summarily comprehended in the Ten Commandments .

Ham. V. Christ rehearsing the Commandments, declared, that the Laws of God be the very way that doth lead to everlasting life, and not the Traditions and Laws of men. So that the works of the Moral Commandments of God, be the very true works of Faith, which lead to the blessed life to come. To. 2. Hom. II. —Containing the immutable Law and Ordinances of God, in no age or time to be altered, nor of any persons, of any Nation, of any age to be disobey'd.

Expl. 41. By a Law in the general, we are to understand, the Will of the Lawgiver requiring duty: But here by the Moral Law we are to understand, (1.) More generally, the revealed Will of God, of what man is to believe and do in order to salvation. (2.) More particularly, the Decalogue, which is the sum of all Moral Laws, which are scattered up and down in the Scripture. And this Decalogue (or Ten Words, or Ten Commandments) may be called Moral, (1.) Because of the universality of it; for the Decalogue doth oblige all mankind, it being that very Law, for substance, which was written in very legible Characters in the heart of Adam, and is not quite blotted out of the minds of the veryest Gentiles in the world. (2.) It doth oblige at all times. (3.) The whole man, for it requires as well the internal obedience of the soul, and all its powers and faculties, as outward obedience of the body.

A. 42. The sum of the Ten Commandments, is to love the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our soul, with all our strength, and with all our mind, and our neighbor as ourselves .

Hom. 5. p. 3. Mark diligently what God's will is that you should do, and with all your endeavor apply yourselves to follow the same. 〈◇〉 , You must have assured faith in God, and give yourselves wholly unto him, love him in prosperity and adversity, and dread to offend him ever more. Then for his sake love all men, — Cast in your mind, how you may do good unto all men to your power, and hurt no man.

Expl. 42. The sum of these Ten Commandments, or Ten Words, we may take in one Word, and 'tis Love, for Love is the fulfilling of the Law; and this Love is threefold, (1.) To God, and this must be in the highest degree, or more than we are to love either ourselves or neighbors; yea this later love, in comparison of that we ought to have unto God, should be as no love at all comparatively, for he is to have all our heart, soul, strength, mind; yet (2.) Our love to ourselves must have the next place; for though our love of charity to others must be real, yet this charity must begin at home: However (3.) We are to love our neighbor as ourselves, not for the degree, but for the kind of our love, it must be real and hearty, and without dissimulation.

A. 43. The Preface to the Ten Commandments is in these words, I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

To. 2. Hom. II. — Before he came to the matter that he would specially warn them of, and as it were for a Preface to make them to take the better heed unto it. Hom. xxi. p. 6.—The Bishop of Rome,—left the poor people should know too much, he would not let them have as much of God's word, as the Ten Commandments wholly and perfectly, withdrawing from the Second Commandment, that bewrayeth his impiety by a subtle Sacrilege.

Expl. 43. Whereas in this Preface, God makes use of rational motives to the obedience of his Commands, this doth discover, (1.) The infinite condescension of God, who is pleased to inform our judgments of the reasonableness of his Commands, before he lays his Commands upon our persons. (2.) That men should not be unreasonable in their Commands (as suppose Parents or other Governors), since God is here pleased to add Reason to his Sovereignty.

A. 44. The Preface to the Ten Commandments teacheth us, That because God is the Lord, and our God and Redeemer, therefore we are bound to keep all his Commandments .

To. 1. Hom. V. p. 2. Christ,— reprov'd the Laws and Traditions made by the Scribes and Pharisees, which were not only for good order of the people (as the Civil Laws were), but they were set up so high, that they were made to be right and pure worshipping of God, as they had been equal with God's Laws, or above them; for many of God's Laws could not be kept, but were fain to give way unto them. This arrogancy God detested, that man should so advance his Laws to make them equal with God's Laws, wherein the true honoring and right worshipping of God standeth, to make his Laws for them to be left off. God hath appointed his Laws, whereby his pleasure is to be honored.—They were not content to have them called by the name of other Temporal Laws; but called them holy and godly Traditions; and would have them not only esteemed for a right and true worshipping of God (as God's Laws be indeed), but also for the most high honoring of God, to which the Commandments of God should give place. And for this cause did Christ so vehemently speak against them.

Expl. 44. In the matter of the Preface we have these things observable, (1.) That God is therefore the supreme Lawgiver, because he is the supreme Lord of the whole Creation. As God by virtue of his Sovereignty may himself do with his Creatures what he will, by the same right he may command them to do what he will. (2.) That God can easily enable men to do what he commands them; for that very power that commands his creatures into being, can also command them into action. (3) That the bonds of the Covenant should be as the cords of love, and the bands of a man, sweetly to draw men to obedience; when once we are listed into the number of God's people by Baptism, we are under a more special obligation to obey God not only as our Creator, but as our Father. (4.) That deliverances call for duties; and if a corporal deliverance of the Israelites was an obligation upon them to obey the God of Israel, much more should that spiritual deliverance from the Egyptian slavery of sin be an obligation upon them to obey God.

Rules to be observed for the understanding of the Moral Law, or the Ten Commandments.

- 1 Rule, That Christ the Lawgiver is the best Interpreter of Moses; or that the Gospel is the fullest and clearest Interpreter of the Law. The Writings of the Prophets are many times good Expositions of the Law of Moses. But the Writings of Christ and his Apostles are far more clear and full. In reference to Christ we have a known instance in the 5th of Mat. passim. And the Apostles frequently in their Epistles, as when we are commanded to shun all occasions of evil, to love the Lord Jesus in sincerity, and our neighbor without dissimulation, and not to defraud him any way, &c.
- 2 Rule, That the Law is perfect, Psal. 19.7. as (1.) In itself, not admitting of any additional Precepts in the Gospel, which are generally obliging to all Christians which were not obliging before that Christ came in the flesh. For as for those three Precepts of the Gospel, for a man, (1.) To deny himself. (2.) To take up his Cross; and (3.) To follow Christ; they are rather interpretations and instances of that honor and love we are to have for Christ as God, which is required in the First Command, than any additions obliging, which did not oblige before; nay David himself did in some respect deny himself, take up his Cross, and follow Christ; the middle of these had place when he said, The reproaches of those who reproached thee are fallen upon me; and so Moses denied himself, and Caleb and Joshua followed the Lord fully. (2.) The Law is perfect in its extent and comprehension, in regard of the subject, for it doth command the whole Soul in all its powers and faculties; for it doth require the understanding to know, the judgment to approve that which is good; the will to choose it, the memory to retain it, and the affections to pursue and enjoy it; and upon this account it is said, that the Law is spiritual.
- 3 Rule, Whatever the Law commands, it doth forbid the contrary; as when it commands us to honor our Parents, it doth forbid us to dishonor them; and whatever the Law forbids it commands the contrary; as when it forbids us to take the name of God in vain, it requires us to use any of the names, or titles, or ordinances of God with reverence.
- 4 Rule, When the Law commandeth a duty, (as suppose to worship God) it doth require us to make use of means, occasions, motives and encouragements to it: and when the Law forbids (ex. gr. worshipping of Images), it doth also forbid the occasions, appearances and inducements of any evil.
- 5 Rule, Where a promise is annexed (ex. gr. that the days may be long in the Land, &c.) there the contrary threatening is included; and where a threatening is annexed, there the contrary promise is included.
- 6 Rule, That the duties of the second table must give place to the indispensable and necessary duties of the first table, when they cannot both be performed together, as the love of Parents must yield to the love of God; but in things ceremonial, the duties of the first table must yield to the moral duties of the second; as sacrificing to works of mercy towards man.

A. 45. The first Commandment is, Thou shalt have no other God's before me.

Expl. 45. These words are the first command, and not those, I am the Lord thy God, (as some would have them) in which there is nothing commanded, but only a declaration, who and what that God is who does command.

A. 46. The first Commandment requireth us to know , and acknowledge God to be the only true God, and our God , and to worship and glorify him accordingly

Homil. II. p. 3. Let us take heed and be wise, O ye beloved of the Lord, and let us have no strange God's, but one only God, who made us when we were nothing, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who redeemed us when we were lost, and with his Holy Spirit doth sanctify us.

Homil. V. p. 3. Have an assured Faith in God, and give yourselves wholly unto him, love him in prosperity and adversity, and dread to offend him ever-more. To. II. Hom. xvij. What availeth it the wisemen of the world to have knowledge of the Power and Divinity of God— where they did not honor and glorify him in their knowledges as God? Hom. VI. whom we are to love with all our heart, i. e. that our heart, mind, and study be set to believe his Word, to trust in him, and to love him above all other things that we love best in Heaven or on Earth.

Expl. 46. In the first Commandment there are these 4 things required, (1.) Knowledge of God, as namely, that he is the Creator and Governor of the world, being the supreme Lord and Law giver; as also, that he is infinitely perfect in his Nature, Attributes, Word, and Works. (2.) Faith, which doth consist in our owning and acknowledging him to be such a God as he is held forth in his Word, and in a reliance upon him as such. (3.) Obedience, (which in reference to this command, doth principally consist in the conformity of Man's will to the Will of God. (4.) Love to God implied in these words [before me].

A. 47. The first Commandment forbiddeth the denying , or not worshipping and glorifying the true God as God and our God , and the giving that worship and glory to any other which is due to him alone .

To. 1. Hom. VIII. Whoever in time of reading God's Word, studieth for the glory and honor of this World, is turned from God, — and hath not a special mind to that which is commanded and taught of God; is turned from God, although he doth things of his own devotion and mind, which to him seem better and more to God's honor. To. 2. Hom. xvi. p. 2. It may be boldly and with a safe conscience pronounced of the Bishops of Rome, namely, that they have forsaken and daily do forsake the Commandments of God, to erect and set up their own Constitutions.

Expl. 47. More particular, this Commandment doth forbid these and the like sins; as (1.) Ignorance of God, when men either do not know, or will not consider who God is, and what he would have them do. (2.) Atheism, both in judgment, when men are wavering and doubting about the Being of God, and therefore disputing against it; and in practice, when men live as if there were no God. (3.) Idolatry, which consists either in the worship of a false God, or in worshipping the true God in a false manner, by mingling the corrupt traditions or fancies of men in the worship of God; or in worshipping more God's than that one God who made the world, and is Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, God blessed forever. (4.) Men's being ashamed of, or being negligent in the profession of the true Religion. (5.) The willful omission of any known duties of Religion, as prayer, meditation, praising God, &c. (6.) Wilful infidelity, when men do not believe God, or take him upon his word, or do reject and contemn his commands, promises, or threatenings. (7.) All blasphemous and misbecoming thoughts of God whatsoever; as also all errors and misapprehensions concerning God, or any of those revelations he has given of himself. (8.) All disobedience to his revealed Will. (9.) All unsuitable affections to himself, or anything that bears his stamp, as his Ordinances, Day, Providences, and People. (10.) All unmindfulness and forgetfulness of God. (11.) All carnal presumption, pride, tempting of God, reliance upon and seeking to unlawful means for help in any distress, this being accompanied with the forsaking of and apostasy from the true God. (12.) All impatience and discontent under any evil; as also men's ascribing that which is good to anything besides himself, who is the fountain of all good.

A. 48. These words [before me] in the first Commandment teach us, that God who seeth all things, taketh notice of, and is much displeas'd with the sin of having any other God

To. 2. Hom. I. The eternal and incomprehensible Majesty of God, the Lord of Heaven and Earth, whose seat is in Heaven, and the Earth is his footstool,—calleth upon his people, to mark, and take heed, and that upon the peril of their souls, to the charge which he giveth them,—Thou shalt worship the Lord God, and him only shalt thou serve. Adjoining penalty to the transgressors, and reward to the obedient,—to move to obedience and observing this the Lord's great Law,— which might ingender fear in our hearts of disobedience herein, being in the Lord's sight so great an offense and abomination.

Expl. 48. Here is further clearly intimated, (1.) That God would have the first room in our estimation. (2.) In our affections, i. e. that we prize and love him above all.

A. 49. The second Commandment is, Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven Image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them: For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation, of them that hate me, and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my Commandments.

To. 2. Hom. I. The Scriptures use the two words (Idols and Images) indifferently for one thing always. They be words of divers things (Gr. & Lat.), but one in sense and signification in the Scriptures, and matters of Religion. — Wherefore our Images, if publicly suffered in Temples and Churches, be indeed none other but Idols, as unto which Idolatry hath been, is, and ever will be committed.—Hath it not been preached unto you since the beginning, &c. How by the Creation of the World, and the greatness of the work, they might understand the Majesty of God, the Creator and Maker of all, to be greater than that it should be expressed or set forth in any Image or bodily Similitude. And that in the First Table, and the beginning thereof,—is this Doctrine aforesaid (not briefly touched, but) at large set forth, and that with denunciation of destruction to the contemners and breakers of this Law, and their posterity after them.

Expl. 49. We have here principally observable, (1.) The order; (2.) The matter of the Commandment. From the order, we are to observe, that God doth prefer the inward worship of the heart, which is required in the first Command, to the outward worship of the body, which is here principally directed, that the later, or that of the body, without the former is but hypocritical; and the former without the later but partial; so that God is to be worship'd with all our bodies and spirits. Those therefore who do present their bodies in Idol-worship (as that of the Mass) and yet plead they keep their hearts for God, are here condemned. (2.) The matter, or argument and scope of the Command, i. e. to prevent all miscarriages and abuses in bodily worship, and to instruct men how they may present their bodies as well as their souls a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God. Yet to prevent mistakes about what is forbidden in this Command, we are to note these two things. (1.) That not all making of Images or Pictures, or likenesses of the creatures is here forbidden; for then it would follow, that a man might not so much as frame an Idea in his own fancy of one man's being like another, contrary to the very notion of truth, which is nothing else but a conformity betwixt the mind and the object. (2.) Nor is all civil use, or historical representations of things to the eye (which is so helpful to the understanding and memory) here forbidden.

A. 50. The second Commandment requireth the receiving, observing , and keeping pure and entire all such religious Worship and Ordinances, as God hath appointed in his Word .

Hom. II. p. 3. Let us honor and worship for Religions sake none but God; and him let us worship and honor as he will himself, and hath declared by his word, that he will be worship'd and honored, not in, nor by Images or Idols, which he hath most straitly forbidden; neither in kneeling, lighting of Candles, burning of Incense, — to believe that we should please him for all these be abomination before God; but let us honor and worship God in spirit and in truth, fearing and loving him above all things, trusting in him only, calling upon him, and praying to him only, praising and lauding of him only, and all other in him. Hom. XX. He requireth a sincere and pure love of godliness, and of the true worshipping and serving of God, i. e. that forsaking all manner of things that are repugnant and contrary to God's will, we do give our hearts unto him.

Expl. 50. In the general, is here required that the bodily worshipping of God be performed only in such a manner, both for substance and circumstances, as God doth require or allow, or at least is not expressly and consequentially contradicted in his word. More particularly▪ (1.) It doth require our utmost and constant care and endeavor, to observe and preserve all holy Ordinances, and external Church-privileges in their purity and freedom from all manner of corrupt mixtures in any kind, whereby God is provoked; fasting, prayer, thanksgiving, hearing, reading the Word, singing of Psalms, administration and participation of Gospel-Institutions, as the Sacraments, Swearing, the Discipline and Censures of the Church, Maintenance of Gospel Ministers, &c. (2.) All outward decency in such external Rites and Ceremonies as are warrantably used in Religion, especially in public. (3.) All outward reverence in gesture, speech, and behavior, in the worship of God. (4) All disapproving, detesting, and loathing all manner of Idolatries, Will-worship, superstition, together with all the monuments, and occasions, and appearances thereof.

A. 51. The second Commandment forbiddeth the worshipping of God by Images , or any other way not appointed in his Word .

To. 2. Hom II. p. 1. Lest the Doctrine against Images should not be marked or remarked, the same is written and required not in one but in sundry places of the word of God,—Neither could the notableness of the place, being the very beginning of the very loving Lord's Law, make us to mark it.—So that if either the multitude or plainness of the places might make us to understand, or the earnest charge that God giveth in these places move us to regard; or the horrible plagues, punishment, and dreadful destruction, threatened to such worshippers of Images or Idols, setters up or maintainers of them, might ingender any fear in our hearts, we would once leave and forsake this wickedness, being in the Lord's light so great an offense and abomination. —p. 3. Images and Image-worshipping were in the primitive Church (which was most pure and incorrupt) abhor'd and detested as abominable, and contrary to true Christian Religion.—p. 3. Idolatry cannot be separated from Images any long time, but as an inseparable accident, or as a shadow follows the body when the Sun shineth, so Idolatry followeth and cleaveth to the public having of Images in Temples and Churches. —It is not possible to keep men from Idolatry, if Images be suffered publicly; —the Images of God, our Savior, the Virgin, the Apostles, Martyrs, and others of notable holiness, of all others most dangerous.

Expl 51. More particularly this command forbiddeth (1.) absolutely and altogether the making of any kind of Images of God, or of any person in the Trinity (at least) as God. (2.) It forbiddeth all making of Images in order to the worshipping of God in them or by them, or any way abusing them in the true Religion, as conceiting the presence of God to be in or with an Image in a more especial manner than elsewhere. (3.) All the means and direct occasions of Idolatry, all inventions, traditions, and corruptions of men in God's worship, or about the worship of God. (4.) All manner of witchcraft, or consulting those that have familiar Spirits. (5.) All worshipping of Images, as well as of God before them, together with all that religious respect that is given to them, as in shrining, clothing them, &c. (6.) All profaning, neglecting, opposing, or contemning of the worship and Ordinances of Christ; as also all kind of Simony and Sacrilege.

A. 52. The Reasons annexed to the second Commandment, are God's Sovereignty over us , his propriety in us , and the zeal he hath to his own Worship .

Hom. II. p. 1. Concerning none other matter did God give more, or more earnest and express Laws to his people than those that concern the true worshipping of him, and the avoiding and fleeing of Idols, and Images, and Idolatry, for that both the said Idolatry is most repugnant to the right worshipping of him, and his true glory, above all other vices, and that he knew the proneness and inclination of man's corrupt kind and nature, to that most odious and abominable Vice.

Expl. 52. The reasons here annexed are such as are attempered and suited to those two affections in man; namely, [fear and hope] which are the two hinges upon which all Religion doth turn; for (1.) here is a severe threatening to move and stir up that passion of fear which may prevent or restrain our disobedience to this command, or at least to scare us from continuing in any kind of Idolatry, Superstition, &c. which it doth forbid. And in this threatening, we have (1.) The heinousness of the Sin forbidden; for 'tis here intimated spiritual Whoredom, because God is here represented as jealous over his people that are entered into a marriage-Covenant with him; under the notion of a Husband that is enraged with jealousy in reference to the unchaste behavior of his Wife. (2.) In the punishment threatened, the grievousness of the sin is intimated; when God doth threaten to punish this Sin to the third and fourth Generation. (3.) 'Tis here implied, that this Sin is a hating of God, when 'tis said (of them that hate me) in reference to Idolaters. (2dly,) We have here a gracious promise for the encouraging of hope to the careful observers of this command; and in this promise there is observable, (1.) God's love to them in showing mercy to thousands of them. (2.) Their love to God in keeping his commands; and consequently the love of the world or anything more than God is flat Idolatry, and the Apostle doth call covetousness by that name.

A. 53. The third Commandment is, Thou shalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his Name in vain.

Hom. VII. Almighty God, to the intent his holy Name should be had in honor, and evermore be magnified of the people, commandeth that no man should take his name vainly in his mouth, threatening punishment unto him that irreverently abuseth it by swearing, forswearing, and blasphemy.

Expl. 53. The infinitely wise God very well knowing that if any seem to be Religious and bridleth not his tongue, that man's Religion is vain; he doth therefore in this command lay a restraint upon man's tongue, that it may not any way break forth to the dishonor of his great name; for although God does give a particular command for the direction of the tongue in reference to our neighbor, sc. the ninth Command, yet he doth provide for his own honor first in this third command.

A. 54. The third Commandment requireth the holy and reverent use of God's Names , Titles, Attributes , Ordinances , Word , and Works .

Artic. 39. As we confess vain and rash swearing is forbidden Christian men by our Lord Jesus Christ and James his Apostle: So we judge, that Christian Religion doth not prohibit, but that a man may swear when the Magistrate requireth in a cause of Faith and Charity, so it be done according to the Prophets teaching, in justice, judgment, and truth. —Thus an Oath (if it have with it these three conditions) is a part of God's glory, which we are bound by his Commandments to give unto him.

Expl. 54. In this 'tis observable, that when the abuse of God's name in any kind whatsoever, is here forbidden; the Religious and reverent use of it is thereby commanded. Now by God's Name we are in the general to understand that whereby he is in a peculiar manner made known to us, and distinguished from all false God's whatsoever, just as a man is made known by his name, and distinguished from all other men; not but that more men may have the same name, but that there doth belong some peculiar property to a man of such a particular name, whereby he is known from everybody else: and so though there be God's many, and Lord's many in name; yet to us there is but one God, who by something or other in his Titles, attributes, words and works is distinguished from all other God's: ex. gr. when we call God (wise) we are to understand that he is infinitely so; and consequently distinct from all his creatures hereby. Then next for his Ordinances, Word, and Works; they must be holily and reverently used (that is, with a serious sense of his Divine Majesty) whether these be used in our thoughts, words or actions; but most especially this command requireth, that when we take Oaths or make lawful vows, we do it from such principles, in such a religious manner, and to such right ends, as that the Name of God be thereby honored.

A. 55. The third Commandment forbiddeth all profaning, or abusing of anything whereby God maketh himself known

Hom. VII. He forbiddeth all vain swearing and forswearing, both by God and by his creatures, as the common use of swearing, in buying, selling, and our daily communication.—When men do swear of custom, in reasoning, buying, and selling, or other daily communications (as many be common and great swearers), such kind of swearing is ungodly, unlawful, and forbidden by the Commandment of God, for such swearing is nothing else but taking of God's holy Name in vain. To. 2. Hom. X. p. 2. Let us not be scorers, jesters, and deriders of the Scripture, for that is the uttermost token and show of a Reprobate, of a plain enemy to God his Wisdom.

Expl. 55. Here is forbidden in the general, all manner of profanation, or abuse of any name of God, as any of his Titles, as wise, good, holy, &c. any of his works, as those of Creation or Providence; his Word written or preached; any of his Ordinances, as Prayer, Preaching, Sacraments; as when we make any unhandsom reflection upon any of these in our words or carriage; or do not use them at all when we should, and when we do not as we ought: more particularly here are forbid; (1.) All rash Oaths, whether before a Magistrate, or in a man's private passion. (2.) All horrid and profane Oaths, as when men swear Wounds, Blood, &c. and use their Dammees and Sinkmees. (3.) All blasphemous Oaths, ex. gr. All such wherein the name of God, or Christ are profanely abused. (4.) All mincing or contracting of Oaths; and here some tell us, that I marry, is but the contracting of I by St. Mary, though some use it only as an expletive. (5.) All mock-Oaths, or aping of them. (6.) All injurious and perjurious Oaths. (7.) All cursing, &c. (8.) All violation of lawful Oaths, Vows, Covenants. (9.) All willful forbearing of Oaths in necessary cases. (10.) All profane scoffing, &c.

A. 56. The reason annexed to the third Commandment is, that however the breakers of this Commandment may escape punishment from men, yet the Lord our God will not suffer them to escape his righteous judgment .

To. 1. Hom. VII. The most holy Name of God being commonly used and abused, vainly and unreverently talked of, sworn by, and forsworn to the breaking of God's Commandment, is the procurement of his indignation. P. 2. And though such perjur'd men's falsehood he now kept secret, yet it shall be opened at the last day, when the secrets of all men's hearts shall be opened to all the world.—Almighty God will be a swift witness against them,—and the curse shall enter into the house of the false and perjur'd man.

Expl. 56. In the reason of the command 'tis intimated. (1.) That God in a special manner is the avenger of those that abuse his name. (2.) The certainly of this vengeance. (3.) That men are apt to be remiss in punishing this Sin.

A. 57. The fourth Commandment is, Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gate. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath-day, and hallowed it.

Expl. 57. This command being the fourth in order, is the last of the first Table, or of those commands which do concern piety towards God, and in the amplification of it, doth require charity and mercy towards man, especially towards inferiors, (as Son, Daughter, Servant, &c.) and therefore in requiring both duties of piety and mercy, it doth as it were glew both the Tables of the Law together. As to the matter of the Command, (1.) Here is a Preface to be noted, Remember; as if God should have said, though you should forget all the other Nine Commands (which I would not have you to do neither), yet be sure you forget not this. In which [Remember] there is implied, (1.) The importance of the Command, that it doth import no less than the whole Religion and duty of man towards God, and therefore to be remembered. (2.) The aptness of men to forget this Command, both because the doctrine of it is not to be learnt from the light of nature (at least not so clearly as the other Commands), and because the duties of it do much cross the grain with corrupt nature. (2dly,) The thing to be remembered is the Sabbath-day, or that day of Rest (which God has appointed) from all manner of employment and business, except works of duty to God, charity to man, and of absolute necessity, relief, or mercy towards the inferior creatures. How it is to be remembered, we have in the next A.

A. 58. The fourth Commandment requireth the keeping holy to God such settimes as he hath appointed in his Word, expressly one whole day in seven, to be a holy Sabbath unto himself

To. 2. Hom. VIII. It appeareth to be God's good-will and pleasure, that we should at special times, and in special places, gather ourselves together, to the intent his name might be renowned, and his glory set forth in the Congregation and Assembly of his Saints.—And therefore by this Commandment, we ought to have time, as one day in the week, wherein we ought to rest, yea from our lawful and needful works.

Expl. 58. 'Tis in this A. expressed in the general, how the Sabbath is to be kept holy, as also any other day (as suppose) of Fasting or Thanksgiving, which man doth appoint according to God's will. Now to sanctify a day (and particularly the Sabbath) is to employ it wholly and solely to that use for which it is sanctified, or set apart by God, whether it be in reference to the public or private exercises of Religion. And it must be the whole Sabbath-day (yet with a merciful respect to nature and the constitution of men's bodies, for God will have mercy and not sacrifice) beginning at the dawning of the day, because Christ the Sun of Righteousness then rose, and it is to continue till midnight, for so long was Paul engaged in Sabbath-exercises, Act. 20. 7,—10. This is the time required by this Law, but if men have not strength of body to continue so long, so there be in them a willing mind, God will accept of what strength they have, and not what they have not.

A. 59. From the beginning of the world to the Resurrection of Christ, God appointed the seventh day of the week to be the weekly Sabbath, and the first day of the week ever since to continue to the end of the World, which is the Christian Sabbath

To. 2. Hom. VIII. Remember saith God, that thou keep holy the Sabbath-day, upon which day, as it is plain in Act. 13. the people accustomedly resorted together, and heard diligently the Law and the Prophets read among them. And albeit this Commandment doth not bind Christian people, as touching the precise keeping the seventh day, after the manner of the Jews; for we keep now the first day, which is our Sunday (Dominical or Lord's-day) and make that our Sabbath, i. e. our day of rest, in honor of our Savior Christ, who as upon that day rose from death, conquering it triumphantly; yet notwithstanding, whatsoever is found in the Commandment appertaining to the Law of Nature, as a thing most godly, most just, and needful, for the setting forth of God's glory, it ought to be retained and kept of all good Christian people.—If we will be children of our heavenly Father, we must be careful to keep the Christian Sabbath, which is the Sunday, (i. e. Dominical or Lord's-day), not only for that it is God's express Commandment, but also to declare ourselves to be loving children, in following the example of our gracious Lord and Father,—This Example and Commandment of God, the godly Christian people began to follow immediately after the ascension of our Lord Christ,—choosing a standing day, not the Seventh, which the Jews kept; but the Lord's-day, the day of the Lord's Resurrection, the day after the Seventh day, which is the First day of the week.

Expl. 59. The old Sabbath (as we see by this A. was the seventh day of the week in order, that is, the Jews did observe our Saturday; for their seventh-day-Sabbath, and the reason of it is expressed in the command; sc. God rested from Creation-work that day. But the morality, or indispensable and perpetual obligation of this command doth not necessarily require the seventh in order, for that is Ceremonious and abrogated together with the Jewish Sabbath: but it doth necessarily require the keeping holy of a seventh day for number, or a seventh part of the week to be spent in Sabbath-duties, which seventh part is now by the Resurrection of Christ upon the first day, and by his own immediate authority (or by that which he gave to his Apostles) fixed upon that first day, (now commonly called our Sunday, or Dominical, i. e. Lord's-day) and no other even to the end of the world. Though there be no express mention made of this change from the last to the first day in Scripture, there being no question moved about it that we read of in the Apostles time, yet by consequence the matter of fact is clear.

A. 60. The Sabbath is to be sanctified by an holy resting all that day, even from such worldly employments and recreations as are lawful on other days, and spending the whole time in public and private exercises of God's Worship , except so much as is to be taken up in the works of necessity and mercy .

To. 2. Hom. VIII. God hath given express charge to all men, that upon the Sabbath-day, which is now our Sunday (i. e. Lord's-day) they should cease from all weekly and work-day labor, that like as God himself rested and consecrated it to quietness and rest from labor, so God's obedient people should use the Sunday (i. e. Lord's-day) holily, and rest from their common and daily business, and also give themselves wholly to heavenly exercises of God's true Religion and service. — Thus it may plainly appear, that God's will and Commandment was to have a solemn time, and standing day in the week, wherein the people should come together, and have in remembrance his wonderful benefits, and to render him thanks for them, as appertaineth to loving, kind, and obedient people.— St. John saith, Rev. 1. I was in the spirit on the Lord's-day. Since which time God's people hath always, in all Ages, without any gain-saying, used to come together upon the Sunday, to celebrate and honor the Lord's blessed name, and carefully to keep that day in holy rest and quietness, both man, woman, child, servant, and stranger.

Expl. 60. As to the particular manner of the Sanctification of the Sabbath it is there expressed to be (1) by an holy rest, by which we are not to understand that brutal and sluggish rest whereby men do indulge themselves in sloth and laziness, (as if their bodies were not to move though it be to the Church) upon this day; but this rest must be from all kind of employment, whether it be of body or mind which doth any way indispose a man for or distract him in the service of God; whether such actions, thoughts or words be in themselves sinful, which men ought to forbear and rest from at all times; or in themselves lawful, as the cares, thoughts, and business of a man's honest calling, they are to be forborne this day, and much more all kind of recreations, whether lawful or no. (2) By exercising ourselves unto godliness, not only in those duties of Religion which we perform on other days either alone, or with others, as Prayer, reading Scripture, and other good Books, holy Conference, but in those duties also which are more peculiar to this day, as Hearing, Meditation, receiving of the Sacraments, Singing of Psalms, &c. and thus the whole day is to be spent, except so much of it as is to be taken up in works of such eminent necessity as is brought upon men by the Providence of God, and not such necessity as men make for their own gain or pleasure, and in works of mercy.

A. 61. The fourth Commandment forbiddeth the omission or careless performance of the Duties required , and the profaning the day by Idleness, or doing that which is in itself sinful , or by unnecessary thoughts, words, or works, about worldly employments or recreations .

To. 2. Hom. VIII. For the transgression and breach of the Sabbath-day, God hath declared himself much to be grieved, as Num. 15. but alas! the wicked boldness of those that will be accounted God's people, who pass nothing at all of keeping and hallowing the Sunday (i. e. Lord's-day)—They, though there be no extreme need, must drive and carry,—row and ferry,—buy and sell on the Sunday (i. e. Lord's-day), they use all days alike. The other, though they will not travel, nor labor, as on the week-day, yet they will not rest in holiness, as God commandeth; but they rest in ungodliness and filthiness, prancing in their pride, pranking and pricking, pointing and painting themselves to be gorgeous and gay; they rest in excess and superfluity, in gluttony and drunkenness, like Rats and Swine; they rest in brawling and railing, in quarrelling and fighting; they rest in wantonness, in toyish talking, in filthy fleshliness: So that it doth evidently appear, that God is more dishonored, and the Devil better served on the Sunday (i. e. Lord's-day) than upon all the days in the week beside.—The Beasts which are commanded to rest on the Sunday (i. e. Lord's-day) honor God better than this kind of people; for they offend not God, they break not their holy days.

Expl. 61. More particularly this command forbiddeth (1) all unpreparedness for the Sanctification of the Sabbath. (2) All forgetfulness of the day or duties of it, and both these in that one word [Remember.] (3) All negligent omission or performance of any Sabbath-exercise, as Prayer, hearing the Word, Meditation, &c. (4) All direct profaning of the Sabbath by doing nothing, or by bodily sloth; for on this day we are in an especial manner to glorify God with our bodies and spirits which are God's. (5) All manner of words, thoughts, affections, cares, designs, and actions which do directly tend to: (1) Worldly profit and gain, as journeys, fairs, markets, and all manner of buying and selling, except of that of which there is a real and present necessity towards the sustenance of man's life. (2) To sensual pleasure, as all manner of gaming, bowling, idle talking and walking, and all such kind of visits as have more of Complement than of real necessity in them, more of recreation in them to the body or carnal mind, than of Religion towards God, or of charity towards our neighbor. (6) All manner of servile works, not only in reference to Superiors and Governors, but also in reference to those that are under their care and charge, for that all excuses for worldly or sinful employment may be taken away from all persons: 'Tis said neither, thou, nor thou, &c.

A. 62. The Reasons annexed to the fourth Commandment are, God's allowing us six days of the week for our own employments, his challenging special propriety in the seventh, his own example, and his blessing the Sabbath-day.

To. 2. Hom. VIII. Like as it appeareth by this Commandment, that no man in the six days ought to be slothful or idle, but diligently to labor in that state wherein God hath set him. — So God doth not only command the observation of this holy day, but also by his own example doth stir and provoke us to the keeping of it. Wherefore, O ye people of God! lay your hands upon your hearts, repent and amend this grievous and dangerous wickedness, stand in awe of the Commandments of God, gladly follow the example of God himself, be not disobedient to the godly order of Christ's Church, used and kept from the Apostles time to this day. Fear the displeasure and just plagues of almighty God, if ye be negligent, and forbear not laboring and travelling on the Sabbath-day or Sunday (i. e. Lord's-day), and do not resort together, to celebrate and magnify God's blessed Name, in quiet, holiness, and godly reverence.

Expl 62. The reasons are here ranked under three heads, (1) the equity of the thing commanded, God allowing us six days for our honest and ordinary employments we may well give him one in seven, and be content to spend that cheerfully in his service, (Six days shalt thou labor, &c.) (2) From God's Propriety in this day, this is the day which the Lord hath made, or instituted and appointed, Psal. 118.23. And may he not do what he will with his own, may he not enjoy it to be spent in his service if he please. (3) From God's example in resting the seventh day; not that we are therefore to rest on the seventh day in order, because God did so after he had created the world and all things therein; but that we are to spend (according to the tenor of this Command, a seventh day which is now our Dominical, or Sunday, in an holy rest unto the Lord. (4) From God's end in blessing, and sanctifying this day, or in setting it a-part to holy uses, namely that we should so use it, and thereby receive the blessing of the Sabbath from the Lord of the Sabbath.

A. 63. The fifth Commandment is, Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

Expl. 63. This command which is here called the fifth, is by the Apostle called the first Commandment with promise, Ephes. 6.1, 2. (i. e.) to which this promise of long life is expressly made, it being also the first command of the second Table.

A. 64. The fifth Commandment requireth the preserving the honor, and performing the duties belonging to everyone in their several places and relations, as Superiors, Inferiors, or Equals.

To. 1. Hom. V. p. 3. Obey all your Superiors and Governors, serve your Masters faithfully and diligently▪ as well in their absence as in their presence, not for dread of punishment only, but for conscience sake, knowing that you are bound so to do by God's Commandments. Hom. X. p. 2. Every degree of people in their vocation, calling, and office, hath appointed them their duty and order; some are in high degree, some in low; some Kings and Princes, some Inferiors and Subjects, Ministers and People, Masters and Servants, Fathers and Children, Husbands and Wives, &c.

Expl. 64. Here is required (1) something in general of all, that they give to all that honor which is due unto them in their different places and relations, whether they be Superiors in age, parts, gifts, or authority, who are there so called by that obliging name of parents, that men may yield what is due unto such with all childlike and filial respect, and because in the beginning Parents were Magistrates; or Superiors in power; or whether they be equal to us or our Inferiors image, power, &c. for in both these capacities there is due to them love, gratitude, and such offices of Christianity, civility, or friendship which are suitable and proper to them. (2) Something in special is required from Children to be given to their natural Parents; and 'tis all expressed in this one word (honor). And 'tis observable that the command is laid on all Children, of both sexes, and of what age, or rank soever though they be Children of Princes and Nobles; and the honor due unto natural father and mother, or to those who are in their stead, as father and mother-in-law, grand-father or Grand-mother, Uncle or Aunt, Guardian, Tutor, &c. It is (1) the honor of respect or love, both in heart, words and behavior; for this law on Children is a law of love, and as it requires that they love one another, so also that they love their Parents. (2) The honor of Reverence, (i. e.) Children must fear as well as love their Parents, they must stand in awe of them as being under their authority, and that thereby they may be kept from offending their Parents. (3) The honor of Obedience which proceeds from both the other; 'tis love or fear that makes Children obey. Now in order to this Obedience the rod of correction is a scepter so needful in Parents hands, that Solomon reckons that Parent to hate his child that doth not use it, Prov. 13.24. (4) The honor of help or recompense, (i. e.) As Parents need help, and the child is able or hath opportunity to do it, he or she must thankfully requite thereby their labor of love.

A. 65. The fifth Commandment forbiddeth the neglecting, or doing anything against the honor and duty which belongeth to everyone in their several places and relations .

To. 1. Hom. V. p. 3. Disobey not your Fathers and Mothers, but honor them, help them, and please them to your power. Hom. X. St. Paul threateneth no less pain than everlasting damnation to all disobedient persons, to all resisters. — p. 2. Yet let us believe undoubtedly (good Christian people) that we may not obey Kings, Magistrates, or any other (though they be our own Fathers), if they would command us to do anything contrary to God's Commandments. p. 3. And here let us take heed, that we understand not these, or such other like places (which so straitly command obedience to superiors, and so straitly punished rebellion and disobedience to the same) to be meant in any condition of the pretended and coloured power of the Bishop of Rome. For truly the Scripture of God alloweth no such usurped power, full of enormities, abusions, and blasphemies.—He ought therefore rather to be called Antichrist, and the Successor of the Scribes and Pharisees, than Christ's Vicar, or St. Peters Successor.

Expl. 65. But more particularly in reference to natural Parents (or those who stand in their room) these miscarriages are forbidden to Children. (1) All manner of contempt of the persons of Parents, especially when by reason of old age, sickness, or natural infirmities, they are not able to manage their Parental authority either as they ought, or have done, or when by the Providence of God their repute or estate is low in the world. (2) All slighting of their good instructions, example, counsel, directions, reproof and correction. As God would not have his own chastening and instruction despised, so neither that of Parents, and therefore he calls that child a fool, (by the mouth of Solomon) a scorner, and brutish, who is guilty hereof. (3) All slighting of Parents commands, and of their pleasure whether in reference to duty to be performed by them, whether in matters civil or religious; or in reference to the disposal of themselves in Marriage, or in any calling, place and employment. (4) All slighting of the tenderness and watchfulness of Parents, by doing that on purpose which doth either disturb their passions, or disquiet their minds. (5) All mocking, deriding, or imitating their weaknesses and misbehaviour, or any way disgracing them, as Absalom did his fathers government, and as Cham did in discovering his fathers nakedness. Much more (6) here are forbidden all cursing of them, and bitter railing at them. (7) All such carriage in Children as does not redound by way of reflection, as well as what does not tend directly to the Parents honor.

A. 66. The Reason annexed to the fifth Commandment is, a promise of long life and prosperity (as far as it shall serve for God's glory, and their own good) to all such as keep this Commandment .

To. 1. Hom. X. p. 3. By obedience to our superiors, shall we please God, and have the exceeding benefit, peace of conscience, rest and quietness here in this world, and after this life enjoy a better life. To. 2. Hom. XXI. p. 3. Good and obedient Subjects are in God's favor, and be partakers of peace, quietness, and security, with other God's manifold blessings in this world, and by his mercies through our Savior Christ, of life everlasting also in the world to come.

Expl. 66. In the general, we have one great reason from the promise of prosperity and long life, particularly annexed to this Command; in which promise there are two things, (1) The peculiarity of the blessing promised to the obedience of this Command, for obedient children may be sure of the blessing promised, when it may be a blessing. (2) The greatness of the blessing, for of all temporal blessings 'tis the greatest, sc. life; and then here is that which is so sweet to nature in this life, 'tis long life and prosperous withal, otherwise it would not be a blessing. Yet more particularly, obedience to Parents is indispensable, because (1) God requires it in the next place to that which he claimeth for himself; and has therefore placed this Law next to the Commands of the first Table. (2) The Law of Nature doth in a peculiar manner require this in all Nations, even the most blind and barbarous; yea instinct of Nature in the brute creatures doth teach them some kind of respect to their Sires and Damms.

A. 67. The sixth Commandment is, Thou shalt not kill.

Expl. 67. The fifth Command did concern special duties to special persons, sc. the obedience of Children towards their Parents; but this Command doth reach all persons in general; and the end of it is not only to preserve man's life, but humanity itself, and therefore this [Thou] in the prohibition doth forbid murder to all persons.

A. 68. The sixth Commandment requireth all lawful endeavors to preserve our own life, and the life of others.

Hom. V. p. 3. Cast in your minds, how you may do good unto all men, unto your power, and hurt no man. —Oppress not, beat not, neither hate a 〈...〉; but help and succor every man as you may▪ yea, even your enemies that hate you, that speak evil of you, and that do hurt you. Hom. VI. Cherish good and harmless men,—and encourage with rewards to do well.

Expl. 68. Now in order to this end, these things may be very helpful, (1) Humanity, or a general respect of kindness towards all, whether in offices of love or of pity. (2) A slowness to anger, after the example of God, whom we so much provoke; and this is called lenity, or meekness of spirit, for which Moses was so eminent. (3) A study to be quiet, both outwardly from all brawling and contention; and inwardly from all revengeful thoughts, purposes, passions; as also a diligent care in outward demeanour, to avoid all occasions, temptations, and practices which do tend to stir up wrath. (4) Placableness, or an easiness to be reconciled, and to forget and to forgive injuries and affronts. (5) A readiness to use all lawful and proper means to defend our own or neighbors life, as we are called to it by the Law of Nature, Humanity, and Religion, as we are in a capacity to do it. (6) Such a cheerfulness of spirit as tends to the health of the body. (7) Christian temperance and moderation in the use of the creatures, in bodily labor, and lawful recreations. (8) A conscientious care to use such Physic

(as is prescribed by those who are skilful therein) which is either for the preservation or recovery of health. (9) Care to save our own and others souls.

A. 69. The sixth Commandment forbiddeth the taking away of our own life , or the life of our neighbor unjustly , and whatsoever tendeth thereunto .

To. 2. Hom. XXI. p. 3. Robberies and murders of all sins are most loathed of most men, being against the second Table of God's Law. To. 1. Hom. VI. Delay not rebukes and punishments of those that offend, but give them in due time, lest they fall headlong.

Expl. 69. Here (1) Negatively, This Command forbids not (1) All kind of war, for some is lawful. (2) Nor the execution of public justice in capital punishments upon capital offenders. (3) Nor self-defense, against violence in some cases. (4) Nor moderate anger, where there is just cause, as ex. gr. in the case of reproof, and upon the like warrantable occasions. But (2) Positively, Here is forbidden, (1) Self-murder, both direct, as a man's hanging, drowning, stabbing, &c. himself; indirect, as surfeiting, drunkenness, and the neglect of any lawful means for the preservation or repair of health; as of meat, drink, physic▪ &c. (2) Murder of our neighbor, (1) Directly, when wittingly and out of hatred (and without a just call) a man doth either by himself, or by means of another, take away the life of his neighbor. (2) Murtherous thoughts, and hatred of him without a cause. (3) All inhumanity and unmercifulness, or want of compassion. (4) All neglect of, or the withdrawing of our lawful defense. (5) All quarrelsome broils and brawlings. (6) All Duels, because in this case men wrest the Sword of Justice out of the Magistrates hand, that they may carve out justice (or rather revenge) for themselves. (7) All provoking speeches and behavior.

A. 70. The seventh Commandment is, Thou shalt not commit adultery.

Hom. XI. By the which [Adultery], although it be properly understood of the unlawful commixtion or joining together of a married man with any woman beside his wife, or of a wife with any man beside her husband; yet thereby is signified also all unlawful use of those parts which be ordained for generation.

Expl. 70. As the former precept did concern the life, so this doth concern the chastity of our neighbor. And as natural and regular self-love should be the rule and standard of our love to our neighbor, according to which we are to act in the preservation of his life; so that love we ought to have to ourselves, and that care we ought to have for the preservation of our own chastity, we ought also to have for the preservation of our neighbors chastity, otherwise we do not love our neighbor as ourselves.

A. 71. The seventh Commandment requireth the preservation of our own , and our neighbors chastity , in heart , speech , and behavior .

To. 1. Hom. XI. Christ doth not only establish the Law against Adultery, and make it of full force; but teacheth us an exact and full perfection of purity and cleanness of life, both to keep our bodies undefiled, and our hearts pure and free from all evil thoughts, carnal desires, and fleshly consents.

Expl. 71. Here is (1) something required in the general, and that is the utmost endeavors to preserve chastity amongst all persons, and that honorable state of marriage from all the lusts of uncleanness, for as well the bodies of others as our own, are, or should be, the consecrated Temples of the Holy Ghost, and therefore are not to be defiled by the sacrilegious and abominable lusts of filthiness. (2) In particular, for this chastity is required (1) In heart, or soul, as it comprehends all the powers and faculties thereof, with all the inward actings of these; as, (1) That in the understanding the thoughts be pure, chaste, and clean; and that whatever things are honest, in order to the preservation of chastity, we think on these things. (2) That the will do make its choice accordingly. (3) That the memory be a faithful Register only of the rules, and laws, and examples of modesty and chastity, and not to keep the Records of lust, nor to be Master of the Rowls to the spirit of uncleanness. (4) That nothing be represented upon the stage of fancy, but what doth become godliness and honesty. (5) That the affections do hug and embrace nothing that is defiled with the impurity of lust. (2dly,) Here is required chastity in speech, that men's discourse and communication be such as doth tend to promote and preserve good manners, to credit the Gospel, and to give good example to others (especially the younger sort of people), as the Holy Ghost (that Spirit of purity) has left us an example of purity in speech, when he speaks only of that (which considered in itself) has nothing of guilt, but only something of that natural shame upon it which was bequeathed to us by our first Parents; ex. gr. he knew her, he covered his feet, &c. Judge. 3.24. 1 Sam. 1.19. (3 dly,) In behavior, that our gestures, postures, garb, apparel, company, diet, and whole demeanour be such both before God and men, as becomes the purity of that Gospel which does not only teach to deny worldly, but also to abstain from all fleshly lusts, to avoid the appearance of them, and to hate the very garment spotted with the flesh.

A. 72. The seventh Commandment forbiddeth all unchaste thoughts , words , and actions .

To. 1. Hom. V. p. 2. Commit no manner of adultery, fornication, or other unchastness, in will, nor in deed, with any other man's wife, widow, or maid. Hom. XI. Here is whoredom, fornication, and all other uncleanness forbidden, to all kinds of people, all degrees, and all ages without exception.

Expl. 72. (1) By unchaste thoughts, we are to understand all impure and unchaste motions of the Soul in any of its faculties, as also all the cherishing and indulging of these inwardly and secretly, as by consent, allowance, keeping them in mind with delight, and acting them in the fancy. (2) In unchaste words is here forbidden, all kind of Ribaldry, Bawdry, Balladry, Romances, and Love-songs, and all such wanton discourses as are either plainly unchaste, or at least immodest, and such as do not become the tongues or pens of those who profess godliness; or at the best are such as have a direct tendency to the violation of modesty, if not of chastity. (3) By actions we are to understand not only all acts of uncleanness, as adultery, fornication, sodomy, bestiality, self-pollution, &c. but also all that which doth open a gap to any lusts of uncleanness, as polygamy, unlawful marriages, divorces, and dispensations; all stews and naughty houses; all undue delays of marriage where there is not the gift of continence; all wanton dalliance, dancings, plays, and all such painting of the face, or pampering of the body, which have a natural tendency to inflame, or provoke filthy lust.

A. 73. The eighth Commandment is, Thou shalt not steal.

Expl. 73. This command concerns the goods as the next does the good name of our neighbor.

A. 74. The eighth Commandment requireth the lawful procuring and furthering the wealth and outward estate of ourselves, and others.

Hom. V. Bestow your own goods charitably, which you get duly, as need and case requireth.

Hom. VI. Bear good will and heart unto every man, to use ourselves well unto them, as well in words and countenances, as in all our outward acts and deeds.

Expl. 74. As in all the commands which concern our neighbor, the grand principle is to be love to him; so in all (but especially here) the rule of our duty must be that golden rule of righteousness, do as you would be done by. Now next to the promoting of our own estate or welfare in the world, we must endeavor our neighbors welfare, we must not only love him as ourselves, but we must in the general be careful to promote or preserve his estate as our own by all honest and lawful means; more particularly here is required, (1.) Personal care about a man's own estate or goods, for charity begins at home. (2.) Truth and faithfulness about what is committed to our charge by others. (3.) Commutative justice between man and man, in bargaining contracting, buying and selling, and in rendering to everyone his due, and in due time; as also in borrowing, bartering, chaffering and changing. (4.) Restitution of what we wrongfully detain of another's goods, either to the person from whom they are detained, or to his heirs and executors if we be able, or else to acknowledge our fault to them, and to beg their pardon. (5.) Lending freely and not looking for anything again, especially where interest is to the impoverishing of our neighbor. (6.) Charity to the relief of the poor. (7.) Hospitality to strangers. (8.) Diligence and faithfulness in an honest, calling not only that a man may provide for himself or his friends or family, but that he may have to give to him that needeth, (9.) That all this be done with singleness of heart as to the Lord Christ, and with love to others as to ourselves.

A. 75. The eighth Commandment forbiddeth whatsoever doth, or may unjustly hinder our own, or our neighbors wealth, and outward estate.

To. 2. Hom. XXI. Thefts and robberies are most pernicious to society. Hom. XVII. p. 2. So many as increase themselves by usury, by extortion, by perjury, by stealth, by deceits and craft, they have their goods of the Devils gift.

Expl. 75. This Command in the general doth forbid all that doth hinder the end of this Command, which is the preservation of Livelihood, in order to the sustentation of life, whether our own or others, and consequently all that which doth hinder the performance of the foremention'd duties doth directly tend to the neglect of them. Particularly it doth forbid (1.) inwardly; and that (1.) all covetous desires of what is not our own, heart-deceit, cheating contrivance, though never executed. (2.) All overvaluing worldly things. (3.) Envy at the prosperity of another, because he is richer than we. (4.) All over-eager pursuit of worldly things, confidence in them, distracting cares about them, and inordinate grief for the loss of them. (5.) All discontentedness with our present lot and condition. (2.) Outwardly; (1.) all kind of robbery and stealth whether by force or fraud; and hither may be referred, (1.) That common practice amongst some of men-stealing, as also the enticing away of Servants from their Masters. (2.) The receiving and buying of stolen goods; the receiver is worse and the buyer little better than a thief, when he knows or suspects them to be stolen. (3) False weights, measures, lights, removing of land-marks &c. (4.) All monopolies to raise the price. (5.) All kind of cheating by game, and here many times the sin is double, sc. the game itself and cheating by it, or any such like juggling by sleight of hand. (6.) All cozenage in words. (7.) All acts of unfaithfulness in contracts, bargains, or in matters of trust public or private. (8.) Sacrilege, or the taking away of that which is devoted to pious uses, together with all unjust alienations. (9) Needless protracting of Law-suits. (10.) All such engagements as (by suretyship, &c.) are to a man's own prejudice. (11.) All forestalling of markets, and hoarding up against a dearth to the prejudice of the public. (12.) All injustice in any kind, whether by griping, usury, oppression, or any other unlawful way.

A. 76. The ninth Commandment is, Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor?

Expl. 76. For the government of the tongue in reference to God we have the third Commandment, and for the guidance of it in reference to our selves and others we have this Commandment, for though our neighbor here be only mentioned yet ourselves must not be excluded, and therefore regular self-care for our own good name is to be the rule of our care to preserve his good name.

A. 77. The ninth Commandment requireth the maintaining and promoting of truth between man and man , and of our own ▪ and our neighbors good name , especially in witness bearing

To. 1. Hom. XII. p. 3. If we be good and quiet Christian men, let it appear in our tongues. If we have forsaken the devil, let us use no more devilish tongues.

Expl. 77. The scope and drift of this Commandment most directly and expressly is the preservation of truth, but in subordination to the preservation of love to our neighbor, there being nothing that doth tend more to the violation of this affection, than the belying of him. The general duty therefore which this Commandment requires in reference to our neighbor is to speak the truth in love, yet more particularly as this Command is broken, so it is to be kept both inwardly and outwardly: (1.) Inwardly, and then it doth require (1) love, both to the truth and to our neighbor; because this twofold love is a good means for the preservation of our neighbors good name. (2.) An high and just value and esteem of our neighbors credit and reputation. (3.) Charitable thoughts concerning him, 'till we have grounds to the contrary. (4.) Willingness to hear well, and unwillingness to hear ill of him. (5.) A hearty rejoicing at good, and sorrowing for evil reports of him. (2dly,) Outwardly, is required, (1) Silence concerning our neighbor, or the not revealing of secrets, when either his good name, or a man's own good conscience is in danger to be prejudiced thereby; for to reveal a secret (where the concealing of it is not either much to the damage of others, or of the party who would have it kept a secret) would be a violation both of Christian fidelity, and of human society, and of the laws of friendship. (2.) Here is outwardly required our just defense of our neighbor, by speaking well of him, (1) so far as the truth of the matter will bear it. (2) As we have a fit opportunity. And (3) a due call to speak on his behalf, but especially in witness bearing before a Magistrate; for in such a case a man is to say the whole truth, or all that is material (even in circumstances themselves) for the just vindication of his neighbors good name; and nothing but the truth, not that which is partly true and partly false. (2.) To do (as well as speak) what we can according to our place and capacity, and to use our utmost interest for his defense, though there might be something of pains, charge, or hazard in such Christian and neighborly endeavors. (3.) That a man do discourage and rebuke tale-bearers, flatterers, slanderers, and false accusers, especially when we observe that what they say is from malice, prejudice, and bitterness, and hath very little of probability in the matter.

A. 78. The ninth Commandment forbiddeth whatsoever is prejudicial to truth , or injurious to our own , or our neighbors good name .

To. 1. Hom. XII. p. 3. He that hath been a malicious slanderer, now let him be a loving comforter.—He that hath abused his tongue in evil speaking, now let him use it in speaking well. All bitterness, anger, railing, and blasphemy, let it be avoided from you.

Expl. 78. More particularly, here is forbidden something (1st,) Inwardly, as (1) All uncharitable and censorious thoughts concerning our neighbor; for we are to love our neighbor, and charity thinketh no evil. (2) All supercilious and disdainful thoughts, as of the meanness of his person, the weakness of his parts, gifts, &c. (3) All ungrounded suspicious and over-credulousness, or a readiness to open the ear to anybody that shall but open his mouth against him. (4) All such inordinate passions as (hatred, wrath, &c.) are suitable to such a bad and unchristian temper of mind. (2dly,) Outwardly, is here forbidden, (1) False testimony against him, whether privately unto some private person in our discourse, or publicly before a Magistrate, when a man is to speak or to swear in truth, judgment, and righteousness. (2) The suborning or procuring of others to be false witnesses against him. (3) Pleading for an evil cause, for this is to defend injustice, and to be the Devils advocate. (4) Uncharitable censures. (5) Unjust verdicts and sentences. (6) Any kind of endeavors to suppress or hinder the course of justice and truth by undue silence. (7) Speaking the truth unseasonably, especially when it tends to detraction, reproach, and slander; for to report the sins of others without just cause, is really a reproach, as from the reporter, though the matter be true; if it be done without malice, and in order to his reformation, such report is not sinful, because here only a less good is neglected for procuring a greater. Yet is it no defamation to speak of another's man's failings, when they are the common talk of public fame, or marked out by the sentence of the Judge, or the notoriety of the fact. (8) Forgeries, whether of writing or tales. (9) Harsh misconstructions and interpretations of other men's words, intentions, or actions. (10) Flattering, and undervaluing of others. (11) All malicious aggravations, or unjust excuses and extenuations of others faults. (12) All such whisperings, reviling, and rash speaking, whereby either truth, charity, or the good name of others is wronged. (13) All raising and receiving false reports, and the rejoicing in the disgrace of another. (14) All mental reservations, and Jesuitical equivocations, or any other way whereby our own good name, or credit and conscience, and the good name of others, as well as truth itself and Religion, is wronged▪

A. 79. The tenth Commandment is, Thou shalt not covet thy neighbors house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbors wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his asse, nor anything that is thy neighbors.

Expl. 79. This Command doth concern the frame and temper of the inward man, whether it be in reference to God, to ourselves, or to others; and the main scope of it is to preserve heart-purity, yea to bring fallen man (if it were possible on this side the heavenly Paradise) to that primitive rectitude and original righteousness wherewith he was created, and which was not only the perfection but the glory of man's nature.

A. 80. The tenth Commandment requireth full contentment with our own condition , with a right and charitable frame of spirit towards our neighbor, and all that is his .

To. 1. Hom. V. p. 3. Covet not wrongfully, but content yourselves with that which you get truly, and also bestow your own goods charitably, as need and case requireth.

Expl. 80. This Command requires in the general, yet in a more direct and express manner internal obedience to all the other nine Commands; or a universal regularity in man's nature, principles, inclinations, inward motions and affections towards God and man. Obj. But will some say, this Command therefore seems to be needless, or supernumerary, because every other Command doth require that holy and regular frame of heart which is suitable to itself, and the duties which it requires from the outward man. Answ. This Command is added not only as a universal declaration, but also as an universal confirmation of what God requires (as to the rectitude or due temper of soul) in all the other Commands together, and therefore 'twas necessary to be added to all the rest; so that this Command is of a further reach than all the former, being it requires universal rectitude, or original righteousness towards God and man. Obj. But then this Law would require that which is impossible. Answ. The Law must not cease to be perfect, because man is impotent, or not able to perform. Man has willfully lost this power; yet the Law must not therefore lose its purity or perfection. Yet (2) this frame of soul is not impossible to man's rational nature, though to corrupted nature. (3) Though the rigor of the Law doth still require perfection, yet the grace of the Gospel doth accept of sincerity in and through Christ. But more particularly, (1) This Command requires distinction of propriety, or that a man should know what belongs to him as his own. (2) Contentedness of mind with a man's present condition and lot, till God is pleased in his good providence to make his way plain before us, for the alteration or bettering of our condition; now God's way of providence is known by this, that it never contradicts his revealed will in his word, and in that it never destroys the eternal principles of righteousness and justice betwixt men. (3) It requires a charitable frame, i. e. that we be so far from envying him, or coveting what is his, that we rather wish and pray heartily, that both he and his may prosper, as well as we, or what belongs to us.

A. 81. The tenth Commandment forbiddeth all discontentment with our own estate , envying or grieving at the good of our neighbor , and all inordinate motions and affections to anything that is his .

To. 2. Hom. XXI. p. 3. Coveting or desiring of other men's Wives, Houses, Lands, Goods and Servants, willing to leave unto no man anything of his own.

Expl. 81. This Command forbiddeth all manner of lust or concupiscence, whereby the nature or heart of men is polluted and defiled, so that original lust or concupiscence which Paul had not known to be sin but by this Law, is plainly forbidden by this Law, Thou shalt not covet, Rom. 7.7. Neither is only the fountain-lust, or the depraved inclination of corrupt nature here forbidden, but also all the streams that proceed from it; as the lusts of the flesh, as luxury, or the lust of the eye as gain, or the pride of life as glory, scil. vain-glory. Yet further, here is forbidden (1st,) Discontentedness of mind, when men repine and murmur at God's providence, as if he did wrong, those complainers, when he gives either more or better of this worlds goods to others than he does to them; which wicked temper doth arise, (1) From men's covetousness. (2) From pride, which would pull down other men's estates to a man's own level; but these two levelling principles being destructive to propriety as well as society, are here forbidden. (3) From a double mistake: As (1) concerning the nature of these things, as if a man's happiness did consist in the abundance of these things. (2) Concerning God's government of the World, as if he did not govern the World in wisdom and righteousness. Qu. But may not a man lawfully desire more of this Worlds goods than he has already? Ans. Yes; Provided (1) his desire of what he wants be without murmuring and repining. (2) With cheerful submission to the will of God. And (3) with subordination to God's glory; neither is contentment of mind, at all inconsistent with such regular desires. (2dly,) Envying at the prosperity of others is here forbidden: For (1) This is against charity, which requires we should love our Neighbors as ourselves, and which should rather rejoice than grieve at the good of others. (2) And that golden Rule of Righteousness, Do as you would be done unto. (3) Against the example of God himself, who rejoiceth in the prosperity of his servants. (3dly,) Here is forbidden all inordinate motions and affections towards worldly objects; as love, delight, zeal, &c. in or for the enjoyment; and impatience, vexation, immoderate grief for loss or disappointments.

A. 82. No mere man since the Fall, is able in this life perfectly to keep the Commandments of God , but daily doth break them in thought , word , and deed .

Artic. XIII. Works done before the grace of Christ, and the inspiration of his spirit, are not pleasant to God, forasmuch as they spring not of faith in Jesus Christ; neither do they make men meet to receive grace, or (as the School-Authors say) deserve grace of congruity; yea, rather for that they are not done as God hath willed and commanded them to be done, we doubt not but they have the nature of sin. Hom. III. p. 2. We have neither faith, charity, hope, patience, chastity, nor anything else that good is, but of God, and therefore those virtues be called the fruits of the Holy Ghost, and not the fruits of man. —Truly there be imperfections in our best works.—Let us therefore not be ashamed to confess plainly our state of imperfection; yea, let us not be ashamed to confess imperfection, even in all our best works.

To. 2. Hom. XVII. The holy company (of Saints in heaven) confesseth constantly, that all the goods and graces wherewith they were endued in soul, came of the goodness of God only. It is meet therefore to think, that all spiritual goodness cometh from God only.

Expl. 82. When 'tis said no mere man since the fall, &c. 'Tis clearly implied that before the fall man had power to keep the Law of God perfectly; but now since the fall he has not this power in this life, neither (1) in his corrupt estate before conversion, nor (2) in his regenerate after conversion. (1st,) Not in his corrupt estate, for though men unconverted either to Christianity (as the Gentiles) or to Christ (as all profane Christians) may by the power of nature, and freewill; or by the help of common grace, be able to do some things contained in the Law, which in themselves considered are good for the matter▪ yet not in a right manner, because not from a right principle, true grace; and not to a right end, God's Glory, nor by a right rule, the Law of God in the spiritual meaning of it. Nor (2dly,) in his regenerate state here in this life; for (1) his knowledge of his duty is but in part, And how can he do it perfectly when he does not know perfectly? (2) His grace imperfect, Ex. gr. faith, love, &c. because mingled with more or less of the opposite corruption.

A. 83. Some sins in themselves, and by reason of several aggravations, are more heinous in the sight of God, than others .

Hom. V. p. 3. Christ saith, Woe be unto you, for you devour widows houses under color of long prayers, therefore your damnation shall be greater.—You make them children of hell worse than yourselves be. Hom. VIII. p. 2. Children of unbelief of two sorts, who despair and presume; and both these sorts of men be in a damnable state; as the one should believe the promises, so the other the threatenings; not over-boldly presume of God's mercy, and live dissolutely.

Expl. 83. If we consider sin only with reference to the Infiniteness of God's majesty who is thereby provoked, in this respect all sins are equally heinous, because all against an Infinite Majesty; but if we consider them either in their own nature as transgressions or in their several circumstances, then some sins are greater, or more heinous than others; for though every sin be a transgression of the Law of God, yet every Law of God, doth not equally, and so directly and immediately concern the Glory of God and the salvation of man; neither is every Law so clearly promulgated, or made known: Besides, there are some aggravations in the sin itself, as when it is not only in the heart, but in word and deed; so the greater the scandal, the greater the means to prevent it, the greater the person by whom, and against whom, the greater the sin; as also it may receive its aggravations from many circumstances, as time; when a man is drunk upon the Lord's day; place, as to cut a purse in the Church, or at the Bar before the Judge; Company, as to be debauched in Civil, or profane in Religious company.

A. 84. Every sin deserveth God's wrath and curse, both in this life, and that which is to come

Hom. XX. p. 1. We do daily and hourly by our wickedness and stubborn disobedience, horribly fall away from God, thereby purchasing unto ourselves (if he should deal with us according to his justice) eternal damnation.

Expl. 84. Every sin being a breach of the Law deserves the curse of the Law, or the penalty which is due to the sinner upon every the least sin, and that penalty is death; not only temporal, but spiritual and eternal; or the wrath of God to be inflicted upon the sinner both here and hereafter. Obj. But if every sin deserve hell, then this would seem to take away the difference in punishments? Answ. No, for this doth not lie in the duration of the punishment, for that will be eternal to all who come into that state where the worm never dyes, and the fire never goeth out; but it will be in the degrees of the punishment; some belike shall lose more good, and endure more evil or torment than others.

CHAP. III. Of things to be practice'd, according to the Gospel: Or the Ordinances of the Gospel, particularly of the two Sacraments, in 13 Articles, with their Explanation.

From A. 85. to 98.

A. 85. TO escape the wrath and curse of God due to us for sin, God requireth of us Faith in Jesus Christ, repentance unto life, with the diligent use of all outward means whereby Christ communicateth to us the benefits of Redemption.

Hom. XX. p. 1. —We have here a perpetual Rule appointed unto us, which ought to be kept at all times; and that there is no other way whereby the wrath of God may be pacified, and his anger asswaged,—which no man is able to abide, but is moved by repentance to obtain mercy.—And with a full purpose of amendment of life, fleeing to the mercy of God, taking sure hold thereupon, through faith in his Son Jesus Christ, there is an assured and infallible hope of pardon and remission, —and that we shall be received into the favor of our heavenly Father. To. 1. Hom. VIII. p. 2. If we turn to him with an humble and a very penitent heart he will receive us to his favor and grace, for his name sake, for his promise sake, for his truth and mercies sake, promised to all faithful believers in Jesus Christ his only natural Son.

Expl. 85. There were never anymore than these two ways prescribed by God unto man, for his keeping or obtaining of that happiness which doth consist in the favor of God. (1) Perfect and sinless obedience to the whole will of his Creator, and this was prescribed in innocence, for his keeping in favor with God. (2) Faith in Jesus Christ; which was prescribed immediately after the Fall, for the recovery of the favor of God which he had lost; for we are to look upon God not only as the party offended by transgression, but also as the supreme Lawgiver, and great Governor of the world; and therefore God as the supreme Governor was bound (by virtue of the perfection of his own Government, and for the preservation of the honor of his Law and Justice) not to treat with man, in order to his being received into favor again, but only in and through a Mediator; and because infinite wisdom could not find out a fitter than he who was God-man, God was therefore pleased in the riches of his grace and mercy, to pitch upon this way of recovering lost man, sc. by faith in Christ, who is mediator between God and man: And although the Law of works did not accept of repentance upon the breach thereof, yet the Law of faith doth, or the Covenant of Grace doth as well require repentance toward God, as faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. But then this, repentance must be qualified (as is expressed in the A.) sc. It must be repentance unto life, not a dead repentance, but such as brings forth suitable fruit, namely, that which is unto holiness, and the end everlasting life: And then, in the next place God requires a diligent use of all the means of grace, these being the conduit-pipes whereby Christ, and Grace, and the Spirit, and all the spiritual benefits of our redemption are ordinarily communicated unto us; for though the want of these may not damn any (but other sins) where those that want them are not in the fault that they want them; as those that want the means of grace, and have only the Light of nature, will not be condemned for what they want, but for not glorifying God according to what light they have, though it be but from the dim candle of nature; so those that have these means and neglect them, will have the greater damnation; for, This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, Io. 3.14. From all which may be inferred, (1) That the light of nature, or the dim candle of corrupt reason is not sufficient to guide a man to Heaven; for if it were, faith would have been superfluous, and Gospel-revelation concerning our redemption by Christ needless. (2) That in order to salvation, it is not enough for a man to believe the truth of the Gospel; but he must also accept of the terms of the Gospel, or Christ in the Gospel▪ sc. faith and repentance. i. e. He must accept of Christ in all his Offices, and accordingly yield subjection to him; and he must repent of all his sins, so as to bring forth fruit meet for repentance; for a fruitless or a dead repentance will never carry a man to heaven. (3) That Christ is communicative of his Grace, for therefore hath he appointed means of Grace for the conveying of Grace to his members; he is not a fountain sealed, but a fountain opened. (4) That it is the duty of Christians to attend diligently upon the Ordinances of Christ, for not only the necessity of the end requires it, there being no other ordinary way for the obtaining of the end, but by these means, but also the obligatory power of God's Command. (5) That those therefore are enemies to their own salvation and redemption by Christ, that do willfully neglect the use, or deny the necessity of Christ's Ordinances. (6) That if Christians be never the better for Christ, and by what he has done for sinners, they may thank themselves, for God has prescribed means whereby they may reap benefit from the undertaking of Christ; if then they do miss of life and salvation, 'tis because they will not come to him that they may have life. (7) That Christians had need to beg of God, that his good Spirit may move upon the waters of the Sanctuary, that in and through Christ they may prove effectual for healing.

A. 86. Faith in Jesus Christ is a saving-grace , whereby we receive , and rest upon him alone for salvation , as he is offered to us in the Gospel .

Hom. IV. p. 1. Of Faith. It consisteth not only in believing that the word of God is true. — But it is also a true trust and confidence of the mercy of God through our Lord Jesus Christ, — hanging only upon him, and calling upon him, ready to obey and love him. —It being the first coming unto God whereby we are justified. P. 2. By faith only, not that the said justifying faith is alone in man, without true repentance, hope, charity, dread, and the fear of God, at any time or season.—But to take away clearly all merit of our works,—and wholly to ascribe the merit and deserving of our justification unto Christ only, and his most precious blood-shedding. This faith the holy Scripture teacheth us; this is the strong rock and foundation of the Christian Religion; this Doctrine all old and ancient Authors of Christ's Church do approve. This Doctrine advanceth and setteth forth the true glory of Christ, and beateth down the vain-glory of man. This whosoever denieth, is not to be accounted for a Christian man, nor for a setter forth of God's glory, but for an adversary to Christ and his Gospel, and a setter forth of vain-glory. — Not that this our own act, to believe in Christ which is within us, doth justify us. (For this were to count ourselves to be justified by some act or virtue that is within ourselves) But we must renounce the merit of faith, &c. and trust only in God's mercy, and that sacrifice which our high Priest and Savior, Christ Jesus the Son of God, once offered. To. 2. Hom. XI. Unfeigned faith is the only mean and instrument of salvation required on our parts.

Expl. 86. In this description of faith there are several things observable, as (1) concerning the object of it; and this is Jesus Christ, not only as God, though therefore he is to be believed because Truth itself; nor only as God-man, though the Word being made flesh he is to be believed because he is the Revealer of his Fathers will concerning man's Salvation, but as being God-man he is constituted Mediator betwixt God and man, and by virtue of his Mediatorship doth execute the office of a King, of a Priest, and of a Prophet, in order to the Salvation of all those who do believe in him, or do heartily receive and embrace him for their all-sufficient Savior upon the terms of the Gospel; and thus considered he is proposed as the object of saving Faith; yet because without shedding of blood there is no remission, and because we are said to have redemption through his blood, therefore Christ crucifi'd is the most peculiar object of this faith. (2) Concerning the act of this faith 'tis to be noted, that doth not barely exert or put forth itself in a firm assent only to the truth of the Gospel, nor yet in a particular full persuasion that I shall be undoubtedly saved in and through Christ, for true saving faith may be without this full assurance, but 'tis exercised in a free consent of the will that this Savior shall be our Savior upon those terms he is offered; namely, cheerful submission both to his Scepter and to his Cross, and hereupon the affections those everlasting gates of the Soul, as love, joy, delight, &c. are set open that this King of glory may enter in and find entertainment there.

A. 87. Repentance unto life is a saving grace , whereby a sinner out of the true sense of his sin , and apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ , doth with grief and hatred of his sin turn from it unto God , with full purpose of, and endeavors after new obedience .

Hom. XX. Of Repentance. Which is a returning again of the whole man unto God, from whom we be fallen away by sin. — We must return from those things whereby we have been withdrawn, plucked, and led away from God. —Unto whom alone we must return,—not to the creatures, or the inventions of men, or our own mercies, —by Jesus Christ,—who hath made satisfaction to the Justice of God,—with our whole heart,—forsaking all that is contrary to God's will,—out of a sincere love of godliness,—a purpose of ourselves by God's grace to renounce our former wicked life; and a full conversion to God in a new life to glorify his name, &c. We must beware and take heed, that we do in no wise think in our hearts, imagine or believe, that we are able to repent aright, or turn effectually unto the Lord, by our own might and strength, for this must be verified in all men, Without me ye can do nothing, John. 15.5. Again, of ourselves we are not able as much as to think a good thought, 2 Cor. 3.5.

Expl. 87. This repentance is called repentance unto life, because the fruit thereof is unto holiness, and the end everlasting life, and concerning this repentance several things are to be noted (1st,) concerning the nature of it that (as well as faith) it is a saving-grace, because it is a part of Sanctification, and not a common work of the spirit which is reckoned up amongst those things which do not accompany Salvation, as every part of Sanctification doth. (2dly,) Concerning the immediate spring of this repentance, and that is a true sense of sin, (i. e.) such a sense of sin as doth break the heart for sin, and that in a kindly manner with grief, or godly sorrow not with despair; this latter sense of sin may be found in a Judas, but only the former in a Paul; for whether it be in reference to the guilt of sin, a true penitent does not despair of pardoning mercy; or whether it be in reference to the punishment of sin, he hopes to be delivered from the wrath to come; and therefore this true sense of sin, and a lively apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ are here joined together. (3dly,) We have here the inward acts of repentance, as (1) grief of heart for sin, called therefore a being pricked at the heart, and a being contrite, and broken in spirit; which is when a man's heart is ready to bleed and melt, and tremble within him because he has broken the holy Law of God, and has thereby foolishly exposed himself to the curse and penalty of the Law. (2) Hatred of sin whereby a man doth disrellish, and dislike sin, and can roll it as a sweet morsel under his tongue no longer; when he does not only not love sin, but he abhors it, the very thoughts of it are grievous and ungrateful to him; and therefore (3) he turns from it, not only does as one who turns away his face that cannot endure to behold it, but his feet, for he hastens as far from it as he can, and that he may secure himself from the danger of it he turns from it to God. (4) With resolution not to return to his old beloved anymore. (4thly,) we have here the outward effects of repentance (called its fruits) active, constant, universal endeavors to lead a new life.

A. 88. The outward and ordinary means whereby Christ communicateth to us the benefits of Redemption, are his Ordinances, especially the Word, Sacraments, and Prayer, all which are made effectual to the Elect for salvation.

Hom. 5. p. 3. Apply yourselves chiefly, and above all things, to read and hear God's word; mark diligently therein what his will is you should do, and with all your endeavors apply yourselves to follow the same.

Expl. 88. 'Tis here supposed in the A. that there are inward and extraordinary means whereby Christ can and sometimes probably does communicate the benefits of Redemption, there being Salvation in no other name than that of Jesus, where persons are not made capable of this Salvation in an ordinary way, and in the use of means, there is no other way left but that which is extraordinary; and so we read of those that have been sanctified from the womb. But the ordinary means are the standing Ordinances of the Gospel, sc. the Word, Sacraments and Prayer; the Word to inform and reform us, Sacraments to confirm our faith, and Prayer to beg a divine and effectual blessing upon both; and all these three are included in that one great ordinance of the Gospel, a Gospel-ministry, unto which Christ hath promised his presence unto the end of the world, because till then the mystical body of Christ will stand in need of being edified in its most holy faith, for if the Unction of the Spirit had taken away the use of preaching why then did the Apostles use to preach?

A. 89. The Spirit of God maketh the reading, but especially the preaching of the Word, an effectual means of convincing and converting sinners , and of building them up in holiness and comfort , through faith unto salvation .

Hom. I. p. 2. If we lack a learned man to instruct and teach us, yet God himself from above will give light to our minds, and teach us those things which are necessary for us, and wherein we are ignorant.—Mans human and worldly wisdom, or science, is not needful to the understanding of Scripture; but the revelation of the Holy Ghost, who inspireth the true meaning into them, that with humility and diligence do search therefore. To. 2. Hom. XVII. p. 1. Let us in faith and charity call upon the Father of mercy, by the mediation of his well-beloved Son our Savior, that we may be assisted with the presence of his holy Spirit, and profitably on our parts, demean ourselves in speaking and harkening to the salvation of our souls. Hom. XVI. p. 2. And he of his great mercy so work in all men's hearts, by the mighty power of the Holy Ghost, that the comfortable Gospel of his Son Christ may be truly preached, truly received, and truly followed in all places, to the bearing down of sin, death, the Pope, the Devil, and all the Kingdom of Antichrist. Hom. XVII. p. 3. We should not be able to believe and know these great mysteries that be opened to us by Christ, but by the Holy Ghost. St. Paul says, that no man can know what is of God, but by the Spirit of God; as for us (saith he) we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, for this purpose, that in that holy Spirit we might know the things that be given us by Christ.

Expl. 89. In this A. there is (1) something supposed; (2) something asserted: Here it is supposed (1) that sometime the reading of the Word doth prove effectual for the spiritual and eternal good of the Soul, and hence it is that Christ commands us to search and read the Scripture, and doth charge men's ignorance and error about Soul-matters, upon their negligence herein. (2) That reading of Scripture at home doth not at all excuse people from hearing the Word in the solemn Assemblies where it is preached, for there is an especially here fixed on the word Preached as to the efficacy of it, either for conviction, conversion or comfort. (3) That the Word whether read or preached (except the Spirit, go along with it) is but a dead letter, till the Angel (i. e.) the Spirit of God move upon this water of the Sanctuary no healing is to be expected from it. And therefore (2lie.) 'tis here asserted (1) concerning the Word read, (2) concerning the Word preached that the Spirit of God doth make it effectual (1) for the opening of blind eyes, so as to discover to men the things that concern their peace and their duty. (2) For the turning of sinners unto God from the error and evil of their ways, from darkness unto light. (3) For the building of men up in their most holy faith, because hereby is laid the first stone, for faith cometh by hearing; hereby is laid the last, for 'tis by the Ministry of the Word that the Christian is made an habitation of God through the Spirit, or a temple of the Holy Ghost. (4) For the perfecting of holiness in the fear of God. (5) For comfort, for this is that brook in the way of which the Christian traveler drinketh, and so is able to run the ways of God's commands and not be weary, to walk and not to faint.

A. 90. That the Word may become effectual to salvation, we must attend thereunto with diligence , preparation , and prayer , receive it with faith , and love , lay it up in our hearts , and practice it in our lives .

Hom. I. p. 1. The Scriptures have power to turn through God's promise, and they be effectual through God's assistance; and being received in a faithful heart, they have ever an heavenly spiritual working in them. — In reading God's will he profits most, that is most turned into it, that is most inspired with the Holy Ghost, most in heart and life changed into that thing which he readeth. — Read it humbly with a meek and lowly heart, to the intent you may glorify God, and not yourself, with the knowledge of it; and read it not without daily praying to God, that he would direct your reading to a good effect. — Let us hear, read, and know these holy rules, instructions, and statutes of our Christian Religion, and upon that we have made profession to God at our Baptism. Let us fear and reverence, lay up (in the chest of our hearts) these necessary and fruitful lessons. Let us night and day muse, and have meditation and contemplation in them.

Expl. 90. This A. doth inform us of the right manner of using and managing the word (whether read or preached) with profit as (1st,) our attendance upon the Word must be with diligence, now this doth imply (2) things, (1) the intention of the mind, that when a man is reading Scripture, or hearing a Sermon, he do seriously mind what he is about, do not suffer his mind and thoughts to be roving upon other things; and the reason of this intention of mind is because he knows that the eye of God is intent upon him. (2) An holy solicitude, or a man's being concerned in the issue of the duty, he being sensible that he is now engaged in the use of that means for eternal life that God has prescribed, he now reads every Chapter, and hears every Sermon, as if it were (as indeed it is) for his life; so in this diligent attendance there is something wherein the outward man is concerned, sc. a devout, reverent and serious composure of the outward man to the work. (2dly,) Preparation, and this doth imply (1) a man's laying aside all worldly cares, affairs and business, sports or recreations which might any way hinder him in such holy and heavenly employment, that so he may attend upon it without distraction. (2) A man's laying aside all worldly affections, as love of the world, &c. or his putting away all superfluity of naughtiness. (3) A man's putting himself into the presence of God, or a pressing upon himself the sense of God's authority, majesty and holiness, as well as of the truth and importance of his word. (3dly,) Prayer, that God's word may do us good; and here we are to pray (1) for the Minister, that he may preach as becomes the word of God, and an Ambassador of Christ. (2) For ourselves, that we may receive it as the engrafted word which is able to save our Souls; yet more particularly (1) that we may mingle it with faith, it being that which deserves the most firm or the highest degree of assent that we are able to give to anything. (2) That we may receive it with love (1) to God the author of it, and because 'tis his word. (2) To the Preacher as sent by God; (3) to the word itself, because for the matter 'tis that which doth so highly import our happiness. (4) We are to give reception and entertainment not only in the porch of our ear, but in the best room of our hearts; yea it being a precious treasure, better than gold and silver, it must be our care, (1) to lay it up as treasure in our hearts, to hide it there as David did. (2) As treasure to be improved, to lay it out, now this cannot be done any other or better way than by a man's taking heed to his ways, according to God's word, for he that thus ordereth his conversation aright shall see the salvation of God.

A. 91. The Sacraments become effectual means of salvation, not from any virtue in them, or in him that doth administer them, but only by the blessing of Christ, and the working of his Spirit in them that by Faith receive them .

Artic. XXVI. The effect of Christ's Ordinance is not taken away by the Ministers wickedness, neither the grace of God's gifts diminish'd from such as by faith and rightly do receive the Sacraments ministered to them, which be effectual because of Christ's institution and promise, although they be ministered by evil men. Nevertheless it appertaineth to the discipline of the Church, that enquiry be made of evil Ministers, and that they be accused by those that have knowledge of their offenses; and finally, being found guilty by just judgment be deposed.

Expl. 91. Here we have it expressed, (1) negatively, how the Sacraments do not become effectual, &c. as (1) not from any virtue in themselves; for as the word is a dead letter of itself, so the Sacraments are dead signs; for can it be imagined in reason, that the soul which must live forever, can be feasted, fed, and nourished to eternal life by a morsel of bread and a sup of wine? (perishing elements), or that the spiritual defilement of the soul can be washed off by a few drops of water sprinkled upon the face. (2) Not from any virtue in the Minister, as neither (1) his piety, because this can be no meritorious or procuring cause of a blessing in the Minister; (2) nor his good intention, for then the blessing would not only depend upon the power, but also upon the will of man; but the efficacy of Sacraments depends (2dly,) affirmatively, (1st,) Upon Christ's blessing grounded on his own institution and appointment, for he will not be wanting to his own Ordinances. (2dly,) Upon the working of the Spirit, or his application of them to the soul in a spiritual manner, and thereby bringing to the mind of the receiver, (1) the Author of Sacraments, Christ; (2) the impulsive cause, his love; (3) by representing and sealing the righteousness of Christ to the soul; (4) by objective excitation of suitable affections, as love, gratitude. (3dly,) Their efficacy doth depend on the receivers faith, not as a meritorious cause, but as a necessary condition, without which Christ will not bless them.

A. 92. A Sacrament is an holy Ordinance, instituted of Christ, wherein by sensible signs, Christ and the benefits of the new Covenant are represented , sealed, and applied to believers .

Expl. 92. In the general, all sound Divines do agree, that a Sacrament hath these two parts, (1) an outward sign, such as are the objects of sense, and especially of seeing; for though bread and wine be objected or presented to the taste, as well as to the eye; and water to the touch, yet the representation or the resemblance of Christ's body broken and his blood shed, is in seeing the bread broken and the wine poured out; and the spiritual washing of the soul represented to the eye of faith, by that washing of the filth of the flesh which is visibly done before the eye of the body. (2) Invisible grace; for the internal application of Christ's benefits to the soul being of a spiritual nature, cannot be seen by the eye of the body; yet more particularly, in this A. we have the nature and quality of a Sacrament, 'tis a holy Ordinance, (1) it has holiness to the Lord stamped upon it, and so is spiritual in its nature. (2) It is instituted by Christ the holy one; it is not his Holiness at Rome, or rather that man of sin, that can institute a Sacrament, though he hath taken the boldness to add five Sacraments to those two which Christ hath appointed. The holiest man upon earth cannot appoint a Sacrament; it is privilege enough in man to celebrate it when it is instituted by God. (3) It is a means for the promoting of sanctification and holiness, for it is an obligation upon a Christian to holiness, and though it be not a means to work conversion (ordinarily at least), yet it doth excite, quicken, and confirm grace. (4) It is the seal of a holy Covenant, wherein (as by a Deed of free-gift) all the benefits of Christ's Redemption are made over and applied to believers, and wherein all the promises are Yea and Amen through Christ unto such. (5) It is an Ordinance that in a most eminent manner is accompanied with the assistance, influence, and comforts of the Holy Ghost, because at such a time the Spirit in a most remarkable manner is concerned to execute his office, as the Spirit of Adoption witnessing together with the spirits of believing Receivers, that they are the children of God. And doth not all this holiness wherewith this Sacrament is attended, require on the Communicants part a holy and solemn preparation?

A. 93. The Sacraments of the New Testament are Baptism , and the Lord's Supper .

Artic. XXV. There are two Sacraments ordained of Christ our Lord in the Gospel, i. e. Baptism and the Supper of the Lord.—Confirmation, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, and extreme Unction are not to be counted for Sacraments of the Gospel. To. 2. Hom. IX. Sacraments instituted by our Savior Christ to be received and continued of every true Christian in due time and order, for such purpose as He willed them to be received, as visible signs expressly commanded in the New Testament, whereunto is annexed the promise of free forgiveness of our sins, and of our holiness, and joining in Christ, there be but two, namely, Baptism and the Supper of the Lord.

Expl. 93. There are but these two, not only as generally necessary, but as only necessary to salvation, for who was fitter to judge of the necessity, or to appoint the number of Sacraments, then he alone who had the sole power to appoint any Sacrament at all; now (1) in the New Testament we find only these two of Christ's appointment. (2) These two are sufficient to the end to which they are appointed. sc. to seal the Covenant of Grace. (3) Though there were more extraordinary, yet there were but two ordinary Sacraments under the Old Testament, sc. Circumcision and the Passover. (4) Only these two forementioned do correspond to these two of the Old Testament; and so do not Penance, Matrimony, Orders, &c. (5) Only these two are directed as to the manner of participation in the New Testament. (6) Christ's Ministers have only these two, and no more in their Commission to administer and to celebrate as Sacraments, sc. Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

A. 94. Baptism is a Sacrament, wherein the washing with water in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost , doth signify and seal our ingrafting into Christ, and partaking of the benefits of the Covenant of Grace , and our engagement to be the Lord's .

Artic. XXVII. It is a sign of regeneration or new birth, whereby (as by an instrument) they that receive Baptism rightly, are grafted into the Church; the promises of forgiveness of sin, of our adoption to be the Sons of God by the Holy Ghost, are visibly signed and sealed.

Expl. 94. In this A. we have (1) the general notion of Baptism; It is a Sacrament (i. e.) a seal of the righteousness of faith, and so is every other Sacrament which is a seal of the Covenant of Grace, whether under the legal or evangelical dispensation. (2) We have here the description of Baptism, and therein the difference of Baptism from the Lord's Supper. (1) In the outward signs or elements in that water in this Bread and Wine, and God having been so particular and distinct in appointing these, we should be as strict and careful in the use of them; not adding to them the corrupt inventions of men, as the Papists do add to Water, Cream, Salt, Oil and Spittle, &c. Nor diminishing from the other, As they do when they deprive the people of the Cup. (2) They differ in their order, for Baptism is the first Sacrament of the Gospel, because it is to be administered when a Christian (or the Infant of one or both believing Parents) is solemnly to be admitted a member of Christ's visible Church, but the Lord's Supper is to follow this. (3) In frequency, Baptism is to be administered but once, because a man can be born but once spiritually (as well as naturally) and this Sacrament is a seal of this spiritual birth, when the inward Baptism of the Holy Ghost, is accompanied with the outward of Water, which by the way being both inward and outward, may be called the Doctrine of Baptisms; but the Supper being to represent and exhibit Christ as spiritual nourishment to the soul, may and must be often, because we often stand in need of it. (4) In the form of administration, Baptism being in the Name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; because we are to be baptized into all the three persons in the Godhead; but the Supper in these words, take, eat, this is my body, &c. (5) In Baptism is sealed to us and represented our dying unto sin, and living unto righteousness (especially in those of years—that are baptized) but in the other Sacrament, Christ dying for our sin is represented and confirmed to us. (6) Baptism doth seal us a title to all visible Church privileges and ordinances of the Gospel, and the Lord's Supper doth suppose this title both to these and all the benefits and advantages of the Covenant of Grace. (7) In Baptism we solemnly engage to be the Lord's, and to be entirely his; and in the Supper we renew this engagement, and not only our renewal of our vow, but our Baptismal vow should be frequently and seriously considered, especially in a time of Temptation and Apostasy.

A. 95. Baptism is not to be administered to any out of the visible Church, till they profess their faith in Christ, and obedience to him, but the Infants of such as are members of the visible Church are to be baptized.

Engl. Artic. XXII. The Baptism of young Children, is in any wise to be retained in the Church, as most agreeable with the institution of Christ.

Expl. 95. 'Tis here observable that Baptism is not to be administered (1st) to Infidels or unbelievers (whilst such) as Jews, Turks, and Pagans; for those are not to be solemnly admitted into the visible Church, who have no precedent right by virtue of the Covenant of Grace to such admission, but (2dly,) 'Tis to be administered to these two sorts of persons. (1) Those who have not yet been baptized, and do make a credible profession of their faith in Christ, and obedience to his Gospel: which was required of converted Gentiles in order to their Baptism, and will be of converted Jews when they are to be re-engrafted into the true olive; yet is this no plea for the practice of Anabaptists, who defer the Baptism of their Children till they can make a profession of their faith, where one or both the Parents is a visible member of the Church. For (2) Infants of visible professors are to be looked upon as members of the Church visible, and there are to enjoy this Church privilege; else such Infants would be in a worse condition now than formerly.

A. 96. The Lord's Supper is a Sacrament, wherein by giving and receiving Bread and Wine, according to God's appointment, his death is shown forth, and the worthy receivers are not after a corporal and carnal manner, but by faith made partakers of his body and blood, with all his benefits to their spiritual nourishment and growth in grace.

Artic. XXVIII. It is a Sacrament of our Redemption by Christ's death. Inasmuch that to such as rightly, worthily, and with faith receive the same, the bread which we break is partaking of the body of Christ; and likewise the Cup of blessing is a partaking of the blood of Christ. Transubstantiation (or the change of the substance of Bread and Wine) in the Supper of the Lord, cannot be proved by holy Writ; but it is repugnant to the plain words of Scripture, overthroweth the nature of a Sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions.

Expl. 96. When 'tis here said the Lord's Supper is a Sacrament, we are to understand no more by a Sacrament, then that 'tis a seal of the righteousness of faith; so that those persons who do run to the righteousness of works, or of the Law in order to justification, they run out of the tenor of the Covenant of Grace, in which only the righteousness of faith is sealed to the believer. More particularly in this great Gospel-ordinance of the N. T. We have (1) the Sacramental signs, Bread and Wine; not Bread only, or Wine only, but both, hereby noting that we have in Christ whatever is needful (whether for support or comfort) to life everlasting. (2) The thing outwardly represented by these two elements, sc. Christ's body and blood; by the Bread his body; so that the Papists who stick so close to the letter, might with as much show of reason conclude that Christ's body was turned into Bread, as that the Bread was turned into his body. And by the Bread broken, is signified his body being wounded and broken; and by the Wine his blood, and by the pouring forth of the Wine, the shedding forth of his blood, without which no remission. (3) The Sacramental actions, sc. giving and receiving, whereby is noted not only that he gave himself for sinners, but that he gives himself to believers; and that as by the bodily hand they receive the Bread and Wine, so by a hand of saith they receive and accept of Christ as he offereth himself in the Gospel. (4) The spiritual signification of the whole, sc. the righteousness of Christ, and all the benefits of his Mediatory undertaking, made over and sealed to them in the Covenant of Grace, who do by faith apply these to themselves; so that every worthy Communicant may say, Christ died for me, &c. (5) The authoritative design of all this to this very end and purpose by Christ himself, who alone can appoint Gospel Sacraments; because he alone can bestow that Grace of which Sacraments are but the Conduit pipes. (6) That worthy Receivers are partakers of Christ's body and blood, not in a gross and corporal, but in a spiritual manner, for if the Bread were the real body or flesh of Christ which we eat in this Sacrament, then it would be no Sacrament at all; because the sign and thing signified would be really the same. (7) The advantages hereof, are the pardon of sin sealed, assurance of God's love, spiritual joy, comfort, refreshment, nourishment and growth in Grace.

A. 97. It is required of them that would worthily partake of the Lord's Supper, that they examine themselves of their knowledge, to discern the Lord's body, of their faith to feed upon him, of their repentance, love, and new obedience, lest coming unworthily, they eat and drink judgment to themselves.

Artic. XXVIII. The body of Christ is given, taken, and eaten in the Supper only after an heavenly and spiritual manner; and the mean whereby the body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper, is Faith. To. 2. Hom. XV. We must certainly know, that three things be requisite in him which would seemly, as becometh such high mysteries, resort to the Lord's Table, i. e. first, a right and worthy estimation and understanding of this mystery. Secondly, To come in a sure faith. Thirdly, To have newness or pureness of life to succeed the receiving of the same. p. 2. Newness of life, and godliness of conversation, as fruits of faith, are required in the partakers of this Table. We may learn by eating of the typical Lamb, whereunto no man was admitted but he that was a Jew, and was circumcised, and was before sanctified.

Expl. 97. By worthiness we are only to understand fitness; for in order to a Christian's practice of this Ordinance, he must examine himself in these two things. (1) As to his Right and Title, for if a man has no right to or interest in the righteousness of Christ, when he receives this seal, he has it only to a blank. (2) As to fitness, called in Scripture the wedding garment, for he is no more fit to be a guest at Christ's table who wants this garment, than he is to feast with a Prince at his royal table, who is clothed with nothing but rags and nastiness; yet more distinctly he must examine himself, (1st,) in point of knowledge, whether or no he be competently acquainted with the terms of the Covenant of Grace, of which this Sacrament is a seal, and with the necessary principles of Religion, and with the indispensable duties of the Gospel, and with the greatness of the love of Christ in dying for sinners; for he who is grossly ignorant of these things, as also of the difference between the Sacramental elements, and actions, and what is spiritually intended by them, can never be able to discern the Lord's body; but above all he must be sure to know practically and experimentally Christ crucified in this Sacrament. (2dly,) He must examine his faith, as, (1) Whether he be in a state of faith, (a believer) which he may know by his being a new Creature. (2) Whether he do upon this particular occasion exercise the Grace of faith; but especially whether he doth heartily assent to the truth of the Gospel; and whether he does heartily close with Christ in the Gospel. (3) His repentance, whether it be such as doth break his heart as well from sin as for sin, which hath broken and crucified the body of his dear Redeemer. (4) His love whether this doth fill him (1) with admiring thoughts of the love of Christ in dying for him, greater love than this hath no man seen. (2) With readiness and resolution to suffer, yea die for Christ if called to it. (5) New obedience, which may be known to be such. (1) By the spring from whence it doth flow, the Grace of God; or the new nature. (2) By the manner of its being performed, sc. in a spiritually-natural way with delight and zeal. (3) By the rule of it, the Law spiritually interpreted. (4) By the end of it, the glory of God; and that person who finds himself thus qualified, may come and welcome to the Lord's table; so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup.

CHAP. IV. Of things to be prayed for, in the Lord's-Prayer, in 10 Articles, with their Explanation. From A. 98. to the end.

A. 98. Prayer is an offering up of our desires to God , for things agreeable to his will , in the name of Christ , with confession of our sins , and thankful acknowledgment of his mercies .

To. 2. Hom. VII. p. 1.—Prayer is necessary for all men, at all times, and in all places.—Be fervent in prayer, assuring ourselves, that whatsoever we ask of God the Father in the Name of his Son Christ, and according to his will, he will undoubtedly grant it. p. 2. In all our necessities, direct our prayers to him, call upon his holy Name, desire help at his hands, and at none others. —He is able,—will help us,—hears, understands better than ourselves, what we lack, and how far we have need of help. Hom. IX.—Be sure that in all prayer your minds be devoutly lifted up to God, else your prayers are to no purpose. Hom. XVII. All good things came down to us from the Father of light. — Jesus Christ his Son and our Savior, is the mean, by whom we receive his liberal goodness, — in the power and virtue of the Holy Ghost we be made able to receive his gifts and graces.

Expl. 98. Concerning Prayer there are two things to be noted, (1) the name, (2) the thing itself. The name of that which is here described is Prayer, a term more comprehensive than invocation, which is only vocal Prayer, for it doth comprehend in it, Invocation, Petition, Confession, Thanksgiving, Supplications, and Intercessions, whether expressed in words or only pent up in a devout breast. (2) For the thing itself, we have (1) the necessary Requisites of Prayer. (2) The ordinary sorts and kinds of it. Necessary Requisites are (1st) that it be an offering up of our desires to God, and this is essential to all Prayer, that there be a holy motion of the will towards God in pious and devout desires though these should never be framed into words; Internal or heart-Prayer in some cases is all that God requires, and therefore he will graciously accept of it: But this spiritual Sacrifice must be presented only to God; for (1) He only knows, and can supply our wants. (2) Faith and Prayer must go together, and faith is only to be in God. (3) The Lord's Prayer doth only send us to God and no other. But then, &c. [See Expl. 99.]

A. 99. The whole Word of God is of use to direct us in Prayer , but the special Rule of Direction, is that Form of Prayer, which Christ taught his Disciples , commonly called the Lord's Prayer.

To. 2. Hom. VII. p. 3. What better example can we desire to have than of Christ himself, who taught his Disciples and other Christian men, first to pray for heavenly things, and afterwards for earthly things, as is to be seen in that Prayer which he left unto his Church, commonly called the Lord's-Prayer.

Expl. 99. (2dly,) 'Tis essentially necessary to Prayer that it be only for things agreeable to God's will. (1) The whole Will of God in general; As men must not make their lust their end, in begging anything of God (for those who ask that they may consume what they ask upon their lust, do ask amiss for the end;) so neither their fancy their rule, for then they ask amiss for the manner and matter both. (2) And more particularly, the Lord's Prayer; for this may be used not only as a Prayer itself, Luk. 11.2. but also as a pattern for all other Prayers, not so much for method and order, for we are not so strictly tied to that; as for matter in which we are not to deviate from this so comprehensive directory in the matter of Prayer, Mat. 6.9. (3dly.) In the name of Christ, (i. e.) (1) By virtue of his warrant and authority, because he doth command us to pray. What is done by his authority, is in his Name. (2) Making use of him as our Mediator or Intercessor, or great Master of Requests in Heaven; for we are strangers to God and enemies to him naturally, and so must make use of the Name of Christ, and not of our own. (2dly.) The ordinary kinds or parts of Prayer, are (1) Confession of sin, either expressed or implied, for when we beg or petition for any mercy, we are to own our unworthiness of it, which we cannot well do without confession of sin. (2) Thanksgiving, for there is something of the nature of Prayer in such acknowledgments, scit. our desire that God would accept of our Sacrifices of Praise, and Christ has taught us in our Prayer to praise God, For thine is the Kingdom, &c.

A. 100. The Preface of the Lord's Prayer, which is, Our Father which art in heaven; teacheth us, to draw near to God with all holy reverence, and confidence, as children to a Father, able and ready to help, and that we should pray with, and for others.

Hom. XVII. Consider his great power to make us dread and fear; —high wisdom,—inestimable goodness, to take good heart again to trust well unto him,—being assured to take him for our refuge, our hope and comfort, our merciful Father, in all the cases of our lives.

Expl. 100. The Preface teacheth many lessons. (1) Solemn Preparation, that we come not rashly to pray, but bethink ourselves beforehand to whom we are to pray. (2) Reverence, as the name Father doth import. (3) Access with boldness, that we may go to God as freely in and through Christ, as Children can go to their natural Parents. (4) Confidence of speeding all the while we ask aright for the matter, and manner, and end; for when men do not speed, 'tis because they ask amiss, i. e. either what they should not, or as they should not, or wherefore they should not. (5) God's readiness to hear and help, therefore called our Father; none more ready to help a Child than the Father of •t. (6) God's pity and compassion towards his children, which does move him to help them; As a father pities his children, &c. (7) That great Article of our Creed, Communion of Saints; for all true Christian supplicants have one common union in that one common relation of children unto God, and therefore called our Father. (8) Compassion, that we do pity and pray one for another, being all of us children of the same common Father. (9) That though God is present in all places, yet Heaven is in a more especial manner the habitation of his holiness; because he doth there more immediately, gloriously, and fully communicate of himself to the Angels and Spirits of just men made perfect. (10) That man (being a sinful supplicant) should know his distance from the great God, and with all humble and thankful admiration acknowledge God's condescension towards him, in that he is willing to receive any petition from him.

A. 101. In the first Petition, which is, Hallowed be thy Name; We pray, that God would enable us and others to glorify him in all that whereby he makes himself known, and that he would dispose all things to his own glory.

To. 2. Hom. VII. p. 3.—We are taught whensoever we make our prayers unto God, chiefly to respect the honor and glory of his Name.

Expl. 101. This is not only the first Petition in this Prayer, but the first of those Petitions wherein we are taught to beg good things; for the two last Petitions in this Prayer are deprecatory against evil. Now from the shortness of all these Petitions in general, we may observe, that the efficacy of Prayer doth not consist in the multitude of words, but doth most show itself in a holy fervency and ardour of affections. In this Petition there is, (1st,) Something supposed, as the ground of this Petition, as (1) That man ought to make the glory of God his chief end in all his designs. (2) That by his natural power, and without the grace of God, he is not able to glorify God. (2dly,) We have the matter of the Petition (Hallowed be thy name). In which words we do pray in the general, that all the Attributes, Titles, Ordinances, Words, and Works of God (whereby he is made known) may be heartily and highly valued, and esteemed, and magnified in the world. More particularly, we beg. (1) That God would give us hearts. (2) Grace, to show forth his glory in all our words, thoughts, actions, and capacities. (3) That he would prevent or remove all that sin especially whereby the luster of his glory in the world is most eclipsed, as Atheism, Ignorance, Idolatry, Oppression, &c. (4) That he would so lay the scene of his Providence in the government of the world, that he may still get to himself a glorious name, whether it be in works of power, wisdom, justice, or mercy; for though he will do this whether we beg it or no, yet (1) it is our duty, because commanded. (2) Hereby we show our love to God, by this zeal for his glory. (3) To our own souls, for his glory and our happiness are twisted together.

A. 102. In the second Petition, which is, Thy Kingdom come; We pray, that Satan's Kingdom may be destroyed, that the Kingdom of Grace may be advanced, ourselves and others brought into it, and kept in it, and that the Kingdom of Glory may be hastened.

To. 2. Hom. XVI. p. 2. He of his great mercy so works in all men's hearts, by the mighty power of the Holy Ghost, that the comfortable Gospel of his Son Christ may be truly preached, truly received, and truly followed in all places, to the beating down of sin, death, the Pope, the Devil, and all the Kingdom of Antichrist; that like scattered and dispersed sheep, being at length gathered into one fold, we may in the end rest altogether in the bosom of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, there to be partakers of eternal and everlasting life, through the merits and death of Jesus Christ our Savior.

Expl. 102. By kingdom we are to understand in the general, God's rule and dominion and power, that he exerciseth in the world, both over all his creatures, and particularly over men. Now in reference to the wicked, God doth exercise the kingdom of his power and justice in restraining or punishing them; and thus to pray that this kingdom may come amongst wicked men, is to pray, that the interest, power, and dominion of Sin, Satan, and Antichrist in the world may be destroyed; for in this Petition we do acknowledge ourselves to be by nature subjects of the Prince of darkness, and therefore we are to pray, that this iron-yoke may be taken off, and that we may take upon us the easy yoke of Christ. But in reference to the elect, God's kingdom is either, (1st,) A kingdom of Grace in this world, and then we pray, the Scepter of this kingdom may rule in the hearts and lives of God's elect: Now this Scepter being the Gospel, we are to pray, (1) That this may be dispersed all the world over, in order to the gathering of the dispersed Jews which do belong to the election of Grace, and to the fullness of the Gentiles. (2) That where the means of grace and knowledge are enjoyed (together with all Gospel-Ordinances and Gospel-order) they may prove effectual for the begetting and growth of grace and saving-knowledge, and for the spiritual comfort and support of weak Christians. (3) That to this end and purpose God would bestow his Holy Spirit upon his people, as the Spirit of Truth to lead them into all necessary truth, as a Spirit of Holiness to sanctify them, and as he is the comforter. (4) That the power of the Civil Magistrate may be laid out for the good of the Church; and that God would still furnish his Church with such Officers, both Spiritual and Civil, as may most promote the interest of Christ's spiritual kingdom; and all this we are to beg of God alone, (1) because he alone can check and restrain whatever does oppose his kingdom. (2) Because he alone can effectually grant what we beg herein. (2dly,) And for the kingdom of Glory, we are to beg the hastening of it for the elects sake, by Christ's second coming, because hereby, (1) God will be most glorified. (2) The kingdom of Grace will be perfected, when Christ's loyal Subjects shall reign with him in glory. Even so come Lord Jesus, come quickly.

A. 103. In the third Petition, which is, Thy will be done on Earth, as it is in Heaven; We pray, that God by his grace would make us able and willing to know, obey, and submit to his will in all things, as the Angels do in Heaven

To. 2. Hom. XXIII. As God the Creator and Lord of all things, appointed his Angels and heavenly Creatures, in all obedience to serve and honor his Majesty; so was it his will, that man his chief Creature upon the earth, should live under the obedience of his Creator and Lord.

Expl. 103. In this Petition we have two things observable, (1) The matter of our obedience, it must be what God requires. (2) The manner, it must be according to the pattern in the Mount, sc. as it is done in heaven. For the matter, 'tis only God's Will which must be the Rule of man's duty; not the wills, or fancies, or traditions, or corrupt customs of men; we owe obedience no further to men in what they require from us, than it is agreeable to the Will of God, and especially in the duties of Religion, because God alone, who is the searcher of the heart, is Lord of the conscience, whenever therefore what is required of us as matter of duty comes accompanied with a thus saith the Lord, either in the plain words, or in the plain sense of Scripture, we must not dispute, but obey. Yet to prevent mistake, we are to know, (1) There is the secret will of God, called the will of his counsel and purpose; but though this be the Rule he himself walks by, yet 'tis not the Rule of our obedience, and we are no further to pray that this will may be done, than as it seems good to his infinite wisdom; and that we may with patience submit to it, and in all events (though they may cross our wills never so much) acknowledge the holiness and rectitude of it, and nothing may displease us that pleaseth him. But (2dly,) there is his revealed will, as (1) in his promises, and here we are to pray, that they may be fulfilled. (2) In his threatenings towards the implacable enemies of his Church, that these may be executed, and this in subserviency to the former Petition, that his Kingdom may come. (3) In his prophesies, that they may be accomplished. (4) And principally in his Commands, that these may be obeyed and performed above and before anything else, or that these be done whatever else be left undone; and that (2dly,) For the manner, as it is done in heaven by Angels and the Spirits of just men made perfect, i. e. perfectly; not that we can be perfect in holiness here on earth, but that we should be aiming at it, and be perfecting holiness in the fear of God; in which are these two things, (1) The renouncing our own wills, as they do oppose the will of God. (2) Actual, real, constant, cheerful, universal compliance with the holy will of God.

A. 104. In the fourth Petition which is, Give us this day our daily Bread; We pray, that of God's free gift we may receive a competent portion of the good things of this life, and enjoy his blessings with them

To. 2. Hom. VI. [Our daily bread] i. e. all things necessary for this our needy life. Hom. VII. p. 3. When we have sufficiently prayed for things belonging to the soul, then may we lawfully and with safe conscience pray also for our bodily necessities, as meat, drink, clothing health of body, deliverance out of prison, good luck (i. e. success) in our daily affairs, &c. according as we shall have need.

Expl. 104. The former Petitions did respect God; and this is the first of those which doth concern ourselves. In which Petition (1) Somewhat is implied, as (1) That we depend upon God for the necessities of life. (2) That these are only to be desired so far as they may help us in the doing of his will. (3) That the frailty of our natures is such, that they stand in need of daily supplies of these necessaries. (4) That our care in reference to these things is neither to be immoderate, for we are to ask but for bread, i. e. necessity; nor to look far, as is implied in that word day. (5) That having food and raiment we be therewith content. (6) That however men in their honest Callings do take pains for necessaries, yet they are the free gift of God. (2) In the Petition we are to ask, (1) necessaries of life, called in Scripture food and raiment, and here bread. (2) All means and helps to obtain these. (3) A blessing upon them; for these three things are included in this one word [bread].

A. 105. In the fifth Petition, which is, And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors; We pray, that God for Christ's sake would freely pardon all our sins, which we are the rather encouraged to ask, because by his grace we are enabled from the heart to forgive others

To. 2. Hom. IX. Dissention and discord interrupt prayer. —For the Lord's Prayer hath not only a respect to particular persons, but to the whole universal, in the which we openly pronounce, that we will forgive them which have offended against us, even as we ask forgiveness of our sins of God. Hom. VII. p. 2. What if we be sinners, shall we not therefore pray unto God? or shall we despair to obtain anything at his hands? Why did Christ then teach us to ask forgiveness of our sins, &c.

Expl. 105. In reference to the petition about forgiveness, there is (1) something implied. (2) The matter of the Petition, and (3) the illustration of it. 'Tis implied, (1) That man is naturally a guilty creature, and under the condemnation, and consequently obnoxious to the curse of the Law, both by reason of Original and Actual sin. (2) That of himself he cannot make satisfaction to Divine Justice, nor any other for him (Christ only excepted, who is God as well as man). For if man, or any other creature for him, could satisfy God's justice, he might then stick to that plea, and stand at the bar of Justice; whereas he is now forced to the throne of Grace. (3) That God only can forgive sin, for man is here directed only to God. (4) That confession of sin, and petition unto God for pardon, is the way to obtain this pardon in and through Christ. (2dly,) The matter of the petition, or that we pray for, 'tis directly and expressly remission (or forgiveness) of sins, and then consequently the imputation of Christ's righteousness to us, by virtue whereof we may find acceptance with God the Father, in and by and through the merit of the righteousness of his Son Christ. For as by bread in the former Petition we do by a Synecdoche understand all the necessaries of this corporal life; so in this Petition, by forgiveness we may understand that which is so necessary to eternal life, Christ's righteousness to be imputed to us; or in one word, in this Petition we beg justification of our persons, as in the next we beg sanctification of our natures, hearts, and lives. In short, since there is forgiveness with God that he may be feared, we who are so many condemned Malefactors must make our application and our supplication to him, and to him alone for pardon; for sin is such a burden, and of such intolerable weight, that 'tis only omnipotent mercy that can remove the guilt of it from the consciences of men, it being an opposition to the holiness of God's nature, who is infinite; as well as a violation of that Law which is exceeding broad; and therefore, by the way, sin may very well pass for the greatest of evils, since (1) only the righteousness of Christ is broad enough to cover it, that the shame of the sinners nakedness may not appear; (2) only the mercy of an infinite God could pardon it; (3) since 'tis a down-right defacing of the image of God in man, and instead thereof drawing the black lines or image of Satan upon man's soul; (4) and is consequently the greatest enemy to man's happiness and perfection; (5) It doth procure for the impenitent unpardoned sinner, the eternal wrath of God and flames of hell. Q. But it may be here demanded, why our sins are called debts? For an Answer we are to know in the general, that they are not so properly, but metaphorically, with allusion to those debts that are contracted between man and man; for God is not to be considered properly as a Creditor, but as a Governor; so that in strict sense our obedience (rather than our sin) is our debt to God, and such a debt as we owe to him by the Law of our Creation; so that our sins are called our debts only because sin doth make punishment to become a debt which we owe unto God, and 'tis our just debt, and of the two it is punishment which man doth suffer for sin that comes nearer to the nature and notion of a debt than sin itself, this being a due debt to God's Justice, as obedience is to his Authority, however we cannot pray that this debt of punishment be remitted, except we beg that guilt (which is an obligation to punishment) be first removed. (3ly) We have the illustration of the matter of this Petition, by an apt similitude or resemblance, sc. as we forgive our debtors), which words with reference to God, are not to be considered either as a rule that God should proceed in the same manner, to forgive us as we do others, or as a standard that God should measure out so many pardons to us as we give to those who do offend us, but (1) as an argument, (2) as an evidence. The argument proceeds from the less to the greater; that if we who have (but as it were) a drop of mercy, can forgive others, how much more will God (who is an Ocean of free grace and love itself) forgive us; not that our forgiving others is meritorious of God's forgiving us. (2) Our forgiving others, when 'tis done freely and heartily and universally, 'tis a fruit of the love and mercy of God shed abroad in our hearts, an evidence of true grace in the soul, or of sanctification, and those whom he has sanctified he has also justified.

A. 106. In the sixth Petition, which is, And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; We pray, that God would either keep us from being tempted to sin, or support and deliver us when we are tempted

To. 2. Hom. IX.—Must crave continually of God the help of his holy Spirit, so to rule their hearts, lest hatred and debate do arise,—brawlings, tauntings,—cursings and fightings. Which are from the ghostly enemy, who taketh great delight therein.—They are compassed by the Devil, whose temptation if followed must needs begin and weave the web of all miseries and sorrows. —They will not consider the crafty trains of the Devil, and therefore give not their thoughts to pray to God, that he would vouchsafe to repress his power.

Expl. 106. In this Petition there are two things necessarily supposed, as (1) The wickedness or perverseness of man's nature to sin, for when we beg that God would not lead us into temptation, we do own a proneness to fall into it. (2) The weakness of man's nature to resist temptations, or to come off without any final damage when we are tempted, for therefore do we pray to God to deliver us from evil; that if the wise God, in his wise and just providence, for holy and just ends, do so order things, that we be assaulted by the Devil, the World, or the Flesh, yet that God would so powerfully support and assist us by his Grace and Spirit that we be not overcome, but that we may recover as a Bird out of the snare of the Fowler. We do not absolutely pray against afflictions (though these are also temptations) and lead us not, &c. but we do absolutely pray to be delivered from the evil of sin, and this by God alone, who can bring good out of evil.

A. 107. The Conclusion of the Lord's-Prayer, which is, For thine is the Kingdom, and the Power, and the Glory, forever, Amen; teacheth us, to take our encouragement in prayer from God only, and in our prayers to praise him, ascribing Kingdom, power, and glory to him and in testimony of our desire and assurance to be heard, we say, Amen

To. 2. Hom. IX. [Amen] which word is as much as to say, as truth, that the blessing or thanksgiving may be confirmed.

Expl. 107. In this Conclusion we are taught, (1) Self-denial, and the renouncing of all worth and merit in ourselves; for we are not to say, Lord do thus and thus, for I am worthy, for whom thou shouldst do so and so, but for thine is the Kingdom, &c. i. e. Thou who hast commanded us to pray for what we need, hast Power to give us what we beg, though in ourselves never so unworthy. From that word therefore [Lord] we may note, (1) That answering of prayers is a special part of God's providence in governing the world, which he will have every supplicant to own and acknowledge. The belief of a providence is very necessary to the offering up unto God the sacrifice of prayer. (2) From those words [and the Power] we may note, sc. That what God may do as Governor of the world, in answering prayers by virtue of his supreme Authority, that he hath strength and ability to execute and perform. (3) From those words [and the Glory] observe, (1) That God looks upon it as one of his Titles of Honor, to be a God hearing prayers; (2) That therefore in our prayers (as well as in any other part of Divine worship) we should principally aim at the honor of God; and 'tis one of the greatest arguments we can have of hope to speed, when our design is rather to gloririfie God than to gratify ourselves. (3) That the Kingdom and Power of God, and that honor which does redound to him from both these are everlasting. (4) That Praise should accompany Prayer. (5) That whatever we ask of God in the name of Christ, according to his will, believing we shall receive, for that's the meaning of that word which doth seal up this Prayer, Amen; because so it is, or so be it, or (in the words of Christ) be it unto thee even as thou wilt; a greater encouragement than which unto prayer no rational supplicant can desire, for 'tis no more than ask and have, that your joy may be full.

To the Right Worshipful, Sir Henry Montague Knight, the Kings Majesty's Serieant for the Law, and Recorder of the Honorable City of London.

Worthy Sir;

WHere there is diversity of helps, leading to one Intention of good, the variety may well be tolerated. Who finds fault with a Garden, for the multitude of flowers? You shall perceive here different kinds; whereof (if some to some seem bitter) there is none unwholesome. It takes fire at the Altar of God, and begins with the Christians Sacrifice: the flame whereof (by the operation of the blessed Spirit) may both enlighten the understanding, and warm the affections of good men: and in others consumingly waste the dross and rust of sin, which must either be purged by the fire of Grace here; or sent to the everlasting fire to be burned. The Wisemens Oblation seconds it: what is formerly commanded in Precept, is here commended in Practice. The Politic Hunters of the world are discovered: and Plain-Dealing encouraged. One (almost forgotten virtue) Charity is praised; and a busy vice is taxed. In all is intended Lux Scientiae, Pax Conscientiae; Peccati ruina, aedificatio Iustitiae.

Your noble endeavours are observed by all eyes, to be distinguished into this method: from your virtues there is a resultance of shining Light to information, from your Office to reformation of others. Go forward so still, to manage your Place in that honorable City: and let the fire of correction eat out the rust of corruption. You may punish, even whiles you pity. The good Magistrate, like a good Surgeon, doth with a shaking hand search ulcers; more earnestly desiring Non inuenire quod quaerit, quàm inuenire quod puniat. The God of mercy and salvation wrap up your soul in the bundle of Life; and (when the Lust of the earth shall to the Dust of the earth) fixe you in the blessed Orbe of Glory.

Your Worships in all faithful observance. THO. ADAMS.

THE SACRIFICE OF THANKFVLNESSE,

Psal. 118. 27.

God is the Lord, which hath shown us Light: bind the Sacrifice with Cords, even unto the Horns of the Altar.

THE first and the last words of this Psalm are, O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: because his mercy endureth forever.

Thanksgiving is the prescript, and the postscript. He that is Alpha and Omega; the first and the last, requires that our beginning and ending should be, Praise to the Lord.

You see the head and the foot: the bulk, body, members are not dissonant. There is scarce any Verse in the Psalm, that is not either an Hosanna, or an Halleluia; a prayer for mercy, or a praise for mercy.

I have singled out one; let it speak for all the rest. God is the Lord, that hath shown. &c.

Here is somewhat received; somewhat to be returned. God hath blessed us, and we must bless God. His Grace, and our Gratitude, are the two Lines, my Discourse must run upon:

They are met in my Text, let them as happily meet in your Hearts; and they shall not leave you, till they bring you to Heaven.

The sum is, God is to be Praised. The particulars are

- Wherefore, he is to be Praised.
- Wherewith, he is to be Praised.

Wherefore: God is the Lord, that hath shown us light.

Wherewith: Bind the Sacrifice with Cords, even unto the Horns of the Altar.

In the For what we will consider

- the Author.
- his Blessing.

The Author: God is the Lord.

His Blessing: That hath shown us Light.

The Lord, the Light. The Author is called God and Lord: which lead us to look upon his

- Goodness.
- Greatness.

GOD and Good.

LOe, I begin with him, that hath no Beginning, but is the Beginning of all other Beings, God: And would only tell you (for I must not loose myself in this Mystery) that this God is Good. In himself Goodness; Good to us. Psal. 100. The Lord is Good: his mercy is everlasting. He is True Life, saith August. A Quo auertur, cadere: in Quem conuertitur, resurgere: in Quo manere, vinere est. From Him to turn, is to fall: to Him to return, is to rise: in Him to abide, is to live forever.

David in the 59. Psalm calls him, his Mercy. Deus meus misericordia mea: my God, my Mercy. Whereupon Augustine sweetly discourses.

If thou hadst said my Health, I know what thou hadst meant; because God gives health. If thou hadst said my Refuge▪ I understand, because thou fliest unto him If thou hadst said my strength, I conceive thy meaning; because he gives strength.

But Misericordiamea; quid est? Totum, quicquid sum, de misericordia tuá est. My Mercy, What is it? I am by thy Mercy, whatsoever I am.

Bernard would have us speak of God in abstracto; not only to call him Wise, Merciful, good: but Wisdom, Mercy, Goodness; Because the Lord is without accidents at all: For as he is most Great without quantity; so he is most Good without quality: Nil habet in se, nisi se, He hath nothing in him, but himself.

God then being Good; not only formaliter, good in himself: but also effective, good to us; teacheth us to love him. We should love goodness for its own sake: but when it reflects upon us, there is a new invitation of our love.

The LORD.

WE have heard his Goodness; listen to his Greatness. In this Title we will consider his Majesty, as we did in the other his Mercy.

Lord implies a great State • the Title is given to a great man upon earth. But if an earthen Lord be great; Quantus est Dominus, qui Dominos facit? How great is the Lord which makes Lord's? yea, and vnmakes them two at his pleasure.

This is an absolute and independent Lord. 1. Cor. 8. There may be many God's, and many Lord's. But this is Ille Dominus. The Lord, or that Lord; that commands and controls them all. They are Domini titulares; this is Dominus tutelaris. They are in title and name, this in deed and power.

There are Many, saith S<sup>t</sup>. Paul. Many in Title many in Opinion. Some are Lord's and God's ex autoritate; so are Kings and Magistrates. God standeth in the congregation of Lord's: he is Judge among the God's. Others will so style themselves ex usurpation; as the Canonists say of their Pope Dominus Deus noster Papa. Our Lord God the Pope. But he is but a Lord and God in a blind and tetrycall Opinion.

The Lord is only Almighty; able to do more by his absolute power, then he will by his actual. Able for potent, not impotent works. He cannot lie, he cannot die. Diciter omnipotence faciendo quod vult, non patiendo quod non vult. He is called Almighty in doing what he pleaseth not in suffering what he pleaseth not.

This is his Greatness. As his Mercy directs us to love him, so let his Majesty instruct us to fear him. I will briefly touch both these affections; but Love shall go foremost.

LOVE.

Our God is Good, and good to us; let us therefore love him. 1. It is an Affection, that God principally requires. 2. It is a Nature, wherein alone we can answer God.

For the former, God requires not thy Wisdom to direct him, nor thy Strength to assist him, nor thy Wealth to enrich him, nor thy Dignity to advance him; but only thy Love. Love him with all thy heart.

For the second; Man cannot indeed answer God well in any other thing. When God judgeth us, we must not judge him again: When he reproveth us, we must not justify our selves. If he be angry, we must answer him in patience; if he command, in obedience: But when God loves us, we must answer him in the same nature, though not in the same measure; and love him again. We may not give God word for word: we dare not offer him blow for blow: we cannot requite him good turn for good turn: yet we may, can, must give him Love for Love. Nam cum amat Deus, non aliud vult quàm amari,

Now because every man sets his foot upon the freehold of Love, and says, it is mine; let us ask for his Evidence whereby he holds it? We call an Evidence, a Deed; and Deedes are the best demonstration of our right in Love. If thou love God for his own sake, show it by thy deeds of Piety: If thou love Man for God's sake, show it by thy deeds of Charity. The root of Love is in the Heart; but it sends forth Veines into the Hands, and gives them an active and nimble dexterity to good Works. If you love me, saith Christ, keep my Commandments. If you love man, show your Compassion to him: Obedience to our Creator, Mercy to his Image, testify our Loves. He that wants these Evidences, these Deedes; when that busy Informer the Devil sues him, will be unhappily vanquished.

FEARE.

LET us pàsse from Love to Fear. we must Love our good God: we must Fear our great Lord. It is objected against this passage of union, that perfect love casteth out fear. It is answered, that fear brings in perfect love; as the Needle draws in the Thread. And it is not possible, that true Love should be without good Fear; that is, a filial Reverence. For slavish fear, be it as far from your hearts, as it shall be from my discourse.

Now this Fear is a most due and proper affection: and (I may say) the fittest of all to be towards God. Indeed God requires our Love: but we must think, that then God stoupes low, and bows himself down to be loved of us. For there is such an infinite inequality betwixt God and us, that without his sweet dignation, and descending to us, there could be no fitness of this affection. But look we up to that infinite glory of our great Lord: look we down on the vileness of our selves, sinful dust: and we will say, that by reason of the disproportion between us, nothing is so suitable for our baseness to give so high a God, as Fear. Therefore, Comeye Children hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the Lord. Fear the Lord all ye his Servants; as well as Love the Lord all ye his Saints.

Now this Fear hath as many Chalers as Love had. When this Book is held out, every man's lips are ready to kiss it; and to say and swear, that they fear the Lord. Love had the Testimony, Charytie: and Fear, must have his Service. Psal. 2. Serve the Lord with fear.

It is man's necessitated condition to be a Servant. Happy they, that can truly call Christ Master: Ye call me Lord and Master, and ye say well; for so I am.

He that serves the Flesh, serves his fellow: And a Beggar mounted on the back of Honor, rides post to the Devil. This is a choleric Master; so fickle, that at every turn, he is ready to turn thee out of doors. We may say of him, as of the Spaniard, He is a bad Servant, but a worse Master.

He that serves the World, serves his Servant; as if Chams curse was lighted on him, Seruus seruorum; a Drudge to Slaues, a Slaue to Drudges.

He that serves the Devil, serves his Enemy; and this is a miserable service. Sure it was a lamentable preposterous sight, that Solomon saw. Eccle. 10. I have seen Servants upon Horses, and Princes walking as Servants upon the Earth. And Agur numbers it among those four things, whereby the World is disquieted: A Servant when he reigneth, and a Fool when he is filled with Meat: an odious woman, when she is married, and a handmaid that is heir to her Mistress.

Judge then how horribly it is, that men should set (as the Savages of Calecut) the Devil, or his two Ingles, the world and the flesh in the Throne; whiles they place God in the foot-stool. Or that in this Common-wealth of man, Reason which is the Queen, or the Princes the better powers & graces of the Soul, should stoop to so base a Slaue, as sensual lust. Delight is not seemly for a fool: much less for a Servant to have rule over Princes.

S<sup>t</sup>. Basil (not without passion) did envy the Devils happynesse: Who had neither Created us, nor redeemed us, nor preserveth us; but violently Labors our destruction; that yet he should have more servants, then God, that made us, then Jesus Christ that with his own precious Blood, and grievous sufferings bought us. Well, he is happy, that can truly say with David; I am thy Servant, O Lord, I am thy Servant, and the Son of thy Handmayde. This Service is true Honor: for so Kings and Princes; yea the blessed Angels of heaven are thy fellows.

God is Good, that we may love him: the Lord is Great that we may Fear him. We have heard, both severally; let us consider them jointly, and therein the security of our own happiness. It is a blessed confirmation, when both these, the Goodness and the Greatness of GOD meet upon us. His Greatness, that he is able▪ his Goodness, that he is willing to save us. Were he never so Great, if not Good to us, we had little help. Were he never so Good, if not Great, and of ability to succor us, we had less comfort. He would stand us in small stead, if either his Will or his Power was defective; if either he could not, or would not save us.

His Goodness without his Greatness, might fail us: His Greatness without his Goodness, would terrify us. It is a happy concurrence, when Mercy and Truth meet together: when Righteousness and Peace kiss each other. So sweetly singes the Psalmist: Graciou▪ is the Lord, and righteous: yea our God is merciful. Wherevpon S. Ambros. Bis misericordiam posuit, semel iustitiam. He is once said to be Righteous; but twice in one verse, to be Gratious: It is sweet when both are conjoined, as in the first and last verse of this Psalm: O give thaenkes to the Lord, for he is good: for his Mercy endureth forever. The Lord is Good; though Great, yet also Good: and his Mercy (so well as his Justice) endures forever. Man hath no such assurance of comfort in God, as to meditate, that his great Power, and good Will; his Glory and Grace, his Majesty and Mercy met together.

These be God's two Daughters; Justice and Mercy: Let us honor them both; but let us kiss and embrace Mercy. But alas, we have dealt unkindly with them both. God hath two Daughters, and we have ravished them.

There is a Story of a man, that meeting in a Desert with two Virgin-sisters; he did ravish both of them: Afterwards on his apprehension, the former desired, that he might justly die for it. The other did entreat as earnestly, that he might live, and that she might enjoy him for her Husband.

Man is that ravisher, and those two Virgins are the Justice and Mercy of God. Against his Justice we have sinned, and provoked his indignation to strike us: yea, even his Mercy we have abused. For her sake we have been spared, and a longer day of repentance given us: yet we have despised the riches of this Mercy; and presuming on Mercy, have dared to multiply our transgressions. Justice pleads to God that we should die; urgeth his Law: Who so ever sinneth, shall die: And, Death is the wages of sin. Mercy intreats beseecheth, that we may live; and produceth the Gospel, Who so ever repents, shall be pardoned: Who so ever believes, shall be saved: And for further assurance, brings forth that blessed Pardon, sealed in the Wounds and Blood of Jesus Christ. God hearkens to Mercy for his Sons sake: though we have ravished and wronged his Mercy; yet for Mercies sake, we shall be forgiven. But then we must be married to Mercy; married in our Faith, believing on Christ: married in our good life, being merci•ull unto men.

The Blessing.

WEe see the Author, let us look on his Blessing• Light. He hath-s•wed us Light. We are come into the Light, and therefore have light enough of an ample Discourse. But my purpose is only to show you this Light, (as the word is in my Text) not to dwell on it; though I pray, that all you and myself may forever dwell in it.

LIGHT.

Such as the Giver is, such is the Gift. 1. John. •. God is Light, and in him is no Darkness at all. And S. James calls him the Father of Light. God is So Glorious a Light, that as the Sun dazeleth the eyes too steadfastly fixed on it: so his incomprehensible Majesty confounds all those, that too curiously pry into it.

So Clear a Light, that he sees into all corners. The eyes of God are in every place, beholding the evil and the good. He searcheth more narrowly then the beams of the Sun: He sees Bribery in the Office, Adultery in the Closs•t, Fraud in the Shoppe, though the Pent-house makes it as dark as a room in Bedlam.

So Good a Light, that in him is no darkness; not so much as a shadow. There is none in him; there comes none from him. Indeed he made outward Darkness of Hell, the wages of sin: But he never made the inward Darkness of the Soul, which is sin.

So Constant a Light; that though the Sun be variable in his Course, sometimes shining bright, often Clouded: yet God is without change as the Moon, without Eclipsing as the Sun, without Setting as the Stars.

So Spreading a Light, that he communicates it to us. This is the true Light, which Lighteth everyone that cometh into the world. Without whom we should have been wrapped in an eternal miserable Darkness: but that he sent one To give Light to them that sate in Darkness, and in the shadow of Death, to guide their feet into the way of Peace.

And this is the Light, which he here showeth us. By the consent of all Expositors in this Psalm is Typed the coming of Christ, and his kingdom of the Gospel. This is manifested by an Exaltation, by an Exultation, by a Petition, by a Benediction.

The Exaltation. Ver. 22. The stone, which the builders refused, is become the head stone of the Corner. The Jews refused this Stone, but God hath Built his Church upon it.

The Exultation. Ver. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made: we will rejoice and be glad in it. A more blessed Day, then that Day was, wherein he made man, when he had done making the world, Rejoice we, and be glad in it.

The Petition. Ver. 25. Save now I beseech thee, O Lord: O Lord, I beseech thee send now Prosperity. Thy Justice would not suffer thee to save without the Messias: he is come, Save Now, O Lord I beseech thee. Our Savior is come, let mercy and salvation come along with him.

The Benediction makes all clear. ver. 25. Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord. For what David here prophesied, the people after accomplished. Math. 21. Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

The Corollary or Sum is in my Text. ver. 27. God is the Lord that hath shown us light: bind the Sacrifice with Cords to the Horns of the Altar.

It was truly said, Lex est Lux: the Law is Light. But unable to light us to Heaven; not through it own, but our deficiency. Hereon it did not save, but condemn us. Lex non damnans est ficta et picta Lex: That Law that doth not condemn us, is a feigned and painted Law. The Apostle calls it the Ministration of death.

Let then the less Light give place to the greater. Legalia fuerunt ante passionem Domini vina, Statim post passionem mortua, hodie sepulta: The Legal rites were before the Passion of Christ alive, straight after his Passion dead, now buried. Or as another; The Ceremonies of the Law were in their prime Mortals, in Christ's age Mortuae, in our time Mortiferae. They were at first Dying, in our Saviors time Dead, in ours Deadly. The Law was given by Moses, but Grace and Truth came by Jesus Christ.

We have now found out the Light, and (blessed be God) above these fifty years we have found it: That if any should say (as Philip to Christ. John. 14. Lord show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. To whom Jesus answers. Have I been so long with you, and yet hast thou not known me? Philip, he that hath seen me, hath seen the Father: So if any should say) Shew us the Light, and it sufficeth us. I answer; Hast thou been so long in the Light, and hast thou not known it? Art thou one of that Country that, Appollonius writes of, that can see nothing in the day, but all in the night. Hath the Light made thee blind? If no other, the vicissitude of this Exercise Shewes, that the Light is among us.

I should tris•le time to prove by arguments to the care, a thing so visible to the eye: and waste the Light of the day, to demonstrate the evidence of this Light being amongst us. Meditation and Wonder better become this subject, then discourse.

It is the Blessing of God's Right hand. Prov. 3. Length of days is in her Right hand; and in her Left hand Riches and Honor; saith Solomon of Wisdom, he meant it of Christ. This Light shall procure to a man blessed eternity. All those blessings of the Left hand, as Riches and Honor, are frail and mortal: Nothing lasts long in this World, except a suit at Law. But this Light, if our selves fault not, shall out-shine for countenance, and out-last for continuance, the Sun in the Firmament. Therefore our Psalmographer. ver. 15. having shown, that The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the Tabernacles of the righteous he adds, The Right hand of the Lord hath done valiantly. yea he doubles and trebbles it. The Right hand of the Lord is exalted: the right hand of the Lord hath done valiantly. This is the God of Lights, That had the seven Stars in his Right hand. This Light must enlighten us to some duties.

1. Rejoice in this Light, ver 24. This is the Light-day that the Lord hath made: let us Rejoice and be glad in it: Not for a spurt, as the Stony ground▪ Math. 13. that with Joy receives the Sermon; but goes home as stony-hearted, as Judas after the Soppe. Nor as the Jews, to whom John the Baptist was a burning and a shining Lamp: and they for a season, rejoiced in his light: But afterwards never rested, till they had eclipsed the Sun on the Cross, and slain his Morning-star in the Prison. Nor as Children, that come abroad to play in the Sunshine, and make no more account of it. Nor as a people, that never saw the Sun, step out of their doors to gaze upon it, and then turn their backs on it. But Rejoice with a solid joy, as they whom God hath brought out of darkness, into his marueylous light.

2. Walk worthy of this Light. This was St. Paul's request to his Ephesians, that they would Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called. The Night is past, the Light is come: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and put on the armor of Light. Be children of the Light. As the Light shines on thee, let it shine in thee. Thou hast small comfort to be in the Light, unless the Light be in thee. Saith the Prophet to the Church; Arise, shine: for thy light cometh, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee▪ As God hath shown his Light to you: So let your Light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and gloryfie your Father, which is in Heaven. There are some that boast their Communion with God: against S:▪ John reasons Anatura Dei. God is Light: if we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie & do not the truth S<sup>t</sup>. Paul's argument is of the same fashion, what Communion hath Light with darkness? The holy writ calls all sins. Opera tencbrarum, the works of darkness. Because,

1. They are perpetrated against God, who is the Father of Lights. I am. 1. 17.
2. They are suggested by the Devil, who is the Prince of darkness Eph. 6. 12.
3. They are most usually committed in the da•ke Male agens odit Lucem. They that sleep, sleep in the night: and they that be Drunken, be Drunken in the night. 1. Thess 5. 7.
4. They are the effects of blindness of mind: and Ignorance is a grievous inward Darkness. Their fool sh heart was Darkned: and hence issued those deadly sins Rom. 1. 21.
5. Their reward shall be utter Darkness. Cast that unprofitable servant into utter Darkness. Mat. 25. 30. And Iud▪ Ver. 13. To them is reserved the blackness of darkness forever

If then God hath shown thee Light; show not thou the deeds of Darkness: but walk honestly as in the day Rom. 13. 13.

3 Take heed of sore eyes. Pleasures, lusts, and vanities, make the eyes sore that are dotingly fastened on them. The Usurer with telling his Gold: the haughti• with contemplating his greatness: the Drunkard with looking at the Wine laughing in the Cup: the lustful with Gazing on his Painted damnations; make their eyes so sore, that they cannot look up, and behold this Light.

4. Take benefit of this Light, whiles it shines. It may be clouded, as it was in the days of Popery. Either this Light may be set to thee, or thou be set to it. That to thee by Remouing the Candlestick: thou to that by the hand of Death, which shall send thee to the Land of forgetful Darkness. Our Savior taught us this (not only in precept, but) in practice. I must work the work of him that sent me, whiles it is day: for the night cometh wherein no man can work. Let us not do like some Courtiers, that having Light allowed them, Play it out at Cardes, and go to Bed darkling.

5 Lastly, help to maintain this Light, that it go not out. If you would have the Lamps of the Sanctuary shine, pour in your Oil. Grudge not a little cost, to keeke this Light clear. The Papists have their Candlemasse: they bestow great cost in Lights about a Service of Darkness. Repine not you then at a little Charges, for the everlasting Lamp of the Gospel: Some of you I bear you witness, do not Grudge it. Go on and prosper: and whiles you make the Church happy, make yourselves so.

Wherewith.

I must now step from Heaven to Earth: I pass from the For what, to the With what God is to be praised.

He hath shown you his Light: show him yours. He hath given us an inestimable blessing, what shall we return him? What? Bind the Sacrifice with Cords even to the Horns of the Alter.

This is man's Thankfulness, for God's Bountifulness. We will first cast over the particulars, and then sum them.

- 1. Here is Sacrifice to be offered.
- 2. This Sacrifice must be bound. Bind the Sacrifice.
- 3. This Sacrifice must be bound with Cords Bind the Sacrifice with Cords.
- 4. This Sacrifice must be bound with Cords to the Alter. Bind the Sacrifice with Cords to the Alter.
- 5. This Sacrifice must be. 1. Bound. 2. With Cords.
- 3. To the Altar. 4. Yea even to the Horns of the Alter, you see the Totum is Thankfullnesse; and the Bill hath five particulars.
  - 1. The Sacrifice is Devotion.
  - 2. Binding the Sacrifice, constant Devotion.
  - 3. With Cords, servant Devotion.

- 4. To the Altar, rectified Devotion.
- 5. To the Horns of the Altar, confident Devotion. Devotion is the Mother and she hath four Daughters.
  - 1. Constancy, Bind the Sacrifice.
  - 2. Fervency. Bind it with Cords.
  - 3. Wisdom. Bind it to the Altar.
  - 4. Confidence. Even to the Horns of the Altar.

Sacrifice.

Is the act of our Deuote Thankfulness. I might here (to no great purpose) travel a large field of discourse for Sacrifices. But it were no other, but where the Scripture offereth us the company a Myle, to compel it to go with us twain.

All Sacrifices are either Expiatorie, or Gratulatorie. Expiatory for the condonation of sins; Gratulatory for the Donation of graces. So in a word, they were either Sin-offerings, or Peace-offerings.

The Sin-offerings of the Jews had two main ends.

1. To acknowledge Peecat• stipendium mortem; that Death was the wages of sin due to the Sacrificers, laid on the Sacrificed.

2. Mystically & symbolically to prefigure the killing of the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world. So Calvin. Semper illis ante oculos simbola proponi oportu•t. They had ever need of signs, and types, and figurative demonstrations before their eyes.

But those Saerifices are abolished in Christ who offered one Sacrifice for sins forever; and that such a one, as was a sweet smelling Sauour to God. It was a prettie observation, that the last Character of the Hebrew Alphabet, was a plain Figure of Christ's Cross; to show that his Sacrifice ended all theirs.

Ours is the second kind; a Gratulatorie Sacrifice. Our Prophet here speaking of the days of the Gospel. Then, Bind this Sacrifice with Cords, &c. Christ is our Altar, let our selves be the Sacrifice: the Fire that kindles it, the Love of God; the Smoke that goes up, the consumption of our sins.

That this Sacrifice may be acceptable, I will show you how it must be done, how it must not be done.

- 1. What is to be excluded.
- 2. How it ought to be qualified.

Exclusiuely.

IT must be sine Pelle, sine Melle, sine Fell, sine Macula.

1. Sine Pelle, without the Skin of Ostentation; which indeed makes them not Sacrificia, but Sacrilegia, Not Sacrifices, but Sacriledges: They are so Opera muta, Dumb deeds: nay, rather Opera mendacij, Loude lying works; as if they told God a good tale how they loved him, when they meant to deceive him. God will require all untruths between man and man; but fallacies and falsehoods done between the Porch and the Altar, in the shadow of the Church, and under the pretence of his service, he will sorely revenge.

The casting up of the Eyes, the bowing down of the Knees, the uncovering the Head, moving the Lips, knocking the Brest, sighing and crying, what mean they? are they not symptoms and demonstrative witnesses of an inward compunction? Are they not a protestation, that the Soul is speaking to God? If there be not an honest Heart within, this is but the Skin of a Sacrifice: And they that give God the Skin for the Body, God will give them the Skin for the Body; the shadow of Blessings for the substance.

It is storied of one that sold his wife Glasses for Pearls: Imposturam faecit, et passus est, He cozened, and was cozened. They that sell the Lord of Heaven (how so ever they may deceive his Spouse, the Church on earth) Glasses for Pearls, Shelles for Kernels, Copper for Gold, Bark for Bulk, Shew for Substance, Fansie for Conscience; God will be even with them, and give them Stones for Bread, Images of Delight for substantial Ioyes: Imposturam faciunt patienter, They deceive, and shall be deceived.

2. Sine Melle: There must be no Honey of self-complacency in this Sacrifice. Psal. 51. The Sacrifices of God are a broken Spirit: a broken and contrite Heart, O God, thou wilt not despise. A true Sacrifice consists not only (Faciendo, but Patiendo,) in doing, but in dying, or suffering for Christ.

In the Law, Beasts appointed for Sacrifice, were first slain, and so offered. In the Gospel, Christians must first mortify their earthly members, and crucify their carnal lusts, and then offer up themselves. As Death takes away the Natural life; so Mortification must take away the Sensuall life. Moriatur ergo homo, ne moriatur: Mutetur ne damnetur: Let a man die, that he may not die: let him be changed, that he be not damned. Only the mortified man is the true living Sacrifice. It must not then be Honey to our Palates; but bitter: even so bitter, as Abnegare suos, sua, se: to deny our Friends, to deny our Goods, to deny our selves, for Christ his cause.

3. Sine Fell: There must be no Amarulentia, no Gall of bitterness in this Sacrifice. Math. 5. If thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and rememberest that thy Brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift, and go thy way: first be reconciled to thy Brother, and then offer it. If thy Brother hath ought against thee, God hath more. If thou have somewhat against thy Brother, God hath somewhat against thee. Go ye and learn what that meaneth; I will have Mercy, and not Sacrifice.

Whiles you trippe up men's heels with Frauds. lay them along with Sutes, tread on them with Oppressions, blow them up with Usuries, Injuries: Your Sacrifice is full of Gall. It was said in wonder; Is Saul among the Prophets? So, what makes a Slaunderer, a Defrauder, an Usurer, an Oppressor, at Church? They come not sine Fell, without the Gall of Uncharitableness: they shall return sieve Melle, without the Honey of God's Mercies. To do good, and to communicate, forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased: Merciful works are Pro sacrificijs, imo prae sacrificijs: Equall to Sacrifices, above Sacrifices in God's acceptance.

4. Sine Macula. Levite. 22. God commands, that his Sacrifice be without Blemish; nor blind, nor broken, nor maimed, nor infected, &c. Therefore a Lamb without spot was offered for a morning and an evening Sacrifice. And the Lamb of God in an antitypical relation, is truly said, Immaculatus, a Lamb without spot, without blemish.

The Drunkard is without a head, the Swearer hath a Garget in his throat, the Covetous hath a lame hand, he cannot give to the poor: the Epicure hath a gorbely, the Adulterer is a scabbed Goat, the Worldling wants an eye, the Ruffian an ear, the Coward a heart: these are Mutila Sacrificia, lame, defective, luxate, imperfect Sacrifices.

The Prophet Isaiah begins and ends his Prophecy with a denuntiation of God's contempt, and refusal of such Oblations; Who will forget those to be the sons of grace, that forget his Sacrifices to be the Sacrifices of a God. He that sacrificeth a Lamb, is as if he cut off a Dogs neck.

Comprehensiuely.

IT must be Cum Thure, cum Sale, cum Sanguine, cum Integritate.

1. Cum Thure: The Frankincense is Prayer and Invocation. Let my Prayer be set forth before thee as Incense: and the lif•yng up of my hands as the Eueing sacrifice.

These the Prophet calls Vitulos Labiorum, The Cal•s (not of our Fouldes, but) of our Lips: Whereof the Lord more esteemeth, then of the Bullock that hath Horn and Hoofe.

This is the special Sacrifice here meant. God expectes it of us: Non vt auarus, (as Ambros.) Not as if he were covetous of it; but ex debito. Yet as he must give the Beast to us, before we can give it to him. Joel 2. For the Lord must Leave a Blessing behind him; even a Meat Offering, and a Drink Offering for himself: So this spiritual Sacrifice of Prayers and Praise, must be Datum as well as Mandatum; Conferred, as Required. Tribuat Deus, vt homo retribuatur: Let God give it to man, that man may give it to God: He that commands it, must bestow it.

2. Cum Sale: There must be Salt to season this Sacrifice. Levite. 2. With all thine Offeringes thou shalt offer Salt.

Salt hath been usually taken for Discretion. What S. Paul speaks of our Words, should hold also in our deeds. Coloss. 4. Powdred with Salt. The Proverb is true; an Ounce of Discretion, is worth a pound of Learning. Tolle hanc, et virtus vitium erit: Banish this, and you shall run Virtue into Vice, blow Heate into a Flame, turn Conscience into a Furie, and drive Devotion out of her wits: Zeal without this, is like a keen Sword in a mad hand.

3 Cum Sanguine. Not literally, as in the Sacrifices of the Law. Almost all things by the Law are purged with Blood. But spiritually, to make them acceptable, they must be dipped in our, the Blood of Jesus Christ.

Without this they are not holy: as one expounds Sanctum, quasi sanguine consecratum. Here is then the necessity of a true faith, to sprinkle all our Sacrifices with our Saviors Blood; No Sacrifice otherwise good. For whatsoever is not of faith, is sin. Therefore if any man comes to the Church, more for fear of the Law, then love of the Gospel, he offers a thanklesse Sacrifice.

4. Cum Integritate. And this in respect

- Sacrificij,
- Sacrificantis.

1. Of the Sacrifice God reproveth the Jews, that they had laid polluted Bread upon his Alter. If ye offer the Blind for Sacrifice, is it not evil? If ye offer the Lame and the sick, is it not evil? The Lord's Sacrifice must be fat and fair; not a lean, scraggling, starved Creature.

Paul beseecheth his Romans, that they would present themselves a Living (or quick) Sacrifice to God: When infirmities have Craz'd it, and age almost raz'd it, then to offer it: alas; it is not a living, but a dying; not a quick, but a sick Sacrifice. This must be a whole and holy Oblation.

2. Of the Sacrificer. The life and soul of a Sacrifice, is not the outward action, but the inward affection of the Heart. Men's cuiusque, is est quisque: As the Mind is, so is the Man: as the Man is, so is his Sacrifice. If we bring our Sheep to God's Altar, and them alone; we had as good have left them behind us, as an unprofitable Carriage. Wherewith shall I come before the Lord? With burnt offerings, and Calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of Rammes, or with ten thousand rivers of Oil? Shall I give my first borne for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? No, learn another Oblation. God hath shown thee, O man, what is good; and what doth he require of thee, but to Do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

The Poet could ask the Priest, In Templo quid facit aurum? He bids them bring Compositum ius, fas{que} animi, &c. Put these into my hands, et far litabo. Lay upon the Altar of your Heart Faith, Repentance, Obedience, Patience, Humility, Chastity, Charity; Bona pignora mentis, and consecrate these to the Lord.

When the searcher of the Reynes shall find a carkas of Religion without a quickening Spirit, he will turn his countenance from it. Beasts died when they were sacrificed: Men cannot live unless they be sacrificed.

The Oracle answered, to him that demanded what was the best Sacrifice to please God.

Da medium Lunae, Solem simul, et Canis iram: Give the half Moon, the whole Sun, and the Dogs anger: Which three Characters make COR, the Heart. Deus non habet gratum offerentem propter munera, sed munera propter offerentem: God values not the Offerer by the Gift, but the Gift by the Offerer. Let not then thy Heart be as dead, as the Beast thou immolatest.

So Peter Martyr expounds Paul's living Sacrifice. Those things that can move themselves, are living and quick: they are dead, that cannot stir themselves, but by others violence. Compelled service to God; as to keep his Statutes, for fear of Mans Statutes, is an unsound Oblation, not quick and lively. God loves a cheerful giver, and thanks-giver. Non respicit Deus munera, nisi te talem praestes, qualem te munera promittunt: God regards not thy Gifts, unless thou dost show thyself such a one, as thy Gifts promise thee. Ad te, non munera spectat.

You see the Sacrifice, Devotion. The Mother hath held us long: we will deal more briefly with her Daughters.

Constancy.

The first borne is Constancy. Bind the Sacrifice. Grace is like a Ring, without end; and the Diamond of this Ring is Constancy. Deut. 6. Thou shalt bind my Statutes for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. It is the advice of wisdom Let not mercy and truth forsake thee: Bind them about thy neck, and write them upon the Table of thy heart.

The Leafe of a Righteous man never fadeth, saith the Psal. If it doth, then Lapsus foliorum, mortificatio arborum, saith the Gloss. The fall of the leaves will be the death of the Tree. It is to small purpose, to steer the vessel safe through the main, and splitte her within a league of the Haven. To put your hand to the Plow, and thrive well in the best husbandry; and with Demas to look back.

Vincenti dabitur; and fulfilled Holin•sse wear•s the Crown. Some have derived Sanctum, quasi sancitum; an established Nature. All Virtues run in a race: only one winneth the Garland, the Image of eternity, happy Constancy. Wisdom is a tree of Life to them that lay hold on her: and blessed is he that retains her: Therefore, Make sure your Election; Fast bind, fast find: Bind the Sacrifice.

Fervency.

The next Daughter of this righteous generation, is Fervency. Bind the Sacrifice with Cordes. Thou canst not make Heaven too suit. Men use to bind the World to them, faster then the Philistines Sampson, or the Jailor his fugitiue Prisoner, with Cords, with Cords of Yron; that it may not start from them, and run away.

Riches is known to be wild Bedlam; therefore they will keep it in Bonds. They bind their Lands with Intailes, their Goods with Walls, their Monyes with Obligations, that on no condition they may give them the slip: But they care not how loose the Conscience be: they that give liberty enough, even to licentiousness.

But the Sacrifice of Devotion must be bound with Cords: a Corde of love, a Corde of fear, a Corde of faith; and this threefold Coard is not easily broken.

Wisdom.

A third Daughter, and one of the beautifullest, is Wisdom. Bind the Sacrifice with Cords to the Altar. Rectified Devotion, is specially acceptable.

A man may be devout enough: too much, when their zeal is like the horn in the Unicorn's head: it doth more hurt than good. You would not have wished Baal Priests do more for their Master: loe, the gashes and mouths of their self-given wounds, speak their forwardness: they wanted a Lamp of direction, to Guide it to God's Altar.

Aristotle calls Discretion, virtutum normam et formam: the eye of the soul, the soul of virtue. I would to God, some amongst us had one Dramme of this grace, mingled with their whole handfuls of zeal. It would a little Cool the preter natural heat of the sling-brand fraternity; as one wittily calleth them.

Hollerius writes of an Italian, that by often smelling to the herb Basil, had Scorpions bred in his brain. Proud Faction is the weed they so much smell on, and make poesies of, that the serpents bred in their brains, do sting and wound the bosom of the Church. These Bind, and with Cords, but not to the Altar, Devotion is not their scope, but distraction. O may the spirit of meekness Bind their Sacrifice to the Altar: direct their zeal with Discretion, to the glory of God. And let us everyone say resolutely with Dauid: I will wash my hands in innocence, O Lord; and so will I compass thine Altar. Wisdom is a fair Daughter in this Progenie. Bind the Sacrifice with Cords to the Altar.

Confidence.

The youngest Daughter of this fair Sister-hood, is Faith. Copious matter of Discourse might here be offered me, about the site, matter, fashion, of the Altar; and to what purpose these four Horns of the Altar served: Bind the Sacrifice with Cords to the Horns of the Altar.

Perhaps many precious Mines of mysteries might here be found out, which I dig not for. Among diverse other ends I find, that these Horns of the Altar were for Refuge; & guilty men did fly unto them for fear of the Law. Adoniah feared because of Solomon, and arose, and went, and caught hold on the Horns of the Altar. So Joab in the next Chapter, Fled to the Tabernacle of the Lord, and caught hold on the Horns of the Altar. They fled thither in a hopeful confidence of mercy.

Christ is our Altar, Heb. 13. his Merits the Horns of the Altar. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of Praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name. Our Faith must catch hold on these Horns, Christ's merits, that is, our Sacrifice may be acceptable.

The Law of God shall surprise us, and the Sword of eternal death shall kill us, if we bind not our Sacrifice to the Horns of the Altar: if we rest not upon the all-sufficient Merits of Jesus Christ.

This is the Mother of her, whose Daughter she is. It may be said of these, as the Poet of Yce and Water; the Mother brings forth the Daughter, & the Daughter brings forth the Mother.

All her Sisters are beholding to her: Never a Damosell of Israel dares enter Ahasuerus Court, but she; She alone must bring all graces to the Horns of the Altar. O blessed Faith: Many Daughters have done vertuously, but thou excellest them all. Bind then the Sacrifice with Cords, even unto the Horns of the Altar.

YOU hear the Mother and her Children: These are the Daughters that true Devotion bringeth forth. Compare we our Progenie with these, and we shall find, that we bring forth Daughters of another countenance.

Distinguish this Land of ours (let the word Diuide, be held heresy in manners) into four CC: Court, City, Country, Church.

The Court may be said to have three Daughters; as Fulco boldly told Richard the first: which are vicious, & of a wicked disposition. The King answered, He had no Daughters at all. Fulco said, he cherished three in his Court that were no better then Strumpets; and therefore wished him timely to provide them Husbands, or else they would undo him, and his Realm. The angry King would have them named. Fulco told him, they were Pride, Avarice, and Luxury. The blushing, penitent, and discreet Prince confessed, and resolved to bestow them. So he gave Pride to the Templars, Avarice to the Cistercians Monks, & Luxury to the Popish Prelates: the like matches, as fitter then in England could not be found for them.

The City hath four Daughters too: Fraud, Hypocrisy, Usury, Sensuality. Let me say; the breeding and indulgence to such Daughters, shame you. Shall I tell you how to cast them away upon Husbands? Marry Fraud to the professed Cheaters. Bestow Usury upon the Brokers. Banish Sensuality to the Forest, to see if any Beast will take it up. And for Hypocrisy, wedde it to the brain-sick Separatist, though you send it to them with a letter of Mart to Amsterdam.

The Country hath three Daughters; Ignorance, Uncharitableness, and Ill-custom: Ignorance they might bestow on the Papists, they will make much of it. Let them send Uncharitableness to the Savages and Saracens. And Ill-custom to the Jews, who will rather keep their Customs, then their Savior.

For the Church; we have but two Children, and those none of our own breeding neither; though we are fain to bring them up with patience, Pouerti, and Contempt: and take'hem who will, so we were rid of them.

These are not the Daughters of Devotion, but the wretched brood of our Indeuotion.

There are amongst us,

- 1. Some that will not Bind.
- 2. Some that will Bind, but not with Cords.
- 3. Some that will Bind with Cords, but not the Sacrifice.
- 4. Some that will Bind the Sacrifice with Cords, but not to the Alter.
- 5. Some that will Bind the Sacrifice with Cords to the Altar, but not to the Horns of the Altar.

1. Some will not Bind; nay they will not be bound. There are so many Religions in the world, that they will be tied to none of them. Such a one is like a loose Tooth in the head, of little use, of much trouble. Their trepidations are more shaking then cold Ague-fittes: their staggers worse then a Drunkards.

A Fether in the Air, a Fane on the House, a Cockboate in the Sea, are less inconstant. The course of a Dolphin in the Water, of a Buzzard in the Air, of a Whore in the City, is more certain. They are full of farraginous and bullimong mixtures: pour them forth into liberty, and they run wilder then Quick silver on a table.

But let a good man be (as John Bap was commended by our Savior) No Reed shaken with the Wind: Let our Actions have ballace, our Affections balance: be we none of those, that will not Bind.

2. Some will Bind, but not with Cords: they will take on them an outward profession, but not be fervent in it. they will not bind themselves to Devotion, as the Philistines bound Sampson, with new Withes, or with new Ropes; but only with a Rush, or a Haire, or a twine Threed of coldness.

A Sermon or a Mass, is all one to them; they come with equal devotion to either. All the Religion in the World with these Gergesens, is not worth a slitch of Bacon: For handfulls of Barley, and morselles of Bread, you may win them to worship the Queen of Heaven.

Their lukewarmenese is so offensive, that they trouble all stomaches: GOD shall spee them out of the Church: the earth shall spew them into the Grave, and the Grave shall spew them into Hell.

3. Some will Bind, and with Cords; but not the Sacrifice. Such are the utterly irreligious, the openly profane. They have their Cords to bind; but they will not meddle with the Sacrifice, Devotion. The Prophet Isaiah gives them a Vae for their labor.

Woe unto them that draw Iniquity with cords of Vanity; and sin, as it were with a Cart-ropes. But in a just quittance for their strong-hailed wickedness, they draw on their own destruction with Cords, and damnation, as it were with a Cart-ropes. So those Funcs peccatorum, that Solomon speaks of, shall be rewarded: His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the Cords of his sins. There is such a concatenation of their wickedness, rioting, swearing, drunkenness, whoredom, that at last the Cords end reaches to Hell.

Their whole life is but like a Fire-work, that runs along the Rope of wickedness, till at last it goes out in the Grave, and is rekindled in the slaming Pit. They bind sin sure to them selves with Cords; and with the same Cords the Devil Binds them as fast to him: they shall speed as himself doth, and be at last Bound with the Cords, or Chai'es of darkness.

The Magistrate should do well (in mean time) to Bind them with Material Cords, of severe punishments. Chaine up their feet from Brothel-houses, Manacle their hands from slaughters; give them the Cords of Correction, least at last by a Corde they depart the world.

The three spetiall Twists of this Corde, are Drunkenness, Whoredom, Cossenage. If you could untwine these three, and separate them; there were some hope of breaking them all. You say, on their deprehesion they have sure punishment: be as careful to find them out. But it is reported, you have roused these sins from their old nests, and sent them home to your own houses. Cheating winds into some of your own shops: Adultery creeps into some of your own Chambers. And I know not how, sometimes Justices & Magistrates have whipt Drunkenness out of the Alehouse into their own Cellers.

There is one amongst us that is a terrible Binder; and that's the usurer. He Binds strangely, strongly, with the Cords of obligations. You know he that enters into obligation, is said to come into Bonds; it is all one, into Cords. This man's whole life is spent in tying of knots: his profession is Cordage. And for this cause he is beloved of the Cord-makers, for setting them on work; and of nobody else.

This fellow Binds, but he will near Bind the Sacrifice: his conscience shall be loose enough. I could say much to this Binder, if there were any hope of him. But I remember a true story, that a friend told me of an Usurer. There was a Godly Preacher in his Parish, that did beat down with all just conuictions, and honest reproofs that sin. Many Usurers flocked to his Church, because he was a man of note. Among the rest, this Usurer did bid him often to dinner, and used him very kindly. Not long after this Preacher began to forbear Usury; not in any connivance or partialitie; but because he had dealt plentyfully with it; and now his Text led him not to it.

Now begins the Usurer to be heavy, sorrowing and discontent; And turned his former kindness into fullness. The Preacher must needs observe it, and boldly asked him the reasons of this sudden aversion. The Usurer replied. If you had held on your first Course to in•eigh against Usury, I had some hope you would ha•e put all the Usurers down; and so I should have had the better Vent and Custom for my Mony. For my part, say what you will, I never meant to leave it: But I should have been beholding to you, if you could have made me an Usurer alone. You see the hope of an Usurers Conversion.

But I would to God, that everyone thus bound with the Corde of his Wickedness, would consider, that so long as a Corde is whole, it is not easily broken: but untwist it, & lay it thread by thread, and you my quickly snappe it a sunder. Beloved, first untwine the Corde of your sins by serious consideration, and then you may easily break them off by Repentance.

4. Some 1. will Bind, 2. with Cords, 3. yea and the Sacrifice, 4. but not to the Altar. There are many of these in our Land: they bind the Sacrifice exceeding fast to Themselves, not to the Altar. All the Altaragia, the dues that belong to them that serve at God's Altar, and which the Laws of God and man Bound to the Altar, they have loosened, and Bound to themselves, and their heirs.

These Bind the Sacrifice, and with Cords; but not to the right place. Nay, I would to God, they would Bind no more; But now the fashion is to hold God to Custom: & if a poor Minister demand those remanents, which are left to the Altar, he is ou•rthrowne by Custom. Oh the pity of God, that England-should have any such Custom:

And for you, that never think yourselves well, but when you have Bound the Sacrifice to yourselves: and imagine that the Milk or Fleece of your Flocks, which God hath tyth'd for himself, is too good for the Minister; and will either act, or armis, with force of Law, or craft of Coosening, keep it to yourselves; that will plead the rate of a penny in Law, for a pound in concience: Chop and change your Sheep, to defraud Christ of his Tenth sleece: know that as you Bin•e the Sacrifice from the Altar, so you shall have no comfort by the Altar, but the Justice of God shall Bind you from his mercy. Though you may repent: which if you restore not, is impossible: and your restitution is improbable; yet for the present, the Devil hath Eleuen points of the Law against you; that is, Possession.

5. Lastly, some. 1. Bind. 2. The Sacrifie. 3. With Cords. 4. To the Altar. 5 But not to the Horns of the Alter. These are deficient in a spetiall degree of Devotion, Faith. They have many good moral virtues; but they want that, which should make both their virtues and themselves acceptable to God; Faith in his Son Jesus Christ. It is a vain Devotion, whence this is excluded: The Law finds no works righteous. But Quod Lex operum min•do imperat, L•x s•dei credendo impe•rat: What the Law of Works commanded with the threatening, the Law of Faith obtains by believing: Affie we then the merits of our blessed Savior, who is our only Re•ue; and take fast hold on the Horns of the Altar. Bind the Sacrifice with Cords even unto the Horn• of the Altar

The Sum.

TO gather these scattered Branches to their Roote; now we have cast over the particulars, let us Sum them. The Sum is our Thankfulness: Bind the Sacrifice with Cords, &c.

Ingratitude hath been ever held a Monster, a preternaturall thing: one of those privations and def•iciencies which God never made, but the devil thrust in upon the absence of the positive and primitive virtues. Here upon we call an Ungrateful person, an unnatural man.

No man wonders at Dogs, and Wol••, and Foxes; but at Satyres and Centaures, and such Monsters in nature, all gaze upon. Ebriety, Adultery, Avarice (though equally heinous) are less odious; because they have Nature and Custom on their sides. But an Unthankful person named, we all detest, as a sole•isme in sense, a paradox in manners, a prodigy in nature.

To demonstrate this sin to be so far from humanity, that the very Beasts abhor it. There is a St•ry of a poor man, that went often to a Forest to gather Sticks; where suddenly one day, he heard the voice of a man in distress: making towards it, he found a rich Neighbor fallen into a deep Pit; and together with him an Ape, a Lyon, and a Serpent: he made his moan, being endangerd both of the Pit, and of the Beasts: Pity and Charity moved the poor man to help the rich, and that seldom moves the rich to help the poor; He lets down the Corde, wherewith he bound his Sticks, and up comes the Ape: Again he puts for the man, and the Lyon ascendes: A third offer he makes, and the Serpent takes the advantage: last he draweth up the man; who freed by his help from instant death, promised him a bounteous requital, if on the next day he did visit him. The poor man affying his word, came to him accordingly, in a hopeful expectation of reward. But now the rich man would not know him; he hath forgotten that ever he stood in any need of him, and impudently denies him any recompense. The discomforted poor man is fain to travel the Forest again for his Fuell, where the Ape spying him, had ready broken with his teeth and nails, Sticks enough for his burden: there was his utmost Gratitude. Another day coming, the Lyon approacheth him, presenting to him diverse laden Camelles; which driving home, and disburdening, he found precious Treasure, that enriched him. A third time upon other occasions traveling the Forest, the Serpen• creeping salutes him with a Precious stone in her mouth, letting it fall at her sauers feet. The intent of the Fable is to demonstrate, that Beasts and Serpents condemn Man of Ingratitude.

You will say, this is but a fiction: then hear a truth. Isaiah 1. The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Ass his Masters Scrippe: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider. The very Beast looketh to his Masters hand that feeds him.

This vice is so horrible, that God need not sit to judge it; the Devil himself will condemn it: When he reasoned with God about Job, he pleads that God had set a Hedge about him, and blessed the work of his hands: And therefore implies, Doth Job serve God for naught? If he will be Unthankful to a God so kind, Satan himselfe will censure him. It must needs be a horred sin, that the Devil taxeth and abominates. If we be unthankfull, we are sure to be condemned: for if God would not condemn it, the Devil will. An V•grat•full man then (in some sort) is worse then the Devil.

