up this sorrow in us, is first, to stir up our love of God, by repeating to ourselves the many gracious acts of his mercy towards us, particularly, that of his sparing us, and not cutting us off in our sins. Consider with thyself how many and how great provocations thou hast offered him, perhaps in a continued course of many years willful disobedience, for which thou mightest with perfect justice have been ere this sent quick into hell: Nay, possibly thou hast before thee many examples of less *sinner*s than thou art, who have been suddenly snatched away in the midst of their sins. And what cause canst thou give, why thou hast thus long escaped, but only because his eye hath spared thee? And what cause of that sparing, but his tender compassions towards thee, his unwillingness that thou shouldst perish? This consideration if it be pressed home upon thy soul, cannot choose (if thy heart be not as hard as the nether Milstone) but awake somewhat of love in thee towards this gracious, this long suffering God, and that love will certainly make it appear to thee, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord, Jer. 2. 19. That thou hast made such wretched requitals of so great mercy; it will make thee both ashamed and angry at thyself that thou hast been such an unthankful creature. But if the consideration of this one sort of mercy God's forbearance only, be such an engagement and help to this godly sorrow, what will then be the multitude of those other mercies which every man is able to reckon up to himself? and therefore let every man be as particular in it as he can, call to mind as many of them as he is able, that so he may attain to the greater degree of true contrition.

9. And to all these endeavors must be added earnest prayers to God, that he by his holy Spirit would show you your sins, and soften your hearts, that you may thoroughly bewail and lament them.

10. To this must be joined an humble concession of sins to God, and that not only in general, but also in particular, as far as your memory of them will reach, and that with all those heightening circumstances of them, which you have by the forementioned examination discovered. Yea, even secret and forgotten sins must in general be acknowledged, for it is certain there are multitudes of such; so that it is necessary for everyone of us to say with David, Psal. 19. 12. Who can understand his errors? cleanse thou me from my secret faul's. When you have thus confessed your sins with this hearty sorrow, and sincere hatred of them, you may then (and not before) be concluded to feel so much of your disease, that it will be seasonable to apply the remedy.

11. In the next place therefore you are to look on him whom God hath set forth to be the propitiation of our sins, Rom. 3. 25. Even Jesus Christ, that Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world, John 1. 29. And earnestly beg of God, that by his most precious blood your sins may be washed away; and that God would for his sake be reconciled to you, And this you are to believe will surely be done, if you do for the rest of your time forsake your sins, and give yourselves up sincerely to obey God in all his commands. But without that, it is vain to hope any benefit from Christ, or his sufferings. And therefore the next part of your preparation must be the setting those resolutions of obedience which I told you was the third thing you were to examine yourselves of before your approach to the holy Sacrament.

12. Concerning the particulars of this resolution, I need say no more, but that it must answer every part, and branch of our duty, that is, we must not only in general resolve that we will observe God's Commandments, but we must resolve it for every Commandment by itself; and especially where we have found ourselves most to have failed heretofore, there especially to renew our resolutions. And herein it nearly concerns us to look that these resolutions be sincere, and unfeigned, and not only such slight ones as people use out of custom to put on at their coming to the Sacrament, which they never think of keeping afterwards. For this is a certain truth, that whosoever comes to this holy Table without an entire hatred of every sin, comes unworthily; and it is as sure, that he that doth entirely hate all sin, will resolve to forsake it; for you know forsaking naturally follows hatred, no man willingly abides with a thing or person he hates. And therefore he that doth not so resolve, as that God the searcher of hearts may approve it as sincere, cannot be supposed to hate sin, and so cannot be a worthy receiver of that holy Sacrament. Therefore try your resolutions thoroughly, that you deceive not yourselves in them, it is your own great danger, if you do; for it is certain you cannot deceive God, nor gain acceptation from him by anything which is not perfectly heartly and unfeigned.

13. Now as you are to resolve on this newobedience, so you are likewise to resolve on the means, which may assist you in the performance of it. And therefore consider in every duty, what are the means that may help you in it, and resolve to make use of them, how uneasy soever they be to your flesh; so on the other side consider what things they are, that are likely to lead you to sin, and resolve to shun and avoid them: this you are to do in respect of all sins whatever, but especially in those, whereof you have formerly been guilty. For there it will not be hard for you to find, by what steps and degrees you were drawn into it, what company, what occasion it was that ensnared you, as also to what sort of temptations you are aptest to yield. And therefore you must particularly fence yourself against the sin, by avoiding those occasions of it.

14. But it is not enough that you resolve you will do all this hereafter, but you must instantly set to it, and begin the course by doing at the present whatsoever you have opportunity of doing. And there are several things, which you may, nay, must do at the present, before you come to the Sacrament.

15. As first you must cast off every sin, not bring any one unmortified lust with you to that Table, for it is not enough to purpose to cast them off afterwards, but you must then actually do it by with-drawing all degrees of love and affection from them; you must then give a bill of divorce to all your old beloved sins, or else you are no fit way to be married to Christ. The reason of this is clear; For this Sacrament is our spiritual nourishment; now before we can receive spiritual nourishment we must have spiritual life (for no man gives food to a dead person) But whosoever continues not only in the act, but in the love of any one known sin, hath no spiritual life, but is in God's account no better then a dead carcass, and therefore cannot receive that spiritual food. It is true, he may eat the bread, and drink the wine, but he receives not Christ, but instead of him, that which is most dreadful; the Apostle will tell you what, 1 Cor. 11. 29. He eats and drinks his own damnation. Therefore you see how great a necessity lies on you thus actually to put off every sin, before you come to this Table.

16. And the same necessity lies on you for a second thing to be done at this time, and that is the putting your soul into a heavenly and Christian temper; by possessing it with all those graces which may render it acceptable in the eyes of God. For when you have turned out Satan and his accursed train, you must not let your soul lie empty; if you do, Christ tells you, Luke 11. 26. He will quickly return again, and your last estate shall be worse then your first. But you must by earnest prayer invite into it the holy Spirit, with his graces, or if they be in some degree there already, you must pray that he will yet more fully possess it, and you must quicken and stir them up.

17. As for example, you must quicken your humility, by considering your many and great sins; your Faith, by meditating on God's promises to all penitent sinners; your love to God by considering his mercies, especially those remembered in the Sacrament, his giving Christ to die for us: and your love to your neighbor, nay, to your enemies, by considering that great example of his suffering for us that were enemies to him. And it is most particularly required of us when we come to this Table that we copy out this pattern of his in a perfect forgiveness of all that have offended us; and not only forgiveness, but such a kindness also as will express itself in all offices of love and friendship to them.

18. And if you have formerly so quite forgot that blessed example of his, as to do the direct contrary, if you have done any unkindness or injury to any person, then you are to seek forgiveness from him; and to that end, first, acknowledge your fault, & secondly Restore to him, to the utmost of your power, whatsoever you have deprived him of, either in goods or credit. This Reconciliation with our brethren is absolutely necessary towards the making any of our services acceptable with God, as appears by that precept of Christ, Matth. 5. 23, 24. If thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave there thy gift before the Altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Where you see, that though the gift be already at the Altar, it must rather be left there unoffered then be offered by a man that is not at perfect peace with his neighbor. And if this charity be so necessary in all our services, much more in this where by a joint partaking in the same holy mysteries, we signify our being united and knit not only to Christ our head, but also to each other, as fellow members. And therefore if we come with any malice in our hearts, we commit an act of the highest Hypocrisy by making a solemn profession in the Sacrament of that charity and brotherly love, whereof our hearts are quite void.

19. Another most necessary grace at this time is that of devotion, for the raising whereof we must allow ourselves some time to withdraw from our worldly affairs, and wholly to set ourselves to this business of preparation, one very special part of which preparation lies in raising up our souls to a devout and heavenly temper. And to that it is most necessary that we cast off all thoughts of the world, for they will be sure as so many clogs to hinder our souls in their mounting towards heaven. A special exercise of this devotion is Prayer, wherein we must be very frequent and earnest at our coming to the Sacrament, this being one great instrument wherein we must obtain all those other graces required in our preparation. Therefore be sure this be not omitted; for if you use never so much endeavor besides, and leave out this, it is the going to work in your own strength without looking to God for his help, and then it is impossible you should prosper in it: For we are not able of ourselves to think anything, as of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God, 2 Cor. 3. 5. Therefore be instant with him so to assist you with his grace, that you may come so fitted to this holy Table, that you may be partakers of the benefits there reached out to all worthy receivers.

20. These and all other spiritual Graces our Souls must be clothed with when we come to this Feast, for this is that Wedding garment, without which, whosoever comes is like to have the entertainment mentioned in the parable of him who came to the marriage without a wedding garment, Mat. 22. 13. who was cast into utter darkness, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth; for though it is possible he may sit it out at the present and not be snatched from the Table, yet S. Paul assures him, he drinks damnation to himself, and how soon it may fall on him is uncertain: But it is sure, it will, if repentance prevent it not, and as sure that whenever it does come it will be intolerable, for who among us can dwell with everlasting burnings? Isa. 33. 14.

21. I shall add but one thing more concerning the things which are to be done before the Sacrament, and that is an advice, That if any person upon a serious view of himself cannot satisfy his own Soul of his sincerity, and so doubts whether he may come to the Sacrament, he do not rest wholly on his own judgment in the case: for if he be a truly humbled Soul, it is likely he may judge too hardly of himself; if he be not, it is odds, but if he be left to the satisfying of his own doubts, he will quickly bring himself to pass too favorable a sentence. Or whether he be the one or the other, if he come to the Sacrament in that doubt, he certainly plunges himself into farther doubts and scruples, if not into sin: On the other side, if he forbear because of it, if that fear be a causeless one, then he groundlessly absents himself from that Holy Ordinance, and so deprives his Soul of the benefits of it. Therefore in the midst of so many dangers which attend the mistake of himself, I would, as I said before, exhort him not to trust to his own judgment, but to make known his case to some discreet and godly Minister, and rather be guided by his, who will probably (if the case be duly and without any disguise discovered to him) be better able to judge of him than he of himself. This is the counsel the Church gives in the exhortation before the Communion, where it is advised, That if any by other means there forementioned, cannot quiet his own conscience, but require farther counsel and comfort, then let him go to some discreet and learned Minister of God's Word and open his grief, that he may receive such ghostly counsel, advice and comfort that his conscience may be relieved, &c. This is surely such advice as should not be neglected neither at the time of coming to the Sacrament, nor any other when we are under any fear or reasons of doubt concerning the state of our Souls. And for want of this, many have run into very great mischief, having let the doubt fester so long that it hath either plunged them into deep distresses of conscience, or which is worse, they have to still that disquiet within them, betaken themselves to all sinful pleasures, and so quite cast off all care of their souls.

22. But to all this it will perhaps be said, That this cannot be done without discovering the nakedness and blemishes of the soul, and there is shame in that, and therefore men are unwilling to do it. But to that I answer, That it is very unreasonable that should be a hindrance. For, first, I suppose you are to choose only such a person as will faithfully keep any secret you shall commit to him, and so it can be no public shame you can fear. And if it be in respect of that single person, you need not fear that neither; for, supposing him a godly man, he will not think the worse of you, but the better, that you are so desirous to set all right between God and your Soul. But if indeed there were shame in it, yet as long as it may be a means to cure both your trouble and your sin too (as certainly godly and faithful counsel may tend much to both) that shame ought to be despised, and it is sure it would if we loved our Souls as well as our Bodies; for in bodily diseases, be they never so foul or shameful, we count him a fool who will rather miss the cure than discover it, and then it must here be so much a greater folly by how much the Soul is more precious than the Body.

23. But God knows, it is not only doubting persons, to whom this advice might be useful, there are others of another sort, whose confidence is their disease, who presume very groundlessly of the goodness of their estates: And for those it were most happy, if they could be brought to hear some more equal judgments, then their own in this so weighty a business. The truth is, we are generally so apt to favor ourselves, that it might be very useful for the most, especially the more ignorant sort, sometimes to advise with a spiritual guide, to enable them to pass right judgments on themselves; and not only so, but to receive directions, how to subdue and mortifie those sins they are most inclined to, which is a matter of so much difficulty, that we have no reason to despise any means that may help us in it.

24. I have now gone through those several parts of duty we are to perform before our receiving. In the next place, I am to tell you, what is to be done at the time of receiving. When thou art at the Holy Table; first, humble thyself in an unfeigned acknowledgment of thy great unworthiness to be admitted there; and to that purpose remember again between God and thine own Soul, some of thy greatest, and foulest sins, thy breaches of former vows made at that Table, especially since thy last receiving. Then meditate on those bitter sufferings of Christ, which are set out to us in the Sacrament, when thou seest the bread broken, remember how his blessed body was torn with nails upon the Cross; when thou seest the Wine poured out, remember how his precious blood was spilled there; and then consider, it was thy sins that caused both. And here think, how unworthy a wretch thou art to have done that which occasioned such torments to him? How much worse then his very crucifiers? They crucified him once, but thou hast, as much as in thee lay, crucified him daily. They crucified him because they knew him not, but thou hast known both what he is in himself, The Lord of Glory, and what he is to thee, a most tender and merciful Savior, and yet thou hast still continued thus to crucify him afresh. Consider this, and let it work in thee, first, a great sorrow for thy sins past, and then a great hatred and a firm resolution against them for the time to come.

25. When thou hast a while thus thought on these sufferings of Christ for the increasing thy humility and contrition; then in the second place think of them again, to stir up thy Faith, look on him as the sacrifice offered up for thy sins, for the appeasing of God's wrath, and procuring his favor and mercies toward thee. And therefore believingly, yet humbly beg of God to accept of that satisfaction made by his innocent and beloved Son, and for the merits thereof to pardon thee whatever is past, and to be fully reconciled to thee.

26. In the third place consider them again to raise thy thankfulness. Think how much both of shame and pain he there endured, but especially those great agonies of his Soul, which drew from him that bitter cry, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me, Matt. 27. 45. Now all this he suffered only to keep thee from perishing. And therefore consider what inexpressible thanks thou owest him; and endeavor to raise thy Soul to the most zealous and hearty thanksgiving: For this is a principal part of duty at this time, the praising and magnifying that mercy which hath redeemed us by so dear a price. Therefore it will here well become thee to say with David, I will take the Cup of Salvation and will call upon the Name of the Lord.

27. Fourthly, look on these sufferings of Christ to stir up this love; and surely there cannot be a more effectual means of doing it, for here the love of Christ to thee is most manifest, according to that of the Apostle, 1 John 3. 16. Hereby perceive we the love of God towards us, because he laid down his life for us. And that even the highest degree of love, for as himself tells us, John 15. 13. Greater love then this hath no man, then that a man lay down his life for his friend. Yet even greater love then this had he, for he not only died, but died the most painful and most reproachful death, and that not for his friends, but his utter enemies. And therefore if after all this love on his part there be no return of love on ours, we are worse then the vilest sort of men, for even the Publicans, Matth. 5. 46. <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> Love those that love them. Here therefore chide and reproach thyself that thy love to him is so faint and cool, when his to thee was so zealous and affectionate. And endeavor to enkindle this holy flame in thy Soul, to love him in such a degree that thou mayest be ready to copy out his example, to part with all things, yea, even life itself whenever he calls for it, that is, whensoever thy obedience to any command of his shall lay thee open to those sufferings. But in the mean time to resolve never again to make any league with his enemies, to entertain or harbor any sin in thy breast. But if there have any such hitherto remained with thee, make this the season to kill and crucify it; offer it up at this instant a sacrifice to him who was sacrificed for thee, and particularly for that very end that he might redeem thee from all iniquity. Therefore here make thy solemn resolutions to forsake every sin, particularly, those into which thou hast most frequently fallen. And that thou mayest indeed perform those resolutions, earnestly beg of this crucified Savior that he will, by the power of his death, mortify and kill all thy corruptions.

28. When thou art about to receive the Consecrated Bread and Wine, remember that God now offers to Seal to thee that New Covenant made with mankind in his Son. For since he gives that his Son in the Sacrament, he gives with him all the benefits of that Covenant, to wit, pardon of sins, sanctifying grace and a title to an eternal inheritance. And here be astonished at the infinite goodness of God, who reaches out to thee so precious a treasure. But then remember that this is all but on condition that thou perform thy part of the Covenant. And therefore settle in thy soul the most serious purpose of obedience, and then with all possible devotion join with the Minister in that short, but excellent prayer, used at the instant of giving the Sacrament, The Body of our Lord, &c.

29. So soon as thou hast received, offer up thy devoutest praises for that great mercy, together with thy most earnest prayers for such assistance of God's Spirit as may enable thee to perform the vow thou hast now made. Then remembering that Christ is a propitiation not for our sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world; let thy charity reach as far as his hath done, and pray for all mankind that everyone may receive the benefit of that sacrifice of his; commend also to God the estate of the Church, that particularly whereof thou art a Member.

And forget not to pray for all to whom thou owest obedience, both in Church and State; and so go on to pray for such particular persons as either thy relations or their wants shall present to thee. If there be any Collection for the poor (as there always ought to be at this time) give freely according to thy ability; or if by the default of others, there be no such Collection, yet do thou privately design something towards the relief of thy poor brethren, and be sure to give it the next fitting opportunity that offers itself. All this thou must contrive to do in the time that others are receiving, that so when the public prayers, after the administration begin, thou mayst be ready to join in them, which thou must likewise take care to do with all devotion: thus much for thy behavior at the time of receiving.

30. Now follows the third and last thing; That is, what thou art to do after thy receiving. That which is immediately to be done, is as soon as thou art retir'd from the Congregation, to offer up again to God thy Sacrafice of praise for all those precious mercies conveyed to thee, in that holy Sacrament, as also humbly to entreat the continued assistance of his grace to enable thee to make good all those purposes of obedience thou hast now made. And in whatsoever thou knowest thyself most in danger, either in respect of any former habit, or natural inclination, there especially desire and earnestly beg his aid.

31. When thou hast done thus, do not presently let thyself loose to thy worldly cares and business. But spend all that day, either in meditating, praying, reading, good conferences, or the like; so as may best keep up that holy flame that is enkindled in thy heart. Afterwards, when thy calling requires thee to fall to thy usual affairs, do it, but yet still remember that thou hast a greater business then that upon thy hands; that is, the performing of all those promises, thou so lately madest to God, and therefore whatever thy outward employments are, let thy heart be set on that, keep all the particulars of thy resolution in memory, and whenever thou art tempted to any of thy old sins, then consider, this is the thing thou so solemnly vowedst against, and withal remember what a horrible guilt it will be, if thou shouldst now willfully do anything contrary to that vow; Yea, and what a horrible mischief also it will be to thyself. For at thy receiving, God and thou entredst into Covenant, into a league of friendship and kindness. And as long as thou keepest in that friendship with God, thou art safe, all the malice of men or devils can do thee no harm: For as the Apostle saith, Rom. 8. 31. If God be for us who can be against us? But if thou breakest this league (as thou certainly dost, if thou yield to any willful sin) then God and thou are enemies, and if all the world then were for thee, it could not avail thee.

32. Nay, thou wilt get an enemy with in thine own bosom, thy conscience accusing and upbraiding thee; and when God and thine own conscience are thus against thee, thou canst not but be extremely miserable even in this life, besides that fearful expectation of wr••h which awaits thee in the next. Remember all this when thou art set upon by any temptation, and then sure thou canst not but look upon that temptation as a cheat, that comes to rob thee of thy Peace, thy God, thy very Soul. And then surely it will appear as unfit to entertain it, as thou wouldst think it to harbor one in thy house who thou knowest came to rob thee of what is dearest to thee.

33. And let not any experience of God's mercy in *pardon*ing thee heretofore encourage thee again to provoke him; for besides that it is the highest degree of wickedness and unthankfulness to make that goodness of his which should lead thee to repentance an encouragement in thy sin: Besides this, I say, the oftener thou hast been pardon'd, the less reason thou hast to expect it again, because thy sin is so much the greater for having been committed against so much mercy. If a King have several times *pardon*ed an offender, yet if he still return to commission of the same fault, the King will at last be forced, if he have any love to Justice, to give him up to it. Now so it is here, God is as well just as merciful, and his Justice will at last surely and heavily avenge the abuse of his Mercy; and there cannot be a greater abuse of his mercy then to sin in hope of it: so that it will prove a miserable deceiving of thyself thus to presume upon it.

34. Now this care of making good thy vow must not abide with thee some few days only and then be cast aside, but it must continue with thee all thy days. For if thou break thy vow, it matters not whether sooner or later. Nay, perhaps the guilt may in some respects be more, if it be late, for if thou have for a good while gone on in the observance of it, that shows the thing is possible to thee; and so thy after breaches are not of insirmity, because thou canst not avoid them, but of perverseness, because thou wilt not: Besides the use of Christian-Walking must needs make it more easy to thee. For indeed all the difficulty of it is but from the custom of the contrary: And therefore if after some acquaintance with it, when thou hast overcome somewhat of the hardness, thou shalt then give it over, it will be most inexcusable. Therefore be careful all the days of thy life to keep such a Watch over thyself, and so to avoid all occasions of temptations, as may preserve thee from all Wilful breaches of this vow.

35. But though the obligation of every such single vow reach to the utmost day of our lives, yet are we often to renew it, that is, we are often to receive the holy Sacrament, for that being the means of conveying to us so great and invaluable benefits; and it being also a command of Christ, That we should do this in remembrance of him, we are in respect both of reason and duty to omit no fit opportunity of partaking of that holy Table. I have now shown you what that reverence is which we are to pay to God in his Sacrament.

PARTITION IV. HONOUR *due to God's Name; Of Sinning against it; Blasphemy; Swearing; Assertory Oaths, Promissory Oaths; Unlawful Oaths: Of Perjury; Of vain Oaths, and the Sin of them, &c.

§. 1. THE last thing wherein we are to express our Reverence to him, is, the Honouring his Name. Now what this Honouring of his Name is, we shall best understand by considering what are the things by which it is dishonored, the avoiding of which will be our way of honoring it.

The first is, all Blasphemies, or speaking any evil thing of God, the highest degree whereof is cursing him, or if we do not speak it with our mouths, yet if we do it in our hearts by thinking any unworthy thing of Him; it is looked on by God, who sees the heart, as the vilest dishonor. But there is also a blasphemy of the actions, that is, when men who profess to be the servants of God, live so wickedly that they bring up an evil report on him whom they own as their Master and Lord. This Blasphemy the Apostle takes notice of, Rom. 2. 24. Where he tells those who profess to be observers of the Law, That by their wicked actions, the Name of God was blasphemed among the Gentiles. Those Gentiles were moved to think ill of God, as the favourer of sin, when they saw those, who called themselves his servants, commit it.

A second way of Dishonouring God's Name is, by swearing, and that is of two sorts, either by false Oaths, or else by rash and light ones. A false Oath may also be of two kinds, as first, that by which I affirm somewhat, or secondly, that by which I promise. The first is when I say such or such a thing was done so or so, and confirm this saying of mine with an Oath; if then I know there be not perfect truth in what I say, this is a flat perjury, a downright being forsworn: Nay, if I swear to the truth of that whereof I am only doubtful, though the thing should happen to be true, yet it brings upon me the guilt of Perjury; for I swear at a venture, and the thing might for ought I knew be as well false as true, whereas I ought never to swear to anything, the truth of which I do not certainly know.

2. But besides this sort of Oaths, by which I affirm anything, there is the other sort, that by which I promise somewhat. And that promise may be either to God or Man, when it is to God, we call it a vow of which I have already spoken, under the head of the Sacraments, I shall now only speak of that to man; & this may become a false oath, either at, or after the time of taking it. At the time of taking, it is false if either I have then no real purpose of making it good, or else take it in a sense different from that which I know, he to whom I make the promise understands it; for the use of oaths being to assure the persons to whom they are made, they must be taken in their sense. But if I were never so sincere at the taking the Oath, if afterwards I do not perform it I am certainly Perjured.

3. The nature of an Oath being then thus binding, it merely concerns us to look that the Matter of our Oaths be lawful, for else we run ourselves into a woeful snare. For Example, suppose I swear to kill a man, if I perform my Oath I am guilty of Murder, if I break it, of Perjury. And so I am under a necessity of sinning one way or other: But there is nothing puts us under a greater degree of this unhappy necessity, then when we swear two Oaths, whereof the one is directly cross and contradictory to the other. For if I swear to give a man my whole estate, and afterwards swear to give all or part of that estate to another, it is certain I must break my Oath to one of them, because it is impossible to perform it to both, and so I must be under a necessity of being forsworn. And into this unhappy straight every man brings himself that takes any Oath which crosses some other which he hath formerly taken; which should make all that love either God or their own souls, resolve never thus miserably to entangle themselves by taking one Oath cross and thwarting to another. But it may perhaps here be asked, What a person that hath already brought himself into such a condition shall do? I answer, he must first heartily repent the great sin of taking the unlawful oath, and then stick only to the lawful, which is all that is in his power towards the repairing his fault, and qualifying him for God's pardon for it.

4. Having said this concerning the kinds of this sin of Perjury, I shall only add a few words to show you how greatly God's Name is dishonored by it. In all Oaths you know, God is solemnly called to witness the truth of that which is spoken; now if the thing be false, it is the basest affront and dishonor that can possibly be done to God. For it is in reason to signify one of these two things, either that we believe he knows not whether we say true or no; (and that is to make him no God, to suppose him to be as deceivable, and easy to be deluded as one of our ignorant neighbors) or else that he is willing to countenance our Lies; the former robs him of that great attribute of his, his knowing all things, and is surely a great dishonoring of him, it being even amongst men accounted one of the greatest disgraces to account a man fit to have cheats put upon him; yet even so to deal with God if we venture to for swear upon a hope that God discerns it not. But the other is yet worse, for the supposing him willing to countenance our lies, is the making him a party in them; and is not only the making him no God (it being impossible that God should either lie himself or approve it in another) but it is the making him like the very Devil. For he it is that is a liar, and the Father of it, John 8. 44. And sure I need not say more to prove that this is the highest degree of dishonoring God's Name.

5. But if any yet doubt the heinousness of this sin, let him but consider what God himself says of it in the Third Commandment, where he solemnly professes, He will not hold him guiltless that taketh his Name in vain; and sure the adding that to this Commandment, and none of the rest, is the marking this out for a most heinous guilt. And if you look into Zac. 5. you will there find the punishment is answerable, even to the utter destruction not only of the man, but his house also. Therefore it concerns all men as they love either their temporal or eternal welfare to keep them most strictly from this sin.

But besides this of for swearing, I told you there was another sort of Oaths by which God's Name is dishonored, those are the vain and light Oaths, such as are so usual in our common discourse, and are expressly forbidden by Christ, Mat. 5. 34. But I say unto you, swear not at all, neither by Heaven, for it is God's throne, nor by the Earth, for it is his footstool: where you see we are not allowed to swear even by mere creatures, because of the relation they have to God. How great a wickedness is it then to profane his holy Name by rash and vain Oaths, this is a sin that is (by I know not what charm of Satan's) grown into a fashion among us; and now its being so, draws daily more men into it. But it is to be remembered that when we shall appear before God's Judgment seat to answer for those profanations of his Name, it will be no excuse to say, It was the fashion to do so: it will rather be an increase of our guilt, that we have by our own practice helped to confirm that wicked custom which we ought to have beat down and discouraged.

6. And sure whatever this profane Age thinks of it, this is a sin of very high nature. For besides that it is a direct breach of the Precept of Christ, it shows first, a very mean and low esteem of God: Every Oath we swear is the appealing to God to judge the truth of what we speak, and therefore being of such greatness and Majesty, requires that the matter concerning which we thus appeal to him should be of great weight and moment, somewhat wherein either his own glory, or some considerable good of man is concerned. But when we swear in common discourse it is far otherwise, any the triflingest or lightest thing serves for the matter of an Oath, nay, often men swear to such vain and foolish things, as a considering person would be ashamed barely to speak. And is it not a great despising of God to call him solemnly to judge in such childish, such wretched matters? God is the great King of the world; now though a King be to be resorted unto in weighty cases, yet sure he would think himself much despised if he should be called to judge between Boys at their childish games: And God knows many things whereto we frequently swear, are not of greater weight, and therefore are a sign that we do not rightly esteem of God.

7. Secondly, This common swearing is a sin which leads directly to the former of forswearing, for he that by the use of swearing hath made Oaths so familiar to him, will be likely to take the dreadfullest Oath without much consideration. For how shall he that swears hourly, look upon an Oath with any reverence? and he that doth not, it is his chance, not his care, that is to be thanked, if he keep from Perjury. Nay, further; he that swears commonly, is not only prepared to forswear, when a solemn Oath is rendered him, but in all probability does actually forswear himself often in these suddener Oaths: for supposing them to come from a man ere he is aware (which is the best can be said of them) what assurance can any man have who swears ere he is aware, that he shall not lie so too? And if he doth both together, he must necessarily be forsworn. But he that observes your common swearers will be put past doubt that they are often forsworn. For they usuaily swear indifferently to things true or false, doubtful or certain. And I doubt not but if men who are guilty of this sin would but impartially examine their own practice, their hearts would second me in this observation.

8. Thirdly, This is a sin to which there is no temptation, there is nothing either of pleasure or profit got by it: Most other sins offer us somewhat either of the one or the other, but this is utterly empty of both. So that in this sin the Devil does not play the Merchant for our Souls, as in others he does; he doth not so much as cheapen them, but we give them freely into his hands without anything in exchange. There seems to be but one thing possible for men to hope to gain by it, & that is to be believed in what they say when they thus bind it by an Oath. But this also they constantly fail of, for there are none so little believed as the common swearers. And good reason, for he that makes no conscience thus to profane God's Name, why shall any man believe he makes any of lying? Nay, their forwardness to confirm every the slightest thing by an Oath, rather gives jealousy that they have some inward guilt of falseness, for which that Oath must be the cloak. And thus you see in how little stead it stands them, even to this only purpose for which they can pretend it useful: and to any other advantage it makes not the least claim, and therefore is a sin without temptation, and consequently without excuse; for it shows the greatest contempt, nay, unkindness to God, when we will provoke him thus, without anything, to tempt us to it. And therefore though the commonness of this sin have made it pass but for a small one, yet is very far from being so, either in itself, or in God's account.

9. Let all therefore who are not yet fallen into the custom of this sin, be most careful never to yield to the least beginnings of it, and for those who are so miserable, as to be already ensnared in it, let them immediately, as they tender their Souls, get out of it. And let no man plead the hardness of leaving an old custom, as an excuse for his continuing in it, but rather the longer he hath been in it, so much the more haste let him make out of it, as thinking it too too much, that he hath so long gone on in so great a sin. And if the length of the custom have increased the difficulty of leaving it, that is in all reason to make him set immediately to the casting it off, lest that difficulty at last grow to an impossibility; and the harder he finds it at the present, so much the more diligent and watchful he must be in the use of all those means, which may tend to the overcoming that sinful habit: some few of those means it will not be amiss here to mention.

10. First let him possess his mind fully of the hainousness of the sin, and not to measure it only according to the common rate of the world. And when he is fully persuaded of the guilt, then let him add to that, the consideration of the danger, as that it puts him out of God's favor at the present, and will, if he continue in it, cast him into Hell forever. And sure if this were but thoroughly laid to heart, it would restrain this sin: For I would ask a man, that pretends impossibility of leaving the custom, whether if he were sure he should be hanged the next oath he swore, the fear of it would not keep him from swearing? I can scarce believe any man in his wits so little Master of himself, but it would. And then surely damning is so much worse than hanging, that in all reason the fear of that ought to be a much greater restraint. The doubt is, men do either not heartily believe that this sin will damn them, or if they do, they look on it, as a thing a great way off and so are not much moved with it; but both these are very unreasonable. For the first, it is certain, that everyone that continues willfully in any sin is so long in a state of damnation, and therefore this being so continued in, must certainly put a man in that condition, For the second, it is very possible, he may be deceived in thinking it so far off, for how knows any man that he shall not be struck dead with an oath in his mouth? Or if he were sure not to be so, yet eternal damnation is surely to be dreaded above all things, be it at what distance soever.

11. A second means is to be exactly true in all thou speakest; that all men may believe thee on thy bare word, and then thou wilt never have occasion to confirm it by an oath, to make it more credible, which is the only color or reason can at any time be pretended for swearing.

12. Thirdly, Observe what it is that most betrays thee to this sin, whether drink, or anger or the company and example of others, or what ever else, and then if ever thou mean to forsake the sin, forsake those occasions of it.

13. Fourthly, Endeavour to possess thy heart with a continual Reverence of God, and if that once grow into a custom with thee, it will quickly turn out that contrary one of profaning. Use and accustom thyself therefore to this reverence of God, and particularly to such a respect to his name, as if it be possible, never to mention it without some lifting up of thy heart to him. Even in thy ordinary discourse, when ever thou takest his Name in to thy mouth, let it be an occasion of raising up thy thoughts to him. But by no means permit thyself to use it in idle bywords, or the like. If thou doest accustom thyself to pay this reverence to the bare mention of his name, it will be an excellent fence against the profaning it in oaths.

14. A fifth means is a diligent and constant watch over thyself, that thou thus offend notwith thy tongue, without which all the former will come to nothing. And the last means is prayer, which must be added to all thy endeavors, therefore pray earnestly, that God will enable thee to overcome this wicked custom; say with the Psalmist, Set a watch O Lord over my mouth, and keep the door of my lips; and if thou doest sincerely set thyself to the use of means for it, thou mayest be assured, God will not be wanting in his assistance. I have been the longer on this because it is so reigning a sin. God in his mercy give all that are guilty of it a true sight of the heinousness of it.

15. By these several ways of dishonoring God's Name you may understand what is the duty of honoring it, viz. A strict abstaining from everyone of these, and that abstinence founded on an awful respect and reverence to that sacred Name which is Great, Wonderful and Holy, Psa. 99. 3. I have now past through the several branches of that great duty of Honouring of God.

PARTITION V. Of WORSHIP due to God's Name. Of PRAYER, and its several parts. Of public Prayers in the CHURCH, in the FAMILY. Of PRIVATE PRAYER. Of REPENTANCE, &c. Of FASTING.

§. 1. The Eighth Duty we owe to God is WORSHIP; This is that great duty by which especially we acknowledge his Godhead, Worship, being proper only to God, and therefore it is to be looked on as a most weighty duty. This is to be performed, first, by our Souls, secondly, by our Bodies: The Souls part is Praying. Now prayer is a speaking to God, and there are divers parts of it, according to the different things about which we speak.

2. As first, There is Confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God. And this may be either general or particular; the general is when we only confess in gross, that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins. The former is necessary to be always a part of our solemn prayers, whether public or private. The latter is proper for private prayer, and there the oftener it is used the better; yea, even in our daily private prayer it will be fit constantly to remember some of our greatest and foulest sins, though never so long since past. For such we should never think sufficiently confessed and bewailed. And this bewailing must always go along with Confession; we must be heartily sorry for the sins we confess, and from our souls acknowledge our own great unworthiness in having committed them. For our confession is not intended to instruct God, who knows our sins much better than ourselves do, but it is to humble ourselves, and therefore we must not think we have confessed aright till that be done.

3. The second part of prayer is Petition; that is, the begging of God whatsoever we want either for our Souls or Bodies. For our Souls we must first beg pardon of sins, and that for the sake of Jesus Christ, who shed his blood to obtain it. Then we must also beg the grace and assistance of God's Spirit to enable us to forsake our sins, and to walk in obedience to him. And herein it will be needful particularly to beg all the several virtues, as Faith, Love, Zeal, Purity, Repentance, and the like, but especially those which thou most wantest: And therefore observe what thy wants are, and if thou beest proud, be most instant in praying for humility; if lustful, for chastity, and so for all other Graces, according as thou findest thy needs. And in all these things that concern thy Soul, be very earnest and importunate, take no denial from God, nor give over, though thou do not presently obtain what thou suest for. But if thou hast never so long prayed for a grace, and yet findest it not, do not grow weary of praying, but rather search what the cause may be which makes thy prayer so ineffectual; see if thou do not thyself hinder them; perhaps thou prayest to God to enable thee to conquer some sin, and yet never goest about to fight against it, never makest any resistance, but yieldest to it as often as it comes, may, puttest thyself in its way, in the road of all temptations. If it be thus, no wonder though thy prayers avail not, for thou wilt not let them. Therefore amend this, and set to the doing of thy part sincerely, and then thou needest not fear but God will do his.

4. Secondly, We are to petition also for our bodies; that is, we are to ask of God such necessaries of life as are needful to us, while we live here. But these only in such a degree, and measure, as his wisdom sees best for us, we must not presume to be our own carvers, and pray for all that wealth, or greatness, which our own vain hearts may perhaps desire, but only for such a condition, in respect of outward things, as he sees may most tend to those great ends of our living here, the gloryfying him, and the saving of our own Souls.

5. A third part of Prayer is Deprecation, that is, when we pray to God to turn away some evil from us. Now this evil may be either the evil of sin or the evil of punishment: The evil of sin is that we are especially to pray against, most earnestly begging of God, That he will by the power of his grace, preserve us from falling into sin. And whatever sins they are to which thou knowest thyself most inclined, there be particularly earnest with God to preserve thee from them. This is to be done daily, but then more especially, when we are under any present temptation, and in danger of falling into any sin; in which case we have reason to cry out as S. Peter did when he found himself sinking, Save Lord, or I perish; humbly beseeching him either to withdraw the temptation, or strengthen us to withstand it, neither of which we can do for ourselves.

6. Secondly, We are likewise to Pray against the evil of Punishment, but principally against Spiritual punishments, as the anger of God, the withdrawing of his grace, and eternal damnation. Against these we can never pray with too much earnestness: But we may also pray against temporal punishments, that is, any outward affliction, but this with submission to God's will, according to the example of Christ, Mat. 26. 39. Not as I will, but as thou wilt.

7. A Fourth part of Prayer is Intercession, that is, praying for others: This in general we are to do for all mankind, as well strangers as acquaintance, but more particularly, those to whom we have any especial Relation, either public, as our Governors, both in Church and State, or private, as Parents, Husband, Wife, Children, Friends, &c. We are also to pray for all that are in affliction, and such particular persons as we discern especially to be so: Yea, we are to pray for those that have done us injury, those that despitefully use us and persecute us, for it is expressly the command of Christ, Mat. 5 44. And that whereof he hath likewise given us the highest example in praying even for his very crucifiers, Luk. 23. 34. Father forgive them. For all these sorts of persons we are to pray, and that for the very same good things we beg of God for ourselves, that God would give them in their several places and callings, all spiritual and temporal blessings which he sees wanting to them, and turn away from them all evil whether of sin or punishment.

8. The fifth part of Prayer is Thanksgiving; that is, the Praising and Blessing God for all his mercies, whether to our own persons, and those that immediately relate to us, or to the Church and Nation whereof we are members, or yet more general to all mankind; and this for all his mercies both spiritual and temporal. In the Spiritual, first, for those wherein we are all in common concerned, as the giving of his Son, the sending of his Spirit, and all those means he hath used to bring sinful men unto himself. Then secondly, for those mercies we have in our own particulars received, such are, the having been born within the pale of the Church, and so brought up in Christian Religion, by which we have been partakers of those precious advantages of the Word and Sacraments, and so have had, without any care or pains of ours, the means of eternal life put into our hands. But besides these, there is none of us but have received other spiritual mercies from God.

9. As first, God's patience and longsuffering, waiting for our Repentance, and not cutting us off in our sins. Secondly, his calls and invitations of us to that repentance, not only outward, in the ministry of the Word, but also inward, by the motions of his Spirit. But then if thou be one that hath by the help of God's grace been wrought upon by these calls, and brought from a profane or worldly, to a Christian course of life, thou art surely in the highest degree tied to magnify and praise his goodness, as having received from him the greatest of mercies.

10. We are likewise to give thanks for Temporal blessings, whether such as concern the public, as the prosperity of the Church or Nation, and all remarkable deliverances afforded to either; or else such as concern our particulars; such are all the good things of this life which we enjoy, as Health, Friends, Food, Raiment, and the like; also for those minutely preservations, whereby we are by God's gracious providence kept from danger, and the especial deliverances which God hath given us in time of greatest perils. It will be impossible to set down the several mercies which every man receives from God, because they differ in kind and degree between one man and another. But it is sure that he which receives least hath yet enough to employ his whole life in praises to God. And it will be very fit for every man to consider the several passages of this life, and the mercies he hath in each received, and so to gather a kind of List or Catalogue of them, at least the principal of them, which he may always have in his memory, and often with a thankful heart repeat before God.

11. These are the several parts of Prayer, and all of them to be used both publicly and privately. The public use of them is first, that in the Church, where all meet to join in those prayers wherein they are in common concerned. And this (where the prayers are such as they ought to be) we should be very constant at, there being an especial blessing promised to the joint requests of the faithful, and he that without a necessary cause absents himself from such public prayers, cuts himself off from the Church, which hath always been thought so unhappy a thing, that it is the greatest punishment the Governors of the Church can lay upon the worst offender; and therefore it is a strange madness for men to inflict it upon themselves.

12. A second sort of Public Prayer is that in a Family, where all that are members of it join in their common supplications; and this also ought to be very carefully attended to, first, by the Master of the Family, who is to look that there be such prayers, it being as much his part thus to provide for the Souls of his Children and Servants, as to provide food for their Bodies. Therefore there is none, even the meanest householder, but ought to take this care. If either himself or any of his Family can read, he may use some prayers out of some good book, if it be the Service Book of the Church, he makes a good choice; if they cannot read, it will then be necessary they should be taught without Book some form of prayer which they may use in the Family, for which purpose again some of the Prayers of the Church will be very fit, as being most easy for their memories by reason of their shortness, and yet containing a great deal of matter. But what choice soever they make of prayers, let them be sure to have some, and let no man that professes himself a Christian, keep so heat henish a Family, as not to see God be daily worshipped in it. But when the Master of a Family hath done his duty in this providing, it is the duty of every member of it to make use of that provision, by being constant and diligent at those Family-Prayers.

13. Private or secret Prayer is that which is used by a man alone apart from all others, wherein we are to be more particular, according to our particular needs, then in public it is fit to be. And this of private Prayer is a duty which will not be excused by the performance of the other of public. They are both required, and one must not be taken in exchange for the other. And whoever is diligent in public prayers, and yet negligent in private, it is much to be feared he rather seeks to approve himself to men than to God, contrary to the command of our Savior, Mat. 6. who enjoins this private prayer, this praying to our Father in secret, from whom alone we are to expect our reward, and not from the vain praises of men.

14. Now this duty of Prayer is to be often performed, by none seldomer then Evening and Morning, it being most necessary that we should thus begin and end all our works with God, and that not only in respect of the duty we owe him, but also in respect of ourselves, who can never be either prosperous or safe, but by committing ourselves to him; and therefore should tremble to venture on the perils either of day or night without his safeguard. How much oftener this duty is to be performed, must be judged according to the business or leisure men have; where, by business, I mean not such business as men unprofitably make to themselves, but the necessary business of a man's Calling, which with some will not afford them much time for set and solemn Prayer. But even these men may often in a day lift up their hearts to God in some short Prayers, even whilst they are at their work. As for those that have more leisure, they are in all reason to bestow more time upon this duty. And let no man that can find time to bestow upon his vanities, nay, perhaps his sins, say he wants leisure for prayer, but let him now endeavor to redeem what he hath mis-spent, by employing more of that leisure in this duty for the future. And surely if we did but rightly weigh how much it is our own advantage to perform this duty, we should think it wisdom to be as frequent as we are ordinarily seldom in it.

15. For first, it is a great Honor for us poor worms of the earth to be allowed to speak so freely to the Majesty of heaven. If a King should but vouchsafe to let one of his meanest Subjects talk familiarly and freely with him, it would be looked on as a huge honor; that man how despisable soever he were before, would then be the envy of all his neighbors; and there is little question, he would be willing to take all opportunities of receiving so great a grace. But alas! this is nothing to the honor is offered us, who are allowed, nay, invited to speak to, and converse with the King of Kings, and therefore how forward should we in all reason be to it?

16. Secondly, It is a great Benefit, even the greatest that can be imagined; for Prayer is the instrument of fetching down all good things to us, whether spiritual or temporal; no prayer, that is qualified as it ought to be, but is sure to bring down a blessing, according to that of the wise man, Eccles. 35. 17. The Prayer of the humble pierceth the clouds, and will not turn away till the highest regard it. You would think him a happy man that had one certain means of helping him to whatever he wanted, though it were to cost him much pains and labor; now this happy man thou mayest be if thou wilt. Prayer is the never-failing means of bringing thee, if not all that thou thinkest thou wantest, yet all that indeed thou dost, that is, all that God sees fit for thee. And therefore be there never so much weariness to thy flesh in the duty, yet considering in what continual want thou standest of something or other from God, it is madness to let that uneasiness dishearten thee, and keep thee from this so sure means of supplying thy wants.

17. But in the third place, this duty is in it self so far from being uneasy, that it is very pleasant. God is the fountain of happiness, and at his right hand are pleasures for evermore, Psalm 16. 11. And therefore the nearer we draw to him the happier we must needs be, the very joys of heaven arising from our nearness to God. Now in this life we have no way of drawing so near to him, as by this of Prayer, and therefore surely it is that, which in itself is apt to afford abundance of delight and pleasure, if it seem otherwise to us, it is from some distemper of our own hearts, which like a sick palate cannot relish the most pleasant meat. Prayer is a pleasant duty, but it is withal a spiritual one; and therefore if thy heart be carnal, if that be set either on the contrary pleasures of the flesh, or dross of the world, no marvel then, if thou taste no pleasantness in it, if like the Israelites thou despise Mann• whilst thou longest after the flesh pots of Egypt. Therefore if thou find a weariness in this duty, suspect thyself, purge, and refine thy heart from the love of all sin, and endeavor to put it into a heavenly and spiritual frame, and then thou wilt find this no unpleasant exercise, but full of delight and satisfaction. In the mean time complain not of the hardness of the duty, but of the unto wardness of thy own heart.

18. But there may also be another reason of its seeming unpleasant to us, and that is want of Use. You know there are many things, which seem uneasy at the first trial, which yet after we are accustomed to them, seem very delightful, and if this be thy case, then thou knowest a ready cure, viz. to use it oftener, and so this consideration naturally inforces the exhortation of being frequent in this duty.

19. But we are not only to consider how often, but how well we perform it. Now to do it well, we are to respect, first the matter of our Prayers, to look that we ask nothing that is unlawful, as revenge upon our eneies, or the like; secondly the manner; and that must be first in faith, we must believe, that if we ask as we ought, God will either give us the thing we ask for, or else something which he sees better for us. And then secondly in humility; we must acknowledge ourselves utterly unworthy of any of those good things we beg for, and therefore sue for them only for Christ's sake; thirdly with attention, we must mind what we are about, and not suffer ourselves to be carried away to the thought of other things. I told you at the first, that Prayer was the business of the soul, but if our minds be wandering, it is the work only of the tongue and lips, which make it in God's account no better then vain babbling, and so will never bring a blessing on us. Nay as Jacob said to his mother, Gen. 27. 12. It will be more likely to bring a curse on us then a blessing, for it is a profaning one of the most solemn parts of God's service, it is a piece of Hypocrisy, the drawing near to him with our lip, when our hearts are far from him, and a great slighting and despising that dreadful Majesty we come before: And as to ourselves it is a most ridiculous folly, that we who come to God upon such weighty errands, as are all the concernments of our souls and bodies, should in the midst forget our business, and pursue every the lightest thing that either our own vain fancies or the Devil, whose business it is here to hinder us, can offer to us. It is just as if a Mal•factor, that comes to sue for his life to the King, should in the midst of his supplication happen to espy a Butter fly, and then should leave his suit, and run a chace after that Butterfly: Would you not think it pity, a pardon should be cast away upon so wretchless a creature? And sure it will be as unreasonable to expect that God should attend and grant those suits of ours, which we do not at all consider ourselves.

20. This wandering in Prayer is a thing we are much concerned to arm ourselves against, it being that to which we are naturally wonderful prone. To that end it will be necessary first to possess our hearts at our coming to Prayers with the greatness of that Majesty we are to approach, that so we may dread to be vain and trifling in his presence. Secondly, We are to consider the great concernment of the things we are to ask, some whereof are such that if we should not be heard, we were of all creatures the most miserable, and yet this wandering is the way to keep us from being heard. Thirdly, We are to beg God's aid in this particular: And therefore when thou settest to Prayer, let thy first petition be for this grace of attention.

21. Lastly, Be as watchful as is possible over thy heart in time of prayer to keep out all wandering thoughts, or if any have gotten in let them not find entertainment, but as soon as ever thou discernest them, suffer them not to abide one moment, but cast them out with indignation, and beg God's pardon for them. And if thou dost thus sincerely and diligently strive against them, either God will enable thee in some measure to overcome, or he will in his mercy pardon thee what thou canst not prevent: But if it be through thy own negligence thou art to expect neither, so long as that negligence continues.

22. In the fourth place, we must look our Prayers be with Zeal and Earnestness, it is not enough that we so far attend them as barely to know what it is we say, but we must put forth all the affection and devotion of our souls, and that according to the several parts of prayer before mentioned. It is not the cold, faint request that will ever obtain from God. We see it will not from ourselves; for if a beggar should ask relief from us, and do it in such a scornful manner that he seemed indifferent whether he had it or no, we should think he had either little want or great pride; and so have no heart to give him. Now surely the things we ask from God are so much above the rate of an ordinary Alms, that we can never expect they should be given to slight and heartless petitions. No more in like manner will our Sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving ever be accepted by him, if it be not offered from a heart truly affected with the sense of his mercies; it's but a kind of formal complementing, which will never be approved by him who requires the heart, and not the lips only. And the like may be said of all the other parts of Prayer. Therefore be careful when thou drawest nigh to God in Prayer, to raise up thy soul to the highest pitch of zeal and earnestness thou art able. And because of thyself alone thou art not able to do anything, beseech God that he will inflame thy heart with this heavenly fire of Devotion, and when thou hast obtained it, beware that thou neither quench it by any willful sin, nor let it go out again for want of stirring it up and employing it.

23. Fifthly, We must Pray with Purity, I mean, we must purge our hearts from all affections to sin. This is surely the meaning of the Apostle, 1 Tim. 2. 8. when he commands men to lift up holy hands in Prayer, and he there instances in one special sort of sin, wrath and doubting; where, by doubting, is meant those unkind disputes and contentions which are so common amongst men. And surely he that cherishes that or any other sin in his heart, can never lift up those holy hands which are required in this duty. And then sure his prayers be they never so many or earnest, will little avail him: The Psalmist will tell him, he shall not be heard, Psal. 66. 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. Nay, Solomon will tell him yet worse, that his prayers are not only vain, but abominable, Prov. 15. 8. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord. And thus to have our prayers turned into sin, is one of the heaviest things can befall any man; we see it is set down in that sad Catalogue of curses, Psal. 109. 7. Therefore let us not be so cruel to ourselves as to pull it upon our own heads, which we certainly do if we offer up prayers from an impure heart.

24. In the last place we must direct our prayers to right ends; And that either in respect of the prayer itself, or the things we pray for; First, we must pray not to gain the praise of devotion amongst men, like those hypocrites, Mat. 6. 5. Nor yet only for company or fashion sake to do as others do: But we must do it, first, as an act of worship to God; secondly, as an acknowledgment, that he is that great spring, from whence alone we expect all good things. And thirdly, to gain a supply of our own or others needs. Then in respect of the Things prayed for; we must be sure to have no ill aims upon them; we must not ask that we may consume it upon our lusts, Jam. 4. 3. as those do who pray for wealth, that they may live in riot and excess, and for power, that they may be able to mischief their enemies, and the like. But our end in all must be God's glory first, and next that, our own and others Salvation, and all other things must be taken in only as they tend to those, which they can never do if we abuse them to sin. I have now done with that first part of worship, that of the Soul.

25. The other is that of the Body, and that is nothing else but such humble and reverent gestures in our approaches to God, as may both express the inward reverence of our Souls, and may also pay him some tribute from our very Bodies, with which the Apostle commands us to glorise God, as well as with our souls; and good reason, since he hath created and redeemed the one as well as the other: whensoever therefore thou offerest thy prayers unto God, let it be with all lowliness as well of body as of mind, according to that of the Psalmist, Psal. 95. 6. O come let us worship, let us fall down and kneel before the Lord our maker.

26. The Ninth DUTY to God is REPENTANCE: That this is a duty to God we are taught by the Apostle, Act. 20. 21. where speaking of repentance, he stiles it repentance towards God. And there is good reason this should be a duty to him, since there is no sin we commit but is either mediately or immediately against him. For though there be sins both against ourselves and our neighbors, yet they being forbidden by God, they are also breaches of his Commandments, and so sins against him.

This repentance is, in short, nothing but a turning from sin to God, the casting off all our former evils, and instead thereof constantly practicing all those Christian duties which God requireth of us. And this is so necessary a duty, that without it we certainly perish, we have Christ's word for it, Luke 13. 5. Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

27. The directions for performing the several parts of this duty have been already given in the preparation to the Lord's Supper, and thither I refer the Reader. Only I shall here mind him, that it is not to be looked upon as a duty to be practiced only at the time of receiving the Sacrament. For this being the only remedy against the poison of sin, we must renew it as often as we repeat our sins, that is daily. I mean we must every day repent of the sins of that day, for what Christ saith of other evils, is true also of this, sufficient to the day is the evil thereof; we have sins enough of each day to exercise a daily repentance, and therefore every man must thus daily call himself to account.

28. But as it is in accounts, they who constantly set down their daily expenses, have yet some set time of casting up the whole sum, as at the end of the week or month; so should it also be here, we should set aside some time to humble ourselves solemnly before God for the sins, not of that day only, but of our whole lives. And the frequenter these times are, the better. For the oftener we thus cast up our accounts with God, and see what vast debts we are run in to him, the more humbly shall we think of ourselves, and the more shall thirst after his mercy, which two are the special things that must qualify us for his pardon. He therefore that can assign himself one day in the week for this purpose, will take a thriving course for his soul. Or if any man's state of life be so busy as not to afford him to do it so often, let him yet come as near to that frequency as is possible for him, remembering always, that none of his worldly employments can bring him in near so gainful a return as this spiritual one will do, and therefore it is very ill husbandry to pursue them to the neglect of this.

29. Besides these constant times, there are likewise occasional times for the performance of this duty, such especially are the times of calamity and affliction, for when any such befalls us, we are to look on it as a message sent from heaven to call us to this duty, and therefore must never neglect it when we are thus summoned to it, lest we be of the number of them who despise the chastisements of the Lord, Heb. 12. 5.

30. There is yet another time of repentance, which in the practice of men hath gotten away the custom from all those, and that is the time of death, which, it is true, is a time very fit to renew our repentance, but sure not proper to begin it; and it is a most desperate madness for men to defer it till then. For to say the mildest of it, it is the venturing our Souls upon such miserable uncertainties as no wise man would trust with anything of the least value.

For first, I would ask any man that means to repent at his death, how he knows he shall have an hours time for it? do we not daily see men snatched away in a moment? and who can tell that it shall not be his own case? But secondly, suppose he have a more leisurely death, that some disease give him warning of its approach, yet perhaps he will not understand that warning, but will still flatter himself, as very often sick people do, with hopes of life to the last: and so his death may be sudden to him though it comes by never so slow degrees. But again, thirdly, if he do discern his danger, yet how is he sure he shall then be able to repent? Repentance is a grace of God, not at our command; and it is just and usual with God, when men have a long time refused and rejected that grace, resisted all his calls and invitations to conversion and amendment, to give them over at last to the hardness of their own hearts, and not to afford them anymore of that grace they have so despised. Yet suppose in the fourth place, that God in his infinite patience should still continue the offer of that grace to thee, yet thou that hast resisted, it may be thirty, or forty, or fifty years together, how knowest thou that thou shalt put off that habit of resistance upon a sudden, and make use of the grace afforded? It is sure thou hast many more advantages towards the doing it now then thou wilt have then.

31. For first, The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart the harder it will be to drive it out. It is true, if Repentance were nothing but a present ceasing from the acts of sin, the death bed were fittest for it, for then we are disabled from committing most sins; but I have formerly shown you repentance contains much more than so, there must be in it a sincere hatred of sin, and love of God. Now how unlikely is it that he which hath all his life loved sin, cherished it in his bosom, and on the contrary abhorred God and goodness, should in an instant quite change his affections, hate that sin he loved and love God and goodness, which before he utterly hated?

32. And secondly, The bodily pains that attend a death bed will distract thee and make thee unable to attend the work of repentance, which is a business of such weight and difficulty, as will employ all our powers even when they are at the freshest.

33. Consider those disadvantages thou must then struggle with, and then tell me what hope there is thou shalt then do that, which now upon much easier terms thou wilt not. But in the third place there is a danger behind beyond all these, and that is, that the repentance which death drives a man to, will not be a true repentance, for in such a case it is plain, it is only the fear of hell puts him on it, which though it may be a good beginning, where there is time after to perfect it, yet where it goes alone it can never avail for Salvation. Now that death bed repentances are often only of this sort, is too likely when it is observed, that many men who have seemed to repent, when they have thought Death approaching, have yet, after it hath pleased God to restore them to health, been as wicked (perhaps worse) as ever they were before; which shows plainly that there was no real change in them, and then surely had such a man died in that seeming repentance, God, who tries the heart, would not have accepted it, which he saw was unsincere. When all these dangers are laid together, it will surely appear a most desperate adventure for any man to trust to a Death-bed repentance. Nor is it ever the less for that example of the penitent Thief, Luke 23. 43. which is by many so much depended on. For it is sure, his case and ours differ widely, he had never heard of Christ before and so more could not be expected of him than to embrace him as soon as he was tendered to him: But we have had him offered, nay pressed upon us from our Cradles and yet have rejected. But if there were not this difference, it is but a faint hope can be raised only from a single example, and another we find not in the whole Bible. The Israelites we read were fed with Manna from Heaven, but would you not think him stark mad that should out of expectation of the like, neglect to provide himself any food? Yet it is full as reasonable to depend upon this example as the other. I conclude all in the words of the Wise man, Eccles. 12. 1. Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth before the evil days come.

34. To this duty of repentance, Fasting is very proper to be annexed. The Scripture usually joins them together; among the Jews the great day of atonement was to be kept with Fasting, as you may see by comparing Levite. 16. 31. with Isaiah 58. 5. and this by God's especial appointment. And in the Prophets when the people are called on to repent and humble themselves, they are also called on to Fast. Thus it is Joel 2. 12. Therefore now thus saith the Lord, Turn ye unto me with all your hearts, with fasting, and with weeping, &c. Yea, so proper hath Fasting been accounted to Humiliation, that we see even wicked Ahab would not omit it in his 2 Kings 21. 27. Nor the Heathen Ninevites in theirs, Jonah 3. 5. Nor is it less fit or less acceptable since Christ, then it was before him. For we see he supposes it as a duty sometimes to be performed, when he gives directions to avoid vain-glory in it, Matth. 6. 6. And also assures us that if it be performed, as it ought, not to please men, but God, it will surely be rewarded by him. And accordingly we find it practiced by the Saints: Anna, Luke 2, 37. Served God with fasting and prayer: where it is observable, that it is reckoned as a service of God, fit to be joined with prayers. And the Christians of the first times were generally very frequent in the practice of it. Now though fasting be especially proper to a time of humiliation, yet is it not so restrained to it but it may be seasonable, whensoever we have any extraordinary thing to request from God. Thus when Esther was to endeavor the deliverance of her people from destruction, she and all the Jews kept a solemn Fast, Esther 416. And thus when Paul and Barnabas were to be Ordained Apostles, there was fasting joined to prayer, Acts 13. 3. And so it will be very fit for us, whensoever we have need of any extraordinary directions, or assistance from God, whether concerning our temporal or spiritual concernments, thus to quicken our prayers by Fasting. But above all occasions, this of Humiliation seems most to require it, for besides the advantages of kindling our zeal, which is never more necessary then when we beg for pardon of sins, Fasting carries in it somewhat of revenge, which is reckoned as a special part of repentance, 2 Cor. 7. 11. For by denying our bodies the refreshment of our ordinary food, we do inflict somewhat of punishment upon ourselves for our former excesses, or whatever other sins we at that time accuse ourselves of; which is a proper effect of that indignation which every sinner ought to have against himself. And truly he that is so tender of himself that he can never find in his heart so much as to miss a meal, by way of punishment for his faults, shows he is not much fallen out with himself, for committing them, and so wants that indignation which the Apostle in the forenamed text mentions as a part of true repentance.

35. There is no doubt, but such Holy revenges upon ourselves for sins are very acceptable to God; yet we must not think that either those, or anything else we can do, can make satisfaction for our offenses, for that nothing but the blood of Christ can do. And therefore on that, and not on any of our performances we must depend for pardon. Yet since that blood shall never be applied to any but penitent sinners, we are as much concerned to bring forth all the fruits of repentance, as if our hopes depended on them only.

36. How often this duty of fasting is to be performed, we have no direction in Scripture. That must be allotted by men's own piety, according as their health, or other considerations will allow. But as it is in humiliation, the frequenter returns we have of set times for it, the better; so is it likewise in fasting, the oftener, the better, so it be not hurtful either to our healths, or to some other duty required of us. Nay perhaps fasting may help some men to more of those times for humiliation, then they would otherwise gain. For perhaps there are some, who cannot, without a manifest hindrance to their calling, allow a whole day to that work, yet such a one may at least afford that time, he would otherwise spend in eating: And so fasting will be doubly useful towards such a man's humiliation, both by helping him in the duty, and gaining him time f•••.

37. I have now gone through the first branch of our Duty to God, to wit, the Acknowledging him for our God. The Second is the having no other. Of which I need say little, as it is a forbidding of that grosser sort of Heathenish Idolatry, the worshipping of Idols, which though it were once common in the world, yet is now so rare, that it is not likely any that shall read this will be concerned in it. Only I must say, That to pay Divine Worship to any creature, be it Saint or Angel, yea, or the Image of Christ himself, is a transgression against this second branch of our duty to God, it being the imparting that to a creature which is due only to God, and therefore is strictly to be abstained from.

38. But there is another sort of Idolatry of which we are generally guilty, and that is, when we pay those affections of Love, Fear, Trust, and the like, to any creature in a higher degree than we do to God: for that is the setting up that thing, whatsoever it is, for our God. And this inward kind of Idolatry is that which provokes God to jealousy as well as the outward of worshipping an Idol. I might enlarge much upon this, but because some severals of it have been touched on in the former discourse, I suppose it needless. And therefore shall now proceed to the second head of DUTY, that to our SELVES.

PARTITION VI. Of DUTIES to our SELVES; Of Sobriety; Of Humility; the great Sin of PRIDE; the Danger, the Folly of this; Of VAINGLORY, the Danger, Folly; the Means to Prevent it: Of MEEKNES; the Means to obtain it, &c.

§. 1. THIS DUTY to our SELVES is by S. Paul in the forementioned Text, Titus 2. 12. summed up in this one word, Soberly. Now by Soberly, is meant our keeping within those due bounds which God hath set us. My business will therefore be to tell you what are the particulars of this Sobriety: And that first, in respect of the soul; secondly, in respect of the body: The sobriety of the soul stands in right governing its passions and affections; and to that are many Virtues required. I shall give you the particulars of them.

2. The first of them is Humility, which may well have the prime place, not only in respect of the excellency of the virtue, but also of its usefulness towards the obtaining of all the rest. This being the foundation on which all others must be built. And he that hopes to gain them without this, will prove but like that foolish builder Christ speaks of, Luke. 6. 49. who built his house on the sand. Of the Humility towards God I have already spoken, and shown the necessity of it, I am now to speak of Humility, as it concerns ourselves, which will be found no less necessary than the former.

3. This Humility is of two sorts, the first is, the having a mean and low opinion of ourselves, the second is the being content that others should have so of us. The first of these is contrary to pride, the other to vain-glory. And that both these are absolutely necessary to Christians, I am now to show you; which will, I conceive, best be done by laying before you first, the sin, secondly, the danger, thirdly, the contrary vices.

4. And first, for Pride; the sin of it is so great, that it cast the Angels out of heaven, and therefore if we may judge of sin by the punishment, it was not only the first, but the greatest sin that ever the Devil himself hath been guilty of: But we need no better proof of the heinousness of it, than the extreme hatefulness of it to God; which besides that instance of his punishing the Devil, we may frequently find in the Scriptures, Prov. 16. 5. Everyone that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord. And again, Chap. 6. 16. where there is mention of several things the Lord hates, a proud look is set as the first of them: So Jam. 4. 7. God resisteth the proud; and divers other texts there are to the same purpose, which show the great hatred God bears to this sin of Pride. Now since it is certain, God who is all goodness hates nothing, but as it is evil, it must needs follow, that where God hates in so great a degree, there must be a great degree of evil.

5. But secondly, PRIDE is not only very sinful but very dangerous; and that first, in respect of drawing us to other sins; secondly, of betraying us to punishments. First, Pride draws us to other sins, wherein it shows itself indeed to be the direct contrary to humility; for as that is the root of all Virtue, so is this of all Vice. For he that is proud sets himself up as his own God, and so can never submit himself to any other rules or Laws than what he makes to himself. The ungodly, says the Psalmist, is so proud that he careth not for God, Psal. 10. 4. Where you see it is his pride that makes him despise God. And when a man is once come to that, he is prepared for the commission of all sins. I might instance in a multitude of particular sins that naturally flow from this of pride; as first, Anger, which the wise man sets as the effect of pride, Pro. 21. 24. calling it proud wrath; secondly, strife and contention; which he again notes to be the off spring of pride, Prov. 13. 10. Only by pride cometh contention. And both these are indeed most natural effects of pride. For he that thinks very highly of himself expects much submission and observance from others, and therefore cannot but rage and quarrel whenever he thinks it not sufficiently paid. It would be infinite to mention all the fruits of this bitter root: I shall name but one more, and that is, that pride not only betrays us to many sins, but also makes them incurable in us, for it hinders the working of all remedies.

6. Those remedies must either come from God or man; if from God, they must be either in the way of meekness and gentleness, or else of sharpness and punishment. Now if God by his goodness essay to lead a proud man to repentance, he quite mistakes God's meaning, and thinks all the mercies he receives are but the reward of his own desert, and so long 'tis sure he will never think he needs repentance. But if on the other side God use him more sharply, and lay afflictions and punishments upon him, those in a proud heart work nothing but murmurings and hatings of God, as if he did him injury in those punishments. As for the remedies that can be used by man, they again must be either by way of correction, or exhortation; corrections from man will sure never work more on a proud heart, then those from God; for he that can think God unjust in them, will much rather believe it of man. And exhortations will do as little. For let a proud man be admonished though never so mildly and lovingly he looks on it as a disgrace. And therefore instead of confessing or amending the fault, he falls to reproaching his reprover as an over-busy or censorious person, and for that greatest and most precious act of kindness, looks on him as his enemy. And now one that thus stubbornly resists all means of cure must be concluded in a most dangerous estate.

7. But besides this danger of sin, I told you there was another, that of punishment; and of this there will need little proof when it is considered, that God is the proud man's professed enemy, that he hates and resists him, as appeared in the Texts forecited: And then there can be little doubt, that he which hath so mighty an adversary shall be sure to smart for it. Yet besides this general ground of conclusion, it may not be amiss to mention some of those texts which particularly threaten this sin, as Prov. 16. 18. Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall: Again, Prov. 16 5. Everyone that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord, though hand join in hand, yet they shall not be unpunished. The decree it seems is unalterable, and whatever endeavors are used to preserve the proud man they are but vain, for he shall not go unpunished. And this is very remarkable in the story of Nebuchadnezzor, Dan. 4. who though a King, the greatest in the world, yet for his pride was driven from among men to dwell and feed with beasts. And it is most frequently seen, that this sin meets with very extraordinary judgments even in this life. But if it should not, let not the proud man think that he hath escaped God's vengeance, for it is sure there will be a most sad reckoning in the next; for if God spared not the Angels for this sin, but cast them into hell, let no man hope to speed better.

8. In the third place I am to show you the great Folly of this sin; and to do that, it will be necessary to consider the several things whereof men use to be proud; they are of three sorts, either those which we call the goods of Nature, or the goods of Fortune, or the goods of Grace.

9. By the Goods of Nature, I mean Beauty, Strength, Wit, and the like, and the being proud of any of these is a huge folly: For first, we are very apt to mistake and think ourselves Handsome or Witty when we are not, and then there cannot be a more Ridiculous Folly then to be proud of what we have not, and such everyone esteems it in another man, though he never supposes it his own case, and so never discerns it in himself. And therefore there is nothing more despiseable amongst all men, then a Proud Fool, yet no man that entertains high opinions of his own wit but is in danger to be thus deceived, a man's own judgment of himself being of all others the least to be trusted. But secondly, suppose we be not out in judging, yet what is there in any of these natural endowments which is worth the being Proud? There being scarce any of them which some creature or other hath not in a greater degree then man. How much does the whiteness of the Lily, and the redness of the Rose exceed the white and red of the fairest face? What a multitude of creatures is there, that far surpass man in strength and swiftness? And divers others there are which as far as concerns any useful end of theirs, act much more wisely than most of us; and are therefore oftentimes in Scripture proposed to us by way of Example. It is therefore surely great unreasonableness for us to think highly of ourselves for such things as are common to us with beasts and plants. But thirdly, if they were as excellent as we fancy them, yet they are not at all durable, they are impaired and lost by sundry means; a frenzy will destroy the rarest wit, a sickness decay the freshest beauty, the greatest strength, or however old age will be sure to do all. And therefore to be proud of them is again a folly in this respect. But lastly, whatever they are, we gave them not to ourselves. No man can think he did anything towards the procuring his natural beauty or wit, and so can with no reason value himself for them.

10. In the second place, the folly is as great to be proud of the goods of Fortune; by them I mean wealth and honor, and the like; for it is sure, they add nothing of true worth to the man, somewhat of outward pomp and bravery they may help him to, but that makes no change in the person. You may load an Ass with money, or deck him with rich Trappings, yet still you will not make him a whit the nobler kind of beast by either of them. Then secondly, these are things we have no hold of, they vanish many times, ere we are aware, he that is rich today, may be poor tomorrow, and then will be the less pitied by all in his poverty, the prouder he was when he was rich. Thirdly, We have them all, but as Stewards, to lay out for our Masters use, and therefore should rather think how to make our accounts, than pride ourselves in our receipts. Lastly, Whatever of these we have, they, as well as the former, are not owing to ourselves. But if they be lawfully gotten, we owe them only to God, whose blessing it is, that maketh rich, Prov. 10. 22. If unlawfully, we have them upon such terms that we have very little reason to brag of them. And thus you see in these several respects, the folly of this second sort of pride.

11. The third is that of the goods of grace; that is any virtue a man hath. And here I cannot say, but the things are very valuable, they being infinitely more precious, than all the world, yet nevertheless this is of all the rest the highest folly. And that not only in the foregoing respect, that we help not ourselves to it, grace being above all things most immediately God's Work in us; but especially in this that the being proud of grace, is the fine way to lose it. God, who gives grace to the humble, will take it from the proud. For if, as we see in the parable, Mat. 25. 28. the talent was taken from him who had only put it to no use at all, how shall he hope to have it continued to him that hath put it to so ill, that instead of trading with it for God, hath trafficked with it for Satan? And as he will loose the Grace for the future, so he will loose all Reward of it for the time past. For let a man have done never so many good acts, yet if he be proud of them, that pride shall be charged on him to his destruction, but the good shall never be remembered to his reward. And this proves it to be a most wretched folly to be proud of grace. It is like that of children, that pull those things in pieces they are most fond of, but yet much worse than that of theirs, for we not only loose the thing (and that the most precious that can be imagined) but we must also be eternally punished for doing so, there being nothing that shall be so sadly reckoned for in the next world as the abuse of Grace, and certainly there can be no greater abuse of it, than to make it serve for an end so directly contrary to that for which it was given, it being given to make us humble, not proud; to magnify God, not ourselves.

12. Having shown you thus much of this sin, I suppose it will appear very necessary to be eschewed; to which purpose it will first be useful to consider what hath been already said concerning it, and that so seriously, as may work in thee not some slight dislike, but a deep and irreconcilable hatred of the sin: secondly, to be very watchful over thine own heart that it cherish not any beginnings of it; never suffer it to feed on the fancy of thy own worth, but when ever any such thought arises, beat it down immediately with the remembrance of some of thy follies or sins, and so make this very motion of pride an occasion of humility. Thirdly, Never to compare thyself with those thou thinkest more foolish or wicked than thyself, that so thou mayest like the Pharisee, Luk. 16. 11. extol thyself for being better; but if thou wilt compare, do it with the Wise, and Godly, and then thou wilt find thou comest so far short as may help to pull down thy high esteem of thyself. Lastly, To be very earnest in Prayer, that God would root out all degrees of this sin in thee, and make thee one of those poor in Spirit, Mat. 5. 3. to whom the blessing, even of Heaven itself, is promised.

13. The second contrary to humility I told you was vain glory. That is, a great thirst after the praise of men. And first, that this is a sin, I need prove no otherwise, then by the words of our Savior, John 5. 44. How can ye believe, that receive honor one of another? Where it appears, that it is not only a sin but such a one, as hinders the receiving of Christ into the heart, for so believing there signifies. This then in the second place shows you likewise the great dangerousness of this sin, for if it be that, which keeps Christ out of the heart, it is sure it brings infinite danger, since all our safety, all our hope of escaping the wrath to come, stands in receiving him. But besides the authority of this text, common experience shows, that where ever this sin hath possession it endangers men to fall into any other. For he that so considers the praise of men, that he must at no hand part with it when ever the greatest sins come to be in fashion and credit (as God knows many are nowadays) he will be sure to commit them rather than run the disgrace of being too single and precise; I doubt there are many consciences can witness the truth of this, so that I need say no more to prove the danger of this sin.

14. The third thing I am to show, is the folly of it; and that will appear first, by considering what it is we thus hunt after, nothing but a little air, a blast, the breath of men, it brings us in nothing of real advantage: for I am made never the wiser nor the better for a man's saying I am wise and good. Besides, if I am commended, it must be either before my face or behind my back; if the former, it is very often flattery, and so the greatest abuse that can be offered, and then I must be very much a fool to be pleased with it. But if it be behind my back, I have not then so much as the pleasure of knowing it; and therefore it is a strange folly thus to pursue what is so utterly gainless. But secondly, it is not only gainless, but painful and uneasy also, He that eagerly seeks praise is not at all master of himself, but must suit all his actions to that end, and instead of doing what his own reason and conscience (nay perhaps his worldly conveniency) directs him to, he must take care to do what will bring him in commendations, and so enslaves himself to everyone that hath but a tongue to commend him. Nay, there is yet a further uneasiness in it, and that is, when such a man fails of his aim, when he misses the praise, and perhaps meets with the contrary reproach, (which is no man's lot more often than the vain-glorious, nothing making a man more despised) then what disturbances and disquiets, and even tortures of mind he is under? A lively instance of this you have in Achitophel, 2 Samuel 17. 23. who had so much of this upon Absalom's despising his counsel, that he chose to rid himself of it, by hanging himself. And sure this painfulness that thus attends this sin, is sufficient proof of the folly of it. Yet this is not all, it is yet further very hurtful. For if this vain glory be concerning any good, or Christian action, it destroys all the fruit of it; he that prays or gives alms to be seen of men, Matth. 6. 2. must take that as his reward, Verily I say unto you, they have their reward; they must expect none from God, but the portion of those Hypocrites that love the praise of men more than the praise of God. And this is a miserable folly to make such an exchange. It is like the Dog in the Fable, who seeing in the water the shadow of that meat he held in his mouth, caught at the shadow, & so let go his meat. Such dogs, such unreasonable creatures are we when we thus let go the eternal rewards of Heaven to catch at a few good words of men. And yet we do not only lose those eternal joys, but procure to ourselves the contrary eternal miseries, which is sure the highest pitch of folly and madness. But if the vain glory be not concerning any virtuous action, but only some indifferent thing, yet even there also it is very hurtful; for vain glory is a sin that wheresoever it is placed endangers our eternal estate, which is the greatest of all mischiefs. And even for the present it is observable, that of all other sins it stands the most in its own light, hinders itself of that very thing it pursues. For there are very few that thus hunt after praise, but they are discerned to do so, and that is sure to eclipse whatever praise-worthy thing they do, and brings scorn upon them instead of reputation. And then certainly we may justly condemn this sin of folly which is so ill a manager even of its own design.

15. You have seen how wretched a thing this vain glory is in these several respects, the serious consideration whereof may be one good means to subdue it, to which it will be necessary to add, first, a great watchfulness over thyself; observe narrowly whether in any Christian duty thou at all considerest the praise of men, or even in the most indifferent action, look whether thou have not too eager a desire of it, and if thou findest thyself inclined that way, have a very strict eye upon it, and where ever thou findest it stirring check and resist it, suffer it not to be the end of thy actions: But in all matters of Religion let thy Duty be the Motive; in all indifferent things of common life let Reason direct thee; and though thou mayest so far consider in those things the opinion of men, as to observe the rules of common decency, yet never think any praise that comes in to thee from anything of that kind, worth the contriving for: Secondly, set up to thyself another aim, viz. that of pleasing God; let that be thy enquiry when thou goest about anything, whether it be approved by him? and then thou wilt not be at leisure to consider what praise it will bring thee from men. And surely he that weighs of how much more moment it is to please God, who is able eternally to reward us, then men, whose applause can never do us any good, will surely think it reasonable to make the former his only care. Thirdly, if at any time thou art praised, do not be much overjoyed with it, nor think a jot the better of thyself; but if it be Virtue thou art praised for, remember it was God that wrought it in thee, and give him the glory, never thinking any part of it belongs to thee: If it be some indifferent action, then remember that it cannot deserve praise, as having no goodness in it: But if it be a bad one (as amongst men such are sometimes likeliest to be commended) then it ought to set thee a trembling instead of rejoicing, for then that woe of our Savior's belongs to thee, Luke 6. 26. Woe unto you when men speak well of you, for so did their Fathers to the false Prophets, and there is not a greater sign of a hardened heart, then when men can make their sins the matter of their glory. In the last place let thy prayers assist in the fight with this corruption.

16. A second VERTUE is MEEKNES, That is a calmness and quietness of spirit, contrary to the Rages and impatiencies of Anger. This Virtue may be exercised either in respect of God, or our neighbor. That towards God I have already spoken of, under the head of Humility, and that towards our neighbor I shall hereafter. All I have here to say of it is, how it becomes a duty to ourselves; that it does, in respect of the great advantage we reap by it; which, in mere kindness to our selves, we are to look after. And to prove that brings us this great advantage; I need say no more, but that this meekness is that to which Christ hath pronounced a blessing, Mat. 5. 5. Blessed are the meek, and not only in the next world, but even in this too, they shall inherit the earth. Indeed none but the meek person hath the true enjoyment of anything in the world, for the angry, and impatient are like sick people, who we use to say, cannot enjoy the greatest prosperities: For let things be never so fair without, they will raise storms within their own breasts. And surely whoever hath either in himself, or others observed the great uneasiness of this passion of anger, cannot choose but think meekness a most pleasant thing.

17. Besides, it is also a most honorable thing, for it is that whereby we resemble Christ, Learn of me, saith he, for I am meek and lowly in heart, Matth 11. 28. It is also that whereby we conquer ourselves, overcome our own unrulie passions, which of all victories is the greatest and most noble. Lastly, it is that which makes us behave ourselves like men, whereas anger gives us the fierceness and wildness of Savage Beasts. And accordingly the one is by all esteemed and loved, whereas the other is hated and abhorred, every man shunning a man in rage as they would a furious beast.

18. Farther, yet meekness is the sobriety of the mind, whereas anger is the direct madness, it puts a man wholly out of his own power, and makes him do such things as himself in his sober temper abhors; how many men have done those things in their rage, which they have repented all their lives after? and therefore surely as much as a man is more honorable then a beast, a sober man then a mad man, so much hath this virtue of Meekness the advantage of Honor above the contrary vice of Anger.

19. Again, meekness makes any condition tolerable and eàsie to be endured. He that meekly bears any suffering takes off the edge of it that it cannot wound him, whereas he that frets and rages at it; whets it and makes it much sharper then it would be; nay, in some cases makes that so, which would not else be so at all, as particularly in the case of reproachful words, which in themselves can do us no harm, they neither hurt our bodies nor lessen our estates, the only mischief they can do us is to make us angry, and then our anger may do us many more; whereas he that meekly passes them by is never the worse for them, nay, the better; for he shall be rewarded by God for that patience. Much more might be said to recommend this virtue to us, in respect of our own present advantage, but I suppose this may suffice to persuade men to esteem of it. The harder matter will be to gain them to the practice of it, wherein men pretend I know not what difficulties of natural constitutions, and the like; yet sure there is no man of so Cholerick a temper, but if he did heartily set about it, would find it were not impossible in some good measure to subdue it: But then he must be diligent in using means to that end. Divers of these Means there are, I shall mention some few.

20. As first, The imprinting deep in our minds the loveliness and benefits of meekness, together with the ugliness and mischiefs of anger. Secondly, To set before us the examples of Christ, who endured all reproaches, yea, torments with perfect patience, that was led as a sheep to the slaughter, I say 53. 7. That when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, threatened not, 1 Peter 2. 23. And if he, the Lord of glory suffered thus meekly and unjustly from his own creatures, with what face can we ever complain of any injury done to us? Thirdly, To be very watchful to prevent the very first beginnings of anger, and to that purpose to mortify all inward peevishness and frowardness of mind, which is a sin in itself, though it proceed no farther, but will also be sure, if it be cherished, to break out into open effects of anger. Therefore when ever thou findest the least rising of it within thee, make as much haste to check it as thou wouldest to quench a fire in thy house, but be sure thou bring no fuel to it, by entertaining any thoughts that may increase it. And at such a time especially keep a most strict watch over thy tongue, that it break not out into any angry speeches, for that breath will fan the fire, not only in thine adversary, but thyself too; therefore though thy heart be hot within, stifle the flame, and let it not break out; and the greater the temptation is, the more earnestly lift up thy heart to God to assist thee to overcome it. Fourthly, Often remember how great punishments thy sins have deserved, and then whether thy sufferings be from God or man, thou wilt acknowledge them to be far short of what is due to thee, and therefore wilt be ashamed to be impatient at them.

21. The third Virtue is CONSIDERATION, and this in a most special manner we owe to our Souls. For without it we shall, as rash unadvised people use to do, rush them into infinite perils. Now this Consideration is either of our State, or of our Actions. By our State, I mean what our condition is to God ward, whether it be such that we may reasonably conclude ourselves in his favor. This it much concerns us to consider and examine, and that not by those easy rules men are apt to frame to themselves, as whether they believe that Christ died for their sins, that they are of the number of the Elect, and shall certainly be saved; if these and the like were all that were required to put us into God's favor, none but some melancholy person could ever be out of it; for we are apt enough generally to believe comfortably of ourselves. But the Rules God hath given us in his Word are those by which we must be tried at the last day, and therefore are certainly the only safe ones by which to try ourselves now. And the sum of those are, That whosoever continues in any one willful sin is not in his favor, nor can if he so die hope for any mercy at his hand.

22. Now it is highly necessary we should consider what our condition is in this respect: for since our life is nothing but a puff of breath in our nostrils, which may for ought we know be taken from us the next minute, it nearly concerns us to know how we are provided for another world, that so in case we want at present that oil in our Lamps wherewith we are to meet the Bridegroom, Mat. 25. 8. we may timely get it, and not for want of it be ever shut out like the foolish Virgins from his presence. The neglect of this consideration hath undone many souls; some by too easy a belief that they were in a good condition, without considering and trying themselves by the foregoing Rule, but presuming either upon some slight outward performances, or upon such a false faith as I even now described; others by the wretched careless going on, without so much as asking themselves what their condition is, but hope they shall do as well as their neighbors, and so never enquiring farther; which wretched carelessness will as certainly undo the spiritual, as the like would do the temporal estate; yet in that every man is wise enough to foresee, that a man that never takes any accounts of his estate to see whether he be worth something or nothing, will be sure to be a beggar in the end. But in this far weightier matter we can generally be thus improvident.

23. The second thing we are to consider, is our Actions, and those either before or after the doing of them. In the first place, we are to consider before we act, and not to do any thing rashly or headily; but first, to advise with our consciences, whether this be lawful to be done, for he that follows his own inclination, and does everything which that moves him to, shall be sure to fall into a multitude of sins. Therefore consider soberly and be assured of the lawfulness of the thing before thou venture to do it. This advisedness is in all worldly things accounted so necessary a part of wisdom, that no man is accounted wise without it; a rash man we look upon as the next degree to a fool: And yet it is sure there is not so much need of looking about us in anything as in what concerns our souls, and that not only in respect of the great value of them above all things else, but also in regard of the great danger they are in, as hath been shown more at large in the beginning of the Treatise.

24. Secondly, We are to consider the actions when they are past also, that is, we are to examine whether they have been such as are allowable by the Laws of Christ. This is very necessary whether they be good or bad; if they be good, the recalling them helpeth us to the comfort of a good conscience, and that comfort again encourageth us to go on in the like; and besides, it stirs us up to thankfulness to God, by whose grace alone we were enabled to do them. But if they be bad, then it is especially necessary that we thus examine them, for without this it is impossible we should ever come to amendment; for unless we observe them to have been amiss, we can never think it needful to amend, but shall still run on from one wickedness to another, which is the greatest curse any man can lie under.

25. The oftener therefore we use this consideration the better, for the less likely it is that any of our sins shall escape our knowledge. It is much to be wisht that every man should thus every night try the actions of the day, that so if he have done anything amiss he may soon check himself for it, and settle his resolutions against it, and not let it grow on to a habit and course. And that he may also early beg God's pardon, which will the easier be had the sooner it is asked, every delay of that being a great increase of the sin. And surely whoever means to take an account of himself at all, will find this the easier course, it being much easier to do it so a little at a time, and while passages are fresh in his memory, then to take the account of a long time together. Now if it be considered, that every willful sin must have a particular repentance before it can be pardoned, me thinks men should tremble to sleep without that repentance; for what assurance hath any man that lies down in his bed that he shall ever rise again? and then how dangerous is the condition of that man that sleeps in an unrepented sin? The weighing of these several Motives may be a means, by God's blessing, to bring us to the practice of this duty of Consideration in all the parts of it.

PARTITION VII. Of CONTENTEDNES and the Contraries to it; Murmuring, Ambition, Covetousness, Envy; Helps to Contentedness; Of DUTIES which concern our BODIES; Of CHASTITY, &c. Helps to it; Of TEMPERANCE. Rule of Temperance in EATING.

§. 1. THE Fourth VIRTUE is CONTENTEDNES, and this surely is a duty we must owe to ourselves, it being that without w<sup>ch</sup> it is impossible to be happy. This Contentedness is a well-pleas'dnes with that condition, whatever it is, that God hath placed us in, not murmuring and repining at our lot, but cheerfully welcoming whatsoever God sends. How great, and withal how pleasant a virtue this is may appear by the contrariety it hath to several great and painful vices; so that where this is rooted in the heart, it subdues not only some such single sin, but a cluster of them together.

2. And first it is contrary to all murmuring in general, which is a sin most hateful to God, as may appear by his sharp punishments of it on the Israelites in the wilderness, as you may read in several places of the book of Exodus and Numbers. And surely it is also very painful and uneasy to a man's self, for if, as the Psalmist saith, it be a joyful pleasant thing to be thankful, we may by the Rule of contraries conclude, It is a sad and unpleasant thing to be murmuring; and I doubt not every man's own experience will confirm the truth of it.

3. Secondly, It is contrary to Ambition; the ambitious man is always disliking his present condition, and that makes him so greedily to seek a higher, whereas he that is content with his own lies quiet out of the road of this temptation. Now ambition is not only a great sin in itself, but it puts men upon many other: There is nothing so horrid, which a man that eagerly seeks greatness will stick at; lying, perjury, murder, or anything will down with him, if they seem to tend to his advancement: And the uneasiness of it is answerable to the sin. This none can doubt of that considers what a multitude of fears and jealousies, cares and distractions there are that attend ambition in its progress, besides the great and public ruins that usually befall it in the end. And therefore sure Contentedness is in this respect as well a Happiness as a Virtue.

4. Thirdly, It is contrary to Covetousness; this the Apostle witnesseth, Heb. 13. 5. Let your conversation be without covetousness, and be content with such things as ye have; where you see contentedness is set as the direct contrary to covetousness. But of this there needs no other proof then common experience; for we see the covetous man never thinks he hath enough, and therefore can never be content; for no man can be said to be so that thirsts after anything he hath not. Now that you may see how excellent and necessary a virtue this is that secures us against covetousness, it will not be amiss a little to consider the nature of that sin.

5. That it is a very great crime, is most certain, for it is contrary to the very foundation of all good life; I mean those three great Duties, to God, to our Selves, to our Neighbor. First, It is so contrary to our Duty to God, that Christ himself tells us, Luke 16. 13. We cannot serve God and Mammon: he that sets his heart upon wealth, must necessarily take it off from God. And this we daily see in the covetous man's practice, he is so eager in the gaining of riches, that he hath no time or care to perform duty to God; let but a good bargain, or opportunity of gain come in his way, Prayer, and all duties of Religion, must be neglected to attend it. Nay, when the committing the greatest sin against God may be likely either to get or save him ought, his love of wealth quickly persuades him to commit it.

6. Secondly, It is contrary to the Duty we owe our Selves, and that both in respect of our Souls and Bodies. The covetous man despises his Soul, sells that to eternal destruction for a little pelf: for so every man does that by any unlawful means seeks to enrich himself, Nay, though he do it not by unlawful means, yet if he have once set his heart upon wealth, he is that covetous person upon whom the Apostle hath pronounced, That he shall not enter into the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 6. 10. Nor doth he only offend against his Soul but his Body too. For he often denies that those necessary refreshments it wants, and for which his wealth (as far as it concerns himself) was given him. This is so constantly the custom of rich Misers that I need not prove it to you.

7. In the third place, Covetousness is contrary to the duty we owe to our neighbors. And that in both the parts of it, Justice and Charity: he that loves money immoderately, will not care whom he cheats and defrauds so he may bring in gain to himself; and from hence spring those many tricks of deceit and cozenage, so common in the world. As for Charity, that is never to be hoped for from a covetous man who dreads the lessening of his own heaps more than the starving of his poor brother. You see how great a sin this is, that we may well say of it as the Apostle doth, 1 Tim. 6. 10. The love of money is the root of all evil. And it is not much less uneasy than wicked, for between the care of getting and the fear of losing, the covetous man enjoys no quiet hour. Therefore every man is deeply concerned, as he tenders his happiness either in this world or the next, to guard himself against this sin, which he can no way do, but by possessing his heart with this virtue of contentedness.

8. In the fourth place, it is contrary to envy, for he that is content with his own condition, hath no temptation to envy another's: How unchristian a sin this of envy is, shall hereafter be shown: At the present, I need say no more, but that it is also a very uneasy one, it frets and gnaws the very heart of him that harbors it. But the worse this sin is, the more excellent still is this grace of contentedness, which frees us from it. I suppose I have said enough to make you think this a very lovely, and desirable Virtue. And sure it were not impossible to be gained by any, that would but observe these few directions.

9. First, To consider, that whatever our estate and condition in any respect be, it is that which is allotted us by God, and therefore is certainly the best for us, he being much better able to judge for us, than we for ourselves; and therefore to be displeased at it, is in effect to say, we are wiser than he. Secondly, Consider thoroughly the vanity of all worldly things, how very little there is in them, while we have them, and how uncertain we are to keep them; but above all, in how little stead they will stand us at the day of death or judgment, and then thou canst not think any of them much worth the desiring, and so wilt not be discontented for want of them. Thirdly, Suffer not thy fancy to run on things thou hast not: many have put themselves out of love with what they have, only by thinking what they want. He that sees his neighbor possess somewhat, which himself hath not, is apt to think how happy he should be, if he were in that man's condition, and in the mean time never thinks of enjoying his own, which yet perhaps in many respects may be much happier, than that of his neighbors which he so much admires. For we look but upon the outside of other men's conditions, and many a man that is envied by his neighbors, as a wonderful happy person, hath yet some secret trouble, which makes him think much otherwise of himself. Therefore never compare thy condition in anything with those thou countest more prosperous than thyself, but rather do it with those thou knowest more unhappy, and then thou wilt find cause to rejoice in thine own portion. Fourthly, Consider how far thou art from deserving any good thing from God, and then thou canst not but with Jacob, Gen 32. 10. confess, that thou art not worthy of the least of those mercies thou enjoyest; and instead of murmuring that they are no more, wilt see reason to admire, and praise the bounty of God, that they are so many. Fifthly, be often thinking of the joys laid up for thee in Heaven; look upon that as thy home, on this world, only as an Inn, where thou art fain to take up in thy passage; and then as a Traveler expects not the same conveniences at an Inn, that he hath at home, so thou hast reason to be content with what ever entertainment thou findest here knowing thou art upon thy journey to a place of infinite happiness, which will make an abundant amends for all the uneasiness, and hardship thou canst suffer in the way. Lastly, Pray to God, from whom all good things do come, that he will to all his other blessings, add this of a contented mind, without which thou canst have no taste or relish of any other.

10. A fifth Duty is DILIGENCE: This is made up of two parts, watchfulness, and industry, and both these we owe to our Souls.

11. First, Watchfulness, in observing all the dangers that threaten them. Now since nothing can endanger our Souls, but sin, this watchfulness is principally to be employed against that: And as in a besieged City, where there is any weak part, there it is necessary to keep the strongest guard; so it is here, where ever thou findest thy inclinations such, as are most likely to betray thee to sin, there it concerns thee to be especially watchful: Observe therefore carefully to what sins either thy natural temper, thy company, or thy course of life do particularly incline thee, and watch thyself very narrowly in those; Yet do not so lay out all thy care on those, as to leave thyself open to any other, for that may give Satan as much advantage on the other side; but let thy watch be general, against all sin, though in a special manner against those, which are like oftenest to assault thee.

12. The second part of diligence, is industry, or labor, and this also we owe to our Souls, for without it they will as little prosper as that vineyard of the sluggard, which Solomon describes, Prov. 24. 30. For there is a husbandry of the Soul, as well as of the estate, and the end of the one, as of the other, is the increasing, and improving of its riches. Now the riches of the Soul are either Natural, or Divine. By the natural I mean its faculties of reason, wit, memory, and the like; by the Divine I mean the graces of God, which are not the Souls natural portion, but are given immediately by God, and both these we are to take care to improve, they being both talents entrusted to us for that purpose.

13. The way of improving the natural is by employing them so, as may bring in most honor to God: we must not let them lie idle by us, through sloth, neither must we overwhelm them with intemperance, and brutish pleasures, which is the case of too many, but we must employ them, and set them on work. But then we must be sure it be not in the Devils service, like many, who set their wit only to the profaning of God, or cheating their neighbors, and stuff their memories with such filthiness, as should never once enter their thoughts; our use of them must be such, as may bring in most glory to God, most benefit to our neighbors, and may best fit us to make our accounts, when God shall come to reckon with us for them.

14. But the other part of the Souls riches, is yet more precious, that is grace, and of this we must be especially careful, to husband, and improve it. This is a duty expressly commanded us by the Apostle, 2 Pet. 3. 18. Grow in grace. And again, in the first Chapter of that Epistle, verse 5. Give all diligence to add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, &c. Now the especial means of improving grace is by employing it, that is, by doing those things for the enabling of us whereunto it was given us: This is a sure means, not only in respect of that easiness, which a custom of anything brings in the doing of it, but principally, as it hath the promise of God, who hath promised, Matth. 25. 29. That to him that hath (that is, hath made use of what he hath) shall be given, and he shall have abundance. He that diligently and faithfully employs the first beginnings of grace, shall yet have more, and he that in like manner husbands that more, shall yet have a greater degree; so that what Solomon saith of temporal riches, is also true of spiritual, The hand of the diligent maketh rich.

15. Therefore whenever thou findest any good motion in thy heart, remember that is a season for this spiritual husbandry: If thou have but a check of conscience against any sin, thou livest in, drive that on till it come to a hatred, and then that hatred, till it come to resolution, then from that resolution, proceed to some endeavors against it. Do this faithfully, and sincerely, and thou shalt certainly find the grace of God assisting thee, not only in every of these steps, but also enabling thee to advance still higher, till thou come to some victory over it. Yet to this industry thou must not fail to add thy prayers also, there being a promise, that God will give the holy Spirit to them that ask it, Matth. 7. 11. And therefore they that ask it not, have no reason to expect it. But it must be asked with such an earnestness, as is some way answerable to the value of the thing, which being infinitely more precious then all the world, both in respect of his own worth, and its usefulness to us, we must beg it with much more zeal and earnestness, then all temporal blessings, or else we show ourselves despisers of it.

16. Having directed you to the means of improving grace, I shall to quicken you to it, mention the great danger of the contrary; And that is not as in other things, the losing only those further degrees, which our industry might have helped us to, but it is the losing even of what we already have; For from him that hath not (that is again hath not made use of what he hath) shall be taken away even that which he hath, Matth. 25. 29. God will withdraw the grace, which he sees so neglected, as we see in that Parable, the Talent was taken from him that had only hid it in a Napkin, and had brought in no gain to his Lord. And this is a most sad punishment, the greatest that can befall any man, before he comes to Hell, indeed it is some kind of foretaste of it, it is the delivering him up to the power of the Devil, and it is the banishing him from the face of God, which are not the least parts of the misery of the damned. And it is also the binding a man over to that fuller portion of wretchedness in another world; For that is the last doom of the unprofitable servant, Matth. 25. 30. Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. You see there are no light dangers that attend this neglect of grace, and therefore if we have any love, nay any common pity to our Souls, we must set ourselves to this industry. I have now done with those VERIUES, which respect our SOULS. I come now to those which concern our BODIES.

17. The first of which is Chastity, or Purity, which may well be set in the front of the duties we owe to our bodies, since the Apostle, 1 Cor. 6. 18. sets the contrary as the especial sin against them, He that committeth fornication, sinneth against his own body.

18. Now this virtue of chastity consists in a perfect abstaining from all kinds of uncleanness; not only that of adultery, and fornication, but all other more unnatural sorts of it, committed either upon ourselves, or with any other. In a word, all acts of that kind are utterly against Chastity, save only in lawful marriage. And even there men are not to think themselves let loose to please their brutish appetites, but are to keep themselves within such rules of moderation, as agree to the end of marriage, which being these two, the begetting of Children, and the avoiding of fornication, nothing must be done which may hinder the first of these ends; and the second aiming only at the subduing of lust, the keeping men from any sinful effects of it, is very contrary to that end to make marriage an occasion of heightening, and enflaming it.

19. But this virtue of chastity reacheth not only to the restraining of the grosser act, but to all lower degrees; it sets a guard upon our eyes, according to that of our Savior, Mat. 5. 28. He that looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart; and upon our hand as appears by what Christ adds in that place, If thy hand offend thee, cut it off: so also upon our tongues, that they speak no immodest or filthy words, Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, Ephes. 4. 29. Nay upon our very thoughts, and fancies, we must not entertain any foul or filthy desires, nor so much as the imagination of any such thing. Therefore he that forbears the grosser act, and yet allows himself in any of these, it is to be suspected that it is rather some outward restraint, that keeps him from it, then the conscience of the sin. For if it were that, it would keep him from these too, these being sins also, and very great ones in God's sight. Besides, he that lets himself loose to these, puts himself in very great danger of the other, it being much more easier to abstain from all, then to secure against the one, when the other is allowed. But above all, it is to be considered that even these lower degrees are such as make men very odious in God's eyes who seeth the heart, and loves none that are not pure there.

20. The loveliness of this Virtue of Chastity needs no other way of describing then by considering the loathsomeness and mischiefs of the contrary sin, which is, first, very brutish; those desires are but the same that the beasts have; and then how far are they sunk below the nature of men, that can boast of their sins of that kind as of their special excellency? when if that be the measure, a Goat is the more excellent creature. But indeed they that eagerly pursue this part of Beastiality do often leave themselves little, besides their human shape, to difference them from beasts: This sin so clouds the understanding, and defaceth the reasonable Soul. Therefore Solomon very well describes the young man that was going to the harlots house, Prov. 7. 22. He goeth after her as an Ox goeth to the slaughter.

21. Nor secondly, are the effects of it better to the body than to the mind. The many foul and filthy, besides painful diseases, which often follow this sin, are sufficient witnesses how mischievous it is to the body. And alas, how many are there that have thus made themselves the Devils Martyrs? Suffered such torments in the pursuit of this sin, as would exceed the invention of the greatest tyrant? Surely they that pay thus dear for damnation, very well deserve to enjoy the purchase.

22. But thirdly, Besides the natural fruits of this sin, it is attended with very great and heavy Judgments from God; the most extra ordinary and miraculous Judgment that ever befell any place, Fire and Brimstone from Heaven upon Sodom and Gomorrah, was for this sin of uncleanness. And many examples likewise of God's vengeance may be observed on particular persons, for this sin. The incest of Amnon cost him his life, as you may read, 2 Sam. 13. Zimrie and Cozbi were slain in the very act, Numb. 25. 8. And no person that commits the like, hath any assurance it shall not be his own case. For how secretly soever it be committed, it cannot be hid from God, who is the sure avenger of all such wickedness. Nay, God hath very particularly threatened this sin, 1 Cor. 3. 17. If any man defile the Temple of God, him shall God destroy. This sin of uncleanness is a kind of sacrilege, a polluting those bodies, which God hath chosen for his Temples, and therefore no wonder, if it be thus heavily punished.

23. Lastly, This sin shuts us out from the Kingdom of Heaven, wherein no impure thing can enter. And we never find any list of those sins, which bar men thence, but this of uncleanness hath a special place in it. Thus it is Gal. 5. 19 and so again, 1 Cor. 6. 9. If we will thus pollute ourselves we are fit company only for those black spirits, the Devil and his Angels; and therefore with them we must expect our portion, where our flames of lust shall end in flames of fire.

24. All this laid together, may surely recommend the virtue of Chastity to us, for the preserving of which we must be very careful, first, to check the beginnings of the temptation, to cast away the very first fancy of lust with indignation, for if you once fall to parley and talk with it, it gains still more upon you, and then it will be harder to resist; therefore your way in this temptation is to fly rather than fight with it. This is very necessary, not only that we may avoid the danger of proceeding to act the sin, but also in respect of the present fault of entertaining such fancies, which of itself, though it should never proceed further, is, as hath been shown, a great abomination before God. Secondly, have a special care to fly Idleness, which is the proper soil for these filthy weeds to grow in; and keep thyself always busied in some innocent or virtuous employment, for then these fancies will be less apt to offer themselves. Thirdly, never suffer thyself to recall any unclean passages of thy former life with delight, for that is to act over the sin again, and will be so reckoned by God; nay, perhaps thus deliberately to think of it may be a greater guilt than a rash acting of it. For this both shows thy heart to be set upon filthiness, and is also a preparation to more acts of it. Fourthly, forbear the company of such light and wanton persons as either by the filthiness of their discourse, or any other means, may be a snare to thee. Fifthly, pray earnestly that God would give thee the Spirit of Purity, especially at the time of any present temptation. Bring the unclean Devil to Christ to be cast out, as did the man in the Gospel; and if it will not be cast out with Prayer alone, add Fasting to it; but be sure thou do not keep up the flame by any high or immoderate feeding. The last remedy, when the former prove vain, is Marriage, which becomes a duty to him that cannot live innocently without it. But even here there must be care taken lest this which should be for his good, become not to him an occasion of falling for want of sobriety in the use of marriage. But this I have touched on already, and therefore need add no more but an earnest entreaty, That men would consider seriously of the foulness and danger of this sin of uncleanness, and not let the commonness of it lessen their hatred of it, but rather make them abhor that shameless impudence of the world that can make light of this sin against which God hath pronounced such heavy curses, Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge, Heb. 13. 4. and so he will certainly do all sorts of unclean persons whatsoever.

25. The second VIRTUE that concerns our bodies is TEMPERANCE: And the exercises of that are divers, as first, temperance in Eating, secondly, In Drinking, thirdly, in Sleep, fourthly in Recreation, fifthly, in apparel. I shall speak of them severally; and first of temperance in eating. This temperance is observed when our eating is agreeable to those ends to which eating is by God and Nature designed; those are first, the being, secondly, the wellbeing of our bodies.

26. Man is of such a frame that Eating becomes necessary to him for the preserving his life, hunger being a natural disease which will prove deadly if not prevented, and the only Physic for it is Eating, which is therefore become a necessary means of keeping us alive. And that is the first end of eating; and as men use not to take Physic for pleasure, but remedy, so neither should they eat.

27. But secondly, God hath been so bountiful as to provide not only for the being, but the well being of our bodies, and therefore we are not tied to such strictness, that we may eat no more than will just keep us from starving, but we may also eat whatsoever either for kind or quantity most tends to the health and welfare of them: Now that eating which is agreeable to these ends, is within the bounds of temperance, as on the contrary whatsoever is contrary to them, is a transgression against it; he therefore that sets up to himself other ends of eating, as either the pleasing of his taste, (what is yet worse) the pampering of his body that he may the better serve his lust, he directly thwarts and crosses these ends of God's; for he that hath those aims doth that which is very contrary to health, yea, to life itself, as appears by the many diseases and untimely deaths which surfeiting and uncleanness daily bring on men.

28. He therefore that will practice this Virtue of Temperance, must neither eat so much, nor of any such sorts of meat (provided he can have other) as may be hurtful to his health: what the sorts or quantities shall be is impossible to set down, for that differs according to the several constitutions of men; some men may with temperance eat a great deal, because their stomachs require it, when another may be guilty of intemperance in eating but half so much, because it is more then is useful to him. And so also for the sort of meat, it may be niceness and luxury for some to be curious in them, when yet some degree of it may be necessary to the infirmities of a weak stomach, which not out of wantonness but disease cannot eat the courser meats. But I think it may in general be said, That to healthful bodies the plainest meats are generally the most wholesome, but every man must in this be left to judge for himself; and that he may do it aright, he must be careful that he never suffer himself to be enslaved to his palate, for that will be sure to satisfy itself, whatever becomes of health or life.

29. To secure him the better let him consider, First, How unreasonable a thing it is that the whole body should be subjected to this one Sense of Tasting, that it must run all hazards only to please that. But it is yet much more so that the diviner part, the Soul, should also be thus enslaved; and yet thus it is in an intemperate person, his very soul must be sacrificed to this Brutish appetite; for the sin of intemperance, though it be acted by the Body, yet the Soul must share in the eternal punishment of it. Secondly, Consider how extreme short and vanishing this pleasure is, it is gone in a moment, but the pains that attend the excess of it are much more durable, and then surely it agrees not with that common reason, wherewith, as men, we are endued to set our hearts upon it. But then in the third place, it agrees yet worse with the temper of a Christian, who should have his heart so purisied and refined with the expectation of those higher and spiritual joys he looks for in another world, that he should very much despise these gross and brutish pleasures which beasts are as capable of as we, and to them we may well be counted to leave them, it being the highest their natures can reach to; but for us who have so much more excellent hopes, it is an intolerable shame that we should account them as any part of our happiness. Lastly, The sin of Gluttony is so great and dangerous, that Christ thought fit to give an especial warning against it, take heed to yourselves that your hearts be not overcharged with surfeiting, &c. Luk. 21. 34. And you know what was the end of the rich glutton, Luk. 16. He that had fared deliciously every day, at last wants a drop of water to cool his tongue. So much for that first sort of Temperance, that of Eating.

PARTITION VIII. Of Temperance in DRINKING, False Ends of Drinking, viz. Good Fellowship, putting away Cares, &c.

§. 1. THE second is Temperance in Drinking, and the ends of eating and drinking being much the same, I can give no other direct rules in this, then what were given in the former, to wit, that we drink neither of such sorts of liquor, nor in such quantities as may not agree with the right ends of drinking, the preserving of our lives and healths: Only in this there will be need of putting in one Caution, for our understandings being in more danger to be hurt by drinking then meat, we must rather care to keep that safe, and rather not drink what we might safely in respect of our healths, if it be in danger to distemper our reason. This I say because it is possible some men's brains may be so weak that their heads cannot bear that ordinary quantity of drink which would do their bodies no harm. And whoever is of this temper must strictly abstain from that degree of drink, or that sort of it which he finds hath that effect, yea, though it do in other respects appear not only safe but useful to his health For though we are to preserve our healths, yet we are not to do it by a sin, as drunkenness most certainly is.

2. But alas! of those multitudes of drunkards we have in the world, this is the case but of very few, most of them going far beyond what their health requires, yea, or can bear, even to the utter destruction thereof. And therefore it is plain men have set up to themselves some other ends of drinking than those allowable ones forementioned; it may not be amiss a little to explain what they are, and withal to show the unreasonableness of them.

3. The first, and most owned, is that which they call Good fellowship; one man drinks to keep another company at it. But I would ask such a one, Whether if that man were drinking rank poison he would pledge him for company? If he say he would not, I must tell him, that by the very same, nay, far greater reason, he is not to do this. For immoderate drinking is that very poison; perhaps it doth not always work death immediately (yet there want not many instances of its having done even that, very many having died in their drunken fit) but that the custom of it does usually bring men to their ends, is past doubt, and therefore though the poison work slowly, yet it is still poison. But however it doth at the present work that which a wise man would more abhor than death; it works madness, and frenzy turns the man into a beast, by drowning that reason which should difference him from one. Certainly the effects of drink are such, that had being drunk been first enjoined as a punishment, we should have thought him a more than ordinary Tyrant that had invented it.

4. A second end of drinking is said to be the maintaining of friendship and kindness amongst men. But this is strangely unreasonable, that men should do that towards the maintaining of friendship, which is really the greatest mischief that can be done to any man. Did ever any think to befriend a man by helping to destroy his estate, his credit, his life? Yet he that thus drinks with a man does this and much more, he ruins his reason, yea, his soul, and yet this must be called the way of preserving of friendship; this is so ridiculous that one would think none could own it but when he were actually drunk. But besides, alas, experience shows us, that this is fitter to beget quarrels than preserve kindness, as the many drunken brawls we every day see, with the wounds, and sometimes murders that accompany them, do witness.

5. A third end is said to be the cheering of their spirits, making them merry and jolly. But sure if the mirth be such that reason must be turned out of doors before it begin, it will be very little worth; one may say with Solomon, Eccl. 2. 2. The laughter of such fools is madness. And sure they that will be drunk to put themselves in this temper, must by the same reason be glad of a Frenzie, if they could but be sure it would be of the merry sort. But little do these merry folks think what sadness they are all this while heaping up to themselves, often in this world, when by some mad pranks, they play in their jollity, they bring mischief upon themselves, but however certainly in another, where this mirth will be sadly reckoned for.

6. A fourth end is said to be the putting away of cares; but I shall ask what those cares are? be they such as should be put away? perhaps they are some checks and remorse of conscience, which must be thus charmed. And I doubt this hath proved too effectual with many to the laying them asleep: But this is the wickedst folly in the world; for if thou thinkest not these checks to have something considerable in them, why do they trouble thee. But if thou do, it is impossible thou canst hope this can long secure thee from them. Thou mayest thus stop their mouths for a while, but they will one day cry the louder for it. Suppose a Thief or a Murderer knew he were pursued to be brought to justice, would he think you to put away the fear of being hanged, fall to drinking, and in the mean time take no care for his escape; or would you not think him desperately mad if he did? Yet this is the very case here, thy conscience tells thee of thy danger, that thou must ere long be brought before God's Judgment Seat; and is it not madness for thee instead of endeavoring to get thy pardon, to drink away the thought of thy danger. But in the second place, suppose these cares be some worldly ones, and such as are fit to be put away; then for shame do not so disgrace thy Reason, thy Christianity, as not to let them be as forcible to that end as a little drink. Thy Reason will tell thee it is in vain to care, where care will bring no advantage: and thy Christianity will direct thee to one on whom thou mayest safely cast all thy cares, for he careth for thee, 1 Pet. 5. 7. And therefore unless thou meanest to renounce being both a man and a Christian, never betake thee to this pitiful shift to rid thee of thy cares. But besides, this will not do the deed neither; for though it may at the present, whilst thou art in the height of the drunken fit, keep thee from the sense of thy cares, yet when that is over, they will return again with greater violence; and if thou have any conscience, bring a new care with them, even that which ariseth from the guilt of so foul a sin.

7. A fifth end is said to be the passing away of time. This though it be as unreasonable as any of the former, yet by the way it serves to reproach idleness, which is, it seems, so burdensome a thing, that even this vilest employment is preferred before it. But this is in many a very false plea. For they often spend time at the pot not only when they have nothing else to do, but even to the neglect of their most necessary business. However it is in all a most unreasonable one, for there is no man but he may find somewhat or other to employ himself in. If he have little worldly business of his own, he may yet do somewhat to the benefit of others; but however there is no man but hath a Soul, and if he will look carefully to that he need not complain for want of business, where there are so many corruptions to mortify, so many inclinations to watch over, so many temptations (whereof this of drunkenness is not the least) to resist; The Graces of God to improve and stir up, and former neglects of all these to lament, sure there can never want sufficient employment; for all these require time, and so men at their deaths find; for then those that have all their lives made it their business to drive away their time, would then give all the world to redeem it. And sure where there is much leisure from worldly affairs, God expects to have the more time thus employed in Spiritual exercises. But it is not likely those meaner sort of persons, to whom this book is intended, will be of the number of those that have much leisure, and therefore I shall no farther insist on it, only I shall say this, that what degrees of leisure they at any time have, it concerns them to employ to the benefit of their souls, and not to bestow it to the ruin of them, as they do, who spend it in drinking.

8. A sixth end is said to be the preventing of that reproach which is by the world cast on those that will in this be stricter then their neighbors; but in answer to this, I shall first ask, What is the harm of such reproach? sure it cannot equal the least of those mischiefs drunkenness betrays us to. Nay, if we will take our Savior's words it is a happiness, Blessed, saith he, are ye when men shall revile you, and say all manner of evil against you for my sake, Mat. 5. 11. And S. Peter tells us, 1 Peter 4. 14. If ye be reproached for the Name of Christ happy are ye: and sure to be reproached for obedience to any command of Christ's, is to be reproached for his Name. Secondly, Let it be remembered that at our Baptism we solemnly renounced the world; and shall we now so far consider it, as for a few scoffs of it to run ourselves on all the temporal evils before mentioned; and which is much worse, the wrath of God and eternal destruction? But Thirdly, If you fear reproach, why do ye do that which will bring reproach upon you from all wise and good men, whose opinion alone is to be regarded? And it is certain drinking is the way to bring it on you from all such. And to comfort thyself against that, by thinking thou art still applauded by the foolish and worst sort of men, is as if all the mad men in the world should agree to count themselves the only sober persons, and all others mad, which yet sure will never make them the less mad, nor others the less sober. Lastly, consider the heavy doom Christ hath pronounced on those that are ashamed of him, and so are all those that for fear of reproach shall shrink from their obedience to him, Mat. 8. 38. Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of the Father with the holy Angels. There is none but will at that day desire to be owned by Christ: But whoever will not here own him; that is, cleave fast to his commands, notwithstanding all the scorns, nay, persecutions of the world, shall then certainly be cast off by him. And he that will adventure thus to maintain his credit among a company of Fools and Madmen, deserves well to have it befall him: But after all this, it is not sure that even these will despise thee for thy sobriety, it is possible they may seem to do so to fright thee out of it; but if their hearts were searched, it would be found they do even against their wills, bear a secret reverence to sober persons, and none fall more often under their scorn and despising than those that run with them to the same excess of riot; for even he that sticks not to be drunk himself, will yet laugh at another that he sees so.

9. There is a seventh end, which though every man think too base to own, yet it is too plain it prevails with many. And that is the bare pleasure of the drink; but to these I confess it will not be fit to say much, for he that is come to this lamentable degree of sottishness, is not like to receive benefit by anything can be said: Yet let me tell even this man, that he of all others hath the most means of discerning his fault, for this being such a ground of drinking as nobody will own, he is condemned of himself; yea, and all his fellow drunkards too, for their denying it, is a plain sign they acknowledge it a most abominable thing. And if Esau were called a profane person, Heb. 12. 6. for selling but his birth right for a mess of pottage, and that too when he had the necessity of hunger upon him, what name of reproach can be bad enough for him who sells his health, his reason, his God, his soul, for a cup of drink, and that when he is so far from needing it, that perhaps he hath already more than he can keep? I shall say no more to this sort of persons, but let me warn all those that go on in the sin on any of the former grounds, that a little time will bring them even to this which they profess to loathe; it being daily seen that those which first were drawn into the sin for the love of the company, at last continue in it for love of the drink.

10. I can think but of one end more, that is, that of Bargaining. Men say it is necessary for them to drink in this one respect of trading with their neighbors, bargains being most conveniently to be struck up at such meetings. But this is yet a worse end than all the rest, for the bottom of it is an aim of cheating and defrauding others; We think when men are in drink we shall the better be able to over-reach them; and so this adds the sin of cozenage and defrauding to that of drunkenness. Now that this is indeed the intent, is manifest, for if it were only the dispatch of bargains were aimed at, we should choose to take men with their wits about them, therefore the taking them when drink hath distempered them can be for nothing but to make advantage of them. Yet this often proves a great folly as well as a sin; for he that drinks with another in hope to over-reach him, doth many times prove the weaker brained, and becomes drunk first, and then he gives the other that opportunity of cheating him which he designed for the cheating of the other. Now this end of drinking is so far from becoming an excuse, that it is a huge heightening of the sin; for if we may not drink intemperately upon any occasion, much less upon so wicked a one as is the cozening and defrauding of our brethren.

11. I suppose I have now shown you the unreasonableness of those Motives, which are ordinarily brought in excuse of this sin. I am yet further to tell you, that it is not only that huge degree of drunkenness which makes men able neither to go nor speak, which is to be looked on as a sin, but all lower degrees, which do at all work upon the understanding, whether by dulling it and making it less fit for any employment, or by making it too light and airy, apt to apish and ridiculous mirth, or what is worse, by inflaming men into rage and fury. These, or whatever else make any change in the man, are to be reckoned into this sin of drunkenness: Nay, further, the drinking beyond the natural ends of drinking, that is, beyond moderate refreshment is a sin, though by the strength of a man's brain it makes not the least change in him, and therefore those that are not actually drunk, yet can spend whole days, or any considerable part of them in drinking, are so far from being innocent, that that greater woe belongs to them, which is pronounced, Isa. 5. 22. against those that are mighty to drink. For though such a man may make a shift to preserve his wits, yet that wit serves him to very little purpose when his employment is still but the same with him that is the most sottishly drunk, that is, to pour down drink.

12. Nay, this man is guilty of the greater waste; First, of the good creatures of God: That drink which is by God's providence intended for the refreshing and relieving of us, is abused and misspent when it is drunk beyond that measure which those ends require, and sure there is not the meanest of these creatures we enjoy, but the abuse of them shall one day be accounted for, and he that drinks longest hath the most of that guilt. But in the second place, this is a wast of that which is much more precious, our time, which is allowed us by God to work out our Salvation in, and must be strictly reckoned for, and therefore ought every minute of it to be most thriftily husbanded to that end in actions of good life; but when it is thus laid out it tends to the direct contrary, even the working out our damnation. Besides, he that thus drinks, though he escape being drunk himself, he is yet guilty of all the drunkenness that any of his company fall under, for he gives them encouragement to drink on by his Example, especially if he be one of any authority, but if he be one whose company the rest are fond of, his company is then a certain ensnaring of them, for then they will drink too, rather than lose him. There is yet a greater fault that many of these stronger brained drinkers are guilty of, that is, the setting themselves purposely to make others drunk, playing, as it were, a prize at it, and counting it matter of triumph and victory to see others fall before them: This is a most horrible wickedness, it is the making ourselves the Devils Factors, endeavoring all we can to draw our poor brethren into eternal misery, by betraying them to so grievous a sin; and therefore it may well be reckoned as the highest step of this vice of drinking, as having in it the sin of mischieving others added to the excess in ourselves. And though it be looked upon in the world as a matter only of jest and merriment to make others drunk, that we may sport ourselves with their ridiculous behavior, yet that mirth will have a sad conclusion, there being a woe expressly threatened by God to this very sin, Hab. 2. 15. W• unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him and maketh him drunk that thou mayest look on their nakedness: And sure he buys his idle pastime very dear, that takes it with such a Woe attending it.

13. I have now gone through the several motives to, and degrees of this sin of drunkenness, wherein I have been the more particular because it is a sin so strangely reigning amongst us, no Condition, no Age, or scarce Sex free from it, to the great dishonor of God, reproach of Christianity, and ruin not only of our own Souls hereafter, but even of all our present advantages and happiness in this life; there being no sin which betrays each single committer to more mischiefs in his understanding, his health, his credit, his estate, than this one doth. And we have reason to believe this sin is one of those common crying guilts which have long lain heavy upon this Nation, and pulled down those many sad judgments we have groaned under.

14. Therefore, Christian Reader, let me now entreat, nay conjure thee by all that tenderness and love thou oughtest to have to the honor of God, the credit of thy Christian profession, eternal welfare of thine own Soul, the prosperity of the Church and Nation, whereof thou art a member; Nay, by that love which certainly thou hast to thy own temporal welfare, to think sadly of what hath been spoken; And then judge, whether there be any pleasure in this sin, which can be any tolerable recompense for all those mischiefs, it brings with it; I am confident no man in his wits can think there is, and if there be not, then be ashamed to be any longer that fool, which shall make so wretched a bargain, but begin at this instant a firm and a faithful resolution, never once more to be guilty of this swinish sin, how often soever thou hast heretofore fallen into it, and in the fear of God betake thee to a strict temperance, which when thou hast done, thou wilt find thou hast made not only a gainful but a pleasant exchange; for there is no man that hath tried both courses but his own heart will tell him there is infinitely more pleasant comfort and pleasure in sobriety and temperance than ever all his drunken revellings afforded him.

15. The main difficulty is the first breaking off the custom, and that arises partly from ourselves, partly from others. That from ourselves may be of two sorts; the first is, when by the habit of drinking, we have brought such false thirsts upon ourselves, that our bodies seem to require it, and this wants nothing but a little patience to overcome. Do but refrain some few days and it will afterwards grow easy; for the hardness arising only from custom, the breaking of that does the business. If thou say, it is very uneasy to do so, consider, whether if thou hadst some disease which would certainly kill thee if thou didst not for some little time refrain immoderate drinking, thou wouldst not rather forbear then die? if thou wouldst not, thou art so brutish a sot, that it is in vain to persuade thee; but if thou hadst, then consider how unreasonable it is for thee not to do it in this case also; the habit of drinking may well pass for a mortal disease, it proves so very often to the body, but will most certainly to the Soul; and therefore it is madness to stick at that uneasiness in the cure of this which thou wouldst submit to in a less danger. Set therefore but a resolute purpose to endure that little trouble for a small time, and this first difficulty is conquered, for after thou hast a while refrained, it will be perfectly easy to do so still.

16. The second difficulty is that of spending the time, which those that have made drinking their trade and business, know scarce how to dispose of. But the very naming of this difficulty directs to the cure, get thee some business, somewhat to employ thyself in, which, as I have already shown, will be easily found by all sorts of persons, but those meaner to whom I now write, can sure never want it ready at hand, they being generally such as are to be maintained by their labor, and therefore to them I need only give this advice, to be diligent in that business they have, to follow that close as they ought; and they will have little occasion to seek out this way of spending their time.

17. There is another sort of difficulty, which I told you arises from others, and that is either from their persuasions, or reproaches. It is very likely if thy old companions see thee begin to fall off, they will set hard to thee, to bring thee back to thy old course, they will urge to thee the unkindness of forsaking the company of thy friends, the sadness of renouncing all that mirth and jollity, which good fellows (as they call them) enjoy, and if thou canst not thus be won, they will affright thee with the reproach of the world, and so try if they can mock thee out of thy sobriety.

18. The way to overcome this difficulty is to foresee it, therefore when thou first enterest on thy course of temperance, thou art to make account thou shalt meet with these (perhaps many other) temptations, and that thou mayest make a right judgment, whether they be worthy to prevail with thee, take them before hand, and weigh them, consider whether that false kindness, that is maintained among men by drinking, be worthy to be compared with that real and everlasting kindness of God, which is lost by it; Whether that foolish, vain mirth bear any weight with the present joys of a good conscience here, or with those greater of Heaven hereafter. Lastly, whether the unjust reproach of wicked men, the shame of the world be so terrible, as the just reproof of thine own conscience at the present, and that eternal confusion of face that shall befall all those, that go on in this sin, at the last day; Weigh all these, I say, I need not say, in the balance of the Sanctuary, but even in the scales of common reason, and sure thou wilt be forced to pronounce, that the motives to temperance infinitely out weigh those against it; When thou hast thus advisedly judged, then fix thy resolution accordingly, and when ever any of these temptations come to stagger thee, remember thou hast formerly weighed them, knowest the just value of them, and that they are a most unworthy price for those precious advantages thou must give in exchange for them. And therefore hold fast thy resolution, and with indignation reject all motions to the contrary.

19. But be sure thou thus reject them at their very first tender, and do not yield in the least degree; For if once thou givest ground, thou art lost, the sin will by little and little prevail upon thee. Thus we see many, who have professed to be resolved upon great temperance, yet for want of this care, have adventured into the company of good fellows, when they have been there, they have at the first been over entreated to take a cup, after that another, till at last they have taken their rounds as freely as any of them, and in that flood of drink drowned all their sober resolutions. Therefore whoever thou art, that dost really desire to forsake the sin, take care to avoid the occasions and beginnings of it; to which end it will be good openly to declare and own thy purposes of sobriety, that so thou mayest discourage men from assaulting thee. But if either thou art ashamed to own it, or seemest to be so, they will quickly make use of that shame to bring thee to break it.

20. If thou be thus wary to keep thee from the first beginnings, thou art then sure never to be overtaken with this sin: For it is like the keeping the out-works of a besieged City, which so long as they are stoutly defended there is no danger, but if they be either surprised or yielded, the City cannot long hold out. The advice therefore of the wise man is very agreeable to this matter, Eccles. 19. 1. He that despiseth small things shall perish by little and little. But because as the Psalmist saith, Psal. 127. 1. Except the Lord keep the City the watch-man waketh but in vain: therefore to this guard of thyself add thy most earnest prayers to God that he will also watch over thee, and by the strength of his grace enable thee to resist all temptations to this sin.

21. If thou do in the sincerity of thy heart use these means, there is no doubt but thou wilt be able to overcome this vice, how long soever thou hast been accustomed to it, therefore if thou do still remain under the power of it, never excuse thyself by the impossibility of the task, but rather accuse the falseness of thy own heart, that hath still such a love to this sin, that thou wilt not set roundly to the means of subduing it.

22. Perhaps the great commonness of the sin and thy particular custom of it may have made it so much thy familiar, thy bosom acquaintance, that thou art loath to entertain hard thoughts of it, very unwilling thou art to think that it means thee any hurt, and therefore art apt to speak peace to thyself, to hope that either this is no sin, or at most but a frailty, such as will not bar thee out of heaven: But deceive not thyself, for thou mayest as well say there is no heaven, as that drunkenness shall not keep thee thence; I am sure the same word of God which tells us there is such a place of happiness, tells us also that drunkards are of the number of those that shall not inherit it, 1 Cor. 6. 10. And again, Gal. 5. 21. Drunkenness is reckoned among those works of the flesh, which they that do shall not inherit the kingdom of God. And indeed had not these plain texts, yet meet reason would tell us the same, That is a place of infinite purity, such as flesh and blood, till it be refined and purified, is not capable of, as the Apostle tells us, 1 Cor. 15. 53. and if as we are mere men, we are too gross and impure for it, we must sure be more so when we have changed ourselves into Swine, the soulest of beasts, we are then prepared for the Devils to enter into, as they did into the herd, Mark 5. 13. and that not only someone or two, but a Legion, a troop and multitude of them. And of this we daily see examples, for where this sin of drunkenness hath taken possession, it usually comes as an harbinger to abundance of others; each act of drunkenness prepares a man not only for another of the same sin, but of others; lust and rage, and all brutish appetites are then let loose, and so a man brings himself under that curse which was the saddest David knew how to foretell to any, Psal. 69. 28 The falling from one wickedness to another. If all this be not enough to affright thee out of this drunken fit, thou must still wallow in thy vomit, continue in this sottish, senseless condition, till the flames of Hell rouse thee, and then thou wilt by sad experience find what now thou wilt not believe, that the end of those things, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 6. 21. is death. God in his infinite mercy timely awake the hearts of all that are in this sin, that by a timely forsaking it they may fly from that wrath to come. I have now done with this second part of Temperance, concerning Drinking.

PARTITION IX. *Temperance in SLEEP; the rule of it, &c. Of RECREATION; Of APPAREL.

§. 1. THE Third part of TEMPERANCE concerns SLEEP: And Temperance in that also must be measured by the end for which sleep was ordained by God, which was only the refreshing and supporting of our frail bodies, which being of such a temper that continual labor and toil tires and wearies them out, Sleep comes as a Medicine to that weariness, as a repairer of that decay, that so we may be enabled to such labors as the duties of Religion or works of our Calling require of us. Sleep was intended to make us more profitable, not more idle; as we give rest to our beasts; not that we are pleased with their doing nothing, but that they may do us the better service.

2. By this therefore you may judge what is temperate sleeping; to wit, that which tends to the refreshing and making us more lively and fit for action; and to that end a moderate degree serves best. It will be impossible to set down just how many hours is that moderate degree, because as in eating so in sleep, some constitutions require more then others. Every man's own experience must in this judge for him, but then let him judge uprightly and not consult with his sloth in the case, for that will still, with Solomon's sluggard, cry, A little more sleep, a little more slumber, a little more folding of the hands to sleep, Prov. 24. 33. But take only so much as he really finds to tend to the end forementioned.

3. He that doth not thus limit himself falls into several sins under this general one of sloth, as first, he wastes his time, that precious talent which was committed to him by God to improve, which he that sleeps away, doth like him in the Gospel, Matth. 25. 18. Hides it in the earth when he should be trading with it; and you know what was the doom of that unprofitable servant, verse 30. Cast ye him into outer darkness: he that gives himself to darkness of sleep here, shall there have darkness without sleep, but with weeping and gnashing of teeth. Secondly, he injures his body, immoderate sleep sils that full of diseases, makes it a very sink of humors, as daily experience shows us. Thirdly, he injures his Soul also, and that not only in robbing it of the service of the body, but in dulling its proper faculties, making them useless and unfit for those employments to which God hath designed them; of all which ill husbandry the poor Soul must one day give account. Nay, lastly, he affronts and despises God himself in it, by crossing the very end of his creation, which was to serve God in an active obedience, but he that sleeps away his life, directly thwarts and contradicts that, and when God saith, Man is born to labor, his practice saith the direct contrary, that man was born to rest. Take heed therefore of giving thyself to immoderate sleep, which is the committing of so many sins in one.

4. But besides the sin of it, it is also very hurtful in other respects, it is the sure bane of thy outward estate, wherein the sluggish person shall never thrive; according to that observation of the Wise man, Pro. 23. 21. Drowsiness shall cover a man with rags; that is, the slothful man shall want convenient clothing; nay, indeed it can scarce be said, that the sluggard lives: Sleep you know is a kind of death, and he that gives himself up to it, what doth he but die before his time? Therefore if untimely death be to be looked upon as a curse, it must needs be a strange folly to choose that from our own sloth which we dread so much from God's hand.

5. The fourth part of Temperance concerns Recreations, which are sometimes necessary both to the body and the mind of a man, neither of them being able to endure a constant toil without somewhat of refreshment between; and therefore there is a very lawful use of them; but to make it so, it will be necessary to observe these Cautions.

6. First, We must take care that the kind of them be lawful, that they be such as have nothing of sin in them; we must not to recreate ourselves do anything which is dishonorable to God, or injurious to our neighbor, as they do who make profane or filthy backbiting discourse their recreation. Secondly, we must take care that we use it with moderation: and to do so, we must first be sure not to spend too much time upon it, but remember that the end of recreation is to fit us for business, not to be itself a business to us: Secondly, we must not be too vehement and earnest in it, not set our hearts too much upon it, for that will both ensnare us to the using too much of it, and it will divert and take off our minds from our more necessary employments: Like Schoolboyes, who after a play time, know not how to set themselves to their books again. Lastly, we must not set up to ourselves any other end of recreations but that lawful one, of giving us moderate refreshment.

7. As first, we are not to use sports only to pass away our time, which we ought to study how to redeem, not fling away; and when it is remembered how great a work we have here to do, the making our calling and election sure, the securing our title to heaven hereafter, and how uncertain we are what time shall be allowed us for that purpose; it will appear our time is that which of all other things we ought most industriously to improve. And therefore sure we have little need to contrive ways of driving that away which flies so fast of itself, and is so impossible to recover. Let them that can spend whole days and nights at Cards and Dice, and idle pastimes, to consider this, and withal, whether they ever bestowed a quarter of that time towards that great business of their lives for which all their time was given them, and then think what a woeful reckoning they are like to make when they come at last to account for that precious treasure of their time. Secondly, we must not let our covetousness have anything to do in our recreations; if we play at any Game, let the end of our doing it be merely to recreate ourselves, not to win money; and to that purpose be sure never to play for any considerable matter, for if thou do, thou wilt bring thyself into two dangers, the one of covetousness, and a greedy desire of winning, the other of rage and anger at thy ill fortune, if thou happen to lose; both which will be apt to draw thee into other sins besides themselves: Covetousness will tempt thee to cheat and cozen in gaming, and anger to swearing and cursing, as common experience shows us too often. If thou find thyself apt to fall into either of these in thy gaming, thou must either take some course to secure thyself against them, or thou must not permit thyself to play at all: for though moderate play be in itself not unlawful, yet if it be the occasion of sin, it is so to thee, and therefore must not be ventured on. For if Christ commands us so strictly to avoid temptations, that if our very eyes or hands offend us (that is, prove snares to us) we must rather part with them than to be drawn to sin by them: How much rather must we part with any of these unnecessary sports, then run the hazard of offending God by them? He that so plays, lays his soul to stake, which is too great a prize to be played away. Besides, he loses all the recreation and sport he pretends to aim at, and instead of that sets himself to a greater toil than any of those labors are he was to ease by it. For sure the desires and fears of the covetous, the impatience and rage of the angry man are more real pains than any the most laborious work can be.

8. The last part of Temperance is that of APPAREL, which we are again to measure by the agreeableness to the ends for which clothing should be used. Those are especially these three: first, the hiding of nakedness. This was the first occasion of apparel, as you may read, Gen. 3. 21. and was the effect of the first sin; and therefore when we remember the original of clothes, we have so little reason to be proud of them, that on the contrary we have cause to be humbled and ashamed, as having lost that innocence which was a much greater ornament than any the most glorious apparel can be. From this end of clothing we are likewise engaged to have our apparel modest, such as may answer this end of covering our shame: And therefore all immodest fashions of apparel, which may either argue the wantonness of the wearer, or provoke that of the beholder, are to be avoided.

9. A second end of Apparel, is the fencing the body from cold, thereby to preserve the health thereof, and this end we must likewise observe in our clothing; we must wear such kind of habits, as may keep us in that convenient warmth, which is necessary to our healths. And this is transgressed, when out of the vanity of being in every fantastic fashion, we put ourselves in such clothing, as either will not defend us from cold, or is some other way so uneasy, that it is rather a hurt than a benefit to our bodies to be so clad. This is a most ridiculous folly, and yet that which people that take a pride in their clothes are usually guilty of.

10. A third end of Apparel is the distinguishing or differencing of persons, and that first in respect of Sex; Secondly, in respect of qualities. First, clothes are to make difference of Sex; this hath been observed by all Nations, the habits of men and women have always been divers. And God himself expressly provided for it among the Jews, by commanding that the man should not wear the apparel of the woman, nor the woman of the man. But then secondly, there is also a distinction of qualities to be observed in apparel; God hath placed some in a higher condition than others, and in proportion to their condition, it befits their clothing to be; Gorgeous apparel, our Savior tells us, is for Kings Courts, Luke 7. 25. Now this end of apparel should also be observed. Men and women should content themselves with that sort of clothing, which agrees to their Sex and condition, not striving to exceed, and equal that of a higher rank, nor yet making it matter of envy, among those of their own estate, vying who shall be finest, but let every man cloth himself in such sober attire, as befits his place and calling, and not think himself disparaged, if another of his neighbors have better than he.

11. And let all remember that clothes are things, which add no true worth to any, and therefore it is an intolerable vanity to spend any considerable part either of their thoughts, time or wealth upon them, or to value themselves ever the more for them, or despise their poor brethren that want them. But if they desire to adorn themselves, let it be as S. Peter adviseth the women of his time, 1 Pet. 3. 4. In the hidden man of the heart, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. Let them cloth themselves as richly as is possible with all Christian virtues, and that is the raiment that will set them out lovely in God's eyes, yea, and in men's too, who, unless they be fools and Idiots will more value thee for being good, than fine, and sure one plain Coat thou putttest upon a poor man's back will better become thee, than twenty rich ones thou shalt put upon thine own.

12. I have now gone through the several parts of temperance; I shall now in conclusion, add this general caution, that though in all these particulars I have taken notice only of the one fault of excess, yet it is possible there may be one on the other hand; men may deny their bodies that which they necessarily require to their support, and well being. This is, I believe, a fault not so common, as the other, yet we sometimes see some very niggardly persons, that are guilty of it, that cannot find in their hearts to borrow so much from their chests, as may feed their bellies, or cloth their backs, and that are so intent upon the world, so moiling, and drudging in it, that they cannot afford themselves that competent time of sleep, or recreation, that is necessary. If any that hath read the former part of this Discourse be of this temper, let him not comfort himself, that he is not guilty of those excesses there complained of, and therefore conclude himself a good Christian, because he is not intemperate, for whoever is this covetous creature, his abstaining shall not be counted to him as the virtue of temperance, for it is not the love of temperance, but wealth, that makes him refrain; And that is so far from being praise-worthy, that it is that great sin which the Apostle tells us, 1 Tim. 6. 10. is the root of all evil; such a man's body will one day rise in judgment against him, for defrauding it of its due portion, those moderate refreshments, and comforts which God hath allowed it. This is an Idolatry beyond that of offering the children to Moloch, Lev. 20. 3. they offered but their children, but this covetous wretch sacrifices himself to his god Mammon, whilst he often destroys his health, his life, yea, finally his Soul too, to save his purse. I have now done with the second head of duty, that to ourselves, contained by the Apostle under the word soberly.

PARTITION X. Of DUTIES to our NEIGHBOURS. Of JUSTICE, Negative, Positive. Of the sin of MURDER, Of the Hainousness of it, the Punishments of it, and the strange Discoveries thereof. Of Maiming, wounds and stripes.

§. 1. I Come now to the third part of Duties, those to our Neighbor, which is by the Apostle summed up in gross in the word [righteousness,] by which is meant not only bare justice, but all kind of charity also, for that is now by the law of Christ become a debt, to our neighbor, and it is a piece of unrighteousness to defraud him out of it. I shall therefore build all the particular duties we ow to our neighbor, on those two general ones, Justice and Charity.

2. I begin with JUSTICE, whereof there are two parts, the one Negative, the other Positive: the negative justice is to do no wrong, or injury to any. The positive justice is to do right to all; that is, to yield them whatsoever appertains or is due unto them. I shall first speak of the negative justice, the not injuring or wronging any. Now because a man is capable of receiving wrong in several respects; this first part of justice extends itself into several branches, answerable to those capacities of injury. A man may be injured either in his Soul, his body, his possessions, or credit; and therefore this duty of negative justice lays a restraint on us in every of these. That we do no wrong to any man in respect either of his Soul, his body, his possessions, or credit.

3. First, This JUSTICE ties us to do no hurt to his Soul; and here my first work must be to examine what harm it is that the soul can receive; it is we know an invisible substance which we cannot reach with our eye, much less with our swords and weapons, yet for all that it is capable of being hurt and wounded; and that even to death.

4. Now the Soul may be considered either in a natural or spiritual sense; in the natural it signifies that which we usually call the mind of a man, and this we all know may be wounded with griefs or sadness, as Solomon saith, Prov. 15. 13. By sorrow of heart the spirit is broken. Therefore whoever does causelessly afflict or grieve his neighbor; he transgresses this part of justice, and hurts, and wrongs his soul. This sort of injury malicious and spiteful men are very often guilty of, they will do things▪ by which themselves reap no good, nay, often much harm, only that they may vex and grieve another; This is a most savage, inhumane humor, thus to take pleasure in the sadness, and afflictions of others; and whoever harbours it in his heart, may truly be said to be possessed with a Devil, for it is the nature only of those accursed spirits to delight in the miseries of men; and till that be cast out, they are fit only to dwell as the possessed person did, Mar 5. 2. Among graves and tombs, where there are none capable of receiving affliction by them.

5. But the Soul may be considered also in the spiritual sense, and so it signifies that immortal part of us which must live eternally, either in bliss or woe in another world. And the Soul thus understood is capable of two sorts of harm: First, That of sin; Secondly, That of Punishment; the latter whereof is certainly the consequent of the former; and therefore though God be the inflicter of punishment yet since it is but the effect of sin, we may justly reckon, that he that draws a man to sin, is likewise the betrayer of him to punishment, as he that gives a man a mortal wound, is the cause of his death; therefore under the evil of sin both are contained, so that I need speak only of that.

6. And sure there cannot be a higher sort of wrong, then the bringing this great evil upon the Soul; sin is the disease and wound of the Soul, as being the direct contray to Grace; which is the health and soundness of it: Now this wound we give to every Soul whom we do by any means whatsoever draw into sin.

7. The ways of doing that are divers, I shall mention some of them, whereof though some are more direct than others, yet all tend to the same end. Of the more direct ones there is, first, the commanding of sin, that is, when a person that hath power over another shall require him to do something which is unlawful; an example of this we have in Nebuchadnezzar's commanding the worship of the golden Image, Dan. 3. 4. and his copy is imitated by any parent or master who shall require of his child or servant to do any unlawful act. Secondly, there is counseling of sin, when men advise and persuade others to any wickedness: Thus Jobs wife counseled her husband to curse God, Job 27. And Achitophel advised Absalom to go into his Fathers concubines, 2 Sam. 16. 21. Thirdly, there is enticing and alluring to sin, by setting before men the pleasures or profits they shall reap by it. Of this sort of enticement Solomon gives warning, Prov. 1. 10. My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not; if they say, Come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without a cause, &c. and verse the 13. you may see what is the bait, by which they seek to allure them: we shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil, cast in thy lot among us, let us all have one purse. Fourthly, there is assistance in sin; that is, when men aid and help others either in contriving or acting a sin. Thus Jonadab helped Amnon in plotting the Ravishing of his sister, 2 Sam. 13. all these are direct means of bringing this great evil of sin upon our brethren.

8. There are also others, which though they seem more indirect, may yet be as effectual towards that ill end: As first, example in sin; he that sets others an ill pattern does his part to make them imitate it, and too often it hath that effect; there being generally nothing more forcible to bring men into any sinful practice, than the seeing it used by others, as might be instanced in many sins, to which there is no other temptation, but their being in fashion. Secondly, there is encouragement in sin, when either by approving, or else at least by not showing a dislike, we give others confidence to go on in their wickedness. A third means is by justifying and defending any sinful act of another's, for by that we do not only confirm him in his evil, but endanger the drawing others to the like, who may be the more inclinable to it, when they shall hear it so pleaded for. Lastly, the bringing up any reproach upon strict and Christian living, as those do who have the ways of God in derision; this is a means to affright men from the practice of duty, when they see it will bring them to be scorned and despised; this is worse than all the former, not only in respect of the man who is guilty of it (as it is an evidence of the great profaneness of his own heart) but also in regard of others, it having a more general ill effect than any of the former can have, it being the betraying men not only to some single acts of disobedience to Christ, but even to the casting off all subjection to him: By all these means we may draw on ourselves this great guilt of injuring and wounding the souls of our brethren.

9. It would be too long for me to instance in all the several sins, in which it is usual for men to ensnare others; as drunkenness, uncleanness, rebellion, and a multitude more. But it will concern every man for his own particular, to consider sadly what mischiefs of this kind he hath done to any, by all, or any of these means, and to weigh well the greatness of the injury. Men are apt to boast of their innocence towards their neighbors, that they have done wrong to no man; but God knows many that thus brag, are of all others the most injurious persons: perhaps they have not maimed his body, nor stolen his goods: but alas! the body is but the case and cover of the man, and the goods some appurtenances to that, 'tis the soul is the man, and that they can wound and pierce without remorse, and yet with the adulteress, Prov. 30. 20. say, They have done no wickedness; but glory of their friendly behavior to those whom they thus betray to eternal ruin, for whomsoever thou hast drawn to any sin, thou hast done thy part to ascertain to those endless flames. And then think with thyself how base a treachery this is, thou wouldst call him a treacherous villain, that should while he pretends to embrace a man, secretly stab him; but this of thine is as far beyond that, as the soul is of more value then the body, and hell worse then death. And remember yet farther, that besides the cruelty of it to thy poor brother, it is also most dangerous to thyself, it being that against which Christ hath pronounced a woe, Matth. 18. 7. and ver. 6. he tells us that whoever shall offend (that is, draw into sin) any of those little ones, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the Sea. Thou mayest plunge thy poor brother into perdition, but as it is with wrestlers, he that gives another a fall, commonly falls with him, so thou art like to bear him company to that place of torment.

10. Let therefore thy own & his danger beget in thee a sense of the greatness of this sin, this horrid piece of injustice to the precious soul of thy neighbor. Bethink thyself seriously to whom thou hast been thus cruel, whom thou hast enticed to drinking, advised to rebellion, allured to lust, stirred up to rage, whom thou hast assisted or encouraged in any ill course, or discouraged, and disheartened by thy profane scoffings at piety in general, or at any conscionable strict walking of his in particular; and then draw up a bill of indictment accuse and condemn thyself, as a Cain, a murderer of thy brother, heartily and deeply bewail all thy guilts of this kind, and resolve never once more to be a stumbling block, as S. Paul calls it, Rom. 14. in thy brothers way.

11. But this is not all, there must be some fruits of this repentance brought forth; now in all sins of injustice, restitution is a necessary fruit of repentance, and so it is here, thou hast committed an act (perhaps many) of high injustice to the soul of thy brother, thou hast robbed it of its innocence, of its title to heaven, thou must now endeavor to restore all this to it again, by being more earnest and industrious to win him to repentance, then ever thou wert to draw him to sin, use now as much art to convince him of the danger, as ever thou didst to flatter him with the pleasures of his vice, in a word, counterminde thyself by using all those methods, and means to recover him, that thou didst to destroy him, and be more diligent and zealous in it for 'tis necessary thou shouldst both in regard of him and thyself: First, in respect of him, because there is in man's nature so much a greater promptness and readiness to evil, then to good, that there will need much more pains and diligence to instill the one into him, then the other: besides, the man is supposed to be already accustomed to the contrary, which will add much to the difficulty of the work. Then in respect of thyself; if thou be a true penitent, thou wilt think thyself obliged, as S. Paul did, to labor more abundantly, and wilt be ashamed, that when thou art trading for God, bringing back a soul to him, thou shouldest not pursue it with more earnestness, then while thou art an agent of Satan's, besides the remembrance, that thou art a means of bringing this poor soul into this snare, must necessarily quicken thy diligence to get him out of it: So much for the first part of negative justice, in respect of the souls of our brethren.

12. The second concerns the bodies, and to those also this justice binds thee to do no wrong nor violence. Now of wrongs to the body there may be several degrees, the highest of them is killing, taking away the life; this is forbid in the very letter of the sixth Commandment. Thou shalt do no murder.

13. Murder may be committed either by open violence; when a man either by sword, or any other instrument takes away another's life, immediately, and directly, or it may be done secretly and treacherously, as David murdered Uriah, not with his own sword but with the sword of the Children of Ammon, 2 Sam. 11. 17. And Jozabel Naboth by a false accusation, 1 Kings 21. 13. And so divers have committed this sin of murder by poison, false-witness, or some such concealed ways. The former is commonly the effect of a sudden rage, the latter hath several originals, sometimes it proceeds from some old malice fixed in the heart towards the person, sometimes from some covetous or ambitious desires; such a one stands in a man's way to his profit or preferment, and therefore he must be removed; and sometimes again it is to cover shame, as in the case of Strumpets, that murder their Infants that they may not betray their filthiness. But besides these more direct ways of killing, there is another, and that is, when by our persuasions and enticements we draw a man to do that which tends to the shortening of his life, and is apparent to do so; he that makes his neighbor drunk, if by that drunkenness the man come to any mortal hurt which he would have escaped if he had been sober, he that made him drunk is not clear of his death; or if he die not by any such sudden accident, yet if drinking cast him into a disease, and that disease kill him, I know not how he that drew him to that excess can acquit himself of his murder in the eyes of God, though human Laws touch him not. I wish those who make it their business to draw in customers to that trade of debauchery would consider it. There is yet another way of bringing this guilt upon ourselves, and that is by inciting and stirring up others to it, or to that degree of anger and revenge which produces it; as he that sets two persons at variance, or seeing them already so, blows the coals, if murder ensue, he certainly hath this share in the guilt, which is a consideration that ought to aflright all from having anything to do in the kindling, or increasing of contention.

14. Now for the heinousness of this sin of murder, I suppose none can be ignorant, that it is of the deepest die, a most loud crying sin; This we may see in the first act of this kind, that ever was committed, Abel's blood cried from the earth, as God tells Cain, Genesis 4. 10. Yea, the guilt of this sin is such, that it leaves a stain even upon the land where it is committed, such as is not to be washed out, but by the blood of the murderer, as appears Deut. 19. 12, 13. The land cannot be purged of blood, but by the blood of him that shed it; and therefore though in other cases the flying to the Altar secured a man, yet in this of willful murder no such refuge was allowed but such a one was to be taken even thence, and delivered up to justice, Exodus 21. 14. Thou shalt take him from my Altar, that he may die. And it is yet farther observable, that the only two precepts which the Scripture mentions, as given to Noah after the flood, were both in relation to this sin, that of not eating blood, Gen. 9. 4. being a ceremony to beget in men a greater horror of this sin of murder, and so intended for the preventing of it. The other was for the punishment of it, Gen. 9. 6. He that sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed; and the reason of this strictness is added in the next words, For in the Image of God made he man; where you see that this sin is not only an injury to our brother, but even the highest contempt, and despite towards God himself, for it is the defacing of his image, which he hath stamped upon man. Nay yet further, it is the usurping of God's proper right, and authority. For it is God alone, that hath right to dispose of the life of man; 'twas he alone that gave it, and it is he alone that hath power to take it away; but he that murders a man does, as it were, wrest this power out of God's hand, which is the highest pitch of rebellious presumption.

15. And as the sin is great, so likewise is the punishment; we see it frequently very great, and remarkable, even in this world, (besides those most fearful effects of it in the next) blood not only cries, but it cries for vengeance, and the great God of recompenses as he stiles himself, will not fail to hear it: very many examples the Scripture gives us of this: Ahab and Jezebel, that murdered innocent Naboth, for greediness of his vineyard, were themselves slain, and the Dogs licked their blood in the place, where they had shed his, as you may read in that Story; so Absalom, that slew his brother Amnon, after he had committed that sin, fell into another, that of rebellion against his King and Father, and in it miserably perished. Rechab and Baanah, that slew Ishbosheth, were themselves put to death, and that by the very person they thought to endear by it; many more instances might be given of this out of the Sacred Story, and many also out of Humane, there having been no age but hath yielded multitudes of examples of this kind, so that every man may furnish himself out of the observations of his own time.

16. And it is worth our notice, what strange and even miraculous means it hath often pleased God to use for the discovery of this sin; the very brute creatures have often been made instruments of it; nay, often the extreme horror of a man's own conscience hath made him betray himself, so that it is not any closeness a man uses in the acting of this sin, that can secure him from the vengeance of it, for he can never shut out his own conscience, that will in spite of him be privy to the fact, and that very often proves the means of discovering it to the world, or if it should not do that, yet it will sure act revenge on him, it will be such a Hell within him as will be worse then death: This we have seen in many, who after the commission of this sin have never been able to enjoy a minutes rest, but have had that intolerable anguish of mind that they have chosen to be their own murderers rather than live in it. These are the usual effects of this sin even in this world, but those in another are yet more dreadful, where surely the highest degrees of torment belong to this high pitch of wickedness, for if as our Savior tells us, Mat. 5. 22. Hell fire be the portion of him that shall but call his brother fool, what degree of those burnings can we think proportionable, to this so much greater an injury?

17. The consideration of all this ought to possess us with the greatest horror, and abomination of this sin, and to make us extremely watchful of ourselves, that we never fall into it, and to that end to prevent all those occasions which may insensibly draw us into this pit. I mentioned at first several things which are wont to be originals of it, and at those we must begin, if we will surely guard ourselves. If therefore thou wilt be sure never to kill a man in thy rage, be sure never to be in that rage, for if thou permittest thyself to that, thou canst have no security against the other, anger being a madness that suffers us not to consider, or know what we do, when it has once possessed us. Therefore when thou findest thyself begin to be inflamed, think betimes, whither this may lead thee, if thou letttest loose to it, and immediately put the bridle upon this head strong passion; so again, if thou wilt be sure thy malice shall not draw thee to it, be sure never to harbor one malscious thought in thy heart, for if it once settle there it will gather such strength, that within a while thou wilt be perfectly under the power of it, so that it may lead thee even to this horrible sin at its pleasure; be therefore careful at the very first approach of this treacherous guest, to shut the doors against it, never to let it enter thy mind; so also if thou wilt be sure thy covetousness, thy ambition, thy lust, or any other sinful desire shall not betray thee to it, be sure thou never permit any of them to bear any sway with thee, for if they get the dominion, as they will soon do, if they be once entertained in the heart, they will be past thy control, and hurry thee to thi or any other sin, that may serve their ends. In like manner if thou wouldst not be guilty of any of the mortal effects of thy neighbors drunkenness, be sure not to entice him to it nor accompany him at it, and to that purpose do not allow thyself in the same practice, for if thou do, thou wilt be laboring to get company at it. Lastly, if thou wilt not be guilty of the murder committed by another, take heed thou never give any encouragement to it, or contribute anything to that hatred, or contention, that may be the cause of it. For when thou hast either kindled or blowed the fire, what knowest thou whom it may consume? bring always as much water as thou canst to quench, but never bring one drop of oil to increase the flame. The like may be said of all other occasions of this sin not here mentioned; and this careful preserving ourselves from these, is the only sure way to keep us from this sin; therefore as ever thou wouldst keep thyself innocent from the great offense, guard thee warily from all such inlets, those steps and approaches towards it.

18. But although murder be the greatest, yet it is not the only injury that may be done to the body of our neighbor, there are others which are also of a very high nature, the next in degree to this is Maiming him, depriving him of any member, or at least of the use of it, and this is a very great wrong and mischief to him, as we may discern by the Judgment of God himself, in the case of the bond-servant, who should by his Masters means lose a member, Exod. 21. 26. the freedom of his whole life was thought but a reasonable recompense for it, He shall let him go free, saith the text, for his eye; Nay though it were a less considerable part, if it were but a tooth, which of all other may be lost with the least damage, yet the same amends was to be made him, ver. 27.

19. But we need no other way of measuring this injury, then the judgment of every man in his own case; how much does every man dread the loss of a limb, so that if he be by any accident or disease, in danger of it, he thinks no pains or cost too much to preserve it. And then how great an injustice, how contrary to that great rule of doing as we would be done to, is it, for a man to do that to another, which he so unwillingly suffers himself.

But if the person be poor, one that must labor for his living, the injury is yet greater, it is such as may in effect amount to the former sin of murder, for as the wise man says, Ecclus. 24. 21. The poor man's bread is his life, and he that deprives them thereof is a bloodshedder. And therefore he that deprives him of the means of getting his bread by disabling him from labor, is surely no less guilty. In the Law it was permitted to every man that had sustained such a damage by his neighbor to require the Magistrate to inflict the like on him, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, as it is Exod. 21. 24

20. And though unprofitable revenge be not now allowed to us Christians, yet sure it is the part of everyone who hath done this injury, to make what satisfaction lies in his power; 'tis true, he cannot restore a limb again (which by the way should make men wary how they do those mischiefs which it is so impossible for them to repair) but yet he may satisfy for some of the ill effects of that loss: If that have brought the man to want and penury, he may, nay, he must, if he have but the least ability, relieve and support him, yea, though it be by his own extraordinary labor: for if it be a duty of us all to be eyes to the blind and feet to the lame, as Job speaks, much more must we be so to them whom ourselves have made blind and lame. Therefore whoever has done this injury to any of his poor brethren, let him know, he is bound to do all that is possible towards the repairing of it, if he do not, every new suffering that the poor man's wants bring upon him, becomes a new charge and accusation against him, at the tribunal of the just Judge.