Men and Brethren, let us be Thankful: Let our Meditations travel with Da•id in the 148. Psalm, first up into Heaven. Even the very Heavens and heights praise him. And those blessed Angels in his Court sing his Glory. Descend we then by the celestial bodies, and we shall find the Sun, Moon, and all the Stars of light, praising him. Passe we by the Waters, which the Makers decree hath confined there, and we shall hear those Praising him. A little lower, we shall perceive the Meteors, and upper Elements; the Fire and Hayle, Snow and Vapour, magnifying him: even the Wind and Storm, fulfilling his wo•d. Fall we upon the Center, the very Earth; we shall hear the Beasts and Cattle, Mountains and Hilles, fruitful Trees and all Cedars, extolling his Name. The chirping Birds sing sweet Psalms and Carols to their Creators praise, every Morning when they rise, every Euening ere they go to rest. Not so much as the very Creeping things, saith the Psalmist; the noisome Dragons, and crawling Serpents in the deeps, but they do, in a sort, bless their Maker. Let not then Man, the first fruits of his Creatures, for whose service all the rest were made, be unthankful. If these, much more let all Kings of the earth, and all people: Princes, and all Judges of the World: Young men and Maydens, Old men and Children, praise the Name of the Lord.

There are some, that Kiss their own hands, for every good turns that befalls them. God giveth them blessings, and their own wit or strength hath the praise. Other receive them but as due debt, as if God were obliged to them. But alas! What hast thou (O man, that is good) that thou hast not received? Thou hast not a rag to thy back, nor a bitte to thy Belly, nor a good hair on thy head, nor a good thought in thy heart, but God giveth it.

Our evils are properly our own. Omnia mea mala p•re sunt mala, et mea sunt. Omnia mea bona pure, suut bona et mea no• sunt: All my evils are truly evil and mine own. All my good things are truly good, but none of my own. Now is not the Author of all good, good enough to be remembered? When the Benefits are gotten, must the benefactor be forgotten? And shall Thanks wax old, whiles gifts are new? Boni siquid habeo, a Deo sumpsi, non a me proesumpsi. Shall we then set the receauers in the place of the Giver, and worship our selves?

This is a Sacrilegious theft. The stealing of temporal goods may be requited with restitution: but the purloining of God's glory can never be answered. These are subtle Thieves: for though Heaven be sure and secure enough from violent robbers, yet these by a wily insidiation enter into it, and rob God of his Honor. Other Thieves steal for necessity; and but from their equals, men. These filch from God his holy right, and that out of a scornful pride.

It would here be examined, whether England hath any ground in it guilty of this barren Ingratitude? If I should fall to discoursing the favors of GOD, rained in such plentiful showers upon us; our peace, plenty, tranquility, and all those gifts of his Left hand; together with that grace of his Right, which blesseth all the rest, and without which they were but a Summer without a Spring; full of heat, but infertile; the Gospel: you would say, Satis haec, we have heard this often enough. Ad nauseam vsque: A Sermon of such repetition is but like a suit of the old make. Your curious ears are too fine for such recognitions. You think we never speak of these things, but for want of other matter.

The wonders, which God wrought in Egypt by Mose, in Canaan by Joshua, were commanded to be proclaimed to all succeeding generations. How many Psalms did this sweet Singer of Israel compose of this subject? How many excellent Sermons did the Prophets preach when they had no other ground or Text, but those principles? 〈◇〉 did the people sling away from before the Pulpits, with; We have heard these things often enough: they are tedious.

God's mercies to us shall vie weight and number with theirs. We are if not their parallel; yet their second in the favors of Heaven. God hath hedged us in with his providence, and compassed us about with songs of deliverance. We are the Plant of his own hand, & he continually waters us with the saving shewers of his Gospel. We need not travel to our neighbors Cisterns; every man hath his own Well; and such a Well, as yields the Water of life, if we would bring Buckets with us; Ears of attention, and Hearts of retention to draw it out withal. What Nation so far as the World is Christened, hath so many learned Divines? Neither is this Learning like a Coale burning to themselves, but a bright Lamp shining to us: Even those reverend Fathers, that sit at the Sterne of the Church, and charge their minds with her greatest troubles, are yet continually preaching to some particular Congregation. It cannot be denied, but the Lord hath shown us Light.

Now where be the Fruits that he must look for? I dare scarcely enter into this search; as the Elephant refuseth to drink in a clear Water, least he should see his own deformity. I fear to find the correspondency of the deeds of Darkness. I know, God hath his number amongst us; I hope it is not small. God every day increase it, to his glory, and the Churches comfort. Let me have freedom to speak generally.

Beloved, our lives shame us. If men and Angels should hold their peace, our own open, and manifest iniquities will proclaim us unthankfull. Fraud in our houses, Drunkenness in our streets, Oppression in our fields Adultery in corners, Injustice on seats, Impiety in our Temples, Rapine upon our Temples, devastation of our Temples; at least, of the means that God hath given them. These, these are the fruits, too many of us return for God's mercies. Thus, thus do we adorn the Gospel.

The greatness of God's kindness to us, we strive to match with our unkindness to God. He that in his own person stood for our defense, and bore the heat and burden of the day for us, hath this requital, to have his cause put off to others. We dare not stand for his glory. Could we else brook his holy days profaned, holy name abused, holy Church despised, his servants impoverished; if we were as kind to him, as he is to us?

Whereas every man hath a Charge for God's glory, we put it off from one to another. The poor man to the Rich, and says he should look to these disorders: the Rich man to the Minister: the Minister after a hearty dehortation to the Magistrate. But still wickedness holds up the head, and the heat of rebellion is not qualified.

It is storied of a Certain King, that fighting a desperate Battle, for the recovery of his Daughter, injuriously stolen from him; found ill success, and the day utterly against him. Till by the faithful valour of a strange Prince, disguised in the habit of a mean Soldier, (that pitied his loss, and bore love to his Daughter) he recovered both her, and victory: The Prince interposing himself to hazard of death, & many wounds, for the others redemption. Not long after this Prince received some wrong concerning his Honor, which he deservedly prized: He made his complaint to the King, and besought him to give a just censure of his cause. The forgetful King put him over to a Judge. The Prince replies; O King, when thou wast lost, I endangered myself for thy rescue: I did not bid another save thee, but I saved thee myself. Lo, the scars of those wounds I bore, to free thee and thy state from inevitable ruin: And now my suit is before thee, dost thou shuffle me off to, another?

Such was our case; Satan had stolen our dear daughter, our soul: in vain we laboured a recovery: principalties and Powers were against us, weakness and wretchedness on our sides. Christ the Sun of God took pity on us: and though he were an eternal Prince of Peace, disguised himself in the habit of a common Soldier; Induens formam serui, putting on him the likeness of a Servant, undertook this War against our two strong enemies; set himself betwixt us and death, bore those wounds, which should have lighted on us. By no Angel, nor Saint; by no Gold or precious Minerals, did he redeem us; but by his own grievous sufferings. Now his Glory is in question: his Name, his Honor is abused, dear to him as his own Majesty: We stand by, and behold it; he appeals to our censure, remembers us of the Wounds, Passions, Sorrows, he endured for us: We put him off from one to another, and let the cause of him that saved us, fall to a loss. Who shall plead for our Ingratitude? Heaven and earth, Sun and Stars, Orbes and Elements, Angels and Devils will cry shame upon us.

If we ask now, as the Wicked will at the latter day; Lord, When saw we thee hungry, and did not feed thee? When naked, and did not clothe thee? When was thy cause before us, which we defended not? I answer; any day, every day. When we hear Swearers wound and tear his holy Name in pieces: when we see Idolaters give his Honor to Carved or painted Blocks: When Ruffians speak contemptibly of his holy rites; when his Sabbaths, Sacraments, word, Ministers are vilipended; our selves standing by with a guilty silence. Oh which of us hath not been Guiltie of this Ingratitude?

It was the exprobaton of Athens, that she suffered those men to die in exile, ignominy, oblivion, that with their virtuous endeavors had reared her up on the Pillars of Fame. Miltiades, Aristides, Solon, Phocion; Vbi vixerunt, Vbi iacent? Where lived they? where lie they? Their worthy Acts gave glory to that City, and that City covered them with the inglorious dust of obscurity. So the Lord Jesus had made us live that were dead, and we do, what we can, to let his lining name die amongst us.

The Grecians had a Proverb amongst them, against them.

Pro meritis male tractarunt Agamemnona Graei. Agamemnon for the Honor of Greece, had done great service to the conquest and subversion of Troy. And when he came home, was Slaine by his own Wife Clitemnestra, by the help of Aegistus the adulterer. Christ loved us as his Wife, endowed us with all his own Riches; Conquers Troy for us, subdues all our Enemies and returning home, when he expects to find peace, and kind entertainment in our hearts; we fall to vexing and wounding him; forsaking his love, and cleaving to the world in a Cursed Adultery. So

Dulcem pro meritis tractamus acerrime Christum., So bitterly do we requite our sweet Savior, for his mercies.

Scipio had made Rome Lady of Africa And coming home with Triumph over that and Hanibal, the Senate banished him into a base village. where dying he commanded this sculpture to be engraven on his Tomb. Ingrata Patria, ne ossa quidem mea habes. Vnthankfull Country, thou hast not so much as my very bones. Many and mighty deliverances hath the Lord given us.

From furious Amalickites, that came with a Navy as they bragged, able to fetch away our Land in Turues.

From an angry and raging Pestilence that turned the popular Streetes of this City into solitude.

From a Treason wherein men conspired with Devils: for Hell was brought up to their coniurations; and a whole brewing of that salt Sulphur was tunned up in Barrels for us to drink.

Behold, and kiss the feet of his Mercy, we are delivered by Jesus Christ from all these miseries and mischiefs. Oh let us not voluntarily call upon ourselves, a worse then all these, our own Vnthankfulness. Let not Christ say, Ingrat Anglia, ne ossa quidem mea habes: Unthankful England, thou hast not so much as (my bones) the prints, and sensible impressions of these favors in thy memory. Thou hast shut thy Savior out of thy mind, and buried him in neglectful oblivion. Take heed, least in a just quittance, he exclude thee from his thoughts, and forget to do thee anymore good: Least he take away his Name, his Glory, his Light, his Gospel, from thee; and bestow it on those vnchristned borders, where now his great Majesty is not adored.

How justly might he leave us in our former wretchedness? There is a pretty Fable, the moral of it will profitably fit our present Discourse. A Serpent accidentally enclosed, betwixt two great Stones, that he could no way es extricate himself; made his moan to a man passing by to deliver him. The man with much force removed the Stone, and set him free. The Serpent now, feeling his liberty, thus bespake his deliverer. I confess, you have done me a kindness in helping me out, being almost famished: But now I am out, my hunger is so violent, that I must needs take the benefit of my fortune, and devour you. The man urged his Ingratitude; but to no purpose, for the Serpent would eat him. Instantly he spied an Ass coming, and desired the Serpent to put it to his judgment. The Serpent was contented, knowing that the Ass durst not but condemn the man for his prey, least he endangered himself. The case was pleaded on both sides; the Man urging his kindness, the Serpent his hunger: But the Ass gave judgment on the Serpents side; who is now ready to set on the Man. Hereupon flies by an Eagle, to whom the Man appealed for Judgment in this controversy. The Eagle hearing the cause debated, demanded of the Serpent, if he could have freed himself, without the man's aid? The Serpent answered affirmatively, and said, it was only his policy, by this trick to get the Man within his reach. The Eagle desires to see the place: the Man shows it. The Eagle bids the Serpent go into the hole again for more certain demonstration. The Serpent doth so; and the Man remooues the other Stone, as it was before, and reincloseth the Serpent. The Eagle now bids the Serpent deliver himself: He replied, he could not. Then (quoth the Eagle) this is my judgment: The next time the Man lets thee forth, do thou take him for thy prey, and eat him.

It cannot be denied, but we were once surer in Satan's hold, then this Serpent is imagined to be between the Stones. The Man Christ Jesus in pity redeemed us, and gave us liberty: We are no sooner out, but we fall to devour him; to make his poor members, his poor Ministers our Prey; to wound his Name with Blasphemies, to steal his Goods with Sacrilege; and to give his Honor either to other Creatures, or to our own Wittes• as if we could have delivered our selves. Let any be Judge but the Ass, our own flesh & blood; and we are sure to be condemned for Ingratitude But if Christ should in his Justice, put us again into our former hole; leave us in the power of Satan, Who would not say with the Eagle, The next time he sets us free, let us take him for our bootie, and deuo•e our Redeemer.

It is recorded of Alexander, an Emperour famous for his liberality: and of Julius Caesar, no less commended for his patience: that the former would never give, nor the other forgive an Ungrateful person. Wretched were we, if the Lord should with-hold from us either of these Mercies. If he should shut up the Flud-gates of his Bounty, and cease giving: or lock up the Treasure-house of his Mercy, and leave forgiving. If he should neither Donare bona sua, nor Condonare mala nostra; woe unto us: We might curse our Births, or rather our Ingratitude.

We hope still, God will be merciful to us for Christ his sake: So God of us, he hopes we will be obedient to him for Christ his sake. Petimusque, damus{que} vicissim: As we expect, God should save us for the merits of his Son: So God expectes, we should serve him for the merits of his Son. If the bitter sufferings, and heart-blood of Jesus, cannot get of us the forbearance of Iniquity; How shall it get for us the forgiveness of Iniquity? As we entreat God, for his Mercy, to be good to us: So God intreats us, for his Mercy, to be good to him; and therein most good to our selves.

O let that Goodness, that reconciles us both, prevail with us both. With God, to bless us by his bountifulness: With us, to bless God by our Thankfulness. What should I say? For Jesus Christ his sake, let us be Thankful. It is a good thing to give thanks to the Lord, saith our Psalmist. Good for the virtue of the action: Good for the excellency of the object: Good for the happiness of the retribution.

For the Action; it is better to Bless, then to curse. Rom. 12. Bless them that persecute you: Bless, and curse not.

For the Object; our Prayses are sung to a most glorious God: one that is Beauty it self; and only worthy to inhabit the praises of Israel.

For the Retribution: If we bless God, God will bless us: As one notes, that all David's Psalms, were either Hosanna, or Halleluiah; that is, God bless, or God be blessed. Either a Prayer for Mercy, or a Praise for Merci. Ascendat ergo gratia, vt descendat gratia: For, Gratiarum cessat decursus, vbi recursus non fuerit: Grace will not come down, unless Gratitude go up. All Rivers run back to the Sea, whence they were first derived.

Let us send up our gifts to God, that he may send down his gifts to us. Let us not Vti datis, tanquam innatis: But remember that we hold all in Capite, and are sutors to the Court of Heaven; worthy to forfeit our estates, if we pay not the quit-rent of Thankfulness; acknowledge not Gratitude and Obedience.

God will not long Catulis indulgere. Luporum, pamper the Wolves whelps, as the Proverb: But he will forget them, that forget him. We have a saying from Aristotle. Nec in puerum, nec in senem collocandu esse beneficium: That our beneficence should not be fixed upon a Child, or an Old man: for the Child before he comes to age, will forget it; and the Old man will die, before he can requite it. Are we all either Children or Old men, that we either not remember, or not return Thankfulness to God for his mercies? Yet saith the Psalmist: Old men, and Children, praise the Name of the Lord.

With him let us then say; What shall we render to the Lord, for all his Benefits towards us? David was inward with God; yet he studied what Present he should offer him. He lights upon that, which he was only able to give, and God most willing to receive; Thankfulness. I will take the Cup of Salvation, and bless the Name of the Lord. Pray we then to GOD, to give us Thankfulness, that we may give it him. For of our selves we have not what to give, unless the Lord give us, wherewith to give.

Let us Shew forth his loving kindness in his Morning, and his faythfulness every Night. Morning and Euening let us praise him, that hath made the Day for our labor, and the Night for our rest: And that not ex vsu, magis quam sensu, but with a hearty humility Give unto the Lord the Glory due to his Name: Bring your Sacrifice, and come into his Courts. Let no opportunity steal by neglected: but Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous: and give thanks at the remembrance of his Holynesse. No Garment better becomes you; though you have almost put it out of fashion, then to Praise the Lord: For, Praise is comely for the righteous.

Thanksgiuing is the best Sauce to our Meat; and blesseth all the Dishes on the Table. When thou hast eaten, and art full, thou shalt bless the Lord thy God. Whether we eat or drink, work or rest, let us set that golden Poesie on all our labors, which the Angel to Zachay gave of the Headstone: Grace, grace unto it. He spake pleasant truth, that said: He that riseth from the Table without giving of thanks, goes his way, & owes for his Ordinary. He is unthankfull, that is unmindful of a benefit: unthankful that requites it not: unthankfull that dissembles it: but most unthankfull that denies it. Though we cannot requite God's favor, we will neither forget it, nor dissemble it, nor deny it.

I have purposely been liberal in this doctrine: neither beg I pardon for prolixity: It was necessary for the Text; no less for our times. God hath shown us his Light, and we bring forth the works of Darkness.

We say, we all are thankful. Our Words will not pass with God, without our Deeds. Our Words are so fickle and false, that we dare not trust one another without manuscripts: Scriveners must be employed in all our commerce. And shall God take our words, with whom we have broke so often? No beloved, we must set our hands to it: and to speak to our capacity in the City; seal it, and deliver it, as our act and deed: we must work that which is good.

I appeal from men's Lips, to their Liues: Verba rebus probate, saith Seneca: The form, the life, the Soul of Thankfulness is Obedience. We, like blind Isaac, cannot see your Hearts; but say, Let me feel thee. my son. If your Liues be rugged, like the Hands of Esau, we dare not trust your Voice, for the Voice of Jacob. If your deeds be rough, and sensible of rebellion, in vain you tell us, you are Thankful. It is somewhat that you Enter into his Courts, and speak good of his Name: But you must also do good for his Name, and you shall be blessed. I have begun, and will end with a Psalm: O come then, let us fing unto the Lord; let us rejoyce to the Rock of our salvation. Let ve come before his presence with Thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise to him, with Psalms. For the Lord is a great God, and a great King above all God's. God is the Lord, that hath shown us Light: bind the Sacrifice with Cords even to the Horns of the Altar.

FINIS.

POLITICKE HVNTING: OR, A Discouerie of the cunning Esauites of our times. And, Plain Dealing: or, A president of Honesty.

The Text. Genes. 25. 27.

Esau was a cunning Hunter, and a man of the field: and Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in Tents.

WHen God hath a long while deferred his actual Blessings to the importunate suppliants, and extended their desires; at last he doubles on them the expected Mercy: So he recompenceth the dilation with the dilatation and enlarging of his favors. Rebecca had been long barren; and now the Lord opens her Wombe, and sets her a teeming, she conceives two at once.

It is obserueable, that many holy Women, ordained to be the mothers of men specially famous and worthy, were yet long barren. Sara the wife of Abraham, that bore Isaac: Rebekah the wife of Isaac that bore Jacob: Rahel the wife of Jacob, that bore Joseph: Anna the mother of Samuel, Elizabeth the mother of John the Baptist: Hereof may be given some reasons. <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate>

1. One Chrysost. gives, Vt ex mirabili partu stirilium, praestrueretur fides partui virginis: That by the miraculous Child-bearing of barren Women, a way might be made to believe the birth of Christ by a Virgin.
2. To show that Israel was multiplied, not by N•turall succession, but by Grace. So Theodoret.
3. To exercise the Faith; Hope, & Patience of such as notwithstanding a Promise, had their issue delayed.

But now Isaa• prays, God hears, Rebecca conceives: she conceives a double burden; a pair of Sons struggling in her womb. Her body is no less disquieted with this plenty, then her mind was before with the lack of Children. Esau and Jacob are borne: brethren they are, not more near in birth, then different in disposition: For Esau was a cunning Hunter, a man of the Field: but Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in Tents.

These two are the Subject of my Discourse: wherein I will regard their Nomina, Omina; Names, and Proceedings. Their Names, Esau and Jacob: note their conditions for opposite. The one a cunning Hunter: the other, a Plain man. Of both whom I will be bold to speak literally, and liberally: literally, of their individual persons: liberally, as they, were figures and significations of future things.

For herein is not only regardable a mere• History, but a Mystery also. And as S. Paul applied the true Story of Isaac the son of the free, and Ish•ael the some of the bondwom••; that by these things was another thing meant Gal. 4. 24. So I may conclude of these two Brothers in the same manner. ver. 29. As then, he that was borne after the Flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the Spirit; even so is it now. So it is now, and so it shall be to the end of the world.

A Discouerie of the cunning Esauites of our times.

Genes. 25. 27.

Esau was a cunning Hunter, and a man of the field:

I Must speak first of the first borne Esau. It is probable, he was called Esau in regard of his manner of birth. ver. 25. He that came out first, was red all over like an hairy Garment: and they called his name Esau.

Some derive it from the Hebrew word, Quasah, which signifieth, To make: and taken passively, it implies a Perfect man. For he came forth red, and hairy: Redde, to betoken his bloody disposition: Hayrie, to show his savage and wild Nature. Other Children are borne with Haire only on the Head, Eye-lids, and Brows: but he was hairy all over; promising extraordinary cruelty.

He had three names. 1. Esau, because he was complete. 2. Edom, because he was red of complexion; or because he coveted the red Pottage. 3. Seir, that is, Hayre.

You hear his Name, listen to his Nature. God's Spirit gives him this Character: He was a cunning Hunter, &c. A Name doth not constitute a Nature: yet in holy Writ, very often, the Nature did fulfill the Name, and answer it in a future congruence.

The Character hath two Branches: noting his

- Dition.
- Condition.

His Condition or Disposition was Hunting: his Dition, Portion, or Segniory was the Field: he was a Field-man.

The first mark of his Character is, A cunning Hunter. Wherein we have expressed his - Power.

- Policy.

His Strength, & his Sleight: his Brawn, and his Brain. His Might; he was an Hunter. His Wit; he was a Cunning Hunter.

His Strength: A Hunter.

Hunting, in it self, is a delight lawful and laudable: and may well be argued for, from the disposition that God hath put into creatures. He hath naturally inclined one kind of Beasts to pursue another, for man's profit and pleasure. He hath given the Dog a secret instinct to follow the Hare, the Hart, the Fox, the Bore: as if he would direct a man by the finger of Nature to exercise those qualities, which his divine Wisdom created in them.

There is no Creature but may teach a good soul one step toward his Creator. The World is a Glass, wherein we may contemplate the eternal power and majesty of God. For the invisible things of him, from the creation of the World, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head. It is that great Book, of so large a Character, that a man may run and read it. Yea, even the simplest man that cannot read, may yet spell out of this Book, that there is a GOD. Every Shepherd hath this Calendar, every Plough-man this ABC. What that French Poet divinely sung, is thus as sweetly english'd,

The World's a School; where in a gen•rall Story,

God always reads dumb Lectures of his Glory.

But to our purpose: This practice of Hunting hath in it. 1. Recreation. 2. Benefit.

Delight. Though man by his rebellion against his Creator, forfeited the Charter which he had in the Creatures: and hereon Adams punishment was, that he should work for that Sudore vultus, which erst sprung up naturally beneficis Creatoris: Yet this lapse was recovered in Christ to believers, and a new Patent was sealed them in his Blood; that they may use them not only ad necessitatem vitae, but also in delectationem animi. So God gives man not only Bread and Wine to strengthen his Heart, but even Oil to refresh his Countenance. Let thy Garments be always White, and let thy Head lack no Ointment. When Solomon had found men pulling on themselves unnecessary vexations in this world, and yet not buying Peace in Heaven with their trouble on Earth; he concludes: Then I commended Mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the Sun, then to Eate, and to Drink, and to be Merry: for that shall abide with him of his labor, the day, of his life that God giveth him under the Sun.

But there is a Liberty, the bounds whereof because men's affections cannot keep, it is better their understandings knew not: For, Melius est nescire centrum, quam non tenere circulum. I may say of too many, as Seneca: Nihil faelicitati eorum deest, nisi moderatio eius: They have happiness enough, if they could moderate it. Nothing is Magis proprium materiae, (say Philosophers) more proper to matter, then to flow; nisi a forma sistitur, unless the form refrain and stay it. Nothing is more peculiar to Man, then to run out, and to err exorbitantly, if Grace direct not.

Men deal with Recreation, as some Travelers do with another's Grounds: they beg passage through them in Winter, for avoidance of the Miry ways; and so long use it on sufferance, that at last they plead Prescription, and hold it by Custom. God allows Delights to succor our infirmity, and we saucily turn them to habitual Practises. Therefore Solomon condemns it in some, as he commends it in others. Rejoice in thy youth, and follow thy vanities: but know, that for all this, God will bring thee into Judgment. And our Savior denounceth a Vae ridentibus, for they that will laugh, when they should weep; shall mourn, when they might have rejoiced.

We often read Christ weeping, never laughing: taking his creatures for sustentation, not for recreation. Indeed he afforded us this benefit; and what we had lost, as it were ex postliminio, recovered to us. But it were strange, that Haeres succedens in defuncti locum, should do more, then the Testator ever did himself, or allowed by his grant: Or that Servants and Sinners should challenge that, which was not permitted to their Master and Savior. But thus we prevent our liberty, as the Pharisees did the Law, in sensum reprobum. These Hunt, but keep not within God's Pale; the circumferent limits, wherein he hath mounded and bounded our liberty.

Benefit. Recreations have also their profitable use, if rightly undertaken.

1. The Health is preserved by a moderate Exercise. Sedentariam agents vitam; They that live a Sedentarie life, so find it.

2. The Body is prepared and fitted by these sportive, to more serious labors, when the hand of War shall set them to it.

3. The Mind, wearied with greater employments, hath thus some cool respiration given it, & sent back to the service of God with a revived alacrity.

His Policy. A Cunning Hunter.

But we have hunted too long with Esau's Strength, let us learn his Sleight: A cunning Hunter. Hunting requires tantum artis, quantum martis: Plain Force is not enough, there must be an accession of Fraud. There is that common sense in the Creatures, to avoid their pursuers. Fishes will not be taken with an empty hook: nor Birds with a bare Pipe, though it go sweetly: nor Beasts with Briareus strength only, though he had an hundred hands. Here Actus pollutior armis. Fishes must have a Bait, Birds a Nette; and he that takes Beasts, must be a cunning Hunter. Can a Bird fall into a Snare upon the earth, where no Ginne is for him? Nay, often both Visers & Deuices, Toyles and Toylings, Strength and Stratagems, are all too little.

A cunning Hunter.

It appears, that Esau's delight was not to surprise tame Beasts, that did him service; but wild: For, against the former, there needed no such cunning. How easily is the Ox brought to the Yoake, the Horse to the Bitte, the Lamb to the Slaughter? His intention and contention was against wild and noxious creatures.

This Observation teacheth us to do no violence to the Beasts, that serve us. Solomon stamps this Mark on the good man's Fore-head, that he is merciful to his Beast. And the Law of God commanded, that The mouth of the Ox should not be muzzled, that treadeth out the Corn. God opened the mouth of an Ass to reprove the folly of Balaam; who struck her undeservedly for not going forward, when God's Angel stood ad oppositum.

Those sports are then intolerable, wherein we vex those Creatures, that spend their strengths for our benefits. God therefore often justly suffers them to know their own power, and to revenge themselves on our ingratitude. The Roman Soothsayers diuined; that when Bulls, Dogs, and Asses, (Beasts created for use and obedience) grew mad on a sudden, Bellum servile imminebat, it boded some servile War and Insurrection. But we may truly gather, that when God suffers these serviceable and domestical Creatures, to make Mutenie and Rebellion against us; that God is angry with our sins: and that they no otherwise shake off our service, then we have shaken off the service of God. So long as we keep our Covenant with the Lord, he makes a League for us, with the Beasts of the field: but when we fall from our Allegiance, they fall from theirs; and (without wonder) quit our Rebellion against God, with their Rebellion against us. We see what we get by running from our Master; we loose our Servants.

But if they that fly from God by Contempt, shall thus speed, What shall become of them that fly upon God by Contumacie? If wicked Nabal could blame the Servants, qui fugiunt Dominos, that run from their Masters; how would he condemn them, qui persequuntur, that run upon them with violence? But if we band our selves against God, he hath his Hosts to fight against us. Fowls in the air, Fishes in the sea, Beasts on the earth, Stones in the street, will take his part against us. So long doth the Hen clock her Chickens, as she takes them to be hers: but if they fly from the defense of her Wings, she leaves them to the prey of the Kite. So long as we obey GOD, Heaven and Earth shall obey us; and every Creature shall do us service: But if we turn Outlawes to him, we are no longer in the circle of his gracious custody and protection.

A cunning Hunter.

AS Cunning as he was to take Beasts, he had little cunning to save himself. How foolish was he, to part with his Birthright for a mess of Lentile Pottage? And since there is a necessary discussion of his Folly, as well as of his Cunning, I will take here just occasion to demonstrate it: and that in five Circumstances.

1. He had a ravenous and intemperate desire. This appears by three phrases he used. 1. Feed me, I pray thee; Satisfie, saturate, satiate me: or, let me swallow at once, as some read it: The words of an appetite insufferable of delay. 2. To show his eagerness, he doubles the word for haste: With that Red, with that Red Pottage. Red was his color, Red his desire: He coveted Red Pottage, he dwelt in a red soil; called thereon, Idumea: and in the Text, Therefore was his name called Edom. 3. He says, I am faint: and ver. 32. at the point to die, if I have it not: Like some longing souls, that have so weak a hand over their appetites, that they must die, if their humor be not fulfilled. We may here infer two Observations.

1. That Intemperance is not only a filthy, but a foolish sin. It is impossible, that a ravenous Throat should lie near a sober Brain: There may be in such a man, understanding and reason; but he neither hears that, nor follows this. A City may have good Laws, though none of them be kept. But as in sleepers and mad-men, there is Habitus rationis, non vsus et actus: Such men have reason, but want the active use. Venter praecepta non audit: The belly hath no ears. Though you would write such men's Epitaphs whiles they are living, yet you cannot; for Mortem suam antecesserunt, they have antedated their death, and buried themselves alive: as the French proverb says, They have digged their Grave with their Teeth. The Philosopher passing through Vacia the Epicures grounds, said; Hic suus est Vacia: not here he lives, but here he lies; as it were dead and sepulcherd. The parcimonie of ancient times hath been admirable. The Arcadians lived on Acorns: the Argives on Apples: the Athenians on Figs: the Tyrinthians on Peares: the Indians on Canes: the Carmanes on Palms: the Sauromatians on Millet: the Persians nasturtio, with Cresses: And Jacob here made dainty of Lentils.

2. That a man may epicurise on course fare: For Lentile Pottage was no extraordinary fine diet. But as a man may be a Crassus in his Purse, yet no Cassius in his Pottes: So on the contrary, another may be (as it is said of Job) Poor to a proverb; yet be withal, as voluptuous as Esau. Men have talem dentem, qualem mentem: Such an Appetite as they have Affection. And Esau may be as great a Glutton in his Pottage, as those greedy Dogs. (Isaiah 56.) that fill themselves with strong Wines: or those fat Bulls (Am 6.) that eat the Lambes and Calves out of the Stall. Thus the poor may sin as much in their Throat, as the rich: and be Epicures tam Late, though not tam laute, in as immoderate, though not so dainty Fare. Indeed Labor in many bodies requires a more plentiful repast, then ease: and the sedentarie Gentleman needs not so much Meat, as his drudging Hind: But in both this Rule should be observed; Quantum naturae sufficiat, non quantum gulae placeat; Not what will please the Throat, but what will content Nature: to eat what a man should, not what he would. The Poor man that loves delicate Cheare, shall not be Wealthy: and the Rich man that loves it, shall not be Healthy. As cunning as Esau was, here is one instance of his folly, An intemperate Appetite.

2. His Folly may be argued, from his base estimation of the Birthright; that he would so lightly part from it, and on so easy conditions, as Pottage. It seems, he did measure it only by the pleasures and commodities of this life, which were afforded him by it. ver. 32. I am ready to die: and what profit shall this Birthright do me? Which words import a limitation of it to this present World, as if it could do him no good afterwards. Whereupon the Hebrews gather, that he denied the Resurrection. For this cause the Apostle brands him with the mark of Prophanesse. Heb. 12. that he changed a Spiritual Blessing for a Temporal Pleasure.

And what, O ye Esauites, Worldlings, are momentary Delights compared to Eternal? What is a mess of Gruell, to the Supper of Glory? The Belly is pleased the Soul is lost. Never was any Meat, except the forbidden Fruit, so dearly bought, as this Broth of Jacob: A Curse followed both their feedings. There is no Temporal thing without the trouble, though it be far more worthy then the Lentile-Pottage. Hath a man good things, he fears to forgo them: and when he must, could either wish they had not been so good, or a longer possession? Hath he evil, they bring grief; and he either wisheth them good, or to be rid of them? So that good things trouble us with fear, evil with sorrow. Those in the future, these in the present. Those, because they shall end: these, because they do not end. Nothing then can make a man truly-happy, but Eternity. Pleasures may last a while in this world; but they will grow old with us if they do not die before us. And the Staff of Age is no Pole of eternity. He then hath too much of the sensual and Profane blood of Esau in him, that will sell everlasting Birthrights and Comforts, for transient Pleasures.

3. Another Argument of his folly, was Ingratitude to God; who had in mercy vouchsafed him, (though but by a few minutes) the privilege of Primogeniture: Wherewith Divines hold, that the Priesthood was also conveyed. The Father of the Family exercised it during his life; and after his decease the first borne succeeded in that with the Inheritance. And could Esau be ungrateful to a God so gracious? Or could he possibly have aspired to a higher dignity? Wretched Vnthankfulnesse, how justly art thou branded for a Prodigy in Nature? There are too many, that in a sullen neglect, overlook all God's favors, for the want of one of their Affections long after. Non tam agunt gratias de Tribunatu, quam queruntur, quod non sunt euecti in Consulatum: It is nothing with them to be of the Court, except they be also of the Council.

4. His Obstinacie taxeth his Folly; that after cold blood, leisure to think of the Treasure he sold, and digestion of his Pottage, he repented not of his Rashnes; But ver. 34. He did eat, and drink, and rose up, and went his way: Filled his Belly, rose up to his former Customs, and went his way without a Quid faeci? Therefore it is added, He despised his Birthright. He followed his Pleasures without any interception of Sorrow, or interruption of Conscience. His whole life was a circle of sinful Customs; and not his Birthrights loss can put him out of them. A circular thing implies a perpetuity of motion, according to Mathematicians. It begins from all parts alike, et in seipso definite, ends absolutely in it self, without any point or scope objectual to move to. Earth was Esau's home; he looks after no other felicity: therefore goes his way with less thought of an heavenly Birthright, then if he had missed the Deare he hunted. It is wicked to sell Heavenly things at a great rate of Worldly: but it is most wretched to vilipend them.

5. Lastly, his Perfidious nature appeareth, that though he had made an absolute Conuenance of his Birthright to Jacob, and sealed the Deed with an Oath; yet he seemed to make but a jest of it, and purposed in his heart not to perform it. Therefore chap. 27. 41. 〈ϕ〉 said in his heart, the days of mourning for my Father are at hand, then will I say my brother Jacob. He tarried but 〈ϕ〉 the Funeral of his Father, and then resolved to send his Brother after him; as Cain did Abel because he was more accepted. It is hard to judge, whether he was a worse Son or a Brother: He hopes for his Fathers death, and purposeth his Brothers; and vows to shed blood instead of Tears.

Perhaps from his example, those desperate Wretches of England drew their instruction. They had sold their Birthright, and the Blessing which Jesus Christ, like old Isac dying, bequeathed in his Will to all believers, and all the interest in the truth of the Gospel, to the Pope for a few Pottage, red Pottage, died in their own blood for seeking to color it with the blood of God's Anointed, and of his Saints. And now in a malicious rancor, seeing the Children of Truth to enjoy as much outward peace, as they were conscious of an inward vexation: they expected but Diem Luctus, the days of Mourning, when God should translate our late Queen of eternally-blessed memory, from a Kingdom on Earth, to a better in Heaven: and then hoped, like Busters in a Fallow field, to raise up their heavy Fortunes, •• turbinis, by a Whirlwind of Commotion. But our Pacator Orbis, (which was the real attribute of Constantine) beguiled their envious Hopes. And as Patriculus said of the Roman Empire after Augustus death, when there was such hope of Enemies, fear of Friends, expectation of trouble in all; Tanta suit vnus viri Maiestas, vt nec bonis, neque contra malos opus foret armis: Such was the majesty of one man, that his very presence took away all use of Arms. Our royal Jacob precluded all Stratagems, prevented all the Plots of these malicious Esauites, and settled us both in the fruition of the Gospel, and peace with it. But in mean time, God did punish their persidious machinations; as he will do Periurie and Treason, wheresouer he find them. For he will nail upon the Head of the Periurer, his Oath trayterously broken.

IN all these circumstances it appeareth, that though Esau was subtle to take Beasts; he had no cunning to hunt out his own Salvation. From all which scattered Stones brought together let me raise this building of Instruction.

The wisest for the World are most commonly Fools for Celestial blessings. Wicked men can Sentire quae sunt carnis, not, Sapere quae sunt spiritus, Sauour things of the Flesh, not of the Spirit. The Prophet Jeremiah compounds both these, and shows, how Wisdom and Folly may concur in one man. Ier. 4. They are Wise to do evil: but to do good they have no knowledge. Let them War, they have their Stratagems: Let them plot in Peace, they have their Policies. Hunting, they have Nettles: Fowling Ginnes: Fishing Baits: not so much as even in Husbandry, but the professors have their reaches: they know, which way the Market goes, which way it will go. Your Tradesmen have their Mysteries: Mysteries indeed, for the mystery of Iniquity is in them: they have a stock of good Words, to put off a stock of bad Wares: in their particular qualities they are able to school Machiuell.

But draw them from their Center Earth, and out of their Circumference Worldly policies; and you have not more simple Fools: They have no acquaintance with God's Statutes, and therefore no marvel, if they misjudge Vices for Virtues; as Zebul told Gaal, that he mistook Vmbras montium, pro capitibus hominum. A man may easily run his soul upon the rocks of Rebellion, whiles he neither looks to the Card of Conscience, nor regards the Compass of Faith.

A man of the Field.

WEe have taken the first branch of his Character, the main proportion of his Picture: He was a cunning Hunter. There is another color added: He was a man of the Fielde. But because I take it for no other then an explanation of the former attribute, an exposition of the Proposition, saving it hath a little larger extent, I do no more but name it.

We do not think, because he is called, A man of the Field, that therefore he was a Husbandman: but as the Septuagint call him, A Field-man, in regard that he was continually conversant in the Field: There was his sport, there was his heart. Therefore (ver. 28.) did Isaac love Esau, because he did eat of his Venison: He loved his Venison, not his Conditions. Some would read it thus, Because Venison was in his mouth; and so turns his Hunting into a Metaphor: as if by insinuation he wound himself into the favor of Isaac: But the other reading is better; saving that by the way, we may give a reprehension to such Mouth-hunters.

If you would know who they are: they are the Flatterers. Of whom we may say, as Huntsmen of their Dogs, They are Well-mouthed; or rather, Ill-mouthd▪ For an ordinary Dogs biting doth not ranckle so sore as their licking. Of all Dogs they are best likened to Spaniels; but that they have a more venomous tongue: They will fawn, and fleere, and leap up, and kiss their Masters hand: but all this while they do but hunt him; and if they can spring him once, you shall hear them quest instantly, and either present them to the Falcon, or worrey and prey on them themselves: perhaps not so much for their flesh, as for their Fethers. For they love not Dominos, but Dominorum; not their Masters Good, but their Masters Goods.

The golden Ass got into sumptuous Trappings, thinks he hath as many Friends, as he hath Beasts coming about him: One commendes his Snoute for sayrer then the Lions; another his Skin for richer then the Leopards; another his Foot for swifter then the Harts; a fourth his Teeth for whiter and more precious then the Elephants; a last, his Breath for sweeter then the Ciuet-beasts: And it is wonder▪ if some do not make him believe, he hath Horns, and those stronger then Bulls, and more virtuous then the Unicorns. All this while they do but hunt him for his Trappings; uncase him, and you shall have them baffle and kick him. This doth Solomon insinuate, Prov. 19. Riches gather many Friends: But the Poor is separated from his Neighbors. He says not the Rich man, but Riches. It is the Money, not the Man, they hunt.

The Great-one bristles up himself, and conceals himself higher by the head than all the rest; and is proud of many Friends. Alas, these Dogs do but hunt the Bird of Paradise for his Fethers: These Wasps do but hooer about the Gally-pot, because there is Honey in it. The proud Fly sitting upon the Chariot-wheel, which hurried with violence huff'd up the Sand gave out, that it was she, which made all that glorious dust. The Ass carrying the Egyptian Goddess, well'd with an opinion that all those crouches, cryings, and obeysances, were made to him: But it is the Case, not the Carcase, they gape for. So may the chased Stag boast how many Hounds he hath attending him: They attend indeed, as Ravens a dying Beast: Acteon found the kind truth of their attendance. They run away as Spiders from a decaying House; or as the Cuckoe, they sing a scuruie note for a month in Summer, and are gone in June or July: sure enough before the Fall. These Hunters are gone; let them go: For they have brought me a little from the strictness and directnesse of my intended speech. But as a Physician coming to cur, doth sometimes receive some of his Patients infection: So I have been led to hunt a little wide, to find out these cunning Hunters.

Bee pleased to observe two general Notes, and then I will come to the Application.

1. These two Brethren were borne together, were brought up together; yet how great difference was there in their composition of Bodies, in their disposition of Minds, in their events of Life; or as they say, in their Fortunes?

1. For Bodies: One was rough and Hairy, the other was smooth and Plain. This is seldom seen in Children begot and borne of the same Parents; but seldom or never in two borne at one birth. And we may go so far with the Physiognomer to say, That Complexion (though not guides,) yet inclines the inward Disposition.

2. For Disposition of Mind; this Text shows a wide and opposite difference: Esau was a cunning Hunter, a man of the Field: But Jacob a plain man, dwelling in Tents. And Gregory observes from this example, the remoteness or contrariety of Worldlings & Holy men's delights. Men of the World hunt after the pleasures of the World as Esau: Men of Grace give themselves to the contemplation and study of Virtue, as Jacob.

3. For Euent or Success in this World, there was such Distance, as greater could not be imagined: For it is here said, the Elder shall scrue the Younger. The privilege of Primogeniture belonged to Esau; yet both that, and the Blessing went to Jacob. If among us, the eldest Son sell all his Lands to a younger Brother, many are ready to bless his Stars, and to say, He is borne to better Fortunes. But this President will besot that speech: diverse things are here figured.

1. Literally here is intended, that the Idumeans, the seed of Esu, should be subject to the Israelites, the posterity of Jacob. So we read 2 Sam 8. that they were subdued to Israel by David. All thoy of Edom became David's servants; and so continued to the reign of Jotham. This gave the Jews not only a superiority in temporal Dominions, but in spiritual Blessings; the Grace and Mercy of God for they were the visible Church, and Edom was cut off.

2. Mystically, this signifies the carnal Jews subdued to the Christians; though the other were the elder people: Therefore it is observable, that in the Genealogy of Christ Math. 1. many of the first borne were left out. Luke. 3. Seth is put in for the son of Adam▪ yet his eldest son was Cain. So Math. 1. 2. Abraham begat Isaac; yet his eldest son was Ishmael. Isaac begat Jacob; yet here his first borne was Esau. Jacob begat Judah; yet his first borne was Reuben. And David begat Solomon in Matthews Genealogy, Nathan in Luke's; yet both younger brethren by Bathsheba. Exod. 4. Israel is called God's first borne, and his chosen people, his appropriation. Populus Iudaeus adumbratus fuit in his primogenitis: The Jews were figured in these first borne; and we the Gentiles, that were the younger Brothers, have got away the Birthright. Rom 11. They are cast off, we grafted in: so that now the Elder se••eth the younger.

Which teacheth us to look well to our Charter in Christ: for it is not enough to be borne of believing Parents, but we must also be believers. Job may sacrifice for not expiate his sons sins. It is sinful for men on earth to deprive the first borne: but God may, and doth it. Gen. 48. Israel stre•ched out his right hand▪ and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger: and his left hand on Manass•hs head, guiding his hands wi•tingly: though M•n•sseh was the first borne. And ver. 18 When Joseph said to him, Not so my Father. Jacob answered, I know it my Son, I know it. Thus Generation may be cut off, Regeneration never. A man may be lost, though borne in the Faith, unless he be borne again to the Faith. Neither is it enough for Ishmael, to plead himself the Son of Abraham, unless he can also plead himself the Son of God, and an heir of Abraham's faith.

2. Commende me here to all Genethliackes, casters of Natiuities, Star-worshippers, by this token, that they are all Impostors, and here proved Fools. Here be Twins conceived together, borne together; yet of as different natures and qualities, as if a vast local distance had sundered their Births; or as if the originary blood of enemies had run in their Veines. It is S. Augustine's Preclusion of all Star-predictions out of this place. And since I am fallen upon these Figure-casters, I will be bold to cast the Destinie of their Profession, and honestly lay open their Juggling in six Arguments.

1. The falsehood of their Ephimerides. The Prognosticators, as if they were Midwiues to the Celestial bodies, plead a deep insight into their secrets: or as if like Physicians they had cast the Vrine of the Clouds, and knew, where the fit held them; that it could neither rain nor hail, till some Star had first made them acquainted with it. Demonstration hath proved these so false and ridiculous, that they may rather Commouere nauseam quàm bilum, and risum more then both.

Perhaps when some appoint Rain on such a day, some Frost, others Snow, a fourth Wind, a last calm and fair weather; some of these may hit, some of these must hit: But lightly he that against his knowledge told true today, lies tomorrow: and he that lied yesterday, may happen right next day; as a blind Archer may kill a Crow.

For this cause (I think) some were called Erring, or Wandering Stars: not so much that they were uncertain in their own seats and motions, as because they caused to err their Clients and gaping Inquisitors. And so they are called Erring in the same phrase and sense, as Death is called Pale; not that it is Pale it self, but because it makes those Pale it seasseth on: And Winter durtie, not formaliter, but secundum effectum, because it maketh the Earth dirty. So that rather their own speculations by the Stars, then the Stars, are erring: both Decepto sensu cum iudicio, et corruptis organis.

Therefore some of the subtler, have delivered their opinions in such spurious, enigmatically, dilogically terms, as the Devil gave his Oracles; that since Heaven will not follow their Instructions, their Constructions shall follow Heaven. And because the Weather hath not fallen out, as they have before told, they will now tell as the weather falls out. So that reading their Books you would think, as the Beggars have their Canting, they had got a new Language out of the Elements, which the poor Earth never did or shall understand: And it is thought, that Canting is the better Language, because it is not so ambitious, as to meddle with the Stars: Whereof the Prognosticators head comes as short, as his tongue doth of the Beggars eloquence.

2. The state of Fortune-tellers, and Prophecy-usurpers: which is not only poor and beggarly, as if the envious Earth refused to relieve those, that could fetch their living out of the Stars; but also ridiculous.

Nil habet infaelix paupertas durius in se,

Quàm quod ridiculos homines facit.

This is not all; but they are utterly ignorant of their own destinies. Now Quisibi nescius, cui praescius? He that is a Fool for himself, how should he be wise for others? Thracias the South sayer, in the nine years drought of Egypt, came to Busiris the Tyrant; and told him, that Jupiter's wrath might be appeased by sacrificing the Blood of a Stranger. The Tyrant asked him, What Country-man he was, of Egypt, or an alliant? He told him, a Stranger.

Monstrat{que} piari

Illi Busiris; fies Iouis hostia primus,

Inquit, et Aegipto tu dabis hospes aquam.

Thou, quoth the Tyrant, art that lucky guest,

Whose Blood shall wet our soil, and give us rest.

It is reported that Biron, that French Martial, came to an Astrologer, to know the future success of his Plots; which because he gave disastrous, the angry Duke begun to his mischievous intendments, in the Fate-tellers blood. Can they read other men's Fates in the Stars, and not the's own? Therefore one wittily wrote on such a Book, after throwing it into the fire:

Thy Author foretells much: alas! weak friend:

That he could not prognosticate thy end.

3. The quick moving of the Celestial bodies, and their remoteness from our eyes: Both our sense is too weak to pierce into those Fires; and those Fires are too quick in motion for our apprehension. Therefore saith S. Aug. Si tam celeriter alter post alterum nascitur, vt eadem pars Horoscopi maneat, paria cuncta quaero, quae in nullis possunt geminis inueniri: If one of the Twins be so immediately borne after the other, that the same part of the Horoscope abide, I require likeness and equality in them both; which can in no Twins be found. We see here two Brethren borne together (it is most likely) under the reign of one Planet or Constellation; yet as different in Natures, as the Planets themselves.

To this they answer, that even this cause, the swift motion of the Planets, wrought this diversity: because they change their Aspects and Coniunctions every moment. This would one Nigidius demonstrate, who upon a Wheel turning with all possible swiftness, let drop at once two aspersions of Ink, so near together as possibly he could: yet Stanterota, &c. the Wheel standing still, they were found very remote & distant. Whereby he would demonstrate, that in a small course of time, a great part of the celestial Gloabe may be turned about. But this S. Austin soundly returns on them: That if the Planetarie courses, and Celestial motions be so swift, it cannot be discerned under what Constellation any one is borne. And Gregory wittily derides their folly, that if Esau and Jacob were not therefore borne under one Constellation, because they came forth one after another. By the same reason, neither can any one be borne under one Constellation, because he is not borne all at once, but one part after another.

4. Vitabreuis hominum: Mans short and brittle life. If our age were now, as it was with the Patriarchs, when the Stag, the Raven, and long-lived Oak, compared with man's life, died very young: They might then observe and understand the motion and reuolution of the Stars, and behold their effects: when if any Star had long absented it self from their contemplation, they could stay two or three hundred years to see it again: But now as an English Nightingale sung;

Who lives to age,

Fitte to be made Methushalem his Page?

On necessity this Astrologer must live so long, as to have observed the life of such a man, borne under such a Planet: and after him of another borne in the like manner. Nay, he must overtake the years of Methusalem in the successive contemplation of such experiments. But this life is not given, therefore not this knowledge.

5. The infinite number of the Stars take from them all possibility of infallible predictions. They cannot give their general number, and can they give their singular natures? To attempt it, is Imprudencia caecissima; to affirm it, Impudentia effrontissima, blind dotage, shameless impudence.

6. The various Disposition, Conditions, Natures, and Studies, coetaneorum, of such as are borne together. So Gregory reasons of these Twins: Cum eodem momento mater vtrumque fuderit, cur non vna vtrius{que} vitae qualitas (vel aequalitas) fuit? When the Mother brought them both forth at one instant, How comes it to pass, that they have not the same quality and equality in their lives? Are not many borne at the same time, and under the same Constellation, Quorum processus et successus varius et saepe contrarios videmus: Whose proceedings and events we behold so different?

If we may give credit, that Romulus and Remus were both borne of a Vestall (defiled by a Soldier) at one birth, both exposed together to a wide Desert, both taken together and nourished of a she-Wolf, both building and challenging Rome; yet Romulus slew his brother, and got the Kingdom of that City, and after his own name called it Rome.

Fraterno primi maduerunt sanguine muri. If Castor, Pollux, and Helena, were got by Jupiter, and hatched by Laeda out of one Egg, How came they to so various fortunes?

Cur fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit? Cicero mentions it for the Chaldean folly, that they would have Omnes eodem tempore ortos, all that were borne (wheresoever) together, eâdem conditione nasci: to be borne to the same condition.

But were all the Infants slain at one time by Herod, borne under one Constellation? Or all the old World, drowned in the Deluge, under one Star? Or all Soldiers slain in one field, under the same Sign? The Mathematicians were wont to affirm, that all borne under the Sign Aquarius, would be Fishers: But in Getulia there are no Fishers; was never any there borne under the sign Aquarius? The Cretans, (saith Paul) were always Lyers: What, were they all borne under Mercury? The Athenians greedy of Nouelties: had they all one predominant Star? The Belgic's Warriours: Were they therefore all borne under the reign of Mars?

But I have spent too much breath about this folly of Prognosticators. Of whom it may be said, that not only The Children of this world are wiser in their generation, then the Children of Light: But they would be wiser ipsa Luce, then the Light it self. They would know more then Saints and Angels, and search out the inuestigable things of the Lord. Nam si qui, quae euentura sunt, praeuideat, aequiparent Ioui: If they could foresee future things, they would brag themselves equal to God: But Secret things belong to GOD, revealed to us. The other is both arrogant in man, and derogant to God. And Greg. says well: If such a Star be a Mans Destenie, then is Man made for the Stars, not the Stars for Man. The Devils know not future events: and will these boast it? Sus mineruam scilicet.

They grew up together: and presently, Esau was a cunning Hunter, Jacob a plain man. We see that even Youth doth insinuate to an observer, the inclination and future course of a man. The Sprigge shooting out of the Tree, bends that way it will ever grow. Teach a Child a Trade in his youth, and when he is old, he will not forget it, saith Solomon. Esau entered quickly into the black way, which leads to the black Gates, that stand ever ready open for black souls. Palet atrii ianua Ditis: As if he should want rather time for his sport, then sport for his time, he begins early; at the very threshold of his life, and morning of his years. Nequitiae cursus celerior quam aetatis: His wickedness got the start of his age.

And did he ever stay his course; that foolish parents should be so indulgent to their children's licentiousness? nay, ready to snibbe and check their forwardness to Heaven with that curb, A young Saint, an old Devil: and, Wild youth is blessed with a stayed Age. But indeed most likely, a young Saint proves an old Angel: and a young Esau, an old Devil.

And hence follows the ruins of so many great Houses; that the young Master is suffered to live like an Esau, till he hath hunted away his Patrimony; which scarce lasts the Son so many years, as the Father that got it had Letters in his name. But what cares he for the Birthright: when all is gone, he like Esau, can live by the Sword: He will fetch Gold from the Indies, but he will have it. But he might have sau'd that journey, and kept what he had at home. If the Usurer hath bought it, though for Porridge, he will not part with it again, though they weep Tears. It is better to want superfluous means, then necessary moderation. Inse magnarunt, summisque negatum est, Stare diu: especially when the huge Colosses have not sound feet. Vast Desires, no less then Buildings, where Foundations are not firm, sink by their own magnitude. And there comes often Fire Ex Rhamno, out of the Bramble, that burns up the Men of Shechem, and sets on fire the Eagles nest in the Cedars. Psal. 37. Parumiusto, A little that a righteous man hath, is better then the riches of many wicked. And a plain Jacob will prosper better, then a profane Hunting Esau. Let a man begin then with God. Wherewithall shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereunto according to thy word.

Thus literally: Let us now come to some moral application to our selves.

Hunting is for the most part taken in the holy Scripture in the worst sense. So Gen. 10. Nimrod was a Hunter, even to a Proverb: and that Before the Lord, as without fear of his Majesty Now if it were so hateful to hunt Beasts, what is it to Hunt-men? The wicked oppressors of the world are here Typed and Taxed: who employ both Arm and Brain to Hunt the poor out of their Habitations; and to drink the Blood of the oppressed. Herein observe the

- Persons Hunted.
- Manner of Hunting.
- Hounds.

The Poor.

Are their Prev: any man that either their wit or violence can practice on. Not so much Beggars; yet they would be content to Hunt them also out of their Coasts: but those that have somewhat worth their Gaping after; and whose estates may Minister some Gobbets to their Throtes. Aquila non Capit muscas: the Eagles hunt no Flies, so long as their be Foules in the Air. The Commonaltie, that by great Labor have gotten a little stay for themselves; these they Hunt, and lay along, and Prey on their prostrate Fortunes.

If they be Tenantes, woe is them. Fines, Rents, Carriagas, slaueries shall drink up the Sweat of their Brows. There is law against Coyners; and it is made treason justly to stamp the Kings Figure in Mettalles: But what is Mettall to a Man, the Image of God? And we have those that coin Money on the poor's Sins: Traitors they are to the King of Kings.

The whole Country shall feel their hunting. They hunt Commons into Seueralles; Tilled grounds into Pastures, that the Gleaning is taken from the Poor, which God commanded to be left them; and all succor, except they can graze in the High-ways. And to others, to whom their Rage cannot extend, their Craft shall: for they will hoyst them in the Subsidies, or ouercharge them for the Wars, or vex them with Quarrels in Law, or perhaps their Servants shall in direct terms beat them. Naboth shall hardly keep his Vineyard, if any nooke of it disfigures Ahab's Lordship: If they cannot buy it on their own price, they will to Law for it; wherein they respect no more, then to have *a*sam querelae*, a colorable occasion of contention: for they will so weary him, that at last he shall be forced to sell it: But Tully says of that sale; Ereptio non emptio est: It is an Extorting, not a Purchasing.

Thus the Poor man, is the Beast they hunt: who must rise early, rest late, eat the Bread of sorrow, sit with many a hungry meal, perhaps his Children crying for Food, whiles all the fruit of his pains is served in to Nimrod's Table. Complaine of this whiles you will, yet as the Orator said of Verres: Pecuniosus nescit damnari. Indeed a Monny-man may not be damnified, but he may be damned. For this is a Crying sin, and the wakned ears of the Lord will hear it: neither shall his provoked hands forbear it. Si tacuerint paupers, loquentur Lapides: If the Poor should hold their peace, the very Stones would speak. The Fines, Rackings, Inclosures, Oppressions, Vexations, will cry to God for vengeance. The Stone will cry out of the Wall; and the beam out of the Timber shall answer it.

You see the Beasts they hunt: Not Foxes, not Wolves nor Boars, Bulls, nor Tigers. It is a certain observation; no Beast hunts the own kind to devour it. Now if these should prosecute Wolves, Foxes, &c. they should then hunt their own kind: for they are these themselves; or rather worse then these: because here Homo homini Lupus. But though they are Men they hunt, and by nature of the same kind; they are not so by quality: For they are Lambes they persecute: In them there is Blood, and Flesh, and Fleece, to be had: and therefore on these do they gorge themselves. In them there is weak Armor of defense against their cruelties; therefore over these they may domineer. I will speak it boldly: There is not a mighty Nimrod in this Land, that dares hunt his equal: But over his inferior Lamb he insults, like a young Nero. Let him be graced by High ones, and he must not be saluted under twelve score off. In the Countrie he proves a Termagaunt: his very Scowle is a Prodigy, and breeds an Earthquake. He would be a Caesar, and tax all: It is well if he prove not a Cannibal. Only Macro salutes Seianus so long as he is in Tiberius his favor: Cast him from that Pinnacle, and the Dog is ready to devour him.

You hear the Object, they hunt; attend the Manner. And this you shall find, as Esau's, to consist in two things: Force, and Fraud. They are not only Hunters, but cunning Hunters.

1. For their Force, they are Robusti latrones, and have a violent impetuous, imperious Hunting. Desolation and destruction are in their Pathes. We may say of them, as Tertullian said of the Montanists. Nontam Laborant vt aedificarent sua, quam vt destruerent aliena. They seek not so much their own increasing as the depopulation of others. Philosophers hold the world to be composed of three concurrent principles, Matter, Form, and Priuation: holding the last, to be rather a principle of Transmutation, then of Establishment. Oppressors besides the Matter, which is the Common-wealth; and the Form which is Justice; have devised to make necessary also Priuation.

There are sins, which strive only Intra orbem suum urere: which have no further latitude then the Conscience of the Committer: They are Private and Domestical sins: the sting whereof dies in the proprietary. Such are Prodigality, Envy, Sloth, Pride. Though evil example may do somewhat, they have no further extension. But some are of so wild a nature, that they are Mallets and Swords to the whole Country about them. And these are districtly, the sins of the Hand. So Micah. 2. They covet Fieldes, and take them by Violence: and Houses, and take them away: so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his Heritage. Why do they all this, but because Manus potest. ver. 1. It is in the power of their Hand. And they measure their power, saith Seneca, by the Span, by the reach of their Hands. Iniurijs vires metuntur. Anaxagoras thought man the wisest of all Creatures, because he hath Handes, whereby he can express all signs. He might have concluded him the Wickedest of all Creatures, quia manuatus, because he hath Hands. For no Tiger or Vulture under Heaven is more hurtful with his Clawes and Tallents, then Man with his Hands. Achilles asked Palamedes going to the Troyan Wars, Why he went without a Servant? He shown him his hands, and told him they were Loco seruorum, instead of many servants. Manus organum organorum. Their dexterity and aptness chargeth them with sins, whereof the other parts are no less Guilty.

For the most part, those Beasts have least immanitie that have most strength. Oxen and Horses and Elephants are tame and seruicable, but Bees and Hornets have Stings. So wisely hath the Creator disposed, that there may not be a Coniunction et Potentiae et Malevolentiae: that might and malice may not meet. So they are suffered to have Will to hurt, & not Power; or Power, and not will. The cursed Cow hath short Horns: But these Hunters have got both. The Poet saith:

That Lions do not prey on yielding things,

Pity's infeoffed to the blood of Kings.

Posse et nolle, noble: That thou mayst harm and wilt not, is laus tua, thy praise: that thou wouldest and canst not, gratia Dei, is God's providence. Haman would hang Mordecai and cannot: he is a villain in Hell for his intent. David, when he had Saul in the Cave, could hurt and would not: he is a Saint in Heaven. Shimei would, but cannot kill (though rail on) David: David can, and will not kill Shimei. The hot Disciples would have Fire from Heaven to destroy the Samaritans, and could not: Christ could command it, and would not. How rare is a man of this disposition among us? If advantage hath thrust a Bootie into his hands, the Lamb is in the Wolves Cave with more security. Plead what thou wilt, prostrate thy own innocence, aggravate the Oppressors cruelty: he answers as Esopes Wolf answered the Lamb; Thy Cause is better then mine, but my Teeth are better then thine; I will eat thee. Aud this is a shrewd invincible argument, when the cause must be tried out by the Teeth. Pactum non pactum est, non pactum pactum est; quicquid illis lubet: Bargain or not bargain; the Law must be on their sides: Nemo potentes tutus potest aggred. He comes to his cost, that comes to complain against them.

2 For their Fraud; they are Cunning Hunters. They are Foxes as well as Lions to get their Prey. Nay the Fox-head doth them often more stead, then the Lions Skin. Mical. 7. They hunt with a Net. They have their political Ginnes to catch them. Gawdy Wares and dark Shoppes, (and would you have them love the light, that live by darkness, as many Shopkeepers) draw and tole Customers in: where the crafty Leaches can soon feel their Pulses: if they must buy, they shall pay for their necessity. And though they plead, We compel none to buy our Wares; Caveat emptor: yet with fine voluble Phrases, damnable Protestations, they will cast a mist of error before an Eye of simple Truth; and with cunning devises hunt them in. So some among us have feathered their nests, not by open violence, but political circumvention. They have sought the Golden Fleece, not by Iasons Merite, but by Medeas Subtlety, by Medeas Sorcerie.

If I should intend to discover these Hunters Plottes, and to deal punctually with them, I should afford you more matter, then you would afford me time. But I limit myself, and answer all their Pleaes with August. Their tricks may hold in iure fori, but not in Iure poli: in the Common-pleas of Earth; not before the Kings bench in Heaven.

Neither do these Cunning Hunters forage only the Forest of the world. but they have ventured to enter the Pale of the Church, and hunt there. They will go near to emparke it to themselves, and thrust God out. So many have done in this Land: and though it be danger for the poor Hare to preach to Lions & foxes, I am not afraid to tell them, that they Hunt; where they have nothing to do. Poor Ministers are dear to them; for they are the Deare they Hunt for: How many Parishes in England (all most to the number of half) have they empayled, to themselves, and chased the Lord's Deare out? Yea now, if God lay Challenge to his own Ground against their Sacrilegious impropriations, for his own Tithes; they are not ashamed to tell him, They are none of his: and what laws soever he hath made, they will hold them with a Non obstante. They were taken into the Church for Patrons, defenders; and they prove offenders, Thieves; for most often Patrocinia, latrocinia.

You have read how the Badger entertained the Hedghogge into his Cabine, as his inward friend: but being wounded with the Prickles of his offensive guest, he mannerly desired him to depart in kindness, as he came. The Hedge-hog thus satisfies his just expostulation; that he for his part found himself very well at ease, and they that were not, had reason to seek out another place, that likes them better. So the poor Horse, entreating help of the Man against the Stag; ever after Non equitem dorso, non fraenum depulit ore: They have rid us, and bridled us, and backed us, and spur'd us, and got a tyranny over us, whom we took in for our familiar friends and favorites.

3. Now for their Houndes: besides that they have long Noses themselves, and Hands longer then their Noses, they have Dogs of all sorts.

Beagles, cunning Intelligencers. Eó laudabilior, quo fraudulentior: The more crafty they are, the more commendable.

Their Setters, prowling Promoters; whereof there may be necessary use, as men may have of Dogs; but not tolerable for their purposes.

Their Spaniels, fawning Sycophants, that lick their Masters hands, but are brawling ever at poor strangers,

Their great Masti•es; surely and sharking Bailiffs, that can set a Rankling Tooth in the poor Tenants Ribbes.

They have their Bandoes, corrupt Soliciters, Parrat-Lawyers; that are their properties, and mere Trunkes, whereby they inform and Plead before Justice, against Justice. And as the Hounds can sometimes smell out the Game, before their Master; as having a better Nose, then he an Eye: so these are still Picking-holes in poor men's estates, and raking up broken Titles: which if they justly be defended; Actio fit non Lustralis, sed secularis: Whereif (because Justice doth sometimes prevail) it go against them; yet Major est expensarum sumptus, quam sententiae fructus: The cost is more Chargeable then the victory profitable.

Some of them, whose Pale is the Burse, have their Blood-hounds; long-nosd, hook-handed Brokers, that can draw the sinking estate of poor men, by the blood of necessity. If they spy Pride and Prodigality in the streets, they watch over them as Puttocks over a dying Sheep. For Pascuntur scelere: they are not Doves but Ravens, and therefore sequuntur cadauera, follow Carcasses. O that some blessed medicine could rid our Land of these Warts and Scabbes; free us from these Currs. The Cunning Hunters could not do so much mischief, without these Lurchers, these insa•iate Hounds.

Thus I have shown you a Fielde of Hunters: what should I add, but my Prayers to Heaven, and desires to Farth, that these Hunters may be hunted. The hunting of harmful Beasts is commended; the Wolf, the Boar, the Bear, the Fox, the Tiger, the Otter. But the metaphorical hunting of these is more praise worthy: the Country-wolves, or City-Foxes deserve most to be Hunted. Non est meae Paruitatis, &c. I am to shallow to advise you Demodo: I only wish it might be done: they that have authority to do it, know best the means, I will but discover the Game, and leave it to their Hunting: naming the persons they should Hunt: they know the Hounds where withal.

1 There is the wild Boar, that breaks over God's mounds and spoils his Vineyard. Psal. 80. The Boar out of the Wood doth waste it: and the wild Beast of the Field, doth devour it. This is the depopulator, that will forage and lay all waste, if he be not restrained. What; Do you call him a wasting Boar? he rather encloseth all, breaketh up none. Yes, he lays waste to the Common-wealth, though he encloseth to himself. He wasteth Societies, Communitie, Neighbourhood of people; turns them out of their ancient Dores, sends them to the wide World to beg their Bread. He is a bloody Boar, and hath two damnable Tuskes: Money to make him Friends, and to charm connivance: And a wicked Conscience, that cares not to swim to Hell in Blood. The brawny Shield of this Boar, whereby he bears off all blows of Curses, is the security of his own dead Heart: He thinks the Cries and Vlulations of Widdowes and Orphans, the best Music. When the hand of God strikes him, (as strike him it will, and that fearfully) he even rouseth and rageth on him; and dyes like an angry Boar, foaming at mouth, as if he were spitting defiance at Heaven. Let this Beast be Hunted.

2. There is the Fox, the crafty Cheater, that steals the Grapes. Cant. 2. Take in the Foxes, &c. It is God's charge to hunt him. He turns Beasts out of their Dennes by defying them. He sold his Conscience to the Devil for a stock of villanous Wit. He hath a stinking Breath; corrupted with Oaths and Lies: and a ravenous Throat to prey upon men's simplenesse. If all tricks fail, he will counterfeit himself dead, that so drawing the Fowls to feed upon him, he may feed upon them. The Defrauder puts on a semblance of great smoothness; you would take him for a wonderful honest man: Soft, you are not yet within his clutches; when you are, Lord have mercy on you, for he will have none.

3. There is the bloody Wolf; the professed cutthroat the Usurer. Hunt him, sease on his Den; it is full of pooremens Goods. What a Golden Law would that be, which were called a Statute of Restitution: Such a one as Nehemiah enacted. Neh. 5. that Lands and Vineyards, Houses and Goods, mortgaged into Usurers hands, should be restored. When he sealed it with a sacramental Oath, and made them swear consent to it. And he shook his Lappe, and said. So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labor, that performeth not this Promise; even thus be he shaken out, and emptied. And all the Congregation said, Amen. But if they will not restore by themselves, they shall by their posterity. For, as Pliny writes of the Wolf, that it brings forth blind Whelps: so the Usurer lightly begets blind Children, that cannot see to keep what their Father left them. But when the Father is gone to Hell for gathering, the Son often follows for scattering. But God is just. A good man leaveth his Inheritance to his Children Children: and the Wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

4. There is also the Badger, a Beast of rapine: We have his fellows among us, the Engrossers of Corn, the Raysers of the price, sweeping away whole Markets: We call these Badgers. The Poor that comes with a little Money, cannot speed; but at an unreasonable rate: they engross all. And by their Capacitie, or rather Rapacitie, having so much in their hands, they sell it at the place of their transporting, at their own price.

5. The Dromedarie would also be better hunted: I mean the vagrant Rogues, whose whole life is nothing but an exorbitant course: the main begging, the by's silching and stealing: Only they are not so serviceable as the Dromedary; which is a Beast of quick feet, and strange speed. The reason is given by Aristotle, because the extreme heat of Nature doth waste all the vinctuositie and fatness, and thereby gives greater agility. But these Dromedaries are not swift: Let one charitable Constable amongst a hundred light on him, and give him correction, and a Passport to his (false-named) place of birth, and he will not travel above a Mile a day. Let them alone, and they will traverse their way; which are no ways: for they cannot keep the beaten path: let them be where they will, they are never out of their way. They boast themselves of the brood of Cain for they are perpetual Runnagats. If the Stoks and Whip-post cannot stay their extrauagancie, there remains •nely the Gal-house.

6. Let the roaring Bull be hunted; the Bulls of Basan, the Bulls of Rome; sent over by the Pope ad interitum, either of us or themselves: For their end is not implere Ecclesiam, but c•miterium; to fill Church-yards with dead bodies, not the Church with living souls. No Service would be so welcome to them, as the Sicilian Euensong, or the Parisian Matins. But since no Drugge is currant in their Shoppes, but Diacatholican, Treason and Ruin; let it be first ministered to themselves to purge their burning Fevers. And since the Pope sends his Bulls into England so thick, bellowing to call his Calves together, and to excite their revolting from their Sovereign; let them speed no otherwise then those Bulls once did, that called in another Bull, which was Bull the Hang-man: to dispatch them all.

If you be disposed to hunt, hunt these Beasts that havoc the Common-wealth: Let the Lambes alone, they do you much good, no hurt. And to this chase use all your skill: in this work it shall be your commendation to be cunniug Hunters. The Lord shall emparke you within the Pale of his own merciful Providence, and restrain the savage fury of your Enemies. Let those, whom God hath made Masters of this serious game, and given Commission to hunt vicious persons: Let every particular man hunt Vice out of his own heart. If there be any violence to get the Kingdom of Heaven, use it: if any policy to overthrow Satan and his complices, against whom we wrestle, exercise it. This War shall be your Peace. You shall help to purge the Land of noxious Beasts; and cleanse your own hearts from those lusts; which if you hunt not to death, shall hunt you to death; as the moral of Acteon. And God that gives you this command and courage, shall add for it a merciful recompense; taking you at last from this militant Chace to the Park of his triumphant Rest. Amen.

FINIS.

CHRIST HIS STARRE: OR, The Wise-men's Oblation.

Matth. 2. II.

When they were come into the house, they saw the young Child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their Treasures, they presented unto him gifts, Gold, and Frankincense, and Myrrh.

THE Feast of the Epiphanie, or manifestation of Christ, as it is this days momorie; so I have purposed this days exercise. As Relatu traditionis instruimur, There were three principal and notable Appearings of Christ on this Day. All which, Eodem die contigisse feruntur, sed alijs at que alijs annis, fell out the same day in diverse years, as they write.

So Maximus Episc. Tribus miraculis ornatum diem sanctum seruamus. &c. we keep this Day Holy and Feastiually, being honored with three Wonders. This Day Christ led the Wise-men to himself by a Star. This Day he turned the Waters into Wine at the Marriage. This Day he was Baptized of John in Jordan.

According to these three distinct Manifestations of himself, they have given this Day, three several names.

1. Epiphania: Because Christ did appear to certain M•gi, by the direction of a Star: and was by their report, made known to the Fox Herod, and his Cubbes, many enemies in Jerusalem▪ (ver. 3.) He was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

2. Theophania: Because there was a Declaration of the whole Trinity. (Math. 3.) Of God the Father, whose voice was heard from Heaven. Of GOD the Son to be Baptized; of whom was the testimony given, This is my beloved Sonns, in whom I am well pleased. Of GOD the holy Ghost, who descending like a Dove, lighted on him.

3. Bethphania: Because, (John. 2.) he shown the power of his Deity, at the Wedding, in changing their Water into Wine: So the Text (ver. 11.) This beginning of Miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested his glory.

4. Some have added a fourth name from a fourth Wonder, that they say was wrought on this Day: Phagiophania; Because Christ relieved Famem triduanam, the three days hunger of five thousand, with five Barley Loaves, and two little Fishes.

I confess, this History hath many observable points in it. It entreates of Wise-men, of a tyrannical King, of troubled People, and of the King of Kings lying in swaddling clothes. To discourse all these,

Virtutesque, virosque, et tanti incendia bell; would exceed the limites of one cold hour. I would therefore confine my short speech, and your attention, to the verse read.

Wherein me thinks, I find a miraculous Wonder: That extraordinary Men, by an extraordinary Star, should find the King of Heaven in so extraordinary a place. Wise-men seeking a Star, showing a Savior lying in a Manger: But cernere oculis, docenter oraculis, the eye of Flesh sees somewhat; the eye of Faith shall see more.

I may distinguish all into a

- Direction.
- Devotion.

The Direction of God, the Devotion of Men. By the Direction, they are brought to the Messias. By their Devotion, they Worship him, and present him Gifts, Gold, Frankincense, and Myrrh. For the Direction, we will borrow a little of the Premises; and therein consider

- God's Leading.
- Their Following.

God's Leading was by a Star. They that delight to cast Clouds upon the clear Sun, have here mooted many Questions about this Star.

1. Whether this Star were singular, or an heap of Stars. Our Roman adversaries, to bring willful trouble on themselves and us, have coniu'r'd a fiction from one Albumazar a Heathen; that the Sign in the Zodiac, called the Virgin, is composed of so many Stars, as may aptly pourtray Virginem gestantem inter brachia filium, a Virgin bearing an Infant in her arms: And some of them have thought that, this Star.

Let Albumazar be the father of this opinion; and for a little better authority, they have motherd it on a Prophecy of Tiburtine Sibylla when Augustus boasted his super-human Majesty, Sibylla shown him Virginem in coelo Infanti portam, a Virgin in Heaven bearing a young Child in her arms; with these words: Hic Puer major te est, ipsum adora, Yonder Infant is greater then thou art, O Caesar, worship him.

But because the Father of this toy was an Ethnicke, and the Mother thought a Sorceresse, they have (as somethinke, spite of his teeth) brought in Chrysostom for a God-father to it; or to an opinion, if differing from it, yet also exceeding the truth of this History. Whether of himself, or on their teaching, he says thus. This Star appeared to them descending upon that victoriall Mountain, having in it the form of a little Child; and above him the similitude of a Cross. But I confess, (and loe the great vaunts of their unity) that many of them are of another mind.

Howsoever, the Text is plain against it. (ver. 2.) 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Vidimus Stellam eius. Aster and astrum differ, as Stella and *Sydu*s. Aster and Stella signify one Star: Astrum and *Sydu*s, a knot of Stars; as any Sign in the Heaven, coacted and compounded of many Stars. The Evangelist here useth the singular and individual word; We have seen his Star, not Stars.

2. They question, whether this was a new Star, created for the purpose; or one of those co-euall to the World. Chrysostom, Damaseen, Fulgentius, with most others, are persuaded it was a new Star. Houdemius an English man so sung of it,

Nouâ caelum Stellâ depingitur,

Dum Sol nouus in terris oritur.

T'was fit a new Star should adorn the Skies,

When a new Sun doth on the Earth arise.

It is called by Augustine, Magnifica Lingua coeli: The glorious Tongue of Heaven. It appears, this was no ordinary Star, ex

- situ,
- Motu,
- Tempore Lucendi.

1. By the Site: The place of it must be (In aere terrae vicino, non ipsius meditullio) in that part or Region of the Air, that was next to the Earth; otherwise it could not so punctually have directed these Wise-men, that traveled by it.

2. By the Motion. The course of other Stars is circular: this Star went straight forward, as a guide of the way: in the same manner, that the Pillar of Fire went before Israel, when they passed out of Egypt.

3. By the Time of Shining. Other Stars shine in the night only, this Star gave light in the broad day; as if it were a Star appointed to wait on the Sun.

Stella Luce vincens Luciferum,

Magos ducit ad Regem Syderum.

Of this Star did that Coniurer prophecy. (Num. 24.) There shall come a Star out of Jacob, &c. It was a true Star, it was a new Star; created by God in Heaven for this purpose: Not that the birth of Christ depended on this Star, but this Star on his birth. Therefore it is called Christ's Star, (ver. 2.) His Star.

This Star served

- To them Ad Ducendum.
- To us Ad Docendum.

It led them really, let it also lead us figuratively to Christ: Them Per visum, us Per fidem.

By the consent of Divines this Star did prefigure the Gospel. And indeed: For what other Light directs us to Christ?

Not the Star of Nature: Did not every step it taught us to tread, bring us further off? If it heard of him, it sought him, as Laban sought his Idols in the Tents: or as Saul sought his Asses in the Mountains: or as Joseph & Mary fought him among their Kinsfolks: Either in the Tents of soft ease and security: or in the Mountains of Worldly dignity: or among the Kindred of the flesh, friends and company.

Not the Star of the Law: for this told us of a perfect obedience, and of condemnation for disobedience; of God's anger, our danger; of sin and death. This Star would have lighted us to Heaven, if we had no Clouds of Iniquity to darken it to our selves. And that which S. Paul speaks (Gal. 3.) The Law was our School-master to bring us unto Christ; is to be understood of the legal Tipes and Sacrifices. Where, by an Oblation of the blood of Beasts, was prefigured the Blood of that Lamb, which should expiate all our sins.

The Gospel is this Star; and blessed are they, that follow it: It shall bring them to the Babe Jesus. God hath fixed this Star in our Orbe: but how few are so wise as these Wise-men, to follow it? That Star was sometimes hidden, this shines perpetually. It is horror and shame to speak it; we no more esteem it, then if we were wear•e of the Sun for continual shining.

I am loath to part with this Star; but other Observations call me from it. You hear God's Leading, mark their Following. This is described Ex

- Aduentu,
- Euentu.

by their

- Access.
- Success.

Veniunt, Inueniunt: They Come, they Find.

Their Access.

Some have thought that these Magi, having so profound skill in Astrology, might by calculation of times, composition of Stars▪ and S•ellations of the Heavens, foreknow the birth of the Mes•ias. But this opinion is utterly condemned by Augustine, and all good men. And it shall only help us with this Observation.

God purposed so plentiful a salvation by Christ that he calls to him at the first those, who were far off. Far off indeed; not only in a local, but cere•oniall Distance. For place they were so far; as Persia from India: from thence most Writers affirm their coming. For the other respect, he calls those to Christ, who had run furthest from Christ; and given themselves most over to the Devil. Magi•ans, Sorcerers, Coniuri•s consederates with Satan in the most detestable art of Witchcraft. These that had set their faces against heaven' and blaspheme'd out a renunciation of God and all goodness: even at those Doors doth God's spirit Knocke, & sends them by a Star to a Savior.

Be our •innes never so many for number, never so heinous for nature, never so full for measure, yet the mercy of God may give us a Star; that shall bring us, not to the Babe Jesus in a Manger, but to be Ch•ist a King in his Throne. Let no penitent Soul despair of mercy.

Christ manifested himself to two sortes of people in his swathing Cloutes; to these Magicians, and to Shepherds: the latter simple and ignorant, the other learned and wicked. So August▪ In rusticitate Pastorum imperitia proeualet, in Sacrilegijs magorum imp•etas. Yet to both these, one in the day of his nativity the other in this Epiphanie, did that Savior, with whom is no respect of of persons manifest his saving mercy. Whether thou be poor for Goods of the world, or Poorer for the Riches of grace, be comforted; thou mayest one day see the salvation of God.

2. Observe their obedience: they Come instantly on God's call. They have seen his Star, and they must go to him. They regard not, that Herod was an enemy to the King of Persia their Master; they come to his Court to enquire for Christ. When they are there, let Herod be never so troubled about the name of the true and new-borne King of Jews; they have the inward direction, the record of an ancient prophecy added by the Priests. ver. 6. from Micah. 5. 2. Thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel. Hereupon they go.

Obedience, when it hath the warrant, goes upon sound and quick Feet Necfal•a fingit, nec vera metuit impedimenta. No obstacles can stay it, no Errors stray it, nor Terrors fray it: it is not deluded with toys, nor deferred with joys. It •arries not with the young man in the Gospel, to kiss his Friends; nor with the Old man, to fill his Barns: but Currit per saxa, perignes, through all dangers and difficulties, with a faithful eye bent upon the Callers promises. And this is that other Virtue remarkable in these Wise-men.

3. Faith. They come to the Priests made acquainted with the Oracles of God, to inquire of this King. The Priests resolve the place of his birth from the Prophet: but though told of his Star, they will not stir a foot towards him: Perhaps it might cost them their Honors or lives by the Kings displeasure; therefore they will point others, but disappoint their own souls.

Here is a strange inversion, Veritas illuminat Magos; Infidelit as obcoecat Magistro: Truth guides the Magicians, Unbelief blinds the Priests. They that were used to Necromanticke Spelles and Charmes, begin to understand the truth of a Savior: whiles they that had him in their Books, lost him in their Hearts. Vtuntur paginis, quarum non credunt eloquijs: They turn over the leaves, and believe not their Contents. To what end were all their quotidian Sacrifices? If they were not types and figures of a Mesias, what other thing made they their Temples, but a Butchers shambles?

Now the Mercy and Grace of our Lord Jesus, keep us from this apostate wickedness. Let Truth never speak it of us, that we have the Book of the Lord in our Hands, not the doctrine in our Consciences. That we have God's Seals, yet vn-marked Souls. That De virtutibus vacui loquimur: We speak of the Graces, we have not.

It was once spoken of Greece, in regard of the ruins, (•ea of the utter extinction, for Etiam periere ruinae) Graciam in Graecia quaerimus, non inuenimus: We seek for Greece in Greece, and cannot find it. Let it never be said of us in respect of our recidiuall disobedience; Angliam in Anglia quaerimus; et non inuenta est: We seek that famous Church of England in England, and find it not. Many love to live within the circumference and reach of the Gospel, because it hath brought Peace, and that Peace Wealth, and that Wealth Promotion: But if this Health or Quiet might be upheld or augmented by that Roman Harlot, they would be ready to cry, Great is Diana of the Ephesians; and Christ might lodge long enough at Bethlehem, ere they would go to visit him. Our lives too prodigiously begin to pretend this: But,

O faxit Deus, vt nullum sit in omine pondus.

And for our selves, Bel. Let us not like the Priests, direct others to a Savior, and stay at home our selves: nor like the Trumpeter, that encourageth others to the Battle against the enemies of God, and our salvation, Nihil ipse nec ausus, nec potuit: our selves being Cowards, and giving never a stroke. It is not enough to tell the people of a Savior in Bethlehem: Opus est etiam praeitione, aut saltem coitione, et pari congressu: We must go before them, or at least go with them.

For this cause I commend the Faith of these Magi: Seeing the Priests doctrine concurs with the Stars dumb direction, though Herod will not leave his Court, nor the Scribes their ease, nor the People their trades; yet these men will go alone to Christ. When thou art to embrace Religion, it is good going in company, if thou canst get them; for the greater blessings •alles upon a multitude: but resolve to go, though alone: For thou shalt never see the Lord Jesus, if thou tarry till all Jerusalem go with thee to Bethlehem.

WEe have heard their Aduent or Access; listen to the Euent or Success. They saw the young Child, with Mary his Mother.

God hath answered the desire of their hearts: they had undertook a long Journey, made a diligent inquiry; no doubt their Souls longed with Simeon to see their Savior. Loe! he that never frustrates the faithful affection, gives abundant satisfaction to their hopes. They saw the young Child with Mary his Mother. Observe they saw him.

Whom? The young Child▪ Meditate and wonder. The Ancient of days is become a young Child. The Infinitely great is made Little. The sustainer of all things Suckles. Factor terrae, factus interra. Creator coeli, creatus sub coelo. He that made Heaven and Earth, is made under Heaven upon Earth. The Creator of the world is Created in the world, Created Little in the world; they saw the young Child.

With whom? With Mary his Mother. Mary was his Daughter, is she now become his Mother? Yes; he is made the Child of Mary, who is the Father of Mary. Sine quo Pater nunquam fuit, sine quo mater nunquam fuisset. Without whom his Father in Heaven never was; without whom his Mother on Earth had never been.

Where? It is evident in S. Luke's Gospel, they found him lying in a Cratch. He, who sits on the right hand of the Majesty on high, was lodged in a stable. He that Measures the Waters in his Fist, and Heaven with a Spane▪ was now Crowned in a Manger, and swaddled with a few Ragges. Here they find neither Gard to defend him, nor tumults of people thronging to see him; neither Crown on his Head, nor Scepter in his hand; but a young Child in a Cratch: having so little external glory, that they might have saved their pain and seen many in their own Country far beyond him. Our instruction hence is, that.

God doth often strangely and strongly exercise the Faith of his; that their persuasion may not be guided (Oculus, but Ora•ulis) by their Sight, but his Word. The eye of true Faith is so quick sighted, that it can see through all the Mistes and Fogs of difficulties. Hereon these Magi do confidently believe, that this poor Child, lying in so base a manner, is the great King of Heaven and Earth. The faith of man, that is grounded on the promises of God must believe, that in prison there is liberty, in trouble peace, in affliction, comfort, in Death life, in the Cross a Crown, and in a Manger the Lord Jesus.

The use of this teacheth us not to be offended at the baseness of the Gospel; lest we never come to the Honor to see Jesus. It was an argument of the Devils breaching. Have any of the Rulers, or Pharisees believed on him? The great, the learned, the wise give him no cr•dence. But this people that knoweth not the Law is Cursed: None but a few o• the rascall company follow him. 〈◊〉 hereof Simeon resolved his mother Mary. 〈...〉 set for the fall, as well as the risi•g again of many 〈...〉 for a Sign which shall be spoken against. He should 〈...〉 but woe unto

But such is God's miraculous working that he subdues Crowns to a Cross, overcomes <...> poverty, overthrows the <ϕ> of the <ϕ> , by <ϕ> Folishnesse of the Spirit and sets knees a <...> in a Manger.

YOU see their Access, and the Euent or Success; which points determine their Direction: Let us come to their

Devotion.

Herein we shall find a triplicite; to follow the method of Augustine's Gloss, Adorant corporibus, vncrantur officijs, honorant muneribus: Christ had bestowed on these Magi three sorts of gifts; Goods Corporal, Spiritual, Temporal: And all these in a devout thankfulness they return to Christ.

In Falling down, they did honor him with the Goods of the body.

In Worshipping him, with the gifts of the Mind.

In Presenting to him gifts, Gold, Frankincense, & Mirrhe; with the goods of the World.

The Body and Mind, I will knit together, (They fell down, and worshipped him.) It is fit they should be partners in repentance, that have been confederates in sin. It is questioned, whether in transgressing, the body or the soul be most culpable? I am sure, either is guilty. It is all one: a man that wants Eyes, carries a man that wants Feet: the lame that cannot go, spies a Bootie; and tells his blind Porter of it, that cannot see: He that hath Eyes directs the way; he that hath Feet travels to it; but they both consent to steal it. The Body without the Soul wants Eyes: the Soul without the Body wants Feet; but either supplies the other to purloine God's glory: Discusse, whether more, that list; I am certain, both the blind and the lame are guilty. Both have offended, both must in a repentant Oblation be offered to God. Therefore saith Paul, not only Present your Bodies <ϕ> Sacrifice; but also, Bee transformed by the renewing of your Minds. Bodily labor profits •tle, without the Soul; and it is a proud Soul that hath stiff Knees. These Magi therefore give both; Procidentes adoruerunt eum.

Here is one thing sticks horribly in the Papists stomachs; and like a Bone in the throat, will neither up nor down with them. They fell down and worshipped him: Not her. This same leaving out of (Her) hath much vexed them. How much would they have given the Evangelist, to put in (Illam.) They saw Him with his Mother: yet they Worshipped Him, not his Mother.

They have troubled us and themselves with many Arguments, that though this was concealed, it was not omitted. And they are resolved to believe it, though they cannot prove it; and that, though it be not so good, shall be as ready. Howsoever? they will confute the Magi in their practice: for they still Adorare eam, when perhaps they forget eum, and give the Mother more honor then her Maker. It was but mannerly in Bellarmino, to post-scribe two of his Tomes, with Laus Deo, virgini{que} matri Mariae: Praise to the Lord, and his Mother the virgin Mary. Some (setting the Cart before the Horse) have written (Laus beatæ virgini, et Jesus Christo,) Praise to the virgin Mary, and Jesus Christ: And they have enjoined ten Auemaries, for one Paternoster. It is to be feared at last, they will adore her for their Savior, as they do for their Mediator, and shut Christ quite out of doors.

But let me come out of Babel into God's City. They fell down, and worshipped Him. Let our Instruction hence be this.

God did ever so strangely qualify the baseness of Christ, that though he seemed in men's eyes a contemptible object, and abject; (Esa. 53.) yet he was beautified with some certain mark of his Divinity; that he might be discerned to be more than Man. Here when he had an Ox-stall for his Cloath of estate, he had a Star from Heaven to shine forth his Glory. Now, when generally in the world there was as much thought of the man in the Moon, as of Christ the Son of Righteousness, behold Magicians come from the East, and prostrate themselves before him.

The eye of their Flesh, saw his rags of Poverty: the eye of their Faith, saw his robes of Glory. Instead of the cold Stones and Pavement, they saw his Sapphires, Jaspers, Chrysolites. Instead of his Manger, they saw his Throne. For the Beasts about him, they saw armies of Angels attending him. For his base Stable, they saw Palatium centum sublime columnis; a Palace of many Turrets. They beheld Magnu• in paruo latere; that this little Child was a great King, yea a great GOD, yea a great King above all God's. Thus, as Thomas in one of his Hymns.

Quod non capis, quod non vides,

Animosa firmat fides,

Praeter rerum ordinem.

What we neither feel nor see,

Powerful Faith believes to be.

When Christ was first revealed to poor Shepherds, he was not without a Qu•re of Angels singing his Glory. Let him be in the Wilderness among wild Beasts, even those glorious Spirits are his Pensioners, and minister to his wants. He comes hungry to a Fig tree, to demonstrate his natural infirmity: but finding no fruit on it, he curseth the Fig tree; Never Fruit grow on thee hereafter, to declare his Power. Must he pay tribute? Yet the Kings Son should pay none: but he is content to be a Subject; he will pay it: but he bids Peter go to the Sea, and take it out of a Fishes mouth. To show his Humility, he will pay it; but to show his Divinity, he bids the Sea pay it for him. He that undertook the Miserie to be whipped; did also to prove his Majesty, whip the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple: Which was no less then a miraculous Wonder, that a private man should do it without resistance. Yea, when he was dying between two Thieves, he so qualifies the baseness of the Cross, that he works in the heart of one, to call him Savior, and to desire remembrance in his Kingdom. When his Soul was leaving his Body, as a man; even then he rent the Vail of the Temple, shook the Earth, tore the Rocks, open the Graues; to prove that he was GOD.

Thus in his greatest humiliation, God never left him without some testimony of his divine power that as beholding him hungry, thirsty, weary, weeping, bleeding, dying; we say, O homo certe sure he was a Man: So, seeing him to calm the Seas, command the Winds, heal the Sick, raise the Dead, cast out Devils, we may say, O Deus certe, sure he was GOD. Thus these converted Magicians beheld him, Hominem verum, though not hominem merum; a little Child, a great GOD. To borrow a distich of a divine Poet.

O strangest eyes, that saw him by this Star,

Who, when by-standers saw not, saw so far?

Men are especially taken with three things, Submission, Honor, Gifts. These Wise-men, therefore having Falne down and worshipped him, do now open their Treasures and present him Gifts; Gold, Frankincense, and Myrrh.

Divers of the Fathers have diversely gloss'd these Wise-men's Gifts.

Bern. They did offer Gold, to relieve Mary's necessity; Frankincense, to sweeten the Stable; Myrrh, to comfort the swaddled Babe. Others thus.

They did offer Gold to Christ, as being a King: Frankincense, as being God: Myrrh, as being Man, to die for the redemption of the World.

Ambros. Aurum Regi, Thus Deo, Myrrham Defuncto, or Morituro. Gold for a King, Incense for God, Myrrh for a Man, that must die: a special Vnguent to reserve the Body from corruption.

So Basil. Vt Regiaurum, vt morituro Myrrham, vt Deo thus obtulerunt.

The same Hillary: In auro Regem, in thure Deum, in Myrrha hominem confitentur.

All the Fathers, and other Writers, harp on this string, and sing the same note. Nazianzen, Cyprian, Augustine, Jerome, Gregory, Fulgentius; that in Gold, they acknowledged him a King; by Incense, God; by Myrrh, a passable and mortal Man. So the Christian Poets have sung.

Aurea nascenti fuderunt munera Regi:

Thura dedere Deo: Myrrham tribuere sepulehro.

So another. Aurum, Thus, Myrrham, Regique, Deoque, Hominique, Dona ferunt.

In general learn two profitable Instructions.

1. They come not to Christ empty-handed. It was God's charge to Israel (Deut. 16.) but we think now, we are delivered from that Law,) Non apparebis in conspectu meo vacuus: Thou shalt not appear before me empty. You plead, God cares not for our Sheep and Oxen, or the fat of our Rammes: for all the World is his. He requires it not for himself, though due to himself. Give it then to his poor Ministers, to his poor members here.

I know not how happily, I am fallen into that I would never be out of, Charity. Most men now-a-days (as it is in the Proverb) are better at the Rake, then at the Pitch-forke; readier to pull in, then give out. But if the Lord hath sown plentiful Seed, he expects plentiful Fruits; an answerable measure, heape, and shaken, and thrust together, and running over. If God hath made the Bushel great, make not you the Pecke small. Turn not the bounty of Heaven, to the scarcity of Earth. We love the retentive well, but our expulsive is grown weak. But as God hath made you Diuit in arca, so beseech him to make you Diuites in conscientia. Accept not only the distributive virtue from Heaven, but affect the communicative virtue on Earth.

As in a state political, the lieger Ambassadors that are sent abroad to lie in foreign Kingdoms, secureth our peaceable state at home. So, that we disperse abroad, makes safe the rest at home. The Prayers of the Poor by us relieved, shall prevail with God for Mercy upon us. The happy solace of a well pleased Conscience shall rejoice us: and the never failing Promises of God, shall satisfy us. We hear many Rich men complain of losses, by Sea, by Debtors, by unjust Servants: we never heard any man complain of want that came by Charity: No man is the poorer, for that he gives to the Poor: Let him sum up his Books, and he shall find himself the richer. As God therefore hath laid up for you In terra morientium, in this World: so lay up for your-selves Interra viuentium, in the World to come. As you are rich in the Kings Books, be rich in God's Book. If it were possible, all the World should miscarry, your Treasure in Heaven is in a sure Coffre: no Thief, Rust, Moth, Fire, shall consume that. You shall find God the best Creditor; he will pay great Usury, not ten in a hundred, but a hundred, a thousand for ten.

2. Their Gifts were not slight and trivial, lean, meager, staruelings; but Opimat, optima; everyone the best in their kinds. Gold is the best of Metals, Frankin cense of aromatical Odours, Myrrh of medicinal Vnguent.

Match these Wise-men, O ye miserable times of ours. Raro reddentem, rarissime optima reddentem profertis. You seldom bring forth a man that will give; but almost never, one that will offer the best Gifts. Our lame Son must be God's Clerke, our starved Lamb, our poorest Fleece, our thinnest Sheafe must fall for God's Tenth. If we give him the Shales, the Huskes, the Sheards, the Shreds, of our Wealth, we judge him beholding to us.

God hears the Heavens, and the Heavens hear the Earth, and the Earth hears the Corn, Wine, Oil, and they hear us. Our valleys stand thick with Corn, our Trees groan with the burden of Fruits, our pastures abound with Cattle & we return God either nothing, or the worst we can pick out. Take heed, least God curse our Blessings; and whiles our Barns and Garners be Fatte, he withal send leanness into our Souls.

Never think, ye miserable worldings, without opening your Treasures, and Presenting the Lord with liberal gifts; ever with these Magi to see the face of the Lord Jesus. Go home now, and make thyself merry with thy wealth, whiles Christ stands mourning in the streets: applaud thy Wardrobe, whiles he goes Naked: saturate thyself with thy Fatte morsels, whiles he begs (vnrelieued) for the Crummes: beak thy Pamperd limbs at the Fire, whiles he shakes through Cold: thy miseries is to come; thou shalt not behold thy Savior in his glory.

Generally their example hath taught us somewhat; to be Charitable, to be Ritch in Charytie. More specially they shall instruct us to particular Gifts.

Some have alluded these three, Gold, Myrrh and Frankincense, to the three Theological virtues; Faith, Hope, and Charity.

Auro virtus perhibetur Amantis:

In Myrrha bona Spes; Thure beata Fides.

By Incense they understand Faith: because as that is to be offered, so this is, to be reposed in God alone.

By Myrrh, Hope: that though death lay the body in the Cold earth, and send it to Putrefaction; yet Hope shall (as it were) embalme it with Myrrh, and give it expectance of a better Resurrection.

By Gold, Love and Charity; the use of it being such, as it can procure them to whom we give it, necessary things to the sustentation of their lives. Et quid non venditur auro?

Others have resolved it thus.

Pro Myrrha Lachrymas; Auro cor porridge purum.

Pro Thure, ex humili pectore funde precat.

Pure Heart thy Gold, thy Myrrh be Penitence:

And devout Prayer be thy Frankincense.

In a word:

1. Offer up to God thy Frankincense, Supplication and Thanksgiuing. (Psal. 141.) Let thy Prayer be set forth before him as Incense, and the lifting up of thy Hands as an Evening Sacrifice. Put this into Christ's Censor, and it will make a sweet smoke in God's Nosthrils. Whoso offereth me Praise, glorifieth me. It shall perfume thy Soul, qualify the stench of thy iniquities, and vindicate thy Heart from the suffocating Plague of sin. Say then, (Psal 54.) I will freely sacrifice unto thee: I will praise thy Name, O Lord, for it is good. Freely, for this must be Frankincense.

2. Next, present to him thy Myrrh, a chaste and mortified Li•e. Let thine Eyes, like the  of the C•urch (Cant. 5. 5.) drop down sweet-smelling Myrrh: Let them gush forth with pen•tent Tears, and thy Soul pour out floods of sorrow for thy offenses We have sinned, we have sinned: O let the Lord behold our Oblation of Myrrh accept our Repentance.

3. Lastly, thou must give thy Gold also: a pure Heart, tried in the Furnace of Affliction and sublim'd from all corruption. And because God only knows the Heart, and the World must judge by thy Fruits; give thy spiritual Gold to Christ, and thy temporal Gold to his poor members. Here take with thee three Cautions.

1. That all these Gifts be derived from an honest Heart. It is said of these Magi, They opened their Treasurs, and presented unto him Gifts. Mans Heart is his Treasury: thou must open that, when thou presentest any Gift to the Lord. He that comes with an open Hand, and a shut Heart, shall be answered of God, as Belshazzar was of Daniel; Keep thy Rewards to thyself, and give thy Gifts to another.

2. That thy Gifts observe the true latitude of Devotion; which endeavours to extend it self to the glory of God, the good of thy Brother, and the salvation of thy own Soul. And to all these three, may these three Gifts of the Wise-men be preferred. The Incense of Prayer, respects God: the Gold of Charity respects our Neighbor: and the Myrrh of Mortification respects our selves.

3. That you offer not only one, but all these. It hath been questioned, Whether these Magi did offer Singuli singula, or singuli tria: But the consent of Divines is, that they gave everyone all, Semel et fimul. Thy Oblation will not be welcome, if any one of the three be missing; Give then all.

Some will give Myrrh, but not Frankincense: Some will give Frankincense, but not Myrrh: and some will give Myrrh and Frankincense, but not Gold.

1. Some will give Myrrh, a strict Moral life, not culpable of any gross eruption, or scandalous impiety: but not Frankincense. Their Prayers are thin sown; therefore their Graces cannot come up thick. Perhaps they feel no want; and then you know, Rarae fumant faliorbus Arae: In their thought, they do not stand in any great need of God: when they do, they will offer him some Incense. These live a morally honest life, but are scant of religious Prayers: and so may be said to offer Myrrh without Frankincense.

2. Some will give Frankincense: Pray frequently, perhaps tediously; but they will give no Myrrh, not mortify or restrain their Concupiscence. The Pharsses had many Prayers; but never the fewer sins. These mock God, when they so often beg of him, that his Will may be done, when they never subdue their affections to it. There are too many such among us, that will often join with the Church in common Devotions, who yet join with the world in common vices. These make great smoakes of Frankincense, but let not fall one drop of Myrrh.

3. Some will give both Myrrh and Frankincense, but by no means their Gold. I will give (saith the Worldling) a Sober life; there's my Myrrh: I will say my Prayers, there's my Frankincense: but do you think I will part with my Gold? This same Gold lies closer in men's Hearts, then it doth in their Purses: You may as well wring Hercules Club out of his Fist, as a Penny from their heaps, to charitable uses.

You have read (2. Sam. 24. 24.) how Areunah, like a King, gave to the King Oxen for Sacrifice, and the Instruments for Fuell: But David answered, Shall I offer burnt Offerings unto the Lord my God, of that which doth cost me nothing? These men will give God Oblations, and enough; provided they cost them nothing. The Usurer must save his Gold for his idolatrous Eye, the Drunkard for his Host, the Lustful for his Whore, the Proud for his Back, the Epicure for his Belly: Can you hope they will part from their Gold?

Aurum omnes, pulsa iam pietate, colunt,

O this damned sin of Covetousness; how many it keeps from the Grace of God, and the Gates of Heaven? Men think they can never have Gold enough. They write of the Toad, that she eats of nothing but the Earth; and thereof no more, then she can hold in her foot at once: and the reason they give is, that she fears the Earth would be wasted, and none left. A fit emblem of the Covetous, who fear to take their Portion of the things God hath given them under the Sun, lest they should want: when the vnrauellling the bottom of their Patrimony, would last to ten frugal Generations.

How this Sickness grouels a man! how it stoupes him into Earth, into Hell! This Disease lies in men's Bones. I have read of a Beggar, that passed by a company of Rich men, and earnestly besought their Alms, complaining that he had a secret Disease lying in his Bones, that he could not earn his living: They in charity gave him somewhat, and let him go. One among the rest following him, would needs know of him, what that secret Disease should be, seeing that outwardly he seemed to ail nothing. Quoth the Beggar, you cannot see it, for it lies in my Bones; and some call it Idleness. You see many a Rich man, whose cup of Wealth runs over: you wonder to see him so miserable, both to himself and others. Why, there is a Disease that lies in his Bones; that keeps him from working the works of Charity, from relieving his distressed Brethren: you may call it Covetousness. They will part with anything, so they may keep their Gold. But we must give our Gold too, with the rest: If we offer not all, Christ will accept none.

I will ende with a Consolation; for who can shut up this Story with aterror? The Lord will so graciously provide for his, that in their greatest ext•emitie they shall not be destitute of comfort. Though Mary travel in her Travel; for she was delivered in Bethlehem, whither she came to be taxed (Luk. 2.) and (likely) wanted necessary provision for her Infant and her self: behold GOD will relieve their poverty, and send them Gold from the East. As he once in a Dearth, provided for Jacob's Family in Canaan, by a store of Bread in Egypt. Comfort shall come when, and whence we least expect it. Rocks shall yield Water, Ravens shall bring Meat, rather then we shall perish; even our Enemies shall sustain us. I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the Righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging Bread.

By whom all things were made, and since have stood:

By him they all shall work unto our good.

To whom be praise forever. Amen.

PLAIN-DEALING, OR, A PRECEDENT OF HONESTIE.

GEN. 25. 27.

Jacob was a Plain man, dwelling in tents.

THE world (I take it in Paul's sense, Rom. 12. 2.) is grown at once deformed and suttle. And, as it is commonly seen, that misshapen trunckes are houses of the sharpest wits: as it was said of the Emperor Galba, Ingenium Galbae male habitat; because he had an acute wit, with an uncomely body: nature recompensing her defection one way, with perfection another way. So the world is become ill-favored, and shrewdpated; as politic in brain, as it is stigmatic in limbs. Honesty, though it be elder then fraud, yet hath lost the privilege in men's estimation: It may keep the priority, the superiority is gone; and it must be fain to serve the younger.

Plain-dealing was held a good cittisen, a good townsman: but Double-dealing, since he came blustering in, hath thrust him sedibus, aedibus; out of house and home; out of repute among men, out of succor of friends; out of Commons, and almost out of Canons; out of his house in the Town, and seat in the Church.

I will therefore call back antiquity, and present to your eyes the purity of the Primitive times. For I may say with Tertullian; Perfectiona prima: the nearer the spring-head, the purer streams. Men, quo minus ab ortu aberrant, might more perfectly discern, and more constantly follow the truth. Jacob is our exemplar, and pattern of Plain-dealing. He was a plain man, dwelling in tents.

Jacob,

TAKEN in the proper sense, signifieth to supplant. Indeed Esau abuseth it, Gen. 27. 36. Is he not rightly named Jacob? for he hath supplanted me these two times. He took away my Birth-right, and behold, now he hath taken away my Blessing. But Jacob did not steal away his birthright; but only took the advantage to buy, what careless Esau was willing to sell. And having the Birthright, the Blessing did justly belong to him: for the birthright and the blessing were not to be separated. But this name was a prediction of that fell out afterwards, for Jacob indeed supplanted and overthrew his brother.

The Character gives him a Plain man, dwelling in tents. This is a manifest description of Jacob's

- Conversation.
- Profession.

For his Life, he was a Plain-dealing man; simple, and without fraud. Though some autithetically oppose it to Esau's roughness. That Esau was an hairy man, but Jacob was Plain & smooth; without any semblance to his brothers ruggednesse. We deny not, that Jacob was so: that exposition is true, but not enough. It falls short of that praise, which God's spirit here means him. He was a Plain man; without craft or subtlety.

For his delight and profession, He dwelt in tents. Which though the Hebrews expound of frequenting the tents of Sem and Heber for knowledge; is indeed only a description of such as live in the fields, and employ themselves about cattle: and this we frequently find to be Jacob's desire and practice. The good Patriarchs were plain men: plain in their clothes; no seas crossed for strange stuffs and fashions: plain in their houses, which were mere Tents; not gorgeous parlors without hospitality: plain in their diet, as Jacob here, that fed on Lentil-pottage.

But having thus proposed Jacob for a Precedent of Plain-dealing: it is primarily necessary to prove him clearly so. Otherwise the Original being faulty, there can hardly be taken a good copy out of it. There are exceptions made against Jacob's Plainness; and that in regard of his dealing, both with his

- Owne brother, Esau.
- Father in law, Laban.

I will briefly examine either; and how far he may be justified. In regard of Esau, it is objected, that he strove against him

- Before
- At
- After

his birth.

Before.

It is said, verse 22 The children struggled together within their mothers womb. Never brothers begun so early a liti•ation. These two were the Champions of two mighty Nations, successively to be derived from ‹◊› •omes: and they begin this opposition in a duel, or single combat: when the field was their mothers womb: the quarrel, precedency and chiefedome.

This was not a pleasant and merry contention; as some would read it. Ambrose, Jerome, Augustine so give it: exultare, gestire, ludere: to leap, skip, or play: but it was an earnest struggling, as we translate it; the word signifying to beat, hurt, or bruise one another.

It was not a natural strife, or ordinary motion. Aristole affirms, that male twins do strive in the right side upon the 40. day; and females in the left, on the 90. day. But by Aristotle's leave, what woman, except Rebekah, ever complained of so strange and early a contention! Nature was not here alone, if at least she was here at all.

Nor yet was this struggling voluntary and considerate. They did not strive scientia certandi, with a knowledge capable of what they did: or with any skill of wrestling. No, it was extraordinary, moved by a higher cause, not without the presage and signification of a great effect. It portended the future concertation of two great people: neither if it had been pleasant, natural, or usual, would Rebecca have been so strangely affected, or troubled with it; as to cry out Why •m I thus? or to solicit God by prayer, to kno• what it mea•t.

And is it any wonder, that Jacob and Esau wrestle in their mothers womb; when their seed, especially after a spiritual signification, must forever wrestle in the world? Shall the womb of the Church on earth be ever free from ca•nall professors mingled with holy? And is it possible these should live together in perfect peace, that are of so contrary natures? The wolf shall sooner dwell with the lamb, and the leopard play with the untroubled kid, and chil•ren sit vnstu•g at the holes of asps The sons of Behel will not 〈◇〉 sons of God live in quiet: that enmity, which was once put between the seed of the Woman, and of the Serpent, will not so easily be reconciled. Indeed the seed of Esau is the greater, but they serve the less. They are moe in number, stronger in power; et cannot extend it further then the permitting hand of heaven 〈◇〉 it. And even whiles they do persecute the righteous, Quibus nocere volunt, prosunt plurimum, sibi autem ipsi maxim nocent: they hurt only themselves, and benefit those to whom they intended nothing less. They are our Apothecaries, to minister us bitter pilles, but so, that they cannot put in one ingredient more then the Lord allows them.

Origen draws from this a mystical sense; and understands these two combatants to be within us. As if it had presignified what Pavl affirmeth, Galat. 5. The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other. Rebecca may well thus figure the state of a regenerate soul; wherein, till this mortal shall put on •••ortalitie, and glory swallow up corruption, there must be a perpetual co•flict. In men unconverted on earth, in Saints glorified in heaven, there is no such unquietness: the former being without a Jacob, the latter without an Esau: these having no flesh. the other nothing but flesh. But in men called and justified by the blood of Christ, yet in a m•litant estate, there is a necessity of this combat. No strife, no Christian. Before sanctification there is all peace in the soul. How should there choose, when there is no enemy to resist? The unregenerate heart ha•h only an Esau in it: what strife can there be without a Jacob? Nature can very easily agree with it self. Disturbance is a sign of sanctification: there is no grace, where there is all peace. No sooner is the new man formed in us, but suddenly begins this quarrel. The remaining corruption will fight with grace, and too often prevail against it. Indeed it hath lost the dominion, but not the opposition; the soueraignie, not the subtlety: it will dwell, though it cannot reign. Never any Rebecca was so happy, as to conceive none but a Jacob: Esau, the flesh will be there also, to give trial and exercise. If grace alone sate in the heart, the hopeless devil would forbear his temptations: he knows, he hath a friend in our house, that will be ready to let him in. So long as there is a Judas with Christ, he will not despair of betraying him. It is our corruption he works upon: if it were not for this Esau, he would not proffer assault. We see our combat; let us fight, and conquer. Our flesh is the elder brother; grace is borne after nature: but when this Jacob comes, he will get the superiority: the elder shall serve the younger. This strife begins betimes: there is no Israelite, but must be content to commence this war with his being. Regeneration and contention salute us at once: we cannot enter our names into Christ's muster-book, but we must fight. Let the secure worldling live at his cowardly ease, we must look for a skirmish. Herein stands our comfort, We shall be more then Conquerors, through him that loved us.

At his Birth.

THE strife is not ended at once; but continues, or rather is renewed at the birth. Afterward came his brother out, and his hand held Esau by the heel: Lest Esau should out-run his brother into the world, Jacob catcheth fast hold of his heel. So that though Esau's body have the primogeniture, yet Jacob's Hand was borne before his Heele. Razi hath a conceit, that though Esau was first borne, yet Jacob was first conceived: and therefore the Birthright did of right belong unto him. But it is without question, that Esau had the start of nature, though Jacob of grace: and therefore Jacob holds him by the heel, as if he would stay him from possessing that privilege, which Nature (God afterwards disposing otherwise) bestowed on him.

After the Birth.

AND herein there are two impeachments laid to Ia•cobs plain-dealing. He is accused with fraudulent stratagems concerning the - Birthright.

- Blessing.

For the Birthright.

ESau is by some few minutes the elder; and that was enough to give him just title to the Birthright. That Jacob therefore might have the better claim to it, he buys that which he could not win: and by an honest art redeemes the losses of nature. But this action smells of cunning, and seems to mar the credit of his Plain-dealing.

1. Jacob is accused for cruel and uncharitable dealing with his brother. Esau comes hungry from the field, he is ready to die for want of sustenance; he sees his brother (in no such exigent) with food in his hand; he breaks forth into an earnest complaint, entreating his commiseration: now, shall a brother deny relief to his brother being ready to die, except upon such intolerable conditions? Sure it could be no less then a hard measure, to take such advantage of a brothers necessity. But it is answered, that there could not be any such necessity of Esau's coveting Jacob's pottage; for there was (if not lentile pottage) store of as good meat in the house; able to have given satisfaction to his hunger, and ready enough at his request, being the elder son. It was not then distressed needinesse, but insatiate greediness, that wrought Esau's lust to Jacob's pottage. And it is not unfit, that the luxurious appetite should pay for his folly.

2. But Jacob cannot be excused of covetousness; that would set no lower a price on his pottage, then the Birthright. Which comprehended many privileges; priority, government of the brethren, a double portion to the rest, the Priesthood and right to sacrifice, and (what yet further commended it) a type and figure of everlasting life. And will Jacob require such a Birthright, including all these privileges for a mess of pottage? what tyrant could set such an Impost on a merchandise! what citizen such a price on his engrossed commodities? Here was an exaction beyond the taxing of Tiberius: an extortion more extreme then an Usurers. We answer, Not as the Hebrews conceit, that Jacob afterwards gave a greater sum, and paid this but as an earnest: the Scripture neither expressing directly, nor inferring by consequence any such matter▪ But we say, that Jacob, by the instruction of his mother, knew that the Birthright did justly belong to him, by the preordination of God: therefore now wisely taketh this opportunity to r• cover that to himself, whereof his brother was but an usurper: For though Esau could plead the right of Nature, Jacob could the right of grace; and he knew this would at last prevail. Neither yet must this particular fact of Jacob be drawn into a general imitation. His warrant was a divine revelation; the silence whereof in these days sends us for direction to the written Truth, To the Law, to the Testimony: let this resolve and instruct thee.

3. But this Birthright was a holy thing, and therefore the Apostle calls him a Profane person for selling it: Now there is no profaneness in selling a thing not sacred. But if sanctified things cannot be sold without sin, can they be bought without sin? Did not Jacob offend as much in the one, as Esau in the other? It is well answered, that Jacob intelligi potest suam redemisse vexationem: he did but buy his own vexation. He buys not simply a thing, whereunto he had no right; but only taketh this occasion to recover his own: whereof the appointment of God had made him a possible, yea certainly future proprietary. It was never held Simony, for a spiritual man to buy his own peace. Many things are detained from the clergy unjustly, which God's law hath made sacred and theirs: they may therefore without touch of Simoniackal dealing, redeem their own quietness, and purchase a peaceable possession. I say not, that any man may buy a spiritual endowment before he hath it; but when he hath it in right, he may purchase his own peaceful and quiet enjoying it. All that can be said, is this: Esau preferred his belly before his Birthright: Jacob his Birthright before his belly. The one sold spiritual things for temporal, the other with temporal things bought spiritual.

And who will not part with transient benefits for eternal blessings? If either by suite, or strife, or purchase we can attain Heaven, we are happy. For suite, there is no hour unseasonable, no prayer unwelcome, no importunity troublesome. The unjust Judge could give relief to the importunate widow: and shall not our just God give ear and ease to our incessant complaints? Spare to speak, and spare to speed: the timorous requester teacheth the invocated a denial. For strife; we know who taught us, that the Kingdom of Heaven suffers violence, and must be attained by a holy kind of force. Jacob must wrestle for the Blessing before he hath it: and so wrestling he shall have it, though he be sent halting to his grave. The Lord knows our strength, yet he loves our violence and importunity: and therefore hath so conditioned the gate of heaven, that without our Striuing, we must not look to enter it. For purchase, had a far higher rate been set on the Birthright, Jacob would not have grudged to give it. He hath too much of the blood of Esau in him, that will not forgo all the world, rather then the Birthright. The wise Merchant, when he knew the field wherein lay that hidden treasure, sold all he had to buy it. He is a besotted Cosmopolite, that refuseth to purchase such spiritual Friends by his riches, as may procure him a place in the celestial habitations. Grudge not him a portion of thy temporal wealth, that is able to minister everlasting comfort to thy conscience. Thou art no looser, if thou mayest exchange earth for heaven.

For the Blessing.

WHAT hath secure Esau lost, if having sold the Birthright, he may reserve the Blessing? Behold, of this he assureth himself: his Father hath sent him for venison, that his soul might bless him. To hunting he is gone in haste; meaning to recover that again by his own venison, which he had lost by his brothers pottage. Isaac being now blind in his eyes, but yet blinder in his affections; forgetting what decree and sentence God had formerly passed of his two sons for some temporal regard doth favor Esau, and intends to bequeath unto him, that spiritual and happy legacy of the Blessing. God had said, that the elder shall serve the younger; yet forgetful Isaac purposeth to bless his first borne Esau. How easy is it even for a Saint, to be transported with natural affections! he could not but remember, that himself (though the younger) was preferred to his elder brother Ishmael: he knew that God's command prevailed with his Father Abraham above nature, when he bound him for a sacrifice: he saw Esau lewdly matched with the daughters of Heathens: yet he will now think on nothing, but Esau is my first borne; and if it be possible, he will pour the benediction upon a wrong head.

But God is often better to us then we would; and with his preventing grace stops the precipitation of erring nature. So sweet is the ordination of the Divine providence, that we shall not do what we would, but what we ought; and by deceiving us, turns our purposed evil into eventual good. We are made to do that good, which we not intended. God hath ordained the superiority to the younger; he will therefore contrive for him the Blessing. Whatsoever Isaac affected, this God will have effected.

To bring the Lord's will to pass there never wanted means. Sinnefull man may have his hand in this: the just degree of God stands untouched. He determined the death of his Son, without favor to their guilt that murdered him. The affections of Parents are here divided: Isaac loves Esau, and Rebecca Jacob: this difference shall make way to the fulfilling of the Promise. Neither parent neglected either son: but Rebekah remembered the Lord's purpose better then Isaac. Neither is it enough what Ambrose heereon saith, Mater affectum, pater iudicium indicat: mater circa minorem tenera pictate propendit, pater circa seniore naturae honorificentiam seruat. The mother shows affection, the father judgment: she tenderly loves the younger, he gives the honor of nature to the elder. Nay rather, the mother shows judgment, and the father affection. For what was Jacob to Rebecca more then Esau? or why should she not rather love her first borne? It is God that inclines the mothers love to the younger against nature, because the father affects the elder against the promise. Hereupon she will rather deceive her own husband, then he shall deceive his own chosen son of the decreed blessing. The wife will be subtle, when the husband is partial: her honest fraud shall answer his forgetful indulgence. Isaac would turn Esau into Jacob: Rebecca doth turn Jacob into Esau.

The discourse or contemplation of the provident mother, and her happy sons passages in this action, I find set down by so divine and accurate a pen; that despairing of any tolerable imitation, I shall without distaste to the Reader, or imputation to myself, deliver it in his own express words. Rebecca presuming upon the Oracle of God, and her husbands simplicity, dares be Jacob's surety for the danger, his counselor for the carriage of the business, his cooke for the diet; yea dresses both the meat and the man. And now puts dishes into his hand, words into his mouth, the garments on his back, the goats hair upon the open parts of his body, and sends him in thus furnished for the blessing. Standing no doubt at the door, to see how well her lesson was learned, how well her device succeeded. And if old Isaac should by any of his senses have discerned the guile, she had soon stepped in, and undertaken the blame, and urged him with that known will of God, concerning Jacob's dominion, and Esau's servitude; which either age or affection had made him forget And now she wisheth, that she could borrow Esau's tongue as well as his garments, that she might securely deceive all the senses of him, which had suffered himself more dangerously deceived with his affection. But this is past her remedy: her son must name himself Esau with the voice of Jacob.

We see the proceeding: it is now examinable, whether this doth not somewhat impeach the credit of Jacob's Plain-Dealing. There have been vndertakers of Jacob's justification, or at least excusation in this fact. Let us hear what they say. 1. Gregory thus excuseth it: that Iahob did not steal the Blessing by fraud, but sibi debitam, accepit, took it as a due to himself, in respect that the primogeniture was formerly deuolued to him. The truth is, he that ought the Birthright, might justly challenge the Blessing: but this doth not wholly excuse the fact. 2. Chrysostom thus mitigates it; that non studio nocendi contexit fraudem, he did not deceive, with a mind to hurt; but only in respect of the promise of God. But this is not sufficient; for there was an intention of hurt, both to Isaac in deceiving him, and to Esau, in depriving him of the Blessing. But whatsoever may be pleaded for the defense of Jacob's dissimulation in outward gesture, there is no apology for the words of his tongue. The meaning of the speech is in the speaker; therefore his tongue cannot be guiltless, when it goes against his conscious heart: but the meaning of the gesture, is in the interpreter, who gives it a voluntary construction. Gesture is more easily ruled then speech: and it is hard, if the tongue will not blabbe what a man is, in spite of his habit. Isaac's eyes might be deceived, they were dim: his hands, by the roughness of the garments: his nostrills by the smell of them: his palate, by the savor of the meat. All these senses yield affiance, what then shall drive Isaac to a suspicion or incredulity? None but this, the ear sticks at the judgment; that says, the voice is the voice of Jacob. To help forward this deceit, three lies are tumbled out, one in the neck of another. 1. I am Esau thy first borne. 2. I have done as thou badest me. 3. eat of my venison. To clear him of this sin of lying, hath been more peremptorily undertaken, then soundly performed.

1. Chrysostom, with diverse others, think that though he did lie, he did not sin; because he did it by the revelation and counsel of God. So that God willing to have the prediction fulfilled, dispensing and disposing all things, is brought in as the preordainer of Jacob's lie, that I say not the Patron. But not without derogation to his divine Justice. For first, it appears not that this was the counsel of God, but only Rebecca's device, verse 8. Hear my voice my son, in that which I command thee. My voice, not God's; what I command, not what GOD approves. 2. If

Jacob had received any oraculous warrant for this project, he would not have had so doubtful an opinion of the success. The matter was forseene of God; not allowed: for God never inspireth lies. God's wise disposition of this means, affords no warrant of his approbation. He ordereth many things, which he ordained not. The means were so unlawful, that Jacob himself doth more distrust their success, then hope for their blessing. He knew that good Isaac being •o plain-hearted himself, would severely punish deceit in his son. Men in office truly honest, are the sorest enemies to fraudulent courses in others. He therefore carries his meat in trembling hands; and scarce dares hope, that God will bless such a subtlety with good event. Yet he did; but how! Here was prodigal dissembling; a dissembled person, a dissembled name, dissembled venison, dissembling answer; yet behold a true blessing; to the man, not to the means. Thus God may work his own will out of our infirmities; yet without approval of our weakness, or wronging the integrity of his own goodness.

2. Some have confessed it a lie, but a guiltless he; by reason of a necessity imagined in this exigent; as if GOD could not have wrought Isaac's heart to bless Jacob in this short interim, whiles Esau was gone a hunting for venison. Origen says, that Necessity may urge a man to use a lie, as sauce to his meat: Another; as Physicians use Hellebora. But that which is simply evil, can by no apology be made good. Causa patrocini non bona, peicr erit.

3. Some take from it all imputation of alie, and directly justify it. Augustine thinks Jacob spoke mystically, and that it is to be referred to Jacob's body, not to Jacob's person; to the Christian Church that should take away the Birthright from the elder. But we may better receive, that Jacob fell into an infirmity, then the color of an allegory. Neither doth the success justify the means. As some Philosophers have delivered, that Prosperum, scelus vocatur virtus; lucky wickedness merits the name of goodness. But Jacob's one act of falsehood, shall not disparage wholly that simplicity the Scripture gives him; He was a plain man. To be unjust condemns a man, not the doing of one singular act unjustly: therefore God casts not off Jacob for this one infirmity: but makes use of this infirmity to serve his own purpose. If Esau's and Jacob's works be weighed together in a balance; one would think the more solid virtue to be in Esau's.

Esau obeyeth his fathers will, painfully hunts venison, carefully prepares it: here is nothing but praiseworthy. Jacob dissembles, offers kids flesh for venison, counterfeits Esau, beguiles his father: here is all blameworthy. I will not heereon speak as a Poet:

Committunt eadem diuerso crimina fato,

Ille crucem sceleris pretium tu•it, hic diadem.

But infer with the Apostle. The purpose of God shall remain by election; which standeth not in works, but in grace. Therefore, howsoever Jacob got the Blessing against Isaac's will; yet once given, it stood: neither did the father recant this act as an error, but saw in it the mercy of God, that prevented him of an error: so verse 33. I have blessed him, therefore he shall be blessed. When afterwards Esau came in, Isaac trembled: his heart told him, that he should not have intended the Blessing where he did; and that it was due to him, unto whom it was given, not intended. He saw now that he had performed unwilling justice; and executed God's purpose against his own. He rather cries mercy for wrong intending, then thinks of reuersing it.

Yet then may Jacob stand for our precedent of Plain-Dealing; notwithstanding this particular weakness. Who hath not oftener erred without the loss of his honest reputation? Not that his fact should embolden an imitation: let us not tell Jacob's lie, to get Jacob's blessing. It would be presumption in us, what was in him infirmity: and God that pardoned his weakness, would curse our obstinatenesse. There is yet one cavil more against Jacob's integrity concerning

Laban,

About the parti-coloured sheep; whether it were a fault in Jacob, by the device of the pilled and straked rods to enrich himself. The answer is threefold.

1. This was by the direction of God, Genesis 31. 11. who being an infinite and illimited Lord, hath an absolute power to transfer the right of things from one to another: as he might justly give the Land of Canaan to the Israelites, from the usurping Canaanites.
2. Jacob apprehends this means to recover his own; due unto him by a double right: first, as the wages of twenty years service, Genesis 31. 7. yet vnpayd. Secondly, as the dowry for his wives; whom miserable Laban had thrust upon him without any competent portion. Thirdly, especially God's warrant concurring; it was lawful for him to recover that by policy, which was detained from him by injury. So did the Israelites borrow of the Egyptians, their best goods, iewells, and ornaments; and bore them away as a just recompense of their long service.
3. Lastly, he is quitted by that saying, Volenti non fit iniuria. Laban sees that he was well blessed by Jacob's service: the increasing his flocks makes him loath to part. But Jacob hath served long enough for a dead pay; somewhat he must have, or be gone. His hard vnckle bids him ask a hire: you know Jacob's demand: Laban readily promoues this bargain; which at last made his son in law rich, and himself envious. So saith Calvin, Tractatus est prosuo ingenio; Laban is handled in his kind. He thought by this means, to have multiplied his own flocks: but those few spotted sheep and goats, upon this covenant, as if they had been weary of their old owner, alter their fashion, and run their best young into party-colors; changing at once their color, and their master. So that this means, which Jacob used, was not fraudulent or artificial, but natural; not depending upon man's wit, but God's blessing: who considering his tedious and painful service, pays him good wages out of his vnckles folds. For fourteen years the Lord hath for Jacob enriched Laban: therefore for these last six he will out of Laban enrich Jacob. And if the vnckles flock be the greater, the nephews shall be the better. Most justly then is Jacob cleared from injustice; and no aspersion of fraud with Laban can be cast to discredit his Plain-Dealing.

He dwelt in Tents.

Two things are observable in the holy Partriarchs, and commendable to all that will be heirs with them of eternal life.

1. Their contempt of the world. They that dwell in Tents, intend not a long dwelling in a place. They are mouables, ever ready to be transferred at the occasion and will of the Inhabiter, Hebr. 11. Abraham dwelt intents with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same Promise. The reason is added. For he looked for a City which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is GOD. These Saints studied not to enlarge their barns, as the rich Cosmopolite, Luke 12. or to sing Requiems to their souls, in the hoped perpetuity of earthly habitations. Soul live; thou hast enough laid up for many years: Fool! he had not enough for that night. They had no thought, that their houses should continue forever, and their dwelling places to all generations; thereupon calling their lands after their own names. God convinceth the foolish security of the Jews, to whom he had promised (by the Messias to be purchased) an everlasting royalty in heaven; by the Rechabites; who built no houses, but dwelt in Tents; as if they were strangers, ready on a short warning for removal. The Church esteems Heaven her home, this world but a Tent. A Tent, which we must all leave, build we as high as Babel, as strong as Babylon. When we have fortified, combined, feasted, death comes with a Voyder, and takes away all, Dost thou think to reign securely because thou closest thyself in Cedar? Friends must part, Jonah and his gourd, Nebuchadnezzar and his palace, the covetous churl and his barns. Arise, and depart, for this is not your rest. Though you depart with grief, from Orchards full of fruits, grounds full stocked, houses dightly furnished, purses richly stuffed; from music, wine, junkets, sports: yet go; you must go, every man to his own home. He that hath seen heaven, with the eye of Fath, through the glass of the Scripture, slips off his coat with Joseph, and springs away. They that lived thrice our age, yet dwelt in Tents; as Pilgrims that did not own this world. The shortness and weakness of our days, strengthens our reasons to vilipend it. The world is the field, thy body the Tent, heaven thy free-hold. The world is full of troubles; winds of persecutions, storms of menaces, cold of uncharitableness, heat of malice, exhalations of prodigious terrors, will annoy thee. Love it not: Who can affect his own vexations? It is thy through-fare; God loves thee better, then to let it be thy home. Every misery on earth should turn our loves to heaven. God gives this world bitter teats, that we might not suck too long on it. Satan, as some do with rotten nutmegs, guildes it over, and sends it his friends for a token. But when they put that spice into their broth, it infects their hearts. Set thy affections on heaven, where thou shalt abide forever. This life is a Tent, that a Mansion. In my Fathers house there are many mansions. This casual, that firm: a kingdom that cannot be shaken. This troublesome, that full of rest. This assuredly short, that eternal. Happy is he that here esteems himself a Pilgrim in a Tent, that he may be hereafter a citizen in a stable kingdom.

2. Their frugallitie should not pass unregarded. Here is no ambition of great buildings; a Tent will serve. How differ our days and hearts from those! The fashion is now, to build great houses to our lands, till we leave no lands to our houses: and the credit of a good house, is made, not to consist in inward hospitality, but in outward walls. These punkish out-sides beguile the needy Traveler: he thinks, there cannot be so many rooms in a house, and never a one to harbor a poor stranger: or that from such a multitude of chimneis, no meat should be sent to the gates. Such a house is like a painted whore: it hath a fair cheek, but rotten lungs; no breath of charity comes out of it. We say, frustra fit per plura, quod fieri potest per pauciora. What needs a house more rooms, then there is use for? A less house, and more hospitableness would do a great deal better. Are not many of these glorious buildings set up in the curse of Jericho: the foundation laid in the blood of the eldest, the poor: the walls reared in the blood of the yoongest, the ruin of their own posterity? This was one of the Travelers observed faults in England; camini mali; that we had ill clockes, and worse chimneis; for they smoaked no charity.

We see the Precedent: the application must teach us to Deale plainly. Here is commended to us Plainness in

- Meaning
- Demeaning.

Which instructs us to a double concord and agreement: In Meaning betwixt the heart and the tongue. In Demeaning betwixt the tongue and the hand.

In Meaning.

There should be a loving and friendly agreement between the heart and the tongue. This is the minds herald, and should only proclaim the senders message. If the tongue be an ill servant to the heart, the heart will be an ill master to the tongue; and Satan to both. There are three kinds of dissimulation held tolerable, if not commendable: and beyond them, none without sin.

1. When a man dissembles to get himself out of danger, without any prejudice to another. So David feigned himself mad, to escape with life. So the good Physician may deceive his patient, by stealing upon him a potion which he abhorreth, intending his recovery.
2. When dissimulation is directly aimed to the instruction and benefit of another. So Joseph caused the money to be put in his brethren's sacks, thereby to work in them a knowledge of themselves. So Christ going to Emaus with the two Disciples, made as if he would go further; to try their humanity.
3. When some common service is thereby performed to the good of the Church. Such are those stratagems and policies of war, that carry in them a direct intention of honesty and justice, though of hostility; as Joshua's, whereby he discomfited the men of Ai.

Further then these limits no true Israelite, no Plain-Dealing man must venture. Plato was of opinion, that it was lawful for Magistrates, Hosium vel Ciuium causa mentiri; to lie, either to deceive an enemy, or save a citisen, I might against Plato set Aristotle; who saith expressly, that a lie in it self, is evil and wicked. And another Philosopher was wont to say, That in two things a man was like unto God; in bestowing benefits, and telling the truth. Nor will we infer with Lyranus, because there is a Title in the Civil Law, De dolo malo, of evil craft, that therefore it is granted, there is a craft not evil. But let us know, to the terror of liars, that the devil is the father of lying; and when he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own. And beyond exception, they are the words of everlasting verity; No lie is of the truth. Therefore into that heavenly Jerusalem shall enter none, that works abomination, or maketh a lie. A lie must needs be contrary to the rule of grace, for it is contrary to the order of nature: which hath given a man voice and words to express the meaning of the heart. As in setting Instruments, they refer all to one tune: so the heart is the ground, which all our Instruments should go by. If there were no God to search the heart, he was a fool that would not dissemble: since there is, he is a fool that doth. Therefore Job excellently, All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrills: my lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit. The sweetest Psalmist insinuates no less. My heart is inditing a good matter, my tongue is the pen of a ready writer. When the heart is a good Secretary, the tongue is a good pen: but when the heart is a hollow bell, the tongue is a loud and a lewd clapper. Those undefiled Virgins, admitted to follow the Lamb, have this praise. In their mouth was found no guile.

In Demeaning,

WHich is the good harmony betwixt the tongue and the hand. The righteous man, to whom God's celestial Tabernacle is promised, speaketh the truth in his heart: and when he hath sworn, though to his own hurt, he changeth not. The paucity of these men makes the Church of God so thin of Saints, and the world so full of Dissemblers. As the tongue must not speak false, so the hand must not do unjustly: injustice is the greatest dissimulation. We live under Libra, Justice and Equity: who knows whether the nights or the days pass over his head more happily: we fear not Taurus the Bull, that shoots his horns from Rome: nor Scorpio, that sends his venomous sting from Spain: nor the vnchristned Aries of Infidels, profane and professed enemies to engine and batter our walls: if the Sagittarius of heresy do not wound us in the reins: nor the Gemini of double-dealing circumvent us in our lives. The world is full of tricks: we will not do what we ought, yet defend what we do. How many spend their wits to justify their hands? Through the vnluckie and unnatural copulation of fraud and malice, was that monstrous stigmatic Aequiuocation engendered: a damned egg, not covered by any fair bird; but hatched, as Poets fain, of Ospraves, with a thunder-clap.

I will now only seek to win you to Plain-Dealing, by the benefits it brings: the success to God.

1. The principal is to please God; whose displeasure against double dealing, the sad examples of Saul for the Amalekites, of Gehazi for the bribes, of Ananias for the inheritance, testify in their destruction. Whose delight in Plain-dealing himself affirms. Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile.

2. The credit of a good name, which is a most worthy treasure, is thus preserved. The riches left thee by thy Ancestors may miscarry through others negligence; the name not, save by thy own fault. It is the Plain-dealers reward; his name shall be had in estimation: whereas no faith is given to the dissembler; even speaking truth: every man is more ready to trust the poor Plain-dealer, then the glittering false-tongued gallant.

3. It prevents and infatuates all the malicious plotts of enemies. God, in regard to thy simplicity, brings to naught all their machinations. Thou, O Lord, hadst respect to my simple pureness. An innocent fool takes fearless steps; and walks as securely, as if it stood girt with a wall of brass.

4. It preserves thy state from ruin. When by subtlety men think to scrape together much wealth; all is but the Spiders web, artificial and weak. What Plain-dealing gets, sticks by us; and infallibly derives it self to our posterity. Not only this man's own soul shall dwell at ease: but also his seed shall inherit the earth. Wicked men labor with hands and wits, to undermine and undo many poor; and from their demolished heaps to erect themselves a great fortune: but GOD bloweth upon it a Nonplacet: and then, as powder doth small shot, it scatters into the air, not without a great noise; and they are blown up. If thou wouldst be good to thyself and thine, use Plainness.

5. It shall somewhat keep thee from the troubles and vexations of the world. Others, when their double dealing breaks out, are more troubled themselves, then erst they troubled others: for shame waits at the heels of fraud. But blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

6. The curses of the poor shall never hurt thee. Though the causeless curse shall never come; yet it is happy for a man so to live, that all may bless him. Now the Plain man shall have this at last. Gallant prodigality, like fire in flax, makes a great blaze, a hot show: but Plain hospitality, like fire in solid wood, holds out to warm the poor: because God blesseth it. So I have seen hot-spurs in the way gallop amaine; but the Iuy-bushes have so stayed them, that the Plain traveler comes first to his journeys end.

7. It shall be thy best comfort on thy death-bed; Conscientia been peractae vitae, the conscience of an innocent life. On this staff leans aged Samuel: Whose Ox er Ass have I taken? To whom have I by fraud or force done wrong? On this pillow doth sick Hezekiah lay his head. Remember Lord, that I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. So Job solaceth himself. My heart shall not condemn me for my days. When no clogges of usury with their heavy pressures, nor folds of injustice with their troublesome vexations, disquiet our peace-desiring sides, or lie upon our consciences. When thou hast no need to say to thine heir, Restore this or that which I have fraudulently or unjustly taken away. You see how false the Proverb was; Plain-dealing is a Jewel; and he that useth it shall die a beggar: But it is well returned in the supplement; he that will not use it, shall die a dishonest man.

8. Lastly, thou shalt finderest for thy soul. Thou hast dealt plainly, so will God with thee; multiplying upon thee his promised mercies. If thou hadst been hollow, not holy; fraudulent, not plain; thy portion had been bitter; even with hypocrites. But now of a plain Saint on earth, thou shalt become a glorious Saint in heaven.

THE THREE DIVINE SISTERS.

JOHN. 13. 34.

A new commandment give I unto you, That you love one another: as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

THE THREE DIVINE SISTERS.

1. COR. 13. 13.

Now abideth Faith, Hope, Charity, these three: but the greatest of these, is Charity.

WHen those three Goddesses, say the Poets, strove for the golden ball, Paris adjudged it to the Queen of Love. Here are three celestial graces, in an holy emulation, if I may so speak, striving for the chiefedome; and our Apostle gives it to Love. The greatest of these is Charity.

Not that other Daughters are black, but that Charity excels in beauty. We may say of this Sister, as it was said of the good Woman, Prov. 31. Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou surpassest them all. Paul doth not disparage any, when he saith, Charity is the greatest. All stars are bright, though one star may differ from another in glory. We may say of graces, as of the Captains of the sons of Gad; the least can resist a hundred, the greatest a thousand. Or as the song was of Saul and David. Saul hath slain his thousand, David his ten thousand. Faith is excellent, so is Hope; but the greatest of these, is Charity.

Mee thinks these three Theologall Virtues may not unfitly be compared to three great Feasts, which we celebrate in the year; Easter, Whitsuntide, and Christmas. Faith, like Easter, believes Christ dead for our sins, and risen again for our Justification. Hope, like Pentecost, waits for the coming of the holy Ghost, God's free Spirit of grace to come into us, and to bring us to Heaven. And Charity looks like Christmas, full of love to our neighbors, full of hospitality, and mercy to the poor.

These are three strings often touched; Faith, whereby we believe all God's promises to be true, and ours: Hope, whereby we wait for them with patience: Charity, whereby we testify, what we believe and hope. He that hath faith cannot distrust: he that hath hope, cannot be put from anchor: he that hath charity, will not lead a licentious life; for, Love keeps the commandments.

For Methods sake, we might first confer them all, then prefer one. But I will speak of them according to the three degrees of comparison. 1. Positively. 2. Comparatiuely. 3. Superlatiuely. The greatest of these is Charity.

Faith

IS that grace, which makes Christ ours, and all his benefits. God gives it. 1. Cor. 12. Faith is given by the spirit. By the Word preached. Rom. 10. Faith comes by hearing. For Christ his sake. To you it is given for Christ his sake, to believe in his name. This virtue is no sooner given of God, but it gives God. So soon as thou believest, Christ is thine and all his. For he that gives us Christ, will also with him give us all things.

Without this, it is impossible to please God: Let us not otherwise dare to come into his presence. There is nothing but wrath in him, for sin in us. Joseph charged his brethren, that they should come no more in his sight, unless they brought Beniami with them. We come at our peril into God's presence, if we leave his beloved Benjamin, our dear Jesus behind us. When the Philosopher heard of the enraged Emperors menace, that the next time he saw him he would kill him; he took up the Emperors little son in his arms, and saluted him with a potes ne? Thou canst not now strike me. God is angry with every man for his sins; happy is he that can catch up his son Jesus: for in whose arms soever the Lord sees his son, he will spare him. The men of Tyre are fain to intercede to Herod by Blastus. Act. 12. Our intercession to God is made by a higher and surer way; not by his servant, but by his son.

Now this Mediator is not had without a medium, Faith. Fides medium, à quo remedium. Faith is that means, whereby we lay hold on this Christ. Diffidence shall never have Jesus for the Advocate. Though every man may say; I believe, Lord help my unbelief.

Saint Paul useth one word, that very significantly expresseth Faith; calling it the Evidence of things not seen. Fides est credere quod non vides; cuius merces est videre quod credis, Faith is to believe what thou seest; whose reward is to see what thou believest. Now the Metaphor may be extended thus.

1. Christ dying, made a Will or a Testament, scaling it with his own blood, wherein he bequeathed a certain Legacy of Inheritance to his brethren with himself. John. 17. Father, I will that they whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me. This is the substance of his Will and Testament.

2 The Conveyance of this Will is the Gospel, Whosoever believes, and is baptized, shall be saved. A large Patent, a free and full grant. There is no exception of persons; either in regard of state, quality, or Country. There is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. The conveyance is of an ample latitude.

3. The Executor or Administrator of this Will, if I may so speak, is the holy Ghost: that Comforter which Christ promised to send, that should lead us into all truth. This Spirit begets faith & sanctification in our hearts, puts Abba into our mouths, applies the merits of our Savior to our souls; and indeed seals us up to the day of redemption. Without his assistance we could appropriate no comfort by his Will; nor challenge any Legacy therein bequeathed.

4. Lastly, the Evidence, whereby every particular man apports to himself this title and interest, is his Faith. Thou unregenerate soul pleadest a Legacy in this Will: Go to, let us join issue, & come to trial. Where is thy Evidence? Here it is, my Faith. This Evidence, as all other, must have some witnesses: produce thine; and before the Barre of the great Chief Justice, the Kings Bench of Heaven, let them not lie.

The first is thy Conscience. Alas! give this leave to speak without interruption (and one day it shall not flatter thee.) This saith thy Evidence, is false & counterfeit; forged by a wretched Seriuener, flesh and blood: for thy heart trusts in vncertainly good riches, or in certainly bad vanities, more then in the living God.

The next, is thy life. Alas! this is so speckled with sins, so raw and sore with lusts: that as a body broken out into blaines and biles, argues a corrupted liver or stomach within: so the spots and ulcers of thy life demonstrate a putrefied heart. Loe now thy witnesses. Thou art gone at the common Law of Justice: It is only the Chancery of mercy that must clear thee. What wilt thou now do? What, but humble thyself in repentance for thy false faith; take prayer in thy company, for pardon of former errors; go by the word preached; for the Minister is, as it were, the Register, to engross the deed; and desire God on the humbled knees of thy soul, to give thee a new and a true Evidence. Let this instruct us to some uses.

1. Be sure that thy Evidence is good. Satan is a subtle Lawyer, (and thou doest not doubt of his malice) and will soon pick holes in it; find out tricks and cavils against it. He will winnow and sift thee, grain after grain: take heed, lest thou run not all to chaff. There is a Faith of Saints. Gal. 2. Now live not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life that I live, I live by the Faith of the Son of God. And there is a faith of Devils. I am. 2. Thou believest, thou doest well: the Devils believe and tremble. There is a faith, which cannot perish. John. 3. Whosoever believeth in him, shall not perish. And there is a faith, that in the time of temptation falls away. Luk. 8. The rocky ground receives the Word, and for a while believeth, but in the time of temptation fall away. There is a faith which the world overcometh; such was the faith of Demas. And there is a faith that overcometh the world. 1. John. 5. This is the victory whereby we overcome the world, even our faith. There is a dead, idle, and infructuous faith, I am. 2. 14. And there is a lively, active, working faith. Gal. 5. Faith worketh by love. Bee sure then, that thy faith will endure the toucheuen the fiery trial.

2 Do not loose such a Legacy, as Christ hath bequeathed, for want of faith. Glorious is the inheritance, but where is thy Evidence? Flatter not thy soul with hope of this possession, without the assurance of faith. Christ gives his life for his sheep: What is this to thee that art a Wolf, a Swine, a Goat? God dresseth his Vineyard, pruneth it, watereth it, is provident over it: What's this to thee, that art a thorn, and no branch of the Vine? Look thou to be weeded up, and thrown out. The blood of Christ runs fresh: but where is thy pipe of faith, to derive it from his side to thy conscience? Say, it should shower mercy, yet if thou wantest faith, all would fall besides thee. There would be no more favor for thee, then if there was no Savior.

Let then no miseries of earth, much less pleasures, quench thy faith. Satan seeing this spark of fire kindled in thy heart, would blow it out with storms, or work thee to smother it thyself with vanities, or to rake it up in the dead embers of cold security: but believe against sight and sense. As David prophesied, that he should be a King. Eo plus habet fides meriti, quo minus argumenti. Faith shall have so much the more recompense, as it had the less argument to induce it.

Hope.

IS the sweetest friend, that ever kept a distressed soul company: it beguiles all the tediousness of the way, all the miseries of our Pilgrimage.

I am mala finissem letho; sed eredula vitam

Spes fouet, & melius cras foresemper ait.

Therefore dum spiro spero, says the Heathen: but dum, expiro spero, says the Christian. The one, whilst I live, I hope; the other, when I die, I hope: so Job, I will hope in thee, though thou killest mee. It tells the soul such sweet stories of the succeeding joys; what comforts there be in heaven; what peace, what joy, what triumphes, marriage-songs, and Hallelujahs, there are in that Country, whether she is traveling; that she goes merrily away with her present burden.

It holds the head whilst it takes, and gives invisible drink to the thirsty conscience. It is a liberty to them that are in prison, and the sweetest Physic to the sick. Saint Paul calls it an Anchor. Let the winds blow, and the storms beat, and the waves swell, yet the Anchor stays the ship. It breaks through all difficulties, and makes way for the soul to follow it. It teacheth Abraham to expect fruit from a withered stock; and Joseph in a dungeon, to look for the Sun and Stars obeisance. It counsels a man, as Esdras did the woman; that having lost her son, would needs die languishing in the disconsolate fields. Go thy way into the City to thine husband. Mourne not wretch for the loss of some worldly and perishing delight: sit not down and die, though the fruit of thy womb be swallowed into the earth. But go home to the city, the City of mercy; to thine husband, even thy husband Jesus Christ; let him comfort thee: This is the voice of hope.

Though misery be present, comfort absent, though through the dim and waterish humor of thy heart, thou canst spy no deliverance; yet such is the nature of Hope, that futura facta dicit: It speaks of future things, as if they were present. Rom. 8. We are saved by hope. Yet sic liberati, vt adhuc speranda sit haereditas, postea possidenda. Nunc habemus ius adrem, nondum inre. We have our inheritance, in hope; which gives us the right of the substance, though not the substance of the right: assurance of the possession, though not possession of the thing assured. This tells us, that Nemo valde dolebit & diu, no man should grieve much and long. God making our misery, aut tolerabilem, aut breuem, either sufferable or short.

These are the comforts of Hope. Now, that you may not be deceived, there is (as I said before of Faith) a thing like Hope, which is not it.

There is a bold and presumptuous Hope, an ignorant security, and ungrounded persuasion, the very illusion of the Devil; who, when he cannot prevail with down-right evil, cozens with the shadows of goodness: that how wickedly and wretchedly soever a man shall live, though he suck the poisonous dugs of lust, though he surres himself warm with poor men's hearts, though he forbids his brains (as on covenant) one sober hour in the yeaee to think of heaven, though he thirst for carouses of blood, though he strives to powder a whole Kingdom with the cornes of death and massacre, though he carries half a dozen impropriate Churches on his sacrilegious back, though he out-thunder heaven with blasphemies, though he trample under his profane foot the precious blood of God's son; yet still he hopes to be saved by the mercy of God. But we will sooner cast pearls to swine, and bread to dogs, then the comforts of Zion to such. We say not, Rejoice & tremble, but tremble without rejoicing. We sing not to them, with the Lord is mercy, that he might be feared: but with the Lord is judgment and vengeance, with him is plague and pestilence, storm and tempest, horror and anguish, indignation and wrath, that he may be feared. Against this Hope, we shut up the bosom of consolation, and the promise of safety by the merits of Christ; and so far as we are charged, the very gates of everlasting life.

There is an Hope, sober, faithful, well grounded, well guarded, well assured. This is like a house built on a rock. The rock, is God's promised mercy; the building, Hope in Christ: it is (as it were) moted or intrenched about with his blood, bulwarked and rampirde with the Sacraments, assured by the sweet testimony of God's Spirit to the Conscience: known by the Charity of the Inhabitants; for it keeps bread for the hungry, clothes for the naked, entertainment for strangers. To this Hope we open the doors of the kingdom of Heaven; and so far as the Commission of the Keys leades us, we unlock the gates of eternal life, and allow entrance. We call this the Blessed Hope.

Charity

IS an excellent virtue, and therefore rare: if ever in this contentious age; wherein Fratrum quo{que} gratia rara est: the unfeigned love of brothers is strange. Woe is me; before I am come to define what love is, I am fallen into a declamation against the want of it: what is here chiefly commended, is chiefly contemned: as if we had no need of mutual succor; nor could spare a room in our hearts to entertain Charity, lest we should expel our old loved guests, fraud, malice, and ambition. Love hath two proper objects, the one immediate and principal; the other, mediate and limited.

The proper and immediate object of our Love, is God. This is the great Commandment, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy strength. As if he would not leave out the least sinew or string of the heart, the least faculty or power of the soul, the least organ or action of the strength. So Bern. With all the heart, that is, affectionately. With all the Soul, that is, wisely. With all the strength, that is, constantly. Let the zeal of thy heart inflame thy love to God, let the wisdom of thy soul guide it, let the strength of thy might confirm it. All the affection of the heart, all the election of the soul, all the administration of the body. The Soul judgeth, the Will prosecutes, the strength executes. God can brook no riualles: no division betwixt him and Mammon, betwixt him and Melchom, betwixt him and Baal, betwixt him and Belial. Causa dilige-di Deum Deus est, modus sine modo. The cause and motive to love God, is God: the manner, is without measure. Minus amatte, qui aliquid amat praeterte, quod non amat propter te, He poorly loves God, that loves anything besides him, which he doth not love for him.

The subordinate object of love, is man: and his love, is the effect of the former cause; and an actual demonstration of the other inward affection. Waters coming from the sea, boil through the veins of the earth, till they become springs, and those springs rivers, and those rivers run back to the sea again. All man's love must be carried in the stream of God's love. Blessed is he that loves Amicum in Domino, inimicum pro Domino; his friend in the Lord, his enemy for the Lord. Rom. 13. Owe nothing to any man, but this, that ye love one another. Other debts, once truly paid, are no more due: but this debt, the more we pay it, the more we owe it; and we still do acknowledge our selves debtors to all, when we are clear with all; proverbially: I owe him nothing but love. The communication of this riches doth not impoverish the proprietary: the more he spends of his stock, the more he hath. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth. But he that will hoard the treasure of his Charity, shall grow poor, empty, and bankerout. There is that withholdeth more then is meet, but it tendeth unto poverty. Love is the abridgement of the Law, the new precept of the Gospel. Luther calls it the shortest, and the longest Divinity: short for the form of words; long, yea, everlasting for the use and practice; for Charity shall never cease.

Thus for the first degree of compariion, Positively. The second is Comparatiue; where, though it be said, Virtues and great men must not be compared, yet we may without offense, bring them to a holy conference; else how shall we perceive the Apostles intended scope, the transcendency of Charity? I will therefore first confer Faith with Hope; and then with them both Charity.

The distinction between Faith and Hope, is nice, and must warily be discovered. I will reduce the differences into three respects, of Order, Office, and Object.

For Order, Paul gives Faith the precedency. Hebr. 11. Faith is the ground of things hoped for. Faith always goes before, Hope follows after; and may in some sort be said to be the daughter of Faith. For, it is as impossible for a man to Hope for that which he believes not, as for a Painter to draw a picture in the air. Indeed, more is believed then is hoped for; but nothing is hoped for, which is not believed. So that on necessity, in respect of order, Faith must precede Hope.

For Office; Faith is the Christians Logic, Hope his Rhetoric. Faith perceives what is to be done, Hope gives alacrity to the doing it. Faith guides, adviseth, rectifieth; Hope courageously encounters with all adversaries. Therefore Faith is compared to a Doctor in the Schools, Hope to a Captain in the wars. Faith discerns the truth, Hope fights against impatience, heaviness of Spirit, infirmity, dejectednesse, desperation. Divines have alluded the difference between Faith and Hope in Divinity, to that between wisdom and valor in Philosophy. Valour without wisdom, is rashness: wisdom without valor, is cowardice. Faith without Hope, is knowledge without valor to resist Satan: Hope without Faith, is rash presumption, and an indiscreet daring. You see their different Office.

For Object; Faithes object is the absolute word, and infallible promise of God; Hopes object, is the thing promised. Fides intuetur verbum rei, Spes vero rem verbi: Faith looks to the word of the thing, Hope to the thing of the word. So that Faith hath for the object, the Truth of God, Hope the Goodn'sse of God. Faith is of things both good and bad, Hope of good things only. A man believes there is a hell, as truly as he believes there is a heaven; but he fears the one, and hopes only for the other. Faith hath objected to it things past, present, future. Past, it believes Christ dead for our sins, and risen again for our Justification. Present, that he now sits at the right hand of his Father in heaven. Future, that he shall come to judge quick and dead. Hope, only respects and expects things to come. For a man cannot hope for that which he hath. You see how in some sense, Hope excels Faith. For, there is a faith in the Devils; they believe the truth of God, the certainty of the Scriptures, they acknowledge Christ the Judge of quick and dead, therefore cry, Why tormentest thou us before the time? They have faith joined with a Popish preparatory good work, Fear; the Devils believe and tremble: yea, they pray: they beseech Christ not to send them into the deeps; what then want they? Hope, a confident expectation of the mercy of God: this they can never have. They believe, they cannot hope. This is the life of Christians, and the want makes Devils. If it were not for this hope, we of all men were most miserable.

Charity, differs from them both. These three divine graces, are a created Trinity; and have some glimmering resemblance of the Trinity vncreate. For, as there, the Son is begotten of the Father, and the holy Ghost proceeds from them both: so here, a true faith begets a constant hope, and from them proceeds Charity. Thus is God's Temple built in our hearts, saith August. The foundation whereof is Faith, Hope the erection of the walls, Charity the perfection of the roof.

In the godly all these three are united together, & cannot be sundered. We believe in God's mercy, we hope for his mercy, and we love him for his mercy. Faith says, there are good things prepared: Hope says, they are prepared for me: Charity says, I endeavor to walk worthy of them. So that, what good Faith believes, shall be, Hope expects for her self, and Charity aims at the way to get it, by keeping the commandments. Faith apprehends both reward and punishment: Hope only looks for good things for our selves: Charity desires the glory of God, and the good of all our Brethren.

The second degree, gives way to the third, last, best; the Superlatiue. But the greatest of these is Charity. Time will not afford me to answer all the objections, which subtle wits have inconsequently deduced from these words. Neither were it to other purpose, then to write Iliades after Homer: they have been so soundly and satisfyingly answered already. I will only mention two, and but report a responsiue Solution.

1 The principal promises are made to believers. Whosoever believes, and is baptized, shall be saved. So no less a promise is made to Lovers, Rom. 8. All things shall work together to the best, to those that love God, &c. God, saith the Psalmist, is near to those that call upon him. He is close by all those that suffer for him: but he is within those that love him. Here is Prope, •uxta, Intus. This same Intra, within is of the highest degree. 1. John. 4. God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. O unspeakable felicity!

2 If Charity be greater then faith, then is not man justified by faith only. Inconsequent illation. Saint Paul commends not love for the virtue of Justification: it may fail in that particular action, yet receive no impeachment to the excellency of it. By demonstration. A Prince doth excel a peasant: shall any man therefore infer, that he can plow better, or have more skill in tillage. A Philosopher doth excel a Mechanicke; though he cannot grind so well as a Miller, or lim so cunningly as a Painter. A man is better then a beast: who but a mad-man will therefore conclude, that he can run faster then a horse, draw more then an ox, or carry a greater burden then an Elephant. Though he fail in these particular arts, yet none will deny, but he is better then a beast.

The truth is, that in Faith stands originally our fellowship with God. Into that hand he poureth the riches of his mercy for salvation: and were the actions of Charity never so great, and (foolishly thought) meritorious; yet, if not the effects of a true saving Faith, they are lost, and a man may for his Charity go to the Devil. And though they would plead from the form of the last judgment, Math. 25. that God accepts men to life for their deeds of Charity: feeding, clothing, relieving. Yet the Scripture fully testifies, that God neither accepts these, nor our selves for these, further then they are the effects of a true faith. Our persons being first justified by faith in Christ, then God will crown our works. Yet a Christian must work: for no nudifidian, so well as no nullifidian, shall be admitted into heaven. Therefore saith the Apostle, Faith worketh by love. For Faith is able to justify of it self, not to vorke of it self. The hand alone can receive an Alms: but cannot cut a piece of wood without an axe or some instrument. Faith is the Christians hand, and can without help receive God's given grace into the heart: but to produce the fruits of obedience, and to vorke the actual duties required, it must have an instrument; add Love to it, and it worketh by love. So that the one is our Justification before God, and the other our Testification before men. Wherein then consists this high transcendency of Charity? In two privileges, incommunicable to Faith and Hope; Latitude and Perpetuity.

1. For Latitude, Love is the greatest. Faith and Hope are restrained within the limits of our particular persons. The just man lives by his own faith: and hopes good to himself; but Love is like the Vine, which God brought out of Egypt, and cast out the heathen to plant it, which covereth the mountains with the shadow of the boughs, & spreads the branches unto the sea and the rivers: It is like the Sun in the sky, that throws his comfortable beams upon all; and forbears not to warm even that earth that beareth weeds. Love extends to earth & heaven. In heaven it affecteth God the Maker and mover: the Angels, as our Guardians; the triumphant Saints, for their pious sanctity. On earth, it embraceth those that fear the Lord especially: it wisheth conversion to those that do not: it counsels the rich: it comforts the poor: it reverenceth superiors, respecteth inferiors: doth good to friends, no evil to foes: wisheth well to all. This is the latitude of Charity. The property of faith, is to receive into it self: the property of love, to lay out it self to others. So that faith hath but narrow limits, but the extent of Love is universal, not bounded with the world. Faith believes for thyself, but Charity derives, & drives the effects of thy faith to others. Thy faith relieves thyself, thy charity thy brother.

2. For perpetvity and continuance. Faith lays hold on God's gracious promise for everlasting salvation: Hope expects this with patience: but when God shall fulfil his word, & us with joy, then Faith shall be at an end: hope at an end: but Love shall remain between God & us, an everlasting bond. Therefore saith the Apostle, Now abideth faith, &c. Now. Now three, then one: and that is Charity. When we have possession of those pleasures, which we hoped and believed, what longer use is there of Faith or Hope? But our loves shall not end with our lives. We shall everlastingly love our our Maker, Savior, Sanctifier, Angels, & Saints; where no discontent shall breed any iarre in our Hallelujahs. If the use of love be so comfortable on earth, what may we think it will be in heaven!

Thus saith Chrysost: Only love is eternal. Now Faith and Hope hold up the hands of Charity, as Aaron and Hur held up the hands of Moses: but then their use and office shall cease. Tunc non erit spes, quando erit spes. Hope shall not be, when the thing hoped is. Hope shall bring in possession, possession shall thrust out Hope. Therefore saith Augustine, is Charity greater; Et si non propter eminentiam, tamen propter permanentiam; If not for the excellency, yet for the perpetuity.

Thus to justify a man, Faith is greater, but in a man justified, Charity is greater. Let Faith alone with the great work of our salvation: but that finished, it shall end, & so yield superiority to Love, which shall endure forever.

Thus you have commended to your souls these three sisters, Faith, Hope, and Charity. Faith we must have, or we are reprobates; Hope, or wretches, Charity, or not Christians. There is a promise made to Faith, that it shall have access to God. Heb. 11. To Hope, that it shall not be ashamed, Rom. 5. But to Charity, that it shall dwell in God, and have God dwelling in it, 1. John. 4.

I should now tell you, that as these three fair Sisters come down from heaven; so in a cross contrariety, the Devil sends up three foul fiends from hell. Against Faith, Infidelity: against Hope, Desperation: Against Charity, malice. He that entertains the elder sister, unbelief, I quake to speak his doom, yet I must; He is already condemned. He that embraceth the second ugly Hagge, Despair, bars up against himself the possibility of all comfort: because he offends so precious a nature, the mercy of God, & tramples under his desperate feet that blood, which is held out to his vnaccepting hand. He that welcomes malice; welcomes the Devil himself: he is called the Envious, and loves extremely to lodge himself in an envious heart. These be fearful, prodigious sisters; fly them, and their embraces: and remember, O ye whom Christ concerns, the commandment of your Savior; Love one another.

I will end with our Apostles exhortation to his Philippians. If there be any consolation in Christ; and there is consolation in him, when the whole world cannot afford it: If any comfort of love; and he that knows not the comforts of love, knows no difference betwixt man and beast: If any fellowship of the spirit, by whom we are all knit into one Communion, and enriched with the same treasures of grace: If any bowels and mercies; if uncharitableness and avarice hath turned our intrals into stone and iron; if we have not forgotten the use and need of mercy. Fulfill my joy, that ye be like minded, and have the same love. Fulfill the Apostles joy only? the joy of the Bride and Bridegroom, of the Church on earth, of the Saints in heaven; of the joy of the blessed Angels; the joy of the Father, Son, & holy Spirit; and last of all, the joy of your own hearts; that you Love one another. Forget not that trite, but true saying.

They shall not want prosperity,

That keep Faith, Hope, and Charity.

THE TAMING OF the Tongue.

IAM. 3. 8.

But the tongue can no man tame: it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.

Here is a single Position, guarded with a double reason. The Position is, No man can tame the Tongue. The Reasons, 1. It is unruly. 2. Full of deadly poison. Here is busy dealing with a wild member: a more difficult action, and intractable nature could not have met. Tongue is the Subject (I mean in the discourse;) and can you ever think of subjecting it naturally to reason, or taming it to Religion? Go lead a Lyon in a single hair, send up an Eagle to the sky to pecke out a star, cope up the thunder, and quench a flaming City with one widows tears: if thou couldest do these, yet nescit modo lingua domari: the Tongue can no man tame. As the Proposition is backed with two reasons; so each reasons; so each reason hath a terrible second, The Evil hath for the second vnruines: the Poisonfulnes hath deadly. It is evil, yea unruly evil: it is poison, yea, deadly poison. The Fort is so barricadoed, that it is hard scaling it: the refractory Rebell so guarded with Evil and Poison, so warded with unruly and deadly; as if it were with Giants in an vnchanted Tower, as they fabulate; that no man can tame it. Yet let us examine the matter, and find a stratagem to subdue it.

In the Proposition.

We will observe, 1. The Nature of the thing to be tamed. 2. The difficulty of accomplishing it. The insubiectionable subject is the Tongue: which is, 1. a member, and 2. an

Member,

It is a Member.

He that made all, made the Tongue: he that craves all, must have the Tongue. Quicreavit necessariam, postulat creatam. It is an instrument, let it give Music to him that made it. All creatures in their kind bless God. Psal. 148. They that wanttongues, as the heavens, Sun, Stars, Meteors, Orbes, Elements; praise him with such obedient Testimonies, as their insensible natures can afford. They that have tongues, though they want reason, praise him with those natural Organs. The birds of the air sing, the beasts of the earth make a noise; not so much as the hissing Serpents, the very Dragons in the deep, but sound out his praise. Man then, that hath a tongue, and a reason to guide it, (and if more, a religion to direct his reason) should much, much more bless him. Therefore says the Psalmographer, that for the well tuning of his Tongue, is called the sweet Singer of Israel, I will praise the Lord with the best Instrument I have; which was his Tongue.

Not that praises can add to God's glory, nor blasphemies detract from it. The blessing Tongue cannot make him better, nor the cursing, worse. Nec melior si laudaueris, nec deterior si vituperaueris. As the Sun is neither bettered by birds singing, nor battered by dogs barking. He is so infinitely great, and constantly good, that his glory admits neither addition, nor diminution.

Yet we that cannot make his name greater, can make it seem greater: and though we cannot enlarge his glory, we may enlarge the manifestation of his glory. This both in words praising, and in works practicing. We know it is impossible to make a new Christ, as the Papists boast the almightiness of their Priests: yet our holy lives, and happy lips (if I may so speak) may make a little Christ, a great Christ. They that before little regarded him, may thus be brought to esteem him greatly: giving him the honor due to his name, and glorifying him, after our example.

This is the Tongues office. One member, without arrogating any merit, or boasting the beholdingness of the rest unto it, is to do that duty which is assigned it. The eye is to see for all, the ear to hear for all, the hand to work for all, the feet to walk for all, the knees to bow for all, the Tongue to praise GOD for all. This is the Tongues office, not unlike the Towneclarkes, which if it perform not well, the Corporation is better without it. The Tongue is man's clapper, and is given him, that he may sound out the praise of his maker.