21. There are yet other degrees of injury to the body of our neighbor, I shall mention only two more, Wounds, and stripes; A man may Wound another, which though it finally cause loss neither of life nor limb, is yet an endangering of both; and the like may be said of stripes; both of which however are very painful at the present, nay perhaps very long after, and pain of all temporal evils, is to be accounted the greatest, for it is not only an evil in itself, but it is such a one, that permits us not, whilst we are under it, to enjoy any other good; A man in pain having no taste of any the greatest delights: If any man despise these, as light injuries, let him again ask himself, how he would like it, to have his own body slasht or bruised, and put to pass under those painful means of cure, which are many times necessary in such cases? I presume there is no man would willingly undergo this from another, and why then should thou offer it to him?

22. The truth is, this strange cruelty to others is the effect of a great pride, and haughtiness of heart, we look upon others with such contempt, that we think it no matter how they are used; we think they must bear blows from us, when in the mean time we are so tender of ourselves, that we cannot hear the least word of disparagement, but we are all on a flame. The provocations to these injuries are commonly so slight, that did not this inward pride dispose us to such an angriness of humor, that we take fire at everything, it were impossible we should be moved by them. Nay some are advanced to such a wantonness of cruelty, that without any provocation at all in cool blood, as they say, they can thus wrong their poor brethren, and make it part of their pastime and recreation to cause pain to others. Thus some tyrannous humors take such a pleasure in tormenting those under their power, that they are glad when they can but find a pretence to punish them, and then do it without all moderation, and others will set men together by the ears, only that they may have the sport of seeing the scuffle; like the old Romans, that made it one of their public sports to see men kill one another, and sure we have as little Christianity as they, if we can take delight in such spectacles.

23. This savageness and cruelty of mind is so unbecoming the nature of a man, that he is not allowed to use it even to his beast; how intolerable is it then towards those, that are of the same nature, and which is more, are heirs of the same eternal hopes with us? They that shall thus transgress against their neighbors in any of the foregoing particulars, or what ever else is hurtful to the body, are unjust persons, want even this lowest sort of justice, the negative, to their neighbors, in respect of their bodies.

24. Neither can any man excuse himself by saying what he has done was only in return of some injury offered him by the other, for suppose it be so, that he have indeed received some considerable wrong, yet cannot he be his own revenger without injury to that man, who is not, by being thine enemy, become thy vassal, or slave, to do with him what thou list; thou hast never the more right of dominion over him, because he hath done thee wrong, and therefore if thou hadst no power over his body before, 'tis certain thou hast none now, and therefore thou art not only uncharitable (which yet were sin enough to damn thee) but unjust in every act of violence thou doest to him. Nay, this injustice ascends higher, even to God himself, who hath reserved vengeance as his own peculiar right, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord, Rom. 12. 19. and then he that will act revenge for himself, what does he, but encroach upon this special right and prerogative of God, snatch the sword, as it were, out of his hand, as if he knew better how to weild it! which is at once a robbery, and contempt of the Divine Majesty.

PARTITION XI. Of JUSTICE, about the Possessions of our Neighbor, against Injuring him, as concerning his WIFE, his GOODS. Of Malice, Covetousness, Oppression, Theft. Of Paying of Debts, &c.

§. 1. THE third part of Negative Justice concerns the possessions of our Neighbors; what I mean by Possessions, I cannot better explain then by referring you to the Tenth Commandment, the end of which is to bridle all covetous appetites and desires towards the possessions of our neighbor. There we find reckoned up, not only his house, servants, and cattle, which may all pass under the one general name of his goods or riches, but particularly his wife, as a principal part of his possessions, and therefore when we consider this duty of negative justice, in respect of the possessions of our Neighbor, we must apply it to both his wife as well as his goods.

2. The especial and peculiar right that every man hath in his wife is so well known that it were vain to say anything in proof of it, the great impatience that every husband hath to have this right of his invaded, shows that it is sufficiently understood in the world, and therefore none that does this injury to another, can be ignorant of the greatness of it.

The corrupting of a man's wife, enticing her to a strange bed, is by all acknowledged to be the worst sort of theft, infinitely beyond that of the goods.

3. Indeed there is in this one, a heap of the greatest injustices together; some towards the woman, and some towards the man: Towards the Woman there are the greatest imaginable; it is that injustice to her soul, which was before mentioned as the highest of all others, 'tis the robbing her of her innocence and setting her in a course of the horridest wickedness (no less then lust and perjury together) from which it is probable she may never return, and then it proves the damning of her eternally. Next it is in respect of this world, the robbing her of her credit, making her abhorred and despised, and her very name a reproach among all men; and besides it is the depriving her of all that happiness of life, which arises from the mutual kindness and affection that is between man and wife, instead whereof this brings in a loathing, and abhorring of each other; from whence flow multitudes of mischiefs, too many to rehearse, in all which the man hath his share also.

4. But besides those, there are to him many, and high injustices; for it is first the robbing him of that, which of all other things he accounts most precious, the love and faithfulness of his wife, and that also wherein he hath such an incommunicable right, that himself cannot, if he would, make it over to any oother; and therefore sure it cannot without the utmost injustice be torn from him by any: Nor is this all, but it is farther the ingulfing him (if ever he come to discern it) in that most tormenting passion of jealousy, which is of all others the most painful, and which oft puts men upon the most desperate attempts, it being as Solomon says, Prov. 6. 34. The rage of a man. It is yet farther, the bringing upon him all that scorn, and contempt, which by the unjust measures of the world falls on them, which are so abused, and which is by many esteemed the most insufferable part of the wrong; and though it be true that it is very unjust he should fall under reproach, only because he is injured, yet unless the world could be new molded, it will certainly be his lot, and therefore it adds much to the injury: Again, this may indeed be a robbery in the usual sense of the word, for perhaps it may be the thrusting in the child of the adulterer into his family, to share both in the maintenance and portions of his own children; and this is an arrand theft: first, in respect of the man, who surely intends not the providing for another man's child; and then in respect of the children, who are by that means defrauded of so much as that goes away with. And therefore whosoever hath this circumstance of the sin to repent of, cannot do it effectually, without restoring to the family, as much as he hath by this means robbed it of.

5. All this put together will sure make this the greatest and most provoking injury that can be done to a man, and (which heightens it yet more) it is that, for which a man can never make reparations; for unless it be in the circumstance before mentioned, there is no part of this sin, wherein that can be done; to this purpose it is observable in the Jewish Law, that the Thief was appointed to restore fourfold, and that freed him; but the adulterer having no possibility of making any restitution, any satisfaction, he must pay his life for his offense, Lev. 20. 10. And though now a days adulterers speed better, live many days to renew their guilt, and perhaps to laugh at those, whom they have thus injured, yet let them be assured, there must one day be a sad reckoning, and that whether they repent or not: If by God's grace they do come to repentance, they will then find this to be no cheap sin, many anguishes of soul, terrors, and perplexities of conscience, groans, and tears it must cost them; and indeed were a man's whole life spent in these penitential exercises, 'twere little enough to wipe off the guilt of any one single act of this kind; what overwhelming sorrows then are requisite for such a trade of this sin, as too many drive? Certainly it is so great a task, that it is highly necessary for all that are so concerned, to set to it immediately, lest they want time to go through with it; for let no man flatter himself, that the guilt of a course and habit of such a sin can be washed away with a single act of repentance; no, he must proportion the repentance to the fault, and as one hath been a habit and course, so must the other also. And then how strange a madness is it for men to run into this sin (and that with such painful pursuits, as many do) which he knows must at the best hand, that is, supposing he do repent of it, cost him thus dear; but then if he do not repent, infinitely dearer; it loses him all his title to heaven, that place of purity, and gives him his portion in the lake of fire, where the burnings of his lust shall end in those everlasting burnings: For how closely soever he have acted this sin, be it so that he may have said with the adulterer in Job 25. 15. No eye seeth me, yet 'tis sure he could not in the greatest obscurity shelter himself from God's sight, with whom the darkness is no darkness, Psalms 139. 12. And he it is, who hath expressly threatened to judge this sort of offenders, Heb. 13. 4. Adulterers God will judge. God grant that all that live in this foul guilt, may so seasonably, and so thoroughly judge them selves, that they may prevent that severe and dreadful judgment of his.

6. The second thing, to which this Negative Justice to our Neighbors possessions reacheth, is his Goods, under which general word is contained all those several sorts of things, as House, Land, Cattle, Money, and the like, in which he hath a right and property; these we are by the rule of this justice to suffer him to enjoy without seeking either to work him damage in any of them, or to get any of them to ourselves: I make a difference between these two, because there may be two several grounds or motives of this injustice; the one malice, the other covetousness.

7. The malicious man desires to work his neighbor mischief, though he get nothing by it himself; 'tis frequently seen, that men will make havoc, and spoil of the goods of one, to whom they bear a grudge, though they never design to get anything to themselves by it, but only the pleasure of doing a spite to the other: This is a most hellish humor, directly answerable to that of the Devil, who bestows all his pains and industry, not to bring in any good to himself, but only to ruin and undo others: and how contrary it is to all rules of justice, you may see by the Precept given by God to the Jews concerning the goods of an enemy, where they were so far from being allowed a liberty of spoil and destruction, that they are expressly bound to prevent it, Exodus 23 45. If thou meet thine enemies Ox, or his Ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again: If thou see the Ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, and wouldst forbear to help him, thou shalt surely help with him: Where you see it is a debt we owe to our very enemies, to prevent that loss and damage, which by any accident he is in danger of: and that even with some labor, and pains to ourselves. How horrible an injustice is it then, purposely to bring that loss, and damage on him? Who ever is guilty of this let him never excuse himself by saying, he hath not inriched himself by the spoil of his neighbor, that he hath nothing of it cleaves to his finger, for sure this malicious injustice is no less a fault then the covetous one; nay, I suppose in respect of the principle & cause, from which it flows, it may be greater, this hatred of another being worse then the immoderate love of ourselves; whoever hath thus mischiefed his neighbor, he is as much bound to repair the injury, to make satisfaction for the loss, as if he had enriched himself by it.

8. But on the other side, let not the covetous defrauder therefore judge his sin light because there is another, that in someone respect outweighs it; for perhaps in others his may cast the scales; certainly it does in this one, that he that is unjust for greediness of gain is like to multiply more acts of this sin, then he that is so out of malice; for 'tis impossible any man should have so many objects of his malice, as he may have of his covetousness; there is no man at so general a defiance with all mankind that he hates everybody; but the covetous man hath as many objects of his vice, as there be things in the world he counts valuable: But I shall not longer stand upon this comparison, 'tis sure they are both great and crying sins, and that is ground enough of abhorring each: let us descend now to the several branches of this sort of covetous injustice; 'tis true they may all bear the name of robbery, or theft, for in effect they are all so, yet for methods sake it will not be amiss to distinguish them into these three, Oppression, Theft, and Deceit.

9. By Oppression I mean that open and barefaced robbery, of seizing upon the possessions of others, and owning, and avowing the doing so. For the doing of this there are several instruments; as first that of power, by which many Nations and Princes have been turned out of their rights, and many private men out of their estates: Sometimes again, Law is made the instrument of it; he that covets his neighbors lands or goods, pretends a claim to them, and then by corrupting of Justice by Bribes and gifts, or else over-ruling it by greatness and authority gets judgment on his side: This is a high oppression, and of the worst sort, thus to make the Law, which was intended for the protection, and defense of men's Rights, to be the means of overthrowing them; and it is a very heavy guilt, that lies both on him that procures, and on him that pronounces such a sentence, yea, and on the Lawyer too, that pleads such a cause, for by so doing he assists in the oppression; sometimes again, the very necessities of the oppressed are the means of his oppression; thus it is in the case of Extortion, and griping Usury: a man is in extreme want of money, and this gives opportunity to the executioner to wrest unconscionably from him, to which the poor man is forced to yield to supply his present wants. And thus also it is often with exacting Land-Lord's, who when their poor tenants know not how to provide themselves elsewhere, rack & skrew them beyond the worth of the thing. All these and many the like are but several ways of acting this one sin of Oppression which becomes yet the more heinous, by how much the more helpless the person is, that is thus oppressed, therefore the oppression of the widow, and fatherless, is in Scripture mentioned as the height of this sin.

10. It is indeed a most crying guilt, and that against which God hath threatened his heavy vengeance, as we read in divers texts of Scriptures: Thus it is, Ezek. 18. 12. He that hath oppressed the poor, and hath spoiled by violence, he shall surely die, his blood shall be upon him; and the same sentence is repeated against him, ver. 18. Indeed God hath so peculiarly taken upon him the protection of the poor, and oppressed, that he is engaged as it were in honor to be their avenger, and accordingly, Psal. 12. We see God solemnly declare his resolution of appearing for them, ver. 5. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord, I will set him in safety from him; the advice therefore of Solomon is excellent, Prov. 22. 22. Rob not the poor, because he is poor, neither oppress the afflicted in the gate, for the Lord will plead their cause and will spoil the soul of those that spoiled them; they are like in the end to have little joy of the booty it brings them in, when it thus engages God against them.

11. The second sort of this injustice is Theft, and of that also there are two kinds, the one the withholding what we should pay, and the other taking from our neighbor what is already in his possession.

12. Of the first sort is the not paying of debts, whether such as we have borrowed, or such as by our own voluntary promise are become our debts, for they are equally due to him, that can lay either of these claims to them; and therefore the withholding of either of them is a theft, a keeping from my neighbor that which is his; yet the former of them is rather the more injurious, for by that I take from him that which he once actually had (be it money, or whatsoever else) and so make him worse then I found him: This is a very great, and very common injustice; men can now a days with as great confidence deny him that asks a debt, as they do him that asks an alms, nay many times 'tis made matter of quarrel for a man to demand his own, besides the many attendances the creditor is put to in pursuit of it, are a yet farther injury to him, by wasting his time, and taking him off from other business, and so he is made a looser that way too. This is so great injustice, that I see not how a man can look upon anything he possesses as his own right, whilst he thus denies another his. It is the duty of every man in debt, rather to strip himself of all, and cast himself again naked upon God's providence, then thus to feather his nest with the spoils of his neighbors. And surely it would prove the more thriving course, not only in respect of the blessing, which may be expected upon justice, compared with the curse, that attends the contrary, but even in worldly prudence also; for he that defers paying of debts, will at last be forced to it by Law, and that upon much worse terms, then he might have done it voluntarily, with a greater charge, and with such a loss of his credit, that afterward in his greatest necessities he will not know where to borrow. But the sure way for a man to secure himself from the guilt of this injustice, is never to borrow more then he knows he hath means to repay, unless it be of one, who knowing his disability, is willing to run the hazard. Otherwise he commits this sin at the very time of borrowing; for he takes that from his neighbor upon promise of paying, which he knows he is never likely to restore to him, which is a flat robbery.

The same justice which ties men to pay their own debts, ties also every surety to pay those debts of others, for which he stands bound, in case the principal either cannot or will not: for by being bound, he hath made it his own debt, and must in all justice answer it to the creditor, who its presumed, was drawn to send on confidence of his security, and therefore is directly cheated and betrayed by him, if he see him not satisfied. If it be thought hard, that a man should pay for that which he never received benefit by, I shall yield it, so far as to be just matter of wariness to every man how he enter into such engagements, but it can never be made an excuse for the breaking them.

As for the other sort of debt, that which is brought upon a man by his own voluntary promise, that also cannot without great injustice be withho•den; for it is now the man's right, and then 'tis no matter, by what means it came to be so. Therefore we see David makes it part of the description of a just man, Psa. 15. 4. that he keeps his promise yea, though they were made to his own disadvantage; and surely he is utterly unfit to ascend to that Holy Hill, there spoken of, either as that signifies the Church here, or Heaven hereafter that does not punctually observe this part of justice. To this sort of debt may be reduced the wages of the servant, the hire of the laborer, and the withholding of these is a great sin, and the complaints of those that are thus injured, ascend up to God. Behold (saith S. James) the hire of the laborers which have reap•d down your fields, which is, of you kept back by fraud, crieth, and the cries of them that have reaped, are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth: and Deut. 24. 14. 15. we find a strict command in this matter. Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor and needy, at his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the Sun go down upon it, for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it, lest he cry against thee to the Lord, and it be sin unto thee. This is one of those loud clamourous sins, which will not cease crying, till it bring down God's vengeance, and therefore though thou have no justice to thy poor brother, yet have at least so much mercy to thyself, as not to pull down judgments on thee by thus wronging him.

PARTITION XII. Of Theft; Stealing. Of Deceit in Trust, in Traffick. Of Restitution, &c.

§. 1. THE second part of Theft is the taking from our neighbor that which is already in his possession; and this may be done either more violently, and openly, or else more closely, and sliely; the first is the manner of those that rob on the way, or plunder houses, where by force they take the goods of their neighbor; The other is the way of the pilfering thief, that takes away a man's goods unknown to him; I shall not dispute, which of these is the worst, 'tis enough that they are both such acts of injustice, as make men odious to God, unfit for human society, and betray the actors to the greatest mischiefs even in this world, death itself being by Law appointed the reward of it; and there are few that follow this Trade long, but at last meet with that fruit of it. I am sure 'tis madness for any to believe he shall always steal securely, for he is to contend with the industry of all those whom he shall thus injure, whose losses will quicken their wits for the finding him out, and which is infinitely more, he is to struggle with the justice of God, which doth usually pursue such men to destruction, even in this world; witness the many strange discoveries, that have been made of the craftiest thieves. But however, if he were secure from the vengeance here, I am sure nothing but repentance and reformation can secure him from the vengeance of it hereafter. And now when these dangers are weighed, 'twill surely appear, that the thief makes a pitiful bargain, he steals his neighbors money, or cattle, and in exchange for it he must pay his life, or his soul, perhaps both, and if the whole world be too mean a price for a Soul, as he tells us, Mark 18. 36. who best knew the value of them, having himself bought them, what a strange madness is it, to barter them away for every petty trifle, as many do, who have got such a habit of stealing, that not the meanest worthless thing can escape their fingers? Under this head of theft may be ranked the receivers of stolen goods, whether those that take them, as partners in the theft, or those that buy them, when they know or believe they are stolen. This many (that pretend much to abhor theft) are guilty of, when they can by it, buy the thing a little cheaper than the common rate. And here also comes in the concealing of any goods a man finds of his neighbors, which whosoever restores not, if he know, or can learn out the owner, is no better than a thief, for he withholds from his neighbor that which properly belongs to him: and sure 'twill not be uncharitable to say, that he that will do this, would likewise commit the grosser theft, were he by that no more in danger of Law than in this he is.

The third part of injustice is Deceit, and in that there may be as many acts as there are occasions of intercourse and dealing between man and man.

2. It will be impossible to name the mall but I think they will be contained under these two general deceits, in matters of Trust, and in matter of Traffick, or bargaining; unless it be that of Gaming, which therefore here by the way, I must tell you, is as much a fraud and deceit as any of the rest.

3. He that deceives a man in any Trust that is committed to him, is guilty of a great in uestice, and that the most treacherous sort of one, it is the joining of two great sins in one, defrauding; and promise-breaking; for in all trusts there is a promise implied, if not expressed, for the very accepting of the trust contains under it a promise of fidelity; these trusts are broken sometimes to the living, sometimes to the dead; to the living there are many ways of doing it, according to the several kinds of the trust; sometimes a trust is more general, like that of Potiphar to Joseph, Gen. 39. 4. a man commits to another all that he hath, and thus Guardians of children, and sometimes stewards are entrusted; sometimes again it is more limited, and restrained to someone special thing: A man intrusts another to bargain, or deal for him in such a particular, or he puts someone thing into his hands, to manage, and dispose: Thus among servants it is usual for one to be entrusted with one part of the Masters goods, and another with another part of them. Now in all these, and the like cases, whosoever acts not for him that intrusts him, with the same faithfulness, that he would for himself, but shall either carelessly loose, or prodigally imbezel the things committed to him, or else convert them to his own use, he is guilty of this great sin of betraying a trust to the living. In like manner he that being entrusted with the execution of a dead man's Testament, acts not according to the known intention of the dead man, but enriches himself by what is assigned to others, he is guilty of this sin, in respect of the dead; which is so much the greater, by how much the dead hath no means of remedy, and redress, as the living may have. It is a kind of robbing of graves which is a theft of which men naturally have such a horror, that he must be a very hardened thief, that can attempt it. But either of these frauds are made yet more heinous, when either God, or the poor are immediately concerned in it; that is, when anything is committed to a man. for the uses either of piety; or charity; this adds scruledge to both the fraud, and the treachery, and so gives him title to all those curses, that attend those several sins, which are so heavy, that he that for the present gain will adventure on them, makes as ill, nay, a much worse bargain, then Gehazi, 1 Kings 5. 27 who by getting the raiment of Naaman got his leprosy too.

4. The second sort of fraud is in matters of traffick and bargain, wherein there may be deceit both in the seller, and buyer; that of the seller is commonly either in concealing the faults of the commodity, or else in overrating it.

5. The ways of concealing its faults are ordinary these, either first by denying that it hath any such fault, nay, perhaps commending it for the direct contrary quality, and this is down right lying, and so adds that sin to the other, and if that lie be confirmed by an oath, as it is too usually, then the yet greater guilt of perjury comes in also; and then what a heap of sins is here gathered together? abundantly enough to sink any poor soul to destruction, and all this only to skrew a little more money out of his neighbors pocket, and that sometimes so very little, that 'tis a miracle that any man that thinks he has a Soul, can set it at so miserable a contemptible price. A second means of concealing is by using some Art to the thing, to make it look fair, and to hide the faults of it, and this is acting a lie, though it be not speaking one, which amounts to the same thing, and has surely in this case as much of the intention of cheating, and defrauding, as the most impudent forswearing can have. A Third means, is the picking out ignorant Chapmen; This is, I believe, an Art too well known among Tradesmen, who will not bring out their faulty wares to men of skil, but keep them to put off to such, whose unskillfulness may make them passable with them: and this is still the same deceit with the former; for it all tends to the same end, the cozening and defrauding of the Chapmen, and then it is not much odds, whether I make use of my own Art, or his weakness for the purpose. This is certain, he that will do justly, must let his Chapmen know what he buys; and if his own skill enable him not to judge, (nay, if he do not actually find out the fault) thou art bound to tell it him, otherwise thou makest him pay for somewhat, which is not there, he presuming there is that good quality in it, which thou knowest is not, and therefore thou mayest as honestly take his money for some goods of another man's, which thou knowest thou canst never put into his possession, which I suppose no man will deny to be an arrant cheat. To this head of concealment may be referred, that deceit of false weights and measures, for that is the concealing from the buyer a defect in the quantity, as the other was in the quality of the commodity, and is again the making him pay for what he hath not. This sort of fraud is pointed at particularly by Solomon, Prov. 11. 1. with this note upon it, that it is an abomination to the Lord.

6. The second part of fraud in the seller, lies in over-rating the commodity; though he have not disguised, or concealed the faults of it, and so have dealt fairly in that respect; yet if he set an unreasonable price upon it, he defrauds the buyer: I call that an unreasonable price, which exceeds the true worth of the thing, considered with those moderate gains, which all Tradesmen are presumed to be allowed in the Sale: Whatever is beyond this must in all likelihood be fetched in by some of these ways: As first, by taking advantage of the buyers ignorance in the value of the thing, which is the same with doing it in the goodness, which hath already been shown to be a deceit: Or secondly, by taking advantage of his necessity; thou findest a man hath present and urgent need of such a thing, and therefore takest this opportunity to set the Dice upon him; but this is that very sin of Extortion, and oppression spoken of before; for it is sure, nothing can justly raise the price of anything, but either its becoming dearer to thee, or its being some way better in its self; but the necessity of thy brother causes neither of these; his nakedness doth not make the clothes thou sellest him stand thee in ever the more, neither doth it make them any way better; and therefore to rate them ever the higher, is to change thy way of trading, and sell even the wants and necessities of thy neighbor, which sure is a very unlawful vocation. Or thirdly, it may be by taking advantage of the indiscretion of the Chapman: A man perhaps earnestly fancies such a thing, and then suffers that fancy so to over rule his reason, that he resolves to have it upon any terms; If thou findest this in him, and thereupon raisest thy rate, this is to make him buy his folly, which is of all others the dearest purchase; 'tis sure his fancy adds nothing to the real value, no more then his necessity did in the former case, and therefore should not add to the price. He therefore that will deal justly in the business of selling, must not catch at all advantages, which the temper of his Chapman may give, but consider soberly, what the thing is worth, and what he would afford it for to another, of whom he had no such advantage, and accordingly rate it to him at no higher a price.

7. On the Buyers part there are not ordinarily so many opportunities of fraud; yet it is possible a man may sometimes happen to sell somewhat, the worth whereof he is not acquainted with, and then it will be as unjust for the buyer to make gain by his ignorance, as in the other case it was for the seller: but that which oftener falls out, is the case of necessity, which may as probably fall on the sellers side, as the buyers: A man's wants compel him to sell, and permit him not to stay to make the best bargain, but forces him to take the first offer; and here for the buyer to grate upon him, because he sees him in that strait is the same fault which I before shown it to be in the seller.

8. In this whole business of traffick there are so many opportunities of deceit that a man had need fence himself with a very firm resolution, nay, love of justice, or he will be in danger to fall under temptation; for as the Wise man speaks, Eccles. 27. 2. As a Nail sticks fast between the joynings of the Stones, so doth sin stick close between buying and selling; it is so interwoven with all Trades, so mixed with the very first principles, and grounds of them, that it is taught together with them, and so becomes part of the Art; so that he is now a days scarce thought fit to manage a Trade, that wants it, while he that has most of this black Art of defrauding, applauds and hugs himself, nay, perhaps boasts to others, how he hath over-reached his neighbor.

What an intolerable shame is this, that we Christians, who are by the precepts of our Master set to those higher duties of Charity, should instead of practicing them, quite unlearn those common rules of justice, which mere Nature teaches? For, I think, I may say, there are none of those several branches of injustice towards the possessions of our neighbor, which would not be adjudged to be so by any sober Heathen; so that, as Saint Paul tells those of the Circumcision, that the Name of God was blasphemed among the Gentiles, by that unagreeableness that was betwixt their practice, and their Law, Rom. 2. 24. So now may it be said of us, that the Name of Christ is blasphemed among the Turks and Heathens, by the vile and scandalous lives of us, who call ourselves Christians, and particularly in this sin of injustice; For shame let us at last endeavor to wipe of this reproach from our profession, by leaving these practices, to which me thinks this one single consideration should be enough to persuade us.

9. Yet beside this, there want not other; Among which, one there is of such a nature, as may prevail with the arrantest worldling, and that is, that this course doth not really tend to the enriching of him; there is a secret curse goes along with it, which like a Canker eats out all the benefit was expected from it. This no man can doubt that believes the Scripture, where there are multitudes of Texts to this purpose: thus Prov. 22. 16. He that oppressteth the poor to increase his riches, shall surely come to want. So Habbak. 2. 6. Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his, how long? And he that ladeth himself with thick Clay: shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee? and thou shalt be for booties to them. This is commonly the fortune of those that spoil and deceive others, they at last meet with some that do the like to them. But the place in Zacharias is most full to this purpose, Chap. 5. where under the sign of a flying roll is signified the curse that goes forth against this sin, Verse 4. I will bring it forth, saith the Lord of Hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the Thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my Name, and it shall consume it with the timber thereof, and with the stones thereof. Where you see, theft and perjury are the two sins, against which this curse is aimed (and they too often go together in the matter of defrauding) and the nature of this curse is, to consume the house, to make an utter destruction of all that belongs to him that is guilty of either of these sins Thus whilst thou art ravening after thy neighbors goods, or house, thou art but gathering fuel to burn thine own And the effect of these threatenings of God we daily see in the strange improsperousness of ill gotten estates, which every man is apt enough to observe in other men's cases: he that sees his neighbor decline in his estate, can presently call to mind, this was gotten by oppression or deceit; yet so sottish are we, so bewitched with the love of gain, that he that makes this observation, can seldom turn it to his own use, is never the less greedy, or unjust himself for that vengeance he discerns upon others.

10. But alas, if thou couldst be sure that thy unjust possessions, should not be torn from thee, yet when thou rememberest, how dear thou must pay for them in another world, thou hast little reason to brag of thy prize. Thou thinkest thou hast been very cunning, when thou hast overreached thy brother; but God knows all the while, there is another overreaching thee, and cheating thee of what is infinitely more precious, even thy Soul: the Devil herein deals with thee as Fishers use to do; those that will catch a great fish, will bait the hook with a less, and so the great one coming with greediness to devour that, is himself taken: So thou that art gaping to swallow up thy poor brother, art thyself made a prey to that great devourer. And alas! what will it ease thee in Hell, that thou hast left wealth behind thee upon earth, when thou shalt there want that, which the meanest beggar here enjoys, even drop of water to cool thy tongue. Consider this, and from henceforth resolve to employ all that pains and diligence thou hast used to deceive others, in rescuing thyself from the frauds of the grand deceiver.

11. To this purpose it is absolutely necessary, that thou make Restitution to all whom thou hast wronged: For as long as thou keepest anything of the unjust gain, 'tis as it were an earnest penny from the Devil, which gives him full right to thy Soul. But perhaps it may be said, it will not in all cases be possible to make restitution to the wronged party, peradventure he may be dead; in that case then make it to his Heirs, to whom his right descends. But it may further be objected, That he that hath long gone on in a course of fraud, may have injured many, that he cannot now remember, and many that he has no means of finding out: In this case all I can advise is this: First, to be as diligent as is possible, both in recalling to mind who they were, and endeavoring to find them out; and when, after all thy care, that proves impossible, let thy Restitutions be made to the poor, and that they may not be made by halves, be as careful as thou canst to reckon every the least mite of unjust gain, but when that cannot exactly be done, as 'tis sure it cannot by those who have multiplied the acts of fraud, yet even there let them make some general measures, whereby to proportion their restitution: as for example, a Tradesman that cannot remember how much he has cheated in every single parcel, yet may possibly guess in the gross whether he have usually over-reached to the value of a third, or a fourth part of the wares, and then what proportion soever he think he has so defrauded, the same proportion let him now give out of that estate he hath raised by his trade: but herein it concerns every man to deal uprightly, as in the presence of God, and not to make advantage of his own forgetfulness, to the cutting short of the Restitution, but rather go on the other hand, and be sure rather to give too much, than too little. If he do happen to give somewhat over, he need not grudge the charge of such a sin offering, and 'tis sure he will not if he do heartily desire an atonement. Many other difficulties there may be in this business of restitution, which will not be foreseen, and so cannot now be particularly spoke to; but the more of those there are, the greater horror ought men to have of running into the sin of injustice, which it will be so difficult, if not impossible for them to repair, and the more careful ought they to be to mortify that which is the root of all injustice, to wit Covetousness.

PARTITION XIII. Of False Reports, False Witness, Slanders, Whisperings. Of despising and Scoffing for Infirmities, Calamities, Sins, &c. Of Positive Justice, Speaking the Truth, Of Lying. Of Humility and Pride. Of Envy and Detraction. Of Gratitude, &c.

§. 1. THE Fourth Branch of Negative Justice concerns the Credit of our neighbors, which we are not to lessen, or impair by any means, particularly not by false Reports: Of false reports there may be two sorts, the one is when a man says something of his neighbor, which he directly knows to be false, the other when possibly he has some slight surmize, or jealousy of the thing; but that upon such weak grounds, that 'tis as likely to be false as true. In either of these cases, there is a great guilt lies upon the reporter. That there doth so in the first of them, nobody will doubt, everyone acknowledging that it is the greatest baseness to invent a lie of another; but there is as little reason to question the other, for he that reports a thing as a truth, which is but uncertain, is a liar also, or if he do not report it as a certainty, but only as a probability, yet then though he be not guilty of the lie, yet he is of the injustice of robbing his neighbor of his credit; for there is such an aptness in men to believe ill of others, that any the lightest jealousy will, if once it be spread abroad, serve for that purpose; and sure it is a most horrible injustice upon every slight surmize, and fancy, to hazard the bringing so great an evil upon another; especially when it is considered, that those surmizes commonly spring rather from some censoriousness, peevishness, or malice in the surmizer, then from any real fault in the person so suspected.

2. The manner of spreading these false reports of both kinds, is not always the same; sometimes it is more open and avowed, sometimes more close and private: the open is many times by false witness before the Court of Justice; and this not only hurts a man in his credit, but in other respects also; 'tis the delivering him up to the punishment of the Law, and according to the nature of the crime pretended, does him more or less mischief; but if it be of the highest kind, it may concern his life, as we see it did in Naboth's case, 1 King 21. How great and crying a sin it is in this respect, as also in that of the perjury, you may learn from what hath been said of both those sins. I am now to consider it only, as it touches the credit; and to that it is a most grievous wound, thus to have a crime publicly witnessed against one, and such as is scarce curable by anything that can afterwards be done to clear him, and therefore whoever is guilty of this, doth a most outrageous injustice to his neighbor; this is that which is expressly forbidden in the ninth Commandment, and was by God appointed to be punished by the inflicting of the very same suffering upon him, which his false testimony aimed to bring upon the other. Deut. 19. 16.

3. The second open way of spreading these reports, is by a public and common declaring of them; though not before the Magistrate, as in the other case, yet in all companies, and before such as are likely to carry it farther, and this is usually done with bitter railings, and reproaches, it being an ordinary Art of slanderers, to revile those whom they slander, that so by the sharpness of the accusation, they may have the greater impression in the minds of the hearers; this both in respect of the slander, and the railing, is a high injury, and both of them such, as debar the committers from Heaven; thus Psal. 15. where the upright man is described, that shall have his part there, this is one special thing, verse. 3. That he slandereth not his neighbor. And for railing the Apostle in several places reckons it amongst those works of the flesh, which are to shut men out both from the Church here by excommunication, as you may see 1 Cor. 15. 11. and from the Kingdom of God hereafter, as it is, 1 Cor. 6. 10.

4. The other more close and private way of spreading such reports is that of the Whisperer, he that goes about from one to another, and privately vents his slanders, not out of an intent by that means to make them less public, but rather more; this trick of delivering them by way of secret, being the way to make them both more believed, and more spoken of too; for he that receives such a tale, as a secret from one, thinks to please somebody else, by delivering it as a secret to him also; and so it passes from one hand to another, till at last it spread over a whole Town: This sort of slanderer is of all others the most dangerous, for he works in the dark, tyes all he speaks to, not to own him as the author, so that whereas in the more public accusations, the party may have some means of clearing himself and detecting his accuser, here he shall have no possibility of that, the slander, like a secret poison, works incurable effects, before ever the man discern it. This sin of whispering is by Saint Paul mentioned among those great crimes, which are the effects of a reprobate mind, Rom. 1. 29. It is indeed one of the most incurable wounds of this sword of the tongue; the very bane and pest of human society; and that which not only robs single persons of their good names, but oftentimes whole families, nay, public societies of men of their peace, what ruins: what confusions hath this one sin wrought in the world? 'Tis Solomon's observation, Prov. 18. 28. That a whisperer separateth chief friends, and sure one may truly say of tongues thus employed, that they are set on fire of Hell, as Saint James saith, Chap. 3. 6.

5. This is such a guilt that we are to beware of all the degrees of approach to it, of which there are several steps; the first is the giving ear to, and cherishing of those that come with slanders, for they that entertain and receive them, encourage them in the practice; for as our common proverb says, if there were no Receivers, there would be no thief; so if there were none that would give an ear to tales, there would be no talebearers. A second step is, the giving too easy credit to them, for this helps them to attain part of their end, they desire to beget a general ill opinion of such a man, but the way of doing it must be by causing it, first, in particular men: and if thou suffer them to do it in thee, they have so far prospered in their aim. And for thy own part thou dost a great injustice to thy neighbor to believe ill of him without a just ground, which the accusation of such a person certainly is not. A third step is the reporting to others, what is thus told thee; by which thou makest thyself directly a party in the slander, and after thou hast unjustly withdrawn from thy neighbor thy own good opinion, endeavourest to rob him also of that of others. This is very little below the guilt of the first whisperer, and tends as much to the ruin of our neighbors credit. And these several degrees have so close a dependence one upon another, that it will be very hard for him that allows himself the first, to escape the other; and indeed he that can take delight to hear his neighbor defamed, may well be presumed of so malicious a humor, that 'tis not likely he should stick at spreading the slander. He therefore that will preserve his innocence in this matter, must never in the least degree cherish or countenance any that brings these false reports. And it is not less necessary to his peace, then to his innocence; for he that once entertains them, must never expect quiet, but shall be continually incited, and stirred up even against his nearest, and dearest relations; so that this whisperer, and slanderer is to be looked on by all, as a common enemy, he being so as well to those to whom, as of whom he speaks.

6. But besides this grosser way of slandering, there is another, whereby we may impair, and lessen the credit of our neighbor, and that is by contempt, and despising; one common effect whereof is scoffing, and deriding him. This is very injurious to a man's reputation, for the generality of men do rather take up opinions upon trust, then judgment; and therefore if they see a man despised, and scorned, they will be apt to do the like. But besides this effect of it, there is a present injustice in the very act of despising, and scorning others. There are ordinarily but three things, which are made the occasions of it, (unless it be with such, with whom virtue and godliness are made the most reproachful things, and such despising is not only an injury to our neighbor, but even to God himself for whose sake it is, that he is so despised) those three are first the infirmities, secondly the calamities, thirdly the sins of a man, and each of these are very far from being ground of our triumphing over him.

7. First, for infirmities, be they either of body or mind, the deformity and unhandsomness of the one, or the weakness, and folly of the other, they are things out of his power to help, they are not his faults, but the wise dispensations of the great Creator, who bestows the excellency of body and mind, as he pleases, and therefore to scorn a man, because he hath them not, is in effect to reproach God who gave them not to him.

8. So also for the calamities, and miseries, that befall a man, be it want, or sickness, or whatever else, these also come by the providence of God, who raiseth up, and pulleth down, as seems good to him, and it belongs not to us to judge, what are the motives to him to do so, as many do, who upon any affliction that befalls another, are presently concluding, that sure it is some extraordinary guilt, which pulls this upon him, though they have no particular to lay to his charge. This rash judgment our Savior reproves in the Jews, Luk. 13. where on occasion of the extraordinary sufferings of the Galileans, he asks them, verse. 2. Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans, because they suffered such things? I tell you nay, but except you repent, ye shall all likewise perish: when we see God's hand heavy upon others, it is no part of our business to judge them, but ourselves, and by repentance to prevent, what our own sins have deserved. But to reproach, and revile any that are in affliction, is that barbarous cruelty, taken notice of by the Psalmist, as the height of wickedness, Psal. 69. 26. They persecute him whom thou hast smitten, and they talk to the grief of them whom thou hast wounded: In all the miseries of others, compassion becomes a debt to them; how unjust are they then, that instead of paying them that debt, afflict them with scorn and reproach?

9. Nay the very sins of men, though as they have more of their wills in them, they may seem more to deserve reproach, yet certainly they also oblige us to the former duty of compassion, and that in the highest degree, as being the things, which of all others make a man the most miserable; in all these cases, if we consider how subject we are to the like ourselves; and that it is only God's mercy to us, by which we are preserved from the worst that any man else is under, it will surely better become us to look up to him with thankfulness, then down on them with contempt and despising. Thus you see the direct injustice of scorning and contemning our brethren, to which when that other is added, which naturally follows, as a consequent of this; to wit, the begetting the like contempt in others, there can sure be no doubt of its being a great and horrible injustice to our neighbor in respect of his credit.

10. Now how great the injury of destroying a man's credit is, may be measured by these two things; first, the value of the thing he is robbed of, and secondly the difficulty of making reparations. For the first, 'tis commonly known, that a man's good name is a thing he holds most precious, oftentimes dearer then his life, as we see by the hazards men sometimes run to preserve even a mistaken reputation; but 'tis sure it is that, which hath even by sober men been esteemed one of the greatest happiness of life: And to some sort of men, such especially as subsist by dealings in the world, tis so necessary, that it may well be reconed as the means of their livelihood, and then sure, 'tis no slight matter to rob a man of what is thus valuable to him.

11. Secondly, the difficulty of making reparations increaseth the injury, and that is such in this case of defamation, that I may rather call it an impossibility then a difficulty: For when men are possessed of an ill opinion of a person, 'tis no easy matter to work it out; so that the slanderer is herein like a young Conjurer, that raises a Devil he knows not how to lay again. Nay, suppose men were generally as willing to lay down ill conceits of their neighbors, as they are to take them up, yet how is it possible for him that makes even the most public recantation of his slander, to be sure that every man that hath come to the hearing of the one, shall do so of the other also? And if there be but one person, that doth not, (as probably there will be many) then is the reparation still short of the injury.

12. This consideration is very fit to make men afraid of doing this wrong to their neighbor; but let it not be made use of to excuse those that have already done the wrong, from endeavoring to make the best reparations they can; for though 'tis odds, it will not equal the injury, yet let them however do what they are able towards it: And this is so necessary towards the obtaining pardon of the sin, that none must expect the one, that do not perform the other. Whosoever therefore sets himself to repent of his faults of this kind, must by all prudent means endeavor to restore his neighbor to that degree of credit he hath deprived him of; and if that be not to be done without bringing the shame upon himself, of confessing publicly the slander, he must rather submit to that, than be wanting to this necessary part of justice, which he owes to the wronged party.

13. Thus I have gone through these four branches of Negative Justice to our Neighbor; wherein we must yet further observe, that this justice binds us not only in respect of our words, and actions, but of our very thoughts, and affections also; we are not only forbid to hurt, but to hate, not only restrained from bringing any of these evils forementioned upon him, but we must not so much as wish them before, not delight in them after they are befallen him: we must take no pleasure either in the sin of his Soul, or hurt of his body; we must not envy him any good thing he enjoys, nor so much as wish to possess ourselves of it: Neither will it suffice us, that we so bridle our tongue, that we neither slander, nor revile, if we have that malice in our hearts, which makes us wish his discredit; or rejoice, when we find it procured, though we have no hand in the procuring it. This is the peculiar property of God's Laws, that they reach to the heart; whereas men's can extend only to the words, and actions; and the reason is clear, because he is the only Law-giver, that can see what is in the heart, therefore if there were the perfectest innocence in our tongue, and hands, yet if there be not this purity of heart, it will never serve to acquit us before him. The counsel therefore of Solomon is excellent, Prov 4. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life. Let us strictly guard that, so that no malicious unjust thought enter there; and that not only, as it may be the means of betraying us to the grosser act, but also as it is in itself such a pollution in God's sight, as will unfit us for the blessed vision of God, whom none but the pure in heart have promise of seeing, Mat. 5. 8. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

14. I come now to speak of the Positive part of Justice, which is the yielding to every man that which by any kind of right he may challenge from us. Of these dues there are some that are general to all mankind, others that are restrained within some certain conditions and qualities of men, and become due only by virtue of those qualifications.

15. Of the first sort, that is those, that are due to all men, we may reckon first the speaking Truth, which is a common debt we owe to all mankind; speech is given us as the instrument of intercourse and society, one with another, the means of discovering the mind which otherwise lies hid, and concealed, so that were it not for this, our conversations would be but the same as of beasts: Now this being intended for the good and advantage of mankind, 'tis a due to it, that it be used to that purpose; but he that Lyes, is so far from paying that debt, that on the contrary he makes his speech the means of injuring and deceiving him he speaks to.

16. There might much be said to show the several sorts of Obligations we lie under, to speak truth to all men; but supposing I write to Christians, I need not insist on any other, then the Commands we have of it in Scripture, thus Eph. 4 25. the Apostle commands that putting away lying, they speak every man truth with his neighbor: And again, Col. 3. 9. Lye not one to another: and Prov. 6. 17. a lying tongue is mentioned as one of those things that are abominations to the Lord. Yea so much doth he hate a lie, that it is not the most pious and religious end, that can reconcile him to it, the man that lies, though in a zeal to God's glory, shall yet be judged as a sinner, Rom. 3. 7. what shall then become of those multitudes of men that lie on quite other ends? some out of malice, to mischief others, some out of covetousness to defraud their neighbors, some out of pride, to set themselves out, and some out of fear, to avoid a danger or hide a fault. But of a yet stranger sort, then all these, are those, that do it without any discernible temptation, that will tell lies by way of story, take pleasure in telling incredible things, from which themselves reap nothing, but the reputation of impertinent liars.

17. Among these divers kinds of falsehoods, Truth is become such a rarity among us, that it is a most difficult matter, to find such a man as David describes, Psalms 15. 2. That speaketh the truth from his heart. Men have so glibbed their tongues to lying, that they do it familiarly upon any or no occasion, never thinking that they are observed either by God or man. But they are extremely deceived in both; for there is scarce any sin (that is at all endeavored to be hid) which is more discernible even to men: they that have a custom of lying, seldom fail, be their memory never so good) at some time or other to betray themselves; and when they do, there is no sort of sin, meets with greater scorn, and reproach; a Liar being by all accounted a title of the greatest infamy, and shame. But as for God, 'tis madness to hope that all their Arts can disguise them from him, who needs none of those casual ways of discovery, which men do, but sees the heart, and so knows at the very instant of speaking, the falsehood of what is said: and then by his Title of The God of Truth, is tied not only to hate, but punish it, and accordingly you see, Rev 20. that the Lyars are in the number of those that are shut out of the new Jerusalem; and not only so, but also have their part in the Lake that burneth with Fire and Brimstone. If therefore thou be not of the humor of that unjust Judge Christ speaks of, Luke 18. 2. Who neither feared God, nor regarded man, thou must resolve on this part of Justice, the putting away lying, which is abhorred by both.

18. A second thing we owe to all is Humanity and Courtesie of behavior, contrary to that sullen churlishness we find spoken of in Nabal, who was of such a temper, that a man could not speak to him, 1 Sam. 25. 17. There is sure so much of respect due to the very nature of mankind, that no accidental advantage of health or honor, which one man hath above another, can acquit him from that debt to it, even in the person of the meanest; and therefore that crabbed and harsh behavior to any that bears but the form of a man, is an injustice to that nature he partakes of. And when we consider how much that nature is dignified by the Son of God his taking it upon him, the obligation to reverence it is yet greater, and consequently the sin of thus contemning it.

19. This is the common guilt of all proud and haughty persons, who are so busy in admiring themselves, that they over look all that is valuable in others, and so think they owe not so much as common civility to other men, whilst they set up themselves as Nebuchadnezzar did his Image to be worshipped of all. This is sure very contrary to what the Apostle exhorts, Rom 12. 10. In honor prefer one another: And again, Phil. 2. 4. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others; and let such remember the sentence of our blessed Savior, Luke 14. 11. He that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted, which we often find made good to us, in the strange down falls of proud men. And it is no wonder, for this sin makes both God and men our enemies; God, as the Scripture everywhere testifies, abhors it, and all that are guilty of it, and men are by means of it used so contemptuously and unkindly by us, that they are by nothing more provoked against us, and then whom God and man thus resist, who shall secure and uphold?

20. A third thing we owe to all is Meekness; that is, such a patience, and gentleness towards all, as may bridle that mad passion of anger, which is not only very uneasy to ourselves, as hath already been shown, but also very mischievous to our neighbors, as the many outrages, that are oft committed in it, do abundantly testify. That this duty of meekness is to be extended to all men, there is no doubt; for the Apostle in express words commands it, 1 Thess. 5. 14. Be patient towards all men, and that it should seem in spite of all provocation to the contrary, for the very next words are, See that none render evil for evil, or railing for railing: and Timothy is commanded to exercise this meekness even towards them who oppose themselves against the Doctrine of the Gospel, 2 Tim. 2. 24. which was a case, wherein some heat would probably have been allowed, if it might have been in any.

21. This virtue of meekness is so necessary to the preserving the peace of the world, that it is no wonder, that Christ, who came to plant peace among men, should enjoin meekness to all. I am sure the contrary effects of rage and anger are everywhere discernible, it breeds disquiet in Kingdoms, in Neighbourhoods, in Families, and even between the nearest relations; 'tis such a humor, that Solomon warns us never to enter a friendship with a man that is of it, Prov. 22. 24. Make no friendship with an angry man, and with a furious man thou shalt not go. It makes a man unfit to be either friend or companion, and indeed makes one insufferable to all that have to do with one, as we are again taught by Solomon, Prov. 21. 19 where he prefers the dwelling in a wilderness, rather than with a contentious and angry woman, and yet a woman has ordinarily only that one weapon of the tongue to offend with. Indeed to any that have not the same unquietness of humor, there can scarce be a greater uneasiness, then to converse with those, that have it, though it never proceed farther, then words. How great this sin is, we may judge by what our Savior says of it, Matt. 5. where there are several degrees of punishment allotted to several degrees of it; but alas! we daily outgo that, which he there sets as the highest step of this sin; the calling thou fool, is a modest sort of reviling, compared with those multitudes of bitter reproaches we use in our rages.

22. Nay, we often go yet higher; reproaches serve not our turn, but we must curse too; How common is it to hear men use the horredst execrations, and cursings upon every the slightest cause of displeasure? nay, perhaps without any cause at all; so utterly have we forgot the rule of the Apostle, Rom. 12. 14. Bless and curse not; Yea, the precept of our blessed Savior himself, Matth. 5. 44. Pray for those that despi•efully use you. Christ bids us pray for those, who do us all injury, and we are often cursing those, who do us none. This is a kind of saying our prayers backward indeed, which is said to be part of the ceremony the Devil uses, at the making of a Witch, and we have in this case also reason to look on it, as a means of bringing us into acquaintance, and league with that accursed spirit here, and to a perpetual abiding with him hereafter. 'Tis the language of Hell, which can never fit us to be Citizens of the New Jerusalem, but marks us out for inhabitants of that land of darkness. I conclude this with the advice of the Apostle, Eph. 4, 31. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice.

23. Having spoken thus far of those common dues, wherein all men are concerned, and have a right, I am now to proceed to those other sorts of dues, which belong to particular persons, by virtue of some special qualification. These qualifications may be of three kinds, that of excellency, that of Want, and that of Relation.

24. By that of excellency, I mean any extraordinary gifts, or endowments of a person; such as wisdom, learning, and the like, but especially grace: these being the singular gifts of God, have a great value and respect due to them, wheresoever they are to be found; and this we must readily pay by a willing, and glad acknowledgement of those his gifts in any he has bestowed them on, and bearing them a reverence, and respect, answerable thereunto, and not out of an overweening of our own excellencies, despise and undervalue those of others, as they do, who will yield nothing to be reason, but what themselves speak, nor anything piety, but what agrees with their own practice.

25. Also we must not envy, or grudge that they have those gifts, for that is not only an injustice to them, but injurious also to God who gave them as it is at large set forth in the parable of the laborers, Mat. 20. where he asks them, who grumbled at the masters bounty to others, Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with my own, is thine eye evil because mine is good? This envying at God's goodness to others, is in effect a murmuring against God, who thus disposes it, neither can there be a greater, and more direct opposition against him, then for me to hate and wish ill to a man, for no other reason, but because God has loved and done well to him. and then in respect of the man, 'tis the most unreasonable thing in the world, to love him the less, merely because he has those good qualities, for which I ought to love him more.

26. Neither must we detract from the excellencies of others, we must not seek to eclipse or darken them by denying either the kinds, or degrees of them; by that means to take off that esteem, which is due to them. This sin of detraction is generally the effect of the former, of envy, he that envies a man's worth, will be apt to do all he can to lessen it in the opinions of others, and to that purpose will either speak slightly of his excellencies; or if they be so apparent, that he knows not how to cloud them, he will try if he can by reporting some either real, or feigned infirmity of his, take off from the value of the other, and so by casting in some dead flies, as the wise man speaks, Eccles. 10. 1. Strive to corrupt the savor of the ointment: this is a great injustice, and directly contrary to that duty we owe, of acknowledging, and reverencing the gifts of God in our brethren.

27. And both those sins of envy, and detraction do usually prove as great follies, as wickedness; the envy constantly brings pain, and torment to a man's self, whereas if he could but cheerfully, and gladly look on those good things of another's, he could never fail to be the better for them himself; the very pleasure of seeing them would be some advantage to him but besides that those gifts of his brother may be many ways helpful to him, his wisdom and learning may give him instruction; his piety, and virtue, example, &c. but all this the envious man loseth, and hath nothing in exchange for it, but a continual fretting, and gnawing of heart.

28. And then for detraction, that can hardly be so managed, but it will be found out; he that is still putting in Caveats against men's good thoughts of others, will quickly discover himself to do it out of envy, and then that will be sure to lessen their esteem of himself, but not of those he envies, it being a sort of bearing testimony to those excellencies, that he thinks them worth the envying.

29. What hath been said of the value, and respect due to those excellencies of the mind, may in a lower degree be applied to the outward advantages of honor, greatness, and the like. These though they are not of equal value with the former (and such for which no man is to prize himself) yet in regard, that these degrees, and distinctions of men are by God's wise providence disposed, for the better ordering of the world, there is such a civil respect due to those, to whom God hath dispenc'd them, as may best preserve that order, for which they were intended. Therefore all inferiors are to behave themselves to their superiors with modesty, and respect, and not by a rude boldness confound that order which it hath pleased God to set in the world, but according as our Church-Catechism teaches, order themselves lowly and reverently to all their betters. And here the former caution against envy comes in most seasonably; these outward advantages being things, of which generally men have more taste, than of the other, and therefore will be more apt to envy, and repine to see others exceed them therein, to this therefore all the former considerations against envy will be very proper, and the more necessary to be made use of, by how much the temptation is in this case to most minds the greater.

30. The second qualification is that of want; whoever is in distress for anything, wherewith I can supply him, that distress of his makes it a duty in me so to supply him, and this in all kinds of wants. Now the ground of its being a duty is, that God hath given men abilities not only for their own use, but for the advantage and benefit of others, and therefore what is thus given for their use, becomes a debt to them, whenever their need requires it. Thus he that is ignorant and wants knowledge is to be instructed by him, that hath it, and this is one special end, why that knowledge is given him: The tongue of the learned is given to speak a word in season. Isaiah 50. 4. He that is in sadness, and affliction, is to be comforted by him that is himself in cheerfulness. This we see Saint Paul makes it the end of God's comforting him, that he might be able to comfort them that are in any trouble, 2 Cor. 1. 4. He that is in any course of sin, and wants reprehension and counsel, must have that want supplied to him by those who have such abilities, and opportunities, as may make it likely to do good. That this is a justice we owe to our neighbor, appears plainly by that text, Levite. 19. 17 Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, thou shalt in any wise reprove him, and not suffer sin upon him; where we are under the same obligation to reprove him, that we are not to hate him. He that lies under any slander, or unjust defamation, is to be defended, and cleared by him, that knows his innocence, or else he makes himself guilty of the slander, because he neglects to do that which may remove it; and how great an injustice, that of slandering our neighbor is, I have already shown.

31. Lastly, he that is in poverty and need, must be relieved by him that is in plenty; and he is bound to it, not only in charity, but even in justice. Solomon calls it a due, Prov. 3. 27. Withhold not good from him to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it: and what that good is, he explains in the very next verse: Say not to thy neighbor, go and come again, and tomorrow I will give, when thou hast it by thee: It seems 'tis the withholding a due, so much as to defer giving to our poor neighbor. And we find God did among the Jews separate a certain portion of every man's increase to the use of the poor, a tenth every third year (which is all one with a thirtieth part every year, Deut. 14. 28. 29. And this was to be paid not as a charity, or liberality, but as a debt, they were unjust, if they withheld it. And surely we have no reason to think, that Christian justice is sunk so much below the Jewish, that either nothing at all, or a less proportion is now required of us. I wish our practice were but at all answerable to our obligation in this point, and then surely we should not see so many Lazarus's lie unrelieved at our doors, they having a better right to our superfluities, than we ourselves have, and then what is it, but arrant robbery to bestow that upon our vanities, nay our sins, which should be their portion.

32. In all the foregoing cases, he that hath ability is to look upon himself, as God's steward, who hath put it into his hands to distribute to them, that want, and therefore not to do it, is the same injustice and fraud, that it would be in any steward to purse up that money for his private benefit, which was entrusted to him, for the maintenance of the family, and he that shall do thus, hath just reason to expect the doom of the unjust steward, Luke 16. to be put out of the stewardship, to have those abilities taken from him, which he hath so unfaithfully employed. And as for all the rest, so particularly for that of wealth, 'tis very commonly to be observed, that it is withdrawn from those that thus defraud the poor of their parts, the griping miser coming often by strange undiscernable ways to poverty; and no wonder, he having no title to God's blessing on his heap, who does not consecrate a part to him in his poor members. And therefore we see the Israelites before they could make that challenge of God's promise to bless them, Deut. 26. 15. Look down from thy holy habitation and bless thy people Israel, &c. they were first to pay the poor man's tithes, ver. 12. without which they could lay no claim to it. This withholding more than is meet, as Solomon says, Prov. 11. 24. tends to poverty; and therefore as thou wouldst play the good husband for thyself, be careful to perform this justice according to thy ability to all that are in want.

33. The third qualification is that of Relation, and of that there may be divers sorts, arising from divers grounds, and duties, answerable to each of them. There is first a relation of a Debtor to a Creditor; and he that stands in that relation to any, whether by virtue of bargain, loan, or promise, 'tis his duty to pay justly what he owes, if he be able (as on the other side if he be not; 'tis the Creditors, to deal charitably and Christianly with him, and not to exact of him beyond his ability.) But I need not insist on this, having already by showing you the sin of withholding debts, informed you of this duty.

34. There is also a relation of an obliged person to his Benefactor, that is one that hath done him good, of what kind soever, whether spiritual, or corporal; and the duty of that person is, first thankfulness, that is a ready and hearty acknowledgement of the courtesy received: secondly, prayer for God's blessings, and rewards upon him; and thirdly, an endeavor, as opportunity and ability serves, to make returns of kindness, by doing good turns back again. This duty of gratitude to Benefactors is so generally acknowledged by all, even the most barbarous and savagest of men, that he must have put off much of his human nature, that refuses to perform it. The very Publicans and sinners, as our Savior says, do good to those ••a do good to them.

35. Yet how many of us fail even in this, how frequent is it to see men, not only neglect to repay courtesies, but return injuries instead of them? it is too observable in many particulars, but in none more, then in the case of advice, and admonition, which is of all others, the most precious part of kindness, the reallest good turn that can be done from one man to another. And therefore those that do this to us, should be looked on, as our prime and Greatest Benefactors. But alas! how few are there that can find gratitude, shall I say? nay patience for such a courtesy? Go about to admonish a man of a fault, or tell him of an Error, he presently looks on you, as his enemy, you are, as S. Paul tells the Galatians, Chap. 4. 16. become his enemy because you tell him the truth; such a pride there is in men's hearts, that they must not be told of anything amiss, though it be with no other intent, but that they may amend it. A strange madness this is, the same that it would be in a sick man, to fly in the face of him that comes to cure him, on a fancy that he disparaged him in supposing him sick; so that we may well say with the Wise man, Prov. 12. 1. He that hateth reproof is brutish. There cannot be in the world a more unhappy temper, for it fortifies a man in his sins, raises such Mounts, and Bulwarks about them, that no man can come to assault them; and if we may believe Solomon, destruction will not fail to attend it, Prov. 29. 1. He that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy. But then again in respect of the admonisher, 'tis the greatest injustice, I may say, cruelty that can be, he comes in tenderness, and compassion to rescue thee from danger, and to that purpose puts himself upon a very uneasy task; for such the general impatience men have to admonition, hath now made it; and what a defeat, what a grief is it to him to find, that instead of reforming the first fault, thou art run into a second; to wit, that of causeless displeasure against him? This is one of the worst, and yet I doubt, the commonest sort of unthankfulness to Benefactors, and so a great failing in that duty we owe to that sort of relation. But perhaps these will be looked on as remote relations (yet 'tis sure they are such as challenge all that duty I have assigned to them) I shall in the next place proceed to those relations, which are by all acknowledged to be of the greatest nearness.

PARTITION XIV. Of Duty to Parents; Magistrates, Pastors. Of the Duty of Parents to Children, &c.

§ 1. THE first of those nearer sorts of relations, is that of a Parent; And here it will be necessary to consider the several sorts of Parents, according to which the duty of them is to be measured. Those are these three, the Civil, the Spiritual, the Natural.

2. The Civil Parent is he, whom God hath established the Supreme Magistrate, who by a just right possesses the Throne in a Nation. This is the common Father of all those that are under his authority. The duty we owe to this Parent is, first, Honor and Reverence, looking on him, as upon one, on whom god hath stamped much of his own power and authority, and therefore paying him all honor and esteem, never daring, upon any pretence whatsoever, to speakevil of the Ruler of our people, Acts 23. 5.

3. Secondly, Paying Tribute; This is expressly commanded by the Apostle, Rom. 13. 6. Pay ye Tribute also, for they are God's Ministers attending continually upon this very thing. God has set them apart as Ministers for the common good of the people, and therefore 'tis all justice, they should be maintained and supported by them. And indeed when it is considered, what are the cares and troubles of that high calling, how many thorns are platted in every Crown, we have very little reason to envy them these dues; and it may truly be said, there is none of their poor laboring subjects that earns their living so hardly.

4. Thirdly, We are to pray for them: this is also expressly commanded by the Apostle, 1 Tim. 2. 2. to be done for Kings, and for all that are in authority. The businesses of that calling are so weighty, the dangers and hazards of it so great, that they of all others need prayers for God's direction, assistance, and blessing, and the prayers that are thus poured out for them, will return into our own bosoms, for the blessings they receive from God tend to the good of the people, to their living a quiet and peaceable life, as it is in the close of the verse forementioned.

5. Fourthly, We are to pay them Obedience. This is likewise strictly charged by the Apostle, 1 Peter 2. 13. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, whether it be to the King as Supreme, or unto Governors as those that are sent by him: We owe such an obedience to the supreme power, that whoever is authorized by him, we are to submit to; and S. Paul likewise is most full to this purpose, Romans 13. 1. Let every soul be subject to the higher powers: And again, Ver. 2. Whosoever resisteth the powers, resisteth the Ordinance of God. And 'tis observable that these precepts were given at a time, when those powers were Heathens, and cruel persecutors of Christianity; to show us, that no pretence of the wickedness of our Rulers can free us of this duty. An obedience we must pay either Active or Passive: the Active in the case of all lawful commands; That is, when ever the Magistrate commands something, which is not contrary to some command of God, we are then bound to act according to that command of the Magistrate, to do the things he requires. But when he enjoins anything contrary to what God hath commanded, we are not then to pay him this active obedience; we may, nay we must refuse thus to act, (yet here we must be very well assured that the thing is so contrary, and not pretend conscience for a cloak of stubbornness) we are in that case to obey God rather than man. But even this is a season for the Passive obedience, we must patiently suffer, what he inflicts on us, for such refusal, and not, to secure ourselves, rise up against him. For who can stretch his hand against the Lord's anointed, and be guiltless? says David to Abishai, 1 Samuel 26. 9. and that at a time when David was under a great persecution from Saul, nay, had also the assurance of the Kingdom after him, and St. Paul's sentence in this case is most heavy, Rom. 13. 2. They that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. Here is very small encouragement to any to rise up against the lawful Magistrate, for though they should so far prosper here, as to secure themselves from him by this means, yet there is a King of Kings from whom no power can shelter them, and this damnation in the close will prove a sad prize of their victories. What is on the other side the duty of the Magistrate to the people will be vain to mention here, none of that rank being like to read this Treatise, and it being very useless for the people to inquire, what is the duty of their Supreme, wherein the most are already much better read, than in their own, it may suffice them to know that whatsoever his duty is, or however performed, he is accountable to none but God, and no failing of his part can warrant them to fail of theirs.

6. The second sort of Parents are the spiritual; That is, the Ministers of the Word, whether such, as be Governors in the Church, or others under them, who are to perform the same offices to our Souls, that our natural parents do to our bodies. Thus S. Paul tells the Cointhians, that in Christ Jesus he had begotten them through the Gospel, 1 Cor. 4. 15. and the Galatians, Chap. 4. 19. that he travels in birth of them, till Christ be formed in them: And again, 1 Cor. 3. 2. He had fed them with Milk; that is, such Doctrines as were agreeable to that infant state of Christianity they were then in; but he had stronger meat for them of full age, Heb. 5. 14. All these are the Offices of a Parent, and therefore they that perform them to us, may well be accounted as such.

7. Our duty to these is first to love them, to bear them that kindness, which belongs to those who do us the greatest benefits. This is required by S. Paul, 1 Thess. 5. 13. I beseech you, brethren, mark them which labor among you, and are over you, in the Lord, and admonish you, and esteem them very highly in love for their works sake. The work is such as ought in all reason to procure them love, it being of the highest advantage to us.

8. Secondly, 'Tis our duty to value and esteem them, as we see in the text now mentioned, and surely this is most reasonable, if we consider either the nature of their work, or who it is that employs them. The nature of their work is of all others the most excellent; we use to value other professions proportionably to the dignity and worth of the things they deal in. Now surely there is no Merchandize of equal worth with a Soul, and this is their Traffick, rescuing precious Souls from perdition. And if we consider further, who it is that employs them, it yet adds to the reverence due to them. They are Ambassadors for Christ, 2 Cor. 5. 20. and Ambassadors are by the Laws of all Nations to be used with a respect, answerable to the quality of those that send them. Therefore Christ tells his disciples, when he sends them out to preach, He that despiseth you despiseth me, and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me. Luke 10. 16. It seems there is more depends on the despising of Ministers, then men ordinarily consider, 'tis the despising of God and Christ both. Let those think of this, who make it their pastime, and sport to affront, and deride this calling. And let those also, who dare presume to exercise the Offices of it, without being lawfully called to it, which is a most high presumption; 'Tis as if a man on his own head should go, as an Ambassador from his Prince; the Apostle says of the Priests of the Law, which yet are inferior to those of the Gospel, That no man taketh this honor to himself, but he which was called of God. Heb. 5. 4. How shall then any man dare to assume this greater honor to himself, that is not called to it; Neither will it suffice to say, they have the inward call of the spirit; for since God hath established an order in the Church, for the admitting men to this Office, they that shall take it upon them without that authority, resist that ordinance, and are but of the number of those thieves and robbers, as our Savior speaks, John 10. which come not in by the door. Besides the sad experience of these times show, that many who pretend most to this inward call of the spirit, are called by some other spirit, then that of God, the doctrines they vent, being usually directly contrary to that word of his, on which all true Doctrines must be founded. Such are to be looked on as those seducers, those false prophets, whereof we are so often warned in the Epistles of the Apostles. And whosoever countenances them, or follows them, partakes with them in their guilt. It is recorded of Jeroboam, as a crying sin, that he made of the manest of the people priests; that is, such as had by God's institution no right to it, and whoever hearkens to these uncalled preachers runs into that very sin, for without the encouragement of being followed, they would not long continue in the course, and therefore they that give them that encouragement, have much to answer for and are certainly guilty of the sin of despising their true Pastors, when they shall thus set up these false apostles against them. This is a guilt this age is too much concerned in, God in his mercy so timely convince us of it, as may put a stop to that confusion and impiety, which breaks in so fast upon us by it.

9. Thirdly, We owe to them maintenance: but of this I have spoken already in the first part of this Book, and shall not here repeat. Fourthly, We owe them obedience, Obey them, saith the Apostle, that have the rule over you and submit yourselves, for they watch for your Souls, Heb. 13. 17. This obedience is to be paid them in spiritual things; that is, whatsoever they out of God's word shall declare to us, to be God's Commands, these we are diligently to obey, remembering that it is not they, but God requires it, according to that of Christ, he that heareth you, heareth me, Luke 10. 16. And this whether it be delivered by the way of public preaching, or private exhortation, for in both, so long as they keep them to the rule, which is God's Word, they are the Messengers of the Lord of Hosts. Mal. 2. 7. This obedience the Apostle enforceth from a double motive, one taken from their Ministry, another from themselves. They watch, says he, for your Souls, as they that must give an account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief; The people are by their obedience to enable their Pastors to give a comfortable account of their Souls, and it is a most unkind return of all their care and labors; to be put to grieve for the ill success of them. But then in the second place, 'tis their own concernment also; they may put their Ministers to the discomfort of seeing all their pains cast away, but themselves are like to get little by it, that (says the Apostle, Heb. 13. 17.) will be unprofitable for you; 'tis yourselves, that will finally prove the losers by it, you lose all those glorious rewards, which are offered, as the crown of this obedience, you get nothing but an addition to your sin and punishment, for as our Savior tells the Pharisees, If he had not come and spoken to them they had not had sin, John 15. 24. that is, in comparison with what they then had; so certainly they that never had the Gospel preached to them, are much more innocent than they that have heard and resisted it. And for the punishment, what Christ told those to whom he had preached, That it should be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, which were Heathen Cities, than for them, the same undoubtedly we may conclude of ourselves.

10. Lastly, We are to pray for them; This S. Paul everywhere requires of his Spiritual children; thus Eph. 6. 7, 8. having commanded prayer for all Saints, he adds, And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the Gospel; and so again, Col. 4. 3. And this remains still a duty to these Spiritual Fathers, to pray for such assistances of God's Spirit to them, as may enable them rightly to discharge that Holy Calling. I shall omit to set down here, what is the duty of Ministers to the people, upon the same consideration, on which I forbore to mention the duty of Magistrates.

11. The third sort of parent is the natural, the fathers of our flesh, as the Apostle calls them, Heb. 12. 9. And to these we owe several duties, as first we owe them reverence, and respect; we must behave ourselves towards them with all humility, and observance, and must not upon any pretence of infirmity in them, despise or contemn them, either in outward behavior, or so much as inwardly in our hearts. If indeed they have infirmities, it must be our business to cover, and conceal them; like Shem and Japheth, who while cursed Cham published and disclosed the nakedness of their father, covered it, Gen. 9. 23. and that in such a manner too, as even themselves might not behold it. We are as much as may be to keep ourselves from looking on those nakednesses of our parents, which may tempt us to think irreverently of them. This is very contrary to the practice of too many children, who do not only publish and deride the infirmities of their Parents, but pretend they have those infirmities they have not; there is ordinarily such a pride, and headiness in youth, that they cannot abide to submit to the counsels, and directions of their Elders, and therefore to shake them off, are willing to have them pass for the effects of dotage, when they are indeed the fruits of sobriety, and experience. To such the exhortation of Solomon is very necessary, Prov. 23. 22. Hearken to thy father that begat thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old. A multitude of texts more there are in that book to this purpose, which shows that the wisest of men thought it necessary for children to attend to the counsel of their parents. But the youth of our Age set up for wisdom, the quite contrary way, and think they then become wits, when they are advanced to the despising the counsel, yea mocking the persons of their parents. Let such if they will not practice the exhortations, yet remember the threatening of the wise man, Pro. 30. 17. The eye that mocketh his father and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young Eagles shall eat it.

A second duty to them is love; we are to bear them a real kindness, such as may make us heartily desirous of all manner of good to them, and abhor to do anything that may grieve or disquiet them. This will appear but common gratitude; when 'tis remembered, what our parents have done for us, how they were not only the instruments of first bringing us into the world, but also of sustaining and supporting us after; and certainly they that rightly weigh the cares and fears, that go to the bringing up of a child, will judge the love of that child to be but a moderate return for them. This love is to be expressed several ways, first, in all kindness of behavior, carrying ourselves not only with an awe, and respect, but with kindness and affection, and therefore most gladly and readily doing those things, which may bring joy and comfort to them, and carefully avoiding whatever may grieve, and afflict them. Secondly, this love is to be expressed in praying for them. The debt a child owes to a parent is so great, that he can never hope himself to discharge it, he is therefore to call in God's aid, to beg of him, that he will reward all the good, his parents have done for him, by multiplying his blessings upon them; what shall we then say to those children, that instead of calling to heaven for blessings on their parents, ransack hell for curses on them, and pour out the blackest execrations against them? This is a thing so horrid, that one would think there needed no persuasion against it, because none could be so vile, as to fall into it, but we see God himself, who best knows men's hearts, saw it possible; and therefore laid the heaviest punishment upon it: He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death, Exod 21. 17 And alas! our daily experience tells us, 'tis not only possible, but common even this of uttering curses But 'tis to be feared, there is another, yet more common, that is the wishing curses, though fear or shame keep them from speaking out. How many children are there, that either through impatience of the Government, or greediness of the possessions of the Parents, have wisht their deaths? But whoever doth so let him remember, that how sly and fairly soever he carry it before men, there is one that sees those secretest wishes of his heart, and in his sight he assuredly passes for this heinous offender, a curser of his Parents. And then let it be considered, that God hath as well the power of punishing, as of seeing, and therefore since he hath pronounced death to be the reward of that sin 'tis not unreasonable to expect he may himself inflict it; that they who watch for the death of their Parents, may untimely meet with their own. The fifth Commandment promiseth long life as the reward of honoring the Parent, to which 'tis very agreeable that untimely death be the punishment of the contrary, and sure there is nothing more highly contrary to that duty, then this we are now speaking of, the cursing our Parents.

14. The third duty we owe to them is Obedience; This is not only contained in the fifth Commandment, but expressly enjoined in other places of Scripture. Ephes. 6. 1. Children obey your Parents in the Lord, for this is right; and again, Col. 3. 20. Children obey your Parents in all things, for this is well-pleasing to the Lord. We owe them an obedience in all things, unless where their commands are contrary to the commands of God, for in that case our duty to God must be preferred, and therefore if any Parent shall be so wicked, as to require his child to steal, to lie, or to do any unlawful thing, the child then offends not against his duty, though he disobey that command, nay, he must disobey, or else he offends against a higher duty, even that he owes to God, his Heavenly Father. Yet when 'tis thus necessary to refuse obedience, he should take care to do it in such a modest, and respectful manner that it may appear 'tis conscience only, and not stubbornness moves him to it. But in case of all lawful commands; that is, when the thing commanded is either good, or not evil, when it hath nothing in it contrary to our duty to God, there the child is bound to obey, be the command in a weightier or lighter matter; How little this duty is regarded is too manifest everywhere in the world, where Parents generally have their children no longer under command, then they are under the rod; when they are once grown up, they think themselves free from all obedience to them; or if some do continue to pay it, yet let the motive of it be examined, and 'twill in too many be found only Worldly Prudence; They fear to displease their Parents, lest they should shorten their hand toward them, and so they shall lose somewhat by it; but how few are there that obey purely upon conscience of duty? This Sin of Disobedience to Parents was by the Law of Moses punishable with death, as you may read Deut. 21. 18. but if Parents now a days should proceed so with their children, many might soon make themselves childless.

15. But of all the acts of disobedience, that of marrying against the consent of the Parent, is one of the highest. Children are so much the goods, the Possessions of the Parent, that they cannot without a kind of theft, give away themselves without the allowance of those, that have the right in them; and therefore we see under the Law, the Maid that had made any vow, was not suffered to perform it, without the Consent of the Parent. Numb. 30. 5. the right of the Parent was thought of force enough to cancel, and make void the Obligation, even of a vow, and therefore surely it ought to be so much considered by us as to keep us from making any such, whereby that right is infringed.

16. A fourth duty to the Parent is to assist, and minister to them in all their wants of what kind soever, whether weakness, and sickness of body, decayedness of understanding, or poverty, and lowness in estate; in all these the child is bound according to his ability, to relieve and assist them: for the two former, weakness of body, and infirmity of mind, none can doubt of the duty, when they remember how every child did in his infancy receive the very same benefit from the Parent, the child had then no strength to support, no understanding to guide itself; the care of the Parents was fain to supply both these to it, and therefore in common gratitude, whenever either of these becomes the Parents case, as sometimes by great age, or some accident both do, the child is to perform the same offices back again to them. As for that of Relieving their poverty, there is the very same Obligation to that with the former, it being but just to sustain thy Parent who has formerly sustained thee: but besides this, Christ himself teaches us, that this is contained within the precept of honoring their Parents; for when Mar. 7. 13. he accuses the Pharisees of rejecting the Commandment of God, to cleave to their own traditions, he instances in this particular, concerning the relieving of Parents, whereby 'tis manifest that this is a part of that duty which is enjoined in the fifth Commandment, as you may see at large in the Text, and such a duty it is that no pretence can absolve, or acquit us of it. How then shall those answer it, that deny relief to their poor Parents, that cannot part with their own excesses, and superfluities, which are indeed their sins, to satisfy the necessities of those to whom they owe their being? Na, some there are yet worse, who out of pride scorn to own their parents in their poverty: Thus it often happens, when the Child is advanced to dignity or wealth, they think it a disparagement to them to look on their Parents that remain in a low condition, it being the betraying, as they think, to the world the meanness of their birth, and so the poor Parent fares the worse for the prosperity of his child. This is such a pride and unnaturalness together, as will surely find a sharp vengeance from God; for if Solomon observe of Pride alone, that it is the fore-runner of destruction, Prov. 16. 18. we may much rather conclude so of it, when it is thus accompanied.

17. To this that hath been said of the duty of Children to their Parents, I shall add only this; That no unkindness, no fault of the Parent, can acquit the child of this duty; but as S. Peter tells servants, 1 Peter 2. 18. that they must be subject not only to the good and gentle Masters, but also to the froward; so certainly it belongs to children to perform duty not only to the kind and virtuous, but even to the *harshes*t, and wicked'st Parent. For though the gratitude due to a kind Parent, be a very forcible motive to make the child pay his duty, yet that is not the only nor chiefest ground of it; That is laid in the Command of God, who requires us thus to honor our Parents, and therefore though we should suppose a Parent so unnatural, as never to have done anything to oblige the child, (which can hardly be imagined) yet still the Command of God continues in force, and we are in conscience of that, to perform that duty to our Parents, though none of the other tie of gratitude, should lie on us.

But as this is due from the child to the Parents, so on the other side there are other things also due from the Parents to the Child, and that throughout the several states and Ages of it.

18. First, There is the care of nourishing and sustaining it, which begins from the very birth, and continues a duty from the Parent, till the child be able to perform it to himself; This is a duty, which nature teaches, even the savage beasts, have a great care and tenderness in nourishing their young, and therefore may serve to reproach and condemn all Parents, who shall be so unnatural as to neglect this. I shall not here enter into the question, Whether the Mother be obliged to give the Child its first nourishment, by giving it Suck herself, because 'twill not be possible to affirm universally in the Case, there being many circumstances, which may alter it, and make it not only lawful, but best not to do it; all I shall say, is, that where no impediment of sickness, weakness, or the like does happen, 'tis surely best for the Mother herself to perform this office, there being many advantages to the child by it, which a good Mother ought so far to consider, as not to sell them to her own sloth, or niceness, or any such unworthy motive; for where such only are the grounds of bearing it, they will never be able to justify the omission, they being themselves unjustifiable.

But besides this first care, which belongs to the body of the child, there is another, which should begin near as early, which belongs to their Souls, and that is the bringing them to the Sacrament of Baptism, thereby to procure them an early right to all those precious advantages, which that Sacrament conveys to them. This is a duty the Parents ought not to delay, it being most reasonable, that they who have been instruments to convey the stain and pollution of sin to the poor Infant, should be very earnest and industrious to have it washed off, as soon as may be: Besides the life of so tender a creature is but a blast, and many times gone in a moment; and though we are not to despair of God's mercy to those poor children, who die without Baptism, yet surely those Parents commit a great fault, by whose neglect it is, that they want it.

19. Secondly, The Parents must provide for the education of the child; they must, as Solomon speaks, Proverbs 22. 6. Train up the child in the way he should go. As soon therefore as children come to the use of reason, they are to be instructed, and that first in those things, which concern their eternal wellbeing they are by little and little to be taught all those things which God hath commanded them, as their duty to perform; as also what glorious rewards he hath provided for them, if they do it, and what grievous and eternal punishments, if they do it not. These things ought as early, as is possible, to be instilled into the minds of children, which (like new vessels) do usually keep the favor of that which is first put into them; and therefore it nearly concerns all Parents to look they be at first thus seasoned with Virtue and Religion. 'Tis sure if this be neglected, there is one ready at hand to fill them with the contrary, the Devil will be diligent enough to instill into them all wickedness and vice, even from their cradles, and there being also in all our natures so much the greater aptness to evil, then to good, there is need of great care and watchfulness, to prevent those endeavors of that enemy of Souls, which can no way be, but by possessing them at first with good things, breeding in them a love to virtue, and a hatred of vice; that so when the temptations come, they may be armed against them. This surely is above all things the duty of Parents to look after, and the neglect of it is a horrible cruelty; We justly look upon those Parents, as most unnatural wretches, that take away the life of their child; but alas! that is mercy and tenderness, compared to this of neglecting his education, for by that he ruins his Soul, makes him miserable eternally; and God knows multitudes of such cruel Parents there are in the world, that thus give up their children to be possessed by the Devil, for want of an early acquainting them with the ways of God; nay, indeed how few there are that do conscionably perform this duty, is too apparent by the strange rudeness and ignorance that is generally among youth: the children of those who call themselves Christians, being frequently as ignorant of God and Christ as the meerest Heathens. But whoever they are, that thus neglect this great duty, let them know that it is not only a fearful misery they bring upon their poor children, but also a horrible guilt upon themselves. For as God says to the careless watchmen, Ezek. 3. 18. That if any soul perish by his negligence, that soul shall be required at his hands; so surely will it fare with all Parents, who have this office of watchmen entrusted to them by God over their own children. A second part of education is the bringing them up to some employment, busying them in some honest exercise, whereby they may avoid that great snare of the Devil, Idleness, and also be taught some useful Art or Trade, whereby when they come to age, they may become profitable to the Commonwealth, and able to get an honest living to themselves.

20. To this great duty of Educating of Children, there is required as means, first, Encouragement; secondly, Correction: Encouragement, is first to be tried, we should endeavor to make children in love with duty, by offering them rewards and invitations, and when ever they do well take notice of it, and encourage them to go on. It is an ill course some parents hold, who think they must never appear to their children but with a face of sowreness and austerity; this seems to be that, which S. Paul forewarns Parents of, when he bids fathers not to provoke their children to wrath, Col. 3. 21. To be as harsh and unkind to them, when they do well, as if they do ill, is the way to provoke them; and then the Apostle tells us in the same verse, what will be the issue of it, they will be discouraged, they will have no heart to go on in any good course, when the Parent affords them no countenance. The second means is correction, and this becomes seasonable, when the former will do no good, when all fair means, persuasions, and encouragements prevail not, then there is a necessity of using sharper; and let that be first tried in words, I mean not by railing and foul language, but in sober, yet sharp reproof; but if that fail too, then proceed to blows; and in this case as Solomon says, He that spareth his rod, hateth his son, Prov. 13. 24. 'Tis a cruel fondness, that to spare a few stripes at present, will adventure him to those sad mischiefs, which commonly befall the child, that is left to himself. But then this correction must be given in such a manner, as may be likely to do good; to which purpose it must first be given timely; the child must not be suffered to run on in any ill, till it have got a habit, and a stubbornness too. This is a great error in many Parents, they will let their children alone for divers years, to do what they list, permit them to lie, to steal, without ever so much as rebuking them, nay, perhaps please themselves to see the witty shifts of the child, and think it matters not what they do while they are little: But alas! all that while the vice gets root, and that many times so deep a one, that all they can do afterwards, whether by words or blows, can never pluck it up. Secondly, Correction must be moderate, not exceeding the quality of the fault, nor the tenderness of the child. Thirdly, it must not be given in rage, if it be, it will not only be in danger of being immoderate, but it will lose its effect upon the child, who will think he is corrected, not because he has done a fault, but because his Parent is angry, and so will rather blame the Parent than himself, whereas on the contrary care should be taken to make the child as sensible of the fault, as of the smart, without which he will never be thoroughly amended.

21. Thirdly, after children are grown up, and are past the age of education, there are yet other offices for the Parent to perform to them; the Parent is still to Watch over them, in respect of their souls, to observe how they practice those precepts which are given them in their education, and accordingly to exhort, encourage, or reprove, as they find occasion.

22. So also for their outward estate, they are to put them into some course of living in the world; if God have blest the Parents with wealth, according to what he hath, he must distribute to his children, remembering that since he was the instrument of bringing them into the world, he is according to his ability to provide for their comfortably living in it, they are therefore to be looked on as very unnatural parents, who, so they may have enough to spend in their own riots, and excess care not what becomes of their children, never think of providing for them. Another fault is usual among Parents in this business; they defer all the provisions for them, till themselves be dead, heap up perhaps great matters for them against that time, but in the mean time afford them not such a competency, as may enable them to live in the world. There are several mischiefs come from this: First, it lessens the child's affection to his parent, nay, sometimes it proceeds so far, as to make him wish his death, which though it be such a fault, as no temptation can excuse in a child, yet 'tis also a great fault in a Parent, to give that temptation. Secondly, it puts the child upon shifts and tricks; many times dishonest ones, to supply his necessities; this is, I doubt not a common effect of it, the hardness of Parents has often put men upon very unlawful courses, which when they are once acquainted with, perhaps they never leave, though the first occasion cease; and therefore Parents ought to beware how they run them upon those hazards. Besides the Parents loses that contentment, which he might have in seeing his children live prosperously and comfortably, which none but an arrant Earth Worm would exchange for the vain imaginary pleasure of having money in his chest. But in this business of providing for children, there is yet another thing to be heeded, and that is, that the Parent get that wealth honestly, which he makes their portion; else 'tis very far from being a provision, there is such a curse goes along with an ill-gotten estate, that he that leaves such a one to his child, doth but cheat and deceive him, makes him believe he has left him wealth, but has withal put such a canker in the bowels of it, that is sure to eat it out. This is so common an observation, that I need say nothing to confirm the truth of it; would God it were as generally laid to heart, as it seems to be generally taken notice of: Then surely Parents would not account it a reasonable motive to unjust dealing, that they may thereby provide for their children, for this is not a way of providing for them; nay, 'tis the way to spoil them of whatever they have lawfully gathered for them, the least mite of unlawful gain being of the nature of leaven, which sours the whole lump, bringing down curses upon all a man possesseth. Let all Parents therefore satisfy themselves with such provisions for their children as God shall enable them honestly to make, assuring themselves how little soever it be, 'tis a better portion than the greatest wealth unjustly gotten, according to that of Solomon, Prov. 16. 8. Better is a little with righteousness, then great revenues without right.

23. A fourth thing the Parent owes to the child is Good Example, he is not only to set him rules of virtue, and godliness; but he must himself give him a pattern in his own practice, we see the force of example is infinitely beyond that of precept, especially where the person is one, to whom we bear a reverence, or with whom we have a continual conversation; both which usually meet in a Parent. It is therefore a most necessary care in all Parents to behave themselves so before their children that their example may be a means of winning them to virtue; But alas! this age affords little of this care, nay, so far 'tis from it, that there are none more frequently the instruments of corrupting children, than their own Parents. And indeed how can it be otherwise, while men give themselves liberty to all wickedness, 'tis not to be hoped, but that the children which observe it, will imitate it; the child that sees his father drunk, will sure think, he may be so too, as well as his father. So he that hears him swear, will do the like, and so for all other vices, and if any Parent that is thus wicked himself, should happen to have so much more care of his child's Soul, than his own; as to forbid him the things which himself practices, or correct him for the doing them; 'tis certain the child will account this a great injustice in his father, to punish him for that which himself freely does and so he is never likely to be wrought upon by it. This consideration lays a most strict tie upon all Parents, to live Christianly, for otherwise they do not only hazard their own Souls, but those of their children also, and as it were purchase an estate of inheritance in Hell.

24. A fifth duty of Parents is blessing their children; the way of doing that is double, first, by their prayer; they are by daily and earnest prayers to commend them to God's protection and blessing, both for their spiritual and temporal estate; and secondly by their piety they are to be such persons themselves as that a blessing may descend from them upon their posterity. This is often promised in Scriptures to godly men, that their seed shall be blessed.

Thus in the second commandment, God promises to show mercy to the thousand generation of them that love him and keep his commandments. And it is very observable in the Jews, that though they were a stiff-necked generation, and had very grievously provoked God, yet the godliness of their forefathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, did many times move God to save them from destruction; on the other side, we see that even good men have fared the worse for the iniquities of their fathers, Thus when Josiah had destroyed idolatry, restored God's service, and done good beyond all the Kings that were before him, yet there was an old arrear of Manasseh his grand father, which all this piety of his would not blot out, but he resolves to cast Judah also out of his sight, as you may read at large, 2 Kings 23. If therefore Parents have any bowels, any kindness towards their children, any real desire of their prosperity, let them take care by their own godly life to entail a blessing upon them.

25. Sixthly, Parents must take heed, that they use their power over their children with equity, and moderation, not to oppress them with Unreasonable Commands, only to exercise their own authority, but in all things of weight to consider the real good of their children, and to press them to nothing, which may not consist with that. This is a rule whereof Parents may often have use, but in none greater then in the business of marrying their children, wherein many that otherwise are good Parents, have been to blame, when out of an eagerness of bestowing them wealthily, they force them to marry utterly against their own inclinations, which is a great tyranny, and that which frequently betrays them to a multitude of mischiefs, such as all the wealth in the world cannot repair. There are two things which Parents ought especially to consider in the matching their children; the first, how they may live Christianly, and to that purpose to choose a virtuous and pious person, to link them with; the second is, how they may live cheerfully and comfortably in this world; and to that end though a competency of estate may be necessary to be regarded, yet surely abundance is no way requisite, and therefore that should not be too vehemently sought after; that which much more tends to the happiness of that state, is the mutual kindness, and liking of the parties, without which marriage is of all other the most uncomfortable condition, and therefore no parent ought to thrust a child into it. I have now done with the first sort of Relation, that of a Parent.

PARTITION XV. Of Duty to our Brethren, and Relations. Husband, wife, Friends, Masters, Servants.

§. 1. The second sort of Relation is that of a Brother; now brotherhood may be twofold, either natural, or spiritual the natural may in the largest extent contain under it all mankind, all that partake of the same nature; but I shall not consider it so in this place, having already mentioned those general duties, which belong to all as such. I now speak of that natural brother-hood, that is between those that are the children of the same immediate Parent; and the duty of these is to have united hearts, and affections: This nature points out to them, they partaking in a more especial manner, of each others substance, and therefore ought to have the greatest tenderness and kindness, each to other; thus we see Abraham make it an argument, why there should be no contention between him and Lot, because they were brethren: Gen. 13. 8. And though by brethren there is meant only cousins, yet that helps the more strongly to conclude, that this nearer relation is in reason to be a greater bar to strife, as also that this kindness is in some degree to be extended to all that have any nearness of blood to us.

2. This kindness and Love between Brethren and Sisters ought to be very firmly grounded in their hearts, if it be not, they will be of all others in most danger of disagreeing; for the continual conversation that is among them, whilst they are at home in the fathers house, will be apt to minister some occasion of jar. Besides the equality, that is, among them in respect of birth, often makes them inclinable to envy each other, when one is in any respect advanced above the other. Thus we see Josephs brethren envied him, because he had most of his fathers love, and Rachel envied her sister Leah: because she was fruitful; therefore for the preventing of such temptations, let all who have brethren and sisters, possess their mind with a great and real kindness to them, look on them as parts of themselves, and then they will never think fit either to quarrel with them, or to envy them any advantage, anymore than one part of the body does another of the same body, but will strive to advance & help forward the good of each other.

3. The second kind of Brotherhood is spiritual; that contains all those who profess the same Faith with us: the Church in our Baptism becomes a Mother to each baptized person; and then surely they that have the relation of children to her, must have also the relation of brethren to each other; and to this sort of brethren also we owe a great deal of tenderness and affection; the spiritual bond of Religion should, of all others, the most closely unite our hearts. This is the Brotherhood which S. Peter exhorts us to love, 1 Peter 2. 17. And to it we are in an especial manner bound to do all good offices, Do good, saith the Apostle, to all, but especially to them that are of the household of Faith, Gal. 6. 10. Our compassions are to be most melting towards them of all others, in all their needs; Christ tells us, that whosoever gives but a cup of cold water to any in the name of a Disciple, shall not lose his reward, Mat. 10. 42. From whence we may assure ourselves that this peculiar love to Christians as Christians, is very acceptable in his sight.

4. Several duties there are required of us to these brethren; one principal, is the holding Communion with them, and that first in Doctrine; we are constantly to continue in the belief and profession of all those necessary truths, by which we may be marked out as followers, and Disciples of Christ; this is that faith; which S. Jude speaks of, which was once delivered to the Saints, Jude 3. by keeping whereof we continue still united to this spiritual brotherhood, in respect of profession, which we must constantly do, what storms and persecutions soever attend it, according to the exhortation of the Apostle, Heb. 10. 22. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. Secondly, we are also, as opportunity serves, to communicate with them in all holy offices; we must be diligent in frequenting the assemblies of the Saints, which is as it were the badge of our profession, and therefore he that willingly withdraws himself from these, gives ground to suspect, he will be apt to renounce the other also. But these parts of communion we find strictly maintained by the first Christians, Acts 2. 42. They continued steadfastly in the Apostles doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers: they continued, and that steadfastly, they were not frightened from it by any persecutions, though that were a time wherein they were tried with the sharpest sufferings; which may teach us, that it is not the danger, that attends this duty, can acquit us of it.

5. Secondly, we are to bear with the Infirmities of our Christian brethren, according to the advice of S. Paul, Romans 15. 1. We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak. If one that holds all necessary Christian truths, happen yet to be in some error, we are not for this either to forsake his communion, or despise his person. This S. Paul reaches us in the case of that weak brother, who by error made a causeless scruple about meats, Rom. 14. Where he bids the stronger Christians, that is, those who being better instructed, discerned him to be in an error, yet to receive him nevertheless, and not to despise him; as on the other side, he bids that weak one not to judge the stronger; the lesser differences in opinion must be born with on both sides, and must not in the least abate our brotherly charity towards each other.

6. Thirdly, we are to endeavor the restoring of any fallen brother, that is, to bring him to repentance, after he hath fallen into any sin. Thus St. Paul commands the Galatians, that they should restore him that was overtaken in a fault, considering themselves least they also were tempted. We are not to look on him as a cast-away to give him over as utterly desperate, neither are we to triumph over him, in respect of our own innocence, like the proud Pharisee, over the poor Publican, Luke 18. 11. but we are meekly to endeavor his recovery, remembering that our own frailty is such, that we are not secure from the like falls.

7. Fourthly, We are to have a Sympathy, and fellow feeling with these brethren, to be nearly touched with whatsoever befalls them, either as they are considered in society, or in single persons. In society first, and so they make up a Church, & that either the universal, which is made up of all Believers throughout the world, or any particular Church, which is made up of all the Believers in that particular Nation, and whatever happens to either of these, either the whole Church in general, or any such single part of it, especially that whereof ourselves are members, we are to be much affected and moved with it, to rejoice in all the prosperities, and to mourn and bewail all the breaches and desolations thereof, and daily and earnestly to pray with David, Psal. 51. 18. O be favorable and gracious unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem; and that especially when we see her in distress, and persecution. Whosoever is not thus touched with the condition of the Church, is not to be looked on, as a living member of it; for as in the natural body every member is concerned in the prosperity of the whole, so certainly 'tis here: it was the observation of the Psalmist, that God's servants think upon the stones of Zion, and pity to see her in the dust, Psal. 102. 14. and surely all his servants are still of the same temper, cannot look on the ruins and desolations of the Church, without the greatest sorrow, and lamentation. Secondly, we are to have this fellow feeling with our brethren, considered as single persons; We are to account ourselves concerned in every particular Christian, so as to partake with him in all his occasions either of joy or sorrow. Thus the Apostle exhorts, Rom. 12. 14. Rejoice with them that rejoice, weep with them that weep: And again, 1 Cor. 12. under the similitude of the natural body he urges this duty, Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it. All these several effects of love, we owe to these spiritual brethren. And this love is that, which Christ has made the badge of his Disciples, John 13. 35. By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye have love one to another; so that if we mean not to cast off discipleship to Christ, we must not forsake this love of the brethren.

8. The third relation is that between Husband and Wife. This is yet much nearer then either of the former, as appears by that Text, Ephes. 5. 31. A man shall leave Father and Mother, and cleave to his Wife, and they two shall be one flesh. Several duties there are owing from one of these persons to the other: and first for the Wife, she owes obedience. This is commanded by the Apostle, Col. 3. 18. Wives submit yourselves to your own Husbands, as it is fit in the Lord. They are to render obedience to their Husbands in the Lord, that is in all lawful commands, for otherwise 'tis here, as in the case of all other superiors, God must be obeyed rather than man, and the wife must not upon her husbands command do anything which is forbidden by God. But in all things, which do not cross some command of God's, this precept is of force, and will serve to condemn the peevish stubbornness of many wives, who resist the lawful commands of their husbands, only because they are impatient of this duty of subjection, which God himself requires of them. But it may be here asked, what if the husband command something, which though it be not unlawful, is yet very inconvenient, and imprudent, must the wife submit to such a command? To this I answer, that it will be no disobedience in her, but duty, calmly and mildly to show him the inconveniences thereof, and to persuade him to retract that command; but in case she cannot win him to it by fair entreaties, she must neither try sharp language, nor yet finally refuse to obey, nothing but the unlawfulness of the command being sufficient warrant for that.

9. Secondly, The wife owes Fidelity to the husband, and that of two sorts; first, that of the bed, she must keep herself pure and chaste from all strange embraces, and therefore must not so much as give an ear to any that would allure her, but with the greatest abhorrence reject all motions of that sort, and never give any man that has once made such a motion to her, the least opportunity to make a second. Secondly, She owes him likewise Fidelity in the managing those worldly affairs he commits to her, she must order them so, as may be most to her husbands advantage, and not by deceiving and cozening of him employ his goods to such uses as he allows not of.

10. Thirdly, She owes him Love, and together with that all friendliness and kindness of conversation; she is to endeavor to bring him as much assistance, and comfort of life, as is possible, that so she may answer that special end of the woman's creation, the being a help to her husband, Gen. 2. 13. and this in all conditions, whether health, or sickness, wealth, or poverty, whatsoever estate God by his providence shall cast him into, she must be as much of comfort and support to him, as she can. To this all sullenness, and harshness, all brawling, and unquietness is directly contrary, for that makes the wife the burden, and plague of the man, instead of a help and comfort: And sure if it be a fault to behave ones self so to any person, as hath already been shown, how great must it be to do so to him, to whom the greatest kindness and affection is owing?

11. Nor let such wives think that any faults, or provocations of the husband can justify their frowardness; for they will not, either in respect of religion or discretion. Not in religion, for where God has absolutely commanded a duty to be paid, 'tis not any unworthiness of the person can excuse from it; nor in Discretion; for the worse a husband is, the more need there is for the wife to carry herself with that gentleness and sweetness, that may be most likely to win him. This is the advice S. Peter gave the wives of his time, 1 Peter 3. 1. Likewise ye wives be in subjection to your own husbands, that if any obey not the Word, they may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives. It seems the good behavior of the wives was thought a powerful means to win men from Heathenism to Christianity; and sure it might now a days have some good effects, if women would have but the patience to try it: At the least, 'twould have this, that it would keep some tolerable quiet in Families, whereas on the other side the ill fruits of the wives unquietness are so notorious, that there are few neighbourhoods, but can give some instance of it. How many men are there, that to avoid the noise of a froward wife, have fallen to company keeping, and by that to drunkenness, poverty, and a multitude of mischiefs? Let all wives therefore beware of administering that temptation. But whenever there happens anything, which in kindness to her husband, she is to admonish him of, let it be with that softness, and mildness, that it may appear 'tis love, and not anger, that makes her speak.

12. There are also on the Husbands part several duties. There is first Love, which Saint Paul requires, to be very tender & compassionate towards the wife, as appears by the similitudes he useth in that matter, Ephes. 5. The one that of the love a man bears to his natural body, No man, says he, Verse 27. ever hated his own flesh, but nourisheth it, and cherisheth it. The other love is that Christ bears to his Church, which is far greater, verse 26. both which he sets as patterns for this love of Husbands towards their Wives. This utterly forbids all harshness and roughness to them; Men are to use them as parts of themselves, to love them as their own bodies, and therefore to do nothing that may be hurtful, and grievous to them, no more then they would cut, and gash their own flesh. Let those husbands that tyrannize over their wives, that scarce use them like human creatures, consider, whether that be to love them, as their own bodies.

13. A second duty of the Husband, is Faithfulness to the bed. This is by God as well required of the husband, as the wife, and though the world do seem to look on the breach of this duty, with less abhorrence in the husband, yet sure before that Just Judge, the offense, will appear no less on the man's side, then the woman's. This is certain, 'tis in both a breach of the vow, made to each other, at their Marriage, and so besides the uncleanness, a down-right perjury, and those differences in the case, which seem to cast the scale, are rather in respect of civil and worldly consideration, then merely of the sin.

14. A third duty of the Husband is to maintain and provide for the Wife. He is to let her partake with him in those outward good things, wherewith God hath blest him, and neither by niggardliness debar her of what is fit for her, nor yet by unthriftiness so waste his goods, that he shall become unable to support her. This is certainly the duty of the husband, who being, as hath been said, to account his wife as a part of his own body, must have the very same care to sustain her, that he hath for himself. Yet this is not so to be understood, as to excuse the wife from her part of labor and industry, when that is requisite, it being unreasonable the husband should toil to maintain the wife in idleness.

15. Fourthly, The husband is to instruct the wife, in the things which concern her eternal welfare, if she be ignorant of them. Thus St. Paul bids the wives learn of their husbands at home, 1 Cor. 14. 36. which supposes, that the husband is to teach her. Indeed it belongs to every Master of a Family to endeavor that all under his charge be taught all necessary things of this kind, and then sure more especially his wife, who is so much nearer to him, than all the rest. This should make men careful to get knowledge themselves, that so they may be able to perform this duty they owe to others.

16. Lastly, Husbands and Wives, are mutually to pray each for other, to beg all blessings from God both spiritual and temporal, and to endeavor all they can to do all good to one another, especially all good to each others Souls, by stirring up to the performance of duty, and dissuading and drawing back from all sin, and by being like true yoke-fellows, helpful and assistant to each other in the doing of all sorts of good, both to their own Family, and all others within their reach. This is of all other the truest and most valuable love. Nay, indeed how can it be said they do love at all, who can contentedly let each other run on in a course that will bring them to eternal misery? And if the love of husbands and wives were thus grounded in Virtue and Religion, 'twould make their lives a kind of Heaven on earth, 'twould prevent all those contentions, and brawlings, so common among them, which are the great plagues of Families, and a lesser Hell, in passage to the greater; and truly where it is not thus founded, there is little comfort to be expected in marriage.

17. It should therefore be the care of every one that means to enter upon that state, to consider advisedly before hand, and to choose such a person with whom they may have this spiritual friendship, that is such a one, as truly fears God. There are many false ends of Marriage looked upon in the world: some marry for Wealth, others for Beauty, and generally they are only worldly respects, that are at all considered; but certainly he that would Marry as he ought, should contrive to make his Marriage useful to those better ends, of serving God, and saving his own Soul; at least he must be sure it be no hindrance to them, and to that purpose the virtue of the person chosen is more conducing than all the wealth in the world, though I deny not, but that a competency of that may likewise be considered.

18. But above all things, let all take heed, that they make not such marriages, as may not only be ill in their effects, but are actual sins at the time; such are the marriages of those that were formerly promised to some other, in which case 'tis sure they rightly belong to those, to whom they past the first promise, and then for any other to marry them, during the life of that person, is to take the husband or wife of that other, which is direct adultery, as S. Paul tells us, Rom. 7. 3. The like unlawfulness there is also in the marriage of those, who are within those degrees of kindred forbidden by God, the particulars whereof are set down in the 18. and 20. of Lev. and whoever marries any that is within any of those degrees of nearness, either to himself, or to his deceased wife, which is as bad, commits that great sin of Incest, and so long as he continues to live with such his unlawful wife, remains in that fearful guilt. This wariness in the choice of the person to be married, would prevent many sad effects, which we daily see follow such rash or unlawful matches; it were well therefore if people would look on marriage, as our Church advises, as a thing not to be undertaken lightly, unadvisedly, or wantonly, to satisfy men's carnal lusts and appetites, but reverently, discreetly, advisedly, soberly, and in the fear of God; and in so doing no doubt a blessing would follow, which otherwise there is little ground to expect. I have now done with this Relation between Husband and Wife.

19. The next is that between Friends; and this Relation if it be rightly founded, it is of great nearness and usefulness, but there is none more generally mistaken in the world; men usually call them their friends, with whom they have an intimacy, and frequency of conversation, though that intimacy be indeed nothing but an agreement and combination in sin. The Drunkard thinks him his friend that will keep him company, the Deceitful person, him that will aid him in his cheats, the Proud man him that will flatter him: And so generally in all vices, they are looked on as friends, that advance and further us in them. But God knows this is far from friendship; such a friend as this the Devil himself is in the highest degree, who is never backward in such offices. The true friendship is that of a direct contrary making; 'tis a concurrence and agreement in virtue, not in vice: in short, a true friend loves his friend so, that he is very zealous of his good; and certainly he that is really so, will never be the instrument of bringing him to the greatest evil. The general duty of a Friend then must be resolved to be the industrious pursuit of his friends real advantages, in which there are several particulas contained.

20. As first, faithfulness in all trusts committed to him by his friend, whether that of goods or secrets; he that betrays the trust of a friend in either, is by all men looked upon with abhorrence, it being one of the highest falsenesses and treacheries, and for such treacherous wounds the Wise man tells us, Every friend will depart, Eccles. 22. 22.

21. Secondly, 'tis the duty of a Friend to be assisting to his friend in all his outward needs; to counsel him, when he wants advice; to cheer him, when he needs comfort; to give him, when he wants relief; and to endeavor his rescue out of any trouble or danger. An admirable example we have of this friendship in Jonathan to David, he loved him as his own soul; and we see he not only contrives for his safety when he was in danger, but runs hazards himself to rescue and deliver his friend, draws his fathers anger upon him, to turn it from David, as you may read at large, 1 Sam. 30.

22. The third and highest duty of a friend is to be aiding and assisting to the soul of his friend, to endeavor to advance that in piety and virtue, by all means within his power, by exhortations and encouragements to all virtue by earnest and vehement disswasions from all sin, and not only thus in general, but by applying to his particular wants, especially by plain and friendly reproofs, where he knows or reasonably believes there is any fault committed. This is of all others the most peculiar duty of a friend, it being indeed that which none else is qualified for. Such an unwillingness there is in most men to hear of their faults, that those that undertake that work, had need have a great prepossession of their hearts, to make them patient of it: Nay, it is so generally acknowledged to be the proper work of a friend, that if he omit it, he betrays the offender into security, his not reproofing will be apt to make the other think he does nothing worthy of reproof, and so he tacitly acts that basest part of a flatterer, sooths and cherishes him in his sin; when yet farther it is considered how great need all men have at some time or other, of being admonished, 'twill appear a most unfriendly, yea cruel thing to omit it; we have that natural partiality to ourselves, that we cannot so readily discern our own miscarriages, as we do other men's, and therefore 'tis very necessary they should sometimes be shown us by those, who see them more clearly; and the doing this at the first may prevent the multiplying of more: whereas if we be suffered to go unreprieved, it often comes to such a habit that reproofs will do no good. And then how shall that person be able to answer it either to God or himself, that has by his silence betrayed his friend to this greatest mischief. 'Tis the expression of God himself speaking of a friend, thy friend which is as thine own soul, Deut. 13. 6. And sure we should in this respect account our friends as our own souls, by having the same jealous tenderness and watchfulness over their souls, which we ought to have of our own. It will therefore be very fit for all that have entered any strict friendship, to make this one special article in the agreement, that they shall mutually admonish and reprove each other; by which means it will become such an avowed part of their friendship, that it can never be mistaken by the reprov'd party for censoriousness or unkindness.

23. Fourthly, To these several parts of kindness must be added that of Prayer, we must not only assist our friends, ourselves, in what we can, but we must call in the Almighty aid to them, recommending them earnestly to God for all his blessings, both temporal & spiritual.

24. Lastly, We must be Constant in our Friendships, and not out of a Lightness of humor grow weary of a friend, only because we have had him long. This is great injustice to him, who if he have behaved himself well, ought the more to be valued, by how much the longer he has continued to do so: And it is great folly in ourselves, for it is the casting away the greatest treasure of human life, for such certainly is a tried friend. The wisest of men gives warning of it, Prov. 27. 16. Thine own friend and thy fathers friend forsake not. Nay farther 'tis not every light offense of a friend, that should make thee renounce his friendship, there must be some allowance made to the infirmities of men, and if thou hast occasion to pardon him somewhat today, perhaps thou mayest give him opportunity to requite thee tomorrow; therefore nothing but unfaithfulness, or incorrigible vice should break this band.

25. The last relation is that between Masters and Servants, both which owe duty to each other: That of the Servant is first obedience to all lawful commands; this is expressly required by the Apostle, Ephes. 6. 6. Servants obey in all things your Masters, &c. And this obedience must not be a grumbling and unwilling one, but ready and cheerful, as he there proceeds to exhort, ver. 7. with good will doing service; and to help them herein, they are to consider that it is to the Lord, and not unto men; God has commanded servants thus to obey their Masters; and therefore the obedience they pay is to God, which may well make them do it cheerfully, how harsh, or unworthy soever the Master be, especially if what the Apostle farther urgeth, ver. 8. be considered that there is a reward to be expected from God for it.

26. The second duty of the Servant is faithfulness, and that may be of two sorts; one as opposed to eye-service, the other to purloining or defrauding. The first part of faithfulness is the doing of all true service to his Master, not only when his eye is over him, and he expects punishment for the omission, but at all times, even when his Master is not likely to discern his failing, and that servant that doth not make conscience of this, is far from being a faithful servant; this eye service being by the Apostle set opposite to that singleness of heart, which he requires of servants, Eph. 6. 5. The second sort of faithfulness consists in the honest managery of all things entrusted to him by his Master, the not wasting his goods (as the unust Steward was accused to have done, Luk. 16.) whether by careless embezzelling of them, or by converting any of them to his own use without the allowance of his Master. This latter is that purloining of which the Apostle warns servants, Tit. 2. 10. And is indeed no better then arrant theft; of this kind are all those ways, that the servant hath of gaining to himself by the loss and damage of his Master, as the being bribed to make ill bargains for him, and many the like: Nay, indeed this sort of unfaithfulness is worse then common theft, by how much there is a greater trust reposed, the betraying whereof adds to the crime. As for the other sort of unfaithfulness, that of wasting, though without gain to themselves, it differs not much in effect from this, the Master may lose as much by the one as by the other, and then what odds is it to him, whether he be robbed by the covetousness or negligence of his servant, and it is still the same breach of trust with the former, for every Master is supposed to intrust his affairs as well to the care as the honesty of his servant: for 'twould be little advantage to the Master to be secured that his servant would not himself cheat him, whilst in the mean time he would by his carelessness give opportunity to others to do it; therefore he that does not carefully look to his Masters profit, deceives his trust, as well as he that unjustly provides for his own.

27. A third duty of a servant is patience and meekness under the reproofs of his Master, not answering again, as the Apostle exhorts, Tit. 2. 9. That is, not making such surly and rude replies, as may increase the Masters displeasure: A thing too frequent among servants, even in the justest reprehensions, whereas S. Peter directs them patiently to suffer even the most undeserved correction, even when they do well and suffer for it, 1 Pet. 2. 20. But the patient suffering of rebuke is not all that is required of servants in this matter, they must also mend the fault they are rebuked for, and not think they have done enough, when they have (though never so dutifully) given the Master the hearing.

28. A fourth duty of a servant is diligence; he must constantly attend to all those things, which are the duties of his place, and not give himself to idleness, and sloth, nor yet to company keeping, gaming, or any other disorderly course, which may take him off from his Masters business. All these are necessary duties of a servant, which they are carefully and conscionably to perform, not so much to escape the Masters anger as God's, who will certainly call everyone of them to an account, how they have behaved themselves towards their earthly Masters.

29. Now on the other side, there are some things also owing from the Masters to their servants: As first the Master is bound to be just to them, in performing those conditions, on which they were hired, such are commonly the giving them food and wages, and that Master that with holds these, is an oppressor.

30. Secondly, The Master is to admonish and reprove the servant in case of fault, and that not only in faults against them; wherein few Masters are backward, but also and more especially in faults against God, whereat every Master ought to be more troubled then at those which tend only to his own loss, or inconvenience; the dishonor of God and the hazard of the meanest man's soul, being infinitely more worthy our disquiet, then anything of the other kind can be. And therefore when Masters are presently on sire for any little negligence or fault of a servant towards themselves, and yet can without trouble see them run into the greatest sins against God, 'tis a sign they consider their own concernments too much, and God's glory and their servants souls too little. This is too commonly the temper of Masters, they are generally careless how their servants behave themselves towards God, how disordered and profane their families are, and therefore never bestow any exhortation, or admonition, to persuade them to virtue, or draw them from vice; such Masters forget that they must one day give an account how they have governed their families. It is certainly the duty of every Ruler to endeavor to advance piety and godliness among all those that are under his charge, and that as well in this lesser dominion of a family, as in the greater of a Realm or Nation. Of this David was so careful, that we see he professes, Psal. 101 7. That no deceitful person should dwell in his house, that he that told lies should not tarry in his sight; so much he thought himself bound to provide that his family might be a kind of Church, an Assembly of godly upright persons: And if all Masters would endeavor to have theirs so, they would beside the eternal reward of it hereafter, find a present benefit by it, their worldly business would thrive much the better; for if their servants were brought to make conscience of their ways, they would then not dare either to be negligent or false.

31. But as it is the duty of Masters to admonish and reprove their servants, so they must also look to do it in a due manner, that is so, as may be most likely to do good, not in passion and rage, which can never work the servant to anything but the despising or hating him; but with such sober and grave speeches, as may convince him of his fault, and may also assure him, that it is a kind desire of his amendment (and not a willingness to wreck his own rage) which makes the Master thus to rebuke him.

32. A third duty of the Master is to set good example of honesty and godliness to his servants, without which 'tis not all the exhortations, or reproofs he can use, will ever do good; or else he pulls down more with his example, then 'tis possible for him to build with the other, and 'tis madness for a drunken, or profane Master to expect a sober and godly family.

33. Fourthly, the Master is to provide that his servants may not want means of being instructed in their duty, as also that they may daily have constant times of worshipping God, publicly by having prayers in the family; but of this I have spoken before under the head of Prayer, and therefore shall here say no more of it.

34. Fifthly, The Master in all affairs of his own, is to give reasonable and moderate commands, not laying greater burdens on his servants then they are able to bear, particularly not requiring so much work, that they shall have no time to bestow on their souls, as on the other side he is not to permit them to live so idly as may make them either useless to him, or may betray themselves to any ill.

35. Sixthly, The Master is to give his servants encouragement in well doing, by using them with that bounty and kindness which their faithfulness and diligence and piety deserves: and finally in all his dealing with them, he is to remember that himself hath, as the Apostle saith, Ephes. 6 9. A Master in heaven, to whom he must give an account of the usage of his meanest servant on earth. Thus have I briefly run through those several Relations, to which we owe particular Duty, and so have done with that first branch of Duty to our Neighbors; that of Justice.

PARTITION XVI. Other Branches of our Duty to our Neighbor. Of Charity to men's Souls, Bodies, Goods, &c.

THE second branch of Duty to our Neighbors is Charity, or Love. This is the great Gospel duty so often enjoined us by Christ, the New Commandment as himself calls it, John 13 34. That ye love one another, and this is again repeated twice in one Chapter, John 15. 12. 17. and the first Epistle of S. John is almost wholly spent in the persuasion to this one duty, by which we may see 'tis no matter of indifference, but most strictly required of all that profess Christ. Indeed himself has given it as the badge and livery of his Disciples, John 13. 35. By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye have love one to another.

This Charity may be considered two ways; first, in respect of the Affections; secondly, of the Actions. Charity in the affections is a sincere kindness, which disposes us to wish all good to others, and that in all their capacities, in the same manner that justice obliged us to wish no hurt to any man, in respect either of his Soul, his Body, his Goods, or his Credit, so this first part of Charity binds us to wish all good to them in all these.

And first, for the Soul. If we have any the least spark of Charity, we cannot but wish all good to men's Souls; Those precious things which Christ thought worth the ransoming with his own blood, may surely well challenge our kindness, and good wishes; and therefore if we do not thus love one another, we are far from obeying that Command of loving, as he hath loved; for 'twas the Souls of men which he loved so tenderly, and both did and suffered so much for. Of this love of his to Souls there are two great and special effects: the first, the purifying them here by his grace, the second, the making them everlastingly happy in his glory; and both these we are so far to copy out in our kindness, as to be earnestly desirous that all men should arrive to that purity, and holiness here, which may make them capable of eternal happiness hereafter. It were to be hoped, that none that himself carried a Soul about him, could be so cruel to that of another man's, as not sincerely to wish this, did not experience show us there are some persons, whose malice is so devilish, as to reach even to the direct contrary; the wishing not only the sin, but the damnation of others. Thus may you have some, who in any injury, or oppression they suffer, make it their only comfort, that their enemies will damn themselves by it; when alas! that should to a Christian be much more terrible, then any suffering they could bring upon him. He that is of this temper, is a disciple of Satan's, not of Christ, it being directly contrary to the whole scope of that grand Christian precept, of loving our neighbors as ourselves. For 'tis sure, no man that believes there is such a thing as damnation, wishes it to himself; be he never so fond of the ways that lead to it, yet he wishes that may not be his journeys end; and therefore by that rule of Charity should as much dread it for his Neighbor.

Secondly, We are to wish all good to the Bodies of men, all health and welfare, we are generally tender enough of our own bodies, dread the least pain or ill, that can befall them: Now Charity, by virtue of the forementioned precept, extends this tenderness to all others, and whatever we apprehend as grievous to ourselves, we must be unwilling should befall another. The like is to be said of the other two, goods and credit, that as we wish our own thriving and reputation, so we should likewise that of others, or else we can never be said to love our neighbor as ourselves.

This Charity of the affections, if it be sincere, will certainly have these several effects, which are so inseparable from it, that they are often in Scripture accounted as parts of the duty, and so most strictly required of us; First, it will keep the mind in a peaceable and meeke temper towards others, so far from seeking occasions of contentions, that no provocation shall draw us to it; for where we have kindness we shall be unapt to quarrel, it being one of the special qualities of Charity, that it is not easily provoked, 1 Cor. 13. 5. And therefore whoever is unpeaceable, shows his heart is destitute of this Charity. Secondly, it will breed compassion towards all the miseries of others, every mis-hap that befalls, where we wish well, is a kind of defeat and disaster to ourselves, and therefore if we wish well to all, we shall be thus concerned in the calamities of all, have a real grief, and sorrow, to see any in misery, and that according to the proportion of the suffering. Thirdly, it will give us joy in the prosperities of others: Solomon observes, Prov. 13. 19. That the desire accomplished is sweet to the Soul; and then whoever has this real desire of his neighbors welfare, his desire is accomplished in their prosperity, and therefore he cannot but have contentment and satisfaction in it. Both these are together commanded by St. Paul, Rom. 12. 12. Rejoice with them that rejoice, weep with them that weep. Fourthly, it will excite and stir up our prayers for others: We are of ourselves impotent, feeble creatures, unable to bestow blessings, where we most wish them, therefore if we do indeed desire the good of others, we must seek it on their behalf, from him, whence every good and perfect gift cometh, Jam. 1. 17. This is so necessary a part of Charity, that without it our kindness is but an insignificant thing, a kind of empty complement. For how can he be believed to wish well in earnest, who will not thus put life and efficacy into his wishes by forming them into prayers which will otherwise be vain and fruitless. The Apostle thought not fit to leave men to their bare wishes, but exhorts that supplications, prayers and giving of thanks be made for all men, 1 Tim. 2. 1. which precept all that have this true charity of the heart, will readily conform to. These severals are so naturally the fruits of this Charity that it is a deceit for any man to persuade himself he hath it, who cannot produce these fruits to evidence it by.

But there is yet a farther excellency of this grace, it guards the mind, and secures it from several great and dangerous vices; as first from Envy; This is by the Apostle taught us to be the property of Charity, 1 Cor. 13. 4. Charity envieth not; And indeed common reason may confirm this to us, for Envy is a sorrow at the prosperity of another, and therefore must needs be directly contrary to that desire of it, which we shown before was the effect of love; so that if love bear sway in the heart, 'twill certainly chace out Envy. How vainly then do those pretend to this virtue, that are still grudging, and repining at every good hap of others.

Secondly, It keeps down Pride and Haughtiness. This is also taught us by the Apostle in the forementioned place, Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up; and accordingly we find, that where this virtue of love is commanded, there humility is joined with it. Thus it is, Col. 3. 12, Put on therefore bowels of Mercies, Kindness, Humbleness of mind, and Romans 12. 10. Be kindly affectioned one towards another with brotherly love in honor preserring one another, where you see how close an attendant humility is of love. Indeed it naturally flows from it, for love always sets a price and value upon the thing beloved, makes us esteem and prize it; thus we too constantly find it in sel• love, it makes us think highly of ourselves, that we are much more excellent then other men. Now if love thus placed on ourselves, beget pride, let us but divert the course, and turn this love on our brethren, and it will as surely beget humility, for then we should see and value those gifts and excellencies of theirs, which now our pride, or our hatred makes us to overlook and neglect, and not think it reasonable either to despise them, or vaunt and magnify ourselves upon such a comparison; we should certainly find cause to put the Apostles exhortation in practice, Phil. 2. 4. That we should esteem others better than ourselves. Whoever therefore is of so haughty a temper, as to vilisie and disdain others, may conclude, he hath not this charity rooted in his heart.

Thirdly, It casts out ensoriousness and rash judging Charity, as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 13. 5. Thinketh no evil, is not apt to entertain ill conceits of others, but on the contrary as it follows, ver. 7. Believeth all things, hopeth all things; that is, it is forward to believe and hope the best of all men; and surely our own experience tells us the same, for where we love we are usually unapt to discern faults, be they never so gross (witness the great blindness we generally have towards our own) and therefore shall certainly not be likely to Create them, where they are not, or to aggravate them beyond their true size and degree. And then to what shall we impute those unmerciful censures and rash judgments of others, so frequent among men, but to the want of this Charity.

Fourthly, It casts out Dissembling and feigned kindness; where this true and real love is, that false and counterfeit one flies from before it, and this is the love we are commanded to have, such as is without dissimulation, Rom. 12. 9. Indeed where this is rooted in the heart, there can be no possible use of dissimulation: because this is in truth all that the false one would seem to be, and so is as far beyond it as Nature is beyond Art, nay indeed as a divine virtue is beyond a foul sin; for such is that hypocritical kindness, and yet tis to be feared that does too generally usurp the place of this real charity, the effects of it are too visible among us, there being nothing more common then to see men make large professions to those who as soon as their backs are turned they either deride or mischief.

Fifthly, It casts out all mercinariness, and self-seeking, 'tis of so noble and generous a temper, that it despises all projectings for gain or advantage, Love seeketh not her own, 1 Cor. 13. 5. And therefore that huckstering kind of love so much used in the world, which places itself only there, where it may fetch in benefit is very far from this charity.

Lastly, It turns out of the heart all malice and desire of Revenge, which is so utterly contrary to it, that it is impossible they should both dwell in the same breast; 'tis the property of love to bear all things, 1 Cor. 13. 7. To endure the greatest injuries, without thought of making any other return to them than prayers and blessings, and therefore the malicious revengeful person, is of all others the greatest stranger to this Charity.

'Tis true, if this virtue were to be exercised but towards some sort of persons, it might consist with malice to others, it being possible for a man that bitterly hates one to love another; but we are to take notice that this Charity must not be so confined, but must extend and stretch itself to all men in the world, particularly to Enemies, or else it is not that divine charity commended to us by Christ. The loving of friends and benefactors is so low a pitch that the very Publicans and sinners, the worst of men were able to attain to it, Matth. 5. 46. And therefore 'tis not counted rewardable in a Disciple of Christ; No, he expects we should soar higher, and therefore hath set us this more spiritual and excellent precept of loving of enemies, Matth. 5. 44. I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; and whosoever does not thus, will never be owned by him for a Disciple. We are therefore to conclude, that all which hath been said concerning this Charity of the Affections, must be understood to belong as well to our spitefullest enemy, as our most obliging friend. But because this is a duty to which the froward nature of man is apt to object much, 'twill not be amiss to insist a little on some considerations, which may enforce it on us.

And first consider what hath been already touched on, that it is the Command of Christ, both in the Text above mentioned, and multitudes of others, there being scarce any precept so often repeated in the New Testament, as this of loving and forgiving of our enemies. Thus Ephes. 4. 32. Be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another; And again, Col. 3. 13. Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. So also, 1 Peter 3. 9. Not rendering evil for evil, nor railing for railing, but contrariwise Blessing. A whole Volume of Texts might be brought to this purpose, but these are certainly enough to convince any man, that this is strictly required of us by Christ, and indeed I think, there are few that ever heard of the Gospel, but know it is so. The more prodigiously strange is it, that men that call themselves Christians, should give no degree of obedience to it, nay, not only so, but even publicly avow, and profess the contrary, as we daily see they do, it being ordinary to have men resolve, and declare that they will not forgive such, or such a man, & no consideration of Christ's command can at all move them from their purpose. Certainly these men understand not what is meant by the very word Christian, which signifies a servant, and Disciple of Christ, and this Charity is the very badge of the one, the lesson of the other: and therefore 'tis the greatest absurdity, and contradiction, to profess themselves Christians, and yet at the same time to resist this so express Command of that Christ, whom they own as their Master. If I be a Master, saith God, where is my fear? Mal. 1. 6. Obedience and reverence are so much the duties of servants, that no man is thought to look on him as a Master, to whom he pays them not. Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say? saith Christ, Luke 6. 46. The whole world is divided into two great Families, Christ's and Satan's, and the obedience each man pays, signifies to which of these Masters he belongs, if he obey Christ, to Christ; if Satan, to Satan. Now this sin of malice, and revenge is so much the dictate of that wicked spirit, that there is nothing can be a more direct obeying of him, 'tis the taking his livery on our backs, the proclamation whose servants we are; What ridiculous impudence is it then, for men that have thus entered themselves of Satan's Family, to pretend to be the Servants of Christ? Let such know assuredly, that they shall not be owned by him, but at the great day of accompt, be turned over to their proper Master, to receive their wages, in fire and brimstone.

A second consideration is the example of God: this is an argument Christ himself thought fit to use, to impress this duty on us as you may see Luk. 6. 35. 36. Where after having given the Command of Loving Enemies, he encourages to the practice of it, by telling, that it is that which will make us the Children of the Highest (that is, 'twill give us a likeness and resemblance to him; as children have to their Parents) for he is kind to the unthankful and the evil; And to the same purpose, you may read Mat. 5. 45. He maketh his sin to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust; And sure this is a most forcible consideration to excite us to this duty. God we know, is the fountain of perfection, and the being like to him, is the sum of all we can wish for, and though it was Lucifers fall, his ambition to be like the most high, yet had the likeness he affected been only that of Holyness and goodness, he might still have been an Angel of light; This desire of imitating our Heavenly Father is the especial mark of a child of his. Now this kindness and goodness to enemies is most eminently remarkable in God, and that not only in respect of the temporal mercies, which he indifferently bestows on all, his sun and rain on the unjust, as in the text forementioned, but chiefly in his spiritual Mercies; We are all by our wicked works Col. 1. 21. Enemies to him, and the mischief of that enmity would have fallen wholly upon ourselves, God had no motive besides that of his pity to us, to wish a reconciliation, yet so far was he from returning our enmity, when he might have revenged himself to our eternal ruin, that he designs and contrives how he may bring us to be at peace with him. This is a huge degree of mercy and kindness, but the means he used for effecting this, is yet far beyond it; He sent his own Son from Heaven, to work it, and that not only by persuasions, but sufferings also; So much did he prize us miserable creatures, that he thought us not too dear bought with the blood of his Son. The like example of mercy and patience we have in Christ both laying down his life for us Enemies, and also in that meek manner of doing it, which we find excellently set forth by the Apostle, 1 Pet. 2. 22, 23, 24. and commended to our imitation. Now surely when all this is considered, we may well make S. Johns inference, Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another, 1 John 4. 11. How shameful a thing is it for us to retain displeasures against our brethren, when God thus lays by his towards us, and that when we have so highly provoked him?

This directs to a third consideration, the comparing our sins against God, with the offenses of our brethren against us, which we no sooner shall come to do, but there will appear a vast difference between them, and that in several respects; For first there is the Majesty of the person, against whom we sin, which exceedingly increases the guilt, whereas between man and man, there cannot be so great a distance, for though some men are by God advanced to such eminency of dignity as may make an injury offered to them the greater, yet still they are but men of the same nature with us, whereas he is God blessed forever; Secondly, there is his sovereignty and power, which is original in God, for we are his creatures, we have received our whole being from him, and therefore are in the deepest manner bound to perfect obedience, whereas all the sovereignty that one man can possibly have over another, is but imparted to them by God, and for the most part there is none of this neither in the case, quarrels being most usual among equals. Thirdly, there is his infinite bounty and goodness to us, all that ever we enjoy, whether in relation to this life or a better, being wholly his free gift, & so there is the foulest ingratitude added to our other crimes; in which respect also 'tis impossible for one man to offend against another in such a degree, for though one may be (& too many are) guilty of unthankfulness towards men, yet because the greatest benefits that man can bestow, are infinitely short of those which God doth, the ingratitude cannot be near so great as towards God it is. Lastly, there is the greatness and multitude of our sins against God, which do infinitely exceed all that the most injurious man can do against us, for we all sin much oftener and more heinously against him than any man, be he never so malicious, can find opportunities of injuring his brethren. This inequality and disproportion our Savior intimates in the parable, Mat. 18. where our offenses against God are noted by the ten thousand talents, whereas our brethren's against us are described by the hundred pence; a talent hugely out-weighs a penny, and ten thousand outnumber a hundred, yet so and much more does the weight and number of our sins exceed all the offenses of others against us: Much more might be said to show the vast inequality between the faults which God forgives us, and those we can possibly have to forgive our brethren: But this I suppose may suffice to silence all the objections of cruel and revengeful persons, against this kindness to enemies. They are apt to look upon it as an absur'd and unreasonable thing, but since God himself acts it in so much a higher degree, who can without blasphemy say 'tis unreasonable? If this, or any other spiritual duty appear so to us, we may learn the reason from the Apostle, 1 Cor. 2. 14. The carnal man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; 'tis the carnality and fleshliness of our hearts, that makes it seem so, and therefore instead of disputing against the duty, let us purge our hearts of that, and then we shall find that true which the spiritual Wisdom affirms of her Doctrines, Prov. 8. 9. They are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.

Nay, this loving of enemies is not only a reasonable, but a pleasant duty, and that I propose as a fourth consideration; there is a great deal of sweetness and delight to be found in it; of this I confess none can so well judge as those that have practiced it, the nature even of earthly pleasures being such, that 'tis the enjoyment only that can make a man truly know them: No man can so describe the taste of any delicious thing to another, as that by it he shall know the relish of it, he must first actually taste of it, and sure 'tis more so in spiritual pleasures, and therefore he that would fully know the sweetness and pleasantness of this duty, let him set to the practice and then his own experience will be the best informer: But in the mean time, how very unjust, yea, and foolish is it, to pronounce ill of it before trial: for men to say this is irksome, and intolerable, who neves so much as once offered to try whether indeed it were so or no? Yet by this very means an ill opinion is brought up of this most delightful Duty, and passes currant among men, whereas in all justice the testimony of it should be taken only from those who have tried it, and they would certainly give another account of it.

But though the full knowledge hereof be to be had only by this nearer acquaintance, yet me thinks even those who look at it but at a distance may discern some what of amiableness in it, if no other way, yet at least by comparing it with the uneasiness of its contrary, Malice and Revenge are the most restless, tormenting passions that can possess the mind of a man, they keep men in a perpetual study and care how to effect their mischievous purposes, it disturbs their very sleep, as Solomon observes Prov. 4. 16. They sleep not except they have done mischief, and their sleep is taken away, except they cause some to fall: Yea, it imbitters all the good things they enjoy, so that they have no taste or relish of them; a remarkable example of this we have in Haman, who though he abounded in all the greatness and felicity of the world, yet the malice he had to a poor despicable man Mordecai, kept him from tasting contentment in all this, as you may see Esther 5. where after he had related to his friends all his prosperities, ver. 11. he concludes thus ver. 12. Yet all this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting in the kings gate. On the other side, the peaceable spirit, that can quietly pass by all injuries and affronts, enjoys a continual calm, and is above the malice of his enemies, for let them do what they can, they cannot rob him of his quiet, he is firm as a rock, which no storms or winds can move, when the furious and revengeful man is like a wave, which the least blast tosses and tumbles from its place. But besides this inward disquiet of revengful men, they often bring many outward calamities upon themselves, they exasperate their enemies, and provoke them to do them greater mischiefs, nay oftentimes they willingly run themselves upon the greatest miseries in pursuit of their revenge, to which tis ordinary to see men sacrifice Goods, Ease, Credit, Life, nay soul itself, not caring what they suffer themselves so they may spite their enemy; so strangely does this wretched humor besot and blind men. On the contrary, the meek person he often melts his adversary, pacifics his anger; A soft answer turns away wrath, saith Solomon, Prov. 15. 1. And sure there is nothing can tend more to that end; but if it do happen that his enemy be so inhumane, that he miss of doing that, yet he is still a gainer by all he can suffer. For first, he gains an opportunity of exercising that most Christian grace of charity and forgiveness: and so at once of obeying the command, and imitating the example of his Savior, which is to a true Christian spirit a most valuable advantage; and then secondly, he gains an accession and increase to his reward hereafter. And if it be Objected, that that is not to be reckoned in to the present pleasure of the duty: I answer that the expectation and belief of it is, and that alone is a delight infinitely more ravishing then the present enjoyment of all sensual pleasure can be.

The fourth consideration is, the Danger of not performing this Duty; of which I might reckon up divers, but I shall insist only on that great one, which contains in it all the rest, and that is the forfeiting of our own pardons from God, the having our sins against him kept still on his score, and not forgiven. This is a consideration, that me thinks should affright us into good nature; if it do not, our malice is greater to ourselves then to our enemies. For alas! what hurt is it possible for thee to do to another, which can bear any comparison with that thou doest thyself, in losing the pardon of thy sins? which is so unspeakable a mischief, that the Devil himself with all his malice cannot wish a greater, 'tis all he aims at, first, that we may sin, and then that those sins may never be pardoned, for then he knows he has us sure enough, Hell, and damnation being certainly the portion of every unpardoned sinner, besides all other effects of God's wrath in this life; consider this, and then tell me what thou hast got by the highest revenge thou ever actedst upon another. 'Tis a Divelish phrase in the mouth of men, that revenge is sweet: but is it possible there can be (even to the most distemperate palate) any such sweetness in it, as may recompense that everlasting bitterness that attends it? 'Tis certain, no man in his wits can upon sober judging, imagine there is. But alas! we give not ourselves time to weigh things, but suffer ourselves to be hurried away with the heat of an angry humor, never considering how dear we must pay for it: like the silly Bee, that in anger leaves at once her sting & her life behind her, the sting may perhaps give some short pain to the flesh it sticks in, but yet there is none but discerns the Bee has the worst of it, that pays her life for so poor a revenge; so it is in the greatest acts of our malice, we may perhaps leave our stings in others, put them to some present trouble, but that compared with the hurt redounds to ourselves by it, is no more then that inconsiderable pain is to death; Nay not so much, because the mischiefs, that we bring upon ourselves are eternal, to which no finite thing can bear any proportion. Remember then, whensoever thou art contriving & plotting a revenge, that thou quite mistakest the mark; thou thinkest to hit thy enemy, and alas! thou woundest thyself to death. And let no man speak peace to himself, or think that these are va•n terrors, & that he may obtain pardon from God, though he give none to his brethren. For he that is truth itself has assured us the contrary, Mat. 6. 15. If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. And least we should forget the necessity of this duty, he has inserted it into our daily Prayers, where we make it the condition, on which we beg pardon from God; Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. What a heavy curse then does every revengful person lay upon himself, when he says this Prayer? he does in effect beg God not to forgive him; and 'tis too sure that part of his prayer will be heard, he shall be forgiven just as he forgives, that is not at all. This is yet farther set out to us in the parable of the Lord and the Servant, Matth. 18. the servant had obtained of his Lord the forgiveness of a vast debt, ten thousand talents, yet was so cruel to his fellow servant, as to exact a poor trifling sum of an hundred pence, upon which his Lord recalls his former forgiveness, and charges him again with the whole debt, and this Christ applies to our present purpose, ver. 35. So likewise shall my heavenly Father do unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every man his brother their trespasses. One such act of uncharitableness is able to forfeit us the pardon God hath granted us, and then all our sins return again upon us, and sink us to utter ruin. I suppose it needless to heap up more testimonies of Scripture, for the truth of this; these are so clear, as may surely serve to persuade any man, that acknowledges Scripture, of the great and fearful danger of this sin of uncharitableness. The Lord possess all our hearts with such a just sense of it as may make us avoid it.

The last consideration I shall mention, is that of Gratitude. God has shown wonderful mercies to us, Christ has suffered heavy things to bring us into a capacity of that mercy and pardon from God: And shall we not then think ourselves obliged to some returns of thankfulness? If we will take the Apostles judgment he tells us, 2 Cor. 5. 15. That since Christ died for us all, 'tis but reasonable that we should not henceforth live unto ourselves, but unto him that died for us. Indeed were every moment of our life consecrated to his immediate Service, 'twere no more then common gratitude requires, & far less then such inestimable benefits deserve; what a shameful unthankfulness is it then to deny him so poor a satisfaction as this, the forgiving our brethren? Suppose a man that were ransomed either from death or slavery, by the bounty and sufferings of another, should upon his release be charged by him that so freed him in return of that kindness of his, to forgive some slight debt, which was owing him by some third person, would you not think him the unthankfullest wretch in the world, that should refuse this to so great a benefactor? yet such a wretch and much worse is every revengful person: Christ hath bought us out of eternal slavery, and that not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, 1 Pet. 1. 8. But with his own most precious blood, and hath earnestly recommended to us the love of our brethren, and that with the most moving arguments, drawn from the greatness of his love to us; and if we shall obstinately refuse him in so just, so moderate a demand, how unspeakable a vileness is it? and yet this we do downright, if we keep any malice or grudge to any person whatsoever. Nay, farther this is not barely an unthankfulness, but there is also joined with it a horrible contempt, and despising of him. This Peace & unity of brethren was a thing so much prized & valued by him, that when he was to leave the world, he thought it the most precious thing he could bequeath, and therefore left it by way of legacy to his Disciples, Jo. 14. 27. Peace I leave with you; we use to set a great value on the slightest bequests of our dead friends, to be exceeding careful not to lose them and therefore if we willfully bangle away this so precious a Legacy of Christ, 'tis a plain sign we want that Love and esteem of him, which we have of our earthly friends, and that we despise him as well as his Legacy. The great prevailing of this sin of uncharitableness has made me stand thus long on these considerations, for the subduing it. God grant they may make such impression on the Reader, as may be available to that purpose.

I shall add only this one advice, that these or whatsoever other remedies against this sin must be used timely: 'Tis oftentimes the frustrating of bodily medicines, the applying them too late, and 'tis much oftener so in spiritual, therefore if it be possible, let these & the like considerations be so constantly & habitually fixed in thy heart, that they may frame it to such meekness as may prevent all risings of rancor or revenge in thee, for it is much better they should serve as armor to prevent, then as balsome to cure the wound. But if this passion be not yet so subdued in thee, but that there will be some stirrings of it, yet then be sure to take it at the very first rise, and let not thy fancy chew, as it were, upon the injury by often rolling it in thy mind, but remember betime the foregoing considerations, and withal, that this is a time, and season of trial to thee, wherein thou mayest show how thou hast profited in Christ's School, there now being an opportunity offered thee either of obeying and pleasing God, by passing by this offense of thy brother, or else of obeying and pleasing Satan, that lover of discord, by nourishing hatred against him. Remember this, I say, lotimes, before thou be enflamed, for if this fire be thoroughly kindled, it will cast such a smoke, as will blind thy reason, and make thee unfit to judge even in this so very plain case, whet her it be better by obeying God, to purchase to thyself eternally bliss, or by obeying Satan, eternal torments. Whereas, if thou put the question to thyself before this commotion, and disturbance of mind, 'tis impossible but thy understanding must pronounce for God; And then unless thy will be so perverse that thou wilt deliberately choose death, thou wilt surely practice according to that sentence of thy understanding; I shall add no more on this first part of Charity, that of the Affections,

I proceed now to that of the Actions; And this ended is it, whereby the former must be approved, we may pretend great charity within, but if none break forth in the Actions, we may say of that Love, as Sa•nt James does of the Faith he speaks of, that it is dead, Jam. 2. 20. It is the loving in deed, that must approve our hearts before God, 1 Jo. 3. 18. Now this love in the Actions may likewise fitly be distributed, as the former was, in relation to the four distinct capacities of our brethren, their Souls, their Bodies, their Goods, and Credit.

The Soul I formerly told you may be considered either in a natural or spiritual sense, & in both of them Charity binds us to do all the good we can. As the Soul signifies the mind of a man, so we are to endeavor the comfort and refreshment of our brethren, desire to give them all true cause of joy, & cheerfulness, especially when we see any under any sadness or heaviness, then to bring out all the cordials we can procure, that is, to labor by all Christian and fit means to cheer the troubled spirits of our brethren, to comfort them that are in any heaviness, as the Apostle speaks, 2. Cor. 1. 4.

But the Soul in the spiritual sense is yet of greater concernment, and the securing of that is a matter of much greater moment, then the refreshing of the mind only, in as much as the eternal sorrows and sadnesses of Hell exceed the deepest sorrows of this life; and therefore though we must not omit the former, yet on this we are to employ our most zealous charities; Wherein we are not to content ourselves with a bare wishing well to the Souls of our brethren, this alone is a sluggish sort of kindness, unworthy of those who are to imitate the great Redeemer of Souls, who did and suffered so much in that purchase: No, we must add also our endeavor to make them what we wish them, to this purpose, 'twere very reasonable to propound to ourselves in all our conversings with others, that one great design of doing some good to their souls. If this purpose were fixed in our minds, we should then discern perhaps many opportunities, which now we overlook, of doing something towards it. The brutish ignorance of one would call upon thee to endeavor his instruction; the open sin of another, to reprehend & admonish him; the faint and weak virtue of another to confirm and encourage him. Every spiritual want of thy brother may give thee some occasion of exercising some part of this Charity, or if the circumstances be such, that upon sober judging, thou think it vain to attempt anything thyself, as if either thy meanness, or thy unacquaintedness, or any the like impediment be like to render thy exhortations fruitless, yet if thou art industrious in thy Charity, thou mayest probably find out some other instrument, by whom to do it more successfully. There cannot be a nobler study then how to benefit men's Souls, and therefore where the direct means are improper, 'tis fit we should whet our wits for attaining of others. Indeed 'tis a shame, we should not as industriously contrive for this great spiritual concernment of others, as we do for every worldly trifling interest of our own; yet in them we are unwearied, and try one means after another, till we compass our end. But if after all our serious endeavors, the obstinacy of men do not suffer us, or themselves rather, to reap any fruit from them, if all our wooings and intreatings of men to have mercy on their own Souls will not work on them, yet be sure to continue still to exhort by thy example; Let thy great care and tenderness of thy own Soul preach to them the value of theirs, and give not over thy compassions to them, but with the Prophet Jer. 13. 17. Let thy Soul weep in secret for them; and with the Psalmist, Let rivers of waters run down thy eyes, because they kept not God's Law, Psal. 119. 136. Yea with Christ himself, weep over them, who will not know the things that belong to their peace, Luk, 11. 42. And when no importunities with them will work, yet even then cease not to importune God for them, that he will draw them to himself, Thus we see Samuel, when he could not dissuade the people from that sinful purpose they were upon, yet he professes notwithstanding, that he will not cease praying for them; nay, he looked on it as so much a duty, that it would be sin to him to omit it, God forbid, says he, that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you, 1 Sam. 12. 23. Nor shall we need to fear that our prayers will be quite lost, for if they prevail not for those for whom we pour them out, yet however they will return into our own bosoms, Psal. 35. 13, we shall be sure not to miss of the reward of that Charity.

In the second place, we are to exercise this Active Charity towards the bodies of our Neighbors; we are not only to compassionate their pains, and miseries, but also to do what we can for their ease and relief. The good Samaritan Luke. 10. had never been proposed as our pattern, had he not as well helped as pitied the wounded man. 'Tis not good wishes, no nor good words neither that avail in such cases, as St. James tells us, If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give him not those things that are needful for the body, what doth it profit? Jam. 2. 15. 16. No sure, it profits them nothing, in respect of their bodies, and it will profit thee as little in respect of thy Soul, it will never be reckoned to thee as a Charity. This relieving of the bodily wants of our brethren, is a thing so strictly required of us, that we find it set down Mat. 25. as the especial thing we shall be tried by at the Last Day, on the omission whereof is grounded that dreadful sentence, ver. 41. Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels. And if it shall now be asked, what are the particular acts of this kind which we are to perform? I think we cannot better inform ourselves for the frequent and ordinary ones, then from this Chapter, where are set down these severals, the giving meat to the hungry, and drink to the thirsty, harbouring the stranger, clothing the naked, and visiting the sick and imprisoned; By which visiting is meant, not a bare coming to see them, but so coming as to comfort and relieve them; for otherwise it will be but like the Levite in the Gospel, Luk. 10. who came & looked on the wounded man, but did no more, which will never be accepted by God. These are common and ordinary exercises of this charity, for which we cannot want frequent opportunities. But besides these there may sometimes by God's especial providence fall into our hands, occasions of doing other good offices to the bodies of our neighbors; we may sometimes find a wounded man with the Samaritan, and then 'tis our duty to do as he did; we may sometimes find an innocent person condemned to death, as Susanna was, and then are with Daniel to use all possible endeavor for their deliverances: This case Solomon seems to refer to, Prov. 24. 11. If thou forbear to deliver him that is drawn unto death, and them that are ready to be slain, if thou sayst behold we knew it not; doth not he that pondereth the heart consider? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? shall not he render to every man according to his deeds; we are not lightly to put off the matter with vain excuses, but to remember that God, who knows our most secret thoughts, will severely examine, whether we have willingly omitted the performance of such a charity: sometimes again (nay God knows, often now a days) we may see a man that by a course of intemperance is in danger to destroy his health, to shorten his days, and then it is a due charity not only to the soul, but to the body also, to endeavor to draw him from it. It is impossible to set down all the possible acts of this corporal charity, because there may sometimes happen such opportunities as none can foresee; we are therefore always to carry about us a serious resolution of doing whatever good of this kind we shall at any time discern occasion for, & then whenever that occasion is offered, we are to look on it as a call, as it were from heaven, to put that resolution in practice. This part of charity seems to be so much implanted in our natures, as we are men, that we generally account them not only unchristian, but inhumane, that are void of it, and therefore I hope there will not need much persuasion to it, since our very nature inclines us; but certainly that very consideration will serve hugely to increase the guilt of those that are wanting in it. For since this command is so agreeable even to flesh and blood, our disobedience to it can proceed from nothing but a stubbornness and resistance against God who gives it.

PARTITION XVII. Of Charity, Alms giving, &c. Of Charity in respect of our Neighbors Credit, &c. Of Peace-making. Of going to Law: Of Charity to our Enemies, &c. Christian Duties both possible and pleasant.

§ 1: THE third way of expressing this Charity is towards the goods or estate of our neighbor; we are to endeavor his thriving and prosperity in these outward good things; and to that end, be willing to assist and farther him in all honest ways of improveing or preserving them, by any neighborly and friendly office. Opportunities of this do many times fall out: A man may sometimes by his power or persuasion deliver his neighbors goods out of the hands of a thief, or oppressor; sometimes again by his advice and counsel, he may set him in a way of thriving, or turn him from some ruinous course; and many other occasions there may be of doing good turns to another, without any loss or damage to ourselves, and then we are to do them, even to our rich neighbors, those that are as wealthy (perhaps much more so) as ourselves; for though Charity do not bind us to give to those that want it less than ourselves, yet whenever we can further their profit, without less'ning our own store, it requires it of us: Nay, if the damage be but light to us in comparison of the advantage to him, it will become us rather to hazard that light damage, than lose him that greater advantage.

2. But towards our poor brother, Charity ties us to much more; we are there only to consider the supplying of his wants, and not to stick at parting with what is our own, to relieve him, but as far as we are able give freely what is necessary to him. This duty of Almsgiving is perfectly necessary for the approving our love not only to men, but even to God himself, as St. John tells us, 1 Jo. 3. 17. Whoso hath this worlds goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 'Tis vain for him to pretend to love either God or man, who loves his money so much better, that he will see his poor brother (who is a man, and bears the image of God) suffer all extremities, rather than part with anything to relieve him: On the other side, the performance of this duty is highly acceptable with God, as well as with men.

3. 'Tis called, Heb. 13. 16. A sacrifice wherewith God is well pleased; and again, Phil. 4. 18. St. Paul calls their alms to him, a Sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God, and the Church hath always looked on it as such; and therefore joined it with the soleumest part of worship, the holy Sacrament. But because even sacrifices themselves under the Law, were often made unacceptable by being maimed and blemished, it will here be necessary to enquire what are the due qualifications of this Sacrifice.

4. Of these there are some that respect the motive, some the manner of our giving. The motive may be threefold, respecting God, our neighbor and ourselves. That which respects God is obedience and thankfulness to him: he has commanded we should give alms, and therefore one special end of our doing so, must be the obeying that precept of his. And it is from his bounty alone that we receive all our plenty, and this is the properest way of expressing our thankfulness for it; for as the Psalmist saith, our goods extend not unto God, Psal. 16. 2. That tribute which we desire to pay out of our estates, we cannot pay to his person. 'Tis the poor, that are as it were his Proxey and receivers, and therefore what ever we should by way of thankfulness give back again unto God, our alms is the way of doing it: Secondly, in respect of our neighbor, the motive must be a true love and compassion to him, a tender fellow-feeling of his wants, and desire of his comfort and relief: Thirdly, in respect of ourselves, the motive is to be the hope of that eternal reward promised to this performance. This Christ points out to us, when he bids us lay up our treasure in heaven, Mat. 6. 20. And to make us friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness, that they may receive us into everlasting habitations, Luk. 16. 9. That is by a charitable dispensing of our temporal goods to the poor, to lay up a stock in heaven to gain a title to those endless felicities, which God hath promised to the charitable. That is the harvest we must expect of what we sow in these works of mercy, which will be so rich as would abundantly recompense us, though we should as the Apostle speaks, 1 Cor. 13. 3. Bestow all our goods to feed the poor: But then we must be sure we make this our sole aim, and not instead of this propose to ourselves the praise of men, as the motive of our charity, for that will rob us of the other; this is expressly told us by Christ, Mat. 6. They that set their hearts on the credit, they shall gain with men, must take that as their portion, ver. 3. verily I say unto you, they have their reward; they chose, it seems, rather to have men their Pay-masters, than God, and to them they are turned off, that little airy praise they get from them, is all the reward they must expect: Ye have no reward of my Father which is in heaven, ver. 1. we have therefore need to watch our hearts narrowly, that this desire of vain glory steal not in, and befool us into that miserable exchange of a vain blast of men's breath for those substantial and eternal joys of heaven.

5. In the second place we must take care of our alms-giving, in respect of the manner; and in that, first, we must give cheerfully; men usually value a small thing, that is given cheerfully, and with a good heart, more than a much greater, that is wrung from a man with grudging and unwillingness; and God is of the same mind, he loves a cheerful giver, 2 Cor. 9. 7. Which the Apostle makes the reason of the foregoing exhortation, of not giving grudgingly, or as of necessity, ver. 6. And sure 'tis no unreasonable thing, that is herein required of us, there being no duty that has to human nature, more of pleasure and delight, unless it be where covetousness or cruelty have quite workit out the man, & put a ravenous beast in his stead. Is it not a most ravishing pleasure to him that hath any bowels, to see the joy that a seasonable alms brings to a poor wretch? how it revives and puts new spirits in him, that was even sinking? certainly the most sensual creature alive knows not how to bestow his money on anything, that shall bring him in so great a delight, and therefore me thinks it should be no hard matter to give not only without grudging, but even with a great deal of alacrity and cheerfulness, it being the fetching in of pleasure to ourselves.

6. There is but one objection can be made against this, and that is, that the danger of impoverishing ones self by what one gives, may take off that pleasure, and make men either not give at all, or not so cheerfully. To this I answer: That first were this hazard never so apparent, yet it being the command of God, that we shall thus give, we are yet to obey cheerfully, and be as well content to part with our good; in pursuance of this duty, as we are many times called to do upon some other. In which case Christ tells us, he that forsakes not all that he hath, cannot be his Disciple.

7. But secondly, this is sure a vain supposition: God having particularly promised, the contrary to the Charicable, that it shall bring blessings on them, even in these outward things. The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself, Prov. 11. 25. He that giveth to the poor shall not lack, Prov. 28. 27. And many the like texts there are, so that one may truly say, this objection is grounded in direct unbelief. The short of it is, we dare not trust God for this: giving to the poor is directly the putting our wealth into his hands. He that giveth to the poor lendeth unto the Lord, Prov. 19. 17. And that too on solemn promise of repayment, as it follows in that verse, that which he hath given will he pay him again. It is amongst men thought a great disparagement, when we refuse to trust them; it shows we either think them not sufficient, or not honest: How vile an affront is it then to God thus to distrust him? nay indeed how horrid blasphemy, to doubt the security of that, for which he has thus expressly past his word, who is Lord of all, and therefore cannot be insufficient, and who is the God of truth, and therefore will not fail to make good his Promise? Let not then that infidel fear of future want, contract and shut up thy bowels from thy poor brother; for though he be never likely to pay thee, yet God becomes his Surety, and enters bond with him, and will most assuredly pay thee with increase. Therefore it is so far from being damage to thee, thus to give, that it is thy great advantage: Any man would rather choose to put his money in some sure hand, where he may both improve, and be certain of it at his need, than to let it lie unprofitably by him, especially if he be in danger of thieves, or other accidents, by which he may probably loose it: Now alas! all that we possess is in minutely danger of losing; innumerable accidents there are, which may in an instant bring a rich man to beggary; he that doubts this, let him but read the story of Job, and he will there find an example of it: And therefore what so prudent course can we take for our wealth, as to put it out of the reach of those accidents, by thus lending it to God, where we may be sure to find it ready at our greatest need and that too with improvement and increase; in which respect it is that the Apostle compares Alms to Seed, 2 Cor. 9. 10. We know it is the nature of Seed that is sown, to multiply and increase, and so does all our acts of mercy, they return nor single and naked to us, but bring in their sheaves with them, a most plenteous & bountiful harvest. God deals not with our alms, as we too often do with his graces, wrap them up in a napkin, so that they shall never bring in any advantage to us, but makes us most rich returns: and therefore we have all reason most cheerfully, yea, joyfully to set to this duty, which we have such invitations to, as well in respect of our own interests, as our neighbors needs.

8. Secondly, We must give seasonably: it is true indeed there are some so poor, that an Alms can never come unseasonably, because they always want, yet even to them there may be some special seasons of doing it, to their greater advantage; for sometimes an Alms may not only deliver a poor man from some present extremity, but by the right timeing of it, may set him in some way of a more comfortable subsistence afterward. And for the most, I presume it is a good Rule, to dispence what we intend to any, as soon as may be, for delays are hurtful oftentimes both to them & ourselves; first, as to them, it is sure, the longer we delay, the longer they groan under the present want, & after we have designed them a relief, it is in some degree a cruelty to defer bestowing of it, for so long we prolong their sufferings; you will think him a hard hearted Physician, that having a certain cure for a man in pain, should when he might presently apply it make unnecessary delays, & so keep the poor man still in torture: and the same it is here; we want of the due compassion, if we can be content our poor brother should have one hour of unnecessary suffering, when we have present opportunity of relieving him, or if he be not in such an extremity of want, yet whatever we intend him for his greater comfort, he loses so much of it, as the time of the delay amounts to: Secondly, in respect of ourselves; tis ill to defer, for thereby we give advantage to the temptations either of Satan or our own covetous humor, to dissuade us from it. Thus it fares too often with many Christian duties; for want of a speedy execution, our purposes cool, and never come to act; so many resolve they will repent, but because they set not immediately upon it, one delay succeeds another, and keeps them from ever doing it at all; and so 'tis very apt to fall out in this case, especially with men, who are of a covetous temper, and therefore they of all others should not trust themselves thus to delay.