Infinite causes draw deservedly from man's lips, a devout acknowledgement of God's praise.
Quia

- Creator ad esse.

- Conseruator in esse.
- Recreator in been esse.
- Glorificator in optimo esse.

He gave us being that had none; preserved us in that being; restored us voluntarily fallen, unto a better being; and will glorify us with the best, at the day of the Lord Jesus. Then let the Tongue know, Si non reddet Deo faciendo quae debet, reddet ei patiendo quae debet: If it will not pay God the debt it owes him in an active thankfulness, it shall pay him in a passive painefulnes. Let the meditation here of put our tongues into tune. A word fitly spoken, is like Apples of gold in pictures of silver.

It is a member you hear: we must take it with all the properties; Excellent, Necessary, Little, Singular.

1. Excellent. Abstractively and simply understood, it is an exceeding excellent member, both Quoad

- Maiestatem.

For the Majesty of it, it carries an imperious speech: wherein it hath the preeminence of all mortal creatures. It was man's Tongue, to which the Lord gave license to call all the living creatures, and to give them names. And it is a strong motive to induce, and to beget in other terrene natures, a reverence and admiration of man. Therefore it is observed, that God did punish the ingratitude of Balaam, when he gave away some of the dignity proper to man, which is use of speech, and imparted it to the Ass, man alone speaks. I know that spirits can frame an aerial voice, as the Di•ell when he spake in the Serpent that fatal temptation, as in a Truncke; but man only hath the habitual faculty of speaking.

For the Pleasantnesse of the tongue; the general consent of all gives it the truest Melos, and restrains all musical organs from the worth and praise of it: Eccles. 40. The pipe and the Psalterie make sweet melody: but a pleasant tongue is above them both. No instruments are so ravishing, or prevail over man's heart with so powerful complacency, as the Tongue and voice of man.

If the Tongue be so excellent, how then doth this Text censure it for so evil? I take the Philosophers old and trite answer. Linguanihil est, vel bona melius, vel mala peius. Then a good Tongue, there is nothing better; then an evil, nothing worse. Nihil habet medium: aut grande bonum est, aut grande malum. It hath no mean; it is either exceedingly good, or excessively evil. It knows nothing but extremes: and is or good best of all, or bad worst of all. If it be good, it is a walking garden, that scatters in every place a sweet flower, an hearb of grace to the hearers. If it be evil, it is a wild Bedlam, full of gadding and madding mischiefs. So the Tongue is every man's best, or worst movable.

Hereupon that Philosophical servant, when he was commanded to provide the best meat for his Masters table, the worst for the family: bought & brought to either, neates tongues. His Moral was, that this was both the best, and worst service; according to the goodness or badness of the Tongue. A good Tongue is a special dish for God's public service. Parsoptima hominis, digna quae sit hostia. The best part of a man, and most worthy the honor of sacrifice. This only, when it is well seasoned. Seasoned, I say, with salt; as the Apostle admonisheth: not with fire. Let it not be so salt as fire, as that Proverb, which no man living hath tasted. There is a City of salt, mentioned, Joshua 15. Let no man be an Inhabitant of this salt-city. Yet better a salt-tongue, then an oily. Rather let the righteous reprove me, then the precious balms of flatterers break my head; whilst they most sensibly sooth and supple it. We allow the Tongue salt, not pepper: let it be well seasoned, but not too hot. Thus a good Tongue is GOD'S dish, and he will accept it at his own table.

But an evil Tongue is meat for the Devil, according to the Italian Proverb: The Devil makes his Christmas pie of lewd Tongues. It is his daintiest dish, and he makes much of it: whether on earth to serve his turn as an instrument of mischief, or in hell to answer his fury in torments. Thus saith Solomon of the good Tongue. The tongue of the just is as choice silver, and the lips of the righteous feed many. But Saint James of the bad one: It is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison,

2. It is Necessary; so necessary, that without a tongue I could not declare the necessity of it. It conuerseth with man, conueying to others by this organ that experimental knowledge, which must else live and die in himself. It imparts secrets, communicates joys, which would be less happy suppressed, then they are expressed: mirth without a partner, is hilaris cum ponder foelicitas. But to disburden griefs, and pour forth sorrows in the bosom of a friend, O necessary tongue! How many hearts would have burst, if thou hadst not given them vent! How many souls fallen groveling under their load, if thou hadst not called for some supportance! How many a panting spirit hath said, I will speak yet ere I die; and by speaking received comfort! Lastly, it speaks our devotions to heaven, and hath the honor to confer with God. It is that Instrument which the holy Ghost useth in us, to cry Abba Father. It is our spokesman: and he that can hear the heart without a tongue, regardeth the devotions of the heart better, when they are sent up by a diligent messenger, a faithful tongue.

3. It is Little. As man is a little world in the great▪ so is his tongue a great world in the little. It is a little member, saith the Apostle, verse 5. yet it is a world; verse 6. yea prauitatis vniuersitas, a world of iniquity. It is parnum, but prauum; little in quantity, but great in iniquity. What it hath lost in the thicknesse, it hath got in the quicknesse: and the defect of magnitude is recompensed in the fortitude: an arm may be longer, but the Tongue is stronger; and a leg hath more flesh then it hath, besides bones which it hath not, yet the tongue still runs quicker and faster; and if the wagger lie for holding out, without doubt the Tongue shall win it.

If it be a talking tongue, it is mundus garrulitatis, a world of prating. If it be a wrangling tongue, it is mundus litigationis, a world of brabbling. If it be a learned tongue, it is as Erasmus said of Bishop Tonstall, mundus eruditionis, a world of learning. If it be a petulant tongue, it is mundus scurrilitatis, a world of wantonness. If it be a poisonous tongue, it is mundus infectionis, saith our Apostle, verse 6. it defileth the whole body. It is Little.

So little, that it will scarce give a Kite her breakfast, yet it can discourse of the Sun and Stars, of Orbes and Elements, of Angels and Duells, of Nature and Arts: and hath no straiter limites, then the whole world to walk through. Homuncio est, gigantea iactat, verse 5. It is a Little member, yet boasteth great things.

Though it be Little, yet if good, it is of great use. A little bitte guydeth a great horse, adequitis libitum, to the Riders pleasure. A little helme, ruleth a great vessel: though the winds blow, and the floods oppose, yet the helme steares the ship. Though little, yet if evil, it is of great mischief. A little leaven sours the whole lump. A little Remora dangers a great vessel. A little sickness distempereth the whole body. A little fire setteth a whole city on combustion, verse 5. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!

It is Little in substance, yet great ad affectum, to provoke passion; ad effectum, to produce action. A Seminaries Tongue, is able to set Instruments on work, to blow up a Parliament. So God hath disposed it among the members, that it governs or misgouernes all; and is either a good King, or a cruel Tyrant. It either precedes to good, or peruerts to evil; purifieth, or putrifieth the whole carcass, the whole conscience. It betrayeth the heart, when the heart would betray God: and the Lord lets it double treason on it self, when it preuaricates with him.

It is a little leak that drowneth a ship, a little breach that looseth an army, a little spring that pours forth an Ocean. Little; yet the Lyon is more troubled with the little Waspe, then with the great Elephant. And it is observable, that the Egyptian Sorcerers failed in minimis, that appeared skillful and powerful in maioribus. Doth Moses turn the waters into blood? the Magicians did so, with their Inchantments. Doth Aaron stretch out his hand over the waters, and cover the Land with Frogs? The Magicians did so with their Inchantments. But when Aaron smote the dust of the Land, and turned it into Lice, the Magicians could not effect the like. Nor in the Ashes of the Fornace turned into boils and blaines. In Frogs and Waters, they held a semblance, not in the Dust and Ashes turned into Lice and soars. Many have dealt better with the greater members of the body, then with this Little one. Defecerunt in minimis: Virtus non minima est, minimam compescere linguam.

4. It is a singular member. God hath given man two ears, one to hear instructions of human knowledge, the other to hearken to his divine precepts; the former to conserve his body, the latter to save his soul. Two eyes, that with the one he might see to his own way, with the other pity and commiserate his distressed brethren. Two hands, that with the one he might work for his own living, with the other give and relieve his brothers wants Two feet, one to walk on common days to his ordinary labor: Man goes forth in the morning to his labor, and continues till the evening: the other on sacred days to visit and frequent the Temple, and the congregation of Saints. But among all, he hath given him but one Tongue: which may instruct him to hear twice so much as he speaks; to see twice so much as he speaks: to work, and walk twice so much as he speaks. I will praise thee (O Lord) for I am fearfully and wonderfully made:

maruailous are thy works, and that my soul knoweth right well. Stay, and wonder at the wonderful wisdom of God.

1. To create so little a piece of flesh, and to put such vigor into it: to give it neither bones nor nerves, yet to make it stronger then arms and legs, and those most able and serviceable parts of the body. So that as Paul saith, 1. Cor. 12. On those members of the body, which we think less honorable, we bestow more abundant honor: and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness. So on this little weak member hath the Lord conferred the greatest strength; and as feeble as it is, we find it both more necessary, and more honorable.

2 Because it is so forcible, therefore hath the most wise God ordained, that it shall be but little, that it shall be but one. That so the parvity and singularity may abate the vigor, the rigor of it. If it were paired, as the arms, legs, hands, feet, it would be much more unruly. For he that cannot tame one tongue, how would he be troubled with twain! But so hath the Ordinator provided, that things of the fiercest and firyest nature, should be little, that the malice of them might be somewhat restrained.

3. Because it is so Vnruly, the Lord hath hedged it in, as a man will not trust a wild horse in an open pasture, but prison him in a close pownd. A double fence hath the Creator given to confine it, the lips and the teeth; that through those mownds it might not break. And hence a threefold instruction for the use of the Tongue, is insinuated to us.

1. Let us not dare to pull up God's mownds; nor like wild beasts, break through the circular limites, wherein he hath coped us. Look that thou hedge thy possession about with thorns, and bind up thy silver and gold. What, doth the wise man intend to give us some thriftie counsel, and spend his ink in the rules of good husbandry, which every worldling can teach himself? No; Yes: he exhorteth us to the best husbandry, how to guyde and guard our Tongues, and to thrive in the good use of speech. Therefore declares himself; Weigh thy words in a balance, and make a door and bar for thy mouth. Let this be the possession thou so hedgest in, and thy precious gold thou so bindest up. Beware thou slide not by it, lest thou fall before him that lieth in wait. Commit not urglary, by breaking the doors, and pulling down the bars of thy mouth.

Much more, when the Lord hath hung a lock on it, do not pick it with a false Key. Rather pray with David, Psal. 51. O Lord open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise. It is absurd in building, to make the Porch bigger then the House: it is as monstrous in nature, when a man's words are too many, too mighty. Every man mocks such a gaping boaster, with Quid feret hic dignum tanto promissor hiatu? Saint Bernard gives us excellent counsel. Sint tua Verba

- rara
- vera
- ponderosa

contra

- multiloquium
- falsiloquium
- vaniloquium.

Let thy words be few, true, weighty, that thou mayest not speak much, not falsely, not vainly. Remember thy bounds, and keep the non vltra.

2. Since God hath made the tongue one, have not thou a tongue and a tongue. Some are double-tongued, as they are double-hearted. But God hath given one tongue, one heart; that they might be one indeed, as they are in number. It is made simple, let it not be double. God hath made us men, we make our selves monsters. He hath given us two eyes, two ears, two hands, two feet. Of all these we will have, or at lest use but one. We have one eye to pry into others faults, not another to see our own. We have one ear to hear the Plaintiff, not the other for the Defendant. We have a foot swift to enter forbidden paths, not another to lead us to God's holy place. We have one hand to extort, and scrape, and wound, and not another to relieve, give alms, heal the wounded. But now whereas God hath given us, but one tongue, and one heart, and bidden us be content with their singularity; we will have two tongues, two hearts. Thus cross are we to God, to Nature, to Grace: monstrous men; monoculi, monopedes; bicordes, bilingues: one-eyed, one-footed; double-tongued, double-hearted. The slanderer, the flatterer, the swearer, the tale-bearer are monstrous (I dare scarce add) men: as mis-shapen Stigmatikes, as if they had two tongues, and but one eye: two heads, and but one foot.

3. This convinceth them of preposterous folly, that put all their malice into their tongue, as the Serpent all her poison in her tail. And as it were by a chymicall power, attract all vigor thither, to the weakening and enervation of the other parts. Their hands have chiragram; they cannot stretch them forth to the poor, nor give relief to the needy. Their feet podagram, they cannot go to the Church. Their eyes opthalmiam, they cannot behold the miserable and pity-needing. Their ears surditatem, they cannot hear the Gospel preached. Oh how defective and sick all these members are! But their Tongues are in health; there is blitheness and volubility in them. If they see a distressed man, they can give him talkative comfort enough; Bewarmed, be filled, be satisfied: they can fill him with Scripture-sentences; but they send him away with an hungry belly. Whereas the good man's hand is as ready to give, as his tongue to speak. But the fools lips babbleth foolishness; volat irrevocabile verbum. Words run like Hazael; but good works, like the Creeple, come lagging after.

We see the nature of the thing to be tamed, the tongue: let us consider the difficulty of this enterprise. No man can do it. Which we shall best find, if we compare it with other - members of the body.

- creatures of the world.

With other members of the body: which are various in their faculties and offices; none of them idle.

1. The eye sees far, and beholdeth the creatures in coelo, solo, salo: in the heavens, sun and stars: on the earth birds, beasts, plants, and mineralls: in the sea, fishes and serpents. That it is an unruly member, let our Grand-mother speak; whose roving eye lost us all. Let Dinah speak, her wandering eye lost her virginity, caused the effusion of much blood. Let the Jews speak concerning the daughters of Madian; what a fearful apostasy the Eye procured. Yea let David acknowledge, whose petulant eye robbed Uriah of his wife and life, the land of a good soldier, his own heart of much peace. Yet this eye, as unruly as it is, hath been tamed. Did not Job make a covenant with his eyes, that he would not look upon a maid? The eye hath been tamed, but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly, &c.

2. The ear yet hears more, then ever the eye saw: and by reason of the patulous admission, derives that to the understanding, whereof the sight never had a glance. It can listen to the whisperings of a Doeg, to the susurrations of a Devil, to the Boys of a Syren, to the voice of a Delilah. The Parasite through his windore creeps into the great man's favor: he tunes his warbling notes to an enlarged ear. It is a wild member, an Instrument that Satan delights to play upon. As unruly as it is, yet it hath been tamed. Mary sate at the feet of Christ, and heard him preach with glad attention. The ear hath been tamed, but the Tongue can no man tame, &c.

3. The foot is an unhappy member, and carries a man to much wickedness. It is often swift to the shedding of blood: and runneth away from God Jonah's pace; flying to Tharshish, when it is bound for Nineveh. There is a foot of pride, Psal. 36. a saucy foot, that dares presumptuously enter upon God's free-hold. There is a foot of rebellion, that with an apostate malice kicks at God. There is a dancing foot, that paceth the measures of circular wickedness. Yet as unruly as this foot is, it hath been tamed. David got the victory over it. I considered my ways, and turned my foot unto thy testimonies. The foot hath been tamed, but the Tongue can no man tame, &c.

4. The hand rageth and rangeth with violence, to take the bread it never sweat for, to enclose fields, to depopulate Towns, to lay waste whole countries. They covet fields, and houses, and vineyards, and take them, because their Hand hath power. There is a hand of extortion, as Ahab's was to Naboth; the greedy landlords to the poor tenant. There is a hand of fraud, and full of Liegerdumaine, as the userers to his distressed borrower. There is a hand of bribery, as Judas, with his Quantum dabit; what will you give me to betray the Lord of Life. There is a hand of lust, as Ammons to an incestuous rape. There is a hand of murder, as Joab's to Abner, or Absalom's to Ammon. O how unruly hath this member been! yet it hath been tamed: not by washing it in Pilate's basin, but in David's holy-Water, Innocence. I will wash my hands in innocence, and then, O Lord, will I compass thine altar. Heereuppon he is bold to say; Lord, look if there be any iniquity in my hands. God did repudiate all the Jews sacrifices, because their hands were full of blood. David's hands had been besmeared with the aspersions of lust and blood; but he had penitently bathed them in his own tears: and because that could not get out the stains, he faithfully renseth and cleanseth them in his Sons and Savior's fountain, the all-meritorious blood of Christ. This made them look white: whiter then Lilies in God's sight. Therefore hath the Lord recompensed me according to my righteousness: according to the cleanness of my hands in his eye-sight.

Thus the eye, the ear, the foot, the hand, though wild and unruly enough, have been tamed; but the tongue can no man tame: it is an unruly evil, &c.

With other creatures of the world; whether we find them in the earth, air, or water.

1. On the earth, there is the man-hating Tiger; yet man hath subdued him; and (they write) a little boy hath led him in a string. There is the flock-devouring wolf, that stands at grinning defiance with the shepherd; mad to have his prey, or loose himself; yet he hath been tamed. The roaring Lyon, whose voice is a terror to man, by man hath been subdued. Yea, serpents, that have to their strength two shrewd additions, subtlety, and malice; that carry venom in their mouths, or a sting in their taylor, or are all over poisonous; the very basilisk, that kills with his eyes, as they write, three furlongs off. Yet all these savage, furious, malicious natures have been tamed, but the tongue can no man tame: it is an unruly evil, &c.

2. In the sea there be great wonders. They that go down to the sea in ships, and do business in great waters. These see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. Yet those natural wonders have been tamed by our artificial wonders, ships. Even the Leviathan himself; Out of whose mouth go burning Lamps, and sparks of fire. Out of his nostrils goeth smoke, as out of a boiling Caldron. Squama squamae couiungitur; the flakes of his flesh are joined together; they are firm in themselves, and cannot be moved. Yet we know, that this huge creature hath been tamed; but the tongue can no man tame, &c.

3. In the air, the Birds fly high above our reach, yet we have ginnes to fetch them down. A lure stoops the highest-soaring hawk. Nay, Art makes one fowl catch another, for man's delight and benefit. Incredible things, if they were not ordinary. Snares, limetwiggles, netes tame them all: even the Pelican in the Desert, and the Eagle amongst the cedars. Thus saith our Apostle, verse 7. Every kind (not everyone of every kind, but every kind or nature of all) of beasts, of birds, of serpents, and of things in the Sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of the nature of man: but the Tongue can no man tame, &c.

Thus far then Saint James his proposition passeth without opposition. The tongue can no man tame. The tongue is too wild for any manstaming. It would be a foolish exception, (and yet there are such profane tongues to speak it) that woman stands without this compass and latitude: and to infer, that though no man can tame the tongue, yet a woman may: It is most unworthy answer. Woman, for the most part, hath the glibbest tongue: and if ever this impossibility preclude man, it shall much more annihilate the power of that weaker sex. She is loud, saith Solomon: a foolish woman is ever clamorous. She calls her tongue, her Defensiuue weapon; she means offensive: a fire brand in a frantic hand doth less mischief. The Proverb came not from nothing; when we say of a brawling man, he hath a woman's tongue in his head.

The tongue can no man tame. Let us listen to some weightier exceptions. The Prophets spake the oracles of life, and the Apostles, the words of salvation; and many men's speech ministers grace to the hearers. Yelde it; yet this general rule will have no exception: no man can tame it: man hath no stern for this ship, no bridle for this colt. How then? God tamed it. We by nature stammer as Moses, till God open a door of utterance. I am of unclean lips, saith the Prophet, and dwell with people of unclean lips. God must lay a coal of his own altar upon our tongues, or they cannot be tamed.

And when they are tamed, yet they often have an unruly trick. Abraham lies, Moses murmurs, Elias for fear of a Queen and a queane wisheth to die, Jonah frets for the Gourd, David cries in his heart, All men are liars: which speech rebounded even on God himself; as if the Lord by Samuel had deceived him: Peter forswears his Master, his Savior. If the tongues of the just have thus tripped, how should the profane go upright? The tongue can no man tame.

The instruction hence riseth in full strength; that God only can tame man's tongue. Now the principal actions hereof are: first, to open the mouth, when it should not be shut: secondly, and to shut it, when it should not be open.

To open our lips when they should speak, is the sole work of God, Psalm 51. 15 O Lord open thou my lips, and then my mouth shall be able to show forth thy praise. God must open with his golden key of grace, or else our tongues will arrogate a licentious passage. We had better hold our peace, and let our tongues lie still, then to set them a running, till God bids them go. God commands every sinner to confess his iniquities: this charge, David knew, concerned himself: yet was David silent; and then his bones waxed old with anguish. His adultery cried, his murder cried, his ingratitude cried for revenge: but still David was mute; and so long, day and night the hand of the Lord was heavy upon him. But at last God stopped the mouth of his clamorous adversaries, and gave him leave to speak. I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord, and thou for gavest the iniquity of my sin. It is Christ, that must cast out this dumb Devil. The Lord is the best opener. He did open Lidia's heart, to conceive. He did open Elisha's servants eyes, to see. He did open the Prophets ears to hear. He did open Paul's tongue, to speak.

To shut our lips, when they should not speak, is only the Lord's work also. It is Christ that casts out the talking Devil: he shuts the wicket of our mouth against unsavory speeches. We may think it a high office (and worthy even David's ambition) to be a doorekeeper in God's house, when God vouchsafes to be a doorekeeper in our house.

Thus all is from God. Man is but a lock, God's Spirit the key; that openeth, and no man shutteth; that shutteth, and no man openeth. He opens, and no man shuts. I must speak, though I die, saith Jeremiah: his word is like fire in my bones, and will make me weary of forbearing. He shuts, and no man opens; so Zacharias goes dumb from the Altar, and could not speak.

Away then with arrogation of works, if not of words. Whē a man hath a good thought, it is gratia infusa; when a good word, it is gratia effusa: when a good work, it is gratia diffusa. If the man cannot produce words to praise God, much less can he procure his works to please God. If he cannot tune his tougue, he can never turn his heart. Two useful benefits may be made hereof.

1. It is taughtvs, whether we have recourse to tame our tongues. He that made the tongue, can tame the tongue. He that gave man a tongue to speak, can give him a tongue to speak well. He that placed that unruly member in his mouth, can give him a mouth to rule it. He can give Psalms for Carrols; the Songs of Zion for the ballads of hell. Man hath no bridle, no cage of brass, nor bars of iron to tame it: God can. Let us move our tongues, to entreat help for our tongues: and according to their office, let us set them on work to speak for themselves.

2. We must not be idle our selves: the difficulty must spurr us to more earnest contention. As thou wouldest keep thy house from thieves, thy garments from moths, thy gold from rust; so carefully preserve thy tongue from unruliness, As the Lord doth set a watch before thy mouth, and keep the door of thy lips, Psal. 141 So thou must also be vigilant thyself, and not turn over thy own heart to security. How can ye being evil, speak good things: for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. Look how far the heart is good, so far the tongue. If the heart believe, the tongue will confess: if the heart be meek, the tongue will be gentle: if the heart be angry, the tongue will be bitter. The tongue is but the hand without, to show how the clock goes within. A vain tongue discovers a vain heart. But some have words soft as butter, when their hearts are keen swords: be they never so well traded in the art of Dissembling, sometime or other the tongue, Iu das-like, will betray the Master: it will mistake the hearts errand, and with stumbling forgetfulness trip at the door of truth. The heart of fools, is in their mouth: but the mouth of the wise, is in their heart. To avoid ill communication, hate ill cogitation: a polluted heart makes a fowl mouth. Therefore one day, Ex ore tuo, Out of thine own mouth will God condemn thee.

I have with some prolixity insisted on the Position; the reasons shall be but lightly touched.

1. It is an unruly evil.

The difficulty of taming the tongue, one would think were sufficiently expressed in the evil of it: but the Apostle seconds it with another obstacle, signifying the wild nature of it, unruly. It is not only an evil, but an unruly evil. I will set the Champion and his Second together in this fight; and then show the hardness of the combat.

Bernard saith: Lingua facile volat, & ideo facile violat. The tongue runs quickly, therefore wrongs quickly. Speedy is the pace it goes, and therefore speedy is the mischief it does. When all other members are dull with age, the tongue alone is quick and nimble. It is an unruly evil to our selves, to our neighbors, to the whole world.

1. To our selves. Ver. 6. It is so placed among the members, that it defileth all. Though it were evil, as the plague; and unruly, as the possessed Gergeseus, Math. 8 yet if set off with distance, the evil rests within it self. A Leaper shut up in a Pesthouse, ranckleth to himself, infects not others. A wild Cannibal in a prison, may only exercise his savage cruelty upon the stone walls, or iron grates. But the tongue is so placed, that being evil and unruly, it hurts all the members.

2. To our Neighbors. There are some sins that hurt not the doer only, but many sufferers. These are districtly the sins of the tongue and the hand. There are other sins private and domestical: the sting and smart whereof dyes in the one soul; and without further extent, plagues only the person of the committer. So the Lavish is said, no man's foe but h's own: the proud is guilty of his own vanity: the slothful bears his own reproach: and the malicious wasteth the marrow of his own bones, whiles his envied object shines in happiness. Though perhaps these sins insensibly wrong the common-wealth, yet the principal and immediate blow lights on themselves. But some iniquities are swords to the Country; as oppression, rapine, circumvention: some incendiaries to the whole land; as evil and vnrnly tongues.

3 To the whole world. If the vastate ruins of ancient monuments, if the depopulation of Countries, if the consuming fires of contention, if the land manured with blood; had a tongue to speak, they would all accuse the Tongue for the original cause of their woe. Slaughter is a lamp, and blood the oil; and this is set on fire by the tongue.

You see the latitude and extension of this unruly evil; nor evnrly then the hand. Slaughters, massacres, oppressions are done by the hand: the tongue doth more. Parcit manus absenti, lingua n̄mini. The hand spares to hurt the absent, the tongue hurts all. One may avoid the sword by runni•g from it; not the tongue, though he run to the Indies. The hand reacheth but a small compass, the tongue goes through the world. If a man wore coat of armor, or maile of brass; yet, Penetrabunt spicula linguae; The darts of the tongue will pierce it.

It is evil, and doth much harm; it is unruly, and doth sudden harm. You will say, many wicked men have often very silent tongues. True, they know their times and places, when and where to seem mute. But Jeremiah compounds the wisdom and folly of the Jews: That they were wise to do evil, but to do good they had no understanding. So I may say of these, they have tongue enough to speak evil, but are dumb when they should speak well.

Our Savior in the days of his flesh on earth, was often troubled with dumb Devils: but now he is as much troubled with roaring Devils. With the fawning Sycophant, a prating Devil. With the malicious slanderer, a brawling Devil. With the unquiet peace-hater, a scolding Devil. With the avarice and ill-conscious Lawyer, a wrangling Devil. With the factious Schismatic, a gaping Devil. With the swaggering ruffian, a roaring Devil. All whom Christ by his ministers doth conjure, as he once did that crying Devil; Hold thy peace, and come out. These are silent enough to praise God, but loud as the Cataracts of Nile to applaud vanity. David saith of himself, Psalm 32. that when he held his peace, yet he rored all the day long. Strange! be silent, and yet roar too, at once? Gregory answers; h̄e that daily commits new sins, and doth not penitently confess his old, roars much, yet holds his tongue. The Father pricked the pleurisie-vain of our times. For we have many roarers, but dumb roarers: though they can make a hellish noise in a Tavern, and swear down the Devil himself; yet to praise God, they are as mute as fishes.

Saint James here calls it fire. Now you know fire is an ill master: but this is unruly fire. Nay, he calls it the fire of hell; blown with the bellows of malice, kindled with the breath of the devil. Nay, Stella hath a conceit, that it is worse then the fire of hell: for that torments only the wicked, this all, both good and bad. For it is Flabellum, invidis, and Flagellum, iusti. Swearers, railers, scoldes have hell-fire in their tongues.

This would seem incredible, but that God saith it is true. Such are hellish people, that spet abroad the flames of the devil It is a cursed mouth that spets fire: how should we avoid those, as men of hell! many are afraid of hell fire, yet nourish it in their own tongues. By this kind of Language, a man may know who is of hell. There are three sorts of languages observed. Celestial, terrestrial, and infernal. The heavenly language is spoken by the Saints, Blessed are they that dwell in thy house: they will be still praising thee. Their discourse is habituated, like their course or conversation; which Paul saith is heavenly. The earthly tongue is spoken of worldlings, He that is of the earth, is earthly: and speaketh of the earth. Worldly talk is for worldly men. The infernal language is spoken by men of hell; such as have been taught by the devil: they speak like men of Belial. Now, as the Country man is known by his language: and as the Damsel told Peter; Sure thou art of Galilee, for thy speech bewrayeth thee: so by this rule, you may know heavenly men by their gracious conference: earthly men by their worldly talk: and hellish, by the language of the low Countries, swearing, cursing, blasphemy.

Well the efore did the Apostle call this Tongue a fire; and such a fire, as sets the whole world in combustion. Let these unruly tongues take heed lest by their roarings they shake the battlements of heaven; and so waken an incensed God to judgment. There is a curse that goeth forth, and it shall enter into the house of the swearer, and not only cut him off, but consume his house with the timber, and the stones of it. It was the Prophet Jeremiah's complaint; that for oaths the Land mourned. No marvel, if God curse us for our cursings; and if the plague light upon our bodies, that have so hotly trolled it in our tongues: no wonder if we have blistered carcasses, that have so blistered consciences; and the stench of contagion punish us for our stinking breaths. Our tongues must walk, till the hand of God walk against us.

2. Full of deadly poison.

Poison is h•omini i•imicum, loathsomely contrary to man's nature: but there is a poison not mortal; the venom whereof may be expelled; this is deadly poison. Yet if there was but a little of this resident in the wicked tongue, the danger were less; nay, it is full of it; full of deadly poison.

Tell a blasphemer this, that he vomites hell fire, and carries deadly poison in his mouth; and he will laugh at thee. Beloved, we preach not this of our own heads; we have our infallible warrant: God speaks it. The poison of Asps is under their lips, saith the Psalmist. It is a loathsome thing, to carry poison in ones mouth: we would fly that serpent, yet willingly converse with that man. A strangely hated thing in a beast, yet customable in many men's tongues. Whom poison they? First, Themselves; they have speckled souls. Secondly, They sputte their venom abroad, and bespurtle others: no beast can cast his poison so far. Thirdly, Yea, they would (and no thanks to them that they cannot) poison God's most sacred and feared name. Let us judge of these things, not as flesh and blood imagineth, but as God pronounceth.

It is observable, that which way soever a wicked man useth his tongue, he cannot use it well. Mordet detrahendo, lingit adulando. He bites by detraction, lickes by flattery; and either of these touches ranckle: he doth no less hurt by licking, then by biting. All the parts of his mouth are instruments of wickedness. Logicians in the difference betwixt vocem, and sonum, say that a voice is made by the lips, teeth, throat, tongue.

The Psalmographer on everyone of these hath set a brand of wickedness. 1. The lips are labia dolosa, lying lips, Psal. 120. 2. The teeth are frementes, frendentes, gashing teeth. 3. The tongue, lingua mendax, lingua mordax. What shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue? 4. The throat patens sepulchrum. Their throat is an open sepulcher. This is a monstrous and fearful mouth: where the porter, the porch, the entertainer, the receiver are all •icious. The lips are the Porter, and that's fraud: the porch the teeth, and there is malice: the entertainer, the tongue, and there is lying: the receiver, the throat, and there is devouring.

I cannot omit the Moral of that old Fable. Three children call one man Father, who brought them up. Dying, he bequeaths all his estate only to one of them, as his true natural son; but which that one was, left uncertain. Hereupon everyone claims it. The wise Magistrate for speedy decision of so great an ambiguity; causeth the dead father to be set up as a mark; promising the challengers, that which of them could shoot next his heart, should enjoy the Patrimony. The elder shoots, so doth the second, both hit: but when it came to the yongers turn, he utterly refused to shoot: good nature would not let him wound that man dead, that bred and fed him living. Therefore the Judge gave all to this son, reputed the former bastards. I he scope of it is plain, but significant. God will never give them the Legacy of Glory, given by his Son Will to children; that like bastards shoot through, and wound his blessed Name. Think of this, ye swearing and cursing to•gues

To conclude, God shall punish such Tongues in their own kind: they were full of poison, and the poison of another stench shall swell them. They have been enflamed, and shall be tormented with the fire of hell. Burning shall be added to burning; save that the first was active, this passive. The rich glutton, that when his belly was full, could loose his tongue to blasphemy, wanted water to cool his tongue. His tongue sinned, and his tongue smarted. Though his torment was universal, yet he complains of his tongue. That panted, that smoked, that reeked with sulphur and brimstone: that burns with the flame of hell dead, that burned with it living. For a former tune of sin, it hath a present tune of woe. It scalded, and is scalded: as it cast abroad the flames of hell in this world, so all the flames of hell shall be cast on it in the world to come. It hath fired, and shall be fired, with such fire as is not to be quenched.

But blessed is the sanctified tongue. God doth now choose it as an instrument of music, to sing his praise; he doth water it with the saving dew of his mercy, and will at last advance it to glory.

FINIS.

EXODVS. 15.3.

The LORD is a man of war: the LORD is his Name.

LONDON, Printed by Adam Islip and Edward Blount, and are to be sold in Paul's Church-yard at the sign of the black Bear. 1617.

To the well deserving Captain EDWARD PANTON, the Captains and truly generous Gentlemen, Citizens of London, of the Society of ARMES, practicing in the Artillery Garden.

WEe are all Soldiers, as we are Christians: some more specially, as they are men. You bear both Spiritual Arms against the enemies of your Salvation, and Material Arms against the enemies of your Country. In both you fight under the Colours of our great General Jesus Christ. By looking a little into this mystical war, you shall the better understand how to be Milites cataphracti, good Soldiers in all respects.

Job calls man's life a Warfare: and we find, Revel. 12. that there was war in heaven: Michael and his Angels fought against the Dragon; and the Dragon & his Angels. Where by Heaven is meant the Church of God upon earth; as Interpreters observe generally. For in Heaven above there is no warfare, but welfare: no trouble, but Peace that passeth all understanding: Now to this War every Christian is a professed Soldier: not only for a spurt, for sport; as young Gentlemen use for a time to see the fashion of the wars: but our Vow runs thus in Baptism; that every man undertakes to fight manfully under Christ's Banner against Sin, the World, and the Devil; and to continue his faithful Soldier and Servant to his lives end. And this Battle let us fight with courage, because we are warriors under that General that (without question) shall conquer. Nil desperandū Christo Duce, & Auspice Christo. They overcome by the blood of the Lamb. Reu 12.11. Though they loose some blood, they shall be sure to win the victory.

Bernard supposeth a great war between Christ the king of Jerusalem, & Satan the K. of Babylon. The Watchman on the walls spies a Christian soldier to be surprised by the Babylonian Host, & carried captive to their Tents. Hereof he informs the king, who presently chargeth Timorem, the Fear of God, to run & redeem the soldier. Fear comes thundering upon the adversary power, & forceth thē trembling to surrender back their prey; which he is now returning home to the king. Hereupon steps up Spiritus Tristitiae, Sadnes; & cries, O ye Babylonians, is it not a shame that one man should rescue a prisoner from such a multitude? Well ne timeatis a Timore isto, be not afraid of this fellow Fear: I will give you a stratagem how to reduce him. This must not be done Marte sed art; not by force but by fraud: mark the event.

This Spirit of Sadness lies in the way, and falls in with the Soldiers, colloquing as a friend, as a fiend; amica sed iniqua colloctione. Suspectles Fear follows a little off. But Sorrow had brought the Soldier to the brink of a deep Pit, Desperation; and was even upon the point of thrusting him in; The Watchman observes it, and again tells the king: who (quicker then thought) dispatcheth a fresh supply of succor, Hope, to his delivery. Hope mounted upon a swift horse, Desire; comes amaine: and with the Sword of Gladnes puts Sorrow to flight; so quits him from the gulf of Despair. Once again is the Citizen of heauē freed: now Hope sets him (being weary) on his own horse, Desire: himself leads him with the Cord of Promised mercy: Fear comes after with a switch made of Remembrance of sins, and so sets him forward to Jerusalem.

Hereupon the King of Babylon calls a Council; where some grieve, others rage, all Hell roars, that they had lost a prisoner, of whom they lately thought themselves so sure. There is not more joy with the Angels in heaven, then there is sorrow with the devils in hell, for this Sinners conversion. But yet all is not well, as the Watchman certifies the King of Omnipotence. The Soldier is mounted upon Desire, Hope leads him, and Fear drives him amaine: but I doubt he comes too fast, because he hath neither Bridle nor Saddle. Hereon the Kings, that hath everlasting care of all Christian souls, sends forth two of his grave Counselors to him, Temperance and Prudence; Temperance gives him a Bridle, that is Discretion; and Prudence a Saddle, that is Circumspection. This is not all: Fear and Hope give him two Spurres; on the left heel Fear of punishment, on the right, Expectation of bliss. Knowledge clears his Eye, Diligence opens his Eare, Obedience strengthens his Hand, Devotion rectifies his Foot, Faith encourageth his Heart. And if he want anything, Prayer offers him her service, to wait upon him as a faithful messenger; promising that whensoever he sends her to the King with a Petition, she will bring him back a Benediction.

Thus as in a little Tablet you see the whole world; that all of us must be Soldiers on earth militant, that will be Conquerors in heaven triumphant. But are there not enemies in the flesh, so well as enemies in the Spirit? Is mystical armor only necessary to a Christian, & is there no use of material? No; Aequūest Deum illis esse propitium, qui sibi non sunt aduersarij; it is just, that God should be a friend to thē, that are not enemies to themselves. I know prayers are good weapons: and Exo. 17. there was more speed made to victory by lifting up of Moses hands, then of Joshua's word. He that would overcome his enemies on earth, must first prevail with his best friend in heaven. If the mercy & strength of God be made thine by prayer, fear not the adverse powers. Ro. 8. We shall be conquerors through him that loved us. But is it enough to bend the knee, without stirring the hand? Shall war march against us with thundering steps; & shall we only assemble our selves in the Temples, lie prostrate on the pavements, lift up our hands & eyes to heaven, & not our weapons against our enemies? Shall we beat the air with our voices, and not their bosoms with our swords? only knock our own breasts, & not knock their heads? Sure, a religious conscience never taught a man to neglect his life, his liberty, his estate, his peace. Piety and Policy are not opposites: he that taught us to be harmless as Doves, bad us also be wise as Serpents. Give way to a fiction: fables are not without their useful morals. A boy was molested with a dog; the Frier taught him to say a Gospel by heart, and warranted this to allay the dogs fury. The mastiff spying the boy, flies at him: he begins (as it were) to conjure him with his Gospel. The dog (not capable of religion) approacheth more violently. A neighbor passing by, bids the boy take up a stone: he did so, and throwing at the dog, escaped. The Frier demands of the lad, how he sped with his charm. Sir (quoth he) your Gospel was good, but a stone with the Gospel did the deed. The Curs of Antichrist are not afraid of our Gospel, but of our stones: let us fight, & they will fly.

Fight say you; why who strikes us? Yield that no enemies do, are we sure that none will do? When our security hath made us weak, & their policy hath made thē strong, we shall find thē (like that troublesome neighbor) knocking at our door early in the morning, before we are up; when it will be too late for us to say, If we had known of your coming, we would have provided better cheare for you. They thank you, they will take now such as they find, for they purpose to be their own carvers, and the worst morsels they swallow shall be your hearts. Let us therefore like good housekeepers, whō such vnbidde guests come, have always a breakfast ready for thē: which if we give thē heartily, they shall have small stomach to their dinners.

Be you but ready for war, and I durst warrant your peace. Whilst you are dissolute, they grow resolute. Ludouicus Viues reports, that the young nobles and gallants in a city of Spain were fallen to such levity of carriage; that instead of marching to the sound of a Drum, they were dancing leuolto's to the Lute in a Ladies chamber: their Beavers were turned to Beuer hats. Everyone had his mistress, and spent his time in courting Venus; but Mars was shut out at the back gate. The ancient Magistrates observing this, consulted what should become of that country, which these men must govern after they were dead. Hereupon they conferred with the women, their daughters, the Ladies: whom they instructed to forbear their wonted favors, to despise the fantastical amorists, and to afford no grace to them that had no grace in themselves. This they obeyed diligently, and wrought so effectually, that the Gentlemen soon began to spy some difference betwixt Effematenes and Noblenes. And at last in honorable and serviceable designs excelled all their Ancestors. If we had in England such Ladies, (though I do not wish them from Spain) we should have such Lord's. Honor should go by the Banner, not by the Barue: and Reputation be valued by valor, not measured by the acre: there would be no ambition to be carpet-Knights.

How necessary the readiness of Arms, and of men practiced to those Arms, hath been to the common good; what Nation hath not found, either in the habit to their safety, or in the privation to their ruin? Only we bless our selves in our peace; and say to them that advise us to military preparations, as the Devils said to Christ, that we come to torment them before their time. But let them rest, that thus will rust: and for yourselves, worthy Gentlemen, keep your Arms bright; and thereby your names, your virtues, your souls: you shall be honored in good men's hearts, whilst wanton and effeminate Gulls shall weave and wear their own disgraces. Spernite vos sperni: there are none that think basely of you, whose bosoms are acquainted with other then ignoble thoughts. But I have held you too long in the gates, unless I could promise you the sight of a better City. Yet enter in, and view it with your eyes: it hath already entered your ears; God grant it may enter all our hearts. So yourselves shall be renowned, our Peace secured, and the Lord's great Name glorified, through Jesus Christ.

Yours to be commanded in all Christian services, THO. ADAMS.

THE SOVLDIERS HONOVR. Wherein by diverse inferences and gradations it is evinced, that the Profession is just, necessary, and honorable: to be practiced of some men, praised of all men. Together with a short Admonition, concerning Munition, to this honored City.

IVDG. 5. VER. 8.

They chose new gods: then was war in the gates: was there a shield or spear seen among forty thousand in Israel?

My heart is toward the Governors of Israel, that offered themselves willingly among the people. Bless ye the Lord.

IT was a custom in the Heathen world, after victory to sing songs of Triumph.

This fashion was also observed among the Jews; as we frequently find it. After a great conquest of the Philistines, the people of Israel sung; Saul hath slain his thousand, and David his ten thousand. When Joshua had overthrown those five Kings; at whose prayer the Sun stood still, and the day was made longer then ever the world saw before, or since; the people sung, The Sun stood still in Gibeon, and the Moon in the valley of Aialon. When Israel had crossed the red Sea with dry feet, and the returning waters had drowned their pursuing enemies; Moses and the people sung this Song, The Lord is a man of war, the Lord is his Name, &c. Here Deborah having conquered Sisera, with his nine hundred Chariots of iron, she sung this triumphant Song to the Lord; Praise ye the Lord for the avenging of Israel: Hear O ye Kings, I will sing to the Lord.

I have chosen two strains of this Song; from which, as they shall teach me, so I purpose to teach you, to bless the Lord that teacheth us all. So the Psalmist; It is the Lord that teacheth our hands to war, and our fingers to fight. This Lord give me a tongue to sing it, you ears to hear it, and us all hearts to embrace it.

In all I observe two generals, which express the nature of the two verses. There is great Affliction. There is great Affection.

The Affliction; They chose new gods: then was war in the gates, &c. The Affection; My heart is toward the Governors of Israel, that offered themselves willingly among the people: Bless ye the Lord. In the Affliction, me thinks I find three points of war:

- The Alarm; They chose new gods.
- The Battle; Then was war in the gates.
- The Forlorn hope; Was there a shield or a spear seen among forty thousand in Israel?

Here is 1. Superstition populi, the Apostasy of the people; they chose new gods. This I call the Alarm; for Impietas ad arma vocat, Vngodliness calls to war. If we fight against God, we provoke God to fight against us. Then 2. Inflictio Belli, a laying on of punishment: God meets their abomination with desolation; the hand of Justice against the hands of unrighteousness; then was war in the gates: This I call the Battle. Then 3. Defectus remedij, a destitution of remedy: Was there a shield or spear seen among forty thousand in Israel? Sin had not only brought war, but taken away defense; in praelia trudit inermes, sent them unarmed to fight. And this I call the Forlorn hope. You see the particulars: now ordine quidque suo.

The Alarm.

They chose new gods. Their Idolatry may be aggravated by three circumstances or degrees. They are all declining, and downwards: there is Malum, Peius, Pessimum; evil, worse, and worst of all.

1. They chose. Here is Electio, non compulsio; a frank choice, no compelling: They voluntarily took to themselves, and betook themselves to other gods. Naaman begged mercy for a sin, to which he seems enforced, if he would reserve the favor of his King, and peace of his estate: and therefore cried, Be merciful to me in this; when I bow with my master in the house of Rimmon, in this the Lord pardon me. But here is spontanea malitia, a willful wickedness; they chose. There is Evil, the first degree.

2. God's. What? a people trained up in the knowledge of one God: Jehovah, I am; and there is none besides me. Vnissimus (saith Bernard) si non est vnus, non est; if he be not one, he is none. The Bees have but one king, flocks and herds but one leader, the sky but one Sun, the world but one God.

Innumerabilis est, vnus enim Deus est.

Says the Epigrammatist. God is therefore innumerable, because he is but one. It was for the Heathen, that had (saith Augustine) mentes amentes, intoxicate minds and reprobate hearts, to have plurimos deos, a multitude of gods. They had gods of the Water, gods of the Wind, gods of the Corn, gods of the Fruits: Nec omnia commemoro, quia me piget, quod illi non pudet. Neither do I mention all, because it grieves me to speak, what they were not ashamed to do. Prudentius says, they had so many things for their god, as there were things that were good.

Quicquid humus, pelagus, coelum mirabile gignunt,

Id duxere deos, colles, freta, flumina, flammās.

Insomuch, that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . But Israel knew, that vnicus Deus, there was but one God; that others were dij titulares, gods in name; theirs only Deus tutelarīs, God in power. Their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges. Do these bring other gods in competition with him? Peius, this is worse.

3. New gods. Will any Nation change their gods? no: the Ekromites will keep their god, though it be Beelzebub: the Ammonites will keep their god, though it be Melchom: the Syrians will stick to their god, though it be Rimmon: the Philistines will not part with their god, though it be Dagon. And shall Israel change Jehovah, viuentem Deum, the living God? Pessimus; this is worst of all.

These be the wretched degrees of Israel's sin: God keep England from such Apostasy. We have one God: let the Romists choose them another: as the Canonists style their Pope, Dominus Deus noster Papa; our Lord God the Pope. But we have one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism; one God, and Father of all, who is above all, and thr•ugh all, and in us all. We have one God in professi•n: this God grant, that we have but one in affection. But vnum colimus ore, multos cord: we worship one with our mouths, many in our hearts. Tot sunt nostrae deitates, quot cupiditates: we have so many gods, as we have lusts. Honor is the ambitious man's god: Pleasure the voluptuous man's god: Riches the covetous man's god. Haec tria pro trino Numine mundus habet. This is the Trinity the world worships. These three Tyrants, like those three Romans, Caesar, Crassus, and Pompey, have shared the world between them; and left God least, that owes all.

The people of Israel, when they had turned beast, and calued an Idol, cried in triumph, These are thy gods, O Israel. So we may speak it with horror and amazement of soul, of these three Idols; These are thy gods, O England. The Idols of the Heathen were Silver and Gold, saith the Psalmist. It is but inverting the sentence: Mutato nomine nos sumus fabula; change but the names, and we• are the subject or whom the tale is told. Their Idols were Silver and Gold; and Silver and Gold are our Idols. He that railed on Belsebub, pulled all Ekrom about his ears: he that slighted Melchom, provoked the Ammonites. But he that condemns Mammon, speaks against all the world.

But if God be our God, Mammon must be our slave: for he that is the servant of God, must be the master of his money. If God be our King, he must be our King only: for the Bed and the Throne brook no rivals. When the Souldiors had chosen Valentinian Emper••, they were consulting to join with him a partner. To whom Valentinian replied; It was in your power to give me the Empire, when I had it not: now I have it, it is not in your power to give me a partner. God must be our God alone. Aequum est deos fingere, ac Deum negare. It is all one to choose new gods, and to deny the true God. If therefore we will have Nouum deum, a new god; we shall have Nullum Deum, no God. No, let the Heaten choose new gods; thou O Father of mercy, and Lord of heaven and earth, be our God forever. This is the Alarm: we come now to

The Battle.

Then was war in the gates. If Israel give God an Alarm of wickedness, God will give them a Battle of wretchedness. If thou, O Israel, wilt peccare in extremo tuo, God will punire in extremo suo: if thou sin in thy extremity, God will punish in his extremity. Idolatry is an extreme impiety; therefore against it the gate of heaven is barred. Know ye not, that no Idolater shall inherit the Kingdom of God? The Idolater would thrust God out of his Throne, therefore good reason that God should thrust him out of his Kingdom. The punishment is also extreme: and hath in it a great portion of misery, though not a proportion answerable to the iniquity. For it deserves not only war and slaughter in the gates of earth, but eternal death in the gates of hell. But not to extend the punishment beyond the proposed limits; nor, where it offers the company a mile, to compel it to go with us twain: let us view it, as it is described. And we shall find it aggravated by three circumstances.

- A Natura. War; there's the Nature of it.
- A Tempore. Then; there's the Time of it.
- A Loco. In the gates; there's the Place of it.

There is Quid, Quando, Vbi. What, When, and Where. War, that's the Quid. Then, that's the Quando. In the gates, that's the Vbi. Then was war in the gates.

The Nature of it; What, war.

War is that miserable desolation, that finds a land before it like Eden; and leaves it behind it like Sodom and Gomorra, a desolate and forsaken wilderness. Let it be sowed with the seed of man and beast, as a field with wheat; war will eat it up. Bellum, quasi minime bellum: or rather in vicinity to the name, mos belluarum. For men, Solummodo iustum, quibus necessarium: not just, but when it is necessary, and cannot well be avoided. Not to be waged by a Christian without observation of Saint Augustine's rule. Esto bellando pacificus. In war seek peace: though thy hand be bloody, let thy heart be peaceable. Pacem debet habere voluntas, bellum necessitas. Let necessity put war into the hands: religion keep peace in the heart. In it self it is a miserable punishment. This is the Nature; What.

The time, or Quando: Then.

When was this war? Tempore Idolatrico; in the time of Idolatry. They chose new gods; Then. When we fight against God, we incense him to fight against us. Indeed we have all stricken him: which of us hath not offered blows to that sacred Deity? Our oaths proffer new wounds to the sides of Jesus Christ: and our merciless oppressions persecute him through the bowels of the poor. Saul, Saul, why psecutest thou me? Saul strikes upon earth, Jesus Christ suffers in heaven. Yet if timely repentance step in, we scape his blows, though he hath not scaped ours. He is ready to say, as Cato to the man that hurt him in the Bath, (when in sorrow he asked him forgiveness) Non memini me percussum; I do not remember that I was stricken.

But if Israel's sins strike up alarm, Israel's God will give battle. If they choose new gods, the true God will punish. Then was war.

It is a fearful thing when God fights. When God took off the chariot-wheels of the Egyptians, they cried; Let us flee from the face of Israel, for the Lord fighteth for them against the Egyptians. The heathen gods could not defend their friends, nor subdue their enemies, nor avenge themselves.

Mars vltor galeam quoque per didit, & res

Non potuit seruare suas.

Their stout god of war might loose his helmet, his target, the victory; unable to deliver himself. But God is the Lord of Hosts: God hath spoken once: twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God. Once, twice, yea a thousand times have we heard it, read it, seen it, that God is powerful. That as Augustine: Verba toties inculcata, vera sunt, viua sunt, sana sunt, plana sunt. Things so often repeated and pressed, must needs be plain and peremptory. God hath soldiers in heaven, soldiers on earth, soldiers in hell, that fight under his press. So that he hath Mille nocendi arts; a thousand ways to avenge himself.

In heaven he hath armies; of fire to burn Sodom: of floods to drown a world: of hail-stones to kill the Amorites: of stars, as here Deborah sings. They fought from heaven: the stars in their courses fought against Sisera. And whilst Israel slew their enemies at their Generalls prayer; the Sun stood still in Gibeon, and the Moon in the valley of Aialon. Yea there are heavenly soldiers. Luke 2. Suddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly host. One of these celestial soldiers slew in one night above an hundred thousand Assyrians.

Below he hath Seas to drown Pharaoh; Swallows of the earth to devour Corah. With fierce Lions, fell Dragons, hissing Serpents, crawling Wormes, he can subdue the proudest Rebells.

In hell he hath an army of fiends, though bound in chains that they shall not hurt the faithful; yet let loose to terrify the wicked. There was an evil Spirit to vex Saul; fowl Spirits in the Gospel, made some deaf, others dumb, and cast many into fire and into waters.

Thus stands the wicked man environed with enemies: God and man, Angels and Devils, heaven and earth, birds and beasts, others and himself, maintain this war against himself. God may be patient a long time; but Laes a patientia fit furor, patience too much wronged becomes rage: and Furor arma ministrat, wrath will quickly afford weapons.

Serior esse solet vindicta seuerior.

The sorest vengeance is that which is long in coming; and the fire of indignation burns the hotter, because God hath been cool and tardie in the execution. Impiety and Impunity are not sworn sisters but if Wickedness beat the Drumme, Destruction will begin to march. The ruined Monuments and Monasteries in those Provinces, seem totell the passengers; Hic fuit hostilitas, war hath been here. We may also read in those rude heaps, Hic fuit iniquitas, Sin hath been here. It was Idolatry rather than war that pulled down those walls. If there had been no enemy to rase them, they should have fallen alone, rather than hide so much superstition and impiety under their guilty roofs. In the tenth of this book, when the Israelites served Baalim and Ashtaroth, the gods of Syria, and the gods of Sidon, then was the anger of the Lord hot against them, and he sold them into the hands of the Philistines, and into the hands of the children of Ammon. Then those enemies destroyed their Cities, and depopulated their Countries: making them spectacles of Crueltie and Justice; Crueltie of man, Justice of God. This is the Time, When.

The Place, or Vbi.

In the gates. This is an extreme progress of war, to come so near as the Gates. If it had been in terra inimicorum, in the land of their enemies: a preparation of war a great way off: Sonus hostilitatis, the noise of war. As Ierem. 6. Behold a people cometh from the North, a Nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth. Their voice roareth like the Sea: and, we have heard the fame thereof. Here is war, but coming, raising, roaring: audiuimus tantum; we have only heard the noise of it.

Yea, if it had come but to the coasts, and invaded the borders: as the Philistines did often forage the skirts of Israel; yet it had been somewhat tolerable: for then vidimus tantum; we have but seen it only. Ostendisti populo grauiam. Psal. 60. Thou hast shown thy people grievous things: shown, but not inflicted: shaken the rod, but not scourged us. But here venit ad limina bellum; war is come to their thresholds, to the Zenith and heart of the land; to defy them in the very gates. And now they more then hear, or see it; sentiunt, they feel it.

The Gates in Israel, were those places where they sate in Justice: as we may frequently read, they gave judgment in the Gates. They distributed the Corn in the Gates. They distributed the Corn in the Gates, where that unbelieving Prince was trodden to death. And Absalom sate in the Gates, and said to every man that had a Controuersie: See thy matters are good and right; but here is no man deputed of the King to hear thee. So that Pacis loca bellum occupat; War possesseth the places of Peace, and thrusts her out of her wonted residence and presidence, the Gates. In the Gates? War is not then in the right Vbi: as they said of Pope Sixtus; because he delighted in bloody wars, that he ill became the Seat of Peace: according to that Epitaph on him.

Non potuit soeuum vis vlla extinguere Sixtum,

Audito tandem nomine Pacis obit

No war could kill Sixtus: but so soon as ever he heard of peace, he presently died. War is got very far, when it possesseth the Gates.

You now see the punishment. Happy are we, that cannot judge the terrors of war, but by report and hear-say: That never saw our Towns and Cities burning; our houses rifled, our Temples spoiled, our wives ravished, our children bleeding dead on the pavements, or sprawling on the merciless pikes. We never heard the groans of our own dying, and the clamours of our enemies insulting, confusedly sounding in our distracted ears: the wife breathing out her life in the arms of her husband; the children snatched from the breasts of their mothers; as by the terror of their slaughters to aggravate their own ensuing torments. We have been strangers to this misery in passion, let us not be so in compassion. Let us think we have seen these calamities with our neighbors eyes, and felt them through their sides.

When Aeneas Syluius reports the fall of Constantinople; the murdering of children before the parents eyes, the Nobles slaughtered like beasts, the Priests to••• in pieces, the holy Virgins incestuously abuse• he cries out, O miseram vrbis faciem; Oh wre••hed face of a City. Many of our neighbors have been whirled about in these bloody tumults: they have heard the dismal cries of cruel adversaries, Kill, Kill; the shrikes of women and infants; the thunders of those murdering pieces in their ears; their Cities and Temples flaming before their eyes; their streets swimming with blood: when Semianimes voluuntur equi.

Men and horses confusedly wallowing in their mingled bloods.

Only to us the iron gates of war have been shut up: we sit and sing under our own Fig-trees; we drink the wine of our own Vineyards; There is no breaking in, nor going out, no complaining in our stretes: We have the Peace of God, let us be thankful to the God of Peace. But it is good to be merry and wise: Let not our peace make us secure. The Jews, in their great Feast, had some malefactor brought forth to them: so let it be one good part of our solemnity, to bring forth that malefactor, Security; a rust grown over our souls in this time of peace, and send him packing. We have not the blessings of God by entaile, or by lease; but hold all at the good will of our Landlord: and that is but during our good behavior. We have not so many blessings, but we may easily forfeit them by disobedience. When we most feared war, God sent peace: now we most brag of peace, God prevent war.

Do not our sins give an alarm to Heaven, and shall not Heaven denounce war against us? Nulla pax impijs, There is no peace to the wicked, saith my God. Joram said, is it peace, Jehu? But he answered, What peace so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many? They are our sins, that threaten to loose us our best friend, God: and if God be not our friend, we must look for store of enemies. Our great iniquities hearten our adversaries: they profess to build all their wickedness against us, upon our wickedness against God. If they did not see us choose new gods, they would never have hope to bring war to our gates. If we could prevail against our own evils▪ we should prevail against all our enemies. The powers of Rome, the powers of Hell should not hurt us, if we did not hurt our selves. Let us cast down our Iesabels, that bewitch us; those lusts, whereby we run a whoring after other gods: and then Peace shall stand Sentinel in our Turrets; God shall then strengthen the bars of our gates, and establish peace in our borders. Let us, according to that sweet Singers doctrine, Psal. 34.14. Depart from evil, and do good; then seek peace, and pursue it. Yea, do well, and thou shalt not need to pursue it; Peace will find thee without seeking. Augustine, Fiat iustitia, & habebis pacem; Live righteously, and live peaceably. Quietnesse shall find out Righteousness, wheresoever she lodgeth. But she abhorreth the house of evil: Peace will not dine, where Grace hath not first broken her fast. Let us embrace Godliness; and the Peace of God that passeth all understanding, shall preserve our hearts and minds in Jesus Christ. The Lord fixe all our hearts upon himself; that neither our selves, nor our children after us, nor their generations, so long as the Sun and Moon endureth, may ever see War in the Gates of England. Thus we have run thorough the Battle, and considered the terrors of a bloody War; and now come to

The Forlorn Hope.

Was there a shield or spear seen among forty thousand in Israel? Was there? There was not: This question is a plain negative. Here is Defectus remedij, the want of help: great misery, but no remedy: not a Spear to offend; no, not a Shield to defend. War, and war in the Gates, and yet neither offensive nor defensive weapon? Miserrima priuatio, quae omnem tollit ad habitum regressum. A miserable destitution, which admits of no restitution, that can never be restored to the former habit. It takes away all, both present possession, and future possibility; Rem & Spem, Help, and Hope.

But suppose, that only someone company had wanted, yet if the rest of the forces had been armed, there were some comfort. No, not a shield nor spear among many, among a thousand, among many thousand, among forty thousand: An Host of men, and not a weapon? grievous exigent! If it had been any defect but of armor, or in any other time but the time of war, or only in one City of Israel, and not in all. But is there war, and war in the gates, and do many, even thousands, want? what, armor enough? so they might easily; nay, but one shield, one spear? miserable calamity!

They were in great distress under the reign of Saul, 1. Sam. 13. The spoilers came out of the Campe of the Philistines, in three companies, &c. Yet it came to pass in the day of battle, that there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan: but with Saul and with Jonathan his son was there found. Here was a great want; three bands of the enemies, and but two swords: yet there were then two; and it so pleased God that those two were enow. As the Apostles said to Christ, Ecce duo gladij; Master, here are two swords: and he answered, It is enough. But two swords for so many, and against so many; a word of great misery. But God saith, Satis est, those two are enow, a word of great mercy. He can give victory with two swords, with one sword, with no sword: and so he did here, that convinced Israel might see, it was the Lord that fought for them; and so be moved to bless the Lord.

You see now all the parts of the Affliction: the Alarm in sin, the Battle in war, and the Forlorn hope in the want of remedy. Two useful observations may hence be deduced.

1. That war at sometimes is just and necessary; indeed just when it is necessary; as here. For shall it come to the gates, and shall we not meet it? Yea shall we not meet it before it come near the gates? There is then a season when war is good and lawful. Saint Augustine observes, that when the Soldiers, among the rest of the people, came to John the Baptist to be catechised: What shall we do? He did not bid them leave off being soldiers, but taught them to be good soldiers. Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages. Milites instruit, militare non prohibet: he directs them to be good men, not forbids them to be warlike men.

God himself is termed a Man of war: and he threatens war: The Lord hath sworn that he will have war with Amalek from generation to generation. Manie of the Philistines, Canaanites, and Sidonians were left to teach Israel war. Luxuriant animi rebus plerumque secundis. Too much warmth of prosperity hatcheth up luxury. There must be some exercise, lest men's spirits grow restie.

The standing water turns to putrefaction.

And virtue is no virtue but in action.

Sings the divine Poet. Idleness doth neither get, nor save, but loose. If exercise be good, those are best which tend to most good. The exercises of war step in here, to challenge their deserved praise. As with wooden wasters men learn to play at the sharp: so practice in times of peace makes ready for the time of war. It is good to be doing, that when Satan comes, inueniat occupatum; he may find thee honestly busied. The bird so long as she is upon wing, flying in the air, is safe from the fowler: but when she sits lasie on a tree, pruning her feathers, a little shot quickly fetcheth her down. So long as we are well exercised, the devil hath notso fair a mark of us: but idle, we lie prostrate objects to all the shot of his temptations. Now there are two cautions obserueable in the justness of wars. 1. that they be undertaken iusta causa, upon just and warrantable cause. 2. that they be prosecuted bono animo, with an honest mind.

1. The Cause must be just. For Frangit & attollit vires in milite causa.

The cause doth either encourage or discourage the soldier, indeed it makes or mars all. This just cause is threefold, well comprised in that verse, Paxpopuli, Patriaeque salus, & Gloria Regni.

The peace of the people, the health of the Country, and the glory of the Kingdom.

1. The Peace of the people: for we must aim by war to make way for peace. We must not desire truce to this end, that we may gather force against an unjust war: but we desire a just war, that we may settle a true peace. So Joab heartened his brother Abishai and the choice men of Israel against the Syrians. Be of good courage, and let us play the men, for our People, and for the Cities of our God.

2. The health and safety of our Country: Periclitantur aliqui, ne pereant omnes, Some must be endangered, that all may not be destroyed. And I would here, that the dull and heavy spirits of our rotten worldlings would consider. Quorum causa; for whose sake these worthy men spare neither their pains nor their purses, in this noble exercise. Even for theirs; theirs, and their children's, that so contemptibly judge of them.

If ware should be in the gates, whither would you run for defense, where shroud yourselves, but under their Colours which you have despised? Who should keep the Usurers money from pillaging? all his Obligations, Morgages, and Statutes from burning? Who should keep the foggy Epicure, in his soft chair after a full meal fast asleep? Who should maintain the nice Lady in her Caroch, whirling through the popular streets? Who should reserve those delicate parlours, and adorned chambers from fire and flames? Who should save Virgins from raushment, children from famishment, mothers from astonishment? City & Country, Temples and Palaces, Traffickes and Markets, Ships and Shops; Westminster-hall and the Exchange, two of the richest acres of ground in England, from plowing up; from having it said, I am seges vbi Troia fuit, corn groweth were London stood; all from ruin; who but the Soldier under God? The sword of God, and the sword of Gideon?

3. The Glory of the Kingdom, and that is Euangelium Christi, the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Wars for God are called God's battles. The destruction of their cities that revolt from God to Idols, and the whole spoil, is for the Lord: it is the Lord's battle, and the Lord's spoil. Deut. 13. Saul thus encouraged David to war; Be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles. The most and best warriors were called the Sons of God. So Abraham, Moses, David, Joshua, Gideon; and that Centurion was a man of war, whose praise Christ so sounded forth in the Gospel, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel. And the best wars are for God: so Christians bear in their Ensigns the Cross, to show that they fight for the honor of Jesus Christ.

When therefore there is hazard to loose the peace of the people, the safety of the Country, the glory of all, the Gospel of our Savior Christ; here is just cause of war. They that go forth to fight upon these terms, shall conquer.

Causa iubet melior superos sperare secundos.

A good cause gives assurance of victory. God shall martial that army, yea himself will fight for them.

2. The next caution, after a good ingression, is to be sure of a good prosecution. We say of the Surgeon, that he should have a Ladies hand, and a Lions heart: but the Christian soldier should have a Ladies heart, and a Lions hand. I mean, though he deal valiant blows, yet not destroy without compassion. Fortitudo virtus bellica, mansuetudo virtus bella. Though manfulnesse be a warlike virtue, yet gentleness is a Christian virtue. The sword should not be bloodied, but in the heat of battle. And after victory, when a soldier looks on the dead bodies of his enemies, pity should sit in his eyes rather than insultation. He should not strike the yielding, nor prey upon prostrate fortunes.

I know that diverse aspersions are cast upon men of this rank, They think that many take arms, Non vt seruiant, sed vt soeuiant; not to serve for their Country, but to rage and forage: making their Cote-armor a defense for drinking, whoring, swearing, dicing; and such disorders. As if it were impossible, that a tender conscience should dwell in one bosom with a valiant heart. Olim castra quasi casta dicebantur; quia castratur in ijs libido. The Campe seemed to take the denomination, saith he, from chastity; because in the wars lust was beaten down. But now Venus is gotten into the arms of Mars.

Militat omnis amans, & habet sua castra Cupido.

Cupid hath displayed his Colours, and pitched his Tent in the midst of the Army; as if it were the only bravery of a Soldier, to drink valiant healths to his Mistress. One writes of the Turks, that though they are the most monstrous beasts at home in peace, and sin even against nature: yet in wars caute & caste viuunt, they live charily and chastely. Not as the Friars say, Caute si non caste: the Turks are better then the Friars in this. Vitia sua domi deponunt, saith he: they leave all their naughtiness behind them at home. But he adds withal to our reproach, Christianus assumit: the Christians there take up those vices, as if they found them sown in a pitched field. That there is often, saith he, Grauior turba meretricum, quam militum: it is hard to judge, whether the number of souldiors or of harlots be greater. Hence it is said, that Rara fides pietasque viris, qui castra sequuntur.

There is so little fidelity and piety in men that follow the wars. These be the common invectives against Soldiers.

But now do not many tax them, that are worse themselves? Who can endure to hear an Usurer tax a Pillager? an Epicure find fault with a Drinker? a man-eating Oppressor with a gaming Soldier?

Quis tulerit Gracchum de seditione loquentem?

Who can abide to hear Gracchus declaine against sedition? or the Fox preach peace to the Geese? Say that some are faulty: must therefore the whole Profession be scandalized? Will you despise the word of God, because some that preach it are wicked men? no;

Dent ocyus omnes,

Quas meruere pati, sic stet sententia poenas.

Lay the fault where it should lie: be they only blamed that deserved it. Some persons may be reproveable, but the Profession is honorable.

The martialist may be a good Christian: in all likelihood should be the best Christian. Mors semper in oculo, therefore should be semper in animo. How should death be out of that man's mind, that hath it always in his eye? His very calling teacheth him to expound Saint Paul; who calls the Christians life a Warfare. His continual dangers to the good soldier, are as it were so many meditations of death. If he die in peace, he falls breast to breast with virtue. If in war, yet he dies more calmly then many an Usurer doth in his chamber. Though he be conquered, yet he is a Conqueror: he may loose the day in an earthly field, but he wins the day against Sin, Satan, and Hell; and sings with Paul, like a dying Swan; I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; now there is laid up for me a Crown of Righteousness.

2. The other inference that may hence be deduced, is this, That Muniton and Arms should at all times be in readiness. How grievous was it, when Iabin had such an Host, and not a shield or spear among forty thousand in Israel? For our selves, we have not our Peace by Patent; we know not how long it will continue: let us provide for War, in training up some to military practices. If War do come, it is a labor well spent: if War do not come, it is a labor very well lost. Wise men in fair weather repair their houses against Winter storms; the Ant labors in harvest, that she may feast at Christmas. Diu apparandum est bellum, vt vincas celerius; Be long in preparing for war, that thou mayest overcome with more speed: Longa belli praeparatio celerem facit victoriam; A long preparation makes a short and quick victory.

Tut we say, if that day comes, we shall have Soldiers enow; we will all fight. O dulce bellum inexpertis; They that never tried it, think it a pleasure to fight. We shall fight strangely, if we have no weapons; and use our weapons more strangely, if we have no skill: Non de pugna, sed de fuga cogitant, qui nudi in acie exponuntur ad vulnera; Their minds are not so much of fighting, as on flying, that are exposed to the fury of war without weapons; neither will all be soldiers that dare talk of wars: Non dat tot pugna socios, quot dat mensa conviuas; All that are your fellow guests at the Table, will not be your fellow soldiers in the Field.

Could any tongue forbear to tax the rich men of this honorable City, if their houses be altogether furnished with Plate, Hangings, and Carpets, and not at all with Weapons and Armor, to defend the Common-wealth? How fondly do they love their Riches, that will not lay out a little to secure the rest? When the Turk invaded the Greek Empire; before the siege was laid to Constantinople, the Metropolitan City, the Emperor sollicites the subjects to contribute somewhat to the repair of the walls, and such military provision and prevention: But the subjects drew back, and pleaded want. Hereupon the Turk enters, and conquers: and in ransacking the City, when he found such abundance of wealth in private houses, he lift up his hands to Heaven, and blessed himself, that they had so much riches, and would suffer themselves to be taken, for not using them.

So if ever London should be surprised by her enemies, which the wonted mercies of our God defend forever; would they not wonder to find such infinite treasures in your private houses, when yet you spent none of them to provide shield or spear, munition to defend yourselves? What scope can you imagine, or propound to your own hearts wherein your riches may do you service? You can tell me, nay I can tell you. You reserve one bag for pride, another for belly-cheare, another for lust, yet another for contention and suits in law. O the madness of us Englishmen! we care not what we spend in civil jars, that yet will spend nothing to avoid foreign wars. They say, the Jew will spend all on his Pasches, the Barbarian on his Nuptials, and the Christian on his quarrels, or lawsutes. We need not make our selves enemies by our riches, we have enow made to our hands. Christ says; Make you friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness. Make to yourselves friends by your charity, not adversaries by your litigation. Seek peace, saith the Prophet, and pursue it: seek peace, war will come fast enough. And if it do come, it will hardly be made welcome. The Spaniards have often threatened, often assaulted; ever been prevented, ever infatuated. Take we heed, if they do prevail, they will be revenged once for all. God grant we never try their mercy. Whether they come like Lions rampant, or like Foxes passant, or like Dogs couchant, they intend nothing but our ruin and desolation.

O Lord, if we must fall by reason of our monstrous sins, let thine own hand cast us down, not theirs: for there is mercy in thy blows. When that woeful offer was made to David, of three things; Choose thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee. Either seven years famine, or three months persecution, or three days plague. He answered unto Gad, and by him unto God: I am in a wonderful strait: but suddenly resolves; Let us now fall into the hands of the Lord, for his mercies are great; and let me not fall into the hands of man. If it be thy will, O Lord to plague us, take the rod into thine own hands: do thou strike us.

—liceat perituro viribus ignis,

Igne perire tuo; clademque author leuare.

Why shouldst thou sell us into the hands of those Idolatrous Romists, that will give thine honor to stocks and stones; bless this or that Saint and not be thankful to thy Majesty, that gives them the victory. For thine own sake, be merciful to us; yea thou hast been merciful: therefore we praise thee; and sing with thy Apostle: Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

I have held you long in the Battle: it is now high time to sound a Retreat. But as I have spoken much of Israel's Affliction, so give me leave to speak one word of the Prophetesses Affection: and of this only by way of exhortation. My heart is set on the Governors of Israel, that offered themselves willingly among the people: Bless ye the Lord. Here is considerable

- Both Subiectum in Quo.
- Both Obiectum in Quod.

The Subject in which this Affection resides: and the Object on which this Affection reflects.

The Subject wherein it abides is Cor, the Heart: a great zeal of love. Not only Affectio cordis, but Cor affectionis: not only the Affection of the Heart, but the Heart of Affection. My heart is set.

The Object on which it reflects is double; Man and God, the excellent creature, and the most excellent Creator: the men of God, and the God of men. Upon Men; My heart is towards the Governors of Israel, that offered themselves willingly among the people. Upon God; Bless ye the Lord.

Among men two sorts are objected to this love: Superiors in the first place, Inferiors in the later. To the Commanders primarily, but not only: for if they offered themselves willingly among the people, as we read it: then certainly the people also willingly offered themselves, as the other translations read it: Those that were willing amongst the people. You see, here is a foundation laid for a great and ample building of discourse; but I know you look to the glass, therefore promise nothing but application. And that

1. To the Governors of our Israel; that they offer themselves willingly to these military designs: not on compulsion; Quoniam probitate coacta, gloria nulla venit. His brows deserve no wreathed Coronet that is enforced: come with a willing mind. In every good work there must be Sollicitudo in effectu, and Feruo in affectu: cheerfulness in the affection, and carefulness in the action. God loves a cheerful giver: so thou gainest no small thing by it, but even the love of God. Whatsoever good thing thou doest, saith Augustine, do it cheerfully and willingly, and thou doest it well. Si autem cum tristitia facis, de te sit, non tu facis: if thou doest it heavily and grudgingly, it is wrought upon thee, not by thee: thou art rather the patient than the agent in it. God could never endure a luke-warm affection. Reuelat. 3. No man was admitted to offer to the building of the Tabernacle, that did it grudgingly. Of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart, ye shall take my offering. In all thy gifts show a cheerful countenance, saith the Wiseman: in all, whether to God or man. Saint Chrysostom gives the reason; Cum tali vultu respicit Deus, cum quali tu facis. God respects it with such a countenance as thou performest it. God's service is Libera seruitus, where not necessity but charity serves. Non complacet Deo famulatus coactus. God could never endure forced service. Do all then with willingness of heart.

Think with a reverend courage of your noble Ancestors, how their prowess renowned themselves and this whole nation. Shew yourselves the legitimate and true borne children of such fathers. The fame of Alexander gave heart to Julius Caesar, to be the more noble a warrior. Let the consideration of their valor teach you to shake off cowardice. They fought the battles, that you might enjoy the peace. You hold it an honor to bear Arms in your Scutchions; and is it a dishonor to bear Arms in the Field? The time hath been, when all honor in England came a Marte or Mercurio; from Learning or Chivalrie, from the Pen or the Pike, from Priesthood or Knighthood.

It would be an unknown encouragement to goodness, if honor still might not be dealed but upon those terms. Then should many worthy spirits get up the High-gate of preferment: and idle Drones should not come nearer then the Dunstable high-way of obscurity. It was a monstrous story, that Nicippus his Sheep did bring forth a Lyon: but it is too true, that many of our English Lions have brought forth Sheep. Among birds you shall never see a Pigeon hatched in an Eagles nest: among men you shall often see noble progenitors bring forth ignoble cowards.

But let virtue be renowned, rewarded, wheresoever she dwells. Though Bion was the son of a Courtesan, I hope no man will censure him with Partus sequitur ventrem. Non genus sed genius: non gens sed men's. Never speak of thy blood, but of thy good: not of thy Nobility, thou art beholding to thy friends for it, but of thy virtue. Even the Duke fetcheth the honor of his name from the wars; and is but Dux, a Captain. And it seems the difference was so small between a Knight and a common Soldier, among the Romans; that they had but one word, Miles, to express both their names.

You then that have the places of Government in this honorable City, offer willingly your hands, your purses, yourselves, to this noble Exercise. Your good example shall hearten others: be not ashamed to be seen among the people; upon such did Deborah set her heart. Alexander would usually call his meanest soldiers, friends and companions. Tullie writes of Caesar, that he was never heard speaking to his Soldiers; Ite illuc, Go thither: but Venite hu, come hither: I will go with you. The inferior thinks that labor much easier, which he sees his Captain take before him. Malus miles qui Imperatorem gemens sequitur: He is an ill Soldier that follows a good Leader with a dull pace. So Gideon to his Soldiers, Judge. 7. Look on me, and do likewise: when I come to the outside of the Campe, it shall be that as I do, so shall ye do. So Abimelech to his men of Arms, Judge. 9. What ye have seen me do, make hast, and do as I have done. The good Captain is first in giving the charge, and last in retiring his foot. He endures equal toile with the common Soldiers: from his example they all take fire, as one Torch lighteth many. And so much for the Governors.

2. Now for you that are the materials of all this, let me say to you without flattery▪ Go forth with courage in the fear of God, and the Lord be with you. Preserue unity among yourselves: left as in a Town on fire, whiles all good hands are helping to quench it, thieves are most busy to steal booties: So whilst you contend, murmur, or repine one at the honor of another, that subtle thief Satan, through the crack of your divisions, step in, and steal away your peace.

Offer yourselves willingly; and being offered step not back. Remember that Turpe est militem fugere; it is base for a Soldier to fly. When Bias was environed with his enemies, and his soldiers asked him, what shall we do? He replied, Go ye and tell the living that I die fighting, and I will tell the dead that you did scape flying. Our Chronicles report, that when William the Conqueror landed at Pemsey near to Hastings in Sussex, he commanded all his ships to be sunk: that all hope of returning back might be frustrate. You have begun well; go on, be perfect, be blessed.

And remember always the burden of this song, which everything that hath breath must sing; Bless ye the Lord. Those heavenly Soldiers that waited on the nativity of Jesus Christ, sung this song; Glory be to God on high. Upon this Lord the heart of Deborah, of Israel, of us all, should be set. It is he that teacheth us to fight, and fighteth for us.

To conclude with an observation of a reverend Divine: England was said to have a warlike Saint, George; but Bellarmino snibbes Jacobus de Voragine for his leaden Legend of our English George. And others have inveighed against the authentic truth of that story. Sure it is their malice, that have robbed England of her Saint. Saint James is for Spain, Saint Denis for France, Saint Patricke for Ireland; other Saints are allotted and allowed for other Countries: only poor England is bereaved of her George: they leave none but God to revenge our quarrels. I think it is a favor and an honor, and we are bound to thank them for it. Let them take their Saints, give us the Lord; Bless ye the Lord. So let us pray with our Church, Give peace in our time O Lord; for there is none that fighteth for us, but thou O God. To this merciful God be all glory, obedience, and thanksgiving, now and forever. AMEN.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE, SIR HENRY CAREY, Lord HVNSDON, Viscount Rochford.

MY LORD,

Among the many absurdities, which give us just cause to abhor the Religion of the present Roman Church, this seemeth to me none of the least; that they have filled all the Temples under the command of their politic Hierarchy, with Idols: and changed the glory of the Invisible God, into the worship of visible Images. They invoke the Saints by them, yea they dare not serve the Lord without them. As if God had repealed his unchangeable Law; and instead of condemning all worship by an Image, would now receive no worship without an Image. I have observed this one, among the other famous marks of that Synagogue; that they strive to condemn that which God hath justified, and to justify what he hath condemned. For the former; He hath precisely directed our Justification only by faith in the merits of Christ: this they vehemently dispute against. For the other; He hath (not without mention of his Jealousy) forbidden all worship that hath the least tang of Idolatry: this they eagerly maintain. What large Volumes have they written against the Second Commandment! as if they were not content to expunge it out of their Catechisms, unless they did also Dogmatic contradict it to the whole world. They first set the people upon a plain rebellion, & then make show to fetch them off again with a neat distinction. Thus do they pump their wits to legitimate that by a distinction, which God hath pronounced a Bastard by his definitive sentence: as if the Papal Decrees were that law, whereby the world should be judged at the last day. But who will regard a house of magnificent structure, of honorable & ancient memory, when the plague hath infected it, or thieves possess it? And who, in their right senses, will join themselves to that Temple, which after pretence of long standing, stately building, and of many such perogatives and royalties, is found to be besmeared with superstitions, and profaned with innumerable Idols? Why should we delight to dwell there, where God hath refused to dwell with us.

I publish this argument as no new thing to your Lordship: but, wherein your well experienced knowledge is able to inform me. Only I have been bold, through your thrice honored Name, to transmit this small Discourse to the world: emboldened by the long proof I have had of your constant love to the Truth, and the gracious Piety of your most noble

Mother, the best encouragement of my poor labors on earth. The best blessings of God be still multiplied upon her, yourself, your religious Lady, and your honorable Family: which is continually implored by

Your Lordships humble Servant. THO. ADAMS.

THE TEMPLE.

2. COR. 6.16.

What agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols?

IT is not fit, they should be too familiar or near together in this world, whose portions shall be so far asunder in the world to come. The Sheep and Goats are indeed now blended promiscuously, and none can distinguish them here, but he that shall separate them hereafter: the right and left hand of the last Tribunal shall declare them. But they that be alien or opposite to us in Faith and Profession, are manifest, and we have a frequent charge De non commiscendo. Now the nearer this ill matched conjunction, the more intolerable: the same board, ill; the same bed, worse; worst of all, the same Temple. So the Apostle begins his dehortation, Bee not unequally yoked with unbelievers: so he ends it, What agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols! Divers seeds of grain in one ground, diverse kinds of beasts in one yoke, diverse sorts of cloth in one garment, were expressly forbidden under the Law: and shall several Religions be allowed in one Church under the Gospel?

The absurdness of such a mixture is here illustrated by many oppositions; the sound of all which is Interrogative, the sense Negative. Righteousness and Unrighteousness, Light and Darkness, Christ and Belial, the Believer and the Infidel; these can have no society, no communion, no concord, no conjunction; and What agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols?

I need not by Art divide these words, for they are divided by nature. Now as Quae Deus coniunxit, nemo separet, Those things that God hath joined together, let no man put asunder: so Quae Deus separavit, nemo coniungat, Those things that God hath put asunder, let no man join together. The scope of the Text, and the matter of my Discourse, is to separate Idols from the Temple of God; the holy Ghost hath divided them to my hands: they cannot agree in his sentence, let them never agree in our practice: cursed is he that goes about to compound this controversy. The Temple is holy, Idols profane; it is not lawful to mixe Sacra profanis. The Temple is for God, Idols for the Devil: God and the Devil admit no reconciliation. Therefore as two hostile nations, after some treaty of peace, neither liking the proposed conditions, break off in a rage, In hoc vterque consentimus, quod consentire nolumus, in this we both consent, that we will not consent at all; so be it here agreed, that no agreement can be made. In composing differences betwixt man and man, betwixt family and family, betwixt kingdom and kingdom, Beati Pacifici, Blessed are the Peace makers. But in reconciling Christ and Belial, the Temple of God and Idols, Maledicti pacifici, Cursed are the peace-makers. Here Bella geri placeat magnos habitura triumphos. God himself in Paradise did first put the quarrel, his Apostle hath here given the Alarm, and he deserves a malediction that sounds a retreat.

But as no battle can be well fought without order, and martial array, so no discourse can be made profitable without some method. The Temple therefore we will suppose to be God's Castle, and Idolatry the Invasion of it. This Castle is but one, Idols are many. The Champions that God hath set to defend his Castle, are especially or principally Princes and Pastors, the Magistracy and the Ministry; the adversary forces that fight against it be the Devils mercenary Soldiers. The Munition on the one side is the Divine Scripture, the sacred Word of God: the Engines, Ordnance, and Instruments of assault on the other side, are Idols, Traditions, and those carnal inventions, wherewith the corrupt heart of man seeks to batter it. This Siege is continual, this feud implacable, the difference irreconcilable. Yet at last the war shall end, with the ruin of those enemies, in the triumph of the righteous, and to the everlasting glory of God?

Now though this war be every way spiritual, it is diverse ways considerable. There is a material, and there is a mystical Temple: there are external, and internal Idols: there be ordinary, and extraordinary Soldiers. Every Christian, as he is a Temple of God, so not without the assault of Idols: there is a civil war, a Rebellion within him, wherewith he is continually exercised. In this militant estate of the Church none are free: only he that gives full allowance to his own corruptions, is not a Temple of God, but a Synagogue of Satan; a sink of uncleanness, rather than a Sanctuary of holiness. Thus from one general arise many particulars; and you will say, Behold a company; as Leah said of her son Gad, a Troupe cometh. Yet all these branches have but one root: they are but like the wheels of a Clock, taken a little in sunder to view, then to be put together again. Let not their number discourage your attention. When a wealthy favorite of the world sent his servant to bespeak lodging for him, he told the Host, Here will come to night the Lord of such a Manor, the Land-lord of such a Town, the Keeper of such a Forest, the Master of such an Office, the Lay-parson of such a Parish, a Knight, a Justice of Peace, a Gentleman, an Usurer, and my Master; Alas, answers the Host, I have not lodging for half so many: Bee content, replies the servant, for all these are but one man. So if you distrust your memories for room to entertain so many observations, yet be comforted, for all have but this one Sum, There is no agreement betwixt the Temple of God and Idols.

The Temple.

That which was built by Solomon, was justly called the Wonder of the world: a white and glorious Monument, set on the hill of Zion, inviting passengers to see it, and amazing their eyes when they beheld it. It was of white Marble without, of Cedar and Gold within, all of the best, all beautiful, precious, durable. So magnificent was that holy Structure, that all nations have admired it, all times celebrated it Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion. While the favor of heaven was set upon Jerusalem, the joy of the whole earth was mount Zion. It is fit, he that made the world a house for Man, should have a house in this world made for himself: neither could it be too costly, seeing all the materials that went to it were his own. Every rotten Cottage is too good for Satan, no Fabric could be too sumptuous for God. While his people dwelt in Tents, Himself was content to dwell in a Tabernacle: in the flitting condition of Israel, he would have his own house a movable, that they might never remove without him. But when their residence was settled in the promised Land, he would have his Tabernacle turned into a Temple; that they dwelling where he appointed them, He might also dwell among them. The former was for motion, the latter for rest: the one for progress, the other his standing house. All this while God had but one House at once: first the Tabernacle, then that gave place to the Temple, and Solomon's Temple being defaced, was supplied by Zorobabels. Now he hath many houses, even so many as there be nations, as there be congregations, as there be persons professing Christ. We have houses of our own, why should not God have his? A Prince hath more houses than one, why should the King of Heaven be abridged? A King in his own person can dwell but in one house at once, let God have never so many, he can at once fill them all. He hath a house of flesh, so every Believer is his Temple: a house of stone, so this material one is his Temple: a house neither of flesh nor stone, but immaterial, immortal in the heavens. And as Christ says, that in his Fathers House there are many Mansions; so in his Fathers militant Church there are many houses.

It were vain to ask what God should do with a house, when we consider what we do with our own: what, but dwell in it? But how God doth dwell in it, seems to be a question: seeing the Apostle saith, that he dwells not in Temples made with hands. Indeed he dwells not in them, as we dwell in ours. Our house defends us, God defends his house: our house comprehends us, God comprehends his house. We are only within our houses, and they are without us: God is so within his house, that he is also without it, elsewhere, everywhere, yea his house is within him. When we are abroad, we cannot keep our houses; yea when we are in them asleep, they serve to keep us. God can never be absent from his, nor doth the keeper of this Temple ever sleep. Now every material Temple, wherein the Saints are assembled, the truth of the Gospel is preached and professed, the holy Sacraments duly administered, and the Lord's Name is invoked and worshipped, is the Temple of God.

Why is it called His Temple, but for the testification of his presence? When Cain stood excommunicated for murdering his brother, and might not come to the place appointed for God's service, he is said to be cast out from the presence of the Lord. Some have interpreted the like of Jonah's flying from his presence; that he fled from the place where the Prophets used to stand ready to be sent of God. Nadab and Abihu died before the Lord; that is, before the Altar of the Lord. That which was done before the Ark or Altar, in the Tabernacle or Temple, was said to be done coram Domino. And yet too many come to the Temple with so little reverence, as if they thought God were not at home, or did not dwell in his own house. But the Lord is present in his Temple: in vain shall we hope to find him elsewhere, if we do not seek him here. I will be in the midst of you, gathered together in my Name: not anywhere, not everywhere, but here. Indeed, no place excludes him, but this place is sure of him: he fills all places with his presence, he fills this with his gracious presence. Here he both hears us, and is heard of us: Audit orantes, docet audientes; he hears our prayers, and teacheth us our lessons. No place sends up faithful prayers in vain, no place hath such a promise of hearing as the Temple. It is the Lord's Court of Audience, his Highness Court of Requests. There humble souls open their grievances, from thence they return laden with graces. Why are many so void of goodness, but because they are negligent of the public devotions? They seek not the Lord where he may be found, therefore deserve to miss him where they pretend to seek him. Why should they think to find God in their Closets, while they care not to seek him in his Temples? When we need the help of our friend, do we tarry till we meet him by chance, or till he come to us, or shall we not rather go home to his house? Peter and John went up into the Temple at the hour of Prayer: they thought it not sufficient to pray in their private chambers, but join themselves with the Congregation, as a Navy Royal to transport their holy Merchandise to heaven. Lift up your hands in the Sanctuary, and bless the Lord. Pure hands are accepted in every place; but especially in the Sanctuary. What follows? The Lord that made heaven and earth, bless thee out of Zion. He says not, the Lord that made heaven, bless thee upon earth: nor, the Lord that made earth, bless thee out of heaven: but the Lord that made heaven and earth, bless thee out of Zion. Blessings come originally from heaven, mediately through Zion. In the Temple let us seek, in the Temple we shall find those precious treasures and comforts of Jesus Christ.

This Temple is not without some enemies. Besides those profane Politicians, that think with one Eustathius, that there is no use of Temples: or those Massilians, who (as Damascene reports) did add to other Heresies Templorum contemptum: or those Pseudo-Apostoli, that laughed at a Temple full of Suppliants, as a house full of fools. Or those that be of Jereboam's mind, who to settle himself in the kingdom of Israel, diverts the people from God's house at Jerusalem. Instead of that snowy & glittering Temple, they shall have two golden representations. Zion is too far off, these shall be near home: that is a tedious way of devotion, these both compendious and plausible. As Josephus brings him in persuading them; My good people and friends, you cannot but know that no place is without God, and that no place doth contain God; wheresoever we pray, he can hear us; wheresoever we worship, he can see us: therefore the Temple is superfluous, the journey needless, God is better able to come to you, then you are to go to him. Beside these, the Temple of God hath two kinds of foes.

1. The Anabaptists tell us; that the old superstition hath made those houses fitter for Stables then for Churches; that they ought no more to be called Templa Dei, but Templa Idolorum; as they pretend, the Passover was called in those corrupt times, not Pascha Dei, but Pascha Iudaeorum. By the same reason they would have removed all Princes, because some have abused their governments. But we say, though evil men abuse good things, yet if a kingdom were not a lawful State, David and Josiah would never have been Kings; for good men do not use evil things. The Temple in Christ's time was become a den of thieves, yet even then and there did he send up devout and holy Prayers. It is a gross ignorance that cannot distinguish betwixt a fault that proceeds ex natura facti, and that which proceeds ex abusu boni: the former is malum simpliciter, the other is but malum per accidens. No man pulls down his house, because uncleanness hath been committed in one of the chambers. Let offenders be removed from the Temple, not the Temple demolished because of offenses. The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you, saith Christ; not quite taken away, but only taken from the Jews. When GOD threatened the like to Saul, he did not mean to have no more Kings, or to reduce it to the former state of Judges: no, only the kingdom shall lose Saul, but Israel shall not lose the kingdom. It is a Maxim in nature, Things dedicated to God, are not to be transferred to the uses of men: a principle in Philosophy, Quae recte data sunt, eripi non licet: and a proverb among our children, To give a thing, and take a thing, is fit for the Devils darling.

2. The Sacrilegious, to whom God is beholding, if they let his Temple stand; but for the maintenance of it, they will be so bold with him, as either to share half, or leave him none. There be many that pray in the Temple, who yet also prey on the Temple: as if a thief should do homage to that house in the day, which he means to rob in the night. But alas, why should I touch that sore which is all dead flesh? or speak against Sacrilege In orbe sacrilego, among them that delight in it? Where Lawyers are feed, hired, bribed to maintain Sacrilege, God and his poor Ministers may even hold their peace. Something would be spoken for Zion's sake, but I take this place and time for neither the right Vbi nor Quando. We know, Abigail would not tell Nabal of his drunkenness, till he was awake from his wine. Whensoever it shall please God to awake you from this intoxication, we may then find a season to speak to you. But God keep you from Nabal's destiny; that when this sin shall be objected to your Consciences on your death-beds, your hearts do not then die in you like a stone. One thing let me beg of you in the Name of him, whom you thus wrong: Howsoever you persist to rob the Temple of the due Salary, yet do not stand to justify it. By imploring mercy perhaps you may be saved, but by justifying the Injury, you cannot but be lost. As the French King, Francis the first said to a woman kneeling and crying to him for Justice; Stand up woman, for Justice I owe thee; if thou beggest anything, beg mercy. So if you request anything of God, let it be mercy, for he owes you Justice: and in this point, God be merciful to you all.

It was David's earnest prayer, One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple. There are many that pray David's words, but not with David's heart. Vnum petij, one thing I have desired, De praeterito, for the time past: & hoc requiram, this I will still seek after, de futuro, for the time to come: I have required it long, and this suite I will urge till I have obtained it. What? to dwell in some of the houses of God all the days of my life, and to leave them to my children after me: not to serve him there with devotion, but to make the place mine own possession. These love the House of God too well, they love it to Have, and to Hold: but because the Conveyance is made by the Lawyer, and not by the Minister, their Title will be found naught in the end: and if there be not a Nifi prius to prevent them, yet at the great day of universal Audit, the Judge of all the world shall condemn them. By this way, the nearer to the Church, the further from God. The Lord's Temple is ordained to gain us to him, not for us to gain it from him. If we love the Lord, we will love the habitation of his House, and the place where his Honor dwelleth: that so by being humble frequenters of his Temple below, we may be made noble Saints of his House above, the glorious kingdom of Jesus Christ.

These be the enemies to the Temple, whereof the first would separate Dominum à Templo, the other Templum à Domino. they would take God from the Temple, these would take the Temple from God. Let me conclude this point with two watch-words.

1. The first concerns us of the Ministry, the waiters of the Temple. It hath been an old saying, De Templo omne bonum, de Templo omne malum: all good or evil comes from the Temple. Where the Pastor is good, and the people good, he may say to them, as Paul to his Corinthians, Nonne opus meum vos estis in Domino, Are not ye my work in the Lord? Where the Pastor is bad, and the people no better, they may say to him, Nonne destructis nostra tu es in seculo, art not thou our destruction in the world? It is no wonder, if an abused Temple make a disordered people. A wicked Priest is the worst creature upon God's earth: no sin is so black, as that shall appear from under a white Surplesse. Every man's iniquity is so much the heinouser, as his place is holier. The sin of the Clergy is like a Rheum, which rising from the stomach into the head, drops down upon the lungs, fretting most noble and the vital parts, till all the members languish into corruption. The lewd sons of Eli were so much the less tolerable, by sinning in the Tabernacle. Their sacrifices might do away the sins of others; no sacrifice could do away their own. Many a soul was the cleaner for the blood of those beasts they shed; their own souls were the fouler by it. By one and the same service, they did expiate the people's offenses, and multiply their own. Our Clergy is no Charter for heaven. Such men are like the conveyances of Land, Evidences and Instruments to settle others in the kingdom of heaven, while themselves have no part of that they convey. It is no impossible thing, for men at once to show the way to Heaven with their tongue, and lead the way to Hell with their foot. It was not a Jewish Ephod, it is not a Romish Cowle, that can privilege an evil doer from punishment. Therefore it was God's charge to the executioners of his Judgments, Begin at my own Sanctuary: and the Apostle tells us, that Judgment shall begin at the house of God. and Christ entering into his Prophetical Office, began reformation at his Fathers house. Let our devout and holy behavior prevent this; and by our reverent carriage in the Temple of God, let us honor the God of the Temple. It should be our endeavor to raise up seed unto our elder Brother, to win souls unto Christ. Nunquam cessate lucrari Christo, qui lucrati estis à Christo. If Christ, while he was upon the Cross, saith Bernard, had given me some drops of his own blood in a Vial, how carefully would I have kept them, how dearly esteemed them, how laid them next my heart? But now he did not think it fit to trust me with those drops, but he hath entrusted to me a flock of his lambes, those souls for whom he shed his blood, like whom his own blood was not so dear unto him: upon these let me spend my care, my love, my labor, that I may present them holy Saints to my dear Lord Jesus.

2. The other concerns all Christians; that they beware, lest for the abuses of men, they despise the Temple of God. For as the Altar cannot sanctify the Priest, so nor can the unholiness of the Priest dishallow the Altar. His sin is his own, and cannot make you guilty: the virtue and comfort is from God, and this is still able to make you holy. When we read, that the sin of the Priests was great before the Lord, for men abhorred the offering of the Lord: this we all confess, was ill done of the Priests; and I hope no man thinks, it was well done of the people. Say their sins, yea their very persons were worthy to be abhorred, shall men therefore scorn the Sanctuary, & cast that contempt on the Service of God, which belongs to the vices of man? This were to add our own evil to the evil of others, and to offend God because he was offended. Cannot the faults of men displease us, but we must needs fall out with God? Do we not provoke him justly to abhor our souls, when we so unjustly contemn his service? Know, that he is able to sanctify thy heart, even by the ministry of that man whose heart he hath not yet sanctified. The virtue consists not in the human action, but in the divine Institution. We say of the Sacraments themselves, much more of the Ministers; Isti non tribuunt, quod per istos tribuitur: these do not give us, what God doth give us by them.

But this age is sick of such a wanton levity, that we make choice of the Temple, according to our fancy of the Preacher: and so tie up the free Spirit of God from blowing where he pleaseth, that he shall be beholding to the grace of the Speaker, for giving grace to the hearer. So whereas Paul ties Faith to hearing, they will tie hearing to Faith; and as they believe the holiness of the man, so they expect fruit of the Sermon. This is to make Paul something, and Apollos something; whereas Paul himself says they are both nothing. God only gives the increase, and who shall appoint him by whom he shall give it? Let the seed be good, and the ground good, and the Lord will send fruit whosoever be the Sower. But while you make hearing a matter of sport, Preaching is too often become an exercise of wit. Words are but the Images of matter, and (you shall hear anon) it is not lawful to worship Images. It dangerously misbecomes the Temple, when anything shall be intended there, but the glory of God, and gaining of souls to Jesus Christ.

Thus much concerning the Temple; the next point I must fall upon is

Idols.

Idol in Greek signifies a resemblance or representation, and differs not from Image in Latin: both at first taken in a good sense: but the corruption of times hath bred a corruption of words; and Idol is now only taken for the Image of a false god. Every Idol is an Image, but every Image is not an Idol but every Image made and used for religious purposes, is an Idol. The Images of God are Idols; wherewith Popery abounds. An old man, sitting in a chair, with a triple Crown on his head, and Pontifical robes on his back, a Dove hanging at his beard, and a Crucifix in his arms; is their Image of the Trinity. This Picture sometime serves them for a god in their Churches, and sometime for a sign at thir tap-houses: so that it is a common saying in many of their Cities, Such a Gentleman lies at the Trinity, and his servants at God's head. This they seem to do, as if they would in some sort requite their Maker: because God made man according to his Image, therefore they, by way of recompense, will make God according to man's Image. But this certainly they durst not do, without putting the second Commandment out of their Catechisms, and the whole Decalogue out of their Consciences.

I intend no polemical discourse of this point, by examining their Arguments: that business is fitter for the School, then the Pulpit. And, O God, that either School or Pulpit in Christendom should be troubled about it! that any man should dare to make that a question, which the Lord hath so plainly and punctually forbidden! Beside the Iniquity, how grievous is the absurdity? How is a body without a spirit, like to a spirit without a body? A visible picture, like an invisible nature? How would the King take it in scorn, to have his picture made like a Weasel or a Hedgehog? And yet the difference betwixt the greatest Monarch, and the least Emmet, is nothing to the distance betwixt a finite & an infinite. If they allege with the Anthropomorphites, that the Scripture attributes to God hands, and feet, and eyes: why therefore may they not represent him in the same forms? But we say, the Scripture also speaks of his covering us with the shadow of his wings; why therefore do they not paint him like a Bird with feathers? If they say, that he appeared to Daniel in this form, because he is there called the Ancient of days: we answer, that God's Commandments, and not his apparitions, be rules to us: by the former we shall be judged, and not by the latter. It is mad Religion, to neglect what he bids us do, and to imitate what he hath done: as if we should despise his Laws, and go about to counterfeit his thunder. God is too infinite for the comprehension of our souls, why should we then labor to bring him into the narrow compass of boards & stones? Certainly, that should not be Imaged, which cannot be Imagined. But Christ was a man, why may not his Image be made? Some answer, that no man can make an Image of Christ, without leaving out the chief part of him, which is his Divinity. It was the Godhead united to the manhood, that makes him Christ: sure this cannot be painted. But why should we make Christ's Image without Christ's warrant? The Lord hath forbidden the making of any Image, whether of things in heaven, where Christ is; or of things on earth, where Christ was; to worship them. Now till God revoke that precept, what can authorise this practice?

Their Images of the Saints, employed to such religious purposes, make them no less then Idolaters. It is a silly shift to say, the honor done to the Images, reflects upon the represented Saints. When they clothe an Image, is the Saint ere the gayer or warmer? when they offer to an Image, is the Saint ere the richer? When they kneel to an Image, the Saint esteems himself no more worshipped, then the King holds himself honored, when a man speaks to his picture before his face. Therefore some of them are driven to confess plainly, that the Image is worshipped for it self. But could the Saints in heaven be heard speak upon earth, they would disclaim that honor, which is prejudicial to their Maker. As Calvin is not afraid to say of the blessed Virgin, that she would hold it less despite done to her, if they should pull her by the hair of the head, or trample her in the dirt, then to set her in rivalry with her Son and God and Savior. But they tell us, that they worship not the Images of false God's, as did the Pagans; but only the Images of God's own servants, and choice friends. But will the jealous God endure this, that his honor be taken from him, upon condition it be not bestowed upon his enemies, but on his friends? Idolatry is called Adultery in the Scriptures: and shall a woman quit her self from offense, because though she do commit adultery, yet it is with none but her husbands friends? Is this done in a good meaning, or in love to Christ? It is but a bad excuse of a wife, to say that she exceedingly loves her husband, therefore must have some other man to kiss and embrace in his absence, and all this in love to her husband.

We are all by nature prone to Idolatry: when we were little children, we loved babies: and being grown men, we are apt to love Images. And as Babies be children's Idols, so Idols & Images be men's Babies. It seems that Idols are fittest for Babies, therefore so the Apostle fits his caution, Babes keep yourselves from Idols. As all our knowledge comes by sense, so we naturally desire a sensible object of devotion: finding it easier to see Pictures, then to comprehend Doctrines, and to form prayers to the Images of men, then to form man to the Image of God.

Nor can they excuse themselves from Idolatry, by saying they put their confidence in God, not in the Images of God. For when the Israelites had made their golden Calf, and danced about it, one calf about another; they were not such beasts, as to think that beast their God. But so can Superstition besot the mind, that it makes us not men, before it can wake us Idolaters. What do they say? Make us gods that shall go before us. Every word is wicked, absurd, senseless. 1. They had seen the power of God in many miraculous deliverances before their eyes; the voice of God had scarce yet done thundering in their ears: he had said, I am Jehovah, thou shalt have no other gods; and this they trembling heard him speak out of the midst of the flames: and yet they dare speak of another god. 2. The singular number would not serve them, make us gods. How many gods would they have? Is there anymore then one? 3. Make us gods; and were not they strange gods that could be made? Instead of acknowledging God their Maker, they command the making of gods. 4. This charge they put upon Aaron, as if he were able to make a god? Aaron might help to spoil a man, either himself or them, but he could not make a man, not one hair of a man, much less a god: and yet they say to him, Make us gods. 5. And what should these gods do? Go before us? Alas, how should they go, that were not able to stand? how go before others, that could not move themselves? Oh the blockishness of men, that make blocks to worship! Otherwise, how could they that are the Images of God, fall down before the Images of creatures. For health, they call upon that which is weak: for life, they pray to that which is dead: and a prosperous journey they beg of that which cannot set a foot forward.

Yet as their sin was bad enough, let not our uncharitableness make it worse. Let us not think them so unreasonable, as to think that Calf a God; or that the Idol which they made today, did bring them out of Egypt three months before. It was the true God they meant to worship in the Calf, and yet (at the best) even that Idolatry was damnable. So charity bids us hope of the Papists, that they do not take that bord or stone for their God, yet withal we find that God doth take them for Idolaters. They tell us (with a new distinction) that they forbid the people, to give Divine worship to Images: but we say, they had better forbid the people to have Images. A block lies in the high way, and a watchman is set by it to warn the Passengers; Take heed, here is a block. But how if the watchman fall a sleep? Whether is the safer course, quite to remove the block out of the way, or to trust the passengers safety upon the watchman's vigilancy? As for their watchmen, commonly they are as very Images as the Images themselves: and how should one block remove another? When Jeroboam had set up his two Idols in Israel, he rakes up his Priests out of the common kennel; the basest of the people were good enough for such a bastard devotion: wooden priests were fit enough to wait upon golden Deities. So when Micah had made him a costly Idol, he hires him a beggarly Levite. No otherwise did the Painter excuse himself, for drawing the Images of Peter and Paul too ruddy and high coloured in the face; that howsoever they were while they lived, pale with fasting and preaching, yet now they must needs become red with blushing at the errors and ignorance of their successors; for such with a loud noise they give themselves out to be.

To conclude, if it were as easy to convince Idolaters, as it is to confound & tread down their Idols, this labor of Confutation had been well spared, or were soon ended. But if nothing can reclaim them from this superstitious practice, let them read their fearful sentence. Their place shall be without, among the dogs, and those desperate sinners incapable of forgiveness.

The strong, the Idol which they made their strength, shall be as towe, and the maker or worshipper thereof as a spark, and they shall both burn together in everlasting fire, and none shall quench them. Now the Lord open their eyes to see, and sanctify their hearts to yield, that there is no agreement betwixt the Temple of God and Idols: which is the next point, whereof I shall speak with what brevity I can, and with what fidelity I ought.

No agreement.

There be some points which the wrangling passions of men have left further asunder, then they found them; about which there needed not have been such a noise. But things that are in their own natures contrary, and opposed by the ordinance of God, can never be reconciled. An enemy may be made a friend, but enmity can never be made friendship. The air that is now light, may become dark: but light can never become darkness. Contraries in the abstract are out of all composition. The sick body be recovered to health, but health can never be sickness. The sinner may be made righteous, but sin can never become righteousness. Fire and water, peace and war, love and hatred, truth and falsehood, faith and infidelity, Religion and Idolatry, can never be made friends: there can be no agreement betwixt the Temple of God and Idols.

God is Ens entium, All in all: an Idol is nothing in the world, saith the Apostle: now All and Nothing are most contrary. Idolatry quite takes away Faith, a fundamental part of Christian religion: for an Idol is a thing visible, but Faith is of things invisible. The Idol is a false evidence of things seen, Faith is a true evidence of things not seen. Besides, God can defend himself, save his friends, plague his enemies: but Idols nec hosts abscindere possunt quasi dij, nec se abscondere quasi homines; they can neither revenge themselves on provokers, like gods; nor hide themselves from injurers, like men.

The foolish Philistines thought that the same house could hold both the Ark & Dagon; as if an insensible Statue were a fit companion for the living God. In the morning they come to thank Dagon for the victory, and to fall down before him, before whom they thought the God of Israel was fallen: and loe, now they find the keeper flat on his face before the prisoner. Had they formerly of their own accord, with awful reverence, laid him in this posture of an humble prostration; yet God would not have brooked the indignity of such an entertainment. But seeing they durst set up their Idol cheek by cheek with their Maker, let them go read their folly in the Temple floor, & confess that he which did cast their god so low, could cast them lower. Such a shame doth the Lord owe all them, which will be making matches betwixt him and Belial. Yet they consider not, how should this God raise us, who is not able to stand, or rise himself? Strange they must confess it, that whereas Dagon was wont to stand, and themselves to fall down; now Dagon was fallen down, and themselves stood; & must help up with their own god. Yea, their god seems to worship them on his face, and to crave that succor from them, which he was never able to give them. Yet in his place they set him again; and now lift up those hands to him, which helped to lift him up; and prostrate those faces to him, before whom he lay prostrate. So can Idolatry turn men into the stocks and stones which they worship: They that make them, are like unto them. But will the Lord put it up thus? No, the next fall shall burst it to pieces; that they may sensibly perceive, how God scorns a Competitor, and that there is no agreement betwixt Him and Idols. Now what is the difference betwixt the Philistines and Papists? The Philistines would set God in the Temple of Idols, the Papists would set Idols in the Temple of God. Both agree in this, that they would make God and Idols agree together. But Manasseh found to his cost, that an Idol might not be endured in the house of God.

How vain then, are the endeavours to reconcile our church with that of Rome; when God hath interposed this bar, there is No agreement betwixt him and Idols? Either they must receive the Temple without Idols, or we must admit Idols with the Temple, or this composition cannot be. There is a contention betwixt Spain & the Netherlanders, concerning the right of that Country: but should not the Inhabitants well fortify the coasts, the raging sea would soon determine the controversy, and by force of her waves take it from them both. There is a contestation betwixt us and the Pontificians, which is the true Church: but should not we in mean time carefully defend the Faith of Christ against Idols, Superstition would quickly decide the business, and take the possession of truth from us both. A proud & perverse stomach keeps them from yielding to us: God and his holy word forbids our yielding to them: they will have Idols or no Temple, we will have the Temple and no Idols: now till the agreement be made betwixt the Temple and Idols, no atonement can be hoped betwixt us & them.

I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. He that would not endure a little leaven in the lump, what would he have said of a little poison? If Moses joined with Christ, the ceremonial Law with the Gospel, were so offensive to him; how would he have brooked Christ and Belial, light and darkness, righteousness and unrighteousness, the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils, the Table of the Lord, and the table of devils, the Temple of God and Idols? In the tuning of an Instrument, those strings that be right we meddle not with, but set the rest higher or lower, so as they make a proportion & harmony with the former. The same God who of his gracious mercy, hath put us in the right & unjarring harmony of truth, bring them home in true consent to us, but never suffer us to fall back unto them. Hitherto the contention between us hath not been for circumstance, but substance; not for the bounds, but for the whole Inheritance: whether God or man, grace or nature, the blood of Christ or the milk of Mary, the written Canon or unwritten Tradition, God's ordinance in establishing Kings, or the Popes usurpation in deposing them, shall take place in our consciences, and be the rule of our faiths and lives.

We have but one Foundation, the infallible word of God: they have a new foundation, the voice of their Church, which they equalize in presumption of certainty with the other. We have but one Head, that is Christ; they have gotten a new head, & dare not but believe him, whatsoever Christ says. Sponsus Ecclesiae nostrae Christus, Christ is our husband: they have a new husband. While Rome was a holy Church, she had a holy husband: but now as Christ said to the woman of Samaria, He whom thou now hast, is not thine husband: so he whom the Romanists have now got, is an adulterer, he is no husband. So that here is Foundation against foundation, Head against head, Husband against adulterer, Doctrine against doctrine, Faith against unbelief, Religion against superstition, the Temple of God against Idols; and all these so diametrically opposed, that the two Poles shall sooner meet, then these be reconciled. Michael and the Dragon cannot agree in one Heaven, nor the Ark and Dagon in one house, nor Jacob and Esau in one womb, nor John and Cerinthus in one Bath, nor the clean and the leprous in one camp, nor truth and falsehood in one mouth, nor the Lord and Mammon in one heart, nor religion & superstition in one kingdom, nor God and Idols in one Temple. The silly old Hermit was sorry, that God and the Devil should be at such odds, and he would undertake to make them friends: but the Devil bad him even spare his labor, for they two were everlastingly fallen out. No less vain a business doth that man attempt, that would work an agreement betwixt the Temple of God and Idols.

I take leave of this point with a caution. Fly the places of infection, come not within the smoke of Idols, lest it smother the zeal of God's Temple in your hearts. Revolting Israel calls for gods; but why should this god of theirs be fashioned like a Calf? What may be the reason of this shape? Whence had they the original of such an Idol? Most likely in Egypt: they had seen a black Calf with white spots worshipped there. This Image still ran in their minds, and stole their hearts, & now they long to have it set up before their eyes. Egypt will not out of their fancies: when they wanted meat, they thought of the Egyptian flesh pots: now they want Moses, they think of the Egyptian Idols. They brought gold out of Egypt; that very gold was contagious: the very Eare-rings and Jewels of Egypt are fit to make Idols. The Egyptian burdens made them run to the true God, the Egyptian examples led them to a false god. What mean our wanderers by running to Rome & such superstitious places, unless they were weary of the Church of God, & would fetch home Idols? If it were granted, that there is some little truth among them, yet who is so simple as to seek his corn among a great heap of chaff, and that far off; who may have it at home, winnowed and cleansed to his hand?

The very sight of evil is dangerous, and they be rare eyes that do not convey this poison to our hearts. I have heard of some, that even by laboring in the Spanish galleys, have come home the slaves of their superstitions. Egypt was always an unlucky place for Israel, as Rome is for England. The people sojourned there, and they brought home one Calf: Jeroboam sojourned there, and he brought home Two calves: an old woman (in all likelihood) had sojourned there, and she brought home a great many. The Romish Idols have not the shape of calves, they have the sense and meaning of those calves: and to fill the Temple full of Calves, what is it but to make Religion guilty of Pulls?

Consider it well, ye that make no scruple of superstitious assemblies; it will be hard for you to dwell in a Temple of Idols untainted. Not to sin the sins of the place we live in, is as strange, as for pure liquor tunned up in a musty vessel, not to smell of the cask. Egypt will teach even a Joseph to swear: a Peter will learn to curse in the high Priests Hall. If we be not scorched with the fire of bad company, we shall be sure to be blacked with the smoke. The soundest body that is, may be infected with a contagious air. Indeed a man may travel through Ethiopia unchanged, but he cannot dwell there without a complexion discoloured. How hath the common practice of others brought men to the devilish fashion of swearing, or to the brutish habit of drinking, by their own confessions? Superstition, if it have once got a secret liking of the heart, like the plague will hang in the very clothes; and after long concealment, break forth in an unlooked for infection. The Israelites, after all their erring in the wilderness, will still smell of Egypt. We read God saying, Out of Egypt have I called my Son. That God did call his Son out of Egypt, it is no wonder: the wonder is that he did call him into Egypt. It is true, that Egypt could not hurt Christ: the King doth not follow the Court, the Court waits upon the King: wheresoever Christ was, there was the Church. But be our Israelites so sure of their sons, when they send them into Egypt, or any superstitious places? It was their presumption to send them in, let it be their repentance to call them out.

The familiar society of orthodox Christians with mis-believers, hath by God ever been most strictly forbidden: and the nearer this conjunction, the more dangerous, and displeasing to the forbidders. No man can choose a worse friend, then one whom God holds his enemy. When Religion and Superstition meet in one bed, they commonly produce a mongrel generation. If David marry Maachah, their issue proves an Absalom. If Solomon love idolatrous women, here is enough to overthrow him with all his wisdom. Other strange women only tempt to lust, these to mis-religion; and by joining his heart to theirs, he shall disjoin it from God. One Religion matching with another, not seldom breed an Atheist, one of no religion at all. I do not say, this is a sufficient cause of divorce after it is done, but of restraint before it is done. They may be one flesh, though they be not one spirit. The difference of religion or virtue makes no divorce here, the great Judges sentence shall do that hereafter. And the believing husband is never the further from heaven, though he cannot bring his unbelieving wife along with him. The better shall not carry up the worse to heaven, nor the worse pull down the better to hell. Quod fieri non debuit, factum valet. But now, is there no tree in the Garden, but the forbidden? none for me to love, but one that hates the truth? Yes, let us say to them in plain fidelity, as the sons of Jacob did to the Shichemites in dissembling policy; We cannot give our sister to a man that is uncircumcised: either consent you to us in the truth of our Religion, or we will not consent to you in the league of our Communion.

Saint Chrysostom calls this a plain denial of Christ. He that eateth of the meat offered to Idols, Gustu negavit Christum, hath denied Christ with his tasting. If he but handle those things with delight, Tactu negavit Christum, he hath denied Christ with his touching. Though he touch not, taste not, yet if he stand to look upon the Idolatry with patience, Visu negavit Christum, he hath denied Christ with his eyes. If he listen to those execrable charms, Auditu negavit Christum, he hath denied Christ with his ears. Omitting all these, if he do but smell to the Incense with pleasure, O doratu negavit Christum, he hath denied Christ with his smelling. It is said of the Israelites, Commisti sunt inter gentes, They were mingled among the Heathen. What followed? Presently, they learned their works. The reason why the Raven returned not to Noah's Ark, is given by some, because it met with a dead carcass by the way. Why do we pray, Deliver us from evil; but that we imply, (besides all other mischiefs) there is an infectious power in it to make us evil? Let us do that we pray, and pray that we may do it. Yea Lord, free us from Egypt, estrange us from Rome, separate us from Idols, deliver us from evil, For thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

Thus far we have taken a literal survey of the Text; concerning the material Temple, external or objectual Idols, and the impossibility of their agreement. Now to come nearer home to our selves in a moral Exposition: here first

The Temple of God

Is the Church of Christ; and they are so like, that we often interchange the terms, calling a Temple the Church, & the Church a Temple of God. The material Temple under the Law was a figure of the spiritual under the Gospel. The former was distinguished into three rooms; the Porch, the holy place, and the Sanctum Sanctorum, or Holy of holies. The Porch prefigured Baptism, which is the door whereby we enter into the Church of Christ. The Holy place, the communion of the militant church vply earth, separated from the world. The Hoon of holies, whereinto the high Priest only entered, & that once a year, presignified the glorious kingdom of heaven, whereinto the Lord Jesus entered once for all. There was one Court of the Temple common, whither access was denied to none: though they were unclean or uncircumcised, thus far they might be admitted. There was another Court within that, allowed to none but the Israelites, & of them to none but the clean. There was a third, proper only to the Priests and Levites, whither the Laity might not come: thus far they might bring their offerings, but further they might not offer to go. In the Temple it self there was one room, into which the Levites might not enter, the Priests might. Another, whither the Priests might not come; but only the high Priest, and even he but once yearly. Some passages of the Christian Church are common to all, even to the unclean hypocrites, and foul-hearted sinners. They have access to God's holy ordinances, and tread in his Courts; as the Pharisee came into the congregation, and Judas received the Communion. Other are secret and reserved, wherein the faithful only converse with God, and solace themselves in the sweet fruition of his gracious presence.

The material Temple in three divisions, seemed to be a clear representation of the Church in three degrees. The first signified the external and visible face of the Church, from which no professor of Christ is debarred. The second, the communion of the invisible Church upon earth. The last, the highest heaven of God's glorified Saints. Neither did those rooms more exceed one another, then do these parts of the spiritual house of Christ. What are the most polished corners of the Temple, to the spiritual & living stones of the Church? What be pebbles to Sapphires, or marbles to Diamonds? Howsoever some are more transported with insensible monuments, then with living Saints. As it was a complaint long since, Fulget Ecclesia in parietibus, luget in pauperibus. Yet Temples are built for men, not men for Temples: and what is a glorious edifice, when the whole world is not worth one soul? Dead walls be of small value, to the living Temples of the holy Ghost: yea, the temple of our body, to the temple of Christ's Body, his Church: yea the Temple of God's Church militant on earth, to that which is triumphant in heaven. What is silver and gold, Cedar and Marble, to those divine graces, faith, truth, piety, holiness? Solomon's Temple did last but some 430. years, the Church is for eternity. The Temple took up but a little space of ground, at most the Hill Zion, the Church is universally spread: in all parts of the world God hath his chosen.

Did our intellectual eyes truly behold the beauty of this Temple, we would with that good Emperor, esteem it better to be a member of the Church, than head of the kingdom. We would set this one thing against all worldly glories. As when Henry 4. that late Great king of France, was told of the king of Spain's ample dominions: as first he is king of Castile, and I (quoth Henry) am king of France: he is king of Navarre, and I am king of France: he is king of Portugal, and I am king of France: he is king of Naples, and I am king of France: he is king of the Sicilies, and I am king of France: he is king of Noua Hispania, the West Indies, and I am king of France: he thought the kingdom of France equivalent to all these. So let thy soul, O Christian, solace it self against all the wants of thy mortal pilgrimage, in this, that thou art a member of the church. Another hath more wit or learning, yet I am a Christian: another hath more honor and preferment on earth, yet I am a Christian: another hath more silver and gold and riches, yet I am a Christian: another hath large possessions, yet I have an Inheritance in heaven, I am a Christian. David thought it not so happy to be a King in his own house, as to be a door-keeper in God's house. Were our hearts thoroughly sanctified, we would under-value all honors to this, that we are parts of this spiritual Temple, the members of Jesus Christ.

Idols.

Every device of man in the service of God is a mere Idol. Whatsoever we invent out of God's School, or substitute in God's room, is to us an Idol. Howsoever we flatter our selves, with reflecting all the honor on God, yet he will reflect the vengeance on us. Shall a man speak deceitfully for God, or tell a lie for his glory? He is not so penurious of means to honor himself, as to be beholding to us for a lie. The doctrine of universal grace seems to make much for God's glory, but himself says it is a lie; for he will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. To say that Christ in the womb wrought many miracles, hath a fair show of honoring him; but who can say it is not a lie? Sure, we read no such matter. To distribute among the Saints departed several Offices; as one to have the charge of women in child-bed, another to be the Patron of such a City or Country; (to omit their protection of beasts, one for hogs, another for horses) seems to honor God in thus honoring them: but it is a lie, and a plain derogation to his universal providence: yea as absurd, as if the flies should take upon them to give the charges and offices of this kingdom. To say, the Saints in heaven know the occurrence of this nether world, and the condition of their ancient friends or children below, reading them in the Deity, as by the reflection of a glass; this is a fiction that carries a show of honoring God: but it doth indeed dishonor him, by making creatures as omniscient as their Maker. Besides, how absurd is it to say, that John in Patmos seeing Christ, did see all that Christ saw. If I standing on the ground, see a man on the top of a high Turret, do I see all that he seeth. If the sight of him that looketh, be to be measured by the sight of him on whom he looketh; it will follow that he which looketh on a blind man, should see nothing at all. And who seeth not the blindness of this consequence?

To say that all the worship done to the Virgin mother, redounds to the honor of her Son and God, is a gross falsehood. The Idolatrous Jews might as well have pretended the honor of God, when they worshipped the Queen of heaven. That fanatical vision of theirs, concerning the two ladders that reached up to heaven, while Christ was preparing to judge the world: the one Red, at the top whereof Christ sate: the other white, at the top whereof the Virgin sate and when the Friars could not get up the red ladder of Christ, but evermore tumbled down backward, S<sup>t</sup>. Francis called them up the white ladder of our Lady, and there they were received. Did this make for the honor of Christ, when the red blood of our Savior is not so able to bring men to heaven, as the white milk of his mother? which must needs be the moral or meaning of it. Or the observation of Barrhadius the Jesuit, who made bold to ask Christ, why in his ascension to heaven he did not take his mother along with him; and makes himself this answer: It may be, Lord, for fear lest thy heavenly Court should be in doubt, which of the two they should go first to meet, An tibi Domino suo, an ipsi Dominae suae, whether thee their Lord, or her their Lady: as if it had been well advised of Christ to leave his mother behind him, lest she should share part of his glory. Did this make for the honor of Christ? To choke up the knowledge of God, by preaching that Ignorance is the mother of Devotion, hath small color of honoring God. The ascribing of false miracles to the living or departed Saints, seems to honor God, but sure he will never thank them for it. Saint Augustine being sick, a blind man came to him, expecting that he could miraculously restore his sight: but that good Father sent him away with a check, Doest thou think that if I could cure thee by miracle, that I would not by miracle cure myself?

It is a foolish thought, that God will be glorified by a lie. Our judicial Astrologers, that tie men's destinies to the Stars and Planets, pretend God's honor, who hath given such virtue and influence to his creatures; but indeed make thē no better then Idols. Though the Sun and Moon be good and necessary, yet to adore the Sun and Moon is flat Idolatry. It was not Mercury that made the thief, nor Venus that made the strumpet: as when the husband cudgelled his adulterous wife, and she complained that he was unnatural to strike his own flesh; alleging that it was not she that played the harlot, but Venus in her: to whom he replied, that neither was it she that he did beat, but Venus in her, or rather Venus out of her.

To make this useful to our selves; let us take heed of fancying another service of God, then he hath prescribed us. Every Master in his own family, appoints the manner how he will be served. He that requires our service, requires it his own way; or else he holds us to serve our selves, not him. Shall we make our selves wiser then our Maker, as if he did not best know what would best please him? Shall heaven give a blessing to that, which was devised against the will of heaven? Doth not God threaten them with the addition of plagues, that shall add to his precepts? If such devices be good and necessary, why did not God command them? Did he want wisdom? If they be not necessary, why do we use them? Is it not our presumptuous folly? The Lord's Jealousy is stirred up by the rivalitie, not only of a false God, but of a false worship. Nothing is more dangerous, then to mint his services in our own brains. In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men. Is it not grievous for men to lose all their labor, and that in the main business of their life? That so many hundred oblations, so many thousand prayers, so much cost of their purses, so much affliction to their bodies, so much anguish of their souls, should be all forceless, fruitless? Like a dog that hunts counter, and takes great pains to no purpose.

Evil deeds may have sometimes good meanings; but those good meanings are answered with evil recompenses. Many bestow their labors, their goods, their bloods, and yet receive torments instead of thanks. When the Apostle bids us mortify our earthly members, he does not intend violence to our selves, but to our sins. There is one mortification, to cast our selves out of the world: there is another mortification, to cast the world out of us. A body macerated with scourges, disabled with fastings, wearied with pilgrimages; was none of S. Paul's mortification. Who hath required this at your hands? Where is no command imposed, no reward proposed; no promise made, if you do; no punishment threatened, if you do not; what fruit can be expected but shame? Must we needs either do nothing, or that which is worse then nothing? Shall we offer so much, suffer so much, and all in vain? Quis haec à vobis? Let him pay you your wages, that did set you on work. Never plead your own reason, where God hath set a plain interdiction. He that suffers his faith to be overruled by his reason, may have a fat reason, but a lean faith. That man is not worthy to be a follower of Christ, who hath not denied himself; therefore denied his Reason; for his reason is no small piece of himself. If Reason get the head in this divine business, it presently prevails with will, and will commands the affections: so this new Triumvirate shall govern the Christian, not Faith. But as when three Ambassadors were sent from Rome, to appease the discord between Nicomedes and Prusias; whereof one was troubled with a Megrin in his head, another had the Gout in his toes, and the third was a fool; Cato said merrily, that Ambassage had neither Head, nor Foot, nor Heart. So that man shall neither have a head to conceive the truth, nor a foot to walk in the ways of obedience, nor a heart to receive the comforts of salvation; that suffers his reason, will, and affections, to usurp upon his faith.

Hence it comes to pass, that the most horrid sins are turned into Idols; by setting our own reasons against the manifest will of God. Thus lies shall be fathered upon the Father of truth, and truth upon the Father of lies. Thus breach of faith, and perjury, shall be held Orthodox opinions. Yea, that execrable monster, whereof this day remembers us, Treason it self, shall be held good Doctrine. Rude cacodaemon, that stigmatic Idol, that gross devil shall be worshiped. Si fas cadendo coelestia scandere, If this be the way to the kingdom of heaven, if thus men may merit to be stars in the Firmament, by embruing their hands in the blood-Royal of Princes; what Jesuit will not be a Star? When such be their principles, such must needs be their practices. What though God condemn Treason to hell, when the Pope will advance it to heaven? What though the Divine Scripture doth rank traitors among dogs & devils, when the Pope will number them among Saints? It was wont to be said, Ex quolibet ligno non fit Mercurius, every block is not fit to make an Image. Yet now, the most monstrous sin that ever the devil shaped in his Infernal forge, is not only by the practice, but even by the Doctrine of Rome, turned into an Idol. What is that we shall call fin, when murder & Treason is held religion? Alas for our age, to bear the date of these impieties! That our posterity should ever read in our Chronicles: In such a year in such a day Traitors conspired against their lawful & Gracious Sovereign: and that in those days there was a sect of men living, that did labor in voluminous writings, to justify those horrible facts. But oh, may those pestiferous monuments be as fast devoured by oblivion, as the authors and abettors themselves are swallowed up by confusion. And the same God deliver us his people from their conspiracies, that hath delivered this his Church from their Idolatries.

Thus we have looked abroad, but now have we no Idols at home? O how happy was it, if they were as far from the Temple, as they are from agreement with the Temple? I will not abound in this discovery; there be three main Idols among us; Vain Preasure, vain Honor, and Riches: & it is to be feared, that these three vanities have more clients then the Trinity that made us. The first is an Idol of the water, the next an Idol of the air, the last an Idol of the earth.

1. Vain Pleasure; and oh what a world of foolish worshippers flock to this merry Goddess! She hath a Temple in every corner: Ebriety sits in Taverns, burning smoky Incense, and sacrificing drink-offerings to her. So that if a man should prophesy of wine and strong drink, he were a Prophet fit for this age: but to preach sobriety, is held but a dry doctrine. We commend wine for the excellency of it; but if it could speak, as it can take away speech, it would complain, that by our abuse, both the excellencies are lost: for the excellent man doth so spoil the excellent wine, until the excellent wine hath spoiled the excellent man. O that a man should take pleasure in that which makes him no man: that he should let a thief in at his mouth, to steal away his wit: that for a little throat-indulgence, he should kill in himself both the first Adam, his reason; but even the second Adam his regeneration, & so commit two murders at once! In every Brothel this Idol hath her temple; where the bed of uncleanness is the Altar, the Priest a strumpet, and the sacrifice, a burning flesh offered to Moloch. It is no rare thing for a man to make an Idol of his Mistress, and to spend more time in her courtings, then he doth at his prayers; more cost on her body, thē upon his own soul. Images were but dead Idols, but painted Popinjays be living Idols Pleasure hath a larger extent, then I can now stand to survey: this may be called an Idol of the Water; fluid and unsatisfying.

2. Vain Honor is the Idol of fools: no wise man ever sought felicity in shadows. His Temple is Pride, his Altar Ambition, his Service Flattery, his Sacrifice Petulancy. Silly Sennacherib, to make an Idol of a Chariot: and no wiser Prince of Tyre, to make an Idol of his own brain! Men mistake the way to be great, while they neglect the way to be good. All the while a man hunts after his shadow, he mis-spends his time and pains: for the Sun is upon his back, behind him, and his shadow is still vn-overtaken before him: but let him turn his face to the Sun, & follow that, his shadow shall follow him. In vain doth that man pursue honor, his shadow, while he turns his face from virtue and goodness; he shall miss what he so labors to catch: but let him set his face toward Christ, the Sun of righteousness, and run to the high prize of eternity, this shadow shall wait upon him; for those that honor me, I will honor, saith the Lord.

God resisteth the proud; and good reason, for the proud resisteth God. Other sins divert a man from God, only Pride brings him against God, & brings God against him. There is nothing in this world worth our pride, but that moss will grow to a stone. Pride is ever dangerous, but thē most when it puffs us up with a presumption of merit. Thus the Romists presume to do more good works, and those more perfect then God requires: so that he is become a debtor to them, & bound to make them satisfaction. But doubtless, God will more easily bear with those sins whereof we repent, then with that righteousness whereof we presume. I am not as other men are, said the Pharisee; & the clock of his tongue went truer then the dial of his heart; he was not like other men indeed, sure he was like none of them that should be saved. Humility is so hard a lesson to get into the heart, that Christ was fain to come down from heaven, in his own person to teach it.

Pride is even conversant about good works and graces; this Saul loves to be among the Prophets. So that if a man have some good measure of sanctification, and of assurance of eternal life; it will be hard not to be proud of that. Pride hath hurt many, Humility never yet did harm. A man goes in at a door, and he stoops: the door is high enough, yet he stoops: you will say, he needs not stoop; yea, but saith Bernard, there is no hurt in his stooping: otherwise he may catch a knock, this way he is safe. A man may bear himself too high upon the favor of God, there is no danger in his stooping, no harm in humility. Let me rather be the lowest of God's servants, then the noblest among his enemies. The honor of this world is at best but a golden dream, from which men commonly awake in contempt. This is an Idol of the Air.

3. Wealth is the covetous man's Idol; Job shows the form of his Canonization: He makes gold his hope, and says to the wedge, Thou art my confidence. As treason sets up a new king, for David, Absalom: so covetousness sets up a new god, for Jehovah, Mammon. But, O miserable god, saith Luther, that cannot defend it self from rusting or robbing. And, O more miserable man, that trusts himself upon the keeping of that god, which himself is fain to keep. Micah did not worship his silver, till it was cast into the form of an Idol: these spare the labor of forming, and worship the very metal. The Superstitious adore Aurum in Idolo, gold in the Idol: the covetous find Idolum in Auro, an Idol in the very gold. Metalla seems to sound quasi 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Post alia necessaria: when they had manured the ground, sown seeds, gathered fruits, and found out other things to sustain life, then Itum est in viscera terrae, they digged into the bowels of the earth. O that man should lay that next his heart, which God hath placed under his feet! that the thing which might be best spared, should be most admired! Mammon hath his Temple, the world: God hath his Temple, the Church: but there be many that balk God's Temple to go to Mammons: and they offer fair, that make some reverence to God, as they pass by him to the world. Hence it is, that so many get riches, and so few godliness. The Poets fain Pluto to be the god of Hell, & the god of Riches; (as if Riches and Hell had both one Master.) Sometime they set him forth lame and slow-paced, sometime nimble as fire. When Jupiter sends him to a Soldier or a Scholar, he goes limping: when he sends him to on of his Pandars, he flies like lightning. The moral is, the wealth that comes in God's name, comes slowly, and with diligent labor: but that which is hailed in with an evil conscience, is both hasty & abundant in the collection. This is the worldlings main god, all the rest be subordinate to him. Si modo Jupiter mihi propitius sit, minores deos flocci facio: So long as Mammon favors them, or their Great Diana multiplies their gains; they scorn the other petty gods, making account with a little money to buy them all. This is an Idol of the Earth.

No agreement.

Ye cannot serve God and Mammon; you may dispute for it, you shall never compound it. Gehazi cannot run after the forbidden talents, but he must leave his master. Some indeed here, have so finely distinguished of the business, that though they serve God, they will serve him more thriftily, and please him as good cheap as they can. They have resolved not to do evil, though they may gain by it: yet for gain, they will venture as near evil, as possibly they can and miss it. But when it comes to push, it will be found, that for one scruple of gold, they will make no scruple of conscience. But as those Inhabitants of Judea, that served both God & Idols, did indeed neither serve God nor Idols: so these higglers, while they would have two masters, have indeed never a one. For in the evil day, their master the world will renounce them, & then their master Christ will not receive them: so highly doth he scorn such a competition. Man was made to serve God, and the world to serve man: so the world at best is but God's servant. Now if we plead our selves God's servants, what an indigne & preposterous thing is it, to take our own servant, and make him competitor with our Master? God says, lend, give, clothe, feed, harbor: Mammon says, Take, gather, extort, oppress, spoil: whether of these is our God? Even he that is most obeyed. No less might be said for pleasures and honors, or whatsoever is delectable to flesh and blood. The love of this world is enmity to God; and the East & West shall sooner unite their forces, thē these be reconciled.

It is the Devils especial aim, to bring these Idols near the Temple: he finds no such pleasure to domineer in his own hell; but he hath a mind to Paradise: One wittily observeth, that Christ chose poor Fishermen, as the fittest to receive his Oracles, & to plant his Church; because Satan scorned to look so low, as to tempt them. He studied to prevent Christ among the Kings of the earth, and great Doctors, never suspecting silly fishers. But when he found himself deceived, he will then make their whole profession to fare the worse for it; he bears the whole succession of their Tribe an old grudge. Before, he passed by them, and tempted the great Masters; now he will sooner tempt them than Kings and Emperors. The Church doth not judge them that are without, but them within: and Satan had rather foil one within, then a hundred without. He hath a desire to all, but especially he loves a religious soul: he would eat that with more greediness, then Rachel did her Mandrakes. The fall of one Christian better pleaseth him, then of many unbelievers. No King makes war against his own loyal subjects, but against rebels & enemies. The devil is to subtle, to spend his malice vpon them that do him ready service He cares not so much to multiply Idols in Babylon, as to get one into Zion. To maintain priests of Baal in the land of Israel, at the table of Jezebel, as it were under God's nose: or to set up Calves at Bethel, in scorn of the Temple; this is his ambition. The Fox seldom preys near home, nor doth Satan meddle with his own; they are as sure as temptation can make them. What Jailor lays more chains upon the shackled malefactor, that loves his prison, and would not change? The Pirate spends not a shot upon a cole-ship; but he lets fly at the rich Merchant. Cantabit vacuus, the empty traveler may pass unmolested: it is the full barn that invites the thief. If we were not belonging to the Temple, we should not be assaulted with so many Idols; if not Christians, fewer temptations.

Now the more potent and malicious our adversaries, the more resolute and strong be our resistance. The more extreme the cold is without, the more doth the natural heat fortify it self within, & guard the heart. It is the note of the ungodly, that they bleſs Idols: if we would not be ſuch, let us bleſs our ſelves from Idols. And as we have baniſhed the material Idols out of our Temples, ſo let us drive theſe ſpiritual ones out of our hearts Let us ſay with Ephraim, we have heard God, & ſeen him; What have we to do anymore with Idols? The vices of the religious are the ſhame of religion: the ſight of this hath made the ſtoutest Champions of Chriſt melt into tears. Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, becauſe they keep not thy law. David was one of thoſe great Worthies of the world, not matchable in his times; yet he weeps. Did he tear in pieces a bear like a kid? reſcue a lamb with the death of a lyon? foil a mighty giant, that had dared the whole army of God? Did he like a whirlwind, bear and beat down his enemies before him; and now does he, like a child or a woman, fall a weeping? Yes, he had heard the name of God blaſphemed, ſeen his holy rites profaned, his ſtatutes vilipended, and violence offered to the pure and intemperate Chſtity of that holy virgin, Religion: this reſolved that valiant heart into tears; Rivers of waters run down mine eyes. So Paul, I tell you of them weeping, that are enemies to the Cross of Chriſt. Had he with ſo magnanimous a courage, endured ſtripes and perſecutions, run through perils of all ſorts and ſizes, fought with beaſts at Ephesus, been wrapped up to heaven, and learned his Divinity among the Angels; & does he now weep? Yes, he had ſeen Idols in the Temple, Impiety in the Church of God: this made that great ſpirit melt into tears. If we ſee theſe Idols in others, or feel them in our ſelves, and complain not; we give God and the Church juſt cauſe to complain of us. Now the Lord deliver his Temples from theſe Idols.

But all this while we have walked in generals; and you will ſay, Quod omnibus dicitur, nemini dicitur: let me now therefore come to particulars.

The Temple of God

Is every Chriſtian: as the Church is his great Temple, ſo his little temple is every man. We are not only through his grace, living ſtones in his Temple, but living temples in his Zion: each one bearing about him a little ſhrine of that infinite Majeſty. Wherſoever God dwells, there is his Temple: therefore the believing heart is his Temple, for there he dwells. As we poor creatures of the earth have our being in him, ſo he the God of heaven hath his dwelling in us. It is true, that the heaven of heavens is not able to contain him; yet the narrow lodgings of our renewed ſouls are takē up for him. What were a houſe made with hands unto the God of ſpirits; unleſs there be a ſpirit for him to dwell in made without hands? Here if the Body be the Temple, the Soul is Priest: if that be not the offerer, the Sacrifice will not be accepted.

In this Spiritual Temple, firſt there is the Porch; which we may conceive to be the Mouth, Therefore David prays to have a Watch ſet at the door of his lips, to ward the gate of God's Temple. This may ſeem to be one reaſon of ſaluting in former times by a kiss; they did kiſs the gate of God's Temple. Here the Fear of God is the Porter; who is both ready to let in his friends, and reſolute to keep out his enemies. Let him ſpecially watch for two ſorts of foes, the one, a traitor that goes out, evil ſpeaking: the other, a thief that ſteals in, too much drinking.

The Holy place is the sanctified mind, that which S. Paul calls the Inner man. Here be those riches and ornaments, the divine graces. Here not only Justice, and Faith, and Temperance, sing their parts, but the whole Choir of heavenly virtues make up the harmony.

The Holy of holies is the purified Conscience, wherein stand the Cherubims, Faith & Love; and the Mercy-seat, shaded with the wings of those glorious Angels: frō which Propitiatory God gives the gracious testimonies of his good Spirit, witnessing with our spirits that we are his children. In this Sacrary doth the Lord converse with the soul; takes her humble confession, gives her sweet absolution. It is a place whither nor man nor Angel can enter; only the high Priest Jesus comes, not once a year, but daily; and communicates such inestimable favors and comforts, as no tongue can express.

Here we find the Ark, wherein the Royal law, and Pot of heavenly Manna are preserved. the one restraining us from sin to come by a happy prevention, the other assuring us pardon of sin past with a blessed consolation. Let us look further upon the golden Candlesticks, our illumined understandings; whereby we perceive the will of our Maker, and discern the way of our eternal peace. Then upon the Tables of Shew-bread, which be our holy memories, that keep the bread of life continually ready within us. Yea, Memory is the treasury of this Temple, which so locks up those celestial riches, that we can draw them forth for use at all opportunities. Here is also the Vail, and those silken curtains, and costly hangings; the Righteousness of Christ, which makes us acceptable to God; both hiding our own infirmities, and decking us with his virtues. Here is the Altar for sacrifice, the contrite heart: the beast to be slain is not found among our herds, but among our affections; we must sacrifice our lusts: the knife to kill them, which would else kill us, is the Sword of the Spirit, the Word of God: the fire to consume them is holy zeal, kindled in our breasts by the inspiration of God.

There be other sacrifices also for us to offer in this Temple, on this Altar. Besides our praises and prayers; the setting forth of our prayer as Incense, and the lifting up our hands as an evening sacrifice: there is mercy, & charitable deeds. What is devotion without compassion? What, sacrifice without mercy? If thy brother hath ought against thee, yea, if thou have ought that should have been thy brothers; thy oblation will stink in God's nostrils. It was an old complaint of the Church, that her stones were clothed, and her childrē naked; that the curious found matter to delight them, but the distressed found not bread to sustain them. Therefore saith S. Augustine, Si habes taurum pinguem, occide pauperibus: If thou have a fat Bull, sacrifice it to the poor. Though they cannot drink the blood of goats, they can eat the flesh of bulls. And he that saith, If I were hungry, I would not tell thee; yet will acknowledge at the last day, I was hungry, and thou didst feed me; Come thou blessed. The poor have God's commendatory letters to us, and our prayers be our commendatory letters to God: if we will not hearken to him, how should he gratify us? Thus, O Christian, art thou a moving Temple of the living God.

Let this teach us all to adorn these Temples with decent graces. Superstition cares not what it bestows on material Fanes: mountainous Columns, Marble Pillars, gorgeous Monuments, which yet are not sensible of their own ornaments; spangled Crucifixes, Images clad in Silks and Tissues, with embroidered Canopies, and Tables beset with Pearls and Diamonds. Thus bountiful is she to her superfluities; Oh that our Religion would do something for these ancient and ruinous walls. But how much more precious be these spiritual Temples of our selves? How much more noble ought to be their furnitures?

First then, if we be the Temples of God, let us be holy: for holiness, O Lord, becometh thy House forever.

2. It is Domus orationis; they must have the continual exercises of Prayer. In Templo vis orare? In te ora. Wouldst thou pray in God's Temple? Pray in thyself.

3. The sound of the high praises of God must be heard in these Temples: There every man speaks of his honor. It pleaseth the Lord to inhabit the praises of Israel. And Psal. 48. We have thought of thy loving kindness, O God, in the midst of thy Temple: that is, even in the midst of our selves, in our own hearts. There let us think upon his mercies, there echo forth his praises.

4. The Inhabitant disposeth all the rooms of his house: if God dwell in us, let him rule us. Submit thy will to his word, thy affections to his Spirit. It is fit that every man should bear rule in his own house.

5. Let us be glad when he is in us, and give him no disturbance. Let not the foulness of any room make him dislike his habitation. Cleanse all the sluttish corners of sin, and perfume the whole house with Myrrh & Cassia. Still be getting nearer to thy Land-lord: other Inhabitants come home to their houses; but here the house must strive to come home to the Inhabitant. Whensoever God comes toward thee, meet him by the way, and bid him welcome to his own.

6. Lastly, if we be the Lord's houses, then no bodies else. The material Temples are not to be diverted to common offices: much more should the spiritual be used only for God's service. Let us not alienate his rights: thus he will say, This is my house, here will I dwell, for I have a delight therein. O may we so adorn these Temples with graces, that God may take delight to dwell in us.

Idols.

These be the Temples: the Idols that haunt them, we better know, then know how to expel: they be our lusts, and inordinate affections; the rebellions of our corrupt nature, which fight against the Soul, defile the body, and disgrace the Temples of God's Spirit. So I pass from them, to the last point; that betwixt these libidinous Idols, and those spiritual Temples, there can be

No agreement.

God will dwell with no Inmates: if uncleanness be there, will the fountain of all purity abide it? Will Christ dwell with an adulterer? He that will suffer no unclean thing to enter his city above, will he himself dwell in an unclean city below? O think how execrable that sin is, which doth not only take the members of Christ, and makes them the limbs of an harlot; but even turneth Christ's Temples into stinking Brothels. Our hearts be the Altars to send up the sweet Incense of devout prayers and cheerful thanksgivings; if the smoke of malicious thoughts be found there, will God accept our oblations? Is it possible, that man should please his Father, that will not be reconciled to his brother? The Lamps of knowledge and sobriety are burning within us; will not the deluge of drink put them out? Will the Lord dwell in a drunken body? Must we not cease to be his Temples, when we become Bacchus his Tuns and tunnels? There is Manna, the bread of life within us; will not Epicureanism & throat-indulgence corrupt it? There is peace in us, will not pride and contention affright it? There is the love of heaven in us, will not the love of the world banish it? Shall the graces of God cohabit with the vices of Satan? Will the Temple of God endure Idols? No, these Eagles plumes will not brook the blending with common feathers: this heavenly gold scorns the mixture of base and sophisticate metals.

Let us search our hearts, & ransack them narrowly: if we do not cast out these Idols, God will not own us for his Temples. My House shall be called the house of prayer: this was God's Appropriation: But you have made it a den of thieves: this is man's Impropriation. Let us take heed of impropriating God's house; remembering how he hath revenged such a profanation with scourges. We are bought with a price, therefore let us glorify God both in body & spirit, for they are his: His purchase, his Temple, his inheritance, his habitation: do not lose so gracious an owner, by the most ungracious sacrilege. You see many ruined houses, which have been once kings palaces: learn by those dead spectacles to keep yourselves frō the like fortunes: lest God say of you, Hoc Templum meum fuit, this was my house; but now because it took in Idols, I have forsaken it.

Or what if we do not set up Idols in these Temples, when we make the Temples themselves Idols? or say not with Israel, Make us gods, while we make gods of our selves? while we dress altars, and erect shrines to our own brains, & kiss our own hands for the good they have done us? If we attribute something to our selves, how is Christ all in all with us? Do we justly blame them that worship the Beast of Rome, and yet find out a new Idolatry at home? Shall we refuse to adore the Saints & Angels, and yet give divine worship to our selves, dust and ashes? If victory crown our battles, if plenty fill our garners, or success answer our endeavours; must the glory of all reflect upon our own achievements? This is a rivalry that God will not endure, to make so many Temples nothing but Idols. But as the Lancashire Justice said of the ill-shap'd Rood, though it be not well favored enough for a god, it will serve to make an excellent devil. So proud dust and ashes, that arrogates the honor of God, and improprieties it to himself; though he be too foul for a Temple, yet he is fit enough for an Idol. When David prays, Libera me ab homine malo, Deliver me from the evil man, O Lord. Saint Augustine, after much study and scrutiny to find out this evil man, at last lights upon him; ab homine malo, that is, à me ipso: Deliver me from the evil man, deliver me from myself; Deliver Augustine from Augustine; I am that evil man. So, of all Idolatries, God deliver us from a superstitious worship of our selves. Some have Idolized their Princes, some their Mistresses, some their Manufactures; but they are innumerable that have Idolized themselves. He is a rare man that hath no Idol, no little god in a box, no especial sin in his heart, to which he gives uxorious and affectionate Indulgence.

The only way to mend all, is for every man to begin with himself. In vain shall we blame those faults abroad, which we tolerate at home. That man makes himself ridiculous, who leaving his own house on fire, runs to quench his neighbors. Let but every man pull a brand from this fire, the flame will go out alone: if every soul cleanse his own Temple, all shall be quit of Idols, and God will accept of all. A multitude is but a heap of vanities; the more we take away, the fewer we leave behind. When a field is overgrown with weeds, the best course to have a good general harvest, is for every man to weed his own ground. When we would have the street cleansed, let every man sweep his own door, and it is quickly done. But while every man censures, & none amends, we do but talk against Idols, with still uncleansed Temples.

Let us pray for universal repentance, like a good Josiah, to purge the houses of God: till lust and profaneness, pride and covetousness, fraud and wantonness, malice and drunkenness, be no more found among us: till everything be cast out, and nothing let in, that is unclean. So shall the Lord dwell in us with content, and we shall dwell in him with comfort. Here we shall be a Temple for Him, hereafter he shall be a Temple for us. So we find that glorious City described, I saw no Temple therein, but the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb was the Temple of it. We are God's Temple on earth, God shall be our Temple in heaven. To this purpose, the Spirit of God sanctify us, and be forever sanctified in us. Amen.

Some may haply (long ere this) have prejudicated in their censures; How is this Opus diei in die suo? What is all this to the business of the day? I might have prevented the objection, by comparing Idolatry with Treason: the one being a breach of Allegiance to the Lord, the other a breach of allegiance to the Lord's Anointed. Idolatry is a Treason against God, and Treason is a kind of Idolatry against the King. From both which the divine grace, and our holy obedience deliver us all. I conclude with application to the Time.

This is one of those blessed days celebrated for the deliverance of our gracious Sovereign: and well may the deliverance of a King, of such a King, deserve a day of gratulation. When God delivers a private man, he doth, as it were, repeat his Creation: but the deliverance of a King, is always a choice piece in the Lord's Chronicle. The Story, how he was endangered, and how preserved, this place hath diverse times witnessed; and that in a more punctual manner, then I have either strength, or art, or time to match. A hard time it seemed to be, when a King was imprisoned, when he had no guard with him but his Innocency, no subject but a Traitor. But there was a stronger with him, then all they could be against him. A good Prince hath more guards then one: he hath, 1. a subsidiary guard, consisting of mortal men. 2. An inward guard, the integrity of his own Conscience. 3. A spiritual guard, the prayers of his faithful subjects. 4. A celestial guard, the protection of diligent & powerful Angels. 5. A divine guard, his Makers providence that fenceth him in with a wall of fire, which shall at once both preserve him, and consume his enemies.

But my purpose is not to bring your thoughts back to the view of his peril, but to stir your hearts up to thankfulness for his preservation. He is justly styled, The Defender of the Faith: he hath ever defended the Faith, and the Faith hath ever defended him. He hath preserved the Temple of God from Idols, and therefore God hath preserved him from all his enemies.

Surely that Providence, which delivered him from those early Conspiracies, wherewith he hath been assaulted from his cradle, meant him for some extraordinary benefit, and matchless good to the Christian world. He that gave him both life and Crown (almost) together, hath still miraculously preserved them both, from all the raging violences of Rome and Hell. Now when the Lord delivered him, what did he else but even deliver us all? That we might rejoice in his safety, as the Romans did in the recovery of Germanicus; when they ran with lamps and sacrifices to the Capitol, and there sung with shouts and acclamations; Salua Roma, salua Patria, saluus Germanicus: the City is safe, the Country is safe, and all in the safety of Germanicus. While we consider the blessings which we enjoy by his gracious Government; that the estates we have gotten with honest industry, may be safely conveyed to our posterity: that we sit under the shadow of peace, and may teach our children to know the Lord: that the good man may build up Temples and Hospitals, without trembling to think of savage and barbarous violences to pull them down: that our Devotions be not molested with uproars, nor men called from their callings by mutinies: that our Temples be not profaned with Idols, nor the Service of God blended with superstitious devices: that our temporal estate is preserved in liberty, our spiritual estate may be improved in piety, and our eternal estate assured us in glory: that our lives be protected, and in quiet our souls may be saved: for such a King of men, bless we the God of Kings; and sing for his deliverance, as they did for their Germanicus, as privately every day, so this day in our public Assemblies; Salua Britannia, Salua Ecclesia, saluus JACOBUS: Our Kingdom is safe, the Church of God is safe, our whole Estate is safe, we are all safe and happy, in the safety and happiness of King JAMES. O that as we have good cause to emulate, so also we would truly imitate the gratulation of Israel; we for our King that hath preserved the Temple, as they for their King that built the Temple; while the Levites and singers stood with Harps and Cymbals and Viols, and the Priests blowing with Trumpets; as if they had all been one man, and made one sweet harmony to the praise of God.

For these public & extraordinary blessings, God requires public and extraordinary praises: that this great Assembly with prepared hearts, and religious affections, should magnify his glorious Name: & if it were possible, by some unusual strain of our united thanks, pierce the very skies, & give an Echo to those celestial Quires, singing Honor, & praise, and glory, be to our gracious God, for all his merciful deliverances both of Prince and people. Yea, O Lord, still preserve thine own Anointed: convert or confound all his enemies; but upon his head let his Crown flourish. Long, long live that royal keeper of God's holy Temple, & the Defender of that Faith which he hath of old given to his Saints: and let all true-hearted Israelites say, Amen: yea, let Amen, the faithful witness in heaven, the Word & Truth of God, say Amen to it. For our selves, let us heartily repent of our former sins, religiously amend our future lives, abandon all our intestine Idols, serve the Lord with pure hearts; and still, and still, God shall deliver both Him and us from all our enemies. This God grant for his mercies sake, Jesus Christ for his merits sake, the Holy Ghost for his Names sake; to whom, three persons, and one eternal God, be all praise and glory, obedience and thanksgiving, world without end.

TO THE VERIE WORTHY AND NOBLY-DISPOSED GENTLEMAN Sir THOMAS CHEEKE Knight.

RIGHT WORSHIPFUL,

This Sermon bears so strange a title in the forehead, that I durst not (a while) study for a Patronage to it, but intended to send it to the broad world, to shift for it self, as fearing it would not be owned: for it taxeth many vices; specially the Black Euell, secret Theeuery, and the White Devil, sly Hypocrisy; whence it taketh the denomination, now what ambitious Courtier, would grace such a Stranger? what vicious Greatness would entertain such a Page? what corrupted Lawyer, such a Client? what covetous Gentleman, such a Tenant? what usurious Citizen, such a Chapman? Indeed what guilty man, such a Book, as will tell him to his face, thou art the man? yet because, first generally, the world would think, I had brought forth a strange Child; that I could get no Godfather to it; And especially, because you (rare in these Apostate times) are known free from the aspersion of these speckled stains, the world bestowing on you, that worthy (not undeserved) Character of Virtue: so that with a clear & vn-clouded brow (the argument of an innocent soul) you may read these lines; I have been bold, at once, to offer this to your Patronage, and myself to your service. To this, your affection to divine Knowledge, good profecion in it, and much time spent towards the perfection of it, (a disposition worthy your blood) have prompted me with encouragement. It is not the first of this nature, that I have published, (perhaps the last) but if I had not judged it the best, I would not have been so ambitious, as to present it to the view of so approved a Judgment. Thus in affiance, of your good acceptance; I humbly leave you to him, that never leaveth his.

Your worships in my best of services, THOMAS ADAMS.

To the Reader.

Honest and understanding Reader; (if neither, hands off) I never saluted thy General name by a special Epistle, till now: and now, perhaps, soon enough: but if Honesty be Usher to thy understanding, and understanding Tutor to thy Honesty; as I cannot fear, so I need not doubt, or treat with thee for Truce: Truce, of what? of Suspense, not of Suspension; it belongs to our Betters: Suspend thy censure, do not suspend me by thy censure. I do not call thee aside, to ask, with what applause this Sermon passeth, but (it is all, I would have and hear) with what benefit. I had rather convert one soul, then have an hundredth praise me. Whereof, if I were (so besotted to be) ambitious, by this I could not hope it: for it pulls many tender and tendered sins out of their downy neasts; and who strikes vice, and is not stricken with calumnies? I must rather think, it hath passed from one press to another, to a worse, hazarding it self to be pressed to death with censures: which yet (though I lowly hope better) I cannot fear; since it speaks no more, nor other, then justifiable truth. What hath been objected already, I must briefly answer. It is excepted, that I am too merry, in describing some vices. Indeed, such is their ridiculous nature, that their best conviction is derision; yet I abominate any pleasantness here, but Christian; and would provoke no smile but of Disdaine: wherein the gravity of matter, shall free my form of words from lightness. Others say, I am other-where too Satyricaly-bitter. It is partly confessed: I am bitter enough to the sins, and therein (I think) better to the sinners, more charitable to the persons. Some wish I would have spared the Church-thieves, because it is not yet generally granted, that Impropriations of Tythes, are appropriations of wrongs; but if there be a competent maintenance to the Minister, and not to him neither, except of worthy gifts, (provided, that they judge of his gifts and competency) it is enough: well, if any such be grieved, let him allow his Minister a Sufficiency, under which he cannot live, without want to his family, or disgrace to his profession (at least, so taken.) and heerof certified, I will take counsel to draw the books, and put his name out of the Catalogue of Thieves: But it would be strange if any of these Ziba's should yield to Mephibosheth a division of his own lands or goods; when they do, I will say, David is come again to his Kingdom, or rather, the Son of David is come to Judgment. Others would have Inclosers put out, because (commonly) great men, but therefore the greater their sins, and deserving the greater taxation. Nay some would persuade Usury to step in, to traverse his Inditement, and prove himself no Thief, by the verdict of the Countrie; because Sub Iudice lis est, it is not yet decided, that Usury is a Sin. It is Sub Iudice indeed, but the Judge hath already interposed his Interlocutory, and will one day give his Definitive Sentence, that Usury shall never dwell in his holy Mountain. Others blunder in their verdict, that I have too violently baited the Bagge at the stake of Reproch, and all because I want it: I will not return their censure, that they are hence known to have it, that speak against me, for speaking against it: who yet, if they would light the candle of their Speech, at the fire of their Vnderstandings, would easily see and say, that it is not the fullness of the Bagge, but the fowlenesse of the Bagge-bearer, that I reprove: I could allow your purses fuller of wealthinesse, so your minds were emptier of wickedness: but the Bags effects, in our affects, usually load us, either with parcimony or prodigality; the lightest of which burdens, saith Saint Bernard, is able to sink a Ship. Others affirm, that I have made the Gate of Heaven too narrow, and they hope to find it wider; God and the Scriptures are more merciful. True it is, that Heaven-Gate is in it self wide enough; and the narrownesse is in respect of the Enterer: and though thy sins cannot make that too little to receive thee, yet they make thee to gross and unfit, to get into that: thus the Straitnesse ariseth from the deficiency, (not of their Glory, but) of our Grace. Lastly, some have the Title sticking in their stomachs; as if Christ him self had not called Judas a Devil; and likened an Hypocrite to a Whited Sepulcher: as if Luther did not give Judas this very Attribute; and other Fathers of the Church, from whom Luther derives it. Good Christian Reader, leave cavils against it, and fall to caueats in it: read it through: if there be nothing in it to better thee, either the fault is in my hand, or in thy heart. Howsoever, give God the praise; let none of his Glory cleave to us earthen Instruments. If thou likest it, then (quo animo legis, obserua, quo obseruas, serua) with the same affection thou readest it, remember it, and with the same thou rememberest, practice it. In hope of this, and prayer for this, I commend this Book to thy Conscience, and thy conscience to God. Willington, March. 27. 1613.

Thine if thou be Christ's T. A.

THE WHITE DEVIL OR THE HYPOCRITE VNCASED: In a Sermon preached at PAUL'S Cross, March the seventh, 1612.

JOHN 12. 6.

This he said, not that he cared for the poor: but because he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein.

I Am to speak of Judas, a Devil by the testimony of our Savior: have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a Devil? yet so transformed into a show of sanctimony, that he, who was a Devil in the knowledge of Christ, seemed an Angel in the deceived judgment of his fellow-Apostles. A Devil he was, black within and full of ranckour, but white without, and skinned over with hypocrisy; therefore to use Luther's word, we will call him the white Devil. Even here he discovers himself, and makes good this title: Consider the occasion thus.

Christ was now at supper among his friends, where everyone shown him several kindness; among the rest Marie powers on him a box of ointment: take a short view of hir affection. 1. She gave a precious unction, Spikenard: Judas valued it at 300. pence, which (after the best computation) is with us, above 8. pounds; as if she couldnot be too prodigal in hir love. 2. She gave him a whole pound, verse 3. she did not cut him out devotion by piece-meal or remnant, nor serve God by the ounce: but she gave all; for quality, precious; for quantity, the whole pound: Oh that our service to God were answerable! We rather give one ounce to lust, a second to pride, a third to malice &c. so dividing the whole pound to the Devil: she gave all to Christ. 3. To omit hir annointing his feet, and wiping them with the hairs of hir head: when hir humility and zeal met: his feet as unworthy to touch his head: with hir hairs, as if hir chief ornament was but good enough to honor Christ withal; the beauty of hir head to serve Christ's feet; she brake the box, tanquam ebria amore; and this of no worse then Alablaster, that Christ might have the remaining drop: and the whole house was filled with the odour: at this repines Judas, pretending the poor, for he was white; intending his profit, for he was a Devil.

The words contain in them a double

Censure,

- 1. Judas censure of Mary: this repeatedly folded up: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : he said thus; with reference to his former words: verse 5. why was not this &c.
- 2. God's censure of Judas: this

Partlie

- 1. Negative: he cared not for the poor: to convince his hypocrisy, that roared at the poor, but levelled at his profit; like a Ferry-man, looking toward charity with his face, rowing toward covetousness with his arms.
- 2. Affirmative, demonstrating his
  - 1. Meaning: he was a thief.
  - 2. Means: he had the bag.
  - 3. Maintenance: he bare what was given; or put therein.

In Judas censure of Mary, many things are observable, to his shame, our instruction; and these. 1. some more general. 2. some more special and personal; all worthy your attention, if there wanted nothing in the deliverance.

1. Observe that Saint John lays this fault on Judas only: but Saint Matthew and Mark charge the Disciples with it, and find them guilty of this repining: and that (in both, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ) not without Indignation. This knot is easily untied; Judas was the ring-leader, and his voice was the voice of Jacob, all charitable; but his hands were the hands of Esau, rough and injurious: Judas pleads, for the poor, the whole Synod, likes the motion well; they second it with their verdicts: their words agree; but their spirits differ: Judas hath a further reach; to distill this ointment thorough the Limbecke of hypocrisy into his own purse; the Apostles mean plainly: Judas was malicious against his master; they simply thought the poor had more need. So sensible and ample a difference do circumstances put into one and the same action: presumption or weakness, knowledge or ignorance, simplicity or craft do much aggravate or mitigate an offense. The Apostles consent to the circumstance, not to the substance, setting as it were) their hands to a blank paper: it was in them pity, rather than piety, in Judas neither pity nor piety, but plain perfidie, an exorbitant and transcendent sin, that would have brought innocence it self into the same condemnation: thus the aggregation of circumstances, is the aggravation of offenses. Consider his covetise, fraud, malice, hypocrisy, and you will say, his sin was monstrous; sine modo, like a Mathematical line, (diuisibilis in semper diuisibilia) infinitely diuisible. The other Apostles receive the infection, but not into so corrupted stomachs, therefore it may make them sick, not kill them: sin they do, but not unto death. It is a true rule even in good works: finibus non officijs, discernendae sunt virtutes a vitijs: virtues are discerned from vices not by their offices, but by their ends or intents: neither the outward form, no nor (often) the event, is a sure rule to measure the action by: the eleven Tribes went twice by God's special word and warrant against the Benjamites, yet in both assaults received the overthrow. Cùm Paterfilium, Christus corpus, Judas Dominum, res eadem, non causa, non intentio operantis: when God gave his son, Christ gave himself, Judas gave his Master; here was the same work, not the same cause nor intention in the workers: the same rule holds proportion in offenses: here they all sin, the Apostles in the imprudence of their censure, Judas in the impudence of his rancor.

I might here first lead you into the distinction of sins, secondly, or traverse the Inditement with Judas, whereby he accuseth Mary, justifying her action convincing his slander. thirdly, or discover to you the fowlness of rash judgment, which often sets a rankling tooth into virtues side; often calls chastity her self an harlot, and with a guilty hand throws the first stone at Innocence.