9. Thirdly, We should take care to give prudently, that is to give most, where it is most needed, and in such a manner, as may do the receiver most good: Charities do often miscarry for want of this care, for if we give at all adventures to all that seem to want, we may sometimes give more to those, whose sloth and lewdness is the cause of their want than to those who best deserve it, and so both encourage the one in their idleness, and disable ourselves from giving to the other. Yet I doubt not such may be the present wants even of the most unworthy, that we are to relieve them, but where no such pressing need is, we shall do best to choose out the fitter objects of charity, such are those who either are not able to labor, or else have a greater charge than their labor can maintain, and to those our alms should be given also in such manner as may be most likely to do them good the manner of which may differ according to the circumstances of their condition; it may to some be best perhaps, to give them by little and little, to others the giving it all at once may tend more to their benefit; and sometimes a seasonable loan may do as well as a gift, and that may be in the power sometimes of those who are able to give but little: But when we thus lend on charity, we must lend freely without Use, and also with a purpose, that if he should prove unable to pay, we will forgive so much of the principal as his needs require, and our abilities will permit. They want much of this charity, who clap up poor debtors in prison, when they know they have nothing to answer the debt, which is a great cruelty to make another miserable, when nothing is gained to ourselves by it.

10. Fourthly, We should give liberally, we must not be strait handed in our alms, and give by such pitiful scantlings, as will bring almost no relief to the receiver, for that is a kind of mockery; 'tis as if one should pretend to feed one that is almost famished by giving him a crumb of bread, such Doles as that would be most ridiculous, yet I fear 'tis too near the proportion of some men's alms; such men are below those Disciples we read of, who knew only the Baptism of John, for 'tis to be observed, that John the Baptist, who was but the fore-runner of Christ, makes it a special part of his Doctrine, that he that hath two coats should impart to him that hath none, Lu. 3. 11. He says not, he that hath some great Wardrobe, but even he that hath but two coats must part with one of them; from whence we may gather that whatsoever is above (not our vanity but) our need should thus be disposed of, when our brethren's necessity requires it. But if we look into the first time of the Gospel, we shall find Christianity far exceeded this proportion of Johns, the converts assigned not a part only, but frankly gave all to the use of the Brethren, Acts 4. and though that being upon an extraordinary occasion, will be no measure for our constant practice yet it may show us how prime and fundamental a part of Christianity, this of Charity is, that at the very first founding of the Church, such vast degrees of it were practiced; and if we farther consider what precepts of love are given us in the Gospel, even to the laying down our lives for the brethren, 1 Jo. 3. 16. We cannot imagine our goods are in God's account so much more precious than our lives, that he would command us to be prodigal of the one, and yet allow us to be sparing of the other.

11. A multitude of Arguments might be brought to recommend this bounty to all that profess Christ; I shall mention only two, which I find used by St. Paul to the Corinthians on this occasion. The first is the example of Christ, 2 Cor. 8. 9. For ye know the Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich. Christ emptied himself of all that glory and greatness, he enjoyed in Heaven with his Father, and submitted himself to a life of much meanness and poverty, only to enrich us. And therefore for shame, let us not grudge to empty our Coffers, to lessen somewhat of our heaps, to relieve his poor members. The second is the expectation of reward, which will be more or less, according to the degrees of our Alms, 2 Cor. 9. 6. He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly, and he that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully. We think him a very improvident husband-man, that to save a little seed at present, sows so thin, as to spoil his crop; and the same folly 'twill be in us, if by the sparingness of our Alms, we make ourselves a lank harvest hereafter, lose either all, or a great part of those rewards which God hath provided for the liberal Alms-Giver. What is the proportion which may be called a liberal giving, I shall not undertake to set down, there being degrees even in liberality, one may give liberally, & yet another give more liberally than he; besides, liberality is to be measured, not so much by what is given as by the ability of the giver; A man of a mean estate may give less than one of a great, and yet be the more liberal person, because that little may be more out of his, than the greater is out of the others. Thus we see Christ pronounces the poor widow to have given more to the Treasury, than all the rich men, Luke. 21. 3. not that her two mites were more than their rich gifts, but that it was more for her, she having left nothing behind, whereas they gave out of their abundance what they might easily spare. Every man must herein judge for himself; we see the Apostle, though he earnestly press the Corinthians to bounty, yet prescribes not to them how much they shall give, but leaves that to their own breasts, 2 Cor. 9. 7. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give. But let us still remember, that the more we give (provided we do not thereby fail in the support of those, that most immediately depend on us) the more acceptable it will be to God, and the more rewardable by him. And to secure the performance of the duty of Alms-giving (what ever the proportion be) we may do very well to follow the advice St. Paul gives the Corinthians in this matter, 1 Cor. 16. 2. Upon the first day of the week let everyone of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him; If men would do thus, lay by somewhat weekly in store for this work of Charity, it were the surest way not to be unprovided of somewhat to give, when an occasion offered itself, and by giving so by little and little, the expense would become less sensible, and so be a means to prevent those grudgings, and repinings, which are apt to attend men in greater disbursements; And sure this were in other respects also a very proper course, for when a trades-man casts up his weekly account, and sees what his gains have been, 'tis of all others the most seasonable time to offer this tribute to God out of what he hath by his blessing gained; If any will say they cannot so well weekly reckon their gains, as by longer spaces of time, I shall not contend with them for that precise time, let it be done monthly, or quarterly, so it be done: But that somewhat should still be laid by in bank for these uses rather than left loose to our sudden Charities is sure very expedient, and I doubt not, whoever will make trial of it, will upon experience acknowledge it to be so.

12. The fourth exercise of our Charity is towards the credit of our neighbor: and of this we may have many occasions; sometimes towards the innocent, and sometimes also towards the guilty. If one whom we know to be an innocent person, be slandered, and traduced, Charity binds us to do what we may for the declaring his innocence, and delivering him from that false imputation, and that not only by witnessing when we are called to it, but by a voluntary offering our testimony on his behalf, or if the accusation be not before a Court of Justice, and so there be no place for that our more solemn testimony, but that it be only a slander tost from one to another, yet even there we are to do what we can to clear him, by taking all occasions publicly to declare what we know of his innocence. But even to the guilty there is some Charity of this kind to be performed, sometimes by concealing the fault, if it be such that no other part of Charity to others make it necessary to discover, or be it not so notorious, as that it will be sure to betray itself: The wounds of Reputation are of all others the most incurable, and therefore it may well become Christian Charity to prevent them, even where they have been deserved; and perhaps such a tenderness in hiding the fault may sooner bring the offender to Repentance, if it be seconded (as it ought to be) with all earnestness of private admonition: But if the fault be such, that it be not to be concealed, yet still there may be place for this Charity, in extenuating, and lessening it, as far as the circumstances will bear; As if it were done suddenly, and rashly, Charity will allow some abatement of the Censure, which would belong to a designed, and deliberate act; and so proportionably in other circumstances. But the most frequent exercises of this Charity happen towards those, of whose either innocence or guilt we have no knowledge, but are by some doubtful actions brought under suspicion: And here we must remember, that it is the property of love, not to think evil, to judge the best; and therefore we are both to abstain from uncharitable conclusions of them ourselves, and as much as lies in us, to keep others from them also, and so endeavor to preserve the credit of our neighbor, which is oftentimes as much shaken by unjust suspicions, as it would be by the truest accusation. To these cases, I suppose belongs that precept of Christ, Mat. 7. 1. Judge not; and when we consider, how that is backed in the following words, That ye be not judged, we shall have cause to believe it no such light matter, as the world seems to account it; Our merciful judging of others will be paid home to us, in the strict, and severe Judgment of God.

13. I have now gone through this Active Charity, as it relates to the four several capacities of our brethren, many of the particulars whereof were before briefly mentioned, when we spake of Justice. If any think it improper, that the same acts should be made part of Justice, and Charity too, I shall desire them to consider, that Charity being by Christ's command become a debt to our brethren, all the parts of it may in that respect be ranked under the head of Justice, since 'tis sure paying of debts is a part of that: Yet because in our common use we do distinguish between the offices of Justice and Charity, I have chose to enlarge on them in particular referenc to Charity. But I desire it may still be remembered, that whatsoever is under precept, is so much a due from us, that we sin not only against Charity, but Justice too, if we neglect it; Which deserves to be considered, the more to stir up our care to the performance, and the rather, because there seems to be a common error in this point; Men look upon their acts of mercy, as things purely voluntary, that they have no obligation to; and the effect of it is this, that they are apt to think very highly of themselves, when they have performed any, though never so mean, but never blame themselves, though they omit all: which is a very dangerous, but withal a very natural fruit of the former persuasion. If there be any Charities wherein Justice is not concerned, they are those which for the height and degrees of them are not made matter of strict duty, that is, are not in those degrees commanded by God, and even after these 'twill be very reasonable for us to labor; but that cannot be done without taking the lower and necessary degrees in our way; and therefore let our first care be for them.

14. To help us wherein there will be no better means, then to keep before our eyes that grand rule of Loving our Neighbors as ourselves; This the Apostle makes the sum of our Whole duty to our Neighbors, Rom. 13. 9. let this therefore be the standard, whereby to measure all thy actions, which relate to others; When ever any necessity of thy Neighbors presents itself to thee, ask thyself, whether if thou wert in the like case, thy love to thyself would not make thee industrious for relief, and then resolve thy love to thy Neighbor must have the same effect for him. This is that Royal Law, as St. James calls it, Jam. 2. 8. which all that profess themselves subjects to Christ, must be ruled by; and whosoever is so will not fail of performing all Charities to others, because 'tis sure he would upon the like occasions have all such performed to himself. There is none, but wishes to have his good name defended, his poverty relieved, his bodily sufferings succoured; Only it may be said, that in the spiritual wants, there are some so careless of themselves, that they wish no supply, they desire no reproofs, no instructions, nay, are angry when they are given them; it may therefore seem that such men are not by virtue of this rule tied to those sorts of Charities. To this I answer, that the love of ourselves, which is here set as the measure of that to our Neighbor, is to be understood to be that reasonable love, which men ought to have, and therefore though a man fail of that due love he owes himself, yet his Neighbor hath not thereby forfeited his right, he has still a claim to such a degree of our love, as is answerable to that, which in right we should bear to ourselves, and such I am sure is this care of our spiritual estate, and therefore 'tis not our despising our own Souls, that will absolve us from Charity to other men's, yet I shall not much press this duty in such men, it being neither likely that they will be persuaded to it, or do any good by it, their ill example will overwhelm all their good exhortations, and make them unfruitful.

15. There is yet one act of Charity behind, which does not properly fall under any one of the former heads, & yet may relate to them all, and that is, the Making peace, and amity among others; By doing whereof we may much benefit both the Souls, Bodies, Goods, and Credit of our brethren; for all these are in danger by strife and contention. The reconciling of enemies is a most blessed work, and brings a blessing on the actors: We have Christ's word for it, Blessed are the Peace-makers, Mat. 5. 9. and therefore we may be encouraged diligently to lay hold of all opportunities of doing this office of Charity, to use all our Art, and endeavor to take up all grudges and quarrels we discern among others; Neither must we only labor to restore peace where it is lost, but to preserve it where it is: First, generally, by striving to beget in the heart of all we converse with a true value of that most precious Jewel, Peace; Secondly, particularly, by a timely prevention of those jars, and unkindnesses, we see likely to fall out. It may many times be in the power of a discreet friend or neighbor, to cure those mistakes, and misapprehensions, which are the first beginnings of quarrels and contentions; and it will be both more easy and more profitable, thus to prevent, then pacify strifes. 'Tis sure 'tis more easy, for when a quarrel is once broken out, 'tis like a violent flame, which cannot so soon be quenched, as it might have been, whilst it was but a smothering fire. And then 'tis also more profitable, for it prevents many sins, which in the progress of an open contention, are almost sure to be committed. Solomon says, In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin, Prov. 10. 19. which cannot more truly be said of any sorts of words, then those that pass in anger, and then though the quarrel be afterwards composed, yet those sins will still remain on their account; and therefore it is a great Charity to prevent them.

16. But to fit a man for this so excellent an Office of Peace Making, 'Tis necessary that he be first remarkably peaceable himself; for with what face canst thou persuade others to that which thou wilt not perform thyself? or how canst thou expect thy persuasions should work? 'twill be a ready reply in every man's mouth, Thou Hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, Matth. 7. 5. and therefore be sure thou qualify thyself for the work. There is one point of Peaceableness which seems to be little regarded among men, and that is in the case of Legal trespasses; Men think it nothing to go to Law about every petty trifle, and as long as they have but Law on their side, never think they are to blame: but sure had we that true Peaceableness of spirit which we ought, we should be unwilling for such slight matters to trouble and disquiet our Neighbors. Not that all going to Law is utterly unchristian, but such kind of suits especially, as are upon contentiousness, and stoutness of humor, to defend such an inconsiderable right, as the parting with will do us little or no harm, or which is yet worse, to avenge such a trespass. And even in greater matters, he that shall part with somewhat of his Right for love of Peace, does surely the most Christianly, & most agreeably to the advice of the Apostle, Cor. 6. 7. rather to take wrong, and suffer ourselves to be defrauded. But if the damage be so unsupportable, that it is necessary for us to go to Law, yet even then we must take care of preserving Peace; first, by carrying still a friendly, and Christian temper towards the party, not suffering our hearts to be at all estranged from him; secondly, by being willing to yield to any reasonable terms of agreement, whenever they shall be offered; and truly if we carry not this temper of mind in our suits, I see not how they can be reconcilable with that peaceableness so strictly required of all Christians. Let those consider this who make it their pleasure themselves to disquiet their Neighbor, or their trade to stir up others to do it. This tender regard of Peace both in ourselves, and others, is absolutely necessary to be entertained of all those, who own themselves to be the servants of him, whose title it is to be the Prince of Peace, Isai. 9. 6.

17. All that remains to be touched on concerning this Charity of the Actions, is the extent of it, which must be as large as the former of the affections, even to the taking in not only strangers, and those of no relation to us, but even of our bitterest enemies. I have already spoken so much of the Obligation we are under to forgive them, that I shall not hear say anything of that, but that being supposed a duty, 'twill sure then appear no unreasonable thing to proceed one step further, by doing them good turns; for when we have once forgiven them, we can then no longer account them enemies, and so 'twill be no hard matter even to flesh and blood to do all kind things to them. And indeed this is the way, by which we must try the sincerity of our forgiveness: 'Tis easy to say, I forgive such a man, but if when an opportunity of doing him good is offered, thou declinest it, 'tis apparent there yet lurks the old malice in thy heart; Where there is a thorough forgiveness, there will be as great a readiness to benefit an enemy as a friend: nay perhaps in some respects a greater, a true charitable person looking upon it as an especial prize, when he has an opportunity of evidencing the truth of his reconciliation, and obeying the precept of his Savior, by doing good to them that hate him, Matth. 5. 44. Let us therefore resolve that all actions of kindness are to be performed to our enemies, for which we have not only the command, but also the example of Christ, who had not only some inward relentings towards us his obstinate, and most provoking enemies, but shown it in acts, and those no cheap, or easy ones, but such as cost him his dearest blood. And surely we can never pretend to be either obeyers of his command, or followers of his example, if we grudge to testify our loves to our enemies by those so much cheaper ways of feeding them in hunger, and the like, recommended to us by the Apostle, Rom. 12. 20. But if we could perform these acts of kindness to enemies in such manner as might draw them from their enmity, and win them to Peace, the Charity would be doubled: And this we should aim at, for that we see the Apostle sets as the end of the forementioned acts of feeding, &c. that we may heap coals of fire on their heads, not coals to burn, but to melt them into all love and tenderness towards us; and this were indeed the most complete way of imitating Christ's example, who in all he did and suffered for us, designed the reconciling of us to himself.

18. I have now shown you the several parts of our duty to our Neighbor, towards the performance whereof I know nothing more necessary, then the turning out of our hearts that self love which so often possesses them, and that so wholly, that it leaves no room for Charity, nay, nor justice neither to our Neighbor. By this self-love I mean not that true love of ourselves, which is the love and care of our Souls (for that would certainly help, not hinder us in this duty) but I mean that immoderate love of our own worldly interests, and advantages, which is apparently the root of all, both injustice and uncharitableness towards others. We find this sin of self-love set by the Apostle in the head of a whole troop of sins, 2 Tim. 3. 2. as if it were some principal officer in Satan's camp, and certainly, not without reason, for it never goes without an accursed train of many other sins, which like the Dragons tail Rev. 12. 4. sweeps away all care of duty to others. We are by it made so vehement, and intent upon the pleasing ourselves, that we have no regard to anybody else, contrary to the direction of S. Paul, Rom. 15. 2. Which is not to please ourselves, but every man to please his Neighbor for his good to edification; which he backs with the example of Christ, verse 3. For even Christ pleased not himself: If therefore we have any sincere desire to have this virtue of charity rooted in our hearts, we must be careful to weed out this sin of self-love, for 'tis impossible they can prosper together.

19. But when we have removed this hindrance, we must remember that this, as all other graces proceeds not from ourselves, it is the gift of God, and therefore we must earnestly pray to him to work it in us, to send his holy Spirit, which once appeared in the form of a dove, a meek and gall-less creature, to frame our hearts to the same temper, and enable us rightly to perform this duty.

20. I have now past through those several branches I at first proposed, and shown you what is our duty to God, ourselves, and ourneighbour: Of which I may say as it is, Luk. 10. 28. This do and thou shalt live. And surely it is no impossible task to perform this in such a measure, as God will graciously accept, that is in Sincerity, though not in perfection, for God is not that austere master, Luk 19. 20. That reaps where he has not sowed, he requires nothing of us, which he is not ready by his grace to enable us to perform; if we be not wanting to ourselves, either in asking it by prayer, or in using it by diligence. And as it is not impossible, so neither is it such a sad melancholy task, as men are apt to think it. 'Tis a special policy of Satan's, to do as the spies did, Num. 23. 28. bring up an ill report upon this good land, this state of Christian life, thereby to discourage us from entering into it, to fright us, with I know not what Giants we shall meet with; but let us not thus be cheated, let us but take the courage to try, and we shall indeed find it a Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey: God is not in this respect to his people a wilderness, a land of darkness, Jer. 2. 31. His service does not bereave men of any true joy, but helps thou to •• great deal: Christ's yoke is an easy, nay a pleasant yoke, his burden a light, yea a gracious burden. There is in the practice of Christian duties a great deal of present pleasure, and if we feel it not, it is because of the resistance our vicious and sinful customs make, which by the contention raises an uneasiness. But then first that is to be charged only to ourselves, for having got those ill customs, and thereby made that hard to us, which in itself is most pleasant, the duties are not to be accused for it. And then secondly, even there the pleasure of subduing those ill habits, overcoming those corrupt customs is such, as hugely outweigheth all the trouble of the combat.

21. But it will perhaps be said, that some parts of piety are of such a nature, as will be very apt to expose us to persecutions, and sufferings in the world, and that those are not joyous, but grievous; I answer, that even in those there is matter of joy: we see the Apostles thought it so, they rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer for Christ's name, Acts 4. 41. and S. Peter tells us, that if any suffer as a Christian, he is to glorify God for it, 1 Pet. 4. 16. There is such a force and virtue in the testimony of a good Conscience, as is able to change the greatest suffering into the greatest triumph, and that testimony we can never have more clear, and lively, then when we suffer for righteousness sake; so that you see Christianity is very amiable even in its saddest dress, the inward comforts of it do far surpass all the outward tribulations that attend it, and that even in the instant, while we are in the state of warfare upon earth. But then if we look forward to the crown of our victories, those eternal rewards in heaven, we can never think those tasks sad, though we had nothing at present to sweeten them, that have such recompenses await them at the end, were our labors never so heavy, we could have no cause to faint under them: Let us therefore when ever we meet with any discouragements in our course, fix our eye on this rich prize, and then run with patience the race which is set before us, Heb. 12. 2. Follow the Captain of our salvation through the greatest sufferings, yea even through the same red sea of blood which he hath waded, whenever our obedience to him shall require it; for though our fidelity to him should bring us to death itself, we are sure to be no losers by it, for to such he hath promised a Crown of life, the very expectation whereof is able to keep a Christian more cheerful in his fetters and dungeon, then a worldling can be in the midst of his greatest prosperities.

22. All that remains for me farther to add, is earnestly to entreat and beseech the Reader, that without delay, he puts himself into this so pleasant and gainful a course, by setting sincerely to the practice of all those things, which either by this Book, or by any other means he discerns to be his duty, and the further he hath formerly gone out of his way, the more haste it concerns him to make to get into it, and to use the more diligence in walking in it. He that hath a long journey to go, and finds he hath lost a great part of his day in a wrong way, will not need much entreaty, either to turn into the right, or to quicken his pace in it. And this is the case of all those that have lived in any course of sin, they are in a wrong road, which will never bring them to the place they aim at; Nay, which will certainly bring them to the place they most fear and abhor; much of their day is spent, how much will be left to finish their journey in, none knows, perhaps the next hour, the next minute the night of death may overtake them; what a madness is it then for them to defer one moment to turn out of that path which leads to certain destruction, and to put themselves in that, which will bring them to bliss and glory? Yet so are men bewitched, and enchanted with the deceitfulness of sin, that no entreaty, no persuasion can prevail with them, to make this so reasonable so necessary a change, not but that they acknowledge it needful to be done, but they are unwilling to do it yet, they would enjoy all the pleasures of sin as long as they live, & then they hope at their death, or some little time before it, to do all the business of their Souls; But, alas! Heaven is too high to be thus jump't into, the way to it is a long and leasurly ascent, which requires time to walk. The hazards of such deferring are more largely spoken of, in the Discourse of Repentance, I shall not here repeat them, but desire the Reader seriously to lay them to heart, and then surely he will think it seasonable counsel that is given by the wise man, Eccles. 5. 7. Make no tarrying to turn to the Lord, and put not off from day today.

FINIS.

PRIVATE DEVOTIONS For several OCCASIONS. ORDINARY and EXTRAORDINARY.

LONDON, Printed for T. Garthwait, at the little North Door of S. Paul's Church, 1660.

CHRISTIAN READER,

I Have, for the help of thy Devotions, set down some FORMS of PRIVATE PRAYER, upon several occasions: If it be thought an om•ssion that there are none for Families, I must answer for myself, that it was not from any opinion that God is not as well to be worshipp'd in the Family as the Closet; but because the Providence of God and the Church hath already furnished thee for that purpose, infinitely beyond what my utmost care could do. I mean the PUBLICK LITURGY, or COMMON PRAYER, which for all public addresses to God (and such are Family prayers) are so excellent & useful, that we may say of it as David did of Goliath's sword, 1 Sam. 21. 9. There is none like it.

DIRECTIONS for the MORNING.

As soon as ever thou awakest in the morning, lift up thy heart to God in this or the like short Prayer.

LORD, As thou hast awaked my Body from sleep, so by thy grace awaken my Soul from sin, and make me so to walk before thee this day and all the rest of my life, that when the last trumpet shall awake me out of my grave, I may rise to the life immortal, through Jesus Christ.

WHEN thou hast thus begun, suffer not (without some urgent necessity) any worldly thoughts to fill thy mind, till thou hast also paid thy more solemn Devotions to Almighty God, and therefore during the time thou art dressing thyself (which should be no longer then common decency requires) exercise thy mind in some spiritual thoughts: as for example, consider to what Temptations thy business or company that day are most like to lay thee open, and arm thyself with Resolutions against them; or again, consider what Occasions of doing service to God, or good to thy neighbor are that day most likely to present themselves, and resolve to embrace them; and also contrive how thou mayest improve them to the uttermost. But especially it will be sit for thee to Examine whether there have any sin escaped thee since thy last nights examination. If after these considerations any further leisure remain, thou mayest profitably employ it in meditating on the general Resurrection (whereof our rising from our beds is a Representation) and of that dreadful Judgment which shall follow it, and then think with thyself in what preparation thou art for it, and resolve to husband carefully every minute of thy time towards the fitting time for that great account. As soon as thou art ready retire to some private place, and there offer up to God thy Morning Sacrifice of Praise and Prayer.

PRAYERS for the MORNING.

At thy first kneeling down, say,

O Holy, Blessed and Glorious Trinity, three Persons and one God, have mercy upon me a miserable sinner.

LORD, I know not what to pray for as I ought, O let thy Spirit help my infirmities, and enable me to offer up a spiritual Sacrifice acceptable to thee by Jesus Christ.

A THANKSGIVING.

O Gracious Lord, whose mercies endure for eever, I thy unworthy servant who have so deeply tasted of them, desire to render thee the tribute of my humblest praises for them: In thee, O Lord, I live, and move and have my being, thou first madest me to be, and then that I might not be miserable but happy, thou sendest thy Son out of thy bosome to redeem me from the power of my sins by his Grace, and from the punishment of them by his Blood, and by both to bring me to his glory. Thou hast by thy mercy caused me to be born within thy peculiar fold, the Christian Church, where I was early consecrated to thee in Baptism, and have been partaker of all those spiritual helps which might aid me to perform that Vow I there made to thee; and when by my own willfulness or negligence I have failed to do it, yet thou in thy manifold mercies hast not forsaken me, but hast graciously invited me to repentance, afforded me all means both outward and inward for it, and with much patience hast attended and not cut me off in the acts of those many damning sins I have committed, as I have most justly deserved. It is, O Lord, thy restraining grace alone by which I have been kept back from any the greatest sins, and it is thy inciting and assisting grace alone, by which I have been enabled to do any the least good, therefore not unto me, not unto me, but unto thy name be the praises. For these and all other thy spiritual blessings, my soul doth magnify the Lord, and all that is within me praise his holy Name. I likewise praise thee for those many outward blessings I enjoy, as health, friends, food and raiment, the comforts as well as the necessaries of this life, for those continual protections of thy hand, by which I and mine are kept from dangers, and those gracious deliverances thou hast often afforded out of such as have befallen me; and for that mercy of thine whereby thou hast sweetened and allayed those troubles thou hast not seen sit wholly to remove: for thy particular preservation of me this night, and all other thy goodness towards me; Lord, grant that I may render thee not only the fruit of my lips, but the obedience of my life, that so these blessings here may be an earnest of those richer blessings thou hast prepared for those that love thee, and that for his sake whom thou hast made the Author of Eternal Salvation to all that obey him, even Jesus Christ.

A CONFESSION.

O Righteous Lord, who hatest iniquity, I thy sinful creature cast myself at thy feet, acknowledging that I most justly deserve to be utterly abhorred and forsaken by thee, for I have drunk iniquity like water, gone on in a continued course of sin and rebellion against thee, daily committing those things thou forbiddest, and leaving undone those things thou commandest; mine heart, which should be an habitation for thy spirit, is become a cage of unclean birds, of foul and disordered affections; and out of this abundance of the heart my mouth speaketh, my hands act, so that in thought, word, and deed I continually transgress against thee. [Here mention the greatest of thy sins] Nay, O Lord, I have despised that goodness of thine which should lead me to Repentance, hardening my heart against all those means thou hast used for my amendment. And now, Lord, what can I expect from thee but judgment and fiery indignation, that is indeed the due reward of my sins? But, O Lord, there is mercy with thee that thou mayest be feared, O fit me for that mercy by giving me a deep and hearty Repentance, and then according to thy goodness let thy anger and thy wrath be turned away from me; look upon me in thy Son, my blessed Savior, and for the merit of his sufferings pardon all my sins: And, Lord, I beseech thee by the power of thy grace so to renew and purify my heart, that I may become a new creature, utterly forsaking every evil way, and living in constant, sincere, universal obedience to thee all the rest of my days, that behaving myself as a good and faithful servant, I may by thy mercy at the last be received into the joy of my Lord: Grant this for Jesus Christ his sake.

A PRAYER for GRACE.

O Most gracious God, from whom every good and perfect gift cometh, I wretched creature that am not able of myself so much as to think a good thought, beseech thee to work in me both to will and do according to thy good pleasure; enlighten ••, ⟨◇⟩ that I may know thee, and let me not be barren or unfruitful in that knowledge; Lord, work in my heart a true faith a purifying hope, and an unfeigned love towards thee, give me a full trust on thee, zeal for thee, reverence of all things that relate to thee; make me fearful to offend thee, thankful for thy mercies, humble under thy corrections, devout in thy service, sorrowful for my sins; and grant that in all things I may behave myself so as befits a creature to his Creator, a servant to his Lord; enable me likewise to perform that duty I owe to myself, give me that meekness, humility, and contentedness whereby I may always possess my soul in patience and thankfulness; make me diligent in all my duties, watchful against all temptations, perfectly pure and temperate, and so moderate in my most lawful enjoyments that they never become a snare to me; make me also, O Lord, to be so affected towards my neighbor, that I never transgress that royal Law of thine, of loving him as myself; grant me exactly to perform all parts of justice, yielding to all whatsoever by any kind of right becomes their due; and give me such bowels of mercy and compassion that I may never fail to do all acts of charity to all men, whether friends or enemies, according to thy command and example. Finally, I beseech thee, O Lord, to sanctify me throughout, that my whole spirit and soul and body may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; to whom with thee and the Holy Ghost be all honor and glory forever.

Amen.

INTERCESSION.

OBlessed Lord, whose mercy is over all thy works, I beseech thee to have mercy upon all men, and grant that the precious ransom which was paid by thy Son for all, may be effectual to the saving of all. Give thy enlightening grace to those that are in darkness, and thy converting grace to those that are in sin; look with thy tenderest compassions upon the Universal Church, O be favorable and gracious unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem, unite all those that profess thy Name to thee, by Purity, and Holiness, and to each other by Brotherly love. Have mercy on this desolate Church, and sinful Nation, thou hast moved the Land and divided it, heal the sores thereof for it shaketh, make us so truly to repent of those sins, which have provoked thy Judgments, that thou also mayest turn, and repent, and leave a blessing behind thee. Bless those whom thou hast appointed our Governors, whether in Church or State, so rule their hearts, and strengthen their hands, that they may neither want will nor power to punish wickedness and vice, and to maintain God's true Religion and Virtue. Have pity, O Lord, on all that are in affliction; be a Father to the fatherless, and plead the cause of the widow, comfort the feeble minded, support the weak, heal the sick, relieve the needy, defend the oppressed, and administer to everyone according to their several necessities; let thy blessings rest upon all that are near and dear to me, and grant them whatsoever thou seest necessary either to their bodies or their Souls. [Here name thy nearest Relations] Reward all those that have done me good, and pardon all those that have done, or wisht me evil, and work in them and me all that good which may make us acceptable in thy sight, through Jesus Christ.

For PRESERVATION.

OMerciful God, by whose bounty alone it is, that I have this day added to my life, I beseech thee so to guide me in it by thy grace, that I may do nothing which may dishonor thee, or wound my own soul, but that I may diligently apply myself to do all such good works, as thou hast prepared for me to walk in; and Lord I beseech thee, give thy Angels charge over me, to keep me in all my ways, that no evil happen unto me, nor any plague come nigh my dwelling, but that I and mine may be safe under thy gracious protection, through Jesus Christ.

O Lord, pardon the wanderings and coldness of these petitions, and deal with me, not according either to my prayers or deserts, but according to my needs, and thine own rich mercies in Jesus Christ, in whose blessed Name and Words, I conclude these my imperfect Prayers; saying, Our Father, &c.

DIRECTIONS for NIGHT.

AT NIGHT, when it draws towards the time of rest, bethink thyself, how thou hast passed the day, examine thine own heart, what sin either of Thought, Word, or Deed thou hast committed, what opportunity of doing good thou hast omitted, and whatsoever thou findest to accuse thyself of, confess humbly and penitently to God, renew thy purposes, and resolutions of amendment, and beg his pardon in Christ, and this not slightly, and only as of course, but with all devout earnestness, and heartiness, as thou wouldest do, if thou were sure thy death were as near approaching, as thy sleep, which for ought thou knowest may be so indeed, and therefore thou shouldest no more venture to sleep unreconciled to God, then thou wouldest dare to die so. In the next place, consider what special and extraordinary mercies thou hast that day received, as if thou hast had any great deliverance, either in thy inward man, from some dangerous temptations, or in thy outward, from any great and apparent danger, and offer to God thy hearty and devout praise for the same; or if nothing extraordinary have so happened, and thou hast been kept even from the approach of danger, thou hast not the less, but the greater cause to magnify God, who hath by his protection so guarded thee, that not so much as the fear of evil hath assaulted thee. And therefore omit not to pay him the tribute of humble thankfulness, as well for his usual and daily preservations, as his more extraordinary deliverances. And above all, endeavor still by the considerations of his mercies to have thy heart the more closely knit to him, remembering that every favor received from him is a new engagement upon thee, to love and obey him.

PRAYERS for NIGHT.

O Holy, blessed and glorious Trinity, three persons and one God, have mercy upon me a miserable sinner.

Lord I know not what to pray for as I ought, O let thy Spirit help my infirmities, and enable me to offer up a spiritual Sacrifice acceptable unto thee by Jesus Christ.

A CONFESSION.

O MOST Holy Lord God, who art of purer eyes then to behold iniquity, how shall I abominable wretch dare to appear before thee, who am nothing but pollution? I am defiled in my very nature, having a backwardness to all good, and a readiness to all evil; but I have defiled myself yet much worse by my own actual sins and wicked customs; I have transgressed my duty to thee, my neighbor, and myself, and that both in thought, in word, in deed, by doing those things which thou hast expressly forbidden, and by neglecting to do those things thou hast commanded me. And this not only through ignorance and frailty, but knowingly, and willfully, against the motions of thy Spirit, and the checks of my own conscience to the contrary. And to make all these out of measure sinful, I have gone on in a daily course of repeating these provocations against thee, notwithstanding all thy calls to, and my own purposes and vows of amendment; yea, this very day I have not ceased to add new sins to all my former guilts. [Here name the Particulars.] And now, O Lord, what shall I say, or how shall I open my mouth, seeing I have done these things? I know that the wages of these sins is death; but O thou who willest not the death of a sinner, have mercy upon me; work in me, I beseech thee, a sincere contrition, and a perfect hatred of my sins, and let me not daily confess, and yet as daily renew them, but grant; O Lord, that from this instant I may give a bill of Divorce to all my most beloved lusts, and then be thou pleased to marry me to thyself in truth, in righteousness and holiness. And for all my past sins, O Lord, receive a reconciliation; accept of that ransom thy blessed Son hath paid for me, and for his sake whom thou hast set forth as a propitiation▪ pardon all my offenses, and receive me to thy favor. And when thou hast thus spoken peace to my soul, Lord keep me that I turn not anymore to folly, but so establish me with thy grace, that no temptation of the world, the Devil or my own flesh may ever draw me to offend thee, that being made free from sin, and becoming a servant unto God, I may have my fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

A THANKSGIVING.

O Thou Father of Mercies, who art kind even to the unthankful, I acknowledge myself to have abundantly experimented that gracious property of thine, for notwithstanding my daily provocations against thee, thou still heapest mercy and loving kindness upon me. All my contempts and despisings of thy spiritual favors have not yet made thee withdraw them, but in the riches of thy goodness and long suffering thou still continuest to me the offers of grace and life in thy Son. And all my abuses of thy temporal blessings thou hast not punished with an utter deprivation of them, but art still pleased to afford me a liberal portion of them. The sins of this day thou hast not repaid as justly thou mightest, by sweeping me away with a swift destruction, but hast spared and preserved me according to the greatness of thy mercy. [Here mention the particular mercies of that day.] What shall I render unto the Lord for all these benefits he hath done unto me? Lord, let this goodness of thine lead me to repentance, and grant that I may not only offer thee thanks and praise, but may also order my conversation aright, that so I may at the last see the salvation of God, through Jesus Christ.

Here use the Prayer for Grace and that of Intercession appointed for the Morning.

For PRESERVATION.

O Blessed Lord, the Keeper of Israel, that neither slumbrest nor sleepest, be pleased in thy mercy to watch over me this night, keep me by thy grace from all works of darkness, and defend me by thy power from all dangers, grant me moderate and refreshing sleep, such as may fit me for the duties of the day following. And, Lord, make me ever mindful of that time when I shall lie down in the dust; and because I know neither the day nor the hour of my Masters coming, grant me grace that I may be always ready, that I may never live in such a state as I shall fear to die in, but that whether I live, I may live unto the Lord; or whether I die, I may die unto the Lord, so that living and dying I may be thine, through Jesus Christ.

Use the same concluding prayer as in the Morning.

As thou art putting off thy clothes, think with thyself that the time approaches that thou must put off thy body also, and then thy Soul must appear naked before God's judgment Seat, and therefore thou hadst need be careful to make it so clean and pure by repentance and holiness, that he who will not look on iniquity may graciously behold and accept it.

Let thy Bed put thee in mind of thy Grave, and when thou liest down, say,

O Blessed Savior, who by thy precious death & burial didst take away the sting of death and power of the grave, grant me the joyful fruits of that thy victory, and be thou to me in life and death advantage.

I will lay me down in peace, and take my rest, for it is thou Lord only that makest me dwell in safety.

Into thy hands I commend my spirit, for thou hast redeemed it, O Lord, thou God of truth.

IN the ANTIEN Church there were besides morning and night four other times every day which were called HOURS OF PRAYER, and the zeal of those first Christians was such as made them constantly observed. It would be thought too great a strictness now in this lukewarm age to enjoin the like frequency, yet I cannot but mention the example, and say, that for those who are not by very necessary business prevented, it will be but reasonable to imitate it, and make up in public and private those FOUR TIMES of PRAYER, besides the OFFICES already set down for MORNING and NIGHT: and that none may be to seek how to exercise their devotions at these times, I have added divers COLLECTS for several GRACES, whereof every man may use at each such time of prayer so many as his zeal and leisure shall point out to him, adding, if he please, one of the confessions appointed for morning or night, and never omitting the LORD'S PRAYER.

But if any mans state of life be really so busy as will not allow him time for so long and solemn devotions, yet certainly there is no man so overlaid with business, but that he may sinde leisure oftentimes in a day to say the LORD'S PRAYER alone, and therefore let him use that if he cannot more. But because it is the Character of a Christian, Phil. 3. 20. That he hath his conversation in heaven, it is very fit that besides these set times of Prayer, he should divers times in a day by short and sudden EJACULATIONS dart up his soul thither. And for this sort of devotion no man can want leisure, for it may be performed in the midst of business; the Artisicer at his work, the Husbandman at his Plough may practice it. Now as he cannot want time, so that he may not want matter for it, I have thought it not unuseful out of that rich storehouse, the BOOK of PSALMS, to furnish him with some texts, which may very fitly be used for this purpose, which being learned by heart will always be ready at hand to employ his devotion; and the matter of them being various, some for Pardon of sin; some for Grace, some for the light of God's countenance, some for the Church, some for Thanksgiving, &c. every man may fit himself according to the present need and temper of his soul. I have given these not as a full collection, but only as a taste, by which the Readers appetite may be raised to search after more in that Book, and other parts of holy Scripture.

COLLECTS for several GRACES.

For FAITH.

O Blessed Lord, whom without Faith it is impossible to please, let thy spirit I beseech thee work in me such a Faith as may be acceptable in thy sight, even such as worketh by love, O let me not rest in a dead ineffectual Faith, but grant that it may be such as may show itself by my works, that it may be that victorious Faith which may enable me to overcome the world, and conform me to the Image of that Christ, on whom I believe, that so at the last I may receive the end of my Faith, even the salvation of my soul, by the same Jesus Christ.

For HOPE.

O Lord, who art the hope of all the ends of the earth, let me never be destitute of a well grounded hope, nor yet possessed with a vain presumption, suffer me not to think thou wilt either be reconciled to my sins, or reject my repentance, but give me, I beseech thee, such a hope as may be answerable to the only ground of hope, thy promises, and such as may both encourage and enable me to purify myself from all filthiness, both of flesh and Spirit, that so it may indeed become to me an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, entering even within the veil, whither the forerunner is for me entered, even Jesus Christ my High Priest and blessed Redeemer.

For THE LOVE of GOD.

O Holy and gracious Lord, who art infinitely excellent in thyself, and infinitely bountiful and compassionate towards me, I beseech thee suffer not my heart to be so hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, as to resist such charms of love, but let them make deep and lasting impressions on my soul. Lord, thou art pleased to require my heart, and thou only hast right to it. O let me not be so sacrilegiously unjust as to alienate any part of it, but enable me to render it up whole and entire to thee. But, O my God, thou seest it is already usurped, the world with its vanities hath seized it, and like a strong man armed keeps possession, O thou who art stronger come upon him, and take this unworthy heart of mine as thine own spoil, refine it with that purifying fire of thy love, that it may be a fit habitation for thy Spirit: Lord, if thou see it fit, be pleased to let me taste of those joys, those ravishments of thy love, wherewith thy Saints have been so transported. But if in this I know not what I ask, if I may not choose my place in thy Kingdom, yet O Lord, deny me not to drink of thy cup, let me have such a sincerity & degree of love, as may make me endure anything for thy sake, such a perfect love as may cast out all fear & all sloth too, that nothing may seem to me too grievous to suffer, or too difficult to do in obedience to thee, that so expressing my love by keeping thy Commandments, I may by thy mercy at last obtain that Crown of life, which thou hast promised to those that love thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

For SINCERITY.

O Holy Lord, who requirest truth in the inward parts, I humbly beseech thee to purge me from all hypocrisy and unsincerity. The heart O Lord, is deceitful above all things, and my heart is deceitful above all hearts, O thou who searchest the heart and reins, try me, and seek the ground of my heart, and suffer not any accursed thing to lurk within me, but purify me even with fire, so thou consume my dross. O Lord, I cannot deceive thee, but I may most easily deceive myself, I beseech thee let me not rest in any such deceit, but bring me to a sight and hatred of my most hidden corruptions, that I may not cherish any darling lust, but make an utter destruction of every Amalekite; O suffer me not to speak peace to myself, when there is no peace, but grant I may judge of myself, as thou judgest of me, that I may never be at peace with myself, till I am at perfect peace with thee, and by purity of heart be qualified to see thee in thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ.

For DEVOTION in PRAYER.

O Gracious Lord God, who not only perittest, but invitest us miserable and needy creatures, to present our petitions to thee, grant I beseech thee, that the frequency of my prayer may be some what proportionable to those continual needs I have of thy mercy: Lord, I confess, it is the greatest honor and greatest advantage, thus to be allowed access to thee, yet so sottish and stupid is my profane heart, that it shuns or frustrates the opportunities of it. My Soul, O Lord, is possessed with a spirit of infirmity, it is bowed together, and can in no wise lift up itself to thee. O be thou pleased to cure this sad, this miserable disease, to inspirit and inliven this earthy drosly heart, that it may freely mount towards thee, that I may set a true value on this most valuable privilege, and take delight in approaching to thee, and that my approaches may be with a reverence, some way answerable to that awful Majesty I come before, with an importunity and earnestness, answerable to those pressing wants I have to be supplied, and with such a fixedness and attention of mind, as no wandering thoughts may interrupt; that I may no more incur the guilt of drawing near to thee with my lips, when my heart is far from thee, or have my prayers turned into sin, but may so ask that I may receive, seek that I may find, knock that it may be opened unto me: that from praying to thee here, I may be translated to the praising thee eternally in thy glory, through the merits and intercession of Jesus Christ.

For HUMILITY.

O Thou High and Lofty one, that inhabitest Eternity, yet art pleased to dwell with the humble spirit, pour into my heart I beseech thee, that excellent grace of Humility, which may utterly work out all those vain conceits I have of myself; Lord convince me powerfully of my own wretchedness, make me to see that I am miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked, and not only dust, but sin, that so in all thy dispensations towards me, I may lay my hand upon my mouth, and heartily acknowledge that I am less then the least of thy mercies, and greater then the greatest of thy judgments. And O Lord, grant me not only to walk humbly with my God, but even with men also, that I may not only submit myself to thy rebukes, but even to those of my fellow Christians, and with weekness receive and obey their admonitions. And make me so to behave myself towards all, that I never do anything through strife or vain glory; and to that end grant, that in low liness of mind I may esteem every other man better then myself, and be wiling that others should esteem them so also; that I neither nourish any high opinion of myself, nor covet one among others, but that despising the vain praise of men, I may seek that praise which cometh from thee only. That so instead of those mean servile Arts I have used to recommend me to the esteem of men, I may now employ all my industry and care to approve myself to thee, who resistest the proud, and givest grace to the humble: grant this, O Lord, for his sake, who humbled himself unto the death of the Cross, Jesus Christ.

For the FEAR of GOD.

O Glorious Majesty, who only art high, and to be feared, possess my soul with a Holy awe and reverence of thee, that I may give thee the honor due unto thy Name, and may bear such a respect to all things which relate to thee, that I may never profane any Holy thing, or sacrilegiously invade what thou hast set apart to thyself. And, O Lord, since thou art a God that wilt not clear the guilty, let the dread of thy justice make me tremble to provoke thee in anything, O let me not so misplace my fear, as to be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the Son of man, who shall be made as grass, and forget the Lord my Maker; but replenish my Soul with that fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom, which may be as a bridle to all my brutish appetites, and keep me in a constant conformity to thy Holy will. Hear me, O Lord, I beseech thee, and put this fear in my heart, that I may not depart from thee, but may with fear and trembling work out my own Salvation, through Jesus Christ.

For TRUST on GOD.

O Almighty Lord, who never failest them that must on thee, give me grace. I beseech thee, in all my difficulties and distresses, to have recourse to thee, to rest and depend on thee; thou shalt keep him, O Lord, in perfect peace, whose mind is staid on thee, O let me always rest on this firm Pillar, and never exchange it for the broken reeds of worldly succors, suffer not my heart to be overcharged with the cares of this life, taking thought what I shall eat, or drink or wherewithal I shall be clothed, but grant, that having by honest labor and industry done my part, I may cheerfully commit myself to thy providence, casting all my care upon thee, and being careful for nothing, but to be of the number of those whom thou ownest and carest for, even such as keep thy Testimonies and think upon thy Commandments to do them. That seeking first thy Kingdom and the righteousness thereof, all these outward things may be added unto me, in such a measure as thy wisdom knows best for me; grant this O Lord, for Jesus Christ his sake.

For THANKFULNES.

O Most Gracious and Bountiful Lord, who fillest all things living with good, and expectest no other return, but praise and thanksgiving, let me O Lord, never defraud thee of that so easy tribute, but let my heart be ever filled with the sense, and my mouth with the acknowledgement of thy mercies. It is a joyful and a pleasant thing to be thankful, O suffer me not I beseech thee, to loose my part in that Divine pleasure, but grant that as I daily receive blessings from thee, so I may daily from an affectionate and devout heart offer up thanks to thee, and grant that not only my lips, but my life may show forth thy praise, by consecrating myself to thy service, and walking in Holiness and Righteousness before thee all the days of my life, through Jesus Christ my Lord and blessed Savior.

For CONTRITION.

O Holy Lord, who art a merciful embracer of true penitents, but yet a consuming fire towards obstinate sinners, how shall I approach thee, who have so many provoking sins to inflame thy wrath, and so little sincere repentance to incline thy mercy! O be thou pleased to soften and melt this hard obdurate heart of mine, that I may heartily bewail the iniquities of my life, strike this rock, O Lord, that the waters may flow out, even floods of tears, to wash my polluted conscience; my drowsy Soul hath too long slept securely in sin, Lord awake it though it be with thunder, and let me rather ••• thy terrors then not feel my sin. Thou sentest thy blessed Son to heal the broken hearted, but Lord, what will that avail me if my heart be whole. O break it that it may be capable of his healing virtue; and grant, I beseech thee, that having once tasted the bitterness of sin, I may fly from it, as from the face of a Serpent, and bring forth fruits of repentance in amendment of life, to the praise and glory of thy grace in Jesus Christ our blessed Redeemer.

For MEEKNES.

O Blessed Jesu, who wast led as a sheep to the slaughter, let, I beseech thee, that admirable example of Meekness quench in me all sparks of anger and revenge, and work in me such a gentleness and calmness of Spirit as no provocations may ever be able to disturb. Lord, grant I may be so far from offering the least injury, that I may never return the greatest any otherwise then with prayers and kindness, that I who have so many talents to be forgiven by thee may never exact pence of my brethren, but that putting on bowels of mercy, meekness, longsuffering, thy peace may rule in my heart and make it an acceptable habitation to thee, who art the Prince of peace, to whom with the Father and holy Spirit be all honor and glory forever.

For CHASTITY.

O Holy and Immaculate Jesus, whose first descent was into the Virgins womb, and who dost still love to inhabit only in pure and virgin hearts, I beseech thee send thy Spirit of purity to cleanse me from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit; my body, O Lord, is the Temple of the Holy Ghost, O let me never pollute that Temple with any uncleanness. And because out of the heart proceed the things that defile the man, Lord grant me to keep my heart with all diligence, that no impure or foul thoughts be harboured there, but enable me, I beseech thee, to keep both body and soul pure and undefiled, that so I may glorify thee here both in my body and spirit, and be glorified in both with thee hereafter.

For TEMPERANCE.

O Gracious Lord, who hast in thy bounty to mankind afforded us the use of thy good creatures for our corporal refreshment, grant that I may always use this liberty with thankfulness and moderation; O let me never be so enslaved to that brutish pleasure of taste, that my Table become a snare to me, but give me, I beseech thee, a perfect abhorrence of all degrees of excess, and let me eat and drink only for those ends, and according to those measures which thou hast assigned me for health and not for luxury. And, Lord, grant that my pursuits may be not after the meat that perisheth, but after that which endureth to everlasting life, that hungering and thirsting after righteousness I may be filled with thy grace here, and thy glory hereafter, through Jesus Christ.

For CONTENTEDNES.

O Merciful God, thy wisdom is infinite to choose, & thy love forward to dispence good things to us, O let me always fully and entirely resign myself to thy disposals, have no desires of mine own, but a perfect satisfaction in thy choices for me, that so in whatsoever estate I am, I may be therein content. Lord grant I may never look with murmuring on my own condition, nor with envy on other men's. And to that end, I beseech thee, purge my heart of all covetous affections, O let me never yield up any corner of my Soul to Mammon, but give me such a contempt of these fading riches, that whether they increase or decrease I may never set my heart upon them, but that all my care may be to be rich towards God, to lay up my treasure in heaven, that I may so set my affections on things above, that when Christ who is my life shall appear, I may also appear with him in glory. Grant this, O Lord, for the merits of the same Jesus Christ.

For DILIGENCE.

O Lord, who hast in thy wisdom ordained that man should be born to labor, suffer me not to resist that design of thine by giving myself up to sloth and idleness; but grant I may so employ my time and all other talents thou hast entrusted me with, that I may not fall under the sentence of the slothful and wicked servant; Lord, if it be thy will, make me some way useful to others, that I may not live an unprofitable part of mankind; but however, O Lord, let me not be useless to myself, but grant I may give all diligence to make my calling and election sure: My soul is beset with many and vigilant adversaries, O let me not fold my hands to sleep in the midst of so great dangers, but watch and pray, that I enter not into temptation, enduring hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, till at the last from this state of warfare thou translate me to the state of triumph and bliss in thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ.

For JUSTICE.

O Thou King of righteousness, who hast Commanded us to keep judgment and do Justice, be pleased by thy grace to cleanse my heart and hands from all fraud and injustice, and give me a perfect integrity and uprightness in all my dealings. O make me ever abhor to use my power to oppress, or my skill to deceive my brother, and grant I may most strictly observe that sacred rule of doing as I would be done to, that I may not dishonor my Christian profession by an unjust or fraudulent life, but in simplicity and godly sincerity, have my conversation in this life, never seeking to heap up treasures of wickedness, but preferring a little with righteousness before great revenues without right. Lord, make me exactly careful to render to every man what by any sort of obligation becomes his due, that I may never break the bond of any of those relations that thou hast placed me in, but may so behave myself towards all, that none may have any evil thing to say of me, that so, if it be possible, I may have peace with all men, or however I may by keeping innocence and taking heed to the thing that is right, have peace at the last, even peace with thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

For CHARITY.

O Merciful Lord, who hast made of one blood, and redeemed by one ransom all Nations of men, let me never harden my bowels against any that partake of the same nature and redemption with me, but grant me an universal charity towards all men. Give me, O thou father of compassions, such a tenderness and meltingness of heart, that I may be deeply affected with all the miseries and calamities outward or inward of my brethren, and diligently employ all my abilities for their succor and relief. O let not an unchristian self love possess my heart, but drive out that accursed spirit, and let thy Spirit of love enter and dwell there, and make me seek not to please myself, but my neighbor for his good to edification, even as Christ pleased not himself, Lord, make me a faithful steward of all those talents thou hast committed to me for the benefit of others, that so when thou shalt call me to give an account of my stewardship, I may do it with joy and not with grief. Grant this merciful Lord, I beseech thee for Jesus Christ his sake.

For PERSEVERANCE

O Eternal and unchangeable Lord God, who art the same yesterday and today, and forever. Be thou pleased to communicate some small Ray of that excellence, some degree of that stability to me thy wretched creature who am light and inconstant, turned about with every blast; my understanding is very deceivable, O establish it in thy truth, keep it from the snares of seducing spirits, that I may not be led away with the error of the wicked and fall from my own stedfastness: my will also, O Lord, is irresolute and wavering, and doth not cleave steadfastly unto God, my goodness is but as the morning cloud, and as the early dew it passeth away. O strengthen and confirm me, and whatever good work thou hast wrought in me, be pleased to accomplish and perform it until the day of Christ. Lord thou seest my weakness, and thou knowest the number and strength of those temptations I have to struggle with, O leave me not to myself, but cover thou my head in the day of battle and in all spiritual combats make me more then conqueror through him that loved me. O let no terrors or slatteries either of the world or my own flesh ever draw me from my obedience to thee, but grant that I may continue steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; & by patient continuance in well doing, seek, & at last obtain glory, and honor, and Immortality, and eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

A Brief Paraphrase of the LORD'S PRAYER To be used as a Prayer.

[Our Father which art in Heaven.]

O LORD, who dwellest in the highest heavens, thou art the Author of our being, thou hast also begotten us again unto a lively hope, and carriest towards us the tenderness and bowels of a compassionate father. O make us to render to thee the love and obedience of children; and that we may resemble thee our father in heaven (that place of true delight and purity) give us a holy disdain of all the deceitful pleasures and foul pollutions of this world, and so raise up our minds that we may always have our conversation in heaven, from whence we look for our Savior the Lord Jesus Christ.

[1. Hallowed be thy Name.]

STRIKE such an awe into our hearts, that we may humbly reverence thee in thy Name, which is great, wonderful and holy, and carry such a sacred respect to all things that relate to thee and thy worship, as may express our reverence of thy great Majesty. Let all the people praise thee, O God, let all the people praise thee.

[2. Thy Kingdom come.]

Establish thy Throne and rule forever in our souls, and by the power of thy grace subdue all those rebellious corruptions that exalt themselves against thee, they are those enemies of thine which would not that thou shouldst reign over them, O let them be brought forth and slain before thee, and make us such faithful subjects of this thy Kingdom of Grace, that we may be capable of the Kingdom of Glory, and then Lord Jesus come quickly.

[3. Thy will be done in earth, &c.]

ENABLE us by thy grace cheerfully to suffer thy will in all thy inflictions, and readily to perform it in all thy commands, give us of that heavenly zeal to thy service, wherewith the blessed Angels of thy presence are inspired, that we may obey thee with the like fervor and alacrity, and that following them in their obedience, we may be joined with them to sing eternal praises in thy Kingdom to God, and to the Lamb forever.

[4. Give us this day our daily bread.]

GIVE us that continual supply of thy grace, which may sustain and nourish our souls unto eternal life. And be thou pleased also to provide for our bodies all those things which thou seest fit for their support, through this our earthly pilgrimage, and make us cheerfully to rest on thee for them, first seeking thy Kingdom and the righteousness thereof, and then not doubting but all these things shall be added unto us.

[5. Forgive us our Trespases, as we forgive them, &c.]

HEAL our souls, O Lord, for we have sinned against thee, let thy tender mercies abound towards us, in the forgiveness of all our offenses; And grant O Lord, that we may never forfeit this pardon of thine, by denying ours to our brethren, but give us those bowels of compassion to others which we stand in so much greater need of from thee, that we may forgive as fully and finally upon Christ's command, as we desire to be forgiven, for his merits and intercession.

[6. Lead us not into Temptation but deliver, &c.]

O LORD, we have no strength against those multitudes of temptations that daily assault us, only our eyes are upon thee, O be thou pleased either to restrain them or assist us, and in thy faithfulness suffer us not to be tempted above that we are able, but in all our temptations make us a way to escape that we be not overcome by them, but may when thou shalt call us to it, resist even unto blood, striving against sin, that being faithful unto death, thou mayest give us the crown of life.

[For thine is the Kingdom, the Power, &c.]

HEAR us & graciously answer our petitions for thou art the great King over all the earth, whose Power is infinite, and art able to do for us above all that we can ask or think, and to whom belongeth the Glory of all that good thou workest in us or for us. Therefore blessing, honor, glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, to our God, forever and ever,

Amen.

Pious EJACULATIONS Taken out of the Book of PSALMS.

For PARDON of SIN.

HAVE mercy on me, O God, after thy great goodness, according to the multitude of thy mercies do away mine offenses.

Wash me thoroughly from my wickedness, and cleanse me from my sin.

Turn thy face from my sins, and put out all my misdeeds.

My misdeeds prevail against me, O be thou merciful unto my sins.

Enter not into judgment with thy servant, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

For thy names sake, O Lord, be merciful unto my sin, for it is great.

Turn thee, O Lord, and deliver my soul, O save me for thy mercies sake.

For GRACE.

TEACH me to do the thing that pleaseth thee, for thou art my God.

Teach me thy way, O Lord, and I will walk in thy truth, O knit my heart to thee, that I may fear thy name.

Make me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me.

O let my heart be sound in thy statutes, that I be not ashamed.

Incline my heart unto thy I estimonies, and not to covetousness.

Turn away mine eyes, lest they behold vanity, and quicken thou me in thy way.

I am a stranger upon earth, O hide not thy Commandments from me.

Lord teach me to number my days, that I may apply my heart unto wisdom.

For the LIGHT of God's COUNTENANCE.

LORD, why abhorrest thou my soul, and hidest thy face from me? O hide not thou thy face from me, nor cast thy servant away in displeasure.

Thy loving kindness is better then life itself.

Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me.

Comfort the Soul of thy servant, for unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul.

THANKSGIVING.

I WILL always give thanks unto the Lord, his praise shall ever be in my mouth.

Thou art my God, and I will thank thee, thou art my God and I will praise thee.

I will sing unto the Lord, as long as I live, I will praise my God whilst I have my being.

Praised be God which hath not cast out my prayer, nor turned his mercy from me.

Blessed be the Lord God, even the God of Israel, which only doth wondrous things.

And blessed be the Name of his Majesty forever, and all the earth shall be filled with his Majesty,

Amen, Amen.

For DELIVERANCE from TROUBLE.

BE merciful unto me, O Lord, be merciful unto me, for my Soul trusteth in thee, and under the shadow of thy wings shall be my refuge, until these calamities be over-past.

Deliver me, O Lord, from mine enemies, for I fly unto thee to hide me.

O keep my Soul, and deliver me, let me not be confounded, for I have put my trust in thee.

Mine eyes are ever looking unto the Lord, for he shall pluck my feet out of the net.

Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, for I am desolate and in misery.

The sorrows of my heart are enlarged, O bring thou me out of my troubles.

For the CHURCH.

O BE favorable and gracious unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

O God, wherefore art thou absent from us so long? Why is thy wrath so hot against the sheep of thy pasture?

O think upon thy Congregation, whom thou hast purchased and Redeemed of old.

Look upon the Tribe of thine Inheritance, and Mount Zion where thou hast dwelt

It is time for thee, Lord. to lay to thy hand, for they have destroyed thy Law.

Arise, O God, and maintain thine own cause.

Deliver Israel, O God, out of all his troubles.

Not laboring to make peace among others.

The use of this Catalogue of sins is this: Upon days of Humiliation, especially before the Sacrament, read them consideringly over, and at every particular ask thine own heart, Am I guilty of this •And whatsoever by such Examination thou findest thyself faulty in, Confess particularly, and humbly to God, with all the heightening circumstances, which may any way increase their guilt, and make serious Resolutions against every such Sin, for the future; after which thou ••ayest use this Form following.

O LORD, I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face to thee, for my iniquities are increased over my head, and my trespass is grown up even unto Heaven. I have wrought all these great provocations, and that in the most provoking manner, they have not been only single but repeated acts of sin: for, O Lord, of all this black Catalogue which I have now brought forth before thee, how few are there which I have not often committed, nay, which are not become even habitual and customary to me? And to this frequency, I have added both a greediness, and obstinacy in sinning, turning into my course as the Horse rusheth into the battle, doing evil with both hands, earnestly, yea, hating to be reformed, and casting thy words behind me, quenching thy Spirit within me, which testified against me, to turn me from my evil ways, and frustrating all those outward means whether of judgment or mercy, which thou hast used to draw me to thy self. Nay, O Lord, even my repentances may be numbered amongst my greatest sins, they have sometimes been feigned and hypocritical, always so slight and ineffectual, that they have brought forth no fruit in amendment of life, but I have still returned with the dog to his vomit, and the sow to the mire again, and have added the breach of resolutions and vows, to all my former guilts. Thus, O Lord, I am become out of measure sinful, and since I have thus chosen death, I am most worthy to take part in it, even in the second death, the lake of fire and brimstone. This, this, O Lord, is in justice to be the portion of my cup, to me belongs nothing but shame and confusion of face eternally. But to thee, O Lord God, belongeth mercy and forgiveness, though I have rebelled against thee, O remember not my sins and offenses, but according to thy mercy think thou upon me O Lord for thy goodness. Thou sentest thy Son to seek and to save that which was lost, behold, O Lord, I have gone astray like a sheep that is lost, O seek thy servant; and bring me back to the Shepherd and Bishop of my Soul; let thy Spirit work in me a hearty sense and detestation of all my abominations, that true contrition of heart, which thou hast promised not to despise. And then be thou pleased to look on me, to take away all iniquity, and receive me graciously, and for his sake who hath done nothing amiss, be reconciled to me, who have done nothing well; wash away the guilt of my sins in his blood, and subdue the power of them by his grace, and grant, O Lord, that I may from this hour bid a final adieu to all ungodliness, and worldly lusts, that I may never once more cast a look toward Sodom, or long after the fleshpots of Egypt, but consecrate myself entirely to thee, to serve thee in Righteousness and true Holiness, reckoning myself to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord and blessed Savior.

This PENITENTIAL PSALM may also fitly be used.

PSALM 51.

HAVE mercy upon me O God, after thy great goodness, according to the multitude of thy mercies do away mine offenses.

Wash me thoroughly from my wickedness, and cleanse me from my sin.

For I acknowledge my faults, and my sin is ever before me.

Against thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight, that thou mightest be justified in thy saying, and clear when thou art judged.

Behold I was shapen in wickedness, and in sin hath my mother conceived me.

But lo, thou requirest truth in the inward parts, and shalt make me to understand wisdom secretly.

Thou shalt purge me with Hyssop, and I shall be clean, thou shalt wash me, and I shall be whiter then snow.

Thou shalt make me hear of joy and gladness, that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice.

Turn thy face from my sins, and put out all my misdeeds.

Make me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right Spirit within me.

Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me.

O give me the comfort of thy help again, and stablish me with thy free Spirit.

Then shall I teach thy ways unto the wicked, and sinners shall be converted unto thee.

Deliver me from blood guiltiness• O God, thou that art the God of my health, and my tongue shall sing of thy righteousness.

Thou shalt open my lips, O Lord, and my mouth shall show thy praise.

For thou desirest no sacrifice, else would I give it thee, but thou delightest not in burnt offering

The sacrifice of God is a troubled spirit, a broken and contrite heart, O God, shalt thou not despise.

O be favorable and gracious unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

Then shalt thou be pleased with the Sacrifice of righteousness, with the burnt offerings and oblations, then shall they offer young bullocks upon thine altar.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost.

As it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be, world without end.

Amen.

PRAYERS BEFORE the Receiving of the blessed SACRAMENT.

O Most merciful God, who hast in thy great goodness prepared this spiritual feast for sick and famished Souls, make my desires and gaspings after it, answerable to my needs of it. I have with the prodigal wasted that portion of grace thou bestowedst upon me, and therefore do infinitely want a supply out of this treasury: But, O Lord, how shall such a wretch as I dare to approach this holy Table? I am a dog, how shall I presume to take the children's bread? Or how shall this spiritual Manna, this food of Angels be given to one who hath chosen to feed on husks with swine, nay to one who hath already so often trampled these precious things underfoot, either carelessly neglecting, or unworthily receiving these holy mysteries? O Lord, my horrible guiltiness makes me tremble to come, and yet makes me not dare to keep away, for where, O Lord, shall my polluted soul be washed if not in this fountain which thou hast opened for sin and for uncleanness? Hither therefore I come, and thou hast promised that him that cometh to thee thou wilt in no wise cast out: This is, O Lord, the blood of the New Testament, grant me so to receive it, that it may be to me for remission of Sins. And though I have so often and so wretchedly broken my part of that Covenant, whereof this Sacrament is a seal, yet be thou graciously pleased to make good thine, to be merciful to my unrighteousness, and to remember my sins and my iniquities no more; and not only so, but to put thy laws into my heart, and to write them in my mind, and by the power of thy grace dispose my soul to such a sincere and constant obedience, that I may never again provoke thee; Lord, grant that in these holy mysteries I may not only commemorate, but effectually receive my blessed Savior, and all the benefits of his Passion: and to that end give me such a preparation of soul as may qualify me for it, give me a deep sense of my sins and unworthiness, that being weary and heavy laden, I may be capable of his refreshings, and by being suppled in my own tears, I may be the fitter to be washed in his blood, raise up my dull and earthly mind from groveling here below, and inspire it with a holy zeal, that I may with spiritual affection approach this spiritual feast; and let, O Lord, that infinite love of Christ in dying for so wretched a sinner inflame my frozen benumbed soul, and kindle in me that sacred fire of love to him, and that so vehement that no waters may quench, no floods drown it, such as may burn up all my dross, not leave one unmortified lust in my soul, and such as may also extend it self to all whom thou hast given me command and example to love, even enemies as well as friends. Finally, O Lord, I beseech thee to clothe me in the wedding garment, and make me though of myself a most unworthy, yet by thy mercy an acceptable guest at this holy Table, that I may not eat and drink my own condemnation, but may have my pardon sealed, my weakness repaired, my corruptions subdued, and my soul so inseparably united to thee that no temptations may ever be able to dissolve the union, but that being begun here in grace it may be consummated in glory. Grant this, O Lord, for thy dear Sons sake, Jesus Christ.

ANOTHER.

O Blessed Jesus, who once offeredst up thyself for me upon the Cross, and now offerest thyself to me in the Sacrament, let not I beseech thee, my impenitence and unworthiness frustrate these so inestimable mercies to me, but qualify me by thy grace to receive the full benefit of them. O Lord, I have abundant need of thee, but am so clogged with guilt, so holden with the cords of my sins, that I am not able to move towards thee, O loose me from this band, wherewith Satan and my own lusts have bound me, and draw me that I may run after thee. Lord, thou seest daily how eagerly I pursue the paths that lead to death, but when thou invitest me to life and glory, I turn my back and forsake my own mercy. How often hath this feast been prepared, and I have with frivolous excuses absented myself, or if I have come, it hath been rather to defy then to adore thee. I have brought such troops of thy professed enemies, unrepented sins along with me, as if I came not to commemorate, but renew thy passion, crucifying thee afresh, and putting thee to open shame: and now of what punishment shall I be thought worthy, who have thus trampled underfoot the Son of God, and counted the blood of the Covenant an unholy thing! Yet O merciful Jesu, this blood is my only refuge, O let this make my atonement or I perish eternally? Wherefore didst thou shed it, but to save sinners? Neither can the merit of it be overwhelmed either by the greatness or number of sins. I am a sinner, a great one, O let me find its saving efficacy. Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful to me for my soul trusteth in thee, and in the clefts of thy wounds shall be my refuge until thy fathers indignation be overpast. O thou, who hast as my high Priest, sacrificed for me, intercede for me also, and plead thy meritorious sufferings on my behalf, and suffer not, O my Redeemer, the price of thy blood to be utterly lost: And grant, O Lord, that as the sins I have to be forgiven are many, so I may love much. Lord, thou seest what faint, what cold affections I have towards thee, O warm and enliven them: and as in this Sacrament that transcendent love of thine in dying for me is shed forth, so I beseech thee let it convey such grace into me as may enable me to make some returns of love: O let this divine fire descend from heaven into my soul, and let my sins be the burnt offering for it to consume, that there may not any corrupt affection, any accursed thing be sheltered in my heart, that I may never again defile that place, which thou hast chosen for thy Temple. Thou dyedst, O dear Jesu, to redeem me from all iniquity, O let me not again sell myself to work wickedness, but grant that I may approach thee at this time with most sincere and fixed resolutions of an entire reformation, and let me receive such grace and strength from thee, as may enable me faithfully to perform them: Lord, there are many old habituated diseases my soul groans under. [Here mention thy most prevailing corruptions.] And though I lie never so long at the Pool of Bethesda, come never so often to thy Table, yet unless thou be pleased to put forth thy healing virtue, they will still remain uncured. O thou blessed Physician of souls, heal me, and grant I may now so touch thee that everyone of these loathsome issues may immediately stanch, that these sicknesses may not be unto death, but unto the glory of thy mercy in Pardoning, to the glory of thy grace in Purifying so polluted a wretch. O Christ hear me, and grant I may now approach thee with such humility and contrition, love & devotion, that thou mayest vouch safe to come unto me, & abide with me; communicating to me thyself, & all the merits of thy Passion. And then, O Lord, let no accusations of Satan or my own conscience amaze or distract me, but having peace with thee, let me also have peace in myself, that this Wine may make glad, this Bread of life may strengthen my heart, & enable me cheerfully to run the way of thy Commandments. Grant this merciful Savior for thine own bowels & compassions sake.

EJACULATIONS to be used at the LORD'S TABLE.

LORD, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof.

I have sinned: What shall I do unto thee, O thou preserver of men?

[Here recollect some of thy greatest sins.]

If thou, Lord, shouldst be extreme to mark what is done amiss, O Lord, who may abide it?

But with the Lord there is mercy, and with him is plenteous Redemption.

Behold, O Lord, thy beloved Son in whom thou art well pleased.

Hearken to the cry of his blood which speaketh better things then that of Abel.

By his Agony and bloody Sweat, by his Cross and Passion, good Lord deliver me.

O Lamb of God which takest away the sins of the world, grant me thy Peace.

O Lamb of God which takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon me.

Immediately before Receiving.

THOU hast said, That he that eateth thy flesh and drinketh thy blood hath eternal life.

Behold the servant of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word.

At the Receiving of the Bread.

BY thy Crucified body deliver me from this body of death.

At the receiving of the Cup.

O LET this blood of thine purge my conscience from dead works to serve the living God.

Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean. O touch me, and say, I will, be thou clean.

After Receiving.

WHAT shall I render unto the Lord for all the benefits he hath done unto me?

I will take the Cup of Salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord.

Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

Therefore blessing, honor, glory and power be to him that sitteth upon the Throne, and to the Lamb forever and ever. Amen.

I have sworn, and am steadfastly purposed to keep thy righteous judgments.

O hold thou up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not.

A Thanksgiving after the Receiving of the Sacrament.

O Thou fountain of all goodness, from whom every good and perfect gift cometh, and to whom all honor and glory should be returned, I desire with all the most fervent and inflamed affections of a grateful heart, to bless and praise thee for those inestimable mercies thou hast vouchsafed me: Lord, what is man that thou shouldst so regard him as to send thy beloved Son to suffer such bitter things for him? But, Lord, what am I the worst of men, that I should have any part in this atonement, who have so oft despised him and his sufferings? O the height and depth of this mercy of thine, that art pleased to admit me to the renewing of that Covenant with thee which I have so often and so perversely broken; that I who am not worthy of that daily bread which sustains the body, should be made partaker of this bread of life which nourisheth the soul, and that the God of all purity should vouchsafe to unite himself to so polluted a wretch: O my God, suffer me no more, I beseech thee, to turn thy grace into wantonness, to make thy mercy an occasion of security, but let this unspeakable love of thine constrain me to obedience, that since my blessed Lord hath died for me, I may no longer live unto myself but to him: O Lord, I know there is no concord between Christ and Belial, therefore since he hath now been pleased to enter my heart, O let me never permit any lust to chace him thence, but let him that hath so dearly bought me still keep possession of me, and let nothing ever take me out of his hand. To this end be thou graciously pleased to watch over me, and defend me from all assaults of my spiritual enemies, but especially deliver me from myself, from the treachery of my own heart, which is too willing to yield itself a prey. And where thou seest I am either by nature or custom most weak, there do thou, I beseech thee, magnify thy power in my preservation. [Here mention thy most dangerous temptations] And Lord let my Savior's sufferings for my sins, and the Vows I have now made against them never depart from my mind, but let the remembrance of the one enable me to perform the other, that I may never make truce with those lusts which nailed his hands, pierced his side, and made his soul heavy to the death. But that having now anew listed myself under his banner, I may fight manfully, and follow the Captain of my Salvation, even through a sea of blood. Lord, lift up my hands that hang down, and my feeble knees, that I faint not in this warfare; O be thou my strength who am not able of myself to struggle with the slightest temptations. How often have I turned my back in the day of battle? How many of these Sacramental vows have I violated? And, Lord, I have still the same inconstant deceitful heart to betray me to the breach of this. O thou who art Yea and Amen, in whom there is no shadow of change, communicate to me, I beseech thee, such a stability of mind, that I may no more thus start aside like a broken bow, but that having my heart whole with thee I may continue steadfast in thy Covenant; that not one good purpose which thy Spirit hath raised in me this day may vanish, as so many have formerly done, but that they may bring forth fruit unto life eternal. Grant this, O merciful father, through the merits and mediation of my Crucified Savior.

A Prayer of Intercession to be used either before or after the receiving of the Sacrament.

O MOST gracious Lord, who so tenderly lovedst mankind as to give thy dear Son out of thy Bosom to be a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, grant that the effect of this Redemption may be as universal as the design of it, that it may be to the salvation of all. O let no person by impenitence and willful sin forfeit his part in it, but by the power of thy grace bring all, even the most obstinate sinners to repentance. Inlighten all that sit in darkness, all Jews, Turks, Infidels and Heretics, take from them all blindness, hardness of heart, and contempt of thy Word, and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, unto thy fold, that they may be saved among the number of the true Israelites. And for all those upon whom the Name of thy Son is called, grant, O Lord, that their conversations may be such as becometh the Gospel of Christ, that his Name be no longer blasphemed among the Heathens through us. O Blessed Lord, how long shall Christendom continue the vilest part of the world, a sink of all those abominable pollutions, which even Barbarians detest? O let not our Profession and our Practice be always at so wide a distance. Let not the Disciples of the holy and Immaculate Jesus be of all others the most profane and impure. Let not the subjects of the Prince of Peace be of all others the most contentious and bloody, but make us Christians in deed as well as in name, that we may walk worthy of that Holy vocation wherewith we are called, and may all with one mind and one mouth glorify thee the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Have mercy on this languishing Church, look down from heaven the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory, where is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies towards us? Are they restrained? Be not wroth very sore, O Lord, neither remember iniquity forever, but though our backslidings are many, and we have grievously rebelled, yet according to all thy goodness let thy anger and thy fury be turned away, and cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary which is desolate, for the Lord's sake; and so separate between us and our sins, that they may no longer separate between us and our God. Save and defend all Christian Kings, Princes and Governors, especially those to whom we owe subjection, plead thou their cause. O Lord, against those that strive with them, and fight thou against those that fight against them, and so guide and assist them in the discharge of that office whereunto thou hast appointed them, that under them we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty. Bless them that wait at thine Altar, open thou their lips that their mouth may show forth thy praise, O let not the lights of the world be put under bushels, but place them in their Candlesticks, that they may give light to all that are in the house. Let not Jerohoams Priests profane thy Service, but let the seed of Aaron still minister before thee. And O thou Father of mercies, and God of all comfort, succor and relieve all that are in affliction, deliver the outcast and poor, help them to right that suffer wrong, let the sorrowful sighing of the prisoners come before thee, and according to the greatness of thy power, preserve thou those that are appointed to die; grant ease to those that are in pain, supplies to those that suffer want, give to all presumptuous sinners a sense of their sins, and to all despairing, a sight of thy mercies, and do thou, O Lord, for everyone abundantly above what they can ask or think. Forgive my enemies, persecutors, and slanderers, and turn their hearts. Pour down thy blessings on all my friends, and benefactors, all who have commended themselves to my Prayer. [Here thou mayest name particular persons.] And grant, O merciful Father, that through this blood of the Cross, we may all be presented pure and unblameable, and unreprouvable in thy sight; that so we may be admitted into that place of purity, where no unclean thing can enter, there to sing eternal praises to Father, Son, and holy Ghost forever.

A Prayer in times of common Persecution.

O BLESSED Savior, who hast made the Cross the badge of thy Disciples, enable me, I beseech thee, willingly and cheerfully to embrace it; thou seest, O Lord, I am fallen into days, wherein he that departeth from evil maketh himself a Prey, O make me so readily to expose all my outward concernments, when my obedience to thee requireth it, that what falls as a Prey to men, may by thee be accepted as a Sacrifice to God: Lord preserve me so by thy grace that I never suffer as an evil doer, and then, O Lord, if it be my lot to suffer as a Christian, let me not be ashamed, but rejoice that I am counted worthy to suffer for thy Name: O thou who for my sake enduredst the cross, and despisedst the shame, let the example of that love and patience prevail against all the tremblings of my corrupt heart, that no terrors may ever be able to shake my constancy, but that how long soever thou shalt permit the rod of the wicked to lie on my back, I may never put my hand unto wickedness: Lord, thou knowest whereof I am made, thou rememberest that I am but flesh, and flesh, O Lord, shrinks at the approach of anything grievous. It is thy Spirit, thy Spirit alone, that can uphold me, O stablish me with thy free Spirit, that I be not weary and faint in my mind. And by how much the greater thou discernest my weakness, so much the more do thou show forth thy power in me, and make me, O Lord, in all temptations steadfastly to look to thee, the author and finisher of my faith, that so I may run the race, which is set before me, and resist even unto blood, striving against sin: O dear Jesus, hear me, and though Satan desire to have me, that he may winnow me as wheat, yet do thou O blessed Mediator, pray for me that my faith fail not, but that though it be tried with fire, it may be found unto praise, and glory, and honor at thy appearing. And, O Lord, I beseech thee grant that I may preserve not only constancy towards God, but charity also towards men, even those whom thou shalt permit to be the instruments of my sufferings, Lord, let me not fail to imitate that admirable meekness of thine, in loving and praying for my greatest persecutors; and do thou, O Lord, overcome all their evil with thy infinite goodness, turn their hearts, and draw them powerfully to thyself, and at last receive both me and mine enemies into those mansions of peace and rest, where thou reignest with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, one God, forever.

A Prayer in time of affliction.