But that which I fasten on, is the power and force of example: Judas with a false weight sets all the wheels of their tongues a going: the steward hath begun a health to the poor, and they begin to pledge him round. Authority shows it self in this, to beget a likeness of manners: Tutum est peccare autoribus illis: It is safe sinning after such authors: if the Steward say the word, the fiat of consent goes round. Imperio maximus, exemplo major. He that is greatest in his government, is yet greater in his precedent. A great man's livery is countenance enough, to keep drunkenness from the stocks, whoredom from the post, murder and stealth from the gallows: such double sinners shall not escape with single judgments: such leprous and contagious spirits, shall answer to the justice of God, not only for their own sins, but for all theirs, whom the pattern of their precedēcy hath induced to the like, to the like, said I? nay, to worse: for if the master drink (ad plenitudinē) to fullness, the servant will (ad ebrietatē) to madness: the imitation of good comes for the most part short of the pattern, but the imitation of ill exceeds the example: a great man's warrant is like a charm or spel, to keep quick and stirring spirits within the circle of combined mischief: a Superiors example is like strong or strange physic, that ever works the servile patients to a likeness of humors, of affections: thus when the mother is an Hittite, and the father an Amorite, the daughter seldom proves an Israelite. Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis. Greatness is a copy, which every action, every affection strives to write after. The Son of Nebat is never without his commendation following him, he made Israel to sin. The imitation of our Governors manners, fashion, vices, is styled obedience: if Augustus Caesar loves poetrie, he is nobody that cannot versifie: now (saith Horace:)

when Leo lived, because he loved merry fellows, and stood well affected to the Stage, all Rome swarmed with iuglers, singers, plaiers. To this, I think, was the prouerbessquared: Confessor Papa, confessor populus. If the Pope be an honest man, so will the people be. In vulgus manant exempla Regentum. The common people are like tempered wax, whereon the vicious seal of greatness makes easy impression. It was a custom for young gentlemen in Athens to play on Recorders: at last Alcibiades seeing his blown cheeks in a glass, threw away his pipe, and they all followed him: our gallants in stead of Recorders embrace scorching lust, staring pride, staggering drunkenness, till their souls are more blown, than those Athenians cheeks; I would some Alcibiades would begin to throw away these vanities, and all the rest would follow him. Thus spreads example, like a stone thrown into a pond, that makes circle to beget circle, till it spread to the banks. Judas train soon took fire in the suspectless Disciples; and Satan's infections shoot through some great star, the influence of damnation into the air of the communitie. Let the experience hereof make us fearful of examples.

Observe, that no society hath the privilege to be free from a Judas: no, not Christ college it self: I have chosen you twelve, and behold one of you is a Devil: and this no worse man than the Steward, put in trust with the bread of the prophets. The Synod of the Pharisees, the Conuent of Monks; the Consistory of Jesuits, the Councils of Bishops, the holy Chair at Rome, the sanctified parlor at Amsterdam, is not free from a Judas. Some tares will show, that the envious man is not a sleep. They heard him preach that had the words of eternal life: they attended him, that could feed them with miraculous bread: they followed him, that could quiet the seas, and control the winds: they saw a precedent, in whom there was no defect, no default, no sin, no guile; yet behold, one of them is an hypocrite, an Iscarioth, a Devil: what, among Saints? Is Saul among the Prophets? Among the Jews a wicked Publican, a dissolute soldier was not worth the wondering at: for the publicans, you may judge of their honesty, when you always find them coupled with harlots, in the Scripture: for the soldiers (that robed Christ in jest, and robbed him in earnest) they were irreligious Ethnics: but amongst the sober, chaste, pure, precise Pharisees, to find a man of sin, was held uncouth, monstrous: they run from their wits, then, that run from the Church, because there are Iudasses. Thus it will be, till the great Judge with his fan shall purge his floor; till the Angels shall carry the wheat into the barn of glory. Until that day comes, some rubbish will be in the net, some goats among the sheep, some with the mark of the Beast, in the congregation of Saints; one Ishmael in the family of Abraham, one without his wedding garment, at the marriage Feast; among the Disciples a Demas, among the Apostles a Judas. Thus generally.

1 Observe: Judas is bold to reprove a lawful, laudable, allowable work: he said this. I do not read him so peremptory in opportunity, he could swallow a gudgeon, though he keckes at a sly: he could observe, obey, flatter the compounding Pharisees, & thought, he should get more by licking, than by biting; but here because his mouth waters at the money, his teeth rankle the woman's credit: for so I find malignant reprovuers styled: corrodunt, non corrigunt; correptores, immo corruptores: they do not mend but make worse; they bite, they gnaw: thus was Diogenes surnamed Cynicke for his snarling; Conuitiorum canis: the dog of reproaches: such forget that (monendo plus, quàm minando possumus) mercies are above menaces: many of the Jews, whom the thunders of Sinai, terrors of the Law moved not, John the Baptist wins with the songs of Zion Judas could fain and sawne, and fan the cool wind of flattery on the burning malice of the consulting Scribes: here he is hoat, sweats and swells without cause: either he must be unmerciful or ouermercifull; either wholly for the rains, or all upon the spurr: he hath soft and silken words for his masters enemies, course and rough for his friends: there he is a dumb dog and finds no fault, here he is a barking cur, and bites a true man instead of a thief; he was before an ill mute, and now he is a worse consonant. but (as Pierius ambitious daughters were turned to meg-pies for correcting the muses, so) God justly reproves Judas, for unjustly reproving Marie. Qui mittit in altum lapidem, recidet in caput eius. A stone thrown up in a rash humor, falls on the throwers head, to teach him more wisdom: he that could come to the Pharisees (like Martials parrat, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉); or like Jupiter's priest to Alexander with a love sate) commending their piety, which was without mercy, here condemns mercy, which was true piety and pity.

I could here find cause to praise reprehension: if it be reasonable, seasonable, well grounded for the reproouer, well conditioned for the reprovèd. I would have no profession more wisely bold than a Ministers; for sin is bold, yea saucy and presumptuous: it is miserable for both, when a bold sinner, and a cold Priest shall meet: when he that should lift up his voice like a trumpet, doth but whisper through a trunke. Many men are dull beasts without a goad, blind Sodomites without a guide, deaf Adders and Idols without ears, forgetful like Pharaohs Butler without memories: our connivance is sinful, our silence baneful, our allowance damnable. Of sin neither the fathers, factors, nor fautors are excusable: nay the last may be worst, whiles they may and will not help it. Let Rome have the praise without our envy or riuallrie: Peccat is Roma patrocinium est. Sodomy is licenced, sins to come pardoned, drunkenness defended, the Stews maintained, perjury commended, treason commanded: as sinful as they think us, and we know ourselves, we would blush at these. Nihil interest scelerian faue as, an illud facias: there is little difference between permission and commission: between the toleration and perpetration of the sin: he is an abettor of the evil, that may and will not better the evil. Amici vitia, fi feras, facis tua, thy unchristian sufferance adopts thy brothers sins for thine own; children of thy fatherhood, of so great a parentage is many a sin-favoring Magistrate; he begets moe bastards in an hour, then Hercules did in a night; and except Christ be his friend, God's Sessions will charge him, with the keeping of them all: no private man can plead exemption from this duty: for amicus is animi custos; he is thy friend, that brings thee to a fair and free end. Doth human charity bind thee to reduce thy neighbors straying beast, and shall not Christianity double thy care to his erring soul? cadit afina, & est qui subleuet, perit anima, non est qui recogitet. The fallen beast is lifted up, the burdened soul is let sink under her load.

2. Observe his devilish disposition, bent and intended to stifle goodness in others, that had utterly choked it in himself? Is the Apostle Judas an hinderer of godliness? surely man hath not a worse neighbor, nor God a worse servant, nor the Devil a better factor, than such a one: an Aesop's dog, that because he can eat no hay himself, lies in the manger and will not suffer the horse. he would be an ill porter of heaven gates, that having no lust to enter himself, will not admit others: as Christ reported and reprovèd the Lawyers. Here fruitless trees, that cumber the ground: cockle and darnel that hinder the good cornes growth: malicious devils, that plot to bring more partners to their own damnation: as if it were, (aliquid socios habuisse doloris) some ease to them, to have fellows in their misery.

Let me paint out a short complaint against this sin: dolendum à medico, quod non delendum à medicina: we may bewail, where we cannot prevail. The good old man must weep, though he cannot drive away the disease of his child with tears. Thou that hindrest others from good works, makest their sins thine, which, I think thou needest not do, for any scarcity of thine own: whiles thou temptest to villainy, withstandest his piety, thou at once pullest his sins, and God's curses on thee. For the author sins more, than the actor, as appears by God's Judgment in Paradise; where three punishments were inflicted on the Serpent, as the original plotter; two on the woman as the mediate procurer, and but one on Adam, as the party seduced. Is it not enough for thee, oh Judas, to be a villain thyself, but thou must also cross the piety of others? hast thou spoiled thyself, and wouldst thou also mar Mary?

3 Nay observe; he would hinder the works of piety thorough color of the works of charity: diuerting Mary's bounty from Christ to the poor; as if respect to man, should take the wall of God's service? thus he strives to set the two tables of the Law, at war, one against the other; both which look to God's obedience as the two cherubins to the mercy-seat; and the Catholic Christian hath a Catholic care. I prefer not the laws of God one to the other: one star, here, differs not from another star in glory. Yet, I know, the best distinguishes caution to the Lawyer: this is the great Commandment, and the other is (but) like unto it. Indeed I would not have Sacrifice turn Mercy out of doors, as Sara did Agar; nor the fire of zeal drink up the dew and moisture of charity; as the fire from heaven dried up the water at Eliah's sacrifice: neither would I that the precise observation of the second table, should guild over the monstrous breaches of the first. Yet I have heard Divines (reasoning this point) attribute this privilege to the first Table above the second; that God never did (I will not say, never could) dispense with these commandments which have himself for their proper and immediate object. For then (say they) he should dispense against himself, or make himself no God, or more: He never gave allowance to any, to have. 1. another God. 2. another form of worship. 3. the honor of his name he will not give to another. 4. nor suffer the profaner of his Holy-day to escape unpunished. For the second table, you have read him, commanding the brother to raise up seed to his brother: notwithstanding the Law, Thou shalt not commit adultery: commanding the Israelites to rob the Egyptians, without infringing the law of stealth, all this without wrong: for, the earth is his, and the fullness thereof. Thou art a father of many children; thou sayest to the younger, sirrah, wear you the coat today which your other brother wore yesterday; who complains of wrong? we are all (or at least, say we are all) the children of God: have earthly Parents a greater privilege than our heavenly? if God then have given dispensation to the second Table, not to the first; the observation of which (think you) best pleaseth him?

Let not then, oh Judas, charity shoulder out piety: nay charity will not, cannot: for faith worketh by love. And love never dined in a conscience, where faith had not first broken her fast. Faith and love are like a pair of compasses; whilst faith stands perfectly fixed in the center, which is God; love walks the round, and puts a girdle of mercy about the loins: there may indeed be a show of charity without faith, but there can be no show of faith without charity: Man judgeth by the hand, God by the heart.

Hence our Pollicies in their positive laws, lay severe punishments on the actual breaches of the second Table, leaving most sins against the first, to the hand of the Almighty Justice. Let man's name be slandered. Currat lex, the law is open; be God's name dishonoured, blasphemed, there is no punishment but from God's immediate hand. Carnal fornication speeds (though not ever bad enough, yet) sometimes worse than spiritual: which is idolatry. Yet this last is (maius adulterium) the greater adultery: because (non ad alteram mulierem, sed ad alterum Deum) it is not the knitting of the body to another woman, but of the soul to another God. The poor slave, is conuented to the spiritual court, and meets with a shrewd penance for his incontinence: the rich noble man, knight or gentleman (for Papists are no beggars) breaks the Commissaries cords as, easily as Sampson the Philistines withes, and puts an Excommunication in his pocket. All is answered, who knows the spirit of man, but the spirit of man? and he stands or falls to his own master. Yet again, who knows whether bodily stripes may not procure spiritual health? and a seasonable blow to the estate may not save the soul in the day of the Lord Jesus. often (detrimentum pecuniae & sanitatis, propter bonum animae) a loss to the purse, or a cross to the corps, is for the good of the conscience. Let me then complain. 1. are there no laws for Atheists; that would scrape out the deepeingrauen characters of the souls eternity, out of their consciences; and think their souls as vanishing as the spirits of dogs: not contenting themselves to lock up this damned persuasion in their own bowels, but belching out this unsavory breath to the contagion of others (witness many an Ordinary that this is an ordinary custom); that in despite of the Oracles of heaven, the Prophets; and the Secretaries of nature, the philosophers; would enforce, that either there is no God, or such a one, as had as good be none: nominal Protestans, verbal Neuters, real Atheists. 2. Are there no laws for image-worshippers, secret friends to Baal, that eat with us, sit with us, play with us, not pray with us, nor for us, unless for our ruins. Yes, the sword of the Law is shaken against them: (alas that, but only shaken:) but either their breasts are invulnerable, or the sword is obtuse, or the strikers troubled with the palsy & numbness in the arms. 3. Are there no laws for blasphemers, common swearers, whose constitutions are so ill tempered of the four elements, that they take and possess several seats in them: all Earth in their harts, all Water in their stomachs, all Air in their brains, and (saith Saint James) all Fire in their tongues: they have heavy earthen hearts, watery and surfeited stomachs, light, aierie, mad-brains, fiery and flaming tongues. 4. Are there no laws to compel them on these days, that Gods house may be filled? no power to bring them from the puddles to thesprings? from walking the streets, sporting in the fields, quaffing in taverns, slugging, wantonizing on couches, to watch with Christone hour in his house of prayer? why should not such blisters be launched by the knife of authority, which will else make the whole body of the Common-wealth (though not incurable, yet) dangerously sick? I may not seem to prescribe, give me leave to exhort: non est meae humilitatis dictare vobis &c. It suites not with my mean knowledge, to direct you the means, but with my conscience to rub your memories: oh let not the pretended equity to men, countenance out our neglected piety to God!

4. Lastly observe his unkindness to Christ: what, Judas, grudge thy master a little unction? and wick is yet viler) from another's purse? with what detraction, derision, exclamation wouldest thou have permitted this to thy fellow servant, that repinest it to thy master? how hardly had this been derived from thy own estate, that didest not tolerate it from Mary's? what? thy master, that honored thee with Christianity, graced thee with Apostleship, trusted thee with Stewardship, wilt thou deny him this courtesy, and without thine own cost? thy Master, Judas, thy friend, thy God, and yet in a sweeter manner, thy Savior, and canst not endure another gratuitous kindness towards him? shall he pour forth the best unction of his blood, to bath and comfort thy body and soul, and thou not allow him a little refection? hath Christ hungered, thirsted, fainted, sweet, and must he instantly bleed and die, and is he denied a little unction? and doest thou, Judas, grudge it? it had come more tolerably from any mouth: his friend, his follower, his Professor, his Apostle, his Steward! unkind, unnatural, unjust, unmerciful Judas.

Nay, he terms it no better then a waste and a loss: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ? ad quid perditio haec? Why is this wast? What, lost and given to Jesus? can there be any waste in the creatures due service to the Creator? no: pietas est, pro pietate sumptus facere: this is godliness, to be at cost with God: therefore our fathers left behind them (deposita pietatis) pledges, evidences, sure testimonies of their Religion, in honoring Christ with their riches: (I mean not those in the days of Popery, but before ever the locusts of the Papal sea made our Nation drunk with hir enchanted cup:) they thought it no waste either (noua construere, aut vetera conseruare) to build new Monuments to Christ's honor, or to better the old ones: we may say of them, as Rome bragged of Augustus Caesar: quae inuenerunt lateritia, reliquerunt marmorea: what they found of Brick, they left of Marble; in imitation of that precedent in Isaiah, though with honest hearts: The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones: the Sycomores are cut down, but we will change them into Cedars. In those days, charity to the Church was not counted waste: The people of England, devout like those of Israel, cried one to another (afferte) Bring ye into God's house; till they were stayed with a statute of Mort-main, like Moses prohibition, the people bring too much, but now they changed a letter, and cry, (Auferte) take away as fast as ever they gave, and no Inhibition of God or Moses, Gospel or statute, can restrain their violence: till the Alabaster box be as empty of oil, as their own consciences are of grace. We need not stint your devotion, but your deuoration: every contribution to God's service is held waste: ad quid perditio haec? now any required ornament to the church is held waste: but swallowing down (I say not, of ornaments, as things better spared, but) necessary maintenance, Tythes, Fruits, Offerings, are all too little: Gentlemen in these cold Countries have very good stomachs, they can devour (and digest too) three or four plump Personages; in Italy, Spain, and those hot Countries, (or else nature and experience too lies) a Temporal man cannot swallow a morsel or bit of a spiritual preferment, but it is reluctant in his stomach, up it comes again: surely these Northern Countries, coldly situate, and nearer to the Tropicke, have greater appetites: the Africans think the Spaniards gluttons, the Spaniards think so of the French-men, French men and all think and say so of English-men; for they can devour whole Churches: and they have sed so liberally, that their poor seruitors (ashamed I am to call them so) the Vicars have scarce enough left to keep life and soul together: nor so much as (sitis & fames & frigora poscunt) the defense of hunger and thirst and cold requires: your fathers thought many Acres of ground well bestowed, you think the Tythe of those Acres a waste: Oppression hath plai'd the Judas with the Church, and because he would prevent the sins incurable by our fullness of bread, hath scarce left us bread to feed upon, Daniel's dict among the Lions, or Elias his in the wilderness. I will not censure you in this, ye Citizens; let it be your praise, that though you dwell in sieled houses yourselves, you let not

God's house lie waste: yet sometimes it is found, that some of you so careful in the City, are as negligent in the Country, where your lands lie; and there the Temples are often the ruins of your oppression; your poor, undone, blood-sucked Tenants, not being able to repair the windows or the leads, to keep out rain or birds: if a leuy or taxation would force your benevolence, it comes maleuolently from you, with a Why is this wast? Raise a contribution to a lecture, a collection for a fire, an alms to a poor destitute soul, and lightly there is one Judas in the congregation to cry, ad quid perditio haec? why is this waste? Yet you will say, if Christ stood in need of an unction, though as costly as Mary's, you would not grudge it, nor think it lost: Cosen not yourselves, ye hypocrites; if ye will not do it to his Church, to his poor ministers, to his poor members, neither would you to Christ: if you cloth not them, neither would you cloth Christ if he stood naked at your doors. Whiles you count that money lost, which God's service receiveth of you, you cannot shake away Judas from your shoulder. What would you do, if Christ should charge you, as he did the young-man in the Gospel Sell all, and give to the poor, that think your superfluties a waste? oh, durus sermo! a hard sentence! Indeed a cup of cold water is bounty praised and rewarded, but in them that are not able to give more: the Widows two mites are accepted, because all hir estate. If God thought it no waste to give you plenty, even all you have, think it no wast to return him some of his own. Think not the Oile waste, which you pour into the Lamp of the Sanctuary: think not the bread waste, which you cast on the waters of Adversity: think nothing lost, whereof you have feossed God in trust. But let me teach you soberly to apply this, and tell you what indeed is waste.

1. Our immoderate diet: indeed not diet, for that contents nature, but surfeit, that overthrows nature: this is waste. Plain M<sup>r</sup>. Nabal made a feast like a Prince. Dives hath no other arms to prove himself a Gentleman; but a scutchion of these 3. colors: first he had money in his purse: he was rich: secondly, he had good rags on his back, clothed in purple: thirdly, dainties on his table; he fared deliciously, and that, every day: this was a Gentleman without Heraldry. It was the rule: ad alimenta; vt ad medicamenta: to our meat, as to our medicine: man hath the least mouth of all creatures: (malum non imitari, quod sumus.) Therefore it is ill for us, not to imitate that which we are; not to be like our selves: there are many shrewed contentions between the appetite and the purse; the wise man is either a Neuter, or takes part with his purse: to consume that at one banket, which would keep a poor man with convenient sustenance all his life, this is waste. But alas our slavery to Epicureanism is great in these days, mancipia seruiunt dominis, domini cupiditatibus: servants are not more slaves to their masters, then their masters are slaves to lusts. Timoreons Epitaph fits many:

Multa bibeus, & multa vorans, mala plurimadicens &c. he eat much, and drunk much, and spake much evil: we sacrifice to our palates as to God's: the rich feast, the poor fast: the dogs dine, the poor pine: ad quid perditio haec? Why is this waste?

2. Our unreasonable ebrieties.—Tenent{que}

Pocula saepe homines, & inumbrant ora coronis.

They take their fill of wine here, as if they were resolved with Dives, they should not get a drop of water in Hell: Eat, drink, play: quid aliud sepulchro bouis inscribi poterat? what other epitaph could be written on the sepulcher of an Ox? Epulonum crateres, sunt epulonum carceres: their boules are their bolts: there is no bondage, like to that of the Vintage. The furnace beguiles the oven; the Celler deceives the Buttery: we drink away our bread, as if we would put a new petition into the Lord's prayer, and abrogate the old; saying no more with Christ, give us this day our daily bread, but give us this day our daily drink: quod non in diem, sed in mensem sufficit: which is more then enough for a day, nay would serve a month. Temperance, the just Steward, is put out of his office: what place is free from these Ale-house recusants? that think better of their drinking-room, then Peter thought of Mount Tabor, bonum est esse hîc: it is good being here; vbi nec Deus, nec Daemon; where both God and the Devil are fast a sleep. It is a question, whether it be worse to turn the image of a beast to God, or the image of God to a beast: if the first be Idolatry, the last is impiety. a voluptuous man is a murderer to himself, a covetous man a thief, a malicious a witch, a drunkard a devil thus to drink away the poor's relief, our own estate; ad quid perditio haec? why is this wast?

3. Our monstrous pride, that turns hospitallity into a dumb show: that which fed the belly of hunger, now feeds the eye of lust: akers of land are metamorphised into trunks of apparel; and the soul of charity is transmigrated into the body of bravery: this is wast: we make our selves the compounds of all Nations: we borrow of Spain, Italy, Germany, France, Turkey and all; that death when he robs an Englishman, robs all Countries: where lies the wealth of England? in three places: on Citizens tables, in Usurers coffers, and upon Courtiers backs: God made all simple, therefore woe to these compounded fashions: God will one day say, (hoc non optas meum nec imago mea est.) this is none of my workmanship, none of my image. One man wears enough on his back at once, to cloth two naked wretches all their lives: ad quid &c. why is this wast?

4. Our vainglorious building, to emulate the skies, which the wise-man calls, the lifting up of our gates too high. Houses built like palaces; Tabernacles, that in the Masters thought, equal the Mansion of heaven: structures to whom is promised eternity, as if the ground, they stood on, should not be shaken. Whole towns depopulate to rear up one man's walls; chimneys built in proportion, not one of them so happy as to smoke; brave gates, but never open: sumptuous parlours, for Owls and Bats to fly in, pride begun them, riches finished them, beggary keeps them: for most of them molder away, as if they were in the dead builders case, a consumption. Would not a less house, Ieconiah, have served thee for better hospitallity? our Fathers lived well under lower roofs: this is wast, and wast indeed, and these worse then the Devil: the Devil had once some charity in him, to turn stones into bread, but these men turn bread into stones; a trick beyond the Devil: ad quid perditio haec? Why is this waste?

5. Our ambitious seeking after great alliance: the son of the Thistle must match with the Cedars daughter: The father tears dear years out of the Earthes bowels, and raiseth a bank of usury, to set his son upon, and thus mounted, he must not enter save under the noble roof: no cost is spared to ambitious advancement: ad quid &c. why is this waste.

Shall I say? our upholding of Theaters to the contempt of Religion: our maintayning Ordinaries to play away our patrimonies: our four-wheeled Porters: our Antic the fashion: our smoky consumption; our perfumed putrefaction: ad quid perditio haec? Why are these wastes? experience will testify at last, that these are wastes indeed; for they waste the body, the blood, the state, the freedom, the soul it self, and all is lost, thus laid out: but what is given (with Mary) to Christ, is lost like sown grain, and shall be found again at the harvest of Joy.

We have heard Judas censuring Mary: let us now hear God censuring Judas; and that first negatively: he cared not for the poor. For the poor he pleads, but himself is the poor, he means well too: but let his pretence be what it will, God's witness is true against him; he cared not for the poor.

1. Observe: doth Christ condemn Judas for condemning Mary? then it appears, he doth justify hir action: he doth, and that after in express terms: Let hir alone: &c. ver. 7. Happy Mary that hast Jesus to plead for thee: blessed Christians, for whom Jesus Christ is an Advocate. He is near me, that justifies me, who will contend with me? verse 9. behold the Lord will help me, who is he that can condemn me? hence David resignes his protection into the hands of God. Judge me, oh God, and defend my cause against the unmerciful people. And Paul yet with greater boldness, sends a frank defiance and challenge to all the actors & pleaders that ever condemnation had, that they should never have power to condemn him, since Jesus Christ justifies him. Happy man, whose cause God takes in hand to plead. Here is a Judas to accuse us, a Jesus to acquit us: Iudasslanders, Jesus clears: wicked men censure, the just God approves: earth judgeth evil, what is pronounced good in heaven! oh then do well, though (fremant gentes) great men rage, though perverseness censures, impudence slanders, malice hinders, tyranny persecutes; there is a Jesus, that approves: his approbation shall out-weigh all their censures: let his spirit testify with me, though the whole world oppose me.

2. Observe: It is the nature of the wicked to have no care of the poor. Sibi nati, sibi viuunt, sibi moriuntur, sibi damnantur: they are all for themselves, they are borne to themselves, live to themselves, (so let them) die for themselves, and go to Hell for themselves. The fat Bulls of Bashan, love the lambes from the flock, and the Calves from the stall &c. But think not on the affliction of Joseph. Your gallant thinks not the distressed, the blind, the lame to be part of his care: it concerns him not: true and therefore heaven concerns him not: it is infallible truth, if they have no feeling of others miseries, they are no members of Christ: go on now in thy scorn, thou proud Royster: admire the fashion and stuff, thou wearest; whiles the poor mourns for nakedness: feast royallie Dives, whiles Lazarus can get no crumbs: Apply, Absalom, thy sound, healthful limbs to lust and lewdness, whiles the lame, blind, maimed cannot derive a penny from thy purse, though he move his suit in the name of Jesus; thou givest testimony to the world, to thy own conscience, that thou art but a Judas. Why, the poorest and the proudest have though not Uestem comunem, yet cutem comunem? there may be difference in the fleece, there is none in the flesh: yea perhaps, as the gallants perfumed body is often the sepulcher to a putrefied soul: so a white, pure, innocent spirit may be shadowed under the broken roof of a maimed corpse. Nay, let me terrify them: not many rich, not many mighty, not many noble are called: It is Paul's thunder against the flashes of greatness: he says not, not any, but not many: for seruatur Lazarus pauper, sed in finu Abrahami Diuitis: Lazarus the poor man is saved, but in the bosom of Abraham the rich. It is a good saying of the son of Sirach: The affliction of one hour will make the proudest stoop, sit upon the ground, and forget his former pleasure, a piercing misery will soften your bowels, and let your soul see through the breaches of his prison, in what need distress stands of succor. Then you will be charitable or never, as physicians say of their Patients, take whiles they be in pain; for in health nothing will be wrung out of them. so long as health & prosperity clothe you, you reckon not the poor: Nabal looks to his sheep, what cares he for David? if the truth were known, there are many Nabal's now, that love their own sheep, better than Christ's sheep: Christ's sheep take coats, their own sheep give coats. Say some that cavil, if we must care for the poor, then for the covetous; for they want, what they possess, and are indeed poorest: no, pity not them, that pity not themselves; who in despite of God's bounty will be miserable: but pity those, whom a fatal distress hath made wretched.

Oh, how unfit is it among Christians, that some should surfeit, whiles others hunger? that one should have two coats, and another be naked, yet both one man's servants. Remember that God hath made many his stewards, none his Treasurer: he did not mean, thou shouldst hoard his blessings, but expend them to his glory: he that is infinitely rich, yet keeps nothing in his own hands, but gives all to his creatures: at his own cost and charges he hath maintained the world, almost 6000. years: he will most certainly admit no hoarder into his kingdom: yet, if you will needs love laying up, God hath provided you a coffer: the poor man's hand is Christ's treasury. The besotted worldling hath a greedy mind, to gather goods, and keep them; and loe, his keeping loseth them: for they must have either (finem tuum, or finem suum) thy end, or their end: Job tarried and his goods went; but the rich man went, and his goods tarried. Si vestra sunt, tollite vobiscum: if they be yours, why do you not take them with you? no, hinc acquiruntur, hinc amittuntur: here they are gotten, here lost. But God himselfe being witness (nay he hath past his word) what we for his sake give away here, we shall find again hereafter; and the charitable man dead and buried, is richer under the ground, than! was above it. It is an usual song, which the Saints now sing in heaven.

That we gave;

That we have.

This riddle poseth the worldling, as the Fishermens did Homer: Quae cepimus, reliquimus: quae non cepimus, nobiscum portamus: what we caught, we left behind us; what we could not catch, we carried with us. So, what we loose, we keep: what we will keep, we shall loose. he that looseth his goods, his lands, his freedom, his life for Christ's sake shall find it. This is the charitable man's case: all his alms, mercies, relieuings are (wisely and without executorship) sown in his life time; and the harvest will be so great, by that time he gets to heaven, that he shall receive a thousand for one: God is made his debtor, and he is a sure paymaster. Earth hath not riches enough in it to pay him, his requital shall be in heaven, and there with no less degree of honor, than a kingdom.

Judas cares not for the poor: Judas is dead, but this fault of his lives still: the poor had never more need to be cared for: but how: there are two sorts of poor, and our care must be proportionable to their conditions, there are. 1. some poor of God's making. 2. some of their own making: let me say, there are God's poor and the Devils poor: those the hand of God hath crossed; these have forced necessity on themselves by a dissolute life. The former must be cared for by the compassion of the heart, and charity of the purse: God's poor must have good alms; a seasonable relief according to thy power; or else the Apostle fearfully and peremptorily concludes against thee: the love of God is not in thee. If thou canst not find in thy heart to diminish a grain from thy heap, a penny from thy purse, a cut from thy loaf, when Jesus Christ stands at thy door and calls for it, profess what thou wilt, the love of earth hath thrust the love of heaven out of thy conscience. even Judas himself will pretend charity to these.

For the other poor, who have pulled necessity on themselves with the cords of Idleness, riot, or such disordered courses, there is another care to be taken; not to cherish the lazy blood in their vaines by abusive mercy; but rather chafe their stonied sinews by correction, relieve them with punishment, and so recover them to the life of obedience. The sluggard lusteth, and hath an empty stomach: he loves sustenance well, but is loath to set his foot on the cold ground for it. The laws sanction, the good man's function saith, if he will not labour, let him not eat. For experience telleth that where slouth refuseth the ordinary pains of getting, therelust hunes for it in the vnbeaten paths of wickedness; and you shall find, that if ever occasion should put as much power into their hands, as idleness hath put villainy into their harts; they will be ready to pilfer your goods, fire your houses, cut your throats. I have read of the King of Macedon, deserying two such in his dominions, that (alterum e Macedonia fugere, alterum fugare fecit.) he made one fly out of his kingdom, and the other drive him. I would our Magistrates would follow no worse a precedent: indeed our laws have taken order for their restraint; wheresoever the fault is, they are rather multiplied; as if they had been sown at the making of the statute, and now (as from a harvest) they arise ten for one: surely our laws make good willes, but they have bad luck for executors: their willes are not performed; nor their legacies distributed; I mean the legacies of correction to such children of slouth, Impunitas delicti inuit at homines ad malignandum: Since chief encouragement is the want of punishment: favor one, harden many. It is fit therefore, that (poena ad paucos, met us ad omnes perueniat) penalty be inflicted on some, to strike terror into the rest.

It was Saint Augustine's censure: Illicit a non prohibere, consensus erroris est, not to restrain evil, is to maintain evil. The common wealth is an Instrument, the people are the strings, the magistrate is the musitian: let the musitian look, that the instrument be in tune, the iarring strings ordered; and not play on it, to make himself sport, but to please the ears of God. Doctors, the ministers of mercy now can do no good, except Ductores, the ministers of justice put to their hands. We can but forbid the corruption of the heart; they must prohibit the wickedness of the hand. Let these poor be cared for, that have no care for themselves: runnagates, renegates, that will not be ranged (like wandering planets) within the sphere of obedience: yet a little more sleep, says the sluggard: but (modicum non habet modum) their bunch will swell to a mountain; if it be not prevented and pared down. Care for these ye magistrates, lest you answer for the subornation of their sins: for the other, let all care, that care to be received into the arms of Jesus Christ.

3. Observe: Judas cares not for the poor; what, and yet would he for their sakes have drawn comfort from the Son of God? what an hypocrite is this? could there be so deep dissimulation in an Apostle? yes in that Apostle, that was a Devil. Loe still I am haunted with this white Devil, Hypocrisy: I cannot sail two leagues, but I rush upon this rock; nay, it will encounter, incommber me quite thorough the voyage of this verse. Judas said, and meant not, there is hypocrisy: he spake for the poor, and hates them, there is hypocrisy: he was a privy thief, a false steward, &c. all this not without hypocrisy. shall I be rid of this Devil at once, and conjure him out of my speech? God give me assistance, and add you patience, and I will spend a little time, to uncase this white Devil, and strip him of all his borrowed colors.

Of all bodily creatures, man (as he is God's image) is the best: but basely dejected, degenerated, debauched, the (simply) worst: of all earthly creatures a wicked man is the worst, of all men a wicked Christian, of all Christians a wicked professor, of all professors a wicked hypocrite, of all hypocrites a wicked, warped, wretched Judas. Take the extraction or quintessence of all corrupted men, and you have a Judas: this then is Judas a man degenerate, a Christian corrupted, a professor putrefied, a guilded hypocrite, a white-skinned Devil. I confess I am sparingly affected to this point, and would fain shift my hands of this monster, and not encounter him: for it is not to fight with the Unicornes of Assyria, nor the Bulls of Samaria, nor the Beasts of Ephesus: neither absolute Atheists, nor dissolute Christians, nor resolute ruffians: the horns of whose rapine and malice are no less manifest, than malignant; but at once imminent in their threats, and eminent in their appearance. But to set upon a Beast, that hath with the heart of a Leopard, the face of a man, of a good man, of the best man; a star placed high in the orbe of the Church, though swooped down with the Dragons tail, because not fixed; a darling in the mothers lap, blessed with the Churches indulgence, yet a bastard: a brother of the fraternity, trusted sometimes with the Churches stock, yet no brother, but a broker of treacheries, a brocher of falsehoods: I would willingly save this labor, but that the necessity of my Text over-rules my disposition.

I know, these times are so shameless and impudent, that many strip of the white, and keep the Devil; wicked they are, and without show of the contrary: men are so far from giving house-room to the substance of religion, that they admit not an out-room for the show; so backward to put on Christ, that they will not accept of his livery; who are short of Agrippa, scarce persuaded to seem Christians, not at all to be: these will not drink hearty draughts of the waters of life, nay scarce vouchsafe (like the dogs that run by Nile) to give a lap at Jacob's well: unless it be some, as they report, that frequent the sign of it, to be drunk: they salute not Christ at the Cross, nor bid him good morrow in the Temple, but go blustering by, as if some serious business had put haste into their feet, and God was not worthy to be staid & spoke withal: if this be a riddle, show me the day, shall not expound it by a demonstrative experience. For these I may say, I would to God, they would seem holy, and frequent the places, where sanctimony is taught, but the Devil is a nimble, running, cunning fencer, that strikes on both hands, duplici ictu, and would have men either (non sanctos, aut non parùm sanctos) not holy, or not a little holy, in their own opinion, and outward ostentation: either no fire of devotion on the hearth, or that that is, in the top of the chimney: That subtle winnower persuades men, that they are all chaff, and no wheat, or all wheat and no chaff; and would keep the soul either lank with ignorance, or rank with insolence: let me therefore woo you, win you to reject both these extremes, between which, your hearts lie, as the grain betwixt both the millstones.

Shall I speak plainly? You are sick at London of one disease (I speak to you settled Citizens, not extraneous) and we in the Country of another: a Sermon against hypocrisy in most places of the Country, is like phlebotomy to a consumption (the spilling of innocent blood) our sicknesses are cold palseys and shaking agues: yours in the City are hotter diseases, the burning fevers of fiery zeal, the inflammations and impostumes of hypocrisy: we have the frosts, and you have the lightnings; most of us profess too little, and some of you profess too much, unless your courses were more answerable; I would willingly be in none of your bosoms; only I must speak of Judas. His hypocrisy was vile in 3. respects.

1. He might have been sound: I make no question but he heard his Master preach, and preached himself, that God's request is the heart: so Christ schools the Samaritan woman; so prescribed the Scribe. Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, &c. cord Judas, with the heart, which thou reseruest like an equivoating Jesuit: nay, (toto cord, for it is not tutum, except it be totum) with the whole heart, which thou never stoodest to divide, but gavest it wholly to him, that wholly killed it, thy masters enemy, and none of thy friend, the Devil. Thou heardest thy master, thy friend, thy God denounce many a fearful, fatal, final woe against the Pharisees; (hac appellatione, & ob hanc causam) under this title, and for this cause) hypocrites, and because hypocrites. As if his woes were but words, and his words wind, empty and airy menaces, without intention of hurt, or extension of a revengeful arm, behold thou art an hypocrite: thou art therefore the worse, because thou mightest be better.

2. He seemed sound: (spem vultu simulat, premit altum cord dolore; nay dolum rather) craft rather than grief, unless he grieved, that out of his cunning, there was so little coming, small prize or booty: yet like a subtle gamester, he keeps his countenance, though the dice do not favor him. And as Fabius Maximus told Scipio preparing for Africa concerning Syphax: Fraus fidem in parvis sibi perstruit, vt cum operaepretium sit, cum magna mercede fallat. Judas creeps into trust by justice in trifles, that he might more securely cheat for a fit advantage. Without pretence of fidelity how got he the stewardship? perhaps if need required, he spared not his own purse in Christ's service; but he meant to put it to usury: he carried not the purse, but to pay himself for his pains: thus iactura in loco, res quaestuosissima:) a seasonable damage is a reasonable vantage: in this then his vileness is more execrable, that he seemed good.

If it were possible, the Devil was then worse than himself, when he came in Samuel's mantle. Iesabel's paint made her more ugly: if ever you take a fox in a lambes skin, hang him up, for he is the worst of the generation: a Gibeonite in his old shoes, a Seminary in his hairecloth, a Ruffian in the robes of a Iacobine, fly like the plague: these are so much the worse Devils, as they would be holy Devils: true Traitors that would fight against God with his own weapons; and by being out of cry religious, run themselves out of breath to do the Church a mischief.

3. He would seem thus to his master; yet knew in his heart, that his master knew his heart: therefore his hypocrisy the worst. Had he been an Aliant to the common wealth of Israel, and never seen more of God, than the eye of nature had discovered, (yet says even the Heathen: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; God hath a revenging eye.) then no marvel, if his eyes had been so blind, as to think Christ's blind also, and that he, which made the eye, had not an eye to see withal: but he saw that son of David give sight to so many sons of Adam casually blind, to one naturally and borne blind; miraculum inauditum, a wonder of wonders: and shall Judas think to put out his eye, that gave them all eyes? oh incredible, insensible, invincible ignorance!

You see his hypocrisy: me thinks even the sight of it is disuasion forcible enough, and it should be needless to give any other reason than the discovery. yet whiles many censure it in Judas, they condemn it not in themselves, and either think they have it not, or not in such measure. Surely we may be no Iudasses, yet hypocrites: and who will totally clear himself? let me tell thee, if thou doest, thou art the worst hypocrite, and but for thee, we had not such need to complain. He that clears himself from all sin, is the most sinner, and he that says, he hath not sinned in hypocrisy, is the rankest hypocrite: but I do admit a distinction. All the sons of Adam are infected with this contamination, some more, some less, heres the difference; all have hypocrisy, but hypocrisy hath some: aliud habere peccatum, aliud haberi à peccato. It is one thing for thee to possess sin, another thing for sin to possess thee. All have the same corruption, not the same eruption: in a word, all are not hypocrites, yet who hath not sinned in hypocrisy? Do not then send your eyes like Dinah's gadding abroad, forgetting your own business at home: strain not courtesy with these banquets, and having good meat carved thee, lay it liberally upon another man's trencher, be not sick of this plague and conceal it, or call it by another name: hypocrisy is hypocrisy, whatsoever you call it: and as it hath learned to leave no sins naked, so I hope, it hath not forgot to clothe it self: it hath as many names as Garnet had, and more Protean shapes than the Seminaries: the white Devil is in this a true Devil; multorum nominum, non boni nominis: of many names, but never a good one. The vileness of this white Devil appears in 6. respects.

1. It is the worst of sins, because it keeps all sins: they are made sure and secure by hypocrisy. Indeed some vices are quarter-masters with it, and some Sovereigns over it: for the hypocrisy is but another sins pandar: except to content some affected guest, we could never yield to this filthy Herodias. It is made a stawking horse for covetousness, under long prayers many a Pharisee deuours the poor, houses, goods and all. It is a complexion for lust, who, were she not painted over with a religious show, would appear as loathsome to the world, as she is indeed. It is a sepulcher of rotten impostures, which would stink like a putrefied corps, if hypocrisy were not their cover. It is a mask for treason, whose shop-full of poisons, pistols, daggers, gunpowder-trains, would easily be spied out, had hypocrisy left them bare-faced. Treachery under this visard thrusts into Court-revels, nay, Court-councils; and holds the torch to sports, nay the books to serious consultations; deuiseth, adviseth, plots with those that provide best for the Common-wealth, Thus are all sins beholding to hypocrisy: she maintains them at her own proper costs and charges.

2. It is the worst of sins, because it counterfeits all virtues: he that counterfeits the Kings coin, is liable to death, if hypocrisy find not death, and (mortem sine morte) death without death, for counterfeting the king of heavens Seal manual of grace, it speeds better then it merits: vice is made virtues ape in an hypocrites practice. If he see Chusi run, this Ahimaaz will outrunne him: he mends his pace, but not his path: the goodman goes slower, but will be at heaven before him: thus thriftiness in a Saint, is counterfeted by niggardlinesse in an hypocrite. be thou charitable, behold he is bountiful, but not except thou may behold him: his vainglorious pride shall emulate thy liberality: thou art good to the poor, he will be better to the rich: he follows the religious man a far of, as Peter did Christ, but when he comes to the cross, he will deny him. Thus hypocrisy can but put blood into your cheeks, (like the Aliptae) and better your colors; but you may be sick in your consciences, and almost dead at the heart, and (non est medicamen in hortis) there is no medicine in this drugsters shop can cure you.

3. An hypocrite is a kind of honest Atheist: for his own Good is his God: his heaven is upon earth, and that not the Peace of his conscience, or that kingdom of heaven, which may be in a soul living on earth, but the secure peace of a worldly estate: he stands in awe of no Judge, but man's eye; that he observes with as great respect, as David did the eyes of God; if man takes notice, he cares not, yet laughs at him for that notice, and kills his soul by that laughter: so Pygmalion-like, he dotes on his own carved and painted piece: and perhaps dies Zeuxis death, who painting an old woman, and looking merrily on her, brake out into a laughter that killed him. if the world doth not praise his doings, he is ready to challenge it, as the Jews God, wherefore have we fasted, and thou seest it not? he crosseth Christ's precept: the left hand must be privy to the right hands charity, he dares not trust God with a penny, except before a whole congregation of witnesses, lest perhaps, God should deny the receipt.

4. An hypocrite (at last) is hated of all, both God and man: the world hates thee, Judas, because thou retainest to Christ, Christ hates thee more because thou (but) only retainest, and doest no faithful service. The world cannot abide thee, thou hypocrite, because thou professest godliness; God can worse abide thee, because thou doest no more than profess. It had been yet some policy, on the loss of the worlds favor to keep God's; or if lost God's, to have (yet) kept in with the world: thou art not thy own friend, to make them both thy enemies: miserable man, destitute of both refuges, shut out both from God's and the worlds doors. Neither God nor the Devil loves thee, thou hast been true to none of them both, and yet most false (of all) to thyself. So (this white Devil) Judas, that for the Pharisees sake betrayed his master, and for the Devils sake betrayed himself, was in the end rejected of Pharisees and master; and like a ball, tost by the rackets of contempt and shame, bandied from the Pharisees to Christ, from Christ to the Pharisees, from wall to wall, till he fell into the Devils hazard; not resting like a stone, till he came to his center, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; into his own place. Purposeth he to go to Christ? his own conscience gives him a repulsive answer: no, thou hast betrayed innocent blood. Goes he to the chief Priests and Elders? cold comfort: what is that to us? see thou to that. Thus (your ambi-dexter proves at last ambo-sinister) he that plays so long on both hands, hath no hand to help himself withal. This is the hypocrites misery; because he wears God's livery, the world will not be his mother; because his heart, habit, service is sin-wedded, God will not be his father: he hath lost earth for heavens sake, and heaven for earths sake; and may complain with Rebeccaes fear of hir two sons; why should I be deprived of you both in one day? or as sorrowful Jacob expostulated for his, Me have you robbed of my children: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and will you take Benjamin also? all these things are against me. This may be the hypocrites mournful Dirge: My hypocrisy hath robbed me of all my comforts: my Creator is lost, my Redeemer will not own me; and will ye take away (my beloved Benjamin) the world also? all these things are against me. Thus an open sinner is in better case, then a dissembling Saint. There are few that seem worse to others, then they are in themselves: yet I have both read and heard of some, that have with broken hearts, and mourning bowels, sorrowed for themselves, as if they had been reprobates; and not spared so to proclaim themselves, when yet their estate was good to godward, though they knew it not: perhaps their wickedness and ill life hath been grievous, but their repentance gracious: I may call these black Saints. The hypocrite is neat and curious in his religious outside, but the linings of his conscience are filthy and polluted rags: then I say still, a black Saint is better than a white Devil.

5 Hypocrisy is like the Devil, for he is a perfect hypocrite: so he begun with our first Parents, to put out his apparent horns in Paradise: non moriemini, ye shall not die: yet he knew this would kill them. An hypocrite then is the child of the Devil, and (quoth Time the midwife) as like the father, as it may possibly look, he is the father of lies; and there is no liar like the hypocrite, for as Peter to Ananias, thou hast not lied to men, but to God. Nay, the hypocrite is his eldest son. Now, the privilege of primogeniture by the law, was to have a double portion: wretched hypocrite in this eldership: (Math. 24. 51.) Satan is called a Prince, and thus stands his monarchy, or rather Anarchy. The Devil is king, the hypocrite his eldest son: the usurer his younger; Atheists are his viceroyes in his several provinces, for his dominion is beyond the Turks for limits: Epicures are his Nobles: Persecutors his Magistrates; Heretics his ministers, Traitors his executioners: sin his law; the wicked his subjects, Tyrannie his government: hell his court, and damnation his wages. Of all these the hypocrite is his eldest Son.

6 Lastly, an hypocrite is in greatest difficulty to be cured. Why should the minister administer physic to him, that is perfectly sound? or why should Christ give his blood to the righteous? well may he be hurt and swell, swell and rankle, rankle and fester, fester and die, that will not bewray his disease, least he betray his credit.

A man of great Profession, little Devotion, is like a body so repugantly composed, that he hath a hot liver, and a cold stomach: that which heats the stomach, ouerheates the liver: that which cools the liver, ouercooles the stomach: so, exhortations, that warm his conscience, inflame his outward zeal: desuasiues to cool his hypocrisy, freeze his devotion, he hath a flushing in his face, as if he had eaten fire: zeal burns in his tongue, but come near this gloeworme, and he is cold, dark, squalid. Summer sweates in his face, winter freeseth in his conscience: March, many forwards in his words, December in his actions: pepper is not more hot in the tongues end, nor more cold at heart: and (to borrow the words of our worthy Divine and best Characterer) we think him a Saint, he thinks himself an Angel, flatterers make him a God, God knows him a Devil.

This is the white Devil, you will not think how glad I am, that I am rid of him: let him go; yet I must not let you go, till I have persuaded you to hate this monster, to abhor this Devil. Alas! how forget we (in these days) to build up the cedar work of piety, and learn only to paint it over with vermillion! we white and parget the walls of our profession, but the rubbish and cobwebs of sin hang in the corners of our consciences: take heed, a Bible under your arms, will not excuse a false conscience in your bosoms: think not you fadome the substance, when you embrace the shadow: so the fox seeing sweet meats in the violl, licked the glass, and thought he had the thing: so the ignorant sick man eats up the Physicians bill, instead of the receipt contained in it. It is not a day of seven, nay an hour of seven days, the grudged parting with an alms to a fire, the coniuring of a paternoster, (for the heart only prays) or once a year renewing thy acquaintance with God in the sacrament can privilege or keep impune thy injuries, usuries, perjuries, frauds, slanders, oppressions, lusts, blasphemies. Beware of this white Devil, lest your portion be with them in hell, whose society you would defy on earth, God shall smite thee, thou painted wall; and wash of thy vermilliondye with the rivers of brimstone. You have read of some, that heard Christ preach in their pulpits, feasted at his communion-table, cast out devils in his name, yet not admitted: whiles they wrought miracles, not good works, cast out devils from others, not sins from themselves, they miss of entrance. Go then and solace thyself in thy bodily devotion, thou hearest, readeest, receauest, releueest; where is thy conscience, thy heart, thy spirit? God asks not for thy livery, but thy service: he knows none by their confession, but by their conversation. Your looks are the objects of strangers eyes, your lives of your neighbors, your consciences of your own, all of God's. Do not Ixion-like take a cloud for Juno, a mist of presumption for a sound and solid faith: more can say the Creed, than understand it, more feel it than practice it. Go into your grounds in the dead of winter, and of two naked and destitute trees, you know not which is the sound, which the doted: the summer will give Christ's mark: By their fruits you shall know them.

I speak not to discourage your zeal, but to harden it, but to better it. Your zeal goes through the world, ye worthy Citizens: Who builds hospitalls? the City. Who is liberal to the distressed Gospel? the City. Who is ever faithful to the Crown? the City. Beloved your works are good; oh do not loose their reward through hypocrisy. I am not bitter, but charitable: I would fain put you into the Chariot of grace with Elias, and only wish you to put off this Mantle. Oh that it lay in my power to prevail with your affections, as well as your judgments: you loose all your goodness, if your hearts be not right, the ostentation of man shall meet with the detestation of God. You loose your attention now, if your zeal be in your eye, more than heart. You loose your prayers, if, when the ground hath your knee, the world hath your conscience: as if you had two gods: one for Sundays, another for work days; one for the Church, another for the Change. You loose your charity whiles you give glosingly, illiberally, too late: not a window you have erected, but must bear your names: but some of you rob Peter to pay Paul, take Tenths from the Church, and give not the poor the Twentieths of them. It is not seasonable, nor reasonable charity, to undo whole towns by your usuries, enclosings, oppressions, impropriations; and for a kind of expiation, to give three or four the yearly pension of Twentie marks: an Almshouse is not so big as a village, nor thy superfluity whereout thou givest, like their necessity whereout thou extortest: he is but poorly charitable, that having made a hundred beggars, relieves two. You loose all your pious observations, whiles you loose your integrity: your solemn censuring, mourning for the times evil, whiles yourselves are the evil cause thereof: your counterfeit sorrow for the sins of your youth, whiles the sins of your age are worse; your casting salt and brine of reproof at others faults, whiles your own hearts are most unseasoned; all these artificial whitings, are but thriftie leasings, sick healths, bitter sweetes, and more pleasing deaths. Cast then away this bane of religion, hypocrisy; this candle with a great wicke and no tallow, that often goes out quickly, never without stench; this fair, flattering, white Devil. How well have we bestowed this pains, I in speaking, you in hearing, if this Devil be cast out of your consciences, out of your conversations: It will leave some prints behind it in the best, but bless not yourselves in it, and God shall bless you from it: Amen.

The affirmative part of God's censure, stands next to our speech; Describing his. 1. meaning. 2. means. 3. maintenance. His meaning was, to be a thief, and sharke for himself, though his pretence pleaded (forma Pauperis) in the behalf of the poor. He might, perhaps, stand upon his honesty, and rather than loose his credit, strive to purge himself by his suspectless neighbors: but there need no further Jury pass upon him, God hath given testimony, and his witness is beyond exception, Judas is a thief. A thief: who saw him steal? he that hath now condemned him for his pains. Indeed the world did not so take him, his reputation was good enough: yet he was a thief, a crafty, cunning, cheating thief.

There are two sorts of thieves: public ones, that either with a violent hand take away the passengers money, or rob the house at midnight: whose Church is the highway; there they pray (not to God, but) on men: their dwelling like Cain's, very unsure; they stand upon thorns whiles they stand upon certenties: Their refuge is a wood, the instrument of their vocation a sword: of these some are land-thieves, some sea-thieves: all roaue on the sea of this world, and most commonly suffer shipwreck, some in the deep, some on a hill. I will say little of these as not pertinent to my text, but leave them to the Jury: And speak of thieves like Judas, secret robbers, that do more mischief with less danger to themselves. These ride in the open streets, whiles the other lurk in close woods. And to reason, for these private thieves are in greater hazard of damnation: the grave exhortations of the Judge, the serious counsel of the assistant minister, together with the sight of present death, and the necessity of an instant account with God, work strongly on a public theefes conscience, all which the private thief neither hath, nor hath need of in the general thought. The public thief wants but apprehension, but this private thief needs discovery: for they lie close as treason, dig low like pioners, and though they be as familiar with us, as familiars, they seem stranger than the Indians.

To define this manner of thieves: A private thief is he, that without danger of law robs his neighbor; that sets a good face on the matter, and hath some profession to countenance it: a justifiable cloke hides a damnable fraud; a trade, a profession, a mystery, like a Rome-hearted Protestant, hides this Deuillish Seminary under his roof without suspicion. To say truth, most of our professions (thanks to ill professors) are so confounded with sins, as if there went but a pair of sheeres between them: nay they can scarce be distinguished: you shall not easily discern between a hot, furious professor and an hypocrite; between a covetous man and a thief; between a Courtier and an aspirer: between a gallant and a swearer; between an officer and a bribetaker: between a seruitour and a parasite: between Farmers and poor-grinders: between gentlemen and pleasure-lovers: between great men and mad men: between a tradesman and a fraudesman: between a monied man and an usurer; between an usurer and the Devil. In many arts, the more skillful, the more ill-full: for now-adaies: armis pollentior astus: fraud goes beyond force: this makes Lawyers richer than soldiers, userers than Lawyers, the Devil than all. The old Lion (saith the Fable) when his nimble days were over, and he could no longer pray by violence, kept his den with a feigned sickness: the suspectless beasts drawn thither to a dutiful visitation, thus became his pray: cunning served his turn, when canning did no good. The world, whiles it was young, was simple, honest, plain-dealing: gentlemen then delued in the ground, now the soles of their feet must not touch it: then thy drunk water, now wine will not serve, except to drunkenness: then they kept sheep, now they scorn to wear the wool; then Jacob returned the money in the sacks mouth, now we are ready to steal it and put it in. Plain-dealing is dead, and what we most lament, died without issue. Virtue had but a short reign, and was soon deposed: all the examples of sin in the Bible are newly acted over again, and the interest exceeds the principal, the counterpaine the original. The Apostasy, now, holds us in our manners: we leave God for man, for Mammon. Once, Orbis ingemuit, factum se videns Arrianum; the world groaned, seeing it self made an Arian: It may now groan worse, factum se videns Machiauellum, seeing it self made a Machiavelli. nisi Deus opem praestat, deperire restat. Greeued devotion had never more cause to sing, Mundum dolens circuiui; fidem vndi{que} quaesiui, &c.

The world I compassed about,

Faith and honesty to find out:

But Countrie, City, Court and all,

Thrust poor Devotion to the wall:

The Lawyer, Courtier, Merchant, Clowne

Have beaten poor Devotion down,

All wound hir; till for lack of breath,

Fainting Devotion bleeds to death.

But I am to deal with none but thieves, and those private ones: and because Judas is the precedent, I will begin with him, that is most like him: according to the proverb, which the Grecians had of Philo Iudaeus: ( 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : aut Plato Philonem sequitur, aut Platonem Philo.) Either Plato followed Philo, or Philo imitated Plato. Let me only change the names: Either Judas played the Pope, or the Pope plays the Judas. This is the most subtle thief of the world, and robs all Christendom under a good color: who can say, he hath a black eye, or a light finger? for experience hath taught him, that cui pollis Leonina non sufficit, vulpina est assuenda: whē the Lions skin cannot threat, the foxes skin can cheat. Pope Alexander was a beast, that having entered like a fox, he must needs reign like a Lion, worthy he was to die like a dog: for, vis confilij expers, moleruit sua, power without policy is like a piece without powder: many a Pope sings that common Ballad of hell: Ingenio perij, qui miser ipse meo: Wit, whither wilt thou? woe is me: my wit hathwrought my misery.

To say truth their Religion is nothing in the circumstance but craft; and policy maintains their Hierarchy; as Judas subtlety made him rich. Judas was put in trust with a great deal of the Devils business; yet not more than the Pope. Judas pretended the poor and robbed them: and doth not the Pope think you? Are there no alms-boxes rifled and emptied into the Popes Treasury? Our Fathers say that the poor gave Peter-pence to the Pope, but our grandfathers cannot tell us, that the Pope gave Caesar-pence to the poor: did not he sit in the holy chair, (as Augustus Caesar in his imperial throne) and cause the whole Christian world to be taxed: and what? did they freely give it? no, a taxation forced it; what right then had the Pope to it? just as much as Judas had to his masters money? was he not then a thief? yet, what need a rich man be a thief? the Pope is rich, and needs must, for his comings in be great: he hath rent out of heaven, rent out of hell, rent out of purgatory: but more sacks come to his mill out of purgatory, than out of hell and heaven too; and for his toling, let the world judge: therefore saith Bishop Jewel, he would be content to loose hell and heaven too, to save his purgatory. Some by pardons he prevents from hell: some by Indulgences he lifts up to heaven; and infinite by merits he ransomes from purgatory: not a jot without money; cruces, altaria, Christum: he selles Christ's cross, Christ's blood, Christ's self; all for money. Nay, he hath rent from the very Stews a hell above ground, and swells his coffers by the sins of the people: he suffers a price to be set on damnation; and maintains lust to go to Law for her own; gives whoredom a toleration under his seal; that Lust the son of Idleness, hath free access to Liberty the daughter of Pride.

Judas was a great Statesman in the Devils Commonwealth; for he bore four main offices: either he begged them shamefully, or he bought them bribingly, or else Beelzebub saw desert in him, and gave him them gratis, for his good parts; for Judas was his white boy. he was 1. an hypocrite. 2. a thief. 3. a traitor. 4. a murderer. Yet the Pope shall vie offices with him, and win the game too for plurality. The Pope sits in the holy chair, yet a Devil: perjury, Sodomy, sorcery, homicide, parricide, patricide, treason, murder, &c. are many and essential things to the Pope. He is not content to be Steward, but he must be Uicar, nay indeed, Lord himself: for what can Christ do, and the Pope cannot do? Judas was nobody to him. He hath stolen Truths garment, and put it on Errors back, turning poor Truth naked out of doors. he hath altered the primitive institutions, and adulterated God's sacred laws; maintaining vagas libidines: he steals the harts of subjects from their Sovereigns, by stealing fidellity from the harts of Subjects: and would steal the crown from the kings head, and all under the shadow of religion. This is a thief; a notable, a notorious thief, but let him go: I hope he is known well enough, and every true man will bless himself out of his way.

I come to our selves: there are many kinds of private Thieves in both the houses of Israel and Aaron: in foro & choro, in Change and Chancel; Common-wealth and Church. I can tax no man's person; if I could, I would abhor it, or were worthy to be abhorred: the Sins of our Times are the Thieves, I would arraign, testify against, condemned, have executed, the persons I would have saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

1. If there be any magistrates (into whose mouths God hath put the determination of doubts; and the distribution of right into their hands:) that suffer popularity, partiality, passion to rule, over-rule their judgments, these are private thieves: they rob the poor man of his just cause, and equities relief, and no law can touch them for it: thus may causes go, not according to right, but friendship: as Themistocles boy could say, As I will, the whole Senate will: for as I will, my mother will; as my mother will, my father will; as my father will, the whole Senate will. Thus as a groom of the chamber, a Secretary of the closet, or a porter of the gate will, the cause must go: this is horrible theft, though not arraignable, hence a knot is found in a bulrush: delay shifts of the day of hearing; a good point is set on a foul pastboard; circumstances are shuffled from the bar; the Sun of truth is clouded: the poor confident Plaintiff goes home undone: his moans, his groans are vented up to heaven: the just God sees and suffers it, but he will one day judge that Judge. Who can indite this thief? what law may pass on him? what Jury can find him? what Judge can fine him? none on earth: there is a bar he shall not escape: if there be any such, (as I trust there is not) they are thieves.

2. If there be any Lawyer, that takes fees on both hands, one to speak, another to hold his peace: as (Demosthenes answered his bragging fellow Lawyer) this is a thief, though the law doth not call him so: a mercenary tongue and a money-spel'd conscience, that undertakes the defense of things known to his own heart to be unjust, is only proper to a thief: a double thief, he robs both sides: the adverse part in pleading against the truth, his own client in drawing him on to his further damage. If this be not, as the Roman complained, latrocinium in foro, thievery in the Hall, there is none: happy Westminster hall, if thou wert freed from this kind of cutpurses. If no plummets, except of unreasonable weight, can set the wheels of their tongues a going: and then if a golden addition can make the hammer strike to our pleasure: if they keep their ears and mouths shut, till their purses be full; and will not understand a cause till they feel it: if they shuffle difficulties into plainness, and trip up the Laws heels with tricks: if they Surgionlike keep the Clients disease from healing, till he hath no more money for salve: then to speak in their own language, Noverint vniuersi, Be it known to all men by these presents that these are thieves: though I could wish rather, that Noverint ipsi, they would know it themselves, and reform this deformity.

3. If there be any officer, that walks with unwashen hands, I mean, with the fowl fingers of bribery, he is a thief: be the matter penal or capital, if a bribe can pick Justices lock, and plead against the innocent, or for himself being nocent, and prevail, this is theft. Theft? who is robbed? the giver? doth not the freedom of his will transfer a right of the gift to the receiver? no; for it is voluntary or willing will: but as a man gives his purse to the over-mastring thief, rather than ventures his life; so this his bribe, rather than endanger his cause: shall I say, the thief hath as much right to the purse, as the officer to the bribe; and they are both, though not equally palpable, yet equally culpable thieves. Is the giver innocent or nocent? innocent, and shall not innocence have her right without a bribe? nocent; and shall gold conceal his fault, or cancel his punishment? Dost thou not know whether, and wilt thou blind thyself before hand with a bribe? for bribes are like dust thrown in the eyes of Justice, that she cannot without pain look on the Sun-shine of truth. Though a second to thyself receive them, wife or friend, by thy allowance, they are but stolen goods, coles of fire put in the roof of thy house: for fire shall devour the houses of bribes. And there have been many houses built by report, the first stone of whose foundation was hewn out of the quarry of bribery. These are thieves.

4. There is theeuerie too among Tradesmen: and who would think it? many (they say) rob us, but we rob none: yes, but they think that (verba lactis will countenance frandom in factis) smooth words will smother rough deeds. This web of theft is many ways woven in a shop or a warehouse, but three especially.

1. By a false weight, and no true measure, whose content or content is not justifiable by law; or the cunning conveyances in weighing or metting, such as cheat the buyer: are not these pretty tricks to pick men's purses? the French word hath well expressed them: they are Lieger dumaines. Now had I not as good loose my purse on Salisburie plain, as in London Exchange? is my loss the less, because violence forbears and craft picks my purse? The highway thief is not greater abomination to God, than the shop-thief: and for man, the last is more dangerous: the other we knowingly fly; but this laughs us in the face, whiles he robs us.

2. By insufficient wares, which yet with a dark window and an impudent tongue, will appear good to the buyers eye and ear too. Sophistry is now fled from the schools into shops: from disputation to merchandising: he is a silly tradesman, that cannot sophisticate his wares, as well as he hath done his conscience; and wear his tongue with protestations, barer than trees in Autumn, the head of old age, or the livings of Church-men. Oaths indeed smell too rank of infidelity; marry, we are Protestants, and protest away our souls: there is no other way to put off bad wares, and put up good monies: are not these thieves?

3. By playing or rather praying upon men's necessities: they must have the commodity, therefore set the dice on them: vox latronis: the advantage taken of a man's necessity is a trick of a worse Devil than Judas: Thou shouldest rather be like Job, a foot to lame necessity, and not take away his crutch: or perhaps God hath put more wit into thy brains, than his, thou seest further into the bargain: and therefore takest opportunity to abuse his plainness: thou seruest thyself in gain, not him in love: thou mayest, and laugh at the law; but there is a law, thou hast transgressed, that without Jesus Christ shall condemn thee to hell.

Go now, and applaud yourselves, ye sons of fraud, that eagle-eyed scrupulousity cannot find you faulty, nor the Lyon-handed law touch you, please yourselves in your security. You practice belike, behind the hangings, and come not on the public stage of Injury: yet you are not free from spectators: testante Numine, homine, Daemone: God, man, Angels, Devils shall witness against you: ex cordibus, ex codicibus: by your hearts, by your books, God shall judge you. Injury is often in the one, perjury in the other: the great Justice will not put it up: they shall be convicted thieves.

5. There are thieves crope into the Church too; or rather they encroach on the Church; for Ministers cannot now play the thieves with their livings, they have nothing left to steal: but there are secret Iudasses, can make shift to do it. Difficilis magni custodia census. The Eagles flock to a carcass, and thieves hanker about rich doors: at the dispersion of church-livings, they cried as the Babylonians, to the spoil, to the spoil. The Church was once rich, but it was (diebus illis) in the golden time: when honesty went in good clothes; and ostentation durst not give religion the check-mate, now they plead prescription, and prove them their own by long possession. I do not tax all those for private thieves, that hold in their hands, lands and possessions, that were once the Churches; but those that withhold such as are due to Church-men. Their estates were once taken away by (more than) God's (mere) sufferance, for a just punishment of their idleness, Idolatry, lusts: sure there is some Achanism in the campe of the Levites, that makes this plague-sore to run still: there is some disobedient and fugitive Ionasses that thus totter our ship. I complain not, that claustra are turned into castra; Abbeys into Gentlemens houses; places of monition, to places of munition: but that men rob (aram dominicam) God's house, to furnish (haram domesticam) their own house, this is theft, and sacrilegious theft: a succession of theft; for the fingers of the sons are now heavier than the loins of their fathers: those were (improbi Papistae) wicked Papists, and these are (improbirapistae) ungodly robbers.

This is a monstrous theft, and so exceeding all thefts, as (non nisi in Deum fieri potest) it can be committed against none but God. When Scipio robbed the temple of Tholossa, there was not a man, that carried away any of the gold, whoever prospered after it: and I pray you tell me, how many have thrived with the goods of the Church? they go from man to man without rest, like the Ark among the Philistines, which was removed from Ashdod, to Gath; from Gath to Ekron, as if it could find no place to rest in, but vexed the people that kept it, till it returned to the old seat in Israel. oftentimes these goods left by Gentlemen to their heirs, prove gangrenes to their whole estates; and house is joined to house so fast, God's house to their own, that the fire, which begins at the one consumes the other: as the Eagle, that stole a piece of meat from the Altar, carried a cole with it, that set her nest on fire. I am persuaded many a house of blood in England, had stood at this hour, had not the forced springs of impropriations turned their foundation to a quagmire. In all your knowledge, think but on a Churchrobbers heir, that ever thrived to the third generation: yet alas! horror to my bones, and shame to my speech! there are not wanting among our selves, that give encouragement to these thieves: and without question, many a man, so well otherwise disposed, would have been reclaimed from this sin, but for their distinctions of competencies: I appeal to their own consciences, there is not an humorist living, that in heart thinks so, or would forbear their reproof, were he not well provided for. These are the foxes, that content not themselves to steal the grapes, but they must forage the vine: thus yet still isGods house made a den of Thieves, without envy or partiality they are thieves.

6. There is more store of thieves yet: covetous Landlords, that stretch their rents on the tenter-hooks of an evil conscience, and swell their coffers by undoing their poor tenants: these sit close, and stare the law in the face, yet by their leave they are thieves: I do not deny the improvement of old rents, so it be done with old minds, I mean, our forefathers charity: but with the Devil, to set right upon the pinacles, and pitch so high a price of our lands, that it strains the Tenants heart-blood to reach it, is theft, and killing theft. What all their immoderate toile, broken sleeps, sore labors can get, with a miserable diet to themselves, not being able to spare a morsel of bread to others, is a pray to the Landlords rapine: this is to rob their estates, grind their faces, suck their bloods. These are thieves.

7. Engrossers; that hoard up commodities, and by stopping their propagation raise the price; these are thieves. Many Block-houses in the city, monopolies in the court, garners in the country, can testify, there are now such thieves abroad: we complain of a dearth; sure the heavens are too merciful to us, that are so unmerciful one to another: scarcity comes without God's sending: who brings it then? even the Devil and his brokers, engrossing misers. The Common-wealth may often blow her nails, unless she sit by an engrossers fire: her limbs may be faint with hunger, unless she buy grain at an engrossers price. I confess, this is a sin, which the Law takes notice of, but not in the full nature, as theft. The pick-purse (in my opinion) doth not so much hurt, as this general robber; for they rob millions. These do not with Joseph, buy up the superfluity of plenty, to prevent a dearth; but hoard up the store of plenty, to procure a dearth. rebels to God, trespassers to nature, thieves to the Common-wealth: if these were apprehended and punished, neither City nor Country should complain as they do, Mean time, the people's curse is upon them, and I doubt not but God's plague will follow it; if repentance turn it not away: till when, they are private thieves.

8. Inclosers; that pretend a distinction of possessions, a preservation of woods, indeed to make better and broader their own territories, and to steal from the poor commons; these are horrible thieves. The poor man's beast is his maintenance, his sustenance, his life, to take food from his beast, is to take the beasts food from his belly: so he that incloseth Commons is a monstrous thief, for he steals away the poor man's living and life; hence many a Cottager, nay perhaps Farmer, is fain (as the Indians do to Devils) to sacrifice to the lord of the soil, a yearly bribe for a venoceat. For though the law forbids such inclosures: yet (quod fieri non debet, factum valet) when they are once ditcht in, say the law what it will, I see no throwing out: force bears out, what fraud hath borne in: let them never open their mouths to plead the Common-wealths benefit: they intend it as much as Judas did, when he spake for the poor: no, they are thieves, the bane of the common good, the surfeit of the land, the scourge of the poor: good only to themselves; and that in opinion only: for they do it, to dwell alone, and they dwell alone indeed: for neither God nor good Angel keeps them company: and for a good conscience, it cannot get thorough their quick-sets. These are thieves, though they have enclosed their theft, to keep the Law out, and their wickedness in: yet the day shall come, their lands shall be thrown out, their lives thrown out, their souls thrown out: their lands out of their possessions, their lives out of their bodies, their souls out of heaven; except repentance and restitution prevail with the great Judge for their pardon: mean time, they are thieves.

9 Many Tap-house-keepers, Tauerners, victuallers; which the provident care of our worthy magistrates, hath now done well to restrain: if at least this Hidraes heads do not multiply. I do not speak to annihilate the profession: they may be honest men, and doubtless some are, which live in this rank: but if many of them should not chop away a good conscience for money, drunkenness should never be so welcome to their doors. The dissolute wretch sits there securely, and buys his own sickness, with great expense: which would preserve the health of his poor wife and children at home: that lamentably mone for bread, whiles he lauisheth all in drink. Thus the pot robs him of his wit, he robs himself of grace, and the victualler robs him of his money. This theft might yet be borne: but the Common-wealth is here robbed too. Drunkenness makes so quick riddance of the ale, that this raiseth the price of mault: and the good sale of mault, raiseth the price of barley: thus is the land distressed, the poor's bread is dissolved into the drunkards cup. the markets are hoysed up, if the poor cannot reach the price, the maultmaster will, he can utter it to the rap-house: and the tap-house is sure of her old friend drunkenness. Thus theft sits close in a drinking room, and robs all that sails into that coast. I confess, they are (most of them) bound to suffer no drunkenness in their houses, yet they secretly acknowledge, that if it were not for drunkenness, they might shut up their doors, as utterly unable to pay their rents. These are thieves.

10. Flatterers, that eat like moths into liberal men's coats, the bane of Greatness, are thieves, not to be forgotten in this catalogue. These rob many a great man of his goodness, and make him rob the common-wealth of hir happiness. Doth his Lord want money? he puts into his head, such fines to believed, such grounds enclosed, such rents improved. Be his maintainers courses never so fowl, either he furthers them, or he smothers them: sin hath not a more impudent bawd, nor his master a more impious thief, nor the common-wealth a more sucking horseleach. He would raise himself by his Great-one, and cannot contrive it, but by the ruin of others. He robs the flattred of his goods, of his grace, of his time, of his freedom, of his soul: is not this a thief? beneficia, veneficia: all their good is poison. They are Dominis arisores, reip. arrosores: their Masters Spaniels, the common-wealths wolves, put them in your Pater-noster, let them never come in your Creed: pray for them, but trust them no more than thieves.

11. There is another nest of thieves more in this City, Brokers and breakers: I conjoyne them in my description, for the likeness of their condition. Brokers' that will upon a good pawn lend money to a Devil: whose extortion, by report, is monstrous; and such as to find in men is improbable, in Christians impossible: the very vermin of the earth. Indeed man had a poor beginning; we are the sons of Adam, Adam of dust, dust of deformity, deformity of nothing; yet made by God: but these are bred like monsters of the corruption of nature and wicked manners; and carry the Devils cognizance. for Breakers, such as necessity compels to it, I censure not: if they desire with all their harts to satisfy the uttermost farthing and cannot; God will then accept vottall restitution for total restitution; that which is affected, for that which is effected: the will for the deed: and in those debt is not (as the vulgar speech is) deadly sin: a sore it may be, no sin. But they that with a purpose of deceit, get goods into their hands in trust, & then without need hide their heads, are thieves: for the intent to steal in their minds directed their injurious hands. The Law arraigns them not, the Judgment seat of God shall not acquit them. These steal more quickly and with security, than a high-way robs all his life time and that in perpetual danger: It is but passing their words, allowing a good price, conuaying home the wares, and on a sudden dive under the waters: a close concealment shall save them five hundred pounds in a thousand. They live upon others sweat, fare richly upon others meat, and the debtor is often made a gentleman, when the creditour is made a beggar.

Such false Gibeonites enrich Scriveners: their unfaithfulness, hath banished all trust and fidellity. Time was, that Nouerint vniuersi was unborn, the Lawyer himself knew not what an obligation meant. Security stood on no other legs, but promises, and those were so sound, that they never failed their burden: but Time adulterating with the Harlot Fraud, begot a brood of Nouerints: and but for these shackles, debt would often show credit a light pair of heels. Therefore now (plus creditor annulis, quàm animie) there is more faith given to men's seals, than to their souls. Owe nothing but love; saith the Apostle: all owe this, but few pay it; or if they do, it is in cracked money, not currant in God's Exchequer: for our love is dissimulation, and our charity is (not cold, but) dead. But these bankrouts of both wealth and honesty, owe all things but love, and more than ever they mean to pay, though you give them time till Doomes-day. These are Thieves.

12. The twelfth and last sort of thieves (to make up the just dozen) are the userers. This is a private thief like Judas, and for the bag like Judas, which he steals from Christ like Judas, or rather from Christians, that have more need, and therefore worse than Judas. This is a man made out of wax: his Pater-noster is a Pawn: his Creed is, The condition of this obligation: his religion is all religion; a binding of others to himself; of himself to the Devil: for look how far any of the former thieves have ventured to hell, the usurer goes a foot further by the standard. The Poet exclames against this sin:

Hinc vsura vorax, auidum{que} in tempore foenus &c.

Describing in that one line, the names and nature of usury. Foenus, quasi foetus: It is a teeming thing, ever with child, pregnant, and multiplying: money is an unfruitful thing by nature made only for commutation: it is a praeternatural thing, it should engender money: this is monstrosus partus, a prodigious birth. Usura, quasi propter vsum rei. The nature of it is wholly devouring: their money to necessity is like cold water to a hot ague, that for a time refresheth, but prolongs the disease. The usurer is like the worm we call the timber-worm; which is wonderful soft to touch, but hath teeth so hard, that it eats timber: but the usurer eats timber and stones too. The Prophet hedgeth it in, between Bribery and Extortion: In thee have they taken gifts to shed blood: thou hast taken usury and increase: and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbors by extortion; and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord. Therefore I have smitten my hands at thy dishonest gain, &c. You hear God's opinion of it. Beware this dishonest gain: take heed lest this casting your money into a Bank, cast not up a Bank against you: when you have found out the fairest praetexts for it, God's justice shall strike of all: let no man deceive you with vain words: for, for such things God's wrath will fall on the children of disobedience. Infinite colors, mitigations, evasions, distinctions are invented, to countenance on earth, heaven-exploded usury: God shall then frustrate all, when he pours his wrath on the naked conscience. God saith, Thou shalt not take usury: go now, study paintings, excuses, apologies, dispute the matter with God: hell fire shall decide the question. I have no other trade to live on, but usury: only the Devil first made usury a trade. But can this plea in the thief (I have no other trade to live on but stealing) protect and secure him from the gallows?

The usurer then is a thief: nay a double thief, as the old Roman law censured them; that charged the thief with restitution double, the usurer with four-fold: concluding him a double thief. Thieves steal sometimes, usurers always. Thieves steal for necessity, usurers without need. The usurer wounds deeper with a piece of paper, than the robber with a sword. many a young gentleman, newly broke out of the cage of wardship, or blessed with the first Sunshine of his one and twenty, goes from the vigilancy of a restraining Governor, into the tempting hands of a merciless usurer, as if he came out of God's blessing into the warm Sun. Many a man, that comes to his lands, ere he comes to his wits, or experience of their villainy, is so let blood in his estate by usury, that he never proves his own man again.

Either prodigality or penury or dissembled riches borrow on usury: to rack the poor with over-plus, all (but Devils) hold monstrous: to lend the Prodigal, is wicked enough, for it feeds his issue with ill humors, and puts Stibium into his broth, who was erst sick of the vomiting disease, and could not digest his (Fathers ill-gotten) Patrimony. For the rich, that dissemble poverty, to borrow on usury, (for there is that maketh himself poor and hath great riches) they do it, either to defeat creditours, or to avoid taxations and subsidies, or some such sinister respects. The gentleman that borroweth on usury, by racking his rents makes his Tenants pay his usury. The Farmer so borrowing, by inhauncing his corn, makes the poor pay his usury. The Trades-man, raiseth his wares, that the buyer must pay his usury. I will not tax every borrower: it is lawful to suffer injury, though not to offer it: & it is no sin for the true man to give his purse to the thief, when he cannot choose. To redeem his lands, liberty, life, he may (as I suppose) give interest; but not for mere gain only which he may get by that wicked money; lest he encourage the usurer; for a receiver upholds a thief. This is the privy-pocket, whose death is the more grievous because he is repriued till the last Sessions: a Gibbet is built in hell for him, and all the gold in the world cannot purchase a pardon. I know there is mercy in Christ's blood to any repentant and believing sinner, but (excepted Zacchaeus) show me the usurer, that repents: for as humility is the repentance of pride, and abstinence the repentance of surfeit, so is restitution the repentance of vsurse: he that restores not, repents not his usury: and then (non remittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum) the sin is retained, till the gains of usury be restored. This is (durus sermo, sed verus sermo) a hard saying, but true: then we may give all; do, if they be so gotten: Dabit Deus meliora, maiora, plura: God will give better things, God will give greater things, God will give more things; as the Prophet to Amasiah: The Lord is able to give thee more than this.

Thus I have discovered by occasion of Judas some privy thieves; if without thanks, yet not without conscience; if without profit, yet not without purpose of profit. Indeed these are the sins, which I vowed with my self to reprove; not that others have not done it, or not done it better then I from this place: I acknowledge both freely; yet could I not pass this secret thief

Judas, without discovering his companions, or (as it were) breaking open the knot of Thieves, which under allowed pretences, are arrant cut-purses to the Common-wealth. How to punish, how to restrain, I meddle not: it is enough to discharge my conscience, that I have endeavored to make the sins hateful to the trespassers, to the trespassed: Deus tam faciat commodum, quam fecit accommodum: God make it as prevalent, as (I am sure) it is pertinent.

Give me leave, yet ere I leave, to speak a word of the Bagge, first his means, and secondly his maintenance. I will join them together, a fit and a fat booty makes a thief. Judas hath got the bag, and the bag hath got Judas: he could not carry it, but he must make it light enough for his carriage: he empties it into his own coffer; as many Stewards rise by their good Lord and Masters fall. Judas means to be a thief, and Satan means to fit him with a booty: for after he had once wrought journey-work with the Devil, he shall not want work, and a subject to work on. I will limit my remaining speech to these three heads. First the difficulty, to bear the bag, and not to be covetous. Secondly the usual incidency of the bag to the worst men. Thirdly, the progress of sin; only faint not in this last act.

1 It is hard to bear the bag, and not to be covetous: Judas is Burser, and he shuts himself into his pouch: the more he hath the more he couets: the Apostles, that wanted money, are not so having: Judas hath the bag, and yet he must have more, or he will filch it. So impossible is it, that these outward things should satisfy the heart of man. Soli habent omnia, qui habent habentem omnia. They alone possess all things, that possess the possessor of all things. The nature of true content, is to fill all the chinkes of our desires, as the wax doth the seal: None can do this but God, for (as it is well observed) the World is round; man's Heart three cornered: a globe can never fill a triangle; but one part will be still empty: only the blessed Trinity can fill these three corners of man's heart. I confess, the Bagge is a thing much reckoned of, and makes men much reckoned of, for, Pecunia obediunt omnia: all things make obeasance to money: Et qui ex diuitijs tam magnifiant, non miror, sihi diuitias tam magnifaciant: they may admire money, whom money makes admired. Such is the plague and dropsy, the bag brings to the mind, that the more covetousness drinks down, the thirstier it is: This is a true drunkard: dum absorbet vinum, absorbetur à vino, he drinks down his wealth, and his wealth drinks down him. Qui tenet marsupium, tenetur à marsupio, he holds his purse fast, but not so fast as his purse holds him: the strings of his Bagge tie his heart faster then he ties the strings of his Bagge. He is a Jailor to his Jailor, a prisoner to his prisoner, he iayles up his gold in the prison of his Coffer, his gold iayles up him in the prison of covetousness, thus dum vult esse praedo, fit praeda: whiles he would come to a pray, he becomes a pray. The Devil gets his heart, as the Crab the Oyster: the Oyster lies gaping for air on the sandes, the Crab chops in hir claw, and so devoureth it; whiles the covetous gapes for money, the Devil thrusts in his (hairy and cloven foot, I mean his) baits of temptation, and chokes the conscience.

Thus the Bagge never comes alone, but it brings with it cares, saith Christ; snares, saith Paul. It is better to be without riches, then like Judas, conjured into the circle of his bag: his heaven is among his bags; in the sight of them, he applauds himself against all censures, revilings, curses. It had profited some, to have wanted the bag; and this the wicked (waked) consciences confess dying; wishing to be without riches, so they were without sins; yea even those, their riches have procured. It is none of God's least favors, that wealth comes not trolling in upon us: for many of us if our estates were better to the world, would be worse to God. The poor laborer hath not time to luxuriate; he trusts to God, to bless his endeavours, and so rests content: but the bag commonly makes a man either (prodigum or auarum) a prodigal man, or a prodigious man; for (auarus, monstrum) the covetous man is a monster: how many wretches hath this bag drowned, as they swome over the sea of this world, and kept them from the shore of blis? be proud then of your Bagge, ye Iudasses when God's Bailiff death shall come with a babeas corpus, what shall become of your bag? or rather of yourselves for your bag? your bag will be found, but yourselves lost. It will be one day said of you, as great as the bag hath made you, as the Poet sung of Achilles.

I am cinis est, & de tam magno restat Achille,

Nescio quid: paruum, quod non been complete vram.

A great man living holds much ground: the brim

Of his days filled; how little ground holds him!

Great in command, large in land, in gold richer:

His quiet ashes, now, scarce fill a pitcher.

Can your bag commit any penance in Hell? or can you by a Fine, answer your faults in the Star-chamber of heaven? no, Judas and his bag too are perished. As he gave Religion the bag for the World, so the world gave him the bag, and turned him a begging in that miserable Country, whereall the bags in the world, cannot purchase a drop of water, to cool his tongue. Thus are the covetous Judas and his bag well met.

2. The Bagge is most usually given to the worst men: of all the Apostles, he that was to betray Christ, is made his Steward. Goods are in themselves good: Ne putentur mala, dantur & bonis, ne putentur summa bona dantur & malis. Lest they should be thought not good, they are given to good men; lest they should be thought too good, they are given to evil men: doubtless, some rich-men are in heaven, and some poor out; because some rich in the purse are poor in the spirit; and some poor in purse are proud in spirit: and it is not the Bagge, but the Mind, which condemns a man; for the bag is more easily contemned, then the mind conquered. Therefore foolish Crates, to throw away his money into the Sea: ego mergamte, ne mergar a te: I will drown thee, lest thou drown me: since wealth well employed, comforts our selves, relieves others; and brings us (as it were) the speedier way to heaven, and perhaps, to a greater portion of glory: but for the most part, the rich are enemies to goodness, and the poor friends: Lazarus the poor man was in Abraham's bosom, and it was Dives, that went to hell; the rich and not the poor.

Search the scriptures, consult all authors, and who are they, that have sailed through the world in the tallest vessels; and you shall meet loden with the bag Caines, Nimrods, Chams, Ismaels, Esaues, Saul's, Ahab's, Laban's, Nabal's, Demasses, Iudasses, Devils; the slime of nature, the worst of men, and as bad as the best of Devils. What do men cast to swine and dogs, but draffe and carions? what else are the riches that God gives to wicked men? himself is pleased to call them by these names. If they were excellent things, they should never be cast on those God hates (I have hated Esau) and means to condemn. There is no privilege then, in the bag to keep thee from being a Judas: nay therefore thou art most likely, and thereby made most likely to be a Judas. Who hath so much beauty as Absalom? who so much honor as Nebuchadnezzar? Who so much wealth as Nabal? Who the bag but Judas?

Surely God is wise in all his ways; he knows what he does: Judas shall hence bag up for himself the greater damnation. It is then no argument of God's favor to be his Purse-bearer, no more, then it was a sign, that Christ loved Judas above the other Apostles, because he made him his Steward: he gave the rest Grace; and him the Bagge: which sped best? These outward things are the scatterings of his mercies, like the gleaning after the Vintage: the full crop goes to his children. Ishmael shall have wealth, but Ishac the inheritance: Esau his pleasures, but Jacob goes away with the blessing. God bestows favors upon some, but they are angry favors: they are in themselves, bona, goods; and from God, dona, gifts; (for he is not only a living God, but a giving God) but to the receauers, banes. The Israelites had better have wanted their Quails, then eaten them with such sauce. Judas had better been without the Bagge, then have had the Bagge, and the Devil with it.

I would have no man make his riches an argument of God's disfauour, and his own dereliction; no, but rather of comfort, if he can find his affections ready to part with them at Christ's calling. I never was in your bosoms; how many of you lay up this resolution in your Closet among your bags? how many (resolve said I, nay) perform this? you cannot want opportunity in these days. I would wish you to try your hearts, that you may secure your consciences of freedom from this Iudasme: oh, how few Good-riches there be in these days? but one Apostle goes to hell, and he is the richest. Make then your riches a means to help you to heaven; whither you can have no direct and ready way, till you have gotten the Moon beneath your feet, I mean, the world. Lay up your bag in the bosom of charity, and your treasure in the lap of Christ, and then the Bagge shall not hinder, but further your flight to heaven.

3. Observe, how Judas runs through sin, from one wickedness to another without stay: from covetousness to hypocrisy, from hypocrisy to theft, from theft to treason, from treason to murder; for since he could not get the Ointment bestowed on Christ, he means to get Christ himself: and to this purpose goes instantly to the Elders and Priests, with a quid dabitis &c. He values the ointment at 300. pence, and Christ at (but) 30. as if he was worth no more, then the interest-money, ten in the hundredth: and herein he makes his own price, for they gave him his asking: he betrays Jesus Christ a man, Jesus Christ his master; Jesus Christ is maker; as if he would destroy his Savior, and mar his maker.

Thus he runs from sin to sin, and needs he must, for he, that the Devil drives, feels no lead at his heels. Godliness creeps to heaven, but wickedness runs to hell: Many Parliament Protestants go but a Statutepace, yet look to come to heaven; but without more hast, when the Pharisees come out of hell. But facilis descensus Auerni: were you blinder then Superstition, you may find the way to hell: It is but slipping down a hill, and hell stands at the bottom: this is the cause, that Judas runs so fast.

I have read of one Ruffus, that upon his Sheel'd, painted God on the one side, and the Devil on the other: with this motto, situme nolis, isterogitat: if thou, oh God, wilt none of me, heres one will: either God must take him suddenly, or he will run quick to the Devil. The Gallant gallops in riot. The Epicure reels a drunken pace. The Lust-full scorns to be behind; he runs from the fire of lust, to the fire of hell; as the fondly impatient fish leapes out of the boiling panne, into the burning flame. The Swearer is there, ear he be aware, for he goes by his tongue. The Covetous rides post, for he is carried on the back of Mammon: The Usurer sirs still in his chair or the Chimney-corner, lame of the gout, and can but halt; yet he will be at hell, as soon as the best runner of them all.

Usury is a Coach, and the Devil is driuer: needs must he go, whom the Devil drives. He is drawn to hell in pomp, by two Coach-horses, wild spirits, with wings, on their heels, (swifter then Pegasus, or Mercury) Covetousness, and Infidelity: what makes him put money to use, but covetousness? what makes him so wretchedly covetous, but want of faith? Thus he is hurried to hell in case, state, triumph: If any be worthy to bear the Usurer company, let it be the Rioter though of contrary dispositions, yet in this journey fitly and accordantly met: for the Usurer commonly hath money, but no Coach, and the Prodigal Gallant hath a Coach, but no money: if they want company yet, let them take in the Cheater; for he waits upon both these, and may perhaps fail of the like opportunity.

Thus because the ways to hell are full of green, smooth, soft, and tempting pleasures, infinite run apace with Judas, till they come to their own place. But Heavens way is harsh and ascending, and the gate narrow. Indeed the City of glory is capacious and roomthy: <sup>a</sup> In my fathers housethere are many mansions, saith Christ. It is (domus speciosa, & domus spatiosa) not, either scant of beauty, or pent of room. But the gate hath two properties. It is 1. low. 2. strait. and requires of the enterrs: 1. a stooping. 2. a stripping.

Low. Pride is so stiff, that many a Gallant cannot enter: you have few women with the top-gallant head-tires get in here; they cannot stoop low enough; few proud in and of their offices, that have eaten a stake, and cannot stoop: few sons of pride, so starched and laced up, that they cannot without pain salute a friend: a wonderful scarcity of over-precise, (over-dissolute) factious humorists; for they are so high in their own conceits, that they cannot stoop to this low gate. The insolent, hauty, well-opinioned of themselves cannot be admitted: for, not humbled to this day. This low gate, and an high state do not accord Wretched fools, that rather refuse the glory within, then stoop for entrance: as if a Souldior should refuse the honor of Knighthood, because he must kneel to receive it.

Strait, or narrow; they must stoop that enter this low gate, so they must strip, that enter this strait gate. No make-bates get in, they are too full of tales and lies: God by word of mouth excludes them. Into it shall enter none unclean thing, or that worketh abomination or lies. Few litigious neighbors: they have so many suits, contentions, nisi-priusses on their backs, that not get in. Some Lawyers may enter, if they be not ouerladen with fees: you have few Courtiers taken into this Court, by reason, there is no Coach-way to it, the gate is too narrow: no Officers, that are big with bribes. Not an Incloser: he hath too much of the poor's commons in his belly. The usurer hath no hope, for besides his bags, he hath too much wax and paper about him. The Citizen hopes well, but a false measure sticks so cross in his mouth, that he cannot thrust in his head. The Gentleman makes no question, and there is great possibility, if two things do not cross him, a bundle of racked rents, or a kennel of lusts and sports. The plain-man is likely, if his ignorance can but find the gate. Husband-men were in great possibility, but for the hoarding of corn, and hoising of markets. Tradesmen, if they would not swear good credit into their bad wares, might be admitted. Ministers may enter without doubt or hindrance, if they be as poor in their spirits, as they are in their purses. But Impropriators have such huge barns full of Church-grains in their bellies, that they are too great. Let all these take the Physic of Repentance, to abate their swollen souls, or there will be no entrance.

You hear how difficult the way is to heaven, how easy to hell; how fast sin runs, how slowly godliness creeps; what should you then do, but <sup>b</sup> strive to enter in at thenarrow gate: which you shall the better do, if you lighten yourselves of your Bags: oh, do not (Judas-like) for the Bag, sell your honesty, conscience, heaven: The Bag is a continent to money, and the world is a continent to the Bag: and they shall all perish. Meat for the belly, and the belly for meat: Gold for the Purse, and the Purse for gold; and God shall destroy them both. Trust not then a wealthy bag, nor a wealthy man, nor the wealthy world; all will fail; but trust in God, whose mercy, endureth forever: The time shall come, that

Deus erit pro numine,

Cùm mundus sit pro nomine,

Cùm homo pro nemine.

God shall be God, when the world shall be no world, man no man; or at least no man, no world of our expectation, or of ability to help us. To God, then, our only help, be all praise, power, and glory, now and forever.

Amen.

THE HOLY CHOICE. A SERMON PREACHED in the Chapel by GUILDHALL, at the Solemnity of the Election of the Right Honorable the Lord Major of LONDON.

BY THO: ADAMS.

THE HOLY CHOICE.

And they prayed, and said, Thou Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen.

The business of the day is an Election; an election into one of the most Noble Offices of the Kingdom; the government of this Honorable City, which (let not envy hear it) hath no parallel under the Sun. The business of my Text is an Election too; an election into the highest office in the Church, to be an Apostle and Witness of Jesus Christ. If you please to spare the pattern in four circumstances; as, 1. This office is spiritual, yours temporal. 2. This place was void by Apostasy or decession, yours is supplied by succession. 3. This election is by Lots, yours is by Suffrages. 4. This choice was but one of two, it may be your number exceeds: the rest will sure well enough, and the same God that was in the one, be also present in the other, by the assistance of his holy spirit.

The argument of the Text is a prayer to God for his direction in their choice: yea indeed, that he would choose a man for them: including a strong reason of such a request, because he doth know the hearts of all men.

They begin with prayer; this was the usual manner in the Church of God. So Moses prayed for the choice of his Successor. Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh set a man over the Congregation. Christ sent not his Apostles to that holy work, without a prayer; Sanctify them through thy truth. In the choosing of those seven Deacons, they first prayed, and then laid their hands upon them. Thus were Kings Inaugurated, with Sacrifice and Prayer. It is not fit, he that is chosen for God, should be chosen without God. But for this, Samuel himself may be mistaken, and choose seven wrong, before he hit upon the right. In this; I cannot but commend your religious care; that businesses of so great a consequence be always sanctified with a blessing. Those which in a due proportion, must represent God to the world, ought to be consecrated to that Majesty which they resemble, by public devotions. Every important action requires Prayer, much more that which concerns a whole city. When Samuel came to Bethlehem to annoint David, he calls the whole City to the Sacrifice. Indeed the Family of Jesse was sanctified in a more special manner: this business was most theirs, and all Israel's in them. The fear of God should take full possession of all our hearts, that are this day assembled: but those with whom God hath more to do then with the rest, should be more holy then the rest.

The choice of your Wardens and Masters in your several Companies hath a solemn form; and it is the honor of your greatest Feasts, that the first dish is a Sermon. Charity forbid, that any should think, you admit such a Custom, rather for convenience then devotion; as if Preaching were but a necessary complement to a Solemnity, as Wine and Music. I am persuaded better things of you: but if there should be any such perverse spirits, that like the Governor of a people called Aequi, when the Romans came to him, Iussit eos ad quercum dicere, bade them speak to the Oak, for he had other business: but they replied, Et haec sacrata quercus audiat foedus a vobis violatum; let this Oak bear witness, that you have broke the league which you have covenanted. So when we come to preach to your souls, if you should secretly bid us speak to the walls; loe even the very walls will be witnesses against you at the last day. Though Saul be King over Samuel, yet Samuel must teach Saul how to be King. We may instruct, though we may not rule; yea, we must instruct them that shall rule. Therefore as we obey your call in coming to speak, so do you obey God's command in vouchsafing to hear. Let us apply our selves to him with devotion, and then he will be graciously present at our Election.

This Prayer respects two things,

- Quem, the person whom they entreat.
- Quid, the matter for which they entreat

The Person is described by His

- Omnipotence; Lord.
- Omniscience, That knowest the hearts of men.

Omnipotence; Lord. We acknowledge thy right, thou art fit to be thine own chuser. Lord, there be many on earth called Lord's; but those are Lord's of earth, and those Lord's are earth, & those Lord's must return to earth. This Lord is Almighty; raising out of the dust to the honor of Princes, and laying the honor of Princes in the dust. Lord, of what? nay, not qualified; not Lord of such a County, Barony, Seigniorie; nor Lord by virtue of Office and Deputation: but in abstract, most absolute: His Lordship is universal: Lord of heaven, the owner of those glorious mansions: Lord of earth, disposer of all Kingdoms and Principalities: Lord of hell, to lock up the old Dragon and his crew in the bottomless pit: Lord of Death, to unlock the graves: he keeps the Key, that shall let all bodies out of their earthy prisons. A potent Lord; whither shall we go to get out of his Dominion? To heaven? there we cannot miss him: To hell? there we cannot be without him: In air, earth, or sea; in light or darkness, we are sure to find him. Whither then, except to Purgatory? That Terra incognita is not mentioned in his Lordship: the Pope may keep the key of that himself. But for the rest, he is too saucy; exalting his universal Lordship, and hedging in the whole Christian world for his Diocese. Stretching his arm to heaven, in rubricating what Saints he list: to hell, in freeing what prisoners he list: on earth, in setting up, or pulling down what Kings he list: but that some have ‹◊› short his busy fingers.

To the Lord of all they commend the choice of his own servants. Every mortal Lord hath this power in his own Family: how much more that Lord, which makes Lord's? who is so fit to choose, as he that can choose the fit? Who so fit to choose, as he that can make those fit whom he doth choose? It is He alone that can give power and grace to the elected, therefore not to be left out in the election. How can the Apostle preach, or the Magistrate govern, without him; when none of us all can move but in him? It is happy, when we do remit all doubts to his decision, and resign our selves to his disposition. We must not be our own Caruers, but let God's choice be ours. When we know his pleasure, let us show our obedience. And for you, upon whom this Election falls, remember how you are bound to honor that Lord of heaven, that hath ordained such honor for you upon earth: that so in all things we may glorify his blessed Name.

Omniscience: it is God's peculiar, to be the searcher of the heart. The heart of man is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it? Who? Ego Dominus, I the Lord search the heart. He hath made no window into it, for man or Angel, to look in: only it hath a door, and he keeps the key himself.

But why the Heart? Here was an Apostle to be chosen: now wisdom, learning, eloquence, memory, might seem to be more necessary qualities, then the Heart. No, they are all nothing to an honest Heart. I deny not, but Learning to divide the Word, Elocution to pronounce it, Wisdom to discern the truth, Boldness to deliver it, be all parts requireable in a Preacher. But as if all these were scarce worth mention in respect of the Heart; they say not, Thou that knowest which of them hath the subtiler wit, or abler memory; but which hath the truer heart: not which is the greater Scholar, but which is the better man; Thou that knowest the Heart.

Samuel being sent to annoint a son of Jesse, when Eliab, the eldest came forth, a man of a goodly presence, fit for his person to succeed Saul; he thinks with himself, This choice is soon made, sure this is the head upon which I must spend my holy Oil. The privilege of Nature and of Stature, his primogeniture and proportion gives it him; This is he. But even the holiest Prophet, when he speaks without God, runs into error. Signs and appearances are the guides of our eyes; and these are seldom without a true falsehood, or an uncertain truth. Saul had a goodly person, but a bad heart: he was higher then all, many were better then he. It is not hard for the best Judgment to err in the shape. Philoxemenes, a magnanimous and valiant Soldier, being invited to Magyas his house to dinner, came in due season, but found not his Host at home. A servant seeing one so plain in clothes, and somewhat deformed in body, thought him some sorry fellow, and set him to cleave wood. Whereat Magyas (being returned) wondering, he received from him this answer; Expendo paenas deformitatis meae; I pay for my unhandsomeness. All is not valor, that looks big, and goes brave. He that judgeth by the inside, checked Samuel for his misconceit; Look not on his Countenance or Stature, for I have refused him: for the Lord seeth not as man seeth. David's countenance was ingenuous and beautiful, but had it promised so much as Eliabs or Abinadab's, he had not been left in the field, while his Brethren sate at the table. Jesse could find nothing in David worthy the competition of honor with his brethren: God could find something to prefer him before them all. His father thought him fit to keep sheep, thought his Brethren fit to rule men. God thinks him fit to rule, and his Brethren to serve; and by his own immediate choice destines him to the Throne. Here was all the difference; Samuel and Jesse went by the outside, God by the inside: they saw the composition of the body, he the disposition of the mind. Israel desires a King of God, and that King was chosen by the Head: God will choose a King for Israel, and that King is chosen by the Heart. If in our choice for God, or for our selves, we altogether follow the eye, and suffer our thoughts to be guided by outward respects, we shall be deceived.

[ 1 ] Why do they not say, Thou that knowest the estates of men, who is rich, and fit to support a high place; and who so poor that the place must support him? I hear some call Wealth, Substance; but certainly at best, it is but a mere circumstance. It is like the Planet Mercury; if it be joined with a good Heart, it is useful; if with a bad and corrupt one, dangerous. But howsoever at the Beam of the Sanctuary, money makes not the man, yet it often adds some metal to the man; makes his Justice the bolder, and in less hazard of being vitiated. But pauperis sapientia plus valet quam diuitis abundantia. If the poor man have Wisdom to deliver the City, he is worthy to govern the City. I yield, that something is due to the State of Authority; Ad populum Phaleras: So Agrippa came to the Tribunal with great pomp and attendance. This is requisite to keep awe in the people, that the Magistracy be not exposed to contempt. But Magistratus, non vestitus, indicat virum: Wise government, not rich garment, shows an able man. It was not riches, that they regarded.

[ 2 ] Why do they not say, Thou that knowest the Birth or Blood of men? I know, it is a reverend thing to see an ancient Castle or Palace not in decay; or a fair Tree, sound and perfect timber. But as foul Birds build their nests in an old forsaken house, and doated trees are good for nothing but the fire; so the decay of Virtue is the ruin of Nobility. To speak morally, Active worth is better then Passive; this last we have from our Ancestors, the first from our selves. Let me rather see one virtue in a man alive, then all the rest in his pedigree dead. Nature is regular in the brute Creatures; Eagles do not produce cravens; and it was a monstrous fable, that Nicippus his Ewe should yeane a Lyon. But in man she fails, and may bring forth the like proportion, not the like disposition. Children do often resemble their Parents in face and features, not in heart and qualities. It is the earthly part that follows the seed; wisdom, valor, virtue, are of another beginning. Honor sits best upon the back of merit: I had rather be good without Honor, then Honorable without goodness. Cottages have yielded this as well as Palaces. Agathocles was the son of a Potter, Bion of an infamous Courtesan. In holy Writ, Gideon was a poor Thrasher, David a Shepherd; yet both mighty men of valor, both chosen to rule, both special Saviors of their Country. Far be it from us to condemn all honor of the first head, when noble deservings have raised it; though before it could show nothing but a White Shield. Indeed, it is not the Birth, but the new Birth, that makes men truly Noble.

[ 3] Why do they not say, Thou that knowest the wisdom and policy of men? Certainly, this is requisite to a man of place; without which he is a blind Polyphemus, a strong arm without an eye. But a man may be wise for himself, not for God, not for the public good. An Ante is a wise creature for it self, but a shrewd thing in a Garden. Magistrates, that are great lovers of themselves, are seldom true lovers of their Country. All their actions be motions, that have recourse to one Center, that is, themselves. A cunning head without an honest heart, is but like him that can pack the Cards, yet when he hath done, cannot play the Game, or like a house with many convenient Stairs, Entries, and other passages, but never a fair room; all the inwards be sluttish and offensive. It is not then, Thou that knowest the Wealth, or the Birth, or the Head, but the Heart; as if in an Election, that were the main; it is all if the rest be admitted on the By.

Here then we have three remarkable observations. 1. What kind of Hearts God will not choose, and we may guess at them. 2. What Hearts he will choose, and himself describes them. 3. Why he will choose men especially by the Heart.

First what kind of Hearts he will not choose; and of these (among many) I will mention but three.

1. Cor diuisum, a distracted Heart; part whereof is dedicated to the Lord, and part to the world. But he that made all, will not be contented with a piece. Aut Caesar, aut nihil. The service of two Masters, in the obedience of their contrary commands, is incompetible, sensu composito. Indeed Zacchaeus did first serve the world, and not Christ; afterward Christ, and not the world; but never the world and Christ together. Many divisions followed sin. 1. It divided the heart from God; Your sins have seperated between you and your God. 2. It divided heart from heart. God by Marriage made one of two, sin doth often by prevarication make two of one. It divided the tongue from the heart. So Cain answered God, when he questioned him about Abel; Am I my Brothers keeper? As if he would say, Go look. 4. It divided tongue from tongue, at the building of Babel; that when one called for Brick, his fellow brings him mortar: and when he spake of coming down, the other falls a removing the ladder. 5. It divided the heart from it self; They spake with a double heart. The original is, A heart and a heart: one for the Church, another for the Change: one for Sundays, another for working days: one for the King, another for the Pope. A man without a heart, is a wonder: but a man with two hearts, is a monster. It is said of Judas, There were many hearts in one man: and we read of the Saints, There was one heart in many men. Dabo illis cor vnum, a special blessing.

Now this division of heart is intolerable in a Magistrate; when he plies his own cause under the pretence of another's; and cares not who lose, so he be a gainer. Saint Jerome calls this Cor male locatum; for many have hearts, but not in their right places. Cor habet in ventre gulosus, lasciuus in libidine, cupidus in lucris. Naturally, if the heart be removed from the proper sear, it instantly dyes. The eye unnested from the head, cannot see: the foot sundered from the body, cannot go: so spiritually, let the heart be vncentred from Christ, it is dead. Thus the Coward is said to have his heart at his heel, the timorous hath his heart at his mouth, the envious hath his heart in his eyes, the Prodigal hath his heart in his hand, the fool hath his heart in his tongue, the covetous locks it up in his chest. He that knows the hearts of all men, will not choose a divided or misplaced heart.

2. Cor lapideum, a hard or stony heart. This is Ingratum ad beneficia, infidum ad consilia, inverecundum ad turpia, inhumanum ad bona, temerarium ad omnia. A Rock, which all the Floods of that infinite Sea of God's mercies and Judgments cannot soften. A Stitthy, that is still the harder for beating. It hath all the properties of a stone: it is as cold as a stone, as heavy as a stone, as hard as a stone, as senseless as a stone. No persuasions can heat it, no prohibitions can stay it, no instructions can teach it, no compassions can mollify it. Were it of iron, it might be wrought: were it of lead, it might be molten, and cast into some better form: were it of earth, it might be tempered to another fashion: but being stone, nothing remains but that it be broken. What was Pharaohs greatest plague? was it the murraine of Beasts? was it the plague of Boils? was it the destruction of the Fruits? was it the turning of their Rivers into Blood? was it the striking of their First borne with death? No, though all these plagues were grievous, yet one was more grievous then all; Cor durum, his hard heart. He that knows all hearts, knows how ill this would be in a Magistrate: a heart, which no cries of Orphans, no tears of Widows, no mourning of the oppressed, can melt into pity. From such a Heart good Lord deliver us.

3. Cor eupidum, a covetous heart; the desires whereof are never filled. A handful of corn put to the whole heap, increaseth it; yea, add water to the Sea, it hath so much the more: but he that loveth Silver, shall never be satisfied with Silver. One desire may be filled, but another comes. Crescit amor nummi, quantum ipsa pecunia creseit. Natural desires are finite, as thirst is satisfied with drink, and hunger with meat. But unnatural desires be infinite; as it fares with the body in burning Fevers; Quo plus sunt potae, plus sitiuntur aquae: So it is in the covetous heart, Vt cum possideat plurimae, plura petat. Grace can never fill the purse, nor wealth the heart.

This vice is in all men iniquity, but in a Magistrate Blasphemy: the root of all evil in every man, the rot of all goodness in a great Man. It leaves them, like those Idols in the Psalm; neither eyes to see, nor ears to hear; but only hands to handle. Such men will transgress for handfulls of barley, and morsels of bread; and a very dram of profit put into the Scole of Justice, turns it to the wrong side. There is not among all the charms of Hell, a more damnable spell to inchant a Magistrate, then the love of Money. This turns Judgment into Wormwood, or at least into vinegar: for if Injustice do not make it bitter as Wormwood, yet shifts and delays will make it sour as vinegar. O how sordid and execrable should bribes be to them, and stink worse in their nostrils then Vespasians tribute of urine! Let them not only bind their own hands, and the hands of their servants, that may take; but even bind the hands of them that would offer. He that useth Integrity, doeth the former: but he that constantly professeth Integrity, doth the latter. It is not enough to avoid the fault, but even the suspicion: It is some discredit to the Judge, when a Client with his bribe comes to be denied: for if his usual carriage had given him no hope of speeding, he would not offer. A Servant, that is a favorite or inward, gives suspicion of corruption, and is commonly thought but a by-way; some postern or back-door for a gift to come in, when the broad fore-gates are shut against it. This makes many aspire to Offices and great places, not to do good, but to get goods; as some love to be stirring the fire, if it be but to warm their own fingers. Whatsoever affairs pass through their hands, they crook them all to their own ends; and care not what becomes of the public good, so they may advance their own private: and would set their neighbors house on fire, and it were but to roast their own eggs. Let them banish Covetousness, with as great a hatred as Amnon did Tamar; first thrust it out of their hearts, then shut and lock the door after it: for the covetous heart is none of them that God chooseth.

Next let us see what kind of hearts God will choose; and they be furnished with these virtues fit for a Magistrate.

1. There is Cor sapiens, a wise heart; and this was Solomon's suite; An understanding heart. He saw, he had power enough, but not wisdom enough; and that Royalty without wisdom, was no better then an eminent dishonor; a very Calf made of golden Eare-rings. There is no Trade of life, but a peculiar wisdom belongs to it; without which all is tedious and unprofitable: how much more to the highest and busiest vocation, the government of men? An ignorant ruler is like a blind Pilot; who shall save the vessel from ruin?

2. Cor patiens; a meek heart: what is it to discern the cause, and not to be patient of the proceedings? The first Governor that God set over his Israel, was Moses; a man of the meekest spirit upon earth. How is he fit to govern others, that hath not learned to govern himself? He that cannot rule a Boat on the river, is not to be trusted with steering a Vessel on the Ocean. Nor yet must this patience degenerate into cowardliness: Moses that was so meek in his own cause, in God's cause was as resolute. So there is also

3. Cor magnanimum, a heart of fortitude and courage. The rulers and squares that regulate others, are not made of lead or soft wood, such as will bend or bow. The principal Columns of a house, had need be heart of Oke. A timorous and flexible Magistrate is not fit for these corrupt times. If either threatenings can terrify him, or favor melt him, or persuasions swerve him from Justice, he shall not want temptations. The Brain that must dispel the fumes, ascending from a corrupt liver, stomach, or spleen, had need be of a strong constitution. The courageous spirit that resolves to do the will of heaven, what malignant powers soever would cross it on earth, is the heart that God chooseth.

4. Lastly, there is Cor honestum, an honest heart. Without this, courage will prove but legal Injustice, policy but mere subtlety, and ability but the Devils Anvil to forge mischiefs. Private men have many curbs; but men in authority, if they fear not God, have nothing else to fear. If he be a simple Dastard, he fears all men: if a head-strong commander, he fears no man; like that unjust Judge, that feared neither God nor Man. This is the ground of all fidelity to King and Country, Religion. Such was Constantine's Maxim; He cannot be faithful to me, that is unfaithful to God. As this honorable place of the Kings Lieutenāt-ship hath a Sword bearer, so the Magistrate himself is the Lord's Sword-bearer, saith Saint Paul. And as he may never draw this Sword in his private quarrel, so he must not let it be sheathed when God's cause calls for it. It is lenity and connivance that hath invited contempt to great places. Did Justice carry a severer hand, they durst not traduce their Rulers in Songs and Satyrs, the burden whereof will be their own shame. Magistrates are our civil Fathers: and what deserve they but the curse of Cham, that lay open the nakedness of their Fathers? When Alexander had conquered Darius, and casually found his slain body lying naked, he threw his own coat over him, saying, I will cover the destiny of a King. It is God alone that casteth contempt upon Princes; which that he may not do, let them preserve Cor mundum, a clean heart, not conscious of ill demerits.

Such a one sits on the Judgment-Seat, as one that never forgets that he must appear before the Judgment-Seat of Christ. So he executeth Justice, as never losing the sense of Mercy: so he showeth Mercy, as not offering violence to Justice. He can at once, punish the offense, and pity the offender. He remembers his oath, and fears to violate it: to an enemy he is not cruel, to a friend he will not be partial. And if ever he have but once cut the skirt of Justice, as David the lap of Saul's garment, his Heart smites him for it. He minds no other clock on the Bench, but that of his own Conscience. He will not offend the Just, nor afford a good look to varlets: nor yet doth he so disregard their persons, as to wrong their causes. He will maintain Piety, but not neglect Equity. In Court, he looks not before him on the person, nor about him on the beholders, nor behind him for bribes; nay, he will not touch them in his Closet or Chamber, lest the timber and stones in the wall should witness against him. So he helps the Church, that the Commonwealth be no loser: so he looks to the Common-wealth, that the Church may not be wronged. The lewd fear him, the good praise him, the poor bless him; he hath been a Father to Orphans, a Husband to distressed Widows. Many prayers are laid up for him in Heaven; and when he dies, they with the assistance of Angels, shall bear him up to blessedness.

Lastly, let us see why God will choose men by the heart. I deny not, but wisdom and courage, moderation and patience, are all requisite concurrences: but the Heart is the Primum Mobile, that sets all the wheels a going, and improves them to the right end. When God begins to make a man good, he begins at the heart: as Nature in forming, so God in reforming, begins there. As the eye is the first that begins to die, and the last that begins to live: so the heart is the first that lives, and the last that dies. It is said of the Spider, that in the morning, before she seeks out for her prey, she mends her broken web; and in doing that, she always begins in the midst. Before we pursue the profits and baits of this world, let us first amend our life; and when we undertake this, let us be sure to begin at the heart. The Heart is the Fort or Citadel in this little Ile of man; let us fortify that, or all will be lost. And as naturally, the heart is first in being, so here the Will (which is meant by the Heart) is chief in commanding. The Centurions servants did not more carefully obey him, when he said to one Go, and he goeth, to another Come, and he cometh, to a third, Do this, and he doth it: then all the members observe the Heart; if it say to the eye, See, it seeth: to the ear, Hear, it hearkeneth: to the tongue, Speak, it speaketh: to the foot, Walk, it walketh: to the hand, Work, it worketh. If the Heart lead the way to God, not a member of the body, not a faculty of the soul, will stay behind. As when the Sun ariseth in the morning, Birds rise from their nests, Beasts from their dens, and Men from their beds. They all say to the Heart, as the Israelites did to Joshua;

All that thou commandest us, we will do: and whither soever thou sendest us, we will go: only the Lord be with thee. Therefore the penitent Publican smote his heart, as if he would call up that, to call up all the rest. It cannot command and go without.

No part of man can sin without the heart, the heart can sin without all the rest. The Wolf goes to the flock, purposing to devour a Lamb, and is prevented by the vigilancy of the Shepherd; yet Lupus exit, Lupus regreditur; he went forth a Wolf, and comes home a Wolf. The heart intends a sin, which is never brought into action; yet it sins in that very intention. The hand cannot offend without the heart, the heart can offend without the hand. The heart is like a Mill: if the wind or water be violent, the Mill will go whether the Miller will or not; yet he may choose what kind of grain it shall grind, wheat or darnel. If the affections be strong and passionate, the heart will be working; yet the Christian by grace, may keep out lusts, and supply it with good thoughts.

The Heart is God's peculiar; the thing he especially cares for: My son, give me thy heart: and good reason, for I gave my own Sons heart to death for it Non minus tuum, quia meum; It is not less thine, for being mine: yea, it cannot be thine comfortably, unless it be mine perfectly. God requires it principally, but not only: give him that, and all the rest will follow. He that gives me fire, needs not be requested for light and heat; for they are inseparable. Non corticis, sed cordis Deus. God doth not regard the rind of the lips, but the root of the heart. It was the Oracles answer, to him that would be instructed which was the best Sacrifice; Da medium Lunae, Solem simul, & canis iram: which three characters make Cor, the Heart. Mans Affection is God's Hall: man's Memory, his Library: man's Intellect, his Privy Chamber; but his Closet, Sacrary, or Chapel, is the Heart. So Saint Augustine glosseth the Pater noster; Quies in coelis, which art in heaven, that is, in a heavenly Heart.

All outward works an hypocrite may do, only he fails in the Heart: and because he fails there, he is lost everywhere. Let the flesh look never so fair, the good Cater will not buy it, if the liver be spak'd. Who will put that timber into the building of his house, which is rotten at the heart? Man judgeth the heart by the works, God judgeth the works by the heart. All other powers of man may be suspended from doing their offices, but only the Will, that is the Heart. Therefore God will excuse all necessary defects, but only of the Heart. The blind man cannot serve God with his eyes, he is excused: the deaf cannot serve God with his ears, he is excused: the dumb cannot serve God with his tongue, he is excused: the creeple cannot serve God with his feet, he is excused. But no man is excused for not serving God with his Heart. Deus non respicit quantum homo valet, sed quantum velit. Saint Chrysostom seemed to be angry with the Apostle, for saying, Behold, we have left all, and followed thee. What have you left? an angle, a couple of broken nets, and a weather beaten Fish-boat; a fair deal to speak of. But at last he corrects himself, I cry you mercy, Saint Peter: you have forsaken all indeed: for he truly leaves all, that leaves Quod vel capit mundus, vel cupit: that takes his Heart from the world, and gives it to Christ.

All other faculties of man apprehend their objects, when they are brought home to them; only the Will, the Heart goes home to the object. Colour must come to the eye, before it can see it: sound to the ear, before it can hear it: the object to be apprehended is brought home to the understanding, and past things are recollected to the memory; before either can do her office. But the heart goes home to the object. Vbi thesaurus, ibi cor. Not where the heart is, there will be the treasure: but where the treasure is, there will be the heart.

Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. Of all, the pure heart is beholding to God, and shall one day behold God. Therefore Dadid prays, Cor mundum crea in me, Deus: Create in me a clean heart, O God. The Lord rested from the works of his Creation the seventh day; but so dearly he loves clean hearts, that he restes from creating them no day. As Jehu said to Iehonadab, Est tibi cor rectum, Is thy heart right? Then give me thy hand, come up into my chariot. So this is God's question, Is thy heart upright? Then give me thy hand, ascend my triumphant Chariot, the everlasting glory of heaven.

To conclude; because there is such difference of hearts, and such need of a good one; they put it to Him that knows them all, and knows which is best of all. For howsoever Nature knows no difference; nor is there any Quorum praecordia Titan De meliore luto finxit: yet in regard of grace, the sanctified heart is of purer metal then common ones. A little living stone in God's building, is worth a whole Quarry of the world. One honest heart is better then a thousand other: the richest Mine, and the coarsest mould, have not such a disproportion of value. Man often fails in his Election, God cannot err. The choice here was extraordinary, by lots: yours is ordinary by Suffrages; God's hand is in both.

Great is the benefit of good Magistrates: that we may sit under our own Vines, go in and out in peace, eat our bread in safety, and (which is above all) lead our lives in honest liberty: for all this we are beholding, under God to the Magistrate, first the Supreme, then the subordinate. They are Trees, under whose branches the people build and sing, and bring up their young ones in religious nurture. That Silence in heaven about half an hour, when the golden vials were filled with sweet odors, and the prayers of the Saints ascended as pillars of smoke and Incense, is referred by some, to the peace of the Church under Constantine. It is the King of Mexico's Oath, when he takes his Crown; Iustitiam se administraturum, effecturum vt Sol cursum teneat, Nubes pluant, Rivi currant, terra producat fructus; that he will minister Justice, he will make the Sun hold his course, the Clouds to rain, the Rivers to run, and the Earth to fructify. The meaning is, that the upright and diligent administration of Justice, will bring all these blessings of God upon a Country.

If we compare this City with many in foreign parts, how joyfully may we admire our own happiness! Those murders and massacres, rapes and constuprations, and other mischiefs, that be there as common as nights, be rare with us. I will not say that all our people are better then theirs, I dare say, our Government is better then theirs. Merchants make higher use, and are more glad of calm Seas, then common passengers. So should Christians more rejoice in peace, then can the heathen: because they know how to improve it to richer ends, the glory of God, and salvation of their own souls. Proceed ye grave and honorable Senators, in your former approved courses, to the suppressing of vice and disorders, and to the maintenance of Truth and Peace among us. It is none of the least renowns of this famous City, the Wisdom and Equity of the Governors. To repeat the worthy acts done by the Lord's Maters of London, were fitter for a Chronicle; they are too large for a Sermon.

But it is high time to bless you with a Dismissal, and to dismiss you with a Blessing. That Almighty God, that knows the hearts of all, sanctify your hearts to govern, and ours to obey; that we all seeking to do good one to another, He may do good unto us all. To this blessed and eternal God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be all glory and praise forever.
Amen.

P-HA-1. A censure upon the dialogue of the Anabaptists entitled, A description of what God hath predestinated concerning man. By Henry Ainsworth. - Ainsworth, Henry, 1571-1622?

A CENSURE UPON A DIALOGUE OF THE Anabaptists; Intituled, 〈...〉 what God hath Predestinated concerning man, &c. By HENRY AINSWORTH.

ROM. 9.11.15.16.

11 (For the children being not yet borne, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth.)

15 For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion.

16 So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy.

TO THE READER.

CHRISTIAN Reader, howbeit the continued infirmity of this authors body, wherewith it pleased God to exercise him, might justly have excused him from taking pen in hand to write, especially in businesses of this nature, his desire being as himself testified in his life time, to finish this last period of his life with more comfortable meditations then to follow controversies: yet did he labor to his power, yea and (as I may say) beyond his power, to enforce himself even in his decayed health, together with his other necessary labors, to discover the fraud and falsehood of the adversaries: amongst others he judged these Anabaptists not the least, which occasioned this ensuing Censure; Another nearer inhabitant then the former author, was one Mr. Paget that lived in the same city by him▪ being a chief leader to another congregation there, who being of a quarrelsome disposition, and envious hearted towards Mr. Ainsworth, and the truth professed by him, having unjustly picked quarrels against him: afterward without his privity while matters were in debating (not imitating D. Reynolds to Hart although he highly commends him pag. 367.) published a book against him, laying to his charge things which he knew not, even gross untruths, and palpable reproaches, making divers false charges upon him, as if he neither shamed nor feared to be Satan's instrument to blow abroad whatsoever envy and malice had scraped together, in likelihood expecting no other reward then gratifying the world, by the Gospel's disgrace in our subversion; yea laboring through his sides to smite the text it self, which I trust M. Ainsworth hath well cleared in that little advertisement published in his life time with those books of Moses, besides a particular answer to his book he had well begun, and had finished long before his death had not his infirmity of body hindered. But now time permits not to instance particulars, but leaving so unneighbourly, yea so unchristian an opposite to the Lord for judgment, I will add a word or two touching the occasion of this treatise ensuing, which was at the request of some, (whose minds the Anabaptists would cumber with their errors) to show his judgment on the foresaid book. Now as some were assaulted that yet would give no way or entertainment to those errors, yet othersome that had stood in the truth a long time, were perverted. The knowledge of these things coming to this reverend and judicious man, Mr. Henry Ainsworth, he soon drew out this answer, and sent it by a friend into England, to reclaim (if God saw it good) such as had erred herein, and gone astray by rash and inconsiderate zeal beyond knowledge, and through the grace of God to preserve such from falling as yet stood: this he sent for the present, purposing if the Lord continued some competent health and strength, to revise and so to make more perfect this which then shortness of time in respect of the Messengers great haste, could not be afforded, and so to make it public in this spring; but the Lord having prevented this his purpose, by taking him to himself, he now resteth from his labors. Yet finding the matter may, through the blessing of God, be profitable to his people, it is thought fit not to keep these his last labors in matters of this nature in silence, but that it come to the public view for the good of them that are ordained to life. And so I wish thee to farewell in the Lord.

A CENSURE UPON A DIALOGUE of the Anabaptists, entitled, *A Description of what God hath Predestinated concerning MAN, &c.

BEING requested by some, whose minds the Anabaptists would cumber with their errors, to show my judgment on their foresaid Book; I have set down these few observations.

In the first part which they entitle of Predestination, they commit a double fault, 1 They confirm not by holy Writ their own doctrine: for in the third page of their Dialogue, they describe God's Predestination out of their own head; not one Scripture brought to prove that they say: neither can they justify by God's word that their description, wherein some things are erroneous, some ambiguous and sophistical till they be cleared. 2 They abuse and calumniate the doctrine of those whom they call Calvinists, and would father upon them absurdities, errors, blasphemies: taking advantage upon some harsh phrases, concluding against them worse things then either they spake or meant; passing over the explanations to be seen in sundry of their works, which will clear them of the errors that these men would enforce upon them.

The differences which they make (in page 4) between the Calvinists doctrine and theirs, are fraudulent and injurious. As between All things, and all good things: where first these Anabaptists do differ from the plain Scriptures, which testify that All things were created by Christ, Col. 1 16, and without him was not anything made that was made, 1 John. 1 2. Secondly, they cannot be ignorant but that we hold all things that were made to be very good, Gen. 1 31, so this difference they forged out of their idle heads.

The 2 & 3 differences, as that the Calvinists should say, whatsoever is done (murder or the like) cometh from God; and that God is the principal cause and author of all things, appointing all things to the one part and to the other, damnation as salvation, vice as virtue. But the Anabaptists say, whatsoever good is done cometh from God, but no evil things that are done; and that God is the principal cause and author of all good, and of salvation to all men; but the devil is the author of all evil. In these differences they set down some error, with calumny and sophistry.

Error it is to say, God appointed not Damnation as Salvation: wherein again they proclaim themselves different from holy Scripture. For damnation being a work of God's justice upon the reprobates, (as salvation is a work of his grace towards his elect,) cometh from God, and is by him appointed; as those Scriptures plainly testify, Mat. 25 41, Jude v. 4, 2 Pet. 2 3 • 9, Rom. 9 22.

That any of us should say, murder and other like vices come from God, and are appointed by him, is injurious sophistication. We hold not God to be the principal cause or author of any evil as it is sin; but only of evil as it is condign punishment for sin, according to Esa. 45 7, Amos 3 6. Concerning murder, and other like actions, we distinguish between the action as it is natural, and as it is moral. All actions as they are merely natural, are of God: for in him we live, and move, and have our being, Act 17 28, without him no man can move his hand to smite his neighbor. As they are moral, God's providence concerning them is twofold: for as they are vicious & sinfully done, God doth them not, but suffereth them so to be done: as they have in them respect of justice and punishment, so God doth, appointeth, commandeth them to be done: As, the defiling of David's Concubines, being considered in the sinfulness of it, proceeded from Absalom's wicked lust, and Ahithophel's wicked counsel, 2 Sam. 16 21 22. thus God did it not, but suffered it to be done. But considering it as a punishment or chastisement for David's sin, the Scripture telleth us, that God took David's wives and gave them to Absalom, and God did this thing, 2 Sam 12 11 12. The murdering of the Israelites by the Assyrians, of the Iwes by the Babylonians, was a very sinful action done by these Heathens; and thus God suffered them to do it: But as it was a just punishment for his people's iniquity, God sent those heathens against the hypocritical nation, Esa 10 5 6. God caused the Jews to fall by the sword, he made Jerusalem desolate, he himselfe fought against them with an outstretched hand, he delivered them into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar; he prepared destroyers against them, he gave them into the hand of those that sought their life: the Babylonians were his servants, whom he sent and took, and brought against the land; though those Heathens for their iniquity in doing this, were afterward punished, Jer. 19 7 8, & 21 5 7, and 22 7 25, & 25 9 12. Other examples many are in the Scriptures, how these actions which men did most sinfully, God did the same actions by those evil men; most justly: either for judgment upon reprobates, or for chastisement & mercy unto his chosen.

They inveigh against us, as teaching that God decreed that Adam could not but sin; that God commanded him not to sin, and yet decreed that he should not sin. Answ. They proceed in wronging us. We teach not that God decreed sin should be done, otherwise then by suffering it to be done. He never decreed either to do sin, or to command it to be done, or to approve it being done. Neither did any decree of God force Adam to sin; he might have avoided sinning if he had would: but he would not continue in obedience, he sinned willingly.

Further, they feign us to say, that though God by his reviled will commanded Adam not to sin, yet in his secret will he decreed he should sin. Answ. God neither openly nor secretly decreeth or willeth sin as sin: for he is not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, Psal. 5 4. They keep their wont therefore in calumniating us. Also they err, in refusing the distinction between God's revealed and his secret will, whereby we understand not two wills in God, but one and the same will, partly revealed, partly concealed from us and secret, according to Deut. 29 29. By his reviled will or commandment, God would have Abraham to kill his son, Gen. 22, by his secret will (not th'n reviled to Abraham but afterward) he would not have him killed.

They go on and would prove, that God did neither decree, nor lay any necessity on Adam to transgress. But they labor in the wind, and would prove that which we confess, yet in their proof lurketh error; for they affirm, that God left not Adam unfurnished with anything that might support him in that estate in which he created him. For th's th'y bring no word of God, but broach their own fansi's. A•am was unfurnished of God's gracious help to support him when h• was tempted: for want of it, he willingly yielded unto Sa•an: by it, he might and would have resisted all temptations; even as the elect Angels having this grace, are supported so as they shall never fall. Adam in deed was so furnished of God, that no power or fraud of Satan could have vanquished him, unlsse he himself would voluntary yield: which he did, and therefore had no excuse for his sin. But God (if he had pleased) could so have confirmed his will in good, could so have supported him with grace in temptation, that his will should not at all have declined to evil. This God did not, because so it pleased him; and he was not bound to give Adam more grace, then that which he had bestowed on him: which was so great, that no power of devils could have prevailed, if the man had not willingly fallen.

They proceed to manifest two things: first, Of Adams state, viz. that God could not make him otherwise then he made him, that is mutable, able to obey his precepts: but not unchangeably good. Ans. Not to reason of things too high for us, how God could have made man: I grant that men and Angels, and all cr•atures are changeable: and that Adam was able to obey all God's commandments, if he had would: but this proveth not that he was furnished with all things that might support him in that good estate: for he had not special grace from God to stablish his will in good; which the Lord could have done, and then Adam had not sinned. Whereas they add, God did not decree and force him to sin; we say the same, and they sinfully wrong us to impute such blasphemy unto us. 2 The second thing they would manifest is; That many things be done against the will of God. Answ. This as it is set down is false: For it was the will of God to suffer Adam to fall, else he had not fallen: and God willingly suff'reth all the sins done under the Sun; for if he would not suff'r them, the creatures could not do them. But understanding by God's will his commandment, or his approbation: so it is true, that too many things are done against God's will: and this they need not go about to prove, for none (I think) denieth it.

But they scoff at the distinction between the action, and the sin of the action, and call it merely a fabulous riddle: and say, the subtlety of the Riddle is this, that sin is nothing: whereupon they pleasantly infer, that malefactors are punished for nothing. Answ. Had they not a better faculty in deriding then in disputing, they would not have called it a fabulous riddle. I have before proved that all actions of men as they are natural, all motions inward or outward, are of God, Act. 17 28. Again, I have proved that the actions of Assyria and Babylon, were just and holy actions as God did them; but wicked & sinful as men performed them Therefore the action and the sin of the action are rightly and needfully distinguished, seeing God's hand is in the one, but not in the other. That sin is no substantial thing is plain, seeing all things were made by God, John. 1 2, but sin he never made: it is a vicious quality infecting the good things which God made, and corrupting their actions. And thus though sin be not simply nothing, yet it is no substantial thing. Their definition of sin, that it is a thought, word, or deed, contrary to the will of God is no perfect definition: for there is an hereditary sin from Adam, which all have, before they can either do, or speak, or think: of which point we are to treat anon. Their inference that they which hold God to be the author of the deed which is sin, hold him to be the author of sin, is denied and before disproved. We know God was author of the deed of sending Joseph into Egypt: for he sent him hither, partly to try and humble Joseph, partly to provide for Jacob's family, Psal. 10 17 19, Gen. 45 7 8, yet was he not author of the sin committed in sending him, that was of the Patriarchs, moved with envy, Act. 7 9.

They charge M. Knox with wide wandering, and large blasphemy, for ascribing to the providence of God, whatsoever the Ethnics attributed to fortune: Their reason is this, who knoweth not that unto fortune, the Ethnics ascribe all perverse and pestilent wickedness. Answ. Herein they wander from the truth, and blaspheme it. God's providence extendeth further then to such things as he himself is author and doer of: it extendeth to all the most horrible sins in the world, which he willingly suffereth to be done, and provideth in what manner and measure he will suffer them to be done, and by his wisdom knoweth to bring good out of the worst and most sinful deed. Could Adam have been tempted to sin, if God had not given Satan leave to tempt? Could he have fallen, if God had not left him to himself? Was not God's providence in Absalom's horrible sin when he defiled his fathers wives; seeing God foretold it, and the manner of it, before all Israel, and before the Sun? 2 Sam. 12 11 12. God's providence sufficed Shimei's sin when he cursed David: his providence kept Abimelech from sinning in defiling Sarah, Gen. 20 3 6. To conclude, it is near unto Atheism & Epicureanism to deny God's providence in any the least thing or action be it good or evil.

But these men infer worse matter; asking whether anything may be spoken more repugnant to the nature of God, or contrary to his word &c. then to say that God punisheth man with hell torments, for doing those things which he himself hath predestinated, ordained, decreed, determined, appointed, willed and compelled him to do, and that which a man cannot choose, but must needs do by the force and compulsion of his predestination. Answ. Bold calumniators, which woul make the worl believe we say such things as we abhor to think. In how many books might they have seen these things denied, and refuted. We teach that sin is suffered of God, not done by him, nor decreed, willed, commanded, much less compelled. All that sin (whether men or devils) sin voluntarily, of their own will, for which they might all in justice be damned. God tempteth no man to evil, much less forceth or compelleth any to evil, I am. 1 13. So they answer unto, and woul refute their own fictions.

They affirm that we say, whatsoever God foreseeth be willeth, and it cannot but come to pass: whereto they answer, that God foreseeth all things, good and evil, but he willeth only good. And though he fore knoweth all things, yet all things come not to passeth before of necessity. Answ. They still dally and deceive by general and ambiguous terms. If they understand by God's will, his permissive will, or willing sufferance: so we say all things good or evil come to pass by his will. But if they mean God's effective or approving will, so we hold that he willeth nothing but good. The second we teach not, that all things therefore come to pass because God foreknoweth them: his foreknowledge imposeth no necessity on things. But withal we teach, that whatsoever God foreknoweth shall be, that must needs be, else his knowledge should not be certain and infallible: but they come to pass by other causes than his bare foreknowledge. These distinctions observed, their reasons deduced from Scripture are soon taken away.

They plead, that God foreseeth the death of a sinner, and the cause thereof, viz. his wickedness; but willeth it not, as Ezech. 18 32 and 33 11. I will not the death of a sinner, but that he return and live. Christ foresaw the destruction of Jerusalem, yet he willed it not for he wept &c. Mat. 23 37. Answ. They do not well to shuffle together, Death, and wickedness the cause of it. Wickedness God willeth permissively, suffering it to be done: Death he willeth effectually, inflicting it on obstinate sinners. Secondly, they err in denying absolutely that God willeth the death of a sinner, else how should God judge the world? To kill for sin is a work of justice, as to pardon sin is a work of mercy. God willeth his own justice and work thereof. Who but he createth the evil of punishment? Isaiah 45 7, Amos 3 6. Who but he prepareth death and hell for sinners? Math. 25 41. And would he do this against his will? The Scripture in plain words saith of Eli's wicked sons. They hearkened not &c. because the Lord would slay them, 1 Sam. 2 25. Whereas therefore Ezekiel saith, God would not sinners death, it cannot be meant absolutely or in all respect (for then it should contradict the other Scripture,) but conditionally or comparatively: if sinners repent he willeth not their death; or he willeth not their death so much as their repentance. But if the wicked turn not, then the (Prophet saith) God whetteth his sword, bendeth his bow, and prepareth for him the instruments of death, Psal. 7.12 13. So Christ would not Jerusalem's destruction, if they would have come to him: but because they would not, he would make it desolate, as was foretold, Dan. 9.26 27.

They would prove, that all things come not pass of necessity therefore; to wit, because of God's foreknowledge. Answ. They labor in vain to prove that they need not. God's foreknowledge layeth no necessity that the thing must be done by force or compulsion. Yea God's will always layeth no such necessity: seeing he willeth some things conditionally, which are not effected unless the condition be observed: as he would a sinners life, not death, conditionally if he return to God. He would the destruction of Nineveh; but conditionally, except they repented. Other things God willeth absolutely; and those must needs come to pass: for none can resist or hinder his absolute will. Esa. 46 10.11. Job. 23 13 Psal. 33.10.11. But forasmuch as God certainly foreknoweth all things that shall be, whether good or evil, in this respect all things come to pass of necessity, otherwise God in his foreknowledge might be deceived. But as necessity meaneth violence, force, compulsion: so all things are not of necessity, but many are of the voluntary will of the creature. Therefore these adversaries deceive their readers in answering texts of scripture alleged: for sometime they fabricate untruths on us, and with all sometime spread their errors As when they say, In these actions (namely Shimei's cursing of David, and the like) there were evils, namely cursing, envy, pride deceit: now the controversy is (say they) who was the first cause of this cursing, envy pride, deceit.

Answ. They would make controversy where none is. We believe that all sin is originally from the creature, & none from the creator. So when they would conclude from our doctrine, that God should be most to be blamed for forcing of necessity by his decree, Satan to tempt, and man to consent and act it: they show themselves to be calumniators: we do not hold that ever any creature was, is, or shall be forced of necessity by God's decree, to consent unto, or to act any sin.

And here let the prudent reader observe, how these men themselves can distinguish when they are driven to it: for (in pag. 24, 25.) they confess God made them that are now Devils, and continueth the life and being of men and Devils: also (in pag. 26.) that these Devils and men (the instruments that act wickedness) are good, as they are from God, yet the actions (they say) of those instruments, the sins, cannot be good from God.

The first is true, that devils and men were God's good creatures: the second, (that God continueth their life and being) is also true, but imperfect: they should have added their moving also: for so we are taught, that in him we live, and move, and have our being, Act. 17 28. Why said they not that God continueth their moving also? Was it because they saw all our actions are motions, and therefore in some respect also of God? But this they baulk for advantage to their errors. Their third assertion is partly false, and partly fraudulent. Fraud it is to confound actions and sins, as if they were all one, and admitted no distinction (which the Abarastists call a turning device.) False it is that the actions of these instruments cannot be good from God: for whatsoever is from God, is good; & all actions as they are merely natural, are from God, in whom we live and move. Again, all actions which God (either for reward, chastisement or punishment) doth by evil instruments, they are morally good in respect of God: though as they are misdone, or sinfully done by devils and men, they are morally evil; and thus God doth them not, but only suffereth them to be done amiss.

Now for God's sending the Assyrians against Israel, Esa. 10 5 6, his sending delusions upon reprobates, 2 Thess. 2 11, and the like: they say it was not otherwise then by suffering: and they would prove it by the devils words to Christ, Send us into the swine, Mar. 5 12, which another Evangelist setteth down thus, Suffer us to go &c. Mat. 8 31. Hereupon they infer, that God's sending is nothing but suffering in this case.

Answ. They conclude more then the Scripture teacheth: for though such sending be suffering, yet it followeth not that such sending is nothing but suffering: there is more in it then so. For the punishing of Israel by Ashshur, Isaiah. 10. was an act of Justice for their sins: and so is the sending of delusion in 2. Thess. 2. a work of justice: therefore a good work. And if God did not do these things, but only suffered them: then the good works of justice are done by wicked men and devils; and the Devils shall be good doers; and God a sufferer only of good to be done. The proof they make show of from comparing the Evangelists, showeth what strangers they are in the book of God. When sundry Prophets or Apostles repeat the same things, it is usually with some change and difference of words: not that the different words are equivalent, one meaning neither more nor lesse then another, but of different meaning, and larger extent oftentimes, to teach further matter. That which one Evangelist calleth fasting, Mark 2.19. another calleth mourning, Math. 9.15. yet are not these two one, though often joined together. To drink with the drunken, Math. 24.49. is explained, To drink and to be drunken, Luk. 12.45. which two speeches are not always the same; for a man may drink with the drunken, and yet not be drunken himself. In 2. Chron. 5.4. the Levites took up the Ark: in 1. King. 8.3. it is said, the Priests took up the Ark: this expoundeth the former; for though all Priests were Levites, yet all Levites were not Priests. In 1. Chron. 19.19. the Syrians would not help the Ammonites: in 2. Sam. 10.19. it is said, they feared to help them. Yet are not these words of equal force and extent: for some may be unwilling to help though they be not afraid. The Prophet saith, Rejoice greatly O daughter of Zion, Zach. 9.9. the Apostle alledgeth it, Fear not O daughter of Zion, John. 12.15. The Prophet saith, the Gentiles shall seek, Esa. 11.10. the Apostle expoundeth it, the Gentiles shall trust. Rom. 15.12. And many the like; where to make one of the words no more in force then the other, were to do open violence to the scripture. And that all may see that sending is more then suffering, the very same history which they allege doth convince them, for the same Devils at the same time desired Christ that he would not send them away out of the country, Mark. 5 10. but in Luk. 8.31. it is said, they desired that he would not comm•nd them to go out into the deep. If these men's reason be of weight, sending is no more then suffering: this reason hath as much weight, that sending is no less than commanding. Now betwixt commanding and suffering themselves (I suppose) will confess there is sometime a great difference. But why doth the one Evangelist say send us, and another, suffer us? Not to confound these two as one, but to teach us two things; 1. that as it was the devils sinful and malicious desire to hurt the creatures, & to procure envy against Christ in this respect he suffered them: 2. but as it was Christ's just punishment on the covetous Gadarenes, and trial of them whether they loved their swine more then him and his gospel; in these respects Christ not only suffered, but sent the devils into the swine; and the devils were his servants to do what he would have done. The like is to be minded for God's sending the Assyrians, and Babylonians, with sword to kill; and the devils with delusions to deceive the reprobates; and other the like, 1 King. 22, 19, 20—22.23.

This is further manifested by the example of Christ's death: touching which (whatsoever the Scripture saith) these men do deny that God determined, appointed or decreed, that the wicked should betray or murder him, otherwise then by suffering them. Which if they spake in respect of the sin only, we would grant: but being meant of the actions done, it is against the express Scriptures, which say the Jews took and crucified him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, Act. 2 23, and that both Gentiles and Israelites were gathered together for to do whatsoever God's hand and his counsel, predestinated (or fore-determined) to be done: Act. 4 27.28. Now God's Counsel and Predestination that a thing should be done, is more then bare permission; and his hand being in it, showeth him to be an agent in this work. God out of his love, sent and gave his Son for us, John. 3.16.17, it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and put him to grief, Isaiah 53.10, and Christ laid down his life of himself, no man took it from him, John. 10.18, he poured out his soul unto death, Esa. 53.12, he offered up himself a sacrifice for our sins, through the external Spirit, Heb. 7.27, & 9 14. These and the like sayings in Scripture, teach us more of God in Christ's death, then a bare suffering.

God's good hand was in it for our redemption, and not only the wicked hands of them that sinfully crucified him.

Whereas they tell us, Christ might have been slain without sin, for God might have appointed some to sacrifice Christ, as he did Abraham to sacrifice Isaac &c. They speak too presumptuously in God's matters. Will they teach him another or a better way to effect his own purposes, then himself hath chosen? But what would they infer upon it? If God had decreed that Christ should have been slain by holy Angels; they would not then deny (I suppose) but God should be an agent in his Sons death. Now that God decreed he should be slain by evil Angels, and hands of wicked men; and his Decrees and Counsels must stand, Psal. 33.11, his predictions must needs be fulfilled, Act. 1.16, is he not therefore an agent in Christ's death? Shall he be restrained from using any of his creatures to do his good work, because they through their own corruption and malice do it (and cannot but do it) amiss? Or shall their mis doing which is in them voluntary, and not caused of God, be imputed to him? Let men speak and think of God with more sobriety: and though our dullness cannot comprehend how God's good hand can be in the evil actions of wicked men, & he not partaker of their sin: yet let us not deny that which God plainly teacheth, but rather lay our hand on our mouth, and confess we have uttered that we understood not, things too wonderful for us which we knew not, Job. 40.4, & 42, 3.

The last reason which they pretend to answer, is such as dazzleth the adversaries eyes. The Scripture saith, the Jews could not believe, because (the Lord) he blinded their eyes and hardened their heart, that they should not see, nor understand, and be converted and healed, John. 12.39.40. Also the Lord saith, I will harden Pharaoh's heart: and he shall not hearken unto you, that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, &c. Exod. 7.3.4. They answer, to the first, that by comparing Esa. 6.9. Mat. 13.14, &c. Act. 28.26, &c. it is manifest, that they winked with their eyes, lest they should see: for which cause God gave them up to that reprobate sense. To the latter they answer, that Pharaoh hardened his (own) heart, Exod. 9.34, and God hardened his heart (and so the hearts of the wicked) by giving them up to Satan (who worketh hardness of heart against God) and to their own hearts hardness, and lusts, to vile affections, and to reprobate minds, Psal. 81.11.12. Rom. 1.24.26.28.

A•sw. That the Jews winked and would not see, that Pharaoh hardened his own heart and would not let Israel go, is true. That for these causes God gave them up to their own lusts, &c. and to Satan is also true. Thus far we agree; but to the force of our reason they answer nothing at all. For in these works of blinding and hardening, there is more then God's bare permission: they did it, and God it; they sinfully, but God righteously, justly rewarding their sin. And thus the enemy condemneth himself. For he that for sin, inflicteth punishment, doth a good work of justice, and suffereth it not only to be done: but God for sin blinded the eyes, and hardened the hearts of the Jews and Egyptians; therefore in blinding and hardening, God was a doer (as a just Judge) and not a sufferer only, as while ere they pleaded. Between these two there is great difference. The Greeks took Soft•nes and beat him before Gallio's judgment seat; here Gallio suffered them only, caring for none of those things, Act. 18.15.16.17. Paul and Silas were beaten and imprisoned by the Magistrates commandment, Act. 16.22.23, here the Magistrates not only suffered, but were agents also in their beating and imprisoning, though they did it by other wicked men's hands. So God when he commandeth Satan to go and deceive, or harden wicked sinners, 1. King. 22.22, whē he giveth sinners up to a reprobate mind, Rom. 1.24.26, 28, then God deceiveth, God hardeneth in just judgment, and doth not only suffer these things. When the Judge delivereth an evil doer to the Officer, & the Officer cast him into prison, Luk. 12.58, the Judge doth this by the Officer. So God is the Judge, he delivereth evil doers to Satan to be their deluder, their tormentor, their goaler, he giveth them up to blindness, hardness, reprobate minds; & these are works of his justice, which Satan and evil men execute most sinfully. Christ saith, he came into this world for judgment, that they which see not might see, and that they which see might be made blind, Job. 9.39. Now in what manner God blindeth and hardeneth sinners it is not in man to declare: for his judgments are unsearchable, and his ways past finding out, Rom. 11.33, But they that for his judgments would make God the author of sin, err on the one hand: and they that ascribe unto him herein but a bare permission, err on the other hand. Godliness will teach us to believe and rest in that which the Scriptures teach: though it pass our reach and capacity how God in his wisdom doth these things. Hitherto of Predestination.

Of Election.

THEY proceed to speak of election; where after they have set down (as they think good themselves) what our opinion is, they propound their own doctrine, viz. That Christ came to cure all men of their sins, but with a bitter medicine, which is, that we must deny our selves, take up his cross, and follow him. So many as refuse to take this medicine, cannot be cured, but such as receive it are cured. Again, that they are elected who do put on Christ, and that our election dependeth upon this condition, according to the Scriptures, the Lord chooseth to himself a righteous man, and they that were not God's people, shall be his people, &c. if they seek righteousness by faith, and these are the elect, according to the election of grace. Election (they say) is not of particular person, but of quality: all persons are God's generation; and those persons in whom he findeth faith and obedience, of his mere mercy those persons he electeth to salvation, for the quality he findeth in them; which he himself hath wrought by his word and Spirit, which they might have resisted, but did not, but submitted to the righteousness of God; and this is God's purpose of election before the world was; and these are they whom God knew, or acknowledged before. And for God's decree they feign it to be thus, I will cause all Nations to be taught (by Christ) and so many of them, (being all called) as do not behave themselves as they ought, I will cause to be punished, and the rest I will bless and make happy. This is the doctrine of blind Odegos, the Guide; and ignorant Ereunetes the Searcher answereth, I do think it so to have been.

Answ. Very ignorantly and erroneously have they propounded their opinion, with some truth mixing much error, that the blind may lead the blind into the ditch. It is true, that such men as they describe are God's elect: it is also true that God hath wrought these good things in them by his Word and Spirit. But false it is, that our election dependeth upon this condition; False, that election is not of particular persons, but of quality. False it is (and thwarting their former speech) that God electeth those persons in whom he findeth faith and obedience: For before election no such persons are to be found among all the sons of Adam. False it is, and an abusing of the Scripture, to say, that God chooseth to himself a righteous man. False it is to say (in this matter of Election) that all persons are God's generation. Briefly, the whole tenor of their description of God's election, is perverse and erroneous. For,

1 No scripture telleth them that our election to life, dependeth on this condition, of our faith and obedience. Faith and obedience are the effects (not the cause) of our election, and are conditions following election, not going before it; as it is written, As many as were ordained to eternal life believed, Act. 13.48, teaching that God's ordaining to life (that is his election) went before their believing, but these men invert the order of God, and would teach, that so many as believed (beforehand) were ordained to life.

2 The Apostle teacheth us, that whom God foreknew, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, Rom. 8.29, so that our conformity to the image of Christ, our faith, obedience, bearing of his cross &c. is that whereunto (not that wherefore) God predestined or chose us. This is most apparent by the words following: Whom he did predestinate, them he also called, and whom he called them he also justified, and whom he justified them he also glorified, Rom. 8.30, So then glorifying cometh after justifying; justifying after calling; calling, after predestinating or choosing unto life: and these graces are not before predestination or causes of it, as these adversaries would persuade.

3 It is written, that God hath chosen us in Christ, before the foundation of the world▪ that we should be holy; and he predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, Eph. 1.4.5, so that our holiness, and our adoption, are things that we are chosen unto, and do follow election; but are not the things going before, and which we are chosen for, because God findeth them in us.

4 Paul teacheth us that God justifieth the ungodly that believe in him, Rom. 4 5, now those whom he justifieth, he did choose and predestinate before, Rom. 8.30, therefore he chose the ungodly, the unrighteous, that they may be made godly, righteous, and holy, through his grace. But these men say, God chooseth a righteous man, whereas the Scripture saith, There is none righteous, no not one, there is none that understandeth, none that seeketh after God, Rom. 3.10.11, so that if God should choose the righteous only, none at all should be chosen. They say, it is according to the Scripture, but they show no Scripture that accordeth to their saying. If they intend Psal 4.3, the Lord hath set apart (or separated) him that is godly for himself; (for I know not else what Scripture they should mean,) they are deceived and would deceive; for David speaketh not there of his election to life, but of his being set apart to the glory of the kingdom of Israel, which his enemies would have turned to ignominy: neither useth he the word of election, but of setting-apart (or separating after a marvelous sort) which word is used for God's administration towards his people after they are elected and called, as appeareth in Ex. 33.16, & 11.7, yea and it is applied to brute beasts, which are not partakers of the Election that we treat of, Ex. 9.4.

5 Moses teacheth Israel, that God gave them not inheritance in the earthly Canaan (much less in the Kingdom of Christ) for their righteousness or uprightness of their hearts, Deut. 9 4.5.6, he telleth them, Because God loved their fathers, therefore he choose their seed after them, Deut. 4.37. But these men would persuade, that because men deny themselves, take up the cross & follow Christ, (that is, because they are righteous and holy) therefore God chooseth them to inherit heaven.

6 Because all men are by nature, or creation, the offspring, or generation of God. Act. 17.28, these men would conclude that election to eternal life, is not of particular persons, but of quality: as if our first natural birth, and our second supernatural birth were all one: or, because all persons are of God by creation, therefore no persons (or all persons) are of God by regeneration, and by election. But it is palpable error to confound things so different.

They proceed in their error, and say, All men to whom the Gospel is preached, were elected to salvation in Christ; not actually, for they could not be actually chosen, before they had actually any being, but in the eternal purpose of God upon the condition afore spoken.

Answ. Their first assertion is against truth, against reason. It is not true that all to whom the Gospel is preached, were elected to salvation in Christ: no scripture saith so. We are taught the contrary by Act. 13.46.48. where the Gospel was preached to many, but all that heard it were not elected to salvation: for as many as were ordained (that is elected) to eternal life, believed. But all believed not: therefore all were not ordained (or elected) to life. Against reason it is to say, All are elected: for election implieth a leaving or refusing of some. Where all are taken, no choice is made. Their second saying is, all were elected, not actually, because they had no being; but in God's eternal purpose. The action is in God, not in man: and his purposes or decrees are his actions: and if before the foundation of the world, God elected us in Christ, as the Apostle teacheth, Eph. 1.4. then were we actually chosen before we had natural being: though God's choice had not effect in us till we had being: But whereas they add, upon the condition afore spoken; it is an error before refuted.

Object. But of the elect Paul saith, Ye were without Christ, without God in the world, Eph. 2.12. so they were not then really and particularly elected.

Answ. Howsoever they change their terms, their reason is not good. They were not without God or Christ in respect of God's election, which he did before the world was made, Eph. 1.4. but in respect of their sinful estate and unbelief, before they were called, they were without God.

2 Obj. But the Apostle saith, After ye believed, ye were sealed with the holy spirit of promise, &c. Eph. 1.13.14.

Answ. What of this? Could they not be elected of the father, before they were sealed by the holy Ghost? God's election was before all time, Eph. 1.4. their calling and sealing by the Spirit, was in time. But they would confound election and sealing ignorantly.

3 Object. Rom. 9.25, 1 Pet. 2.10. I will call them my people which were not my people, &c. If we were actually and particularly chosen before the creation, then were we also really God's people, and could not at any time be said, not to be his people.

Answ. Here again they confound God's election, with his calling which is the manifestation of his election by the effect. God's predestination is before his calling, Rom. 8.30. So though they were not his people by calling, they were his by election. It is evident by Act. 18.10. that many in Corinth were God's people, before they were called or converted. Jeremiah was known, sanctified and ordained to be a Prophet, before he was formed or born, Ier. 1.5. and can we think he was not then also chosen to life?

They say, The Apostles meaning is, that we are first particularly chosen, when we receive or put on Christ. For God only chooseth where he findeth faith and obedience to the Gospel; and rejecteth where these are wanting. Herein they wrong the Apostles, who neither spake nor meant as these men speak. It is shown before from Act. 13.48. that election goeth before faith: so these men err, that put it after. They pervert the order set down in Rom. 8.30. whiles they make men to be first called, justified, glorified; and then predestinated unto life. They neglect Paul's doctrine, that God chose us before the world was, that we should be holy: and teach new doctrine of Antichrists devising, that God chose us because we were holy. But to follow them in their doctrine: God chooseth none (they say) but where he findeth faith. Where doth God find this, seeing he hath shut up all in unbelief? Rom. 11.32. Faith is not of ourselves, it is the gift of God, Eph. 2.8. so then he findeth not faith in his elect, but giveth them faith. And if they say some will not believe, and them God rejecteth: some will believe, and them God electeth: I demand, whence have any this will to believe? If they answer, of themselves and their own power; the Apostle telleth us the contrary, It is God that worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure, Phil. 2.13. Now God giveth not all men this will to believe and obey: for some cannot believe, 1. John. 12.39. some are reprobate concerning faith and every good work. 2. Tim. 3.8. Tit. 1 16. If God would give all men alike grace, he could make all men willing to believe and obey: but this he doth not: for in some he giveth a new heart and a new spirit, and takes away the stony heart out of their flesh, Ezek. 36.26. in other some he hardeneth their heart, that they cannot believe, nor turn unto him, John. 1•39 40. The mystery of his Gospel, God bideth from some, and revealeth to othersome: even so, for so it seemed good in his sight, Math. 11.25.26. He hath mercy on whom he will, & whom he will he hardeneth, Rom. 9.18.

By this which hath been said, all that love the truth may see, that all men to whom the Gospel is preached, are not elected to salvation in Christ, as these corrupters of the Gospel teach: neither can all men believe, or obey; because God gives them not such grace. Some refuse indeed willingly, and they perish justly: some (who naturally are as bad as other, & have harts of stone not of flesh) are changed, new hearts are given them, faith and holiness are wrought in them, and so they are brought unto salvation whereunto they were elected. Why God changeth the heart of some and not of other some, when he could if he pleased, change alle is not a question to be disputed of, Rom. 9.19.20. Let it suffice us, that God oweth us nothing, except death for our sins. His grace is his own, he may give it where he will, and none have cause to complain: If God have given grace to any of us, let us praise him for his mercy: when we see others left without grace, let us reverence him for his unsearchable judgments.

The rest of their discourse about election, though there be many abuses they offer to the scriptures, which mought justly be taxed, yet because they none of them do prove these men's universal Election, nor disprove our faith, I think needless to reply unto.

Of Reprobation.

TOgether with Election, they treat of Reprobation, badly as before, Our doctrine they pretend to be thus, They say, God hath reprobated some, and the greatest number, and that before they were borne, and had done evil; for whom there was never means of salvation, because God would have them perish, for that was his good pleasure.

Answ. We hold not (as they would bear the world in hand) that God would have men to perish, because it is his good pleasure: but because of their sins he destroyeth them, his justice so requiring. Neither do we hold that God ever decreed to punish his reasonable creature, without respect of the sin thereof deserving punishment. Yet was their punishment decreed before they were borne, or had done evil. For God foreseeing their wickedness, appointed them to wrath before they acted it, though he inflicteth not punishment till they be sinners. And this the scripture teacheth, as in Jude verse. 4. there are certain men crept in, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation. If they were ordained to it before of old, then was it before they were borne. The same is confirmed by Rom. 9.11.12.13. which scripture they seek to pervert by a longsome and erroneous exposition. Our doctrine being thus by them mis-reported; they labor to refute their own forgeries, not our assertions. So that they are unworthy of any reply.

Of falling away.

THE next error which they would maintain, is, that a man may fall from his election: or, that godly men, which are in the true and saving grace of God, may fall away: and may loose their heavenly inheritance which they have right unto. This Popish heresy they have not confirmed by any one Scripture, though they pervert many Scriptures for a show to delude the simple.

The faith which we profess is this: that the elect, however through Satan's temptations, and their own infirmities, they are subject to fall from God and perish; yet they are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, 1 Pet. 1.5, though they through their weakness sin and fall, yet the Lord putteth under his hand, Psal. 37.24, and the seed of God remaineth in them, and they cannot sin (unto death) because they are borne of God, 1 Job. 3.9. Though of themselves they are too ready to depart from God, yet he will not turn away from them to do them good, but putteth his fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from him, Ier. 32.40, so Christ's sheep shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of his hand, but he giveth unto them eternal life, John. 10 28, and the elect cannot possibly be seduced from Christ, Mat. 24.24.

They plead for their error by 7 reasons.

The 1 is certain Scriptures; as Heb. 12.15. Look least any man fail of (or fall from) the grace of God.
Answ. This proveth not that God will suffer his elect to fall utterly from saving grace: but warneth them to take heed to themselves in respect of their own frailty, and Satan's subtlety. Though God's election and foundation standeth sure, 2 Tim. 2•19, yet we must make an end of our salvation with fear and trembling; and must add virtue unto faith, and give diligence to make our calling and election sure; which if we do we shall never fall, 2 Pet. 1.5. ▪ 10.

Salt may loose his savor, Mat. 5. Answ. It may, if men be seasoned but with common grace, such as God giveth to many reprobates Heb. 6.4.5.6, but saving grace bestowed on the elect, is a gift and calling without repentance, Rom. 11.29.

Some that have escaped the pollutions of the world, &c. may return with the Sow to wallow in the mire, 2 Pet. 2.20.22. Answ. Too many in deed do so, but they are swine, not sheep of Christ: they seemed to be washed, by the knowledge of the Lord which they had, but their swinish nature was never changed. The Apostle in that chapter speaketh of hypocrites and reprobates, which walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, v. 10, which are as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, v. 12. which are wells without water, v. 17, so they never had saving grace.

Those that Christ hath bought may be damned, 2 Pet. 2.1. Answ. Those are such as before I spake of, which were bought of Christ by his offer of grace, and their feigned acceptance of it: but had they been in deed bought from the earth, they would have followed the Lamb, and should have been without fault before the throne of God, Rev. 14.3.4 5. Had they been justified by his blood, and reconciled to God by his death; much more should they be saved by his life; Rom 5.9.10. Had they been of Christ's sheep, for whom he laid down his life, he would have given them eternal life, John. 10.27•28. And here note how these men would make Christ's sufferings vain: for many whom (as they think) Christ died for, shall die themselves forever. Where is now the justice of God, that punisheth the wicked thems•lves, and yet punished Christ for them, without cause without fruit? Such doctrine the Apostle doth abhor, Gal. 2.21.

Some may tread under foot the blood of Christ, wherewith they were sanctified, &c. Heb. 10.29. Answ. Such were never sanctified otherwise then Swine that were washed, whose filthy nature was never indeed changed, otherwise then by counterfeisance and hypocrisy.

They that have faith and good conscience, may put it away, and make shipwreck of it: and some may leave their first faith, & be damned, 1 Tim. 1.19, & 5.12. Ans. Faith is not always in deed, that which it seemeth to be: There is a temporary faith, which falleth away in time of temptation, Luke 8.13• a vain dead faith, I am. 2, and there is a living faith, the •aith of God's elect, Tit. 1, 1, this faith never faileth utterly, for it is the seed of God, by which we are regenerate, and it remaineth in us, keeping us from sin, 1. Joh. 3.9.

Some written in the book of life, may be put out, Exod. 32.32.33. Psal. 69.25.28, Rev. 3.5. Answ. Many things are spoken of God, not properly but figuratively, & after the manner of men. So God is no way changeable, Mal. 3.6, I am. 1.17, neither doth he repent, 1. Sam. 15.29, yet is it said, It repented him that he had made man &c. Gen. 6.6, because in destroying the world, he did as men when they repent. So God is said to blot out of his book, those wicked which for a time seemed to themselves, & to others to be written in his book, but after by God's rooting them out, are manifested never to have been written there; for then they should have continued there▪ because the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11.9, his foundation standeth sure, having this seal. The Lord knoweth them that are his, 2 Tim. 2.19. But to the wicked he will profess, I never knew you, Mat. 7, 23. The talent may be taken from him that useth it not well, Mat. 25. Answ. All that have talents, that is gracious gifts, have not true saving grace to sanctify those gifts, neither are they all God's elect. This therefore is no proof of the question in hand.

The Saints at Rome that were justified by faith, and had access unto grace, Rom. 5.1.2, yet if they continued not in the bounty of God, they should be cut off, &c. Rom. 11.22. Answ. This and the examples following are like to the former, and teach God's elect to have care to continue in grace, without which there is no salvation. They teach also that hypocrites falling from God, shall perish. But none truly justified, and partakers of saving grace, shall perish, for God glorifieth them, Rom. 5.9, & 8.30, and he putteth his fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from him, Ier. 32 40, and if they depart not, they perish not, but are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, 1 Pet. 1.5.

2 Their second reason is, If the elect cannot fall out of God's favor, then did not all fall in Adam, and then some were never dead in sins, and so need not Christ's redemption, &c. Answ. An ignorant cavil: for the Apostle teacheth that God hath chosen us in Christ before the foundation of the world. Eph. 1 4. These men speak of our state before Christ. Again Adam and all in him fell from grace, such as they had of God in creation; but not from Christian grace, from grace of election and redemption, whereof they had no need before their fall, neither had they any promise of it till they were dead in sin, Gen. 3 It is this saving grace in Christ, from which the elect can never utterly fall, and not any other grace by creation, from which all men and some Angels have fallen.

3 If the elect cannot fall from their election, then have not all sinned and been deprived of the glory of God, and shut up in unbelief, &c. Answ. The same sophistry is in this reason, that was in the former, changing the state of the question, which is only of them that in Christ were chosen before the world was, and are by him redeemed, justified, sanctified, and shall have eternal life, John. 10.28, whereas these deceivers speak of men without Christ, and before they are by him redeemed.

4 The Ephesians were elect before the foundation of the world, Eph. 1. yet having forsaken their first love, if they repented not, God would remove the candlestick &c. Rev. 2. Answ. This is answered in the answers to the Scriptures which they brought in their first reason. It is true, the elect without repentance, faith, and perseverance cannot be saved. But all God's elect have from him the grace to repent, believe, and continue in well-doing, as before is proved: so they cannot perish. But hypocrites which were among the Saints only, but never of them, they cannot continue with the Saints, and so cannot be saved, 1 John. 2.19.

5 If a man in God's favor and chosen cannot fall out of it: then need he not, though he commit incest, adultery, murder, &c. fear falling into damnation. Answ. Herein they abuse God's comfortable promises, as if men should continue in sin that grace may abound. Far be it. All men ought to fear falling into any sin, and the elect fear continually knowing their own frailty. Our spiritual security is not carnal security: our faith is in God, not in our selves; by his power we are kept, not by our own. He saith to his people, The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed; Isaiah. 54.10. But if by fear, they mean fear without faith, that is despair: we believe that the elect though they fall into such sins, ought not to despair or distrust God's mercy: as the examples of David, Peter &c: which they allege, do evidently confirm. Psal. 51. Luke 22.31.32.

6 If no man elect, can fall from his election by committing of any of these sins, then to what end is repentance taught? It is in vain, if they neither be, nor can be in condemnation, &c. Answ. They that teach such doctrine, their religion is vain. We believe as the elect cannot perish, so neither can they continue in sin: he that is borne of God (saith the Apostle) committeth not sin, 1 John. 3.9. All that truly believe that they are elect, do also believe and know, that by repentance, faith, and abiding in Christ, they must come to the end of their election, the salvation of their souls: this is the way and means unto life, and without this they cannot see God.

7 To what end are men admonished or exhorted not to receive the grace of God in vain, 2 Cor. 6.1, not to fall from their steadfastness, 2 Pet. 3.17 &c. If they cannot fall into them, doth the Lord use words in vain? Answ. No, but these men's words are vain. For God as he hath ordained men to life, hath also ordained his laws, exhortations, threatenings &c. as means to bring them into life. He dealeth not with men as with stones, to carry them into heaven by violence; but giveth them repentance, faith, love, zeal, care and other graces; he persuadeth, moveth, draweth them to come willingly, and to continue carefully, and so at last saveth them.

In the next place, these fallers from grace, seek to wrest the Scriptures which refute their heresy. Unto Christ's words in Mat. 24.24, if it were possible they should deceive the very elect: They answer, that the elect, (namely those that receive and obey the truth Jesus Christ, and abide in him to the death,) cannot perish. Answ. Great is the truth that forceth the adversaries to yield; this is that which we maintain; and Christ's words (if it were possible) prove it undeniably; and showeth it to be impossible that the elect should be deceived to loose Christ.

Obj. Our controversy is whether those that be elect, may fall out of it: and not whether those that abide in it can perish. Answ. Here they would unsay that which before they said well. And the controversy they make is mere cavilling. For if it be impossible that the elect should be seduced from Christ, then is it impossible they should perish; and consequently it is impossible that they should fall from their election. Again, if it be possible that they should fall from their election, then is it possible they should perish, and possible that they should be seduced from Christ: and so our Savior's words will not stand. How greatly are these Deceivers fallen themselves, that seek so to pervert the plain words of Christ.

Object. Many fall from their election, not by being deceived, but willingly forsake the truth, against or after their enlightening, Heb. 6▪ 4, &c. and 10.26, &c. Answ. First, this is nothing to Christ's words in Mat. 24.24. Secondly, the Scriptures which they cite, say not (nor doth any Scripture say) that the elect may fall from their election either by deceit or willingly. Thirdly, as God keepeth all his elect from being deceived from Christ: so he keepeth them from willing forsaking of Christ: for he putteth his fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from him, Ier. 32.40, he stablisheth them in Christ, and annointeth them, and sealet them, and giveth the earnest of the Spirit in their hearts, 2 Cor. 1.21-22.

An other sure proof of the salvation of all God's elect is in John. 10.3.4.5.8.14.15.27.28.29. This Scripture the adversaries would pervert with this gloss: That so long as they continue Christ's sheep, hear his voice and follow him, so long they are sure, and have safety in God's acceptance, &c. But if they do evil and will not hear his voice, then he will repent of the good that he promised, Ier. 18.10, &c. Answ. First, that by sheep are meant God's elect whom he will save, is plain by the parable of the sheep and goats, Math. 25.33, &c. Secondly, in John 10, Christ useth no such words, so long as they continue, so long as they hear his voice, &c. but he plainly telleth us, that the sheep do hear voice, v. 3, that they follow him, v. 4, that they will not follow a stranger, neither know they his voice, v. 5. that the sheep did not hear strangers, v. 8, yea all Christ's sheep shall hear his voice, v. 16.27, and he giveth them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of his hand, or his fathers, v. 28.29. How unsufferably now do these men wrest Christ's heavenly words! Thirdly, the exception which they put, If they do evil in his sight, and will not hear his voice, then he will repent of the good, &c. This exception is impossible to be found in Christ's sheep: for though through infirmity they fall, yet he casteth them not off, for the Lord upholdeth them with his hand, Psal: 37, 24, though they stray he seeketh them up, Psal: 119, 176, he brings again that which was driven away, binds up that which was broken, strengthens that which was sick, &c. Ezek: 34, 16, he circumciseth their heart to love the Lord, with all their heart and withal their soul, that they may live, Deut: 30, 6, Such as believe not, and hear not his voice, are not sheep, but goats or swine; as Christ said to the Jews, ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, John: 10, 26. And how is it possible that the sheep should perish, seeing God is greater then all, in whose hand they are, John: 10, 28, 29. If Satan assail them, the God of peace will tread him under their feet, Rom: 16, 20, if the world, they overcome it by their faith, for greater is he that is in them, then he that is in the world, 1 Joh. 4, 4, & 5, 4, if their own corruptions rebel in them; God not only pardoneth, but also subdueth their iniquities, Mic: 7, 18, 19: as he carried them from the womb, so he hath promised to carry them even unto old age, and hoary hairs, Esa: 46, 3, 4. he sanctifieth them wholly, and preserveth their whole spirit, and soul and body blameless unto the coming of Christ, 1 Thess: 5.23. If neither Satan, nor the world, nor the flesh can draw them from Christ: nothing can draw them away; but they are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, 1 Pet. 1.5.

Unto John. 13 1. where it is said, Christ loved his own unto the end; they first say, that the meaning is, unto the end of his life. Ans. This is a frivolous limitation: did Christ love his own no longer then whiles he lived with them in this world? Who taught these miserable men thus to limit and lessen the love of Christ? He himself testifieth otherwise to his people; I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn, Ier. 31.3.

But it seemeth their conscience checked them when they wrote such doctrine: therefore after they say, that he loveth his forever; but the question is not of Christ's love unto his, but of their love unto him. A. This is no answer to Joh. 13.1. which speaketh of Christ's love, not of theirs. Secondly, it is impossible that Christ should love any forever, if they also love not him. For such as hate and forsake him, them also he will hate and forsake: and so cannot love them forever. Thirdly, it is before proved from Jer. 31.3. that those whom he embraceth with everlasting love, he also draweth with loving kindness: and being drawn, they run after him, Song. 1.4. those whom he loveth first, they love him 1. John. 4.19. he circumciseth their heart to love him, Deut. 30.6. he putteth his fear unto their heart, not to depart from him, Ier. 32.40. and nothing can separate them from the love of Christ, Rom, 8.35.

Unto Rom. 11.29. where the Apostle saith, The gifts and calling of God are without repentance: they answer with their common exception, that if the Jews abide not still in unbelief, they shall be grafted in again: of this the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

Answ. They still labor to overthrow one part of the truth by alleging another. The Apostle as he saith, that if the Jews abide not in unbelief, they shall be grafted in, for God is able, Rom. 11.23▪ so he further saith, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written. There shall come out of Zion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, &c. v. 25 26. and further telleth us, that as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers: whereof the reason is this: for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, v. 28.29 Therefore as the first is true, that God is able to graff them in, so the second is also true, that he is willing, and they shall be graffed in: as there is a condition on their parts, if they abide not in unbelief, so there is an absolute promise on God's part, that they shall not abide in it; because Christ the Deliverer will turn away ungodliness from them, that is, he will take away their unbelief and hardness, he will take away their sins, v. 26 27. which is a plain evidence that he loveth them, and repenteth not of his former love and promise. And as he dealeth with the elect Jews, so doth he with all the elect Gentiles: therefore all God's elect shall in time be converted, and have their sins forgiven them, and so undoubtedly saved by him whose gifts and calling are without repentance.

In 1. John. 2.19. it is said, They went out from us, but they were not of us, for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us, &c. This place showeth, that hypocrites and reprobates which abide not; were never of Christ's Church, though crept for a time amongst them. It teacheth also, that all who are of the Saints, of Christ's sheep and his elect, do abide, and fall not away to perdition.

To this they make answer, first by an open slander; that we should affirm, that God hath predestinated some to salvation; and some to damnation without any condition. This we affirm not, but they falsely charge us, as I have formerly manifested.

Again they say we affirm, that the elect making never so great show of wickedness, and walking in the ways of B•••all, are still elect, and can by no means fall out of their election, &c. But herein they keep their wont. Had they dealt honestly, they should have shown who and where we thus affirm. We hold that the elect after their calling, are careful to avoid all sin, as it is written, We know that whosoever is borne of God sinneth not; but he that it begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not, 1 John. 5, 18, And though the elect fall through infirmity into many grievous sins, yet they abide not always in them, but are renewed by repentance and faith in Christ: and whiles they are fallen, they are not cast off, Psa. 37, neither doth God repent of his electing of them, nor utterly depriveth them of grace and his good spirit, Psal. 51, Luk: 22, 31, 32, Ezek: 34, 16.

Thirdly, they tell us of difference between persons as they are God's generation (or creatures) and qualities good or evil. But this (howsoever they boast of the excellency of it) is to no purpose: for all men being corrupted with evil qualities, Rom. 2. & 3• how is it that any are changed into good; but by the power and grace of God, which is effectual in all his elect: The residue abide in their sins, because God changeth not nor reneweth their harts, and such he never elected unto life, but ordained them of old unto condemnation, Jude v•4.

Lastly they answer with absurd Sophistry; saying, that these words, 1 John: 2: 19: they went out from us, is meant of lying spirits, the Antichrists, in those persons, who once had the spirit of truth in them. And the Apostle saith, they were never of us: for v: 21• no lie is of the truth: For example (say they) the spirit of Hymenaeus, together with his person, was in spiritual fellowship with Paul, so long as he retained faith & a good conscience, but having put away the spirit of truth, and received a lying spirit, he went out from them in that his spirit, for or because it was never of them, &c. Will any say that the Pope himself is Antichrist in respect of his person? or rather in regard of his spirit or spiritual power he hath. Therefore all that this place proveth, is, that lying spirits or Antichrists in men's persons, went out from the truth, and were never of the truth; and therefore serveth nothing to prove that the elect can never fall away.

Answ. Was ever plain scripture more violently wrested, by any heretic? The Apostle saith of the many Antichrists, they went out from us, but they were not of us, 1 John. 2, 18, 19. This these men will not have to be meant of their persons, but of their spirits in their persons. And what understand they by their spirits? their lies, their errors, their spiritual power, such as the Pope hath: that is (as before they distinguished) their wicked qualities; not their persons: for God (they say) loveth all persons, they being his generation, Act. 17.27.

First it is an error to say God hateth not the persons of wicked men, but the evil qualities in them only: for though he hateth no creature in respect of their creation which was good; yet the creature being degenerate and fallen from God, he hateth their wickedness and them also for it, as the Scripture plainly witnesseth, Psal. 5.4.5.6 & 11 5.

2 It is erroneous to say, that by Spirits, the Apostle meaneth not persons, but qualities, 1 John. 4.1. for himself showeth his meaning, when he saith, because many false Prophets are gone out into the world. So by Spirits to be tried, he meaneth Prophets, which came with spiritual gifts: and it is frequent in Scripture to call subjects or persons, by the name of adjuncts or qualities in them: as, I am against thee è pride, Ier. 50, 31, that is, ô thou most proud: and, pride shall stumble and fall, v. 32, that is, the proud person: the poverty of the land, 2 King. 24, 14, 15, the poorest people. Deceit (or Sloth) roasteth not that which he took in hunting, Prov. 14, 27, that is, the deceitful man; and many the like.

3 It is from the deepness of Familism, to say, that Antichrists are not persons, but evil qualities in men, so Christ may be holden no person, but a godly quality in us. The Apostle speaketh of the person, for he saith not the lie, but the liar, he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ, he is Antichrist: 1 John. 2.22.

4 It is an absurd exposition of 1 John 2, 19, to put qualities for persons. He there speaketh of Antichrists, They went out from us; these men will have it, evil or Antichristian qualities went out from us. But what sense then will they make of the last branch of the verse, That they might be made manifest, that they were not all of us? Will they say, some Antichristian qualities were of the Apostles; though not all? The meaning is evident, that in the Church are persons some good, some bad, some elect, some reprobate: but while they abide and walk together in the Church, it is not manifest who are of the Church, who are not; but when the wicked and reprobates depart from the truth and Church, then it is manifest that such Apostates, though for a time in the Church, yet were never of it. So it is a sure proof, that God's elect are both in and of the Church of Christ, and shall never fall away utterly from it.

Of Freewill.

THIS point these adversaries handle confusedly, and maliciously. Confusedly, because they show not what they mean by freewill, or freedom of will: whether free from compulsion, or free from bondage of sin. Maliciously, for that they feign the Calvinists to hold, that the wicked are not only lifted by God's suffering, but compelled to sin by power, &c. compelled by the power, force and compulsion of God's predestination, to commit all those wicked crimes, for which they are punished by the Magistrate, or tormented in hell, &c. and then much more doth it in goodness, as violently work all: so that the godly can neither choose nor refuse goodness.

Answ. If these adversaries have common honesty, let them show out of the writings of the Calvinists (as they call them) these assertions which they impute unto them. Till they do this, let them have their name and fame among liars and workers of iniquity. As for us, we abhor these doctrines of compulsion to sin by force and power of God's predestination &c. As for will in man, we know it to be a natural faculty, still remaining though corrupted by sin, as all other like faculties in us. We acknowledge it still to be free from compulsion or constraint, for so will should be no will. But we confess with grief that in respect of bondage to sin (under which all men were sold, Rom. 7, 14.) it may rather be called Bond will, then Free will: for it is not free to refuse sin, until it be renewed by Christ: and so far as it is regenerate by him, it is again (as other powers and faculties in the Saints) freed by grace, and willeth things that are good.

Again, they produce (to their own condemnation) out of Bastingius, and the Dispute. in Geneva these words; Man by evil was spoiled, not of his will, but of the soundness of his will: therefore that which in nature was good, in quality became evil: and Bernard teacheth, there is in us all power to will, but to will well we had need to profit better: to will evil, we are able already by reason of our fall. The which if they would stand unto (saith this adversary) I would require no more.

Answ. This we will stand unto, and thereby do evince Odegos to be a blind guide and vain disputer, that with lies and calumnies would disgrace his opposites. We grant evil Free-will (or Free will to evil) is remaining in all natural men: we believe that freewill to good, is from grace and regeneration; and that all the Saints have it in part, as they have knowledge, faith, and other virtues here in part: which shall be perfected in the life to come. And if no more be required, his fruitless dispute is at an end: and it is worthless labor to answer words of wind.

Of Original sin.

THE Anabaptists hold (more erroneously then the very papists,) that Original sin is an idle term, and that there is no such thing as men intend by the word. In this their Dialogue they set the state of the Question thus; Of the Original estate of mankind. Wherein they speak doubtfully and deceitfully. For man's original estate is properly that described in Gen. 1▪ which was by creation very good. But since the fall of Adam, our original estate is through that fall become sinful and miserable: and is so acknowledged by David, Psal. 51.5, by Job, Job. 14.4. by Paul, Rom. 5, 12 &c. Eph.s. 2.3, and by Ch•ist himself, John. 3, 3, 5, 6.

Notwithstanding these adversities affirm. That no infant whatsoever, is in the estate of condemnation of hell with the wicked. Which they think to prove thus. Without sin there is no condemnation, Rom. 6, 23. Ez•k. 18, 4, 20; Without transgression of the Law there is no sin, 1 John. 3, 4, Rom. 5, 13. Therefore if infants have transgressed no law, there is no condemnation them.

Answ. The conclusion (which implieth that infants are not transgressors of God's law) is denied. The Apostle teacheth us▪ That by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin: and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned: and, by one man's disobedience, many were made sinners; Rom. 5, 12, 19. Note also how th•se men thwart •h•mselues: before, when they pleaded for falling from grace, one of their reasons was, If the elect cannot fall out of God's favour▪ then did not all fall in Adam, and th•n some were never dead in sins and trespasses, and so need not Christ's redemption, &c. Now they plead, that no infants are sinners: which if it be so, then many (as all that die infants) never fell in Adam, nor needed Christ's redemption. And so such shall either not come into heaven, or shall come thither other ways then by Christ; contrary to Job. 14, 6, Act. 4, 12.

But these en•mies dispute (against the Apostles doctrine) thus. Infants had no life nor being at that time (when the law was given to A•am:) and the law is given to them that know it, and hath dominion over a man as long as he liv•th. Therefore infants having no being, and so no knowledge, nor being then living, that Law had no dominion over them.

Answ. First, this is no more against infants then old men: for no man had life or being at that time o•herwise then infants had So Adams fall was for himself alone, and o•o man fell with him; for no man then had life <math>\langle \diamond \rangle</math> b•ing but he. And thus th•se lying spirits fear not to resist the Apostle, who saith, Through the offense (or fall) of one, many are dead▪ Rom. 5.15, by the offense of one, (judgment come) upon all men to condemnation, v•8, •y one man's disobeyed•n•e, many were made sinners, v. 1, in Adam all died, 1 Cor. 15, 22. This Apostolic doctrine is as contrary to the Anabaptists, as light is to darkness.

2 They hereby weaken (if they could) the Apostles Argument in Heb. 7, 9, 10, by Levies paying tithes to Melchizedek in Abraham: for a man might cavil, that Levi had no life nor being at that time. But Paul saith, he was in the loins of his father Abraham, when Melchizedek met him. So say I, we all were in the loins of our father Adam, when he transgressed. If then Levi paid tithes when Abraham did, we all brake God's law when Adam did.

3 They hereby weaken (as they can) the Apostles proof of our redemption by Christ: for he saith, that Adam is the figure of Christ that was to come: and if through the offense of one many be dead, much more the gift of grace, by one man Jesus Christ hath abounded unto many: and, as by one man's disobedience many be made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous, Rom., 14.15, 19. Now take away the first, namely the transgression of all men in Adam; and it overthroweth the latter, to weet the righteousness and salvation of the world by Christ.

4 They abuse the Apostles words, in Rom. 7.1, whence they would prove, that the Law (given to Adam) was given to them (only) that knew it; namely to Adam and his wife, not to their children which knew it not; whereas the Apostle speaking to the Romans, spake to them that knew the Law; the more to convince them: he denieth not that God gave his Law to Adam and his posterity in his loins. The Lord calleth those things which be not, as though they were, Rom. 4, 17, he spake to Cyrus, and gave him promises, before Cyrus knew him, or was borne into this world,, Esa. 45, 1,—5, he promised the land to Abraham and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child, Act. 7, 5, he made a covenant with Israel, not with them only that stood there that day, but with them also that were not there that day with them, Deut. 29, 14, 15. And if he did thus imply the children with the parents in other covenants & promises: how much more did he the like to Adams seed: seeing Adam is spoken of, not as a particular man, but a general: so that his unrighteousness was not his own only, but his children's also; even as Christ's righteousness (whom Adam figured) was not his own only, but is communicated with all his children, who therefore is the second Adam causing life, as the first Adam caused death, Rom. 5, 1 Cor. 15.

5 Like vanity is in their next words, Infants had then no being, no life, therefore the Law had no dominion over them; For so they might elude Paul's argument of Levies paying tithes, Heb. 7, 9, 10, saying, Levi had then no being, no life, therefore he could pay no tithes in Abraham's days. But as the Apostle saith he was in the loins of Abraham, and so he paid tithes: likewise we were in the loins of Adam, and so we sinned. Again in Rom. 7, 1, the Apostle speaketh of a man during life, who when he is dead, his wife is free from his law, v. 2. If they will apply this to all sin and sinners, then they think when a wicked man dieth, the law of God hath no dominion over him anymore; & so there is no punishment by the law of God to be inflicted on sinners after this life. But do these vain man think by such sophistry to escape the damnation of hell? Do they not know that after death cometh judgment, and that by the law? Heb. 9.27. Rom. 2.12.16.

Against the Apostles doctrine in Rom. 5. they allege, That we were in Adam, not to bring any soul to hell for breach of that command, Thou shalt not eat: for the Lord saith, All souls are mine, both the soul of the father, and the soul of the son: that soul that sinneth it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, &c.

Ans. First the prophet speaketh not in Ezek. 18.4. &c. of Adam, but of the later fathers of the Jews, which sinned, v. 2. but Paul speaketh of Adam, who was not only a particular person (as all other fathers in this case are) but an universal man, the root of all mankind, and a figure of Christ, Rom. 5.14. Again the Prophet speaketh of such sons as are just, and do not such like sins as their fathers did, Ezek. 18.5.14. &c. but Paul speaketh of us all as we are in Adam, unjust and sinners, and guilty of our first fathers iniquity, Rom. 5.12.19. So these two scriptures the one speaking of actual sins which are eschewed, the other speaking of original sin, which we now cannot avoid▪ speak not of one and the same sin or estate, and therefore do not one expound another▪ Thirdly, the Prophet exempteth the good children, which eschew their fathers sinnes, from death, Ezek. 18.9.17. The Apostle enwrappeth us all the sons of Adam in his sin and in death; Rom. 5.12▪14 17. Fourthly, the Prophet speaketh generally of the many sins which the fathers did, and the sons did not, Ezek. 18.6.7.8.18. the Apostle speaketh of that one sin or offense, by which we all (being in Adams loins) are guilty. Rom. 5.16▪ But to this they both agree, the Prophet saith, The soul that sinneth, it shall die, Ezek. 18 4 the Apostle saith, thāt all have sinned (to wit, in Adams loins) therefore death passeth upon all, Rom. 5.▪2, Hereby all wise men may see, how impertinent a proof the Anabaptists bring from Ezek. 18. that Adams sin brings not any soul to hell. For Adams sin bringing sin and death upon all, and hell being the death which is eternal: it is brought by his sin upon all his posterity: except through Iesus Christ our Lord, they have eternal life, which is the gift of God, Rom. 6.23.

Further, they answer, (and desire it may well be observed) that mankind was only in Adam in their bodily substance: he is the father of our bodies in respect of matter; but our form and souls came from God: he is the father of our spirits, Heb. 12.9. Eccles. 12.7. & 8▪8▪ that earthly matter was in Adam, of which our bodies are made, &c. thus and no otherwise were we in Adam.

Answ. We observe it well, and observe their error also. It is untrue that thus (to wit in respect of our bodies only) we were in Adam, and not in respect of our souls: no scripture teacheth them this, but their own fancy. For though our souls were not in all respects in Adam, as our bodies were, to wit, materially: yet in some respect (to wit formally) we were in Adam both body and soul; which I thus manifest. Adam begat Seth in his own image, Gen. 5 Abraham begat Isaac, &c. Math. 1. so body begetteth not body; but man begetteth man: and man consisteth of body and soul, which are the parts that constitute a man. So man (that is the whole, not part of a man on•lie) is said to be borne of a woman, Job. 14.1. yea the 66 souls (whereby figuratively is meant persons, consisting of bodies and souls) are said to come out of Jacob's thigh (or loins) Gen. 46.26. and Levi in the loynes of Abraham is said to pay tithes, Heb 7.9 10. Now the body without the spirit is dead, and therefore cannot pay tithes, nor do any action. And in the place and case in hand, in Adam all sinned, all died, judgment came on all men to condemnation, Rom. 5.12.18. but the body without the soul sinneth not, neither •yeth, nor shall be condemned. Therefore it is apparent that the scripture speaketh of men in Adam otherwise then in respect of their bodies only: so that th•se men's special observation is nothing worth.

Again they plead, As God gave no law to Adam, before he gave him a soul of reason and understanding: no m•re doth he give to any of Adams posterity, a•y law, till he give them souls of reason and understanding, as in Deut. 11.2. I speak not to your children which have neither known nor seen, &c.

Answ. First the words of Moses to Israel to whom he propounded the law, are not to be compared with God's law given to Adam: for the Israelites were spoken to personally: Adam generally as an universal man, the root of all mankind, as before is proved. Secondly, the covenant of Moses law, did also after a sort pertain to their children which then were not, Deut. 29.14.15. though it was actually taught th•m only which were present, D•ut. 11. Thir•lie, the sin which Paul treateth of, and death for sin, was in the world before Moses law, which these men speak of, Rom. 5.12.13.14. Fourthly, let all they say be given them, yet it helps them not: for I have before proved, that we were all in Adam as living men, not as dead corpses▪ and so had souls of •easo• and understanding in him originally; even as we had bodies, eyes, ears; &c. in him originally: though after a different manner as before is noted.

Further they say, God never purposed to execute on Adam for that transgression condemnation to hell; in that he purposed to send Christ betwixt, in whom Adam believing should be saved. If Adam for his own sin was not condemned to hell without remedy, shall any of his posterity be sent to hell without remedy, and that for his sin? &c.

Answ. 1. The question in the first place is changed, which is, whether Adam and all his posterity in him falling from God, deserved not hell for their sin. This they deny not, neither can disprove. 2. As God purposed not to damn Adam for his sin; so neither purposed he to damn Noah for his drunkenness, Lot for his incest, David for his adultery and murder, &c. but to give th•m remedy by faith in Christ. Will they hereupon plead that other actual drunkards, murderers, whoremongers, deserve not damnation: or shall not many such be damned for these sins? 3. Though all infants for their native sin, and all men for their actual sins deserve damnat•on: yet never was it God's purpose to damn all without remedy. For Christ (the second Adam) giveth righteousness and life to all infants and old transgressors that are borne of him; as the first Adam conveyed unrighteousness and death to all his ordinary natural posterity. Yea grace here exceedeth: for the judgment (or guilt) of original sin was by one (offense) to condemnation; but the free gift (by Christ) is of many offenses, unto justification, Rom. 5.16.

They object, that condemnation is for not believing in Christ, John▪ 3•19. & 16 9. Mar. 16.16. Rom. 11.32.

Answ. First th• Apostle saith, the wages of sin is death, Rom. 6.23. therefore the wicked shall be condemned not only for their not believing in Christ, but also for their unmercifulness, idolatries, adulteries and other crimes, Math. 25.41.42. Rom. 2.5.—9. Secondly, the sin of unbelief cleaveth unto all Adams children as other sins: and shall be imputed as well as the sin of lust, or any other iniquity. Thirdly, to believe is not in the will or power of man, but is the gracious gift of God, to such as he hath ordained unto life. Eph. 2 8▪ Act, 13.48.

Again they allege, that Adam by that transgression deprived himself of God's favor in that estate wherein he was in paradise: and notwithstanding the promise of Christ, hath by his sin procured this judgment, Cursed is the earth for thy sake &c Gen. 3. Thus Adam brought himself and all his posterity, the earth and every creature in it to vanity and bondage of corruption, Rom. 8.20. &c. And in this estate are all Adams sons begotten and borne: so that by Adams sin, vanity, corruption and death went over all, &c. So infants have original corruption, as other creatures have. Yet those that die and have corruption by Adams sin, shall not be cast into hell fire.

Answ. A felon, murderer, traitor, that is apprehended by the magistrate, imprisoned, kept in fetters and affliction, his lands and goods confiscate, &c. pleadeth he ought not to be put to death, because he hath suffered for his crimes, loss of liberty, goods, &c. But will this plea save him Even such is the plea of these evil men. For all men being in Adam fallen from God, and traitors to his majesty, children of wrath, & servants of sin and Satan, because God hath cursed the earth for their sake, cast them out of earthly paradise, made the creatures subject to vanity, and themselves subject to sorrows and miseries; therefore they deserve not to die in hell, if these vain men may be judges. But we know the judgment of God is according to truth against all evil doers. He telleth us, the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Christ, Rom. 6.23. where eternal life being opposed to death, showeth that eternal death is the wages due for sin. And what sin is there that deserves not hell? 2. Whereas they say, Adam by his sin deprived himself of paradise: it is true. But if they mean earthly paradise only, they err from the truth: for by his sin he was deprived also of the heavenly paradise, to which there is no restoring but by Christ, Luk. 23.43. Reu. 2.7. and as himself, so all his posterity that sinned in him, Rom. 5. Thirdly, so where they say, all his posterity were subjected to vanity and corruption, it is true; but not all the truth, unless they understand such corruption as Peter speaketh, 2. Pet. 2.12. which is eternal destruction, and then they yield the cause. But they mean not so, but corruption such as is in beasts, birds, &c. wherein they go quite astray. For beasts and other brutish and senseless creatures, are not sinners, as all Adams children are, Rom. 5▪12.19 sin is not but in reasonable creatures only, as Angels and men. Neither is any creature subject to eternal torment, but sinners only. Other creatures when they perish, there is an end of them, and of their misery with them: but they that perish in their sins, have no end of their misery, but it is eternal, Math. 25.46. Mark. 9.45.46. Wherefore they do not well to expound Rom. 5. by Rom. 8 because the Apostle speaketh not of the same, but of divers things and estates in those two chapters. Fourthly, take that which they say, and it overthroweth them. For how should Adams sin bring all his posterity unto death, but by their guilt in Adams sin? If it made not them sinners, the scripture which they formerly alleged, Ezek. 18. teacheth that the children should not die for their fathers sins. Now seeing many infants die daily, it proveth them all to be sinners, because death is the wages of sin, Rom. 6 23. Gen. 2.17.

At length they come to answer Rom. 5. with this perverse doctrine, This is the meaning of the holy Ghost, that by Adams sin, all his posterity have weak natures, Rom. 8.3. by which, when the commandment comes (Rom. 7.10.) they cannot obey and live, but sin and so die; till when they are alive without the law, so saith the Apostle verse. 9. and thus is verified, that all both Jews and Gentiles are under sin, &c. Read on the scripture, and you may evidently see, that neither this, nor any part of God's word, is spoken to or of infants.

Answ. This is not the Apostles meaning: for he saith not they have weak natures, but that all have sinned, and through the offense of one many are dead, many were made sinners; Rom. 5 12.15.19. which is more then weakness of nature, and proneness to sin. Secondly, in Rom. 8.3. it is said, that it (the Law) is weak through the flesh, and so cannot save any man: which words these men wrest, as if it meant Adams children weak. Which thing though it be true, yet is it not that which is spoken of in Rom. 8.3. Thirdly, when the Apostle saith in Rom. 7.9. that he was alive without the law: this contradicteth (according to their sense) the other scripture, in Rom. 5 12. that all have sinned, and are dead. The Apostle in Rom. 5. speaketh of things as they are; in Rom. 7.9, he speaketh of things as they seemed to be, but were not indeed. Paul was alive in his own conceit, thinking himself able to keep the Law, as natural men do suppose they can. But when the commandment came (to wit unto his knowledge and conscience,) then sin revived and he died. How could this be: seeing the commandment is holy, just and good, v. 12 He telleth us in 13 v. that sin wrought death in him by that which was good. So then he was sinful (though he knew it not) before the commandment came; sinful by nature; but not discerning this his woeful state, the Law was given to show it him; for by the law cometh the knowledge of sin, Rom. 3.20. Again, saying in Rom. 7, 11, that sin took occasion by the commandment, deceived him and slew him: he plainly acknowledgeth sin to have been in him, before the commandment came: this he confirmeth in v. 14. saying, the law is spiritual, but I am carnal, sold under sin: Whereupon he applieth the evils which he did, to si•ne dwelling in him, v. 17.20. and this inhabiting or indwelling sin, is that original sin whereof we treat; which Paul for a while could not discern to be in him (as all natural men discern it not, but count it an idle term, and think there is no such thing) till by the Law he came to discern it and to lament it. Fourthly, it is here to be observed how the Anabaptists •grant, all men have weak natures, and cannot obey and live, but sin and die. How cometh this to pass? By Adams sin, say they. Behold here how they thwart their own grounds. They impose a necessity upon all men which (they think) are born innocents, to sin. They cannot but sin, they must needs die: and this not through their own default at all, but by Adams. If we should thus teach, what outcries would they make after us! How is it they here forget the scriptures by themselves forealleged, The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, Ezek. 18.20. Is not this a heavy burden which the sons bear, that their father sinning, and they being innocent, are so weakened of God, that they cannot but sin, they cannot but die? Doth God create an innocent man, and give him charge to do that which is impossible for the man to do, and threaten death unto him for not doing it? We abhor such doctrine as quite overthrowing God's justice. When he made Adam innocent, he gave him no law, but that which was possible & easy for him to do, and to have continued in doing it, if he had would. His justice requireth him to do the like to all his innocent creatures. Wherefore if these men come not to acknowledge with the Apostle (and with us) original sin and death for sin to be in Adams seed, that his fall and disobedience was the fall of us all, by imputation and by infection, (as a serpent brings forth but a serpent) & that so being sinners in him, we have lost our ability to do good, by God's just judgment, & are sold under sin: If they come not (I say) unto this, they will be open enemies to the justice of God, and make the judge of all the world not to do equity. 5. Finally, whereas they say, that neither this nor any part of God's word is spoken to or of infants: they impudently avouch untruth. The Apostle in Rom. 5.14. speaketh of them which sinned after the similitude of Adams transgression, and yet death reigned over them also. What sin can this be but original sin wherein infants are born, and for which many infants die. For when they pass from infancy and come to understanding, they sin actually as Adam did. To sin the same sin they cannot, for all being shut out of paradise, they cannot eat of the forbidden tree, though they would. Neither doth the Apostle speak of that same sin, but of sinning after the similitude of Adams transgression: so it meaneth actual sin, like Adams. Now all sin, is either original or actual. If then death reigneth over them which sin not actually, as Adam did, it must needs reign over them which sin originally only in Adam: and these be infants. For the Anabaptists grant, that when they come to discretion, they sin (and cannot but sin) actually. And thus their next words also are refuted, when they say, Infants are under no law, therefore transgression cannot be imputed unto them, Rom. 4.15. The contrary is thus proved: Infants have transgression imputed unto them, and death for transgression, as the Apostle showeth in Rom. 5. Therefore they are under some law: though not under Moses law which punisheth actual transgressors, yet under Adams law (in whose loins they were and sinned) for which they are punished even with death it self.

In their next words, they condemn themselves and all their vain reasoning, confessing, that Adam fell from the estate wherein he was, and in him all mankind. This is very true, and overthroweth their heresy. For Adams fall, as the Apostle describeth it, was sin, offense, transgression, disobedience, judgment (or guiltiness) to death, and condemnation: Rom. 5.12.—19. Now all mankind fell in him, as Paul teacheth, and these enemies grant: therefore all mankind is in sin, offense, transgression, &c. unto death and condemnation.

Of the remedy for the sin of all (whereof they next speak) we grant that is both for infants and old sinners, by grace in Christ. But these are two several questions: and here we treat of sin only and the merit of it. Of God's grace we have spoken elsewhere.

They proceed and say, that Infants whom Christ so often accounteth innocents, Mat. 18.3, 4, & 19.14. are freed from the law, and so sin is dead in them: but when the commandment comes, then they die in sins and transgressions, &c. Rom. 7.8. Eph. 2.1.

Answ. Innocents may be so called in sundry respects: 1 when in them there is no sin at all; thus Adam in his creation was innocent. 2. When though they be sinners, yet they are not guilty of such sins as men lay to their charge, Exod. 23.7. 2. Sam. 3.28. Ier. 2.34. 3. When they are clear of actual sins: and thus infants may be called innocents, Psal. 106 38 That Christ calleth infants innocents in the first sense, I deny: the scripture also denieth them so to be, Ib. 15.14, & 25.4, John. 3.3.6. Eph. 2.3. I find not in the places which they quote, that Christ called infants innocents: howbeit sometime he calleth his disciples innocents (or guiltless)

Mat▪ 12.7. of whom yet these men (I suppose) will not say, they were without all sin. That infants are freed from the law given to Adam, is denied and disproved by Rom. 5. for in Adam they sinned and died. That sin is dead in them is also disproved: rather they are dead in sin, till they be revived by Christ, Eph. 2.1.3.

Infants (say they) have done neither good nor evil in the flesh therefore Infants shall not appear before Christ, they shall receive no judgement, 2. Cor. 5.10. Rev. 20, 12.13.

Answ. How boldly do these men abuse the scriptures▪ In 2. Cor. 5.10. Paul saith, We must all appear before the judgement seat of Christ. Rev. 20.12. it is said, I saw the dead small & great stand before God. Nay, say these adversaries, not infants. Their reason, because infants have done neither good nor evil in the flesh, is an error before refuted: for though they have not done good or evil actually, as older people; yet in the first Adam they have done evil; and in the second Adam (Christ) they have done well.

Against David's confession of his birth sin in Psal. 51. they thus dispute. If David confess unto God his own sin, then he desireth him in mercy to behold whereof he was made, as Psalm. 103.14. of dust, weak flesh, unable to resist the Tempter: through which weakness he was overcome in these sins: and thus weak flesh is called sinful flesh, (in which Christ came) Rom. 8.1. Christ is said to be made sin, 2. Cor. 5.21. not that he was a sinner: no more David, confessing he was conceived in sin, doth prove that by conception and birth he was a transgressor.

Answ. They pervert both David's words and meaning. He speaketh of sin and iniquity: they speak of weakness only, whereby he fell into sin. What scripture can be so plain, that may not be wrested with such wicked glosses. Against weakness we pray for aid and strength to resist evil: against sin we pray for mercy and forgiveness: and for this David prayeth in Psal. 51.

Secondly, it is another abuse of scripture that they say, weak flesh is called sinful flesh, in which Christ came, Rom. 8.1. where first they make David no more a sinner at his birth, then Christ himself; contrary to the whole tenor of this Psalm, and contrary to Rom. 5. as is before shown. Then they falsify the text in Rom. 8.1.3. for the weakness there spoken of is in the Law, it was weak through the flesh, and so not able to save sinners.

Thirdly, by Flesh there Paul meaneth not the substance of flesh, for that weakeneth not the Law, nor hindereth man's salvation: it is the good creature of God, as is the soul or spirit: but he meaneth by flesh, our corrupt sinful state in soul and body: for he saith in verse 8. they that are in the flesh cannot please God. If flesh mean our bodily substance, then no man living in the body can please God: not the Prophets, not the Apostles, no nor Christ himself, for he lived in our flesh, in our human nature, and the Apostle should speak untruly in the ninth verse, ye are not in the flesh. Wherefore flesh in Rom. 8. signifieth our unregenerate state, as in Genes. 6.3. John 3.6. Rom. 7.18. & 8.5.9.

Fourthly, it is another falsification when they say, sinful flesh in which Christ came: the scripture saith not in sinful flesh, but in the likeness of sinful flesh. Rom. 8.3. Fifthly, weakness or infirmity, as it meaneth not sin, but affliction, such Christ had: such, the Apostle took pleasure, 2 Cor. 12, 10, but infirmity as it meaneth sin, Christ had not: he is opposed herein to the Priests of the Law, which had infirmity or weakness, Heb. 7, 27, 28, and 4, 15, But David in Psal. 51, confesseth such infirmity (if they will have it so called) as was sin and iniquity; which proveth he was a transgressor from the womb, and not without sin as was Christ. 6 Christ is said to be made sin for us, 2 Cor. 5, 21, these words for us the adversaries baulk and omit. David was not made sin for us, or for any: but was himself conceived in sin. Christ being himself no sinner, yet was he made sin, that is a sin-offering for us, to purge us, and make us the righteousness of God in him; for the Sin-offering was usually called sin in the Law, Lev. 4, 3, 8, 14, 20, 24, &c. the Apostle expoundeth it For sin, meaning a sacrifice for sin, Heb. 10, 6, from Psal. 40, thus Christ was a sin, that is a sacrifice for sin: but David was not so. Therefore these places speak not of sin in one and the same sense, but in the contrary. David complaineth of his own sin and guiltiness: Paul speaketh of Christ his purging David and us all from sin and guiltiness, by being made a sin offering for us.

Their former answer being so apparently against the truth, that David acknowledging sin, they will have it no sin, but weakness, they devise to darken the light with another cloud; as if David spake not of his own estate, but his mothers: and then (say they) it is the curse or punishment for sin laid upon her, Gen. 3, 16, where the very words agree with these of David's &c. and it is frequent in Scripture to call punishment for sin by the name of sin, &c. and it is neither David's sin nor his mothers that he here confesseth, to speak properly, but his mothers punishment.

Answ. As a bird in the net, so the more they strive, the more they are entangled. First, the whole scope of the Psalm is, that David might find mercy with the Lord for his own sins, as any that readeth it may see. And that in supplicating to God for grace before and after, he should here insert a complaint of his mothers punishment, is without any color of truth. But this is the meaning, and suitable to his other words, that lamenting his actual transgressions, he bewaileth the evil fountain whence they flowed, to weet, his native corruption, which brought forth these ugly trespasses. Secondly, to let pass how they call God's fatherly chastisement, a curse or punishment; they here again bely the Scripture, in saying, that the very words in Gen. 3.16, agree with these of David's. For neither the word sin, nor iniquity, (both which David useth in Psa. 51.) are to be found in Gen. 3 16, that Od-gos brow may seem to be of brass, who sh•m•th not so often and openly to falsify the text. Thirdly, it is true that sin and iniquity do often improperly mean punishment: but the proper meaning for fault and guiltiness is most frequent: and wh•n it signifieth punishment, the context manifesteth▪ which it doth not here at all: but David before and after bewaileth his sins properly. N•ither is here the phrase of bearing sin and iniquity, which is m•st usual when pun•shment is meant: but of being brought forth in iniquity, and conceived in sin; and they sh•w not a•y o•e place of Scripture where such a phrase signifieth punishment. Fourthly, as neither sin nor iniquity are used in Gen. 3, 16, so the word conception there agreeth not, but differeth from the conceiving that David speaketh of in Psal 51, and the difference of the words plainly discovereth these men's ignorance and error. For in Gen. 3, 16, Seron is conception with sorrow, during the time that the mother goeth with child: but in Psal. 51. jacham signifieth conceiving with pleasure; for the word properly signifieth to be warm or inflamed with desire, as in the act of generation, not of men only, but of cattle also, as in Gen. 30, 38, 39, 41. Now nature both of man and beast teacheth all, that such conceiving is with delight, not with pain, and therefore David using such a word when he telleth how his mother conceived him, cannot (in any reasonable man's understanding) mean his mothers corporal pains or punis•meant, as these corrupters of the Scripture do feign.

They proceed and say, that David did not sin in being conceived and borne: the soul is the subject of sin, for from the soul or heart cometh wickedness, Mat. 15, 19. The soul comes from God, the matter of the body from the parents: the soul is very good coming from God, the body hath not sinned till it be infected with the soul by transgression of a law: and seeing th•y •ffirme that the very matter or substance whereof David was made was sin, and that this is it he confesseth in Psal. 51, observe what will follow •f this their dream. The matter whereof all th• sons of Adam are made is sin: but Chr•st, one of the sons of Adam after the fl•sh was made of that matter; therefore the matter or su•stance of Christ's body was sin. If it be wicked, to say Christ was a sinner because he was conceived of his mothers su•stance, as it is: so it is no less wicked to say, David was a sinner because he was conceived of his mothers substance: seeing the substance of both the mothers was one and the same.

Answ. It is even a wonder to b•hold how these men pervert, err and slander, as if they had sold themselves to work iniquity. We teach not, (as the perversely speak) that David sinned in being conceived and borne; for these being the works of God and nature, are good. But David was a sinner, because he was conceived and borne in sin, as himself confesseth. 2 They err, in saying, the soul is the subject of sin: for neither the soul alone, nor the body alone, but the whole man (which differeth from both, and consisteth of both,) he is the subject of sin. Neither doth the body without the soul, nor the soul without the body commit sin: but the man whiles the soul is in the body, sinneth, 2 Cor. 5, 10 and as the soul was not created but in the body, Zach. 12, 1, so when it departeth from the body, it sinneth no more, but goeth for judgment, Heb. 9, 27, Eccles. 9, 5, 6, 10. 3 Whereas they allege, that wickedness• is from the heart, Mat. 15, 19, it is spoken of living men consisting of soul and body: Madness (as Solomon saith) is in their heart while they live, and after that (they go) to the dead; Eccles 9, 3. And where they say, the soul comes from God, the matter of the body from the parents; they lay not down the truth fully. For though the soul is created of God, and is not materially from the parents as the body; yet the parents give occasion to infuse the soul, (for without corporal generation no soul is created,) and so the soul may in some sort be said to have the beginning from Adam, though not of any matter from him. The essence of is of God; the subsistence of it is from the parents, from whom it hath the manner of subsisting in the body. 4 Though the soul as it is created of God is very good, (as the body also respected naturally is good) yet they err in saying, the body sinneth not till it be infeted with the soul by transgression of a law; whereby they mean actual transgression after it knows the law. For first, it is not the body, but the man (of body and soul) that sinneth as before is shown. Secondly, the body is not infected with the soul, but both body and soul are infected with sin, to wit, that inbred and inhabiting sin which came from Adam, as before is proved from Rom. 5. And this sin man hath, both by imputation and inherence, before he actually transgresseth the law, Rom. 5.14, Psal. 51, for that which is borne of the flesh is fl•sh, John. 3.6.5. They notoriously sl•nder us, that we should affirm the very matter or substance whereof David was made, to be sin: We affirm no such thing. The matter or substance we say is good, as every creature of God is. Sin is an evil accident cleaving to the substance, to the body and soul of man. Of like falsehood it is, that we should affirm David to confess in Psal, 51. that the substance whereof he was made was sin. Neither David nor we ever so spake. So the Argument which by consequence they frame touching the substance of Christ's body, that it should be sin, is frivolous, collected from a fiction of their idle heads. For if no man's substance be sin (as we firmly hold) much less Christ's.

After this, they cast a stumbling block in the way, and would have us show how infants that have sinned, and are under condemnation of hell, can be reconciled to God but only by faith in Christ Jesus: and if they cannot but by repentance and faith, then are they all left under condemnation, not for any law that they have broken, but for their father Adams sin.

Answ. That all have sinned, and are under condemnation, is proved by the Apostle, Rom. 5, 12, 18, how infants can be reconciled to God, he also teacheth, namely through the gift by grace, by one man Jesus Christ, Rom. 5, 15, 18. The manner if it be shown, I fear these men will not receive it: for they that have so kicked against the pricks touching all men's fall and sin in Adam; how should they receive the doctrine of restauration by Christ. Howbeit I will endeavor to show it, if it do no good to them, it may to others. 1 The faith and repentance which they require in infants, namely actual, is not to be found: as such actual sins are not found in them, as are in older men. The one of these exemplifieth the other, as the first Adam figured the second, Rom. 5, 14. By the first Adam we have sin, Rom. 5, 12, offense, v. 15, disobedience, v. 19, judgement, v. 16, death, v. 14, condemnation, v. 16. By the second Adam (Christ) we have grace, & the gift by grace, v. 15, the gift of righteousness, v. 17, the free gift to justification, v. 16, even to justification of life, v. 18. By the first Adam we have three evils, 1 imputation of his sin: 2 corruption of our nature: 3 guiltiness of death temporary and eternal. By the second Adam we have three opposite good things; 1 imputation of his righteousness, 2 regeneration (or renewing) of our nature, 3 and deliverance from death temporary and eternal. As the corruption or viciousness that we have by Adam, is in the bud or spring, in the beginning (not in the full growth,) and inclineth us to all actual sins: so the regeneration we have by Christ, is in the spring and beginnings thereof when we are infants, and inclineth us to actual faith and obedience. And thus repentance and faith are in Christian infants in their bud or beginning, inclinatively: even as impenitence and unbelief are in Adams infants, in their beginning, and by inclination. If any man ask with Nicodemus, how can these things be? Let him consider, that as he knoweth not the way of the wind, or of the spirit, or how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child, even so he knoweth not the works of God, who maketh all; Job. 3, Eccles. 11, 5.

Lastly, to the many examples of God's judgments upon infants, as at Noes flood, the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah, &c. they answer, though they had bodily death for the sins of their parents; yet they perished not with the wicked in hell. For of this (bodily death) other unreasonable creatures, as well as infants, have always had their portions. All flesh must die, and death is loss to none but to the wicked: to the godly and innocent, death and all afflictions of this life, are not worthy of the glory that shall be shown.

Answ. 1 In that they grant, Infants have bodily death for their parents sins, they contradict their own plea before from Ezek. 18•20, the soul that sinneth it shall die: the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father &c. for there the Prophet speaketh even of bodily death and miseries in this world, whereof the Jews complained. And unless they confess, that infants are sinners in their parents, they cannot maintain the justice of God for killing infants, and that oftentimes with strange and horrible deaths. And if they grant that infants are sinners, they cannot with any truth deny but hell is their due, unless they be redeemed by Christ. And by infants death, we certainly conclude that they are sinners, from the Apostles ground in Rom. 5, 12, 14, & 6, 23. and that for their sin they may and shall be cast into hell (unless Christ save them) is evident by Christ's doctrine, in John. 3, 3, Except a man be borne again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God. And that infants are there implied, is plain, because an infant is borne a man, as Christ speaketh John 16, 21, and being borne a sinner, Psal. 51, Rom. 5, must be borne again of the Spirit, or else shall not see the kingdom of God. If it see not God's kingdom, it shall see the devils prison; for a Limbus or third place will nowhere be found. And how these men can exempt wicked infants from hell, otherwise then by their own fancies I know not: •he Apostles taught no such doctrine, when without exception of infants, they call the old world that perished, the world of the ungodly, 2 Pet. 2, 5, and reckon none saved but Noah and his house, Heb. 11, 7, 1 Pet. 3▪ 20, 21, and tell us that Sodom, Gomorrhah, and the Cities about them, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude v▪ 7. But these presumptuous men will control the judgments of God, and tell us that which no Prophet or Apostle ever taught, that all the infants in those cities suffer no such vengeance: yea, though God himself promised that if but ten righteous had been found in Sodom (wherein were many times ten infants) he would not have destroy'd the city for ten's sake, Gen. 18, 32. 2 The reason which they would ground upon, because other unreasonable creatures as well as infants have always had their portions in bodily death; this reason is brutish, and beseemeth not men. For no unreasonable creature is a sinner, as all men in Adam are sinners: no unreasonable creature hath a soul immortal infused of God, as all mankind hath: no brute beast shall be raised from the dead, as all men shall, both old and young, to life or death eternal. And when a beast dieth it hath an end both of welfare and misery, so hath none of Adams children. What comparison then is there between men and beasts? Where they say, death is loss to none but to the wicked; it is true. And hereupon it followeth that seeing infants are wicked, (as is formerly proved) until they be made righteous by Christ, and borne again; death is a loss unto them; and a gain to those only (whether old or young) which are made partakers of the grace and gift of righteousness, by one Jesus Christ, Rom. 5, 12, — 17.

Of Baptizing Infants.

AGAINST baptizing of Infants the adversaries first lay this ground, Baptism pertaineth only to them that declare their repentance and faith to those Disciples of Christ that baptize them. This appeareth by John Baptists doctrine and practice, Mar. 1, 4, Mat. 3, 6, and Christ's disciples, Joh. 4, 1 & 3 22, by Christ's commission for all nations, Mat, 28, 19, Mar. 16.16, by the Apostles practice, Act. 2, 38, 41 & 8, 12, 36 &c.

Answ. That baptism pertaineth to such as declare their repentance and faith, is true; and the Scriptures alleged prove it. But that it pertaineth to such only, is untrue: and none of the Scriptures which they bring, do so teach The infants of the Church, which cannot declare repentance or faith, are also to be baptized, as after shall be manifested.

That the practice taught by the foresaid Scriptures, is to be perpetual; we grant: and they needed not have taken pains to prove it.

Infants (say they) may not be baptized, because there is neither commandment, example, nor true consequence for it, in all Christ's perfect Testament, &c.

Answ, This we deny: commandment there is for it in Math. 28, and Mark 16, & necessary consequences from many Scriptures confirm it; as shall be proved.

Baptism (they say) is in that a good conscience maketh request unto God, 1 Pet. 3.21, it is of repentance for remission of sins, Mar. 1. the washing of the new birth, Tit. 3, 5 &c. If it cannot be proved by the Scriptures that infants have their hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, have repentance, faith &c. they ought not to be baptized.

Answ. Their argument hath only a show, no substance of truth. For first a man might frame as good a reason thus: Circumcision is not that which is outward in the flesh, but that of the heart, in the spirit, Rom. 2, 28, 29, it is the putting off of the body of the sins of the flesh, Coloss. 2.11, it sealeth the righteousness of faith which they have, Rom. 4.11, and the circumcising of the fo-skin of the heart, Deut. 10 16, to love the Lord &c. Deut. 30.6. Now if it cannot be proved by Scripture that infants have the love of God in their hearts, the righteousness of faith, the putting off of the body of sin &c. they may not be circumcised, and the circumcising is nothing. If this be not a good argument to keep children from circumcision, the other is no better to keep them from Baptism. Secondly, Christian infants have the graces they speak of, repentance, faith, regeneration &c, though not actually, or by way of declaration to others; yet they have through the work of the Spirit, the seed and beginning of faith, virtually and by way of inclination; so that they are not wholly destitute of faith, regeneration &c. though it be a thing hid and unknown unto us after what manner the Lord worketh these in them, Eccles. 11, 5. Which I further prove thus. If infants naturally are some ways capable of Adams sin, and so of unbelief, disobedience, transgression &c. then Christian infants supernaturally and by grace, are some ways capable of Christ's righteousness, and so of faith, obedience, sanctification &c. But infants are capable of the former evils by Adam: therefore they are capable of the latter good things by Christ. That they are capable of the former, is before proved (where we treated of original sin) by Rom 5, Psal. 5 1, John. 3, and many Scriptures. The consequence, that therefore they are capable of the latter also, is wit of Christian graces, is thus manifested. 1 Because the first Adam was a figure of the second Adam Christ, so that as the sin of the first Adam, his fault, disobedience, and death for it came on all his children, both by imputation and infection or corruption of nature: so the righteousness and obedience of Christ cometh on all his children, both by imputation and renewing of nature, unto life and salvation, as the Apostle compareth them, Rom. 5.12.15.16.17.18.19.21. 2 Because infants being by Adam sinners, children of wrath &c. must be borne again of the spirits, or else they cannot see the Kingdom of God, John. 3, 3.5.6. But the Christian infants dying in infancy shall see the Kingdom of God, and not be damned (as the adversaries grant) therefore by Christ's doctrine they are borne again of the spirit: and so must needs in some measure have repentance, faith, holiness, without which there is no regeneration. Again, that infants have the faith and love of God in them, and regeneration in their measure is thus proved. They to whom God giveth the sign and seal of righteousness by faith, and of regeneration, they have faith and regeneration: for God giveth no lying sign, he sealeth no vain or false covenants. But God gave to infants circumcision, which was the sign and seal of the righteousness of faith and regeneration, Gen 17.12, Rom. 4.11 & 2.28.29, Coloss. 2.11. Therefore infants had (& consequently now have) faith & regeneration, though not in the crop or harvest by declaration, yet in the bud and beginnings of all Christian graces. They that deny this reason, must either make God the author of a lying sign and seal of the covenant to Abraham and his infants: or they must hold that infants had those graces then, but not now: both which are wicked and absurd to affirm. Or they must say, that circumcision was not the sign and seal of the righteousness of faith, and then they openly contradict the Scripture, Rom. 4.11.

Moreover, as the Apostle in Rom. 5, compareth our natural estate in Adam, and our spiritual estate in Christ, so may we in this case. If we cannot justly object against God's work in nature, but do believe that our infants are reasonable creatures, and are borne not brute beasts but men, though actually they can manifest no reason or understanding more than beasts, (yea a young lamb knoweth and discerneth his damn sooner than an infant knoweth his mother:) then neither can we justly object against God's work in grace, but are to believe that our infants are sanctified creatures, and are borne believers not infidels, though outwardly they can manifest no faith or sanctification unto us. And, why should it be thought incredible that God should work faith in infants? If because we know not or perceive not how it can be: let us consider, that we know not the way of our natural birth, and other earthly things Eccles. 11 5. John. 3, 8, how then can we know heavenly things? If we make question of the power of God; nothing is impossible with him. He made all things of nothing; he can make the dumb beast speak with man's voice, Numb. 22, he can make the babe in the mother's womb, to be affected and leap for joy, at the voice of words spoken to the mother, Luk. 1.44, and can he not also work grace, faith, holiness in infants? Hath Satan power by sin to infect and corrupt infants (as is before proved,) and shall not God have power to cleanse from corruption, and make them holy? If we make doubt of the will of God herein, behold we have his promises to restore our losses in Adam, by his graces in Christ, as he sheweth in Rom 5, that he will circumcise our heart, and the heart of our seed to love him, Deu. 30 6, we have the seal of his promise, in giving circumcision to infants, to signify and seal the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4.11, Gen. 17. And we have assurance of all his promises, and of that to Abraham & his seed in particular, to be confirmed unto us (not abrogated or lessened) by Christ, 2 Cor. 1.20, Luk. 1.72.73 &c. Gal. 3.14 &c. Wherefore they are but a faithless and crooked generation, that notwithstanding all that God hath spoken and done in this kind, do deny this grace of Christ to the infants of his people, and the seal or confirmation of this grace by baptism now, as it was by circumcision of old.

But they proceed to plead against the truth thus, Regeneration is a turning from sin to God, Rev. 6.11. 1 Thes. 1.9. Tit 4.5 Repentance is a sight and knowing of sin by the law a confessing and sorrow for sin, &c. Faith is the ground of things hoped for, &c. Heb. 11.1. and is accompanied with obedience, I am. 2. Let them either now prove, that infants are turned from sin, see, know, confess and sorrow for it, believe the promises of God, &c. or they say nothing.

Answ. They reason ignorantly and perversely, not only against the light of God's word, but of nature. As if some brutish person should plead thus. A man is a living creature that hath a reasonable soul; and the proper affections of a man as he is a man, are the faculty of understanding, of thinking, capableness of learning, of remembering, faculty of reasoning, of judging and discerning true and false, good and evil, of approving and improving, of willing & nilling, of speaking, of numbering, &c. Now let them which affirm that infants are borne men (as Christ doth in John. 16.21.) prove that infants do understand, do think, remember, judge, discern good and evil, approve, will, speak, &c. or else they say nothing. Were not such a disputer worthy to be laughed and hissed at? who requireth the actual use and manifestation of human affections and faculties in infants; which are in them but potentially & in the seed and beginning: and because they cannot declare these things by their works, therefore he denieth them to be of the generation of mankind, or borne men into the world: or that they have the faculties of men at all in them any manner of way? Even such is the argumentation of these erroneous spirits against the truth of religion. For as before they reasoned against the sin, transgression, and condemnation of Infants, (contrary to Paul's doctrine in Rom. 5) because infants actually understand not the law, nor transgress against it; and will not consider how they are sinners originally in Adam: so now also they reason against the grace of Christ in infants, and his work of regeneration in them; because they cannot outwardly manifest the effects of regeneration or fruits of faith, (such as the scriptures that they allege do require in older persons) & will not understand that these graces are in them through Christ and his spirit, but in the beginnings only (as I have formerly proved) and are not in them as in those of full age, who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. And here I desire to know of the Anabaptists in their next writings about these matters; first when they think that children (who in their opinion are borne without any sin) begin to be sinners, whether at 2.3.5.7. or other years: and when they can justly reprove a child for sin, if it show in word, deed, or gesture anything contrary to the law of God, as if it swear, curse, lie, disobey parents, take another's goods, be froward, angry, or the like. Yea let any of them tell me (if he can) when he himself first fell from his innocence and became a sinner, being none before; by what act or transgression of what commandment. It is strange that an innocent man should fall from his innocence, and not know when and how. Secondly let them say, whether every child so soon as it beginneth to be a sinner, hath not remedy for the sin by Christ; and so whether it be not capable of repentance, faith, regeneration, &c. and consequently of baptism, so soon as it is a sinner. Thirdly, seeing they insist so much on the perfection of the ordinances of the New Testament, as of the old, (which thing I willingly grant) I desire to know whether (as God appointed the eighth day for the circumcising of a child after it was borne,) Christ hath appointed any day, month or year for a child to be baptized after it is borne. If they say none, but when the child can manifest repentance and faith: then what manifestation hath Christ prescribed, whether if the child say it repenteth him, & he believeth, it is enough, or what rules and ordinances Christ hath given, by which we may certainly know that now (and not before or after) a child is to receive baptism, as a repentant and believing sinner: and let them tell us at what age of their children they or any of them hath first baptized his child unto remission of sins. These things are needful to be known, that we may walk by rule; and being not yet signified (to my knowledge) in any of their writings, I desire for my information, and for the better clearing of these controversies, that they would set down their doctrine touching these points. For it is required of all parents to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, Eph. 6.4. this they cannot do aright, unless they know when first they begin to sin, and consequently when first they begin to believe. If they blame a child for sin whiles it is an innocent, they commit iniquity: if they keep a child from Christ and Christian baptism when it is a repentant & believing sinner (which may be so soon as it is a sinner) they wrong their child most sinfully, to condemn that which Christ justifieth. These things are worthy of serious consideration both in respect of our children's estate, and of our own.

And now ere I proceed further to answer their cavils, I will show two commandments for the baptising of infants: the one given of old to our fathers, the other given by Christ.

1. That which was once commanded of God, and never by him called back, is now still to be done; as it is written, What thing soever I command you, observe to do it, Deut. 12.32. But God commanded the outward seal of his covenant of grace to be given to the infants of his people, as in Gen. 17.12.13. He that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, &c. and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant. And this commandment touching the substance of it, and outward sealing of the covenant, hath never by him been abrogated. Therefore it is still to be continued, and our infants (by virtue of that commandment) are to have the seal of God's covenant.

The common objection that this proof is not from Christ's testament, but from Moses writings, is of no weight. For Moses wrote of Christ, John. 5.46. The Apostles said none other things then those which the Prophets and Moses did say should come, Act. 26.22. Christ came not to destroy the law or the Prophets, but to fulfill. Math. 5.17. Paul proveth our justification by faith in Christ from Abraham's example written by Moses, as written not for his sake alone, but for us, Rom. 4.3 — 24. Therefore the example of Abraham's infants circumcised, is written for us also. To manifest this reason more fully, I lay down these particulars, 1. That the covenant then made with Abraham was the covenant of the Gospel, which we now have. 2 That circumcision the seal of the covenant then, and baptism the seal of the covenant now, are one and the same in substance. The first is proved thus, Paul saith, The Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, In thee shall all nations be blessed, Gal. 3.8. Again, when circumcision was instituted, the covenant was, Thou shalt be a father of many nations, &c. Gen. 17.4.5. this promise (as belonging to the faith of Christ) is applied to our state under the Gospel, Rom. 4.13.16.17. and is by Paul there opposed to the Law. Moreover the covenant with Abraham was, that the Lord would be a God to him and to his seed after him, Gen. 17.7. this promise implieth blessedness to him and them; for Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, Psal. 33.12. and this blessedness cometh on none by the Law, Rom. 4.15. Gal. 3.10.11.12. and that he should be a God unto us, and we his people, is the sum of the Gospel, Heb. 8•10 2. Cor. 6.16. Reu. 21.3. The difference between the fathers and us, is, that they had the Gospel in promise; we have the same Gospel in performance, Luk. 1.69.70, 72.73. &c. Act. 13.32.33. & 26 6. They believed in Christ that was to come; We believe in Christ who is come: Their faith and ours is one in substance, Heb. 11. Gal. 3.9. That circumcision and baptism are also one in substance (though differing in outward sign) is thus manifested. Circumcision was the sign of faith and holiness, Rom. 4.11. & 2.29. Col. 2.11 Deut. 10•16. Baptism is the sign of faith and holiness, Act. 8.37.38• Rom. 6.3.4• &c. Circumcision was the first sign and seal of entering into the covenant: Baptism is so now. We now being buried with Christ in baptism, are said to be circumcised in him, Coloss. 2.11.12. which plainly manifesteth them to be one and the same: even as their other sacramental signs, are said to be the same that we now have, in respect of the things signified, 1. Cor. 10.1.2.3.4. 1 Cor. 5.7.8. Forasmuch then as the covenant with Abrahah• and with us, and the seal of the covenant then and now, are one in substance: it followeth, that the commandment then to give infants the seal of the covenant, being never repealed, bindeth us to give them the seal of the covenant at this day. The exceptions which the adversaries make of the difference between circumcision and baptism, shall be answered after in their place.

2 The second commandment for baptising of infants, is in Mark. 16.15. Go preach the Gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved. Math. 28.19. Go teach all nations, baptising them, &c. In this commission of Christ are two things, the preaching of the Gospel to every creature, to all nations; and the sealing of the same by baptism. The Gospel belonged to infants, & they are necessarily implied in the first: therefore baptism belonged to infants, and they are as necessarily implied in the later. Christ biddeth them proclaim or preach the Gospel: but what the Gospel is, is not here declared, we must gather it from other scriptures. The Gospel (or Evangelie) is the glad tidings or joyful declaration that the promise which was made unto the Fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children: the promise, (I say) concerning Christ, and the redemption of the world by him, as these scriptures teach, Act. 13.32.33. Luk. 1.54.55.69.70.71.72.73. &c. Act. 2.38.39. & 26.22.23. Luk. 4.18 — 21. So the Gospel (which is the good tidings of the fulfilling of the promise) is as large as the promise was: whereupon, not in the forementioned scriptures only, but in many other places, the Apostles refer the Gospel to the promise (or promises) made of old, as, It is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed: Rom. 4.16. and Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise, Gal. 4.28. and, Christ was a minister of the circumcision, for the truth of God, to confirm the promises (made) unto the fathers: and that the Gentiles might glorify God for mercy, Rom. 15.8.9. and, That the promise by faith of Jesus Christ, might be given to them that believe, Gal. 3.22. and, Paul an Apostle, &c. according to the promise of life, which is in Christ Jesus, 2. Tim. 1.1. and many the like. Not in general only, but the particular promises at several times, are shown to be accomplished in the Gospel; as the promise to Adam, Rom. 16 20. from Gen. 3.15. to Abraham, Luk. 1.55.73. Rom. 4.16.17.18. to David, Luk. 1.69.70. Act. 2•30 31. to Israel by Moses, Samuel, and other Prophets, Act. 3.22.24•25 Luk. 1.70. so that all the promises of God are yea and Amen in Christ, 2. Cor. 1.20.

And for the point in controversy, the promise of grace and salvation to Abraham and to his seed, Gen. 17.7. is by the Gospel shown to be confirmed, Luk. 1.55. Act. 2.38•39. Gal. 3.14.16.29. But the promise to Abraham's seed implied his infants, Gen. 17, 7, 10, 12, therefore the Gospel (which is the complement of that promise) implieth our infants: and so the Apostle saith, the promise is to you and to your children, Act. 2.39. And the sign and seal of the promise was given to Abraham's children in infancy, Gen. 17, 10, 12. therefore it belongeth to our children in their infancy: and we are said to be the children of promise as Isaac was▪ Gal. 4.28▪ But Isaac was the child of promise in his infancy, and had then the seal of the promise in his infancy, when he was but eight days old, Act, 7, 8, wherefore we also in our infancy are children of the promise, and have right to the seal of the covenant even then, or else we are not as Isaac was. And thus Christ commanding the Gospel to be preached, commanded the fulfilling of the promises to be preached, even all and everyone of the promises, without excepting any: and so commanded the promise of grace, and accomplishment of it to the seed of the faithful even in their infancy to be preached. Likewise commanding the seal of the covenant to be applied unto all within the promise, as freely and generally now as ever it was of old, not excepting infants: he commanded infants to be sealed by baptism, as they were sealed before by circumcision. And seeing all believers are by his commission to be baptized: the infants of the Church being believers (in respect of the beginning of faith, though not actually) as I have formerly proved, they are also to be baptized by virtue of Christ's commission, Mark. 16. Math. 28. that so the promises unto the fathers may be confirmed, and the Gentiles (as well as the circumcision, that is, the Jews) may glorify God for his mercy, Rom. 15.8•9.

Now I will proceed to answer their exceptions; beginning first with this about circumcision, and the covenant with Abraham.

1 There was a commandment for circumcision, Gen. 17. there is none for baptism of infants.

Answ. This is before disproved, and a commandment shown Mark. 16. For the sealing of the seed of the faithful in infancy, was a part of the Gospel; seeing the Gospel is the fulfilling of the covenant and promise made to the fathers, and to Abraham in special, Act. 13 32, 33. Luk. 1.55.73. If it be objected, that baptising of infants is not there particularly expressed: I answer, neither are other parts of the Gospel particularly expressed there: but the Gospel in general being to be proclaimed, all parts of the Gospel (whereof sealing the infants is one) are necessarily implied. Note also that things are taught & commanded sometime in scripture, though not in express words: as the trinity of persons in the unity of the Godhead, the resurrection of the dead (as Christ proveth) was taught in Exod. 3. Eternal life in heaven, and eternal death in hell are not expressed in Moses law: nor that they should have Synagogues in every city for the people to meet on the Sabbath. Neither in the new testament is it taught in express words, that Christ is coessential, coequal, coeternal with the father: or, that his death and obedience is the merit of our righteousness, or satisfaction for our sins: nor expressly commanded that women should receive the Lord's supper, nor example that any did: with sundry other things which though they be not expressed in plain words, yet are they soundly to be proved by arguments from the scripture.

2 That commandment included males only, children or servant though unbelievers, and excluded all females, though believers so doth not baptism.

Ans. 1 It is untruly said that servants unbelieve were to be circumcised: they feign this, the scripture teacheth them not so, but the contrary. For circumcision was the seal of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4, 11, and should it be set upon unbelievers, which had no righteousness▪ no faith? So God should be made the author of a false and lying seal: to signify and to assure the things which were not. Again, every circumcised person was to eat the Passover, and had all other privileges of Israel's law, Exod. 12, 48, 49. the Passover signified Christ, and the eating of it life by Christ, 1 Cor. 5.7.8. John. 6.57. But no unbeliever had these benefits. And if unbelievers and Israelites had communion together in circumcision, passover, and other holy things, then was the Church of Israel no communion of Saints, but a mixture with all sorts of infidels, whosoever would, contrary to Exod. 19, 5.6. Levite. 19, 2, & 20, 7. Deut. 14 •, 2, & 26.18, 19, Levite. 20, 26, 1 King. 8.53. Though females (wanting that part of the body) were not outwardly circumcised, for that foreskin which was not, could not be cut off: yet may we not say they were excluded, for then they might not have eaten the passover, Exod. 12.48. They were within the covenant (Deut. 29, 10, 11, 12) and implied in the males. As the men had that sign of purification (according to the nature of the male) which women had not▪ so women had another kind of purification (according to the nature of the female) which men had not, Levite. 12. Each •x had their portion in the things that figured their redemption by Christ, according to their several natures. Therefore when the outward sign was changed from circumcising to baptising, whereof the female is as capable as the male; both sexes are baptized, Act. 8.12. So infants now are as capable of baptism, as they were of circumcision, there is nothing therefore to debar th•m from it.

3 The law required circumcision to be performed on the eight d•y: so doth not the law of baptism.

Ans. What of this? the law of baptism appointeth no day at all for any: shall none therefore be at all baptized? The law required the Passover to be kept on the 14 day of the first month, Exod. 12 The law of Christ appointeth no day when to eat the Lord's supper: yet it is the same in substance that the Passover was, 1 Cor. 5.7, 8, so baptism is the same in substance that circumcision was, Coloss. 2.11, 12. and as all may now eat the Lord's supper, which might then eat the Pascha: so all may now be baptized, which then were circumcised.

4 But when faith is manifested, then is baptism to be performed.

Ans. Th•y mean by manifestation, profession with mouth; and by then they mean not before that time. This is denied, and formerly disproved, and they have no one word of God to confirm their doctrine. 2 Though infants manifest no faith by their own mouth, yet the mouth of God manifests them to have faith in the beginning or feed thereof, because he testifieth them to be holy, 1 Cor. 7, 14, which is not without faith: and testifieth them to have grace and righteousness by Christ, answerable to the corruption and unrighteousness which they have by Adam, Rom. 5. as is before declared.

Again they say, Neither circumcision nor baptism are seals of the covenant of life and salvation: that which is now the seal, was ever the same, which is the holy spirit of promise, 2 Cor. 1, 22, Ephes. 1, 13, & 4.30.

Ans. A bold untruth contradicting the Apostle, who calleth the sign of circumcision, the seal of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4.1. and righteousness of faith is life and salvation, Gal. 3.11. Ephes. 2.8. and the covenant which circumcision sealed, was that the Lord would be their God, Gen. 17.7.10. and so he would give them life and salvation, Reu 21.3.4. Whereas they except, The Spirit is the scale: it is true; but they should observe that it is an invisible seal in the heart; whereas Paul speaketh of an outward visible seal, which is also a sign, and on the body. Again, the covenant may have more seals then one: so that if the Spirit were an outward seal, yet might circumcision be a seal also of the same thing. Moses calleth circumcision a sign or token, Gen. 17.11, but he nowhere calleth it a seal yet Paul calleth it a seal, because in truth it was so, and more then a bare sign. For a sign is to make some other thing known unto us, as the doole-stone or land mark is for distinction of grounds: or it is further to put us in mind of things formerly done, as the stones at Gilgal were for a memorial to Israel how their Fathers passed through Jordan, Joshua. 4.20.21.22. But a seal goeth yet further, and certifieth or assureth of any promise or gift. Now because circumcision was such a sign as assured unto Abraham his righteousness by faith in Christ the promised seed: therefore the Apostle rightly calleth it a seal. Upon which ground we also rightly call the Passover, Baptism, and our Lord's Supper Seals, because they are such signs as certify and assure us of forgiveness of sins, and of righteousness and salvation by Christ. And from this we have a most certain ground for the baptism of infants: because baptism is no more now, then circumcision was of old, namely a sign and seal of righteousness by faith. And if infants had such a seal under the promise of the Gospel: how should it with any color be denied now under the performance of that promise? unless we will say, Christ hath not confirmed the promises made unto the fathers, contrary to Rom. 15.8. 2 Cor. 1.20.

Further they say, There is but two covenants, the Law and the Gospel, the Old and the New, Gal. 4. The old Covenant, the Law, was made with the children of Abraham after the flesh, and had circumcision in their flesh for a sign thereof. The new covenant the Gospel, is not made but with the one seed, Gal. 3.16. that are of the faith of Abraham. The children of the flesh are not they to whom this covenant is made, Rom. 9.8 the children of the flesh must be but out, &c. Gal. 4.30. so that the covenant with Abraham and his children after the flesh, was not the covenant of life and salvation; it was the covenant of work, of the Law. &c.

Ans. In this their plea, there is a little truth, but much error and delusion. It is true, there were but two Covenants, the Law and the Gospel. There is sophistry and delusion in their saying the covenant of the law was with the children of Abraham after the flesh: for as after the flesh meaneth natural generation, so Isaac, Jacob, and all the Israelites, even Christ himself was Abraham's child after the flesh, Math. 1.1. Rom. 1.3. & 9.3.4.5. yet were not they aliens from the covenant of the Gospel. But as the flesh meaneth corruption of nature, Rom. 8.1.8.9. and as men have no other generation of the Spirit, but of the flesh, John 3. verse. 5.6. in this sense it is true, that the children of the flesh are not the children of God, Rom. 9.8.

and they are under the Law, not under the Gospel. But this is nothing against the truth we maintain. For Isaac who was Abraham's seed after the flesh in the first sense, but after the Spirit, and by promise in the second sense, he was circumcised in his infancy, Now all the Christian Church are as Isaac, children of the promise, Gal. 4.28, and our infants though by nature (as it is corrupted) they be children of wrath, Ephes. 2, yet by promise and grace in Christ, they are children of God, Rom. 5, and therefore are to have the seal of the covenant of grace in infancy, as Isaac had; even as by Abraham's justification, the Apostle proveth the justification of us all, Rom. 4.3.22.23.24.

Error it is that they say, Abraham's children had circumcision in the flesh for a sign of the old covenant or Law For first, the Law was given by Moses, Job 1.7. many years after Abraham, and could not disannul the covenant with Abraham, or make the promise of none effect, as the Apostle plainly teacheth us Gal. 3.17. Christ also saith, Circumcision was not of Moses, but of the fathers, Job. 7.22. Secondly, the covenant which circumcision sealed, was that the Lord would be a God to Abraham and his seed, Gen. 17.7.10, this was the covenant of the Gospel, Heb. 8.8 10, Rev. 2 1.3. Thirdly, Circumcision was the seal of righteousness of faith, Rom. 4 11, but the Law is not of faith, Gal. 3.11.12, therefore circumcision was a seal of the Gospel promised, a seal of the covenant of grace.

Whereas they say, the new covenant is not made but with the one seed, Gal. 3.16, it is true, & maketh against them: for that one seed, is there shown to be Christ: not Christ in his own person only, but Christ with his Church, which make one mystical body, 1 Cor. 12.12. Eph. 5.30.31.32. Now the infants of the Church, are by the covenant of grace of the body of Christ, even as by nature they are of the body and stock of Adam, as before (in the treaty of Original sin;) we have proved by Rom. 5, so that the new covenant is made with them also, and therefore the seal of that covenant is due unto them now, as it was in Abraham's days.

Next this, they go about to prove, That the covenant whereof circumcision was a sign, Gen. 17, was not the same which we have now in the Gospel: because the Lord saith, it is not the same, Jer. 31.31, Heb. 8.6. it is a new covenant that we have under the Gospel.

Answ. It is no marvel though these men so often slander us, when they dare bely the Lord himself. Neither doth the Prophet, nor the Apostle (in the places by them cited, or) anywhere say, that the covenant which Abraham had, and which was sealed to him by circumcision, is not the same which we have. I have before proved them to be one in substance by Gal. 3, and Rom. 4.11. The covenant spoken of by Jeremiah, was made when God took them by the hand to bring them out of Egypt, Ier. 31.32, Heb. 8, whereas the covenant with Abraham was many years before, Gal. 3.17. Therefore the covenant made with Abraham by promise, is the same that we now have by performance and confirmation of that promise, Luk. 1.54 55, 72▪ 73 Rom. 15.8.

Again they say, though Abraham himself had the covenant of grace promised him, by which promise he had salvation in the Messiah to come; yet had he not the ordinances of the new covenant which we have: and therefore none of his seed in the flesh could be partakers of that which he had not himself.

Answ. They grant enough to their own condemnation: for if Abraham's covenant was of grace and salvation by Christ; then was it not of the Law (as before they pleaded) for that causeth wrath and damnation, Rom. 4.15, Gal. 3.10.12. We plead not for the same external Ordinances or manner of outward dispensation: but for the same substance of the covenant, which was of faith, not of works; and so of the Gospel not of the Law, as Paul teacheth us, Rom. 4. Gal. 3. The Israelites Passover of the Lamb, and our Passover Christ: their feast of unleavened cakes, and ours, (1 Cor. 5.7.8.) differ apparently in the outward Ordinances. So their bread of Manna from heaven, ours of wheat from the earth; their drink of water from the Rock, ours of wine from the Grape, (in the supper of our Lord) how greatly do they differ in the outward things: yet were they the same spiritual meat and drink both to them and us, even Christ: as the Apostle teacheth 1 Cor. 10.3.4. So Circumcision and Baptism, differ much in the outward rite and sign; but not in the substance or thing signified.

Yet cease they not their idle contention, but further say concerning us, They speak untruly [in saying that the covenant which this new is not like, is that Law given upon mount Sina, Exod. 19. not that in Gen. 17.] Mark the words (in Ier. 31, Heb. 8,) Not like the covenant that I made with their fathers, when I took them by the hand to bring them out of Egypt, which is mentioned in Exod. 3, not Exod. 19, then did God appear to Moses, and commanded him to take them by the hand and lead them out of Egypt, where the covenant is mentioned in ver. 6, I am the God of thy fathers, Abraham &c. I am come to deliver them &c. to bring them into a good land &c. which promise was made unto their father Abraham.

Answ. The untruth and ignorance is in themselves that so reason. For there was no covenant made in Exod. 3. Let the place be viewed. Though if there had then a covenant been made, it were nothing to our purpose; because Abraham was dead many years before, and we reason of the covenant made with him and his seed, whiles he lived, Gen. 17. But in Exod. 19.5 &c. treaty is of a covenant to be made: in Exod. 20 &c. the Laws are promulgated. In Exod. 24, 7, 8, the covenant is made up and dedicated. And that this was that first and old covenant which should be abolished, as Jeremiah foretold, the Apostle doth plainly manifest. For having shown the promise hereof in Heb. 8.8.— 13, he prosecuteth the same matter in Heb. 9, showing the differences between the first covenant and the second, or the old and the new; and how a covenant (or testament) must be confirmed by blood and death: which for the new was by the death of Christ, Heb. 9.15.16, and for the first, it was with the death & blood of bullocks and goats, wherewith Moses sprinkled the people, v. 18 19.20. And this was that action recorded in Exod. 24, done at mount Sina. Moreover observe here these men's fraud: Jeremiah speaketh of a covenant made; they tell us of a covenant (or promise) mentioned in Exod. 3, as if to make a covenant when they came out of Egypt, and to mention a covenant or promise made many years before with Abraham in Canaan, were all one. That which is alleged of the land of Canaan promised in Gen. 17, 8, is true, as a type or figure, but not as the main thing there intended. For Abraham himself had no inheritance in the land of Canaan, no not so much as to set his foot on: Act. 7.5. how then did circumcision seal that to Abraham, which God never performed to him? Is not this to make God's promise to him, vain? The Apostle is a better expositor, who saith, that circumcision sealed to him righteousness of faith, which he had before, Rom. 4.11, and telleth us, how by faith Abraham sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange Countrie, and looked for a heavenly city and country, which he understood to be figured by that earthly land: Heb. 11.9.10.16. And if •h• poss•ssion of Canaan was that which circumcision sealed, then Abraham's servants; yea and all his sons by Keturah, and all pros•lytes of other families, that were circumcised, were deluded with a vain promise: seeing none of all these had ever inheritance in Canaan, but only the Israelites the posterity of Isaac, which were numbered in Numb. 26•2. — 53.

Again, they except thus. The covenant is made in Gen. 17, with Abraham and his seed, not with every faithful man and his seed. Is every faithful man Abraham? What proof for that? It is well if we be Abraham's seed &c.

Answ. The exception is frivolous: for by virtue of that covenant with Abraham who circumcised his infants, Isaac his son, Jacob his son, all the Isra•lits in their generations, and every faithful Proselyte of the heathens, circumcise•d their infants. So the faithful now, who all are Abraham's seed, and heirs by promise, G•l. 3.29, do seal their infants with Bap•ism•, as of •ld •h•y did with Circumcision, for the promise is to such and to their children Act. 2.39. When Paul bringeth Abraham's example for justification by faith, Rom. 4. if any should trifle and say, What is that to us? We are not Abraham: the Apostle telleth, it was not written for his sake alone, but for us also, Rom. 4.23.24. So say we; that Abraham gave his infants the seal of the covenant, it is not written for him alone, but also for us.

But they proceed and say; In Rom, 4, 21, Abraham received the sign of Circumcision, the seal of the righteousness of faith which he •ad, when he was uncircumcised, that he should be the father of the faithful &c. This proveth that Abraham received Circumcision to seal up his fatherhood of the faithful; not that he received it to seal up his faith in the Messiah, which he had 24 years before: but a seal of his faith in believing God, that he should be the father of many Nations, Gen. 17.4, Rom, 4.17, and this was imputed to him for righteousness, Rom. 4.22.

Answ. They are blind, and would make blind. 1 There is no faith that can be imputed to any man for righteousness, but the faith that is in the Messiah; as the Apostle proveth at large, in Rom. 3, 21.22.24.25. and Rom. 4. Gal. 3.2 And Abraham believing the promise of a seed, which belief was counted to him for righteousness, Gen. 15.5.6. believed Christ principally, as his seed after the flesh: for otherwise how could all nations be blessed in him, that is in his seed, as God promised, Gen. 12.3. Gal. 3.8.16. 3 The Apostle disproveth their vain gloss, when having shown how Abraham's faith was counted to him for righteousness, Rom. 4.19.— 22, he annexeth, that this was written for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe in him that raised up Jesus, v. 23 24. But if Abraham's faith had not been the faith in Christ, the Apostles argument from his example had been impertinent.

Finally they say, Abraham received Circumcision as none received it: and faith was required of none to Circumcision: but faith is required to Baptism: & therefore these be but men's dreams, & chaff in stead of wheat.

Answ. In deed they would give us chaff for wheat. They would have us believe that Abraham's circumcision sealed his fatherhood, not his faith in Christ: which dream is before refuted. They would teach us two or moe circumcisions, one which Abraham had, another which other men had. But as there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, Eph. 4.5. so we find but one circumcision, which all our fathers received. They would persuade us, that whatsoever Paul saith, that circumcision was the seale of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4.11. yet faith was required of none to Circumcision. But who will believe this their dream? Will God seal righteousness of faith to them that have no faith? This is to make God the author of vain and worthless seals. If it sealed not to men righteousness of faith, what sealed it? Not the land of Canaan, for (as is foreshowed) no child of Abraham by Keturah, no Proselyte had inheritance in Canaan: no nor Isaac, nor Jacob, who were but strangers in the land as Abraham was, Heb. 11.9. Not the covenant of the Law, for that was not given till many years after Abraham, neither could any man have righteousness by it, but wrath and curse, Gal. 3.10. But had not error blinded their eyes, they might see that the covenant sealed by circumcision was, that the Lord would be a God to them and to their seed after them, Gen. 17.7. and this was the covenant of grace in Christ, Heb. 8.8.10.

Against Peters doctrine in Act. 2.38.39, where he saith, the promise is made to you and to your children; they cavil thus, Whereas many stumble at the word Children, conceiving that it is meant of Infants, it is here and elsewhere used often in the Scriptures for men of understanding: Act. 3.25, &c.

Answ<sup>r</sup> How struggle these men against the light! It is true, that the word Children often meaneth men of understanding; but meaneth it not infants also? The word seed, used in Gen. 17, often implieth old persons also: will they therefore infer, that the promise and seal thereof to Abraham's seed, belonged not to his seed in their infancy? So nether is there any reason to think that the promise to the Jews and their children mentioned in Act 2, is meant only of men of understanding, and not also of their children in infancy. For when the Apostle speaketh of the promise to them and to their children, concerning Christ and remission of sins by him, and sealing the same by Baptism: he hath evident reference to the promise made of old to Abraham, which concerned the same things, and was sealed by circumcision: as appeareth by comparing Luke 1.54.55.72.73 &c. Galath. 3.8.16.

Whereas the Apostle in 1 Cor. 7.14, calleth a believers children holy; these men expound him thus: If your children in your own judgment be holy, and you do not put them away when you are converted to the faith, but use th<sup>m</sup> still as your children, &c. then may you keep your wives being holy, they being of a nearer natural bond then your children, and use them still as your wives &c. Their reason of this interpretation is; Because holiness sometime signifieth when a person or thing is set apart or sanctified to the believer, 1. Timothy 4.5, Titus 1.15. Thus is the unbelieving wife holy, and thus are the children h<sup>o</sup>lie, and not otherwise.

Answ. That children are thus sanctified to the believer is true: but in saying, and not otherwise, they do violence to the Apostles doctrine, and the truth is not in them. For first he meaneth not the children to be holy in the parents judgments; but telleth them his own judgment, they are holy; and useth it as a reason to confirm his former doctrine. Secondly, he meaneth not in respect of putting the children away from civil use as children; for so no mor<sup>e</sup> should be said for the children of the faithful, then for their infidel servants: for Philemon mought and did retain Onesimus for civil use as a servant, before he was converted to Christ, Phil v. 10.11, &c. and believing servants might dwell and converse civilly with unbelieving masters,

1 Tim 6.1 2, Yea misbegotten children and bastards were not to be put away in respect of civil use: for who should nourish or bring them up, rather than their own parents? 2 Sam 11 4.5, & 12.14.15 &c. Thirdly, they corrupt the Apostles reason, which is not to this effect, If you may keep your children, then you may keep your wives: But thus, your unbelieving wives you may keep, for they are sanctified unto you, because the children which you beget of them are holy: and so the holiness of the children is an argument and proof that they might still retain their unbelieving wives. Fourthly, they change the Apostles word am•ss•: he saith not of unbelieving wives that they are holy, but sanctified to the believing husbands; but the children were holy. Fifthly, the sanctification of meats, & purity of other things, mentioned in 1 Tim. 4.5 Tit. 1.15, is not meant of religious sanctification, but for civil uses: whereas the children of believers are otherwise holy, namely, in respect of the covenant of grace and Church of God, as is abundantly proved before, by Rom. 5, where, as they have naturally sin and unrighteousness by Adam, so they have holiness and righteousness by the grace of God in Christ. Also by Gen. 17, compared with Rom. 4.11, where Abraham's (and all faithful men's) children, are with their parents in the covenant of grace, and have the seal of the righteousness of faith. And upon this ground doth Paul strongly prove the believers might keep their unbelieving wives, because the children which they had by such, were (by reason that one parent was a Christian) holy, to wit, with holiness of the covenant made with the faithful and their seed. And in this respect the children of those that are in the covenant, are said to be borne unto the Lord, and to be his children, Ezek. 16.8.20, 21. whereas in the other respect, all children in the world are the Lord's, Exod. 19, 5. And so the children of the Church are called the holy seed, differing herein from the seed of other people's, Ezra 9.1.2, which if these opposites had understood, they could not thus have stumbled at the Apostles words, and wrested his meaning.

But they plead further, that the Apostle saith not, else were your Infants, but else were your Children unclean, but now they are holy: so that all the children of unbelievers are as holy by this place as infants, &c. and so must be baptized.

Answ. Herein they seek to pervert the straight ways of God. As if they should say: God (when he made with Abraham that everlasting covenant which Circumcision was a seal of) said not that he would be a God unto him and to his Infants after him, but unto his seed, Gen. 17 7, so that all the seed of Abraham (Ishmaelites, Edomites &c.) were as holy, and as well within the covenant of grace and to be circumcised, as the Is•a•lites which were the generation of Isaac. But they should observe that the covenant of mercy passeth from the fathers to the children from age to age, even to the thousand generation, if they love God, and keep his commandments: whereas if they ur•e away and hate him, he visi•th their iniquity, Exod. 20.5.6, Ez•k. 18 9.10.13. Children of believers when they are borne of their parents, (and all are borne infants) are all in the covenant with their parents; and were of old to be circumcised, are now to be baptized. If the children be of years when their parents enter into the covenant, either they assent and enter into covenant with them, or they diss•nt and enter not. So Isma•l Abraham's child, being taught of his father to keep the way of the Lord (Genes 18.19.) and not disobeying, he was with his father circumcised at thirteen years of age, Genes. 17.25. Likewise all children now assenting unto and walking in the faith with their parents are to be baptized at what age soever. But when Ishmael fell from his obedience, then was he cast out of Abraham's house, and was no longer counted for Abraham's seed, but in Isaac was his seed called, Genes. 21.10.12. Ishmael was still Abraham's seed and child in nature, according to the flesh; but he continued not still the child of the covenant, Galath. 4.29.30, nor Abraham's seed according to the promise. Even so, if children of believers now being of understanding, do refuse the faith of Christ, or fall from it, they are to be kept out of the Church▪ or cast out from it: and so the seal of grace and salvation belongeth not unto them, (Ezek. 18, 24, 2 Chro. 15.2, Matth 3.7.9.10,) as it belongeth to all the infants of the faithful, and to all their children (of what age so ever) that receive the faith of Christ, and abide in it with them. And these men greatly mistake if they think we hold children are to be baptized, or are holy, because they are our children by nature, (for so they are children of wrath, Eph. 2.3,) but they are holy, and to have the seal of salvation, because God hath graciously accepted them into his covenant with our selves: and keepeth them in it, until they fall from faith and obedience of Christ; even as we our selves continue in the covenant, whiles we continue in the Christian faith, and no longer, 2 Tim. 2.12. As we are the children of the first Adam, we are all sinners, disobedient, unrighteous and under condemnation: but as we are the children of the second Adam (Christ) we are all holy, made obedient, righteous; and heirs of salvation, according to the Apostles doctrine in Rom. 5•12— 21.

Against another proof for baptism of Infants, gathered from Paul's words in 1 Cor. 10•1, 2 &c. where he speaketh of all the Israelites Baptism in the cloud & in the sea: they struggle with little reason or color of truth. For (to omit their discourse of Paul's scope in bringing that in, which no way cleareth the controverse) they tell us. 1 That Moses did not at all wash them with water in the cloud and sea. 2 Th•t this of Moses is called baptism by comparison, as Noah's Ark is called the figure of the Baptism that saveth us: for as the Ark saved those in it from drowning: so the Israelites were all under the cloud and in the sea, and therein baptized or safeguarded from destruction of their enemies. 3 That it pleased the Holy Ghost to say they were baptized in the sea and cloud, because the cloud and sea was their safety, as Noes Ark was: And as Christ saith, they are baptized that suffer for his sake. So there is as much warrant to enjoin infants to suffer persecution, because it is called Baptism: as to baptize them, because the cloud and sea is called Baptism.

Answ. How many wrestings and windings are in these men's words? First, they say, Moses did not at all baptize them with water. And why? Was there no water (think they) in the cloud and in the sea? Let them consider Exod. 14.24.25. compared with Psal. 77.16.17, &c. and they may see there was water enough in the cloud: and they will not say (I think) that there was no water in the sea. All outward baptising or washing, must be with water or some other liquor. If they were not baptized with water, what other liquor were they baptized in? not with blood, as in the Baptism of suffering death for Christ's sake, which they impertinently mention. Not with wine or strong drink: for they found none such in the wilderness. If they can show nothing but water to baptize them in, let them deny no more (for shame) that they were baptized with water. God spake to our fathers by the Prophets at sundry times (or in sundry parts, as it were by piece meal) as the Apostle teacheth Hebrew. 1.1. By Moses he shown how the cloud removed from before Israel, and stood behind them, (as they passed through the sea) and gave them light, but was darkness to the Egyptians: and from this fiery cloudy pillar the Lord looking, troubled the Egyptians, and took off their chariot wheels, that they drave them heavily, Exod. 14.19.20 24.25. This being briefly and obscurely told by Moses, God after enlargeth by Asaph another Prophet, who showeth the manner of it; how not only the waters of the sea saw the Lord, when they fled and parted; but the clouds also (from above) poured out water when they rained; the skies sent out a sound by thunder, &c. thus the ground being softened with the rain, occasioned the chariot wheels of the Egyptians (sticking in the mire) to fall off, and hindered their pursuit: Psa. 77.16.17, &c. After this the Apostle (taught by God's spirit) manifesteth the mystery which before was kept secret; namely how this passage under the cloud (which rained) and through the sea was a baptism to the Israelites: even as Christian men's washings in rivers or vessels, was a baptism to them. And as the manna which Israel ate, and water from the rock which they drank, was the same spiritual meat and drink which we have signified by bread and wine in our Lord's supper; so their washing in the cloud & sea, and our washing in vessels or rivers, is spiritually the same baptism. From hence we gather the baptising of our infants by two arguments: 1 All our fathers (saith Paul) were baptized in the cloud and sea: therefore (say we) infants: for seeing there was no other baptism but that in the cloud and sea, such of our fathers as then were infants were at that time baptized, or else many of our fathers (even all the infants of many thousand families) were never baptized: which is contrary to the Apostles doctrine. And if infants had baptism under Moses, it cannot (with any color of reason) be denied them under Christ. 2. In that the Apostle teacheth us, that the extraordinary and temporary sacraments (or seals of salvation) which Israel had, were the substance and truth which we now have, though Moses doth not so express: it followeth upon like ground, that their ordinary seals, namely Circumcision and the Passover, were the same in truth and substance with baptism and the Lord's Supper which we now have. And being the same, as infants had circumcision then, so they are to have baptism now.

Secondly, whereas they say that of Moses was called baptism by comparison, as if it were not properly baptism; they swerve from the right way: it was as truly and properly baptism to them, as ours is to us, though the manner of administration differ: even as their Manna and water were as truly and properly the sacrament of Christ's body and blood to them, as bread and wine in the Lord's supper are to us. Otherwise the Apostle should not say truly, that they were the same. 1. Cor. 10.3.4.

Thirdly, Noes ark is not called the figure of baptism, as these corrupters of scripture tell us: but baptism (saith the Apostle) is a like-figure (or antitype) 1 Pet. 3.21. So that the saving by water of eight men in the Ark, was a type or figure: and the saving of a few now by water in baptism, is an antitype, or like figure: both of them figuring salvation by the death of Christ. Fourthly, neither do these men set down the reason fully and rightly, why they are said to be baptized, namely, because the cloud and sea was their safety as Noes ark was; for though it may in some sense be granted that these were their safety, as baptism is our safety (for it is said to save us, 1 Pet. 3.21.) yet properly they were said to be baptized in the cloud and sea, because they were in them sacramentally washed from their sins, & planted together in the likeness of his death, burial, and resurrection, as we are now by baptism, Rom. 6.3.4.5. The cloud served them for three users, 1. to protect and keep them safe, Isaiah. 4.5.6. 2 to guide them in the way that they should go, Numb. 9.17. &c. Exod. 13.21. and these two were ordinary, 3. to baptize them by pouring down water, and this was extraordinary, and but one time in the red sea, for ought we find. And in this respect Paul saith they were baptized in it. Fifthly, their last speech of enjoining infants to suffer persecution, as well as to baptize them, is spoken with a wry mouth: for as we enjoin not infants to be baptized, though we baptize them; so can we not enjoin them to suffer persecution. But this we say and know, as infants are baptized into Christ, so oftentimes they suffer persecution for Christ: being with their parents afflicted, imprisoned, banished, &c. yea and bereaved of life it self, so that they have even the baptism of blood or martyrdom also.

Whereas we find mention of whole households to have been baptized by the Apostles; from which example it is probably gathered that infants also were baptized. Against this they dispute thus, 1. There are many households in which there are no infants.

Ans. This is true: and it is also true that in many there are infants. Therefore this argument is propounded but as probable, not as certain.

2 They say, It is most sure as the Apostles practiced in one household, so they practiced in all. But in the Jailor's house they baptized such as they preached the word unto, and such as believed, Act. 16.31.34. and this is most plain that infants cannot hear nor believe, &c.

Ans. It is not most sure, but altogether unlikely, as themselves, I think, will acknowledge. For there is no likelihood that all households to whom the Apostles preached, did believe everyone in them, though some did. And they grant that none but believers were baptized. So then if the goodman of the house, and the men only believed, there none but men were baptized: if women only believed, they only were baptized. Therefore the Apostles practice was not always alike in respect of the persons that they baptized. So for infants, such houses as had none, we easily grant that no infants were there baptized. But such as had infants, their parents believing, we hold that their infants were baptized; for there is no exception of infants at all in any place of the Apostles Acts. The bar which they put, that infants cannot hear nor believe, is soon removed. We know infants can hear, though not with understanding: we know also (and have proved before) that they believe, though not actually or professantly. And this faith begun in them in their regeneration, is a sufficient ground why infants should be baptized, as I have formerly manifested.

Finally, unto Christ's words Mark. 10.14. suffer ye little children to come unto me, &c. for of such is the kingdom of God: they say, It is not s<sup>y</sup>d, Infants are of the kingdom of heaven, that is, obeyers of the Gospel, Luk. 4 43▪ but that they that enter into the kingdom of heaven, must become as little children, for of such like is the kingdom of God. And, This is Christ's meaning, men must be converted and receive the kingdom of God as a child. &c.

Ans They speak like children in understanding. 1. The people brought young children properly unto Christ, not men converted & become like children: Mark. 10.13. For the children the disciples rebuked the bringers: for their rebuking Christ was much displeased, and said, Suffer the little children to come unto me What reasonable creature will now deny that Christ speaketh here of children in years, not of old men like children. The children that were brought, Christ took up in his arms, put his hands one them & blessed them: may we think he took up aged persons. 2 The reason why he would have such children suffered to come to him, is, for of such is the kingdom of God, Mark. 10.14 If he had not meant this of young children themselves, but of men like children in some condition; there had been no weight in his words: but the people might have brought unto him upon that ground, doves, and serpents for Christ to lay hands upon and bless: for as godly men must in some things be like children, 1. Cor. 14.20. so must they in some things also be like serpents, and like doves, Math. 10.16.3 They wrest the text, when they expound for of such is the kingdom of God, thus, for of such like: as if Christ meant not the children properly, but ancients men like such children. They might even as well say, that when Paul writeth, I beseech thee, being such a one as Paul the aged, (Philem. v. 9 that he speaketh not this of himself, but of some other man like himself, that made request for Onesimus. But ignorant and unstable men will pervert all scriptures to their own perdition. That infants of the faithful are indeed of the kingdom of God, is before proved from Rom. 5. and many other scriptures.

Now whereas Christ blessed the children; they tell us, he baptized them not, which we grant: but if they which were by nature children of wrath and curse, were now by grace made children of blessing in Christ; then were they in deed of the kingdom of God, and such as might receive baptism the sign and seal of blessedness.

Lastly they say, It is a blessing to infants to be created, to live, to grow in stature, wisdom, &c. to have their sight, their limbs, &c. so that Christ's blessings extend as well to this life as that which is to come.

Answ. All God's benefits for this life and the next, are in deed blessings: But Christ blessed not those children with any such worldly temporal blessings particularly; but gave them the blessing of God in general: and men are too presumptuous that will without due proof restrain that to some particulars which the Lord hath not restrained. We know that our blessedness from God in Christ, is our eternal salvation, Rom. 4.6. &c. It was his last farewell to his beloved disciples to lift up his hands and bless them, Luk. 24.50. and it is the sum of the Gospel, that in Abraham's seed (that is Christ) all nations shall be blessed, Gal. 3.8. This grace Abraham's infants had, this grace Christ gave to little children: and the same he vouchsafe to continue unto us and to our children throughout their generations: preserving us and them from the curse of Anabaptistry, whereby so many errors are sarsed, scriptures wrested, and souls perverted unto destruction.

IT is true of an heretic which Solomon saith in parable, a foolish woman is troublesome: experience hereof we have in this adversary whom I deal against. For he not content to manifest with mouth, nor to write with pen, nor to print in public once, his own folly and shame, with calling upon us to justify our proceedings or repent of them; doth in another book the second time require an answer, and fretting in himself that we passed over his vanity with silence, he biddeth us battle with the third alarm in his book The character of the beast, lately published. Wherein, (to show how near he is allied to those which say, who is like unto the Beast, who is able to war with him?) he requireth, nay chargeth, yea challengeth us (as he saith) to the defense of our errors vaunting moreover against us, that we are guilty in our consciences of our disability to defend them, and therefore subtly draw back and pretend excuses; triumphing also over us, as they that hitherto in craftiness have withdrawn from the combat, in the matter of the translation, worship and presbytery.

Thus hath he lifted up his horn on high, and spoken with a stiff neck; as if even the mighty were afraid of his majesty, and for fear fainted in themselves. In regard of which insolency; all men I think may see, it is now time, if ever, to take up shield and sword against him, and hew his horns that so have pushed the flock of Christ, whereof not long since he professed himself to be a member with us: though now having left the truth to follow leasing, he maketh open war with the saints. And whereas among others swelling words of vanity, he saith, Loe we protest against them to have a false worship of reading books: we protest against them to have a false government of a triformed Presbyterie; we protest against them to have a false Ministry of Doctors or Teachers, &c. I have taken in hand to set forth our just defense, in these particulars, and to show the fraud and malignity of this boaster: leaving the other point about the constitution of our Church in baptising of infants, to others that have already begun to convince his heresy therein. And this which I have undertaken is rather for others (who may be troubled with his writings) than for his own sake, who yieldeth small hope of good, seeing he proceedeth so fast in evil; and out of a proud heart hath stirred up strife. Wherein also such hath been his fickleness, as no constancy is in his mouth. For (not to speak of three sundry books wherein he hath shown himself of 3. several religions,) in this one book which I deal against, he sayeth and unsaith and contrarieth his own grounds for to shift and hide his blasphemies, that little needed him so earnestly to have called for another man's sword to pierce the bowels of his error; when his own hand fighteth against himself, and the spear which he tosseth, turneth into his heart. I had much rather have followed more comfortable meditations, in the peaceable practice of the truth; than thus to contend with those that seek strife, & that fight against the faith which themselves once professed; having found such by experience, to be above others, most malignant enemies: but truth oppugned, may not be forsaken; and wolves that would ravine, must be beaten from the fold, lest the sheep be devoured or scattered. Now therefore I being to encounter this false Prophet, do humble myself under the good hand of God whose power is made perfect in man's infirmity; whose mercy susteyneth in violence of the enemy; whose truth is a shield and buckler. He bless these my labors unto his people; that the righteous may see and rejoice, and all iniquity may stop her mouth.

A DEFENCE OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES AND WORSHIP OF God, used in the Christian Churches of the Separation: against the calumnies of M. Smyth.

THE book entitled The differences of the Churches of the separation, which we are challenged by the Author to answer: carrieth in the very name thereof, a delusion of the Reader. For if he look for plain differences, what they affirm and we deny; he shall not find them expressed: if he take the differences to be implied, as that whatsoever Mast. Smyth affirmeth we deny, and what he denieth we affirm; then is the Reader much abused, & we injured; who hold in that book, truth & error to be unequally mixed. Seeing then neither expressly nor implicitly the Reader can see the Differences: what are they but delusions?

The many questions which he asketh in the end, containing the sum of all his book, manifest the Authors fraud: for if he know & dare say wherein we differ, what need he desire our direct answer? It became him to refute, & not for to fish with hooks of demands, wherein we would differ from him.

There was one only difference between M. Smyth and us, when first he began to quarrel; though since he have increased them, and increaseth daily, with deadly feud and open opposition, as all men may see.

That difference was this. He with his followers breaking off communion with us, charged us with synn for using our English Bibles in the worship of God; & he thought that the teachers should bring the originals the Hebrew and Greek, and out of them translate by voice. His principal reason against our translated scripture was this. No Apocrypha writing, but only the Canonical scriptures, are to be used in the Church, in time of God's worship. Every written translation is an Apocrypha writing, & is not canonical scripture. Therefore every written translation is unlawful in the Church in time of God's worship. Why he counted every translation apocrypha, and what he meant thereby, appeareth by these words of his a written translation (saith he) or interpretation is as well & as much an human writing, as an homily or prayer, written & read. The like impiety he hath also printed in his book, saying A translation being the work of a men's wit & learning, is as much and as truly an human writing, as the Apocrypha (so commonly called) writings are, and seeing it hath not the allowance of holy men inspired, but is of an hidden authority, it may be justly called Apocrypha &c. And therefore not to be brought into the worship of God to be read.

That this point of the translation was the only difference, as it is known to all that then heard his public protestatiō; so his words in writing show it. Translations written (saith he) are not refrained in the case of scandal, for we desired that they might be refrained for our sakes, that we might keep communion, & it would not be yielded.

So if we would have laid aside our translated Bibles, communion (they say) should have been kept with us.

Now for the true differences on our part, at that time and still, they are thus. We agree with M. Smyth herein, that Only canonical scripture is to be used in God's worship; & that no apocryphal writing is to be used in God's worship. But we disagree & deny, that every written translation is an Apocryphal writing; affirming that the Scriptures in English and other languages, rightly translated out of the Originals, are Canonical; & so to be read in the Church in the worship of God.

After much time spent about this controversy, he manifested other differences, touching the ministry and treasury; and soon after published this book of Differences: wherein, having his latter thoughts (as he thought) better then his former, he retracted a former book of Principles &c, and all other his writings, so far forth as they were overthwarted by this his last book. He also acknowledged the ancient brethren of the separation (as he calleth us) are to be honored, that they have reduced the Church, to the true primitive and Apostolic constitution, which consisteth in these three things, 1 The true matter, which are Saints only, 2 The true form, which is the uniting of them together in the covenant. 3 The true property, which is a communion in all the holy things, and the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, for the mainteyning of that communion. To this blessed work of the Lord wherein those ancient brethren have labored, I know not (saith he) what may more be added, I think rather there can nothing be added. And was he now settled in his course? nothing less, for the strange woman's paths are moveable, they cannot be known. Soon after this God stroke him with blindness, that he could no longer find the door of the Church, out of which he was gone by schism, and which he had assaulted with error. Our entering in by the covenant of God with Abraham to the faithful and their seed, hath been as a brazen wall, whereagainst he hath run himself, to his utter ruin, if God in mercy raise him not up. And now as a man benumbed in mind, he crieth out against us, contrary to his former faith and confession; Loe, we protest against them (saith he) to be a false Church, falsely constituted in the baptising of infants, and their own unbaptised estate. And again, We protest against them, that seeing their constitution is false; therefore there is no one ordinance of the Lord true among them. Thus wine showeth itself in M. Smyth to be a mocker, & strong drink to be raging: whiles he having drunk the wine of violence proclaimeth open war, against God's everlasting covenant.

The defense of which grace, being already in the hands of two worthy soldiers of Christ, Mr Clifton whom he hath printed against, and Mr Robinson, whom he next threateneth: I leave unto them; not doubting but God their strength, will teach their hands, to fight, and their fingers to battle, in so good a cause against this enemy. But because he still urgeth his former quarrels of the scriptures and Ministry: I purpose with God's grace to set against him in these; desiring the Lord my Rock, to gird me with strength, and to make my way entyre.

Touching the first, namely, the use of translated scriptures in the worship of God: M. Smyth thus summeth up the difference, in the forefront of his book.

- 1. We hold (saith he) that the worship of the new testament properly so called, is spiritual, proceeding originally from the heart: and that▪ reading out of a book (though a lawful ecclesiastical action,) is no part of spiritual worship: but rather the invention of the man of syn, it being substituted for a part of spiritual worship.

- 2. We hold that seeing prophesying is a part of spiritual worship: therefore in time of prophesying it is unlawful to have the book as a help before the eye.
- 3. We hold that seeing singing a Psalm is a part of spiritual worship; therefore it is unlawful, to have the book before the ey, in time of singing a Psalm.

Here first let the reader observe, that the main and true difference which was between M. Smyth and us, about the translation, is not mentioned: but is brought in after, as by the way, in hādling these matters; and other points never controverted between us, are made heads of the differences. In which doing, M. Smyth hath graced the very portch of his building, with imposture and fraud.

2. In saying, of himself and his brethrē, We hold &c. he giveth the reader to understand, (unless he meant to delude him,) that they whom he dealeth against, hold the contrary: whereas he neither doth, nor is able to produce any proof hereof against us; neither (I dare say) can he tell what we hold, of these points. Thus secondeth he his fraud with injury; and maketh these two, as Iachin & Boaz, the pillars for to beautify the temple of his book.

Now because his whole battle against the translated Scriptures, is chiefly out of this bulwark of spiritual worship, wherein he hath intrenched himself, and flieth thereto at all assays, when other shifts fail him: I will begin with it, as himself also doth, and come to Translations anon.

OF WORSHIP.

Whereas the word Worship is diversely used, sometime more largely, sometime more straightly; by reason whereof it hath not at all times a like proper signification: M. Smyth spying this, (as by his limitation of properly so called may appear;) takes advantage to himself for to bolster out his former blasphemies, & to deal against us for Idolaters, & the holy Bible for an idol; under the aequivocatiō or double meaning of this word worship; restraining it where he should not, & enlarging it where he ought not. And though he treateth of this thing at large, handling the fountain, the helps, the essence or nature, with the parts and kinds of worship: yet the divers use of the word which was needful first to be shown, (if he meant not to deceive,) he hath quite omitted; that, therefore I will first manifest.

Worship, in our English tongue, and as it is used to express the original scriptures, is diversely taken. Sometime largely, as when it expresseth the Greek word latreuo; as Philip. 3, 3. we ar the circumcision which worship God in the spirit: & Act. 24, 14. soworship I the God of my fathers. And thus both the English & Greek answereth to the Hebrew ghnabad, which properly signifieth to serve, Exod. 3, 12. Deut. 10, 12, 2 Sam. 15, 8.

Also when it expresseth the Greek word sebomai; as Act. 18, 13. toworship God contrary to the law; & Act. 18, 7, Iustus aworshipper of God. And so both it & the Greek answer to the Hebrew jare; which properly signifieth to fear or reverence, as Mat. 15, 9. in vain they worship me; for that which in Hebrew is, their fear towards me Isa 29, 13. So Job. and Jonah, as the Hebrew saith, feared, as the Greek translatheth, Worshipped God. Also when it interpreteth the Greek word threskeuo, as Col. 2, 18. the Worshipping of Angels; and verse. 23. in will-worship; or voluntary religion. Thus worship is largely used, for the fear and service of God, or any religious action.

More strictly and properly, worship is used to English the Greek word proskuneo; as Mat. 2. 2. We are come to worship him; and Rev. 11. 16. they worshipped God; Rev. 13. 4. they worshipped the Dragon, &c. And so both it and the Greek word, do express the Hebrew hishtachavah, which properly signifieth to bow down or prostrate ones self. Exod. 20. 5.

Thus the worship of God generally, comprehendeth the performing of all duties required in the first table of the Law: specially and properly, to worship is to bow down & supplicate unto God.

The meaning of the word being thus distinguished; let us now see how M. Smyth doth deal in the point. He, where he professeth to handle the nature or essence of spiritual worship, and the essential causes and kinds thereof, showeth these things in two particulars; first in the essential causes; 2. in the proper kinds or parts of the worship of the N. testament.

The essential causes are matter and form. The matter of God's worship (saith he) is the holy scriptures, which containeth the word of God or the Gospel, the subject whereof is Christ Jesus: The form or sowl that quickeneth it, is the spirit Col. 3. 16. with Ephe. 5. 18. 19. 20.

Then he illustrateth this, by the ceremonial worship of the old testament. And the matter of that he maketh to be beasts, incense, oil, fat, corn, wine, and the like creatures whereof the sacrifices &c. wer made, with all the actions thereto pertaining.

The form he saith appeared in 4. things; 1. honey, and 2. leaven which must be absent for the most part; and 3. fire and 4. salt which must always be present. Then for the kinds of spiritual worship, he saith they are praying, prophesying, and singing Psalms. Psal. 50. 14—17. 1 Cor. 11. 4. and 14. 15. 17. 26. I am. 5. 13. Rev. 19. 10.

I will not here stand to scan the good order which M. Smyth hath used in handling the nature and essence of worship, whiles omitting the efficient causes, objects and ends, which properly pertain to the discourse of actions: he insisteth upon matter and form which he calleth essential causes: so taking that which is more improper, & difficult. But seeing he hath chosen this way, I will follow him therein.

And first I observe, how he intending to shut out the reading of the scriptures from spiritual worship; yet maketh the scriptures to be the matter of worship: now how the matter of a thing, should be shut out and unlawful to be there, it requireth some skill to know. Secondly, the scriptures being (as he saith) the matter, and the spirit the form of this action of worship; (though properly the spirit is the efficient cause;) it would be known why M. Smyth in another place saith that actions of administering the Church or kingdom of Christ, are not actions of spiritual worship properly so called, making those actions to be admonition, examination, excommunication, pacification, absolution &c. are not these to have the matter of the scriptures, and form of the spirit, as well as prophesy which th' Apostle saith, is a speaking to edifying to exhortation and to comfort? Are we not as well bound to the scriptures in admonishing, as in exhorting and must not the same spirit give life unto both?

Let Paul himself be our example: he teacheth that the whole scripture is profitable, as for doctrine so for rebuke or conviction, and for correction; and he in practice, rebuking and opposing against Elymas, saying, O full of all subtlety and of all mischief, child of the Devil &c. did this by the holy spirit, whereof he is noted then to be full. In preaching to the men of Antiochia, he admonished them by the word of the prophet Habakkuk: in preaching to the Jews in Rome, he rebuked them by the word of the prophet Isaiah; And Peter in his Sermon at Jerusalem pacified their pricked consciences, by the promise of God, to them and to their children; Acts 2. 37. 39. So the word and spirit were matter and form of their rebukes, admonitions, pacifications, &c. even as of their other doctrines & exhortations, and therefore by Mr Sm. own grounds, were spiritual worship; and so his first plot where he made actions of opposition, difference, plea & strife, not to be actions of spiritual worship; is a waggmire whereinto this his conceit of prophesy or preaching to be spiritual worship, is sunk, and by it overthrown. And sure the Prophets and Apostles and Christ himself never observed this new coined difference, for they in their prophesying or preaching of the word, did intermixe rebukes with comforts, admonitions with exhortations, and opposed against syn and sinners usually in their sermons, as the whole history of the Bible showeth. Now by Mr Smiths divinity they worshipped not God, when they spake by way of opposition, difference, plea or strife, in their doctrine; but when they spake to edifying exhortation or comfort; this was the worship of God properly so called. If this distinction be not true, then M. Sm. is a deceiver, properly so called; who to make things serve his heretical humor and hide his blasphemies against our reading of the holy scriptures in the Church, hath digged thus deep to find a pit whereinto to fell the righteous; though himself by God's judgment be fallen into the same.

And here, by the way I will briefly note M. Smiths method in contriving of his book for the advantage of his cause. The three offices of Christ, in prophesy priesthood and Kingdom; he reduceth unto two, 1. kingdom and 2. priesthood; comprehending prophesy under the priesthood as a branch of it. Deut. 33. 10. Rev. 1. 6. with 1 Cor. 14. 31. Act. 2. 17. 18.

Whereas by the same ground of Deut. 33. 10. he mought have made the kingdom also a branch of the priesthood; for the Priests were to teach Jacob God's judgments and Israel his law, as well in cases of controversy plea and strife, (which M. Smyth maketh actions of administering the Kingdom;) as in other doctrines of exhortation and comfort. But I find in the scripture that Moses (not Aaron the Priest,) is made a figure of Christ as a Prophet; and Prophets there were many in Israel of other tribes then Levi: seeing then Moses & the Prophets carried types of Christ's prophesy; Aaron and the Priests, of his priesthood; David and the kings, of his kingdom; I would not now confound the priesthood & prophesy in Christ, any otherwise then the priesthood and kingdom; but keep a like distinction in them all; & as in Christ the head, so in the Church his body. Again as in heavenly order the 1. manifestatiō of man's syn and misery by the law, of his justice & happiness by the gospel; also the 2. work of man's redemption by sacrifice; & 3 the conservation of this grace wrought for the Church, against all enemies; are three distinct things, one following another: so Christ in his administratiō observed this order & distinction; first, teaching the Church as a Prophet, above three years; then offering up himself as a Priest & sacrifice to his father for his Church; and lastly rising & ascending into heaven to the right hand of God, there to reign as king until all his enemies be made his footstool. Now M. Smyth maketh prophesy one with the Priesthood, because he would have these two to be God's worship: & the kingdom he speaketh of first; and excludeth all the actions of it from God's worship. Whereas the Gospel is called the word of the kingdom; and Christ when he preached (or prophesied) is said to preach the kingdom of God; and the doctrines which he taught, were the secrets of the kingdom; and the Apostles in their sermons preached, expounded and testified the kingdom of God. Wherefore they be deep waters which M. Sm. hath found; that the actions of administering the kingdom should not be worship: and yet the preaching of the gospel, or prophesying, shall be worship, and that in the highest degree, properly so called. If he followed not fancy in these things, rather then sound judgment; let the prudent judge.

Like vanity he showeth in this, that having made the scriptures to be the matter of our worship now, he maketh not them to be the matter also of God's worship in Israel, but beasts, incense, oil, fat, &c. and the form of our worship to be the spirit, but the form of theirs to appear in honey, leaven, fire & salt. What, had not they the written word of God, for a ground of their religious actions, as well as we have the written word? had not they the good spirit of God to instruct them, as we have? had they not praying prophesying, singing &c. by the spirit, as we? How is it then, that this man maketh the matter and form of God's worship in Israel, to consist in such carnal things? There is a depth of abomination herein, which is the ground of his anabaptising heresy. For whereas the Apostle magnifieth the Jewish Church, above the Gentiles in many respects: this proud Gentile disgraceth them extremely, saying that their Ministry worship & government was carnal; that faith and repentance was not required to the matter, that is, the people of that Church, but only a carnal holiness; with many such like vituperies, which out of his carnal heart he uttereth against them.

But for their worship which we have in hand, let him show if he can, what one thing we have which they had not before us. He maketh the parts of our worship to be three, praying, prophesying, singing; all these they had, and uttered them by the spirit, as the scriptures everywhere manifest: and though they had many carnal rites with these, as sacrifices, incense, &c. yet was not their worship carnal: for we have also some carnal rites, as washing with water in baptism, the eating of bread & wine in the Lord's supper; have we therefore a carnal baptism, a carnal supper? if not, neither had they a carnal worship, though carnal rites were adjoined unto their worship. But as God whom they worshipped was a spirit, so worshipped they him in spirit, and with faith, expecting that promise which God made unto them of salvation by Christ; as Paul testified of the whole body of that Church; that the twelve tribes instantly serving (or worshipping) day and night, hoped to come unto it: showing further, that the gentiles are of the same, or one joint body with them; fellow-heirs, and partakers of the promise in Christ.

M. S. having shown (as he thought) the matter and form of the Jews worship, inferreth upon it thus. Hence it followeth (saith he) that the worship that beginneth in the book or translation cometh not originally from the spirit, but from the letter or ceremony, and so is not properly of the New Testament, but of the old, 2 Cor. 3. 6.

If this followeth, upon the former description of their worship and ours, I think it comes a great way behind, that few will be able to see it. For, did the matter of their worship, the beasts, incense, oil, &c. proceed out of the book? or did the form seen in fire and salt, come from the book, any otherwise then our praying, preaching, and ministering of the sacraments doth or must do. Did they look on a book when they kindled fire on the altar, or cast salt on the sacrifice? if not, how followeth this halting inference?

That the worship performed in reading the scriptures proceedeth originally from the spirit, even from God, whose spirit is in his word, and who hath commanded it to be read: and that such reading is not the ministry of the letter spoken of, 2 Cor. 3, 6. shall through God's grace, anon be proved; in handling the second point, of the scriptures.

Here next followeth to be considered Mr Smiths allegories & opening the worship of the new testament, by the type in the old.

Their Church, Ministry, worship, government, &c. as he saith, were all literal and ceremonial. Their literal or typical worship, was performed in two places, 1. the holy place, 2. or the court. The worship in the holy place, typed (saith he) most properly the worship of the New Testament, which was typed by the holy place, Rev. 11. 1. 2. 2 Cor. 6. 16. Heb. 8. 2. and 9. 11. 1 Pet. 2. 5. The worship of the tabernacle or holy place, consisted of 3. parts, 1. that which pertained to the brazen altar, 2. that which was performed at the golden altar, 3. that which concerned the table of show bread, Exod. 37. & 38. with Exod. 29, 38. & 30. 7. 8. 34—38. Levite. 24. 1.—9. At the brazen altar were offered sacrifices propitiatory and eucharistical, signifying, prayer, thanksgiving, prophesy. At the golden altar was perfume, signifying prayer, thanksgiving, preaching the gospel. Upon the table of show bread was the candlestick, and 12. loaves with incense. The candlestick signified the Church; shining by doctrine, &c. The show bread, signified the 12. tribes or Church, present before the Lord, fed with Christ &c.

As the holy place with the altar and Priests, did properly signify (saith he) the Church, Worship, and Saints, Rev. 11. 1, 1 Pet. 2. 5. under the new testament: so the court without the holy place whither all the people came, & the typical service performed there, did signify the confused assemblies of antichristian persecutors, & their ceremonial worship, Rev. 11. 2. which the spirit in that place calleth gentiles or hethen in these respects.

The parts of typical service performed in the court, were reading and music, wherein the Levites were chief agents; though the priests also and any of the people might read and sing. The scriptures read and tune musically, are propheties, prayers, thanksgivings.

In this discourse God would let the Reader see, how M. Smyth is given over to blindness of heart, in judging spiritual things: by that blindness which is in him in discerning carnal things, & which are set before all men's eyes.

For, to make the legal shadows serve his fancy, he placeth the brazen altar in the holy place or tabernacle with the golden altar, table and candlestick: whereas the scripture showeth it was set in the court-yard of the tabernacle before the door, and that a good distance off, having the Laver between the tabernacle and it, in which the priests did wash when they went into the tabernacle. And to this place at the door of the tabernacle, did the people assemble, & it was holy. If M. Sm. saw not this in the scripture, yet reason might have taught him not to make a chimney of the Lord's tabernacle covered & hāged with embroidered curtains. The boards of the tabernacle were but ten cubits high, (the brazen altar being three cubits; the tent and coverings were spread over them on hie, and a vayl hanged at the door. Upon the altar was a fire always kept burning, & here whole sheep and oxen were burned to ashes, many at once, sometime a thousand. Can any reasonable man now think, that this was within the tabernacle, which was so low & little a place? would the Lord have the curtains to be embrodered with cherubims, the boards to be covered with gold, that all might be dight with smoke and swoot; & continually in danger to be set on fire? yet M. Smyth will needs have it there, because he thought it would fit his turn well. With like discretion he placeth the candlestick upon the table, though Moses plainly telleth, that it (being very great, of a talent of gold, about 160 pound weight,) was set on the south side of the tabernacle, & the table with show bread on the north. But his eye sight failed not so much in the shadow, as his heart was blinded in the shadowed thing. For he maketh the 1 tabernacle, 2 altar, & 3 Priests, to signify the 1 Church, 2 worship, & 3 saints under the new testament: the 1. court of the tabernacle, he will have to signify the assemblies of Antichrist; the 2 Israelites there assembling, to signify the antichristian persecutors: 3 the typical service in the court, as reading the scriptures, & singing them with music; to signify the ceremonial worship of antichristians. For none but antichristians (as he thinketh) do read the scriptures in their worship. Behold unto what great impiety he abuseth the word of God. The body of the Church of Israel, the son and first born of the Lord, his chosen and chief treasure, precious unto him above all people's of the earth, on whom he set his love, riding upon the heavens for their help, & on the clouds in his glory; a people blessed and saved by the Lord, the shield of their help and sword of their glory: this people he maketh to signify the antichristian persecutors, hated of God, children of the Devil, for whose overthrow and confusion Christ rideth on the heavens in his glory with a garment dipt in blood, and a sword for to slay them, and fil all the fowls of the aier with their flesh.

The worship and service commanded by God unto his people, and his good word to instruct them, by which he called them from the service of Devils: this false prophet maketh to signify the service of antichristian idolaters, which worship Devils.

The Lord's holy courts, wherein they that dwelt were blessed, for which the souls of the Saints longed and fainted, counting one day there better then a thousand elsewhere: is now made to signify the Synagogue of Satan, and place where the Devil dwelleth.

So then the Israel of God which according to his will worshiped and served him with song and sacrifice; the prophets, priests, Levites, yea Christ himself and his Apostles, which often went thither to worship God and teach the people; these all were figures and significations of antichristian persecutors; excepting the priests only whom M, Smyth of his courtesy, maketh figures of Christians, when they did their service in the holy place. By this interpretation, when Zechariah the priest was in the temple burning incense, and the whole multitude of the people were without in prayer, waiting for his coming out to bless them: he & his service, signified Christians and their worship of God; they with their prayers, signified antichristians and their worship of the Devil. Yea God himself is highly blasphemed by this wretched exposition: for seeing by types & figures he taught his people how for to serve him, & led thē by earthly signs to heavenly things signified; how can it be said or thought without blasphemy, that the public worship of the whole congregation appointed by God himself, did signify hellish things, and antichristian idolatries?

But what may we think induced M. Sm. to this impiety? Even Satan deceived him by one place of scripture which he citeth in his book; viz. Rev. 11. 2. where John was willed in a vision, to cast out the court which is without the temple, and not measure it, for it is given to the gentiles. Hence doth M. Smyth gather that the Israelites which were wont to worship in the courts of the Lord, did signify the gentiles, that is the Antichristians, and consequently the court must betokē Antichrists Church, and the worship Antichrists worship. Thus one dark scripture is alleged to overthrow the clear doctrine that shineth throughout all the prophets. Yet even this place itself mought have taught him better. For first the commandment to measure the temple, altar, and worshipers, signified the restoring or repairing of God's Church and people, after some destruction & desolation; as the like visions shown to Ezekiel and Zechariah, after the destruction of Solomon's temple, do manifest. Secondly, whereas the court and the holy city was not measured here by John; as before by the other prophets, they were, and as afterwards John did see: it may teach us, that as yet there was not a full restauration of God's Church and worship, from the defection of Antichrist.

Thirdly in that the court is here said to be given to the gentiles, & the holy city should be trodden underfoot of them, & a time limited how long, two & forty months: this argueth that the court was not made, nor the city built for them: but by God's permission, for the chastisement of men, was given unto them for a season, during which time his two witnesses should prophesy against them. And thus it is said of the figure the first temple and city, I have given the dearly beloved of my sowl, into the hands of her enemies. So all Judah was given into the hand of the king of Babel: and Isaiah complaineth how the adversaries had trodden down God's sanctuary, as here they tread down the holy city. And if the court of the temple must needs signify Antichrists court, because it was given to the gentiles; then must the holy city, (by which name Jerusalem is often alled): signify also Antichrists city & Church, because it was trodden down of the same gentiles; but all the Prophets show that it signified the Church of God.

Finally, if M. S. would have interpreted scripture by scripture & not by his own fancy, he mought have seen a figure of those gentiles, Rev. 11. set forth by the Psalmist, O God the Gentiles are come into thy inheritance, thine holy temple have they defiled, and made Jerusalem heaps. Where by Gentiles are not meant the Israelites, but Babylonians or other hethen persecutors: and the very name Gentiles Rev. 11. whereby Antichristians are called, should have taught him to look for their type, not in the Church of Israel, but in their adversaries; as Antichrist's Church is called Babylon, and Christ's Jerusalem. And as the gentiles of old, exposed the dead bodies of God's saints, unburied, to the beasts and birds: so these gentiles here, having killed the Lord's witnesses, would not suffer their carcasses to be put in graves. But M. Smith's base account of Israel to be but a carnal people, brought him to this dotage; to make them in their assemblies and worship, to be figures of Antichristian persecutors. This being thus cleared; the reader may taste, how unsavory and bitter M. Smith's wormwood is, who to abolish the reading of God's word out of his worship and service; would make the reading of it in the Church of Israel, to signify it should be read in the Churches of Antichrist, but not of Christ.

Having handled thus the essential causes, of God's worship, with the types in Israel; next follow the parts and kinds of the same, which M. Sm. saith are 1. praying, 2. prophesying, 3 & singing psalms. Psal. 50. 14. 17. 1 Cor. 11. 4. and 14. 15—17. 26. I am. 5. 13. Rev. 19. 10.

Worship, properly so called, whereof he would seem to entreat: is not so large as here he makes it: and if he mean worship in general, it is more large than these three particulars do express.

Worship strictly taken, for that which in Greek is proskunesis, betokeneth a prostrating or supplicating unto God: & is in scripture applied and annexed unto prayer, Exod. 34. 8. 9. unto thanksgiving, Gen. 24. 26. 27. unto offerings & sacrifices, (after which it was performed,) 1 Chron. 16. 29. with 2 Chro. 29. 29. unto the bringing of first fruits, with acknowledgement of God's goodness, Deut. 26. 2—10. unto confession praising and blessing of God; Nehem. 9. 3. 2 Chron. 7. 3. 1 Chron. 29. 20. Job. 1. 20. 21. and sometimes it is set down absolutely, where these or some of them, are to be understood. Act. 8. 27. Exod. 4. 31. Wherefore it is truly and properly applied unto all manner supplication or calling on the name of God. But that it may fitly be applied unto prophesying, no scriptures that I know of, manifest; neither will the nature of the action bear it.

Prophesying (to speak properly of it, as is meet in such controversies,) is one of the extraordinary gifts of God unto his Church by his spirit; as we have example in Israel, Num. 11. 25. 26. as was foretold by Joel to be at Christ's coming, Joel 2. 28. 29. and as was fulfilled upon the Apostles & members of the primitive Churches. Act. 2. 4.—17. and 19. 2.—6. 1 Cor. 14. Now why M. Sm. should choose out this one gift, and neglect all others (except singing a Psalm:) and make it above the rest, properly worship, I cannot tell. If he use it for that which generally is called the preaching of the word, it is not fit in this place, where propriety is by himself pleaded for, and should in deed be used. He might have seen in the same 14. to the Corinthians, four ways of teaching noted by the Apostle, verse 6. either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesy, or by doctrine; and examples of these four, in the Christians practice: For Paul spake of revelations to the Church of Corinth, 2 Cor. 12. 1. 2. &c. and John by revelation, to the Churches in Asia. Rev. 1. 1. 2. 4. 9. 10. &c. and by knowledge the same man spake to the Church in general, when he reported that which they had seen, heard, handled and known to be true; John. 19. 35. 1 John. 1. 1. 3. and Peter doth the like; 2. Pet. 1. 17.

18. by prophesy, when by secret instinct of the spirit, they wer moved to speak something which tended to the edifying exhortation & comfort of the Church, 1. Cor. 14. 3. 29. 30. 31. Act. 19. 6. by doctrine, when they scanned the scriptures and gathered doctrines, and exhortations from them, Heb. 4. 3. 4. 7. & 7. 1. 2. &c. Rom. 4. 3. 4. &c. Luk. 4. 17. 18—21.

And this latter is the surest way and safest now for the Church, when by the scriptures they are taught the will of God: the other extraordinary and miraculous gifts being ceased. Therefore the Evangelists and ordinary ministers of churches are not exhorted to prophesy, but to feed, preach, read, teach, exhort comfort &c. Act. 20, 28. &c. 1 Pet. 5, 1, 2, &c. 1 Tim. 4, 13—16. 2 Tim: 4, 2. 1 Tim. 3. 2. Tit. 1, 9. though prophesy was not to be despised, 1 Thes. 5, 20. Even as the Priests and Levites in the Law, were not appointed ordinarily to prophesy but to teach, which they did by reading & expounding the scriptures: and prophesy was extraordinary to them or any other of what tribe so ever. Although therefore the preaching of the word now among us, may be called prophesying, for the like use and effects in the church: yet have we not that proper gift or exercise, anymore then of tongues: which we attayn by ordinary labor and study, they had without study. Act. 2, 4. and 19, 6.

But however M. Sm. taketh the word, I deny prophesying to be worship properly so called: and will consider his reasons, which are two, 1. praying & prophesying are joined together ( saith he) as parts of worship, 1 Cor. 11, 4. and men must be uncovered at both of them. Again, 2. Prophesying and Psalms are coupled together for the same purpose. 1. Cor. 14. 26.

The first reason is insufficient, for in 1 Cor, 11, 4, praying & prophesying are joined indeed together, but not as parts of worship properly so called, that is of the gloss, not of the text. The thing there spoken of concerneth all ecclesiastical actions: & two differing ech from other are named, to imply all the rest. For Paul speaketh of the habit of men and women, which became them to have in all public meetings: which was, that women should be veiled, men unveiled on their heads: and this not only because of the worship of God: but also because of the Angels, which are not to be worshiped; and because of the man, whose glory the woman is: yea because of nature itself, which by giving women long hayr, teacheth them thereby, that their heads should be covered. And by the man having on (or over) the head, is not meant the having of a hat, cap, or bonnet upon his head, for that was lawful even in God's worship, the Priests having bonnets upon their heads, by God's appointment; and to this day, the Eastern countries put not off their bonnets or tucks when they pray or worship. But it was the having of a covering or veil (called by the Apostle peribólaion & catacálumma.) which was a sign of dishonor and subjection, unmeet for men which were principal in the assembly, & carried God's image and glory upon them; but meet for women, which were inferior to men, both by creation and otherwise, and therefore were to have power upon their head, that is, a veil, signifying the power & authority which men had above them, as in all places, so chiefly in the church assemblies, where women mought not speak, for the same cause. And that it was a shame and dishonor for men to have their heads covered, appeareth by other scriptures; as Ier. 14. 4. the ploughmen were ashamed they covered their heads. So David & his men in their sorrow and affliction had their heads covered; and Haman in his mourning covered his head; where the Greek hath the very phrase (kata kephales) which the Apostle here useth. And that among the Greeks also, (such as the Corinthians were) the like custom was for men to cover their heads in dishonor, reproach, and grief; human histories do record. But bonnets or miters on the head, were a sign of honor: even as with us, the masters wear hats, when servants stand bareheaded. Whereas therefore the Apostle willeth women to be veiled or covered, it is not only for the worship of God properly so called, but because of God's worship in general, yea because of reverence and submission to men and Angels. So it followeth not, because men must be unveiled at prayer and at prophesy, therefore these two actions are of one and the same nature: for they mought not be veiled in the Church at all; unless perhaps in extraordinary time of mourning and sorrow, they covered their heads, as I have shown examples in Israel.

The other reason from 1 Cor. 14, 26. where prophesying & psalms are coupled together (as M, Smyth saith) for the same purpose; is more weak and less to the purpose. For prophesy is not named there; but if it had been named, it would not have proved it worship properly, anymore then tongues, revelations, interpretation, doctrine, which there are named, be parts or kinds of worship. And if because things are named together we must therefore count them of the same nature, then faith, hope, and love coupled together, and many other things in other scriptures, must be esteemed the same: which is vanity to affirm. Yea in this very chapter, Mr. Smyth mought have learned the contrary; for it is said if all prophesy, and one that believeth not come in, he is rebuked of all &c. and so he will fall down on his face and worship God, and say plainly that God is in you indeed. where Paul showeth a difference between prophesy & worship, as in name so in gesture, by falling down, whereas at prophesy they sate. And if men should kneel or prostrate themselves at the ministry of the word and sacraments, it were liker idolatry then seemly behavior in the church: but at worship properly so called, kneeling, bowing, falling down &c, are the most fit gestures: so as one is put sometime for another, as when Matthew saith the leper worshipped Christ, Luke recording the same saith, he fell on his face and besought him. And how often throughout the scriptures is bowing and falling down joined with worship? So in Israel, at the ministry of the word, the people stood up; but at the worship of the Lord they bowed down. Moreover worship being directed unto God himself, (for he that boweth, kneeleth, prayeth &c. doth these things unto God, as by the Angel it is commanded worship God;) and prophesy being directed unto men, (as Paul saith he that prophesieth speaketh unto men;) also the next end of worship, being the glory of God (Ex. 23, 14—17. with John. 12, 20. Act. 8, 27.) but the next end of prophesy being the edifying exhortation & comfort of the church, these things may teach us that prophesy is not worship properly so called, that is proskunesis: but only in a general sense, as latreia or sebasis, even as reading the scriptures (which is for men's edifying, exhortation and comfort as prophesy is) and all other like ecclesiastical actions. And this word latreuo, Paul applieth to himself, in his preaching of the gospel; of whom we may learn what manner of worship prophesy is.

Whereas therefore M. Smyth hath accused us of idolatry, for reading the scriptures in the church (wherein we do but that God commanded, in that manner and to that end) and the man himself calleth and esteemeth prophesy <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> to be worship in the proper sense: he is taken in the snare which he set for the righteous; and if any be idolaters for such things, himself is one and principal. Or, how ever it be for that, all men may see how he hath sought to abuse us by his equivocation, & to shroud himself in a conceited fancy.

Yet one thing more I will observe touching the sacraments, which M. Sm. speaketh not of in this place; but elsewhere in that book saith thus; The publishing of the covenant of grace, and the putting to of the seals: is only one concrete action or part of worship: for the publishing of the covenant giveth being to the seals: otherwise, breaking bread and baptising are but putting of seals to a blank. Here first I note by the way, how M. S. acknowledgeth the Lord's supper and baptism to be seals of the covenant of grace; (as in another place also he calleth them;) yet now being put to his shifts for defense of his anabaptisme, he is driven thus to say, I deny that baptism is the seal of the covenant of the new testament. Thus the windy cloud carrieth himself to and fro, and rather then he will forgo his error, he will contradict that which before he had well written; though it may be also confirmed by the testimony of the holy ghost, who calleth circumcision (the figure of our baptism,) a seal of the righteousness of faith. Rom. 4, 11. But, to the point in hand, if the publishing of the covenant, and the putting to of the seal as baptising with water; breaking, giving, taking, eating of bread &c. be one concrete, that is, one joint action or part of worship (as I grant it is, taking worship generally:) why is not the reading and expounding or preaching of the word, also one conjoined action and part of worship: especially seeing they were joined together in Israel, as Nehem. 8. 8. They read in the book of the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense &c. If the Priests and Levites then whose office was to teach Jacob God's judgments and Israel his law; did thus teach with reading: and if it be true that the Apostle saith, Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, he being read in the synagogues every Sabbath: and if Christ himself first read the text of scripture and after that preached from it: have we not as good ground to say that reading and preaching is one joint action and part of worship, as preaching and baptising? But it was Satan's policy to disgrace the reading of God's book, and seek to thrust it quite out of the worship of God; that men mought prophesy (as now they use to speak,) out of their harts; and honor that as God's proper worship; and so the serpents word if it were mixed with the Lord's, mought the more easily be unespied, the scriptures being absent. But God hath joined his word together with his spirit: that his people should not be deceived by such as walk in the spirit, and lie falsely.

Singing of Psalms. M. Sm. will have to be the third part of worship; because praying and singing Psalms are put together (saith he) in the same sense, (that is, as parts of worship.) 1 Cor. 14. 15 17. I am. 5. 13. Act. 16. 25. And prophesying and psalms are coupled together for the same purpose. 1 Cor. 14. 26.

Here again M. S. omitteth the needful distinction of Psalms and singing of them. For some Psalms are written in the Bible, as canonical scripture, given to the Church for to be read, expounded, and sung: which M. S. himself granteth, even of the translation, saying, It may be read in the Church and sung in tunes. And this singing is with harmony of voices. An other kind of Psalm there is, which one man uttereth in the Church, and others hear him: of which sort the Apostle speaketh, 1 Cor. 14. 26. when ye come together, as everyone of you hath a Psalm, or hath doctrine, or hath a tongue, or hath a revelation, or hath interpretation, let all things be done to edifying. This kind is far inferior to the other, as being uttered by men subject to err as well in singing as in teaching, and it is to be tried by the psalms in scripture, and other authentic books. This was an extraordinary gift as strange tongues and the like. Yet M. S. loving to handle things confusedly, that his error might less appear, speaketh here of singing Psalms as of one sort, and nature. Again, that he might make all serve his own fancy, he describeth singing of Psalms to be the showing of our thanksgiving to God, by the manifestation of the spirit, Philip. 4. 6. 1 Cor. 14, 15—17. Whereas we find in the scripture many Psalms directly penned for doctrine and instruction to the Church, as othersome are for thanksgiving to God: yea matter of all sorts, history of things past, prophesy of things to come, rebuke, threatening, comfort, lamentation, and what not, is mixed in songs of the scripture, and why such Psalms might not by the spirit be suggested to Christians in Paul's time, (as well as thanksgivings,) I know not any reason at all. So that his reasons of prayer & song mentioned together, are insufficient to prove them both of one nature properly; as before is noted of prophesy: rather we are to distinguish praying, singing, prophesying, as three several gifts and works of the spirit: and all of them God's worship and service in the Church according to their several kinds and nature. But it seemeth strange unto me, that M. Sm. should now both allow of the scriptures to be sung in tunes in the Church; and also make the singing by gift of the spirit, a part of God's proper worship in the new testament; and yet he & his disciples to use neither of these in their assemblies. If it be an ordinary part of worship, why perform they it not, but quarrel with us, who accounting it an extraordinary gift now ceased, do content ourselves with joint harmonious singing of the Psalms of holy scripture, to the instruction and comfort of our hearts, and praise of our God. Separating ourselves (as the holy Ghost willeth us) from such as dote about questions and strife of words, whereof cometh envy, contention, and many other evils.

OF THE SCRIPTURES.

HAVING ended the point of worship, with the nature & parts of it: it remaineth now to see, how this thing is applied by M. S. against reading of the scriptures. And first in the general touching all manner writings, he saith that books or writings are in the nature of pictures or images, and therefore in the nature of ceremonies, and so by consequēt reading in a book is ceremonial.

If M. Sm. can prove books & images to be both of a nature, & both alike ceremonies: he may be a Proctor for the Pope, who hath brought images into the Church, for lay men's books. And if the book be to him that readeth, of the nature that an image is to him that gazeth: who would not plead for them both alike, to be used or rejected? But what if another would come and say, that words or speeches are in the nature of trumpets or bells; and therefore in the nature of ceremonies; and so by consequēt as the silver trumpets; & golden bells in the Law were ceremonies, & ended by Christ: so speaking or preaching of the word is likewise ceremonial & men now must be all taught by the spirit. Hath not this as good a color against the audible voice, as the other against the visible writing? For as the sound of the voice affecteth the ear and understanding of the hearer; so the sight of the letter affecteth the eye & understanding of the reader: and as far doth a book differ from an image, in this respect, as a man from a bell. A bell when it soundeth in the ear, yieldeth no distinct articulate voice, for the edifying of the hearer; but a man when he speaketh, is understood of the hearers, & his reanable voice doth edify: so an image when it is looked vpō, affordeth a man no edification (no not if it were an image sent frō heaven, unless it had a voice withal:) but a book when it is read, informeth the mind, and feedeth not the eye only, as doth a picture. An image & picture hath a mouth & speaks not; no spirit or breath of life is in thē: but the book of God, is theopneustos, inspired of God, his spirit & life is in it; it is not a dumb teacher, but speaketh & testifieth the mind of God; and by that which is there written the spirit speaketh to the Churches. Wherefore a main difference is to be put between lifeless pictures & God's lively oracles in his book; & so in all writings. And if M. S. continue in this mind that a book and an image are both of a nature, I could with he would set out no more books, but images in their stead: so should less harm come unto men's souls, then now doth by reading his heretical writings.

But if books and writings be in nature of ceremonies, & reading (as he saith) ceremonial; whereof he giveth this reason, for as the beast in the sacrifices of the old testament was ceremonial, so was the killing of the beast ceremonial;) how is it, that he said before of reading, that it is a lawful ecclesiastical action; doth not the lying tongue vary incontinently? For shall we have legal ceremonies, (the shadow of things to come, whose body is in Christ,) to be used as lawful ecclesiastical actions? may we not then have pictures & images of cherubims &c. for ecclesiastical use; as we have the holy scriptures, which by M. S. religion, are in the nature of images & ceremonies. In another place he saith, As musical instruments and playing upon them was typical, because it was artificial: so reading of a book was typical also, because it is meerartificial. So then the playing on the organs, and the reading of the scriptures are both of a nature, both types and ceremonies, & so abolished.

How near these reasons & groūds do reach to Judaism & Familism, I leave unto the wise to judge; and future things will show more: for as yet the wandering stars have not run all their course.

Of the Original scriptures.

AFTER his censure of books in general, to be of the nature of images: M. Sm. cometh to fight against the use of God's scriptures in his worship; beginning even with the Originals, the Hebrew and Greek as they were written by the prophets & Apostles. Wherein he is fallen into a higher degree of error, or of fraud; then when we had controversy with him: for then his plea was, no translation (for it is apocrypha) but only the canonical scriptures are to used in the church in time of God's worship. Now he will out with canonical scripture also, for the reading of it, he thinketh was a ceremony ended by Christ: thus see we fulfilled the saying of the Prophet, they proceed from evil to worse. And first to prove them ceremonies, he layeth these grounds.

The holy Originals (saith he) signify and represent to our eyes, heavenly things: therefore the book of the law is called the similitude of an heavenly thing. Heb. 9. 19—23. Holy scriptures or writings began with Moses, Exo. 24, 4. and 31. 18. John. 1. 17. 2 Cor. 3, 7. Before Moses, holy men prophesied out of their harts, and received and kept the truth of doctrine by tradition from hand to hand. 2 Pet. 2, 5. Jude ver. 14, 15. Deut. 31, 24. When Moses had written the law, he caused it to be put by the ark in the most holy place, as a witness against the people, Deut. 31, 26. therefore the Apostle calleth it the handwriting in ordinances which was contrary to us, which Christ nailed to his cross. Col. 2, 14, Eph. 2, 15. Hence it followeth that the holy Originals, the Hebrew scripture of the old testament, are ceremonies, 2 Cor. 3, 3, 7 Num. 5, 23. 24. & by necessary consequent. The book or tables of stone, typed unto the Jews their hard heart, void of the true understanding of the law. 2 Cor 3, 3. Hebr. 8. 10. Ezek. 36, 26, 27. 2 Cor. 3, 14, 15. The ink wherewith the letters were written, signified the spirit of God. 2 Cor. 3; 3, Heb. 8, 10. with Exod. 31, 18. The letters written or characters engraven signifieth the work of the spirit, who alone doth write the law in our harts. by proportion. also Deut. 9, 10. with Heb. 8, 10. Reading the words of the law out of the book, signifieth the uttering of the word of God out of the heart, by proportion. See also 2 Cor. 3. 2. 3. 6. 1 Cor. 12, 7. The writings of the old testament being ceremonial, are therefore abolished by Christ only so far forth as they are ceremonial, Col. 2. 14. Gal. 4. 9. The thing signified by the book, viz the law of God & the new testament remaineth, 2 Cor. 3. 11. 7. Heb. 8. 6. 7. 13.

Here first may be observed, how M. Sm. professing to treat of the original scriptures, in which both old and new testament, both law and gospel are written unto us: taketh one part only, to weet, the law or old testament, and from it will conclude against the whole body of the scriptures; and this fallacy he often useth in his writings. But if all he here saith were granted, that the writings of Moses were abolished by Christ: Yet will it not thereupon follow that the writings of the other Prophets and of the Apostles also, are typical, ceremonial and abolished. Nay rather the contrary would follow thus; that as circumcision, and the passover &c. were figurative shadows ended by Christ, no more to be used; but baptism and the Lord's supper instituted by Christ in stead of the former, are continually to be practiced: so the writings of the old testament, if they were shadows & ended by Christ, yet the writings of the new testament, given instead of the other, are never to be abolished.

Secondly, let it be considered what M. Sm. hath here left unto us, not ceremonial and unabolished; the thing signified (saith he) by the book, viz, the law of God and the new testament: but where is this to be had? not in letters written with ink, on paper, or parchment, for all these he saith are ceremonial and so abolished; but written in men's harts as in books, with the spirit as with inck, and so to be uttered by men, out of their harts. If Satan can but persuade this point, he will bring out of men's harts, as out of the bottomless pit, a smoke of heresies, instead of the fiery law of God, & who shall control him. For men's harts now, are the same which God's book was of old; and as Israel fetched their laws, doctrines, worship, and services from the scriptures written with inck: so Christians now must fetch their laws, doctrines, worship. &c. from the harts of men, as from the tables of the law, and what is from thence uttered, is to be counted, as written with inck of God's spirit. For the heavenly things themselves are as much yea more to be honored, esteemed, credited; then the book which was but a type and similitude of heavenly things. H. N. the enemy of God's scriptures, can show no stronger ground for his familism, wherein he reproacheth scripture learning: then this which is here laid by M. Smyth.

But the scriptures and reasons which he hath brought, be far from proving so deadly an error. For the book of God as always, so still, signifieth and representeth to our eyes heavenly things; (although some figurative extraordinary use thereof be abolished:) for it signifieth and teacheth unto us the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. And as the book of the law was a witness against Israel, when they walked rebelliously and with a stiff neck: so is it a witness to this day against all Christians that walk in like sort. But such in Israel as had the word near unto them in their mouth and in their heart for to do it; the book of the Law was a witness for them; a sure testimony giving wisdom to the simple, a perfect law, converting the sowl; and the statutes of the Lord therein, were right unto them, and rejoiced the heart, the commandment of the Lord was pure and gave light unto the eyes: even so to all faithful Christians now, the writings of the Prophets & Apostles is a sure word, to which they do well to take heed, as to a light shining in a dark place; by it they believe, and so come to life; and by it their joy is made full.

Again M. Sm. erroneously substituteth one extraordinary use of some part of the scripture, for the ordinary uses of the whole. Moses wrote in a book the old testament or covenant of works, (summed up in Exod. 20. 21. 22. and 23. chapters;) which book was read in the people's ears, and sprinkled with blood, as the people also was; for a sanction or confirmation of the Testament: in which action there was an extraordinary and figurative use of the book for that time, which now is abolished by Christ's blood which hath confirmed the new testament, and abrogated the old. The holy histories, prophesies, psalms, parables &c. were never thus sprinkled with blood; but only that book wherein the conditions of the covenant were written. Wherefore there were besides this, other ordinary permanent & perpetual uses of the scriptures, by reading them privately and publicly, for the teaching exhorting comforting reproving of the people, according to their daily need & occasion, that every child of God might have knowledge of the certainty of the word of truth, for to answer words of truth to them that sent unto him; as Solomon saith. And therefore as at the public solemn assembly of all Israel in the Sabbath year, the law was read unto them all, that they might learn, & fear God, and keep all his words, they & their children: so at their particular assemblies in their synagogues throughout every city, both Moses and ∴ the Prophets that wrote after him, were read every Sabbath day: and this from old time, even unto Christ's days on earth, who himself in his own person and action allowed and sanctified this holy custom; and commended by his Apostles all the scriptures fore written, unto his disciples; and gave them also other scriptures, for like end and use; & warned them that no man should presume above that which is written. Wherefore it is a deceit of Satan for man's ruin, to seek to make the scriptures generally & wholly ceremonial and abolished; because of that extraordinary use of them at the sanction of the law, at mount Sinai. But the counsel of God unto his people is, seek in the book of the Lord, and read; & search the scriptures, for in them ye think to have eternal life.

As for the law of God to be written in men's hearts by the spirit, this taketh not away the use of the law written in books with ink; for in Israel when the bible was read every Sabbath, David had the law of God within his bowels, whereby he declared righteousness in the great congregation; and as he, so every other righteous man's mouth, spake of wisdom, & his tongue talked of judgment, the law of his God being in his heart, as Moses commanded: yet ceased not the reading of the law out of the book. So at this day, true Christians in whose hearts God's law is written, are not (no though they be ministers extraordinarily furnished with grace) to leave the reading of the law written in books anymore then they did in Israel; and Christ's Apostles have written the word even with paper and ink, as they spake it with voice; to meet with their dotage that dream ink and paper to be merely ceremonial. As for all hypocrites, they are now as heretofore stony hearted, and the outward letter written with ink, resembleth their hypocrisy.

But whereas M, S. having cited Deut. 31. 26. inferreth, therefore the Apostle calleth it the handwriting in ordinances which was contrary to us, which Christ nailed to his cross Col. 2. 14. Eph. 2, 15. he mismatcheth the places: for Paul speaketh of worldly rudiments, the outward services of the Law, (which elsewhere he calleth also beggarly rudiments) such as was circumcisió; the observing of days & months &c. which ordinances were as an handwriting or obligation against the Jews, witnessing that they were debtors unto God, sinners, miserable, & under the curse: unless they saw and learned Christ in them: by whom the obligation is cancelled, and curse done away. For by circumcising themselves, they acknowledged (as by a bill of their hand) that they were born in syn, and impure by nature: even as we by baptising ourselves, do the like. By offering sacrifices for sins, they acknowledged themselves actual transgressors of the law, and the killing of beasts, argued themselves were worthy of death. Now it was not possible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sins, and the law taught them so much: therefore it was a schoolmaster to lead them to Christ, that they might be made righteous by faith. This handwriting which stood thus in decrees against the Jews, and which rose up as an adversary and contrary unto them: Christ blotted or wiped out by his death on the cross, where he spoiled also the principalities and powers, the Devils which were ready to plead against Israel, & urge this hādwriting, these ordinances which they practiced, against them; if they used them not with faith in Christ, but with expectation of justice by works of the law. Now this word handwriting figuratively used and applied to the legal ordinances, M. Smyth taketh properly, for the written law and prophets: as if Christ had blotted out them: and taken them from his Church, even as he took circumcision, altars, sacrifices, &c. which how far it is from truth, I leave unto every conscience ⟨◇⟩ judge. But were it as he thinketh, the written word of God, yet must it then be limited, so far forth only as men do abuse it, and learn not Christ by it; for to such only it is a handwriting, contrary to them: and so is at this day. But this is not the proper use or end of the law or scripture in itself, for it preacheth to men the word of faith, and righteousness thereby in Christ, as well as righteousness by works of the law: and the gospel hath witness of the law and prophets, and they testify of Christ, & are a sure word unto Christians. Wherefore it were woe with us, if these were blotted out, and taken away as ceremonies and shadows abolished: the reading whereof both public and private, is a continual light and comfort to our hearts, and confirmation of our holy faith. And to substitute men's hearts (which are, by testimony of the prophet, deceitful and wicked above all things,) in stead of the holy bible, whose words are all true and faithful: is a miserable exchange; for either men must be as were the prophets, moved and carried by the holy ghost; and so all their words taken for heavenly oracles: or else we shall be fed with chaff in stead of wheat, and drink deadly poison in stead of wholesome liquor.

The serpent is subtle more then any beast of the field: he saw this ground of making the scriptures of God, ceremonies, and abolished by Christ, would be distasted of many, yea of any that feareth God: therefore he laboreth to sweeten this wormwood, with an after receipt: which yet is so tempered, as it may serve to help forward his purpose, in taking the book of God out of the church.

M. Smyth in the next place granteth, that the holy scriptures are the fountain of all truth: the ground and foundation of our faith: that by them all doctrines, and every spirit is to be judged: that they are to be read in the church and to be interpreted: nevertheless, not retained as helps before the eye, in time of spiritual worship.

There is no such battle, as when a man is at war with himself: & it is a special judgment where with God smiteth his enemies. Would any man think that such bitter & sweet waters could come out of one fountain, as have flowed here? Standeth this either with religion or with reason; that that which as an adversary, is blotted out, nailed to Christ's cross, & abolished as being ceremonial and a worldly rudiment; should yet be the fountain of all truth, the ground of faith, &c. If these will stand together, what will not? Then also may circumcision, altars, sacrifices, and other Jewish services, although they were shadows and abolished by Christ; yet be retained and used of Christians, with a little qualification, and distinction of worship properly so called: and this will like the Jews very well. But we that have learned Christ, cannot brook such contrary potions. For if the book, writing & reading of it be Jewish shadows ended and abolished by Christ; and the heart and speaking out of it, be the shadowed thing, the heavenly truth, figured by, and substituted for the other: we would keep the substance, & leave the ceremony for such as follow shadows. But if the book of God, the written scriptures, be the fountain of all truth, and foundation of our faith; as it is in deed, and we so esteem it: then can we not but detest, that former plot, as a groundwork of Satan, that hung up the scriptures as our enemy upon the cross, so blotting them out as a cancelled bond, and abolishing them forever.

Wherefore the reading and expounding of the scriptures, continueth, now as of old in Israel, where the law and prophets were read in the synagogues every Sabbath, for to teach & inform God's people in his ways: so read we them still for like end and use, and shall by God's grace (maugre Satan's slights) so do unto the end. And as for the snare, the distinction I mean, of spiritual worship properly so called. Which was set to take the simple: it is broken before; and the adversary himself, if any man be, is caught with the same.

Yet ceaseth he not, but proceedeth with reasons, that the original scriptures are not given as helps before the ey in worship. But the foundations being already overthrown; we shall with less difficulty and more brevity, discover and do away the errors. His reasons are.

Because Christ used the book to fulfil all righteousness, Mat. 3. 15. & having by the use of the book fulfilled the law of reading, he shut the book in the synagogue, to signify that the ceremony of book worship, or the Ministry of the letter, was now expired and finished. Luk. 4. 20. John. 19. 30.

First here is the law of reading brought to an end, according to that first ground of ceremonies; & contrary to the second grant that the scriptures are to be read in the Church and to be interpreted: which reading and interpreting if it be not God's worship and service, it is the worship of the Devil. Thus M. Sm. wavereth as a reed shaken with the wind.

Secondly, in the other side of the leaf, M. Sm, forgetting himself as a drunken man, saith, all the worship that was appointed by Moses for the Priests, was limited to the holy place, whether the people were not admitted; and therefore reading was of another nature performed in the utter court or synagogue or elsewhere, either by the Levites or any other learned men; (quoting again Luke 4. 16.) and so no part of worship properly so called, but only a ceremonial ground or foundation, of inward or outward spiritual worship, common to the Churches of all ages.

If this be so, how ended Christ the ceremony of book-worship, where none was to end? If there were no proper worship in the synagogues but exercises of another nature; then Christ reading in the synagogue, read not worship; and shutting the book there, shut not up book worship, nor caused it to exspire; and so M. Sm. hath lost his dream.

Again, if Christ by shutting the book there, signified an end of reading; and the reading that there was, (as M. S. even now said,) was such as is common to the Churches of all ages: then Christ hath ended all manner reading whatsoever in the Church, even that which is common to all ages; or else the allegory will turn to a fancy; & so all reading must be abolished out of the Church; & that would the Devil fain bring to pass.

But the reason of ending reading, is slight; that because Christ shut the book and gave it to the Minister, therefore he ended the work of reading. He used not to do such weighty matters, by dumb signs, without word of signification. And if the closing of the book were such a mystery: what was the taking and opening of the book, nothing? proportion will carry it to be the beginning, as well as shutting should be the end. But they be vain speculations, to gather from mute actions, an otherthrow of moral laws, permanent and needful for the the Church in all ages. Neither was this the first or the last time of Christ's reading thus; for as his custom was (saith the scripture) he went into the synagogue and stood up to read: neither was it a decent thing, that he having received the book shut, should redeliver it open; their books being long rolls or volumes, not bound up like ours. Finally this argument against reading, hath like weight of truth, as the Papists have for their vanities, who allege for prayer in a strange tongue, that Christ prayed Eli Eli lama sabachthani, which the people that heard him, understood not: and that he preached out of S. Peters bote, to signify how in S. Peters chair, his doctrine should always be steadfastly professed. Such trifles must be brought where sound proofs are wanting.

2. Because reading words out of a book, is the ministration of the letter. 2 Cor. 3. 6. namely a part of the Ministry of the old testament which is abolished, Heb. 8. 13. 2 Cor. 3. 11. 13. and the ministry of the new testament, is the ministry of the spirit. 2 Cor. 3. 6.

This scripture of the 2. Cor. 3. M. Sm. often allegeth for his purpose; pag. 1. & 7. & 13. & 19. and 20. he thought belike it would sound well in simple folks ears, that the reading of scriptures should be the ministry of the letter. But the ignorance & evil of the allegation is great; and fitted for Satan's policy, to draw men from reading the book of God. For if reading be the Ministration of the Letter there spoken of; then is it the ministration of death & damnation, as the Apostle there calleth it, verse. 7. 9. and then the Papists have doon best of all, forbidding the people to read the scriptures, least they should gather out of them errors, and so death and damnation. And who can comfortably read the scriptures, if that be the ministry of the letter, and so death? But out upon such a slanderous interpretation; it is far from the Apostles meaning. He calleth the Law the letter, figuratively, because it was written with letters, & graved on stones: he intendeth not the books of the Prophets, wherein both law and gospel was written, & always to be read for instruction, comfort & salvation to the people. The law was first spoken, and afterwards written by Moses: the gospel of Christ was also first spoken, and afterwards written by his Apostles. If writing and reading made the other the letter, then maketh it this the letter also; and so the word of life, shall be the ministration of death. The law if it had never been written, but only spoken, yet had it been the ministration of death: for all Israel hearing it, were afraid, and death seised upon their consciences: and this by hearing God's lively voice from heaven, not by hearing the stony tables read, for it is not manifest that ever they were read unto them, but only put and kept in the ark for a testimony. Deut. 10. 1—5. and when the 10. commandments were read out of the book, there was no such fear: and the glory of Moses face terrified the people when he spake and talked with them, for which he put a veil upon him: but of reading out of a book at that time (whereto the Apostle here hath reference,) there is not a word. So it was not reading only but speaking also without book, which was the ministration of the letter to the Jews; and as Paul here calleth the law the letter, so elsewhere he calleth it, the voice of words.

It is not therefore the writing, but the thing written which he intendeth. And if M. Sm. should fall to the heresy of justification by the works of the law, and teach this in prophesy out of his heart, though he never read line in the holy Bible, yet should he be a minister of the letter and of damnation to his disciples.

Of this letter Paul saith, it is the ministration of death: but of the scriptures Christ saith serch them, for in them ye think to have eternal life. Of this letter Paul saith, it is the ministry of condēnation; but of the holy letters in God's book, he saith, they are able to make one wise unto salvation through the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

The law is called the letter (not letters as the scripture is called) by a similitude: for a letter is an outward visible thing appearing to the eye of another that looketh on; whereas the thing whereon it is written, whither paper or stone, is not moved or changed thereby. Such is the doctrine of the law to the professor of it. It maketh him seem a fair hypocrite before men: they look and see the commandments of God written on his forehead, on the fringes of his garments, and on his door posts: but his heart and mind are stony still. For the law reneweth no man, but syn that is in us, taketh occasion by the law, and worketh in us all manner transgression of the law, and so death. But the Gospel is the spirit that reneweth & quickeneth by faith in Christ: and changeth the stony heart into flesh, and writeth there the laws of the most high. Thus by the letter is not meant the holy scriptures, which are God's instrument for our renovation: but the external work of the law upon a man: in which sense Paul also mentioneth circumcision in the letter Rom. 2. 29. meaning outward circumcision of the flesh to be seen and read of men: where to take it as this man doth 2 Cor. 3. of reading the scriptures, were to follow the devouring words of the deceitful tongue.

3. Because upon the day of pentecost and many years after the churches of the new testament did use no books in time of spiritual worship, but prayed, prophesied and sang psalms merely out of their hearts Act. 2, 4. 42. and 10. 44. 48. and 19, 6. 1 Cor. 14, 15, 17, 26, 37.

4. Because no example of the scripture can be shown of any man ordinary or extraordinary, that at or after the day of pentecost used a book, in praying, prophesying, and singing psalms: if yea, let it be done and we yield.

Nay, it is not in men's power to yield to the truth though it be shown them: or though their own writings convince them: it is in God that showeth mercy.

First M. Smyth holdeth that such reading as was in the Jews synagogues was common to the churches of all ages. Secondly he saith the scriptures are to be read in the church, and to be interpreted, Col. 4. 16. compared with Luk. 24, 27, & 1 Cor: 14, 27. and 12. 10 by proportion. 2 Pet. 3. 16. If these assertions and these places alleged, (let the reader look and examine them) prove that the scriptures are to be read in churches; as in deed some of them do: we need fight no longer: the enemy unawares hath yielded the field.

His flourish that he maketh, how the churches of the new testament used no books, because no example can be shown: is a deceitful argument. For when there is a ground from God to do the thing: we are to suppose men did it, although it be not expressly written. And this adversary granteth the scriptures were to be read; and we are sure that the churches were to be taught by the men of God: and Paul saith that all the scripture is profitable to teach, to improve, to correct, to instruct in righteousness: that the man of God, that is the minister of the new testament as well as of the old, may be absolute, & made perfect unto all good works. Wherefore as the Priests and Levites which were to teach Israel, taught them by reading & expounding the scriptures; so doubtless did the ministers in the Apostles days, upon the same ground and proportion; though their particular form of administration be not expressed.

That cavil of spiritual worship which as a leprosy overspreadeth all M. Smiths book, is before taken away. Praying never was by reading out of a book; prophesying & singing psalms, being extraordinary gifts of the spirit, were also uttered by the spirit, without a book. Al this notwithstanding, the scriptures were read and expounded to the people, & so must be still; and this though it be not proskunesis adoration supplicatiō or worshiping of God, in the strict sense; yet is it latreia his worship or service in general.

5 Because none of the books of the new Testament were written many years after the day of Pentecost, at the least 7. years: and the Churches all that time, could not use the books of the New Testament which they had not.

But they could use the books of the prophets, which they had: wherein both old & new Testament were contained. And Peter commended the Churches for taking heed unto them, as to a light that shined in a dark place.

6. Because the Churches of the Greeks had no books to use, that they might use lawfully; for they understood not Hebrew, and the Septuagint's translation ought not to be used or made; & the Apostles made no Greek translatiō. &c.

If they had no books to use, they were blameless if they used none. But they had the Greek translation, which was lawful to be made and used in the Jews synagogues; as anon shall be shown, when the Septuagint's work cometh to be scanned.

7 Because as in prayer, the spirit only is our help; and there is no outward help given of God, for that kind of worship; so also in prophesying and singing 1. Cor. 11. 4. and 14. 16.