O JUST and holy Lord, who with rebukes dost chasten man for sin, I desire unseignedly to humble myself under thy mighty hand, which now lies heavy upon me, I heartily acknowledge, O Lord, that all I do, all I can suffer, is but the due reward of my deeds, and therefore in thy severest inflictions I must still say, Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy judgments. But, O Lord, I beseech thee in judgment remember mercy, and though my sins have enforced thee to strike, yet consider my weakness, and let not thy stripes be more heavy, or more lasting than thou seest profitable for my soul; correct me but with the chastisement of a father, not with the wounds of an enemy, & though thou take not off thy rod, yet take away thine anger: Lord, do not abhor my soul, nor cast thy servant away in displeasure, but pardon my sins, I beseech thee; & if yet in thy fatherly wisdom, thou see fit to prolong thy corrections, thy blessed will be done, I cast myself O Lord, at thy feet, do with me what thou pleasest. Try me as silver is tried, so thou bring me out purified. And Lord make even my flesh also to subscribe to this resignation, that there may be nothing in me, that may rebel against thy hand, but that having perfectly suppressed all repining thoughts, I may cheerfully drink of this cup. And how bitter soever thou shalt please to make it, Lord, let it prove medicinal, and cure all the diseases of my soul, that it may bring forth in me the peaceable fruit of righteousness. That so these light afflictions which are but for a moment, may work for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, through Jesus Christ.

A Thanks giving for Deliverance.

O BLESSED Lord, who art gracious and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil, I thankfully acknowledge before thee that thou hast not dealt with me after my sins, nor rewarded me according to my iniquities. My rebellions, O Lord, deserve to be scourged with Scorpions, and thou hast corrected them only with a gentle and fatherly Rod; neither hast thou suffered me to lie long under that, but hast given me a timely and a gracious issue out of my late distresses. O Lord, I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy, for thou hast considered my trouble, and hast known my soul in adversity. Thou hast smitten, and thou hast healed me, O let these various methods of thine have their proper effects upon my soul, that I who have felt the smart of thy chastisements may stand in awe and not sin, and that I who have likewise felt the sweet refreshings of thy mercy may have my heart ravished with it, and knit to thee in the firmest bands of love, and that by both I may be preserved in a constant entire obedience to thee all my days, through Jesus Christ.

Directions for the time of Sickness.

WHEN thou findest thyself visited with Sickness thou art immediately to remember that it is God which, with rebukes doth chasten man for sin. And therefore let thy first care be to find out what it is that provokes him to smite thee, and to that purpose Examine thine own heart, search diligently what guilts lie there, confess them humbly and penitently to God, and for the greater security renew thy Repentance for all the old sins of thy former life, beg most earnestly and importunately his mercy and pardon in Christ Jesus, and put on sincere and zealous resolutions of forsaking every evil way for the rest of that time which God shall spare thee. And that thy own heart deceive thee not in this so weighty a business, it will be wisdom to send for some godly Divine, not only to assist thee with his prayers but with his counsel also. And to that purpose open thy heart so freely to him that he may be able to judge whether thy Repentance be such as may give thee confidence to appear before God's dreadful Tribunal, and that if it be not, he may help thee what he can towards the making it so. And when thou hast thus provided for thy better part, thy Soul, then consider thy Body also, and as the Wise man saith, Ecclu•. 38. 12. Give place to the Physician, for the Lord hath created him: Use such means as may be most likely to recover thy health, but always remember that the success of them must come from God; and beware of Asa's sin, who sought to the Physicians, and not to the Lord, 2 Chro. 6. 12. Dispose also betimes of thy temporal affairs, by making thy Will, and setting all things in such order as thou meanest finally to leave them in, and defer it not till thy sickness grow more violent, for then perhaps thou shalt not have such use of thy Reason as may fit thee for it, or if thou have, it will be then much more seasonable to employ thy thoughts on higher things, on the world thou art going to, rather than that thou art about to leave; we cannot carry the things of this world with us when we go hence, and it is not fit we should carry the thoughts of them. Therefore let those be early dispatched that they may not disturb thee at last.

A Prayer for a sick Person.

O MERCIFUL and Righteous Lord, the God of health and of sickness, of life, and of death, I most unfeignedly acknowledge that my great abuse of those many days of strength and welfare, which thou hast afforded me, hath most justly deserved thy present visitation. I desire, O Lord, humbly to accept of this punishment of mine iniquity, and to bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him. And, O thou merciful Father, who designest not the ruin but the amendment of those whom thou scourgest, I beseech thee by thy grace so to sanctify this correction of thine to me, that this sickness of my body may be a means of health to my soul, make me diligent to search my heart, and do thou O Lord, enable me to discover every accursed thing, how closely soever concealed there, that by the removal thereof, I may make way for the removal of this punishment. Heal my soul, O Lord, which hath sinned against thee, and then if it be thy blessed will, heal my body also, restore the voice of joy & health unto my dwelling, that I may live to praise thee, and to bring forth fruits of repentance. But if in thy wisdom thou hast otherwise disposed, if thou have determined that this sickness shall be unto death, I beseech thee to fit & prepare me for it, give me that sincere and earnest repentance, to which thou hast promised mercy and pardon; wean my heart from the world, and all its fading vanities, and make me to gasp and pant after those more excellent and durable joys which are at thy right hand forever. Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me, and in all the pains of my body, in all the agonies of my spirit, let thy comforts refresh my soul, and enable me patiently to wait till my change come. And grant, O Lord, that when my earthly house of this Tabernacle is dissolved I may have a building of God, an house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. And that for his sake who by his precious blood hath purchased it for me, even Jesus Christ.

A THANKSGIVING for RECOVERY.

O GRACIOUS Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in whose hand my time is, I praise and magnify thee that thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption, and restored me to health again; it is thou alone, O Lord, that hast preserved my life from destruction, thou hast chastened and corrected me, but thou hast not given me over unto death; O let this life which thou hast thus graciously spared be wholly consecrated to thee. Behold, O Lord, I am by thy mercy made whole, O make me strictly careful to sin no more least a worse thing come unto me. Lord, let not this reprieve thou hast now given me, make me secure, as thinking that my Lord delayeth his coming, but grant me I beseech thee to make a right use of this long suffering of thine, and so to employ every minute of that time thou shalt allow me, that when thou shalt appear I may have confidence and not be ashamed before thee at thy coming. Lord, I have found by this approach towards death, how dreadful a thing it is to be taken unprepared. O let it be a perpetual admonition to me to watch for my Masters Coming. And when the pleasures of sin shall present themselves to entice me, O make me to remember how bitter they will be at the last. O Lord hear me, and as thou hast in much mercy afforded me time, so grant me also grace to work out my own salvation, to provide oil in my lamp, that when the Bridegroom cometh I may go in with him to the marriage. Grant this I beseech thee for thy dear Sons sake.

A Prayer at the approach of Death.

O ETERNAL and everliving God, who first breathedst into man the breath of life, and when thou takest away that breath he dies and is turned again to his dust, look with compassion on me thy poor creature who am now drawing near the gates of death, and which is infinitely more terrible, the bar of Judgment. Lord my own heart condemns me, and thou art infinitely greater than my heart, and knowest all things. The sins I know and remember, fill me with horror; but there are also multitudes of others, which I either observed not at the time, or have since carelessly forgot, which are all present to thee. Thou settest my misdeeds before thee, and my secret sins in the light of thy countenance; and to what a mountainous heap must the minutely provocations of so many years arise? How shall one so ungodly stand in thy Judgment, or such a sinner in the Congregation of the Righteous? And to add yet more to my terror, my very repentance I fear will not abide the trial; my frequent relapses heretofore have sufficiently witnessed the unsincerity of my past resolutions. And then, O Lord, what can secure me that my present dislikes of my sins are not rather the effects of my amazing danger than of any real change? And, O Lord, I know thou art not mocked, nor wilt accept of anything that is not perfectly sincere. O Lord, when I consider this, fearfulness and trembling comes upon me, and an horrible dread overwhelmeth me, my flesh trembleth for fear of thee, and my heart is wounded within me. But, O Lord, one deep calleth upon another, the depth of my misery upon the depth of thy mercy; Lord, save now or I perish eternally. O thou who willest not that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, bring me, I beseech thee, though thus late, to a sincere Repentance, such as thou wilt accept, who triest the heart. Create in me, O God, a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me: Lord, one day is with thee as a thousand years, O let thy mighty Spirit work in me now in this my last day, whatsoever thou seest wanting to fit me for thy mercy and acceptance. Give me a perfect and entire hatred of my sins, and enable me to present thee with that sacrifice of a broken and contrite heart, which thou hast promised not to despise; that by this I may be made capable of that atonement which thy dear Son hath by the more excellent oblation of himself made for all repenting sinners. He is the propitiation for our sins, he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was on him, O heal me by his stripes, and let the cry of his blood drown the clamour of my sins. I am indeed a child of wrath, but he is the Son of thy love, for his sake spare me, O Lord, spare thy creature whom he hath redeemed with his most precious blood, and be not angry with me forever. In his wounds O Lord, I take Sanctuary, O let not thy vengeance pursue me to this city of refuge: my Soul hangeth upon him, O let me not perish with a Jesus, with a Savior in my arms. But by his Agony and bloody Sweat, by his Cross and Passion, by all that he did and suffered for sinners, good Lord deliver me; deliver me, I beseech thee, from the wages of my sins, thy wrath and everlasting damnation, in this time of my tribulation, in the hour of death, and in the day of Judgment. Hear me, O Lord, hear me, and do not now repay my former neglects of thy calls, by refusing to answer me in this time of my greatest need. Lord, there is but a step between me and death, O let not my sun go down upon thy wrath, but seal my pard on before I go hence and be no more seen. Thy loving kindness is better then the life itself, O let me have that in exchange, and I shall most gladly lay down this mortal life. Lord thou knowest all my desire, and my groaning is not hid from thee; deal thou with me, O Lord, according to thy Name, for sweet is thy mercy; take away the sting of death, the guilt of my sins, and then though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, I will lay me down in peace, and Lord when I awake up, let me be satisfied with thy presence in thy glory. Grant this merciful God for his sake who is both the Redeemer and Mediator of sinners, even Jesus Christ.

PSALMS.

PUT me not to rebuke, O Lord, in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy heavy displeasure.

There is no health in my flesh because of thy displeasure, neither is there any rest in my bones by reason of my sins.

For my wickednesses are gone over my head, and are a sore burden too heavy for me to bear.

My wounds stink and are corrupt through my foolishness.

Therefore is my spirit vexed within me, and my heart within me is desolate.

My sins have taken such hold upon me that I am not able to look up, yea, they are more in number than the hairs of my head, and my heart hath failed me.

But thou, O Lord God, art full of compassion and mercy, longsuffering, plenteous in goodness and truth.

Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, for I am desolate and in misery.

If thou Lord shouldst be extreme to mark what is done amiss, O Lord, who may abide it?

O remember not the sins and offenses of my youth, but according to thy mercy think thou upon me for thy goodness.

Look upon my adversity and misery, and forgive me all my sin.

Hide not thy face from thy servant, for I am in trouble, O haste thee and hear me.

Out of the deep do I call unto thee, Lord hear my voice.

Turn thee, O Lord, and deliver my Soul, O save me for thy mercies sake.

O go not from me, for trouble is hard at hand, and there is none to help.

I stretch forth my hands unto thee, my Soul gaspeth unto thee, as a thirsty land

Draw nigh unto my soul and save it, O deliver me, because of my enemies.

For my Soul is full of trouble, and my life draweth nigh unto hell.

Save me from the Lions mouth, hear me from among the horns of the Unicorns.

O set me up upon the rock that is higher than I, for thou art my hope, and a strong Tower for me against the enemy.

Why art thou so heavy, O my Soul, and why art thou so disquieted within me?

Put thy trust in God for I will yet give him thanks for the help of his countenance.

The Lord shall make good his loving kindness towards me, yea, thy mercy, O Lord, endureth forever, despise not then the work of thine own hands.

O GOD, thou art my God, early will I seek thee. My Soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh also longeth after thee, in a barren and dry land where no water is.

Like as the heart desireth the water brooks, so longeth my Soul after thee O God.

My Soul is a thirst for God, even for the living God, when shall I come to appear before the presence of God?

How amiable are thy dwellings, O Lord of Hosts?

My Soul hath a desire and longing to enter into the Courts of the Lord, my flesh and my heart rejoice in the living God.

O that I had wings like a Dove, for then would I fly away and be at rest.

O send out thy light and thy truth, that they may lead me, and bring me unto thy Holy Hill, and to thy dwelling.

For one day in thy Courts is better then a thousand:

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the tents of wickedness.

I should utterly have fainted, but that I believed verily to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living.

Thou art my helper and my redeemer, O Lord, make no long tarrying.

EJACULATIONS.

O LORD, of whom may I seek for succor but of thee, who for my sins art justly displeased? Yet O Lord God most Holy, O Lord most Mighty, O Holy and most Merciful Savior, deliver me not into the bitter pains of eternal death.

Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of my heart, shut not up thy merciful eyes to my prayer, but hear me, O Lord Most Holy, O God most Mighty, O Holy and Merciful Savior, thou most worthy Judge eternal, suffer me not at my last hour for any pains of death to fall from thee.

Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am not worthy to be called thy child, yet O Lord do not thou cast off the bowels and compassions of a Father, but even as a father pitieth his own children, so be thou merciful unto me.

Lord, the prince of this world cometh, O let him have nothing in me, but as he accuseth, do thou absolve; he lays many and grievous things to my charge, which he can too well prove, I have nothing to say for myself do thou answer for me, O Lord my God.

O Lord I am clothed with filthy garments, and Satan stands at my right hand to resist me, O be thou pleased to rebuke him, and pluck me as a brand out of the fire, cause mine iniquities to pass from me, and cloth me with the righteousness of thy Son.

Behold, O God, the Devil is coming towards me, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time, O save and deliver me lest he devour my soul like a Lion, and tear it in pieces while there is none to help.

O My God, I know that no unclean thing can enter into thy Kingdom, and I am nothing but pollution, my very righteousnesses are as filthy rags, O wash me and make me white in the blood of the Lamb, that so I may be fit to stand before thy Throne.

Lord, the snares of death compass me round about, O let not the pains of hell also take hold upon me, but though I find trouble and heaviness, yet O Lord I beseech thee deliver my soul.

O dear Jesus, who hast bought me with the precious price of thine own blood; challenge now thy purchase, and let not all the malice of Hell pluck me out of thy hand.

O blessed high Priest, who art able to save them to the utmost, who come unto God by thee, save me I beseech thee, who have no hope, but on thy merits and intercession,

O God I confess I have defaced that Image of thine, thou didst imprint upon my Soul, yet O thou faithful Creator, have pity on thy creature.

O Jesu, I have by my many and grievous sins crucified thee afresh, yet thou who prayedst for thy persecutors, intercede for me also, and suffer not, O my Redeemer, my soul (the price of thy blood) to perish.

O Spirit of grace, I have by my horrid impieties done despite to thee, yet, O Blessed Comforter, though I have often grieved thee, be thou pleased to succor and relieve me, and say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

Mine eyes look unto thee, O Lord, in thee is my trust, O cast not out my soul.

O Lord in thee have I trusted, let me never be confounded.

O Blessed Lord, who scourgest every Son whom thou receivest, let me not be weary of thy correction, but give me such a perfect subjection to thee the Father of Spirits, that this chastisement may be for my profit, that I may thereby be partaker of thy holiness.

O thou Captain of my Salvation, who wert made perfect by sufferings, sanctify to me all the pains of body, all the terrors of mind, which thou shalt permit to fall upon me.

Lord, my sins have deserved eternal torments make me cheerfully and thankfully to bear my present pains, chasten me as thou pleasest here, that I may not be condemned with the world.

Lord, the waters are come in even unto my soul, O let thy Spirit move upon these waters, and make them like the pool of Bethesda, that they may cure whatsoever spiritual disease thou discernest in me.

O Christ, who first sufferedst many and grievous things, and then enteredst into thy glory, make me so to suffer with thee, that I may also be glorified with thee.

O dear Jesus, who humblest thyself to the death of the Cross for me, let that death of thine sweeten the bitterness of mine.

When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death, thou didst open the Kingdom of heaven to all believers.

I believe that thou shalt come to be my Judge.

I pray thee therefore help thy servant whom thou hast redeemed with thy most precious blood.

Make me to be numbered with thy Saints in glory everlasting.

Thou art the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in thee, though he were dead, yet shall he live: Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief.

My flesh and my heart faileth, but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever.

I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, which is far better: Lord, I g•oan earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with that house from heaven.

I desire to put off this my tabernacle, O be pleased to receive me into everlasting habitations.

Bring my soul out of prison, that I may give thanks unto thy name.

Lord, I am here to wrestle not only with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers, & spiritual wickedness, O take me from these tents of Kedar, into the heavenly Jerusalem, where Satan shall be utterly trodden under my feet.

I cannot here attend one minute to thy service, without distraction, O take me up •o stand before thy Throne, where I shall serve thee day and night.

I am here in heaviness through many tribulations, O receive me into that place of rest, where all tears shall be wiped from my eyes, where there shall be no more death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor pain.

I am here in a state of banishment, and absence from the Lord, O take me where I shall forever behold thy face, and follow the Lamb whither soever he goeth.

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness.

OBlessed Jesu, who hast loved me, and washed me from my sins in thine own blood, receive my soul.

Into thy hands I commend my Spirit, for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord thou God of truth, Come Lord Jesu, come quickly.

PRAYERS for their use who Mourn in secret for the PUBLICK CALAMITIES, &c.

Psalm 74.

O God, wherefore art thou absent from us so long: why is thy wrath so hot against the sheep of thy pasture? &c.

Psal. 79.

O God, the Heathen are come into thine inheritance: thy holy temple have they defiled, and made Jerusalem an heap of stones, &c.

Psal. 80.

Hear, O thou shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a sheep: show thyself also, thou that sittest upon the Cherubims, &c.

A Prayer to be used in these times of Calamity.

O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth, I desire humbly to confess before thee, both on my own behalf, and that of this Nation, that these many years of calamity we have groaned under, are but the just, (yea mild) returns of those many more years of our provocations against thee, and that thy present which is but the due punishment of thy abused mercy. O Lord, thou hast formerly abounded to us in blessings above all people of the earth. Thy candle shined upon our heads, and we delighted ourselves in thy great goodness, peace was within our walls, and plenteousness within our palaces, there was no decay, no leading into captivity and no complaining in our streets: but we turned this grace into wantonness, we abused our peace to security, our plenty to riot and Luxury, and made those good things which should have endeared our hearts to thee, the occasions of estranging them from thee; Nay, O Lord, thou gavest us yet more precious mercies, thou wert pleased thyself to pitch thy Tabernacle with us, to establish a pure and glorious Church among us, and give us thy word to be a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our paths; but O Lord, we have made no other use of that light, then to conduct us to the chambers of death, we have dealt proudly, and not hearkened to thy comandments, and by rebelling against the light, have purchased to ourselves so much the heavier portion in the outer darkness. And now, O Lord, had the overflowings of thy vengeance been answerable to that of our sin, we had long since been swept away with a swift destruction, and there had been none of us alive at this day to implore thy mercy. But thou art a gracious God, slow to anger, and hast proceeded with us with much patience and longsuffering, thou hast sent thy judgments to awake us to repentance, and hast also allowed us space for it: But alas we have perverted this mercy of thine beyond all the former, we return not to him that smiteth us, neither do we seek the Lord, we are slidden back by a perpetual backfliding, no man repenteth him of his wickedness, or saith what have I done? 'Tis true indeed we fear the rod (we dread every suffering, so that we are ready to buy it off with the foulest sin) but we fear not him that hath appointed it, but by a wretched obstinacy harden our necks against thee, and refuse to return. And now, O God, what balm is there in Gilead that can cure us; who when thou wouldest heal us, will not be healed, we know thou hast pronounced that there is no peace to the wicked, and how shall we then pray for peace, that still retain our wickedness? This this, O Lord, is our sorest disease, O Give us Medicines to heal this sickness, heal our souls, and then we know thou canst soon heal our land. Lord, thou hast long spoken by thy word to our ears, by thy judgments even to all our senses, but unless thou speak by thy Spirit to our hearts, all other calls will still be ineffectual. O send out this voice, and that a mighty voice, such as may awake us out of this Lethargy: thou that didst call Lazarus out of the grave, O be pleased to call us who are dead, yea, putrefied in trespasses and sins, and make us to awake to righteousness. And though, O Lord, our frequent resistances even of those inward calls, have justly provoked thee to give us up to the lusts of our own heart; yet, O thou boundless ocean of mercy, who art good not only beyond what we can deserve, but what we can wish, do not withdraw the influence of thy grace, and take not thy holy spirit from us. Thou wert found of those that sought thee not, O let that act of mercy be repeated to us who are so desperately, yet so insensibly sick, that we cannot so much as look after the Physician, and by how much our case is the more dangerous, so much the more sovereign remedies do thou apply; Lord help us, and consider not so much our unworthiness of thy aid, as our irremediable ruin if we want it; save Lord, or we perish eternally. To this end dispense to us in our temporal interest what thou seest may best secure our spiritual; if a greater degree of outward misery will tend to the curing our inward, Lord, spare not thy rod, but strike yet more sharply; cast out this devil, though with never so much foaming & tearing. But if thou seest that some return of mercy may be most likely to melt us, O be pleased so far to condescend to our wretchedness as to afford us that, and whether by thy sharper or thy gentler methods, bring us home to thyself. And then, O Lord, we know thy hand is not shortened, that it cannot save, when thou hast delivered us from our sins, thou canst and wilt deliver us from our troubles, O show us thy mercy and grant us thy salvation, that being redeemed both in our bodies and spirits, we may glorify thee in both, in a cheerful obedience, and praise the Name of our God, that hath dealt wonderfully with us, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

A Prayer for This Church.

O Thou great God of recompenses, who turnest a fruitful land into barrenness for the wickedness of them that dwell therein; thou hast most justly executed that fatal sentence on this Church, which having once been the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth, is now become a scorn and derision to all that are round about her. O Lord, what could have been done to thy vineyard that thou hast not done in it, and since it hath brought forth nothing but wild grapes, it is perfectly just with thee to take away the hedge thereof, and let it be eaten up. But O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, yet do thou it for thy Names sake, for our backslidings are many, we have sinned against thee. O the hope of Israel, the Savior thereof in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land, as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night? Why shouldst thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? Yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy Name, leave us not; deprive us of what outward enjoyment thou pleasest, take from us the opportunities of our luxury and it may be a mercy, but O take not from us the means of our reformation, for that is the most direful expression of thy wrath. And though we have hated the light because our deeds were evil, yet, O Lord, do not by withdrawing it condemn us to walk on still in darkness, but let it continue to shine till it have guided our feet into the way of peace. O Lord, arise, stir up thy strength & come & help us, and deliver not the soul of thy Turtle Dove (this disconsolate Church) unto the multitude of the enemy, but help her, O God, and that right early. But if, O Lord, our rebellions have so provoked thee, that the Ark must wander in the wilderness till all this murmuring generation be consumed, yet let not that perish with us, but bring it at last into a Canaan, and let our more innocent posterity see that which in thy just judgment thou denrest to us. In the mean time let us not cease to bewail that desolation our sins have wrought, to think upon the stones of Ston, and pity to see her in the dust, nor ever be ashamed or afraid to own her in her lowest and most persecuted condition, but esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, and so approve our constancy to this our afflicted Mother, that her blessed Lord and Head may own us with mercy when he shall come in the glory of thee his father with the holy Angels. Grant this merciful Lord, for the same Jesus Christ his sake.

A Prayer for the Peace of the Church.

LORD Jesus Christ, which of thine Almightyness madest all creatures both visible and invisible, which of thy godly wisdom governest and settest all things in most goodly order, which of thine unspeakable goodness keepest, defendest and furtherest all thing, which of thy deep mercy restorest the decayed, renewest the fallen, raisest the dead; vouchsafe, we pray thee at last, to cast down thy countenance upon thy well beloved Spouse the Church, but let it be that amiable and merciful countenance wherewith thou pacifiest all things in heaven, in earth, and whatsoever is above heaven and under the earth: vouchsafe to cast upon us those tender and pitiful eyes with which thou didst once behold Peter that great Shepherd of thy Church, and forthwith he remembered himself and repented; with which eyes thou once didst view the scattered multitude and wert moved with compassion, that for lack of a good Shepherd they wandered as sheep dispersed and strayed a sunder. Thou seest (O good Shepherd) what sundry sorts of Wolves have broken into thy sheep cotes: so that if it were possible the very perfect persons should be brought into error: thou seest with what winds, with what waves, with what storms thy silly ship is tossed, thy ship wherein thy little flock is in peril to be drowned. And what is now left but that it utterly sink and we all perish? Of this tempest and storm we may thank our own wickedness and sinful living, we discern it well and confess it, we discern thy righteousness, and we bewail our unrighteousness: but we appeal to thy Mercy, which surmounteth all thy works; we have now suffered much punishment, being scourged with so many wars, consumed with such losses of goods, shaken with so many floods, and yet appears there nowhere any Haven or Port unto us, being thus tired and forlorn among so strange evils, but still every day more grievous punishments, and more seem to hang over our heads. We complain not of thy sharpness, most tender Savior, but we discern here also thy mercy, forasmuch as much grievous plagues we have deserved. But O most merciful Jesus, we beseech thee that thou wilt not consider nor weigh what is due for our deservings, but rather what becometh thy mercy, without which neither the Angels in heaven can stand sure before thee, much less we silly vessels of clay. Have mercy on us, O Redeemer, which art easy to be entreated, not that we be worthy of thy mercy, but give thou this glory unto thine own Name. Suffer not those which either have not known thee or do envy thy glory, continually to triumph over us, and say, Where is their God, where is their Redeemer, where is their Savior, where is their Bridegroom that they thus boast on? These opprobrious words redound unto thee. O Lord, while by our evils men weigh and esteem thy goodness, they think we be forsaken whom they see not amended. Once when thou sleptst in the ship, and a tempest suddenly arising threatened death to all in the Ship, thou awakest at the outcry of a few Disciples and straightway at thine Almighty word the waters couched, the winds fell, the storm was suddenly turned into a great calm; the dumb waters knew their makers voice. Now in this far greater tempest, wherein not a few men's bodies be in danger, but innumerable souls: we beseech thee at the cry of thy holy Church, which is in danger of drowning, that thou wilt awake. So many thousands of men do cry, Lord save us, we perish, the tempest is past man's power; it is thy word that must do the deed, Lord Jesu, Only say thou with a word of thy mouth, Cease, O tempest, and forthwith shall the desired calm appear. Thou wouldst have spared so many thousands of most wicked men, if in the City of Sodom had been found but ten good men. Now here be so many thousands of men which love the glory of thy Name, which sigh for the beauty of thy house, and wilt thou not at these men's prayers let go thine anger, and remember thine accustomed and old mercies? Shalt thou not with thy heavenly policy turn our folly into thy glory? Shalt thou not turn the wicked men's evils into thy Churches good? For thy mercy is wont then most of all to succor, when the thing is with us past remedy, and neither the might nor wisdom of men can help it. Thou alone bringest things that be never so out of order into order again, which art the only Author and maintainer of peace. Thou framedst that old confusion wherein without order, without fashion confusedly lay the discordant seeds of things, and with a wonderful order the things that of nature fought together thou didst ally and knit in a perpetual band. But how much greater confusion is this, where is no charity, no fidelity no bonds of love, no reverence neither of Laws nor yet of Rulers, no agreement of opinions, but as it were in a misordered quire, every man singeth a contrary note. Among the heavenly Planets is no dissention, the Elements keep their place, everyone do the office whereunto they be appointed: And wilt thou suffer thy Spouse, for whose sake all things were made, thus by continual discords to perish? Shalt thou suffer the wicked Spirits, which be authors and workers of discord, to bear such a swing in thy Kingedome unchecked? Shalt thou suffer the strong Captain of mischief, whom thou once overthrewest, again to invade thy tents, and to spoil thy Soldiers? When thou wert here a man conversant among men, at thy voice fled the Devils. Send forth, we beseech thee, O Lord, thy Spirit, which may drive away out of the breasts of all them that profess thy Name, the wicked Spirits, masters of riot, of covetousness, of vain-glory, of carnal lust, of mischief and discord. Create in us, O our God and King, a clean heart, and renew thy holy Spirit in our breasts, pluck not from us thy holy Ghost. Render unto us the joy of thy saving health, and with thy principal Spirit, strengthen thy Spouse and the Heardmen thereof. By this Spirit thou reconciledst the earthly to the heavenly: by this thou didst frame and reduce so many tongues, so many nations, so many sundry sorts of men into one body of a Church, which body by the same Spirit is knit to thee their Head. This Spirit if thou wilt vouchsafe to renew in all men's hearts, then shall all these foreign miseries cease or if they cease not, they shall turn to the profit and avail of them which love thee. Stay this confusion, set in order this horrible Chaos (O Lord Jesus) let thy Spirit stretch out itself upon these waters of evil wavering opinions. And because thy Spirit, which according to thy Prophets saying, containeth all things, hath also the science of speaking; make that like as unto all them which be of thy house, is one Light, one Baptism, one God, one Hope, one Spirit; so they may also have one voice, one note, one song, professing one Catholic truth. When thou didst mount up to heaven triumphantly, thou threwest out from above thy precious things, thou gavest gifts amongst men, thou dealtest sundry rewards of thy Spirit. Renew again from above thy old bountifulness, give that thing to thy Church, now fainting and growing downward, that thou gavest unto her shooting up, at her first beginning. Give unto Princes and Rulers the grace so to stand in awe of thee, that they so may guide the Common-weal, as they should shortly render accompt unto thee that art the King of Kings. Give wisdom to be always assistant unto them, that whatsoever is best to be done, they may espy it in their minds, and pursue the same in their doings. Give to the Bishops the gift of prophecy, that they may declare and interpret holy Scripture, not of their own brain, but of thine inspiring. Give them the threefold charity which thou once demandest of Peter, what time thou didst betake unto him the charge of thy sheep. Give to the Priests the love of soberness, and of chastity. Give to thy people a good will to follow thy Commandments, and a readiness to obey such persons as thou hast appointed over them. So shall it come to pass; if through thy gift thy Princes shall command that thou requirest, if thy Pastors and Herdmen shall teach the same, and thy people obey them both, that the old dignity and tranquility of the Church shall return again with a goodly order unto the glory of thy Name. Thou sparedst the Ninevites appointed to be destroyed as soon as they converted to repentance; and wilt thou despise thy house falling down at thy feet, which instead of sackcloth hath sighs, and instead of ashes tears? Thou promisedst forgiveness to such as turn unto thee, but this self thing is thy gift, a man to turn with his whole heart unto thee, to the intent all our goodness should redound unto thy glory. Thou art the maker, repair the work that thou hast fashioned. Thou art the Redeemer, save that thou hast bought. Thou art the Savior, suffer not them to perish which do hang on thee. Thou art the Lord and owner, challenge thy possession. Thou art the Head, help thy members. Thou art the King, give us a reverence of thy Laws. Thou art the Prince of peace, breath upon us brotherly love. Thou art the God, have pity on thy humble beseechers; be thou according to Paul's saying, all things in all men, to the intent the whole Choir of thy Church with agreeing minds and consonant voices for mercy obtained at thy hands, may give thanks to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, which after the most perfect example of concord be distinguished in property of Persons, and one in nature, to whom be praise and glory Eternally.

Amen.

THE PREFACE TO ALL Mourners, Upon the SAD and MOURNFUL OCCASION Of the much-to-be-lamented DEATH Of Our Most Gracious Queen.

THIS Tract, whereof Death is the Subject, has been Concealed some Years; and upon this Sad and Mournful Occasion of the Death ‹◊› our Gracious Queen, which loudly calls the Nation to Weeping and Mourning; it appears now in the Habit of a true Mourner.

UPON so irreparable a Loss as the Kingdom has Sustain'd; Death is the properest Theme which befits the Season; for when mournful Countenances, heavy Hearts, and watery Eyes appears everywhere, this Whole Duty of Mourning, in the Closet may prove a good Companion.

EVERY day, you see, Nay, every Hour, says Seneca, shows us what a nothing we are, and by some fresh Argument or other puts us in mind of our forgot Mortality: but so Doleful and Mournful a Scene England did not expect would have appeared; especially at such a season, when our Eulogies and Praises should have Ascended to Heaven, from whence flowed the Redemption of the World; even by the great Mystery of our Savior's Incarnation; but this high Festival is now by the decree of Providence turned into Mourning, and our Song into Lamentation.

THE Wise Man tells us, Eccles. 7.2. That when the living are in the House of Mourning, they will lay it to Heart; and if we ought to lay to Heart the Death of any; much more of Righteous Persons; how ought we then to bewail this Sad and Mournful Calamity, wherein God has deprived us of one of our Royal Defenders? O, then let us speedily wish with the Prophet, That our Heads were Water, and our Eyes Fountains of Tears, that we might Weep, Day and Night, for the Loss of so Virtuous a Princess, and so Gracious a Sovereign Queen.

TO give a direct Copy of so Blessed an Original, my Pen can never arrive to that Dexterity, but am Conscious to myself it must be very defective; and the only Apology I can make in this time of Dolour, and Anxiety is; that broken Language is the best Rhetoric upon a Mournful Occasion; but the Veneration of those matchless Excellencies which appeared in our Royal Sovereign Animates my Pen to join with all Condolers in the Contemplation of those excellent Virtues, that Adorned so Illustrious a Princess,

IT was Heavens Decree, to take from us the Light of our Eyes, and the Breath of our Nostrils, a Gracious, and most Excellent Princess; one, under the shadow of whose Wings we sat with great delight, and enjoyed a more then an ordinary portion of Happiness and Prosperity; for the Radiant Beams of her Royal Bounty and Charity extended so far, that to preserve a sinking Kingdom, she Ascended the Throne; not out of any Ambition she had to grasp a Crown, but out of a tender Compassion to save a distressed Nation. She was truly Magnanimous, by Nature, Birth, and Education, and adorned with all the Ornaments befitting so Excellent and Matchless a Princess; in her Power and Dignity, she was Sovereign Queen over a mighty and renowned People: and invested with the highest Authority, that a Crown could render her; thus being inthroniz'd, she was the Glory of her Sex, and an Ornament to the Diadem which she Wore.

HER mind was Noble, Large, and Capacious, and not inferior to her Power and Dignity; her apprehension was quick and lively, and her Judgment was Peircing and Solid: Religion, and Piety, shined with that lusture in all her Divine Conversation, and the whole Series of her Life, that indeed she was a Pillar of Christianity; for the Influences of her Princely Piety was of that Impression and Extent, as might well lay Claim to those Second Causes the Almighty Ordains to his Governing Administration here below.

SHE not only understood her Religion well, but loved it, and with great Sincerity practiced it; for she always with a Stedfast, Regular, and Unaffected Devotion, approached with that Awful Sanctity to the Altars of God, that she seemed to Instruct when she Prayed, and Convert when she Kneeled; so that at so high a degree of Piety, the greatest Atheist, must needs be convinced and believe a Deity, and the loosest Libertine, could not but be Reformed; for his Admiration must needs create a Devotion upon a prospect of her Sacred Example.

HER Delight was in the Law of the Lord, and in that Law did she Meditate both Day and Night; for in the midst of all the most Important Affairs of State, she forgot not her Creator; for so Zealous was she for her Sacred Devotions, that she would rather spare time from her Sleep, than from her Prayers.

SHE always had a great Zeal for the Good of the Church, and she was the very Joy and Delight of the Hearts of the Clergy; for she encouraged their Studies, and continually Supported them under all the Reproaches of Malicious and Wicked Persons; even such, was her Royal goodness to the Pastoral Authority.

THE best practical Books she often made her Study in her Royal Retirement, and at other times caused them to be Read, as part of her Entertainmen, when she was Pleas'd to sit at Work with her Maids of Honor; and this she did as a prudent design whereby to furnish their thoughts with profitable Knowledge, and heavenly Meditation: for her Heart was wholly fixed upon God and Goodness.

EVERY Month, she constantly Communicated in her Royal Chapel; and always prepared herself with such a Strictness and Devotional Frame of Soul, that she Received the Blessed Sacrament in a most Humble and Awful manner, as being deeply affected with a due Sense of the Divine Majesty.

HER Temper was Naturally Sweet, her Disposition was Free and Generous; her Carriage Gracious; and her Intentions most Sincere: her Conversation was Lovely, and she was endued with a large mixture of Christian Charity and Compassion: all Eyes that beheld her at a distance, might discern Mildness, and Goodness, in her Majestick Countenance; which all her Attendants found its real Effects.

SHE delighted to do good; and had a singular Dexterity in the doing of it: for she prudently knew what was proper to be done, both as to the manner and Season: and she seldom vouchsafed a Royal Favor to any, but her Princely Way of doing it trebled the Obligation; and very easy was she in dispatch of what ever Affairs came before her: her Divine Soul indeed was truly Noble, and fitted to her Sovereign Place, and Royal Character; and she had a Serene Capacity as far beyond any of her Subjects, as she was in Power and Dignity above 'em: and had the Almighty been graciously pleased to have continued her Life, we had, had great hopes, and expectations of more then ordinary Blessings under her Government.

TO set forth all her Princely Virtues and Sublime Perfections, is too difficult for a Mortal's Pen to Delineate, or a Mournful Subjects Tongue to Express; neither can any expect so many Angelical Virtues can be Writ in so narrow a Compass, her whole Life indeed Corresponded with Heaven, and she was a Burning and a Shining Light amongst all her Subjects.

But now the Mourning Scene begins to appear; for on Thursday December the 20th. her Majesty felt herself indispos'd, but did not think it required the Attendance of her Physicians; but the Day following her Illness increasing, the Worthy Dr. Millington, and Dr. Ratcliff were called; and uponn the growing Danger; Dr. Brown, Dr. Cox, Dr. Gibbons, Dr. Robinson, and Dr. Cole, with other Learned Gentlemen were added to the Consult of Physicians: and on Saturday the Symptoms of the Small-pox appeared, that Eternal Foe to Beauty and a Distemper which has proved too too fatal to the Royal Family.

HER Spiritual Physicians who always paid their Religious Attendance, were the most Reverend Dr. Tennison Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; the Right Reverend, Dr. Stillingfleet, Bishop of Worcester, Dr. Patrick Bishop of Eli, Dr. Burnet Bishop of Salisbury, and Dr. Kidder Bishop of Bath and Wells.

These Stars of the Church, whose Influence ever shined bright in the sweet Society of her whole Life; are now o'er-cast with Sorrow, and become her Mournful Assistants to conduct her out of it, and though it is not hard to imagine what a more Melancholy, though Spiritual Office they were to perform in this last dutious Service to their most Gracious Royal Sovereign, their best of Friends and Patronesses: yet as Grieved and Sorrowful as they were at the too visible Face of that King of Terrors, DEATH, that was so ready to snatch away that Sacred Life; however they could not but be extraordinarily Comforted to find her so well and so readily prepared to receive him.

THE worthy Arch-Bishop, who constantly attended her, even to the last moment of her Life, was one day asked by her Majesty, What her Physicians Opinion of her was? To which his Grace Sorrowfully, but Sincerely replied to this effect, that they despaired of her Recovery: her Majesty wholly unconcerned, but with her Natural Sweetness of Temper, was Cheerefully pleased to answer in these words, God be Praised, I am Provided.

THAT constant even Temper, of Tranquility and sweet Composure of Mind, accompanied her through her whole Sickness; (her preparation for Eternity being not the Work of her Death-Bed) that she always expressed a perfect resignation to the Divine Will and Pleasure of Heaven; and seemed to have nothing in this World, but what she could freely part from but her Dear Lord, to whom amongst many other kind Affectionate, and tender Expressions, she was pleased to breath forth this hearty and most Passionate wish, in these Words.

That his Subjects might all Love him as she had done.

DURING her whole time of Sickness, his Majesty was that Pious and Constant Mourner over her, and such was his extraordinary tender Affection, and Fondness, that no Persuasions nor Entreaties could draw him a moment from her, neither could any Solicitations prevail with him to absent the Room, but Compassionately lay in a Camp-bed all the time by her.

THE day before her Departure she joined in Communion with the Reverend Bishops, and took the Blessed Sacrament, as a Viaticum for Eternity: and all her Religious Department through her whole Sickness was so Angelical, that her Reverend, and Pious Heavenly Guides found opportunity to Learn more than Instruct; insomuch that the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury was heard to Express,

That when it pleased God to call him, he Pray'd that he might be found so well prepared to Dye.

DURING her whole time of Indisposition, no Studious endeavors were wanting, if possible to Save so Precious a Life; but as Human Art and vigilant Diligence cannot exclude the Will and Pleasure of Heaven, so both the Physicians indefatigable Industry, and the Nations importuning Prayers were wholly Successful: for on Friday the 28th. of December, 1694. about One in the Morning her attending Divines resigned their Royal Charge to her Ministring Angels; at which time without the least Pang of Death, in a Soft and Sweet Slumber she breathed out her Soul into the Arms of the Almighty.

I dare not presume to draw the Royal Face of Grief, or attempt to describe the Sacred Sorrows of our Afflicted King at this Mournful Juncture, but this I may humbly crave privilege to Express, that as to his Royal Character, he is so good a Prince as no Age can Parrallel; one who for his Subjects Safety has exposed his Royal Person in a Field of Blood, against a Tyrannical and Insulting Foe; when Balls of Iron thundered from the Roaring Cannons Mouth in Fire and Smoke then could he look grim Death in the Face in the fiercest Battles, and with an undaunted Courage ne'er have shook at the approach of that Pale Pince of Terrors; but when the Icy hands of Death had struck the fatal blow; he could not resist that melting and tender Affection, when he felt all the Agonies of Death in the dying looks of his beloved Consort: for though she left the World without the least expiring Pangs by dying even in Smiles; our Sorrowful King a Mournful Spectator, stood by in little less than Convulsions to behold her.

AND now what good Subjects can forbear opening the Sluces of their Eyes, and let fall Flouds of Tears upon so Mournful an Occasion; but to sum up our much to be Lamented Loss, I shall refer the Reader to the Pen of the Reverend Dr. Wake one of Eminent Authority,

If a Queen so Virtuous, that her very Example was enough to Convert a Libertine, and to Reform an Age: so Courteous and so Affable, as to be the Wonder and the Delight of all that knew her: so great a Lover of her Country, and the Interests of it, as to be willing to hazard what, next her Conscience, she the most valued; her good Name, and good Opinion in the World, for the preservation of them: so Firm and Constant in her Mind, as not to have ever known, no not in Death itself, what it was to Fear: so Happy in Business, as to Astonish rather than Satisfie, those who were the best Versed in it. I say that to have been deprived of such a Queen as this, and that at such an Age, when our expectations were at the highest from her, be a Loss above the power of Words to Express, then such is our Loss: the greatness of which we are so far from being able sufficiently to declare, that we cannot yet make an Estimate of it.

AND as our Sorrows cannot but be justly Expressed, in the Loss of so Excellent and so Virtuous a Queen; yet, let us offer up our Praises unto God, from whom every good and perfect Gift cometh: that he has not left us Comfortless? that he has not cut down the principal Cedar? that he has not deprived us of our chiefest Support, and Royal Defender? but that we enjoy and have a good King to Sit upon the Throne, to Sway the Scepter, and to go in and out before us, to Protect us from the force of France, and the danger of all Europe; and that our Dear and Dread Sovereign may be forever Happy in us his Loyal Subjects, and we in so Good and Gracious a Prince, let us Implore the Divine Powers to Protect, Guide, and Defend him, in Spirit, Soul, and Body; as for his Enemies let them be Cloathed with Shame; but upon himself let his Crown forever Flourish; and let all the People say, Amen.

AND now, O all you Sons and Daughters of Sorrow and Affliction, that faithfully Lov'd and Honor'd our Renowned Princess, Lament your Loss; but seem not to Bewail her Felicity: do not immoderately drown your Eyes, because God has Wiped away all Tears from hers: and though in such a National Concern of highest Grief, Natural Duty shows us to be Mortals, yet let us not forget to be Christians; and as our Savior said to the Holy Women, so may I with all Awful Reverence Express, Weep not for her, Blest Soul, but for yourselves, that you are not so Happy.

AND this Sweet Advice Saint Jerome gives us, Let us not Mourn, as for one Lost; but rather be thankful that we have had so Good, and so Gracious a Pattern; nay that we still have her, for all still live in Christ, yea, though they die, and whomsoever he thus takes unto himself are still within his Family.

THINK, that you heard her Royal Tongue Express the great Farewell; and in the most Tenderest Affection was pleased to say, Farewell my dearest Sovereign Lord, farewell; I hear Heaven's call, and the mighty Hour is come that we must part; farewell, my Royal Family, and all my mournful Subjects, now farewell: each in your own order all must prepare to follow me: Follow her, then first in her Pious Example, Fight the good Fight keep the Faith, finish your Course as she did, and henceforth is laid up for you (what she Blest Saint hath now received) a Crown of Righteousness: which God the Righteous Judge hath prepared for all those that Love and Fear him.

THE Whole Duty OF Mourning, AND THE GREAT CONCERN Of Preparing Our Selves for DEATH, Practically Considered.

PSALM lxxxix. ver. 68.

What Man is he that liveth, and shall not see Death? shall he deliver his Soul from the hand of the grave?

The INTRODUCTION.

THat needs no Proof where all are Examples to themselves: such is that easiest and hardest Lesson, that all must die; that Death is the undoubted issue of Sin: and that it is a Separation of the Soul from the Body for a time: but because it stealeth on, as they that sleep in a Ship-under Sail, who arrive at their Port, while they think not of going: so we go on with a restless pace, to the Grave and Silence; and the unknown Limit of our present Life, consuming while we are not sensible of it; and because it is terrible to flesh and blood, our main care must be to inform ourselves, first what Preparation we are to make, that neither our Life may prove uneasy, nor Death terrible: Secondly, How to fortify ourselves against the Fear of Death: And Thirdly, How to comfort ourselves with Spiritual Remedies against immoderate Grief for the Loss of Relations and Friends: These Three Branches shall be the Heads of my Discourse.

I. First, We must prepare for Death, for Solomon tells ye, 11 Eccles. 3. in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be: and as Death leaves us, so Judgment shall find us: now as the Passage to the promised Rest, which was a Type of Heaven to the Israel of God, appeared terrible, Deut. 1.19. so likewise is our Journey to the Celestial Canaan; we are instantly ripe, though not ready for dying: are all subject to this pale Prince, to whom we are visiting every moment: this day we now live, we divide with Death; and that which is gone, is irrecoverably lost.

II. The Hour is uncertain to all Men; but they are certainly Happy who are then provided: Luke 12.37. many are apt to watch against the coming of Thieves, who can take nothing from them but only that which a little Time must: then what a stupid Negligence is it, not to watch and provide for Death, which they know will certainly, and may quickly come, and take away Body and Soul, nay Heaven itself to all Eternity, from the securest Sinner. Thinkst thou of Youth and Strength? alas! how many that are young, and in the Vigour of their Age, have died before thee? Dost thou at the Funerals of others, think with the proud Pharisee, Luke 18.11. God I thank thee, that I am not as other men are? seeing then that thou art exempted from the Privilege of Immortality of Body, let not Satan delude thee, but seriously prepare for that day, which may prove thy happiest.

III. Consider, That God is the Great Creator of the World; and the Sovereign Judge of all Mankind: Remember, he sits above, on his glorious Throne, in whose hands are the Keys of Life and Death: that whatever he pleases he brings to pass; and none can resist his Almighty Power; whatever he does is surely the best; and none can accuse his All-knowing Goodness.

IV. Next, If we consider our own sinful State, we may well cry out and say, Unhappy we, the Children of Dust and Ashes! Why were we born to behold the Sun? Why did our Mothers conceive us, and bring us forth to a miserable World; and unkindly rejoice to hear us cry? Whether alas! has the Errors of their Lives lead us, and in how deplorable a Condition do's our Birth engage us! We enter this vain World with weeping Eyes, but upon Death's Summons we go out with sighing Hearts.

V. All the few Days we live are full of Folly and Vanity, and our choicest Pleasures are mixed with Bitterness: the Time that's past is vanish'd like a Dream or Shadow, and that which we expect to come, is not yet at all: the present Time we enjoy, tarries but a moment; and then takes Wings and flys away, and never returns again: already we are dead to all the years we have lived, and vain 'tis to expect to live them over again: But the longer we live here, the shorter is our Life; and in the end we become a Lump of Clay, and a Feast for Worms.

CHAP. I. Several Notions of Death; what it is, its Author, Name, and Nature.

First, If we would know what Death is, the Philosopher tells you, To die, is to be no more Vnhappy: and if we consider Death according to the right Notion, it is but a departed Breath from dead Clay, enlivened at first by Breath cast upon it: Now Job tells you, Death is a Moth, and as the Moth breeds out of the Garment, so Death do's out of the Body. The Heathens were of Opinion, that Death was an Eternal Sleep, the Fear of the Rich, and the Desire of the Poor: but Pious St. Augustine often breathed forth this heavenly Wish, saying, O that I could see Death, not as it was, but as thou, O Lord, hast now made it. Death is the supremest Monarch in the World, as he hath the Dominion over Sin; and he is the antientest King, whose Reign began from Adam; yet St. Paul tells ye, 1 Cor. 15.26. at last this King shall be vanquished; the last Enemy that shall be destroyed, is Death; and Christ who is the Resurrection and the Life, pronounces this Sentence, O Death, I will be thy Death.

II. Whoever was the Author and Father of Death, Sin was the Mother; for the Apostle tells ye, 1 James 15. that Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death; and Eve the Mother of all Living, was delivered in Child-bed of Death. Now Adam falling, Sin follows him, and Man being tempted, Death assaults him; and by Sin Death enters: Every Parent is an Adam to his Child, infusing Corruption in his Generation. Since then Death by Sin crept in at the Window, or rather at the Ear, which is prone to listen to Evil Counsel, let us cast it out by the Sense of Faith, in hearkening to God's Word, which will make us wise unto Salvation.

III. As for the Name of Death, it is called a Sleep, so St. John terms it, Chap. 11.11. Our friend Lazarus sleepeth: and of St. Stephen it is recorded in Holy Writ, after he had done praying for his Persecutors, When he had said this, he fell asleep. 7. Acts 60. it is likewise said of the Patriarchs and Kings of Judah, that they slept with their Fathers, and Job expresseth, That man lieth down, and riseth not, he shall not be awaked out of sleep, till the heavens shall be no more. Likewise Saint Paul mentions in his Mystery, We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed 1 Cor. 15.51.

The Night is the Emblem of Sleep and Mortality: Now Sleep is but the Shadow of Death, and where the Shadow is, the Substance cannot be far off: Lastly, the Grave itself is but a withdrawing Room to retire in for a time; it is going to Bed to take rest, which is sweeter than Sleep, and when it is time to awake and rise, we shall, as the Royal Psalmist says, be satisfied.

IV. Next, as to the Nature of Death, few, or none know it, though all must sensibly feel it: there is nothing after Death, and therefore Death is nothing; it is without Essence, or Substance, but a privation which kills the Creature; therefore curiously to request the Efficiency of it, were but to employ the Eye to behold Darkness: Solomon in his Book of Wisdom, Chap. 1.13. mentions that God made not Death; but created all things that were good: this caused good St. Augustine to breathe forth this Supplication, Lord, thou hast not made Death; wherefore I beseech thee, suffer not that which thou hast not made to reign over that which thou hast made. Now Death came into the World, by Man only; whose Soul was affected to know that which God never made, which was the Evil of Death, thinking it had been very good, by desiring to know the worst of Evils: But so Divine a thing is Knowledge, that we see Innocency itself was ambitious of it: from whence that Proverb is derived, That Evil is not known, but by good.

V. Pet no Learned Man knows so much, but Ignorance may suffer him to commit Evil: for none of a sound Judgment and right understanding can be guilty of Wickedness: and there is no fear of knowing too much Good; but there is much Fear of practicing too little: But since the Almighty has revealed in his word, more than we can comprehend, and enough to work out our Salvation, let us attain to sober Knowledge, and not repine, but be content with our Ignorance. Indeed Knowledge and Power are the Worldling's Idol; but let every Man endeavor fully to know himself, and then Pride and Ambition will soon vanish.

CHAP. II. That Death hath no respect of Persons; but we are continually dying whilst we live.

Although Men cannot, or are unwilling to pay those Worldly Obligations they lie under; yet they must pay this Debt to Nature; and it is a Favor afforded by Nature, that what she hath made most vexatious, she hath made Common, that the Equality of Fate might mitigate the Cruelty of it; and this Question the Psalmist asketh, What Man is he that liveth, and shall not see death?

II. Our Savior told the Jews, their Fathers did eat Manna in the Wilderness, and are dead, 6 John 49. and the Apostle tells ye, Phil. 2.8. that Christ, being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto Death, even the death of the Cross. So that we see it is as natural to die, as to be conceived and born; yet it is improper for us to say Men die Naturally, for Man dies not as a Beast by an Annihilation, but by a Decree from Heaven; it is appointed for all Men once to die, Heb. 9.27.

III. Sickness the Messenger of Death, respects not the best Complexion; the Sores of Lazarus will make as good Dust as the Paint and Washes of Jezebel: and like Jonas his Gourd, we come up in a night, and are gone in a moment; we come naked into the World, and no sooner we are born, but the Grave waits for us: but to continue in the Body is not the request of those which desire Heaven; for the Apostle he desired to be dissolved: and the Psalmist cries out▪ As the heart pants after the Water-Brooks, so longeth my Soul after thee, O God, Psal. 42.1. Death only shortens Time, not Life; and the Merit of Death is the Debt due to Sin, both imposed on Mankind for Sin.

IV. Now, if we cast never so bright a Luster in the World, yet alas! our brittle Bodies how quickly are they broken; Man (says Jeremiah) fades like a leaf, and sin like a wind takes him away. Let a Man live never so long, yet at last Death seizes him; but to consider aright, Death is instrumental in our Passage to Heaven, therefore how can any think their Time ill spent in preparing for that, which will complete their Happiness.

V. There is no Circumstance of our Lives, but has been imbittered by some sad Occasion of a dying Relation or Friend: a happy Meeting often ends in some sad Misfortune, which conduces to an Eternal Parting: This King of Terrors meets us everywhere, <math>\langle \diamond \rangle</math> creeps in at our Windows like a Thief, and enters in at our Doors with his Grand Commission; he accepts of no Bribe, but will draw his fable Veil over all the splendor and glory of the Universe.

VI. Death hath his several Instruments to accomplish his Ends; sometimes we are taken away by Violence and secret Influence, by the Aspect of a Star, and the stink of a Mist, or by the sending out of a Cloud, and meeting of a Vapour; Accidents has happened, by the Fall of a Chariot, a sinking House, or a high mettled Horse to cast his Rider; others by the stumbling at a Stone▪ the scratch of a Nail or Fin, by a full Meal, or an empty Stomach, by watching at the Wine, and drinking of it in full Bowls and Glasses, the Healths of others, when in the mean time they destroy their own: Some by too great Study and Watching at Prayer, others is blasted by the Sun, or Planet-struck by the Moon; sometimes Death's Harbingers are Heats or Golds, watchful Nights, or slumbring Days; by Water turned into Ice, or thaw'd into the Flouds of a River; sometimes by a Hair, or a Ra•sin; by violent Motion, or sitting still; by Severity, or Dissolution; by God's Mercy, or his Anger; by everything in Providence, and everything in Manner, Nature, and Chance.

VII. Like Worldlings, we take indefatigable Pains to heap up Necessaries for our Life, and in the greedy Negotiation we purchase Death; then we are snatched away, and leave what we have so hardly ventured for, behind us: Now all this is the Law and Constitution of Nature, it is a Punishment due to our Sins, the unalterable Event of Providence, and the Decree of Heaven: The Links and Chains which confine us to this Condition are strong as Destiny, and immutable as the Eternal Laws of the Almighty.

CHAP. III. The Certainty of Death practically considered.

O Vain and miserable World! how infallibly true is it that all must die: and yet, alas! this is not all, but many complaints remain, which does attend and perplex us: for here we begin our race in frail and contemptible Weakness, and the whole course of our lives is a hazardous progress of dangers. If we escape the mischances of silly Children; we drive on the rash adventures of Head-strong Youth. If we out live those sudden Storms and Tempests; we fall into more Malicious and Wicked Calamities: our own negligent and superfluous Cares deliberately pine and consume us, and the crosses and affairs of the World: wear and tire out our Lives.

II. If fortunately, we should by a strange and miraculous Success, over come all these, and still bear up our healthful and prosperous Head: we are sure, at last old Age will creep and find us out; and check our Nerves by bowing our strength down to the Grave. The Grave of Silence, from whence no claim, or privilege Exempts, nor any potent Power controuls his Command: Kings and Princes must lay down their Crowns and Scepters, and Queens must leave their Diadems and Royal apparel; the Rich must leave their Wealth behind them, and the Great ones of the World must be crumbled into Dust: the Beautifullest face must be converted into Rottenness; and the Pampoured and well fed Body must become the food of Wormes; the buisie and most activest Man must find a time to die; though his great Affairs and full Employment, can spare none to provide for it. Even the Learned, the Eloquent, the Wise, and most Virtuous must submit to Fate; and the Heirs of Life itself be the Prisoners of Death.

III. Now, this when we see, we weep, and are afraid; since we all must drink of the same cold Cup, all Heads must descend to the same dark Grave; and none can imagine how soon they may be called. To day we are jocund in health among our Friends, and earnest about our Affairs; and tomorrow Arrested by the hand of that unwelcome Serjant, Death. Frail flesh and blood, may naturally and faintly struggle for a time; but at last must yield, and be buried in the Earth from whence we were taken.

IV. At last we must take our leave of our nearest Relations, and dearest Friends; and bid forever a long farewell to all the World; then perhaps our acquaintance may talk of us a while, sometimes as we deserve, and often as they please; perhaps, our Bodies once laid out of sight; we are no more remembered, than if we had never been born: only our good Works follow us to our Graves, and faithfully accompany us beyond our Funerals. But 'tis not for us, O Lord, to choose our own conditions; but to manage well what thou appointest.

CHAP. IV. Several Motives to Remember Death practically Considered.

God having made Man of the Dust of the Earth. Gen. 2.7. and thereupon after his Fall showing him his readiness to return to dust. Gen. 3.19. Ecclus. 12.7, doth yet further call us to consider our frailty; ordaining that this House of Clay is to be supported by a puff of Air continually breathed in and out, and that this being stopped the building must of necessity fall; from whence we see, our life hangs as it were, loose before us, going in and out every moment: therefore it is called the breath of Life, Gen. 2.7. and. 7.15.22. this ought to put us in mind of Mortality, by thinking on the breath of our Nostrils so easily departing: this is plainly demonstrated by the Prophets. Isa. 2.22. Psal. 146.4. and 104.29.

II. Another Instrument of human frailty, is the Pulse, which ariseth from the Heart, and the Arteries or beating Veins; and this by a double motion of Contraction and Dilatation, whereby they are drawn in and out, both for the expeling of noxious fumes through the insensible pores of the flesh, and for drawing of, air, to refresh the heart and vital Spirits: from the variety of the Pulse are taken many signs of Health and Sickness, Life and Death: it is the Character of our Strength or Weakness, and from hence is described the fainting and decayed state of Man, from the panting of the Heart, and restlessness of the Arteries and beating Veins.

III. Another Sustainer of our Life is our daily Food, Meat and Drink, whereby the Spirit is revived. 1 Sam. 30.12. and without it we fall down into the Grave. Now if our appointed Food for a Meal or more, be wanting, then instantly the Body faints, and the Flesh fails, Isa. 44.12. then Death creeps on by degrees, and Men begin to die sensibly: there is a Sense both of painful hunger in the Stomach, and of universal faintness and languishing through the Body: for hunger is a Worm gnawing the Intraills, calling for Meat, or threatening Death. Jer. 11.22. Lam. 4.9. Men being hungry and thirsty their soul fainteth in them. Psal. 107.5. and by this infirm condition whereunto God hath subjected our nature, he calls us to think on Death.

IV. Our Table, as oft as we come to it, is the Memorial of our Mortality; and our food before it enters the Body for nourishment, is diversely prepared, as Corn, and the like, are made to grow by the dung of beasts. Luke. 13.8. and from hence is the strength of our corruptible Life: So that we may say with Holy Job, to Corruption thou art my Father. chap. 17.14. But this not all, but we feed upon Death itself, and that by the allowance of the Almighty. Gen. 9.3. in taking away the lives of other Creatures to maintain our own; this is seriously to be thought upon as a wonderful Work of God: that our lives are preserved by the Death of the Creatures, our living Bodies are sustained by their dead Carcasses: in their Blood Swims our Life; and from their pangs of Death, spring the Pleasures of our Life, our Feasts and daily Food. Now if those that in part were maintained by Sin-Offerings were said to eat Sin; Hos. 4.8. then those that in part were maintained by the death of Creatures, may be said in the like Phrase to eat Death. So often therefore as we eat the Flesh of the dead Creature, and make our bodies to become their Graves; So often are we called to remember our own Death, and our own Grave in the body of the Earth.

V. Another Help to preserve our frail Bodies is our Apparel, which God hath given us to cover and defend them from Cold to preserve Health: and herein we have a double or treble memorial of Death; considering that our Apparel was given us, when by our Sin we came first into the World to the state of Death. Gen. 2.25. and when God first gave us our Garments he took 'em out of Deaths Wardrobe, they being made with the death of the Creatures from whence they were taken: God made coats of skin for Adam, and his Wife, and his Posterity, Gen. 3.21. Heb. 11.35. our Garments therefore being Badges of Mortality, and Cognizances of Death, so oft as we look upon them, we are called of God to remember Death; and so oft as we clothe ourselves with them, to be mindful that we put on the Livery of Death.

VI. As Food and Raiment are Means to preserve Life, so Labor of Man in his Vocation is a means to get both Food and Rayment, and therefore an Help of Helps to maintain Life; and yet in and by this Labor also, we are called to remember our Latter End, and to think of Death: for upon Labor attends Weariness and Faintness, even a failing and decay of Life: Painful Labor sometimes maketh Men weary of their Lives and to think of Death, and wish for it as for hid Treasure; Ex. 1.14. Job 3.17.22. considering that in Death Men rest from their Labors. Rev. 14.13.

VII. And above all, consider the Labor, Vigilancy, and Care, that is found in the highest Callings, how many Thorns is there platted in every Crown: Likewise in the Magistracy, what Troubles is there in distributing Justice, and in the painful Work of the Ministry, who watch over Souls; all these have through their indefatigable Weariness in Affairs of Church and State, have thought it as the best Expedient, to think of Death; nay, even to wish for it, and consequently to prepare for it. Numb. 11.15. 1 Kings, 19.4.

VIII. And not only by the Weariness thereof, but by the divers Kinds of Labor in several Vocations, God takes occasion to show the Vanity and Shortness of Life present, and summons them by their Callings, and by the Quality of their Works to think of Death: For the Weaver, by finishing every Web, God teacheth him how his Days are cut off, and the Web of his Life finished, Isa. 38.12. yea, before the Web is finished, by the running of the Shuttle at every Stroke, and every Thred added to the Web, the Lord admonisheth how swiftly the days of his Life run away, Job 7.6. Then the Shepherd in the Field, by the removal of his Tent or Fold, he is taught to think of the Removal of his Life.

IX. The Travel that Men have by Land, is appointed of the Almighty to put us in mind, that our days are swifter than a Post, Job 9.25. that we ride Post, as on Dromedaries that run by the way, in all hast to their Journeys end. And the Voyages that Men have by Sea in the most swiftest sailing Ships, is mentioned by the Almighty, to represent the swiftness of our Time, that carries us night and day, sleeping or waking to the Haven of Death; Job 9.26. and according to this Wisdom of God, and his Example, should Men make right use of their respective Callings, Employments, and Affairs of the World, to see before their Eyes continually, their Laws End.

X. As Labor and Toil in the Day, so Sleep and Rest in the Night-Season, is also a necessary Help to preserve this Mortal Life; and this Sleep is a lively Image of Death: for in Sleep Men lie down as dead Men, without Sense or Motion, ceasing from their Works, and taking no notice of the things that are done by others; and therefore the Holy Scriptures describeth Death by the Name of Sleep, or lying down to sleep, Job 14.12. Psal. 76.5. Matth. 27.52. John 11.11. 1 Cor. 11.30. 1 Thes. 4.13. Now when Sleep assails us, and like a Giant throws us down, we ought to think of Death; and by sight of our Bed to remember our Grave, to look upon it as a Tomb or Sepulcher, and every Night before we go into it, to labor for reconciliation with God, that so we may lie down and sleep safely.

IX. Whenever Sleep seizes upon us, let us seriously meditate, and think how securely, and sweetly do they sleep, that take care to go to Bed with a just and quiet Conscience? who after a toilsome day of Faithful Diligence and Industry, in a Course of prudent, just, and pious Living, lay down their careful and wearied Heads in Peace and Tranquillity, and safely rest securely in the Bosom of the Almighty's Providence: if they awake at midnight, their Conscience void of Offence, comforts them in the dark, and with Christian Courage, bids them not tremble or be afraid at the Shadow of Death; no, nor even at the grim Majesty of Death itself; but confidently, and with good Assurance, look up with the Eye of Faith, and long for the Dawn of that Eternal Day: this indeed should be our chiefest care, to note, and censure, and correct ourselves: to strive for Mastery over our Passions; and to dismiss from our Thoughts, what no ways concern us.

CHAP. V. Of Sin, the Means of Death, of Sickness, Youth, and Old Age.

OUR Sins the Works of the Flesh, in Scripture, are called dead Works, Heb. 6.1. and 9.14. and the Workers of them are called dead Men, Mat. 8.22. Luke 15.32. John 5.25. Eph. 2.1.5. and therefore upon every occasion of Sin committed, we are taught to remember Death. Whatsoever thing hath Death annexed and threatn'd as the Reward and Fruit belonging to it, the same thing is a just and necessary Memorial of Death: Now all our Sins have this Reward denounced, Rom. 6.23. and 7.5. and therefore in all Sins Death is set before us: as God also speaks expressly in his Warnings against Sin, Deut. 30.15.19. as in sight of Death, we are to remember Sin the Cause of it, so in the sight of Sin we are to remember Death, the Effects of it.

II. Neither are these Sins thus to be considered by us, only in respect of their future Reward; but God, by a further Judgment in sending a present Terror and Fear of Death upon the present Acts of Sin, Lev. 26.36. Heb. 2.15. doth call Men, yea, and force them to remember Death: thus it is with all Wicked Doers, and with the Just sometimes in part, through divers Temptations, Psal. 77.3.7, 8. but with the Faithful, there is another Remembrance of Death by occasion of Sins, as comfortable to them, as the former is terrible to the Wicked: for in fight of Sins that perplex 'em, they call to mind what shall quite free 'em from those Sins, which Expedient is Death; thereupon they set Mortality before their Eyes, and are taught that Lesson of the Almighty, to long for their Redemption, by desiring to remove out of the Body, Rom. 8.23. 2. Cor. 5.8.

III. Afflictions, Sicknesses, and Dangers wherein Death is threatened unto Men, are likewise Means of Death, and by them also we are called of God to remember our Latter End. Sometimes it pleaseth the Great Being for the Warning of Secure Men, to bring them to the Gates of Death before they enter: Psal. 9.13. and though he bring them back again, yet is this done by the Almighty for a Memorial of Death: God brings Men into such Extremities, that nothing but Death is to be expected, they receive the Sentence of Death in themselves, and despair of Life, 1 Cor. 8.9. and are free among the Dead, in their own and others Judgment, Psal. 88.4, 5. and thus many times they are in Deaths often, 2 Cor. 11.23. and such things God worketh oftentimes, that Men might renounce the World, and set their Heart, and their House in Order, as a Preparation for their Departure, Job 33.22, 29.

IV. Let us praise then the Goodness of the Almighty, who ordains all things for the best to his Servants: whose unlimited Providence governs us all our Life, and takes so peculiar a Care of our Death: He wisely casts us down on our Beds of Sickness, and mercifully draws the Curtain 'twixt the Transitory World and us, shutting out all its vain and pernicious Designs, and contracting all our Affairs and Business to a little Room or Chamber; there in that close and quiet Solitude, he speaks to our sorrowful Hearts, and methodically sets before us, all our sinful Life; there he prudently discovers to us the Frauds and Fallacies of this World; and kindly invites us now at last to prepare speedily for the other. Thither he carefully sends his Messengers of Peace, to treat earnestly with our Souls, and reconcile them to his Heavenly Kingdom: Thither he sends even his only beloved Son, to secure our strait Passage, and to guide and conduct us to himself.

V. O, how quite contrary will our serious Thoughts be then, to what they were in our Negligent and Careless Health! how shall we justly and freely Censure what we once much esteemed; and be easily and readily convinced into wiser Counsels! when our unruly and stubborn Senses shall be check'd with Aches and Pains; and our rash and inconsiderate Minds made sober and calm with Fear. When the Opportunity and Occasions of Sin shall be removed away, and every Object about us, incline us to Repentance.

VI. Let thy Holy Name, O Lord, forever be magnified! whose Mercy Sanctifies even thy Punishments and Judgments into Favors: thou bringest us Low and Weak to persuade us to be humble; and prescribest us a Sickness to heal out Souls and cure our Infirmities: thou commandest the unsatisfied Grave to dispense with none, but indifferently seize on all alike: That all may not neglect to provide for that last and fatal hour, and none be utterly undone with foolish and mistaken Hopes; thou tell'st us sincerely and plainly, we all must die; but tenderly and kindly concealest the Time and Place, that everywhere we may readily stand on our Guard, and every moment vigilantly expect thy Coming.

VII. In the Age of Man, where they first climb up and ascend to their height, and then presently decline and descend again, is propounded by the Almighty. Now the Face of Man is a Dial of his Transitory Age, and the manifold Changes thereof from time to time, as the Shadow of Declination in the Dial, do show his Mortality: and the main Differences in the Physiognomies of Men, may justly serve for a Memorial of Man's changeable Estate, his Beauty and the Vigour of his Countenance being daily altered, as the Grace and lovely shape of the Flower that perisheth, James 1.11. This ought to affect us daily, that the different Faces which we behold may put us in mind that the fashion of this world passeth away.

VIII. As the Face, so the Stature of Man growing up as a Plant, according to the divers Measures and Degrees of his growth appointed of God, Psal. 144.12. Luke 1.80. and 2.52. is another Testimony of his changeable Estate, even from the Child of a Span long, unto those that have their full growth, Lam. 2.20. though some be of low stature, as Zacchaeus, Luke 19.3. and some again higher by the head, as was Saul, 1 Sam. 10.23, 24 yet even in these compared with themselves, the proportion of their Growth is an Evidence of their Age to such as know them: and thus the Wheel of Man's Age is visible in the variation of his Stature, which may put him in mind of his Latter End.

IX. Besides the Face and Stature, the Almighty hath set other Marks upon the Bodies of young and old, for a Memento of their Time passing away: God describes to Youth, the Time of Love, Ezek. 16.7, 8. and to Age the near approaching Tokens of Death, whereby they are warned of God to prepare for it: for through decay of strength, the Arms and Hands, the Keepers of the House, begin to tremble, Eccles. 12.3. and the Legs that are as Pillars of the Body, bow themselves; and the help of a Staff to rest on, is sought of the Aged Person, Zach. 8.4. and with that Assistance, at every Step he takes, he strikes upon the Earth, and raps at the Gate of the Grave, until it be opened unto him: This Weakness is further signified by the ceasing of the Grinders, Eccles. 12.3. both the upper and the nether Millstone, which are called the Life of Man, Deut. 24.6. these Teeth failing, Life begins to fail, wherein the Memorial of Death is set before us.

X. And as in the outward Parts, so the like Weakness and Decay of strength is to be observed in the inward; the Silver Cords of the Sinews, which conveys the Faculty of Sense and Motion from the Head, in Old Age are loosed, Eccles. 12.6. that Cable of the Marrow in the Back Bone, which was wont so firmly to hold and stay the frail Bark of our Body, tossed with so many Motions, and by those many Conjugations of Nerves which kept our Body steady, begins now to dissolve: the Head, which is the golden Bowl, wherein is emboxed the Brain that ministers that Faculty of Sense and Motion, through Age is broken and become crazy: the many Veins, which carry the nourishing Blood from the Liver unto each part of the Body, become like unto broken Vessels; and the Arteries, which by the reciprocal Motions and Pulses, do convey the Vital Spirits from the Heart, even to all Parts of the Body, these through languishing Age becomes slow and weak: and all these faint Operations are so many Memorials of Death, and do plainly portend the Approach of our Latter End.

XI. The Old Man's gray head is in Scripture compared to the white Blossoms of the Almond Tree, Eccles. 12.5. this Tree making hast to flourish before many others in the Spring, is therefore in Vision used to signify, that God will hasten his Word to perform it, Jer. 1.11, 12. and consequently the sight of the gray head, either in ourselves or others, serves as a Divine Vision to warn us of God's Decree of hastening our Latter End: yea, those are upbraided of God as Contemnors of this Vision, who though their head be not all white do not observe the first sprinkling of the head, when as the gray hairs are here and there upon them, and they know it not, Hos. 7.9. and regard not this Memorial of their Mortality.

XII. As to the decay of Sense; in Old Age, they that look out of the Windows be darkened, Eccles. 12.3. the Eyes fail; Gen. 27.1. and 48.10. 1 Sam. 3.2. and 4.15. and that dimness of Sight is one of Death's Apparitors to summons Men to their End; by that restraint of Sight, God calls Men to make a new Covenant with their Eyes, to turn them out of the Corners of the World, not to gaze longer after Vanity, nor to walk after the Lust of their Eyes; to live by Faith and not by Sight, 2 Cor, 5.7. not to look after things temporal which are seen, but after things Eternal, which are not seen, 1 Cor. 4.18. and as the Sense of Seeing waxes dim, in Old Age, that of Hearing likewise fails; the daughters of Music are abased and brought low, Eccles. 12.4. Men cannot then anymore hear the voice of singing-men and singing-women, 2 Sam. 19.35. God that planted the Ear, Psal. 94.9. when he makes this Plant to wither again, calls them to remember their Transplantation into another World, to wait for their changing, and to prepare for it. The Tasting likewise decays; for Old Barzillai cannot taste what he eats, or what he drinks, 2 Sam. 19.35. Old Isaac by his touch cannot distinguish betwixt the hands of his Son, and the Skin of a Beast, Gen. 27.16.21, 22, 23. The Psalmist when Old, is covered with Cloaths, and feels no heat, 1 Kings 1.1. yea, the inward Senses begin to fail also; Memory decays; the Understanding is diminished, and the Aged sometimes in their decrepid Age, return to their Infancy, and not able to discern between Good and Evil, 2 Sam. 19.35. how inexcusable are they that live securely, and think not of Death, when they have so many Warnings given them.

XIII. With Decay of Strength and Sense, comes the decay of Health: Old Age is many times a continual Sickness, and when the days of Man are multiplied, they are but Labor and Sorrow, even the strength of them, Psal. 90.10. then is the time, when the evil days approach, and the years of which Man says, I have no pleasure in them, Eccl. 12.1. then is the Light of Sun, Moon, and Stars obscured; and then the Clouds return after the Rain, one Infirmary after another, v. 2. Through decay of Natural Heat ariseth Indigestion and Crudity of Stomach, and thereupon follow Rheums and Catarrhs; and from thence proceeds Aches, and manifold Pains and Diseases, whereby the Almighty, as with an Iron Pen writeth our Lesson, and engraveth this Sentence deep in our Flesh and Bones, Remember your latter end approaching, and prepare for Death.

CHAP. VI. Several Forerunners of Death, which may warn Men to prepare for it, Practically Considered.

Thus in every Age before Death Approaches, we have manifold Fore-Warnings of his Coming, and when Death appears, God usually brings with it some Joynt-Warnings, to prepare us further for our speedy Dissolution. And first, before Death makes a Seizure, there is commonly Pain, like a Harbinger, sent before, to warn the Soul to entertain the Almighty with a present and diligent renewing of their Faith and Repentance: for God could have taken Men out of the World without Pain or Sickness; by a sudden Change, in the twinkling of an eye, 1 Cor. 15.51, 52. but the Divine Wisdom saw it not necessary.

II. When the Lord appeared unto the Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apostles, and vouchsafed unto them Visions of his Glory, he used commonly to send before, as a Marshal, or Usher, some great fear, Gen. 15.12. Exod. 3.6. so that they fell down as dead Men, Ezek. 1, 28. and 2.1, 2. Rev. 1.17. or stood trembling, Dan. 10.8.11. their hair stood an end, and all their bones did shake. Job. 4.14, 15. But since God in his Divine Wisdom has altered that Method, and appears unto a Sinner at his Death in sweeter Visions of Heavenly Comfort, and prepares them with all Reverence for that hour.

III. God doth now as it were usher his way, by sending Sicknesses and bitter Diseases, that thereby we might be humbled for Sin, and renounce this Transitory Life, by giving a more willing Farewell unto it, and to long for our Translation, and the Joy which succeeds it: God shows, that then he expects a special Act of Humiliation, when near our End he visits us with such Pains; which creates a Mourning in us for Sins committed in the World, before we depart out of it: then are we summoned to stir up the Grace of God within us, and to raise up our Spirits with all Love and Reverence to meet the Lord, that we may receive his Blessing, and enter into his Gates with Joy, and into his Courts with Thanksgiving.

IV. These Pains prevailing at the approach of Death, causeth Men to lie down, and fall upon their Beds, Job 33.19. Acts 5.15. and to let all the Affairs of the World alone, with the Works of their several Callings: through Infirmity of Body God forceth them to stoop, and calleth them to remember their Frailty, and their End; as if he should command them to couch down before him, and require them to prostrate their Souls at his Footstool, in seeking his Favor and Mercy in his dear Son, even as their Bodies are prostrate by his Hand of Visitation.

V. This very Position of the Body, represents unto us, how the Grass withereth, and the Flower falleth, and admonisheth our Souls to worship and fall down, and kneel before the Lord our maker, Psal. 95.6. and by Faith to enforce our Bodies also, leaning on our staff, to worship upon the head of our bed, Heb. 11.21. Gen. 47.31. and 48.2. that he may straightway lift us up forever; as Jacob bowed himself to the Ground seven times, at the approach of his Brother Esau, Gen. 33.3. So the Lord by Sickness, bows us down, that we may come submissively into his presence, humbling ourselves under his mighty hand, that he may exalt us in his due rime, 1 Pet. 5.6.