God never gave books to read for prayers unto him: but prepared men's hearts and bended his ear. And as every man knew the plague, (and consequently the benefit) in his own heart, so was he to pray & supplicate unto God, who heard in heaven, and was merciful, and did, as he knew every man's ways and heart. But as in praying men speak their minds to God: so in preaching God speaketh his mind to us; and this he doth by his scriptures and by gifts unto men for teaching and applying them ordinarily to his Church. Prophesying and singing, hath often been performed by the spirit without book, both in the Old Testament and in the new. If any now have such gifts, it were folly to say they must read them out of a book. Reading the scriptures is for ordinary teaching; which by extraordinary gifts, was never destroyed; and things coordinate, are not contraries.

8 Because it is against the nature of spiritual worship: for when we read, we receive matter from the book into the heart: when we pray, prophesy, or sing, we utter matter out of the heart, unto the ear of the Church Ezek, 2. 8.—19 and 3. 1.—4. Rev. 10. 8.—11.

If Ezekiel a Priest under the law, prophesied without a book; and yet reading the book of the law and expounding it, was their ordinary service every Sabbath, as before is manifested: all men may see, that these two may stand together in God's worship, and not one throw out another, as M. Sm. would have it.

Neither is it against the nature of spiritual worship, to read God's book in the ears of the Church: for if it be worship in them to hear the spirit speak out of the Ministers heart; it is worship also in them to hear the spirit speak, out of the holy book. And it cannot be denyed but God's spirit speaketh there; and that which cometh out of the heart of man, must be tried by that book; and accordingly, accepted or refused. As for the Minister himself when he readeth out of God's book, and when he speaketh by gift of the spirit the meaning of the scripture, to the people; he serveth God in them both: having Christ himself for an example. Luk. 4. 17.—21.

9. Because upon the day of Pentecost, fiery cloven tongues did appear, not fiery cloven books. Act. 2. 3. and always there must be a proportion betwixt the type and the thing typed. Upon the day of Pentecost the fiery law was given in books, Deut. 33. 2. Exod. 24. 4. 12. upon the day of Pentecost the fiery gospel was given in tongues, Act. 2. 3. Mat 3. 11. Act. 1. 5. the book therefore was proper for them, the tongue for us.

In deed if any fiery books had appeared at the giving of the law, M. Smiths allegory would have had some light: but when as no such thing was seen, but only a voice of words was heard, as Moses telleth us; we should beware of such cloudy collections.

The fiery law mentioned Deut. 33. 2. hath plain reference to God's promulgating of the law, by voice out of the midst of fire, Exod. 19. 18. 19. & 20. 1—18. Deut. 4. 11. 12. Afterwards those & other laws were written by Moses in a book, Exod. 24. 4 and God himself wrote the ten words on tables of stone: not then at Pentecost, but 40. days after, Deut. 9. 9. 10. Even so the fiery doctrine of the gospel was first uttered by voice, and afterwards written in books, Luk 1. 1. 3. Act. 1. 1. &c. John. 20. 30. 31. The book then was not proper to them, (as M. S. feigneth,) but common also with us. God by Moses first spake, then wrote to his Church: Christ by his Apostles, first spake, then wrote also, to the same Church: and though the son of thonder wanted no gift of utterance by voice, yet Christ bad him write: when if he had pleased he could have sent him to speak. And blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of that prophesy, and keep those things which are written therein: but cursed is he that despiseth reading of the Lord's book, and dissuadeth the Church from that use thereof; by colorable reasons causing the blind to go out of the way: and all people should say, Amen.

10. Because as all the worship which Moses taught began in the letter outwardly, and so proceeded inwardly to the spirit of the faithful: so contrarywise all the worship of the N. Testament signified by that typical worship of Moses, must begin at the spirit, and not at the letter originally. 2 Cor. 3. 6. 8. 1 Cor. 12. 7. or else the heavenly thing is not answerable to the similitude thereof.

The true and proper worship which Moses taught Israel was the worship of God in spirit and truth, Deut. 5. 7. 8. and 6. 4. 5. 6. though he led them hereunto, under veils and shadows, and by the covenant of works brought them to Christ, who doeth both that covenant and shadows away as the wise did understand; Psal. 32. 1. 2. with Rom. 4. 4. 5. 6. 7. Psalm. 40. 6. and 51. 6.—16. &c. with Heb. 10. 8. 9. Their spiritual worship, proceeded from the spirit and heart unto God, 1 King. 8. 22. 23. 33. 35. 38. &c. Ezra, 9. 5. 6. &c. Nehem. 9. 5. 6. &c.

Of the legal worship, & M. Smiths inept allegorizing thereof, is spoken before; also his abuse of that scripture, 2 Cor. 3. 6. is already manifested; with his equivocation about this word worship: that the reader may be wearied, to have the same things oft repeated. Only now the falsehood and snare of these reasons against reading God's word, being discovered: let him learn to beware of Satan's deceit. For the mouth of an heretic is a deep pit, like the strange woman's: he with whom the Lord is angry shall fall therein.

After this M. Sm. feigneth 4. objections for book-worship, as he termeth it; and then frameth answers as he seeth good; but ever and anon retiring to his old sconce of spiritual worship, thinking thereby to ward off all blows. Though it be a weariness to follow such an empty cloud; yet for help to the weak, I will briefly show his vanity.

Reading in the old testament was commanded by Moses, Deut. 31. 9-13. was amplified by David, 1 Chron. 16. & 25. was practiced by Josiah 2 Chrō. 34. 30. by Ezra and Nehemiah, Neh. 8. 8. and 9. 3. allowed by our Savior Christ, Luk. 4. 16. & by the Apostles, Act. 13. 14. 15. and reported as a thing of ancient approved continuance. Act. 15. 21.

To this he answereth; First, the reading commanded by Moses was only once every 7. yere, Deut. 31. 10. 11. and therefore it was no part of ordinary worship, and there is no commandment in Moses, given either to the Priests or Levites, for ordinary reading of the law in the tabernacle. Secondly, hence it followeth, that reading in the old testament, was no part of the worship of the tabernacle or temple, or of the service performed by the priests therein, &c. Thirdly, therefore reading was of another nature performed in the utter court or synagogue or elsewhere, either by the Levites or any other learned men of what tribe soever: Math. 23. 2. Luk. 4. 16. Act. 13. 14. and 15, 21. Deut. 31. 9.-11. 1 Chron. 16. 4. 7. 37. 39. & 15. 1. 8. & 28. 13. 2 Chron. 34. 14. 30. 31. Neh. 8. & 9. and so no part of worship properly so called, but only a ceremonial ground or foundation of inward or outward spiritual worship common to the Churches of all ages. Lastly it is not denyed but that reading now is to be used in the Church: only we say it is not a part of spiritual worship, or a lawful means in time of spiritual worship.

M. Smyth cannot see any commandment in Moses for ordinary reading of the law in the tabernacle: and no marvel, for neither could all the Sadducees see any doctrine in Moses that taught the resurrection of the dead; but Christ could find it by necessary consequence: Moses commanded the feast of boothes to be kept seven days to the Lord, mentioning but holy convocations & sacrifices: M. Sm. (I dare say) will not gather reading, out of this commandment. But Ezra the Priest and all Israel with him, saw it here implied and practiced it, by reading the book of the law of God, every day, from the first day unto the last: when they kept this feast. If every seventh day was to be sanctified in Israel, & all things be sanctified by the word and prayer; and in the synagogues they sanctified the Sabbaths by reading the scriptures: reason might teach us, that the tabernacle was not behind the synagogues in holiness. And where findeth M. Sm. a commandment to read the law in the synagogues? yet was it commanded, or else it was will worship and vanity. The ordinance for Levi to teach Israel God's law; was commandment enough both to read and preach it, as they did daily: and they were not so dull or carnal, but they could well perceive this to belong to their charge and ministry.

But here M. Sm. saith, that the reading in Israel was no part of worship properly so called: forgetting himself (it seemeth) when elsewhere he saith, that the worship that beginneth in the book, is from the letter or ceremony and so is not properly of the new testament but of the old; and again that, book-worship is Judaism and so Antichristian; and idolatry now under the New testament; and again, that Christ shut the book in the synagogue to signify that that ceremony of book-worship, or Ministry of the letter was now expired. Thus fighteth he against himself; one while they had book worship; another while it was no part of worship; & if properly so called help not here at a need, M. Sm. will be found a calumniator both of us, and of Israel, and of Christ himself. For he would have his reader think that we whom he opposeth, made arguments for book-worship, which here he answereth, whereas we never spake or thought of reading to be worship in such a sense, as he would draw it unto, nor otherwise worship then reading was in the synagogues, by Christ himself, neither was there controversy about worship at all, but only whether it were God's word or man's, that we read in the Church, in the worship of God. But now to cloak his blasphemous error, he hath dived into his wit, to bring out a distinction of properly so called: so cogging the reader with the die of deceit, and calumniating us. And hath he not also injured Israel in charging them with book worship, and belied Christ himself, that he should use and finish a ceremony of book worship? when yet here he granteth it was of another nature, it was no part of worship properly so called: it was that which is common to the Churches of all ages.

As one tossed in the sea of error, so reedeth this adversary to and fro, and staggereth like a drunken man.

The second objection he forgeth thus. Reading is commanded in the new testament, Col. 7. 16. 1 Thes. 5. 27. and a blessing promised thereto, Rev. 1.5. and the commandment is that it be practiced in the church: therefore it is a part or means of the worship of the new testament.

The sum of his answer hereunto is.

Not everything performed in the Church, is a part of spiritual worship: for all the parts of public administration of the kingdom are done in the Church, and yet cannot be said to be parts of spiritual worship properly so called chap. 1, and 2.

Properly so called, is a common visor of deceit, pulled off before as here it shall be again. For M. Smyth divided the whole liturgy of the church, into actions of the kingdom and of the Priesthood of the saints. chap. 1. and 2. The actions of administering the priesthood, he made to be actions of concord and union: and of these generally he saith, they be actions of spiritual worship properly so called. The actions of administering the kingdom, he made to be actions of opposition, difference plea and strife: and of them generally he saith, they are not actions of spiritual worship properly so called. Now here and often he denieth reading of the scriptures to be such spiritual worship, therefore it is no action of the priesthood; therefore no action of concord or union. So when the Priests and Levites read the law in the synagogues, and at their solemn feasts; we may not say, they did any action of the priesthood; and when Christ read the prophet Isaiah, Luk. 4. we may not say he did an action of concord or union; & when Paul would have his Epistle read in the churches of Colossae & Laodicea; and Christ would have the Revelation read of all, we must not understand them to mean reading as an action of concord or union in the church; for then it must be an action of the priesthood, and consequently worship properly so called: which M. Sm. will by no means admit of: for he hath limited their bounds: and if any read the scriptures in the church as an action of concord and union, he will draw it as by the hair of the head, along these grounds, to be antichristian & idolatrous; so setteth he his mouth against heaven. Yet reading he granteth, but it must be of another nature: and what is that trow we? He is loath to speak: of the priesthood it is no part; and in handling the actions of the kingdom, he specifieth it not; only there he saith, that books of all sorts may be produced for finding out of the truth: and he quoteth among other Act. 7. 22. and 17. 28. 1 Cor. 15. 33, Tit. 1. 12. Where the learning of the Egyptians, and testimonies of the hethen poets are alleged: and further he nameth particularly translations, dictionaries, histories, chronicles, commentaries. &c. Behold here what place this man alloweth the reading of the scriptures, yea even of the Originals: they must not be read but by way of opposition, difference, plea and strife; they must not be read but where when and as histories, chronicles, commentaries, books of hethen poets and all other like, may be read and produced: so they are tolerable, otherwise there is no place allowed them: though elsewhere he esteemeth better of them then of other writings. But in the actions of the priesthood, in the actions of concord or union, to read them is idolatry. What heretic professing Christ could more have sought the disgrace of God's holy book; then thus to shut it quite out of God's worship, allowing it no other place, by these his wicked grounds, then Julian the Apostate Christ's deadly enemy, would and did allow it (though he esteemed worse of it) in his blasphemous writings. For eyen he in cases of opposition, plea and strife, alleged the testimonies of holy scriptures, among other writings; but in his worship of his God's he would none of them. No marvel though God have stricken this man like Elymas with the blindness of Anabaptism; it is a just recompense of his former error: that as he would have deprived the church of the use of the scriptures, the instrument of God's covenant: so himself now should be deprived of the covenant with Abraham and his seed, and become an alien from the common wealth of Israel.

But let us proceed with his answer.

Moreover (saith he) when he commandeth his Epistles to be read in the churches, his meaning is not strictly literal: that is that the very words which he wrote should be repeated verbatim out of the book: but his meaning is that the sense of the words or meaning of the Apostle should be related, whither by reading the very words, by expounding the meaning by interpreting or translating. &c.

Loe here the shifts of heretics. Paul willeth the church to read his Epistles, yea chargeth them in the Lord, to read them to all the brethren; and writeth to them again, to keep the instructions, taught by his Epistle: M. Smyth saith the meaning is not strictly literal, that the words which he wrote should be repeated: but the sense related. As if Paul wanted fit words to set down his meaning, & they that should read, could tell it better. He that readeth, must read words as they ar written, specially in God's book, & Epistles from the holy Ghost, wherein no one word is vain idle or unprofitable, no word misplaced or out of order: and he that shall presume to add or diminish or change the order in reading God's writings, doth wickedly, and is near unto the curse. If things in reading be difficult, God hath given gifts unto men to open and expound them, to the understanding of all: but this expounding is not reading. Reading is first, exactly to the letter; exposition cometh after with such words as God putteth in the expositors heart; as by Daniel's practice, we may learn. Neither are the words of the expositor comparable to the words of the writer; these being divine, are all as silver fined seven times, no dross mixed with them. The other being human, (I speak of ordinary men as we are) and showing the man's judgment that expoundeth them, are mixed with human infirmities, mistakings, and sometime deadly errors. Wherefore reading of the Original scriptures whereof here we treat, must be strictly literal, as is in the book. Translations are after to be spoken of; and is here vainly inserted, for Paul wrote in Greek, which all in Colossae, Laodicea, Thessalonica, and the whole country over, used as their vulgar tongue, that they needed none to translate for them.

Further M. S. answereth, that the Apostle wrote upon particular occasions, for particular ends, and the commandment of reading was special in these respects to them &c. yet acknowledgeth he at last, an absolute necessity of reading; only he denieth it to be a lawful help or part of spiritual worship. &c.

As the Apostles, so the prophets wrote upon particular occasions; yet is there a general use, for whatsoever is fore written, is fore written for our learning, as Paul himself teacheth. Wherefore this cavil is frivolous. An absolute necessity of reading the scriptures now, as they were read in Israel, and in the Christian churches, and to the same end: is all that we hold, and stand for. Which how it is worship is before shown.

The Apostle 1 Tim. 4. 13. 16. commanded Timothy and so all Elders to attend to reading: where reading is joined with exhortation and doctrine; & so importeth, that it is to be understood of the joining of reading in the time of spiritual worship.

This objection (as the rest) is made of M. Smiths own fashion; and was never thus framed by us. And here he excepteth, that it is not spoken of the execution of his office, but of preparing himself to the execution of it. &c.

That reading in the public church is necessary, he is forced to acknowledge: and in that we rest. If he think this place is not meant of public, but of private reading: he may keep his judgment. My self see no cause why it may not also be meant of the public execution of his office; for Paul departing from Ephesus, besought Timothy to abide there and look unto the Church; and after wrote this letter for his direction how to behave himself in God's house, whiles he tarried away, and in it saith, til I come attend to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. where seeing all these are public ecclesiastical actions, (as M. Sm. himself granteth,) seeing they are joined thus together, & with this limitatiō til I come; what letteth but these all should be executed by him in public? Private reading for his own preparation, was to be always, and not only til Paul's coming. And as for such preparation, it is mentioned after, in verse. 15, and both again jointly verse. 16. for the salvation of himself and others.

Let it be granted that the Apostles and Evangelists used no books being extraordinary men, and having the extraordinary direction of the spirit, for they needed no such helps of books as we do: yet we being ordinary men have need of books. &c.

This last objection, I reject as frivolous, and falsely intimated to be ours. The Apostles I am sure had no greater measure of the spirit then Christ: yet he read publicly in the book: and so did holy men of God before him: & public reading is granted yet necessary: therefore we are to use it. Though we have more need of the book then the Apostles, (our memories and judgments not being sanctified like theirs,) yet had they their infirmities, and used books. But it is God's ordinance of reading, that we stand for: which how M S. hath sought to undermine, and how he is snared in the work of his own hands; is worthy to be noted with Higgajon Selah, and meditated to the praise of God.

OF TRANSLATIONS.

THE first and only controversy between M. Sm. and us being about the scriptures translated or overset into other tongues, which he affirmed to be apocrypha and human writings: how ever he hath sought to excuse and hide his error, yet hath he no will to forsake it, as appeareth by this, that having spoken of writings 1. by men inspired of God, as the prophets and Apostles, and 2. by ordinary men of all sorts; he shuffleth the translations of the holy scriptures among these latter; and affirmeth that * there is no better warrant to bring translationsof scripture written into the church, and to read them as parts or helps of worship, then to bring in expositions, resolutions, paraphrasts and sermons upon the scripture, seeing all these are equally human in respect of the work equal lie divine in respect of the matter they handle.

Very impious is this comparison which thus matcheth a man's comment or written sermon, with God's written word set over into another tongue: for it debaseth the majesty of God's law, and advanceth too high, the baseness of men.

Translation is that in writing, which interpretation is in speaking: namely the expressing of an others mind: but commenting or expounding, is the expressing of ones own mind or understanding. The scriptures first written in Hebrew, and secondarily written in English: do set forth one and the same word & mind of God unto us, though which different letters & sownds: as Emmanuel is interpreted and translated God with us, Mat. 1 23. Messias is interpreted CHRIST in Greek; ANOINTED in English. John. 1. 41. Here the Hebrew, Greek and English differ only in outward letter & sound; the meaning substance or essential form being one in them all, & the word of God, so called by relation, because the mind of God is made known hereby to the mind or understanding of man. The different letter or character changeth not the nature of the thing: for if it did, then Emmanuel written by Matthew in Greek letters 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , and by Isaiah in Hebrew letters 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , should not be one and the same name of Christ; and so the Apostle should be made a falser, & our gospel betrayed to faithless Jews. The different sound or pronūciation changeth not the nature of the thing: for then Messias and Christ should not be one and the same; and so the gospel and new testament, and our faith were overthrown; and more then Jewish superstition should prevail. But God who hath sanctified by his spirit, all sounds and languages to the ear: hath also sanctified by the same spirit all letters and characters to the eye; as the Apostles practice showeth, writing with Greek letters, words and phrases; which had been profaned by lying histories and lascivious poets, unto all manner idolatry and wickedness. Herevpon it followeth, that the word of God, in whatsoever letter or language it be written or spoken unto us; is the word of God still; so to be revered and regarded: and not to be basely and profanely counted among human and apocryphal writings.

A comment or exposition of scripture, as for example, upon this word Emmanuel, showeth the man's judgment mind or understanding that commenteth; telleth the reason of this name why it was given to Christ, discourseth of his godhead, of his manhood, of the uniting of these two in one person, of the end and use of these, and many such like things. This being done by ordinary men, is properly an human writing, (though it may be, agreeable to the word of God,) showing by letters as by signs, what is the mind or understanding of such a man in this mystery of Christ's incarnation: even as Paul saith of his own divine writing; when ye read ye may know mine understanding in the mystery of Christ. Ephes. 3. 4.

Now God hath by his Prophets and Apostles written to his Church a short sum of his mind and will; guiding and carrying them, and inspiring their writings with his good spirit; that there should be nothing but words of truth, faithfulness, equity and perfection in them; that men might have a sure ground for their faith and actions, throughout all generations. And minding man's weakness, the holy Ghost hath omitted to write many things, (though otherwise in their nature very good:) penning such only as were needful and profitable for our faith and salvation: giving us warning also to take heed of other things, because there is no end of making many books, and much reading is a weariness to the flesh. Ecclesiast. 12. 12.

But because in these scriptures, some things are hard to be understood, and all men know not how to use and apply God's word unto their times, estates, actions, &c. therefore hath Christ given gifts unto men, to open and apply the scriptures for the edification of the Church unto the worlds end: always binding them both teachers and hearers, to the foundation laid by the Prophets and Apostles, whose writings are sufficient to make men wise unto salvation through the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

For this cause the holy scriptures are necessary for all Churches, to be read & expounded unto the people: & as every nation differeth in language, so to have the word spoken and written in their vulgar tongue, which change of the tongue or letter, changeth not the nature of the word spoken or written, but it is still divine and heavenly. Only because in this changing or translating, imperfections, wants, errors may fall in: therefore the first writings as the Prophets & Apostles penned them, are to be made the absolute canon, rule, touchstone, whereby all translations are to be tried: by which being tried & found faithful, it is the same word of God, in what language or letter soever, & differeth as much from human commentaries or expositions, as heaven doth from earth.

But Mr. Sm. avoucheth men's written sermons or comments upon the scripture, & the scripture itself written in English, to be equally human in respect of the work equally divine in respect of the matter they handle. Of this his bold and false assertion he maketh no proof at all, it is a speculation of his own heart. Two carnal reasons he setteth down, which are these. To translate the originals into any mother tongue is as well and as much the work of a man's wit and learning, as to analyse the scriptures rhetorically or logically, to collect doctrines and uses theologically, to give expositions and interpretations of places doubtful. Where first if M. S. mean the action of translating simply, without reference to the matter and thing translated, he doth but dally and seek to deceive: for writing, printing, translating are all alike human actions, but the things written printed translated, are different, some good some evil, some of God, some of men and of the devil. The books of Moses written printed or translated, are God's law; the book of Mahomet written printed or translated, is the devils law: the actions of writing, printing, translating, are mere human actions in all of these. Now if because translating is an human action, therefore the thing translated must also be human, & the work of man's wit and learning: then also because writing and printing are human actions, therefore the bible written or printed in Hebrew Greek & all languages, must likewise be human, and the work of men's wit and learning: and then there can be no divine scriptures but the very first copies which the Prophets & Apostles wrote with their own hands: And if Satan could persuade this; he would be glad.

Secondly if Mr. Sm. meaneth the thing translated, as Moses law, David's psalms or other like in English: that these are as well and as much the work of a man's wit and learning; as an exposition of doubtful places in them or doctrines and uses collected from them; he teacheth wicked error, which all of judgment & conscience will abhor. The holy scriptures faithfully expressed in English or any language, is the work of God's wisdom & unsearchable knowledge: and cannot without injury to his majesty, be said to be the work of man's wit & learning; though man have used his skill in writing or translating it according to the original copy given of God. This plea of Mr. Sm. is like as if Jeroboam should have said; the cherubims and the brazen bulls in Solomon's temple, are as well and as much the work of man's wit & skil as my golden calves; & if they may be admitted into the house and worship of God, then why not these? If M. Sm. should answer that the cherubims and bulls which Solomon made, were commanded of God, and from the divine pattern, though human art did make them; but Jereboam's calves were from his own heart: so answer I in this case; the translation is from the divine pattern of God's original book, and commanded to be made and used; but to write comments or homilies to read in the Church, is frō a man's own heart, and hath no commandment or warrant from God so to be used; but are forbidden. Eccles. 12. 12.

Secondly he saith The translator cannot conceive nor express in writing the whole mind of the holy spirit contained in the originals, but only some good part of it: the expositor, paraphrast, commentator may express as much as the translator, yea and in respect of some particulars, as Hebraisms, Grecisms and the like considerations much more.

If a translator cannot express the whole mind of the spirit in all the bible, by his interpretation literal or grammatical: then much less can the expositor express the whole mind of the spirit in the bible, by his exposition theological. For it is a thousand times easier for a translator to do his duty to the full, then for the expositor: yea this latter is utterly impossible, I say not only for one man, but for all the men in the world.

Though the translator cannot express to the full every word and sentence in the Bible, yet the most part he may; whereas the expositor cannot do any at all, but is still to seek all days of his life, and they that come after him also.

Hebraisms cannot always be expressed, through defect of the language: yet translation is needful, and the translator is blameless. For example, this name God called in Hebrew Elohim, Gen. 1. 1. is in Greek translated Theos, and that by the Apostles often in the New Testament. Here is a want in the language, for Elohim is in form the plural number, signifying the Trinity; yet joined with a word of the singular number bara, he created: signifying the unity of the persons in the Godhead. Such a phrase the Geek tongue wanted: therefore the Apostles admit of the Greek propriety, doing the full duty of translators & the defect resteth in the language, of which they were not Lord's. And that the Lord respecteth not so much the words and phrases, as the matter meant by them; infinite examples in the scriptures do manifest.

But whereunto leadeth this cavil? what if all cannot be expressed in the translation, shall we therefore have none in the Church? then neither may we have any preaching by the voice of man; for none can fully express in his sermon, all things that God intendeth by a place of scripture, or any ground of religion. And if preaching must be used, though many human infirmities be mixed with it; then also reading the scriptures (and consequently the translations to them that know not the originals,) must be used, though fewer human infirmities be mixed therewithal; seeing these both are the ordinances of God, as before hath been proved.

But then M. Sm. will draw commentaries and homilies into the Church also. But that is denied to be God's ordinance. He hath appointed the lively voice of his graces in the mouths of his servants to be heard in the Church, for the opening and applying of the word unto them: but not their writings to be read. And because of some infirmities in translations, to disgrace them, as this man doth, and match them with commentaries; it is capere (as the Apostle speaketh,) to play the false vintner with the wine of God's word. For as such a falser to make sale of his mixture, wherein some wine, much water, yea perhaps some puddle water is brewed together, mought say, you can have no wine but such as is turned out of the first vessel; and it cannot be in the turning of it out, but some of the spirit and strength of the wine will vapor away, some taste it will have of the new cask; therefore you may as well drink of this liquor, for in respect of the vessel they are both alike changed, in respect of the matter they are both alike wine. Let M. Sm. therefore cease his odious comparisons of the translation with the comment: or else let him show us some comment or sermon written upon any text, wherein at the least there is not water and wine, and perhaps death in the pot.

OF THE LXXII. INTERPRETERS.

HERE M. Smyth before he proceed further, takes up an accusation against the Church of Israel, who in the days of Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Egypt, and at his request sent 72. learned Jews to translate the Hebrew Bible into Greek before the Apostles time almost 300. years. This their translation (saith M. Smyth,) was a grevous syn.

1. For that the covenant of grace ought not to have been preached unto the gentiles til the fullness of time Mat. 10. 5. 6. 1 Tim. 3. 16. Rom. 16. 25. 26. with Mat. 10. 5. 6. & 28. 19. and therefore that the Lxx. by their translation did communicate it to the Grecians, before the fullness of the time, was their grievous syn.

I answer in the behalf of Israel; First, by M. Smiths divinity, the Church of Israel was a carnal people, had a carnal covenant or promise of carnal things, &c. how is it then that he chargeth them here with profaning, the covenant of grace? and how will this agree with his grounds of Anabaptism?

Secondly, by his divinity also, the scriptures and reading of them, is the ministration of the letter 2 Cor. 3. 6. that is of death & damnation; as before hath been handled. How then could the literal translation & reading thereof, be the ministry or covenant of grace? the ministration of death, was fit enough for the Gentiles that were to die. Or, did it kill them before the time?

Thirdly I deny his collection from those scriptures against this action: for although the fullness of time was not yet come, that God would send preachers with the power of his spirit, to convert all nations: yet followeth it not hereupon, that no gentile, no nation, (no not though they desired it, as King Ptolemy desired the Bible;) mought have the truth imparted unto them. There is no such law made of God; nay the contrary is plain. For, 1. there were many strangers, Egyptians & others that went out with Israel to the Land of Canaan, not forbidden nor debarred of grace with Israel, Exod. 12. 38. nay the law admitted any stranger to circumcision & the passover, & so to the covenant of grace, Exod. 12. 48. 49. 1 Cor. 5. 7. 2. The Gibeonites which were of the worst sort of heathens, devote to destruction, yet obtained mercy with God, to be in the covenant of his grace. Josh. 9. 27. 2 Sam. 21. 1. 2. 5. &c.

3. There were also in Solomon's time 153. thousand and 600. strangers, none exempted from partaking with Israel's mercy.

4. God gave his law to be read even unto strangers also, Deut. 31. 12. so far was he from withholding grace, if any sought it.

5. And solomōd dicating the temple prayed even for strangers, that dwelt in far countries, (who mought when they heard of God's name, come thither and pray in that house) that they even all people of the earth mought know God's name, & fear him as did his people Israel. All which do show the untruth of M. Sm. collection, that it was a syn for Israel to impart the scriptures and covenant of grace to the gentiles.

Because all the Gentiles ought to have been Proselytes of the Jews Church, and to have come to Jerusalem to worship, Exod. 12. 43. 49. Mat. 23. 15. Act, 2. . 10. and ought to have learned their tongue and worship, which was prevented by the Lxx. translation.

First, this reason interfereth with the former; for, if all ought to have been proselytes: how might not the covenant of grace be preached unto them? Could they be converted without the word of the covenant? Here the accuser of the Saints hath rolled a stone, which is returned unto himself.

Secondly, their conversion was not hindered but furthered by the Greek translation; for many now might read and hear of God's name, enquire after his truth and finding it, come to Jerusalem, and learn that tongue, if they could. So yet the seventy are not found in syn, which helped men to righteousness.

Because the Hebrew characters and writings were ceremonies, and so ought not to have been profaned among the Grecians by their wrings &c.

Whether the characters were ceremonies or no, the LXX. are innocent of this blame; for they wrote the bible to the gentiles in the Greek characters, syllables, words, sounds &c. and not in Hebrew. If M. Smyth make the substance of the scripture a ceremony, that is a shadow to be ended and abolished at Christ's coming, it is a wicked error. Or if he make the characters ceremonies in that sense, it is erroneous: for the Hebrews converted to Christ may & ought to read the Hebrew scriptures in the Church, as they were wont in their synagogues. The profaning and abusing of the translated scripture was in deed a syn, in all that so did: so was it if any Israelite or stranger profaned the Hebrew. Yet Hebrew copies might go abroad, notwithstanding the danger of profanation, how much more the Greek? The personal sins of some, may not hinder the public good. Otherwise, at this day bibles should not be printed and commonly sold, because atheists and profane people may buy and abuse them. The scriptures are as much to be revered now, as ever they were; although M. Sm. hath labored their disgrace.

If it were unlawful to sing one of David's Psalms in a strange nation as Babylon, Psal. 137. 4. then much more unlawful was it to translate the scriptures into a strange tongue: for the ceremonial law was bounded within the holy land.

If at this day Turks captiving Christians should ask in scorn and mockage to sing some spiritual song for them to laugh at, I doubt not but we should answer them as the Jews did the Babylonians; & not expose God's word to derision. But if any would hereupon infer, it were syn to translate the scriptures into vulgar tongues, M. S. himself would condemn him: like measure must be meted to himself, for these frivolous reasons.

The scriptures were not ceremonies, (though there was some figurative use of the book of the law,) but if they had been, yet this is an error in M. Smyth. to bound them within the holy land. For circumcision was a shadow, (or as he calleth it, a ceremony) yet did they it in Babylon, and many shadows moe. And for the scriptures, who doubteth but the Jews had and used them in Babel, which was out of the holy land: Yea some of the scripture was written and sent to Babylon, as Ier. 29. 1. &c. some written in Babylon, as the prophetes of Ezekiel and Daniel, Ezek. 1. 1. &c. and some written in the Babylonian language, and not in Hebrew, as Ezra. 4. 7. 8. &c. Dan. 2. 4. 5. &c. Wherefore if any Babylonian would have sought for God, the scriptures should not have been denyed him.

The translation &c. is contradictory to the Lord's mercy to the Jews Church, and their special privileges. Psal. 147. 19. 20. Rom. 3. 1. 2. Act. 10. 28. and 22. 1. 2. 3. 4—18. Eph. 2. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. Act. 13. 46. 47. 48. Rom. 16. 25. 26.

This reason is in a manner the same with the first, and so before answered.

The Jews privileges even then appeared, that the Gentiles must have the instrument of mercy, the scriptures from them. And that God gave them this not for themselves only, but also for the Gentiles occasionally, is before proved. General mercy I know there was not, as is now under Christ.

Peters fact was called in question, about conversing and eating with them, being uncircumcised, Act. 11, 2. 3. not for letting them partake of the privilege of God's word: for it was permitted the Gentiles to hear the word read and preached in the synagogues, as appeareth Acts. 13. 42. 44. 46. 48. And how was it contradictory to God's mercy to the Jews, when his prophets wrote some of the scriptures in the heathens language: as did Daniel and Ezra, which are mentioned before.

Because that seeing the Hebrew writings were ceremonies, it was unlawful for the Septuagint to change them from their proper kind, and to picture them out by the Greek writings for the Greeks use.

Here again is a repetition of the third reason, refuted before: and if he will he may make it twenty; by a little change of the words. But the weight of the argument is shown to be too light: and Greek writings for Greeks use, was no more unlawful, then Chaldee writing for the Chaldeans use; which the LXX. had learned by Daniel's example, if no way else.

Because the LXX did of purpose conceal many things, as judging the Gentiles unworthy to know them fearing also least they should profane such holy mysteries, wherein their consciences told them plainly that their translation was syn. Also they did pervert many things of purpose, add something, and infinitely corrupt their translation, which was their grievous synn.

This last reason seems to come from M. Smiths jealous head, or surmising heart: and it is overthrown by himself. For a little after he saith, it is manifest by histories that the LXX. translation is lost; and this that goeth under the name of the LXX. is a patcherie made out of ancient writings. If this be so, how knows this accuser, that they infinitely corrupted their translation? seeing he never saw their work, which long since is lost? Belike he thought it might be so; and therefore he wrote it was so. If he make not better proof of this his heinous charge; all men may see whose son he is, that so calumniateth the saints: & readeth without book not only their infinite errors, but what their consciences told them also.

His inference hereupon, that the Apostles would never account so sinful a translation to be holy scripture coming from the holy Ghost, nor approve the use of it in the Greek churches; This falleth with his weak reasons: there being no such grievous syn proved against the Greek translation: but rather we may judge it a blessed work of God, that hereby brought many Gentiles to be proselytes, and prepared them for the receiving of the gospel. Albeit I deny not but errors were in the translation, some of which as occasion was, the Apostles in their writings did amend. And whereas he further saith, there could be no use of the LXX translation for reading in the latin church of the Romans. I answer, First if there was use of it, in the Greek churches only: it is enough to warrant like use of translations in all churches, in what tongue soever. Secondly, there could be use of it even in the church of Rome, where the Greek tongue was commonly known before the Apostles time, as Tullie testifieth, and the poets taxed the people for it. And if they understood not Greek, is it likely that Paul would have written his Epistle to the Romans in Greek, as he did? seeing he misliked speaking (and consequently writing,) in an unknown tongue. 1 Cor. 14. 6. 18. 19.

M. Sm. having spent his strength, (though in vain) to heap syn upon Israel for translating the bible: proceedeth unto arguments against reading translations in time of worship. Where first

I will give the reader advertisement, how contrary this enemy is to himself: and then I will come to his fraud against the truth. Of the scriptures set over into other languages, commonly called translations; he thus affirmeth A translation is as much and as truly an human writing, as the apocrypha (so commonly called) writings are. Again he saith, Translations are not the pure word of God, and so contrary to Eccles. 12. 10. Mat. 15, 9. Again, that translations of scripture, and written sermons upon the scripture, are equally human in respect of the work, equally divine in respect of the matter they handle. These and the like blasphemous opinions he sought to infect our church withal, for which he was resisted: these labored he by word and writing to confirm, with sophistical reasons, the pillars of all heresy. Yet even in this same book, he pulleth down this his former uncouth building; it being the nature of error, as the foolish woman, to destroy her house with her own hands. For afterwards he writeth thus, The translation agreeable to the originals, is a secondary scripture, yet much inferior to the originals. So then it is not apocryphal, unless he use a fallacy in this word scripture: for we understand hereby (as Christ himself did) holy scripture, inspired of God: as 2 Tim. 3. 15. 16. It may be read (saith he) in the church, and sung in tunes. Then (say I) it is not as the apocryphal (so commonly called) writings are: for their very name signifying hidden, teacheth that they are not to be read in the public church. It may (saith he) be expounded in the church. But so (say I) may not homilies be, nor apocryphal writings. And if M. S. in his synagogue do read and expound such scriptures to his people, he maketh thē with himself notorious idolaters. Exod. 20. 4. 5. 2 Tim. 3. 16. 17. Eccle. 12. 10. The matter of it (saith he) agreeable to the originals, is inspired to weat, of God. But the matter (say I) of the Apocryphal books, as Judith, Tobie &c. though exactly translated, is not inspired unless of the Devil; for lies and fables are in them both, the translations I mean, and the original Greek copies. It may be made a ground of our faith (saith he) and an instrument to try doctrine by. Then is it (say I) not apocryphal but Canonical: for it is made a canon, that is, a rule of our faith and walking. But far be it that human apocryphal writings should have such use in the Church of God▪ Will M. Sm. ground his faith upon this, that there are seven holy Angels, which present the prayers of the Saints; and that lying Raphael, (of the kindred of Azarias,) is one of them? will he ground his faith upon this, that the smell of the heart and liver of a fish perfumed on the coles, will so drive away the Devil, that he shall never come again anymore? or will he have his disciples to try their religion by such crooked instruments? no marvel though they be led with him into the ditch, when they try his doctrine by that which they profess to be as much and as truly an human writing, as the Apocrypha (commonly so called) writings are. For it argueth that either they use the Bible but for a show and color, (seeing they esteem so vily of it:) or else that they honor the base borne apocrypha, as inspired of God. Which is the very syn & snare, that they have sought to bring upon us.

Now let us examine his arguments.

1 Thes. 5. 21. Try all things, keep that good thing. But no man ignorant of the tongues can try whither the translation be fit or good: & therefore no man ignorant of the tongues, can strictly keep or read a translation in time of worship.

Here first M. Sm. striking at the translation, mysseth that, and hitteth only the ignorant reader of it: for if one have skil of the tongues, & know it to be truly translated; this reason maketh nothing against his reading, but for it. So M. Sm. plays the sophister, to argue against a holy thing, because of the ignorances & infirmities of some men. He mought thus have cavilled against reading the law in Israel; that no man blind of sight (as was Ahijah the prophet) could try whither the original scriptures were truly written or not.

Secondly, if he proceed further as he hath begun, hereafter he may come with like reason thus: Try all things, keep the good thing; but no man ignorant of the tongues, can try whither the interpretation of scriptures which the minister giveth in preaching the word, or any text that he allegeth in his doctrine be fit or good; then mind what conclusion the Devil will make hereupon, in a simple man's conscience: to draw him to doubt of, and consequently to forsake and despise, not only all reading, but also preaching of the word, because he being ignorant of the tongues, cannot judge or try whither that which is read or taught be true; according to the original scriptures. And thus he falleth into the snare of Satan, which Mr. Sm. here hath set in secret.

Thirdly, this reason overthwarteth that which elsewhere the man granteth; that the translation may be made the ground of our faith and an instrument to try doctrine by. This being so, how doth Paul's counsel (Try all things &c.) make against translations?

Rom. 14 23. 1. Tim. 1. 4. - 7. Heb. 11. 6. whatsoever cometh not from faith is syn. but no man ignorant of the tongues can of faith use the translation, seeing he cannot examine it whither it be good or bad; and so beleve or refuse it. Therefore it is not of faith in him, and so it is syn for him, to use it before the eye in time of worship.

Like sophistry and impiety is in this argument as in the former; for it concludes not the thing unlawful in it self, but only in him that is ignorant of the tongues; and his faith, it seeks to shake. For there is no faith without God's word, and where to have this word he cannot tell. If it be set over from the originals to his mother tongue in writing, he cannot try whither it be good or bad: if the Minister translate or interpret it by voice, the poor man is as much uncertain, or more, whither the teacher speak true or false. Thus can he neither read nor hear of saith, if M. Smiths engine once take him: But either he must look for enthusiasms, or revelations from heaven; (which some Anabaptists have dreamed of;) or else, he falleth to profaneness or desperation. And it is not M. Sm. distinction of worship properly so called, that here will comfort the troubled sowl; for he must do all, especially his ecclesiastical & religious actions of faith, and not his proper worship only. Yea the serpent will build more on this rotten foundation, and assault him also that hath skil in the tongues and trouble him, saying; though thou hast knowledge of Hebrew and Greek, yet how canst thou tell whither this that thou readest, be the pure word of God? There be many Jewish fables and human traditions, that have been written in Hebrew, and in Greek also: and whither God spake or wrote these things, as now thou readest them, thou knowest not: and therefore canst not of faith make this book a ground of thy religion and worship. And if thou wilt credit M. Smyth, loe he telleth thee, that as Antichrist hath polluted all God's ordinances, so hath he violated the original scriptures. Do not thou therefore build thy faith upon the scriptures any longer; but believe that which M. Smyth and his like, shall prophesy out of their harts, for so he saith, holy men prophesied before Moses time: (and indeed so some prophesied in Ezekiel's time, though they were blamed for it:) & books are in the nature of pictures and images, and therefore ceremonies, and reading a book is ceremonial; and reading Prophesies in the time of the law, was a type of prophesying: and reading the words of the law out of the book, signified the lettering of the words of God out of the heart: and Christ fulfilled the law of reading, and shut the book in the synagogue, to signify that the ceremony of book-worship or ministry of the letter was now expired and finished: and now the worship of the new testament must proceed originally from the heart and spirit. Wherefore lay aside the scriptures, and hear what men shall prophesy out of their harts; or if that like thee not, expect thou revelations and visions from heaven. Thus M. Sm. as a snare on Mispah, & a net spread upon Tabor, hath laid in his book such a groundwork against the script<sup>r</sup> as fitteth the Devils purpose to intāgle men's sowls; although to deceive the birds withal, he hath strewed some wheat at the mouth of the pit, as, that translations may be made the ground of our faith, & an instrument to try doctrine by: &c. so breathing out of one mouth, both hot and cold.

A translation made verbatim from the originals is absurd by reason of the difference of the dialects, & therefore unlawful seeing it edifieth not, 1 Cor. 14. 26. a translation paraphrastical or a paraphrast if it be lawful in time of worship to be read then why not a written sermon.

These are but blocks, to make the blind stumble. God's word may be set over into English, for the most part word for word without absurdity: and where our language will not bear the strict propriety of the original phrases; we are warranted by the Apostles allegations of scriptures in another tongue, to use such words as the language will afford, to express the other withal. Though tongues differ one from another in propriety of speeches: yet God hath sanctified them all, for instruments to convey his word and law unto us; and this in writing as well as in speaking. Dan. 2. 4. &c. Act. 1. 4. 8. 9.—11. & 15. 23. Rev. 1. 11. 19.

Written sermons are the works of men: God's book set over into English, though with some diversity of phrase, is God's book and word still; for (as hath been shown) it is not the letter or sound, but the thing signified & meant by them, which properly is God's word, and which we are so to reverence. But M. Sm. having granted that the translation may be read in the Church, made a ground of our faith &c. and now asking why a written sermon is not also lawful in God's worship: either alloweth human writings to be read in the Church, as well as God's writings translated, which is a notable error; or else he cavilleth against the truth, contrary to his conscience: And in his reasoning, dealeth like a false coyner; who because the gold of the common wealth is not so fine perhaps, as the gold of Ophir or Uphaz: saith to the merchant, if such course metal may be taken for money; then why not brass or copper?

A paraphrast, commentary or exposition upon a chapter which containeth more of the contents of the originals and the holy Ghosts meaning is unlawful to be read in time of worship: therefore a translation of a chapter which containeth less, is unlawful also to be read in time of worship.

First by Mr. Sm. ground laid in the beginning; a paraphrase, comment or any human writing, may be used in the administration of Christ's kingdom, in like sort as the scriptures; which is erroneous. Secondly he addeth more to his error, in teaching here that a commentary hath more of the contents of the holy Ghosts meaning then the text itself in English or other translations. His cōclusiō therefore bringeth forth vanity, and his belly hath prepared deceit. No commentary in the world made by an ordinary man, containeth the meaning of God, so as the text itself in a faithful translation of the book or chapter doth. Thirdly, Mr. Sm. confesseth that the matter of the translation agreeable to the originals is inspired: but not the writing or character. If the thing written be inspired of God, then is it canonical scripture, 2. Tim. 3. 16. then not apocryphal nor an human work, as a commentary: then containeth it more of the contents of the originals, then any man's exposition. As for his exception of the writing or character, it is but vanity: for the Apostles had the matter of their writings by inspiration, frō God: as for the writing or character, that was not inspired▪ but God's word was written in such characters, words, phrases, as the hethen Greeks, philosophers and Poets, had used long before.

Lev. 22. 22. Mal. 1. 8. 13. 14. Mat. 22. 37. Rō. 12. 1. 2. Ps. 119. 45. & 103. 1. God will be served with the best we have. But there is no one translation the best we hav, seeing the Lord may in time of worship, minister better to him that administereth, if he understand the originals; if he understand not the originals he hath it not at all, for it is another man's work; and therefore no one translation written may be read in time of worship.

M. Sm. is like one of them that hunteth the souls of God's people; setting reasons as hayes to entangle. No one translation (saith he) is the best we have seeing the Lord may in time of worship minister a better: as good a reason against reading the translated scriptures▪ tures, as if he should have said unto an Israelite, no one sheep of thy pasture is the best thou hast: seeing the Lord may in time of worship minister a better, (as he did the ram to Abraham:) therefore no one sheep of them may be offered for sacrifice Mal. 1. 8. Nay his reason against translations hath not so good a color as this: for it is certain that God once ministered a ram to Abraham for sacrifice; but it was never heard that God so ministered another translated book to read, then that which was brought to be read. The gift of interpreting or expounding by voice, is of another kind, and not properly reading, whereof we entreat. But let us follow M. Sm. in his circle, & see whither he will lead us. No translated bible may be read in God's worship, for God may minister a better: what then? shall I bring the original bible & look on that, expecting what interpretation God will give me to speak: seeing I may not read? Not so neither (saith M. S.) the holy original scriptures are not to be retained as helps before the eye in time of spiritual worship: So then neither is that the best sacrifice yet, but I must expect the Lord to minister a better. If neither the translated bible nor the original be the best: where then is the word that is best to be read or uttered to the people? In a man's own heart: that must be the book out of which M. Sm. will have God's law to be read in his worship: all other books are as images and ceremonies, abolished, & ended by Christ. Though he plead here against translations, colourably; yet he aimeth at God's book generally, even as his holy Prophets and Apostles wrote it. But the wickedness of this engine is before discovered. Also for translations this further I say; the scriptures in English are the best for to read unto English ears; better then either Hebrew or Greek, which they cannot hear. And seeing it is needful the scriptures should be read; the translation is best. Yet so, as no Christian is tied to the words of the book, but if he know any error in print or translation, or any better words to express God's mind; he is to do all things for the best unto the church; giving the sense together with his reading, as the practice was in Israel, Nehem. 8. 8. But he that withdraweth corn, the people shall curse him, saith Solomon: how much more deserveth this mā the curse of God's people, that hath sought to withdraw from them in all their public worship, the whole scriptures and book of God, whereby the true corn and bread of their souls, is broken unto them.

Deut. 16. 16. 1 Chro. 21. 24. Eph. 4. 8. Rom. 12. 3. we must worship God with our own, not with another man's: with that which cost us something, not with that which cost us nothing. But for one ignorant of the tongues to read the translation and offer it to God, is to offer to God another man's labor not his own, that which cost him nothing, but is another man's cost, therefore it is unlawful.

Al wisdoms words are plain and straight; but M. Smiths are rough and crooked. Who ever said before, that men read translations and offered them to God? He mought as well have said, we minister the sacraments unto God. For if he mean, the last end is the glory of God: so is it of all a Christian man's actions. Did Paul when he charged that his Epistle should be read unto all the brethren the saints, mean they should read and offer it unto God? Or had it been for them to except (as this man here cavilleth) we must worship God with our own, not with another man's, with that which cost us something, not with that which cost us nothing: but this Epistle cost us nothing, it is another man's cost and pains: therefore it is unlawful to read it, and offer it to God. If this reason had been ridiculous in them, why they would not read Paul's Epistle: even so is it here in M. Smyth, for we read the bible (which is God's Epistle unto us,) in no other manner, nor to no other end then they read Paul's letter which was part of holy scripture) in the church, and the book costeth us as much, as that cost them. And David which would not offer burnt offerings wthout cost: would he not read, or be at the reading of the book of the law in the church, because it cost him nothing, but had been written by Moses, and freely given unto Israel? Never was there heard more childish sophisms. But what if a man translate a book or chapter or text himself and writeth it: this is his own cost, I think: & then he may read and offer it to God, or else M. S. cavilling is little worth.

Reading a translatiō is not commanded, nor was ever practiced by Christ, the Apostles, or primitive churches in time of worship, & so being devised by mā, is the account of vain worship Mat. 15. 9. and will-worship Col. 2. 23. and so a kind of idolatry, and therefore the translation is self before the eye in time of worship an idol, and so hath a curse denounced against the use of it in time of worship. Rev. 22. 18. Exod. 20. 4. 5.

Though they curse, yet thou wilt bless, saith David to God against his enemies: and so say I against this adversary, who curseth the reading of the scriptures, as a will-worship; which God hath blessed: so maketh he himself by his blasphemy, a child of the curse. And by his own mouth let him be judged: for thus he writeth in his book. Mat. 28. Christ commandeth to go teach all nations, and therefore all nations may have the holy scriptures translated into their own vernacular tongue, that thereby they may learn the truth. Then further he addeth. The translation agreeable to the originals, may be read in the church and sung in tunes, may be expounded in the church, may be made a ground of our faith &c. From whence I reason, if Christ commanding the Apostles to teach Mat. 28. did thereby intimate a commandment (or permission) of translations to learn the truth by; and such translations may be read & expounded in the church, & made a ground of our faith: then we & all other Christian churches that have made and used translations to this end, are not idolaters, neither have used will-worship, nor incurred the curse: but it hangeth over M. S. own head, if he prevent it not by repentance.

Writing and reading the law is a part of preaching the law, Act. 15. 21. Deut. 33. 10. with Nehem. 8, 7, 8, Mat. 28. 19. with 1 Thes. 5, 27, Eph. 3, 4, Col. 4, 16, Rev. 10, 10, 11. with Rev. 1, 19, and 22. 18. Preaching must be in all languages, therefore writing and reading must be in all languages: & being a part of preaching of the word and one joint action with it, (so as one and the same word is used in the holy tongue both for to read and to preach,) it is a part of the worship or service of God in spirit, in the gospel of his son, as Paul speaketh; Rom. 1. 9. But woe unto them that speak good of evil, and evil of good; and with feigned words make merchandise of men's souls: their judgment long ago is not far off, and their damnation sleepeth not.

A translation being the work of a man's wit and learning, is as much and as truly an human writing as the Apocrypha (so commonly called) writings are; and seeing it hath not the allowance of holy men inspired but is of an hidden authority, it may be justly called Apocryphon, for the signification of the word importeth so much, and therefore not to be brought into the worship of God to be read.

The Apocryphal writings are human both in matter and form, in language, letter, words, sentences, method and order: the book of God set over into English, notwithstanding the difference of the letters and sounds, is yet for the substance divine, the words, sentences and method heavenly. He that translateth faithfully, altereth not the nature of the work translated, neither maketh he it his own. Luke translating into Greek Isaiah prophesy from the Hebrew, (Luk. 4. 17. 18.) and we translating it into English, have not changed the prophesy itself, from divine to human, from God's work to man's: it was no fruit of our wit or learning to find out such a prophesy of Christ; but we understanding the originals, express the same thing in English which Isaiah wrote, and it is his prophesy not ours. And the visions of John in the Revelation now Englished; are not as much and as truly an human writing, as if M. Smyth should make a book of visions or dreams, out of his own wit and learning, and set it forth in English. Wherefore his heart is stricken with the darkness of Egypt, that can see no difference betwixt the Prophets and Apostles set over into our tongue, and other men's apocryphal writings; but maketh these alike as much and as truly human.

Again this enemy of God's book is herein condemned by his own mouth, for the apocrypha commonly so called, are holden and described thus; These books &c. are called apocrypha, that is books which were not received by a common consent to be read and expounded publicly in the church, neither yet served to prove any point of Christian religion, save inasmuch as they had the consent of the other scriptures called canonical to confirm the same, or rather whereon they were grounded.

These things are spoken of the Apocrypha, not as touching the outward letter or language, but for the substance or things in them contained.

But M. Smyth alloweth translations to be read and expounded publicly in in the Church, and made a ground of our faith: which agreeth as well with this his argument, as did the evil servants plea with his practice. Luk 19. 20. 22. &c.

Al the arguments used against the reading of homilies and prayers, may be applied against the reading of translations in time of worship, as, 1. they do stint or quench the spirit, which is contrary to 1 Thes. 5. 19. 20. 2 Cor. 3. 17. 2. They are not the pure word of God: and so contrary to Eccles. 12. 10. Mat. 15. 9. 3. They are the private works of men: contrary to 1 Cor. 12. 7. 8. 2 Pet. 1. 20. 4. They are the private openings or interpretations of the prophecies of scripture, contrary to 2 Pet. 1. 20. 5. They contradict the gifts bestowed by Christ upon the church for the work of the ministry: contrary to Eph. 4. 8. 11. 12. Act. 2. 4. Joh. 16. 7. 6. They derogate from the virtue of Christ's ascension, and dignity of his kingdom: contrary to Ephe. 4. 8. 7. They blemish Christ's bounty to and care of his church, contrary to John. 14. 16. 18. 26. 8. They disgrace the spirit of God, setting him to school: contrary to 1 John. 2. 27. 9. They bring into the church a strange ministration, contrary to 1 Cor. 12. 5. and so a new part of the Gospel or covenant, contrary to Gal. 3. 15. 10. They do not manifest the spirit which cometh from within, but the letter which cometh from without 2 Cor. 3. 6. Therefore they are not spiritual worship, Joh. 4. 24. with 2 Cor. 3. 17. Gal. 5. 1. and 4. 31.

Indeed if lies may go for arguments, here is a heap. What Lucian could have written more reproachfully & slanderously of the holy scriptures? Cannot the written word and spirit of God, his scriptures and his gifts to open them, stand together: but one must contradict, stint, quench, and disgrace another? Did Christ when he took the book, read the text, and after spake from the same to the people: did he herein contradict his own gifts, blemish his own bounty, stint or quench the spirit in him? or did the church of Israel contradict God's gifts or quench his spirit, when they preached & read the law every Sabbath: Or did the churches of Colossae, Thessalonica &c. run into any of these evils, by reading the scriptures in the public assemblies? Nay rather this adversary would quench the spirit, by abolishing the scriptures out of God's worship: seeing God's spirit is in his scriptures, and he having commanded them to be written, commandeth also him that hath an ear, to hear what in them the spirit speaketh to the churches. Let him not here cavil that he meaneth these things of translations only; for we have heard before, how even the original scriptures are also by him shut out of God's worship; and the reading of them so, condemned for ministration of the letter, Judaism & Antichristian.

But some special things here are, which he seemeth to bend at translations only: as that they are not the pure word of God, and so contrary to Eccles. 12. 10. Math. 15. 9. So then belike, when we read the laws of God, thou shalt not kill; thou shalt not steal; honor thy father and thy mother: or any other scriptures how faithfully soever translated into English; we read not the pure word of God; nor as Solomon saith, an upright writing, the words of truth: but we do that which Christ blamed the Pharisees for, Matth. 15. 9. worship God in vain, teaching doctrines the precepts of men. Loe here some part of the deepness of Satan, who would persuade that the pure word of God, the upright writing, the words of truth, cannot be written in English; no nor spoken; for if they may be spoken, they may be written: but whatsoever is written, (& by consequent spoken) of us in our mother tongue, is a doctrine and precept of men. For thus far reacheth this impious argument.

Again where he calleth them private works of men, private openings or interpretations of propheties, contrary to 1 Corin. 12. 7. 8. 2 Pet 1. 20. he injureth the holy scriptures: for the work or thing itself is God's, whosoever hath written, printed or translated it. The decree of King Ahashverosh, when it was translated and published into all the provinces after every people's language, was it a private decree of him that translated or wrote it? If M. Smyth should translate Paul's Epistles, or John's Revelation; should we esteem them M. Smiths epistles or visions? These be but delusions to make the work his, or of the nature of him, that is but the interpreter or oversetter of the same.

Neither do the scriptures by him alleged, speak ought against trāslations; for God having given to his church, the scriptures for a a ground of their faith; and gracious gifts unto men for opening and applying the scriptures: the one of these destroyeth not the other, but they confirm ech other. And Peter speaketh not of translation or grammatical interpretation of a tongue, called hermencia: which even an infidel that wanteth God's spirit, yet having skil in the tongues, can do: but he speaketh of a theological resolution, opening and applying of the propheties, called of him epilysis, which may be done without any translating at all, as Christ unlosed or expounded his own parables, Mark. 4. 34. and as Joseph opened or expounded the dreams told unto him.

Thus see we the weakness of these reasons; and how M. Smyth quoteth many scriptures to prove things that we all hold: as that it is syn to quench the spirit, to contradict God's gifts &c. but for that which we deny, namely, that in reading the scriptures we commit these evils; this be will have taken for granted: thinking belike his readers will be so simple, that if any one propositiō of an argument be proved, the whole shall be yielded unto. How then doth he reason against us in vain, seeing in his arguments there remains but leasing?

The last of his reasons followeth.

Children may read a translation perfectly well: but children cannot perform any part of spiritual worship: therefore reading a translation is no part of spiritual worship.

The second proposition is untrue, and injurious to all the children of God; and the Devil it seemeth put in his heart to write this, as a ground of his anabaptisme, whereunto soon after he drew him; and now hath moved him to write further, that an infant is no more capable of baptism then is any unreasonable or unsensible creature; thus evil men and deceivers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. Is not the praising of God, a part of his worship? & Christ when the children cried Hosanna in the temple, defended their fact against cavilling Jews, by this, that out of the mouth of babes and fuklings, God had made perfect the praise. Mat. 21. 15. 16. Wherefore this one testimony is enough to confute and still this enemy and avenger, whom Satan useth to wreak his teen upon the children and infants of the Lord.

But I will turn his own weapon against him thus. Mr. Sm. anabaptized himself with water: but a child could have done the like unto himself, who cannot perform any part of spiritual worship: therefore Mr. Sm. anabaptising himself with water, did no part of spiritual worship: and consequently it was carnal worship, and service of the Devil. If he answer, that a child though he could cast water on himself, & utter such words as he heard Mr. Sm. speak withal; yet could he not preach or open the covenant as Mr. Sm. did: I answer in like manner, though children may read the scriptures perfectly well; yet can they not preach nor open the covenant as did the Priests and Levites, Nehem. 8. 8. and as Christ himself did when he read in the synagogue, Luk. 4. Wherefore reading and preaching being joined together, as baptising with water & preaching: he that condemns the one outward action because a child can do it, condemneth also the other by the like reason. And Mr. Sm. having thus written of children, and doon to himself; the babes and sucklings whose souls he would murder by depriving them of the covenant promise and visible seal of salvation in the Church; shall rise up in judgment & shall condemn him in the day of Christ.

Objections for translations answered and maintained.

After this Mr. Sm. professeth to answer objections for translations: where he taketh his liberty to make the objections, as liked him best to answer, thus.

Rom. 4. 3. What saith the scripture, and then followeth the Septuagint's translation. Heb. 3. 7. The holy Ghost saith; and then follow the words of the Lxx. translation: and it is observed that the Apostles quote the words of the seventies translation not only where they expound the meaning of the holy Ghost, as Heb. 10. 5. Rom. 4. 3. where the Apostles follow the Lxx. not the Hebrew, but also in their devises besides the original; as in the second Cainan, Luk. 3. 36. 37. and in the 75. persons of Iaakobs family, Act. 7. 14. whereas there is but one Cainan and 70. persons in the Hebrew.

If the originals themselves are not to be used as helps in time of spiritual worship, as hath been proved; then this objection is of no force for translations.

But the original scriptures are to be used in God's public worship, by such as understand them; as hath ben proved: therefore this answer is of no force against translations.

Secondly, if it were of force to bring translations to be read in time of worship, it were available thus far even to bring in to the time of worship, the errors of the translations. &c.

Whatsoever the Scripture & holy Ghost saith, may be read & heard in God's public worship ordinarily; as before hath been manifested: Errors by God's special extraordinary dispensatiō admitted because of men's infirmities; as Cainan in Luke's genealogy, &c. are not of us ordinarily to be followed; that we should put new persons into genealogies, no more then we may dispense ordinarily with God's commandments, because himself dispensed with the Jews for putting away their wives, for having many wives, and the like; which he suffered for the hardness of their hearts.

The holy Ghost needeth not the lies of men to work his work, nor the seventies errors to support the faith of Theophilus and the Grecians. &c. And it is one thing by connivancy to pass by syn, as was the toleration of polygamy, divorce and usury, see Act. 17. 30. another thing to translate errors from a translation into the original, which is to approve them, and this whosoever affirmeth, speaketh little less than blasphemy. Thirdly, therefore as Antichrist hath polluted all God's ordinances, so hath he violated the original scriptures; and therefore one Cainan must be put out, for some ancient copies have it not: and for 75. there must be seventy all: pente for pantes: as Rom. 12. 11. kairo kurio, and it is possible easily to mistake so small a matter, in copying out anything, as experience teacheth.

Thus Mr. Sm. is slipped aside from translations, to quarrel with the original scriptures and correct them: where (though I would not follow his wanderings) I observe briefly these things.

1. He restreyneth, the holy Ghost from using the seventies errors (bearing with men's weakness:) because he needeth them not: why doth he not also restrain God from suffering divorce & many wives to one man in Israel, seeing he needed not thus to have done then, more then now? Shall man limit the holy Ghost, to do no more then he needeth?

2. He mismatcheth God's passing by the syn of heathens idolatry, Act. 17. 30. with God's permission of divorce and polygamy in his law, and putting in Cainan in Luk. 3. The first was horrible syn in all that did it, though God overlooked it upon their repentance: the latter not so, but tolerable; and Luke's naming of Cainan, holy.

3 He injurieth Luke, intimating as if he put errors from a translation into the original; indeed he had so done, if from the Lxx. he had put it into Moses Hebrew; which was far from him. But he only sets it down out of a common known & received record, into the genealogy which he wrote; which all would allow of, & by which they would try Luke's writing: where the leaving of it out, mought have caused much strife. And if God so bare with the Jews hardness of old: what mouth can blame him for bearing with the weakness both of Jews and Gentiles here? Nay rather his mercy is to be magnified for writing his word so: as the weak mought not stumble or fall away, the froward mought not cavil. For had the Apostles written in Hebrew, the Greeks (& of likelihood many Jews)▪ could not have understood: and if they should have ordinarily left the common translatiō, not only the Gentiles mought have made doubt, but the Jews would have taken occasion to speak evil. For they revered the labors of the 70▪ greatly, and would suffer no other translatiō. God therefore who turneth all things to his glory turned this his indulgence, to the praise of his grace.

4 Mr. Sm. hazardeth the credit of the original scriptures, and of all men's faith; in saying Antichrist hath violated them, as he hath polluted all God's ordinances. It is not good, they say, to bely the Devil: & Antichrist hath evil enough upon him though he be not charged with violating the originals, which this accuser will not easily prove. No doubt but copiers, and writers might fail, and did mistake; and some thinking to mend the new testament by the old, or Luke by Matthew, might make it worse; which by true copies may be amended. So faults are in translations through ignorance or oversight. But this point if it were true, helpeth translations and hurteth them not. For if the originals be violated, and yet are not for the faults to be rejected: so translations may be violated, & the errors in the part, are no cause to reject the whole.

5 He presumeth to put Cainan out, because it is not in some ancient copies: these some I take it will prove but one, which Beza mentioneth: and if the credit of it will countervayl all others in Cainan, it must do the like also in a great part of the genealogy beside; varying all the names from Joseph up to David, according to Matthews narration: which is to overthrow Luke's purpose quite. For he deduceth Christ from Nathan his father in the flesh; and not from the brother Solomon, his father but in the kingdom, as Matthew doth. But to change pente five, into pantes all, Act. 7, 14. without warrant of any Greek copy at all, is too much boldness; & cannot be be born out by kurio & kairo, where many copies are for a ground. If men that perceive not the counsel of God in penning his word, shall presumptuously change it according to their own conceit: we shall have nothing left sound or uncorrupt. Rather, if men be ignorant, let them lay their hand on their mouth.

Lastly (saith he) fully to answer the objection whatsoever is good in the LXX translation, was taken out of the new testament, and ancient fathers of the Greek church. For it is manifest by histories that the LXX translation is lost, and this that goeth under the name of the LXX is a patcherie made out of ancient writings: & therefore the holy Ghost doth not aim at the LXX. translation at all, as is imported in the objection.

This is not fully but foolishly to answer: for though the LXX. trans. were now lost, yet was it not lost in the Apostles days, nay there was no other but that known in the world; & to reason because we have it not now, therefore they then aimed not at it at all, is without reason or color of truth. Neither doth M. Smyth manifest by histories that the Seventies translation is now lost: rather the translations of Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotio, & others that since the Apostles time set over the bible in Greek, these all are lost, save some pieces of them; and that which we have, is for the body of it the Seventies, though much corrupted with words and sentences of the other. And this Jerome's translation of the prophets from the Septuagint, and his commentary citing the divers versions of Aquila, Symmachus &c. showeth: and the best Greek bibles now extant, that have varias lectiones do confirm the same.

Neither if all were granted which he would, is the objection fully answered: for the Apostles cite the scriptures in Greek, which the prophets wrote in Hebrew; either therefore they aimed at the Septuagint or translated it themselves. Whereupon it followeth that the Hebrew text set over into Greek, is the scripture of God still, and speech of the holy ghost. Or (if M. Smiths divinity had then been known,) the unbelieving Jews mought have alleged, that Paul proved not his doctrine by canonical scripture, but by apocryphal writings, that were equally human with the Rabbin's commentaries in respect of the matter: and in respect of the letter & language, worse.

There were Greeks and Grecians, Hellenes and Hellenistai, Rom. 1. 16. Act. 6. 1. The Greeks were so by progeny and blood, the Grecians or Hellenists were Jews by progeny, borne in Grecia. Therefore Paul calleth himself an Hebrew of the Hebrews. Phil. 3, 5. These Grecians had forgotten their language, and spake Greek only; and in their synagogues had the Greek translation read unto them: and the Apostles coming into their synagogues approved that act: and so it followeth, that reading translations is lawful in worship.

The distinction of Greeks and Grecians, is vain (saith M. Sm.) as appeareth by these places compared, Act. 21. 39. & 18. 2. 24. with Act. 6. 1. Phil. 3. 5. For Paul was born at Tarsus in Silicia, and Aquila at Pontus, and Apollos at Alexandria: and yet are all called Jews, not Hellenists or Grecians. And Act. 6. 1. The Hellenists murmured against the Hebrews: the Hellenists did understand their own tongue, and had not forgotten their own language.

This reason of Greeks and Grecians, was propounded not as certain, but as probable: because human writers testified it, and in the scriptures, some footsteps only might be seen.

That there is a distinction in scripture of Hellenes Greeks, & Hellenists Greekists or Grecians; all that have eyes to see, and judgment in the tongue, may read: though in our English this difference is not always manifested. For ordinarily they of that nation are called Hellenes Greeks. John. 12. 20. Act. 16. 1. & 18. 17. and 21. 28. Rom. 1. 14. and often in that and his other Epistles. Hellenists or Grecians are mentioned Act. 6, 1. and 9. 29, & 11. 20. The Hellenes or Greeks are usually set against Jews; as Act. 14. 1. & 18. 4. and 19. 10. and 20. 21. Rom. 1. 16. and 2. 9. 10. and 3. 9. and 10. 12. 1 Cor. 1. 24. and 10. 32. and so in other places▪ The Hellenists or Grecians, are set against Hebrews, Act. 6. 1. The Hellenists were such as spake Greek; for Hellenisti is the Greek tongue, Act. 21. 37. as Ebraisti is the Hebrew tongue, John. 19. 20. All Hellenes or Greeks could their own language; but many of other nations could speak it also, it being spread over all; and such were called not Hellenes but Hellenists; as a Latin is he that is born in Latium, or of that blood; but a Latinist is he that can speak Latin, what country man soever.

That the Jews were dispersed in the Greek nations, we may read all over the history: for there were synagogues of Jews at Salamis, Act. 13. 5. at Antioch of Pisidia: Act 13. 14: at Iconium, Act. 14. 1. at Thessalonica, Act. 17. 1. at Berea, Act. 17. 10. at Athens, Act. 17. 16. 17. at Corinth, Act. 18. 14. at Ephesus, Act. 18. 19. and other places. Their dispersion among the gentiles, had been about 300 years: for Ptolemy Lagi King of Egypt, surprising Jerusalem unawares, carried many thousands of them captives, and made them freemen of Alexandria upon their oath of fealty; and after them many Jews went thither of their own accord, as Josephus witnesseth. And his son Ptolemy Philadelphus who procured the bible to be turned into Greek; willing to gratify the Jews, made free six skore thousand of their captives: who remaining in those parts, not only learned Greek, but forgot Hebrew, as may evidently be gathered by Ben Sirachs words in his prologue before his fathers book, among our Apocrypha, called Ecclesiasticus. For he in the days of Ptolemy Euergetes, (who reigned next to Philadelphus) turned his Fathers Hebrew work into Greek, that they which remained in banishment (as he saith) and were desirous to learn, might apply themselves to good manners, and live according to the law. This pains he might have spared if his people all, could have understood Hebrew. Also under the tyrant Antiochus, the Jews troubles & dispersiō continued & increased, as the book of Maccabees witnesseth: and so the Apostles in their days found synagogues of the Jews, almost in all cities of the Gentiles, as before is shown. Now who knoweth not, that far fewer years than three hundred in a strange land, will make a people, specially in bondage and affliction, forget their native speech: wherefor as it is most probable, that many Jews had forgot Hebrew, so is it almost incredible, that all should keep it, in such estate; when also they married with the gentiles, as Timothy's mother is a president. Acts. 16. 1. Moreover in Jerusalem itself it may be probably gathered they knew & spake Greek. For when Paul spake once in Hebrew to them, it is noted how the people kept the more silence. See Act. 22. 1. 2. and 21. 37. 38. 39. 40. And very learned Jews, as Philo of Alexandria, who lived in the Apostles days, and Josephus, wrote eloquently their works in Greek, having small skill in Hebrew, as by their writings may be gathered.

Now for M. Smiths exception, that Paul, Aquila, & Apollos, are called Jews not Hellenists: it is nothing to the matter: for I grant, all were called Jews but not all Hebrews: and in Act. 6, 1. not Jews, but Hebrews are murmured against by the Hellenists, that is, by such as spake Greek. Wherefore, he needed not have called the distinction vain, when himself can make but such an empty answer. Neither showeth he any reason at all, why Paul reckoning up his privileges (Phil. 3, 5.) calleth himself an Hebrew of the Hebrews: & unless it be for the language I can show none sufficient. For thus I mind his speech; by kindred or stock in general, he was of Israel by tribe in particular he was of Benjamin; by language an Hebrew; by profession of law or religion, a Pharisee; for zeal, a persecutor of the contrary; and for legal righteousness, unrebukeable. Herein the Gr. Scholiast agreeth with me, saying that the name Hebrew is added pros •desin tes Ebraidos glosses, for his skill in the Hebrew tongue. The like he speaketh of himself 2 Cor. 11. 22, They are Hebrews, so am I, they are Israelites, so am I, they are Abraham's seed, so am I. It is well known this people had much to boast of for their stock of Israel, famous throughout all the bible; likewise of Abraham they boasted because of God's covenant with him, and of his fatherhood. But of Heber they had nothing to rejoice more then of other patriarchs, save for the language only, which was derived from him to Abraham the Hebrew, and so to his posterity, til in dispersion it was lost of some, by others retained. And if it be excepted that Paul was born at Tarsus in Silicia, and therefore an Hellenist as others there: I answer, though there he was born, yet his bringing up was in Jerusalem at the feet of Doctor Gamaleel, where he learned both the language and law of the Pharisees; and therefore boasted to be an Hebrew as well as any other.

And for those whom the scripture calleth Hellenists or Greekists they seem to be no other but Jews. For they that were Proselytes or converts among the Hethen, are called Hellenes Greeks; as John. 12. 20. there were Greeks among them, that came up to worship at the feast. Neither know I why a Greek converted to Judaism should have the name of a Greekist, seeing by his conversion, he doth more degenerate from Greekism; so that the name were unfit. Besides, in Act. 2. 10. & 13. 43. such converted strangers, are called Proselytes not Hellenists. Likewise when Paul newly converted, disputed in Jerusalem with the Hellenists, and they went about to slay him, Act. 9. 29. this their carriage argueth that they were Jews, for it is not like that strangers would have been so busy in that place.

Also the Hellenists in Antiochia Act. 11. 20. seem to be Jews there, to whom the Gospel was first preached; as in the words immediately before is noted, they preached to no man, but to the Jews only: after that, many more were converted there daily: & when the gentiles of the city had received the faith, they were troubled concerning circumcision, (this fell out about 7. years after the conversion of the Hellenists, Act. 11) and then the church at Jerusalem writing thereof, directed their letters to the brethren of the Gentiles in Antiochia: all which do persuade that the Hellenists first spoken of were Jews. Hereupon I conclude, that the testimony of learned men, recording how the Hellenists were dispersed Jews, that used the Greek bibles in their synagogues; hath more probability, if not certainty to be true, even by the scripture; then M. Smiths sleight answer can turn away. But he hath yet more to speak.

A. Secondly (saith he) it cannot be proved by scriptures, that the Hellenists had the Gr. transl. read in the synagogues: it is manifestly otherwise by the reasons used before against the translation of the LXX.

R. Those reasons were rather calumnies; & I have before refuted thē, showing that no such syn can be proved upō the Sep. for their trāsl. That the Greek bible was read among the Hellenists, the point before handled giveth light; & I leave it to the judgment of the wise Further I answer, that seeing by scripture we learn that not Jews only but Greeks were present in the synagogues; it cannot be thought that the Lectures there were in Hebrew; which the Jews themselves in likelihood, the Greeks of certainty, could not understand.

Thirdly (saith M. S.) the worship of God properly so called of the whole Church of the Jews was performed in the holy place at Jerusalem, and so that which was performed in the synagogue was not properly the worship of the whole Church of the Jews: but was of that nature that passed between Christ and the Doctors in the temple Luk. 2. 46. with Act. 17. 2.

Neither is that which we perform in our assemblies, the worship of the whole church of the Christians, but of our own particular Church: neither is our reading the scriptures, the worship of God properly so called: as before I have manifested. So in the man's answer, lodgeth guile and deceit.

Though all the Jews worshiped at the temple thrice in the year, yet followeth it not thereupon they had no proper worship in their synagogues. For Mr. Smyth himself counteth prophesy or preaching, proper worship; and this was in their synagogues. Again Prayer & thanksgiving is worship properly; & this they did other where then in the temple as appeareth Act. 16. 13. Neither can we think of our godly forefathers (howsoever Mr. Sm. counteth them a carnal Church,) that they would read and preach the word, and not pray in their synagogues; yea their synagogues were called Oratories or prayer houses; as witnesseth Philo a Jew in the Apostles age, who complaining of the outrage offered in Alexandria (the city where he lived) by throwing down the synagogues calleth them Proseuchas Oratories; and mentioneth also the synagogues of Rome, by the same name.

Fourthly (saith M. Sm.) if the Hellenists read the seventies translation as a part of their proper worship having forgotten their own language, therein were committed these sins:

- 1. Forgetting their tongue, one part of the ceremonial law. Nehem. 13. 24.
- 2. Instituting worship in a common tongue, which was as unlawful as sacrificing a dog.
- 3. Therefore it was false worship; as it was to sacrifice an unclean beast

Proper worship is an improper term wherewith Mr. S. would cloke his error, before discovered. But had it been proper worship, yet this man's charge of them were both unproper and untrue. For, although the willing neglect and forgetting of their Hebrew, was syn: yet the constrained loss of it was not syn. The scripture alleged mought have taught him this; for they that of lust married strange wives, which taught their children Azotik or Ashdod speech, are justly blamed by the holy Ghost: but were any blamed for speaking Babels tongue, where they had been prisoners near 70. years? nay Ezra and Daniel wrote a great parte of their books in Babylon's language, and not in Hebrew. And if it had been such a breach of the ceremonial law as is intimated; Daniel and his brethren who refused the King of Babels diet, would also have refused his language, which they did not at all.

The comparison of sacrificing a dog is odious: for mought not converted strangers pray and praise God in their mother tongues; did God abhor their languages, as dogs in sacrifice? Daniel was skilful both in Zion's tongue and Babels: and he writing his book, recordeth his own prayer and thanksgiving in Babylon's language; Dan. 2. 20.—23. He that should have condemned this for false worship: the godly Jews would have counted him a dog. The Prophets warned Israel of the Idols of Babel, but never of their tongue: nay Jeremiah in Canaan, teacheth the people in the Chaldee tongue, how they should answer and confute Idolaters. Ier. 10. 11. And what will this calumniator of the saints, say of Christ himself, who prayed on the cross, Eloi Eloi lamma sabachthani, which was Syriac not Hebrew, though the scripture which he had reference unto, Psal. 22. 1, was Hebrew. And ordinarily he spake Syriac, as by Ephphatha, Talitha coumi and other like words recorded by the Evangelists, may be probably gathered.

Lastly (saith M. Sm.) if they read the seventies translation, and the Apostles came in & heard: it followeth not they did allow it, as a part of the worship of the new testament, anymore then circumcision &c.

First this followeth, that the bible translated, is the bible still; and Moses turned into Greek, is Moses still: for it is not said that apocryphal human writings were read in the Synagogues, but the law and the prophets. So it proveth the question, that the scriptures in our mother tongue, are divine writings, not human, as M. Sm. avoucheth. Hereupon it will follow undeniably, that they are to be read in all Christian churches now, as then in Israel: and not as profane & apocryphal, to be quite thrust out of God's worship. The Apostles shown an end of circumcision, and like legal shadows: but never any end or ceasing or reading the scriptures: nay they show plainly the contrary. 2 Pet, 1, 19, 2 Tim. 3, 15, 16, 17. 1 Thes. 5, 27.

Deut. 31. 12. The reasons that are alleged for reading the law are perpetual, and therefore the law of reading is perpetual: the moral reasons are, hearing, learning, fearing God, and keeping his laws.

Hereunto M. Smyth answereth: First the law of reading is not moral in the particular act, but in the equity, for it was commanded to be doon but once in seven year, at the feast of tabernacles, Deut. 31. 10. and if it had been moral in the particular act, it should have been from the beginning, which was not so, seeing it began with Moses, and it should continue after the end of the world, for moralities endure forever: but books and so reading of books shall perish.

Men should kiss the lips of him that answereth upright words: but our adversary answereth with a froward mouth. He saith the law was commanded to be read but once in seven year: these words, but once, are not of the law, but of his own false comment. There was a special charge to read the book then, in the ears of all together; not intending to read it but then. For every Sabbath, was to be sanctified, and all things are sanctified by the word and prayer; and Israel knew this well, and therefore from old time read the word in the synagogues every Sabbath; and our Lord Christ accompanied thē in this holy work; so that he is more then Sadducean blind, which saith it was commanded to be doon but once in seven year.

No better is the next plea, that because writing & reading began with Moses & was not frō the beginning of the world, therefore the law of reading is not perpetual, neither bindeth us now: a Familist or Atheist may likewise say, baptism or the Lord's supper in the particular outward act, is not to continue til the worlds end, because it was not from the beginning, but began with Christ. A practice commanded of God, at what time soever; is to continue til by him it be repeled, which reading the scriptures never was, but repeated and augmented, by the Apostles writings. Like vanity is in the reason following: books and reading of books shall perish, when the world is at an end: therefore now whiles the world continueth, we are not bound to read God's book. Mought he not have made these reasons against preaching the word, and other ordinances of God, as well as against reading; seeing these shall cease also at the end of the world. But a seduced heart hath deceived this man, that he cannot deliver his sowl, nor say, Js there not a lie in my right hand?

Secondly (saith he) it is moral in the equity, that is, that all means must be used to attayn the knowledge of the truth, whereof reading is a principal: and yet hence it followeth not, that reading is either part or means of spiritual worship: For books are things merely artificial, as are pictures and images, Gen. 4. 22.

Here again the enemy is caught in the snare of his own tongue: for if reading God's law be a principal mean to attayn the knowledge of the truth now, as it was in Israel, Deut. 31. 12. and so moral & perpetual: then his former cavils against the objection, may be cast as dung upon his own face. Then do we well to read God's word in our church, for that end: and M. Sm. hath doon wickedly for it to blame us, and charge us with idolatry. To hide this his shame, he runs into his old borough, that it is no part or means of spiritual worship; but out of this he hath been often hunted before: and we are sure that observing it according to God's will, we worship & serv God in spirit and truth, as well in this as in other like ordinances of the gospel.

His matching of books with Tubal-cains craft (Gen. 4. 22.) & images, showeth how his idol error hath shut his eyes that he cannot see, his heart that he cannot understand. For in holy scriptures (whereof we speak) the mind of God is made known unto us, and his spirit is in them, so as when we read in the book of Moses, we read that which is spoken to us of God; as the Evangelists in plain words teach us: whereas in handicrafts we see or enjoy but the fruit of man's wit and skil; and an image without life, is the teacher of lies. Such impious comparisons seem rather to come from Tubal-cains forge, then from any possessed with the spirit of God.

Reading the law was performed in the Synagogue, and not tied to the temple: an argument that reading is not ceremonial but moral, for no part of ceremonial worship was performed from the tabernacle or temple.

This objection with the reason, (I think) was never so made of any, but by M. Smyth himself. It is true that reading was not tied to the temple; it is true also (though this argument thus framed, hardly proveth it) that reading is not ceremonial. The last branch is untrue, for some ceremonies or figurative services were performed out of the temple. His answers to this objection, are for the most part true, being well understood: but in part false, when by the way he denieth reading the law to be a moral action; whereof he giveth no reason at all: and the thing is handled before.

Luk 4. 16. Christ stood up to read and redd his text, and then preached out of it. Now his actions are our instructions: and therefore we are to read words out of a book, in time of preaching or prophesying.

This objection M. Smyth hath falsified: it was never thus pressed by us for translations, whereof now we treat: but thus. Luke reporteth that Christ read where it was written The spirit of the Lord is upon me &c. This text Luke setteth down in Greek, which Isaiah wrote in Hebrew; whereupon it followeth, that the scripture translated into another language, is the same scripture still for the substance of it, though the letter and language differ, and is not an apocryphal human writing, and so an idol in God's worship, as Mr. Smyth blasphemed. Els, Luke and the new testament cannot be defended against Jews that should cavil, how human apocryphal writings, are cited for divine and canonical. Thus serveth it to prove the reading of translated scriptures, by necessary consequence: and that we are not bound to bring the book of the law and prophets in Hebrew when we would read to the people, and so interpret or read mentally out of it, as M. Smyth then dreamed: though since he is fallen to forbid the Original Hebrew also, in God's worship, as we have heard before. But M. S. finding (as seemeth) this objection too heavy for him, hath sought to change it, as he could best make answer: which is thus.

First in that it was doon in the synagogue by Christ which was neither Priest nor Levite, it is an argument that it was no proper part of the worship of the Old Testament, but of that nature as was the exercise performed by Christ and the doctors in the temple, so that reading most properly is searching the scripture, which is not worship.

Christ as his custom was, (saith the scripture) went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up to read: and after speaking from the scripture which he had read, all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words, which proceeded out of his mouth. He sate daily teaching in the temple and in the synagogues among the people. But all this reading and teaching: was no proper part of the worship of the old testament, (with M. Smyth) because he was neither Priest nor Levite. Howbeit, before he would needs persuade us by a mystical interpretation, that Christ having by the use of the book fulfilled the law of reading, he shut the book, to signify that the ceremony of book-worship was now expired. So sweet an accord & harmony is in his writing. Well, Christ's action here is excluded from being a part of God's worship. But M. Smyth though he were neither Priest nor Levite of the old testament, nor Apostle, Prophet, Evangelist, Pastor nor teacher, no nor member of the church of the new testament, (he and his followers having dischurched themselves and dissolved their communion;) yet he in that estate, preached, and anabaptized himself, and then anabaptized others: and this in him was the worship of God, or else of the devil, properly so called. And hath not this man behaved himself like a proud Korah, that without all office would presume to do these things which he counteth proper worship; and yet censureth Christ's action in reading & preaching of the word to be no proper part of worship, because he was neither Priest nor Levite? Shall the word out of Christ's mouth, read and applied with all grace of the spirit (which he had without measure) be no proper part of God's worship; and shall the word which Mr. Smyth uttereth out of his heart, be proper worship? And of what nature may we think, was that exercise performed by Christ and the Doctors in the temple? was it none of God's worship? He was I am sure in his fathers business, among the teachers of the word, whom he heard, whom he asked, whom he answered with such understanding as astonished all that heard him. If M. Smyth esteem his own teaching or prophesying used in his synagogue to be the worship of God; and this of Christ and the teachers of Israel in the temple, to be not his worship: he is worthy of all true Christians, to be holden Anathema.

But reading (saith he) is serching the scriptures, which is not worship. But reading (say I) as Christ now did, is proclaiming the word of God unto the people: and if preaching be worship, reading in this sort is worship: not proskunesis, supplication or prostrating unto God: but latreia a worship or service of God in the spirit, in the gospel; as before hath been manifested.

Secondly (saith M. Smyth) Christ had the Originals the Hebrew text of Isaiah the Prophet, and read or interpreted out of it: for it is doubtful whither he uttered the Hebrew words, or spake the sense of the Hebrew in the Syriac dialect, and therefore from hence reading a translation cannot be concluded, but either reading or interpreting the Originals.

How it maketh for translations, I shown before against M. Smiths fraud: and to that we have no answer, but by-matters brought as clouds to darken the light. And if we had alleged this for the Originals, yet Mr. Smyth would not have allowed it, as before hath been shown. He doubteth whither Christ spake in Syriac or not: but if he so did, & preached or prophesied in that common language, (as before I have shown it most likely,) and preaching or prophesying be properly worship; and instituting worship in a common tongue, Be as unlawful as sacrificing a dog, as M. Smyth before affirmed: will not he be found a blasphemmer of Christ, as one that speaks not by the spirit of God, calling Jesus execrable?

Thirdly (saith he) hence cannot be concluded that manner of preaching now used, that a man shall take his text, and then divide it into parts, analysing it rhetorically and logically, collecting doctrines and uses from every member, &c. of his text, all this while he having his book before his eye, to help him at all assays: a thing whereof I am assured the holy scripture yieldeth no warrant that it may be counted a part of spiritual worship. For though the scripture may be so handled, and that for very profitable use; yet that is rather a scholastical lecture, then an Ecclesiastical worship, it is rather an inquisition and serching of the holy spirits intent and purpose then prophesying

If the scriptures may be so handled, and that for very profitable use: surely Mr. Smiths schism, and charge of idolatry laid upon us, had very unprofitable use, and wicked end. For his own conscience can testify for us, if it be not feared; that we never pleaded for other use of the scriptures, then was in Israel, where Christ read the text, and after taught from and applied it; where the law was read, the sense given, and the people caused to understand the reading; where lectures were of the law & prophets in their synagogues every Sabbath; and other such like exercises. But because we did thus out of our translated English bibles (of him called apocrypha,) he accused us of idol-latrie, that is the worship or service of idols; we maintained it to be theo-latrie, that is, the worship or service of God, because it was God's word, not man's, though written in English. This point is now sought to be shifted off, and a new question made, whither reading the scriptures in the Church may be called worship: which I have cleared before.

His sophistical distinction of scholastical lecture, and ecclesiastical worship; we heard not of til now; and it serveth him in no stead: for every such lecture in the Church to Christ's scholars, is the latreia or service of God, not of Idols; and is a manifestation of the holy spirits intent, as of old was in prophesying. The teacher most properly doth then inquire & serch, when he prepareth himself privately by reading, study and meditation, to expound the scriptures in public. Were not the voices of the Prophets in Israel, a manifestation of the spirits intent? But when they were read in the synagogues, their voices were heard, as the scripture teacheth; Act. 13. 27.

Lastly (saith M. S.) if we must needs be tied to this example of Christ, (which I see no reason for, seeing reading was of the old testament,) then the example of Christ shall bind also thus far, as that the book shall be laid aside, so soon as the text is read, and the book that is used, shall be the originals, which is nothing for vocal but for mental reading, or for interpreting, which I never have thought to contradict. &c.

No man that I know, tieth to follow this particular example. We doubt not but men may teach, without any book. But that it is lawful by Christ's example here, to read, open and apply the scriptures; as by other examples of him also, to preach without reading. The main thing is left, and new questions set on foot.

We know well, he at first contradicted not mental reading (as he calleth it) or interpreting out of the originals though now he writeth against the use of the originals also, as before we have seen: so fast he runs on in error. His conceit of mental reading, as it hath no ground frō Christ here, nor any prophet or Apostle, to be the ordinary way of reading or interpreting scripture: so mind we it to be a far more vncertayn and erroneous course; let the man make as many Queries after it, as he will.

Having answered these few objections, as we see; he afterwards questioneth whither the hearers may have their translations or the originals to read or search in time of prophesy. Which he denieth. Of this point, though it was not controverted between us, yet I will speak what I mind about it. Not condemning it, as doth he; nor justifying it, as it is abused by some; but showing the mean, which I take to be best.

His first reason is; that the Prophets and Apostles wrote books, but never divided them into chapters or verses, Henry Stephen first made the verses of the N. Testament: whereupon he concludeth that the hearers could not serch their books in time of hearing. I deny the consequence; for in reading the law & expounding it, comparing words with that which went before and after; the hearers mought serch and see; though it were with more difficulty.

Secondly the Hebrew bibles that we have, are all divided into chapters and verses; as also into other sections, noting where the lecture of the law began and ended, and the lecture of the Prophets answerable to it. Whither the first writers did this, or the Church after them, I will not dispute; but that thus they might do, I make no doubt: For God hath left to the discretiō of the Church and Ministers, what quantity of scripture to read and teach of. And this was the practice in th' Apostles days; for it was not possible that every sabbathall the law and prophets should be read over: & the Hebrew letters and marginal notes, are sufficient records of the antiquity of them. The Churches practice in the books of the Prophets, showeth us our liberty in the Apostles writings; which cannot be read over at once. And long before Henry Stephens time the Greek copies of the New Testament had chapters and sections though otherwise then we now have. And Matthews gospel parted into 68. chapters or titles, and 355. sections, was in a manner as easy for the readers to serch, as it is now with us; and so the rest.

His second reason is, that th' Apostles in citing scriptures, quote not chapter and verse, but only say it is written by Zechariah, by Jeremiah; the scripture saith, &c. This reason dependeth on the former, and is there answered, in part. Further I observe, the Apostles speak diversely, sometime naming no book at all; sometime naming the book, as the Psalms; sometime a part of the book; as the second psalm, and how they particulated matters in their doctrine, is not set down; the summonly of things is recorded. The argument therefore concluding, thus, it is not written that they quoted chapters, therefore they did it not; is not of force, negatively. But if it be true which Hilary an ancient writer recordeth that the seventy Greek interpreters did number and order the Psalms; and we find that sometimes the Apostles quoted what Psalm in noneber they alleged; it may warrant us such like use of human labors, for help of our memory.

His third reason is of like nature, that no mention is made of any hearer that had his book &c. yet mought it be, say I, though it were not mentioned, they used to dispute in their synagogues (after the lecture was ended); and that by the scriptures: and the hearers serched the scriptures daily for trial of doctrine. Who now can say that the hearers had or used no books in the synagogues?

His 4. reason is, that serching quotations hindereth attention, for the mind and affections are distracted from hearing by seeking the places &c. This I grant to be amiss, in all that so use their books; for diligent ear should be given to all that is spoken. Howbeit this abuse, may not abolish the lawful use: for as by turning of leaves many hinder themselves in time of hearing; so many again attentively hearkening, and comparing things spoken with the matters before and after in the chapter, are not hindered at all, but greatly furthered by looking on their books. And for this matter, I rest with that rule given by th' Apostle, for all things to be doon unto edification, seemlily, and with order. 1 Cor. 14. 12. 40.

His last reason is, that manuscripts being few, and very dear, (there being yet no printing found out) all could not have or bring their books; but there is only one kind of true and profitable hearing: either all to have books and serch or none. If God have left it to the wisdom and discretion of his people when and how to use the scriptures, so it be not to confound actions or hinder their good: I will not bring their liberty into bondage, nor prescribe a law, where God hath given none. Though written copies were dear, yet were they many; & many had them; not all: for all now have not. That such as have not books, or cannot read, should prejudice other that have & can, there is no reason. It is not therefore for us to walk by example in this case, but by general ground and equity from God's law: who permitteth us free use of the scriptures for our edification, according to which if men use them in private or public, they do well.

Thus am I at an end about the main controversy of the scriptures, which for the readers good I have beaten out and explained, showing the true differences which he handled covertly for his best advantage. Wherein the judicious may discern, how Mr. Sm. hath been up and down, wavering like a reed shaken of the wind; sometimes seeming to allow translations, sometime bitterly writing against them: that as easy it is to know the way of a serpent upon the rock; as the way of a man with his mineon error.

A DEFENCE OF CHRIST'S MINISTRY in the church: against the contradiction of M. Smyth.

VNto the former battle against the scriptures, M. Sm. addeth strife about the ministry: affirming that the triformed presbytery (as he calleth it) consisting of three kind of Elders, viz. Pastors, Teachers, Rulers, is none of God's ordinance, but man's devise; and that lay elders (so called) are antichristian.

That other point, being an idol of his own invention, which he would have had worshiped in our church, I have more largely dealt against: this latter being a thing oft discussed heretofore, and no new thing by him alleged; I will the more briefly answer.

M. Smyth a while before, both agreed in judgment with us; and wrote in defense of this ministry which now he oppugneth: but that his first faith and labors, he retracteth in this book: and sithence is fallen into further error about the covenant between God and his people. So by degrees he is come to undermine the word, the ministry, and the covenant of grace, three main grounds of Christian religion: to manifest himself one of those which privily should bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that hath bought them, and bring upon themselves swift damnation.

Touching the Eldership, his assertion is; The presbytery is uniform consisting of Officers of one sort. Esa. 66. 28. compared with Exod. 28. 1. and Num. 11. 24. 25. 1 Tim. 3. 1—8. Act. 14. 23. Phil. 1. 1. Ier. 23. 1—4. Ezek. 34. 1—6.

If this opposite would have avouched the contrary, he mought with far more reason have alleged these scriptures. For Isa. 66. 21. speaketh of Priests & Levites., which had charge of the sacrifices & sanctuary: and Num. 11. 24. mentioneth the LXX. elders of Israel, joined with Moses to aid him in the government: and which mought not meddle with the sacrifices. And are these fit scriptures to prove Officers of one sort? If he mean no other Uniformitie in the presbytery, then was between those Elders and the Priests, he fighteth with his own shadow, not with us: who hold a more strict agreement in the Eldership of the church now, then was in that Eldership and priesthood of the law; where one tended to civil causes, the other to ecclesiastical. But I will come to his reasons, proving the Elders to be of one sort, viz. all Pastors.

First in the old testament (saith he) there was but one kind of Priests, who had equal authority to administer all the holy things: excepting the high Priest, who typed forth Christ: so proportionably in the New Testament, there is but one sort of Elders, who succeed the Priests in the dispensation of holy things. Esa. 66. 21.

Behold here at first, the falsehood of this adversary: even now he quoted scriptures that spake of Priests, Levites and other Elders; all which were different: and here he taketh one sort only, Priests, to conclude about the Eldership of the church of Christ. But thus to reason from part of the figure; to the whole thing figured, is mere deceit.

Again, he misseth in his proportion, making all the Elders now, to succeed the Priests then, who had equal authority to administer all the holy things. For the prophet speaketh both of Priests and Levites Isa 66▪ 21. which had not equal authority in all the holy things, as the law plainly showeth, Numb. 16. 8. 9. 10. 40. and 18. 2. 3. If now all the Elders be of one sort, & equally administer all the holy things, proportion is not kept with the Priests and Levites of the law as Isaiah prophesied.

M. Sm. saw this inconvenience, and therefore afterwards seeketh thus to shift it off. The Deacons (saith he) in the new testament are answerable to the Levites in the old; as the Elders are answerable to their Priests Esa. 66. 21. compared with 1 Chron. 26. 20.

Here again he useth his former fallacy, concluding from part of the Levites, unto the whole. And taking one piece of scripture he neglecteth many other which make against him. For as 1 Chron. 26. 20. showeth that some Levites had charge of the treasures; so 1 Chron. 23. 27. 28. &c. and 25. 1, 2. &c. and 26. 1, 2. &c. & Num. 18▪ & other scriptures many, show that othersome were assistants to the Priests in the service of the Lord's house in all businesses, standing every morning and evening to give thanks and to praise the Lord: and together with the Priests did teach & instruct the people, according to the blessing which Moses pronounced upon the whole tribe, Deut. 33. 9. 10. So that the Levites were Ministers also of the word & prayer, which is directly differing from the Deacons office in the Church now, as appeareth Act. 6. 2. 3. 4.

As in the Old Testament there was the sanhedrim which consisted of 70. ancients for the administration of the kingdom, which was a type of the visible Church, all which elders in their first institution did prophesy and were of one kind under Moses: so in the new testament under Christ Jesus which is the King of the Church there is asu•drion or eldership consisting of ancients of one kind, who administer for the good of the Church. Rev. 4. 4. & 5. 6.

First here is the same fallacy that we had before, concluding frō a part to the whole. For in the former, Isaiah was cited for Priests and Levites to be figures of our Ministers, and now the Ancients of Israel are alleged for figures also; & because these Anciēts were of one sort, therefore all the Presbyterie figured both by Priests of Levi, and by Ancients of other tribes, must be all of one sort. The conclusion is vanity. Rather the reason should be framed thus, as the teaching Priests were of one sort and the governing Elders of another; so the teaching Ministers, and the governing elders differ at this day.

Or, taking those Elders politik, to be figures of our Elders ecclesiastik, as M. Sm. maketh them, the true proportion is but this, as governing elders then, so governing elders now, are all of one sort; and this is that which we hold.

Neither will his other places Rev. 4. 4. and 5. 6. help him any better. For he seemeth to understand by that vision, the church; and by the 24. elders about the throne, (all which were of one kind) the eldership of the Church: but he should with all have considered, that besides those Elders, there were 4. other winged creatures full of eyes, which incessantly praised God, and went before the Elders in this action of worship: and these were of the number of the redeemed by Christ blood, and of the Kings and Priests that reigned on earth; and being as meet to signify the Teachers of the Church, as the 24. are to signify the ruling elders; will rather show a difference between the teachers and governors of the Church; then that they should be of one sort. Howbeit I rest not in his exposition of those Elders: but that is another point.

Again (saith he) if Pastor, Teacher, Elder, had been 3. offices formally differing, the Apostle intending to teach the several officers of the church, would have mentioned them, 1 Tim. 3. but there he only mentioneth Bishops and Deacons, according as Philip. 1. 1. go: Bishops are only of one sort or kind.

How M. Sm. understandeth this phrase of formally differing, I cannot tell; his logik is not like every man's: the speech being well taken, I admit of; and do deny the consequence of his argument, that if they differ formally they should have been mentioned 1 Tim. 3. for it is as if he should have said, if Priests & Levites differ formally, Moses would so have mentioned them, Deut. 33. 8.-10. Nay Moses having mentioned the difference other where; thought it not needful to set it down here; and so doth th' Apostle. It is a weak ground to conclude against a thing, because it is not written in such or such a chapter.

But the Apostle (saith he) intendeth to teach the several offices of the Church. Not so; but rather he intendeth to show, how officers in general should be qualified; and setting down things common to all, it had been needless repetition to speak of the Pastor first, and the same things of the teacher, and again the third time, the same of the Elder: he useth no such tautologies. And Timothy needed not to be taught what offices belonged to the Church, though he mought have need to be put in mind of their qualifications. Yet even in the same Epistle, upon other occasions, he mentioneth the difference of the office, some being to rule well, some to labor in the word and doctrine. Of which we shall speak anon. And in his other Epistles, the like differences are plain. Rom. 12. 7. 8. 1 Cor. 12. 4. 5. 28.

Moreover, (saith he) if th' Apostles had ordained three kind of ELDRS Acts. 14. 23. they would have mentioned them with their several kinds of ordinations: but that is not doon: for in one phrase their election and ordination is mentioned: go; their ordination being one, their office is one, and not three.

A reason much like the former, & of like vanity; for to say, such a thing is not mentioned in such a place, therefore it was not doon; is inconsequent.

And here the minding of his own words, might have stayed him from so concluding: for if Luke writing the action, doth in one phrase yea even in one word sum up both the election & the ordination, which yet are different, and doon with many circumstances: may he not also under the general name Elders, imply different sorts. Again where the holy Ghost expresseth not any one kind of ordination, nor any one word spoken to the officers, concerning their charge and office laid upon them; which yet no doubt was doon: Who would look for a several kind of ordination, to be mentioned in such a place?

Further if there had been 3 kind of Elders at Ephesus, then the Apostle at Miletum would have given them several charges as having several duties lying upon them: but th' Apostle Act. 20. 28. giveth them one general charge common to them all, namely the duty of feeding, the work of the Pastor. go, they are all Pastors.

These reasons be all of a suit: and the prayer of David seemeth to have prevailed against this man, for when he shooteth arrows, they are as broken: or like unto staves.

First, we cannot say what several charges Paul gave those Elders; seeing all his words in particular are not recorded. For there is no doubt, but he spake many more words, then are set down: and it is usual in the scriptures, to sum up men's speeches.

Secondly suppose he gave no several charges, but one general common to them all, which was Poimainein to feed and govern the flock: yet will not this prove that they had all one undistinct office: anymore then that Peter had no other then a common Pastors office, because Christ gave him but a general charge common to all Pastors poimaine, feed my sheep.

The Priests and Levites had distinct offices, as before is manifested: yet Hezekiah speaking to them all generally, (as Paul doth here to the Elders,) gives them not several charges, according to their several duties, but useth one common exhortation to them all: which if one would pervert, (as this man doth Paul's speech,) he might plead that all the Levites then were properly to burn incense, as that all the Elders now should properly do the Pastors duty. See 2 Chro. 29. 4. 5.—11.

The conclusion which he maketh that therefore all are Pastors, if he mean it in the strict sense, is denied, as inconsequent. If in the large sense, it is from the question, and deceiveth by ambiguity: for Christ is a Pastor, the Apostles-were Pastors, and so are all Bishops & governors generally: yet no man I think doubteth but these do differ.

Besides. Eph. 4. 11. Pastors and Teachers are all one office. For whereas the Apostle had spoken distributively before of Apostles Prophets, Evangelists as intending them several offices: he speaketh copulatively of Pastors and Teachers, exegetically teaching that they are both one office.

First, let it be observed, how himself doth say, Apostles, Prophets Evangelists were several offices; yet can he not deny, but generally they were to poimainein, that is do the duty of Pastors, feeding and governing the Church of Christ: & so his former exception against Act. 20. is found of no weight. Also his reasons from Isa. 66. 21. & Numbers 11. 25. for one sort of officers to be figured in the law, are of as little value; unless we should think that the principal officers of the Christian Church, were not figured or prophesied of at all.

Secondly the exposition which he giveth of Ephes. 4. 11. is against the Apostles purpose, who distinctly and distributively setteth down the divers gifts and offices of the church: and therefore cannot be thought to express one & the same office by two names. For though he speak copulatively, pastors and teachers, yet is there no reason why these should be taken for one, seeing this word and, coupleth divers things & divers officers; as Apostles and Prophets, Eph. 2. 20, and 3, 5. Apostles and Elders Act. 15, 2. Prophets & Teachers, Act 13, 1. and a thousand the like. Neither needed he teach exegetically, by way of exposition what the pastors office is; seeing it was as well, if not better known, then the Prophets office or Evangelists: neither is it an exposition, when the latter is as dark and more then the former; and the first more proper then the second. For the proper name of the office, as M. Sm. takes it, is Pastor: now to say Pastors that is teachers, were to explain the proper by the unproper, or commune name, which neither Paul nor any wise writer useth to do.

But is ignorance or a worse thing that causeth M. Sm. to pervert so plain a place. The Apostle particulating the several offices some Apostles, some Prophets &c. doth in the last branch according to the elegancy both of the Hebrew and Greek tongues, omit the word some, putting and in the stead, in the very same meaning. An example of the Hebrew may be seen Hos. 3. 4. where the Prophet telleth how Israel should remain without King, and without Prince, and without offering, and without statue, and without Ephod, and Teraphim: meaning and without Teraphim. Here in the last place the word without, is omitted, and to be understood of the reader, as our English translation doth express; for it were trifling to say as Mr. Smyth, that the two last are one, because and coupleth them, or that exegetically one expoundeth another, when as it is but an elegancy in the language: as all that have skil in it can tell.

The like is in the Greek tongue, and in Paul's own writing▪ Gal. 3. 28. There is neither Jew (saith he) nor Greek; there is neither bond nor free: there is neither male and female: that is nor female▪ where and coupleth in the last place, male and female, not as of one kind but divers; and meaneth the same that nor did before.

The very like phrase and elegancy useth he here, Eph. 4. 11. as any that favoereth the language and purpose of the Apostle, may perceive. and this is plainly confirmed by the Syriac, which speaketh of the two last as of the former, saying, and some Pastors and some Teachers. It is also manifested by Paul himself elsewhere distinguishing these two offices, as 1 Cor. 12, 8. to one is given the word of wisdom, and to another the word of knowledge: and Rom. 12. 7.

8. or he that teacheth on teaching, or he that exhorteth on exhortation. And if in one place he putteth a difference; we should not think that in another he takes it away. And there is no plain doctrine set down in scripture, but may be corrupted by such violent expositions as Mr. Smyth maketh of this place.

Lastly (saith he) if all the Elders have the pastors gifts, and the works of the pastor, and the pastors ordination, then they have all the pastors office. But all the Elders have the pastors gifts viz. the word of wisdom or the gift of exhortation, Tit. 1. 9. and therefore the pastors work, as Act. 20. 28. 1 Pet. 5. 2. which is feeding or exhorting: and so the same ordination. Act. 14. 23. Therefore all the Elders have the same office of the Pastor, and so are all of one sort.

The second part of this reason is deceitful; for though in some sort and common measure all the Elders have the pastors gifts, & ordination, and do the pastors work; being all Bishops, that is, careful lookers to, and feeders of the flock: yet in special manner & measure they differ in all. Otherwise, we may also confound other offices: as Apostles and Evangelists, the Evangelists and the Pastors. For Paul an Apostle saith of Timothy an Evangelist, he worketh the work of the Lord, even as I. Had these two therefore one office? Again, Timothy and Titus Evangelists, and the other pastors of the churches, had the same gifts, namely the word of wisdom to exhort, 1 Tim. 6, 2. Tit. 2, 15. with Rom. 12, 8. and therefore the same work, (as these scriptures alleged show;) and the same ordination by imposition of hands of the Apostle and Eldership 2 Tim. 1. 6. 1 Tim. 4. 14. with Act. 14. 23. Will M. Sm. hereupon conclude, therefore all pastors have the same office with the Evangelists? If he acknowledge an error in that, so may he do in this. For it is the special excellency of the gifts of exhorting, teaching, ruling, which causeth the pastors, teachers, rulers, to be designed unto several works and offices. For it were vanity to suppose, that the teachers might be without the word of wisdom at all, or Pastors without the word of knowledge, or rulers without both. Everie Levites lips were to preserve knowledge, for the people to seek the law at his mouth, as at the priests; Deut. 33. 8. 10. Mal. 2. 7. yet was there difference in the office So in Christ's Church where gifts are bestowed in variety, he that excelleth in the word of wisdom and exhortation more then doctrine, is (being lawfully called thereto, a pastor; and he that excelleth in doctrine more then in exhortation, is a teacher: and they that excel other brethren in discretion gravity &c. though they have not meet gifts for pastors or teachers, are (being called thereunto) Elders or governors, to assist the other in guiding the ways of the church. And needful are they unto the same, for one man may well teach an hundred, but two men will scarce govern half so many in peace and order: so great a difference there is, between the knowledge of the truth, and the due walking and practice of the same.

Whereas therefore M. S. gives all the Elders, the word of wisdom, and so the pastors office; meaning strictly and properly: he contraryeth the Apostle who saith, there are diversities of gifts; and to one is given the word of wisdom, and to another the word of knowledge; and again speaking of office, he mentioneth distinctly teaching, & exhorting, & ruling, not in one person but in sundry. Although sometime speaking of the Eldership in general, he ascribeth the same work in general thereto, as in Tit. 1. Act. 20. and other like places. Of the ordination Act. 14. we spake before.

Now after all these reasons, M. Sm. thus concludeth. Hence this con•ectorie (saith he) ariseth: that the Eldership consisting of three sorts of Elders, is the invention of man, having both an antichristian ministry and government in it. And therefore when the popish prelacy was suppressed, and the triformed presbytery substituted, one antichrist was put down, and another was set up in his place. &c. with other like contumelies.

But the falsehood and vanity of his reasons having been manifested, all these reproaches do turn into his own bosom, and in him is fulfilled the word of the Prophet, whiles like the raging sea, he thus casteth up mire and dirt. For God having given to his church diversities of gifts, diversities of administratiōs (or offices,) and diversities of operations, some for to teach, some to exhort, some for to rule; and having evidently distinguished between Teachers, and Governors; between those Elders that rule well, and those that labor in the word & doctrine: it must needs be the spirit of Antichrist and of Satan, that thus despiteth Christ's holy ordinances, which this adversary himself sometime acknowledged and walked in; and now hath forsaken, without ground of truth. But he hath more yet to say, in answering the objections for 3. sorts of Elders: which he thus layeth down.

The first objection.

1 Tim. 5. 17. In this place the Apostle maketh two sorts of Elders, 1. those that rule only, 2. and those that teach and rule. And Ephe. 4. 11. he maketh 2. kinds of those that teach, Pastors and Doctors. Therefore there are 3. kinds of Elders formally differing each from other.

Mr Smiths answer.

The Apostle to Timothy teacheth that Elders are to be honored for 2. works, well ruling and laborious or painful teaching: and the place doth not import a distribution of Officers, but a commendation of several works of one office: and the specialty consisteth not in the works of ruling & teaching which are common to all Elders; but in the quality of the works, viz. well ruling, and painful teaching, as if th' Apostle should say. Elders are to be had in double honor for wise government, but much more are they to be honored for their laborious and painful teaching.

Reply.

If empty words mought carry away matters, it were woe with the truth of religion, for ech spirit of error would bear it down. A doctrine most plain, set forth in evident words; is here turned aside, with a deceitful gloss, contrary to the tenor of the text.

Two several works he acknowledgeth ruling and teaching: yet two several men for these works he will not admit of. But had he learned the Apostles word, who is sufficient for these things? he mought have seen a reason of the counsel of God, in adding helps to the teachers of the word. For if the Apostles those excellent master builders, had need of supply, for want of sufficiency; how much more need have we weaklings? It is God's usual administration in his church, for several works to appoint several persons: so to Moses he committed the government political, to Aaron the ecclesiastical. To Moses he adjoined 70. ancients of Israel; besides the ordinary inferior governors: to Aaron he gave for a gift the whole tribe of Levi. The Levites had also their special distributions, some helping the Priests in sacrificing &c. some tending to song and music, some warding the Tabernacle, some looking to the treasures: all jointly the Ministers and teachers of the church. Deut. 10, 8. & 33. 10.

Christ also providing for the good of his church, as he hath diversities of operations or effects to work in the same, so hath he given diversities of gifts, and these to diverse persons, and also with diversities of ministries or offices, some to teach, some to exhort, some to distribute, some to rule; that that gift which is dim in one man, may shine clear in another, and the church have the use and benefit of all. Now comes M. Sm. and he not being able to deny the diversities of works and operations required in the church: yet dareth deny the diversities of offices, and will have one man in one limited office of the Pastor, to do all that pertaineth to exhorting, teaching, and governing of the church: though the scriptures do so plainly distinguish. And if men excelling in the gift of exhortation, be chosen to attend unto that ministration or office of exhorting; and others excelling in the gift of teaching, others in governing, be chosen to execute their gifts in the teachers and governors offices; this he exclaimeth to be Antichristian: for one office he thinks must do all.

To this end wresteth he these words of Paul The Elders that rule well, are worthy double honor: specially they that labor in the word & doctrine. The specialty saith M. S. consisteth not in the works of ruling & teaching, but in the quality of the works, viz, well ruling & painful teaching. I deny this violent construction: and affirm the specialty here added of Paul, to respect a special distinct person in and for his work: as may thus be manifested. The Apostle treateth of honor, and unto whom it belongeth. Honor widows (saith he) which are widows in deed. Give double honor to the Elders that rule well: specially to them that labor in the word. As honor & double honor, respecteth several persons in their several estates and employments; so double honor and special double honor, respecteth several persons in and for their several works and employments; some ruling well, othersome laboring in the word. Thus the scripture is plain. But M. S. will have the specialty to consist in the quality of the work, viz, well ruling and painful teaching, As if Paul would have double honor given to them that rule and teach, but specially if they rule well & teach painfully. But thus he neither speaketh nor meaneth. For all rule is either well or ill: but ill rule deserves no honor, therefore it were unmeet to appoint double honor in this respect, where open rebuke rather is due, and where loss and damage followeth, because the work must burn. 1 Cor. 3. 14. 15. But take it as the Apostle speaks and intends, widows indeed are to have honor: the well ruling Elders are to have double honor, thus it is meet, and the meaning evident. Now the specialty cometh after well ruling, and respecteth another work, laboring in the word: where the former word well is again to be understood. For false teachers labored in the word, to seduce and deceive: such were to have no special double honor, but their mouths stopped, and to be turned away from, though they creep into houses, though they use fair speech and flattering, though they take such pains, as they compass sea and land to make one of their profession.

Again, the word laboring makes not the specialty: as M. Smyth interpreteth it, painful teaching; for labor is a common duty lying upon all church officers, whose office is not in idleness.

None can rule well but with labor: none can teach well but with labor: and therefore PAUL useth this word of all the officers, 1 Cor. 16. 16. So the specialty here is not for labor simply, but for labor in the word & doctrine, which some Elders did; differing from labor in government, which othersome did, as is evidēt both by this & other scriptures, as 1 Cor. 12. 28. thirdly teachers; after that governors: and Rom. 12. 7. 8. he that teacheth on teaching: he that ruleth with diligence.

Thus several men were employed in these several labors or works, and in respect of the persons employed, is the word specially added, and purposely put between rulers & teachers, as if the Apostle should say, they that labor in ruling are worthy of double honor, specially they that labor in teaching. And that this is Paul's mind his plain words show, when he saith, they that rule, and they that labor: where this word, they, leadeth to diverse persons; as in other scriptures, they that have doon good, and they that have doon evil; they that weep and they that rejoice; and innumerable such speeches. Again the word specially being put between them that rule, and them that labor, confirmeth this yet more: for it increaseth the distinction: as when Paul in the same Epistle saith, God is the savior of all men, specially of the faithful: the word specially distinguisheth the faithful from other common men of the world, who have not faith in God, and yet are saved or preserved by him, that is the preserver of all his creatures, and saveth man and beast. So to Titus he saith, there are many deceivers of minds, specially they of the circumcision; where the word specially distinguisheth those of the circumcision from other deceivers; and meaneth not the same, but different persons. And if here we take it not so for several persons (where well ruling is first set down, and specially comes after, for such as labor in the word and doctrine:) we overthrow the force and grace of Paul's gradation, or stepping to his specialty. And if he had meant as M. S. takes it, for the quality of the works, doon by the same persons: it should be as elsewhere Paul writeth, they that labour much or labour more then the rest: but he speaks not so here.

M. S. expounding the place of the same persons to be honored for wise government, but much more for their painful teaching: confirmeth not his doctrine by any circumstances of this scripture, but citeth others saying,

Answer.

That this is so see Tit. 1. 9. and 1 Thes. 5. 2. 1 3. with 1 Tim. 3. 1. 4.

In Timothy the Apostle saith every Bishop must be didacticos, and proistamenos: and therefore that some Elders are only didacticoi, and not proistamenoi, is contrary to the Apostles intent. Further in Titus, the Apostle expoundeth didacticos to be able to exhort with wholesome doctrine, and to convince the gainsayers: how then shall some of the Elders be rulers only?

Reply.

That all Bishops must be didacticoi, that is, apt and ready for to teach, reprove &c. I grant: yet that they must therefore hav all one office I deny. For Apost. prophets, Evangelists, &c. were all didacticoi, yet differed in office. But how then shall some of the Elders be rulers only? I answer, even Ruling Elders are to be didacticoi, and yet have the office of ruling only. For everyone set over others to teach or inform them in faith or manners, must have aptness to teach the things pertaining to their office, and convince the contrary: or else they are unfit for the place.

But have they not then the teachers office? No, for this aptness to teach is common to all offices of government, but in several sorts, according to every man's function. For example, an Apostle must be apt to teach as an Apostle: and though a man have aptness to teach as a pastor, yet hath he not therefore aptness as an Apostle. For the office is greater, and requireth greater gifts. So a ruling Elder must be apt to teach as a ruler: yet hath he not therefore aptness to teach as a pastor, in whom greater skill is required.

Let us see this in Israel▪ Aptnes to teach was to be in all the Governors: in the whole tribe of Levi generally, Deut. 33. 10. in the priests of Levi more specially, Mal. 2. 7. Deut. 24. 8. in the judges of Israel also according to their office, Deut. 1, 13, 16. with Exod. 18. 15, 16, 21, 22. For this cause God gave the 70. Elders, the spirit of prophesy, Num. 11. 17. 25. And in the reformation by K. Jehoshaphat, we find not only priests and Levites, but other Princes of the king, sent for to teach the people, 2 Chr. 17, 7, 8. 9. These all were didacticoi, apt to teach, but in several respects, and measures, and in several offices.

Otherwise if one will understand aptness to teach, strictly as in the pastors office: then are Paul's words to be taken figuratively the whole for a part, or general for a particular: as a Bishop, that is a teaching Bishop, must be didacticos. And thus the scripture sometime speaketh; as Deut. 33. 8. 10. of the whole tribe of Levi, it is said they shall teach; they shall put incense &c. when as, though all were to teach, yet all were not to burn incense but the Priests only; Also in Deut. 10. 8. of the Tribe of Levi in general, it is said, God separated them, to bear the ark, to stand before the Lord to minister unto him, and to bless in his name. Yet were there special things about blessing, bearing the ark, and other ministrations, which belonged to the Priests of the Levites in particular. Even so Paul writing to Timothy and Titus, of the Eldership in general, may note some things, which more specially pertain to some only in particular.

Touching the word Proistamenos; Provost or Ruler; although I will not deny but every Elder may be so called in a large sense: yet specially it is the title of Ruling Elders only. And it is an oversight in M. Smyth to write that the Apostle saith, Every Bishop must be proistamenos: for that word hath relation to the ruling of his own house, which every Bishop must be able well to do; but in relation to the Church, the governing elders only are called proistameno; and it is their peculiar title, even as Pastors and Teachers are peculiar titles to others, and the name BISHOP and ELDER, common to them all.

In the last place M. Sm. repeateth his former reason from Ephes. 4. how the Apostle saith not some Pastors, some Teachers, but Pastors & Teachers copulatively. But that is before answered, and the plain meaning of Paul manifested, to be, some Pastors and some Teachers, as the ancient Syriac speaketh, and other reasons from that and the like scriptures do confirm.

The 2, objection.

1 Cor. 12. 5. 8. 28. The Apostle saith, there are diversities of ministries namely one that hath the word of wisdom, another that hath the word of knowledge, another that hath government, verse. 28. Therefore the Eldership consisteth of three sort of Elders. &c.

Mr Smiths answer.

First it is granted that there are diversities of ministries, as Ephe. 4. 11. 1 Tim. 3. 1. 8. Phil. 1. 1. namely Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Pastors, Deacons. Yet it followeth not hereupon, that elders are of divers sorts, as is pleaded. see verse. 28.

Again the word diaconia, signifieth sometime any spiritual work proceeding from any member or officer of the Church, as 2 Cor. 8. 4. alms is called diaconia, 1 Pet. 4. 10. diaconein signifieth any work that proceedeth from any gift. So it may signify here: and all the works that follow almost: may be referred thither. Only there are certain energemata mentioned in verse. 10.

Reply.

I perceive though the light shineth in darkness, yet the darkness comprehendeth it not: especially when men do wink with their eyes, least they should see. The sun shineth not clearer at noon, then the truth shineth out of this scripture, with M. S. seeks to darken with a cloud of deceit. The Apostle teacheth, first that one and the same spirit of God, bestoweth on the Church diversities of gifts; to one the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge, &c. Secondly, that one and the same Lord, (Jesus Christ) giveth to his Church, diversities of ministries or offices, that so the divers gifts may be ministered to the people, doctrine by the teacher; exhortation by the exhorter or pastor; government by the ruler &c. Thirdly that one and the same God (the father of whom are all things) worketh or effecteth diversities of effects or operations in the Church, by those divers gifts, and divers ministries. For example; as Christ is given for Prophet Priest and King of the Church; a Prophet to work upon the knowledge of men, that they may discern syn and righteousness: a Priest to work upon the will and affections, killing them as sacrifices, that a new and reasonable creature may be given up to GOD; asking, that the things taught by prophesy; and applied by priesthood, may be orderly practiced in life, preserved from all adverse power, and in the end perfected: even so in his Church (besides extraordinary miraculous Ministries of Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Tongues, gifts of healing and the like, which were but for a time,) he hath set ordinary permanent Ministries to the worlds end; of teachers that by the word of knowledge should teach & inform the minds of men; of Pastors, that by the word of wisdom should exhort and apply the truth unto the conscience and heart of men; and of Governors, that by diligent rule, should look unto the practice and walking of men, & conserve the church in order and peace. Thus God effecteth divers effects by the divers Ministries in his Church, as the Apostle teacheth.

Now though in the enumeration of the Ministries, Teachers & Governors are evidently distinguished, as thirdly teachers, after that, governors; and elsewhere as plainly distinct in their administrations, as the Elders that rule well, & they that labor in the word and doctrine: and again, he that teacheth on teaching: he that ruleth, with diligence: yet Mr Sm. would darken all this light, with this dim answer, it folowes not hereupon that elders are of divers sorts: see verse 28. as if he should say, though the Apostle plainly speaks it, yet do not you believe him.

So though Paul expresseth the office of Teachers, 1 Cor. 12. 28. which M. S. will hav to be the exegesis that is the expositiō of the word Pastors Ephe. 4. 11. and so must needs be the proper and plain name of the office: yet in his book where he pleads for the abomination of Anabaptism, he thus proclaimeth, among other challenges, Loe. we protest against them, to have a false Ministry of Doctors or Teachers: as if he would have the world to take notice, that he meaneth to war against heaven.

With like grace striveth he against the word Diaconia, Ministry, (which the Apostle useth, 1 Cor. 12. 5.) saying that it signifieth sometime any spiritual work &c. and, so it may signify here. But if such shifting & winding may be admitted, we shall have no truth so plain, but may be oppugned: yea Judaism and Atheism may be maintained. For we allege against Jews to prove the death of Christ how the Angel prophesied Messiah shall be slain Dan. 9. 26. I, saith the Jew, but Messiah sometime signifieth any one that is anointed; Priest or King; & so may it here be meant of any anointed governor, & not of him that is properly the Messiah. Tel an Atheist that God made heaven and earth; and he may answer that Elohim God is sometime used to signify Angels, Psal. 8. 5. with Heb. 2. 7. sometime to signify Magistrates, Psal. 82. 1. 6. and therefore he believes not any such God properly, as we profess. Thus every truth, upon a diverse use of the word, may be turned away.

But showeth Mr. Sm. any reason, why diaconia should so signify here? none at all: but saith, so it may be, and telleth of certain energemata mentioned verse. 10. which is as much to the edifying of the reader, as if he had told him there are certain giants of the sons of Anak, with whom it is not safe to meddle.

He should not thus trouble the reader with clouds; the truth is clear and plain. For diaconia is the most proper fit word that the Apostle could possibly use; it being the ordinary word used for ministry of every kind; as the ministry or office of the Apostleship, Rom. 11. 13. 1 Tim. 1. 12, the ministry of the Evangelists, 2 Tim. 4. 5. the ministry of Pastors or Teachers, Col. 4. 17. the Ministry of Rulers, and ministry of Deacons, Rom. 12. 7. 8. Act. 6. 1 Tim. 3. 12. 13. So Diaconos is every minister, and Diaconia every ministry or administration of what sort soever. Now Paul here spake before of divers gifts to be administered; and after of divers effects or operations of the gifts being administered; & between booth mentioneth diversities (diaconioon) of ministries or offices whereby those gifts should be administered and manifested in the Church, that they might be effectual: which what can they be, but the offices or ministries committed to men and executed by them for this end? Even as immediately followeth the manifestation of the spirit is given to every man to profit withal. And after by a similitude of the body, and members, applied to the Church and officers, he confirmeth the same. But though the wisdom of God poureth out her mind unto us, and maketh us to understand her words: yet some men will none of her counsel, they despise all her correction.

The 3 Objection.

The Apostle Rom. 12. 6. 8. maketh an opposition between prophesy and an office and maketh five kinds of officers, Pastors, Teachers, Rulers, Deacons, Widows.

M. S. Answer.

That is denied to be the true resolution of the place &c. for although there be five several actions repeated, yet doth it not follow that there are five several officers to perform those actions: for one person may perform them all, and yet be no officer, viz. teach, exhort, rule, distribute, show mercy. 1 Cor. 14. 3. 26. 31. Rom. 12, 13. 1 Cor. 5. 5.

Reply.

Behemoth is so big that he trusteth to draw up Iarden into his mouth; but no beast (I trow) weeneth that he can drink up all the waters of the sea. Korah thought so well of his holiness and ability, that though he were but an ordinary Levite, he could do the Priests office also: but I never heard of man til now, that could perform all the actions that are to be doon in a church. The Apostles could not tend to two offices therein at once, but got others to do one; & notwithstanding complained of their inability in that, saying who is sufficient for these things? And may one person now perform all actions? needs must the works become much more easy; or the person that doth them, much more mighty, then any that lived in the Apostles time. How ever it may be in distress and extremity, that one man may do some things one after another, about all these actions, yet perform them he cannot. And who but one stricken with madness and blindness and astonying of heart, (as Moses did prophesy) to grope at noon day, as the blind gropeth in darkness, could read this scripture Rom. 12. and the other places cited, & gather such a doctrine from them? The Apostles purpose in Rom. 12. is to persuade unto virtue, among virtues specially to sobriety or modesty, which bewtifieth all good actions. Hereunto he persuadeth by this, that every man hath but his part and measure from God, & one hath not all. This he confirmeth by the similitude of the body, whose members have not all one office or action, but many: so is it with the church; for God hath given divers gifts unto the many members or persons of the same; some have simply the gift of prophesy, which they may use to the edifying of the church, some have an office or ministry also whereunto they are appointed and must attend. Some are Teachers, some Exhorters, some Distributers, some Rulers, some shewers of mercy. Everyone of these must look to the administration and dispensation of his gift, in sobriety, according to the measure and vocation that he hath from God, for the good of the whole body of the church.

The like doctrine is taught again, 1 Cor. 12. 4. 5. 8—12. &c. Now let him that readeth consider, whither M. Sm, doctrine that one person may perform all these, be not as directly opposite to the Apostles meaning and scope, as darkness to light? But he hath yet more to answer.

Answer.

Again the distributive particle Eight four times repeated, in prophesy, diaconia, exhorting, and teaching, importeth thus much: that the Apostles intention is not to subordinate teaching and exhorting to diaconia, but to oppose ech of these 4. particulars to other, as thus: Prophesy is the manifestation of a gift, 1 Cor. 14. 3. Diaconia is the office, & there are divers kinds thereof 1 Cor. 12. 5.

Teaching is one action or work of the prophets or officers 1 Cor. 14. 26. Exhorting is another action or work of them. 1 Cor. 14. 3. Hence it followeth that teaching & exhorting are as well subordinate to prophesy as to diaconia.

Reply.

Thorns and snares (saith Solomon) are in the way of the froward: that find we here. For to trouble and entangle the simple reader, all shifts are sought out, least truth should prevail. First the objection was of M. Smiths own contriving, as he liked best to answer: otherwise he could not (I suppose) be ignorant, that most learned men of these times, (so far as I have seen) though they detest his error, do grant his conclusion. But he concludes not the question, namely that 1. Teaching, 2. Exhorting, 3. distributing, 4. ruling, 5. showing mercy, are all to be performed in the church by one person: or that Paul intends any such thing here. I have before shown the contrary.

But I will labor to break his snare, that the simple fall not therein. diaconia he rightly interpreteth Office, and saith, there are diverse kinds thereof: citing 1 Cor. 12. 5. Let this be compared compared with his answer before to the second objection: where he pleaded that diaconia in 1 Cor. 12. 5. mought signify a work. There he set himself to cavil against the truth, here unawares he granteth it. Well, seeing diaconia here is an office; and there be offices divers: let us proceed. Teaching (saith he) is one work of the prophets or Officers; exhorting is another work of them. Of them, I grant; for they are divers: but is it of him, that is of one and the same officer? is there any word or title that intimateth this? none at all, but the contrary: for as the Apostle mentioneth divers works, teaching exhorting &c. so mentioneth he divers persons, the teacher, the exhorter, the distributor, the ruler. Neither doth he say, let him that teacheth, teach, & exhort, & distribute, and rule, as if one man should do all: but, let him that teacheth teach, let him that exhorteth exhort. As if he should speak of the members of the body (which similitude he used) let that which seeth, see circumspectively: let that which heareth, hear attentively; let that which speaketh, speak warily &c. Would any reasonable man think, that one member must do all these actions, that the eye because it seeth, it also must hear, and speak: and not understand this of the three several members, the eye, ear, and tongue? Even so unreasonable is the collection, that Paul should mean one person to do those several actions.

But M. S. striving about the particle eight, which signifieth whither & or, & applying it to the 4. particulars; maketh the two last to be teaching & exhorting: wherein he useth deceit for advantage. For he putteth the action for the actor that doth it. The Apostle saith, or he that teacheth, or he that exhorteth, so noting two persons: M. Sm. saith or teaching, or exhorting, so noting two actions. Thus he intending to have many actions doon by one person, wresteth the scripture, and maketh it speak after his own fancy.

This being observed, his pleading about Eight will be little worth, for the Apostle by it, disjoineth things thus. Gifts ye have divers, which gifts ye use and manifest, either by prophesy (which any private person in the church may do, even as all other like gifts, of tongues, interpretations, Psalms and the like:) or by ministry that is by office and charge laid upon you, which as it is divers, so everyone must attend unto, and look that he fulfil the same

Thus is here a full and perfect distribution of all the gifts that are in the church, by the two general sorts of persons, or subjects that have them: 1. private brethren, or 2. public officers.

This first division being perfect: that which followeth is an under division, or another division, not of the gifts, but of the persons that have the gifts: which are five, 1. Teachers, 2. Exhorters, 3. Distributers, 4. Rulers, 5. Shewers of mercy. The two first whereof have the sign of disjunction or before thē, in the other it is to be understood: for such defect is common. Now all these persons are to be referred, either to the former 1. prophesy, or 2. ministry, that is office: or both. But seeing no scripture, that I know of, speaketh of distribution, or Ruling, or Showing mercy, under the name of prophesy: therefore I refer them to the latter word Office or Ministry, to which they all agree. Teaching and exhorting I grant are doon in prophesy, by private brethren: but that they are more specially doon in ministry by public officers, none I think will deny. And that here Paul refers them to ministry, seemeth to me most evident: for prophesy was limited by him, according to the proportion of faith: so that if any brother in prophesying, kept unto the proportion of faith he did enough: but an officer must not only do this, but must also attend unto the continual doing of it, in season, out of season, privately, publicly, and therefore must give himself hereunto; whereas a private brother followeth other vocation, and speaketh but when he seeth occasion. For this cause, Paul saith here, an office should be in the office, or ministry in the ministration: meaning that it should be waited upon, and executed in sobriety. And then coming to the Teacher and Exhorter, he useth like speech, in doctrine & in exhortation, meaning that they should give themselves to these works, and execute them with modesty. So the officers, rather than the private brethren (upon whom no such burden is laid) seem here to be intended by teacher & exhorter, and so consequently diverse officers, as there be divers actions for them to perform, and have diverse gifts of God for the same end.

But M. S. continueth his answer thus.

Further if Diaconia be the genus to these 5. species following, then I say that Diaconia signifieth not an office, but a work: and of works there are those 5. kinds. That diaconia doth sometime signify a work is plain. 2 Cor. 8. 4. 1 Pet. 4. 10. Lastly, the Apostle that knew how to speak would never have made teaching and exhortation members distributive with prophesy and diaconia, if he had intended to make them species subordinate to diaconia: therefore questionless that is not his intention.

Rather than he will yield to the truth, he seeks every corner of error: and now the diverse use of the word diaconia must again be urged, against the proper meaning of the same, against the evident light of this scripture, & against the man's own former interpretation. And sure he is used to rough ways and words, that saith it is plain, diaconia signifies a work: the scriptures that he quoteth show it not. The word signifieth ministry or office, and ministration or service doon unto any other: but work is an unproper interpretation. Let linguists judge. Nay let M. S. himself judge, if he will be tried by himself; for in his book against M. Bernard (written after this) he hath this proposition; The true ministry hath a true office, in execution whereof it is exercised; Rom. 12. 7. 1. Cor. 12. 5. 28 Eph. 4. 11. I would gladly know how M. Sm. will prove his assertion from these scriptures, if diaconia do not signify an office in this place. But it is God's special judgment against heretics, that they should be autocrats, condemned of themselves. Yet were it translated work, what would it help him? Of works there are 5. kinds saith he. Who denies it? but are there not also as many kind of workers? let this be disproved: otherwise to strive for the former, is to fight with his shadow.

The Apostle (we doubt not) knew well how to speak; and therefore spake not as M. S. feigneth, of teaching & exhortation as distributive members; but of the teacher and exhorter. And all men know that an office and officer have fit reference each to other; so ministry being mentioned in general, the several ministers are fitly next named. But of this point I spake before.

The 4. objection

The Apostle by the commandment of Christ; writeth to the Angels of the Churches of Asia Rev. 1. & 2. & 3. That is to the Pastors which are but one in every particular Church. For so the words are, to the Angel of the Church, &c.

Mr Smiths answer.

First it can never be proved by scriptures, that there was but one Pastor in a Church, it is plain, Act. 20. 28. that there were many in the Church of Ephesus, (that was one of those 7. Churches) that did perform the work of the Pastor, which is poimainein to feed; even all the elders verse. 17. with verse. 28. And therefore there were many Pastors in that Church in Paul's time. Again, all churches had officers of one sort, & one kind of Presbyterie; &c.

Reply.

This is the last objection which M. Sm. maketh and answereth. Other reasons many there are, more pregnant: this alone without conference with other scriptures, I know will not prove many sorts of officers But it may serve to confirm the point thus: seeing in Ephesus there were many Elders; & Christ here directeth his Epistle to the Angel or Messenger of that Church; this seemeth to be one that had the principal charge of the whole, that is the Pastor. But it cannot be proved (saith M. S.) that there was but one Pastor in a church. Neither can it be proved (say I) that there were many. Yes saith he, all the Elders in Ephesus were poimainein to feed, or do the Pastors work therefore there were many Pastors. I answer, it followeth not; for the reason deceiveth by equivocation or double meaning of the word. Pastor, generally taken is any governor; particularly and strictly (whereof now we speak) it is the Exhorter, or he that hath the word of wisdom. In the general meaning Christ is the Pastor, the Apostles Pastors, all the Elders of a particular Church are Pastors. Will he conclude hereupon, that an Apostle and a Pastor properly so called, is all one office?

The Apostle showeth the contrary, Ephes. 4. 11. As then an Apostle and a Pastor be diverse officers, though both do poimainein, feed: so Pastors, Teachers, Rulers, may be different officers, though all do poimainein, that is feed & rule the flock.

The Pastors in Israel, in the scriptures which he before alleged, Ier. 23. 1. Ezek. 34. 2, had they all one particular office? Far otherwise. For Priests and Levites were distinct in office, and other Elders distinct from them both, as before I have manifested. yea not only the Sacrificers, but the civil governors were Pastors. K. David was a Pastor taken to feed Jacob and Israel. Accordingly in Act. 20. & 1. Pet. 5. all the Elders may feed, & yet not all be in one & the same, but in distinct office.

Answer

Further, (saith Mr. Sm.) the Angel of everyone of those Churches, doth not signify one Pastor only in every Church, but either the college of Pastors if they were many, or the company of the most sincere and holy men, that most opposed the corruptions of the Church, or were most holy and zealous in life & doctrine. That an Angel signifieth a company of men, is plain, Rev. 14. 6. 8. 9. & 18, 4.

Reply.

It is not plain, but very obscure and figurative, if an Angel signifies at any time, a company of men; the scriptures alleged show it not. For though there is no Angel or messenger mentioned, but there is a people also implied, to whom he is a messenger; as there is no Pastor, but implieth a flock; yet is not the Pastor the flock, nor the Angel the people. Special persons are rather noted by the Angels in my judgment. To take the Angel for a company of the most sincere and holy men; is further from the mark: seeing some are written to, in whom little zeal or sincerity can be gathered, Rev. 3. 1. 15. and to pass by the officers, and direct the Letters to private persons, and such especially; is not according to order; encommended by Christ to the Church, 1 Cor. 14. 40.

Answer.

Lastly (saith M. S.) in all likelihood there were some extraordinary men yet living in the Churches, either Prophets or Evangelists, that had extraordinary gifts, whose zeal and holiness might win them special estimation in the Churches: in regard whereof it might be the holy Ghost intending his Epistles to the whole Church, chiefly directeth them to these Persons so qualified, as men best able to prevail with the Church, and calleth them Angels, whether one or more: as John the Baptist is called an Angel. Mark. 1. 2.

Reply

Any thing hath more likelihood with Mr. Sm. then that which is most likely to be true. Can this have all likelihood, that the Evangelists or Prophets extraordinary, on whose foundation Christ's Church is built, should come to that corrupt estate, which some of these Angels were come into? Rev. 3. 1. 15. Hath it all likelihood that such as were officers of all the Churches in general, should be intitled Angels of particular Churches? But it seemeth M. Sm. thinketh the name Angel must needs import some zealous or godly person: wherein he is mistaken. For the Angels are the stars in the firmament of the Church, and of these stars or Angels, many are cast by the Dragons tail, from heaven to earth, and some have the key of the bottomless pit; & some Angels hold the wind of God's spirit from blowing on the earth. So that the Angels or stars in the book of Revelation, usually signify the ministers of the Churches, whither good or evil. Who rather in likelihood have the title of angels or messengers given unto them, both from the like title given by God himself to the Priests of Israel, Mal. 2. 7. and by the Jews common phrase, who called him that was chief ruler in their Synagogues, Sheliach tsibbur, that is the Legate or Messenger of the congregation; which name Sheliach the Rabbin's use for Maleach an Angel; and the Chaldee paraphrast putteth Meshammesh that is, a Minister, in the stead.

Now Christ used to speak familiarly and to the understanding of the people, & so I doubt not but he doth here. And although it be questionable whither there may be moe pastors then one in a Church; yet see I no likelihood of moe then one here; though many Elders. For the Pastor both by his name gift & employment, hath special charge of the flock in such things as Christ writeth of to these Churches. And as Archippus in the Church at Colossae is in special charged to take heed to his Ministry to fulfil it, (though it is to be thought there were moe Elders with him, as in all other Churches:) so mought Polycarpus (the Pastor in John's time of the Church in Smyrna, as writers record;) be written to in special, to look to his Ministry, and so the other Pastors, the Angels, in their several Churches; that by them Christ's mind, mought be signified to the congregations. This course God taketh usually; his messengers the watchmen are to hear the word at his mouth, and give the people warning from him Ezek. 3. 17. Things that concerned the whole Church of Israel, were first spoken from God to Moses, from Moses to the Elders, from them to the people: Exod. 19. 3. 7. and Exod. 12, 1, 3, 21. God doth nothing but he reveleth his secret to his servants the prophets, Amos. 3. 7. So in this Revelation, God gave it to Christ, Christ to an Angel, (properly so called;) the Angel to John: and John writeth to the Angel of the church, the Minister: that by him it may come to all the Congregation.

Thus have we heard the reasons and arguments whereby M. Sm. laboreth to manifest that the triformed presbytery (as he calleth it) consisting of three kinds of Elders, Pastors, Teachers, Rulers, is none of God's ordinance, but man's device: and Antichristian. wherein what weakness or vanity rather, hath appeared, the judicious reader, may discern; & how little cause this challenger had, to cry out the second time for an answer, with, loe, we protest against them to have a false government of a triformed presbytery, But Christ who hath set these for officers in his church, and holdeth all the stars in his right hand; will rescue & deliver them from the hand of aliens, whose mouth talketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood.

OF THE TREASURY.

THE last point of difference from us Mr. Smyth setteth down thus We hold that in contributing to the church treasury, there ought to be both a separation from them that ar without, and a sanctification of the whole action by prayer and thanksgiving. Of these & other points about the Deacons office, he speaketh after in his book. Wherein, if he would have his readers think we differ in all, he notably abuseth both them and us. But of the two points mentioned in his article, I will briefly entreat. First, for the separatiō frō thē without, thus he writeth There ought to be a separation in alms and contribution to the treasury, as well as in other parts of our spiritual cōunion. Act. 4. 32. & 5. 13. 2 Cor. 6. 17. Act. 2. 42. Heb. 13. 16. 2 Cor. 8. 7. therf•e they that are without, if they give anything, must lay it a part severally from the treasury, & it must be employed to common use. Mat. 27. 6. 7.

How M. S. gathereth his proposition frō those scriptures, & how far he will stretch them, I cannot tell: the first place (Act, 4, 32.) mentioneth community of all goods among the saints: the second place Act. 5. 13. showeth how no other man durst join unto thē: the third place 2 Cor. 6. 17. requireth God's people to come out and separate from unbelievers, and touch no unclean thing. If he match these things thus together, as if the goods of unbelievers ar uncleā, & not to be touched or received of the Saints, he misseth of Paul's intent: for upon this ground, that the earth is the Lord's, and the plenty of it: the Apostle proveth it lawful for Christians to partake with unbelievers at their table in whatsoever things is set before them: so that meat drink, clothing, or money may be received from them: neither are these or any like outward things, the unclean things that he forbids to touch, 2 Cor. 6. 17. Consequently, if we may go to their table, we may hav them at ours: if in our poverty we may receive releef of thē: in their poverty, we may and should releev them: wherefor there is that communion in these carnal things permitted: which in spiritual things, as prayer, sacraments &c. is unlawful: & though it be said Act 2. 42. they continued in the Apost. doctrine, fellowship, breaking of bread, & prayer: yet he that shall gather we may have no more communion with an unbeliever in eating & drinking, then in prayer; mistaketh quite. We know that to the defiled & unbelieving nothing is pure, as Paul saith, but unto the pure all things are pure: and if an idol cannot defile God's creature so, but a Christian may use it, (so it be not with offense) neither can the idolater.

In some outward things, I observe difference between the Jews state and ours. They went not in to, nor ate with men uncircūcised, Act. 10. 28. & 11, 3. we go in to men unbaptised, & eat with them, 1 Cor. 10, 27. They did not eat of all meats set before thē by infidels, Dan. 1. 8. we do eat of all that is set before us by such, 1 Cor. 10. 25. 26, 27. They admitted not an uncircumcised into the temple Eze. 44 9. Act. 21, 28, 29. we forbid not any unbaptised to come into our assemblies. 1 Cor. 14. 23—25, Notwithstanding his I find among them, that Solomon asked & received outward things as timber for the temple, of Hiram King of Tyre: & king Darius gave of his own revenues towards the temple & worship of God, & it was not refused. In Israel I find not that any admitted into the public place of the word and prayers, was forbidden there if he would to contribute: neither any such law made by Christ. Rather the ground laid by the Apostle showeth the contrary: if the Gentiles (saith he) be made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things. Rom. 15. 27. Vnbelievers are admitted to the ministry of the word in Christian assemblies, & so made partakers of our spiritual things; if then & there they will give of their carnal things, upon what ground may we refuse them?

It is alleged, how 2 Cor. 8. 7. the communion of almose is called a grace, and in Heb. 13. 16. a sacrifice. I acknowledge it thus to be in the saints, whither they give it in public or private. For when he saith, to do good and to communicate forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased; he meaneth it not only of public contribution in the church, but of private distribution to any at any time. Paul brought almose and offerings to his nation Act. 24. 17.

and himself received such a sacrifice from the Philippians, Philip. 4. 18. And if any one Christian in private had sent him the like, had it not been a sacrifice also? Wherefore the Almose of the Saints are sacrifices, though one give to another in secret: yea if a Christian releev an unbeliever in poverty and distress, it is a sacrifice and sweet odour to God. If therefore upon this ground we may not receive it of unbelievers in the public Church, because it is in the saints a communion of grace and sacrifice: how may we receive it of such in private?

But (saith M. Sm.) they that are without if they give anything, must lay it apart, several from the treasury, & it must be employed to common use. Mat. 27. 6. 7. This position I will not absolutely condemn: neither can I yet grant it, for the proof is insufficient. For whereas the Jews (Mat. 27) would not put Judas wages into their treasury, it was not because he was one without; for Judas was a Jew, no stranger unto them: but because it was the price of blood, therefore they mought not put it into the treasury. This teacheth us, that goods gotten by violence, extortion, murder, theft or other like evil way: may not be put into the treasury, though the members of the Church do offer them. But this is no more for those without, then for those within. And for common use of all unbelievers gifts; I suppose this example will not bear it out. For if in the poverty and distress of Christ's church, they which are not of the same, minister relief thereunto, (which if they do not, it shall be one reason of their condemnation at the day of judgment:) hath not the church liberty to use & enjoy these benefits for themselves, seeing the earth is the Lord's and the plenty thereof? must they needs bestow it for the behoof of strangers, as was Judas hire? I am otherwise minded, for the reasons before rendered. Howbeit concerning these things if any shall better inform us, by the word of God, we shall be willing to receive it.

For the latter branch, that it should be sanctified with blessing or thanks giving to God, we do well approve; upō that general ground of thanks unto God for all his benefits: and as any do give or send more special releef, so more special thanks to be rendered therefore, as we are directed, 2 Cor. 9. 12—15.

Albeit for the manner of performing this thing, as whither a special prayer is to be made before the contributiō, & a special thanksgiving after: or whither in the general prayers of the Church, it is to be sanctified among other the public actions; there may be some question, and I will not contend: let everyone use herein, the wisdom that God giveth them. Only I do observe, how M. Sm. himself makes a query, at what time of the Lord's day, and after what manner the treasury is to be collected: which showeth in him no certainty for the form of this business. & I doubt not but as he, so we all may be to seek, for the most convenient manner & order of doing many things: wherein if any lust to be contentious, I say with the Apostle, we have no such custom, neither the churches of God.

A FEW OBSERVATIONS UPON SOME OF M. SMITH'S Censures, in his answer to M. Bernard.

Mr Smyth in his late book, called Parallels, censures &c. seeks occasion to censure some things which I had written in answer to Mr. Bern. but chiefly insisteth upon the question of ecclesiastical government, whereabout he chargeth me with antichristianisme. If it were not for others that may stumble at this reproach, I would bear it in silence; minding my adversary so fickle and inconstant, as he holdeth almost to nothing that himself hath written; and I would restin God's work, who as already he hath made this man like unto a wheel, so, if he repent not, in due time will make him † like stubble before the wind. For from the faith which he defended in that his book he presently after, in great measure fell away himself. The constitutiō of our Church, (in which estate himself then professed to be with us,) he writeth of it thus I am bold to pronounce &c. our true constitution to be the most honorable and bewtiful ornament of our Church; more glorious then our true Ministry, worship, and government. Contrary to this, a few days after, he sets out The character of the Beast, wherein (having dissolved & forsaking his former true and glorious constitution,) he exclaimeth against us, (as before I have shown,) as having a false Church falsely constituted, and therefore no one ordinance of the Lord true among us. Thus Wormwood fell from heaven.

Again in this answer to Mr. Bernard he acknowledgeth, the apostate Church of the 10. tribes in the Old Testament to be a Church falsely constituted; and so the Churches of Antichrist in the N. Testament: contrarywise in his Character of the Beast, seking shifts for his anabaptisme, he saith Israel's apostasy did not destroy the true constitution of the Church, but Antichrists doeth, &c. I leave these and other like flowers of contradiction, for others to gather that deal in that controversy. Only because his answer to Mr. Bern. seemeth to be written in defense of our cause, and so may be taken of posterity: I would have the reader take notice, that the silver there is mixed with dross and the wine, with the gal of asps. As where Mr. Sm. saith, that to the constitution of the typical Church, (meaning the church of Israel) there was not required true holiness but ceremonial cleanness. This is a false and blasphemous assertiō, injurious to God's holy majesty, as making him to constitute Church of hypocrites: & it is evidently overthrown by the covenants made between God and them; Gen. 17. Exod. 19. 5. 6. 8. Exod. 20. and 21. &c. and 24. 3. 4. 7. 8. Levite. 19. 2. with 1. pet. 1. 15 16. Deut. 5. 1. 2. 3. and 26. 17. 18. 19. and 29. 10. 11. 12. 13. &c.

So when he saith, the Israelites did worship to repentance, we do worship from repentance: therefore they might and did worship, thereby to reconcile themselves to God, we being reconciled to God and accepted in Christ, do proceed to offer to the Lord the calves of our lips, the best grace we have with us, first men declare their repentance▪ and then we receive them into our cōmuniō to worship with us: with thē first men were received into typical cōmuniō, and then they were trained up to repentance and faith in Christ &c. These & the like distinctions Mr. Sm. hath fetched out of his own heart, not from the word of God: for although there be differences many between them and us, as touching outward rites and services, ended & abolished by Christ, (as the Epistle to the Hebrews showeth;) yet as touching the substance of their religion, worship, constitution &c. as touching repentance, faith, reconciliation to God &c. there was no such differences as Mr. Sm. feigneth. They had the law to show them their fyn, and to bring them to Christ: so have we. Mat. 5. 17. Rom. 3 30. 31 and 7. 7.—12. 21. &c. I am. 2. 8. 9. 10. 11. We have the gospel, to show us our righteousness by Christ, without works of the law: so had they, Heb. 4. 2. Levite. 26 42—45. with Luk. 1. 54. 55▪ 72. 73. Deut. 30. 1.—12. 13. 14. with Rom.

10. 5. 6.—8. Gen. 15. 6. Psal. 32. 1. 2. with Rom. 4. 6. &c. 1 Cor. 10. 1. 2. 3. 4. Hebr. 11. Only in the manner of administration the Law & gospel, there be differences manifested.

Also when he saith, that the Jews moral uncleanness did not pollute their ceremonial communion; that their real wickedness did not pollute their ceremonial or typical CHURCH, worship and communion; but lawfully they might have typical communion in typical worship, that were typically clean, though they were wicked in deed: these assertions, manifest M. S. to be not only a typical but a real seducer and deceiver of minds in deed; who would make us believe that if a man in Israel had but touched his own wife lying in her child-bed, or put apart for her disease; if he came to worship in the tabernacle, and had not washed and cleansed himself according to the law, he polluted the Church and communion of the Saints: but though he had committed adultery with his neighbors wife, and came into the tabernacle in his syn to worship, without repentance; yet he polluted not the Church, but lawfully mought have communion in the word, prayer, sacrifices &c. which unclean doctrine is evidently condemned, by these and many other like scriptures. Levite. 4. 2. 3. 13. 14. 22. 23. 27. 28. 35. Levite. 6. 2—7. Num. 15. 22. 23. 24. 27. 29. 30. 31. Levite. 19. 17. Levite. 18. 29. 30. Josh. 22. 16. 17. 18. 20.

But upon these and like rotten grounds, M. S. hath now sought to build his tower of Anabaptism, which the breath of the Lord, will throw down upon his head.

Although therefore the cause which M. S. then had in hand was good, and many good things are in that book; yet the dead flies have caused to stink, and putrefied the ointment of the apothecary: as in these so in other points, which the wise must observe. Leaving therefore those things, I come to the matter which he maketh against me, and in his foresaid book of Parallels, pag. 67. hath thus inveighed.

But Mr Ains. steppeth up with a new kind of Antichristianism, never heard of before: and he teacheth us, if we will believe him, that Christ's ruling power is in the Eldership; and that the Pope and Prelates, arnot Antichrists, for taking into their hands the power of the multitude, but the power of Christ.

Here first Mr S. maketh his own collection, to be my assertion. I said not, neither would say thus absolutely, Christ's ruling power is in the Eldership, my words are these (Counterp. pa. 176) We acknowledge Christ to have ordained aPresbyterie or Eldership, and that inevery Church: for toteach and rule them by his own word and laws.

That which I wrote, I plainly confirmed by scriptures in the margin, which the reader may serch and judge of: neither hath this adversary taken them away; or said ought against them; or yet set them down in his book (where he printed my words) for his reader to take notice of.

That which I have written, is further confirmed, for the substance of it, by Mr Sm. himself, in the very same book of Parallels, the last page but one, where he hath set down this argument. The government of the primitive Apostolic institution, was by a college of Pastors, or presbytery. The government of the English assemblies, is by an antichristianPrelate and his officers. Therefore, The government of the English assemblies is not the primitivs Apostolic government. The major is evident; &c.

Again, in this very passage, where he treateth of popular government, he is driven into such straits, as force him to say: We dispute not whither the Elders must rule or not: but we dispute who hav the negative voice, &c. and a little after: yet we say the Elders are to lead and govern all persons and causes of the Church. Who now will not wonder, at this man's malice, to charge me with Antichristianism for my writing: and himself in the same book, to write as he hath doon.

And were i• in deed Antichristianism, as he saith, which I have stepped up with: yet he overlasheth with his tongue, in calling it a new kind, & never heard of before; considering what he had heard before of M. Bernard, (if not of others) as the opinion of those that he calleth Puritans. But let us turn the edge of his own argument against himself, thus: The government of the primitive Apostolic institution, was by a college of of pastors or presbytery. (This M. S. himself defendeth,) But popular government by the multitude, is not the government by a college of Pastors or presbytery. Therefore, popular government by the multitude (which yet M. Sm. would also plead for,) is not the government of the primitive Apostolic institution.

Again his argument helpeth me thus, The government of the primitive apostolic institution is not Antichristianism. The government which J plead for, in answer to M. Bern. is the government of the primitive Apostolic institution; (for it is the government by the Presbyterie,) Therefore the government which I plead for is not Antichristianism.

Thus mought M. Sm. have been better advised what he censured in me: if he had duly weighed, what he wrote himself.

In his confutation of my writing, he first would have it remembered, that the power of Christ which they speak of, is a ministerial delegated power, given to man &c. I answer, that I had to deal with M. Bernard's book, and knew nothing at all, of 〈◇〉 which had passed between M. S. and him: but finding him to have set down things so badly, as that he mought make his reader believe, there was no other difference, between Papist, protestant, puritan, and Brownist, (as he calleth them,) concerning church government; then only who should administer the same: whither the Pope, or a Prelate, or the presbytery, or the multitude: I thought it needful in my answer, to show the reader a further difference, even in the power and jurisdiction itself, which whosoever do administer, they make themselves Antichrists: seeing the Pope & all Papal prelates, challenge such ruling power, as encroacheth upon Christ's own right: besides their usurping of the power of the church.

And where I say that the Pope is Antichrist, not for taking into his hands the power of the multitude, but of Christ, to rule and govern the church as head of the same: my meaning was not altogether to free the Pope of Antichristianitie, for taking the power of the multitude, which I acknowledge to be a heinous syn in him: but for to show by way of comparison, that the other syn is much greater, to usurp the power of Christ. And thus I write, not only from the general equity of the law, which maketh a syn against God, to be much more then a syn against man: but also from the like speeches in the scriptures. For when Jeremiah said in the Lord's name to Israel, J spake not to your fathers, nor commanded them when J brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings and sacrifices: but this thing I commanded them, obey my voice &c & when Paul said Christ sent me not to baptize but to preach, &c. neither of them denied simply, the things which God had plainly spoken, & Paul practiced; but only by way of comparison: even so do I. And yet if I should stand upon fit and proper terms, I would not call the Pope Antichrist, for doing that which the people in Christian liberty should do: but for doing that which Christ only is to do, who is L. and head of the church. Even as the Apostle John maketh such to be Antichrists in his days, as denied Jesus to be the Christ, or come in the flesh: so all that in these days, deny or oppugn Christ, are properly Antichrists: and they that bereave the brethren of their liberty, are tyrants & oppressors of the church. But as things are some time taken largely, he that sinneth against his neighbor, may be said to syn against God & Christ. Anabaptists, Arians, and all other heretics, are Antichrists: & so I acknowledge the Pope for robbing the church of her power, may be called Antichrist.

But M. Sm. to help the Pope, if thereby he may think to hurt me, pleadeth that the Pope doth not assume that power which Christ as king hath in his own hands reserved to himself. This is catholicly spokē of him and very favourably on the Popes part: but how truly, let the sequel show. The Pope assumeth this power, to be Rector of the universal church; director of the Lord's universal flock: (P. Bonifac. 8. Sexto. decretal. cap. vbi.) To be Cephas, that is (by his interpretatiō) Caput, the head of the Apostolic church. (Anaclet. dist. 22. cap. sacrosācta.) To be Lex animata in terris, a living law in earth; whose sentence & judgment must stand, as given out of heaven by the mouth of Peter himself. Sext. decret. c. Ab arbitris. glosa. P. Agatho. dist. 19. c. sic omnes. which sentence no man must break nor retract, no mā must dispute or doubt of. (P. Nicol. 9. q. 3. c. patet. P. Jnnoc. 2. Art. 17. q. 4. Si quis.) The Pope assumeth this power, to be set of God over nations and kingdoms, to pluck up, and to root out &c. even to judge the princes of the earth; to be one and the same head with Christ of the visible church: and therefore every earthly creature if he will be saved, must of necessity be subject to the Pope. (Bonifac. 8. Extrav. c. unam sanctam. De major. & obed.) He by Romish religion, is that one Pastor, over the one fold: God himself and he his vicar, have but one consistorie. (Hostiens. in cap. Quant. de trans. praeb.) under his feet are all things subdued, sheep and oxen & beasts of the field, fowls of heaven, and fishes of the sea, that is to say, (in catholic interpretation) Jews, heretics, pagans, Christian men of all sorts, Angels in heaven, and souls in purgatory Antonin. sum. major. 3. part. dist. 22. As for emperors and kings, (whom God himself honoreth with his own title of God's,) they may serv to hold the Popes stirrup, or kiss his foot: for they be more inferior to him, then lead is inferior to gold. P. Gelasius. Dist. 96. cap. duo. Wherefore his doctors have kept decorum, in giving him the titles of the highest God; as Optimus, Maximus, most good and most great, & Supremum in terris numen, (Staplet. in princ. fid. doct. praef. ad Greg. 13) Yea Dom. Deus noster papa, our Lord God the Pope, Can. Extravag. Johan. 22. c. cum inter. In glosa. These and many moe like testimonies which might be alleged, will tell every wise heart, whither the pope assumes not the power which Chr. hath reserved to himself: and whither M. S. had not a greater splen against me, then against the Pope: when to contradict what I had written, he sets down, that properly the Pope is not antichrist, for challenging Christ's kingly power proper to himself: & in another place also saith, The pope is not Antichrist, for that he usurpeth that regal power which is proper to Christ: but is antichristian for usurping the delegated power. &c.

As for his friendly qualifications, that the Pope claimeth to be a ministerial head▪under Christ, & in that he doth many actions proper to Christ himself, it is but the misinterpretation of his ministerial headship, not understanding how far it extendeth, &c. these are but colors to hide the filthiness of that scarlet whore, who surmounting in arrogancy all the children of pride, yet will needs be called servant of the servants of God. But I set down, not what the Pope and papal Prelates say they be; (for the Devil will say he is an Angel of light,) nor what they plainly profess to do: but what they be & do in deed; though yet they profess so much, as any forehead might blush to say, the Pope claims not the power proper to Christ alone.

And what if I would press Mr Smiths words as much for the Pope on the other hand, namely that he claimeth to be ministerial Bishop under Christ, & in that he doth many actions proper to the Church, it is but the misinterpretation of his ministerial office, not understanding how far it extends, &c. and hereupon conclude, that properly the Pope is not Antichrist for challenging the Churches ruling power proper to itself; would not this plea be as good as Mr Smiths? And thus the Pope mought be freed from being Antichrist properly at all; or else Mr. S. pleading is but little worth.

Again, for Papal Bishops among the Protestants, however they utter not such speeches of their power, (being curbed through fear of the civil magistrate:) yet their Lordly jurisdiction, which they challenge and usurp over many parishes and provinces, together with the names of blasphemy upō their foreheads as Lord's-spiritual, Archbishops &c. do prove them to encroach upō Christ's kingly power, and usurp the same; though neither they, nor the Pope, nor Belial himself, will say so much.

Next for the government by Elders which I proved by scriptures; Mr Smyth, neither answering, nor once mentioning the scriptures quoted, seeketh to blind his reader with a We say, and a general disclaiming of mine error, (as he calleth it,) without conviction. And let the reader observe his manner of disputing against me. At the first, he said to me, This of you deney M. Ains. (which I think you do not) I say you are therein departed from the faith. Behold how his own heart checked him, when he began his invective against me; it told him, that I denied not the truth. But he proceeds; and after he had shown his own faith, he comes upon me with another If, and conceles his own thought, saying, If you hold any other faith, it is not the faith of Christ. After drawing to an end, he concludeth a gainst me thus I do therefore utterly disclaim this your error Mr. Ains. as one part of Antichristianism in your Church. First let us see what mine error is, and then how it is convinced. Is it mine error to hold that Christ hath ordained a Presbyterie in every Church? why the scriptures which I cited prove it to be truth; and mine adversary hath nothing to say against it, but yieldeth it himself in the last leaf of his book as before I shown. Or is it mine error to hold, that this Presbyterie is to teach and rule the Church by Christ's own words & laws? This seemeth in deed to be the scandal, which Mr. Sm. stumbleth at, & would thus spurn away. The power ministerial of the Elders (saith he) is rather a leading power, then a ruling power: neither ar the Elders in all the New Testament (to my knowledge) called rulers Archontes, but overseers leaders, elders, prohistamenoι: whereby the holy ghost would teach, that their power is not to rule but to lead and direct. I do therefore utterly disclaim this your error &c.

I answer that Mr. Sm. doth sophisticate & dally with the word Rule, whiles he maketh it to answer only to the greek word Archein; which signifieth to rule and reign as Princes; Mark. 10. 42. Rom. 15 12. whereas he knoweth or may know that other words also are fitly translated Rule; as poimainein, Rev. 2. 7. and proistasthai, Rom. 12 8. and he saw before his eyes, how I alleged for teaching and ruling 1. Tim. 5. 17. where this later word is used. Which he not knowing, as it seemeth, how to translate better, and yet not willing to brook the word Rule, saith they are not called Rulers archontes, but *prohistameno*i. He might as well have said, neither ar they called Overseers but Episcopoi, nor Leaders, but *hegoumeno*i, nor Elders but Presbyteroi; and so have bleared the simple readers eyes, with all Greek words, to spoil Christ's Ministers of their authority, and to make men believe they stand but for ciphers. If he be so ignorant of the Greek tongue as he pretendeth, that he will neither allow *Prohistameno*i to be translated Rulers, (which so many Greek authors will allow,) nor give us another English word for it, I will leave him to his ignorance or frowardness rather, and refer the reader to 1 Tim. 3. 4. 5. 12. where this same Greek word is applied to the ruling or governing of a house, and of children, which the Apostle after in 1. Tim. 5. 17. and other places, applieth to the ruling of the Church by Elders. So that Mr Sm. may as well teach householders, they must not rule their houses or children: as that Elders must not rule the Church, because they be not called Archontes princely-rulers, but *prohistameno*i, rulers standing before or over them.

Again if this reason of Mr S. be good it hath broke the neck of his popular government; for it is this; If Elders be not called Archontes (Princes or Princely-rulers;) then are they not to rule the Church of God. But Elders are not called Archontes. Therefore &c. Which I return upon himself thus, If the multitude of brethren be not called Archontes; then are they not to rule the Church of God: but the multitude of brethren are not called Archontes; if they be, let M. S. show where. yea I might add, that they are not called Overseers, nor Leaders, nor Elders, nor *prohistameno*i; Therefore neither are they to rule the Church; and so it is to be without rule or government of man at all; which if M. Sm. do hold, it will be found that himself deneyes the faith. For however it be true, that only Christ himself (who is the Archon or Prince of the kings of the earth,) is properly the Archon or princely-ruler of the Church, and imperial power perteyns to him alone: yet he hath given ministerial power and authority to his servants, poimainein & proistasthai, to feed, rule, govern, go before and direct his Church: and who so refuseth them whom he hath sent and set, refuseth him.

Whereas I further added of the Elders set to teach and rule, that unto them all the multitude, the members, the saints, ought to obey and submit themselves, as the scriptures teach; Heb. 13. 17. 1. Pet. 5. 5. this wholesome doctrine Mr. Sm. before misliked and kicked against, in answering Mr. Bern. & seeks to turn it away, with this peremptory and perverse answer To the place Heb. 13. 17. J say the Apostle doth not intend to teach that the whole body of the Church must yield to the voice of the Elders, in everything that they liest. O notable cavil! who saith they must yield to everything the Elders liest? Is this a fit answer to cashier the government of the Elders? Then away also with his popular government: for I say, no scripture intendeth to teach that either minister or member, must yield to the voice of the multitude, in everything they liest. If so; then Aaron had been blameless for making the golden calf; because it was the people's liest, and they importuned him thereto Exod. 32. 1. 22. 23.

But M. S. proceedeth, saying; nor that the Eldership hath in their hands the power of Christ to rule contrary to their liking. I answer, the Elders are to teach and rule the Church by Christ's own word and laws, as I have expressed. And herein I presuppose that both the Elders will teach and rule according unto godliness, & the people will obey the godly doctrines & directions of their Elders, without mislike or discontentment. For Christ's sheep will hear his voice; his kingdom is peaceable; his subjects loyal and obedient. Now whiles I speak of the ordinary power that the Elders have to teach and rule the Church, as Christ hath constituted it in peace; it is but from a contentious humor, to object, that they have not power to rule contrary to the people's liking, as if there could be no rule, but when the Elders and brethren are at war one with another. Of the Church it is written, the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one sowl; yet none (I think) doubteth, but there was rule & government among them. And of such quiet rule spake I, though M. Sm. would disturb it with his exception; which he mought also have alleged against the Presbyteries authority to pray preach and administer the sacraments; seeing these ar no more to be done contrary to the people's liking, then rule and government: for God hath called us in peace. So for ought that is yet said; the government by Elders standeth fast.

The last battery followeth. But (saith M. S.) the intent of the Apostle is to show, that all the particular members in all their affairs, must submit themselves to the instruction and guidance of the Elders. For although Christ hath placed the Elders as stewards over the servants yet he hath not appointed them as Lord's over his spouse & wife. Your argument therefore (saith he) is a fallacian a conjunction & division thus; Al the particular members must obey the elders in their lawful instructions and their wholesome admonitions severally; Ergo the whole body must jointly obey the voice of the Elders.

Here M. Sm. running himself into a fallacy, by dividing those that are joined together of the Lord, would bear himself out in his evil, by blaming another first, but without all equity, as the judicious reader may easily perceive. For his reason is to this effect, If Elders be stewards over the servants, and not Lord's over the wife (the church): then is not the church to obey or submit unto them. Where learned the man this logik? Is there no obedience or submission, thinks he, but unto Lord's? Then is there no obedience ecclesiastical, which the church may yield to any save unto Christ, for he is the only Lord. But this man is blinded with his erroneous conceit. For as in civil government we are to obey and submit, not only to the King as unto the superior, but also to the governors that are sent of him: so in government ecclesiastical we are to obey and submit, not only to the King Christ, but to the Elders his ministers sent of him: to the one we submit as to the Lord and King: to the other as to servants and ministers, set over us by the Lord. Again, I would fain know, whither Mr. Sm. thinketh the Elders to be Lord's over the particular members? If he say, yea, I abhor his pride, for it is injurious to Christ the sole Lord of all & everyone in the church: if nay, then I detest his sophistry; for by the same reason that he dissuadeth the whole flock from obedience, he mought also dissuade each particular member: which yet he doth not, but yieldeth the contrary. Now that the Apostle intendeth not only the particular members, but the general flock also, is apparent; First, by his reason which he annexeth, for they watch for your souls as they that must give accounts. All good Elders, I ween, do watch as well for the public church, as for the private members, and shall give account for the whole. If then the Apostles reason be of weight; the whole flock, as well as the particular sheep, must obey and submit to such as watch over them. Secondly the Apostle saith elsewhere, to the Elders of another church, take heed to all the flock, whereof the holy ghost hath made you overseers: poimainein, (that is to feed, rule, govern, guide, direct and do all other duties of good shepherds unto) the church of God. Now these words flock & church, mean not particular members, but the general company under charge & guidance. And if the holy Ghost have set Elders and shepherds over the whole flock: can any man doubt, but they must teach rule and direct the whole? & if they must do this by authority from God: is not the whole flock bound to be taught ruled & directed by them in the Lord? What perverting of the scripture then is this, that when the Apostle writing to a whole church, to obey and submit unto their guides: it should be restrained unto particular members for to obey? Such doctrines fit rather the confusion of Babylon, then the holy order & government of Zion. But it seemeth the stench of this restreynt, went up into the nose of the man himself as he wrote it: for presently he seeketh to sweeten the ill savor with these flowers: that All the saints shall yield obedience to the Elders in things commanded by God: and the Elders shall all of them obey the voice of the church in things commanded of God. He might also have added that both Elders and people should obey the voice of any particular person, in things commanded by God. For if the whole church do syn, and any one make it known unto them, and show them the law of God: they are bound to obey him, & submit to his good counsel in the Lord. But what is this to the purpose? The question is into whose hands Christ hath committed the ordinary teaching guiding governing and ruling of his saints here on earth. The scriptures teach, and we accordingly have long since professed, that it is into the hands of the Bishops or Elders. This is that which I defend in my answer to M. Bernard: for this, if for anything, M. S. also inveigheth against me: being indeed against himself also herein. For besides the testimonies fore alleged out of his book, he hath further in the same book written thus, Christ is not their king, seeing he only ruleth by his own laws and officers, and not by Antichristian Lord's and laws &c. And again, You refuse Christ's testament and his kingdom, and will not have him to reign over you in his own offices and laws, which is contrary to these places, Luk. 19. 27. Apoc. 14. 9. 10. 11. Loe here the truth which I defend, confirmed by my adversaries own pen; for this is the only thing which I plead, that Christ ruleth his people, only by his own laws and officers, as mine opposite himself granteth: & yet see, what an outcry he maketh against me, as teaching such Antichristianism, as was never heard of before. But by his former dispute against the Presbyterie, himself is found to be one of those enemies, that will not have Christ to reign over them, by his own offices and laws.

Whereas he putteth the question thus, how far the sheep must obey the Elders which are shepherds: that is not the point between Mr. Bern. and me, neither medle I with it: yet if any be desirous to know my mind in general, it is. So far as the shepherds do teach rule and direct the sheep in the ways of Christ, by his own word and laws; so far at they all jointly and everyone severally, bound to obey and submit to their shephards, and no further. For although this be the ordinary way of teaching and governing the Church; yet if extraordinarily it fall out, that the shepherds walk and lead awry, and the sheep go aright; then is neither the whole flock, nor any one sheep to follow or obey them, unless they will fall together into the ditch.

Neither will that reason, which M. Sm. so laboreth about, namely that the Ministry is not by succession but by election of the church; make ought against me: unless the man thinketh this consequence good, If Elders be chosen by the Church, then are they not to teach and rule the Church by Christ's word and laws. The contrary rather is true. For if the Church be authorized and commanded of Christ to chose and set Elders over them, for to teach and rule them by his own word and laws; and are also commanded to obey and submit themselves unto their Elders: then are the Elders to teach & rule them by Christ's word and laws, and the Church is therein to obey. But the first is true, as the scriptures and reasons forealleged prove; Therefore also the latter.

No more will that similitude of a body, (which as all parables will easily be perverted, being strained beyond the purpose of the holy spirit) help ought against the truth I defend. For as God hath disposed the members everyone of them in the body at his own pleasure, & given them several faculties, so as all the members have not one work; and as the eye for seeing, the ear for hearing, the mouth for speaking, &c. do administer, not for particular members only, but for the whole body: even so the Church hath many members with diversities of gifts, and diversities of offices or ministries; which they are to attend unto and execute for the whole body: & the whole, (not the particular members only, as this man fancieth) are to obey and submit unto these distributions & administrations, being all of the Lord, as the Apostle teacheth. And as all the members of the body have not the gift of speaking, seeing, smelling &c. but these are bestowed on special members for the use of all: so in the church, all are not prophets, or all teachers, or all governors &c. but to one is given the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge &c. unto the administration of which gifts, by the due offices or members; all the body is to submit, and obey in the Lord. So that a wonder it is any man should have the face to blame me with Antichristianism, for disclaiming that position which M. Bernard imputed unto us; namely, that the power of Christ, that is, authority to preach, to administer the sacraments, and to execute the censures of the church, belongeth to the whole church, yea to overy one of them: or for affirming, some special authority to be committed to the Elders for reaching and ruling the church by Christ's own word and laws, unto whom the other brethren are to obey, always in the Lord. What would it be but a mere confusion and abuse of the holy ordinances of the gospel, if everyone in the church should administer & perform the works of all Christ's ministers: which they may, if the power and authority pertaineth unto them: for who may abridge the saints of these things?

And most strange it is, that M. S. (if anything may be strange in him,) would thus inveigh against me: when in handling this very point against M. Bern. he writeth thus Wherefore I say unto you, that the gifts of preaching, administration of the sacraments, and governing are given unto some men, but the offices and officers endued with these gifts are given unto the church &c. If but some men in the church, have the gifts of preaching, administration of sacraments & governing: will M. S. blame me for denying this position of M. Bernard, that Christ's power and authority to preach, administer the sacraments &c. belongeth to everyone in the church. Have they authority to preach or govern, which have not the gifts of preaching or government? I leave the judgment of this controversy, to every wise heart.

And this I hope may suffice for clearing myself of Antichristianism, in that which I wrote about church government: being the main thing which M. Sm. hath wrested against me. Other things there are which he girdeth at briefly: and which I omit to strive with him about, whom I see to be set upon debate. And how adversarylike he dealeth with me, in mangling, corrupting and depraving my answers, for his advantage: they that compare them with his book may see. Let this one be an instance. To an objected error against us, I thus answered: Neither is this position set down in our words, (to my knowledge) neither doth Mr. Bernard take away, but confirm rather the thing that we hold: for he granteth that they offend God, which may and do not ordinardie (having means offered) live in a church rightly constituted: & we grant, that many of Christ's subjects for want of means, do not live in a true constituted church. If therefore he were not a caviller, he would not have reckoned this among our errors.

This my answer M. S. of his liberality hath set down in his book thus.

M. Ains. answering M. Bern. pag. 173. useth these words. Neither is this position set down in our words, (to my knowledge:) if therefore M. Bern. were not a caviller, he would not have reckoned this among our errors. Thus having dealt more injuriously with my words, then the unjust steward did with his Masters reckoning, in abating more then half of my writing, without so much as any note or mark to intimate of further matter in my answer, (which he maketh almost senseless): he proceedeth to charge me with forsaking the defense of the truth and then runs on to justify that he had written to Mr. Bernard which I knew not of.

But for his injurious dealing with me, and persecuting this poor church (which deserved better of him) with his pen in public, as the world now may see he hath don in high measure: I leave him unto God for mercy or judgment. Whose hand as it is heavy upon him already, in giving him over from error to error, & now at last to the abomination of Anabaptism: so will the same hand still follow him unto further judgment if he do not repent. But I wish he may find grace in the eyes of the Lord.

The Preface.

TWoe things (good Reader) have been heretofore controverted between Mr. Johnson and me, the one concerning the Power of the Christian church, which he would have installed in the Ministry thereof: the other concerning the Antichristian church of Rome, with the ministry and baptism thereof, which he hath pleaded to be true, though corrupted; I have proved to be false and deceitful. These things have passed publicly (through mine Opposites occasion) in Mr Richard Cliftons Advertisement, and my Animadversion thereto. The former of these two points, Mr. Johnson hath left unanswered; so the prudent may judge of the strife, by that which we both have said: the latter, he hath sought to maintain by a colorable Plea for the Roman church, chiefly underpropped by two reasons, 1. because Antichrist should sit in the Temple of God; 2. and because Apostate Israel (the figure of this Antichristian church,) was the church of God; as he pretendeth. These, with his other like reasons, I have labored to refell, in this treatise following. His order of handling them, I have altered; beginning with the Church of Rome; then with the Baptism of that church: for so I judge the truth of the controversy will soonest appear. His often longsome repetitions, I seek to abridge; as being fruitless, & wearisome to the Readers: his bold and bitter taunts, I pass over; being not willing to answer any man (and least of all the dead,) to such things. As also his marching us among the Anabaptists, for our more disgrace: his dissembling of his own former judgment and accord with us, in the things now controverted; imputing them to us and others, when himself hath formerly spoken and written for the things which he now would pull down; but hath not taken away his own grounds. Only whereas in his preface he intimateth sundry manifest untruths published in the Animadversion, but nameth none: I signify in a good conscience, that to my knowledge • published not any one untruth, but rather spared him, then pressed things in extremity. That which I suppose he aimeth at, I set down from the report of honest faithful witnesses, (of whom some are now at rest in the Lord,) who would not (as I am persuaded) willingly have related anything but the truth. Finally, as in all other my labors, so in these controversies following, I endeavor to find out & manifest the way and will of God, by the light of his word; to the glory of his name, and comfort of those that love the truth in sincerity.

A REPLY TO A PRETENDED Christian Plea, for the Antichristian Church of Rome.

WEe are taught of God, that they which forsake the Law, praise the wicked; but such as keep the Law will contend with them. Wherefore, though my desire hath been to leave off contention with all men, & to labor to build up Zion in peace: yet being provoked by name, & my writings against the Man of syn, that Son of perdition being publicly traduced; I held it my duty to maintain the war which I began to wage against the Beast, whom The Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth, and will abolish with the brightness of his coming.

The state of this controversy is; whether notwithstanding the infinite idolatries and other abominations now of a long time with strong hand practiced by the church of Rome; it be to be reputed the true church of Christ; and the Sacraments (especially Baptism) to be esteemed the true signs and seals of the covenant of grace, from God to them, in their present estate. I deny it: mine opposite hath colourably pleaded for it, & inveighed much against me, in his last book called A Christian Plea; a°. 1617. Wherein, though in many things he deserved sharp blame; yet having ended his life with his work, and not being now to answer for himself, or make use of that which is written: I will omit the just reproofs, which might through God's mercy have been a benefit unto him: and will address myself, to remove the stumbling blocks out of others way, and to clear the truth which is darkened with the cloud of error. The Lord which hath taken this counsel against Babylon, that the least of the flock shall draw them out; and that he will surely make their habitation desolate with them: enable me with his grace to fight the good fight of faith, and to declare in Zion the vengeance of the LORD our God, the vengeance of his Temple.

Of the church of Rome.

BEcause the true Church is that people to whom pertaineth the adoption of sons, and the glory, and the covenants, & the giving of the Law, and the service (of God,) and the promises: it is requisite that we first handle the state of Antichrists church, so shall we the better discern of the ministry; seals of the covenant, and other ordinances of God which the man of syn abuseth, whether they be true or false unto them, in that their sinful abuse.

In my former answer, I laid down these grounds; The Antichristian synagogue is by the Holy Ghost called a Beast, Rev. 13. 11. which signifieth a Kingdom, Dan. 7. 23. it is named also a great City, Rev. 11. 8. which noteth the largeness of the tpolitie & kingdom. It cometh up out of the earth, Rev. 13. 11. as being of this world, (which Christ's kingdom that cometh down from heavē Rev. 21. 2. is not:) and therefore is called a man of syn, 2 Thes. 2. 3. and a great whore, Rev. 17. 1. whose head is Abaddon or Apollyon, Revel 9. 11. the Destroyer of others, and himself the son of perdition, 2 Thes. 2. 3. and they that follow him are the children of damnation, 2 Thes. 2. 12. This wicked generation warreth against the Lamb Christ, and against the Saints,, Rev. 17.

14. 6. and 13. 7. blasphemeth God's name and Tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven, Rev. 13. 6. that is the true church, whose conversation is heavenly, Phil. 3. 20. Yet do they all this mischief, under show of Christian religion: and therefore this Beast, hath horns like the Lamb Christ, Rev. 13. 11. this whore is arrayed with purple & scarlet, gilded with gold, precious stones and pearls, Rev. 17. 4. as if she were the Queen and spouse of Christ, Psal. 45. 9. 13. Ezek. 16. •0.—13. Song. 7. 5. she hath Peace-offerings and Vowes, Prov. 7. 14. (as if she were devout in God's service, Psal. 66. 13.) bread and waters, Prov. 9. 16. 17. (as ready to refresh the weary souls.) Her doctrines, sweet and amiable, lies spoken in hypocrisy, Prov. 5. 3. 1 Tim. 4. 2. but yet confirmed with signs and miracles, as if they came from heaven, 2 Thes. 2. 9. Rev. 13. 13. 14. her power & efficacy great, prevailing over the many and the mighty, the Kings and Princes of the world, deceiving all nations with her enchantments, Prov. 7. 21. 26. Rev. 17. 2 & 18. 23. and if it were possible, God's very elect, Math. 24. 24. Her continuance and outward prosperity is long, Rev. 13. 5. & 18. 7. & 20. 2. 4. her end, miserable, Rev. 18. 19. 21. & 19. 20. 21. consumed with the spirit of the Lord's mouth, and abolished with the brightness of his coming, 2 Thes. 2. 8. And for her destruction, the heavens shall rejoice, and sing praises to God, Rev. 18. 20. & 19. 1. 2.

The accomplishment of these prophetesies, I there shown to be in the Church of Rome at this day; confirmed by her own canons and doctors, that set forth her profession and practice. These grounds remain yet unanswered by mine opposite; being such as I assure myself neither could he, neither can any soundly refute. Now let us see how far he yieldeth, and how he opposeth. First he prayeth all to take knowledge, that his mind and desire in himself is to plead against the present estate of that church, and not for it: acknowledging it to be fallen, into most sinful and deep defection and apostasy, and so to be a notorious harlot and idolatress: which all the people of God ought to forsake, and to witness the truth there against, even unto death.

How well this his acknowledgement agreeth with his plea in the residue of his book; shall appear in the discussing of the reasons after following. But what saith he to the description of Antichrists church, which I before shown from the scriptures? He saith, I speak of the church and Synagogue of Antichrist, of the Beast, of the great City, of the man of Syn, of the great whore, of Abaddon or Apollyon, the son of perdition &c. whereas I should treat of the Temple of God, whereof Paul speaketh. 2 Thes. 2. Hereupon he chargeth me, to keep what I could from the point of the question in hand, and therefore also to confound things that differ.

I answer, that the the question was by this mine opposites former grant, about the church of Rome, whether it were the church of God or no. Now when at first I show from the scriptures, what manner of Church that Roman church is, in God's account: how could he charge me to keep from the point of the question? 2ly. the place of the Apostle being alleged by mine opposite for a proof that the church wherein Antichrist sitteth, is the Church of God; I come immediately after to scan that scripture: and yet he challengeth me for keeping from the point; whereas all men of judgment may see it was needful to know what God foretold of that church throughout the scriptures, that so we might understand in what sense Antichrist is said to sit in the Temple of God, 2 Thes. 2. For seeing the Temple of God, is a figurative phrase, taken from the shadows of the Law: it is not wisdom in us, to expound a parabolical speech contrary to the plain scriptures & grounds of Christian religion; but we must understand it according to them. Wherefore, there being no other answer made to the description aforesaid: it standeth in force to prove that the church of Rome, is not the true Church of Christ.

So for the accomplishment of the propheties, whereas I shown from the Papists own writings of their church, how fitly it agreeth with Antichrists synagogue foretold of by God: mine opposite answereth I tell them of a Church, such as Bellarmine and others describe, one part whereof lives on earth, another under the earth, and a third part in heaven &c. Whereas our question is of the Temple of God, whereof Paul speaketh, 2. Thes. 2. 4. and of the court and holy city whereof John speaketh Rev. 11. 2. Thus neither the Propheties of God, nor the complement of them shown by the men themselves whom the propheties concern, may be brought to clear the controversy: but mine opposite will insist upon dark and figurative speeches; that men may be the more easily deluded. For how shall we prove against Papists, that the Pope is Antichrist; if we may not allege the Popes own doctrines and practices, which are contrary to Christ? Yea how shall we judge of any church, but by their own Confessions published, and comparing them with the scriptures? Wherefore the profession of Papists concerning their church, is a strong argument whereby they may be discovered to be none of Christ's: & even the Cretian liars testimony against themselves, is true, as the Apostle noteth, Tit. 1. 12. 13.

An Answer to the arguments brought for the church of Rome.

Mine opposite pleadeth thus; 1. First, I take an argument from the baptism had in the churches aforesaid, [the Apostate churches of Christians▪] thus. The Baptism had in the church of Rome, is the Lord's baptism, the sign and seal of his covenant, the ordinance of God had in that church from the Apostles times (before Antichrist there arose) Rom. 6. 2. 3. and so is true baptism, which is from heaven and not of men: that one baptism which pertaineth to the body of Christ, Eph. 4. 4. 5. which the Lord hath given to his church, and not man &c. Therefore the church of Rome, is the church of God, and under his covenant &c.

Answ. Here, let it first be observed, whether mine opposite pleadeth against the present estate of that church, as before he pretended. For if they be under God's covenant, & have it sealed unto them from heaven, by that one true baptism, then are they in the state of grace and of salvation: which is the very thing that all Papists at this day do plead for. Concerning his Argument, I deny, that the baptism had in all Apostate churches of Christians and particularly in the church of Rome, is the Lord's true baptism, or the sign and seal of his covenant of grace unto them. Here mine opposite referreth me to another place of his book, for proof of the truth of their Baptism: whereto I will make answer anon, in their place. And now that my denial may not be so bare as is his assertion here: I will insist upon the two scriptures which he citeth▪ and disprove their baptism.

In Rom. 6. 2. 3. 4. the Apostle saith; How shall we that are dead to syn, live any longer therein? Know ye not that so many of us as are baptized into Christ Jesus, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead, by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Here first the Apostle speaketh of such as are dead to syn; that is mortified Christians, which live not in syn, neither reigneth it in them, but they are freed (or justified) from syn; and are alive unto God. But Antichristians (such as are the professant members of the church of Rome,) are not dead unto, or freed from syn: for they are the subjects of the Man of syn, the worshipers of the Beast, for whom is prepared the wine of the wrath of God, Revel. 14. 9. 10. They are of that church, which by my opposites confession a little before) is fallen into most sinful and deep apostasy, & is a notorious harlot and idolatress, which all the people of God ought to forsake: Wherefore they are rather to be counted dead in sins (as the Apostle speaketh of the Gentiles, Ephes. 2. 1.) and that they are in deed dead, and not partakers of the first resurrection; is evident by Revel. 20. 4. 5. 6. in that they are the worshipers of the Beast, and murderers of the witnesses of Jesus. Wherefore, the doctrine of Baptism in Rom. 6. is far from proving the Antichristians or other heretical and apostate churches, to have the true baptism of Christ, or seal of his covenant: but his servants they are to whom they obey, even of syn unto death, Rom. 6. 16.

The other scripture is Ephes. 4. 4. 5. There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called unto one hope of your calling: one Lord, one faith, one baptism. By which words it appeareth, that such as have the One baptism, have also one and the same faith, Lord, hope, spirit, and body: which to affirm of the Antichristian church of Rome, and of all other heretical and Apostate churches that profess Christ, is very impious. And most firm arguments there are from the Apostles words to the contrary of that which this man pleadeth for. As, The Romish and other heretical churches have not the one & same faith with the true Churches of Christ; witness, their blasphemous doctrines published by the Council of Trent, and in other books; and the Apostles prophesy, that they are departed from the faith, 1 Tim. 4. 1. &c. therefore they have not the one Baptism. They have not one and the same Lord Jesus Christ; but have Antichrist the Man of syn, for their Lord: therefore they have not the one baptism. They have not that one hope, nor that one Spirit, neither are they one body with the true Christian churches: therefore they have not that one baptism. These things are partly proved before in the description which I set down of Antichrists church: they are also acknowledged of all Christian churches, which disclaim the unity with the Antichristians in their faith, spirit, & body. And the scriptures most abundantly disclaim this feigned unity: as 2 Cor. 6. 12. what concord hath Christ with Belial? meaning, none at all. And Belial is there put for Antichrist and his retinue, as in 2 Sam. 23. 6. & 22. 5. The Apostle showeth, that the Antichristians have from God, strong delusions, to believe lies unto their damnation, 2 Thes. 2. 11. 12. That they are departed from the faith, do give heed to educing spirits, and doctrines of Devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, &c. 1 Tim. 4. 1. 2. That the false teachers (among Christians) privily bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction, 2 Pet. 2. 1. That the Beast (which is the kingdom of Antichrist,) and the false prophet (his ministers) and all that worship him, or take his mark; shall be tormented in fire and brimstone forever and ever, Rev. 20. 10. &c. & 14. 9. 10. And shall we now say, that these miserable creatures, have one Spirit, hope, Lord, faith and baptism with the saints and true Churches of Christ? My soul, come not thou into their secret, that so affirm.

The second argument for such churches, is; If they be not under the covenant of God, but divorced from the Lord &c: then is there no salvation for any in those churches.

Ans. I deny the consequence. For then, after Israel was divorced from the Lord, (as is testified in Ier. 3. 8.) there was no salvation for any among them: which I know mine opposite himself would not say.

Objection. Why, out of the covenant of God, there is no salvation.

Ans. I grant it. But though the church be not under the covenant of God, but without it, or divorced from him, yet some particular persons in that church, may through God's grace be in his covenant. For as every true church is in the covenant of God, yet some hypocrites and reprobates are in the same, which perish forever: so every false church is out of the covenant; yet some truly faithful and elect may be therein, which by the covenant of grace may be saved. Example in Rahab the Canaanitess, the church whereof she was, had not the covenant of grace in Christ: yet she having heard of God's works towards Israel, believed in God, and was saved; and before she joined herself to the church of Israel, she shown the fruits of true and living faith, whereby she was justified, & is put in the catalogue of the Saints, Jos. 2. 1. 9. 10. &c. Heb. 11. 31. 39. Jam. 2. 25. 26. The like is to be thought of the other nations, far off from God, who by some means hearing of his name and truth, might embrace the faith unto salvation, though the churches whereof they stood members were false and idolatrous, 1 King. 8. 41. 42. 43. So where mine oppositē bringeth scriptures to prove, that they which are not in the covenant of God and Christ, cannot be saved: he proveth that which is not denied: but this he should have proved, if he could; that if a church be false, and not under the covenant; none in that church can by any means come unto the faith and covenant of Christ; for this I deny. And his argument if it had been sound, should have been this. If Antichristian churches be not under the covenant of God, but divorced from the Lord; then is there no salvation for any that are under the covenant of that church, and in no other covenant: and so I would have granted his argument; as confirmed by the Holy ghost, that all such are in the state of damnation, 2 Thes. 2. 10. 11. 12. Rev. 14. 9. 10.

Here to help the church of Antichrist into the covenant of Christ, he bringeth in the profession of the Jesuits of Reims, which (as he saith) •old Christ by nature to be truly both God and man, to be the one eternal Priest and Redeemer, which by his sacrifice and death upon the cross, hath reconciled in to God, and paid his blood, as a full and sufficient ransom for all our sins, &c. again to be the singular advocate and patron of mankind, that by himself alone, and by his own merit procureth all grace and mercy to mankind. &c.

I answer, First for the persons that set down this profession they are by the testimony of God that false prophet, which with the Beast shall be tormēted forever & ever, Rev. 20. 10. or at least, they are those unclean spirits which come out of the mouth of the Beast & of the False prophet, for they are the spirits of Devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the Kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God almighty, Rev. 16. 13. 14. And this is apparent by that corrupt Testament and blasphemous notes and interpretations upon it, which they there set forth to the world, in stead of the true

Christian and catholic faith. Moreover they are a part of the popish hierarchy which mine opposite after maketh to be the Man of syn, the son of perdition, and the Beast, which he will not endure to hear that they should be accounted the church, or married to Christ: yet here he maketh them the preachers of the doctrine of salvation. Secondly for the Profession which they there make, if it were sound and good, yet denying it again in their works, it nothing availeth them: for of such it is written, They profess that they know God, but in works they deny him, being abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate; Tit. 1. 16. But what shall we say, if they deny the truth of the doctrine of Christ, not in work only, but even in word and profession? First then, (to omit their railing against Calvin about the Godhead of Christ being of himself, in their Annot. on John 1. sect. 3.) concerning Christ's manhood, and the truth of his human nature, how ever they acknowledge him to have taken flesh of the virgin; yet believe they, (and burn to ashes such as will not believe it,) that the bread in the sacrament is transubstantiated into the very body of Christ; so they have a Christ made of a wafer cake; a Christ whose whole body is in an hundred thousand places and moe at once, even in all places of the world, wheresoever Mass is said by a Priest: so he must have a fanatical body, which can neither be seen, felt, tasted or by any sense of man perceived as an human body: & this breaden Christ they worship in that their idolatrous sacrament, and do eat him really & properly with their mouths. And do these now believe Christ's human nature aright; when as by the plain scripture we are taught, that the heaven must receive him, until the times of restitution of all things, Act. 3. 21.

As for his office of Mediatorship; whereas they profess him to be the singular Advocate and patron of mankind; by singular they mean not the only Advocate or mediator, as the scripture teacheth, •Tim. 2. 5. 1 Joh. 2. 1. but a special or chief mediator: for they have innumerable other advocates and mediators, as the heathens of old, had one chief God, and many inferior gods. So the same Rhemists gloss on 1 Tim. 2. telleth us, that though Christ be the only singular Advocate and patron &c. yet this letteth not but there may be other inferior mediators, though not in that singular sense: And how they believe in their Queen of heaven, let this one song (amongst many other) to the virgin Marie witness, when they sing O regina poli, mater gratissima prosi: Spernere me noli, me commendo tibi soli. i. O queen of heaven &c. J commend me to thee only.

As for the redemption, the full and sufficient ransom for all our sins, paid by his blood, which they would seem to hold: it is with fraud and injury to Christ's blood, which by their distinction) satisfied for the syn, but not for the punishment; and therefore they have feigned a purgatory fire, wherein men's souls do bear the punishment of their own venial sins: Council. Trid-sess. 6. can. 30. Bellarm. de Parg. c. 1. From which also they can redeem themselves by money, given to Antichrists priests that sacrifice for the sins of the living and the dead. And whereas God teacheth us, that we are justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ; Rom. 3. 24. and that we are not justified by the works of the Law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, Gal. 2. 16. the Antichristians teach us a justification by faith and works together; by Christ's merits, Saints and Popes merits, & their own; and these works by which they believe to be saved in part, are very many of them wicked works of their own devisings, as going on pilgrimage, giving of their goods to maintain Antichrists clergy, and idolatry, and other like works of the Devil. And of their own idols, as of an Agnus Dei made of wax, they believe and profess, Omne malignum peccatum frangit, ut Christi sanguis, et angit. It breaketh all wicked syn, as the blood of Christ doeth. Thus blasphemously they tread Christ's blood under their feet.

Finally, the faith which they profess to have in Christ, what is it? Any trust or confidence such as the faithful have in Christ to be their savior, as the Apostle teacheth, in Rom. 8. 33. •. 39. & Gal. 2. 20. Hebr. 3. 6. Ephe. 3. 12. Nay, this confidence they reject as a presumption; and their faith, (which is without confidence) being but an assent to the truth of God's promises; & not a confidence of their justification in particular: is such a faith as the Devils have, who know and assent to the truth of God's promises unto mankind. See Bellarm. de Iustific. l. 1. c. 5. 6. &c. Now if this painted face of the Romish Jezebel, be so fowl and ugly, being compared with the beawtie of Christ's true spouse: what may we think is the faith of that ignorant seduced multitude of Antichristians, who professing Christ in name, look for salvation by the wicked works which the Pope hath learned them, and by the works of the Law of God, and belief in Christ, and their own sufferings, confusedly together; and yet neither know Christ, nor what true saving faith in him doth mean.

Object. Who dare say but that God by this faith in Christ, saveth some of them, who do thus believe in simplicity &c.

Answ. And who dare say, but that God, notwithstanding this faith professed by the Jesuits as before, may justly damn them, though they thus believe in simplicity? Seeing even in these things which they profess, they corrupt themselves with horrible idolatries, having many false God's, and false Christ's in whom they also trust, and daily pray unto them, as did the heathens. And, seeing this their faith, considered in the best, is no true saving faith; but as themselves say, The faith which truly justifieth, is not that whereby they believe that God is merciful unto them; but that whereby they believe with the whole heart without any doubting, that Jesus is the Christ, and the son of God. Bellarm. de Iustific. l. 1. c. 8. Such a faith appeareth to have been in the Devils, as it is written And Devils also came out of many, crying out and saying, Thou art Christ, the son of God, Luke 4. 41. But that God giveth some in that church a sounder faith, and saveth them of the riches of his grace; I never denied or doubted of.

Object. 2. Of this mind concerning them, I have been a long time; see Answ. to Mr. Jak. p. 13. 47. &c.

Answ. But then and there, this distinction was rightly put, of, some particular men, considered a part from their constitution; that is, from their church estate: now, that church and all other Apostate churches professing Christ's name, are generally pleaded for, to be in the state of grace, having the one true baptism &c. which is to justify the open wicked, and count Christ's enemies blessed.

Object. 3. Some of them die Martyrs in defense of the Christian faith, (acknowledging Jesus to be the Christ the son of God.) against Turks, &c.

Answ. If it be in defense of the Christian faith, it is well: but if acknowledging Jesus to be the Christ, they die also in defense of the Antichristian faith professed by that church, and for the idolatry of the same, (which is hateful to the very Turks:) then I say with the Apostle, they may give their body to be burned, and it profit them nothing. Neither doubt I, but some of the Jews, have died and will die in defense of the God of Israel as they now profess him from Moses and the Prophets; rather then yield to the heathens. But the extraordinary mercy of God to some in Antichrists church, justifieth no more the estate of that Synagogue of Satan, then his like extraordinary mercy to some of the heathens (of whom we shall speak anon) will justify the heathens synagogues to be God's true churches. As for Martyrs, our own English acts and monuments and other, do show that many have given their lives for this, that the church of Rome is not the true church of Christ. Now by mine opposites plea they died not herein for the truth but for error: what Martyrs them were they?

Obj. 4. Many Jndians, Pagans, Jews are by them converted, and brought to the profession of Christian religion, among whom I doubt not, but the Lord hath and saveth his, even by that knowledge and faith of Christ, which by their preaching among them they are brought unto, &c.

Answ. That many of all nations are converted or perverted unto Antichristianitie by the Papists, there is no doubt, for experience showeth it, and so it is prophesied, that by Babylon's sorceries, all nations should be deceived, Reve. 18. 23. So the heathens of Babylon, Cuth, Hamath &c. were converted by a Samaritan Priest, and taught to fear the Lord the God of Israel: that they feared the Lord, and served their own God's; & also, they feared not the Lord, neither did they after their statutes or after their ordinances, 2 King. 17. 28. 29. 30. 33. 34. If that misceline rabble were God's true church, so are these popish proselytes: if they were not (as I never heard any affirm they were,) neither are these. And what have our learned men of England answered to this old popish argument? J deny (saith D<sup>r</sup>. Fulk) that ever the popish church converted any to the true faith. Answer to a counterf. Catholik art. 1. Yea what say the Papists themselves, of this point? Jerome Benzo (in Histor. Indiarum) saith, that all the religion the Indians have, is to make the sign of the cross, & to hear a Latin mass, and to perform such like ceremonies. Joseph a Costa, a Jesuit, in his book De procuranda Judaorum salute, telleth us, that the Spanyards have baptized many against their wills. He saith, they are like the Samaritans, that worshiped God and idols both together: they make (saith he) a feigned show of Christianity, they serve not God in deed, neither believe they unto righteousness. And are not these converts now, a goodly plea for mine opposite to allege, for proof of a true Christian church? But he proceedeth,

Yea and who can say, but that wheresoever the name of Christ is preached and called upon, the Lord saveth some &c. seeing that Christ is the way, the truth, and the life, and whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, John. 3. 16. 17. &c.

Answ. Where Christ is truly preached, and believed, no Christian will say, but the Lord saveth some: but where Christ is falsely preached and believed in, after Antichrists idolatrous manner, none can truly say, that they are a true Christian Church. As for God's saving some by the doctrine there preached; it is a thing not for us to dispute of: we are commanded to leave secret things unto God, and to hold us unto things revealed, Deut. 29. 29. God who brought light out of darkness, can cause the truth to shine into the harts of his elect, by the corrupt preaching of the Papists▪ and so I doubt not but he doeth. yet is this no justification of the popish church; anymore then the true preaching of the gospel, which is unto the reprobates the savor of death unto death, is a condemnation of the Christian Church, and true doctrine of the same.

Object. 5. But, Out of the Church there is no salvation, which I suppose themselves will not deny. And (that which is more) the Lord's constitutions cease not to be his holy ordinances, though the people that enjoy them, should have no benefit thereof to salvation.

Answ. Here we have suppositions in stead of proof. His assertion I deny, though he supposed the contrary: for out of the true visible Church (whereof we dispute) there may be salvation. Many that are not of any true Church, yea are persecutors of it, and excommunicates out of it, may repent and believe in Christ, even at their last hour, and at their death; and so be saved; though they neither have time, place, or means to be joined to any true visible church on earth. If he speak not of a particular visible church, but of the Universal church which is invisible, and comprehendeth all God's elect: he swerveth from the question, and deceiveth by equivocation; for we treat of the visible church of Rome, whether it be Christ's true church or no. As for the Universal church, which is all over the earth, and from the beginning of the world to the end thereof, and containeth God's elect only: out of it in deed there is no salvation. But what is this to the purpose? For so a man might reason thus. In the church there are no reprobates, there is no damnation; for Christ giveth all his sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish, John. 10. 28. But the Popish synagogue, is (by mine opposites plea) the church, even the true church of Christ. Therefore in it there are no reprobates, there is no damnation. Here (I doubt not) mine opposite would distinguish between the Catholik or universal church in the first proposition, and the particular church of Rome, in the second; and so deny the argument: & why would he then himself obtrude upon us, such a deceitful reason?

The latter part of his speech I grant: but it helpeth him nothing. For the synagogue of Antichrist, is none of God's constitutions, though every true Christian church is: neither hath he annexed promise of grace, to his ordinances abused by the man of syn, and his subjects, in that malignant church, but hath threatened the destruction of the deceivers and deceived, 2 Thes. 2. 8. 10. 11. 12.

3. The third reason for the church of Rome consisteth of a division of the world into Christians, Jews, Turks and Pagans; and of a question, if it be asked, which of these is the Church of God at this day? should we not answer, the Christians: and among the Christians, comprise the churches aforesaid, for the reasons before specified?

Answ. The first part of his answer, I yield unto, that Christians now are God's church. The second I deny, namely that Antichristians (such as the Papists be,) & other heretical and apostate churches, are to be comprised in the number; save in name only, for in deed and truth they are not. His reasons before specified, I have particularly refuted: & so might here end. But further to explain the truth, I answer; that after this general division, we must make another subdivision, or else we may be deceived. The subdivision is of Christians again, into true and false, or into Christians and Antichristians which profess Christ in name & deny him in deed. And this I learn of the holy Ghost, who in the Apostles times divided the Jews into outward, and inward, Rom. 2. 28. 29. and counted these latter only Jews: and such as said they were Jews and were not, but did lie, he calleth them the Synagogue of Satan: Revel. 3. 9. Even so, he prophesied of a Beast (or kingdom) which should have two horns like the Lamb (Christ, and so be called Christians) but should speak as the Dragon, work wonders, & deceive men that dwell on the earth, &c, Revel. 13. 11. 13. 14. He also foretold of false teachers among Christians, who privily should bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them &c. 2 Pet. 2. 1. If thus we distinguish not between the true Christ and false Christ's, between true prophets and false prophets, and so between true churches and false: we may retain the name of Christ and Christian churches, and be in deed nothing less. And according to mine opposites manner of plea, another might reason thus, Of sinners in the world, some are Angels, and some are men. If then the question be asked, seeing Christ came to save sinners, 1 Tim. 1. 15. which of these are redeemed and saved by Christ, & are the church of God? should we not answer men; and among men also comprise all people's upon earth, Jews, Turks Pagans &c. This is the mould of mine Opposers argument; and as colourably as he pleadeth for Antichrists synagogue to be Christ's Church, so others do plead for universal redemption of all people's & persons borne into the world; from John. 1. 9. Rom. 5. 18. and other like scriptures.

4 The fourth reason is from baptism, a visible sign of God's visible Church among Christians, as circumcision was among the Jews &c.

I answer, the baptism among Antichristians is in deed like their church; Christ's in name, but not in deed and truth. As for that which he annexeth, of our defending and reteyning that visible baptism received in the church of Rome; it followeth after to be discussed, when we come to treat of their baptism. In the mean while, let it be observed, that as Circumcision was a sign of the Church of old; so was sacrificing, both then, and before Circumcision was instituted: and all nations reteyning sacrifice then, as well as Antichrist reteyneth baptism & the Lord's supper now; it will also follow by like reason, that all nations were then God's churches; which argument shall be prosecuted hereafter. Again, as the foolish woman calleth passengers to her sweet stolen waters, and pleasant bread of secresies, Prov. 9. 13. 17. so this foolish woman (the church of Antichrist) by like stales, allureth the simple unto her: which are no sounder proof that she is Christ's true spouse, then the true man's purse in the theefs hand, will prove the thief to be a true and honest man.

5 The 5th reason is from the defection of Judah and Israel, remaining still God's people notwithstanding: therefore also the church of Rome, in like manner.

Answ. Of the first part of this reason, touching the state of the Israelites, we are after to speak in particular: but were it granted, I deny the consequence, it followeth not, the Antichristian synagogue is so also.

Inst. The consequence (saith he) is proved, because these were types of the like state of the Christian churches, recorded for our instruction. 1 Cor. 10. 6.—11. with Rom. 154. & 2 Tim. 3. 16. 17. 2 Pet. 2. 1. Jude v. 5. 11. Rev. 2. 14. 20. & 11. 2. &c.

Answ. I grant that he saith, for the Christian churches: but for the Antichristian, it is true in part only. The sins of Judah and Israel, are found in Rome: so are the sins of Sodom, Egypt, Babylon, and heathen Rome; which by warrant from God, were types also of this Antichristian Babylon, Rev. 11. 8. and 17. 5. From which I may as truly conclude; Sodom, Egypt and Babylon of old, were so far fallen frō God, as they were not his churches or people's: and they were types of this church of Antichrist, and the things written of them, are for our instruction, Rom. 15. 4. Jude v. 7. 2. Pet. 2. 5. 6. Therefore this Antichristian synagoge, is not Christ's true church.

Further I answer, that the types which were in Israel, prove not that the things typed are in the same degree of good or evil, neither more nor less; as mine opposite would infer that Antichristians are not now more deep in apostasy then were the Israelites. For types and figures agree in some things, but not in all. Moses, Aaron, David and all other types of Christ were sinners: but it were wicked thereupon to conclude, that Christ himself was a sinner. Moreover Christ's Priesthood was figured in Aaron & his sōns: yet did not that Levitical Priesthood fully type out his office, but in part: & a more complete figure of him was in Melchizedek, as the Apostle showeth in Heb. 5. and 7. chapters. Accordingly, it will follow, that Antichrist is answerable to Israel's apostasy in part: and yet a more complete figure of him is to be found in the Gentiles. And as Christ excelleth in holiness all that were types of him: so Antichrist exceedeth in wickedness all the types of him; & therefore hath many sorts of wicked men, to resemble his impiety. Rev. 11. 8. And that his consequence followeth not from the type to the thing typed, that they are both in an equal estate, appeareth further by his own grant (in pag. 126.), where he maketh Antiochus and his captains &c. a type of the Papacie. Now it is confessed of all, that Antiochus and his company were Pagans in religion: so by the like reason, the Pope with his captains and souldjers, must be Pagans also.

6. The 6 reason alleged for them is, that it should be syn for Papists and Apostate Christians, to marie with Pagans, to neglect baptism, not to sanctify the Lord's day; as it was in Judah and Israel to marie with the heathen, to neglect circumcision, to profane the Lord's day &c. Dan. 11. 32. with 1. Maccab. 1. 16. 45. 51. 55. and with Mal. 2. 11. Ezr. 9. 1. 2. & 10. 10. Neh. 13. 3. 23.—27. Hos. 5. 7. & 7. 8. & 8. 12. Amos 8. 5. with 2 Cor. 6: 14. &c. which should not so be, if they were not the church and people of God, under his covenant, and bound to the observation of his ordinances. For Pagans, and such as pertain not to the Lord's covenant, being not his church and people, are not in their estate bound to these and the like ordinances of the Lord, which he hath given to his church and people. Psal. 147. 19. 20. with Deut. 7. 1.—11.

Answ. This reason is sundry ways faulty. 1. Of Pagans he saith, they are not in their estate bound &c: but Papists and apostate Israelites, he would have them bound, yet mentioneth not their estate: whereas if he speak not of them also in their estate, his argument is false and fraudulent.

2. The scriptures alleged Psal. 147. & Deut. 7. are by him abused, whiles he restreyneth them to these and the like ordinances, namely, marriage, circumcision, baptism, and the Sabbath; understanding by the like ordinances, (as I suppose) the Passover and other sacrifices, the Lord's supper, &c: whereas the Psalmist speaketh generally of God's Words, Statutes (or Ordinances) and Judgments, Psal. 147. 19. 20. which three, do comprehend the moral Law, called the Ten Words, the Ordinances of worship and service, and the Iudicials for punishment of malefactors: all these the Prophet saith, were shown unto Israel, and God dealt not so with any nation. Now to conclude from these words, therefore the nations were not bound to observe the ordinances, because God had not shown them unto them, as he had done unto Israel (namely by his written Law given at Mount Sinai,) hath no more weight then this, Therefore the nations were not bound to the moral Law, or to the Iudicials; and so sinned not in committing idolatry, murder, whoredom, or the like. But this is impious to say, and a false conclusion: therefore his conclusion also touching the ordinances is false, and cannot rightly be gathered from this text. The evil of it further appeareth in one of his instances, the Sabbath day: which is one of the ten commandments, and instituted from the beginning of the world, Gen. 2. If then the nations were free from syn when they kept not the Sabbath, because they had it not written in the book of the Law or Tables of stone as had Israel: were they not also by the same reason free from syn in not keeping the other commanments?

So for the Lord's day now, he maketh the church of Christ only (and so the Papists and other like whom he accounteth true churches) sinners if they keep it not: all others he freeth from syn, as not bound to keep it. Wherupon this paradox followeth, that the further men fall away from Christ, the more free they are from syn. For the church of Rome being fallen to Antichrist the Pope, they are sinners in his account, if they keep not the Lord's day: but the churches of Corinth, Ephesus and other like which are fallen to Mahomet, they are no sinners in his account, though they observe not the Lord's day: and why? Only because they are fallen so far, as they are no church of God, nor in his covenant of grace. Thus, the further from Christ the freer from syn; if this doctrine be true.

But I suppose the contrary to be true: and that all people's how far soever fallen from Christ, are now bound to keep the Lord's day, and other ordinances of Christ; and it is their great syn that they do not. For Christ sent his Apostles to teach all nations, & to baptize them, and to teach them to observe all things whatsoever he commanded his Apostles, even to the worlds end, Mat. 28. 19, 20. And they went into all the world, preaching and admonishing all men everywhere to repent, and believe the Gospel, & to be baptized, and observe all the ordinances of Christ: and all that obeyed not, or that have since fallen from their obedience, are guilty before God, and shall be condemned, because they believe not in Christ, and keep not his commandments. Mark. 16. 15. 16.

If it be said that a Turk or Pagan in that their estate of unbelief may not lawfully be baptized or admitted to the Lord's supper, til they repent: this is true; yet can we not therefore say, they are not bound to be baptized, or are free from syn in neglecting baptism: for they are bound to all the doctrines and ordinances of the gospel in order, first to repent and believe, then to be baptized, then to receive the Lord's supper, and so all the rest. If further it be said, that the Papists in their estate of misbelief and idolatry; may without repentance and without returning to the true faith, be partakers of baptism and the Lord's supper &c: it is denied. For if the Jews (which were the true church though corrupted) might not be received to baptism without repentance, as the scriptures show, Mat. 3. 6. 7.—10. Luk 7. 29. 30. Act. 2. 38. then the Antichristians, the members of that church which (by Mr. Johnsons own acknowledgment) is fallen into most sinful and deep defection and apostasy, and is a notorious harlot and idolatresse; may much less be baptized, or admitted to the Lord's supper unless they repent. And whereas mine opposite pleadeth for their right in the sacraments & other ordinances which they should syn to neglect: it would be known where they are bound to receive them, whether in their own church, or in some Christian reformed church. If in their own; then they are bound to hear Mass, and syn if they be not partakers of it; for that is their idolatrous supper: then do not the Magistrates well to forbidd them their Masses, and other ecclesiastical exercises, which they are bound by God to frequent, and should syn if they used them not. If they have right unto them in other reformed churches: then is there to be a communion between true Christians and those Antichristians, in one body, at one Table: for (as the Apostle saith) we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread, 1 Cor. 10. 17. But this were to build a new Babylon, and to make a confused mixture of the members of Christ and of Antichrist, contrary to all the scriptures. 2 Cor. 6. 14. 15. 16. 17 Rev. 21. 27.

The other scripture which he citeth, Deut 7. 1 - 11. helpeth him no more then the former: for there in the 11. verse, the Commandments, Statutes and Judgments (which imply all Moses law) are expressed: if other nations were freed from all these, then were they freed from all law, and so from all syn; for where there is no Law, there is no transgression, seeing Syn is the transgression of the Law: 1. John. 3. 4. And where he instanceth marriage with Pagans, which is there forbidden Deut. 7. 3. and applieth it to Papists now, that they should syn to mary with such, I grant it. But his inference thereupon, that therefore they are the true church and in the covenant of grace, I deny. For the Jews at this day, which profess (after their false manner) the God of Israel, and all things written in the Law and Prophets, should syn if now they married with such, doing contrary to their express Law, Mal. 2. 11, Yet are not the Jews now in the covenant of grace, or the church of God.

Again in Deut. 7. 5. there is commandment to destroy images and like monuments of idolatry: if this was peculiar to Israel, then other nations sinned not, in suffering idols among them undestroyed: whereas the Apostle plainly showeth their grievous syn in making and using such idols, Rom. 1. 23. and consequently it must needs also be their syn, that they did not forsake, destroy and abolish them.

If any now ask, whether the other nations were then bound to all the ordinances of Israel? I answer, no: for some things were never before commanded, nor unto other then the church of Israel, as the strangers might eat some meats, which the Israelites might not, Deut. 14. 21. Such things having never been forbidden them of God, they might eat without syn, as we may at this day. But this I say of the nations, that all the Laws, Statutes and judgments which were once commanded them of God; they were bound forever to keep, til God again repealed them. As for example all the ten commandments; and such Statutes (or ceremonies) as were taught them of God, as sacrificing, Gen 4. 3. 4. & 8. 20. not to eat flesh with the blood, Gen. 9. 4. and all other the like. And for judgments, to kill murderers, Gen. 9. 6. and so to punish other malefactors. And no Apostasy could ever free them from syn, in neglecting any of God's laws once given them. So no Apostasy could free the Israelites from any law of Moses; or the world now, from the Law of Christ. The Jews that under Antiochus turned, to Paganism, 1 Maccab. 1. 43. were guilty they and their seed, for neglecting circumcision, the Passover and all other ordinances of Moses; and their apostasy (whereby they went out from the covenant of God and his church,) freed them not from syn at all. So the Christians in like manner that have Apostate to Mahometisme, are nevertheless in their sins for neglect of Christ's truth & ordinances; though they be no Christian church, as all of us grant.

Only there is this difference to be put; that such as know the will of God, (as did the Jews, and many Papists now may, by the scriptures,) and do it not; shall be beaten with many stripes; whereas the ignorant people's, and Popish multitude, shall be beaten with few, Luke. 12. 47. 48. But to excuse them from syn wholly, is to plead for iniquity. And for this cause, both David in Ps. 147. and Moses in Deut. 7. urgeth Israel to thankfullnes and obedience above other people's, in that the Lord had now written his laws and ordinances unto them, and made them an holy people, when he left other people's, only to that doctrine which by word of mouth was delivered them from Noah and his sons; which if they did forsake (as they had in a great measure,) they should perish forever.

7. His seventh & last reason for the church of Rome is taken from 2. Thes. 2. 3. 4. Where it is prophesied that Antichrist should sit in the Temple of God. This argument he handleth at large. But first let it be observed, how all his reasons, hitherto, are shown to be insufficient▪ and built upon weak grounds, the first being taken from their baptism, which is adulterate as the church itself: The second, frō an inconvenience falsely presupposed, that none in that church can else be saved: The third, from a question, whether Christians, Jews, Turks or Pagans, be the church. The 4. is again from their baptism. The 5. is from the types of Judah and Israel in apostasy. The 6. is from a supposed freedom that such as are apostate from the covenant of God, should have from syn, if they neglect the ordinances of the gospel. None of these arguments are taken from the essential things whereof the true church consisteth; none from the matter, to prove them saints; or form, to prove them united unto Christ and one to another, according to the order of his testament; none from the faith, to show it to be true; or from the worship and service of God; or from the ministry, to manifest either of these to be according to Christ. And now, the last of his reasons is from a figurative phrase the Temple of God, which may be diversely understood and applied, as himself cannot deny. Let the prudent reader judge, whether these his seven arguments be anything like those seven pillars, which Wisdom hewed out, when she built her house, Prov. 9. 1.

Now let us weigh, his seventh reason. The Apostle (saith he) speaking of Antichrist, in 2 Thes 2. 3. 4. describeth him thus; There shall come an Apostasy (defection or falling away) and the man of syn shall be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped: so that he as God, suteth in the Temple of God, showing himself that he is God &c. Here the Apostle describing Antichrist▪ speaketh of the Temple of God, where he suteth &c. Now that by the Temple of God in Israel, was figured the church of God among Christians, appeareth by these scriptures, 1 Cor. 3. 16. 17. 2 Cor. 6. 16. Ephe.▪ 21. Rev. 11. 1. 2. 19. & 14. 15. 17. & 15. 5. 6. 8. & 16.

1. 17. compared with Zach. 6. 12. 13▪ and is acknowledged by the best writers of all ages &c. So then from this scripture I reason as followeth.

If the Pope of Rome with his hierarchy be the man of syn (here spoken of) and the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped: then is the church of Rome the Temple of God here spoken of; wherein he suteth as God, showing himself that he is God.

But the Pope of Rome with his hierarchy, is (bytheir own grant) the man of syn of whom the Apostle here speaketh &c. Therefore the church of Rome, is the Temple of God also, that here is spoken of.

I answer. This argument I might wholly grant, and not hurt the cause I plead for. For though the church of Rome be the Temple of God, which Paul speaketh of: yet followeth it not, that it is God's true Temple, or true Church, (which is the point that should be concluded;) seeing the scriptures often speak of things as once they were▪ though so they continue not still: as also, they speak of things according to the outward pretense and show that is made of them; though in deed and truth they be nothing less. The first is manifest by these and other like instances: Abigail is called the wife of Nabal, 1 Sam. 30. 5. though Nabal was then dead, and his wife married to David. Simon is still called the Leper, Mat. 26. 6. though he was then cleansed of his leprosy. The king of Tyrus an heathen man that lived in Ezekiel's days, is said to have been in Eden the garden of God, to have been upon the holy mountain of God, and to have walked in the midst of the stones of fire, Ezek. 28. 13. 14. meaning that he had been in God's church, on mount Zion, among the people of God: although not he himself, but Hiram his predecessor (many years before, in the days of David and Solomon) was the man that became a proselyte in Israel, and helped to build the Temple; 2 Chron. 2. 3.—16. even as if a man should speak to the Bishop of Rome at this day, and tell him what he was for a Bishop in the Apostles days, and how now he is degenerate and become the man of syn. The mountains of Horeb and Tabor, where God once gave his Law and Christ was transfigured; are after still called the mount of God, and the Holy mount, 1 King. 19. •. 2 Pet. 1. 18. because they had been for the time sanctified by the presence of God. And so the Temple in Jerusalem, after the Jews had crucified Christ, refused the gospel, & were broken off, because of unbelief; and the sacrificing and worshiping in that place was ended; yet is it until the utter ruin of it by the Romans, called the holy place, Mat. 24. 15. Thus also the City become an harlot, is called the faithful City▪ Isaiah. 1. 21. the wicked that hath forsaken his righteousness is named arighteous man. Ezek. 18. 26. according to their former and not their present estate. And when these titles are given them, it is not to justify them at all, but to aggravate their syn. So for the second, that things are called according to the outward appearance and pretext set upon them, though they be in deed false; is evident by these and the like examples; false God's, which are but idols, are called gods, usually: so one Prophet calleth those the Philistians gods, 1 Chron. 14. 12. which another calleth their images. 2 Sam. 5. 21. False prophets are called Prophets, 1 King. 22. 6. 22: and Balaam a Soothsayer among the heathens, Jos. 13. 22. is called a Prophet. 2 Pet. 2. 16. The evil spirit whom the witch of End or raised up for Saul, is called in the scripture Samuel, 1 Sam. 28. 11. 12▪ 15. 16. 20. by reason whereof, the Papists contend that it was Samuel in deed, and not the Devil; urging the letter, as mine opposite doth urge against me this phrase of the Temple of God. The idolatrous Temple which Jeroboam made in Israel, in honor of the God which had brought them out of Egypt, is called the house of their God, Amos 2. 8. yet that it was his true house or temple, I never heard of any that would affirm: though it was the true God whom they worshiped therein; for Baal with his house, was then destroyed out of Israel, 2 King, 1. 27. 28.

Now mine opposite hath given us a good rule in this his last book, when answering the Anabaptists he saith, The word of God is not the bare letter or outward syllables, but the intendement and meaning of the holy Ghost by whom it was given. Which should carefully be observed by the due consideration of the scriptures, with the circumstances thereof, and by the conference of other places of scripture, and the proportion of faith laid together. Which whiles the Anabaptists neglect, they look on the scripture partially, and press the letter extremely, without consideration of the true and right meaning thereof. These words of his are true; the more it is to be lamented that he himself would so press the letter against me, and not weigh the meaning of the same, by itself, and other scriptures, and the proportion of faith laid together.

In alleging this text, he layeth down the words thus, There shall come an apostasy (or falling away): whereas the Apostle saith, except there come an apostasy (or falling-away) first: which word first, may intimate that the church should fall away from the love of the truth, before the man of syn should be revealed: and this is apparent by the 10. verse, where the people whom Antichrist seduceth, are said to be them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. Or, if the word first (which mine opposite leaveth out,) be understood before Christ's coming, then is it meant of the apostasy (or the falling away,) so called by an excellency, as exceeding all other. And is not to be referred to Antichrist the head only, but to Antichristians the body also; who after other sins, should fall away with Antichrist, and be damned with him; as in the 11. verse it is said, God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; shat they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. So that by the whole scope of this scripture it is evident, the Apostle divideth not the people of the church of Rome, from the Bishop and ministers of the same; as if the people should be God's true Temple, Christ's true Church, under his covenant, and so in the state of grace; when the Bishops and ministers are the Devils Temple, Antichrist, the man of syn, and so in the state of damnation: but maketh both bishops and people, deceivers and deceived, all of them under wrath and condemnation; otherwise then my opposite would persuade. For he pleading thus, The Apostle speaking of Antichrist, describeth him thus. There shall come an apostasy &c: would have men think, that the Bishop and ministers of the church of Rome are the apostasy, and the people not: contrary to all the scope of this scripture, contrary also to Paul, in 1 Tim. 4 1. where he foretellet of some that should apostate (or depart) from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of Devils; meaning it of the people deceived by false teachers: yea it is contrary also to mine opposites own grant, who said (a little before) that the church of Rome is fallen into most sinful and deep defection and apostasy, and so is a notorious harlot and idolatress. Wherefore his distinction here between the apostasy & the church of Rome, making the one Antichrist, the other God's temple, under his covenant of grace: neither accordeth with the scriptures, nor with his own assertion.

Next this, where he saith, that by the Temple of God in Israel, was figured the church of God among Christians: it is granted. But withal, let it be noted, that himself cannot deny, but the Temple and tabernacle in Israel, was not the church and congregation of God's people properly, but a sacramental sign of God's dwelling with them; which I before confirmed by these scriptures, Exod: 25. 8. 2. Chron. 6. 2. Ezek. 37. 26. 27. Rev. 21. 3. Secondly, he himself affirmeth, that the temple at Jerusalem, did primarily figure out Christ, and secondarily the church, both the catholic or universal, and particular churches likewise; & particular Christians, and (in several respects) both their bodies, and their souls and consciences. Upon which graunts of his, it followeth, that there is no necessary consequence of this his proposition, If the Pope of Rome with his hierarchy be the man of syn spoken of in 2. Thes. 2. then is the church of Rome, the Temple of God there spoken of: for he understanding by the church, the people, (as in 1. Cor. 3. 16. 17. 2. Cor. 6. 16. Eph. 2 21.) and yet granting that the Temple in Israel, was not the people; all may see the weakness and insufficiency of this inference, that because the Pope of Rome sitteth as God in the Temple of God; therefore the people of the church of Rome, are that Temple of God there spoken of; & consequently God's true church. For why now may we not as well (if not much better) say that by the Temple of God, is understood the doctrine and profession of Christ the true Temple; or as in my former † book I shown, thus. *As the Temple was an outward sign of God's presence with his people, and of his inward dwelling in their harts * by saith and by his spirit▪ unto their salvation: so Antichrists temple is an outward show of his presence with that seduced people, in whose harts † he dwelleth by Popish faith, and by his spirit of error carrying them to damnation. But as Antichrist shall not professedly deny the true God or Christ, though in deed he falsely * showeth himself that he is▪ God: so shall h•not professedly deny the Temple or church of God, but falsely vaunt his adulterous synagogue to be the same.* Unto this exposition, mine opposite hath given no answer: and it being according to the scriptures, & truth of the thing in controversy; I leave it to the prudent reader, whether the outward show and profession of Christ and Christian religion, be not the first thing here intended of the Apostle by the Temple of God. And this is further confirmed by Rev. 11. 1. Where the Temple, Altar, and Worshipers, are three distinct things; and the people are the worshipers there spoken of, & neither the Temple, nor the Altar; of which place we shall treat anon.

Then whereas he granteth that the Temple in Jerusalem did primarily figure out Christ: how is it, that he wholly neglecteth the primarie thing figured, and insisteth upon the secondary, the church or people of Rome? Seeing it is known, how the Pope pretendeth himself to be Christ's vicar and deputy on earth, and to be the servant and worshiper of Christ in heaven: and may we think that the Apostle in warning them of themysterie of iniquity, would not imply the chief point of the mystery, that Antichrist should in pretence sit for Christ and in his stead, as his vicar general on earth? Thus to sit in the Temple (or for the Temple) of God, may well be understood, that Antichrist should sit for Christ, a pretended friend, but in deed an adverse foe.

Now for that which the Temple secondarily figured, namely the church catholic, and also particular, and so men's consciences: he wavereth in his application. He saith this term [the church of Rome] is taken either particularly (which he applieth to the Lateran church in Rome, the Popes parish church:) or more generally, for all other such Christian churches; as are come under the Popes jurisdiction &c. This later I hold to be most proper here: for what needed there such warning to the Thessalonians & other Christian churches through the world, if a Bishop of the Lateran parish (a corner in Rome) had exalted himself above God therein only; and had not usurped also a pretended Christian power over all? And the complement of the prophesy, is an evident exposition of it: for who knoweth not, that the Pope scorneth to be Bishop of the Lateran parish only▪ it is a jurisdiction over the catholic church throughout the earth, which he challengeth. And now what proof bringeth mine opposite, that the church of Rome as God constituted it, is taken generally for other Christian churches under the Popes jurisdiction? None at all: neither can he bring any jote of God's word for the same▪ Again what proof maketh he, that the catholic Roman church wherein the Pope sitteth, is the true church of God? None but this, I suppose these men themselves being better advised, will not deny them to be the churches and Temple of God. But he should have shown (if it had been possible for him) that the Roman church is by divine institution the catholic or universal church: which because I assure myself it can never be done, I conclude that this Roman catholic church is a fiction of the Popes brain, and a mere idol like himself: and is no otherwise the Temple of God, then the Pope is Christ's universal vicar; namely in lying words and vain ostentation. And so the main ground for the Temple of God wherein Antichrist sitteth, to be the true church of Christ, is overthrown.

As for the Popes Lateran parish, I both deny it to be Christ's true church; and that it only is the Temple of God wherein Antichrist should sit. His proof of the former is this. If we understand it of a particular church, (as the Apostle wrote his epistle to the church of the Romans) how shall we soundly deny it either to be the Temple of God, or Antichrist to be set therein? Thus have we suppositions and questions, in stead of proofs. To his demand I answer: it is the Temple of God in pretence, not in truth; even as the Pope is a bishop of Christ in pretence, but in deed is Antichrist the man of syn, as mine opposite granteth. The church that was in Rome in Paul's time, will no more justify the Popes synagogue there now; then the Christian ministers which were then in that church, Rom. 12. will justify the Antichristian prelates that there reign at this day. Secondly, the Lateran parish at Rome, is of the Popes faith, religion and worship: there are like priests like people. Now if the Bishop of that parish be Antichrist, the son of perdition, as the Apostle telleth us, 2 Thes. 2. 3. then his parishoners which have no other faith or religion then he, are also the children of damnation, 2 Thes. 2. 12. and so cannot be judged to be Christ's true church, and in the state of grace▪ sealed of God with his covenant unto salvation. In the Lateran Church of Rome, where Antichrist is parish priest; the people are gross idolaters, heretics, worshipers of Devils, and of him that sitteth as God in the Temple of God; ascribing unto him that Holyness, divine power and jurisdiction, which he doeth blasphemously challenge; and mine opposite could not show one man of that parish that differeth at all from the religion of their priest: how is it then possible that he should be Antichrist, and they true Christians; he under wrath, they under the covenant of grace; he the very Temple of the Devil, and they the true Temple of God? For shall not the same religion and faith which justifieth them, justifieth him also; when it is found in him as well as in them? Wherefore either the man of syn himself must be a saint among those saints: or they together with him must be (as the holy Ghost calleth them) an habitation of Devils, Revel.

18. 2. To conclude then, seeing there is no true visible church of God's institution, but a particular congregation; (any other general or catholic visible church of Rome, being but the Popes own wicked fiction;) and seeing Antichrists parish church can no more be Christ's then Antichrist himself: it cannot without injury to the Apostle, and to the proportion of faith, and to other scriptures, and to reason itself, be gathered that the church of Rome is at this day God's true Temple or Christ's true Church. Albeit, for that there was once a true Christian church in Rome, and these Antichristians now profess to be the successors of the same, and pretend one faith, religion & worship, and retain some doctrines and ordinances of Christ still, which they sinfully profane: they are therefore said to be the Temple of God; as before I have shown.

Moreover there can no church be called the true Temple of God, but in respect of Christ the chief corner stone and foundation of the building: for he is called the living Stone, and his people are living stones, built up a spiritual house in him, and so grow up to an holy Temple in the Lord, 1 Pet. 2. 4. 5 Eph. 2. 20. 21. If therefore Antichrist sitteth in the true Temple of God, he sitteth first in Christ the head, and secondarily in his body and people: but Antichrist is no otherwise in Christ than in a feigned profession of him, whom in deed he denieth, 1 Joh. 2. 22. therefore he is not in the Temple of God, but in respect of his profession of Christianity and of the Christian society in his people, both which are false and deceitful, after the working of Satan, & in all deceivableness of unrighteousness, 2 Thes. 2. 9. 10. Now it followeth, that I defend my former writings against which he excepteth; as for the reproaches which he layeth upon myself, and his trifling exceptions against words and phrases, I will omit as fruitless.

Whereas in scanning the Apostles words, I noted mine opposites omission of Antichrists sitting as God in the Temple of God; which words as God, do give light to the true meaning: he excepteth how he could allege that one Greek copy wanteth those words▪ so doth the Syriakas Mr. Beza observeth, also the Latin. I answer, if one copy want them, and many, or all other have them; it is no wisdom to leave the many & follow one without apparent reason. For the Syriac he was deceived, for it hath those words plainly, though the copy which Tremellius used wanted them, through the copiers default, as Mr. Junius showeth in his notes upon the Syriac version on 2. Thes. 2. 4. As for the Latin, it omitteth sundry other good things in other places, and is no warrant for us to follow.

Obj. The question was not about the manner of Antichrists sitting in the Temple of God, whether he should sit as God therein or no. Therefore I needed not allege these words.

Answ. But the question was about the Apostles meaning in that place; and therefore his words which help to manifest his meaning, should have been alleged.

*Obj. It is known to be usual in all writers sometimes not to mention, sometimes not to insist at▪ all upon such words as per te▪ne not to the matter in hand &c.*

Answ. Yet I, though I first used the whole phrase of the Temple of God, am taxed for that I do not after always repeat all the words: But to let pass such things, this speech sitteth as God, pertaineth much to the matter in hand: for if the people (which he will have to be the Temple of God;) do so acknowledge and honor the Man of syn for God, as he there sitteth showing himself that he is God: then may we as well doubt whether they be the people of the true God, as whether the man of syn be the true God. But whatsoever honor & divine power the man of syn challengeth to himself, the same do the people of Rome (the Temple of God) give unto him, in word and deed. So the words are needful, and pertain to the matter in hand. For by the worshiping of that Beast, the false church is distinguished from the true church, which refuseth to worship him, Rev. 13. 8. 16. 17. & 14. 1. 4. 9. 10. 11. 12. & 20. 4. 2 Thes. 2. 10. 11. 12.

Obj. Of Antichrists sitting, th' Apostle saith, that he sitteth as God: but of the seat where he sitteth, he saith expressly, in the Temple of God; and saith not as in the Temple of God, as the answer here would import; which therefore is merely shifting, and full of deceit.

Answ. So the Prophet saith expressly, in the house of their God, Amos. 2. 8. and saith not as in the house of their God; though he speaketh of an idolatrous temple, which Jeroboam pretended to be God's: and the Apostle saith expressly, there be gods many and lords many, 1. Cor. 8. 5. and saith not as gods, or as lords, when yet he meaneth the false gods and idols of the heathen. And the scripture expressly saith, the woman saw Samuel; and Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and, then said Samuel, & because of the words of Samuel; 1. Sam. 28. 12. 14. 16. 20. and saith not, one as or like to Samuel, though it was but the devil in the likeness of Samuel. Paul saith expressly that Satan is transfigured into an Angel of light 2. Cor. 11. 14. and saith not as into an Angel; though in the very next words he saith, that his ministers are transfigured as the ministers of righteousness, v. 15. Which term of transfiguring, is sometime used for a true change, as in Phil. 3. 21. he saith Christ shall transfigure our vile body, that it may be conformed to his glorious body: yet in the former place he useth the word but for a counterfeit change. And that the people which worship Antichrist as God, are called the Temple of God, for name, show and pretence; I have before manifested.

Obj. He doth abuse the scripture &c. as if Paul's words were not plain to such as will understand, that Antichrist exalteth himself above all that is called god, so that he as God sitteth in the Temple of God; and therefore is not the true God, but the man of syn &c.

Answ. Some may think, by Paul's words, that Antichrist should openly profess himself to be God, and above all God's: yet the Pope (who is the head of Antichrist) professeth himself to be the servant of the servants of God, & to be but the minister of Christ▪ and Paul teacheth the same, when he calleth his working the mystery (or hidden▪secret) of iniquity; 2 Thes. 2. 7. Even so some may think, by the Temple of God, is meant the true church of God, the people that in Christ are built-together for an habitation of God through the Spirit, and that Christ dwelleth in their hearts by ▪aith, Eph. 2. 21. 22. & 3. 17▪ yet the Papists (who are Antichristians) do believe that man of syn, that exalteth himself above all that is called God, to be a most holy man, and Christian bishop, they are of his saith, worship and religion, trusting in his pardons for remission of their sins &c: and therefore are no better Christians then he, but children of perdition with him, and are by Paul in the very same place counted among them that perish, because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved, therefore God hath sent them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness, 2 Thes 2. 10. 11. 12. Who now, (except they be blinded with affection) can think that Paul calleth such people the Temple of God otherwise then in respect of their profession of Christianity, and boasting, that they are the only good Christians, when they are in deed the sworn servants of Antichrist, and synagogue of Satan, as Rev. 3. 9.

Object. Difference is to be put, between the man of syn that sitteth, & between the temple wherein he sitteth: he sitteth as God, yet the temple wherein he sitteth, is the Temple of God.

Answ. There is in deed such a difference as is between the pastor and the flock; (understanding by the Temple of God, the church of Rome at this day:) such a difference as is between the seducer and the seduced, both adjudged to destruction, 2 Thes. 2. 10. 11. 12. Rev. 14. 9. 10. 11. Other differences if men feign, that the pastors (or hierarchy) are the man of syn, sons of perdition; and the idolatrous people which be of one faith and religion with them, are men of God, and in his covenant of grace; it is far from the truth.

Object. See the like in the cases that fell out at Jerusalem and the Temple there: when Baals idol of indignation was set at the entry of the house of God, Ezek. 8. 3. 5. and when Antiochus Epiphanes and his officers profaned the sanctuary and city of Jerusalem, and set the image of Jupiter Olympius, in the Temple and seat of God, Dan. 11. 31. 36. who would not now put difference between the idols and persons aforesaid on the one hand, and between the Temple and city of God wherein they were set, and which they polluted, on the other.

Answ. The examples are far unlike: first Rome, is not Jerusalem but Babylon, Rev. 17. Secondly, the Temple and holy things in Jerusalem being made of senseless stones and matter, they could not be polluted with syn in themselves as the living stones of Christ's house the people now may soon be, and turned into a synagogue of Satan; as the Christian churches in the Apostles days, are now long since turned to be Turks and Papists. Doth not the Law plainly teach us this; for in the yerely cleansing of the Sanctuary, it was because of the uncleannesses of the sons of Israel, and because of their trespasses, in all their sins, Levite. 16. 16. and for no uncleanness or syn in itself. Thirdly, the example of Antiochus is fit, but wrong applied: for he speaketh only of Antiochus and his officers; whereas both he, his officers and his people (the common souldjers) were they that defiled the sanctuary of God; as it is said in the story, Antiochus went up against Israel & Jerusalem with a great multitude, and entered proudly into the Sanctuary &c. 1 Maccab. 1. 20. 21. So in applying this, he would have the Pope and his officers (the hierarchy) to be the man of syn, as Antiochus and his officers: & the multitude of papists at Rome, he will not have to be (as in deed they should be counted) answerable to Antiochus soldiers; but they must be the Temple of God, answerable to the Temple of Jerusalem, a most unjust resemblance. For the Temple then was a mere patient, and suffered that abuse at Antiochus hands: so the thing answerable hereto, should be (if he would have made a fit comparison,) the Christians (God's true Temple,) which suffer for the truths sake at the Antichristians hands; such as are opposed to the worshipers of the beast, and those that receive his mark, of whom it is written, Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus, Revel. 14. 9.—12. and again, I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast nor his image &c, Rev. 20. 4. And such I never doubted but they were the true Temple of God: but I deny that the church of Rome at this day is such a people or such a Temple: they are the marked soldiers of Antiochus the Pope, and honor him as God in the temple of God (their pretended Christian church) with high impiety. Or at least, they are like the Apostate Jews, which turned to Antiochus religion and became heathens, with worse impiety; 1 Maccab. 1. 13. 14. 15. 43. 52.

Of this sort is his next allegation, where to make his reader merry, he likeneth me to the old man of Athens, which would compel the Jews to call their Temple by the name of Jupiter Olympius, because Jupiter's image was set up in it; 2 Mac. 6. 1. 2, so I would have the church of Rome called Antichrists church &c. I answer: if the church, the people of Rome were now mere patients, amongst whom Antichrist cometh in by violence, they not consenting unto him anymore then God's temple did to Jupiter's image; it should be foolishness in me to call it Antichrists church. Or, to put the example more fitly; if a Jew had been forced by Antiochus violently to kyss or bow the knee to Jupiter's image, when he resisted and testified against it: none could justly call him an idolater, or one of Jupiter's people. But if another Jew had revolted to Antiochus religion, and believed in his Jupiter and honored him with heart, profession and action; he now might justly be called the servant of Jupiter, or one of his people, (as the Moabites are called the people of Chemosh, Numb. 21. 29.) So the church of Rome now fallen from true Christianity, and believing, worshiping, obeying Antichrist, the Popes holiness, are and may justly be called his church: or else Antichrist hath no temple, church or people in the world.

Object. Observe here and throughout his treatise, how still he calleth that the Temple, church and body of Antichrist, which Paul expressly and purposely calleth the Temple of God. And so therein note still his sh·fs and his errors &c.

Answ. Loe still an urging of the bare letter, as do the Papists This is my body, to prove their transubstantiation, that there is no bread left but Christ's very body, really and properly. I have (I trust) without shifting or error proved the present church of Rome to be Antichrists temple church and body, if the Pope be Antichrist. And seeing his mystery of iniquity, is contrary to Christ's mystery of godliness; and Christ hath a mystical temple which is his church and body, Eph. 2. 21. & 5. 23. I would gladly know what temple church and body Antichrist hath, if the church of Rome be not the same. Again, he speaketh too largely, that J still so call it throughout my treatise; for I have other wise written, though it liked him not, thus. God's true temple and tabernacle is in mount Zion▪ in heaven▪ (Rev. 14. 1. 17.) where God sitteth on a throne, (Rev. 16. 17. & 7. 15.) and dwelleth among his people; where is the Ark of his covenant (Rev. 11. 19.) and from thence, lightnings, voices, thondrings, earthquake and h·yle come forth against th· Antichristians his enemies; and vials of his wrath poured out upon the throne of the beast, (Rev. 16. 1. 2. 10.) and on men that have his mark. On the contrary, the Beast, which is the kingdom of Antichrist, ascendeth from beneath, out of the bottomless pit, (Rev. 17. 8.) and blasphemeth this heavenly tabernacle (Rev. 13. 6.) and sitteth in Babylon (Rev. 16. 19.) upon the Dragons throne (Rev. 13. 2.) and fighteth against the Lamb, and against the saints, (Rev. 19. 19.) treading underfoot the holy city (Rev. 11. 2.) and casting down the place of Christ's sanctuary, (Dan. 8. 11.) When th' Apostle therefore telleth us, that Antichrist sitteth as God in the Temple of God, it is to be understood of their invading and destroying of God's church, and people, as the heathens of old deal· with Jerusalem and dwellers therein, (Psal. 79. Dan. 8, 11. 13. & 11. 36. Ier. 22. 12. 13. Law. 2. 7. 9.) Secondly of their own vain ostentation, whiles they will have it called the Christian catholic church, and the Pope the head of the same. Ezek. 28. 2. 6. Esa. 14. 13. 14. 2 Thes. 2. 9▪ 10▪ Rev. 13. 11. 14. & 17. 4. 2 Cor. 11. 13. 14. 15. Thus I grant, that the Temple which Antichrist invadeth & destroyeth, is God's true Temple: but that wherein the Beast sitteth as God, which he trimmeth, upholdeth and boasteth of; (as he doeth the church of Rome at this day) is the synagogue of Satan. But he proceedeth.

Object. As for the ancient Doctor whom here he citeth, let us hear himself speak. His words are these. That which is the Temple of any idol or Devil, the Apostle would not call the Temple of God. Wherupon some will have in this place, not the Prince himself, but after a manner his whole body, th• is the multitude of men pertaining unto him, together with himself under the Prince, understood to be Antichrist. And more rightly also they think it to be said in Latin templum in the Greek; that he sitteth not in the Temple of God, but for the Temple of God which is the church. As we say he sitteth for a friend, that is as a friend. Augustine de Civic. D•, l. 20. c. 19. Where note how far differing Augustine is from this man that citeth him, &c.

Answ. There is not so great difference as mine opposite would pretend. First I cited not Augustine for his own judgment, but for others whom he speaketh of, touching the translation of the Text, in the Temple of God, or, for the Temple. Secondly, he setteth down Augustine's words maimed both at head and foot. For Augustine beginneth thus: But in what temple of God he shall sit as God, is uncertain: whether in that ruin of the Temple which was built by King Solomon; or in the church. For that which is the temple of any idol or devil, the Apostle would not call the temple of God: &c. Now the ruin of Solomon's temple, cannot at this day be called God's temple, otherwise then because it was the Temple of God of old; & hath now no more holiness in deed & truth, thē any other place in the world. And thus I have granted that the church of Rome may be called the church of God, in respect that there was a church there in Paul's time, whereas now it hath no more true holiness, then the synagogue of Satan. So we see how for advantage mine opposite baulked Augustine's first words. In the end, he breaketh off in the midst of a period: for Augustine saith, sitteth for a friend, that is as a friend: or if any other thing is wont to be understood by this kind of speech, So he defineth not certainly of this place, but leaves it doubtful: and presently after confesseth his ignorance; For what is this (saith Augustine) For the mystery of iniquity doth already work, only he who now holdeth let him hold, till he be taken out of the way. I confess myself to be utterly ignorant what he meaneth. Thus we need not strive about Augustine's words here: and I grant, that the Apostle would not have called it the Temple of God, unless either it were so in deed and truth, or had been so in times past, or did pretend to be so still. And I think all will likewise grant, that the holy Ghost would not have called the witches spirit at endor Samuel, unless either it had been Samuel in deed (as the Papists do contend;) or something in pretence and show like Samuel. Neither would the prophet have said to the King of Tyrus, Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God, (a proselyte in the church of Israel;) unless either himself or some of his predecessors had been there in times past. Neither would Amos have called the Israelites idol temple the house of their God, unless either it were so in deed, or in pretence: which phrase when the Greek translateth according to the letter, the house of their God, and the Chaldee paraphrast (as ancient as the Apostles age) expoundeth the house of their idols, they contradict not one another: seeing the same thing may be God's in show, and the devils in deed and truth: for even Satan himself is transformed into an Angel of light; 2 Cor. 11. 14.

Obj. When the Apostle describeth the mystery of Antichrists iniquity, would he teach the church that the place of his sitting is the Temple of God, if he meant that it were in deed the synagogue of Satan and the temple of Antichrist? For that Antichrist should sit in the temple of Antichrist and synagogue of Satan, what mystery is there in it? All the world would easily perceive, that these agreed very well and most fitly together. But for Antichrist to sit in God's temple and Christ's church, this is in deed a mystery.

Answ. The mystery of iniquity began in the true church, but continued not therein always: for when it was discerned, the church either cast it out, or soon degenerated into a synagogue of Satan, if it accepted Antichrist for God, as the Church of Rome doth at this day. Which I further manifest thus, 1. The Apostle saith, As ye have heard that Antichrist shall come, even now are there many Antichrists, &c. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us, but (they went out) that they might be made manifest, that they were not all of us. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? he is Antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: 1. Joh. 2. 18. 19. 22. 23. This scripture teacheth us first that all heretics departing from the faith of Christ, are generally Antichrists, though they retain the name of Christians still, as did the heretics in the Apostles time. 2. That such are gone out from the church, and are in deed none of it, though they pretend to be the true church, as all heretics have done. 3. That both teachers and people departed from the faith and church of Christ, are comprehended under the name of Antichrists, and not the Bishops only. 4. That whosoever is Antichrist (especially the great Antichrist) he denieth the Son (Christ) and consequently God the Father. Now let us apply these things to the Bishop and hierarchy of Rome, whom mine opposite granteth to be the great Antichrist. If the Pope and his hierarchy be Antichrist, then are they none of the Apostolic church, but gone out of the same: but they are Antichrist (by my opposites own confession:) Therefore they are none of th'Apostolic church.

The Pope and his hierarchy are both in and of the church of Rome, the heads, teachers and principal members of it, of the same faith, religion and worship: but they are not in or of the Apostolic Christian church, as before is proved: therefore the church of Rome is not an apostolic Christian church.

If the church of Rome denieth both the Father and the Son: then is it Antichrist (as the Apostle saith) and so no true Christian church. But the church of Rome denieth both the Father and the Son: therefore it is no true Christian church.

If the Pope & his hierarchy deny both the Father and the Son, then the church of Rome also denieth them; for they believe as the Pope and hierarchy believeth, have one and the same religion with their priests. But the Pope and his hierarchy deny both the Father and the Son, otherwise they are not the Antichrist, (as mine opposite saith they are:) therefore the Church of Rome also denieth both the Father and the Son. Now seeing it is thus, how is it possible that it should continue the true Church of Christ, otherwise then by lying pretext and ostentation? And this is the mystery of iniquity, if men could comprehend it that the Bishops and people of Rome, being at first Christ's true church, departed by degrees from the faith & worship of God; til they came jointly to believe lies, and to worship creatures, idols and devils (Rev. 30.) and became a Beast (or Antichristian kingdom) yet with two horns like the Lamb Christ (Rev. 13.) & blaspheming God's Tabernacle & them that dwell in heaven, (that is the true church,) they pretend themselves to be the only true church of Christ, and that all other are heretics; they pretend succession even from the Apostles days, without change of religion, and so they sit in the temple of God, or for the Temple, as if they & none but they were the Temple and church of God; the Pope being the head of this sinful corporation, of this Beast or kingdom; and exalting himself above God & Christ, whiles yet he calleth himself Christ's vicar, and the Servant of the servants of God; and by strong delusion keepeth his people in belief of lies, that together with him they all might be damned, who believe not the truth but have pleasure in unrighteousness; as the Apostle saith, 2. Thes. 2. 12.

Now where he objecteth, what mystery is there in it, that Antichrist should sit in the temple of Antichrist? I answer, it is a great mystery, in that it is done by him and his, under the name and show of Christianity; and as the Apostle saith, after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, 2. Thes. 9. 10. And where he further saith, but for Antichrist to sit in Christ's church, this is in deed a mystery; I answer, it is in deed a contrariety and impossibility (not a mystery:) for no man can serve two masters, Mat. 6. 24. of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage, 2. Pet. 2. 19. to whom men yield themselves servants to obey, his servants they are to whom they obey, Rom. 6. 16. Now the church of Rome, yielding unto and obeying Antichrist, cannot be the servants of Christ, if the Apostles doctrine be true. And after mine opposites manner of reasoning, another man might say, seeing Christianity is the mystirie of godliness, 1. Tim. 3. 16. as Antichristianitie is the mystery of iniquity, 2. Thes. 2. 7. Christ must sit in the Temple of Satan, as Antichrist sitteth in the temple of God: for for Christ to sit in the Temple & church of Christ, what mystery is there in it? but for Christ to sit in Satan's temple, and Antichrist's church, this is in deed a mystery. Were not this (think we) good reasoning, to put darkness for light, and light for darkness; Christ into Antichrist's place, and Antichrist into Christ's; for to find out a mystery? But they that have their eyes opened to read the mystery that is not only in the Pope, but on the forehead of the whore of Babylon his church, will soon espy this fraud: though others are bewitched with her painted face. For as Satan can transform himself into an Angel of light, and his ministers can be transformed as the ministers of righteousness 2 Cor. 11. 14. 15. is it such a marvel, that he should transform his temple and church, into the Temple of God, and church of Christ: and yet as he is a Devil still, notwithstanding his transformation; so his Temple cōtinueth still the Temple of the Devil, and church of Antichrist, how ever they are disguised with other names and habits. And to help a little to the discerning of both these opposite mysteries of piety and impiety: we are to know, that Christ's Kingdom beginneth in the kingdom of Satan, and is perfected in the Kingdom of God; and Antichrist's kingdom beginneth in the kingdom of God, and is perfected in the kingdom of Satan. For, the god of this world having blinded the eyes of infidels, who are dead in sins, and walk according to the prince of the power of the aier: Christ by his Ministers sent into the world, and by his word of truth, the gospel, causeth light to arise unto them, openeth their eyes, and turneth them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in him: and thus God delivereth them from the power of darkness, and translateth them into the kingdom of his beloved son. Then cometh Satan by Antichrists, which are his ministers, privily crept into the church, and by the word of lying, (which is Antichrists gospel) he darkeneth the minds of them that have not received the love of the truth, and turneth them back again from God, and by damnable heresies privily brought in draweth them even to deny the Lord that bought them, and so bring upon themselves swift destruction. Then do they go out from the church, & blaspheme the way of truth, and together with the Beast, do war against Christ: whom yet in name and pretense they would seem to honor and serve, so accomplishing the mystery of their iniquity, unto assured damnation, if they turn not again unto God.

This thing not being observed, how Christ beginneth in the world, and draweth men out of it into his church; and Antichrist beginneth in the church, & draweth men out of it into the world again, (as the Dragons tail, draweth the stars of heaven, & •fteth them to the earth, Rev. 12. 4.) mine opposite thought it absurdity and contradiction in me, for writing thus; When th Apostle therefore telleth us, that Antichrist sitteth as God in the Temple of God, it is to be understood first of their invading and destroying of God's church and people, as the heathens of old dealt with Jerusalem and dwellers therein: secondly of their own vain ostentation, whiles they will have it called the Christian catholic church, and th: Pope the head of the same. Upon this, he thus inveigheth:

What have we here? Doth himself now by the Temple of God understand God's church and people: yea such as was answerable to Jerusalem, and the dwellers therein of old? why then hath he so eagerly oppugned us hereabout? &c.

Answ. I oppugn the present church of Rome, which Antichrist destroyeth not, but buildeth and adorneth as an alluring harlot: the Christian church which was in Rome of old, that hath he invaded and destroyed long since; for they then were Saints, such as he hateth: these now are worshipers of him and of idols & Devils; and are an habitation of Devils. So there is as much difference between the church of Rome now, and the church then: as between the Bishop of Rome now, & the Bishops then: they were Christ's ministers, this now is Antichrist, as mine opposite himself confesseth. And what cause hath he to insult, as if he had got the victory? Let wise men judge. But he proceedeth.

Obj. Where can he show in the scriptures, that sitting is put for invading or destroying &c. Otherwhere still he teareth that by sitting is meant abiding, continuing, dwelling, &c.

What if I cannot prove that sitting is put for invading or destroying: if I prove my assertion by other words of the text, shall it not suffice? The words Eiston Naon, into the Temple, may imply by a figure, his invading: and the person that invadeth being an enemy, a thief, a wolf, implieth his destroying; for our Savior saith, The thief cometh not but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy. 1 Joh. 10. 10. The scripture often wanteth words, easy to be understood: so here

Paul saith of Antichrist, that he (having entered) into the Temple of God, sitteth as God. And if they regard not my exposition, they shall have his on whom they so much rely, Mr. Junius I mean, who so explaineth it, saying, The testimony of sign is this, that Invading the temple of God, he shall sit as God. Jun. Animad verse. in Bellarm. Controv. 3. l. 3. c. 14. not. 18. But what if I confirm it by the word sitting, which he thought so unlikely? In Isaiah. 14. 13. the Prophet upbraideth the king of Babylon thus, Thou hast said in thine heart, J will ascend into heaven &c. J will sit also in the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the North; meaning, mount Zion where God's temple was. But this is meant of Nebuchadnezers invading of Jerusalem to spoil the same, as the history showeth, 2 King. 25. and in him, Antichrists tyranny against the church was lively figured. As for sitting to mean continuing, though it doth so often times, yet not always; Christ sate upon the mount of Olives, Mat. 24. 3. the disciples sate in the house, Act. 2. 2. yet dwelt they not, or continued long there. And when the Babylonian invaded mount Zion to sit there, he continued not there, but having spoiled the city, burned the Temple, and captived the people, he returned into Babylon, 2 King. 25. so Antichrist spoiling Christian churches returneth to his whore of Babylon, his proper habitation, which he wickedly boasteth to be the Zion, Temple and church of God.

Whereas mine opposite expounded the Temple of God to be the church, and shown not whether he meant a church particular, or general and catholic; I said for a particular church, it will not agree with the propheties of Antichrist, whose city or church is so great, as people's, kindreds, tongues & nations, do dwell in the streets thereof, Rev. 11. 8. 9. He gainsayeth me thus:

First, Still he calls that Antichrists church, which th' Apostle calleth the Temple of God.

Answ. It is his own interpretation, that the Temple meaneth the church; and that he that sitteth in it is Antichrist; and sitting he will have to be continuing; and why may not I call that church wherein Antichrist sitteth continually as God, Antichrists church; yea though it were indeed God's church as he supposeth. Seeing the city wherein Christ did but dwell, was called his own city, Mat. 9. 1. And that which God saith, in my house, and in my kingdom, 1 Chron. 17. 14. another Prophet relateth it, thine house and thy kingdom, speaking to David the governor, 2 Sam. 7. 16. Or to show a fitter similitude, as the holy Ghost calleth the Moabites the people of Chemosh, Numb. 1. 29. because they worshiped Chemosh for their God; so the church of Rome which worshipping Antichrist, is fitly called Antichrists church.

Object. How will he prove that the Beasts city Rev 11. 8. is the temple of God, 2 Thes. 24.

Ans. It is himself that expoundeth the Templ▪ to be the church▪ and in special the Lateran church in Rome, where the Pope is parish priest. I show by Rev. 11. 8. that the Popes parish is a larger city or church then either that Lateran parish or Rome itself, even over many nations; and so cannot be a particular church such as Christ instituted; but a new catholic church which the Pope hath devised, and would have it accounted the Temple and church of God. Here mine opposite, laboreth to find a difference between the Beasts city and his church: but all in vain. For thus he reasoneth.

1. This city in Rev. 11. 8. is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. But the church is here called the Temple of God, or the Court without the Temple, or the holy City.

Answ. First then he granteth that the same church may be called both a temple & a city: so the diverse name helpeth him nothing. Secondly, it is true that Antichrists church is called Sodom and Egypt which was an whole country: let men now judge how fitly mine opposite hath confined Antichrists church within the Lateran parish, a corner in Rome. Shall we rather believe him, or the Holy Ghost? Thirdly that is called the Holy city, Rev. 11. 2. which the Gentiles (the church of Antichrist) tread underfoot, as destroyed and wast: whereas the church of Antichrist is a great city called Babylon, sumptuously built, garnished, and by him maintained, Rev. 17. and that is the church of Rome at this day, as all know: and of the present church of Rome is now our controversy.

Obj. 2. This great city is that where our Lord was crucified, Rev. 11. 8. Now all know that he was crucified in and under the jurisdiction of the city, not of the church of Rome. For he was condemned by Pontius Pilate &c.

Answ. The thing he aimeth at, is that the city mentioned in Rev, 11. 8. is a civil polity, as when Rome killed Christ; and not an ecclesiastical polity or church. But he laboreth in the wind: for the city is such as is the Beast or kingdom: the Beast is a spiritual polity most sinful, for it cometh out of the bottomless pit, Rev. 11. 7. that is from the Devil; whereas all Civil polities are from God, though they be heathens, Rom. 13. 1. 2. Secondly he should have known, that the same City which was a civil polity in Christ's time, & killed him: is now subordinate to an ecclesiastical polity, church, or Papacie; and still crucifieth Christ in his members.

Obj. 3. This city is that which was the Dragons throne, and by him given to the Beast, Revel. 13. 2. But this was the city, not the church of Rome. Neither J think will these men themselves say, that the church was the Dragons throne, or was by the Dragon given to the beast.

Answ. The city or polity which the Dragon gave to the Beast, was civil, but is now subjected to, or become ecclesiastical: for the city of Rome is now by profession Christian, which of old was heathen: and by professed Christians (namely the Pope & his church) are those witnesses of God killed, Rev. 11. 7. 8. so their corpses lie unburied in the streets of the beasts city, that is of Antichrists church or polity, which reacheth over many nations.

Obj. 4. This city also is the throne of the Beast, and Babylon the great city spoken of Rev. 16. 10. 19. & 17. & 18. chapt. which is to be understood of the city of Rome and dominion thereof.

Answ. It is granted that this city is Babylon, and Rome, and the dominion thereof: but it is a spiritual polity or church: for who hath dominion now of Rome, but the Pope or Bishop there, the pretended vicar of Christ; and who but he hath killed those Martyrs, within his Diocese or Bishopric, which reacheth over many kingdoms?

Obj. 5. This city is the woman that sitteth on seven-mountains, Reve. 17. 9. 18. And the city, not the church of Rome, is built on 7. mountains.

Answ. Yes, the same heathen city which was first set on seven hills; is now a pretended Christian city, sitting still on her 7 hills: and being a Christian in name, hath killed Christ in his members, by her Popes power ecclesiastical, who hath his seat in her, but his Dragons paws reach into far countries. This city, the woman on 7. hills, is she that hath made the inhabiters of the earth drunk with the wine of her •ornication, Rev. 17. 1. 2. &c. and who but the church of Rome hath done this?

Obj. 6. This city hath 7. kings or kinds of government &c. by Kings, Consuls, Dictators, Decemvirs & Tribunes (ceased before Johns time) Emperors▪ (when John lived) and Popes (not then come:) But how should this be found in the church of Rome, which was not before Johns time; and therefore could not have 5. Kings or kinds of government then fallen.

*Answ. Ill do they thrive, that kick against the pricks. Here himself confesseth the Popes government to be one of the seven: now the Popes government or papacy, is an ecclesiastical monarchy; by it were the witnesses of Christ slain, as before I shown. As for seven goverments to be found in the church of Rome, that is in the papacy, is absurd; for it is to seek 7. kinds of government in one. But six are gone and the seventh remaineth by the Pope. That city or polity which once was heathen, now Christian in name (Antichristian in deed;) which the Pope menageth: is the malignant church that killeth God's witnesses, amongst people's, kindreds, tongues and nations, Rev. 11. 8. 9. Therefore it cannot be restrained to one particular congregation.*

Obj. 7. This city is that which reigned over the kings of the earth in Johns time, Rev. 17. 8. And that not the church but the city of Rome so reigned when John wrote, all do acknowledge.

Answ. But, that the city the church of Rome now reigneth by the Pope the head of that church, all do acknowledge. And the killing of those witnesses Rev. 11. was not in John's time, but after, when the city or polity of Rome was become Christian in name and title. To say, it was not so in John's time, therefore it is not so now; is dallying, rather then sound reasoning.

Obj. 8. Finally, the Lord himself putteth difference between this city Babylon, and his people therein, Rev. 18. 4. as of old, in Babylon of Chaldee▪. Ier. 50. &c.

Answ. This is true; but what can he infer thereupon? It was not God's people in Babylon, that killed those witnesses, Rev. 11. but it was Babylon that killed those witnesses, God's people therein. Because God's people killed not those witnesses, but the Beast in his catholic city or church: therefore (thinks he) that city of the beast, is not his church; a fair conclusion.

Obj. Note here, that by the great city, is meant not only the city itself, but the whole jurisdiction, authority and dominion thereof, how far soever extended.

Answ. It is a good note, and worth the marking: for the great city being the church of Rome, as before is proved; it followeth, that the extents of that church, reach further then the material walls of Rome, even to all nations that are of the Popes religion: and therefore to bound it within the Lateran parish of Rome, is to restrain that which God showeth to be more large. It were a happy day, if the Popes unruly power, were limited within the Lateran parish, and his jurisdiction reached no further. But he must have a larger scope to range in yet a while: and weak warriors are they against him, that plead for his whorish church of Rome, that it is the true church of Christ, and under his covenant of grace. It is the thing that the Pope would most gladly have proved: and I am well assured, Babylon will not fall, til it be otherwise battered.

Obj. Where yet observe further, that the church of Rome, being fallen into deep apostasy, and having the man of syn sitting there in as God, who hath that city for his throne: the things that are spoken of this city, are also applied to the apostate estate of that church of Rome, and the other churches that are under the jurisdiction of the prelacy of that Sea, wheresoever, and of whatsoever people, kindred, tongue or nation they be: &c. But shall we therefore conclude, that by the Temple of God, 2 Thes. 2. 4. may not be understood the church of God?

Answ. How glorious is the truth, that forceth those to yield, that fight against it. His former reasons (that by the City in Rev. 1. 8. the church was not meant,) he now frustrateth himself. But still he cleaveth to his first plea, The temple of God 1 Thes. 2. is the church of God. I may answer hereto, as God by Jeremiah did to the Jews, Trust not in lying words, saying, The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are these: Ier. 7. 4. Our dispute is, in what sense Paul calleth it the Temple of God; whether as the true temple built by Solomon, or as the false temple built in Samaria by the Apostate Israelites, which the Prophet calleth the house of their God, Amos 2. 8. as the Apostle calleth this the Temple of God. Now fain he would have this Romish temple of apostate Papists, to be the true temple of God; and that they notwithstanding their deep apostasy, are God's true church, under his covenant: which I deny, and have before disproved; and Paul in the very same place, counteth them among those that perish, for believing lies, & which shall be damned for not believing the truth, 2 Thes. 2. 10. 11. 12. and Christ teacheth, that being worshipers of the beast, their names are not written in the book of life. Rev. 13. 8. & 17. 8. but they shall be tormented in fire and brimstone forever, Revel. 14. 9. 10. 11. and that the whorish church Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, which is drunken with the blood of the Saints and of the martyrs of Jesus shall be destroyed forever, Rev. 17. 5. 6. & 18. 21. And who now, that have not their right eye blinded, will not rather say, it is the Samaritans Temple, then Solomon's; though in pretence and color, the Temple of God. And seeing every true church now, is a particular congregation in one place; but the church of Rome is a new found catholic church, spread over many nations under one head & Bishop the Pope: it cannot possibly be Christ's true church, having neither the constitution, faith, worship, ministry, order or ordinances of Christ; but of his enemy Antichrist.

Whereas I formerly wrote, Neither is that (if they mean a particular church) answerable to the Temple in Israel, which was not for one synagogue, but forth whole nation of the Jews, and for the Gentiles that came to the faith, through the world. To this he saith;

How greatly forgets he himself, and how presently, seeing but a line before he said, the Temple figured not only the catholic or universal church, Ephe. 2. 21. but also every particular church by proportion, 1 Corint. 3. 16. 17. And may we not then apply it to that whereof it was a figure? &c.

Answ. No: for mine opposite granteth that the Temple was primarily a figure Christ: but so to apply it in this place, 2 Thes. 2. himself thinketh not fit. I deny not, but some where it may and ought to be so applied: but considering that the Temple of God wherein Antichrist now sitteth is a catholic church spread over many nations, (as was prophesied Rev. 11. 8. 9.) I think the applying of Paul's words in 2 Thes. 2. to a particular church, is neither fitting to the type, nor to the prophesy, nor to the accomplishment of it which we see at this day. The priests in Israel figured Christ chiefly, secondarily Christians, Rev. 1. 6. But to apply those things which Paul speaketh of the Priests in Heb. 10. 11. 12. to us Christians, were not only unfitting, but heretical.

Obj. The Candlesticks and Lamps were set in the Temple of God: and the church of Rome was a golden Candlestick, as well as the rest of the primitive churches; and this man himself saith definitely the true churches were many of them apostate when John wrote; whom yet notwithstanding Christ acknowledgeth to be golden candlesticks. In any of which, of Antichrist had sit, as in the church of Rome, I suppose this man would not deny, but his sitting then should have been in the Temple of God: whether it were considered as a particular candlestick itself, or a branch of the great & general candlestick &c.

Answ. 1. If the Candlesticks were churches in the Temple the church: then the Temple in such respect is the catholic church, for one particular church is not in another. 2. I grant that the church of Rome was a golden candlestick in the Apostles time: and I think mine opposite would not deny but then also the Bishop of Rome, was a starr in Christ's right hand. But now the Bishop is a starr fallen from heaven, and acknowledged to be Antichrist: why then may not the church be fallen with him, (as Paul forewarned, Rom. 11. 22.) and the candlestick removed from it, as well as from Ephesus, Rev. 2. 5. except Rome have a privilege above all other cities, because it crucified Christ. 3. I grant also that the true churches apostate in Rev. 2. & 3. were still golden candlesticks, though some of them rusty: but I would have it likewise granted me, that there were other churches but copper candlesticks, though they pretended to be golden; namely such Antichristian haeretical synagogues, as of whom it might be said, They went out from us, but they were not of us, 1. Joh. 2. 18. 19. And if those petty Antichrists were no golden candlesticks; much less can the great Antichrist with his synagogue, be a golden candlestick; for he far exceedeth them in idolatry, heresy and impiety. That Antichrist could sit in any true church then, as he sitteth now in the church of Rome, namely as God, and so to be believed with his lies, worshiped, and obeyed; I utterly deny: for that church that so doeth, departeth from Christ the foundation, and denieth both the Father and the Son, 1 John. 2. 22. 23. and whether it be a particular church, or a more general, it skilleth not: universalitie in worshiping the Beast, causeth but universalitie of damnation, Rev. 13. 16. 17. & 14. 9. 10. 11.

Obj. Whereas he would be taught how that whorish company that worship the Beast and Dragon, can be the true catholic church and spouse of Christ: though that which J noted before be sufficient for the point in hand; yet let him first remember, how but a little before he told us, the catholic church of the now Romish religion, as themselves describe it, hath one part thereof on earth, another under the earth, & a third part in heaven: and now here he speaketh only of such as are on earth, and those also such as worship the Dragon and beast, Rev. 13. 4. whereas the catholic church in deed containeth all churches & people of God from the beginning of the world &c.

Answ. By this then it appeareth, that the church of Rome lieth apparently, when she calleth herself the catholic church: and therefore is not the true church or Temple of God. But I would be taught in deed, how that whorish company here on earth which worship the Beast, can be the true church either universal or particular.

Here first he asketh whither I think there was no other churches of Christians catholic or particular wherein Antichrist sate since th'apostasy of the man of syn, but such as worshiped the Dragon and the beast? And who then were the Tabernacle and those that dwelt in heaven, whom the beast blasphemed, and the saints with whom he made war 42. months, Rev. 13. 5. 6. 7. and of what church they were &c.

Answ. He seemeth to use the word sit in two senses; 1. for oppressing, blaspheming, killing the Saints that resisted Antichrist; and 2. for quiet governing and having in subjection the wicked that believe and obey him: with such aequivocations his writings are too full. Such churches or persons as resisted the beast, and whom he blasphemed and killed: they were of God; and of them there is no question. But the other sort given over of God to believe lies, and to worship the man of syn as God, like as he showeth himself that he is God; they are not the true church of God, catholic or particular: and of such is the present church of Rome, now in question. As for the Saints that dwell in heaven, whom Antichrist blasphemeth: they are where he is not in the true church out of which he is gone, both he and his; and therefore doth he persecute them. The scripture by him cited, Rev. 13. 6. yieldeth a strong argument against his purpose, thus. The true Tabernacle, church and heavenly people, are blasphemed and warred against by Antichrist. The church of Rome now, is not blasphemed and warred against by Antichrist, but blessed commended & maintained. Therefore the church of Rome now, is not the true tabernacle, church or heavenly people.

Obj. Jerusalem came to be a whore, old in adulteries, and the Jews to be an ungodly nation laden with iniquity &c. sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and the whore; rebellious people &c. transgressing after all the abominations of the heathens and polluting the house of the Lord, &c. yet they were still notwithstanding the city, people and temple of the Lord. Isaiah. 1. 3. & 3. 12. with Jer. 50. 28. & 51. 11 35. 36. 45. 50. 51.

Answ. One findeth a dead and stinking carcase of a man; and to prove it a living man he saith, Such an one was so and so diseased, he had the burning ague, the palsy, dropsy, the gangrene & the plague: yet was he a living man, therefore this is likewise. Such is the mould of mine opposites argument. For the Papists the worshipers of the Beast are said of God to be dead men, Rev. 20. 4. 6. not partakers of the first resurrection; that is, dead in syn, not revived by Christ: now to prove them alive, examples of other persons and people's of Israel are alleged; who because they were great sinners, but not dead in syn, therefore these dead men under Antichrist, must be living also. He hath been answered, that the Jews while they continued God's Church though greatly corrupted, are not fit resemblances of Antichrists church which the holy Ghost calleth nowhere Judea, but Babylon, Rev. 17.

Whereas I said, The very word Temple (speaking of that wherein Antichrist sitteth as God,) leadeth us to understand Antichrists church to be but a counterfeit: showing this reason, that the Temple in Israel was not the church or people properly, but a sacramental sign of God's dwelling with his people, 2 Chron. 6. 2. and of his inward dwelling in their hearts by faith, Eph. 3. 17. & 2. 22. so Antichrist's temple is an outward show of his presence with that seduced people, in whose hearts he dwelleth by popish faith, and by his spirit of error carrying them to damnation: &c. Rev. 13. 4. 14. & 16. 14. 1 Tim. 4. 1. 2 Thes. 2. 10. 11. He answereth,

Then when the Apostle saith to the church of Corinth, ye are the Temple of God, 1 Cor. 3. 16. his meaning should be according to this gloss, ye are a counterfeit church. And when Christ said, Destroy this Temple, Joh. • 19. speaking of his body; the word Temple should lead us to understand Christ's body to be but a counterfeit.

Would any man of good understanding and affection have made such inferences upon my words? Doth not the very word God, when it is spoken of Baal, and of images made with men's hands, lead us to understand them to be but counterfeit gods: or would any adversary, if I had so spoken of Baal and the word God which is applied unto him by the Prophet, 1 King. 18. 27. have wrested my reason against the true God? But sundry such abuses I bear, and forbear to reply unto; because my opposite cannot now hear his reproof: and to other men it would be fruitless.

Hitherto of the Apostles phrase, the Temple of God. Now touching the Man of syn there also spoken of, mine opposer in the second proposition of his argument fore-set down, saith. But the Pope of Rome with his hierarchy, is (by their own grant) the man of syn, of whom the Apostle here speaketh. Other proof of this position he giveth none, but saith I grant it; which in his understanding I have not granted. For he so divideth the Pope and hierarchy, (which are Bishops, Priests, and Deacons,) from the church of Rome, as he maketh the one, Antichrist and Man of syn: the other Christians, and men of grace; which how it can be, when both parties are of one and the same faith, worship, religion c it passeth my slender capacity. For if the Bishops priests and deacons have one faith & religion with the people, as it is known they have; and the people have the true Christian faith and religion, though corrupted, yet so as they are still under the covenant of grace, and sealed of God therein by baptism: how should not the same faith give life to the priests or hierarchy, as it doeth to the people? And then, though the hierarchy be Antichrist, the Man of syn, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped, 2 Thes. 2. 3. yet they shall also be true Christians, men of God, and children of salvation.

Now to prove it to be my grant, he sendeth his reader to 30. pages of my book at once; that if he myss it in one, he may suppose it is in another, for not one man of many, will read over so many leaves, for such a purpose only. Well, howsoever I will not make nice to call the Pope and his hierarchy, the Man of syn; yea or the Pope alone, the man of syn, because he is the head of that sinful corporation, and the highest exalted for almightyenes & holiness: yet do I not exclude the people from this body, and give it to the Pope and hierarchy only, as mine opposite would intimate. Nay the reader shall find there the contrary, most expressly: for in pag. 76. I wrote thus. The Antichristian synagogue, is by the holy Ghost called a Beast, Rev. 13. 11. which signifieth a kingdom, Dan. 7. 23. it is named also a great city, Rev. 11. 8. which noteth the largeness of that polity and kingdom. It cometh up out of the earth, Rev. 13. 11. as being of this world, (which Christ's kingdom, that cometh down from heaven Rev. 21. 2. is not;) and therefore it is called a Man of syn, 2 Thes. 2. 3. and a great whore, Rev. 17. 1. whose head is Abaddon or a Apollyon, Rev. 9. 11. the destroyer of others, and himself the son of perdition, 2 Thes. 2. 3. and they that follow him, are the children of damnation, 2 Thes. 2. 12. Again in pag. 83. I do not only show mine, but mine opposers own judgment heretofore saying; She (speaking of the church of Rome) being in this forlorn estate, she is but a lump of syn, a man of syn, 2 Thes 2. 3. a child of perdition. The Beast is not one person, but a kingdom, Rev. 13. 11. Dan. 7. 23. and Mr. Johnson himself hath acknowledged more then once, that the man of syn, is the false church (and religion) of Antichrist, compared to the body of a man, and consisting of all the partes together. Treat<sup>a</sup> of the Minist. against Mr. Hilders. p. 7. Apolog. p. 109.

How faithfully now mine opposite hath dealt with me, to make it seem my grant that the Pope and hierarchy apart from the church of Rome, is the Man of syn, all may see. As for his own former confession, he passeth it over, without approving or disproving what himself hath written.

This point is of weight, to give light to our controversy, for if the whole church, Pope, priests and people, be altogether a man of syn, & son of perdition; then cannot any of sound judgment, think they are a true Christian church, or under the covenant of God's grace.

To show this therefore; first, the scriptures sundry times speaketh of a whole state or company, both governors and people, as of one person, man, woman, or child: as in Hos 1. 4. 6. 9. the three children Jezreel, Lo-ruhamah, and Lo-ammi, signified the three estates of the congregation of Israel, then shortly to follow. So in Rev. 12. 1. a woman signifieth the church of Christ; in Rev. 17. another woman signifieth, the church of Antichrist; even as in Prov. 9. 1. 13. the same churches are set forth like two women, Wisdom, and the Foolish woman. In Rev. 12. 5. the Man child which the woman brought forth, meaneth a company of valiant Christians; as further appeareth by comparing Isaiah. 66. 7. 8. where the Woman that travelleth, is called Zion; and the man child in verse. 7. are called Zion's children in verse. 8. Secondly, as Christ and Antichrist have their several churches, so these ech of them are called a man: as in Ephes. 2. 15. Christ is there said to make in himself, of twain (that is, of two people's, Jews and Gentiles) one new man: where the whole church together with Christ their head, is called a new man. Accordingly, Antichrist the Pope, together with his whole church, is called the man of syn. And as in the new man the true Christian church, Christ the head hath in all things the preeminence: so in the man of syn, the Antichristian church, the Pope (Christ's pretended vicar) hath in all things the preeminence, exalted for power & pretended holiness. As the new man the Christian church, is to be esteemed in the state of salvation, though some secret hypocrites and reprobates closely creep in among them here on earth: so the man of syn the Antichristian church, is to be esteemed in the state of damnation, though some of God's elect and hidden ones are in the same, Rev. 18. 4. And this man of syn the Pope and his church, sitteth in the Temple of God, the profession of Christ (whom the Temple chiefly figured) and of Christian religion and worship, (even as this beast or kingdom hath two horns like the Lamb Christ, Rev. 13. 11.) that so under the show of Christianity, after the effectual working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders (2 Thes. 2. 9. Rev. 13. 13. 14.) he may deceive them that dwell on the earth, and draw them into the lake of fire. Thus much of the Man of syn sitting in the Temple of God. 2 Thes. 2.

Other scriptures he allegeth to confirm his cause, as Manasseh defiling God's house, 2 King. 21. the Chaldeans defiling the Temple, Psalms. 79. the king of Babylon's sitting on the mount of the congregation, Isaiah. 14. The prophets visions of the Temple polluted, Ezek 8. And the prophesy of Antiochus, Dan. 11. In all which places, I acknowledge the true Temple of God, to be understood. But his error in applying this to his purpose, I have before manifested. For that Temple was not the people, but an outward ordinance of God set among his people: whereas in his understanding the Temple of God, wherein Antichrist sitteth is the people. 2. That Temple was not infected with syn, but the syn rested in the persons that worshiped in it, or came into it; as I shown before, from Levite. 16. 16. Whereas the church of Rome is so infected with Antichrists syn, as mine opposite confesseth it to be in most sinful and deep apostasy, and so to be a notorious harlot and idolatress which all the people of God ought to forsake. 3. That temple merely suffered that misusage at the hands of sinners, Jews and Gentiles: even as Christ, the true Temple in his humanity, & true Christians his members have suffered, at the hands of the Romans, of old heathens and now Antichristians. But to make that temple a type of this malignant church, which together with her head the Pope, persecuteth Christ and his saints, and worshippeth creatures, idols and Devils; is altogether amyss. For so we might conclude thus: As the Temple of God though it were defiled with the apostasy & idolatry of the Jews and of the Gentiles, with how great abomination soever; yet continued God's holy Temple still; and could not by any impiety become the Temple of Antichrist or of Satan: so the church of Rome, though it should be defiled with apostasy idolatry profaneness atheism either of Antichrist or of Jews Turks or Pagans; if it should believe and receive the religion of Maomet or of Julian the Apostate; yet should it continue the true church and people of God, and under his covenant of grace. Behold what favor the church of Rome hath found above all churches under heaven: that if she receive Judaism or Paganism, if she worship the Beast; the Dragon, or Devil himself by open profession, yet she abideth the church of God: for if Antiochus who set up Jupiter Olympius image in the Temple, had set up also the professed worship of the Devil; yet the Temple should have been God's holy temple notwithstanding; and so by proportion the church of Rome must be, if this comparison of mine opposites be true. By such doctrine, the whole gospel of Christ is overthrown. For faith and sanctimony of life, are the sum of all the gospel: and both of them are destroyed. For though Rome be apostate and departed from the faith, as Paul foretold, 1 Tim. 4. 1. though she believe in a wafer cake, and worship it for her God and maker: though she believe to have forgiveness of sins, by the abominable massing sacrifice of her priests, by the pardons and indulgences of her popes, and to merit salvation in heaven, by wicked works which she doeth, being taught by the Man of syn: though she have many thousands of new God's and new Christ's, even so many as there be Angels and saints in heaven, and moe too: though she be as filthy in life as Sodom, as idolatrous & malignant against God's people as were Egypt and Babylon, (unto which the holy Ghost hath compared her, Rev 11. 8. & 14. 8.) yet so long as she will say to Christ, but as the Devil said, Thou art Christ the son of God, Luke 4. 41. that is, so long as she reteyneth the profession of Christianity; she is the Temple of God, the church of Christ, and under the covenant of salvation.

But he that justifieth the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 16. 15. and woe unto them that say concerning evil, it is good, Esa. 5. 20. Can not men put difference between God's ordinances given unto a people, & the people: themselves that enjoy, use or abuse those ordinances? The Temple was an ordinance given unto Israel, as were the altars and sacrifices therein: so God gave unto all the world by Noah, commandments for altars and sacrifices, Gen. 8. 20. unto Abraham he commanded circumcision, unto Christians baptism, the Supper of Christ &c. All God's ordinances continue in themselves holy, (till God do abrogate them,) though men that abuse them, fall to be most unholy, and without God in the world. So the sacrifices of sheep and Oxen were in themselves God's holy ordinances, howsoever abused by the Jews in Jerusalem, by the Israelites in Samaria, and by the heathens in their several lands: so circumcision, though profaned by the Sichemites Gen. 34. so baptism and the Lord's supper, though turned by Antichrist into abominable idols; remained and do remain in themselves God's holy ordinances, though men have abused them to their damnation: so the Sun moon and stars continued God's good creatures, though men made idols of them to themselves. To reason therefore from the creatures and ordinances, unto men which abuse them; and to gather because the creature or ordinance abideth good in itself, therefore the person that abuseth it, abideth good also: or to wrest a type, as mine opposite doeth, from a creature or ordinance of old, to a most sinful people now, and make them alike holy; is an high abuse of God's ordinances, and a taking of his name in vain.

Of the Temple in Rev. 11.

Mine opposite proceedeth to speak of the Temple and court in Rev. 11. 1. 2. and to apply it to his present cause. That which he first speaketh of the word Temple diversely used, and meaning not only the house but the Court yard, or Courts: I grant unto him. How to apply it, he showeth himself uncertain, whether more generally to the Christian church, or more specially to the church of Rome. Yet every way (saith he) it will follow that the state of the said church (of Rome) and Christians, is to be esteemed according to the estate of the Temple at Jerusalem, and particularly with reference to the court and holy city given to the gentiles: and therefore is to be accounted the church and city of God, as the other were his court and city, though polluted &c. This I deny: the church or people of Rome at this day, is not answerable to the Temple or court, or city of Jerusalem in holiness: but to the gentiles, in profaneness. And I have before manifested his great abuse of that proportion, from the Temple polluted, yet continuing the Lord's, and holy in itself; to the people apostate and fallen from the Lord, from his faith and worship, to the faith and worship of Antichrist.

In stead of proofs, he offereth things to be considered: The first whereof I leave, as not pertaining to our controversy: though it may seem not agreeable, that the most holy place should be omitted as figuring heaven; seeing in the 19. verse, when the Temple was opened, the Ark of God's testament was seen in it: and the Ark, was set in the most holy place, 2 Chron. 5. 7. It is true that that place figured heaven, Heb. 9. 24. but it might also figure other things on earth, as the Temple itself, figured both Christ, and the Church, as we have formerly heard.

His second consideration is, whether by the temple of God here, may not be understood the holy place, and figuratively faithful Christians, and more inward church of God, invisible to men, but seen and preserved of God, &c. And by the Altar and worshipers, be figuratively noted the spiritual worship and mediation of Christ, with faithful Christians and worshipers (made Priests unto God) who wholly and only rely upon Christ &c.

Answ. Seeing here are three distinct things, the Temple, the Altar, and the worshipers: it seemeth unfit to confound the first with the last; the worshipers here are the faithful Christians, which serve God in his Temple, (as Rev 7. 15.) and upon his Altar. To make the Temple to signify faithful Christians here, when the worshipers are the faithful Christians here themselves: it •itteth not the vision. Rather, as the Temple figured Christ in his humanity, Joh. 2. 19. 21. God manifested in the flesh, in whom God dwelt, & in whom all do serve the Lord; and as the golden altar of incense figured his mediation, the brazen altar for sacrifice, figured his oblation of himself for his Church: so here the measuring of the Temple, Altar, and worshipers, signifieth the restauration of Christian religion from the Apostasy of Antichrist; the Temple of God signifieth Christ truly professed for his person, or doctrine of true Christianity, & constitution of the Church therein: the Altar is the true doctrine of his oblation and mediation for us; and the worshipers are the faithful Christians, that worship God in the true profession of Christ and of his mediation and sacrifice, as in the true Temple and altar of God, contrary to the heresies and abominations of Antichrist.

His third and fourth considerations are, by the Court without the Temple, to be noted in figure the visible church & Christians. By the holy city (Jerusalem) to be noted in figure oither the visible church and outward state of Christians more generally, or such as are truly godly and God's holy church more particularly. By the Gentiles to understand heathens and rebellious Jews, that is profane and wicked Christians, the Antichristian hierarchi• and Locusts Rev, 9. &c.

Answ. This is faulty three ways, first in confounding persons and other things, as one: secondly in shuffling true Christians and Antichristians as one body: thirdly in restraining the gentiles or heathens (spoken of in Revel. 11. 2.) to the Pope and his hierarchy only. 1. The thing here shown in vision, was after the manner of Jerusalem and the Temple of old: there, the Temple was not the people, neither were the courts, the people, neither the city, when it was distinct from the citizens: but they were holy places and signs appointed of God for the people to worship him in & by them. 2. True visible Christians (which he saith are the court and city) and Antichristians (or as he would have it the Pope and his hierarchy,) whom the Lord calleth Gentiles or heathen; he would have mixed together as one body and church, the Antichristian heathens to be the Bishops and pastors, and the visible Christians to be the flock; and this for the space of 1260. years, as himself numbereth the 42. months, a day for a yere. Which is contrary to the whole scope of this book of the Revelation; which showeth the true Christians to be such as are marked and sealed of God, Revel 7. 3. &c. having his name in their foreheads, virgins, and followers of the Lamb, Rev. 14. 1. 4. such as worship not the Beast, or his image, neither receive his mark on forehead or hand, Rev. 20 4. whereas by his exposition, the true visible Christians are those that worship the beast, as the church of Rome doeth and have done these many years. 3. That the gentiles should be only the Pope and hierarchy, agreeeth neither with truth nor type: for whether he respect the rebellious Jews or faithless Gentiles; it can never be shown at any time, that they were only Priests and Levices, or Kings captains and officers, that trode down Jerusalem, or dwelt in the court without the Temple: but people with priests, and soldiers with captains; that strange it is from whence he should gather this interpretation. And though many of all sorts have expounded this book; yet never read I of any one, neither doeth he cite any one man that ever was of his mind, so to interpret these things; but it was his own singular conceit.

As for the key which should open the door to the understanding of this vision, namely, the commandment to measure the Temple &c. with the reed, verse. 1. this he omitteth. But with that will I begin.

After that God, for the idolatries and other sins, of the Jews, had delivered the holy city Jerusalem and the Temple therein, into the hands of the Gentiles the Babylonians, who first robbed the temple, and carried away all the chief men into captivity from Jerusalem to Babylon; and afterward, for further sins, broke up the City, burnt the Lord's house, and the Kings house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem round about, and carried away the rest of the people that were left in the city: the Lord pitying the desolation of his church, began to restore and reedise the same; calling his people to repentance; and unto Zechariah his Prophet, by visions signified that he would return to Jerusalem with mercies, and his house should be built in it: and shown him a man with a measuring line in his hand, to measure the breadth and length of Jerusalem, signifying the reedifying of the same; and thereupon called his people out of Babylon. He foretold him also of the Branch Christ, that should build the Temple of the Lord. And unto Ezekiel, then in captivity, he likewise shown in a vision, a man like brass, with a line and a measuring reed, wherewith he measured the breadth and height of the building which Christ should erect; and this in all the parts thereof, as gates, chambers, windows, posts, courts, tables c and also the temple, posts, doors, walls c likewise the utter court, with all things concerning the same. The end of which vision, was to signify, that in that place he would  dwell in the midst of the sons of Israel (as before he had by the sign of Solomon's Temple;) and he willed the Prophet, that if the house of Israel were ashamed of all (the evils) that they had done, he should show them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof &c. and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof; and let them measure the pattern.

Accordingly, when God had set his Temple or Tabernacle among Christians, (as is described in Rev. 4. by the similitude of Moses Tabernacle;) and for the sins of the people, who began to revolt from the faith and to embrace Antichrist even whiles the Apostles lived, and after their decease, fell more and more from Christ, as by the opening of the seals Rev 6. and by the sounding of the Trompets, Rev 8. is clearly signified: so that the Sun (wherewith the church had been clothed) was become black▪ the Moon, bloody; the stars (the ministers) fallen from heaven to earth; and the heaven itself departed as a scroll tolled together; and God for the sins of Christians (as of the Jews of old) had delivered this rebellious people into the hands of the spiritual Babylon; ••• synagogue of Antichrist, a Beast (or kingdom) blasphemous, idolatrous, filthy in life, and hating the Saints, as Sodom, Egypt and Rome when it was heathenish: then God in wrath remembering mercy to a remnant, the election of his grace: began again to reedify his church. And to signify this, John had in vision a measuring reed given him, to measure the Temple, Altar, and worshipers; but not the Court, or City as yet, because he would renew his church by degrees. Afterward he saw the City, gates, & wall thereof measured also, when the church should fully be restored.

This reed, which was of gold, signifieth the word of God, or scriptures; whereby all doctrines, ordinances, churches and people's are to be measured tried and discerned, whether they be the building of God or no. For God by his word directed Moses to make the Tabernacle and all the appurtenances, according to the pattern shown him in the mount, Exod. 25. 40. Heb. 8. 5. and so they were made, Exod 39. 42. 43. Solomon likewise had the pattern of the Temple, and of the Courts, chambers, treasures &c, the weight of gold for the Candlesticks, tables, bowles, cups &c, as the Lord had made David understand in writing, by his hand upon him, even all the works of that pattern, 1 Chron. 28. 11.—19.

So then the commandment to measure with the reed, the Temple, Altar and worshipers, Rev. 11. 1. signified such a renewing of Christianity and professors of it, as should be according to God's word, when they are measured and tried thereby, of such as have the Apostle John's spirit. But the Court, City and Gentiles treading down the same, were to be cast out, and not measured: to signify that the holy doctrines and ordinances of the gospel, abused and trodden down by the Antichristian gentiles, can endure no measure or trial of God's word, but are to be rejected as profane, in their sinful abuse of them. Because as the Gentiles of old, changed the truth of God into a lie, Rev. 1. 18 . and when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, but became vain in their imaginations, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God, into images, Rom. 1. 21. 23. therefore though they retained after their profane manner, many of God's divine ordinances, taught them from Noah; yet no Prophet or man of God, ever measured their Temples, altars, sacrifices, Priests or people, but cast them out as wicked: so the Gentiles (the Antichristians) now, having likewise changed the truth of God into a lie, and whiles they profess Christ in word, do in deed deny him; albeit they tread down and sacrilegiously profane the holy things of God, his doctrines and ordinances of faith, worship, church &c▪ yet are they to be cast out, and left unmeasured, being such as will endure no trial by the word of God. How then doeth mine opposite seek in vain to measure the church of Rome, and to prove her God's true church though corrupted, and to be under his covenant of grace: when God here expressly biddeth them to be left unmeasured? How is it, that he pleadeth for a reformation only, and will have no new building or plantation; when Sodom and Babylon, must be reformed with fire, that is utterly destroyed; as in the types of old; so in the thing typed at this day? as it is written, she shall be utterly burnt with syre; for strong is the Lord God, who judgeth her. Rev. 18. 8. We find in the type, how after the Babylonians had burned the Temple, when the Jews returned out of captivity, they laid again the foundation of the Temple of the Lord, and then built it: Ezr. 3. 6. 10. 11. We find also in the Gospel, that Antichrist should destroy the Temple, even to the foundation, which is Christ, 1 John. 2. 22. 1 Cor. 3. 11. And in Rev. 11. there is measuring, as for a new building: yet now we shall have (by these pleaders) Babylon reformed, and no new Temple built, or Jerusalem reedified. If any like to apply this foresaid measuring of the Temple Revel 11. to the defection of the church, rather than to the reedifying of it; I will not strive here about: neither will it (if so it be understood) anything help the present state of the church of Rome, about which our controversy here is.

By this which hath been said, I leave it to the judgment of men of understanding, whether it be more fit to apply these Gentiles to the wicked Jews, which whiles the true Temple, courts and city stood; did in hypocrisy abuse God's holy ordinances Esa. 1. as mine opposite doth apply them: or to the Gentiles of whom the Psalmist complaineth that they had come into God's inheritance, defiled the Temple, laid Jerusalem on heaps (that is ruinous, as Mica 3. 12.) killed God's servants, and left them unburied, (as here in Rev. 11. 8. 9. the dead bodies of God's witnesses, are not suffered to be put in graves:) that had devoured Jacob, and laid wast his dwelling place, for the former iniquities of Israel. Seeing that in Isaiah days, there was no measuring for the new building of the Temple, as was after the captivity of Babylon then, and in this place: nor casting out of the court, and giving of the city to be trodden down of the Gentiles for many years, as Judah was given into the hand of the King of Babylon, when God forsook his house, and left his heritage, to be destroyed, and trodden underfoot, seventy years. But as of the destruction of the earthly Jerusalem by the heathen Romans, Christ said: Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, (that is, ruined, & not suffered to be built again), until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, Luke. 21. 24. so of the ruin & wast of this spiritual Jerusalem, by the Antichristian Romans, he saith, it is given to the Gentiles, and the holy City shall they tread down 42. months: after which time John seeth the heavenly Jerusalem measured, that is built again, Rev. 21. 15. 17.

But whether we understand it to have reference to former wicked Jews (called heathens for their hethenish manners,) or to the Babylonian Gentiles: yet hath mine opposite no reason, or color of reason, to restrain it to the governors only, as he doth to the Pope and his hierarchy. For they that trode in the Lord's courts. Isaiah. 1. were the people, as well as the Priests and princes: the people of Gomorrhah, as well as the princes of Sodom, Isaiah. 1. 10. and they that ruined Jerusalem, were the Babylonian soldiers, as well as the King and captains, 2. King. 25. And he should so have applied these Gentiles (that tread down God's holy ordinances touching his church and worship,) to the papists (the Popes marked soldiers, that have the number of his name,) and not to the Bishops and Priests only. For in the beasts army, there are not only Kings and captains which fight against Christ and Christians, but all sorts of men, both free and bond both small and great, which shall be slain with the sword of Christ which proceedeth out of his mouth, and all the fowls shall be filled with their fleshes; Rev. 19. 17. 18. 21. So not the popish hierarchy alone, but all other of their idolatrous religion, are the Gentiles, in Rev. 11. whom the holy Ghost measureth not amongst his people, but casteth out as profane treaders down of his holy things: though mine opposite measureth them as God's true church and in his covenant, yet counteth their pastors, (which are as faithful and holy as they) to be wicked Gentiles.

So the Beast which killeth God's witnesses, Rev. 11. 7. he expoundeth the Antichristian hierarchy & Locusts: which are but the heads, horns, and chief members of the Beast. For as in Dan. 7. the Lion, is the kingdom of Babel, both princes and subjects; and the Bear the kingdom of the Persians, and so all the rest; as is there expounded in v. 23. the fourth Beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, and the ten horns out of that (Beast or) kingdom, are said to be ten kings, v. 24. so the Beast in Rev. 13. is meant of a whole kingdom, and not of governors only. And the scripture plainly enough clareth this, saying, And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, & nations, shall see their dead bodies &c, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves: and they that dwell upon the earth, shall rejoice over them, and make merry &c. Rev. 11. 9. 10. So not the hierarchy only, but popish multitudes also, do belong to this beast and kingdom, that murdereth the witnesses of Christ. And here note, how mine Opposite himself is driven to confess that the Church of God, and the Beast, do in deed differ much the one from the other: but the Church of Rome, both hierarchy and people, are the Beast, as before is proved: therefore the Church of God, and the church of Rome, do in deed differ much the one from other; and mine adversary granteth that which overthroweth his own plea.

This will yet further appear by this that followeth. Whiles the holy city lieth ruinous trodden underfoot by the Antichristian Gentiles, which keep it from being reedified and measured so long a time, 1260. years: there is another great city which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified, Rev. 11. 8. even Babylon the great, the mother of fornications and abominations of the earth, Rev. 17. 5. which lieth not ruinous, but is stately built, dekt and garnished, glorifying herself and living diliciously, which saith in her h<sup>er</sup>t, I sit  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  Queen, and a<sup>n</sup>o widow, and shall see no sorrow: and this is the great City (Rome) which in the Apostle John's time reigned over the kings of the earth, Rev. 17. 18. but after that became a Christian city or polity, but soon forsook Christ, and were Christians in name (being in deed Gentiles,) and a Catholik church, sitting and reigning over people's and multitudes and nations and tongues, Rev. 17. 1<sup>o</sup>. Which albeit mine opposite before labored to make it differ from the Church of Rome, yet I also before took away his reasons. And here himself yieldeth so much, as will overthrow him. For▪ Note here (saith he) that by the great City, is meant not only the c<sup>it</sup>ie itself &c. for (as one well writeth) the city is not only the Town or piece of ground, contained within the comp<sup>o</sup>sse of the walls thereof, together with the Citizens and inhabitants, having order and government &c. but also the whole jurisdiction and government of the cite in all places pertaining thereto. So the streets of this city reach far, even to all places, under the jurisdiction thereof, and comprehend sundry people's, and kindreds, and tongues and nations, as here is said. Wherupon it is fitly compared to the great city Babylon &c. Where yet observe further, that the church of Rome, being fallen into deep Apostasy, and having the man of syn sitting therein as God, who hath the city for his throne: the things that are spoken of this city, are also applied to the apostatle estate of that church of Rome, and the other churches that are under the jurisdiction of the prelacy of that Sea, wheresoever, and of whatsoever people, kindred, tongue on nation they be. Which application thereof J do also acknowledge, as it is observed by and according to the word of God, Rev. 11. 8. with Isaiah. 1. 10. Jer. 23. 14. Ezek. 16. 2.-46. Rev. 14. 8. and 17. and 18. &c. with Isaiah. 21. 9. and 48. 20. Jer. 50. and 51. 1.-45. Ezek. 16. 2.-35. and c. 23. Ziaoh. 2. 6. 7.

Thus far he yieldeth: Wherupon it is evident to all that will see, how this great city, the glorious church of Rome, that killeth God's witnesses in it, is a far different thing from the holy City, which that church treadeth down, and keepeth from being reedified, as the Babylonians having ruinated Jerusalem, kept it from being built again, during their reign. So then his comparing of Rev. 11. 8. with Isaiah. 1. 10. and Ier. 23. 14. seemeth to be an unequal match, by which he would make the church of Rome, as truly God's, as Jerusalem and the Temple were God's in Isaiah time and Jeremiah's, when wicked Jews likened to Sodomites and Gomorrheans, worshiped in them. For 1. Jerusalem then was standing, here it is tuined and lieth unbuilt, unmeasured, cast out from all measuring by the reed of God's word. 2. Sodom, and Babylon, are never in scripture called the holy city, as Jerusalem is: yet here he would have that which God nameth Sodom, Egypt, Babylon; to be in deed Jerusalem. 3. Neither Isaiah nor Jeremiah do call the holy City Sodom or Gomorrhah, but the wicked people in that holy city. Which may fall out in the truest church on earth, that there may as slagitious persons be in it, as any in Sodom. So in the church of Christ and his Apostles, there was Judas a Devil. But Antichrists city hath no other name, then Sodom, Egypt, Babylon, and Rome, by whose power and polity Christ was crucified: and this name is given it spiritually, that is in spirit and truth; as being no way inferior, but beyond them rather in all impiety, cloaked with hypocrisy. In deed Bellarmine pleading for the Pope, contendeth against Jerome, that Jerusalem might be called Sodom, and citeth this very text Isaiah. 1. 10. ye Princes of Sodom: but Mr Junius (on whom mine opposite so much relieth, as we shall see anon) answereth him, It is false. The Prophet calleth not the city Jerusalem, Sodom or Gomorrhe; but the Princes and people figuratively, princes of Sodom, and people of Gomorrhe. The comparison is made of men, not of places. Likewise D. Whitaker's answering Bellarmine to the same objection, saith, Neither do we ever read Jerusalem to be called Sodom, or Egypt: this agreeth much more truly unto Rome &c. I confess that there (in Esa. 1.) the people of the Jews are for their vices compared to Sodom and Gomorrhe, as also in Ezek. 16. but yet it was not called Sodom and Gomorrhe spiritually, but figuratively: whereas this city is called Sodom and Egypt spiritually, that is in a spiritual respect, for spiritual lust, luxury, blindness, all which are found in the popish church.

But mine opposite putting no difference between the holy city Jerusalem ruinated; and the great city Babylon, Sodom, Egypt gloriously edified; compareth the phrase of treading the holy city by the Gentiles, Rev. 11. with treading the Lord's courts by hypocritical Jews Isaiah. 1. and saith, it may signify, besides a treading down, or underfoot, a frequent continual conversing in the outward visit le church with their bodies. Which if it be granted, yet this must be granted also, that it is here cast out & not to be measured as God's true church: which was not the case of Jerusalem and the Courts in Esaies time. And as for the phrase, it is such as may mean no frequent continual conversing at all, but a violent suppressing of the building thereof. For, (to omit that he speaketh here of treading down the city, and in Isaiah, of treading down the Courts) the Gentiles treading down the earthly Jerusalem, Luke 21. 24. meaneth not the frequenting of that place to worship God in. Neither doth the adversaries treading down of the Sanctuary, in Isaiah. 63. 18. or, of the Sanctuary and host, (that is the temple and people of Jerusalem) Dan. 8. 13. or the treading down of the Lord's portion, Jere. 12. 10. or of his vineyard, Esa. 5. 5. signify a frequenting to do good in appearance; as did the Jews in Isaiah. 1.

11. 12. 13. who came with multitude of sacrifices to honor God and that place of his dwelling. Finally, as he dutst not deny but the Gentiles in Rev. 11. were also figured out by the heathens of old, for he saith, not heathens alone, as Antiochus &c, but sinful rebellious Jews: so he should have observed, that figures agree not in all things. For if I would prove the Antichristians now to be professed heathens, and no church; because Antiochos, and the Babylonians were professed heathens and no church, in comparison with the Jews; he would deny the consequence: even so his matching them with the true church of God in Judea, because the wicked of that church were figures of them, is a very weak conclusion.

His exposition of making the Temple, altar, and worshipers to signify the invisible church of God's elect; and the Gentiles with the Court and holy City to be the visible church of hypocrites: agreeth neither with this place, nor with Isaiah. 1. For no men can know much less measure the invisible church of God's elect, as John here measured the Temple, altar, and worshipers: this belongeth to God alone, who knoweth who are his. Neither in Isaiah. 1. were there two distinct churches or places in Jerusalem, one wherein the faithful and elect worshiped; and another wherein Sodomites and hypocrites trode the Lord's courts. Besides if so it were as he supposeth: what manner of people doth he make the church of Rome which he pleadeth for? a company of Sodomites & hypocrites cast out & unmeasured of God, & of all good men. And how thē are they God's true church, sealed with his covenant of promise? He saith, the daughter of Zion, left as a cottage in a vineyard &c. Isaiah. 1. 8. was the faithful church of the sealed and elect. Who ever heard of such an exposition of those words? The daughter of Zion, usually signifieth the Common wealth or church of the Jews; as the daughter of Babel, Psal. 137. 8. was the Common wealth of Babylon. And as Isaiah here complaineth of the calamities of the church of Judea by former wars for their sins; v. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. so where the Babylonians afterward utterly wasted it, Jeremiah lamenteth, how from the daughter of Zion, all her beauty was departed; the Lord had covered her with a cloud, in his anger &c. purposed to destroy her wall; her elders sate on the ground; her breach was like the sea, none could heal her; her prophets had not discovered her iniquity, to turn away her captivity &c. all which do concern the general state overthrown by the Babylonian; & not the state of the faithful and elect only.

He setteth down from my former writing against Mr Smyth, my judgment touching this scripture Rev. 11. when I wrote (as he saith) for the truth. He traduceth me now as a quite other man: but how justly, the reader may see by the very words of mine which he hath set down. For there I said, the cōmandementto measure the Temple, altar and worshipers, signified the restoring or repairing of God's church and people, after some destruction, and desolation; as the like visions shewedto Ezekiel & Zechariah, after the destruction of Solomon's temple, do manifest: &c. There I applied the Gentiles in Rev. 11. to the Babylonians and other heathens, Jer. 12. 7. & 20. 4. Esa. 63. 18. Further I shown, (but this he setteth not down) that M. S. enought have seen a figure of those Gentiles, Rev. 11. set forth by the Psalmist, O God the gentiles are come into thine inheritance &c. where by Gentiles are not meant the Jsraelites, but Babylonians or other heathen persecutors &c. and that Antichrists church is calledBabylon; and Christ's,Jerusalem &c. As M. Io. then well approved of my answer to M. S. so even now he saith still, I did soundly convince him. And who then will not see, that M. I. even by his own grant, is likewise soundly convinced. For as M. S.

fetches the type of these Gentiles, from the Israelites: so doeth M I. fetch it from the Israelites in Isaiah. 1. and contrary to that sound conviction, will not have it like the restoring of the Temple after the Babylonians had burnt it; but like the afflictions of the Jews, whiles their Temple Courts and City stood undestroyed, Esa. 1. So whether of us two, be carried about of every wind, and as reeds shaken hither and thither, (as he intwiveth me,) I leave it unto the prudent reader to judge. As then, so still I hold the holy City, Rev. 11. to be meant of Jerusalem, not of Babylon: how mine opposite now hath expounded it, we have seen. As I did then, so still I hold those Antichristian Gentiles Rev. 11. to be answerable to the Babylonians and other heathens, Psal. 79. Jer. 20. 4. Isaiah. 63. 18. he now will have them answerable to the Jews. I then blamed and still do, that men should make God's holy courts, city and people, to be figures of Antichristians, of their church and worship.

But mine opposite (to make his words seem to hang together) saith, that now J teach, that the Temple of God spoken of 2 Thes. 2. 4. is Antichrists Temple, church, body, &c. Be it so: yet of that scripture there was no controversy between M. S. and me: and as the house of the Lord God of Israel in Ezz. 1. 8. is meant of his true temple; but the house of their God in Amos 2. 8. and in Hos. 9. 8. is meant of an idolatrous Temple: so by the Temple of God in Rev. 11. 1. may be understood his true Temple, and yet the Temple of God in 2 Thes. 2. may be understood of the Temple of Antichrist. And this I said upon mine opposites interpretatiō, which will have the Temple in 2 Thes. 2. to mean the people or church of Rome; which are in deed the Gentiles in Rev. 11. the Sodomites Babylonians Egyptians that tread down the Lord's holy city, and have built a new Babel. For otherwise, if he did understand Antichrists sitting in the Temple of God, to be his treading down of his Temple, as here he treadeth down the holy City, having ruined and burnt it, and keeps it from being reedified, as the Babylonians did during their reign, I would not have contended with him about it. But then his applying of it to the church of Rome, which the Pope hath built, honored, garnished as a most gorgeous harlot: would be altogether unfit; and agree no better then Babylon did with Zion. But of that place 2 Thes. 2. we have spoken at large before.

Whereas heretofore he pleaded, that Antichrist doth not wholly take away the church of God, and every truth and ordinance of the Lord: and I answered, Neither did the Devil take away every truth and ordinance of God from among the heathens, but they retained many rites of God's worship received from their fathers &c. First he blameth me as shifting &c. for not saying, the Devil took not wholly away, the church of God from among the heathens: I answer, if by church, he understand the order and constitution of the church, the heathens strayed not further from it, then Antichrist hath by his counterfeited catholic church: and whosoever will bring them to the trial, it will soon appear. Or, if he understand by Church, God's people, (as he hath now his people in this Romish Babylon, Rev. 18.) I also say, that the Devil took not away the church wholly from the heathens for God had many elect among them, whom by means he called from heathenish idols, to the true faith: of whom there are many instances of sundry persons in the scriptures; and I doubt not but there were many more, whose names are written in the book of life. The dispersion of Israel among the nations, might bring many heathens to the faith; as we have an instance in Esth. 8. 17.

To that which I said, that the Devil did not take away wholly every truth and ordinance of God from among the heathen: he answereth, it is nothing to the purpose, seeing they are not the church and people of God, under his covenant neither do so enjoy any of them.

Answ. First, I spake of the heathens of old, whiles sacrificing was God's ordinance, as the examples that I alleged show. He answereth of the heathens now, whose state is much worse, by refusing or falling from the Gospel. Secondly, his answer is true also of the Antichristian heathens, Rev. •1. 2. if it be applied unto them: for they are not God's church and people under his covenant, neither do they so enjoy any of them: but they are in the bondage and covenant of Antichrist, as before is proved. So my answer was to purpose, & his reply is but the begging of the question.

Object. Take an instance (saith he) in one of the particulars which he mentioned, where he said that the heathens retain baptisms or washings among them: yet when any of them leave that estate, and come to the faith and church of Christ, they are to be baptized into the Lord's name &c. but so may not be done with those that have received baptism in the church of Rome, or any other apostate churches, when they leave such estate &c.

Answ. First, he wresteth my words, spoken of the heathens of old, which retained baptisms or washings whiles they were God's ordinances: and applieth them to their washings now, when they are none of God's ordinances. I said, the ordinances of God retained in other nations (besides Israel) as Altars, sacrifices &c, and alleged authors, before Christ's coming in the flesh: he setteth down these as my words, the heathens retain &c. Had I thus altered the case, I should have been charged with shifting, and that justly. But I acknowledge not though legal washings, sacrifices, altars &c. of Gentiles or Jews to be God's ordinances now, as they were before Christ's death. That which he saith of baptism not to be repeated, I grant: and so must he have done for circumcision among the heathens, such as retained it for a divine ordinance, as they did their sacrifices. I instanced the Colchians, Egyptians, Ethiopians; and the Samaritans, which latter Mr. Johnson acknowledged to have still used circumcision, and yet were not God's true Church. But this he passed over, and answereth not. Now he would bring in the heathenish washings at this day, which is a plain tergiversation. But of Baptism, we shall speak more hereafter.

Of Revel. 18. 4.

TO prove the church of Rome at this day God's true church, he alleged Rev. 18. 4, Go out of her my people &c. I answered, These very words are taken from Jer. 51. 45. My people go out of the midst of her, where by My people, the Church of Babylon is not meant, but the Israelites, Godslost sheep, scattered there upon the mountains and hills, whom first the King of Ashshur had devoured, and lastly Nebuchadnerar King of Babel had broken their bones, having burned Jerusalem and the temple with fire, &c. These Israelites figuring Godselect, are called out of Babylon, which God would utterly destroy &c. So from Antichrists church, which is Babylon, Sodom, Egypt, are God's elect called out: an evident proof, that she is none of God's church, whatsoever she pretendeth &c.

His replies are, questions. Very well (saith he:) But are not those words My people, the words of the covenant, as J said?

Answ. They are; but not of any covenant with Babylon: and consequently not with the church of Rome, which is Babylon at this day; Rev. 17. 5.

2. And were not that people now in Babylon, the church and people of God under his covenant?

Answ. They were God's people, and his lost sheep there: but their Common wealth & church estate was dissolved, their Temple and holy city burned, (when Babylon and Bels temple in it flourished, and was garnished with the holy vessels stolen out of God's temple.) The Lord had swallowed up all the habitations of Jakob;swallowed up Israel, and all her palaces;destroyed his places of assembly, caused the solemn feasts and Sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion;cast off his Altar, abhorred his sanctuary.Mount Zion was desolate, and the foxes walked upon it. But was Babylon, (which thus abused God's people, and burned his Temple,) God's church? If not, how should the Church of Rome, which now is Babylon the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, which is drunken with the blood of the Saints: how should she be God's church, people or Temple?

3. Had not that people also polluted the Temple of the Lord, and fallen into notorious idolatry &c. for which they were given by the Lord into the hands of the Babylonians: and were they not still the Lord's church and people, &c.

Answ. They were, some of them, as before is shown. And so Christians having polluted God's temple of Christianity, and fallen into idolatries and heresies, were given over of the Lord, some into the hands of the Turk (as Israel into the hands of Assur) some into the hands of the Pope (as Judah into Babel.) And such Israelites as embraced the religiō of the Assyrians & Babylonians ceased to be God's people actually, til they repented: others that resisted evil and kept the truth, as Daniel and his brethren; were God's holy people. So all in Rome and Turkey that abide in the truth refusing their abominations, are God's holy people: the rest that have received Maometisme and Antichristianism, are not God's people actually; albeit many of them are God's elect, and shall so be manifested when they come out from them. But mine opposite changeth the state of the question, turning it from Babylon itself, to Israel God's people in Babylon; and so from the Church of Rome now Babylon, to the faithful witnesses of Christ therein; of whom none make doubt.

4. Js there not difference to be put between the people of God in Babylon, and Babylon itself? &c.

Answ. Yes; which whiles it is not held unto, we are dallied with. The controversy is about the church of Rome itself, which is Babylon: the reasons given, are for God's people (open or secret) in that Babylon. Who seeth not the deceit? For God hath had his people in Rome, not only when it was Antichristian, but when it was heathen: and multitudes have been killed for Christ therein, in both estates. This justifieth not, but condemneth Rome, the murderer of the Saints.

Obj. To make this matter yet more plain, observe Zach. 2. 6. 7. Ho, ho, come forth &c. Deliver thyself ô Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon. This plainly showeth that Zion is in Babylon: not mount Zion itself &c. but the people of God, that pertained to Zion: among whom, when God set his Temple, he said withal, I will dwell in the midst of you: showing that the Temple was a token of his presence among them; a band of the holy and mutual conjunction that was between God and them: whether they were bound to come for to worship God, and to bring their sacrifices.

Answ. In deed this maketh the matter more plain. For 1. here he grāteth the Temple to have been a token of God's presence among his people; but when so I applied it in expounding 2. Thes. 2. he resisted me, and would have it there to be the people, the church. 2. This temple the token of God's presence and band of his communion with his people, God had forsaken. For his people synning in it by their idols, Ezek. 8. God in wrath sent destroyers upon them; Ezek. 9 But before destruction he marked his people on the forehead, that cried out for all the abominations. Which being done, he slayed to destruction all others not marked, both old and young, and began at his sanctuary. Then scattered he coals of fire over the city; removed his glory (the sign of his presence) out of his Temple, and from the midst of the city; to signify his departure from amongst them. Then came the king of Babylon God's servant (to execute his wrath) and performed the vision, in burning both Temple and city, and carrying the people thence into Babylon. So Moses prophesy was fulfilled, Levite. 26. 31.—36. Then both such godly ones as had not been polluted with the abominations in Jerusalem, and had been marked of God for his; such sinners also as by their afflictions were brought to repentance, and confessed their iniquity and the iniquity of their fathers, and had their uncircumcised harts humbled, and turned unto him with all their heart, and with all their soul; he mercifully respected them, & remembered his covenant towards them. The rest perished in their sins, being given over in just judgment, (whiles they were in that dispersion,) to serve other goods, wood and stone: though yet by his prophets, God warned them not to do it, Ier. 10. So the Lord set the sign of his gracious presence in the Christian church, Rev. 4. but they soon defiled it by their idolatries, & heresies, for which they were chastised, Rev. 6. Wherefore God in justice ready to bring further plagues, marketh and sealet on the foreheads, such as were his, Rev. 7. then his judgments came forth in greater measure Rev. 8. & by a beast (or kingdom) whose chief seat should be in Babylon, that is Rome, he suffered the Saints to be overcome, and gave him power over all kindreds and tongues and nations: that such as had not their names written in the book of life, should worship him; and be damned forever. In which Babylon or Popish church, the Lord hath notwithstanding his open witnesses, that withstand their abominations unto the death: and many moe of his elect, whom he calleth out in his time from that whorish church; and these are the people of God, that pertain to mount Zion: and will no more justify the state of the church of Rome at this day, then God's lost sheep of Israel, justified Babylon of old.

Obj. Note here, 1. That the people of God pollute his temple, become apostates and idolaters, and are captived in Babylon.

Answ. But note withal, that they have their temple of God, and holy city, consumed with fire; and are carried out of their holy land, into another sinful nation, as before is shown.

2. That thus now Zion is in Babylon, and consequently the Temple of God (so to speak) the people of G. the church of G. is in Babylon.

Ans. So to speak! But the speech is unproper, and God nowhere speaketh so. The visible Temple was burnt; and they had none with them in Babylon, but Bels temple, none of the Lord's. The lost sheep, the people of God pertaining to mount Zion, (as whileere he said) were in Babylon. And for his figurative applying of the Temple here, to the people or church; it is amysse: it should be applied to God himself. For so the Lord saith by the Prophet, though I have scattered them among the countries, yet will J be to them as a little Sanctuary, in the countries where they shall come, Ezek. 11. 16. So the Lord, not the people, was the Sanctuary or temple in Babylon.

3. Stil they are acknowledged of God, to be Zion, his people &c, though in Babylon.

Answ. So I always and still acknowledge God to have his people in Babylon the church of Rome. But it should be proved (if it were possible) that Babylon is Zion; or the church of Rome, to be the church of God.

4. The Lord calleth them from thence by diverse prophets &c. 5. Being so called, they did not all come together at once &c.

Answ. These things are true: and so for the Lord's calling of his people out of Babylon now. But it is not yet concluded, (not ever will be soundly) that the Babylonians are God's people; except the elect, which belong to mount Zion, though-actually in Babylon.

Obj. There will be of God's people yet called from thence, even then when this Babylon (the city of Rome) shall be burnt with fire, and cast down, never to rise anymore. Rev. 18. 4. 8. &c.

Answ. This conclusion is partly true, and partly implieth error. It is true, that there shall be of God's people called out of Babylon, til she be utterly cast down. But the error implied is, that he maketh Babylon the city (not the church) of Rome: and seemeth also to restrain it to the city properly, and to the burning of the material city and houses thereof. Whereas this Babylon, is the great Whore, who though her chief ear is in Rome, yet her ecclesiastical jurisdiction reacheth over people's, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And when the tenth part of that city fell; it is not meant of the tenth part of the houses in Rome; but of people in that catholic church. And when God calleth his people out of Babylon: it is not meant out of Rome only, or Italic▪ but Spain also and all other places where Popery reigneth. Neither is it meant in regard of civil polity, as if the subjects in Italy, Spain and other lands, might not remain in those common wealths still; but they are called out from the heresies, idolatries and extravagant jurisdiction of the Romish church. So the civil bondage of the Jews in the old Babylon, typed the spiritual bondage of God's people in this new Babylon, the church of Rome: and out of it are men called, not out of the civil state, or material place. For who will deny, but Christian churches may dwell in Spain, Italy, yea and Rome itself (if the magistrates will suffer them,) and yet not disobey this precept Come out of her my people. It is a doctrine of grace, and necessary unto salvation to come out of the church estate of this Romish Babylon, but to understand it of the Cōmon wealths estate, and to call men out of it, were a doctrine of rebellion, contrary to Rom. 13. 1. 1. Pet. 2. 13. 14.

Whereas I concluded, God's covenant of grace is not therefore with her at all, for she is appointed to damnation, 2 Thes. 2. 8. 12. Rev. 18. 8.—21. but the elect that obey God's voice calling them out of her, them he will receive into covenant, he will be a father unto them, and they shall be his sons & daughters, as he hath promised. 2. Cor. 6. 17. 18. He replieth: As if they were not already under the covenant of God, being his people: or as if they could be the Lord's people and yet not be under his covenant. The Jews knew better when they were in Babylon; and thereupon prayed, as in Isaiah. 63. 17. 18. 19. & 64. 7. 8. 9. Return to the tribes of thine inheritance &c, we are thine &c. O Lord thou art our father &c.

Answ. The people of God in Rome, being his elect; are under his covenant in regard of his electiō, which was before the world began: but until they be called & come out; they appear not unto men to be under the visible covenant of God's church, whereof Paul speaketh in the place alleged, 2 Cor. 6. That the godly Jews in Babylon, figured God's elect, I before shown from Rom. 11. 4. 5. 7. and mine opposite gainsayeth it not. That God calleth the elect his people, even before they know or obey his voice, was shown him also heretofore, when God said to Paul of heathenish Corinth, J have much people in this city, Act. 18. 10. yet Paul knew not who they were, till after they believed by his preaching. So Christ said, Other sheep J have which are not of this fold, John. 10. 16. speaking of the elect gentiles, whiles yet they were not sheep actually before men; but wild beasts of the wood. His comparison from Isaiah. 63. if it be referred to the Martyrs which the church of Rome hath imprisoned, killed, banished for the truth: is fit, and I acknowledge them visibly under God's covenant. But referred to them that are one with the church of Rome, in her faith and religion; it is very unfit. For those people of God in Babylon, were in civil bondage, but in freedom of spirit, and not servants to syn: such were Daniel, Ananias, and other saints. But these of the Romish church & religion, are in spiritual bondage to Antichrist, and so partakers of his sins, and in state of death, by man's judgment; till they obey their calling and come forth; though God knoweth them before to be his people, by election of grace. By this which hath been said, the wise may discern, what weight there is in Rev. 18. to prove Babylon (the present church of Rome,) to be the church of God, because out of her, God calleth his people. And let all men take notice of the main ground of his error, that he would have Babylon now, to be the civil state or material city; when in deed it is the ecclesiastical or church. For God calleth not people's out of their civil states, (it is a doctrine of rebellion so to interpret it, and contrary to Rom. 13:) but from their sinful ecclesiastical estate. All civil states, though governed by Popish yea or heathenish magistrates, are sanctified to God's people, Act. 25. 10. 11. Rom. 13. 1. 2. &c. 1 Pet. 2. 13. 14. 17. they may lawfully continue under them, have the use and benefit of them: they are all of God, and none of them from the bottomless pit or of the Devil, as is the Beast the Empire of Antichrist, Rev. 17. 8. from which God calleth all his people.

Of comparing the church of Rome with Israel.

Mine opposite labored to strengthen his former reason frō Rev. 18. by saying, And so Israel is often called the Lord's people in the time of their apostasy, 2 King. 9. 6. &c. I answered, the Question was not hereby proved. For 1. The Antichristian church is Babylon, Rev. 16. 19 and 18. 2. and out of her, that is Babylon; are Gads people called, Rev 18. 4. Now to prove her God's church, they flee to Israel, whereas the Gentiles were her true types, Rev. 11. 2. 9, 18. though all the wickedness and hypocrisy of apostate Israel, is also found in this Romish Babel.

His reply is, Let the reader judge, whether the point in hand, touching that phrase of God's people to imply the covenant of God, be not proved by <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> the example of Israel.

Ans. I leave it also to judgment, whether the Question touching the church of Rome be proved hereby. As for the phrase of God's people in that church; I never denied it to imply the covenant of God: to some visibly, as the Martyrs of Christ killed in that church; to other some according to the election of grace, which shall appear when they obey their calling, and are come out of her: as before I shown.

Moreover (he saith) the question was about the Temple of God, 2. Thes. 2. whereabouts he alleged that term and estate of the people of God, Rev. 18. 4. but J flee to Babylon &c.

Answ. A plain evasion. The question was about the church of Rome, as before I shown from his own grant. To justify her to be God's church, he alleged 2 Thes. 2. for one proof; Rev. 1. for another; Rev. 18. 4. for a third: and now the state of Israel for a fourth. His other repetitions, I have answered before. I always distinguished in Rev. 11. between the Gentiles (the Antichristians) and the holy city and court, which they have destroyed & trodden underfoot, and still do. Neither have I denied but the idolaters in Judah and Israel, were types of Antichristians in part: but this I said and still say, that the more full and perfect type of them, is by the holy Ghost shown us to be in the Sodomites, Egyptians and Babylonians, Rev. 11. & 17. & 18. As the Priests of Aaron were types of Christ, but Melchizedek was a more full and perfect type of him; as the Apostle proveth in Heb. 7.

Again, if that which he striveth for, were granted him, namely that Israel in apostasy typed out Antichristians; and that Israel was notwithstanding a true church: yet will it not follow therefore the Antichristian church of Rome, is a true church also. For the apostasy and idolatry of Rome, is far greater then Israel's, as I have elsewhere shown; and can easily confirm against any that shall gainsay it. 2. Mr. Io. himself maketh Antiochus and his captains, (which were of the worst sort of heathens,) to be types and figures of the Pope and his hierarchy (which are the Bishops priests and Deacons of the church of Rome,) as before we have seen. Yet would he not admit of this conclusion; therefore the Bishops Priests and Deacons of the church of Rome are heathens; as was Antiochus. So his reasoning for Israel, though it were true; will be no sound proof for Rome. Types, figures and similitudes hold in some things, not in all: and it is a very easy thing to deceive men by figures, similes, allegories. But the plain doctrines in the scripture, they are a sure ground: and if any do wrest a type or similitude against them, it is to be rejected, what color soever it hath. Now mine opposite reasoneth not from these doctrines; which would soon end the strife. For the scripture plainly saith, that Antichrist, the man of syn, is the son of perdition, and all that believe his lies and follow him are damned. 2 Thes. 2. 3. 10. 11. 12. That Antichrist is a liar, denying both the Father and the Son, 1 John, 2. 22. they that are of God, do overcome him: they that are of the world, hear him. Hereby is known the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error; 1 Joh. 4. 3.—6. They that belong to the Lamb (Christ) on mount Zion, have his Fathers name written on their foreheads, Rev. 14. 1. and worship not the beast, nor receive his mark, Rev. 20. 4. but they that belong to Antichrist, and have not their names written in the book of life, do worship the beast, and receive his mark, and shall be tormented forever, Rev. 13. 8. 16. & 14. 9. 10. 11. But the church of Rome believeth Antichrists lies, worshippeth the Beast and his idols, receiveth his mark, and is partaker of all his abominations. Who now without open injury, to the word of God, can make this people the true church of Christ, and in the visible covenant of grace? On the other hand, my Opposites reasons are drawn from that figurative phrase the Temple of God, 2 Thes. 2. and the type of apostate Israel; and an objection cast in the way to stumble at, that else we must be baptized again: (as if men that cannot tell how to avoid an inconvenience, must run into a mischief; to justify those whom God cōdemneth.) And upon these and the like grounds, are his reasons framed; (as may be seen throughout his work;) with some few props of human authority, to undershore them.

Though this brief answer might serve unto all his discourse about the state of Israel: yet for to help the weak reader, that might stumble at some things laid in his way; I will annex a few moe observations.

Under his wonted title of Errors, evasions, contradictions &c. wherewith he chargeth me, this is 1. That the Temple of God 2 Thes. 2. 4. is no more God's temple, then Jereboam's idol temples in Israel, and Bels temple in Babylon: yet also J said, it was to be understood of God's church & people invaded and destroyed by Antichrist &c.

Answ. This his tautology, I have before answered; and cleared myself both of error and contradiction. For that Antichrist should destroy God's temple and church, I proved by the example of the Babylonians burning the City & Temple of God, and captiving his people: and by the measuring of the new building, Rev. 11. That this being done, Antichrist should have another Temple and church of his own frame, which he should call God's and Christ's; I shown by the Beast arising from the sea, and from the earth, with horns like the Lamb (Christ) Rev. 13. which beast is a kingdom spiritual or ecclesiastical polity, a great whore, Rev. 17. by Antichrist adified, adorned, maintained: which still he pretendeth to be the ancient catholic church, and temple of God.

Now further for Jeroboam that drew Israel into syn, he confesseth that he was a type of Antichrist: though he showeth not wherein. But Jereboam's syn was in making a new House (or Temple) and a new altar to sacrifice in unto God, and new priests, with new signs, as Calves to worship God by: 1 King. 12. In these things then he must be a type of Antichrist: who accordingly (if he answereth to his figure) must erect a new Temple, altar, priesthood and signs, differing from Christ's, as in deed he hath done. And that idolatrous house erected for the worship of the true God, not only the Israelites, but the Prophet Amos, calleth the house (that is the Temple) of their god, Am. 2. 8. as Paul calleth the house wherein Antichrist sitteth, the temple of God, 2 Thes. 2. yet this man blameth me for comparing that Temple with Jereboam's idol temples, which Israel built when he forgot his Maker, Hos. 8. 14. how justly, let men of judgment consider.

2. His 2. exception is about Babylon, and the Beast, that I make them one with the Church of Rome, and distinguish not Babylon from Zion. This I have before cleared: showing that the church of Rome is the whore of Babylon, Rev. 17. and I distinguish it from Zion, which he confoundeth with Babylon, being himself in that blame which he would impute unto me. And to teach that God calleth us out of any civil state or government, I have formerly proed to be erroneous and seditious, contrary to the Apostles, Rom. 13. 1 Pet. 2.

3. That Antichrists Apostasy and the church of Rome with him, is much worse then Jereboam's and Israel's with him; I constantly affirm: and let the sins of them both be compared, and it will soon appear. Did Jeroboam pray unto creatures, as the church of Rome doth to innumerable, even all Saints and Angels, and some mere fictions? Did Jeroboam hold any of those manifold blasphemous heresies now holden in the church of Rome? Nay let the very Babylonians of old be taken: and I will undertake to prove that the church of Rome is not behind them, but in respect of the light of the Gospel revealed by Christ, much worse.

4. I grant that in Paul's time the church of Rome was set in the way of God, and soon after fell into apostasy: but where he chargeth me to say, that the ordinances of God still retained in that church are stolen; he wrongeth me. For I acknowledge not this church now, to be that which was in Paul's time, but a counterfeit, arisen since: a thief, partner with Antichrist, in robbing the church, (as the Babylonians robbed the Temple,) and abusing the ordinances thereof to their perdition. But then he objecteth.

If the church of Rome should repent &c. they should not retain the baptism and other ordinances of God which she hath, but must part with them seeing they are stolen goods. And here he insulteth, asking the Anabaptists, how they can ever be thankful enough to me, for thus pleading their cause &c.

Answ. If the Babylonians should have repented, and joined to the church of God at Jerusalem: they there might have had an holy and lawful use of God's vessels, altars &c, which before they had stolen, and abused: so may these spiritual Babylonians have at this day, if God give them grace to repent, & join unto Zion. Here then the Anabaptists will conne mine opposite but little thank for his gratulation.

5. He calleth it my like error and iniquity, to match baptism and the other ordinances of God in the church of Rome, with the feasts worship and sacrifices of the heathen, who were without Christ and without God &c. These assertions he saith are miserable and Anabaptistical.