VI. Another Warning to think of our Latter End, is that distaste of Meat, and want of Appetite in Sick Persons; when their life abhorreth bread, and their Soul dainty meat, Job 33.20. when the Staff of Bread fails, and the stay of Natural Life is withdrawn, then God summons the sick Persons to remember their end, to double their Care for Eternal Life, to seek the hidden Manna unknown, and unregarded of the World, Rev. 2.17. to feed upon that bread which cometh down from heaven, and giveth Life unto the world, John 6.33. by applying of his Promises, and tasting the Sweetness that is in them.

VII. Again when Sleep departs through Sickness, this is another distinct Warning to move Men to think of their End; God holds their Eyes waking, that they might meditate on their present Frailty; thereby are they called to commune with their heart, and that their Spirit make diligent search concerning their Estate and the Means of their Comfort, Psal. 77.4, 5, 6. God withdraws Sleep from their Eyes, and Rest from their Temples, that they might remember the Eternal Rest from all their Troubles, and might long after it, and prepare for it.

VIII. Now, precedent Pains, the Sick Bed, the loathing of Meats, and the Departure of Sleep, these are Occasions and Furtherances of Meditation, to remember our End: Now on the other hand, there are as many Hinderances of Meditation and Disturbances of the Mind, which meet with Men upon their Beds of Mortality, which to avoid that Obstruction, the Consideration of those Inconveniencies should prove as Motives to persuade us, not to defer our making our Peace with God, to the last Moment of Time; that so we may profitably forecast before it is too late.

IX. It happens sometimes in Sickness, that as some want Sleep, so others in contrary Extremity are oppressed with continual slumbering and sleeping, which with an unresistable Necessity invades them; and this not only in Lethargies, Palsies, and other cold Diseases, but likewise in many Burning and Pestilential Fevers; during which time they lie senseless, and cannot think on their present Danger, nor of anything which belongs to a due Preparation for their End: this leaden Sleep is a black Cloud of Death, a Night-shade, and a particular Darkness, of which in its measure is verified that more general Saying of our Savior, John 9.4. the night comes wherein no man can work: and therefore while there is Light and Liberty of mind, in the time of Health, our End is to be remembered and provided for, before the Hours of Oppression doth seize upon our Mind.

X. Sometimes in Sickness, though Sleep oppress not, there is a kind of raving Distraction, caused by Frensy, Melancholy, or other Distemperatures, which doth overwhelm the Mind, as Nebuchadnezzar's once was, by the Finger of the Almighty, Dan. 4. so that it is unfit to think of Death, or to seek any Comfort against the Danger of it: and from hence therefore it doth likewise appear, how unwise they are that defer the Time of their Repentance unto the Time of Death, when it is uncertain whether they shall be Masters of their own Wits, and Natural Understanding, not to speak of supernatural Grace, which is far above the reach of Man, and yet necessary to Salvation.

XI. Sometimes the very Vehemency and Extremity of Pain, doth trouble and disturb the Mind, and disables it, that it cannot orderly and quietly dispose itself unto Godly and Comfortable Meditations; but being overcome with Impatience, frets, and murmures, its tossed to and fro, and becomes fruitless: therefore are these Extremities of Anguish compared to a Cup of intoxicating Wine, making Men as it were overcome with grief, Isa. 51.17.21, 22. Lam. 4.21. and even frantic with woe and sorrow, that they know not what they do, Deut. 28.34. Jer. 25.16. Eccles. 7.7. and what Folly is it then for Men to be unprepared through forgetfulness of their Latter End, and to remain stupefied in Security all their Life, till they are plunged in a Gulf of Misery? Perplexity and Extremity of Anguish may justly come as a Snare upon them that abuse their present Peace and Quietness, by promising themselves Liberty and Power to dispatch all that is necessary for their Salvation at the last Moment.

XII. And commonly when Death approacheth, our Adversary the Devil, that goes about like a roaring Lion, seeking to devour us at all Opportunities, doth then especially rage, knowing that his time is short, Rev. 12.12. and withal seeks to take Advantage of our present Weakness, by insinuating himself into each of our former Perplexities, and adding frightful Dreams to our Slumbers, strong Fancies to our Distraction, and aggravating our Pains with great Terrors, by that Voice which is within us.

XIII. Experience may inform us what great Temptations many have conflicted with upon their Beds of Mortality; and therefore the Consideration of this last Great Enterprize should alarm everyone betimes to arm themselves against the Last Day of their Lives; to furnish themselves with a Competency of Grace, against the Day of Glory; to seek Truth and Righteousness; Faith, and Patience; to heap up store of Comfortable Promises out of the Word of God, and to lay it up in their Hearts, to be kept in readiness; whereby they may nourish up themselves in Hope, and be vigilant in praying incessantly; that having finished this last Combat and obtained the Victory, they may then be translated from a State Militant to a State Triumphant forever.

CHAP. VII. Of the Separation of Soul and Body, with other Memorials of Mortality, Practically Considered.

THE Divine Providence has ordained that at the Hour of Death, the Soul and Body shall be separated; and at this Separation, the Soul is conveyed away invisibly; no Man knoweth how nor whither: for no Humane Sense can discern the Spirit of Man ascending, Eccles. 3.21. for God in his unsearchable Council, orders his secret Will to be kept unrevealed from Humane Understanding. Now this secret manner of translating the separated Souls, by carrying some close Prisoners to endless Misery, and transporting others in invisible Chariots unto Eternal Glory, serves to warn and admonish us to remember the Evident Monuments of our Frailty: when secret Things are hidden from us by the Almighty, those which are Revealed, are the more to be observed by us, Deut. 29.29.

II. The Scriptures will inform us how some Persons, Men, or Angels, have vanished out of the sight of those they had convers'd with; and from thence we are to observe, that it is not requisite for us to know what they had heard and seen, or to pry narrowly into that which the Divine Wisdom has ordered to be kept from us, Luke 24.31, 32. Acts 8.39. Judge. 6.21, 22. Moreover God hath appointed that they should not be suffered to live, which attempted to converse with the Spirits of those which were departed from us, Lev. 20.27. 1 Sam. 28.8, 9. &c. But by all this, we are so much the more lead to observe the common visible Memorials of Mortality, shown unto us in them that die before us.

III. Furthermore, it is to be observed, that when the Spirit is returned away presently to God that gave it, yet the Body remains and returns to the Dust, from whence it was taken, Eccles. 12.7. If the Almighty by Death had taken away both Soul and Body, or if it had pleased him to take away all Men, as Enoch and Elias were, Heb. 11.5. Gen. 5.14. 2 Kings 2.11.17. or to bury all Men so as Moses was, Deut. 34.6. namely, so as their Bodies should be seen no more among Men; yet, even then, there were occasion enough to remember that wonderful great and final Translation; but now, seeing every Man departing this Life, leaves a part of himself on Earth among his Friends, yea, and that visible Part, even the Body, which was best known among Men; God by this frail Part of Man, that is left, gives us occasion to contemplate what is done with the immortal part; and to keep in Memory the Death past, to prepare us for the Death to come.

As Elias ascending to Heaven let fall his Mantle, for a Remembrance unto Elisha that took it up, 2 Kings 2.13. so we ascending, do let fall our Flesh, that hath been the Mantle of the Soul, under which it was veiled, and covered in the Days of our Mortality: Now by this Pledge, the dead warns the living to part from the love of Vanity, and to make ready for this Change, when the Soul departs more naked out of the World, than it came into it.

V. Besides, the Body is left behind, as a Pledge of our Corruption, to imprint into our minds the horror of Death, through that putrefaction which soon invades it, when it is deprived of the Souls presence: had the Body remained only without Life, and retained its former Comeliness and Beauty, and not been liable to putrefaction, how then would their dearest Relations and Friends have choicely kept them, and lovingly embraced them: but now, by the divine appointment, the body is Sown in Corruption. 1 Cor. 15.42. the Royal Body of David sees Corruption, Acts. 13.36. the Body of Lazarus the Friend of Christ begins to Stink the Fourth Day, John. 11.39. the Fair Body of Sarah, whose Beauteous Countenance charmed Kings and Princes, she being dead must needs be removed out of the sight of her most Faithful and Loving Husband, Gen. 23.4.

VI. And in such a degree hath Corruption prevailed, that some Bodies hath been forced to be buried very deep in the Earth, So noisome have they been, and soon putrefied; but though they are not to be looked upon with the Eye, yet they are the more to be thought upon, and our fading Estate to be Reflected on: by this Serious Reflection, Job humbled himself, confessing that Corruption was his Father; and to the worm thou art my mother and sister, Job. 17.14. and by this Consideration might be humbled the Proudest and most Ambitious Heart, when they Seriously Reflect how the Wormes breed out of their own Corruption, and surround their whole Carcasse, Isa. 14.11. these are the Laws and Ordinances of Death established by the Almighty, whereby he call us the more effectually to think of our End, not to pamper the Flesh, nor to take so much Care for our Bodies as we do for our Souls; according to this Example of God, who shows more respect, and love to the Soul by receiving of it into his Glorious Kingdom, whereas he suffers the Body to lodge in the Pit of Corruption. 1 Cor. 15.43.

VII. The Sequestration of the Body from the Place where the Soul is, and the Corruption of it being Separate, are mememorials wrought immediately by the Hand God: Now, besides these there is other after warnings of Death, effected by the providence of God, by the affections and respects of Men, that is paid to the Honor of the dead, and Comfort of the living: Now for the Honor of the dead, Holy Men of Old have shown great Care to provide Sepulchers, Tombes, and Monuments for them; such was the Cave of Machpelah purchased by Abraham, Gen.

49.30.31. the Pillar on Rachel's Grave that Jacob set up, Gen. 35.20. that continued so many Generations to Samuel's time, 1 Sam. 10.2. the Title on the Sepulcher of the Man of God, that Prophesied of Josiah, 2 Kings. 23.17, 18. the Sepulcher of David, that continued twice Fourteen Generations, from David to the Apostles time, Acte. 2.29. having been preserved in the time of the Babylonian Captivity, even then when both City and Temple were destroyed: these in Scripture are called Memorials, Math. 23.29. John. 11.38. chap. 19.41. by which the Righteous are taught to Remember their latter end.

VIII. The Magnificent Tombes, and the Sumptuous Sepulchers are but so many Scaffolds, Stages, and Theaters of human Frailty, and so many Pulpits out of which our Mortality is Preached: and all the Graves of the Popularity are the Coffers of Death, the view whereof should instruct us to lay up our Treasure in Heaven: and thus though the touch of a Grave defiled the Body with a Ceremonial Pollution in the time of the Law, Numb. 19.16. yet the sight of a Grave may serve to cleanse the Soul, by a Spiritual Consideration of our latter End, even as the sight of the Leviathan being raised up, made Men Purify themselves, Joh. 41.25.

IX. The Grave being prepared for the Dead Corpse, then Men proceed with their Funeral Pomp and Exequies: the mourners go about the streets, and a great train of Relations, Friends, and acquaintance accompany the dead unto his Grave, and follow him that is going to his long home: Eccles. 2.5. this going a Procession to the Grave, is a Memorial to them of their own Condition, that they in their Course must die, and be carried forth in like manner: thus they are called of God to remember at such times: then have they special cause to remember, that Iron Chain of Death and Mortal necessity; by which the dead Person is said to draw all men after him, as there were innumerable before him, Job. 21.23.

X. Then are Men called to climb up the Mountain of Contemplation, from the height thereof to look about them from one end of the World unto the other, to behold the two great Gates thereof so often mentioned in Scripture, that stand always wide open, night and day; the one of entrance into the World, and the other of departure out of it. Job. 1.21. Eccl. 7.5.14, 15. 1 Tim. 6.7. there may they observe how many Thousands come every Hour Naked, Crying and Crowding into the World at their Birth, and as many Thousands every Hour of the Day and Night that depart Groaning, and Crowding out of this World at their Death; thence they see, how one Generation goeth, and another comes Successively, Eccles. 1.4. one draws on the one, and another drives on the other, and there is no Rest in this Race, but all run Uncessantly from the Oriental Gate, to the Western Port, even from the Womb to the Grave.

XI. And as it was ordained at the new Temple, that he which Entred at one Gate, must not return through the same, but go out at another, Ezek. 46.9. So here is no return, but everyone hasts forward, and never ceaseth till they have past the Gates of the Grave: and by this Contemplation, when we see, and find ourselves in the midst of the throng, carried on with others in the Swift Wing'd Chariot of Time, unto the Sun-Setting Gate of the World; we are hereby warned to use this fleeting World as though we used it not, and to think daily of that new Eternal World out of which there is no Gate of departure, when we are once entered into it; and therefore also to make strait Steps to our Paths, and so run that we may obtain.

XII. Having been at the Grave, and performed the last duty to the Deceased, we then return from the dead to the living, to the Friends of the dead, to Mourn with them, to Comfort them, and give them the Cup of Consolation; Rom. 12.15. Jer. 16.7.8. Gen. 37.35. 1 Chron. 7.22. John. 11.19. and in this action we have another Call to remember our End: and while we administer Consolation to others, we are to take an Exhortation ourselves: Now, the house of mourning is the School of mortification; and therefore it is better to enter into it, than into the house of feasting: for there is the end of all men, and the living will lay it to his heart, and so be made better in his heart, by the Consideration of the dead, and by the Sadness of the Countenances waiting on that Consideration; Eccles. 7.2, 3, 4.

XIII. When the Comforters of them that Mourn, are departed to their respective Habitations; yet still the Friends of the dead, even while they are on Earth, so often as they miss their departed Friends, and want the help and benefit, which they were wont to enjoy from them; so often are they called to remember Death, that caused such Separations; Lum. 4 18.20. and in this remembrance they are withal Warned to be prepared ready for Death, and not to be Conformed unto this World, from whence their Comforts are taken away: when the Shepherd takes up the young Lamb, the Ewe follows him of herself, and needs no calling nor driving: when the great Shepherd of the Sheep takes away the Souls of Young and Old, and of dearest Friends from one another, it is to Encourage them to run after the Lord, and to long after his Presence, in whom they shall find more then all this World can afford.

XIV. So often as we think of an indulgent Parent, or an entire Friend, that would have rejoiced with us, and assisted us; so often are we called to be stirred up in our desires to be with them; and especially to run after such a Shepherd, that hath laid down his Life for his Sheep, John. 10.11. Whom the Ewe should follow more then her Lamb; and whom our Soul should long after more then after our dearest Friends: thus this missing of Friends, and Separation from them, both is to some, and ought to be unto all, an effectual means to Separate their minds from the Earth, to loosen their hearts from the love of this Life, and to make them aspire after that perfect, and indissoluble Communion, into which their Friends are gone before.

CHAP. VIII. Eternal Life described, and practically considered.

This Consideration of the last period of our Life ought most to affect us, which must end in Eternal Bliss, or everlasting Woe: this being duly thought upon, may serve to make a deeper Impression upon the Soul, and be retained in the memory more than all the memorials that have been rehearsed: Now would it not seem Strange, if any Person were to have Executed upon him the next day a Shameful and Ignominious Death, or to be Exalted to a Rich and Honorable Estate; think you that this Person could not keep in mind the Judgment approaching, or the glad Tidings of his Worldly Happiness, without the help of a remembrance: and more strange is it, that these great and main Concerns of Eternal Salvation, or Eternal Misery, should not by their own value press the Heart of Man with their ponderosity, unto a continual remembrance of them, without other warnings; when as we know not whether we shall have a days Respite before they approach.

II. The Last End of the Righteous is Eternal Life, and this Life consists especially with God and the Saints: Now, by Fellowship with God, Men come to see God, Math. 5.8. Even to see him as he is, 1 John. 3.2. to see his face, which no man can see, and live, Ex. 33.20. to see him, before whom the Glorious Seraphims, Cover their faces with their wings, Isa. 6.2. To see the Holy Trinity, the Blessed Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Cloathed, with the Sacred Robes of their several Beauty, and Majesty, shining distinctly, as the pure Jasper, the Carnation Sardine, and the Green Emerald: Rev. 4.3. then the Son will manifest himself to those who are his, John. 14.21. and they shall behold his glory: John. 17.24. and the Father shall be seen in him: John. 14.9, 10. and with them both, the seven spirits which are before the throne, even that one and the same spirit Enlightning with his Seven-Fold Graces and Gifts that bright Seven-fold Lamp of his Church. Rev. 14. chap. 4.5. 1 Cor. 12.11.

III. With this Vision, shall the soul be satisfied when it awakes: Psal. 17.15. and this Pleasure Surpasses all that Mortal Eye can behold; for even the Heavenly Angels, are but a shadow of that Goodness and Glory, which is in God the Creator and Author of all things: Rom. 11.36. all is but as a drop of a Bucket, or as a small Mote of dust, that turns not the balance; yea; as nothing, and less than nothing before him: Isa. 40.15.17. The Beauty of this World, and the Excellencies of all Earthly things, are such as Eye hath seen, and the Heart imagined; but this Glory and Pleasant Countenance of God is Exceedingly above all that we can desire or think: Eph. 3.20. Such as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor ever entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. 1 Cor. 2.9.

IV. Now, we ought not to forget this End, but Imprint it in our minds; for though we know not distinctly, what the things prepared are, yet we know they are Great and Glorious; for so much is revealed unto us by God's Spirit, and we have the mind of Christ: 1 Cor. 2.10.12.16. and therefore, O thou great being, teach us to make a Covenant with our Eyes; to turn them away from beholding of Vanity; and ever to look at this mark, and to feed our Eyes with a sight of this Glory, and even afarr off to behold it by Contemplation, until we approach nearer unto it, and with the Psalmist be satisfied therewith, Psal. 17.1•.

V. And in our Fellowship with God, we are not only allowed to see him, but to enjoy him, and all that we see in him: by Covenant he gives himself to be our God: Gen. 17.7.8. and is our portion and inheritance: Psal. 16.5. Jer. 10.16. Lam. 3.24. in this Promise are Contained all the Riches of Glory, and all the Treasures of Immortality: and in all the Promises of the Gospel, there is not more Comfort, then that which is included in this Word: for what Gift is greater then God? or what can be wanting to them that have the Lord for their exceeding great reward: Gen. 15.1.

VI. The Comfort of this Gift is unspeakable for the present in the midst of affliction; but in the last period of our lives, then is the fulfilling of this, and the like Promises: therefore is that End ever to be remembered and longed after: then especially shall it appear how his Flock shall remain as Lambs in the Bosom of the Lord their Shepherd: Isa. 40.11. then will it be further revealed, how God dwelleth in them, and they in him: 1 John. 4.15, 16. he that fills heaven and Earth: Jer. 23.24. is himself a House wherein they shall dwell, and they a Mansion wherein he shall make his abode: John. 14.23. by this Heavenly Conjunction and Cohabitation with God shall the Elect be one, even as the Father and the Son are one; Christ in them and the Father in him, that they may be perfect in one: John. 17 22.

VII. This thrice Blessed and most Glorious Union is that Green bed of Christ and his Spouse, Cant. 1.16. an Eternal Paradise of Delights and Garden of Spiritual Comfort: by this Communion God Embraceth those who are his with both arms of his love, and putteth them in his bosom; Cant. 2.6. chap, 8.3. and in this divine Embrace there is felt more Happiness and Heavenly Joy, then all the Love and Fruits of Love, or whatsoever went under the Name of the Tenderest and Strongest affection in this World, could ever yield unto the Heart of Man: for if the first Fruits of Spiritual Joy now at this present, in the midst of Tribulation, be an Hundred fold more than all the Pleasure of Houses and Lands, Fathers and Mothers, Wife and Children, the most desirable things of this World; Mark. 10.29, 30. then how can it be but more then an Hundred Thousand fold Pleasure to enjoy the Beauty and Face of God in Heaven; to inherit the fullness of Joy in his Presence, and Pleasures for evermore at his Right Hand.

VIII. If the infinite Blessedness of the Glorious Persons in the Holy Trinity doth appear in their mutual Union, so that they were an all sufficient and Eternal delight unto themselves, in enjoying one another continually before the World was, and before Men or Angels were made: Pro. 8.30. then may we well think, how our Vessels shall be filled and overflow with Heavenly Comfort: 1 John. 14. when we come to Drink of that Divine Fountain, and Enter into our Masters Joy, Mat. 25.21.23. and taste the sweetness of that Communion; this Love of God is better then life itself: Psal. 63.3. and all our Life and Love of this World is to be hated in Comparison of it: Luke. 14.26.

IX. And as in Soul, so in Body shall we be made like unto Christ: our vile bodies shall be changed, and fashioned like unto his glorious body, and this according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself; Phil. 3.21. that is, as effectually and Comfortably as an Almighty Power is able to bring to pass: and therefore as in the transfiguration of Christ, his face did shine as the Sun; Mat. 17.2. Even so shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of their Father: Mat. 13.43. as the raiment of Christ through the brightness of his Body, did shine as the Transparen light; and was exceeding white as snow: Mark. 9.3. and withal white and glistering: Luke. 9.29. So the whole Person of the Righteous, made whiter then snow in their transfiguration, shall shine, Glister, and Sparkle, with a Radiant Beauty and Heavenly Brightness, then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously, Isa. 24.23. then he shall be glorified in his Saints, and made marvelous in all them that believe: 2 Thes. 1.10.

X. If the Face of Moses, while he was yet Cloathed with Corruption, when he had seen but the Back-parts of the Almighty, and that but for a moment in one Vision, did yet shine so Gloriously, that Men fled away amazed from him and durst not behold the Brightness of his Countenance: Exod. 34.30. chap. 33.23 What then shall be the Glory of the Righteous when being Cloathed with Immortality, they shall see God Face to Face, and that in a perpetual Vision for evermore.

XI. From this Transfiguration of the Saints made so Glorious by the sight of God and Fellowship with him, ariseth the Glory of their Fellowship one with another, which is also an unspeakable Felicity of the Second Life; to enjoy all the Beauty and all the Love, of all the Glorified Souls and Bodies in Heaven: as Jonathan seeing the Grace of God in David, was knit unto him, and loved him as his own Soul: 1 Sam. 18.1. So here the Saints beholding the Glory of God revealed in each other, shall be link'd together in the nearest bonds of entire Affection: they that first give themselves to God, do then give themselves to one another by the will of God: 2 Cor. 8.5. they are all one in Christ Jesus: Gal. 3.28. there is one body, and one spirit: Eph. 4.4. all are gathered together in one, under one head, whether things in heaven, or in Earth, Men and Angels whether they be Thrones, or Principalities, or Powers: Eph. 1.10.22. all things are the Saints, whether it be Paul's, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are theirs. and they are Christ's, and Christ is God's: 1 Cor. 3.21, 22, 23.

XII. Hereupon the Angels take the Souls of Men deceased into their Bosomes, and convey them to Heaven; and then even the Poorest of the Faithful come into the Bosomes of the chiefest among the Saints; even Lazarus the Beggar into Abraham he Patriarchs Bosom: Luke. 16.22, 33. and not Lazarus only, but many from the East and West, shall come and Sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of Heaven: Mat. 8.11. then especially shall those which one Mourn'd for Zion, be filled with Comfort, and rejoice forever with Jerusalem: they shall suck and be satisfied with the Breasts of her Consolation: there is no weeping, nor Complaining; Rev. 21.4. no Curse, no angry Word; no Countenance of dislike, or disdain▪ no Evil, nor no occasion of Evil; no appearance of Evil, nor no suspicion of Evil: no want of Good in themselves, nor no envy of Good in others; but every Mans Joy doubled for another's Salvation, and Glorified in another's Glory.

CHAP. IX. The Christians Map of the World, wherein the Vanity of it is shown in the shortness of Mans Life, and that this World is not a Place of any long Continuance: Considered Practically.

The Apostle tells ye: Heb. 13.14 that here we have no continuing City, but we seek one to come: this will seem to look to be a hard Verse to the Rich, that they must not tarry here to enjoy their Riches, though they have Honestly and Laboriously heaped it up; but must with Sorrow and Grief be taken from it; but because Sorrow, I know, is a Passion loves no Prefacing, I will forthwith spread my Mantle and divide these Waters; and then there will appear on one side, Earths Inhospitality, we have here no continuing City: at the other Heavens All-sufficiency; but we seek one to come:

II. The World appears here, as with a Clinched Fist, readier to give a Blow than a Benefit, a very withered Jeroboham, whose Hand is shortened that it cannot help, not help us to a continuing City, for here we have none; but the other is the open Hand of Heaven, fuller of Assistances and Blessings than all Rhetoric can delineat; but in this Verse is the Christians Map of the World, consisting likewise of that Pair of Globes Caelestial, and Teristrial: Globes, not Cosmographical, but Theological; one of them not so much discovering the Rarities of the Earth, and Flourishing Cities of the World, as demonstrating the Vanity and Emptiness thereof, and that there is no Continuing City in it: the other not so much Teaching us the Motion of the Stars, and walking unto Heaven with a Staff, as how we may one day shine among those Lights, and really inhabit that same Glorious City, which is some Happiness here, but to hope, for what we Expect hereafter.

III. The first of these, methinks, the lower, or Terrestrial Globe, deals with us here, some what like Satan with our Savior, Mat. 4. Setting us, as on a Pinnacle of the Temple, and shows us all a fair Prospect of the Earth, yet with a Lrue, not his False Glass, not as a Lure, but as a Caution, not in the Language of the Tempter, telling us of Kingdoms and the Glory thereof, but in the Apostles Doctrine, 1 John. 2.17. the World passeth away and the glory thereof; passeth it must, and that one day in the total, pass to nothing, as now in the parts, to no Continuing City; By which defect and indigence of the World, we are the Plaintiffs here Condoling; we the General Race of Adam, we Mortals, because we Sinners: the next is our wants, what we are Scanted of, and that's a Place of residence, a Continuing City, we have none, lastly, the Scene of all these Miseries, where we are thus straightened, and that's here, in this same Dirty Prison Earth.

IV. But what? have we no Continuing City? by your Favor, Holy Apostle, did not the Creator, so soon as he had built this Great House the World, and furnished it, bring in Man his Tennant there, and Sole Possessor? Can we Complain of Wants? did not all Creatures then wear Mans Livery, a name of Servitude, and the very Wheelles of Time itself appointed to attend him unto Immortality? can they then whose is the whole Earth want Cities? whose Chariot is Immortality; whose Lackquies Time was; can they want Continuance? and yet it is here, that we have no Continuance.

V. Indeed this World was thus Man's Royal Manor once, and all Creatures were Tennants to him, and Paradise was to have been his Continuing City, and all this too, Leased out to him, paying but the Rent, obedience, for as many Lives as he should have Posterity: but the edge of his Ambition cut off his entayl'd Happiness, he would be Paramount, Chief Landlord; he, so breaking the Conditions, forfeited his everlasting Tenure that now he is but a Tennant at Will to an offended Landlord, and scarce an Equal sharer in the Vivacity of his Brother Animals; but this Misery and Mortality of Man, is a Condition not Imprinted by the Almighty, who, as he is himself Immortal, had put a Coal, a Beam of Immortality into us, which we might have blown into a Flame, but blew it out by our first Sin; we beggared ourselves by hearkening after false Riches, and therefore now are driven to our wants, to these Complaints, that here we have no Continuance,

VI. We infatuated ourselves by listening after false Knowledge: for that Tree of Knowledge bereft us of the Tree of Life, it taught us to know Evil only: and left us doubly like the beasts that perish: Psal. 49.12. both for Infatuation and Corruption: like the Beasts indeed for Praecipitation unto Death, but not for the Protraction of their Life; most of 'em running Man out of Breath, if we may believe the Naturalists, as especially in this particular, the Crow Nine times Numbering out his Age, the Stagg fourtimes exceeding hers, the Raven again trebling his: the Phoenix as long L•v'd as all of them.

VII. These and others Sport and Chant away whole Centuries of Years, while Man sits sighing over his poor Handfull, Psal. 39.5. thou hast made my days but as a span long, nay rather a short Span; mine age is nothing unto thee, says David, there to God, that might say here unto the Beasts, mine Age is nothing unto these: and yet it would Savour: but of Learned Heathenism, to Chide at Nature, and call her Step-mother to Man, and natural to others; but the Philosopher himself takes off that Cavil, affirming one day of a Life of Reason, above an Age of non-intelligence, beyond-all their longaeivity of Sense: but Divinity turns this seeming Discontent into a Comfort, informing us that this Life properly belongs to things of Sense, all its chief Blandishments, Treasure, or Pleasure, being but Sensual, and no otherwise than Imaginarily Good; much good may it do them, than with the length of this Life, that are to enjoy no other, while Nobler Souls of Reason and Religion, trampling on this, hasten to a better Life among their Brother-Angels, in their own Country, Heaven; there to Measure real Felicities no more by Time, but by Eternity.

VIII. No longer then let this be a Complaint, but Condolation, that we have here no continuing City: thus having brought you acquainted with the Plantiffs, as well as with yourselves, Consider now their wants, We have not a Continuing City: Now Cities have their period and dissolution, both Occasional and Natural: some of them, like goodly Troy, and better: Jerusalem, those Phoenix Cities of the World, in Successive Ages, buried in Fiery Tombes, rak'd in their own Ashes: others, too many of 'em, like old Rome and Carthage, sack'd and demolished by the Bloody Hand of War; so that you see, the Imperial Cities of the Four great Monarchies, nay, those Monarchies themselves, all as well as Babylon, now sit in the Dust: Isa. 47. and 'twas but Flattery in Livius the Historian, who called Rome, the Eternal City, after so many downfalls, and scarce a Feather now of that proud Eagle left.

IX. It was not also her a Fiction in the Poets describing of old Saturn, their God of Time, how he devoured his Children, though of Stone, I am sure the Moral is real, and Termes him a devourer; for whatsoever Time brings forth, Time destroys; this I need say no more of, every Languishing Body, every Nodding Structure is a demonstration; Witness our own Metropolitan City which was in 1666 laid in Ashes, and had not Pious Care, and Dilligent Industry have raised this our Phoenix and Mother-City, we had wanted Earthly Habitations for our Bodies, and Ecclesiastical Tabernacles for the Good of our Souls: and Happy are they who Build such Tabernacles here, that they are not chid by that fame Prophet Haggai. 1.4. Is this a time for you to dwell in ceiled houses, and let my houses lie wast? &c.

X. Yet alas! how Wanton nowadays, is the Worlds invention for Superfluous Building, Temples are too Old Fashion'd, the Zealous Father St. Bernard may still Sigh: Men Build as though they should Continue for Ever, and Glut as though to die to Morrow, which indeed they may rather fear, such a Woe being denounced against them, as the Prophet mentions: Isa. 5.8, 9, 10. Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the Earth, &c. but to avert it, imitate that Ecclesiastical Centurion: Luke 7.5. whom the Jews respected, for loving their Nation, and building them a Synagogue. And, if thou needs wilt Build, let St. Chrysostom be a little thy Surveyour wouldst thou erect Beauteous and Splendid Edifices? I forbid thee not, saith he, yet found them not on Earth, 'tis but an Heap of Sand, but Situate in those Calm Regions that are above the Breath of Danger, Build in Heaven: for here is no Continuing City.

XI. But Cities are here put for the Inhabitants, and our want of peaceful residence, shadowed under their discontinuance; for if we Reflect on the Pilgrimage of Abraham: Gen. 12.1. where he is called from his own Country and his Fathers House, to divide a Life between Variety of strange Lands and Dangers; So that indeed we Read of no other settled Possession that he had but Machpelah: Gen. 23.17. his only Purchase a place of Burial, thus it was with the Father of the Faithful, he had no Continuing City.

XII. Nor was it anything better with the Children; few and evil have been the days of my Pilgrimage, says old Israel: Gen. 47.9. long and evil the days of our Pilgrimage, murmured the Children of Israel in the Wilderness: Exod. 14. that Journey, was a true Type of the Saints way to Heaven, who Wandred up and down, says the Apostle: Heb. 11.37. destitute and afflicted. Militant is the Churches Name, she is an Host upon Continual Marches and Removes; our Habitations here, so often Varied by occasions, either of some Loss, Disfavour, Sickness, or of Death, (I need give no Examples) that, like the Travelling Common-wealth of Israel, we have rather so many several Stations, than appropriate Mansions.

CHAP. X. That Man himself is Frail, and is no Continuing City, or has any Duration here, Practically Considered, and Emblematically discussed.

TO show that Man is no Continuing City, is easily demonstrated, by these following Qualifications, which a City ought to be Furnish'd with: and First, 'tis an Emblem of Strength, so says the Wise Man: Prov. 10.15, The rich man's wealth is his strong City: and the Psalmist says, who will lead me into the strong City? Psal. 60.9. this is the frequent Epithite, through the holy Book, strong and well fenced Cities: indeed there's the Combination of most Men and Arms, the Store-house of Munition, 'tis the Heart of the Body-public, the Seat of most Spirit and Vigour, deservedly may these be called Strong Holds, and Good Fortifications.

II. Now what a City Man hath in this Sense, soon be your own Judges: Walk but about it, View well the Towers thereof, (if you can find any) how Weakly is he Fenced about with these thin Walls of Clay! Walls, that every Ague Shakes, every Dropsy Drowns, every Fever Fires, every Danger Batters; one Fort indeed there is in it, the Heart; but that so feeble as 'tis in a continual Trembling; a Palpitation not more for Breath than Trouble, Psal. 30.10. Watch-men too it hath, Eyes placed in a Tower, the Head, but neither fore-seeing or preventing Mischiefs; at best Exercises, either dim or drowsy.

III. The Soldiers of it, the Hands oft Treacherous, advantaging the Enemy and by Sins Wounding his own Bosom, while in all this Extremity his Carriages the Feet are unable to convey him from Surprisal, or keep him from being Captive to the Grave: so Weak a City Man is, that even Worms can Conquer it: Pliny tells us, for a wonder, of a City undermin'd by Conies; but Worms Triumph over this, and scarce e'er glory of the Victory: what is it I wonder, Philosophers call Man a little World for? is it because he hath such Earthquakes in him, so many Chollicks and Palsies? is it because he hath such Thunderings, sudden Noises in his Head? because such Lightnings, Inflammations in his Veins? He is a little World indeed, Himself the Earth, and his Misery the Sea: nay a great World of Weaknesses, born the most helpless of all Creatures, and lives the Sport of every least Distemper: how seasonable here for Man is St.

Paul's acknowledgment: 2 Cor. 1.29. who is weak, and I am not weak. Yet put, the Case with David he be so Strong and come to Eighty Years, yet it is no Continuing City, but a doubled Misery Labor and Sorrow: Psal. 90.10. and a City of no Strength.

IV. Secondly, a City is a Figure of Unity: Psal. 122.3. Jerusalem is as a City, that is at unity with it self: in unity, a city like each Building of it is an Aggregation of many into one, the proper place of Laws and Government, which are the Causes and Maintainers of Peace, Unity and Concord: but alas! we have no such City, no Continuing Unity, but rather here, continual Discord, Witness too many Vnquiet Families, our clamorous Streets, and the revenging Hall: indeed, so deep Root hath that Envious Mans Seed taken in the Ground of human Hearts, that the whole World almost, is become little better then a Field of Tares.

V. In the Church, what Flouds, what Seas can lend us Tears enough to bewail this want of Unity in matters of Religion? how is the seamless Coat of our Blessed Lord many times, Rent and Torn by Atheists, Libertines and Factious Novelists, which the Bloody Soldiers themselves spared, that it might Prefigure his Vnited Church? how was the Spouse like her Head and Savior Crucified between two Malefactors, Schism and Faction! while I speak of Love, I will not Strait wish those Cut off, which did Trouble us, but as our Charitable Mother Church, hath taught us, Pray, Lord forgive our Enemies, Persecutors, and Slanderers and turn their Hearts: for Religion hath no such Scandal as this want of Union.

VI. And for the Common-Wealth, how full has it been of Jarrs and Contentions? the Elements, Fire and Water, not at such Strife as Men, sure that Prophet spake of those times, Ephraim against Manasseh, and Manasseh against Ephraim, and both against Judah: Isa. 9.21. all, so captious of Indignities, so apprehensive of all Trespases such going to Law for Trivials; that which was anciently said of the Friars of this Realm, with a little Variation may now be said of the Lawyers, those lived of the Ignorance, but these wax Fat on the Strife of the People: Ah! what is become of that Sin Covering Amity? the Badge of Primitive Christianity! as Eusebius told a Bishop of his Age, that asked him, how he should know the Christians from the Infidels, in those Miscellaneous Times, Observe, says he, but how they Love each other, how fast those Brethren hold the Bands of Amity: and the same distinction gives the Bishop of our Souls: Hereby shall men know ye are my Disciples, if ye have love one to another: John. 13.35.

VII. But how are we degenerated into Nabalism? Love is fled, and not so much as Friendship left: very Ethnics and Jews had both their Golden pair of Friends; as David and Jonathan whose Souls were Knit together; Theseus, and Peruhous, who durst Exchange their Bosomes, and be the mutual Currents of their flowing Hearts: but hard it is amongst Christians now to find Unity, as the Apostle says, I speak this to our Shame; now Love sits on the Lips, and can soon take her Flight; Frothy Courtship, Judas's Kisses, Ehud's Embracements are the Friendships of this Age; or if any be more real, yet are they oft Leavened with Inconstancy, and like the Leagues of War, hold but for their own hopes and ends; very Marygolds, that follow but the Sun, and Close against the Clouded Evening: Now, for that Heaven-born Spirit that dares be Faithful, in spite of all the Shuffles the Rude World puts on him; that knows not upon any Urgencies to Violate devoted Friendship, (yet to keep Word, is a Qualification of a Saint: Psal. 15.4.) but such a one, were as great a Rarity as Solomon's Female Virtue: Pro. 31.10.

VIII. Thirdly, a City is an Emblem of Safety; of Safety by Consequence as before of Strength, indeed our Safety is by Defense, that by Strength, and both by such wellfenced Cities, (as Instrumental means:) in the 35. of Numb. 6. you read of Cities of Refuge, Cities where very Delinquents might find Safety: but we have none such here to secure us, even from undeserved Dangers, no, of all the Fortifications in the World, I would fain see that Place, that could Wall out a Famine, or a Pestilence, I am sure Samaria was a wellfenced City, and yet both these entered it, and well nigh Un-peopled it: 1 Kings. 18.

IX. Nor need we go so far for sad Examples: they have entered our own Cities, and no Fence here are Judgment-proof, not Argob's Cities, let them be Wall'd as high as Heaven: Deut. 3.5. a Shower of Vengeance, Hell out of Heaven shall Rain down on Sodom, be it never so well immur'd: and indeed, who dares put Confidence in City-Walls, that hath ever heard or read of Jericho: Josh. 6.20. an Arm of flesh is but a Bruised Reed, no Safety in either Horses or Chariots; Pharaoh found one of them, as David says, but a Vain thing to save him: Exod. 14.25. where his Chariots hurried the faster to destruction, for their Wheels being off, and what Safety in the Multitude of an Host, Sennacherib will tell you, whose Confidence was as great as his Army: 2 Kings. 19.35.

X. But those who rely only upon their own Strength, God is not in all their Thoughts; Like that Proud Emperor, Nero, that Cut off the Heads of all the God's in Rome, and caused the Image of his own to be fixed upon them, we Sacrifice to our own Sword and Spear, when 'tis the right hand of the Lord, that bringeth mighty things to pass; Strength of Arms, I confess are Means and Instruments of War, but unless from God, whence they are all? and, without his assistance may soon again become a Prey to Tyrants, the Sport and Rattle of the Wind and Waves; some may Remember we have been driven to that of David: Psal. 6.10, 11. thou, O God, wentest not forth with our Armies, till we came to his Acknowledgments there, of Vain is the help of Man. God will have the Glory of our Welfare, and it is requisite he should, since he is the Author of it, who else live here in a Shop of angry Meteors, violent Elements each of which would soon Destroy us, were not he our Lord Protector: how often therefore does David call him Rock, and Refuge, Strength, and Tower, Castle and Fortress: Conclude we then with him, Psal. 4. Thou O Lord, only makest us to dwell in safety.

XI. Lastly, a City is a Hieroglyphick of Rest, and therefore in the 21st. of Josh. 'tis said, God gave his people Cities which they built not, and rest round about them: nay, Eternal Rest itself borrows an Expression from the Name of City: 'tis called the New Jerusalem, the City of the Living God: Heb. 12.21. but Man is no Citizen of this, as 'tis a Representative of Rest, his Life a Giddy-wheel; the Orbs, the Clouds, the Winds, the Rivers not so full of Motion; I speak now of the Travells of his Mind, that busy Spirit hurried through Thousands of the Worlds Distractions, which yet if best Employed, is subject to be tired: even Reading is a Weariness, says the Royal Preacher: Eccles. 12.12. and there is no end of many books; unless an end of their Author.

XII. But if this Mill Grind Empty, have not the Mind good things to Work on, and how does it set itself on Fire! on Fire of Hell, by Sinful and Cupidinous Revolutions! what mischief leaves it un-imagined on the Bed, unpractis'd up! how full of all Contemplative uncleanness! even to the making up that Sinful climax: Gen. 6.5. the Heart of Man: the thoughts of the heart, and imaginations of the thoughts, are all evil continually: no Rest from Sinning: and thence how Restless, think you, is the Guilty Conscience, only in this particular, like God, that it never Slumbers, nor Sleeps; the Clamour of this inward Voice, deadens the Voice of Ravens or of Thunder; not only audible to us Waking, but interrupting of our best Repose, Job. 7.13. When I say my bed shall comfort me, and my couch shall give me rest, then thou frightest me with dreams, and terrifiest me with visions.

XIII. To be thus uneasy, is enough to make one with David, ones own Metamorphosis, Psal. 55.6. O that I had the Wings of a Dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest: at rest from the distracting Cares that follows this vain Worlds Affairs! at rest from the impetuous Solicits of the Flesh! at rest from the importunate Temptations of the Devil! at rest from the refractory Impieties of wicked Company. All which, make every honest David sigh out here, Woe is me, that I am constrained to dwell in Mesech, and have my habitation among the tents of Kedar, Psal. 120.5. Thus is our Life a tossed Ark, tumultuous without, sick within; and the poor Soul, like Noah's restless Dove, can find no ground to fix on, till she return from whence she flew at first; and then indeed she rests, Rests from her Labors, so says the Spirit, Rev. 14.13.

XIV. But here, we have no continuing City; no City of Rest: Now, Job sums up all the Particulars, and produces the Total, in his 14 Chap. v. 1.2. Man that is born of a Woman is of few days, and full of trouble; he cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not, that is, hath no continuing City. And having thus demolish'd this Earthly City, how can we now choose but with Metellus sacking Syracuse, lament the transient vanity thereof, and bewail our strong Desires of so weak an Object, as no Continuing City.

CHAP. XI. That there is nothing in this World, worthy of taking off our Affections from Heavenly Things; Practically considered.

There is a Place, where the Woman is clothed with the Sun, and the Moon under her Feet, Rev. 12. where the Church, and every Member of it, is robed with Glory, and far above the reach of any Mutability: But as St. Bernard says, this is in the City that's above, it is not here: this Place is the Moon's chief Region, her very Exchange as it were, to vent all her Varieties, and nothing, save alteration, continues here: Earth you see is the least of Elements, and to the Heavens, no more than is a single Atom to the Sun; an infinite substance then, such as the Soul is, must needs be straightened here: this little Circle can never fill the Hearts vast Triangle; no, nothing but the Trinity. Vain it is therefore to think of placing our Affections here.

II. This again is the lowest and most dreggish Element, the Sink of all, and so the Shop of Dangers and Diseases, and they both so destructive, that they obstruct our abiding here: 'Tis the Valley of the World, Earth, the Valley of Tears, Tears indeed, where we enter Life with Cries, continuing with Sighs, and going out with Groans. This is our Music here! here, where Mirth is but apparent, Grief is real: where we eat the Bread of carefulness, and mingle our Drink with weeping, and all our Actions with sinning, this is our Diet here! here we only taste of Joy, but glut in Sorrow; we walk in Happiness, but journey in Calamity, this is our Travel here! here where Riches are but Thorns, Honors but Pinnacles and Pleasures, Bees that leave more Sting than Honey: these are our Treasures here! So that the World you see, with all its Pomp, makes but up a Nebuchadnezzar's Image, Dan. 2. though the Head be Gold, the Breast of Silver, Belly Brass, and Legs of Iron, yet are the Feet of Clay: let one be honorable, another rich, a third beautiful, and a fourth never so vigorous, yet are the Foundations of them all but Clay, and a small Stone from out the Sling of Death, does break and liken them to Dust: and this is the End of all Things.

III. Now, methinks, by this time, we should be all of Holy Monica's Mind, St. Augustine's Pious Mother, who, as he tells us, having thus discoursed over the Frailty of the World together, melted into this Expression; For my own part, says she, I am now delighted with nothing in this World, and what do I longer here, but practice Jobs attendance? So after all this Colloquy of ours, anatomizing the vain World, what can we find here worthy our Affections? and not worthy our Disdain? Then what do we here, here in our unsatisfied Desires? our eager Prosecutions? treasuring for the Moth, and Thief, like Spiders, spending our Bowels to catch Flies, and as Menot says of sharp Hunters, who lose a Horse of a Price, in pursuit of an Hare worth nothing; here being neither a City of Strength, Unity, Rest, nor Safety: What do we then here, but Ixion-like, grasping of a Cloud for Juno.

IV. It was a Question once debated in the Court of Alexander, What was the Greatest Thing in the World? and having many about him of all Sciences, a Geographer answers him, the Mount Olympus, that Hill indeed being so vast and high, as frequently is took for Heaven itself: An Astronomer, he answered 'twas the Sun, that World of Light so many times bigger than the Earth; a Parasite tells him his own Victory; but an honest Moralist standing by, affirmed the greatest thing in the World was, to be an Heart that could Contemn the greatest: this Philosopher answered as though he had heard Christ himself Preach on that 14. of Luke. 33. Whosoever he be of you, that forsaketh not all he hath, cannot be my Disciple: a pair of imitable Examples, and one of them a Heathen, and shall Christians come behind such, in Contemning of the World, and the greatest things in it, then, let us even change Names with them, but let our Souls aspire with Monica's, that Glory of one Sex and Copy of the other, what do we here? like David; thirst for better Waters, Psal. 42. and yet as 'twas with Monica, one thing Necessary: one thing there was, which made that Female Saint desire a little longer Continuance here; which was her Sons Conversion, and to see him Baptiz'd a Christian.

V. So one thing must our Soul desire of God, that we may live to see that Christened, Baptized in the Tears of Penitence; and then away to our continuing City; what do such Eagles here, when as their Carcass is in Heaven? indeed what do we so long, looking on this Terrene Globe, whose Zones are all Intemperate, (Freezing Charity, or Scorching Envy, Avaritious Drought, or Riotous Profuseness;) whose Paralells are Equal Cares and Fears: whose Circumference is Vanity, and Centre is Corruption: hark how the Philosopher calls us off, Behold now the Beauteous Frame of Heaven, and desist at length to Admire base Earthly things, let the Bodies Figure be the Soul's Tutor, and an Elevated Eye, Teach an Vpright Heart: the Heart to seek that Contiuing City, the Eye to look for one to come.

VI. And here the Christian, and the Heathen part, who have all this while gone along together in the we have no continuing City; they likewise undauntedly apprehending their Mortality, and such as dare to hasten it: Desperate Unthrifts of their Blood: only to period their Miseries;

yet some of them in general Notions Dreamt of the Souls Immortality: thus far shined the dim Light of Nature, here were their Herculean Pillars; but without any endeavor of good Works to seek, or with the Eye of Faith to look for one to come; this is a regenerate Man and a Christians Hope, the Child of Propagative Faith.

VII. That was a strange close of dying Adrian, Thou little wandering, merry Spirit, who wert wont to cheer the Body, what place shalt thou now Inherit! &c. Alas! Heathens find but diminutive Comfort at their Death, treading those unknown Paths with unprepared Feet, going from one Darkness to another; oh! how may we ever Bless God, for our Vocation, our double Light of Grace and Knowledge, when the most Learned of 'em go hence, with I know not whither I go: whereas the meanest Christian with a Job's Faith Exulteth, I know that my Redeemer Liveth; and therefore go forth my Cheerful Soul, and fear not now to go to Christ, whom thou so long hast Serv'd: yet it is not my Task here rigorously to determine all those Lost, whose exact Virtues, so out Moral'd Christians.

VIII. We cannot limit Mercy, God loves it above Sacrifice: Mat. 9. and our Just Lord requires but according unto what he gives: Luke. 12.48. though indeed the Heathen People that know not God, in respect at least of outward Calling are not within the pale of the Messias Dear; and the Law so Written in their Hearts; I fear that Suppressing those inherent Evidences of Nature (which St. Paul calls with-holding of the truth in unrighteousness, Rom. 1.18.) does render them inexcusable, as the Apostle St. Paul argues strongly in that forecited Chapter: Acts 4.12. for there is no other name under Heaven given among men whereby they may be saved; but not to make ourselves inexcusable by Judging another, this we leave to the Great Judge of all, Revealed things to us; albeit we say not what becomes of them, yet to our grateful Comfort we know, saith he, that when this earthly tabernacle of ours shall be dissolved, we have a building not made with hands, Eternal in the Heavens: 2 Cor. 5.1. and yet our Confidence is to Weak to go alone, it must be accompanied with Diligence, we must not think to enjoy Heaven, with only looking for it: they would not then be so few that are chosen: Math. 20.16.

IX. All are Balamites, and desire to die the Death of the Righteous, but Vainly, unless they live the Life of them; 'tis Foolish to expect an end, without the means: to look for this Heavenly City, and not seek it: or that any Lazie Confidence should think to gain it, as God knows that's all the evidence many have to show for it, I hope for it; but for all this Hope, if no Endeavour be used, the Heart may break: no, nor is it Faith can look for it unless Operative, for our Faith cries out like Rachel, give me Children or I die: James. 2.20. but such a Faith as Works by Love, maketh our Hope infallible, of finding what we seek, we seek one to come.

X. Seek, then, is a Word of Labor: bidding us with the Apostle, Work out our own Salvation: Phil. 2.12. Work, 'tis not a Feast or a Feather-Bed, will bring a Man to Heaven, our Jehovah will not as the Poet Jove did in Diana's Lap, Rain down this Golden Purchase into our Bosomes: no, no Drones shall ever taste the Honey of that Hive, but those industrious Bees alone that seek it; a sharp Reproof for Idleness, that Gate of all Impieties, is a Whip of Scorpions for the Sluggards Back: Prov. 6.10. some like the Spouse, seeks no farther then the Pillow; but she found not her Beloved there; Cant. 3.1. and as little do they who stretching on their Beds of Ivory, e'er find his Benefits, whose Bed was but a Manger; but Ruin suddenly, for their not seeking finds out them:

Prov. 6.1. Idleness we know, it was denominated those Virgins Foolish, and Excluded them both the Chamber, and the Knowledge of the Bridegroom, Matth. 25.10. thus Slothful Persons, like Arrows from a feeble Bow, fall short of what they Aim at, and with Esau come too late to gain the Blessing: Gen. 27.30.

XI. Dilligence invites a Blessing; you see, Moses keeping watch over his Flock by Night, is grac'd with Visions; Exod. 3.4. a sight of him whose Vision is Beatifical, and Saul seeking his Fathers Asses, finds a Kingdom: 1 Sam. 9.20. and David is taken from following the Ewes great with Young, and made the great Shepherd of Israel, Psal. 78.71. Diligence invites a Blessing, whereas on the Contrary, Idleness allures Temptation, and Tempts the Tempter; while David exercised himself in God's Law Day and Night, all went well with him, he feared not what either Man or Satan could do to him; but when once he ascends his Wanton Prospect, and loosens the Reins unto his Idler Senses; the Devil soon changes his Title, and makes him a Man after his own heart, Wraps him in a double Snare of Murder and Adultery; and after these, how Justly he Complains, mine Eyes are Dimm, Psal. 6.7. when there's such a Pearl in one, and the other Blood-shod!

XII. Indeed, it is the sitting Bird that is the Fowler's Aim, the Envious Man Sowes his Tares while the Husbandman Sleeps; and Hell itself is beholding to Idleness, not only for Company, but for a description; being called a Lake of standing Water: Rev. 21.8. there's an old Fable, how once the Elements Contended for Priority; the Fire most active got Supremacy, the Agil-Air Wonn the next Regions, the Ambitious Waters Flow to overtake 'em, while Drowsie Earth sat still the while, and therefore is ever since Disgrac'd with the lowest Room; No Sin so unnatural, as Idleness: in a Word, the Idle Man's the Devil's Cushion, whereon he sits and takes his Ease, while the well-busied Heart, is in the Shop, or Work-house of the Almighty: then let ever some good Act or other, be as an Anchor to the Floating Mind; Sedulity becometh even our Civil Callings, but for Spiritual, saith the Apostle: 2 Pet. 1.10. Give all diligence to make your Calling and Election sure.

CHAP. XII. Several Instrumental Means to be used in the Seeking and Attaining of a Heavenly Kingdom; Practtically Considered.

IN the pursuit of a Heavenly Kingdom, we must Run so that we may obtain; But, because 'tis necessary a Seeker should have Eyes as well as Feet, Knowledge as well as Industry: least as the Perverse Jews, you ask, and receive not, because you ask amiss: James. 4.3. Now Consider the manner how to Seek: and that is by doing Good, and suffering Evil: doing Good and being active is the Work of Nature, but to do well, is an effect of Grace, and cause of prosperous Reward, as Holy Moses intimates to Israel: Deut. 6.28. Do ye that which is good in the sight of the Lord that you may prosper: Do you that which is good, and that you may do chiefly with these two Instruments, a Praying Tongue, and a Relieving Hand; for Charity and Prayer are the Swiftest Wings, on which the Soul can mount to Heaven.

II. Prayer, is the Jewel of God's Ear, the Dialogue 'twixt Heaven and Earth; the Tongue of Angels; the Souls Ambassador with God, which never with a Faithful Hand, knocked at Heaven Gates and was sent Empty away; what though not presently heard, 'tis but to double our Importunity? what though not straightway granted, 'tis but to glorify our Patience? yet sometimes, I confess, our Prayers like Exhalations drawn up here, may fall else where in fruitful Showers, and may light on our posterity: but fervent Prayer never goes uncrown'd, but is still heard in a proportion to our Welfare, though not always answered according to our vain Desires.

II. Prayer is the Sole Phoenix of the Graces, from out the Ashes of whose Spicy Nest, Revives a Bird of Paradise; this can make a Precious Arabian Bird as Happy as her other Sister, and for stony hearts can give us Hearts of Flesh: Ezek. 11.19. there is a kind of an omnipotence in Prayer, it locks and opens Heaven, 1 Kings 18.5.7▪ it renews Societies 'twixt parted Souls and Bodies, 2 Kings 4.33. it blows down the Walls of Jericho, stays the Sun, and makes Fire descend; it holdeth that Hand which holdeth all the World from striking a very Sodom; GOD himself can do nothing till praying Lot is gone; Gen. 19.22. and 'tis very remarkable in that Dialogue 'twixt GOD and Abraham, Gen. 18. how God disisted not from Granting, till Abraham first left off Petitioning: and therefore, as the Apostle wishes, Pray Continually, 1 Thes. 5.17. That is, at constant times, of public and retired Devotions; or else continually by Good Words or Works: for indeed no Circumstances can exclude Prayer, and besides, every good Action is a kind of Supplication. Seek therefore by doing Good, and that first by Prayer.

III. But because Prayer alone makes a Man but like a Bird with one Wing, or as a Boat with one Oar, somewhat lame and imperfect to perform this Duty; for let any Zeal make what noise it will, if spoke with the Tongue of Men and Angels, yet without Charity, 'tis but a tinkling, not a well-tuned Cymbal: 1 Cor. 13.1. Let therefore the praying Tongue say to the relieving Hand, as Ruth to Naomi, Ruth. 1.16. Whether thou goest, I will go; and where thou dwellest, I will dwell. Let Charity, I say, and Prayer, like Links of a golden Chain, depend on one another, though like two Gloves, one lost, the other but of little use; yet both together make themselves complete: For God, like Isaac, Gen. 27. will feel the Hands, as well as hear the Voice of whom he blesseth.

IV. Pliny in his History tells us of the Eagle, That she knows her young Ones by their Eyes, their Perspicacy, and unless they can out-face the Sun, she rejects them as a Bastard Brood. But God knows his Children by their Hands, their Liberality; and whom he finds, like Jeroboam, withered-handed, close-fisted, he counts them but degenerate Sons, and will disinherit them of his Heavenly Kingdom, yet will give them a Portion, I tremble to say where: Cast then thy Bread upon the Waters; Eccles. 11.1. relieve the Needy, whose Multitude and Weakness terms them so, and after many days, (for Heaven will never forget it) thou shalt find it: and that flowing to thee, like rich Merchandize, with blest increase: each one that shall crave an Alms, is an Arm stretched out from God, who hath another Hand as ready to reward, as that was to receive; for who so hath Mercy upon the Poor, lendeth to the Lord; Prov. 19.17. and indeed, but lendeth to the best advantage, for the Lord will recompense him. God puts us not to the expense of costly Sacrifices, should he, how cold would his Altars lie! the Calves of our Lips, and Offerings of our Hands, are now all he challengeth; and therefore, to do good, and to distribute, forget not: for these are the pleasing Sacrifices.

V. Part with some of that, which long you cannot keep, to gain that which you can never lose: Make you friends of that unrighteous mammon, Luk. 16.9. Ethimius, tells us, God hath given Men

Riches, not as unto Treasurers, but Stewards: Imitate then that wise One in the Gospel, for to everyone it shall be one Day said, Give an Account; and believe it, none shall make a better Reckoning at the last great Audit, than the Charitable Person: For love covereth a multitude of sins, 1 Pet. 4.8. and this indeed the Judge himself attestates, Mat. 25.30. Christ there describing his last general Sessions, seems to take notice only of Works of Mercy; there's no mention of your Frugality, Temperance, Diligence, or other Virtues; but Feeding, Cloathing, Visiting, and Ministering; these Christ names, and takes upon his own account, You have done it unto me, and therefore re-pays them with Eternal Happiness, Come you Blessed, &c. and Charity is the way unto that Kingdom, and Heavenly City of the New Jerusalem that we seek, though not the worth of it. Seek therefore by doing good, and that by Prayer and Charity.

VI. It follows next, That by Patience in suffering Evil we ought to seek: By suffering, for thereunto are we called, saith the Apostle, 1 Pet. 2.21. Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an Example, that we should follow his steps: and two ways likewise must we suffer; by Bearing, and Forbearing: in which two Things, says Epictetus the sum of all Philosophy, and I may add, of almost all Christianity consists: First, in forbearing Intemperance, all Luxurious Riot, and Excess; 'tis both the Mother and the Nurse of Virtues. Hippocrates his Aphorisms is true on both sides, That Diseases, both of Body and Mind, for the most part, owe their original to fullness and redundant Humours; and indeed, where Satan tempts one fasting, he tempts a thousand full, and therefore abstinence is the best Cure of both. And oh how well had it been for their Posterity, had but our first Parents been acquainted with this Virtue in Paradise! then, for ought I know, they had still been there, and then I am sure, that same one Man's Meat, had not proved so all others Poison: but ever since we took from that first Mother of ours, all our vicious longings, we likewise hunger after Superfluities, and Forbidden Fruits, not contented with enough, but are too indulgent to our wanton Genius.

VII. Intemperance brings not only Grey Hairs, but Green Years, with Sorrow to the Grave! For how soon does immoderate Potions, like much Water on a little Fire, extinguish natural Heat? and as soon do intemperately devoured Meats, like much Fire a little Water, drink up the radical moisture? and here that Judaism is seasonable, What need this wast? Wast of Food, Wast of Feeders? a little contents Nature, but nothing satisfies Opinion: how fast doth Luxury consume the vital Lamp, oftentimes so captivating the Body to Diseases, that nothing can free it, but that general Remedy of all Maladies, an early Death: So that the Intemperate are of the Number of David's Wicked Ones, that scarce live out half their days, Psal. 55.33. and however not by the Laws Politick, yet by the Divine Statutes, each of these is by double Guilt his own Self-murderer.

VIII. Be not therefore like that Image of Intemperance, Sardanapa***, whose effeminate Luxury bereft him of his Kingdom, least it bereave you of a better, of the Kingdom of Glory: but rather imitate that Pattern of Abstinence, the good Emperor Valentinus, who of all the Conquests, he had ever Won, though many, yet on his Death-bed, said, he Gloried but of one; and being asked of which; the greatest Victory, saith he, that e'er I got, was in Subduing that greatest Enemy my own Flesh: I close this with St. Peter's dehortation, and in his wooing

Language: I beeech you brethren abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the Soul▪ 1 Pet. 2.12. seek Patience by suffering, and that not only by forbearing, but likewise by bearing Evil.

IX. Bearing Evil, first, Affliction is the Coat of a Christian, and the Cross his Badge, and it is said to everyone, as well as Constantine, under this Banner thou shalt overcome: are we not all Members of that Head which was Crown'd with Thorns! the parts then must look to Simpathize together with it; for the Head enters not by one passage, and the Members by another; but all go into Heaven at the same Strait Gate: the Red Sea is the way to Canaan, and through many tribulations must we enter into that Kingdom, Acts. 14.22. Affliction, like the Toad, hath a precious Pearl in the Head, how ever it appears ugly; no Affliction is for the present joyous, but our light afflictions which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of Glory: 2 Cor. 4.17.

X. Adversity is God's Knife, wherewith he spareth not to Launce whom it pleaseth him to Heal, and those, like precious Jems, are most beautiful after Cutting: and though our Earthly Mother, this World, may perhaps for our Affliction with Rachel, call us Ben-onies Sons of her Sorrow; yet God our Heavenly Father, will one day for our patient Suffering, with Jacob, call us Benjamins, Sons of his Right-hand; you may perhaps have heard of that Saying of St. Austin, God had never but one Son, and that his only Son, without Sin, but not without Affliction; no •ot his beloved Son in whom he was so well pleased: Mat. 3.17. indeed, the rather was he Afflicted for that he was beloved, seeing he Chastneth whom he loveth, and Scourgeth every Son whom he receiveth: Heb. 12.6.

XI. The Rod is the Badge of Filiation: and therefore St. Augustine notes in God, a cruel Mercy, and a merciful Cruelty: the first, when he permits the Wicked to prosper in this life, as tis Job 21.13. the wicked live, wax fat, and grow in Wealth, saith he, but what ensueth, a sad Catastrophe, in a Moment they go down to Hell; a while they flourish, says the Psalmist, like a green bay Tree, but anon, when their Sins are Ripe, they are cut down like the Grass, and wither like the green Herb: Psal. 37 2. and this indeed is a cruel Mercy, no marvel if the Prophet desired rather God's merciful Cruelty: Jer. 10.14. Correct me, O Lord, yet with thy Judgment, not in thine Anger.

XII. The very Heathen could say, 'Tis better to have been afflicted, for adverse fortune more profits man than smiling stars; and Job as well as David had Experienc'd it: Blessed is the Man, saith he, the Man, what Man think you, the Man that's Clad in Purple, and fares deliciously every day? no, that's not he: is it the Man whom the King will Honor, with the Ring, and Steed, and Royal Robe? 'tis not he neither: what then, is it the Man that hath caught this World in a Purse-net, and by the Omnipotence of his Gold, Commands all the Felicities that grow in Solomon's Walk under the Sun? no, none of all these, but Blessed is the man whom God correcteth: Job. 5.17.

XIII. To this purpose, St. Augustine feigns a Conference 'twixt God and himself, God personating a Merchant, and himself a Chapman: says God, I have merchandize to sell: what is it? says the Holy Father: why says God, the kingdom of heaven: says St. Augustine, what's the price on it? for poverty, says God, the richest Kingdom; for momentary affliction, Eternal Rest; and for Reproach a Crown of Glory: since then our light afflictions which is but for a moment, bringeth us a more excellent and eternal weight of Glory: Rom. 8.18. let us not refuse the Chastning of the Lord, but when he sends it, Patiently suffer Evil: therefore seek by doing Good, do good by Charity and Prayer; and seek by suffering Evil, and suffer by abstaining all Intemperance, and sustaining all Afflictions: so run and you shall obtain, thus seek and you shall find, the Continuing City that we look for: a Prospect of which I shall give you in the following Chapter.

CHAP. XIII. A Prospect of the Heavenly Jerusalem, which we are to seek; Practically Considered.

This is an Object worthy all our Pains; and our best deservings undeserving it: take but a glimpse of it, for we can do no more at present; here we see, as in a glass but darkly: 1 Cor. 13.12. Consider it abstractly as a City, then as a Concrete, one to come; first, you see, 'tis a City, not a Wilderness, as is this World, where we are all in Pilgrimage to the Sepulcher: and behold here a most exact Distinction 'twixt this same and the former City: the Worldly one's built but of Clay and Stubble, the Work of Men's Hands, and those that make 'em are like unto 'em, of a Frail dissolution: but this Coelestial City is made by him who made the Hands, whose Architecture is the Almighty, these Buildings therefore are, John 14.2. the abiding Mansions, whereas those Earthly ones: 2 Cor. 5.1. are but Gourds, but Fleeting Tabernacles; you remember the other was a City of Negatives, neither of Strength, Unity, Rest, nor Safety; this of all affirmatives, where in are all those fixed as in their proper Sphere.

II. And first, 'tis a City of Strength, ask St. John else: Rev. 21.1. the Foundation all of Gold, the Walls of Adamant, and its Twelve Gates of Pearl, materials of the Strongest: yet Guarded with Innumerable Angels that excel in Strength, Psal. 103.20. Garrison'd with an Army of Martyrs, and Govern'd by the Lord of Hosts, indeed there can want no Strength where dwells Omnipotence; here then were that an opportune Desire, who will lead me into this Strong City? and that will do it, by diligent seeking, if thou pursuest it.

III. This too is a City of Unity, the King of Salem's Dwelling-house; those Stars are the Embroideries of Peaces Coat, and the Gay-beams of the Sun and Moon, but the Bright Smiles of Love Triumphant; Heaven is the Place where Charity was bred, Faith and Hope are low born Virtues to her, 1 Cor. 13.8. here they begin, and here they end: but this greater Grace of Love and Unity, (astray indeed on Earth) take up their Eternal Rest in Heaven, nay, there were no Heaven without it: Concord here, ever Flows, and knows no ebb, springing from the undivided Trinity, unto the Goodly Fellowship of the Prophets, and Communion of all Saints, who shining all with the same Light of Glory, breath all the same Incessant Hallelujahs: none envying each others Happiness, Vessels all full though of several Sizes; none know either want or emulation this Jerusalem is the City, at Unity with itself: Psal. 122.3.

IV. Next, 'tis a City of Safety, you see, Strengthned beyond all Opposition, and Seated above Short-armed Danger: no angry Storm can shake the Cedars of this Lebanon, or blast the Ascenders of this Holy Mountain, here only may we cry, Peace, Peace, all Safety dwelling here▪ no Enemies being left to interrupt it, Sin and Sorrow, the Grave and Hell are all Conquer'd, by him who hath subdued all things: 1 Cor. 15.27. yet were the World let loose against them, Christ's little Flock need fear no ill; for they are in such a Hand, as who shall take them from him? John. 10.28. let the World totter into its first Chaos, ruin should threaten them in vain, whom God makes dwell in Safety: Psal. 4.8. this Canaan is full of secure Vines and Fig-trees; the Prophet Zachariah means this City Sure; when he says, Men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more destruction, but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited: Zach. 14.11.

V. Lastly, all these speak Heaven a City of Rest, where there is such Strength, Love, and Safety, needs must there be true Security: first, Heaven is the Center of Souls, as the Earth is of Bodies, and only there they rest: there indeed being contentation adequate to the Soul's Capacity, no further search, no more desire, where as here, one corner of the Heart or other, still is Empty: Heaven satisfieth the hungry Soul with goodness: Psal. 107.9. and yet this Heavenly Rest is not to be taken, (as some Impious Spirits) only privately, as a total Cessation from all Sacred Business, for in that Sense, Saints have no rest in Heaven, never ceasing to fall down before the Throne, saith St. John, never silencing their Sacred Anthems to the King of Glory but as Philosophy-says of the Spheres, this Holy Motion is their endless rest, in respect of all molestations and wonted troubles, which this World showers on them; here they are said to rest, and so says the Spirit: Rev. 13.14. they rest from their labors.

VI. And now could but divine Contemplation transport you with St. Paul, 2 Cor. 12.2. but snatched your Souls a while from out their Earthly Tenements, and Elevate 'em to the Heaven we speak of! what glorious Objects not to be revealed, should you there behold? there should you see Felicity walk hand in hand with Eternity; and what this World can never show you, Glory attended on by Safety: there's Light never Clouded, Health never Weakned, Pleasure unmix'd with Grief, or Beauty with Deformity, a Moon without her Spots, Wisdom acquainted with no Error, and Life beyond the reach of Death.

VII. There shall you see the Eternal Eternally, one whom all shall love without Satiety, and with unweariedness Praise him continually: there likewise should your Ears with Equall Happiness Banquet themselves on the true Coelestial Melody, sweeter than that feign'd of the Spheres, even of Halilujah-singing Saints and Angels: there shall you find, as 'twere an happy Marriage, a Conflux of all goodness united; so that there's nothing absent that you could wish present, nor anything present that you could wish absent; here then with David we may lie down in Wonder, what glorious things are spoken of thee thou City of God! Psal. 87.3. and yet, like as to Sheba's Queen, not the one half can be told you.

VIII. But yet this Happiness is too much for the present; in this Life Pleasure is the shorter twin; and therefore as an exercise of our Hope and Patience, we look for one to come: you see the industrious Husbandman Reaps not presently, but with a costly Confidence, many Days, Weeks and Months, waits at expectation's Gate; so must we, says St. James, chap. 5.7. look for this precious Seed, and have long Patience for it; delay whets our desire, and multiplieth our Estimation: yet may not violate the Rule of Patience, or anticipate the call of Nature; like him that reading Plato's Book of the Souls Immortality, made himself away to hasten it; but such make more hast than good Speed.

IX. Christians must wrap up David's Wish, and St. Paul's Desire, in Job's Patience: Job. 14 14. all the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change cometh; and take the Apostle's Word for it, in due time we shall reap if we faint not: Gal. 6.9. The Mariner too, that Man of hopes, the watery Plough-man, you see, endures his Voyage er'e he gains his Freight, yet for the most part, somewhat he receives beforehand, but his completed Payment, not till he makes his utter port: so likewise in our passage to the true Elizium, we patiently must cut through Winds and Waves, and not expect our entire Wages, till our Course be finished.

X. Yet in the mean time, we are not without that Seal of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 1.22. the earnestness of our Hopes, the Co-assurance of God's Spirit with ours; for we have here Heaven in the Blossom, the Fruit not till hereafter; here the harmonious Feast of a good Conscience, which is Heaven inchoate, but for the Consumation, we look for that to come: this one to come, intimates here, both the certainty and duration of this supernatural City: the certainty, because it bears the force of a Promise, and so it is, Heb. 11.16. for God hath prepared them a City, the Saints then sure enough shall have it, since he hath prepared it, all whose promises, are Yea, and Amen, 2 Cor. 1.20. and if his Word be not enough we have his Oath, Psal. 83.3. I have sworn by my Holiness, saith he, that I will not fail David forever: Woe then, be to our infidelity, if we believe not the Oath which he Sware in the House of his Servant David, that he would give us; and indeed with faithless Man, what is to come may still be so, but Promise-keeping is God's Attribute; for so the Prophet David describes him by it, Psal. 77.8. that he keepeth his promise forever.

XI. His Performance and his Promise differ not in Essence, if in Time, and therefore as St. Paul exhorts, 1 Cor. 15.58. Brethren, be ye steadfast, and immovable, your hope being not in vain in the Lord: we look for a City to come, and that shall come which we look for: I, and not only come, but ever shall continue; the futurity, speaks the permanence, that while 'tis present, it shall be still to come; this future knows not any Preter-perfect-tense, Years eating up Days, Ages swallowing up Years, Time loosing his ne'er so much past, yet ne'er the less to come: not like our slender Joys here, no sooner flow'd to us (almost) but ebbing from us: but a Continuing City, Stor'd with fullness of Joy, and Pleasures for evermore, Psal. 16.11. Evermore! more perennious than the Gliding Stream, or Constant Sun: here the Sun may be one day Darkned, and the Moon pay home her borrowed Light, the fixed Stars may become Planets and wander headlong from their Spheres, whole Nature may so forget her Office, that Heaven and Earth may pass away, but these Pleasures like the Right-hand they wait on, remain for evermore: and this is our expected City, whose Inhabitants, you will say, (by better title than they of Tarsus) may be called Citizens of no mean City, Act 21.29

XII. And in this Royal City, the days brightness there it knows no light, no nor ever fears the least Eclipse: whose cheerful and smiling Brow no Moving Cloud o'recasts; nor tempestuous Storm molests the passage of its Rays: but still shines on Serene and clear; and fills with splendors that Spacious City: it needs not the declining luster of our Golden Sun; nor the borrow'd Silver of the Pale faced Moon: the Radiant Sun that appears there is the Lamb, and the Light that shines is the Glory of God: the Walls of this City are raised with precious Stones, and every Gate is of one rich Pearl; the Mansions are built with choicest Jewels, and the Streets are paved with transparent Gold: in the midst of this City runs a pure Crystal River, perpetually flowing from the Heavenly Throne; there all along those pleasant Banks deliciously grows, the Tree of Life: healing all Wounds with its balmy Leaves, and making Immortal all that but taste its Fruit.

XIII. Thus is the holy City, which we are too seek, Built; thus is the City of the New Jerusalem Adorn'd: O thrice fortunate, and most glorious City! how free and happy are thy blest Inhabitants! every Head there wears a Royal Crown, and every Hand a Palm of Victory: every Sparkling Eye o'reflows with Joy, and every Silver Tongue with Psalms of Praise: there we shall dwell perpetually in the view of God, and be filled forever with the sweetness of his Presence; this is that Coelestial Sphere, whose Zodiac is Felicity, whose Constellations are degrees of Glory, and whose Poles, are Joy and Eternity.

THE Second Branch, HOW To Fortifie our Selves against THE Fears of DEATH.

CHAP. I. That if we dedicate our Lives to Christ, the advantage of Death will be to our Selves.

The Apostle tells us, Phil. 1.21. to me to live is Christ, and to die is Gain. First St. Paul lived, so do all Men, so do all Animals, what our Apostle saith of Bodies, I may of Life: there is a natural Body, and there is a spiritual Body, 1 Cor. 15.44. so there is a Natural; and there is a Spiritual Life; this is an hidden; but that a manifest Life; this an inclosure, but that a common; it is common to Heathens with Christians, to Beasts with Men; the little Ant, the crawling Worms have a share in Life as well as we; so that these may say as well as St. Paul, to me to live; why should we be so much in love with, or dote upon this Life, which we have no more Interest in, than the meanest living Creature? indeed, it is a Mercy for which we ought to be thankful; it is a Talent which we are to improve; but it is no Privilege wherein we should glory, whereof we should boast, or wherewith we should be too much affected.

II. Secondly, as St. Paul lived, so he made account of dying: others live as well as he, and he must die as well as others; and as certainly as we live, we must die: and Man is no less subject to perishing than the Beast; yea, the good man hath no more exemption than the bad; for so the Prophet asserts, Isa. 57.1. The Righteous perisheth: indeed the Apostle elsewhere calls Righteousness a Brest-plate, Eph. 6.14. but it is not Death proof; and though it delivereth in, yet not from Death: it is true, Death is the wages of Sin, but still, it is here the Lot of a Saint: perfect Innocency should not have known Mortality, but Grace in the best is mixed with that Sin, which bringeth Death: Christ, (I grant,) hath taken away Death, but so as he hath taken away Sin for the present, only in part, not fully: Sin is taken away by Death, that is the Power and Guilt of it.

III. And indeed, it is not without manifold Reason that divine Providence hath so ordered it: first that the Members may be conformable to their Head, and that we may follow Christ, the same way of Death, in which he hath gone before us to Glory: secondly, that by pulling down of the Wall, the Moss may be fully plucked out, and by the dissolution of the Body, its Infirmary and Frailty wholly Purged away: thirdly, that the Power of God may appear the more Glorious in Raising us up, after Death hath laid us in the Grave and the Grave turned us into Dust: fourthly, finally, that the Strength of our Faith might appear the more in believing we shall live though we die: for these Reasons the Wise God hath appointed his own Children to Walk through the Valley of the Shadow of Death.

IV. To carry it yet one Step further, and that in a few Words, it is no other than St. Paul (who was not only a Christian, but an Apostle) who taketh it for granted, that he must die; neither the Word nor the Work of Righteousness can secure from Death; for Prophets, Apostles, Ministers as well as others, are Mortal, and must die: indeed, they are, (according to our Savior's Metaphor) the Lights of the World, but such as after a while may be blown out by a violent, however must go out by a natural Death: Clouds they are from whom the Rain of Instruction falls upon the People, but at length they themselves vanish away: finally, Angels they are in Respect of their Office, but still they are Men in regard of their Nature, and must die like Men: St. Paul himself hence supposeth it is a thing which sooner or later would befall him.

V. Now this blest Pattern of the Apostle, might serve to shame us out of our inordinate living to our Selves, and quicken us in our endeavor to live to Christ; as Peter said in another case to Christ, John. 6.68. Lord, whither should we go? thou hast the Words of Eternal Life: let us say in this, Lord to whom should we live? thou hast Command of our Natural Life; yea, thou art the Life of our Life, and Soul of our Soul: oh that all our Oil might empty itself into this Golden Candlestick! that all our Water might run in this Channel, all our Actions be level'd at this Mark CHRIST, and his Honor: for indeed, all he did was in reference to us; he was born for us, lived for us, died for us, Rose again for us, is Ascended, and Sitteth at God's Righthand, and shall at last come again for us: why should not our Souls then wish to be with him? it is a known saying, the Soul is not where it liveth, but where it loveth: and it is no less true, whom the Soul loveth, to him it will live: and it is by Faith that Christ liveth in us, and it is by Love that we live to Christ: let him be the sole Object of thine Affections, and then he will be the chief end of thy Actions.

VI. That Expression of the Spouse in the Canticles, my beloved is mine, and I am his; Cant. 2.16. is very considerable to this purpose: my beloved is mine, in that she expresseth her Sense of Christ's Affection towards her: and I am his, in that she insinuateth her love towards Christ: and (which was the Fruit of it) the Resignation of herself to Christ: excellently doth St. Bernard illustrate these Words:

he is mine, and I am his: he mine, because he is merciful: I his, because I am not unthankful: he Conferreth on me, Grace for Grace: I return him Praise for his Grace: he is for my Deliverance, I for his Honor: he for my Salvation, I in Subjection to his Will.

Thus it was with the Spouse, and thus it will be with every Christian, who duly pondereth upon the Mercy of Christ towards him, and hath his Soul affected with Love and gratitude to Christ. Now if there were not in us any Spark of Love to Christ, yet even Self-love cannot but strongly oblige us to live to Christ, in as much as this is the only Honorable, Profitable, and Pleasurable Life.

VII. No Life so honorable as this: all Actions are dignified, especially by the End to which they tend; whence the more noble the Intention, the more noble the Operation: and what Intention can be higher, or end nobler than the Glory of Christ? this is that which by a strange Activity turneth our Earthly into an Heavenly, our Natural, into a Spiritual Life, which is the most excellent of all Lives: to live to a Man's Lusts, debaseth his Life, and maketh it no better than Bestial; but to live to Christ, exalteth it, and rendereth it no less than Angelical.

VIII. Nor is no Life truly Profitable but this; the Way to live to our Selves, is to live to Christ: whilst he hath the Glory, we have the Benefit: and as his Name is Advanc'd, so our Good is Advantag'd: there is a strange Riddle, and a seeming Contradiction in those Words of God by the Prophet Hos. 10.1 Ephraim is an empty vine, and bringeth forth fruit: a Vine is then said to be Empty when it is Fruitless, and can that which bringeth forth Fruit be said to be Fruitless? but the next Words [to himself] unfolds the Riddle, and reconciles the Contradiction, since the Fruit which is brought forth to ourselves is no Fruit: what one said of the day wherein he had done no good, I have lost a day: that may we say in this case, that day and time of our Life is lost, wherein we live not to Christ.

IX. Finally, this is the most Pleasurable Life, free from those Cares and Fears, Distractions and Vexations, with which living to the World, and our Lusts, is encumbered, full of those Joys and sweet Pleasures, and Delights whereof all others are Ignorant: he that can say, to me to live is Christ, may say, to me to live is peace of Conscience, contentment of Mind, and Joy in the Holy Ghost, in one Word, this is the only way to make both our Life Comfortable; and our Death Gainful.

X. I shall now Conduct you into the Walk of the pleasant Field of Death's Gain, where it will appear that Death is Gain to a Godly Man, and a Good Christian; many are the Miseries under which we Groan in this Life; but, as St. Ambrose says, Death is a Cure for 'em all: in this respect it is, that Seneca saith aptly, it is the cause of none, but the end of many evils: upon this account it was, that Death hath been, even by the Heathens, looked upon as an Advantage: when those two famous Carpenters, Agamedes, and Trophonius, had built a Temple for Apollo at Delphos, they beg'd of him a Reward, to whom this Answer was given by the Oracle, that it should be Conferred on them within Nine days; within which time they died: and when Cydippe beg'd of Juno a Boon for her two Sons, Cleobis and Bito, she found them in the Morning dead in their Beds, as if the God's could not bestow a greater Benefit than Death, by which Men are freed from the Calamities of Life.

XI. In this respect Seneca's Comparison is very fit, who resembleth Death to an Haven, into which when the Ship enters, she is past all the danger of Rocks, Sands, Waves or Winds, to which she was Continually liable upon the Tumultuous Seas: indeed Death is that which delivereth our Bodies from Pains and Aches, our Tears, and our Hearts from Sorrows: and in this respect St. John calls them who die in the Lord, blessed, because they rest from their Labors, Revel. 14.16. to wit, all Labor both of Mind and Body with which here they are oppressed.

XII. The Truth is, many are the Afflictions of all Men, so especially of the Righteous in this Life: they are sure to meet with Persecution from Wicked Men, for their Righteousness sake; as the Tree is beaten with Sticks for its Fruits sake; yea, such is the rage of Persecutors, that they care not to what Sorrows, of Hunger, Cold, Nakedness, Imprisonment, Banishment, and Want, they expose them: besides, Almighty God is pleased to Chastise em; for whilst he lets others alone in Sin, he exercises their Graces by Adversity, whilst others enjoy Prosperity: but when Death comes, it sets them free from all, as being the last Chastisement which God doth inflict upon, and the last Mischief which Wicked Men can do to the Godly.

XIII. Finally, so long as we continue in this World, the bur of Corruption will cleave to us; but Death rids us of it: according to that of St. Paul, 6.7. He that is dead is free from Sin: in this respect, Death is fitly called by St. Ambrose, the Grave of our Sins; and by Gregory Nyssen, the Expurgation of Wickedness, for till the Vessel be broken, the muddy Water of Corruption cannot be wholly poured out: Consult the Experience of the Saints, and you shall find them still Complaining of Spiritual Conflicts with their Corruptions: we are besieged on every side, (as Saint Cyprian observes) and, oh how often is a Breach made upon us! if Covetousness be knocked down, Lust riseth up; if Lust be quelled, Pride starteth forth; if Pride be subdu'd, Anger exasperateth; thus are we forced to a continual struggling with our Sins: but when we die, the Combat ceaseth; and as for the present we are not under Sin; so then, we shall be without Sin, or so much as the Motions of Sin.

CHAP. II. Of the Fears of Death, and how to Fortifie our Selves against them: Practically Considered.

DEath in all Men's Opinion is the King of Terrors, and the most formidablest Enemy in the World to human Nature, now all Grief ariseth from Love and Self-interest, and naturally Men fear Death, because it puts a period to that Life, which Indulgent Love, and Weak Nature would preserve: Christians were wont to assume that Courage, that no Fear possessed 'em, but that of Sin: they could Expostulate with the Law, and say, thou hast no power over me, for God the Father hath sent his beloved Son to Redeem me from the Captivity of thy Bondage, and therefore thy Terrors and Accusations, are all in vain: for this Expedient I have, I will creep into the hole in my Savior's Side: there will I hide myself from all my Foes, and plunge my Conscience in his bleeding Wounds, and by Virtue of his bitter Death, Victorious Resurrection, and Glorious Ascension shall I gain the Conquest.

II. Why should we then thus be surrounded with Fears, and permit Death's Terrors thus to affright us? seems it so hard a task to Walk the Path, which all our Ancestors have Trod before us? Adam the first of all Mankind, and Righteous Noah that feared the Almighty: Abraham the Father of the Faithful, and Friend of God, and Moses the Servant of the Lord: David the Man after God's own Heart, and Solomon the Wisest King that e'er Sway'd the Scepter: all these have Justly paid their Debt to nature, and subscribed to the Law of universal Mortality: Nay, Jesus himself, the blessed Savior of the World, has expired on the Accursed Cross of Eternal Shame; and went to his Transcendant Glory through the Gates of Death.

III. And Now shall our Childish and fond Self-love so blindly flatter us; as to wish an Exception from this regular and general Rule? shall we be still murmuring and repining, when our Life is but a Bubble, a Vapour, nay, but, a Span, and still exposed to innumerable Sorrows and Afflictions? does not the very shortness mitigate and abate its Miseries? and does not those many Miseries highly applaud its shortness? should we not rather be glad and rejoye at the approach of Death, that when e'er it comes it proves so advantageous to us? if in our Aged Years, tis a Haven of Repose; and ought to be kindly Entertain'd after so long, and tedious a Voyage: if Death appears in our Infancy and Youth, it prevents a Thousand Calamities, and numberless Dangers of ruining our Souls: if by an ordinary fit of Sickness, 'tis according to the Course of Nature; if by any disaster or outward Violence, 'tis always the will of Heaven: what occasion have we then to dread or fear, how many Darts Death has in his Quiver, when we are sure he can throw but one at us.

IV. Therefore to depart this World is an act to be done but once; and that once well done, we are happy forever: we must needs confess the Decrees of the Almighty are always Just; and that 'tis only ourselves are the cause of all our Miseries; for no sooner are we Born but we begin to Sin, we Sacrifice our minority and Youth to Vain Sports and Follies; and our Riper Years to Gluttony, Drunkenness, Lust, and Pride: we spend our Old Age in Politick Craft and Greedy Avarice; and begin not to live till we are ready for the Grave: then indeed we lament the shortness of our time; when we have ourselves like Spend thrifts thrown it all so Prodigally away: for when we have lived, and led a loose and negligent Life, we then Complain Death seizes on us unawares: we find fault that perhaps our days are too few to grow Rich; or to satisfy the Ambition of a haughty Spirit: but did we strive to be Taught the Love of God, and to imitate the meek and humble Life of the Blessed Jesus: it would require not so much the number of Years; as the faithful endeavors and utmost diligence of a Pious Mind: could we but bestow, on the improvement of our Immortal Souls, the time we so vainly trifle away on our Frail Bodies; our day would be short enough and not seem tedious; and long enough to finish our appointed Task.

V. Then what shall we but say to our Souls! that our only business here, is but like unto the Wise Virgins; to Trim our Lamps, and to wait the coming of the Bridegroom? but to sow the Immortal Seed of a never failing Hope; and expect hereafter to reap a due Increase: it is insignificant, how late in the Year the Fruit be gathered; if still it improve in growing better: no matter how soon it falls from the laden Tree; if a Stormy Wind blow it not down before it proves Ripe: let us then Contemplate, on God's most Just and Secret providence; who governs all things by the Counsel of his Divine Will whose powerful Hand can Wound and Heal; lead down to the Grave of Silence, and bring back again: let us be ever ready, to him to bow our Heads, and freely submit to him our dearest Concerns: let us say unto him, Lord, strike as Thou pleasest our Health, or Lives, we cannot be safer than at thy disposal: only these few, but earnest Requests we humbly make; which, O may thy Clemency Vouchsafe to hear! Cut us not off in the midst of our Sins and Folly; nor suffer us to Expire with our Sins unpardoned: but make us, Lord, first fit, and ready for Heaven; and then take us to thyself in thy own due time: for 'tis not for us, O Lord, to choose our own Conditions; but to manage well what thou hast appointed.

VI. It is true, Death bereaveth us of a Mortal and Transitory Life, but it is an inlet to an Immortal and Everlasting Life; it despoileth us of our Worldly possessions; I, but it putteth us in possession of our Heavenly Inheritance, it taketh us from the Society of our bosom Friends and Neighbors: I, but it sends us to Abraham's Bosom, and makes way for our Society with Christ: finally, it severs the Soul from the Body; I, but it unites the Soul to God: what is it for the Candle to be put out, whilst we enjoy the light of the Sun? for the standing Pools to be dry, so long as we may drink at the Fountain? for our Earthly Comforts to be taken from us, when Heavenly Joys are Conferred on us? the truth is, Death is not a privation, but a permutation: so Holy Job calleth it a Change: Job 14.14. and that a Blessed Exchange, of a Cottage for a Palace, a Wilderness for a Paradise, a House of Bondage for a Place of Liberty, of Brass for Gold, Pebles for Pearls, Earth for Heaven.

VII. But let the advantages of Death mitigate the Fears which is apt to arise in us from the apprehensions of it; when Abigail told Nabal the threatening Words of David; the Text says, 1 Sam. 25.27. his heart died within him, and became as a Stone. thus is it with the most of us, when any Summons of Death is given: nay, not only with the most, but even sometimes with the best: Christ cometh to the Disciples on the Sea, to preserve them from the Storm, and they are Troubled; Death cometh to deliver us from all evil, and we exceedingly Tremble: indeed the reason is, because we Consider not that Death is a deliverance, and an advantage to us: what Chrysologus saith of Martyrs, is true of all Good Men, Their death is a birth and end a beginning, they live by being killed, and whilst they are thought to be extinguished on Earth, they shine in Heaven; and surely were this well pondered by us, we would not seek Consolation against Death, but Death itself would be our Consolation: those Words of Job, chap. 16.14. I have said to Corruption thou art my Father; to the Worm thou art my Mother and Sister, are not unfitly allegorized by Origen to this purpose; as if he therefore called Corruption and Worms his Father and Mother, because as Parents are comforters to their Children, so were they to him.

VIII. It is true the Separation of Soul and Body is Terrible, and a natural Fear of it cannot but be in all; I but it is as true in respect of the Godly, that when this Separation is made, the Soul is set at Liberty, and rejoiceth, yea, the Body is at rest, and knoweth no Trouble; and is such a Separation to be feared? this Life, what is it but a going to Death? and Death what is it but a going to Life? little cause there is then sure, why we should either too much Love the one, or Fear the other: shall that be the Object of our Fear, says Tertullian, Which freeth us from what ever is to be feared? and this we have from the Mouth of a Roman, I would not be Young again though God would grant it me, and he giveth this Reason, because when I die I shall go from my Inn to my home.

I. It is not Death itself, but our mis-apprehension of Death is terrible to us; says St. Ambrose: Did we look through, beyond Death, at the happiness which followeth, it would not be dreadful but Amiable in our Eyes, and with the Apostle we would not Fear, but desire to depart: that of the Wise Man, Prov. 14.32. the Righteous hath hope in his death, the Chaldee reads, the Righteous hopeth he shall die; so far is a Good Man, from fearing of that he hopeth for, his dissolution; and though he dare not rashly hasten, yet he willingly entertaineth it, whensoever sent by the Almighty to him.

X. Now if a good Life precede, an happy Death cannot but follow; nor is it probable, a happy Death should be the Consequent, if a religious Life hath not been the Antecedent: some there are, who would invert these Words of the Apostle, Phil. 1.21. To me to live is Christ, but to die is Gain: and make Gain the predicate of the former; and Christ of the latter; thus doth every Covetous man say, To me to live is Gain, and to die is Christ; Vain Men who will have Gold to be their God, and yet Christ to be their Redeemer, they will serve Mammon whilst they live, and yet be saved by a Savior when they die; but it will be Just with Christ to say to all such Mammonists, in these Words of God to the Israelites, in the day of their distress, Go to the God's which you have Served, the Gain which you have lived to, and let that deliver you in this hour of your Death.

XI. Others there are who would sever these Clauses, whilst they would gladly say, To die is Gain, but not to live is Christ: one was asked, whether he had rather be Croesus or Socrates, his answer was, he would be rich Croesus in his Life, and good Socrates at his Death; you know whose Prayer it was, Numb. 23.10. Let me die the death of the Righteous, and let my last end be like his; and it is that no doubt which many wish and desire; nay hope, who yet regardeth not to live, the Life of the Righteous, and that their Course to that end may be like his: but what a Folly, nay Madness is it, for Men to expect to Reap that they do not Sow? to Sow to the Flesh, and to the World, and yet Reap by Christ the Gain of everlasting Life after Death? as therefore we expect the one, let us endeavor the other; and if Gain by Death be our Hope, let living to Christ be our practice, XII. So that this Scripture thus Considered, doth plainly put a difference between the Precious and the Vile, the Godly and the Wicked; whilst to these who live to themselves Death is a loss; but to those that live to Christ, it is a Gain: Adrian was wont to say, that Death is the Rich Man's fear, and the Poor Man's desire: and this I may well apply here, Death either is, or may be the bad Man's fear, but the good Man's wish, or to use St. Ambrose his Expression; it is an Haven to the Just, but a Shipwreck to the Guilty; to the Good, a Bed of Repose, but to the Wicked a Rack of Torture; The Man who liveth to the World, saith to Death, as Ahab to Elijah. 1 Kings 21.20. Hast thou found me oh mine Enemy! but he who liveth to Christ, may say to it as David of Ahimaz. 2 Sam. 18.27. it cometh with good tidings.

XIII. And now would you on the one hand see the reason why you are so fearful of Death? it is because your Consciences accuse you, that you have not lived as becometh Christ's Disciples; and so you may thank your own Guilty Consciences for those fears of Death: it was not without reason, that St. Paul saith, 1 Cor. 15.56. The sting of death is Sin; since Death is only venomous and deadly to them who live in Sin: on the other hand, would you see the way to a joyful End? would you have Comfort in, and Gain after Death? Oh let it be your Study to live to Christ: it is our Savior's Counsel to his Disciples, Mat. 6.25. Take no thought for your life, let me alter it a little, take no thought for your death, but for your Life, let your Care be to advance Christ in your lives, and it will be his Care to Confer the Gain of Glory and Immortality upon you at your Death.

XIV. Lastly, I shall earnestly beseech you in those Words of our Savior to his Disciples, I say unto you all Watch; indeed, when we see many falling in their full Strength, and snatched away in the prime of their days, have we not reason to Watch? and Watching to prepare for the Hour of our Death: let it then be the Care of us all whilst we live, to live to the Glory of our Creator, everyone of us in our Station, Consecrating ourselves to, and Employing our Talents in his Service, and for his Glory; and whensoever that time shall approach, whether sooner or later, to any of us; we may like good Stewards give up our Accompts with Joy and not with Grief; and receive that happy Commendation of Well done good and faithful Servants, enter into the Joy of thy Lord.

XV. It was reasonable Advice, and a proper Instrument of Virtue, which Pythagoras taught his Scholars: Let not Sleep seize upon the Regions of your Senses, before you have three times recalled the Conversation, and Accidents of the day: Examine what you have Committed against the Divine Law, what you have Omitted of your Duty, and what Use you have made of the Divine Grace to the purposes of Virtue and Religion; joining the Judge Reason, to the Legislative Mind or Conscience, that God may Reign there as a Law-giver and a Judge: then Christ's Kingdom is set up in our Hearts: then we always live in the Eye of our Judge, and live by the Measures of Reason, Religion, and Sober Counsels.

THE Third Branch.

CHAP. I. Containing Spiritual Remedies against immoderate Grief for the Loss of Relations and Friends: Practically considered.

Saint CYPRIAN affords us these two Golden sayings: That we should not too much bewail the departure of our dearest Relations, and when the day of our Dissolution doth approach, that we readily and cheerfully Obey God's Call. Let the Comfort then, which Death brings, moderate our Sorrow for our Friends who Sleep in Jesus: why should we be troubled for them who are at Rest? and sit down in Sorrow for them who are entered into Joy? why are we Clad in Black for them who Walk in White? and so many Tears flow from our Eyes for them, who have all Tears wiped away from theirs? It is Storied of the Thracians, that they mourn at the Birth, and rejoice at the Death of their Friends: nor was it without Reason, that they should account those fit to be bewail'd, who are launching forth into the Tempestuous Sea of this World, and attend them with Joy who are got into the Harbour of Rest.

II. We read concerning Lazarus, that Christ Rejoyced when he was dead, but Wept being to raise him to Life: and Chrysologus his Note is very apt to our present purpose; Christ bewaileth not the losing, but restoring of his Life: according to which the Greek Fathers make the Reason of our Savior's Tears to be, that he should now call him back to a miserable Life: indeed as St. Jerome saith concerning Nepotian, we may say of everyone who departeth in Christ, We are not so much to condole his loss of this Life, as to Congratulate his deliverance from the miseries of this Life.

III. Thou wilt say perhaps, it is my Friend, my dearly beloved Friend who is dead, and can I choose but Mourn? But, is he thy Friend, and dost thou envy him his Happiness? dost thou dearly Love him and yet grieve at his Welfare? he is thy Friend, and Death is his Benefit: and shall the Benefit of another, especially of thy Friend be thy Sorrow? I, but he is snatched from my Arms, and I have a great Loss in his departure, and that is my Trouble: True, this nature prompteth to, that we should be sensible of our own Loss; yea, Grace requireth that we should be sensible of such a Loss, as it is a Cross inflicted upon us by divine Providence.

IV. Thus Patient Job, Chap. 1.20. When the News came to him of his Children's Death, Shaved his Head, and rent his Mantle: Signs of that Sorrow, which natural affection put him upon; yea, he fell down upon the ground and Worshipped: Signs, that in his Sorrow he looked higher, at the Hand of God which had done it: but, as with one Eye we look on our Loss, and Weep; so with another Eye we must look on their Profit, and Rejoice; as it is a Chastisement, we must be affected with Sorrow; and as a Mercy to them we must express our Joy: and thus, whilst we mingle these affections together, our Sorrow will not be Exorbitant.

V. Indeed, when any die, to whom we have reason to fear, Death is the beginning of Sorrow; and there is sad Cause of bitter Mourning: but not for them who die in the Lord: David justly bewailed dead Absalom, because he died in his Rebellion, and therefore despaired of his Bliss; but when the other Child died, he drieth his Eyes, as not doubting its Happiness: they indeed cannot sufficiently be lamented at their Death, who dying in their Sins, drop into Hell; not they who are carried into those heavenly Mansions; saith Isidore Excellently.

VI. Let not, I beseech you, immoderate Grief too much overwhelm you; but when you have shed your solemn Tears, and paid your due Sighs to the memory of your Friends then wipe our Eyes with the Comfort of Hope; and change your Grief into a Charitable Joy: Remember the Friends you Mourn for, are delivered from the Miseries of this Sinful World, and all the Miseries you so Justly deplore: their Frail Bodies Tremble no more with a shaking Palsy, nor Burn with the violent Flames of a scorching Feaver, they cry out, and lament no more for want of Sleep; nor tumble and roll up and down their uneasy Beds: but quietly rest in the silent Grave; till they rise again to Immortal Glory: which while their Bodies there expect in Peace; their Souls are enlarged to a spacious Liberty: no longer are they Confin'd to this Prison of the Body; but gone to dwell in the Region of Spirits; they are no longer exposed to these Stormy Seas; but are gladly arrived at their safe Harbour.

VII. Comfort yourselves, with this firm belief, that they are not lost, but gone before us: that the living Body which thou now sowest with Tears shall rise again with Joy a Glorified Creature: that we shall meet in Heaven and never part again, and that with greater advantage of Love and Perfection: the most perfect Secular Amity hath some bitterness, because the best hath some imperfection: but there shall be no Animosity in Friends to disturb each other, because no Sin, nor imperfection: Now indeed if we are Confident of such a Resurrection, Why should we bewail the Dead? Why too much, if we believe they are not lost? Why should we impatiently take it, that they are withdrawn for a time, whom we believe returning to Eternity? why should we immoderately grieve that our Friends go before us, seeing we must quickly follow after?

VIII. Moderate weeping is most highly Commended, for it expresseth a natural affection we had to the departed, but with a Christian-like Moderation of our Grief, whereby our Faith to Godward is demonstrated: and the reason is manifest; for they rest from their Labors, and their Works follows them: why should we then weep, since they are received into the Throne of Bliss, and are made partakers of Eternity? and St. Cyprian saith, those that depart in the Faith of Christ, they are sent before us, not lost from us: they shall receive Immortality, and be Heirs of Christ's Kingdom: again, they who attain to the Glory of God's Kingdom, are to be thought Happy, and in Joy, not in Sorrow, Vexation, or Woe; and therefore not to be grieved for, in that they are departed from us; for of necessity it is, we must either depart from them, or they from us.

IX. Thrice happy were we, if we were received into that Joy, that Glory, that Eternity, whereof the Saints in Christ's Kingdom are Partakers: a Glory Distinguished, but a Joy Communicate; O admirable Mystery! O ineffable Mercy! A Mystery only to those Revealed, whom he in his Mercy hath reserved to be Inheritors in the Covenant of Peace, established by his Promise, Confirm'd by his Power, and Confer'd on his Elect Israelites, Glorified by a Savior in the highest Heaven, even where Cherubims, and Seraphims make Melody and Solace, to the Blessed Trinity.

X. Touching the Inconvenience of immoderate Sorrow, St. Paul, 1 Thes. 4.13. giveth us an Exhortation, I would not brethren have you ignorant, concerning them which are a sleep, that ye sorrow not even as them which have no hope: whence it appears, that excessive and immoderate Sorrow, implieth a diffidence or distrust we have of our Soul's Immortality, Resurrection, and Glorification, whereby we seem to derogate from that Written Verity, who said; Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour shall come, and now is, when the dead shall hear the Voice of the Son of God, and they that hear it shall live: John. 5.25.

XI. But many Carnal Men there be, whose Spiritual Eyes are dazzled, or rather blemished, with Terrestrial Objects, and can extend their Intellectual Sight, no farther than the exterior Object of Sense guides 'em: and these like Nicodemus, will not scruple to enquire, How can a Man be born again which is Old? can he enter into his Mother's Womb again and be born? Little do these consider how, nor know they how there happens Children by procreation, and regeneration: of which sort might Rachel seem to be, who wept for her Children, and would not be Comforted, because they were not: so strangely doth the violence of Passion transport these, as they become Stupid and Senseless in the deprivation of a Friend.

XII. To Conclude I wish every immoderate and dispassionate Mourner to Reflect on these two Considerations: First, To Conceive the Matter or Composition whereof he was made, for whom he mourneth: Secondly, The necessity of his dissolution; being enjoin'd by that universal Doom, which cannot be repealed, to return to that Mould from whence he had his beginning: as to the first, for his Composition; thou shalt find the Matter whereof he was made, Vile, Sordid, and Contemptible, where that Beauty wherein Consisted the eminent part of his Luster, is but Earth, which we make our inferior Center; yea, though he were by Birth in the highest Rank of Descent, yet the Matter whereof he was Compos'd is but equal with the obscurest Vassal.

XIII. As to the latter, namely, his Dissolution; as the time is dubious to all Men, so is the necessity of the Doom not to be avoided: it was the Pagans Maxim, Earth must to Earth, and it is Pittacus saying; That the Immortal God's themselves could not Struggle against Necessity: seeing then the Frailty of his Composition, the Necessity of Dissolution, have recourse to him in the depth of thy Affliction, who will infuse into thy Tear-distilling Wounds the Balm of his Consolation: acknowledge thou thy Infirmities with the Publican, and he will act the Faithful Samaritan; restrain thy too tender Affection, as one that is believing; so shall not the Death of thy Happy departed Friend grieve thee, but by the Wings of Faith Transport thee from Earth to Heaven; Translate thee as a Faithful Bezalie, from Idolatrous Babel; to Zealous Bethel, from Edom to Eden; from the Tents of Kedar to the Habitations of Moloc, to those Princely Cedars of Lebanon, from Marah the Water of Bitterness, to Bethesda the Pool of Solace: Finally from this Exile of Tears and Misery, to the Siloam of Joy and Eteral Glory, there to receive That Crown of Life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him

The Close.

TO Sum up this Duty of being ready prepared for Death; we must reflect with Sorrow and hatred upon Sin the true Cause of Man's Vanity: Man in his first Estate was altogether Excellency; God saw everything that he made, and behold it was good, Gen. 1-31. Surely this was much more true of Man the Master-piece of the Creation, not Vanity, but Divinity was his Nature; he was not Envelop'd with Rags of Frailty, but Enobled with Robes of Innocency; nor did he walk in a Vain Shew, but a Sacred Representation of God himself.

II. And now if you would know how this Flower was Blasted, it was by the Breath of the Basilisk; how this Image was defaced, it was by the Poison of the Serpent; how Man became Vanity, it was by reason of Iniquity: this Verifies that saying of the Wiseman, Prov. 28. He that soweth iniquity shall reap Vanity.

III. Let us provide then for ourselves another, a better Estate, than the best which this World affords, an Estate of Glory in the Heavens; Man's best Estate on Earth is Mutable, but that is Durable; Empty, but that is Satisfying; Uncertain, but that is Sure; only for term of Years, but that is for Eternity.

IV. That we may be ready prepared to meet this certain Herald of the Grave; let us carefully provide for that Hour, and set our House in order, take leave of our best Relations and Friends, and support ourselves with the Comfortable Hopes of Immortal Life and a Glorious Resurrection; and that Death come not upon us unawares, let us always observe what Christ did instruct his Disciples, Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day, nor the hour, wherein the Son of Man cometh.

V. That Person hath not well Conned over his Lesson of Happiness, that is loath to go to it, though it be through a dead Sea; nor can he be Justly thought desirous of Heaven; who is unwilling to shake Hands with Earth: it was justly said to that Lame Beggar, who refused the offer of his Prince to take him into his Coach, Thou well deservest to stick in the Mire: and surely it is but fit that they should live and lie in Sorrow, who are unwilling that Christ should take them up to himself.

VI. Let Peace and Tranquillity of Mind be our Continual Study; and therefore in whatsoever State we are here, let us learn to be Content, be it never so mean, so as not to repine; and let us not be Content, be it never so high, so as to rest satisfied; and whether our Estate in this World be high or low, let the first and best of our desires and endeavors be after that Estate which is not a Shadow, but a Substance; not a Lease but an Inheritance; not Vanity, but Felicity, and shall be far more in the Fruition, than it is in the Expectation.

VII. Are our Friends for the present in a flourishing Estate? Take we heed how we Launch out either our Hopes, or Love too much towards them, considering that they are but Vanity, and therefore our Hope which is placed on them will end in Shame, and our Love in Vexation.

VIII. Why so big with Expectation of Advantage or Advancement from thy Rich Ally, Honorable Lord, Potent Friend? Alas, thou dost but set thy Foot upon the Water, which cannot bear thee: why so inflamed with Affection to thy beautiful Wife, Child, or near Relation? Alas thou dost but embrace a Shadow in thine Arms, which cannot, nor must not stay long with thee: but set thy Affections on Heaven; to the possession whereof he will bring us, who hath purchased it for us.

IX. Now because Death daily attends us, let us wait for it, and consider well these Four things: First, Whence thou camest: now, this thou art told, That Sinners begat thee in Sin; and miserable Wretches brought thee into this Vale of Misery: So that thy Conception was Sin, thy Birth Misery, thy Life a Punishment, and thy Death a Torment; and the longer thy Life is, the more Sin thou wilt have to answer for. But perhaps thou wilt say, To what end is this human Life lent thee? Why, only to gain a Heavenly Life; and this is all Divine Love aims at: that thy Life may seem shorter, and thy Labor less.

X. Secondly, Consider whether thou goest; thy Life, which like a Flower is subject to fade and decay, tells thee, That thou art in a passing State: but let it rejoice thee to think, that thou goest to thy Fathers; and be comforted in this hope, thou shalt be buried in a good old Age: therefore, let it not trouble thee to live, nor affright thee to Dye; but live in Patience, and die in Desire: though thou dost here for a while bewail thy Sorrow, thou wilt at length forget thy Banishment, and return to thy own Country.

XI. *Thirdly, to express what thou art, what Language can that unfold? Dust, and Air, this thou knowest; and to Dust thou shalt return, that is certain: Man is a sickly, diseased, empty thing, and every Man shall be turned into nothing. This none can plead ignorance in; for our Metal is a moist Humour, and the Mould no better, in an unclean Womb; condemned sooner than born, that's our condition: our best Stock is the Seed of Abraham; and with Job, we say to Corruption, thou art our Mother; and to the Worms, thou art our Brethren and Sisters: these are our great Kindred; our dwelling is amongst Insects, our quantity vile, our weight lighter than Vanity, our worth, nothing. What then is our being? a Dream and Sorrow.*

XII. Fourthly, Consider what thou shalt be; thou knowest what thou art, and therefore dost know thyself not to be; but yet thou dost desire both to be, and to know what thou art; for to see God, and to live with him, is to enjoy him: and this is eternal Safety, and secure Eternity: this may be admired, though hardly understood; yet better understood, then can be expressed: therefore to thy Soul say, O Soul, that art ennobled with the Image of God, adorned with his likeness, espoused him by Faith, redeemed by his Blood, endowed with his Spirit, ranked with his Angels, What hast thou to do with Flesh? but to contemplate on that brightness, that sweetness, and pleasure, which remaineth for thee in that Vision, where thou shalt behold Christ Face to Face for evermore.

P-RA-28. The whole duty of prayer containing devotions for every day in the week, and for several occasions, ordinary and extraordinary - Allestree, Richard, 1619-1681.

THE Whole Duty OF PRAYER, Containing DEVOTIONS FOR Every Day in the Week, AND FOR Several Occasions, Ordinary and Extraordinary. By the Author of The Whole Duty of Man. Necessary for all Families.

Psal. 65. 2.

O thou that hearest Prayers unto thee shall all flesh come.

London, Printed for I. P. and sold by Ric. Ianaway, in Queens-Head-Alley, in Pater-Noster-Row. 1692.

THE Preface.

I Need not Recommend this small Manual to the World, since it bears the Name of so Learned an Author, whose Works have given sufficient demonstration of his Worth and Excellency, and will to his lasting Honor be venerated in all Ages.

This Pattern of Piety hath lay concealed for many years, and was at first Dedicated to the service of an honorable Lady, in whose Cabinet it hath been choicely kept as one of her precious Jewels; it was never designed for the Press, by reason the Reverend Authors Modesty should not be offended.

Upon her Bed of Mortality, she was pleased to honor me so far, as to commit it to my Care, with a particular Charge not to publish it; but one of her Mercenary Servants, by their vigilant Industry, had Plagiarist-like, got a Transcript, and since this Pious and Honorable Persons Decease, did design it for the Press, being unwilling so much Injustice should be acted against so Worthy a Person, I was forced to Cancel my Obligation, and to hand with all speed the Original to be Printed, that I might prevent any Surreptitious Copy.

What Alterations I was forced to make, was leaving out the Praying for our Royal Ancestors, and placing in our Royal Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, &c. Some additional Prayers I thought proper to insert, as Thanksgiving for His Majesty's Safe Return, and the Success of his Royal Navy and Armies, a Duty enjoined on the Church in Public, and ought to be the Duty of every Christian in Private. Lastly, I have added some few Graces which may be necessary for Minor Christians; I shall now conclude with the Words of St. Paul to Timothy, 2 Epistle, 2 Chapter, Verse the 7th. Consider what hath been said, and the Lord give thee Understanding in all things.

THE Whole Duty OF PRAYER.

What Prayer is, and the Parts of it.

PRayer is the Duty both of Soul and Body; it is an humble address unto God, for whatsoever we stand in need of, either in relation to this Life, or that which is to come: The First part of this Duty is Confession, which is the acknowledging of our Sins in all Humility before the great Author of our Being: Now Confession is twofold, general, and particular; the general is when we Confess only we are sinful, without naming any particulars, which indeed belongs to public Prayer, but the acknowledging our Sins to God is very necessary, whether Public, or Private: Particular Confession is when we express the several sorts, and acts of our Sins, and what ill habits we are most prone to; this is proper for Private Prayer, and ought often to be used, for we cannot repeat too often our soulest Sins which we are guilty of, nor cannot enough bewail our own unworthiness in committing them.

THE next part of prayer is by way of Petition, which is begging of God whatever we stand most in need of, either for our Souls or Bodies; first for our Souls we must beg pardon and absolution for all our Sins, in the name of Jesus Christ, who obtained it with his blood: Secondly we must earnestly beseech the grace and assistance of God's blessed Spirit to enable us to forsake all sin and wickedness, and to live in obedience to him: then it will be very necessary to beg all these particular graces, faith, hope, Charity, love, zeal, purity, and repentance; if thou art proud, pray for Humility, if lustful for Chastity, if guilty of gluttony pray for temperance, and so for all other virtues thou standest most in need of.

IN Petitioning for our Bodies, we are to beg of God such accommodations of life, as are necessary for us, but in such a degree and measure, as his all-seeing Wisdom Knows is most suitable to our state, and Conditions the next duty, and Third part of Prayer is deprecation, which consists in praying to God to turn away from us either the evil of sin, or the evil of punishment; to pray against the evil of sin, is to beg earnestly of God to preserve us by his Grace from falling into any sin; and when we are under any great temptation, and even ready to yield, then we must Humbly beseech him, either to withdraw the temptation, or else by the Power of his Grace Strengthen us against it: next we are to pray against the evil of Punishment, which are, two sorts, Spiritual and Temporal; Spiritula punishments, are the wrath of God▪ the with-holding of his Grace, and Everlasting Damnation: temporal punishments, is loss of Friends, goods or reputation, but in these things we must wholly Submit to the will of God, unto whom all we have belongs.

A Fourth Duty in Prayer is intercession, which is praying for all sorts and Conditions of Men, as Governors in Church and State, our Parents, Husband, Wife, Children, or other Relations and Friends, for all those in affliction either in Body; mind or Estate; nay even for our very Enemies according to the example of our Lord and Master, who prayed for his very Crucifiers, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do: The fifth Duty of Prayer is thanksgiving, praising and blessing God for all his mercies Spiritual and Temporal, Spiritual blessings are his sending his Son into the World for our Redemption and his holy Spirit to Sanctify us, that we are born Christians and are made partakers of his holy word and Sacraments: We are likewise to return him thanks, for his patience and long suffering, in not Cutting us off in our Sins and Follies: Temporal blessings, which we are to give thanks for may be for the prosperity of a Church or Nation, and all diliverances which are remarkable:

Some belongs to ourselves, as Health, Wealth, Food, Rayment, Friends, with many other Mercies we daily receive from God, which whoever receives the least blessing is indebted all his life time to Praise the author and giver of all good things.

THESE forementioned parts of our duty in Prayer, are to be made use of both in private and public, that is in the Church and in our Closet, but more especially in the Church to which place there is a peculiar Blessing belongs, which Christ hath promised, that where two or three are gathered together in his Name he will be in the midst of them: The second Duty of public Prayer, is that in a family, and that indeed ought to be the Masters Care to provide for the Souls of those that belong to him, as to provide food for their Temporal Nourishment: Now if he neglects this Duty and takes no care of his Household in this important affair that Man cannot well be esteemed a Christian, but a Heathen.

PRIVATE Prayer is a Duty to be used in secret, where we can more particularize our sins when alone then is requisite to be done in public: Next we are to be frequent in Prayer, and not Complain we want leisure for so doing; for he which is most busy may find some time to perform this Duty, else how can he expect his Employment should be Sanctified; now it is a great advantage for Men to seek God, at least Morning and Evening, if they expect a Blessing upon their endeavors: Next, the advantages we reap by Prayer are many: First It is a great honor, to speak freely to the Almighty: Secondly It is a great benefit, for it brings down Blessings both Spiritual and Temporal to us; Thirdly it is a pleasant Duty, it draws us nearer to God, which qualifies us for the joys of Heaven, where Christ is, at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore.

NEXT we must take care that we ask nothing which is unlawful, but whatsoever we stand in need of to ask it in faith, and great humility; Secondly we must be attentive and mind what we are about, Considering that it is the Majesty of Heaven we are to treat withal, and that our necessities cannot be supplied without his Divine aid and assistance. Thirdly, Vigilancy, Zeal, and Purity of intention must not be omitted, for the Sacrifice of the wicked are abomination to the Lord: Lastly what we Pray for, must be to a good end, that is, not to Pray for Wealth, to Consume it upon our Lusts: Or for grandeur to exercise our malice upon our Enemies; but whatever we do must be done to the glory of God, through whom we have Redemption in his blood, even the forgiveness of our Sins.

Ejaculations at uprising.

AWake, O my Soul, and sing unto the Lord.

Glory be to the Holy and undivided Trinity for watching and preserving me this Night.

I laid me down and slept, for thou Lord sustainest me.

Lord arise, and lift up the Light of thy Countenance upon me.

A Prayer for a Private Person in the Morning.

MOST gracious God, whose Mercies are rich and infinite, to all thy Servants that call upon thee; accept I humbly beseech thee this my morning Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving which I now am to offer up unto thy Divine Majesty: O Lord, in thee I live, move, and have my being; thou formdst me in the womb, and hast writ my name in the Book of Life, and that I might not be miserable, but happy, thou sentest thy only beloved Son to die for me and to redeem me from all iniquity.

WHAT shall I render unto thee, O Lord, for all these thine inestimable benefits, pour forth thy Grace upon me, I beseech thee, that I may abound in Thanksgiving and Praise for them; Enlarge my heart with thy Love, that I may in some degree Comprehend with all Saints, the measure of thine infinite Mercy and goodness manifested to me, by thy dear Son and my alone Savior. To whom therefore with thee and thy blessed Spirit, be ascribed the whole glory of my Creation, Redemption, Sanctification, and Salvation.

FORGIVE, O Lord, the manifold Sins which I commit daily and hourly against thee, and grant that for the time to come thy restraining Grace may subdue my unruly: inclinations, and distempered affections; and as I have been a Servant of Sin, I may now become an Example of reformation: That so I may rejoice in thee as my only Treasure, and rest in thee who art the Center of my felicity; and be thoroughly convinced how good it is to draw nigh unto thee, accounting all things but dross and dung in Comparison of the excellency of Jesus Christ and my alone Savior and Redeemer.

O LORD, as thou in thy tender Mercy and Compassion hast watched over me this Night, and defended me from my Ghostly adversary, so I beseech thee, let thy all-seeing Eye of providence guide me this day in all my Thoughts Words, and Actions, whereby I may fall into no Sin, nor run into any kind of danger: But that all my doings may be ordered by thy governance, to do always that which is Righteous in thy sight, through Jesus Christ my Lord and Savior, in whose Blessed name, and Words, I shut up these my imperfect Prayers in that most absolute form of Prayer which he himself hath taught me, saying, Our Father, &c.

A Prayer at Departure from Home.

ALmighty and Everlasting God, who art the way, the truth, and the Life; look down from thy Throne of Mercy to thy scorstcol of Compassion, and behold me now betwixt the Assaults of the Devil, the allurements of the World, and my own vain inclinations; I cannot look abroad, but they are ever ready to molest me; but O thou that ledest Joseph like a sheep, thou most faithful and Almighty guide, lend me thy hand, open mine Eyes, direct my steps, and cause me to walk in thy fear.

THOU that didst go out with Jacob from Beer sheba unto Padan aran, guiding him in the wast-plains, and watching over him on his pillow of Stones, be not now far from me; lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness, make my Paths straight, and strengthen my goings, that having finished my course here, I may sit down in thy Kingdom hereafter, an inheritance undefiled, purchased for me with the blood of my Savior, and thy beloved Son Jesus Christ,

Amen.

Ejaculations for the Evening.

LET not the Sun go down upon thy Wrath, Eph. 4. 6. Watch ye, for ye know not when the Master of the House cometh, at Even, or at Midnight, or at the Cock crowing, or in the Morning, lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping, Mark 13. 35

An Evening Prayer for a Private Person.

O Eternal God, full of loving kindness, and long suffering, whose Mercy is above all thy Works, and thy Glory above the Heavens, forgive me, I beseech thee, my transgressions this day, my vain thoughts, idle words, and loose Conversation; my exceeding neglect and forgetfulness of thee, my headstrong inclinations and lusting after the World, preferring this Land of Cabul before the Snow of Lebanon, and a broken Cistern before the Well of Life.

JUSTLY, O Lord, mightest thou have cut me off this day, and cast me into the Lake of thy Displeasure, but thou hast had Mercy, and not Sacrifice; thou hast shed upon me the Light of thy Countenance, and removed my sins far out of thy sight. I know, O Lord, it is not in Man to Establish his own Ways, it is thy Almighty Arm must do it; it is thou alone that hast led me through this day, and kept me both from doing and from suffering Evil.

AND now, O thou Preserver of men! What shall I do unto thee? What shall I render unto my Lord, for all the mercies and loving kindnesses shown unto thy Servant this day, and all the days of my life, even to this moment? I will offer unto thee the Sacrifice of Thanksgiving, and call upon the Name of the Lord: I will ever love thee, fear thee, praise thee, and trust in thee; my Song shall be of thee in the Night Season, and in the Day time I will be speaking of thy wondrous Works.

AND forasmuch as thou (out of thy tender Love and Compassion on thy Creatures) hast ordained this time for their repose and refreshment, that having past through the Cares and Dangers of the Day, they might under the shadow of thy Wings find rest and security; keep me, I most humbly beseech thee, from the Hours and the Powers of darkness; watch over me this Night in thy Almighty Providence, and scatter all the Rebellions and Devices of my Adversaries; enlighten my Soul, sanctify my Body, govern my Affections, and guide my Thoughts, that in the fastest closures of my Eye-lids my Spirit may see thee, and in the depth of sleep be conversant with thee. This, and what ever thou knowest is needful for me, I humbly beg at thy hands, through the merits of Jesus Christ my Savior and Redeemer.

Amen.

Praise the Lord, O my Soul▪ and forget not all his Benefits, who forgiveth all thy Sins, and healeth all thine Infirmities.

When thou art weary of the Cares and Vanities of this World.

LIKE as the Hart brayeth for the Water-brooks, so thirsteth my Soul after thee, O God.

O who will give me the Wings of a Dove, that I may fly away and be at rest.

Meditations for Sunday.

THIS is the day which the Lord hath made, let me rejoice and be glad therein, it is a day of rest and sweetness unto my Soul, and a day of Ease from Labor• unto my Body; as thou, O God, didst rest this day from the Works of thy Creation, so grant that I may cease this day from all Sin, and by an earnest Repentance implore thy Pardon; thaw this frozen Heart of mine, that this day it may melt at thy presence; and say unto my Soul those comfortable Words which thou wert pleased once to say to Zacchaeus, This day is Salvation come to thy House,

O Lord, I am utterly unworthy in myself to stand at the Door of thy Sanctuary, much less to appear in thy presence, and be made partaker of thy Heavenly Gifts, for thou, O Lord art a God of pure Eyes, and canst not behold Iniquity; and I am thy sinful Creature, not only willfully opposite unto thee, but even Enmity itself against thee. Unto thee therefore belongeth Righteousness, and unto me shame and confusion of Face. Lord, when I thus see myself in the Glass of thy Law, my flesh trembleth for fear of thee, and I am afraid of thy Judgments.

I HAVE sinned against Heaven, and before thee, by my sad refusal of thy gracious offer of Eternity, in my sinful relinquishing of thy Sacred Word; and am now no more Worthy to be called thy Child. I have been too long feeding on the empty husks of vanity, amongst the filthy Swine of sensuality, and am now willing, by thy Grace, to return home unto thee, and to humble myself low before thee, that thou mayest have the Glory, and I the Comfort of thy Gracious Pardon.

Amen.

A Prayer for Sunday Morning.

O Lord I acknowledge this day to be thine, as consecrated and set a part for thy Worship and Service, and to be observed not only as a Holy day, but a glorious day unto thee, wherein I ought to pay my vows, present my Person and my Prayers before thee, to hear thy word, and Meditate upon the same, to thy Glory, and my own Everlasting Comfort. To this end remove far from me all wandering thoughts, and Worldly Affections, and work in me a desire of studying thy Law, and walking in the Truth, that thy word may not prove unto me the Savour of Death unto Death, but of Life unto Life.

LET my Ears be attentive, that I may hear those things which thou shalt instruct me, that hearing I may understand them; understanding, I may remember them; remembering, I may practice them, to adorn that profession which I have invoked in thy name, and confirm me in the Faith of thy Son Jesus Christ, wherein I was Baptized and made a Member, raise me, O Father, by the power of my Savior's Resurrection from Sin and iniquity, and give me Spiritual rest, Peace of Conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, and Fellowship in the Communion of Saints, that when I shall leave this Earthly Tabernacle, I may keep an Everlasting Sabbath with thee in the Kingdom of Heaven.

BEHOLD, O Lord, I knock at the Door of thy Mercy and tender Compassion, with all the Faculties of my Soul and Body, for all these Graces and particular favors, beseeching thee to continue unto me the right use of them, that thy Spirit may witness unto my Spirit that I am thy Son, and shall be Heir of thy Kingdom of Glory, and that I may be partaker of the inheritance of thy Saints in light, where are Pleasures that last for Evermore. Grant this O Father for Jesus Christ his sake.

Amen.

A Prayer for Sunday Noon.

O God, thou art great in Majesty and infinite in Mercy; wonderful in thy goodness unto thy Church and Children: Thou hast Commanded me to offer up my Prayer and supplications for those that shall enter into the Ministry, and stand before thee to wait at thine altar; the heaviest, O Lord, is very great, and the painful and Conscionable Laborers but few; I beseech thee, be pleased to send able Ministers into thy Church, and place such over particular Congregations as like John the Baptist, may be burning lights, burning, as being zealous in fervency; and lights also as being conspicuous and eminent for Charity, Sanctity of life, and all holy Graces of thy Spirit.

LET thy Urim and thy Thummim be upon them, as upon thy Holy one; let them be sound for Doctrine, and holy for Life and Conversation; Preaching, let them practice, and by practice let them preach and teach the things which concern thy Kingdom: Open wide unto them the Door of utterance, that they may deliver thy Word freely and boldly: Take away all differences and animosities from amongst them; make them examples to those that believe, in soundness of Doctrine, and integrity of Conversation; bless them with all Graces befitting so high a Calling, that I may give thanks unto thee for them, finding the benefit of thy blessing upon me through their Labors, and may praise thy Name for evermore.

Amen.

A Prayer for Sunday Evening.

O Lord, look down from Heaven, thine holy Habitation, and behold with the Eye of thy Love, and tender Compassion, a wretched Creature, who now calls upon thee in the Words of the poor Publican: O God be merciful unto me a Sinner. Write not bitter things against me, neither suffer me to possess the Sins of my Youth. O forgive, and forget all my Transgressions, and cast mine Iniquities as far from thy presence, in distance, as the East is from the West.

LORD pardon, I humbly beseech thee, the faults and frailties which I have escaped this day in the sanctifying of thy Sabbath, whether they be Sins of Omission or Commission; wash them all away in the Blood of thy Son, sanctify me by the Word, thy Word of Truth, that this day hath sounded in my Ears. Grant that like good Seed sown in good Ground, it may take root downward, and bring forth Fruit upwards to the Glory and Praise of thy great Name, and the Salvation of my Immortal Soul.

O LET thy Word be ever in my Mind, to meditate of it; in my Mouth, to speak of it; and in my Life and Conversation, to practice it. By it Work in my Heart Faith, Hope, Charity, and all other supernatural Graces, which accompany Salvation; open mine Eyes that I may see thy Law; and incline my Heart, that I may love the Truth; and loving the same, may yield Obedience to it; doing thy Will on Earth, or at least endeavoring to do it, as the Angels in Heaven; willingly, without murmuring; speedily, without delaying; constantly, without ceasing; and universally, without omitting what thou commandest and commendest in thy Word, so shall I not be distracted with Foolish fears, nor despair of thy Mercy, but ever Hope and Trust in thee, and find Grace to help me in time of need; to whom be ascribed all Honor, Power and Glory, World without end.

Amen.

Mondays Meditations.

O GOD, the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth, who Created the Evening, and the Morning, continue, I beseech thee, unto me, as well the Comfortable rest of the Evening to refresh my weariness, as the most necessary Light of the Morning to manage my affairs and business; make my Conscience serene and clear, and let the pure Light of thy Gospel guide my Feet in the way of peace. This Light of thine, O Lord, showeth what I was in my Birth, Slime and Filthiness; what I am in my Life, Vanity and Folly; and what I shall be in the Grave, Stench and Corruption.

LET these ponderous Considerations, Lord, humble me, that Christ may raise me; wound me, that Christ may heal me; load me, that Christ may ease me; and make me most vile in my own Eyes, that I may be most dear and precious in his sight. O thou, which as upon this day createdst the Clouds to Rain upon the Earth, shower down thy Graces plentifully into my hardened heart to mollify it, whereby I may be fruitful in all good Works.

LORD, who this day didst separate the Waters, separate, I beseech thee, and distinguish betwixt the Water of Tears which I shed for my Sins, and those which I shed for Worldly crosses and afflictions; cast away the one, and put the other into thy Bottle. This day thou madest the Heavens and the Air, without which I cannot breath naturally; no not one moment: Infuse into my Soul thy blessed Spirit of Grace, without which Spiritually I cannot breath forth my Prayers, nor sigh, nor so much as move any Faculty of Soul and Body unto thee. But, Lord, as oft as I take in, or let out the Air which I breath, let me receive in Grace from thee, and breath out Praise unto thee.

Amen.

A Prayer for Monday Morning.

O GOD, as thou hast now raised up my Body from Sleep, the Image of Death, so I beseech thee deliver my mind and affections from the Sleep of Sin, and from the Darkness of this World; and as thou hast brought me to the beginning of this day, be thou present with me, and president in me. Let thy holy Spirit be my Counselor and Instructor, my God and my Guide to lead me into all Truth; help me by assistance of the same Spirit to watch over my Thoughts, Words and Works, that I may neither think, speak, nor do anything which is not agreeable to thy holy Word.

LET me in all reverence and humility of Soul, submit myself unto thy holy Will, so that ordering my Conversation aright, and walking according to thy Golden Rule, peace may be upon me, as upon the Israel of God. Suffer me not to oppress, or defraud my Brother in Bargaining, Buying, and Selling, by using false Weights, and Ballances, or any other unlawful means, but Guide me so by thy Grace, that my Conscience may ever cheer me up through a delightful apprehension of thy blessed Favor.

TO this end order thou my Paths▪ and establish my goings in the way of Peace, Grace and Salvation; cause thou me to walk upright before thee; make me to provide things honest before thee, and Men; behave myself as in thy sight, and do unto others as I would they should do unto me. Let no Sin, inordinate Lust, or unruly Passion, have dominion over me, but help me to lead Captivity Captive, to kill and crucify my Lusts, and sinful Affections, and wage War with my Corruptions, until through Christ which strengthens me, I shall prove more than Conqueror. Grant this unto me for Jesus Christ his sake.

Amen.

A Prayer for Monday Night.

O GOD, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, I do in all humility prostrate myself before thy Divine Majesty, to offer up unto thee this my Evening Sacrifice of Prayer and Thanksgiving, who didst offer up thy Son upon the Cross to be a Propitiation, and meritorious Sacrifice for the Sins of the World. Lord hear me, and help me, and be merciful unto me; my Sins are great, but thy Mercies are greater; my Trespasses Finite, but thy Compassions Infinite, and never fail.

LORD hear my Prayers, and let my Praises be acceptable in thy sight, for unto thee, O Lord, upon the Altar of my Heart do I offer up all possible Praise and Thanksgiving, for all thy Blessings both Spiritual and Temporal, which thou hast in a great measure bestowed upon me; but above all, for Jesus Christ the Fountain of them all, by whom I have Redemption through his Blood, and Access through his Life. I also thank thee for thy Sacred Word, and for the Confirmation and Strengthening of my Faith, by those Sacred Signs and Pledges of thy Love which thou Exhibitest to me, and unto every Believing Soul in the Sacraments.

I RENDER all thanks unto thee, for my Life, Liberty, Food, and Raiment, Health, Wealth, Peace, and Plenty, which thou in much mercy hast afforded unto me, from time to time; and I beseech thee, to continue this thy providence over me, and as thou hast hitherto been a Sun to comfort me, so be thou now a shield to protect me: Keep me in Soul and Body, goods and good name: Vouchsafe me this Night Peace unto my Soul, and rest, and quietness to my Body, that so being refreshed, I may Praise thy name for evermore.

Amen.

Tuesdays<sup>a</sup> Meditations.

O LORD, who on this day madest dry Land, and firm ground to appear; dry up my Tears with the beams of thy Mercy, and give me firm ground of Comfort in thy Word: Thou who on this day Createdst all kind of Seeds, Sow in my heart the incorruptible Seed of thy Sacred writ, that I may thereby be regenerated to a lively, hope: And as on this day Createdst all kind of fruitful Trees, make me, like a good Tree, bring forth good Fruit here, that I may hereafter eat of the Tree of Life, in the midst of the Paradise of God.

LORD, let me enter into a serious Contemplation of the vanity of the World, and the deceitfulness of Riches; the shame of Pleasures, and folly of sports; the inconstancy of honors, and danger of greatness, with the strict account which one day must be given for all: persuade me by thy Spirit, that I have here no abiding City, but ought to seek for one hereafter: and that I am, but a stranger and Pilgrim on this side Heaven.

LET me desire Temporal blessings only for Spiritual ends: Wealth, that I may be Rich in good works; preferment, to advance the honor of the Gospel; Health, and Strength, the better to enable me to do thee service; and length of days, that I may Praise thee, in the Land of the Living: O Lord this day, thy Life was sought to be destroyed, seek thou mine, I beseech thee, to save it. This day thou wast anointed to thy death and burial, anoint me with thy Spirit to eternal Life. Save me from the hands of all mine Enemies, that I may serve thee without fear, in holiness, and Righteousness all the days of my Life.

Amen.

A Prayer for Tuesday Morning.

O LORD, what am I but Dust, and Ashes; and confess, I am utterly lost, having walked after the vanity of my mind, and lived in all manner of Wickedness; but O, if thou shouldst be extreme to mark what is done amiss, O Lord, who were able to abide it? Enter not therefore into Judgment with thy Servant, for in thy sight shall no Flesh living be justified: Though my Sins have magnified themselves in infinite length, breadth, depth, and height, yet let thy Mercy, which passeth all understanding, far exceed them.

AND howsoever, by reason of my Sins, I have justly deserved to be not only deprived of thy blessings, but forever deserted and forsaken, yet for his sake in whom thou art well pleased; cast me not away from thy presence of Grace here, or glory hereafter, but by the one, lead me to the other, by Holiness; bring me to Happiness. Behold, O Lord, how I am thy Servant, and the Son of thy Hand-maid; O grant me Grace, that I may live with thee forever.

THOU hast redeemed me, O let me not fall into Captivity and Bondage unto Sin and Satan, but so confirm and strengthen me, that both in life and death, I may continue thine, and never draw back unto Perdition, or forsake thee, the ever-living God, or renounce my Savior, who hath the Words of Eternal Life; and who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, but that both in Prosperity and Adversity, I may live in thy Fear, die in thy Favor, rest in thy Peace, and reign with thee in thy Glory.

Amen.

A Prayer for Tuesday Night.

O LORD, how often mightest thou cut me off in the midst of my Sins? but thine Eye hath spared me, thou hast given me space of amendment, and Grace to return unto thee, to seek thee whilst thou mayest be found, and call upon thee whilst thou art near. O Lord, be not far from me, but draw near unto my Soul; make haste to deliver me, and help me. Thou hast promised to such as call upon thee, to be a present help in Trouble, to be their Shield and Buckler, their Castle and Fortress, and the Horn also of their Salvation.

AND now seeing thou hast brought the Night upon me, wherein thou hast ordained Man to take his rest, keep me, O Lord, as the Apple of thine Eye, save and defend me from Delusions; cause thine Angels to pitch their Tents round about me, and watch over my Soul and Body, that I may not commit any Sin either in Word or Deed, but persevere in Grace until the appearing of my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ unto Judgment.

DELIVER me, I beseech thee, from sudden Death, Fears and Affrightments, Casualties by Fire, Water, or Tempestuous Weather, Disturbance by Thieves, or any other Dànger whatsoever; vouchsafe me peace of Conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost; guide me here by thy Council, and after that receive me to Glory; let my lying down in the Bed, put me in mind of my resting in the Grave, and my rising from thence, of my Resurrection, that both in Life and Death, I may continue thine, through Jesus. Christ.

Amen.

Meditations for Wednesday.

WONDERFUL are thy Works, O Lord, to the Children of Men; thou hast provided all Creatures, the Fowls of the Air, Fish in the Sea, and Beasts of the Field, to furnish his Table, clothe his Nakedness, and serve his Necessities. The Earth thou Createdst to sustain him, the Waters to wash and cool him, the Air to breath him, the Fire to warm him, the Flowers to refresh him, the Herbs to cure him, the Fruits to nourish him, the Mines to enrich him, the precious Stones to adorn him, and the glorious Luminaries of Heaven, the Sun, and the Moon, to light him; the one in the Day, and the other in the Night, and both to measure his time, to direct his Husbandry, to divert him in his Peregrinations, to ripen his Fruits, and to increase his Stores.

I CANNOT plead Ignorance of thy Deity, for the Heavens declare thy Glory, and the Firmament showeth thy Handy-work. I cannot pretend Ignorance of thy Law, for thou hast put thy Word into my Mouth, and written thy Law in my Heart; nor I cannot affirm that I never heard of the Light of thy Gospel, for the Light came into the World and shined in the Darkness, and the Darkness comprehended it not; but Men love darkness rather than light, because their Deeds are evil.

FOR which thou mightest most justly have cast us into utter Darkness, where there is weeping and wailing, and gnashing of Teeth, but there is mercy with thee, that thou mayest be feared; there is Balm in Gilead to cure our deadly Wounds; there is Unction in Christ, and Salvation in Jesus; out of his precious side, he opened to all the Inhabitants of the Earth a Fountain for Sin, and all Uncleaness, whereby we might be Purified even as he is pure.

A Prayer for Wednesday Morning.

O ETERNAL God, who art of Infinite Majesty, look down from Heaven, the Habitation of thy Holiness, upon me thy unworthy Servant; thou art a God of Power, and canst relieve me; of Goodness, and wilt in thy good time mercifully help me. O Lord, the Fountain of thy Mercy can never be dried up, nor the Merits of my Savior diminished; O therefore Bath my Soul in them, that being Sanctified and Justified, I may appear in thy sight more pure and white than the Snow in Salmon.

I BLESS thy Name for keeping me this Night past, and bringing me to the beginning of this Day; let thy Eyes always attend upon me, prosper, preserve, cherish, guide, and govern me in all my Studies, Actions and Employments, so that I may spend this day, and the remainder of my life, according to thy blessed Will. Grant, O Lord, that whatever I do, it may be acceptable in thy sight, to the Glory of thy most Holy Name, the peace of my Conscience, and the Salvation of my own Soul.

TO this end, be thou, O Lord, my God and my Guide, my Protector and Defender: Keep me unspotted of the World, teach me to deny Ungodliness and Worldly Lusts, and to live Soberly towards myself, Righteously towards my Neighbor, and Piously towards thee, my God; repenting truly of my Sins, and serving thee in holiness and righteousness all my days, that in life, thou mayest be my God, in death my deliverer, and after death, my Eternal rewarder.

Amen.

A Prayer for Wednesday Night.

O MOST glorious God, I do here at this time with the good Samaritan return to give thee thanks for all thy Mercies and Blessings bestowed on my soul and body, in things Spiritual and temporal; for my Election before all time; my Creation in the beginning of time; and my Redemption in the fullness of time; I praise and glorify thee, for thy preservation of me this day, and that thou hast yet spared me, and hast given me Liberty, and a gracious opportunity once more to call upon thee.

LORD; I acknowledge and confess, that thou mightest have taken me away in the midst of my Sins, and in the very act of Committing them; but thou hast dealt more merciful with me; Keep, me O Lord, this Night from fear and danger, and from all noisome Dreams, and from all hindrances of sweet repose, which thou hast appointed for the refreshing of wearied Nature.

SEAL unto me a full, and a free Pardon of all my Sins, of what Nature or quality soever they be, whether they be Sins of omission or Commission, of knowledge, ignorance, weakness, or willfulness; O Lord, deal not with me according to the magnitude and multitude of them, but for thine infinite Mercies blot them out of thy Book of remembrance, and Cast them out of thy sight into the bottomless Sea of thy Compassion, that they may never rise in this Life to shame me, nor in the Life to come to Condemn me.

Amen.

Meditations for Thursday.

LORD Teach me of what Spirit I am, or should be; even of that which descended upon thy Son in the likeness of a Dove, without gall: By this Spirit mortify in me the Lusts and affections of the Flesh, such as envy, wrath, and revenge; by the still small voice, in which thou discourest with Elias, let me observe, that thou art not in the fire of my rage, nor in the storm of my Passion, but in the soft gale of Grace. Thou, didst on this day replenish the Sea, and Rivers with Fish, and the Air with Fowls, in Shapes admirably various, and in number almost infinite; stir me up by this Consideration, to admire thy power; and Wisdom in thus enriching this vast and seeming solitude.

BLESSED Lord, who this day madest the Waters fruitful, let thy Spirit move upon the waters of my Tears that they may abound in the fruits of Repentance, and be blessed in the increase of Spiritual Consolation. This day thou Commandest the Fowls to fly through the Air, lift up my Soul from the Earth, with the wings of Faith and hope, that She may mount up, towards Heaven: Make me light and cheerful, after my heavy Sorrows and afflictions, and though I have been, as if I had lain among the Pots, yet I may be by the Grace of thy Spirit, like that Dove, whose wings are Silver, and her feathers like Gold.

FOR my light and momentary Afflictions are no way worthy the Glory that shall be revealed unto me hereafter: And for the present, what are Afflictions, or Crosses, or Persecutions, but the common lot of thy Children, when I am thus chastened, I am Judged of thee, that I may not be Condemned of the World. How can I ever forget thee, who rememberest me at all times, and in all places;

Amen.

A Prayer for Thursday Morning.

O LORD God, who dwellest in that light which no mortal Eye can approach; yet beholdest in Mercy the Sons and Daughters of Men; thou makest the outgoings of the Morning full of thy Glory, and causest the Sun to shine upon the just and the unjust, mercifully chasing away the darkness of the Night and shadow of Death: I praise thy holy Name that thou hast vouchsafed me to pass this Night in rest and quietness, and hast brought me safe to the beginning of this day.

I HUMBLY beseech thee, by the holy incarnation, and blessed Nativity of thy Son Jesus Christ, the thrice happy day Star that appeared to the World, let thy Mercy this day rest upon me, and the bright beams of thy heavenly light shine forth in the dark corners of my heart, that I may not be transported either through the Corruption of my Nature or the power of darkness to spend this day after my own perverse will and pleasure, but carefully perform thy holy will, willingly, speedily, and constantly.

INCREASE in me, O Lord, the gift of faith, and hope, that I may believe thee, and rely on thy merciful promises made unto me, in Christ Jesus bless my Body and Soul, that no evil happen to them, and preserve my memory and senses that they pass not the limits of reason and understanding: Enlighten my mind, O Lord, to look upon good things, inflame my heart with the love of them, and conduct me with thy Grace, that as thou hast raised my Body from sleep so my Soul may daily be raised from Sin, and Soul, and Body, and Spirit, may be renewed in Righteousness to serve thee, the Living God for evermore.

Amen.

A Prayer for Thursday Night.

O Lord God, great in Mercy, and constant in truth; I acknowledge, and do here in all humility offer unto thy Divine Majesty my duty of praise, and thanksgiving for all thy manifold Graces and benefits bestowed upon me; and though I am unable to recount them; and much unworthy to be a partaker of them, yet in full assurance of thine unspeakable love, I presume to come unto thee, and now again commit to thy almighty protection this night, my Soul, and Body, with all its Faculties; beseeching thee to keep them day and night, blameless and undefiled, against the day of thy coming.

LORD, pardon, and forgive, whatever Sins I have wretchedly effected, or wickedly imagined against thee, or my Neighbor: O lay not the faults and frailties of my Youth unto my charge, but forget, O Lord, and forgive, and cancel the hand writing that is upon the wall, which will be ready to witness against me; strike my Heart with an awe of thy fear, that I may labor to escape thy threatenings, and give me the comfort once more of thy Salvation.

GRANT, O Lord that I may this night quietly rest under the shadow of thy Wings, free from fears, dangers, and Spiritual darkness; and when the dark end of this mortal life is approached, grant me, O Lord a vigilant Heart, freely disposed to abandon all transitory things, and depart hence in the Peace of a good Conscience, into thine everlasting rest, through Jesus Christ, my Lord, and Savior.

Amen.

Meditations for Friday.

THIS day the first Man Adam, was made a living Soul, and Christ the second Adam, was made a quickening Spirit; this day he Sinned in a garden, and this day the Savior of the World sorrowed in a Garden: he took upon this day, the fruit of the forbidden Tree, and thou, O Blessed redeemer wert hung▪ upon the accursed Tree; this day, Adam, was cast into a deep sleep, and his Wife Eve was formed of his rib, flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone; likewise was the Son of God cast into a deadly sleep, and his Side was pierced with a Spear, from whence sprung out two blessed Sacraments, the water of regeneration, and the blood of Expiation and Sanctification.

THIS day our first parent brought the curse upon himself, and all his posterity; but thou, O God hast provided an everlasting Blessing for thyself, and all thy Members; thy Law, O God, is just, holy, and pure; but I am wicked, profane, and impure: That Medicine is for the most part the best, which the Patient least approves of, because it exasperates the pain for a time. Have I the less affection for the most holy Faith, because it restraineth my carnal Liberty, and abridgeth me of Worldly Contentments? Have not I a Law in my mind which opposeth the Law of my members? And is it not much better to Sow unto the Spirit, thereunto the flesh, which produces only Corruption?

IS it not as easy for thee, to raise me out of ashes, as at the first to raise me out of the dust? To send back my Spirit into my Body, as at the first to breath it in? I behold the Seed in the Earth, the plants in the Garden, die before they spring forth: I see Wormes and insects, that spend the Winter season in a kind of death, yet revive in the Spring; I know, I am myself dead in sleep every▪ Night, but alive in the Morning: Why then should I call in question any one Article of my Belief, but humbly say, Lord, I believe help thou my unbelief.

A Prayer for Friday Morning.

O LORD God, maker and governor of all things both in Heaven, and Earth, I come unto thee, with a broken and a contrite Heart, lamenting my Sins, and seeking to find Comfort at thy merciful hands: Lord, thou knowest my grief, my anxiety, and care, Oh let me feel thy comforts to refresh my Soul: Be with me this day in all my worldly affairs, and let thy holy Spirit evermore defend me and preserve my integrity, that I may be acknowledged thine at the last day.

I YEILD thee all laud and praise, for thy preservation of me this night past, and for safely bringing me to behold the glorious light of this day: Lord, excite my heart, that I may express my thankfulness, by my serviceable obedience, preserve and keep me from Sin, and all irregularities both of Soul and Body: Mortify all my Corruptions and sensual Appetites, and purge me thoroughly from filthiness both of flesh and Spirit, that I may perfect holiness in thy fear.

STRENGTHEN me against all the vanities of the world, the lusts of the Flesh, the lusts of the Eyes, and the Pride of life; and give me Grace to employ this day, and the remainder of my Life, in all peace and purity, sanctity and sobriety, to thy Glory, the good Example of others; and finally, the Salvation of my own Soul. This, and whatsoever for want of memory I have omitted, I humbly beg in the Name of thy dear Son, and my alone Savior and Redeemer.

Amen.

A Prayer for Friday Night.

O GOD, thou camest into the World to save Sinners, behold me, I beseech thee, the vile of them; but wash! oh! wash away all my sins in the Blood of thy Son, sanctify my Nature, abolish my Corruptions; guide me here by thy Council, and after that receive me into Glory: Keep me now, and ever, send me a quiet repose, and grant that lying down to rest, I may rise again in thy peace, and walk in thy fear, that so the succeeding day may learn me to grow Wise, and forever Glorify thy Holy Name.

INSPIRE me, O Lord, with the Spirit of sweet Consolation, and though sleep is the Image of Death, and my Bed as the Grave, yet suffer me not to perish suddenly, or unprepared, but watch over me for good, guide me now, and evermore, let no appalements disturb me, keep me from Fire, Storms, Tempests, Thieves, sudden Death and Danger; cause thine Angels to pitch their Tents round about me, my House and Habitation, and preserve all that is near and dear unto me. [Here name your particular Friends]

REMEMBER thy Church, and every Member of it, have pity on the poor afflicted Protestants in all parts beyond the Seas, who suffer for the Testimony of their Faith and a good Conscience; send them help from thy Holy place, and evermore mightily defend them; be unto them a Sun and a Shield, a Sun to Comfort, and a Shield to defend them to all Dangers and Tribulations; put a period unto all their afflictions, and in thy good time vouchsafe them a happy Deliverance. Lord, receive them and me, and all that appertain unto me, this Night and forever, into thy Gracious protection, through the Mediation of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

Meditations for Saturday.

THE great Creator this day rested from all his Work which he had made, and blessed it; O Lord, grant that after this painful life is ended, I may enjoy a comfortable rest with thee in Heaven, where I may keep an eternal Sabbath, and hold a perpetual Feast; there will be rest without Labor, tranquility without Molestation, and joys without End: There, my Soul, wilt thou behold a Glorious City, the Streets of Gold, the Gates of Pearl, and the Foundations garnished with all sorts of precious Stones.

I SHALL behold thee, the Father, in thy Majesty, Christ thy Son in his Glory, the Spirit in his Sanctity, the Arch-Angels and Angels in their Exceilency, and the Saints in their Felicity; then shall I no more hunger, labor, nor travel; I shall no more fear, grieve, nor desire; I shall want no more an earthly House, for the Heaven of Heavens shall be my Habitation, God will be my Temple, and the Lamb that shineth forever shall enlighten me.

LORD, let the hope and expectation▪ of this eternal rest and felicity sweeten all my labors, and ease my torments, let it mitigate my afflictions, and comfort my spirits, that I faint not in my Journey, nor be depressed under my burden, but hold on cheerfully and valiantly, till I arrive at the Land of Promise, and there receive the Lot of mine Inheritance with the Saints in light for evermore.

Amen.

A Prayer for Saturday Morning.

MOST Gracious God, sanctify I humbly beseech thee, this day unto me, and myself, now and ever unto thy service; thy Mercies, O Lord, they are new every Morning, and therefore my Thanks ought every day to be a new repeated: I praise thy holy Name, for keeping me this Night past, unto this present hour and moment, and hast now brought me unto the last day of the Week; grant that I may spend the same soberly, righteously, and holily.

BRING me to the knowledge of thy Blessed Will in all things, that I may endeavor to perform the same to thy Glory, the peace of my Conscience, and the preservation of my own Soul; purge and cleanse my Heart and Conscience from all dead Works, that I may serve thee, the living God, for evermore. Be thou my Guide in all my ways, my stay and support in all my necessities; put an end to the motions of the Flesh, enlarge my Heart for all pious Duties, and habitual Graces of thy Spirit, that I may bring forth the Fruits of them in my Life and Conversation.

BLESS the Kingdom wherein I inhabit, and thy holy Catholic Church, whereof I am an unworthy Member; bless thy Servants, and our dear Lord and Lady King William and Queen Mary, as thou hast Crowned them with a Temporal Crown here, so in thy due time give them a Crown of Glory hereafter. Bless Katherine the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Princess Ann of Denmark▪ with the rest of the Royal Family. Bless all persons, whether dignified or distinguished, from the swayer of the Scepter, to the drawer of Water; have mercy upon all sick persons, Women travelling with Child, and those who are troubled in Body, Mind, or Estate; O Lord, speak peace unto their Consciences, and as thou hast laid laid them down with the one hand, so raise them up with the other, if not to this life, to life eternal, for the Merits and Mediation of Jesus Christ our Lord

Amen.

A Prayer for Saturday Evening.

O GOD, the maker and preserver of all things, look down with thy eye of pity and compassion upon me a miserable sinner; I here prostrate myself, Soul and Body, before thy Divine Majesty, beseeching thee in much mercy to pardon my sins, to Sanctify me, with thy grace, and to bring me to thy glory: That so my Soul may be refreshed with such things as Eye hath not seen, Ear hath not heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of Man to conceive.

ENTER not into Judgment with thy Servant, O Lord, for in thy sight shall no Flesh living be justified: Examine not my ways, this Week past, by the strict rule of thy Law, neither reward me in the severity of thy Justice: But have Mercy upon me a miserable offender, that have deserved the sharpest of thy Judgments; but as the Heavens are higher than the Earth, so is thy Mercy over all thy Works of and great extent to poor Sinners.

SATISFIE my Soul with thy Mercy, and that right soon, so shall I rejoice, and be glad in thee, and learn to praise thee Evermore: And now, O Lord, as this Week is ended, so let my Sins be ended, and never be repeated again anymore: Be pleased to be my merciful protector and preserver from all perils; and dangers this Night: Refresh my Body with quiet rest, that my mind may be cheerful, and be fit to serve thee, in. Sanctifying thy Sabbath, and keeping it as a glorious day unto thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen

Meditations on the Lord's Supper.

HOW can I approach so divine a banquet, and not by an humble confession wash my hands in innocence; holy things must not be given to Dogs, nor Pearls cast before Swine: What is so holy as the Body and blood of Christ, and what Pearl so precious as this Sacrament? There is no Dog so filthy, or Sow so unclean as I am by Nature; but with great detestation of my Rebellious Corruptions, I confess that never Dog so often returned to his Vomit, nor Sow to her wallowing in the mire, as I have to the sink of Sin and mire of sensual filthiness.

O WASH my hands in purity, cleanse my Mouth and purge my Heart, that I may take with a pure Hand, eat with an undefiled mouth, and keep in a faithful heart this bread of life, and food of Angels: give me grace, thoroughly and sincerely to examine myself, and grant that after Examination, I may find my desire fervent, my knowledge Competent, my Sorrow for Sin unfeigned, my purpose of amendment sled fait, my love sincere, and my Faith lively.

AND finding myself thus appareled in a wedding garment, let me be found of thee in Peace, and both cheerfully approach unto, and joyfully and thankfully depart from thy holy, and Heavenly Table; receiving by and with the Bread broken thy Crucified Body, and with the Wine poured out thy blood shed: And by both remission of my Sins, readmission into thy presence and favor, incorporation into thy mystical Body, and finally the glorification of my Body and Soul with thee in thy Kingdom of glory,

Amen.

A Prayer before the Communion.

O LORD Jesus, the Son of the living God, who freely offeredst thy most Sacred Body to be broken, and thy blood to be shed for my Sins that I might be ransomed from Hell, and delivered from wrath and eternal Condemnation; O Lord, my sins, original and actual, of weakness and wickedness, have deserved thy Wrath and heavy indignation; and had not thine eye spared me I had long since been in everlasting burnings, and wholly banished from the presence of thy glory.

LORD, wash away all my Sins in the streams of thy precious blood, which Speaks better things than that of Abel's thou hast loved me, in laying down thy life for me, and hast left unto thy Church▪ this holy Sacrament as a pledge and assurance, that through thy death, all that truly partake of this Sacred and Heavenly institution, apprehending the mysteries, and applying the merits of Christ Crucified, they may receive Comfort and Peace in believing those promises which thou hast expressed unto us in thy word, and be partakers of the benefits of thy Sons passion, and have fruition of thy saving virtue here, and life and Glory hereafter.

ACCEPT me, O Lord, in thy dear Son, as washed, justified and Sanctified, and by thy Spirit cleanse and purify me daily more and more, Sanctify my affections, and enlarge my heart for holy and Heavenly things; and grant that through a steadfast, lively, and constant Faith, I may receive, and worthily eat this Sanctified Bread, and drink of this Sacred Cup, in a holy remembrance that thy Body, O Lord Jesus, was Crucified, and thy blood was shed for the remission of my sins, and grant that it may so effectually operate in my Soul, that I may ever hereafter live in a holy obedience, according to thy heavenly Will, through Jesus Christ.

Amen.

An Ejaculation before Receiving the Bread▪

BLESSED Lord, as thou hast given thy Flesh to be the Bread of eternal Salvation, so vouchsafe to work in me by a lively Faith, that I receiving the same, may evermore continue in me, and thou in me,

Amen.

An Ejaculation before Receiving the Cup.

O LORD, vouchsafe that as thy Blood was shed to wash me a sinner from the Corruption of Old Adam, so grant that it may, through a lively Faith, take effect in me, washing me from the filth of sin, and renew in me the Fruits of Righteousness, that I may become a fit Member to live in thee, and die in thee.

Amen.

A Prayer after the Communion.

O GOD, I praise and bless thy holy Name, for thine unspeakable favor and loving kindness, in feeding me at this time, with the spiritual Food of the