Answ. But why then doth he not refute them by the word of truth? I could as easily call his assertions miserable and Papistical: but he would take that for no sound conviction. And had he but related mine own words (in that 85. page of my book,) the reader might have seen how little cause he had to exclaim • • I spake not generally of the heathens feasts, worship and sacrifices, as he would intimate to his reader: but distinctly of those which had been ordained of God, differing from other of their own devisings. 2. I said, the heathens kept God's ordinance, as well as Rome with their sacrifice of the Mass. He telleth his reader, I match the baptism &c in Rome, with the worship and sacrifices of the heathen. Is this good dealing so to change my words? But sundry such injuries I must bear. And why may we think, doth he in stead of the Lord's supper, (now turned into a Romish mass) put baptism? But because he thinketh that he hath color to plead for one sacrament more then for another. In handling that point of their baptism, I instanced this other seal, our Lord's supper; and another ordinance of God, Excommunication: both which he passeth over: yea everywhere when it cometh in his way, he shunneth it throughout his book, as in this place. He knew well, it was as a red hot iron that would burn his fingers. But of it, we shall speak more, when we come to handle their baptism. 3. To his reason, I answer: the heathens were in deed without Christ and without God, Eph. 2. and so are these Romish Antichristians, or else the Apostle hath not given us a true rule to discern Antichrist by, that he denieth both the Father and the Son: 1 Joh. 2. 22. The heathens retained the knowledge of the true God in some measure, as their writings manifest; and worshiped ignorantly the true God whom the Apostles preached, Act. 17. 23. so the Antichristians ignorantly worship the true God whom we preach and believe; and as ignorantly (by stocks and stones, and prayers in an unknowen tongue like Parrats) as did the heathens of old. The heathens retained a knowledge of Christ the Redeemer, figured in the sacrifices ordained of God: so, the Antichristians retain a knowledge of Christ in name, and signified in the sacraments; but as impiously do they abuse them by holding they confer grace ex opere operato, by the work done, and other iniquities mixed with them, as did the heathens; and by believing and worshiping a Christ made of bread, they surpass the heathens in ignorance and idolatry.

Finally, had mine opposite read Mr. Bezaes larger annotations on Eph. 2. as he read him on 2 Thes. 2. he might have seen the Antichristians very little inferior to the heathens without God, even in Mr. Bezaes judgment; which yet I suppose he would not have called miserable and Anabaptistical, as he doeth in me.

Touching the state of Israel, in my discourse (as he calleth it) he confesseth I have many truths which he also holdeth: yet somesleightes, errors &c also mixed: which he instanceth. Seeing he yieldeth the rest for truths▪ I refer the reader to the things there written; which being observed, he may the better judge of our controversy. As first, that we both agree, The covenant between God & man, was always conditional: by the Law, if theydid his commandments they should live by them; if theycontinued not in all things written in the Law to do them, they were cursed. By the Gospel, he that believeth in the Son of God hath everlasting life, and he that obeyeth not the Son, shall not see life. And all the figurative covenants that Israel had, were also conditional, blessings promised to the obedient, and curses to the transgressors. 2. That man's breaking of the covenant, is alwayes by syn; and so God never breaketh covenant. But by punishing and putting from him the rebellious; we may say God breaketh or disanulleth the covenant. Whensoever a people by syn forsake God, and refuse his word calling them to repentance: they cannot have themselves, neither can other men have concerning them any assurance of their salvation, or that they abide in the covenant of his grace. For whosoever abideth in him, he sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him. Be it man or woman or family or tribe, which turn their heart from the Lord, to serve other gods, though they bless themselves in their harts &c. the Lord will not be merciful unto them. Deut. 29. 18. 19. 20. These things being plain by the scriptures, and by him yielded; with many other things, which I will not here repeat: he though he could not contradict, yet intimateth notable heresy against me, Whether J do not in some things, speak so about the covenant, as may establish the righteousness of works, in some respect. Always remembering that the covenant of God, whereof we speak is this, to Abraham, J will be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee; and J will be your God, and ye shall be my people, Gen. 17. 7. & 22. 18. Hos. 2. 23. Zach. 13. 9. with Act. 2. 39. & 3. 25. Rom. 9. 25. 26.

Answ. As I from my heart abhor that heresy of righteousness by the works of the Law, as that which maketh Christ's death in vain, and abolisheth grace, Gal. 2. 21. Rom. 11. 6. so I trust no equal reader will gather any such doctrine frō my writings; though this man (without all proof) insinuateth it more then once against me. 2. In repeating the covenant, he useth not plainnes, I might say, sincerity. For those words in Gen. 17. 7. are but one part of the covenant, to weet, on God's behalf: he should have expressed the stipulation foregoing, in verse. 1. 2. walk before me, and be thou perfect, and J will make my covenant between me and thee: and after in verse. 9. Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore &c. So the other scripture by him cited, do not so fully express the covenant on both parts, as doth Heb. 8. 10. 11. 12. Where both forgiveness of sins, to justification, and writing of the Law in our harts to sanctification and obedience, are shown to be the covenant of God's grace with men.

He taxeth me as for error and contradiction, in seeking to persuade, that God brake the covenant on his part with Israel, when all the tribes were together (Animadversion. p. 88) and yet after (in the same page,) say, that whiles Israel was one, they continued God's church.

Answ. Herein he wrongeth me, (as he too often useth,) and keepeth not my words or meaning, neither taketh away the reasons from the scripture which I there set down. I spake not of The covenant in general, as he would give his reader to understand; but of a covenant, and a condition of the covenant. And what I said, I proved, from Exod. 6. 4. 5.—8. J have stablished my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan &c. Then God brought them to the borders of the counttie, and said, Loe the land is before you, go up and possess it, Deut. 1. 20. 21. but they were afraid, and would not go up, through their unbelief. Then the Lord was presently wroth, and swore that not one of those transgressors should see that good land: neither did they, but died in the wilderness, Deut. 2. 1. &c. Heb. 3. 17—19. Again I instanced a condition of the covenant on God's part, that he would cast out the Canaanites &c, and on Israel's part, that they should make no compact with the inhabitants. But when they brake covenant, and agreed with them for tribute; the Lord also presently brake with them, saying, J said, J will never break my covenant with you c but you have not obeyed my voice, wherefor J say also, J will not cast them out before you &c. Judge. 2. 1. 2. 3. 20. 21. Now what saith mine opposite to these things: are they not so? He neither yieldeth to the truth, neither could stand before it: but shunning to meddle with my reasons, turneth upon me who shown them; as the reader hath seen: and in stead of a covenant, and a condition of the covenant, setteth down the covenant, meaning the covenant of grace and salvation: whereas notwithstanding the breaking of these covenants & conditions and other the like, the people by repentance, held fast through faith the covenant of grace. For Moses and Aaron and many other, who for their sins could not come into the land of Canaan, yet are in heaven through the covenant of grace. And so though some conditions of the covenant were broken, both on their part and on God's, yet they being brought to repentance continued his church. That herein I neither wrote error, nor contradicted myself, as he would persuade against me. And these things that fell out in Israel on both parts, touching these figurative promises: do teach us the like touching the spiritual promises of eternal life, if men break concerning them; as in repentance, faith and holiness, without which men perish, and shall never see God; Luke 13. 3. Act. 2. 38. Mar. 16. 16. Heb. 12. 14.

He next findeth fault, That J shuffle together the estates of Israel, when they were one body, and when they were rent in two. Also whilst Israel was in the land and presence of the Lord, and when they were cast out of his house and presence. Animadv. p. 88. 89. 90. 91.

Answ. The first is a wrong imputation, as the reader may see in the place of my book by him cited. I there blame him for not distinguishing their estate, when they were one, and when they were rent asunder. And though I pass from one to another, as I was led by answering him, yet confound I them not. But here he dealeth as in the former point: answereth not my reasons whereby I convinced him of misapplying his diverse respects, contrary to the words and meaning of the scriptures; and to avoid if he could his deserved blame, checketh me, but disproveth not what I wrote. Let the reader compare what we both have said.

For the second, I confess I did not so distinctly handle the state of Israel whiles they were in the land, and after when they were put out, as I should and would have done, had I foreseen his pressing of every light thing against me. The reason hereof was, that it skilleth not for the point in controversy, (to weet their Circumcision) whether we respect them before they were cast out or after, for they were not circumcised the second time in either estate. And this mine opposite himself showeth even in this his last book, where he dealeth against the Anabaptists. For in his Chr. plea p. 27. 28. he saith, Circumcision once received in the apostasy of Israel, was not repeated again at their returning to the Lord, and leaving of their idolatrous ways &c: and quoteth among other scriptures, 2 Chron. 30 ch. and Ezr. 6. 19. 20. 21. Of which, the one speaketh of them that returned in Ezekiahs days, whiles the Israelites were in the land: the other of them that had been dispersed among the heathens, and returned. So I, where I treat of Baptism, handle those estates indistinctly: which is made a great matter against me, by him that doeth the same thing himself against others. But now, I will speak of them a part.

The Israelites that rent themselves from Judah, I take to be a false church; and so continued whiles they dwelt in the land. After they were dispersed, and were no church.

The first, I show thus. The twelve tribes by God's institution were all one church, both in Moses time when they had the Tabernacle among them, and encamped all round about it, in the order set of God, Num. 2. and after in the land of Canaan, whiles the Tabernacle stood, & when the Temple was built by Solomon: both which were signs of God's presence and dwelling with his church. And to keep them in this unity, he commanded all the men of Israel to come jointly together from all parts of the land, three times every yere, to worship him and keep their solemn feasts, in that one place which he should choose: and at all other times to offer their sacrifices there, and in no other place; and thither only to bring their first fruits, their commanded and their voluntary oblations; Exod. 23. 14.—17. 19. Deut. 12. 5. 6. 7. Who so did otherwise, blood was imputed unto that man, and he should be cut off from among his people; to keep the people from offering their sacrifices unto Devils, Levite. 17. 3. 4. 7.

Now when the ten tribes revolted and made Jeroboam king, then Israel forgot his maker and built Temples, Hos. 8. 14. For Jeroboam took counsel and made two calves of gold, and said unto them; It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem; Behold thy gods ô Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt; and he set the one in Bethel, and the other he put in Dan: and this thing became a syn. And he made an house of hie places, and made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi. And he offered on the Altar, which he had made in Bethel. 1 King. 12. 28.—33. And having cast off the Lord's Priests & Levites, Jeroboam ordained him priests for the hie places, and for the Devils and for the calves which he had made: but such of all the tribes of Israel, as set their harts to seek the Lord God of Israel, went to Jerusalem, to sacrifice unto the Lord God of their fathers: 2 Chron. 11. 14. 15. 16. Thus of one daughter of Zion, (one church) there became two women, or daughters: the one, to weete Jerusalem (the tribe of Judah) the Lord named Aholibah, that is, My Tabernacle in her; the other, Samaria (the ten tribes) he named Aholah, that is her own tabernacle. So Israel was without the true God, and without a teaching Priest, and without Law, 2 Chron. 15. 3. and the Lord was not with Israel: 2 Chron. 25. 7. but at their first falling away, he threatened by his Prophets, that because Jeroboam had made himself other gods, and molten images, and cast the Lord behind his back, Jeroboam's house should be cut off, and taken away a• dung; and the Lord would smite Israel, and root them up out of that good land which he gave to their fathers, and would s•arter them beyond the river: 1 King. 14. 9.—15. Yet for to show his patience towards his people, (whom he had chosen for his, above all people's of the earth,) and for to save his elect among them, and to make the rest the more inexcusable, he forbare them many years: and by all the Prophets, and all the Seers said unto them, Turn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments & my statutes: yet they would not hear, but hardened their necks, and believed not in the Lord their God; but rejected his statutes and his Covenant that he made with their fathers; and followed vanity, and became vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them; and left all the commandments of the Lord their God: therefore the Lord was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight. 2 King. 17. 13.—18.

From these and other the like testimonies against this people, I gather, that from the time they departed from the Lord, from his Temple, altars and holy signs of his presence with his people in Christ; from his Priests and the lawful sacrifices at Jerusalem, which were figures of Christ, and from the communion of their brethren the Jews (which remained the church of Christ;) and made a new Temple, altar, priesthood and church of human and sinful institution: that this their church, Temple, priesthood and worship were false. For that is truth which agreeth with the will and word of God: all human devices in religion are lies and vanities.

If it be said, the Lord himself rent the kingdom from Solomon's son, and gave it to Jeroboam, 1 King. 11. 29. 31. and therefore this second church, was also of divine institution. I answer; though God divided the kingdom, yet he divided not the church: there might have been twelve kings over the twelve tribes, (as there were of old twelve princes, Numb. 1. 5.—16.) and▪ yet they should have been one Church. The kingdom or Civil state, is an ordinance immediately under God, Rom. 13. the church or ecclesiastical state is an ordinance immediately under Christ the mediator, and he is the head of the body the church, Colos. 1. 18. The civil state is above the ecclesiastical, as God is the head of Christ: therefore the Church is to be subject to the Magistrate, the higher power, the minister of God, though he be an heathen, Rom. 13. 1. &c. 1 Pet. 2. 13. 14. for the civil state is not taken away by difference of religion, error, heresy or any apostasy from Christ: but the ecclesiastical state is by such things dissolved, the Candlestick (the church) may be removed, and of a Church of Christ, become a Synagogue of Satan: 1 Joh. 2. 18. 19. Rev. 2. 5. 9. In their civil state, the Israelites were to be subject unto Nebuchadnezzar an heathen, when he conquered them, Ier. 27. 6. 8. 12. but for their ecclesiastical estate they might never submit to Nebuchadnezzars church, or priests, nor offer to God upon any of his altars. So to Jeroboam as king they might be subject, without dissolving their communion in the mysteries of Christ, set in the Temple, altars, priests &c at Jerusalem. Thus this new church and ministry arising from Jeroboam's syn, was not of God; and therefore could not possibly be a true church, which always is a divine ordinance in Christ the head of the same.

Touching their second estate, after that God had called them back unto him by all his Prophets, but they would not hear; and chastised them seven times, and seven (that is many) times for their sins; he brought the land into desolation, and scattered them among the heathen; so the land did spew them out, as it spewed out the heathens that were before them: the Lord did put her away, and gave her a bill of divorce, Jer 3. 8. and they were Lo-ammi, not God's people, neither was he their God, Hos. 1. 9. they were not his wife, neither was he their husband, Hos. 2. 2. In which estate, they abiding without King, Prince, sacrifice, image, ephod, or Teraphim, were as scattered sheep, devoured by the King of Assyria: and therefore no Church, nor Common wealth, but so broken, that they were not a people. Isaiah. 7. 8.

The next error he chargeth me with is; that I say, If they cannot prove Babylon in Chaldea to be God's Church, when the Jews were there captived, they shall never prove the Temple of God spoken of in 2. Thes. 2. 4. to be God's true Church, &c.

Answ. He hath falsified my words, and not answered my reason. Thus I wrote; Their applying of these things to our times, is not in all points aright. For though in this, Antichrists synagogue and Israel's do agree, that neither be God's true Church: yet the perfect type of Rome, as God describeth it, is Babylon, Rev 17. 18. and we should not be wiser then God. And if they cannot prove Babylon then to be God's true Church, which was not more deep in sin then now Antichrist is, and which city had promise and performance of mercy in Christ, at the end, they shall never prove this synagogue of Satan to be God's true Church, which hath no promise of recovery or mercy, but prophesies and threatenings of assured destruction; Numb. 24. 24. Rev. 14. 9. 10. & 18. 8 21. & 19 20. 21. 2. Thess. 2. 8. 12.

Thus men may see what manner of replies he hath made unto me; and when he hath no other thing to say, he flieth to his wonted refuge The Temple of God, and saith our question and reasoning was about it; as if it were not about the Church of Rome, but about a phrase, that we contended. But hereof I have spoken at large.

For the word Church taken sometime largely, sometime strictly, he taxeth me for omitting this.

Answ. Why should I not omit that whereabout is no controversy. That which Keckerman (whom he citeth) saith of the Church largely taken, to comprehend both the elect and hypocrites, and strictly taken, to comprehend the elect only, I acknowledge for truth. But it is nothing to our controversy.

For his double regard of apostate Churches, and so of Israel, I yielded to him that which was truth, and shown wherein he missed: whereto as he replieth not, but referreth it to the readers judgment: so do I.

I shown how the Jews at this day professing the God of Israel, and praying to him, and reading his Law in their synagogues, may be called God's people in comparison of Pagans that know not God or his scriptures at all, but worship the Sun and Moon, and some the Devil by open profession: yet the Jews now are not actually in the covenant of grace. And the the Turks that profess oneimmutable living, true, most wise and high God; and Christ to be sent of God with his Gospel and that he is the Breath or Spirit of God; may in comparison of Julian the Apostate, and Atheists, be called the people of God and Christians, though indeed they be far from being either. So the church of Rome, in comparison with Turks and Paynims may be called Christians, but are indeed false Christians, &c. To that of the Jews, he answereth nothing. For the Turks, he maketh it nothing to the purpose, seeing they profess not Christ to be the Son of God, made Man, that died for our sins, as the Church of Rome professeth, &c.

Answ. It is to the purpose, that in divers respects, and in comparison with Atheists, and people that profess not God, or Christ at all: they that are not indeed God's people, or true Christians, may be called God's people and Christians: so his double respect help him nothing. And for the Church of Rome, I shown them to be in comparison with Turks, nearer Christ; and so the doctrine there, nearer to salvation then the Mohammedans: and I doubt not but God by it saveth some chosen therein: which yet justifieth not their estate to be a true Christian Church; as the reprobates in the true Church, condemn not the estate thereof.

I shown by many instances, the Church of Rome to be in some things more gross idolaters then either Jews or Turks, or heathens. This he being not able to deny, opposeth, how Jerusalem justified Samaria and Sodom, Ezek. 16. Jer. 3. That Tyre, Sidon, and Sodom, shall have easier judgment then Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum. Mat. 11. yet these cities were the Churches and people of God.

Answ. For Jerusalem, the Prophets speak of it sometime as generally wicked; when yet there were many godly, that partaked not with her sins, Ezek. 9. 4. Such as were more openly wicked then Samaria and Sodom, I deny them to be actually then in the covenant of grace to man's judgment; for the Lord appointed them to destruction, Ezek. 9. The cities of Israel in Christ's time, were a part of the true Church of the Jews: yet for refusing Christ, they should have heavier judgment then the heathens: so shall hypocrites in every true Church, have greater punishment then many heathens. But comparison should be made of Church with Church, not of some in the true Church, with the estate of a false church. And that the general state of the Church of Rome is Antichristian, and so denieth indeed both the Father and the Son; is before proved. And they generally these many years, have been more gross idolaters then either Jews or Turks: therefore their profession of Christ in name, will not prove them to be in the covenant of grace. God testifieth to the Churches of Galatia, Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the Law; ye are fallen from grace, Gal. 5. 4. If they that would be justified by the Law of God, and works of the same, fell from grace: much more they that will be justified by the law of Antichrist, and wicked works, are fallen from grace, and have no benefit by Christ. But such is the general faith of the Church of Rome, believing to be justified by the idolatrous works, which they walk in as they are taught by the Man of Syn, that sitteth as God, in the Temple of God, carrying them to destruction.

Whereas to prove the Temple of God 2. Thes. 2. which he expoundeth the Church of Rome, to be the true Church, he alleged Zach. 6. 12. 13. Eph. 2. 11. &c. 2. Cor. 6. 16. Rev. 11. 19. I shown how he misapplied the Scriptures: he repeateth his former answers, which I have formerly resuted. And now he addeth; But to put him from his shifts, let him tell us plainly, when Paul saith, The Temple of God hath not agreement with Idols, 2. Cor. 6. 16. if yet there be idols set in the Temple of God, as was in the time of Manasseh and Antiochus, whether now it ceased to be the Temple of God or not. The Scripture showeth it is the Temple of God notwithstanding. 2. King. 21. 7. Ier. 50. 28. Ezek. 8. 5. 10. 16. Dan. 11. 31. 38.

Answ. I tell them plainly, that that Temple of God which the prophets speak of, had no agreement with idols; though the wicked set up idols in it by force. But the Church of Rome (which these call the Temple of God) hath agreement with idols, if images of silver and gold, wood and stone, a wheaten god in the Mass, and the man of syn which sitteth as God, be idols. For these idols the Church of Rome worshippeth and serveth most sinfully: but the Temple of God which the Prophets speak of, never worshiped the Idols set up in it, nor had accord with them. But this is a shift of shifts, and a notorious sophisme in mine opposite, to reason from the material Temple of God then, which only suffered that abuse; to the spiritual Temple, the Church or people now, which are voluntary agents, & worshipers of Idols. By which false argumentation he might even as well conclude, that if the Papists should turn flat Pagans of Antiochus religion, and serve his idols, and be of his faith: yet they should continue the true Church and people of God notwithstanding: because the Temple then, continued God's true Temple, notwithstanding all that Antiochus did thereto.

The next point, touching their baptism, I will anon treat of in particular.

For his objection of salvation now had in the Church of Rome, &c. it was his second main argument for that Church, which I have before answered: he after his manner repeateth again and again the same things, so lengthening his work. I refer the reader to that answer I gave before.

Other things whereby I convinced his doctrine, to beat the path for all licentiousness, contrary to the plain Scriptures, which show, that he that committeth sin is of the Devil; and we know that whosoever is born of God, sinneth not, &c. 1. John. 3. 8. & 5. 18. whereas (if that he plead for be true) men may be as profane as Esau, filthy in life as Sodom, idolatrous and sinful as the Egyptians and Babylonians, and yet if they will call themselves Christians, and be outwardly baptized, &c. they shall be justified as God's true Church, they and their seed in his covenant of grace, &c. which is to strengthen the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wickedness, by promising him life. Ezek 13. 22. These and other like things, he passeth over, without word of answer. It is enough for him to cry, the Temple of God, the Temple of God; and to insist upon phrases which may diversely be understood. Whereas the sound plea should be from the doctrines of faith and sanctification of life according; by which the Apostles teach us to discern true Christians from false. And who, that seeketh after the truth, would not rather insist upon these main grounds taught by our Savior and his Apostles? Verily, I judge this pleading for Rome, to be an exceeding great sin; because it by consequence overthroweth both faith and holiness: seeing misbelievers and most sinful idolaters as ever were on earth, are justified to be God's true Church notwithstanding, and in his covenant of grace, contrary to the whole Testament of Christ. It is to make a wide gate and broad way into heaven, and will make men secure in all syn: if they that serve the Man of syn himself, worship his idols, believe in his heresies, and walk in his wicked works, which hope to merit salvation by them in heaven: may be said to be true Christians, and in the state of grace.

Of the state of the Heathen.

WHereas I said, J held it presumption for any to limit God, by how small means or measure of faith and knowledge he will save a man. Who dares den▪ but God had many elect among the heathens, after he had separated Israel from them? Yea God expressly said, when he made Israel his peculiar people; that yet all the earth was his, Exod. 19 5. which are the words of the covenant generally. Wherefore we leave God's secret counsels to himself, as he willeth us. Deut. 29. 29. and do consider only the visible state of Churches, by the rules of God's law and promises.

To this mine opposite saith, What is it that he meaneth hereby? If by the covenant he mean the covenant of grace for salvation, whereof we treat; and think that all people of the world, in all ages and places of the earth are under it: what differeth this from the opinion of the Anabaptists and Arminians touching general redemption? If he speak not of the covenant of grace which is for salvation; all may perceive he speaks not to the point in hand.

Answ. My meaning is plain, that God had his elect among the heathens, as he bath in the Church of Rome: and he could not but see what I intended. By the covenant generally with all nations, I mean the same that himself alleged whileare from Ke•kerman, of the Church largely taken: which he explaineth, the company of all those which profess Christian religion or the name of Christ in what manner soever. And thus (saith he) are all heretics, schismatics, and Arians, Papists, Anabaptists, and such like, referred to the Christian Churches▪ So if he understood himself, he might understand me, when I spake of the covenant generally. For such large Churches as he describeth, I hold all nations to be, when God made his special covenant with Israel. Noah was a Christian, and had the covenant of grace in Christ to him and to his seed, as absolutely as any Christian Church in the Apostles days: though the mystery of the Gospel was not then so clearly revealed * as it was afterward by the Apostles. But for the substance of the covenant, namely Christ, and faith in him, with obedience; it was given to Adam and his seed; to Noah and his seed, Heb. 13. 8. & 11. 1. 2 3. 4. 7. &c. And this covenant of grace in Christ, confirmed by sacrifices, as to us now by the sacraments. Which sacrifices all nations kept the first thousand years after Noah, (which was till after Moses death,) as well as the large Christian or false-Christian churches kept the sacraments. Yea let any show, that any of the heathens (I except not the very Canaanites,) turned the sacrifices into such abominable idolatry, as the Church of Rome hath turned the sacraments. And for other sins, Antichristians are not behind them. How freely did Abraham, Isaac, and Jakob live and publicly worship God by altars and sacrifices, in the midst of the Caananites, Hittites, &c. Gen. 12. 7. & 26. 25. & 35. 6. •. whereas if they had so done (according to the true worship of the Gospel) in the Church of Rome now these many hundred years; they had been burned for heretics, as innumerable of Abraham's faith have been. How religiously did the King of Gerar carry himself towards Abraham's wife, Gen. 20. in comparison of the outrageous adulteries and fornications by the chief of the Church of Rome, as all histories testify. Yea God himself appeared unto that King, and appointed Abraham to pray for him, Gen. 20. 3.—7. How honourably did the Hittites entreat Abraham, acknowledging him a Prince of God, and offered him all kindness, Gen. 23. 5. 6. &c. yet other nations were better then they, Gen. 24. 3. 4. & 27. 46. Look upon Balaam the soothsayer of Mesopotamia, even in Moses time: and see how he consulted with Jehovah his God, by altars and sacrifices of Burnt-offerings, such as were used in Israel, Num. 22. 8. 9. 18. & 23. 1. 2. 3. &c. and it will plainly appear, the heathens had not more degenerated from the religion & worship learned from Noah, then the Church of Rome, hath from that which Paul taught there. Yea there was a better Church in the land of Vz (in all likelihood,) then the Church of Israel was in Egypt, when they polluted themselves with the idols thereof, Ezek. 20. 6. 7. 8. For in Vz land, Job was governor, a most godly man as was upon the earth, and a Priest unto the most high God, Job. 1. 1. 5. 8. & 42. 8. 9. holding firm the faith of Christ his redeemer, and of the resurrection to life, Job. 19. 25. 26. 27. and free from idolatry, Job. 31. 26. 27. 28. And what knowledge and religion was then among the Temanites, Shuhites, Naamathites, and Buzites; the friends of Job that came to visit him, do show; Job. 2. 11. &c. and 32. 2. &c. and notwithstanding their error in their disputation, they obtained pardon of God in Christ, Job. 42. 7.—9. And who can tell when the golden Candlesticks of Christian churches were removed from those other people's. Though soon, even too soon, there was a general apostasy among the nations after Noah, as among the nations after the Apostles times. But among which of them was there a such a Man of Syn reigning at any time, as hath now reigned in the Church of Rome, these many hundred years? Wherefore they measure not things by the golden reed, which cast off those Churches of the nations, as wholly profane and fallen from grace; and yet justify this notorious harlot the church of Rome, to be still in the covenant of grace; whose impieties are not inferior to any of those nations in Moses time, but rather above them; for her sins have reached up to heaven, Rev. 18. 5. And whereas those nations had not the word of God written, but as they learned it by voice of men, which might more easily be corrupted and forgotten: the church of Rome having the written word, hath despised it; not suffered their children to read or hear it, lest (forsooth) it should make them heretics: that for a man to have God's book, it was as much as his life was worth: so the miserable people, for contempt of God's holy Law, have been justly given over into Egyptian darkness, and into most abominable idolatries and heresies, which have drowned men in perdition.

Now that which mine opposite objecteth of the opinion of the Anabaptists, &c. as I reject it for a great error; so his supposition whereby he would feoff it upon me, is injurious: If I think that all people of the world in all ages and places of the earth, are under the covenant of grace, &c. whereas I spake but of the nations in Moses time, which were not so far fallen from God, as they were afterward, and now much more. Again, himself pleadeth for the church of Rome at this day, to be in the covenant of grace: yet I hope he would not say, that all in that church are redeemed; otherwise then many reprobates are redeemed, except he should think there are no reprobates. And if the Man of Syn (which himself expoundeth the Pope and his Hierarchy) be redeemed; which are the chief members of that Church: we must needs acknowledge a very general redemption.

So where he chargeth me with abuse of Ezek. 16. 8. thou beamest mine: and asketh me, Is this now the case and estate of all the earth with the Lord? I answer, no: it was not then, much less is it now. For I said, that then God made Israel his peculiar people, Exod. 19. 5. though generally he said all the earth was his. But because the earth corrupted their ways before him, as they did before the •loud, Gen. 6. 11. 12. therefore God separated to himself a peculiar people to be his inheritance. And so I think mine opposite himself would confess, though all that profess Christianity be God's Churches in his account, yet the Christian reformed churches, are Christ's peculiar Churches, though all Christendom be his in a large sense.

Yet he ceaseth not to object, that the heavens are the Lord's, Deut. 10. 14. and every beast of the forest is his, &c. Psa. 50. 10. 11. 12. shall we therefore think (saith he;) that the beasts are the wife and Church of God •s Ezekiel speaketh of the Jews? &c.

Answ. None but beasts would so think. The comparison in Exod. 19. 5. is not between men and beasts, but between men and men. And such men as had all within less then a thousand years been God's wife, and church, and in his covenant of grace. But most of them on their parts fallen from it to idolatry, as Israel also had Ezek. 20. 7. 8. and as the church of Rome, and other churches within a thousand years after the Apostles, have done. The heathens then were not more fallen from God, then the church of Rome is: mine opposite pleadeth for Rome, because they were a church 15 hundred years before, and Antichrist still sitteth in the Temple of God. I answer him, the heathens in Moses time were all the church nine or ten hundred years before, and are still called God's people, Exod. 19. 5. He replieth, with the instance of Wild-beasts, &c. If I should so have turned my back upon an argument, what outcries would he have made after me?

When David exhorteth all the earth to sing unto the Lord, Psal. 66. 1. & 100. 1. speaketh he to the beasts? When Moses saith, All the earth was of one language, Gen 11. 1. doth not he mean it of the men of the earth only, and not of beasts? So in Exod. 19. 5. ye (Israelites) shall be a peculiar treasure unto me, above all people's: for all the earth (that is all people's of the earth) are mine. Where God calleth all people's his, not only by creation, as the beasts were his; but by covenant made with them in Noes time, when he smelled the sweet savor of his sacrifice, and promised no more to drown the world; and blessed both Noah and his sons, and established his covenani with them and with their seed after them; and gave them a sight of his covenant, his bow in the cloud, Gen 8. 20. 21. & 9. 1. 9. 12. 13. which covenant, though the natural benefit of it, extended to the beasts, (as the beasts also had natural refreshing by that water out of the Rock, which to the Israelites was a sacrament of Christ, Numb. 20 8 1 (or. 10. 4.) yet unto men, (and to men only,) it was a spiritual covenant of grace by Christ, as appeareth by Esa. 54. 8. 9. 10. Rev. 4. 3. and 10 1. 1 Pet. 3. 20. 21. Now the covenant of grace, thus established with Noah, his sons, and their seed after them; was respected of God in Exod 19. 5. when for the Apostasy of Noes seed, he of his love made Israel his peculiar, above all other people's: though some of the Nations were (as in charity I judge from Job's history,) God's true churches still; and in the worst of the nations (as the cursed Canaanites) he had many of his elect, (as he hath now in the church of Rome;) which the examples of Rahab the harlot, the Gibeonites or Nethinims, Uriah the Hittite, Aravnath the Jebusite; and many other throughout the scriptures, do confirm. All men (as the Apostle teacheth from the heathens confession) are God's offspring (or generation,) Act. 17. 28. 29. The Gentile (as the parable shewerh in Luke 15) was brother to the Jew; and God is the God not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles, Rom. 3. 29. and if the uncircumcised Gentile kept the righteousness of the Law, his uncircumcision was counted for circumcision, for there is no respect of persons with God, Rom. 2. 10. 11. 26. Act. 10. 34. 35. And as Paul reasoneth, Hath God cast away his people (Israel)? Far be it: for J also am an Israelite &c God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew: Rom. 11. 1. 2. So I reason; Did God cast away his people's of the seed of Noes sons? Far be it. For Rahab was a Canaanite, Aravnah a Jebusite, Uriah an Hittite; Ebedmelech an Ethiopian, Iether an Ismaelite; and thousands of these and the other nations, which were God's people whom he foreknew, and saved of his grace in Christ. They which cannot answer these things but by instancing beasts; do want the wisdom which men of God should have.

With like success (in another place of his book) he answereth touching the Gentiles. For whereas I wrote, *The ordinanoes of God which they (the Apostate Israelites) in show retained, could not be unto them the figes and seals of the forgiveness of sins, and of life eternal; and therefore were in their use of them, false and deceitful, as were also the ordinances of God retained in other nations; as * Altars, Sacrifices, Priests, tithes, first fruits, incense, meat-offerings, drink-offerings, feasts, baptisms or washing▪ •byntings, excommunications, prayers, vows, and many the like, whereof all histories do record, that the Gentiles did retain them▪ (* Numb. 23. 1. Pompon. Laetus de Sacerd. T•bull. l. 1. eleg. 10. & l. 2. eleg. 1. 2. Homer. Odyss. 3. & Jliad. 1. Uirgil Aen. 2. Caesar bell. Gall. l. 6.*

He replieth, All is to no purpose. For if it be to show that the Gentiles had Altars, sacrifices, priests &c none doeth deny it. But if it be to show that these were the Lord's ordinances, given by him to these nations, as circumcision was to Israel, for confirmation of his covenant unto them; or that circumcision in Israel, was no more a sign and seal of God's covenant, and consequently of forgiveness of sins and life eternal, then those were among the heathens &c▪ then all may see, that this scripture is also perverted, and that neither it nor all the writers in the world, prove any such matter. &c.

Answ. It is easy to say, the scripture is perverted; and show no reason how. I have before proved from the history of Noah, & God: covenant of grace with his seed after him; and from the history of Job: that all nations had not only Altars, sacrifices, Priests &c, but had them also as the Lord's ordinances given them for confirmation of his covenant, of forgiveness of sins in Christ to come. Whence did Cain and Abel, Noah, Abram, Jacob and Job; learn to offer first fruits, and beasts, build altars, pay tithes, make vows &c: but from divine institution taught their fathers from God, and by the fathers to the children? Otherwise they could not have done them in faith, as of some of them the Apostle testifieth they did, Heb. 11. which teacheth us so to judge of the rest. And if all other nations had kept the faith as did Job; their sacrifices had been the seals of forgiveness of sins unto them, as they were unto Job. When they lost their faith, their sacrifices were vain, and no seal of grace unto them. Now compare Israel in their Apostasy: they made new Temples, new Altars, new Priests, new feasts and signs, which were not only none of God's ordinances, but expressly forbidden them by his written Law, Exod. 20. 4. 5. so that they were so far from having their sacrifices, seals of forgiveness of sins unto them, as they were reputed for blood unto them, and they were by the doom of his Law, to be cut off for offering them, Levite. 17. 4. Thus having no word of promise, they neither did nor could sacrifice of faith; but their sacrifices were abominable, as the sacrifices of the heathens: and they sacrificed to devils, not to God, as Moses and the prophets testify, Deut. 32. 17. 2. Chron. 11. 15.

Now for Circumcision; first it was not commanded to the Gentiles, neither was it a seal of the covenant of grace to Noah and his seed; but was first commanded to Abraham and his seed, and household, Gen 17. and so to Israel, and such as would be of that Church, and partake of their passover, Levite. 12. Exod. 12. 44. 48. Wherefore it being not commanded to Noes sons, such of them as were scatered far off, and heard not of the precept to Abraham: were doubtless in the covenant of graceful, if they abode in Noes faith; and were saved without circumcision as well as we at this day. Who doubteth of the salvation of the Patriarchs Sem and Heber, who both of them lived till after the ordinance of circumcision: yet is there no record that they were circumcised. Yea all the Israelites that were born for the space of 40. years in the wilderness, were uncircumcised till Joshua's reign, Jos. 5. 2.—6. yet with them in that estate, Moses renewed the covenant, to be the Lord's people, and that he would be their God, as he had sworn to their fathers, Deut. 29. 10.—13. And whereas mine opposite boldly affirmeth, that all the writers in the world prove no such matter, viz. touching God's ordinances given to the heathens the sons of Noah, for signs of salvation: it will appear otherwise, even by the greatest enemies of the heathens, the Jews themselves. Who though they gloried in circumcision, and the Laws given by Moses; yet thus they write, It is lawful for an heathen to offer burnt offerings unto God in every place; and he himself may offer in an high place, which he hath built. But it is not lawful (for an Jsraelite) to help him, &c. for behold, we are forbidden to offer without (the Sanctuary, Levite. 17. And it is lawful to teach them, and to learn them how they should offer to the name of the blessed (God.) Maimonides in Misn. treat. of Offring sacrifices, chap. 19. s. 16. Thus by the Hebrews testimony, the Gentiles might lawfully use sacrificing in their own lands, on their altars, &c. and the Jews might instruct them to do it aright, though they themselves might not do it with them, being restrained of God. And as for the state of grace, and salvation with God, they also say, Whosoever receiveth the seven commandments (given to the sons of Noah) [of which I have spoken elsewhere, and whereof circumcision was none;] and doth them; he is of the saints of the nations of the world; and he hath a portion in the world to come [that is, in eternal life] if he receive them and do them, because the holy blessed (God) hath commanded them, &c. Maimonides in Misn. treat. of Kings. chap. 8. s. 11. Thus mine opposite needed not to have made it so strange, what I wrote of the state of the Gentiles, nor have called it an idle flourish; had he duly weighed their estate, as God's word and human writers bear witness of it.

But this indeed is admirable (saith he) that he should account the heathens superstitions to be God's ordinances: and yet esteem the circumcision and other ordinances of God had in Israel, to be lying and deceitful signs, &c. Besides in all his bead-roll of Writers, there is no mention at all of circumcision, whereabout our question is, &c.

Ans. 1. I called both the one and the other, the ordinances of God, in respect of their divine institution. The other nations that fell from God: and the Israelites that fell from God: I count them all abusers of God's ordinances; which were not in their use of them, true signs and seals of eternal life unto them: but false and deceitful. Thus I match them alike, without respect of persons, as I am taught by the Apostle, Rom. 2. 9. 10. 11. 12. The heathens superstitions (if he mean things of their own devising,) I never esteemed God's ordinances at all; no nor Rome's superstitions at this day.

2 That circumcision is not in the bead-roll as he calleth it: he need not marvel, seeing it was not commanded the heathens, as before I have shown. It seemeth he had a special fancy to circumcision above all other God's ordinances: otherwise, why might not he think that it might be profaned as much as any other. There was no more holiness in it, then in the sacrifices. And the Apostle saith, If thou be a breaker of the Law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision, Rom. 2. 25. what then will it avail, that Israel had circumcision, when they broke the Law, yea were without the true God, and without Law, 2. Chron. 15. 3. and sacrificed to Devils, Deut. 32. 17. 2. Chron. 11. 15. Finally, here he seeketh for circumcision, where it was not to be found: but within three le•es after in my book, I instanced some among the nations circumcised, even by his own confession; and there he hath passed it over without answer, as if he had not seen it. Such entreaty and worse I bear at his hand with patience. Let me here add the testimony of a learned man. Mr. Calvin (in his Sermon against idolatry, upon Psal. 16. 4.) hath these words, There are diverse which at this day use another starting hole: for confessing that it is a detestable thing to mingle themselves with the idolatries of the Paynims, they will not that this extend itself to the superstitions of the papacy: as though all the impieties of the Paynims had not been the corruptions of the true service of God. From whence I pray you drew the Paynims all their ceremonies, but from the holy Fathers? The mischief was, that they corrupted that which was well instituted of God. And yet all the abominations that were in the world, had this goodly cloke of the name of God, and of Religion: but this made them not therefore justifiable, neither might the faithful communicate with them.

Of Mr. Junius judgment for the church of Rome.

IN my brief answer to the things which mine opposite alleged from Mr. Junius (whose treatise they have printed the second time:) he taxeth me for omitting many clauses in that work. But I then and still do hold it enough to take away the main grounds; which being done, the other of lesser moment will be also found insufficient.

I shown by the scriptures, the Church of Rome now, to be another, and not that church which was in Paul's time: therefore no just proportion to be between them. In stead of disproving that which I shown, he (after his manner) asketh a question, Whether J think these (the Man of syn with his worshipers come in the place of the ancient true Church) be the Temple of God, the people of God, under the covenant of God, having the baptism of God, &c. or whether there be no such there at all, though corrupted and abused?

Answ. I have often told him, and proved by God's word, that this present church of Rome, is not God's true Temple or people, under his covenant, having his baptism: but a false church arisen since, vainly pretending the church covenant and baptism of Christ. Seeing God's word moveth them not, let it be lawful for me to oppose man's authority to man's. D. Whitaker's answering Bellarmine, saith, This church succeedeth the Apostles indeed, but as a den of thieves (doth) the house of God, and as an harlot (doth) the faithful city. It retaineth the chests and coffers wherein of old the treasure was (as Chrysostom elsewhere writeth) but hath lost the treasure it self. It is no more Bethel (the house of God) but Bethaven, that is, the house of vanity or lies. Yea Mr. Junius himself hath thus well written of it, The Church of Christ is said to fight against the Pseudo-Christian (or falsely called Christian) church, over the which Antichrist ruleth. Also, when Bellarmine citeth Tertullian, marvellously praising Rome: Junius answereth, Not Rome, but the Church: and not this Church, but that which then was, nearer the Apostles times, which cleaved to the truth and simplicity of Christ. The disputer would deceive, ex elenchi ignoratione. Into the same fall acie doth mine opposite often run, in his dispute against me: and is therefore reprov'd by Mr. Junius himself.

To the objection of God's calling in the Church of Rome; barely affirmed without proof: I shown from 2. Thes. 2. that the man of syn sitteth there, calling all to worship him, &c. and from Rev. 18. 4. that God calleth out of her, such as shall be saved And from Rev. 9. that their Bishops (the ordinary means of calling) are fallen from heaven, and have the key of the bottomless pit, &c. which Mr. Junius himself hath applied to the popish hierarchy. Mine opposite replieth, that I had not what to answer, but boldly deny that God is there calling as in his Church, &c. In stead of disproving, he falleth to his wonted questioning: how then there can be salvation to any in that church, &c. Answ. It is a weariness to answer his often demands. Salvation by sundry means cometh to God's elect in all false churches, and in the world. How came Rahab to faith among the Canaanites? Heb. 11. 31. I am. 2. 25. and other God's chosen among the heathens. It is one thing for God to call by extraordinary means; another thing for him to call as in his church, by his ordinary ministry, which is the thing that I deny in Rome, and they prove it not there.

The distinction between the papacy and the church of Rome; that is, the pastors and the flock of that church; is of no weight to prove the difference pretended: unless they were of divers faiths and religions. But when the priests teach lies, idolatries and heresies; and the people believe, worship and obey them, (as they do in Rome,) they both perish together, as the scriptures witness 2. Thess. 2. Rev. 14. 9. 10. 11.

Touching the order or rank of Apostates (to omit his trifling about his own translation of the word) he saith Mr. Junius speaks this not of the whole Church, but only of the papal hierarchy. Be it so: but what proof is brought for that he saith. It is known to all that have understanding of their estate, that the church and people of Rome are apostate from the faith and service of Christ, as are their priests and hierarchy. What shall I need to bring proofs? Mr. Johnson himself here confesseth, and prayeth all to take knowledge of it, that the Church of Rome, is fallen into most sinful and deep defection and Apostasy; and so is a notorious harlot and idolatress. If Mr. Junius say otherwise, and will have the Apostasy to be in the Hierarchy only, not in the church: let them first agree between themselves, before they trouble others with their contrary pleas. Or let a third be umpier between them: Mr. Cartwright, who (in his second Reply to D. Whitgift, pag. 245.) saith; J would gladly learn where the Lord hath willed us so to cast away the use of our judgment, that when men make open profession, that they are members of the Pope, which is Antichrist; yet we must account of them as of members of Christ. Or how this is to judge wisely, John. 7. 14.

Whereas Mr. Junius made the papacy, or papal hierarchy to be an accident growing to the Church, apoyson in the church, a pestilence, a dropsy, a gangrene in the body. I shown these inconveniences upon their own grant, If the hierarchy be no part of the body, but an accident, a poison, a gangrene, &c. what shall we think of all the actions of that hierarchy, their ministration of sacraments, making of ministers, & whole church administration? They cannot possibly be the actions of the body, of the church, neither of Christ, &c. And now what is become of their true baptism, and ordination of ministers? And how doth God cal in that Church, as before they reasoned? &c. Here mine opposite chargeth me with trifling and cavilling, &c. as if similitudes should hold in all things.

Answ. A similitude must hold in some things, and in that for which it is alleged; else it is vain: to prove the hierarchy none of the Church, this instance is brought, the pestilence, dropsy, gangrene, is none of the body, but an accident. To disprove this, I show that such accidents can do no natural functions of the body: but the hierarchy do the natural functions of the body of the church of Rome, in teaching, ministering the sacraments, &c. therefore they are not accidents, but true members, yea the chief of that Church.

Object. The Apostate Jews are compared to brass and iron, Jer. 6. 28. Ezek. 22. 18. Shall we now conclude against Judah, to make a nullity of all the actions, ministration, and Churches estate?

Answ. It is a living body that doth actions, and not metal: if a simile be given of a living body, and of a gangrene or scab that consumes the life of that body; all in reason will see, that the body doth actions, the scab or gangrene doth none. But in a similitude from metal, there is no reason to speak of actions. But thus, the whole company is compared to a lump of metal: the godly are as pure silver, Psal. 66. 10. the wicked are as dross. Psalm. 119. 119. the fire of God's word, and tribulation, trieth them, 1. Pet. 1, 6. 7. The Finer reserveth the pure metal, but consumeth or casteth away the dross: thus God threateneth to do with the Jews, Ezek. 22. 18.—22. Here to bring in actions of a living body, is quite from the purpose; but in the other simile not. Here I would say, of dross can be no vessel for the Finer: or, of brass, iron, and reprobate silver, the Lord maketh no choice for vessels in his sanctuary. Of like sort are his other wrested similitudes of trees, corn, seed, &c. all which must be fitted to their proper natures.

But what answer giveth he to the point itself? First, he breaketh out into his charitable terms, saying, Could any Anabaptist write more Anabaptistically then thus, &c. And after sundry reproaches, he replieth in Mr. Junius name, and to my question, Can a scab or gangrene perform any action of a natural body or member? he giveth no answer, but asketh again, Can a body that hath a scab or gangrene, perform no actions of a natural body? I answer; yes, it can. And what now will it help his cause? For though the body can do the natural actions of it: yet it is not possible for the scab or gangrene to do them. Either therefore the Pope and his hierarchy must be other then accidents, gangrenes, poison, dropsy, &c. in the church of Rome (as in deed they are the chief members of that Whore) or else they can perform no ecclesiastical action. As for his usual refuge (when all other fail) the baptism had in Rome, we shall speak of it in due place. Only let it here be observed, that this baptism is there administered by such as are not of the body or Church, (by their own grant,) but by ulcers, gangrenes, &c. And Mr. Junius himself answering Bellarmine, so urgeth it; saying of the Man of Syn (the popish Hierarchy) he is not properly of the Temple, for the ulcer (saith he) is not of the body, though it be in the body. So I strain not the similitude beyond the due proportion, if Mr. Junius his own reasoning be good.

Object. Of Himenaeus and Philetus it is said, their word did eat as a gangrene, 2. Tim. 2. 17. 18. would he then conclude, that the baptism ministered by them was not true baptism? &c.

Answ. First, it is not said of the men, but of their doctrine, that their word fretted as a gangrene; but Mr. Junius maketh the very men, ulcers and gangrenes, in the body, but not of it. If the officers or members of a church teach heresy, that doctrine is as a gangrene; but the persons teaching them are truly officers or members of that church, though sinful. But in Rome, the officers are ulcers, not of the body, in his account: so his example is not fit. Secondly, if they were by the Apostle delivered to Satan, as is probable by 1 Tim. 1. 20. then they and their followers were no true Christian church, but a synagogue of Satan, to be reckoned among the Antichrists, 1 Joh. 2. 18. 19. and so could not administer true Christian baptism, to their disciples.

Obj. Where he again denieth any calling to be in the church of Rome, and asketh, How God doth call in that church, let him ask it of such of his followers, as have heretofore been of the Priests and members of that church &c.

Answ. He again wrongeth me (as too often,) saying that I deny any calling to be in that church: it never entered into my heart. I hold there is some calling in the churches of Turks and Jews, much more, in false Christian churches. I denied that God is there calling as in his church, which they plead for: that is, God hath not there his ordinary true ministers, but Antichrists hierarchy doth call the people from God. How be it, by some whom God raiseth up of ministers or people, his witnesses whom that church murdereth, Rev. 11. 3. 7. and by reading the scriptures and other writings, God calleth his people out of that Babylon. Witness the late Archbishop Marcus Antonius de Dominis, who testifieth, that without persuasion counsel or advise of any man of what sort so ever; he was, by reading the scriptures and Fathers, drawn to mislike and forsake that Roman church. And thus among Turks, Jews, heathens, I doubt not but God calleth some from them by the light of his word and spirit. Yea not only in the church of Rome, but by it and the ministry of it, God calleth his elect: for as the Apostles doctrine in the true church, was to the reprobates the savourof death unto death, which yet is no condemnation of the true church or ministry thereof: so some grounds of Christianity, & doctrines in the false church, (by the false ministry, erected to destroy men's souls with heresies and idolatry;) God, of his wisdom and goodness, causeth them to turn unto the conversion and salvation of his chosen; which yet is no justification either of that church or ministry. Let this answer once suffice, to all his repetitions. And to Mr. Junius (on whom he so relieth) I could oppose Mr. Calvin (man for man) who saith, We see the horrible confusion that is in Popery: but yet there is not any doctrine to pluck men back to God: nay rather the doctrine which is there, doth draw them quite and clean from him. And we see that the Devil hath gotten such sooting there, that all is full of trumperie and illusions, and the loving God is quite forsaken. Sermon 31. on Deut 5. 7.

Obj. What difference Mr. Junius observed between the ministry simplyconsidered, and the hierarchy grown in that church upon it, himself could best have shown. This here is evident, that in one respect he acknowledgeth the hierarchy to be an order or estate of apostasy in the church, an accident &c. in another respect, he esteemeth the ministry of God's holy things to be there, though exceedingly corrupted.

Ans. By such differences and distinctions mine opposite would carry us from the truth, that I say not from common reason. For he granteth the church itself, the people, to be exceedingly corrupted, with most sinful and deep defection and apostasy▪ yet in another respect to be the temple, the people of God. Now we have the like for the Bishops and Priests, in one respect an order of apostasy, in another, God's ministry. Wherefore then have we been led about with distinctions, of the ministry or hierarchy, from the church, the one to be the Man of syn, the son of perdition, the other to be the Temple of God? The plain way should have been thus, The Ministers and people of Rome, are in one respect an apostatical church, in another a faithful church; in one respect the synagogue of Satan; in another, the Temple of God. But either my judgment faileth me, or Mr. Junius driveth at another matter; let men of understanding mind his writing.

Further I answer, by like distinction, we are to put difference between the Angels that sinned, or sinful men, simply considered as God's creatures, and the poison of syn which as an accident is grown upon them: and this is true. But shall that their being God's creatures, free them from damnation which that poison, that accident syn hath brought upon them? No man of knowledge will so say, Even so, the Man of syn, the Pope, hierarchy & people of the church of Rome, which are all in apostasy from the faith of Christ, and service of God; cannot in that estate be judged heirs of salvation, (except God turn them again to Christ,) for the scripture hath given sentence of their damnation, 2 Thes. 2. 3. 10. 11. 12.

Against their bare affirmations to prove Rome on God's behalf altogether a church, a company called of God with his calling by the spirit, and the holy Scripture, &c. And, that God calleth her with his calling, by his spirit and word, &c. I objected the Apostles testimony, God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe lies, 2. Thess. 2. 11. and this is verified by the manifold heresies, idolatries, wherewith the whole body of that Church is poisoned, And strong is the Lord God which will condemne her, Rev. 18. 8. and with the spirit of his mouth he will consume that lawless one, 2. Thess. 2. 8.

Mine opposite replieth, Might he not also thus conclude against Judah in Apostasy, that God did not cal that Church, nor any in it, or by any of them in that estate, alleging Ier. 5. 30. 31. & 6. 28. 29. 30. Ezek. 13. & 14. ch. And again, As if there were no difference to be put between the Temple of God, and that lawless one, 2. Thes. 2. 4. 8. nor between the people of God, and Babylon, Rev. 18. 4. 8. &c.

Answ. I deny not all calling of God in her, as he accuseth me; to it I have before answered. His comparison I deny. In Judah were the Lord's prophets and priests: in Rome, none but the hierarchy, which they say is the Man of syn, no members but ulcers in the body. Let them show me a Jeremiah or Zephanie now in Rome, or a lawful ministry of God therein; as was in Judah, till the captivity, reckoned by the holy Ghost, 1. Chron. 6. 3.—15. Let them show me a company that abstaineth from, and crieth out against their abominations in Rome, as was in Judah and Jerusalem, Ezek. 9. 4. or a basket of good figs, which God acknowledged for his people, Ier. 24. 2. 5. 6. Finally, they still plead for Rome, by the name of Jerusalem; when the holy Ghost calleth it Babylon; Rev. 17. & 18. chap. Such calling as was out of Babylon, I grant unto them. As for the Temple of God, I have before answered their plea from the same.

They pleaded the public record of holy marriage, the scripture, and the ministry, &c. I answered, the scripture showeth no such marriage, but doth defy her as an harlot, Rev. 17. 1. Where is the record that Christ was ever married to the Beast that came up from the bottomless pit, Rev. 17. 8. If her having the book of holy scripture in an unknown tongue, wickedly abused to maintain her whoredoms and abominations, and subjected to the interpretation of her Lord God the Pope, be a record of that holy marriage: the Jews, which have Moses and the Prophets read and expounded in their mother tongue, have better records, &c.

Mine opposite saith, The Scripture showeth record of the marriage of that church, Rom. 1. 7. 8. & 7. 4. & 16. 19.

Answ. It is denied: for this is not that church, but another harlot arisen since, falsely boasting to be the same. 2. That church consisted of officers and people, all jointly married to Christ, Rom. 12. if this record will serve now for the people of Rome, it will serve also for the Bishop and ministry of Rome, (the hierarchy) which they confess to be the Man of syn, 2. Thes. 2. the great Antichrist▪ so then the Scripture showeth belike, that Christ and Antichrist have been married together. And seeing the marriage of Christ with his Church, is by faith, Hos. 2. •0• and the Pope hath still the same faith that the people hath, his marriage standeth as well as theirs. 3. The Scripture showeth like marriage with the churches of Ephesus, Philippi, Thessalonica, and many other; which have revolted to Mahomet, as Rome hath to the Man of syn: so then we must account those Churches still married unto Christ, by the same record. But they will deny those churches to continue the marriage; so do I this. Besides, if he had considered the scripture, Rev. 19 7. 8. he might have seen a new marriage between Christ and his Church: which needed not have been, if the former marriage had continued undissolved, as he supposeth.

Object. Neither is it anything that he saith, God doth defy her as an harlot, Rev. 17. 1. For (besides that he putteth no difference between Babylon and the Church or Temple of God) what will he say to Israel, yea to Judah also and Jerusalem: thinks he not that God defied them also as harlots? Ier. 3. 8. 11. with Isaiah. 1. 21. &c. yet the scripture shows record of •hew marriage with God, Exod. 19. 4. 5. 6.. & Ezek. 16. 8. &c.

Answ. What difference he would make between the Whore of Babylon, Rev. 17. and the Church of Rome whom himself proclaimeth to be a notorious harlot and idolatress, I cannot comprehend. Some that are dazzled, may think one thing to be two or three: I find in Rev. 17. but one notorious harlot Babylon; if they grant that she was never married to Christ, it is all that I desire. That Israel (the twelve tribes) was married to Christ, and after ten of them became an harlot, and was divorced, I grant: and so her adulterous sister Judah▪ afterward. The same I acknowledge for the churches of Rome, Corinth, Ephesus, &c. But since they were divorced from Christ, and married to Mahomet, and Antichrist; there remaineth no more record of their former marriage; ill they return again to the Lord, out of Babylon unto Jerusalem the holy city, which is prepared as a Bride, adorned for her husband, Rev. 21. 2.

Of my next words, mine opposite maketh a wonderment. But it exceedeth all (saith he) that he blusheth not to ask, where is the record that Christ was ever married to the beast that came up from the bottomless pit? Rev. 17. 8. To the beast! That Christ was ever married to the Beast! Did Mr. Junius ever say so? Or thinks he that ever it entered into his thought? Did not Mr. Junius speak expressly of the Church? Will this man never learn to put difference between the Beast and the Church? between the Man of syn and the Temple of God? &c.

Answ. It seemeth that his wonder made him to forget himself. Sayd he not even now, it was evident that Mr. Junius in one respect acknowledged the Hierarchy to be an order or estate of apostasy in the Church; and in another respect he esteemed the ministry of God's holy things to be there? So then, though the Hierarchy only be the Beast (as mine opposite thinketh) and though in respect of the Apostasy it is not married to Christ, yet in respect as it is God's ministry, though corrupted, it is married to Christ. But behold how their doctrines are admirable to themselves. The ministers of the Church of Rome, are of the same religion, faith and holiness with the people: the people he will have to be still married to Christ; but the ministers in no wise; he cannot endure to hear of it; especially when it cometh under the scripture names of the Man of syn, or the Beast. And where he asketh if I will never learn to put difference between the Beast and the Church, &c. I do put difference, though not so great as he would have me: for the Beast, and the whore that rideth him, Rev. 17. though they differ, yet are they so nearly conjoined, that if one be married to Christ, the other is also. But why doth he not teach from the scriptures what the Beast signifieth? I have learned from the Prophet Daniel, that a Beast, meaneth a Kingdom, Dan. 7. 23. and a kingdom by light of reason consisteth of King and subjects, of governors and people; and Mr. Junius himself telleth us so, saying, A kingdom is a multitude of men gathered under one King. As the Christian kingdom therefore consisteth of Christ, his ministers, and people: so doth the Antichristian, of Antichrist, his ministers and people. This Beast hath seven heads and ten horns, Rev. 17. 3. the ten horns are said to be ten Kings, v. •2. (as in Dan. 7. 24. the ten horns out of that kingdom, are ten kings:) these kings are none of the hierarchy: wherefore the whole body of this beast containeth more then the Pope and his hierarchy. The Lamb against whom the Beast with his horns fighteth, Rev. 17. 14. Mr. Junius expoundeth to be Christ and his Church: why may not we by like reason expound the Beast to be Antichrist and his Church? Finally, the Beast (saith Mr. Junius * himself) is the Roman Empire, made long ago of civil▪Ecclesiastical, the chief head whereof he maketh the Pope to be▪▪ And the Beast of Rome (saith he) of a civil Empire, is made an ecclesiastical Hierarchy. The Whore he expoundeth to be the spiritual Babylon, which is Rome: so then, by mine opposites plea, neither did Mr. Junius say, neither ever entered into his thought, that the ecclesiastical Roman Empire since the Pope was head of it, or the hierarchy, was ever married unto Christ. As for the Whore, the Church which rideth this Beast, he calleth it the False-Christian Church over which Antichrist ruleth, and Antichrists Church: (which title mine opposite will not bear at my hand:) and that Antichristian Church which the Angel biddeth cast out, and measure it not, in Rev. 11. 12. Mr. Junius explaineth thus, As if he should say, it belongeth nothing to thee to judge those which are without, 1. Cor. 5. 12. which be innumerable; look unto those of the household only, or unto the house of the living God. Notwithstanding all this, Mr. Johnson would needs measure it for the true Church, House, and Temple of God: so well do Mr. Junius and he accord together.

To a testimony which I alleged out of D. Fulk, concerning the miserable blindness of people in Popery, (of which mine opposite saith, he might have been better advised,) he to require me, as he thinketh, allegeth a speech of Mr. Broughtons, who saith, Millions of millions of Rome's clients are saved: Brought. on Rev. 13. 18. p. 203.

Answ. Would he be content that Mr. Broughton should decide our controversy touching the Church of Rome? Thus then saith that author in the same book; The Popes clients are the tail of the great Dragon. Thence (from Rome) was the Rebellion to arise, Man of syn, Apollyon, &c. to set up, or depose states; and to have a people of his own frame; and to burn the true Temple of God. The Popes power, driveth the Church, not to be seen for certain hundreds of years. (The Pope) wresteth all that is spoken of the true Church, into protection for his synagogue of Satan. Rome passeth all the enemies of the Church, in cruelty and idolatry. Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar were never so hardened. The profane Caesar's did not so strictly hinder all use of Religion. Rome hath far passed the old Babel in idolatry. The Pope followeth all heathen superstition, in name, staff, apparel of Caesar's, and Temples; setting but a face of Christianity upon them. All their doctrine is such, that their Temples, Mass, and daily profession in all things, is from the unclean spirit: and their whole policy is a lie. The Beast which is ascended out of Abyssos, that is, all his eorporations, millions of millions, alpapists, go from their Abyssos of black ignorance, unto Abyssos Luk. 8. whither the Devils shall come in their time to be tormented forever & ever. These & sundry the like commendations doth the author alleged give of the church of Rome, which mine opposite pleadeth for: and taking hold of a phrase, wresteth it for his purpose, from the man's meaning; who seemeth not to speak of the popish church, but of the ancient Christian; for these are there Mr. Broughtons words. And for Julius the captain, who was so careful for S. Paul, that for his sake the lie of the prisoners▪ were spared, Act. 27. God would not record this, but to save millions of millions of Rome's clients for S. Paul: but for the unthankful to S. Paul, and forgers that Peter was at Rome, who never came near it; he still reserved Pilats holiness, that Popes self-murder should be the reward. Was not here a testimony well alleged? So in other places of his book, he quoteth Mr. Brightman, and others; whose writings directly cross that which he pleadeth for in many things; as they that read the authors may see; and anon I will set down their sayings. No marvel then if he wrest my words; as where next he saith, that that which the Apostle speaketh of the Man of sin, and of them that perish, because they receive not the love of the truth, &c. 2. Thess. 2. 9. I apply (for exclusion from pardon and certain condemnation) to the whole Church of Rome, and so to all the members thereof, and that for all ages that either have been, are, or shall be, ever since the Man of syn was seated there.

Answ. I said no more but thus. God (if it were granted that he is the husband of this whore) hath promised her no pardon, but delivered her to Satan, to be seduced, deluded, damned, 2. Thes. 2. 9. 11. 12. I speak not here of those in Rome that have withstood her whoordoms, which have been many; nor of those, to whom at last God hath given repentance unto life, which I hope are moe; nor of other his elect: but of the whore in general, whose damnation is shown in Rev. 17. and 18. yea the Apostle speaketh more particularly, That they all might be damned, who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. Behold how he saith, they all: which some evil minded man might urge against the Apostle, as mine opposite doth against me. But wise men know that the promises of life to the true Church pertain not to the reprobates that are in it: so the threatenings of death to the false Church, take not hold on God's elect which are therein.

Object. If this harlot the Church of Rome, was never Christ's spouse, otherwise then all the world was by our first parents Adam and Noah: how then hath she broken the covenant of wedlock if she never were in it? how can she be called a whore in respect of Christ, anymore then the heathens, that never knew God in Christ? How can she be said to be in Apostasy? &c.

Answ. Of the state of the Gentiles I have spoken before; and proved them to have been all in the covenant of grace in Christ: from Gen. 9. 9. &c. But they generally fell from God to idolatry, (which is whoredom) and apostasy: and were in time rejected of God: who renewed his covenant with one small nation of the Jews, and yet saved his elect among the Gentiles also. So the Christian Churches planted by the Apostles, soon fell from God, and in time were rejected of God; some given over to Mohometisme, some to popery. Yet God hath preserved his little Church, fled into the wilderness, Rev. 12. and saved his elect also in false Churches. I compare these not with the Gentiles at this day, but with the Gentiles before Christ's coming, whiles sacrificing was lawful; as I am taught of God, Rev. 11. and 17. and 18. with the old Babylonians & Egyptians. In those times Tyrus was an harlot, Esa. 23. 16. Nineveh was an harlot, Nahum. 3. 4. and so other nations then by like equity were harlots: and Rome likewise at this day. Who knoweth not, that a woman which is divorced from her husband, (as Israel was from God,) for whoredom, and followeth that trade still; may still be called a harlot? I deny not, but in a large kind of speech, Rome at this day, may be said to have been once married to Christ, in respect of the Christian church that once was there: but so all the Gentiles were in respect of the covenant with Noah. Neither doubt I to say, that the Jews even now do go a whoring from their God; for Moses and the prophets so speak of them, yet actually there is now no covenant between God and them. The out-cries which he maketh unto the Anabaptists to hearken, and to the Reformed Churches to hang down their heads, &c. I omit, as the gall of bitterness which ran too fast out of his pen.

To prove them the same Church which was in Paul's time, he citeth Moses propheties of Israel, Deut. 32. which were the same people & their seed: whereas he should rather have looked on, 2. King. 17. 24.—34. and compared these with the men of Babylon, Cuthah, &c. that came and possessed the Lord's land, and received some part of Israel's religion with their own old idolatry: for so I shown the present estate of this Popish church. And the example of other churches that were in Corinth, Ephesus c looked upon at this day, will confirm it.

About my answer for the godly fathers of the Jews, and wicked fathers of these Antichristians, which the holy Ghost maketh to be Gentiles, Sodomites Egyptians &c. Rev. 11. 2. 8. 18. he saith If I mean this of the city of Rome, I speak not to the point: if of the church of Rome; then he objecteth Ezek. 16. 3. thy father was an Amorite &c.

Answ. His distinction between the city and church of Rome, serveth him in no stead. It was true in Paul's time, when the city was heathen, and a Christian church in it. But now the city is Christian Rome, the Empire is an ecclesiastical empire, as I shown before from Mr. Junius own grant.

The Amorites were not those fathers for whose sake the Jews are loved: but Abraham Isaac and Iakob, out of whose loins the Jews naturally came. But this church of Rome now, is not the child of that primitive church, either in nature or in grace. In place she succedeth them, and so the Mahometists in place succeed other Christian churches planted by th Apostles. And in pretence she is the same Christian church; but as Satan in pretence is an Angel of light.

But the strangers (saith he) that came to Israel, in times of sincerity or of apostasy, were of the church of Israel as well as the Jews, though not of the same natural posterity. 2 Chron. 15. 9. & 30. 25. 5. 6. 7. Lev. 16. 29. Num. 9. 14.

Answ. But the strangers that wasted Israel, and dwelt by force in their land, though they were taught how they should fear the Lord, by a Priest, yet were not that church, of whom Moses wrote: 2 King. 17. 24. 27. 28. So the Goths, Vandals, Saracens, &c which overcame Italy Spain &c and dwelt there, though the priest of Rome taught them his religion, are not the ancient church, of whom Paul wrote. Besides, he hath strained things too far: for diverse Christians are at this day apostate and become Jews: can we say of them, as Paul doth of the natural Jews, As touching the election, they are beloved for the Fathers, Rom. 11. 28. I understand that speech, of the Jewish nation in general, not of particulars which perish through unbelief; as also of the natural Jews, (who refused the gospel for the time, and still do;) and not to concern their proselytes, which they beget to their apostasy. For there is a special regard to the Jews, because they were natural branches, though now broken off; as the Apostle showeth Rom. 11. 21 24.

Obj. The many changes of the Roman state, and troubles by the Goths, Uandals, &c: these specially concern the Roman state touching the city & Empire &c: whereas our question is only of the church of Rome.

Answ. As the state of the Empire is changed, yet in some respect is the same, for the Beast was, and is not, and yet is, Rev. 17. 18. so is the church, and ministry thereof; it was, and is not, and yet is. A man may speak to the Bishop of Rome now, as Ezekiel did to the heathen king of Tyre, Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God, &c. Ezek. 28. 13. to weet in his predecessor Hiram, which had been a proselyte in the church of Israel, 2 Chron. 2. as the Hebrews R. D. Kimchi & Sol. Rashi upon Ezek. 28. and some Christian writers do expound it. So I may say to the Pope, Thou hast been a Christian Bishop, a starr in Christ's right hand; because such was the Bishop of Rome in Paul's time. But mine opposite himself holdeth the Pope and his hierarchy now to be the Man of syn, the son of perdition, and thought it most strange in me, that I should ask when ever Christ was married to that Beast. Now it is as strange, that he pleadeth for the whore of Babylon, the Antichristian church. He would exclude the hierarchy or ministry, because of their apostasy; I also for the same do exclude the church; for the priests and people of Rome are of one faith and religion; if the one be cut off from Christ, so is the other. It cannot be denied but they all have the mark of the Beast upon them; for to take Mr. Junius own exposition, The mark of the beast (saith he) is their Chrism, by which in their sacrament of Confirmation, they oke servile unto themselves, the persons and doings of men &c. and as for the sign left by Christ, (of which Chap. 7. 3.) and the holy sacrament of Baptism, they make void &c.

Obj. He cannot show that ever the church of Rome, ceased to be, since it was first planted, but it hath continued still either in sincerity or apostasy even to this day. Nor can he show that the Lord hath yet put them out of his covenant, or given thm a bill of divorce, or that they have lest off to baptize in his name.

Answ. Neither can he show that the Ministry ever ceased in that church, but hath still continued either in sincerity or apostasy: or that the Lord put the ministers out of his covenant, or that they have left off to baptize in Christ's name. Yet he now excludeth the ministers from being Christ's, he makes them Antichrist, the Beast, the Man of sin, the son of perdition, &c. and is offended that I should speak of their marriage with Christ. And Mr. Junius maketh them accidents, ulcers, and no members of the body; as we have seen. 2. Neither can he show that the churches of the Gentiles ceased to be after their first planting, Gen. 9. but continued still either in sincerity or apostasy, even till the Apostles time; and sacrificed still unto God, and in his name. Let him show when old Babylon was divorced from God: and it will as soon appear that this new Babylon is divorced also.

Object. The Papists plead that Rome standeth not where it did on the seven hills: and the Pope sits on the other side the river, on the hil Uatic•ne, &c. Jn like sort is the answer for the church of Rome, and the changes in religion and state, &c.

Answ. Is this a fit comparison, the change of place, and the change of religion? If it be, then as a man going from England to India, is the same man still: so if he go from the religion in England, to the religion of the Indians, which is Paganism, he is of the same religion that he was still. Or, to keep nearer the point in hand, the Bishop of Rome at this day, notwithstanding all changes of his faith and state since the Apostles time, is a true Christian Bishop still: then he is not Antichrist, the Man of syn spoken of in 2. Thess. 2. as mine opposite saith he is.

Object. Many of those people that made the invasions, became Christians themselves, and so the Church was increased. Not to speak how the very catalogue of the Bishops of the Church of Rome giveth evidence against him. Or will he say, that though there were Bishops of that Church, yet there was not a church whereof they were Bishops?

Answ. So, many of the Babylonians, Cuthims, &c. that invaded Israel, were taught the manner of the God of Israel, and feared the Lord, and had Priests of Israel, which sacrificed for them, 2, King. 17. •4. 25. 27. 32. 33. But what saith the Scripture? Everyone that is joined (to Babylon) shall fall by the sword: their children also shall be dashed to pieces, &c. Esa. 13. 15. 16. And God will cut off from Babylon, name and remnant, son and nephew, Esa. 14. 22. The catalogue of Bishops (if it will do him any pleasure) serveth for the Pope, the Man of syn, the great Antichrist, to prove him a true Christian Bishop, successor of Peter, (whom they falsely put the first in their catalogue;) Now he will not have the Hierarchy to be the church, no of the Church, but accidents, ulcers, gangrenes, and I know not how vile: but the people the church, that turned from paganism to the Pope, or fell with him from Christianity to popery, they are the Temple of God, the Church of Christ, in the covenant of grace. How great partiality is this in men, to magnify the people for their faith and religion, and to despise the Bishops and ministers, that are the chief teachers and maintainers of the same faith & religion, making them accidents, hang-bies, scabs, ulcers, gangrenes, and all that bad is. So his questions of the time when the Church ceased, are answered with the like, when the ministry ceased? Let the year be named when the true Christian ministry was abolished out of the church of Rome, and Antichrist the Man of syn come in the place: & I will answer, in the same year, the people that were fallen with him to the same idolatries, heresies, and to worship him as God in the Temple of God; ceased to be the true Christian Church, and became a synagogue of Antichrist.

Object. His esteeming of the state of the church of Rome in apostasy▪ to be but as the state of the Is•••elites, Edomites, and as Adonisedek with his Amorites and Jebusites in Jerusalem, is disproved and contradicted by himself, when he maketh them like Israel and Judah in their apostasy, Animadv. p. 84.

Answ. It is not contradicted by myself, neither can it be disproved by any. For myself, my words (in the place which he quoteth) are these. She (the Church of Rome) fell into apostasy soon after Paul's time, for then themystery of iniquity did work, & many Antichrists were gone out whiles the Apostles lived. For which their apostasy (like Jsraels) when they would not repent (as Christthreatned some that were new fallen into such sins) the candlestick (the Church) was removed; the Church of Rome, as Paulforewarned, for unbelief was cut off among others; and for a punishment of their apostasy, God▪ delivered the East Churches into the hands of Mahomet, and the West Churches into the hands of that false horned Beast, Antichrist: even as Israel and Judah of old for their like sins, were delivered into the hands of the Assyrians and Babylonians.

By which I show, that as the Christians that fell to Mahometisme, ceased to be God's true Churches: so they likewise that fell to Antichristianism. He could not deny the first, nor disprove the latter: for Paul saith of the Antichristians, God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned, &c. • Thess. 2. 11. 12. For the Ishmaelites and Edomites, they were Abraham's natural seed: so can no man prove the Church of Rome at this day, or any one in it, to be the natural seed of the Christians of Rome in Paul's time. The Ishmaelites and Edomites were fallen from Abraham's faith: the Church of Rome at this day is much more fallen from the Apostles faith taught to the church of Rome by him. Whosoever will bring them both to the trial, it will soon appear; but this trial mine opposite everywhere shunneth. Melchizedek was king of Jerusalem in Abraham's time, Gen. 14. and then none doubteth▪ but there was a true church. Adonisedek was king of Jerusalem in Joshua's time, Ios. 10. both kings, both of the same city; by name, the one King of justice, the other Lord of justice, as pretending to be the successor of Melchizedek; and not more departed from his faith, then the Pope is from Paul's.

Obj. Mr. Junius knew that there dwell Jews in Rome, who are not of the Church; and that the natural posterity of the Saints, may become Jews, Turks, Pagans; and saith, the church may at length cease to be a church, when God ceaseth to call it back, and takes away the evidence of their holy marriage, that is, the holy Scripture out of the hand of the adulteress.

Answ. So Mr. Junius knew that there dwelt Gentiles in Israel, who were not of the Church, Deut. 14. 2. But it is well, that neither dwelling in the place, nor being of the natural posterity, is any sure proof that a people continueth a church. We must then have some other proof, namely continuance in the faith of Christ; which the church of Rome doth not, but is revolted to Antichrist and his infidelity. Where he maketh God's ceasing to call it back a sign of the churches ceasing: first, it is barely said, without proof. Secondly, it is obscure what calling back he meaneth. For take the thousand year after Christ, and see what calling back had Rome. Was it by her own ministry or hierarchy? They were the Man of syn, the ulcers of the church, they called her further from God, but not back from syn. Extraordinary prophets at that time, I think there will scarce be found any: but grant that there were; doth not God so call back the Jews and Turks at this day? Do not some turn to Christianity, and persuade others to turn? Do not some suffer death among the Turks, for the truth? Do not some write books now to the Jews in their own tongue, to call them back unto God? yet are not the Jews therefore the church. God called back the Gentiles from their apostasy▪ by the Apostles preaching, Mark. 16. 15. and before, he sent Jonah to the Ninevites, yea Judah and Israel he scattered among the heathens, who called them back from idolatry, as Daniel did Nebuchadnezzar, and Belshazzar. And the Gentiles seated near Canaan, had always as much means to be called to the Lord's mountain, by the Israelites trading with them, as the church of Rome hath at this day. Besides the prophets that God raised up among the very Gentiles to call them from Idols unto God: as Sibylla, whose prophesies were famous among the heathen Greeks and Romans. But for taking the Scriptures out of the adulteresses hand: if ever church had it, Rome hath had it. For the Scriptures were in a manner buried, kept in the closets of the hierarchy, the people might not have them in their mother tongue, nor read them, on pain of death. Were the Scriptures ever so taken out of the Jews hand? Nay they all have them, read and study them more then many Christians. And now that Bibles are printed, and so common: how is it possible the Scriptures should be taken out of any heretics hands, otherwise then they have been from Rome? When God gave Israel the bill of divorce, did he take the Scriptures out of her hand? If not, (as in deed he did not) then is not this a true rule, that an adulterous church is never divorced, nor ceaseth to be Christ's church, till the Scriptures be taken out of her hands. Mr. Junius elsewhere hath written better, when speaking of some apostate churches of Christians, as Marcionists, Ualentinians, and others, of whom Jerome saith, They were not the Church of Christ, but the Synagogue of Antichrist: he readily granteth it, because they denied the fundamental Articles of the doctrine of faith. The like he granteth to Irenaeus assertion, because (saith he) he spake of heretics and schismatics which retained not the truth in the foundation thereof. Now let us compare this with the former. Did God cease to call back those heretics and schismatics? Were there not many learned Doctors that disputed and wrote against them: by whose means God still called them to repentance? Or did God take the Scriptures out of those heretics hands: when they from them and by them pleaded for their heresies? Thus the rule which Mr. Junius hath given us for the church of Rome, agreeth not with himself. And if those heretical churches were not Christian, but Antichristian synagogues: then is the church of Rome much more, which worshippeth the greatest Antichrist, the man of syn, and denieth the foundation of Christian religion, believing as the Pope believeth, who either denieth the Father and the Son, or else he is not the Antichrist, 1. John. 2. 22. And that the Apostle meaneth not only of open and direct denial, but of indirect and denying in deed when by word he professeth Christ, Mr. Junius himself, D. Whitaker's, Mr. Brightman and others (that have answered Bellarmine's 14. chap. de Rom. Pontif. l. 3.) do soundly prove. Now as the Pope denieth Christ, so doth the Whore of Babylon, the Romish church, holding the same heresies and idolatries: that if the Pope be Antichrist, then is the church of Rome an Antichristian synagogue, and not the true church of Christ.

By this also mine opposites insultation against me, as if I wrote errors and contradictions irreconcilable touching apostate churches, is taken away. For as I never denied, but some apostate churches continued true churches, till the candlestick was removed for their impenitence; so neither could he, nor can any truly deny, but some apostate churches are mere synagogues of Satan: as those Antichrists mentioned 1. John. 2. 19. & those heretical churches whō Mr. Junius himself denieth to be true Christian churches, because they retained not the foundation. And such by necessary consequence, is the church of Rome at this day. But it it is a needless and wearisome labor to follow mine opposite in his tautologies and repetitions of the same things again and again, to enlarge his work, besides his manifold reproaches.

I said of this Roman church, It is not the woman fled into the wilderness▪ Rev. 12. 14. but another woman or city, reigning over the King's of the earth, Rev. 17. 1. 18. &c.

What then, (saith he) difference is to be put between the inward parts of the Temple, and the outward; the parts measured, and the parts unmeasured, between God's Temple, Altar, and worshipers therein, Rev. 11. 1. and the court of the Temple given to the Gentiles, and the holy city trode down by them 42. months, v. 2. If it be not one of these, shall it therefore be none of them? If it be not the inward part of the Temple, will it follow it is not the outward? &c.

Answ. He should have said, though she be not the company of worshipers of God, whom he measureth▪ yet may she be the company of Gentiles that tread down God's courts and city, whom he casteth out as unmeasured. But he leaveth the comparison of persons, and runneth to things, God's ordinances which she abuseth. Of that Scripture, Rev. 11. we have spoken before. Of these two women in Rev. 12. and 17. the Scriptures are so plain, that none of good understanding can mistake the one for the other; or (as this man doth) make the one a part of the other, as if both put together, should make one Temple, one woman, one Church. When the one persecuted, flieth from the Serpent or dragon, the other in the Dragons throne persecuteth, reigneth, triumpheth; abusing and treading underfoot God's ordinances which belong to the persecuted woman; as the Babylonians abused the vessels of God's sanctuary, burned and trode down the holy city, the place of the woman's assembly.

His question, When was the time that the woman fled into the wilderness? is nothing to the purpose. For whensoever she fled, seeing this other woman is not she; but the foolish waman which opposeth her self and her doctrines unto Wisdom, (as in Prov 9. 13. 14. 15. 1. 2. &c.) men should know, that the dead are with her, and her guests are in the depths of hell.

He again injurieth me, when he saith I here make the church of Rome (she that now is) to be also the court of God's Temple, and holy city. I make her to be the company of Gentiles (like the Babylonians of old) that tread down the holy city: and it is he that speaketh M. Sm. language, whiles he maketh the Jews (not the Babylonians) to be the types of these Antichristians, as we have formerly heard. And it is his continual fallacy in reasoning, when speech is of the persons, to fly to the things and ordinances typed by those holy places: as if Jerusalem because it was always the holy city, even when it was ruined; could give holiness to the profane Gentiles, that burned and trode it down.

I said, The heathens in their Altars, Temples, Sacrifices, had the divine things of God among them, as well, if not better then hath the Man of Syn and his worshipers, in their sacrifice of the Mass, and other manifold id•luries.

He replieth: Why saith he not, then hath the church of Rome in her baptism, and other divine things of God among them, though corrupted?

Answ. Behold here again a plain tergiversation. I compare the sacrifices of the Gentiles with the sacrifice of the Antichristians: he shunneth this, and would have me speak of their baptism. As if the Lord's Supper were not as holy as Baptism. But he is a frayd once to meddle with the Lord's supper in Rome, (as we have seen before,) and will have me write what he thinks good, when the reason which I bring is too hard for him. And yet he knoweth, that elsewhere I speak as much of their baptism. But thus he would here evade. So I speaking of the Man of syn (which in his own understanding is the hierarchy,) and of his worshippers, the popish multitude, he tells me Mr. Junius speaketh of the church of Rome, and distinguisheth between it, and the Man of syn with his hierarchy. As if I also did not speak of that church, when I mention the worshippers of the man of syn: which whiles he (by Mr. Junius help,) would prove to be Christ's true church in his covenant of grace, contrary to the Apostle who showeth them to be in the state of damnation, 2 Thes. 2. he is forced to give ground, answereth not my reason touching the Gentiles; but presently flieth to his wonted shelter, of Judah and Israel Not regarding the instruction of the holy Ghost, who throughout the book of Revelation, mentioneth not the Israelites, but as the sealed of God, and kept from Antichrists abominations, Rev. 7. and for the Popish multitude, they are called Gentiles, Sodom, Egypt, Babylon. Rev. 11. & 17. with which when mine opposite is pressed, he flieth to Judah and Israel for an answer; as we everywhere have seen.

For the Church of Rome to be the Mother of Christians, feigned to be like the true Mother, sick, swollen with the dropsy &c. wherein he chargeth me not to answer or confute Mr. Junius; I have done both: showing by evidence of the scripture, Rev. 17. with Rev. 12. that she is not the true mother, Jerusalem; but the whore of Babylon, not sick only, but dead in her sins Rev. 20. 5. with Ephes. 2. 1. And Mr. Junius himself calleth her, the Pseudo Christian (or falsely-named Christian) church.

Mine opposite, (after that he hath again according to his wont fled to Judah and Israel,) replieth to Rev. 20. And first, He referreth us to his answer unto the like spoken before of Israel.

Answ. There he labored to prove it not death in syn, but death civilly, by overthrow of their estate. But that (say I) though it were true of Israel, cannot be the meaning here: for this speaketh of their estate, whiles Antichrist the Beast and his kingdom liveth reigneth and triumpheth, killing the saints, Rev. 20. 4. 5. so that he and his church is not dead civilly, that is, his kingdom 〈◇〉, not overthrowen all this while. Secondly God speaketh here of such a death, as is opposed to the first resurrection, verse. 5. but the first resurrection is from syn, Coloss. 2. 13. & 3. 1. and it is here said to be such, as they that have part therein, the second death hath no power on such, Rev. 20 6. but if it be but a rising from civil death, or destruction of an outward state, they should not by it be freed from the second death, which is due to such only as rise not from death of syn. So this his answer is impertinent. Besides, even Mr. Junius himself expoundeth it of them that lie dead in syn.

2. If this death (saith he) be, as some think, the apostasy spoken of 2. Thes. 2. 3. we must then remember withal, that this apostasy is in the Temple of God, verse. 4. like as there was apostasy in Judah and Israel heretofore: and that difference is to be put between God's Temple and the apostasy itself. &c.

Answ. I have shown, that this death (Mr. Junius also assenting) must needs here be understood of death in syn, or in Apostasy, if so he will have it named. Whereas after his manner he compareth it with th'Apostasy of Judah and Israel, the holy Ghost (as we have heard) compareth it with Babylon, Rev. 17. But if he grant the apostasy in Israel, was death in syn, it will help him nothing: for what people soever is dead in syn, they are not actually God's visible church, til they be raised in Christ. I grant him a difference between God's Temple and the Apostasy: for if by the Temple he mean the people of God free from apostasy, such in deed are not dead: but the people of Rome now are in apostasy, and have been long; and by the sentence of God, are dead in syn and apostasy▪ therefore they are not those living stones, built up to a spiritual house (on Christ the living stone) an holy Priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifice: and for an habitation of God through the spirit: but they are dead stones built upon Antichrist.

3. Moreover (saith he) the dead here spoken of, live again, and reig•• with Christ after the finishing of 1000. years, Rev. 20. 5. whereas he speaketh of the Church of Rome, as being long since damned and dead forever: so this Scripture will be found to be against himself.

Answ. The words of the Scripture are these, But the rest of the dead lived not again, until the thousand years were finished: this is the first resurrection, Rev. 20. 5. How maketh this against me? Doth it not show they were dead, the 1000. years of the Beasts reign? yet he would have them not dead, but sick and diseased. And how notoriously doth he wrong me, as if I made the church of Rome damned and dead forever, that is, as if there could be no mercy shown to the papists, for repentance and turning to the Lord. They are only the reprobate multitude which are damned and dead forever. Many of that church, yea even of the hierarchy, (whom my opposite holdeth to be the Man of syn, the son of perdition) being dead in their sins, God hath in mercy revived and raised with Christ, as he did in the churches of the Gentiles, Eph. 2, 1•Coloss. 2. <math>\langle \diamond \rangle. But such as are not raised from the death of Antichrist, and quickened by Christ, they perish forever. And we speak of that Church now remaining in her sinful death: unto which so continuing, no salvation is promised, but assured destruction threatened, 2. Thes. 2. Rev. 14. 9. 10. 11. Thus we see how notwithstanding all his turning and winding, and backing his error with learned men's names, these Gentiles the church of Antichrist, and worshipers of the Man of syn, are by the sentence of God dead in sins, as were the Gentiles before Christ gave them life. That such of them as the Lord shall in mercy raise up out of the grave of popery▪ shall escape the second death: the rest, do remain under God's wrath, dead in syn, and shall die in torment.

In the end, to that which I shown of that whores death otherwise, and of her burning with fire, Rev. 18. 7. 8, and of the joy which the heavenly multitude shall have at her destruction, Rev. 18. 20. & 1•. 1. 2. 3. mine opposite seemeth to assent▪ referring it to the City, resembled (as he saith) by Babylon, and Babylon's destruction that was of old, Rev. 18. with Ier. 50. & 51. Thus the truth hath wrung out at last an acknowledgement from him; as the fear and light of his conscience made him acknowledge at the first. For he began with the Church of Rome thus, acknowledging it to be fallen into most sinful and deep defection and apostasy, and so to be a notorious harlot and idolatres. This notorious harlot the holy Ghost calleth Babylon the great, the mother of horlots, and abominations of the earth, Rev. 17. 5. which is meant of the City Rome, v. 18. but of an ecclesiastical state, such as is in that city at this day. And that Babylon or church it is, whole destruction is threatened in Rev. 18. and for which there shall be joy, and singing Alleluiah, for that God hath judged the great wh•re▪ which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and shed the blood of his servants, Rev. 1•. 1. 2. 3. &c. For the destruction of this great whore (which in deed is no other then the Church of Rome) mine opposite saith with me, they shall be so far from mourning at her funeral, as they shall rejoice with the heavenly multitude, and sing Hallelujah, when the Lord hath given Sodom's judgment on her, and they see her smoke rise up for evermore, Rev. 19. 1. 2. 3. Of his own mouth now let him be judged; with what truth, equity, conscience, he hath pleaded for the church of Rome to be the Temple of God; the church of God, in his covenant of grace, and to have his baptism the seal of his covenant, even in that adulterous and most sinful estate wherein she standeth at this day under her Pastor Antichrist, whom she honoreth and worshippeth, believing his lies, serving his idols, and trusting to merit heaven by the wicked works which that Man of syn hath taught her. But (that God, for a reward of his popish error in advancing the Ministers above the church, and the pastor above his fellow ministers, gave him over to this second error) who would have thought that a man of understanding would so bitterly have inveighed against me, for denying her to be Christ's true Church; and that he would for defense of such a notorious harlot, have forsaken and written against his own former good testimony, which he witnessed against her? God's counsels are unsearchable▪ and let all that fear him, hear what the Spirit saith unto us; Hearken unto me now therefore ôye children, and attend to the words of my mouth. Let not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths. For she hath east down many wounded: yea many strong men have been slain by her. Her house is the way to hell; going down to the chambers of death. Prov. 7. 24—27.

Of other Writers.

TO his citations of Polanus, Keckerman, &c. I answered, That diverse men were mistaken in judging of that rotten Church (of Rome) which would help these our opposites nothing, who have seen and acknowledged better, and now go back. And I instanced sundry others contrary minded, as Mr. Carwright, Mr. Perkins, D. Fulk, D. Willet. Mr. Bale, all our countrymen, who deny the church of Rome to be the true Church of Christ.

Mine opposite replieth, that I say in particular of Polanus, that he was mistaken, and in this, for that he said that Antichrist must sit in the Temple of God, not Jewish or at Jerusalem, but Christian, &c. wherein, as his manner is, he drepraveth both my words and meaning. For I never dreamt that Antichrist should sit in the Jewish Temple at Jerusalem; but in the Christian Church falsely so called, as Mr. Junius nameth it in Annot. on Rev. 11. But Polanus pleadeth otherwise for the church of Rome, as mine opposite hath set down his words, Chr. plea. p. 212. And in that, I judge he was mistaken, and not I only, but many moe with me, men of greater learning, and before me; though mine opposite leaveth it with this reproach, That all (in my judgment) are mistaken hereabout, but myself and my followers.

And presently after, to that which I alleged from Mr. Cartwright, Perkins, &c. he wisheth they had written more advisedly, and more soundly. And why? even for his former often refuted reasons, of the Temple of God, and Baptism in that church; wherein he doth but beg the question, and answereth not them. For I named to him Mr. Perkins reasons, that the Papists doctrine doth rase the very foundation of Religion; and his 4. arguments in a treatise for that purpose. Now to these he answereth not one word. But the Temple of God, the Temple of God, and Antichrist must sit in the Temple of God: and Martyrs out of the Church of Rome; and where else, had they their baptism? these are his common bucklers. To which I have answered before.

And now, that the Reader may further see, how not I only, but many before me, even such as he nameth in his book for him, (as D. Whitaker's, Mr. Broughton, Mr. Brightman, and others) are direct against him, I will set down their testimonies.

What Mr. Bale, Mr. Cartwright, D. Fulk, M. Perkins, and D. Willet have written, I have shown heretofore: and them he regardeth not.

Whereas Bellarmino would conclude from the protestants grant, that the church of Rome is Christ's true Church, because it is the Temple of God, 2. Thess. 2. D. Whitaker's giveth sundry answers, the two first are these. 1. It may be called the church wherein Antichrist sitteth, because it was the true church of Christ before, not because now it is; &c. So Isaiah saith▪ the faithful city was become an harlot, Esa. 1. 21. where he calleth Jerusalem the faithful city, because it had been faithful before: so we say, the Temple of God is the seat of Antichrist, that is, that which of old was the Temple of God. 2. The Church of Rome taketh to it self the name & title of the true Church, and in the opinion of our adversaries it is the true Church. 〈ϕ〉 was a monstrous thing of old 〈ϕ〉 deny this neither was it denied but of a very few, who straight way when they were known, were killed: notwithstanding it was not the true Church, but the whore of Babylon &c. These answers when I gave, mine opposite could by no means endure at my hand.

The same author saith a little before. Now let us see whether the Bishop of Rome hath departed from Christ, and from the faith: so that the church of Rome now, reteyneth not the form of the Apostles doctrine. Surely that is evident by all the heads of doctrine, which are in controversy between us and them. That Church succeedeth the Apostles in deed, but so as a den of thieves do the house of God, and as an harlot doth the faithful city. &c. And after. But the Pope, saith Billarmino honoreth one true God, the Father, Son and holy Ghost. J answer, he honoreth him not, but blasphemeth him. He doth, I confess, as Atheists are wont to do, which will not openly deny God, but in heart and works they deny him: so the Pope signeth and preclaimeth that he honoreth the trinity, but in deed he car•h not for him. For he that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father, of the holy Ghost: but the Pope honoreth not the Son, for he corrupteth his doctrine, &c. Again, touching that particular before handled, whether by Babylon in Rev. 17. be meant the City or the Church of Rome, Mr. Whitaker's saith, Whereas the adversary affirmeth, that it is not the Church of Rome who•• is called Babylon, but the city, such as it was under the Emperors, it is false. For it is certain, that Rome is by John in the Revelation, called Babylon, because of that Church which should be at Rome. For mention is made there of the false Prophet, as also of the Whore, which by her allurements should bewitch the whole world. These things cannot be understood but of the Church, and are necessarily to be referred unto Antichrist.

Mr. Brightman in his book of the Revelation, expoundeth the Gentiles in Rev. 11. 2. to be the christiās that are so in name only. On Rev. 13. 8. he saith, The holy Ghost doth cry openly, that all they do wholly •eopard and cast away their salvation, that are subject to the Pope of Rome, if so be that they depart out of this life without repentance. And again; This Beast is worshipped of all Reprobates, with whom while thou conspirest in thy worship, who shall separate thee frō the state of reprobates? He doth not therefore break off unity, who departeth from the synagogue of Rome: but he purchaseth unavoidable destruction to himself, who cleaveth unto it, without repentance.

These and the like things saith Mr. Brightman, one whose name mine opposite useth to grace his erroneous cause by. Mr. Broughtons testimony we have heard before.

Mr. Dudley Fenner in his Theology, writeth thus; Antichrist is the head of the universal apostasy that should come, 1. John. 2. 18. John. 4. 2. 2. Thess. 2. 4. 5. 6. Wherupon his church is by a Synecdoche called Antichrist, 1. John. 4. 3. & 2. 18. as the true Church (is called Christ) 1. Cor. 12. 12. The Antichristian church, compared to a Beast, is the apostatical church, but counterfeiting the visor of the true, which representeth the lively image of the Roman monarchy formerly done away, and of the government, power, amplitude & seat thereof amongst all people's; 2 Thes. 2. 4. 5. 6. 8. Revel. 11. 7. 8. & 13. 3. 11. 12.—18. Antichrist, or the False prophet is the head of the Antichristian church, the mediator between it and the Dragon; Rev. 16. 13. & 13. 4. 11. 12. This Antichrist is an Opposer, for to defend the foresaid departing away frō the truth of Christ, (2 Thes. 2. 4. compared as touching the phrase with Dan. 8. 11.) and an Exalter of himself▪ first that he may lift up himself against all that is called God, or that is worshiped; that is, against all powers and majesties, both earthly & heavenly. 2. Thes. 2. 9. Dan. 8. 11. 36. Secondly, that placing his seat in the church in name called God's, he may show himself as God, that is, arrogate to himself the divine power, and absolute dominion of Christ: Isaiah. 31. 1. 2. 2 Thes. 2. 4. Dan. 8. 25.

Napier, (the Noble of Scotland) expounding the Revelation, saith. But as for the outward and visible face of the pretended church, it must be rejected from God, and no care, measure nor account had by him thereof; because it must be given over to Antichristian and idolatrous people, who shall subdue his holy church and spiritual Jerusalem, and tread it underfoot 1260. years. God's true church and spouse, was chased away and remained invisible and soliturie, among certain private persons, predestinate & elect of God. But the rest of the people that lay dead in Antichristian errors, arose not therfrom to embrace the word of life, ill &c. But the rest, J mean the whole outward visible church, lay wholly as dead and corrupt with papistocal errors.

Of the Baptism in the Church of Rome.

Although the former things against the Church of Rome, be enough to disprove her baptism, which is ordained of God only for his Church, and those in his covenant, out of which Rome is gone: yet because mine opposite urgeth some special reasons against me, for the same; I will also briefly answer them.

About this point, he hath nine reasons; in his Christian plea, pag. 27...30.

1. The first, which is against the repeating of Baptism again: I grant him: neither do I hold it needful or lawful to repeat again the baptism received in false churches.

2. The second, being for the same purpose, I likewise grant. As also, that there is one baptism, as there was one circumcision: which plea of his, I would have noted, because of his contrary reasoning afterward. Likewise his example from Israel, whose circumcision was not repeated; I hold very fit. But let the Reader observe, how the Scriptures by him brought to prove it, are 2. Chron. 30. chap. & Ezr. 6. 19. 20. 21. of which the first was before the captivity, the other after.

3. The third, that the covenant of grace is everlasting, is also true: but should have this addition, taught of the holy Ghost, To such as keep his covenant, & that remember his commandments to do them: Psal. 103. 17. 18. For, if we deny him, he also will deny us, 2. Tim. 2. 12. That God hath regard to his covenant in Apostaticall churches and estate, is also true: but barely by him set down, without showing how. That Moses teacheth us in Levite. 26. namely, that the Israelites for their apostasy and forsaking of God, should be chastised; and if they would not amend, they should at last be scattered among the heathen, and perish among them: and they that are left, if they confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers; and if their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, &c. then God will remember his covenant with Jacob, and will not cast them away, nor abhor them, to destroy them utterly, to break his covenant with them; but will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors.

4. The fourth, of Christ's dying once, and our being once baptized: I also grant.

5. The fifth, that the Church of Rome was espoused to Christ, and had his baptism in the Apostles days: is true. But where he addeth, that she hath ever since retained it, with other grounds of Christian religion; there he goeth too far. For many grounds of Christian religion she hath forsaken: as all that are not Papists will acknowledge. Wherefore he addeth a qualification, either for faith, or order, or both, in whole or in part. This is so large as will bring in, not only the heathens of old, but all the old condemned heretics in the Apostles days and after, yea even the very Jews and Turks at this day. For in part they retain the grounds of Christian religion. It is a ground of Christian religion to believe that there is one God: and that the very Devils (as the Apostle saith) do believe, I am. 2. 19. But not to go so far, as I grant him that the Papists in baptism retain Christ's ordinance in whole or in part; so he cannot deny, but also in the Lord's Supper (now turned to an abominable idolatrous Mass,) they retain Christ's ordinance in whole or in part; and so in other their abominations. The Pope himself, the great Antichrist, the son of perdition, reteyneth Christian religion in part. The image of God wherein he made man at the first, Gen. 1. 26. remaineth in all men still in part, as the Scriptures testify, Gen. 9. 6. I am. 3. 9. Wherefore if the reteyning of things in part, holdeth men still in the state of grace and salvation: who then shall be damned? What a wide gate is here opened into the kingdom of heaven, that if men retain Christian religion, either for faith or order, or both; in whole or in part, they remain still in the church and covenant of grace: which is quite contrary to the doctrine of Christ, and of his Apostles, Math. 7. 13. 14. 22. 23. 1. Cor. 6. 9. 10. Gal. 5. 19. 20. 21.

6. His sixth reason, from the Jesuits profession made in their Reims Testament &c, I have before answered; it being in his second argument made for the church of Rome. And that which he addeth of their baptising with water in the name of the Father &c: is of no more weight to justify their baptism; then the like elements of bread and wine, and the words of Christ's institution This is my body &c, are to justify the Popish Mass to be the true supper of our Lord. Of which Mass, (to omit that which many others have written of the abomination of it)

Mr. Calvin saith thus, The Mass •n itself is a ronouncing of the death of Jesus Christ, and a sacrilege forged by Satan, utterly to abolish the sacrament of the Supper.

7. His seventh reason, that Jews and Pagans are turned to the popish Christian •aith; was also refused in answer to his second reason brought for the church of Rome. The conclusion, that there needeth no repeating of baptism, as there was none of circumcision: is granted, and by me never denied.

8. Likewise his eight reason▪ that God hath his people in the Romish Babylon, Rev. 18. 4. under his covenant of grace; is before answered. But he should have proved (if he could) that Babylon itself (which is the church of Rome) is under the covenant of grace: that I deny, the holy Ghost showing in Rev. 17. & 18. ch. that she is under wrath, and destruction. He saith, the children of that church should plead with their mother (as the Prophets taught and dealt with Israel of old, Hos 2. 2. & 3. 1. & 4. 1. 2. 12. &c) that she take away her fornications out of her sight &c. It is true, so they should: but why doth this man diminish from the word of God? For the Prophets words are, Plead with your mother, plead; for she is not my wife, neither am I her husband; let her therefore •ut away her whoredoms &c, Hos. 2. 2. Thus do I plead against this mother church of Rome; but my opposite blameth me, and pleadeth for her, she is the wife of Christ, and not divorced▪ as before we have heard. Baptism (saith he) is not of her adulteries, but of Christ's ordinances. True, so is the Lord's supper, so is excommunication, not of her adulteries; but of Christ's ordinances; and we retain them from Christ. But that whorish church hath corrupted and adulterated all these and other ordinances of Christ, & turned them to abominable idolatries and lies; for which we also plead against her: and her sinful abuse of these divine ordinances, shall nor justify, but the more condemn her.

9. To his ninth and last reason, if baptism be renounced, then also the articles of •aith, the Scriptures and translations: likewise marriages dissolved, &c. I answer. Far be it, that we should renounce any good thing with the church of Rome abuseth▪ anymore then Paul renounced the true God, whom the Athenians ignorantly worshiped: Ac. 17. 23. Whatsoever is of divine▪ institution among Papists▪ Jews, Turks or heathens, we renounce it not; but their profanation and abuse of holy things, we do renounce. Neither can we justify their estate, or any holy thing in their sinful abuse of it • though we put difference between the things▪ which in their ow• nature are good, and the persons which are evil, Thus men, ma• see how weak and without edge his reasons are to justify the bap tisme in the church of Rome, to be in their use of it the true seal of God's covenant of grace in Christ unto them.

Next this, he setteth himself to answer objections, The first whereof he maketh this. But the baptism had in the Church of Rome, i• not true baptism: but an idol, and lying sign; a detestable and cursed sacrament; a fiction and not true Christian baptism; no better then when we wash our own face with water daily. &c.

Answ. That it is not true baptism, I constantly affirm: so did Mr. Johnson himself, whiles he stood in, and wrote for the truth. That the Papists have turned baptism into an idol: I have also formerly proved; and will maintain, against his answers. That therefore it is detestable and cursed unto them, through their abuse of it, doth necessarily follow: for the sacrifice of the wicked is an abominatiō to the Lord, Pro. 15. 8. That it should be no better then the daily washing of our face; is wrongfully imputed to us; and Mr. Cl. whom he citeth in his margin, professeth to hold no such thing. For our daily washing, is no religious action, nor sacrament at all; but baptism by heretics and apostates, is a religious action after their manner, and a false sacrament, therefore neither true, neither yet none at all; as our opposite with us once professed. Apolog. p. 110. Insted of proving it true baptism, he bringeth reasons to show, that if it were an idol and lying sign, it ought to be renounced, and another received. This he knoweth the Anabaptists do practice: so it is no conviction of, them all. But he bendeth his force now against us, and leaveth them. Let us try what he saith.

1. Because (saith he) idols and lying signs and fictions are not of God, but of the Devil, who is a liar, and father thereof, John. 8. 44. Rom. 3. 4.

Answ. I grant that which he saith: but he concludeth not the question. Idols so far as they are idols and lies; are wholly of the Devil, and so far forth to be renounced. But some idols and lies, are made of God's true ordinances, and of his good creatures; as Paul saith of the Gentiles, that they changed the truth of God into a lie; and worshiped and served the creature, Rom. 1. 25. Here the Gentiles lie, is to be done away, and their idolatry renounced: but the truth of God is to be retained, and a holy use of the good creature may be had, which they abused. So we have renounced the popish idolatry and lies which they have brought upon God's sacraments; but the truth we retain.

2. An idol, or such a baptism as is no more then a daily washing of our faces, cannot be the sign and seal of God's true and everlasting covenant, &c.

Answ. I grant it: and from his own words conclude against him; Baptism in the Church of Rome is formerly proved to be an idol: because they give to the creature and work of man's hands, that honor which is due unto Christ only. Therefore it cannot be a sign and seal of God's everlasting covenant; by his own grant. As for us, we retain no idol, but God's truth only, as before I shown.

3. The sign in a Sacrament is that which is outward and visible; which in baptism is washing with water in the name of the Lord. If this be a fiction and lying sign, in the churches aforesaid, then is it not the Lord's: and they there baptized have not then the outward visible sign, which the Lord ordained to be had of his people, and therefore are bound to get it unto them, where it may be had, Rom. 4. 11. & 6. 3. 4. Act. 10. 47. 48. &c.

Answ. 1. The first part of his reason is unperfectly set down: for washing with water is a sign of the washing away of sins, by and in God's institution only; by which institution it is to be ministered to none but the faithful and their seed, Act. 8. 36. 37. & 2. 38. 39. If it be not ministered according to this ordinance of God, it is not the sign of his grace in that abuse, though it be the thing which God in the right use hath appointed for a sign. 2. He would deceive his reader, as if we held washing should be with any other creature then water, or in any other name then the Lord's. These things we know are in themselves the true ordinances of Christ; but by Antichrist turned to a lie, whiles he falsely applieth them to his adulterous synagogue, which Christ hath given to his Church only; and whiles he idolatrously giveth that grace to the work of his sacrilegious priests, which is peculiar to Christ and his blood. It is the true sign of the covenant of Christ which is by Antichrist turned to a lie: and if we should devise to ourselves any other sign, we should be liars like him: who hath devised, cream, spittle, and other like elements, sinfully joined with his baptism.

4. That also is to be done without delay, seeing the neglect of baptism is sin, and no unbaptised may eat of the Lord's Supper, &c.

Answ. It is true: and so we, if we had not been baptized with water, &c. would do it without delay. But he trifleth, insisting upon the outward element, which he knoweth we had: and leaveth the main thing, the relation to the covenant of grace, which we had not in that Antichristian synagogue.

5. If any retain an idol baptism, &c. and presume to come to the Lord's table, they eat judgment to themselves.

Answ. We retain no idol baptism: but have put away the idol, and the lie: and retain the truth only, as before is shown. The same we answer to his sixth reason, which is but a repetition and enlargement of his former, as is his manner.

7. Neither can it be thought that repentance (which still they speak of) should ever make a lie to be a truth, and idol to be God's ordinance, &c. For though repentance findeth mercy with God for a lie, yet a lie is a lie still, and an idol-vanity. Zach. 10. 2. Ier. 10. 8. John. 8. 44. & 14. 6. & 17. 17. with 2. Cor. 6. 14. 15. 16.

Answ. It is true, of such idols and lies as the Scriptures which he citeth speaketh of; but there are other idols and lies, which by men are made of God himself, and of his word and ordinances, which by God's grace upon men's repentance and faith, are restored to the first truth. As, the Gentiles changed the truth of God into a lie, Rom. 1. 25. and changed the glory of the incorruptible God, into an image, Rom. 1. 23. and Israel changed God their glory, into the similitude of an Ox, Psal. 106. 20. When they repented of their changing the truth into a lie, they retained the truth still, and kept that God whom before they ignorantly worshiped, and of whom they had made an idol to themselves, Act. 17. 23. So for God's ordinances; as, if the Israelites had made idols of Jachin and Boaz (the two sacramental pillars in the Temple) 2. Chron. 3. 17. and had burnt incense to them, as they did to the brazen Serpent, 2. King. 18. 4. they should have repented of, and put away their idolatry, but have retained those pillars still, for such signs as God had ordained them. But such pillars and posts as Israel had invented of their own heads, and set them by the Lord's posts, Ezek. 43. 8. no repentance could make them the Lord's posts, but they must have been utterly taken away. So in Popish baptism, water is the Lord's ordinance, by them abused and turned to an idol: salt, oil, &c. are Antichrists ordinances set up also for idols; these latter we utterly reject, because they were never God's ordinances in baptism; the water we retain, having put away only the abuse and lie of Antichrist annexed thereto. If this be not so, then the Jews should not only have repented of and put away their lie, when they used those lying words, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, &c. Ier. 7. 4. but they must have destroyed the Temple it self also. And whereas the Papists and other heretics make lies of the Scriptures, and of Christ's holy words This is my body, make their idol of Transubstantiation, and the like; they should not only repent of their lies, and put away their idols; but also renounce Christ's words, and put away the holy Scriptures; if this doctrine of our opposites be true.

8. Nor do they in deed repent, who still retain such baptism, as themselves think to be an idol, &c. for true repentance bindeth us to cast away all idols, &c.

Answ. This is already answered: neither do we retain such a baptism as we think to be an idol; but that ordinance of God which was an idol by Antichrists abuse, and is through the grace of God restored unto his former truth, that only do we retain, repenting of our former abuse thereof amongst them. God himself (as I have shown) was made an idol by the Gentiles; their repentance bound them to cast away their idolatry, but to retain God still.

Whereas they say, We have gotten the Lord's baptism by coming to the Lord in true faith and repentance, who baptiseth us with the holy Ghost and with fire. As for the outward washing which we had, it need not be repeated, [as before is shown: and we may as lawfully eat the Lord's Supper, without a new washing, as the idolatrous Israelites turning to the Lord, might eat the Passover without a new cutting or circumcising. 2. Chron. 30. 1. 5. 11. 18.—25. Ezr. 6. 21.] And afterward say, We have renounced that Romish baptism, as an impure idol in their abuse, [standing up in the place of Christ and his precious blood, which it is not; pretending to give grace, and wash away sins, which it doth not] &c. they do but shift and contradict themselves, and deceive others, and still run into errors, more and more.

Answ. Great words as if he would bear down all before him. But let us hear his proofs.

For first (saith he) speaking of the Lord's baptism, they speak of that which is inward: whereas our question, is of that which is outward.

Answ. A good beginning. The Apostle saith, there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism; Eph. 4. 5. Himself also a little before, said against the Anabaptists, There is one baptism, as there was one circumcision. Now against us, he would have two baptisms, one outward, another inward. Whereas, though there be two actions, one outward, done by men, the other inward, done by God's spirit: yet both are but one baptism, one sacrament; as the outward body, and the inward soul, make not two men, but one man. A sacrament is a sacred order between the outward visible thing, and the spiritual invisible, which have a mutual proportion and likeness between them. The Apostle saith, That is not circumcision which is outward in the flesh, but that which is of the heart, in the spirit, Rom. 2. 28. 29. If they have in Rome but the outward washing, without the inward: then have they not true baptism, but a false deceitful sign. Secondly, it is not true, that I spake but of the inward work only, for I spake also of the outward; which being had in Rome, need not be repeated: as I shown by the example of the Israelites. Now which of us two shifteth, contradicteth, and deceiveth, I or he: let indifferent men say.

2. They spake (saith he) of abuses in the ministration, and opinions of the Ministers thereof: whereas our question is of the thing it self, not of the abuse.

Answ. We speak of the thing it self (Baptism) abused by the ministers and receivers; neither of which are in God's covenant; and therefore can have no true sign or seal of his covenant unto them in that estate. Secondly, if it were not for abuses and opinions of men, God and his truth, and ordinances, could never be changed into lies and idols, as the Apostle teacheth us they were, Rom. 1. 23. 25. The Athenians were idolaters against the true God; whom Paul preached, and whom they ignorantly worshiped, Act. 17. 23. If one would take them in hand to excuse them, & say, Our question is of the thing it self (the true God) and not of the Athenians abuses and opinions, were it not a worthy plea? yet such we have, for Antichristians baptism.

3. Their assertion (saith he) implieth that they had not the Lord's baptism, till they got it themselves by coming to the Lord in true faith and repentance, which is plain Anabaptistry, and covert Popery and Arminianism: whereby they debase God's grace, and exalt man's works. For it must be understood either of the inward or outward baptism: if of the inward, besides that it toucheth not the question, it implieth Popery: if of the outward, it containeth Anabaptistry.

Answ. Deliver my soul, ô Lord, from lying lips, from the deceitful tongue: Psa. 120. 2. First he citeth as my words, till they had got it themselves by coming to the Lord: whereas the word themselves, is of his own addition. Secondly, he wresteth them to such a meaning, as in his conscience he knew I never intended; namely, to debase God's grace, and exalt man's work, as do the Papists and Arminians. As if I thought that we came or could come to the Lord of ourselves, without being drawn of the Father; or, as if our coming to him were a meritorious work: which errors I abhor. 3. Neither do my words imply such a meaning; anymore then our Savior's, when he said, Come unto me all ye that labor, &c. and J will give you rest: take my yoke upon you, &c. and ye shall find rest to your souls: Math. 11. 28. 29. To conclude of that speech, Therefore they could come of themselves; or their coming should be a meritorious work, or the like: were an openinjury to our Lord's words. His two baptisms inward and outward, is before shown to be but'an evasion: we acknowledge but one baptism, Eph. 4. 5. Neither if it be understood of the outward, doth it (as he saith) conteyn Anabaptistry; for the Anabaptists do not hold that they have the outward baptism by faith and repentance, but do repeat the outward work, and baptize again; which I deny. So herein he hath done me double wrong.

4. If they had died in infancy, they had not then had the Lord's baptism, nor had been baptized with the Holy Ghost: nor any other infants there baptized.

Answ. We and all, are by nature the children of wrath, Eph. 2. 3. and being born in Antichrists church, we had not the visible covenant of promise, which is given only to Christ's Church. Albeit God hath his elect in false Churches, as among the Gentiles of old, and in Israel after they were divorced from the Lord. Jer. 3. whom he can save without baptism, as he did without circumcision. The same is answered to his fifth objection, of the same persons come to years. And is further cleared in the* answer to his second argument for the Church of Rome; where he alleged the like things. And where he saith, Either we have no outward baptism at all, confirming the covenant of God: or else we had it before we came under the Lord's covenant, and in a church divorced from the Lord. I answer; We had the outward washing with water, as the Israelites had the outward cutting of the flesh, when they were divorced from the Lord, Jer.

3. 8. which could not then confirm God's covenant to us or them in such sinful estate. But as after, when they repented, and turned to the Lord, they had their outward cutting sanctified unto them, for a sign of his covenant, and were admitted to eat of his Passover, Ezr. 6. 21. (which no uncircumcised might eat of, Exod. 12. 48.) so our washing hath been by like grace sanctified unto us, for a sign of his covenant; and we may lawfully eat of the Lord's Supper.

His 6. reason is of like nature, touching the members of the Antichristian church, that they have not the Lord's baptism, being not come to the Lord in true faith and repentance, &c. This also is before spoken of in answering his reasons for that church. The Scripture showeth them to be departed from the faith of Christ, 2. Thes. 2. 1. Tim. 4. to be dead in syn, Rev. 20. to be under the wrath of God, Rev. 14. 9. 10. 11. Our opposite himself saith of that church, She is a notorious harlot and idolatress: and of the Hierarchy (the ministers of that church, which have the same baptism with the people, and do administer baptism to that people) he saith, they are the Man of Syn, the son of perdition, 2. Thess. 2. the Beast. Rev. 13. concerning whom he could not endure that we should ask his proof that ever they were married unto Christ. And are such a people and Hierarchy, remaining in that estate, come to the Lord in true faith and repentance? If they have brought themselves by their idolatries, heresies, and innumerable sins, into a woeful estate: what are we, that we should justify those whom God condemneth. Let false prophets preach peace unto them, we must notwithstanding declare the judgments of the Lord, whose wrath is revealed from heaven, against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who deteyn the truth in unrighteousness, Rom. 1. 18.

7. Finally (saith he) Whereas they say, the outward washing need not to be repeated, and yet say also, they have renounced the Romish Baptism as an impure idol in their abuse; they use shifts, and contradict themselves. For if the outward baptism be an Idol, why do they retain it? If not, why have they renounced it?

Answ. I have formerly shown, the shift and contradiction to be in himself; who pleaded against the Anabaptists, that there is but one baptism, and now against us would have two. 2. I have also shown, that God's ordinance turned into an idol or lie; the lie, the idol, is to be renounced, the truth of the ordinance retained: so do we.

That (saith he) which they speak of their abuse, is a shift. Difference is to be put between a thing abused, and th'abuse thereof. The scriptures are the word of God, and not an impure idol to be renounced, though they be abused by the Papists and themselves &c.

Answ. when he hath naught else to answer, he casteth reproaches, and calleth my reason a shift. Would he have me so impious, as to call Baptism, the Lord's supper, or other divine ordinances, idols: unless for the syn and abuse of men, which turn them to idols, as the truth of God, was turned into a lie by the Gentiles, Rom. 1. 25. And do not I put that very difference which himself here putteth: how then is it a shift in me, more than in him. The scripture in itself is always pure: yet popish heresies falsely gathered from the scriptures, are most impure; these we reject, but hold fast the scripture. Water in popish baptism is God's good creature, Antichrist hath turned it and the action with it, into an abominable idol, as if it gave grace, and washed away syn by the work doon of a sacrilegious priest. This abomination we reject: the creature of God, is of his grace sanctified unto us, and we retain it.

Now follow his other reasons to prove it no idol, but true baptism.

1. Because an Idol, &c. is an invention of man in the worship of God. whereas Baptism in those churches, is of the holy things of God, a true sign of his covenant &c.

Answ. The first is granted him: the latter is denied: and he but beggeth the question. For neither doth the church continue in Rome which the Apostles planted: neither doth the true baptism there continue, anymore then the true Supper of our Lord, (turned by them into an abominable Mass,) or anymore then the true ministry, which is changed by his own grant into a man of syn, a Beast, and the great Antichrist. Or, anymore then the true Censure of excommunication, which they profane against such as forsake their idolatrous church.

2. Els those churches should not have a mixture of God's ordinances with their own inventions, &c but should be utterly deprived of all and everyone of God's ordinances. But they have such a mixed estate: &c.

Answ. He concludeth nothing: but should conclude, therefore it is no idol to them in their abuse, but Christ's true baptism. This I deny. And first I answer, that all the heathens had before Christ's coming a mixture of God's ordinances with their own inventions: yet were they not therefore in the covenant of grace, neither had they the true signs and seals thereof. 2. as men's inventions are idols, so God's ordinances may by men be turned into idols, as are the sacraments in Rome. For is not the wheaten God in their supper, an Idol? what mouth will deny it? Mine opposite pressed with it, passeth it over always, as if he could not see it. That thing alone, would have convinced this, and many other his reasons of like sort; if he durst have meddled with it.

3. If their baptism were an idol, then it should be syn in them to retain that baptism still: &c.

Ans. How often shall we have repetitions of the same thing? He hath been answered: the idol ought to be put away, the ordinance of God, ought to be retained? If the Jews had made an Idol of Iachin, 2 Chron. 3. 17. they should have repented of their idolatry, but let the pillar stand. And it is the great syn of the papists, that they keep their Mass, and their popish Christening, and do not put them away as they are idols, and restore them to their ancient truth, as they were Christ's ordinances.

Obj. When Israel fell into defiction, the Prophets that blamed their idolatries, did then also reprove them for not observing religiously such of the ordinances of God as were still remaining among them. Amos. 8. 5. with 2. 8. 11. 12. & 5. 4. 5. Jer. 17. 21.—27. with 2. 20.—28. & 7. c. Ezek. 20. 7. with v. 12. 13. So far were they from accounting God's ordinances retained in apostasy, to be idols, and detestable things, &c.

Answ. So we blame the papists, and all heretics, for not observing religiously God's ordinances, whether retained among them, or omitted by them. Yet were not the prophets so far from counting God's ordinances abused by them, detestable things, as he would pretend. Incense was God's ordinance, yet in Esa. 1. 13. he saith, Incense is an abomination unto me. Sacrifices were God's ordinances, yet in Esa. 66. 3. he saith, He that killeth an Ox, is as if he slew a man: he that sacrificeth a Lamb, as if he cut off a dogs neck: he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered Swines blood: he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an Idol. For these and the like reprehensions, the prophets were counted blasphemers, and persecuted and killed by the Jews: yet were there not half so many corruptions in their sacrifices, as are in baptism and the Lord's Supper now among the Antichristians: though mine opposite counteth me a blasphemer for speaking of them but as they are. And what would he say to the Passover, and all the sacrifices that apostate Israel offered; were they not detestable things through their abuse: When for offering them as they did, they were by God's law to be cut off as murderers, and sacrificers to Devils, Lev. 17. 3. 4.—7. Deut. 32. 17. compared with 1. King. 12. 28—33. 2. Chron. 11. 15. & 13. 9. & 15. 3. And was that Passover now a true sacrament and sign of Christ unto them, and seal of the forgiveness of their sins? If not, then neither was their circumcision: for God's people have not one sacrament true and another false unto them in the same sinful estate.

4. Baptism (saith he) in the defection of Christian Churches, is as circumcision was in the Apostasy of Israel. But circumcision in that estate was not an idol or lying sign, &c. but the Lord's ordinance, a true sign, had before their defection, and still continued in their apostasy; as hath also come to pass in the Christian Church, concerning baptism, Gen. 17. 7.—14. and Lev. 12. 2. 3. with 2. King. 13. 23. 2. Chron. 30. Ier. 9. 26. Ezek. 23. & 32. 24. 26. 29. 32. Also Mat. 28. 18. 19. Rom. 6. 3. 4. with 2. Thes. 2. 4. Rev. 11. 1. 2. 19.

Ans. As baptism is answerable to circumcision, so is the Lord's Supper to the Passover: all of them God's ordinances in themselves but abused by the idolatrous Israelites, and by the Antichristians to their further judgment. Yet nothing so far abused in Israel, as in the church of Rome. Did ever the Israelites believe the paschal lamb to be the very natural body of Christ, and worship it for their maker? Or did they ever add so many abominations to circumcision, as Antichristians do to baptism? or did they believe that the circumcising by the work done, took away all their sins. If they had, then I would prove against all men, that they had turned God's sacraments into abominable idols. If they did not, then he hath made no equal comparison. But take them as they were, I deny their sacraments to have been true signs of forgiveness of sins unto them in that their estate. And where is his proof for this? He citeth many Scriptures, but not one that confirmeth this point in hand. It is true they had the outward cutting of their foreskin: and so had the Canaanites of Shechem, Gen. 34. 24. but God instituted the sign of circumcision, to be the seal of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4. 11. Now one of the Scriptures which he bringeth for proof, saith, All the house of Israel were uncircumcised in the heart, Ier. 9. 26. If they had true faith, their hearts had been thereby purified, Act. 15. 9. and consequently circumcised. But they were not circumcised in heart by faith in Christ; therefore their circumcision could not seal up to them the righteousness of faith; and so was to them a lying sign through their abuse of it. Paul saith, If thou be a transgressor of the Law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision, Rom. 2. 25. They transgressed, and continued in transgression, though God called them to repentance by all his prophets, yet they believed not in the Lord their God; but rejected his statutes and his covenant that he made with their fathers, and his testimonies which he testified against them; and followed vanity and became vain, &c. and left all the commandments of the Lord their God, and made them molten images, &c. that the Lord removed them out of his sight, 2. King. 17. 13.—18. and he gave them a bill of divorce, Jer. 3. 8. and yet they continued circumcision: which could not be to them in their idolatrous and unrepentant estate, a seal of the righteousness of saith, or forgiveness of their sins, unless we will contradict all the Scriptures, Deut. 29. 18.—21. Mat. 3. 7.—10. 1. Cor. 6. 9. 10. Gal. 5. 16.—21. Rom. 8. 1—8. Rev. 22. 15.

5. The covenant of God (saith he) is an everlasting covenant, which God continueth and respecteth even in the times of apostafie, yea and when he chastiseth the transgression thereof, &c. Otherwise the ground and continuance of God's covenant and of the seal thereof, should depend on man's work and merit, and not frecly and wholly on God's grace and mercy.

Answ. The first is ambiguous and deceitful: God's covenant is everlasting, and continued in times of apostasy; but unto whom? Not to the unrepentant or unbelieving that are hardened in their sins, as were the Israelites; but to them that repent, believe, and turn to the Lord; Levite. 26. 15.—40. 41. 42.—45. Deut. 29. 19. 20. Prev. 1. 23.—33. Ezek. 3. 18.—21. & 18. 10.—13. 21. 22. 23. 24. 26. 27. 28.

The second is untrue; for though God damneth unrepentant and unbelieving sinners (as in justice he needs must, because they are not in Christ,) yet doth not the covenant or seal depend on man's work or merit. For it is God's work & grace through Christ's merits only, that men do repent, believe, and return unto him, Act. 11. 18. Eph. 2. 4. 5.—8. 9. And there is no covenant between God and man, but conditional: for without faith and holiness no man shall see the Lord, Mark. 16. 16. Heb. 12. 14. Rom. 11. 20. 21. 22. 23. Though these conditions even in men, are the work of God in them, Heb. 8. 10. 12. Whosoever is born of God, overcometh the world, sinneth not; but keepeth himself, and the wicked one toucheth him not, 1. John. 5. 4. 18. And they that teach otherwise, destroy the Gospel, and open a gap to all profaneness and licentiousness.

If God (saith he) break the covenant on his part, when men break it on theirs, then should there still be a new entering into the covenant again between God and man: and a new baptism daily received again, as the sign and seal thereof.

Answ. God always breaketh not the covenant on his part, when men break it on theirs: but calleth them often back unto repentance, Psa. 89. 31—34. Exo. 32. & 33. chapters. But to some that are hardened, and will not repent, he breaketh his covenant visibly, casting them out of his church, cutting them off, Rom. 11. 20. 22. giving them a bill of divorce, Jer. 3. 8. removeth the candlestick, Rev. 2. 5. Otherwise if a man coming from Judaism or paganism to the Christian faith and Church, do again revolt from Christ to Judaism or paganism, and for obstinacy in his sin is cut off by the power of Christ from his Church: he must still be reputed in the covenant of God visibly on God's part: which is most untrue, seeing God on his part hath cut them off, and given them a bill of divorce. If any such return, the covenant must be renewed, Hos. 2. 7. 19. 20. 2. Cor. 6. 17. 18. yet the seal of the covenant once given, is not to be repeated; as a Christian revolted to paganism, and cut off from the Church; is not when he returneth, baptized again. Because though he was visibly cut off even of God, for his syn: yet by his return, it appeareth that he still belonged to his election of grace which was to man invisible, whiles he continued cut off. Yea though he received the seal after a false manner, when it was not due unto him: yet when he turneth to the Lord it is not repeated. As the Israelites which were circumcised after they were divorced from God, Ier. 3. 8. had no new circumcision in the flesh, when they turned unto God, Ezr. 6. 21.

6. If such were the baptism of the Church in Rome, &c. then should it be likewise in the East Churches, and in all Churches of the world, when they fall into sin, breaking the covenant. &c.

Answ. I deny the comparison. For Rome is revolted from Christ to Antichrist, and fallen from grace, (by the Apostles rule, Gal. 5. 4.) and is become dead in syn, Rev. 20. and is not the true Church of Christ, but a Man of syn, and whore of Babylon, 2. Thes. 2. Rev. 17. which things are before proved. Such is not the state of all Churches that syn and break the covenant: till for their hardness and contempt of God, they be also cut off, as Rome is: which when they be, then have they no true sacraments any longer among them.

7. If there, baptism were indeed a lying sign and fiction, then would it follow that there should be no salvation for any members of those Churches, reteining the baptism there received. For the sign hath reference to the covenant and thing signified, and so a lying sign must have respect to a lying covenant. And by a lying covenant there is no salvation to any, &c.

Answ. The covenant which the Church of Rome hath made with Antichrist, is a lying covenant; and hath lying signs to confirm it; and God hath sent them strong delusion to believe a lie, that they all might be damned, who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness, 2. Thes. 2. 11. 12. Therefore by the covenant and seals of that Antichristian synagogue, we cannot say, that any one by the promise of God shall be saved. But by the covenant of grace which God communicateth with his elect in that and other false churches, many are saved: but that is not the covenant of the church. Of which point, I have spoken before, in answer to his 2. Argument for the church of Rome. His reasons are the same, again and again repeated. Here further note, how by his argument, the popish Mass may be justified, thus. If the Lord's Supper or Mass in Rome, be an idol, a lying sign and fiction; then is there no salvation for the members of that Church, reteining the Mass. For a lying sign must have respect to a lying covenant, and by a lying covenant there is no salvation to any. But the church of Rome (by mine opposites plea) is in the covenant of salvation, which is the true covenant; therefore it also hath the true sign and seal of that covenant in their Mass or Babylonish Supper. For our Lord's Supper is the true sign and seal of the forgiveness of sins, and covenant of grace, Mat. 26. 26. 28. Luk. 22. 19. 20. If he yield not this, then he must say, that they have two covenants, the one of life and salvation sealed to them by baptism, the other of death and damnation, sealed unto them by the Mass or Supper. So they shall go both to heaven and hell, by their double covenant.

8. Finally (saith he) the baptism of those Churches is from heaven, and not of men: and is derived unto us from the Apostles of Christ, through the loins of the church of Rome, &c. Therefore is no idollor lying sign, but the true sacrament and ordinance of the Lord, Math. 21. 21. & 28. 18. 19. with Rom. 6. 3. 4. Heb. 7. 9. 10. 2. Chron. 30. ch.

Answ. I deny this his conclusion, it being but a begging of the question which he should have proved. It is not their baptism which is from heaven: they are fallen from heaven, and become a Beast (or kingdom Ecclesiastical) arisen out of the earth, Rev. 13. 11. they are gone out from the Apostolic Church, and become Antichrists, 1. Joh. 2. 18. 19. Mine opposite himself hath granted that the Pope and his Hierarchy are Antichrist, the Man of syn, the Beast; never married to Christ. Again he saith (in this his Chr. plea p. 3.) In baptism the action is wholly enjoined & laid upon the baptiser, and not upon the baptized. The baptizers in Rome, are the Priests, which be a part of the beast, and Man of syn: on them the whole action lieth, as he saith. Now is this baptism from heaven? Did God ever bid Antichrist baptize? The whole action then of popish baptism, lieth upon them that are confessed by him, to be Antichrist: & yet this baptism he will have to be from heaven. 2. They were not in the loins of the primitive Christian Church, either by nature or by grace; otherwise then all nations in Moses time, were in the loins of the primitive Church in Noes time. 3. We have not our baptism frō them, but from God, who hath delivered us from Antichrist, & given us to his son Christ; and hath so sanctified to us that baptising with water in his name, which they idolatrously and sinfully abused; as we need no other outward washing, but to be baptized by his spirit; as his dealing with such as had been circumcised in Israel, (after they were become a false church, and were divorced from him) and returned again unto him, doth assure us; 2. Chron. 30. ch. Ezz. 6. 21. His reason may also as probably be framed thus. The Lord's Supper or Mass in the Church of Rome, is from heaven, not of men, Math. 26. Luk. 22. and is derived unto us from the Apostles of Christ, through the loins of that Church, which have from that time retained and continued it to this day. Therefore it is not an idol or lying sign; howsoever all protestants with one mouth call it justly, an idol, an horrible idol, an abomination, and the like. The Ministry of the church of Rome, is from heaven, and not of men, Rom. 12. and is derived to us from the Apostles, through the loins of that church, which have from that time continued it to this day. Therefore it is not the Man of Syn, the Beast, the Antichrist, as all protestants say, and as Mr. Johnson himself hath pleaded in his last book, but the true ministry and ordinance of the Lord. The like may be said for their Excommunications, and all other divine ordinances which that church hath sinfully profaned. Yea the very same plea, might all the heathens have made for their sacrifices and divine ordinances, which from Noah and his sons, through the loins of their parents were derived unto them; as before I have manifested.

Whereas I described the abominable manner of baptising in the Church of Rome, how heathen-like they profane Christ's ordinance, mine opposite not being able to justify their impiety, yet pleadeth his best, thus;

But will it therefore follow, that the baptism there had is not God's ordinance, but an idol, a false and lying sign, &c.

Answ. It followeth that they in their Antichristian estate and abuse, have changed God's ordinance into an idol and lying sign, as the Gentiles of old, changed the truth of God into a lie,

Rom. 1. 25. And have added also many lies and lying signs of their own devising, as bad as did the heathens.

Or will it follow, because of their errors and corruptions, that the baptism there had is to be renounced, and another new one to be received?

Answ. Their lies and lying signs, and changing of the truth into a lie, are all to be renounced: but the ordinance of God which he hath restored to the former truth unto those that repent and believe in him, is not to be renounced, and a new received; and such is the outward washing with water in his name, 2 Chron. 30. Ezr. 6. 21.

Is everything abused or misapplied by men, straight way an idol?

Answ. Every thing so abused as they do baptism and the Lord's Supper, is straight way an idol: for divine honor is given to the creature, and work of a wicked man's hand, Exod. 20. Yea let him be a witness against himself: for afterward in pag. 246. he saith touching book-prayer; that it is an image and similitude of spiritual prayer, which yet it is not. And so these books and stinted prayers prescribed by man in the worship of God, come in deed to be idols, supplying the place of the word and spirit of God, which ought not to be. Here the abuse of the book by his own grant, maketh it in deed an idol: for the book may lawfully be used and read of men for instruction, as well as written Sermons, Homilies, &c.

Do they that are baptized, bow down to it and worship it?

Answ. Did the infants that were offered to Molech, (Levite. 20. •.) bow down and worship it? Or they that made their belly their God, Phil. 3. 19. did they bow down to their belly and worship it? Or, do they that make the book an idol, as himself saith; bow down and worship the book? How strangely doth he plead: as if idols cannot be set up in, and worshipped with the heart. But they bow down & worship the bread in the Supper: will he grant that to be an idol?

If that were done unto it (saith he) as was unto the Sun among the Jews; why might it not be still notwithstanding God's ordinance in it self: as the Sun was the true Sun, and God's creature, even unto them, and in that their estate, whiles they made it an idol to themselves.

Answ. O fraud and guile in pleading for idolaters! Every creature of God is good, every ordinance of God is holy in it self: who doubteth of it? If this distinction helpeth the popish sacraments, it helpeth the heathens idols of silver and gold, which are God's good creatures in themselves. But it is a mere fallacy to reason as he doth from the Sun to Baptism; from a creature which is an absolute substance, to a sacrament which is a relation of the covenant between God and men. No idolatry, unbelief, or other wickedness can hinder the Sun from being God's creature unto men in that their sinful estate. If it be likewise in the sacrament, then no idolatry, unbelief, or other wickedness, can hinder baptism and the Lord's supper from being true signs and seals of God's covenant of grace and forgiveness of sins, unto Turks or Pagans, in their sinful estate, if they baptize with water in the name of the Lord, and eat the bread and wine in the Supper of our Lord. But he should have known that common received rule of all truly religious, that Nothing is in deed a sacrament, without the use ordained of God: as we are taught of the Apostle, This is not to eat the Lord's Supper: 1. Cor. 11. 20. The water that flowed out of the rock, was the same creature of God to men that drunk of it, and to the beasts that drunk of it, Numb. 20. 11. but it was a sacrament to men only, using it for a confirmation of their faith, by a divine institution, 1. Cor. 10. 4. Further, by his reason, it is undeniable that the Pope himself (whom he acknowledgeth to be Antichrist) and all that partake with him in his Mass, notwithstanding all their idolatry and heresy thereabout, do eat the true sacrament, sign and seal of the forgiveness of their sins. And why then should he deny the Pope to be as good a Christian as himself: seeing all they are blessed whose sins are forgiven them, Rom. 4. 6. 7.

Let it be observed, that they baptize only in the name of the Lord: and with acknowledgement of the Articles of the Christian saith, as in their form of baptism may be seen.

Answ. And let it also be observed, that they sacrifice their Mass (or celebrate their idolatrous supper) only in the name of the Lord; and with acknowledgement of the same Articles of Christian faith, even by the Pope himself. Why then hath he pleaded against the Pope and his Hierarchy, that they, they only are the Man of syn, the son of perdition, the Beast, the Antichrist; and why wondered he so at me, when I called for proof that Christ was married to that Beast; seeing he hath the same baptism, the same Lord's Supper, the same belief touching the Articles of faith, that the people of his church have. But their counterfeit profession of Christ is before discovered. And they that baptize (which are the Hierarchy) he confesseth to be the Man of syn, the Antichrist, they are none of the church (as we have heard) but ulcers, gangrenes, &c. what now have such to do with the name of the Lord, or administration of the seals of his covenant. And compare with this, that which himself saith in the 3. page of his book, that the action (of baptism) is wholly enjoined and laid upon the baptiser, and not upon the baptized. If this be so, where hath God laid the action of baptizing upon Antichrist, the Man of syn: and if God hath not laid it upon him, how can he truly do it in God's name?

How will they prove (saith he) that it is a lying sign unto them in their estate, seeing baptism (as the other sacraments in Israel and under the Gospel) hath this in it to be a sign by the ordinance of God, not at the pleasure of man. And God is the God of truth, and appointeth no lying signs, but true. Neither can man's iniquity make God's signs to be lying signs. Synful therefore and erroneous it is so to think, if not also blasphemous so to speak.

Answ. And was it sinful and erroneous (thinketh he) in Paul, when he said, They changed the truth of God into a lie, Rom. 1. 25. For if man's iniquity cannot change God's signs into lying signs: how should it change the truth of God into a lie? And how could Jeremiah have proved unto the Jews (if mine opposite had then lived to plead for them) that those were lying words, when they said The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, &c. Ier. 7. 4. for had they not in deed the Temple of the Lord, his true ordinance and sign, whereof they spake? The word of God is truth, John. 17. 17. How then should man's iniquity, make God's truth to be a lie unto themselves, though they pervert the word unto all manner false-doctrine, error and heresy▪ Idols are lies, Esa. 44. 20. Ier. 16. 19. 20. How can the Pope make an idol of the bread in the sacrament, though he fall down and worship it, and believe it is his maker:

seeing as it is bread, it is a true thing, and God's good creature; as it is sacramental bread, it is a true sign by the ordinance of God, who appointeth no lying signs. Is it not blasphemous now, and would he not rend his clothes as did Caiaphas, if he should hear one call the Popes sacrament of the altar, an idol, or a lying sign unto him in that estate? But to conclude, The sacraments are in deed signs by the ordinance of God, not at man's will: God's ordinance maketh them signs of grace to the faithful receivers only, 1. Cor. 11. 20. 29. Rom. 2. 25 Act. 8. 36. 37. If infidels and Antichrists falsely challenge and usurp God's signs, and abuse them to open idolatry, and their own perdition; they change the truth of God's ordinance into a lie unto themselves; and whiles they vainly think to have forgiveness of sins by them, they add syn unto syn, and receive their own damnation.

Whereas I had set down two reasons to prove the Popish baptism false, and a lying sign unto them: mine opposite passeth them over, as too heavy for him; and cometh to set down differences between God's ordinances and men's corruptions; God's signs, and men's errors: Marriage, meats and drinks, and the abuses of these; the scriptures, and the errors gathered from them; the Sun, Moon and Starrs, as they are creatures, and as they are made idols and worshiped of men, &c. Wherein he laboreth to prove the thing which we hold; and doth most injuriously intimate against us, as if we thought the contrary. Should we be so wicked as to imagine the ordinances of God, or his creatures to be evil in themselves? Far be it from us. Nay we say, that the papists for abusing the sacraments, and turning them to lies and idols, shall have the greater judgment: not for abusing bread and wine and water as they are creatures only, but for abusing them as they are sacramental signs ordained of Christ, which maketh their profanation more horrible, their damnation more just. But this is a practice of many, that plead for error; to leave the arguments which do convince them, and to propone new questions and reasons of their own: that they may seem to say something, by multitude of words.

So when I shown the example of the idolatrous Israelites, that repenting and forsaking their false Synagogues & lying signs in them usurped, they needed not a new outward cutting or circumcising, as is shown at large in our former writings. Discovery, p. 116.—120. Apolog. p. 110.—113. He passeth over the reasons manifested in those books, as if he had never seen them: when as the one was most of it penned by himself. And now he pleadeth:

Whereas they say, that circumcision was also a lying sign, and false sacrament to Israel in their defection, how do they prove it? where doth the Scripture teach it? will they have us take it on their bare word, and believe that their saying are Oracles? &c.

Answ. He might have seen reasons in the books before cited, besides those that I have set down. But thus in seeking to wound us, he hath smitten through his own sides, as if himself when he wrote those things in our Apology, would have had men believe his bare word, and that his sayings were Oracles. Whereas, if ever he wrote soundly in his life, he did it in that Apology, as all men of good judgment may perceive. Further now to answer him, I say, that I spake of their lying signs, which implied their Passover and sacrifices, as well as their circumcision. And those being so profaned, as for them they were by God's Law to be cut off as murderers, Levite. 17. as sacrificers to Devils, not to God, Deut. 32. 17. 2. Chron. 11. 15. & 15.

3. were they then true signs unto them of God's grace and favor, and forgiveness of their sins in Christ? The Scripture teacheth, they could not be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of Devils, 1. Cor. 10 21. In particular, for their circumcision, I proved it thus, True circumcision was the seal of the righteousness of saith, Rom. 4. 11. Israel in their apostasy were fallen from the faith Hos. 11. 12. they were without the true God, without Priest to teach, & without Law, 2. Chron. 15. 3. and how then could they have the true circumcision the seal of the righteousness of saith, and forgiveness of their sins in that sinful estate. Thus I shown God's words (not mine own) for oracles.

He asketh, if we will be wiser, and more righteous then God himself, who accounted them still to be his people, under his covenant, and himself to be their God, and upon this ground called them to repentance, &c.

Answ. All this notwithstanding, whiles they continued unrepent and unbelieving, and hardened their necks against the Lord their God; &c. their circumcisim (by Paul's doctrine) was made uncircumcision, Rom. 2. 25. their sacrifices were an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 15. 8. And he might have seen in the Scriptures, that though Israel were divorced from the Lord, Ier. 3. 8. and not his people; or wife, nor he her husband, Hos. 1. 9. & 2. 2. yet they are in respect of their former state, their continual profession, and the future mercy towards them, called God's people still, even till Christ's time, Isaiah. 11. 11. 16. Amos. 9. 14. That he should not urge a phrase (as his manner is,) against the plain doctrines of the Scripture.

Obj. What will they say to the circumcision of Judah in their apostasy, &c. was it also among them none of God's ordinance, but an idol? &c.

Answ. It was God's ordinance, though abused by the unworthy receivers, as before is shown. But he from a false church, and Babylon, fled to Zion the true Church corrupted; which is his perpetual fallacy. If Judah, or any Church in the world had done with the sacraments as Rome hath done, they had changed them into idols, contrary to the 2. commandment. But Judah never did so with circumcision and the Passover; he showeth no word of God to prove it.

Obj. Have the gates of hell more prevailed against the Christian Church since Christ's coming, then they did or could against the Church of the Jews before his coming in the flesh? Mat. 16. 18.

Answ. This old popish reason, hath been often answered by many Writers against the Antichristians: and is of no more force for Rome turned to Antichrist, then for Ephesus, Corinth, and other churches turned to Mahomet. For what privilege (besides a popish dream) had Rome above Ephesus? Should it, (because it crucified Christ, and is therefore cursed above all cities,) have prerogative above Ephesus, wherein was a church (in Paul's time) which was the ground and pillar of truth. 1. Tim. 1. 3. & 3. 15. yet is that church long since cut off: but Rome's church must continue, for her good service to Devils and idols, Rev. 9. 20. and for worshiping the Beast, Rev. 13. He might have seen in Rev. 12. that the woman the Church perisheth not, though she be fled into the wilderness, from the presence of the Serpent, and synagogue of Antichrist. His other repetitions again and again; are before answered.

Obj. The ordinances of God may in any churches become unprofitable to men by their own sins, circumcision may be made uncircumcision to such as break the Law, &c. Rom. 2. 25. 26. so baptism now. But shall we therefore say, that they are not in such churches, to such persons, the Lord's ordinances, nor his true signs and sacraments, but idols and lying signs, &c. Was the Lord's table in the Church of Corinth, a table of Devils; or the Lord's Supper an idol or lying sign, &c. to such as eat it unworthily? Was it not the Lord's ordinance, and true sacrament, though sinfully abused by them? &c.

Ans. The Lord's ordinances abide always the same, and holy in themselves, howsoever abused by Christians, by Antichristians, by Jews, Turks or Pagans, to their perdition. Neither is there a like degree of abuse in all; neither doth every abuse make a thing an idol: but when the honor due to God alone, is given to a creature, then it is made an idol: and so I have proved is done in the church of Rome; to which proofs he answereth not. I instanced the Lord's Supper in Rome, whereof they have made an abominable idol, worshiping a piece of bread as their maker. Mine opposite will never mention or meddle with this, but shunneth it as convinced in conscience. And from Antichrists church, runneth to the Christian Church in Corinth; and asketh if the Lord's table there, were a table of Devils? I answer, No; not then in Corinth, but now in Rome, they have made it by their idolatrous Mass, a table of Devils: and as Moses said of Israel, they sacrificed to Devils, not to God. Deut. 32. 17. so say I of these Antichristians, their sacrifice of the altar is a sacrifice to Devils, not to God. This he should have disproved, if he could have done it; and not to leave the persons and things whereof we dispute, and run to others. So the Lord's baptism, they have turned into an idol▪ ascribing the gift of grace (which only is God's) to water, words and works of men: that as the Gentiles turned the truth of God into a lie, Rom. 1. these Gentiles also have turned the truth of God, and of his sacraments into lies. And as the Lord's incense and sacrifices were an abomination to him, from the hands of wicked sinners. Isaiah. 1. 13. Prov. 15. 8. so the Lord's sacraments are an abomination to him, from the hands of Antichristians. And as he doth, so ought all his people to esteem of them; and not to regard lying words of such as cry nothing but the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, the sacraments and ordinances of the Lord; to deceive God's people, and to harden the sinners in their wicked works.

Whereas I distinctly shown the idolatry committed in Antichrists baptising of his subjects, partly by perverting the holy signs, as the Israelites did the brazen serpent, • King. 1. 4. partly by inventing signs of his own, as crosses, exorcismes, &c. Mine opposite first † censureth the things I wrote to be notable shifts, errors, contradictions, abuse of scriptures, vain distinctions, and odious assertions. Such grace hath flowed from his tongue and pen.

1. Observe (saith he) a needless distinction of idols, nothing helping for the question in hand.

Ans. The distinction is true and needful to discern the truth of the question, against his clamorous reproaches, as if I called God's ordinance in itself considered, an idol.

2. If they mean (saith he) that baptism there had is an idol of both sorts, they do the more increase their error.

Ans. I do so mean: yet is there no increase of error: I hear his bold words, but no proof.

3. They speak of crosses, exorcismes, &c. whereas we speak of the baptism it self.

Ans. So do I: but of popish baptism, mixed with Christ's ordinances and Antichrists together. All parts of a thing put together, make the whole: and it is deceitful dealing to dazel men's eyes with the whores golden cup, and to pass by the abominable ingredients, the fornications that are in it, when both are joined together, Rev. 17. 4.

4. They speak of the abuse, our question is of the thing it self, notwithstanding their sinful abuse.

Ans. Our question is of popish baptism, which cannot be rightly handled without looking to their abuses: for how should we judge of the heathens worship and sacrifices, if we look not upon their abuses, as Paul doth in Rom. 1. The same I answer to his 5. exception, of their opinions and errors. Take away the errors of actions, and what fault can we find with any?

6. If the Romish baptism be a lie in the right hand of all that receive it: then of infants; then also in their own right hand that were baptized there. Not to speak of the Martyrs, &c.

Ans. There is no respect of persons with God. Bee they old or young, better or worse: syn is syn in all. Though God's grace in Christ, purgeth syn from his elect, which remaineth in the reprobates.

His 7. 8. and 9. exceptions, are vain; and repetitions of former things, without conviction. If Bellarmine or any speak truth, we may speak it with them: so Paul speaketh with the heathen Poets, Tet. 1. 12. 13. Act. 17. 28.

10. If they mean the true sacraments in Christ's Church, seal not up to God's people, forgiveness of sins, it is an error: if they mean that they do not themselves take away sins, and confer grace, they use shifts, and keep not to the point of the relation here spoken of, and as it is appointed to be by the Lord himself.

Answ. The first I grant him; and he knew well it was not my meaning. The latter I have proved, that they being under God's wrath, 2. Thess. 2. have no seal from God of forgiveness of sins in that estate. And their doctrine of conferring grace by the work done, is heretical and idolatrous: which he not being able to gainsay, puts it away (as his manner is) with a shift.

11. From God's sentence of condemnation touching Antichrist and his adhaerents, they reason to God's baptism never condemned by the Lord, but still continued in the Church and Temple of God, where Antichrist sitteth.

Ans. Of his own mouth let him be judged. We reason only of Antichrist and his adherents, the Whore of Babylon, or adulterous church, which he saith are condemned of God. How then doth God give them the sign and seal of grace & forgiveness of sins? God's baptism we condemn not, neither our Lord's Supper: but Antichrists Christening and Mass, we deny to be Christ's baptism and supper. He still beggeth the question which he should prove. And let him take away Antichrist and his adhaerents; and the church of Rome, whereof we reason, will be vanished as smoke, and come to nothing: as take away Christ and his adhaerents, so there will be no Christian Church, nor sacraments to be found.

12. From the brazen serpent, which was but a temporary and extraordinary sign, the use whereof was ceased when it was thus perverted, &c. they reason to baptism, which is an ordinary sign, whose use still continueth, and may never be taken away or destroyed, to the end of the world.

Ans. We reason not from the one to the other: but by the abuse of the one, we show the abuse of the other. And what is this in him but a shift, to plead the temporarinesse of that sign? For if they had burnt incense to it in the wilderness; or if they had burnt incense to the Cherubims, or brazen Bulls, or pillars which were continued signs, they had made idols of them nevertheless. Otherwise the wheaten god in the Popish supper is no idol: seeing the use of the Lord's Supper continueth to the worlds end, as well as baptism. And hitherto of the shifts as he calleth them; wherein how he hath shifted in stead of answering by the word of truth, the wise reader may see. Like these are his catalogue of Errors.

1. That the baptism had in the church of Rome is an idol, &c.

Ans. 1. This is proved by the 2. commandment, Exod. 20. whiles they ascribe divine honor to the creature. 2. It is proved also by his own assertion, that books of prayer, read for prayer, are idols; as before I shown from his words in his last book. 3. He showeth not one word to prove it an error in me: but saith, Of which more hereafter. Thus vain tautologies are his arguments to oppose the truth which he calleth Error.

2. That whereas idols are of two sorts, both the kinds are in Popish baptism. If it be as the brazen serpent, that from an holy sign was perverted to an idol, it should presently be destroyed, as 2. King. 18. 4.

Answ. I deny his inference. If they had burnt incense to the Temple, should it have been destroyed. The brazen serpent was named but for an instance, to show that holy signs may be made idols by wicked men. This doctrine he being not able to convince; leaveth it, and would evade by the destroying of it. As if all idols must be destroyed. The heathens made idols of the Sun, Moon, Starrs, Beasts, Fishes, Mountains, Lakes, &c. Must all these therefore be destroyed? If men make an idol of their King, as did the Babylonians, Dan. 6. 7. must the King presently be destroyed? whoever heard of such divinity? That which he addeth of the Popes crossings, exorcismes, &c. is before answered: for he saith, Our question is of the baptism it self; as if those were not a part of Popish baptism. He would have wicked men's actions separated from all their sins, errors and wickedness in doing them. So in deed I could justify all idolatry in the world: for take away the error and syn of an action, and that which remaineth must needs be good.

3. They say not they have renounced the abuses and kept the baptism itself, &c. but say they have renounced that Romish baptism, as an impure idol in their abuse. If they have in deed so done, then here again is notable error and Anabaptistry. And now then what outward baptism have they remaining to themselves?

Ans. Neither doth Solomon say, the abuse of the wicked's sacrifice is an abomination, and except the sacrifice as holy: but he saith expressly, The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 15. 8. He was answered before to his two baptisms outward and inward, that the Apostle (and elsewhere himself) maketh but one baptism, Eph. 4. 5. And the outward part thereof we retain as now sanctified to us of God; as the outward cutting of the idolatrous Israelites was to them that repented, 2. Chron. 30. Ezr. 6. 21. which again he putteth off till afterwards.

4. Note also that the brazen Serpent was not in deed an idol: but an holy ordinance of God, which in time came to be idolatrously abused, &c.

Ans. He saith all things, but proves nothing. It was in deed an idol, and an holy ordinance idolatrously abused also. These things stand well together. The Sun was in deed an idol to them that worshiped it: and yet it was a good creature of God also idolatrously abused. The bread in the sacrament is in deed an idol to Papists that worship it as their maker: yet is it also in it self, God's ordinance idolatrously abused: so is popish baptism. He might even as well say, that Reuben's fact in lying with his fathers concubine, was not in deed adultery; but an abuse of God's ordinance of marriage, or a defiling of his fathers bed, Gen. 35. 22. & 49. 4.

5. Moreover, the brazen Serpent was but a temporary ordinance, &c.

Ans. This was the twelfth of his shifts before: now he repeateth and multiplieth it among his Errors. I refer the reader to my former answer.

6 That the Romish baptism is an impure idol in their abuse, standing up in the place of Christ, and his precious blood, which it is not, pretending to give grace, &c. which it doth not. But the baptism in the church of Rome is God's ordinance, had and planted there by the Apostles, &c. These are the errors and abuses of men about it, not the nature of the baptism it self. Otherwise all that have received it, ought to renounce it utterly, and to get another outward baptism, &c.

Answ. This also was before objected and answered: and it is a world to see how he wearieth his reader with repeating worthless reasons. Sacrificing among the heathens I have before proved was God's ordinance. So was the Lord's supper in the church of Rome in the Apostles time: so was excommunication; so was the Ministry of Bishops, &c. These have been continued in Rome with their baptism: may we not say therefore the Mass is an idol, or that the Bishop the Pope of Rome now is an idol and Antichrist? Of our getting another baptism (which is the usual foot and base of his arguments) we have before spoken that which he could not take away.

Obj. Will these men say, that we can without sin retain anything, and not utterly reject it, that standeth up in the place of Christ's precious blood? &c.

Ans. We cannot indeed without syn retain it, while so it standeth: neither do we so retain it; far be it from us. Neither might the Gentiles retain the lie, which they had made of the truth of God, Rom. 1. 25. But when the lie was done away, and God restored to them his former truth, that they were to retain. The idolatrous Israelites, if they had set up their own blood of circumcision in place of Christ's blood; might not without syn have retained it whiles so it stood. Yet repenting of their idolatry, they might keep the outward sign without repeating it: even so we in this case.

Obj. Errors and abuses of men may hurt themselves: but cannot change the nature of God's ordinance in it self.

Answ. Not in it self I grant, considered without their abuse: but together with their abuse, God's ordinance of sacrifice, incense, &c. is an abomination to him, Prov. 15. 8. Esa. 1. 13. So baptism and the Supper now in Rom, are abominations to the Lord.

Obj. Mans unbelief cannot make the faith of God of none effect. God is true, though every man be a liar, Rom. 3. 3. 4.

Ans. What may we think would he conclude from this Scripture? To cite a place, and leave it doubtful what he inferreth, is to deceive the reader. If he intend (according to the question in hand) that the sacraments are seals of grace and of salvation unto men, whether they believe or do not believe: it is a notable error overthrowing the Gospel; and establishing the popish herefie of grace ex opere operato, by the work done. The Scriptures teach, touching God's word and promise, that it profiteth not them that hear it, if it be not mixed with faith in them, Heb. 4. 2. if men believe not, they shall not be established, Isaiah. 7. 9. but shall be damned, Mark. 16. 16. they shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them, John. 3. 36. Neither is the faith of God, by men's unbelief, made without effect. For his truth and faithfulness is confirmed as well in damning unrepentant & unbelieving sinners, as in saving those that repent and believe. When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity; he shall die in his iniquity; and yet the way of the Lord is equal; as saith the prophet; Ezek. 18. 24. 25. 26. Again, as all men naturally are liars, and do fail and break covenant on their part, by syn; which God never doeth: so if they continue in syn, and turn not to the Lord by repentance and faith, they all perish, Luk. 13. 3. 5. Rom. 8. 6.—10. 1. Cor. 6. 9. 10. Jude v. 5. But let men repent, and turn from their transgressions, so iniquity shall not be their ruin, Ezek. 18. 30. Otherwise it would follow, that after men are entered into covenant with God, & are baptized: though they fall frō Christ to Antichrist (as the church of Rome hath done) though they fall to Mahomet (as many East churches have done;) though they turn to be Jews or pagans, and so die, yet they shall be saved; for their unbelief cannot make the faith of God of none effect. But so to expound this Scripture Rom. 3. were to turn judgment into wormwood, unto the destruction of men's souls. And if mine opposite would not gather some such thing from it; what will it help his plea for the baptism of the church of Rome, which is the whore of Babylon, whom God hath devoted unto destruction, except they repent. Rev. 17. & 18. chap.

Obj. The Jews in Christ's time and before, holding justification by circumcision, & works of the Law; set these up in the place of Christ & his precious blood, &c. Should we therefore say, that circumcision was then an impure idol in their abuse? &c. Or should we not rather learn to put difference between God's ordinance in it self, and between man's abuse thereof, &c.

Ans. Whensoever Jew or Gentile, held justification by circumcision, sacrifice, or works of the Law: they made their sacraments, sacrifices, and works idols, impure idols to themselves in their abuse. And it is admirable, that men teaching religion, should be ignorant, that whatsoever creature or work of man is put in the place of God and Christ; it is thereby made an idol: though God's ordinances, and the works of his Law in themselves are always good; but turned to idols, are always evil, and an abomination to the Lord, as is before proved. What mouth can deny, but the Papists are idolaters in praying to Saints and Angels? If idolaters, then they serve idols: if they serve idols in so praying; then the Saints and Angels are idols to them in their sinful abuse. Yet who knoweth not that the Saints and Angels in heaven, are blessed and holy, and not Idols in themselves. But this is mine opposites continual fallacy whereby he would deceive his reader; that because Baptism and the Lord's supper, are God's holy ordinances in themselves; therefore the Papists that worship them as God's, have not made them idols to themselves. And under this shelter of falsehood he shrowdeth himself when he hath naught else to answer: repeting it I know not how often.

7. That the Romish baptism is a lie "in the right hand of all that soreceive it. Where the Prophet speaketh of idols, that by nature are no God's &c. If the Romish baptism were in the nature of it no baptism &c, then should it without question be renounced as a very idol in deed. &c.

Answ. Belike then, he would have us take it for no lie, but for a truth, that popish baptism giveth grace, and washeth away syn by the work done. Neither is it a lie, but truth, that bread in their Mass is very Christ really & properly, as he died on the cross. To apply Esa. 44. 20. against these things, is to hold an error. Well, let my error continue with me: for I trust I shall always hold that they are lies in the right hand of all that so receive them. And as the prophet speaketh of thē that by nature were no God's: so do I. For neither is water in Baptism, not wine in the Mass, Christ's blood naturally: neither can they do that which only Christ's blood effecteth. And how ever there is difference between the idols of false God's, and the idols of the true God; yet the scripture calleth them all Devils, Deut. 32. 17. 2 Chron. 11. 15. 1 Cor. 10. 20. so I call them all lies. And where he saith, if it were in the nature of it no baptism; he might have known, that God's true ordinance of baptism, turned into a lie, maketh it a lying baptism, and yet some baptism it is, though not the true. Wherof the lie being put away, and the truth restored of God unto us; there need no other renunciation, as before I have proved. His other repetitions and questions of the same thing; need no further answer.

Obj. How will he show, that baptism is so received as standing in the place of Christ &c. seeing they are infants usually that receive it there &c.

Answ. Even as he will show against the Anabaptists, that baptism is truly and rightly received in Christian churches: where they are infants usually that receive it. For as the covenant of Christ is to parents and their seed: so the covenant of Antichrist is to parents and their seed; even the covenant of destruction; that their babes be dashed against the Rock, Psal. 137. 9. Esa. 13. 16. The infants of Jews, are Jews; the infants of Turks are Turks; the infants of Christians are Christians: so the infants of Antichristians are Antichristians.

Obj. Considering also their profession of Christ, and baptising with water in the name of the Father Son and holy Ghost; and that this alone is in deed the baptism of that church; the other things being but erroneous opinions, and sinful additions &c.

Answ. We have before considered that the profession of that church, is all one with the profession of the Pope, who either is not Antichrist, or else he denieth both the Father and the Son, (as the Apostle saith, 1 Joh. 3. 22.) how ever in word he confesseth both. 2. As they baptize with water in the name of the Father &c: so they consecrate their Supper or Mass with bread and wine, and the words of Christ's institution, Mat. 26. why doth he not also affirm, that their Mass is no idol, no lie, in the hands and mouths of them that receive it as their maker, and eat their God, more profanely then the heathens. 3. It is untrue that that alone (which he mentioneth) is in deed the baptism of that church: in deed it ought to be, but so it is not. He might as well say, their prayers to God, are the only prayers of that church; for by divine institution so it should be; but it is known they pray also to innumerable creatures. 4. I grant the other things, are but erroneous opinions, and sinful additions: and he also must grant, that all the idolatry of the heathens, condemned in Rom. 1. were but erroneous opinions and sinful additions; contrary to the covenant which God had made with them in Noes days, Gen. 9. 9. 10. 11. &c. Were it not for erroneous opinions, and sinful additions; all men now should be in that perfect estate wherein at first we were created. Eccles. 7. 29.

8. That the Romish baptism is such, as the saying of the Apostle is verified in it, an idol is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. 8. 4. &c. If so, then the baptism of that church, hath no relation to God, nor any divine institution, representation, or signification in it, &c. Then it ought of necessity to be rejected &c.

Answ. If the Apostles doctrine be true of idols, that they are nothing, 1 Cor. 8. 4. he ought not to kick against it, or me for alleging it. To his inference I answer, it hath no true relation unto God's covenant (which is not with that Antichristian church,) but a false pretended relation it hath: as their other sacrament of the Mass or supper; where also there is a lying relation to Christ's sacrifice, which they blasphemously renew, crucifying daily the Lord of glory. To his conclusion, he hath oft been answered: we reject the idol wholly; and retain only the truth, so far as God by his word hath sanctified it unto us: without either gross Anabaptistry, or notorious blasphemy, which with open mouth he chargeth us, & would fray the simple with.

9. That water (the material thing) in popish baptism, is as the gold and silver (that is the matter) of the idols spoken of, Psal. 115. 4. where as the use of water in baptism is appointed by the Lord and still to be retained, John. 1. 33. &c. but the use of gold for idols, is forbidden, and utterly to be abandoned, Exod. 20. 23. Deut. 7. 25. 26. &c.

Answ. He corrupteth my words. I said, An idol for the matter and workmanship is something (Psal. 115. 4.) but for the relation unto God, it is nothing. So Popish baptism as touching the material thing is somewhat, the salt, water, oil, are God's creatures: the outward action is the work of the hands of an idolatrous priest; and this work remaineth, as did the work of the idolaters circumcising in Israel. &c. This he maketh an error in me▪ which all that have knowledge, will easily see to be truth. But the use of water in baptism, (saith he) is appointed by the Lord. True, unto the Christian church it is so: but the use of water in popish idol baptism, or of bread and wine in the Popish mass, was never appointed by the Lord: this was the point he should have proved. As God said to the Jews, bring no more vain oblations, incense is an abomination unto me, Esa. 1. 13. so saith he to the Antichristians, make no more vain baptisings, the Mass is an abomination to me. Mine opposite saith, the use of gold and silver for idols is forbidden: very well; and is not the use of water, bread and wine for idols forbidden also? The use of gold to make the images of Cherubims was commanded, Exod. 25. 18. but if the Gentiles had made themselves golden Cherubims, they had been idols and syn to them, for God commanded them not. So water, bread and wine, are commanded the Christian church, in her sacraments: but to the Antichristian church God commandeth not these, til they repent & turn to Christ; then and not before may they use them for holy signs. Psalm. 50. 16. 17. Prov. 21. 27. & 9. 13. 17. 18. In this, his tenth error or exception is also answered; which is about the very same thing: but that he delyteth in multiplication.

11 Touching the relation, (which is the main thing in a sacrament) that it should seal up unto them the forgiveness of sins, and (as they blasphemously say) quite take away sins, and confer grace; so it is a vain idol, and nothing. But the Sacraments in their relation are not only seals but signs also: Gen. 17. 11. Rom. 4. 11. &c. Now (by their assertion) the baptism aforesaid showeth nothing at all to the mind, and so is a vain idol and nothing; and that which it showeth to the eye, is but as the gold and silver of the heathens idols: which if it were true, then in deed there should be nothing of God's ordinance▪ nothing of a true sacrament, &c. And can they then blame the Anabaptists? &c.

Answ. That there is no true relation in the popish baptism, is sufficiently proved; the persons being Antichristians, out of the covenant, and without promise in that estate. That they have the true material things, of washing with water in the name of the Father &c, I have always granted; though these materials are abused by them to idolatry, as the Jews abused their sheep and bullocks to abominable sacrifices. That of the gentiles silver and gold, is true also touching the matter, which is God's good creature: further comparison I made not, though he corrupted my words.

Object. Whether think they that the baptism received in the truest Churches, do seal up to hypocrites the forgiveness of their sins? If they think not, whether they will say, that the baptism of those churches hath not the relation which is the main thing in a Sacrament. It is generally held that Simon Magus who was baptized by Philip, was an hypocrite, and that his baptism did not seal up unto him the forgiveness of his sins: will they therefore say, that the baptism ministered by the Evangelists, had not the relation &c? Besides that thus the relation of the sacraments should depend wholly upon man, and not upon the Lord or his ordinance at all.

Answ. To pass over his form of writing, how he asketh questions, when he should prove or convince: I answer, his question is from the matter in hand, and so is deceitful. We speak of the outward visible church of Christ and ordinances belonging thereto; also of the visible Antichristian church and ordinances there abused. He leaveth this, and runneth to hypocrites, which men cannot discern; and whom therefore we must leave unto God, among other secrets, Deut. 29. 29. To reason from the one of these to the other, would bring all confusion; for hypocrites are lawfully admitted into the Church; as was Judas, Simon Magus and many other: if upon this ground, open Antichristians, idolaters, unbelievers, may be admitted also: then the church and the world, shall be one confused Babel. To his question I answer; baptism in true Churches administered as th' Apostles and Evangelists did: •ealeth up to all, the forgiveness of their sins; unto the judgment of man; and they should greatly
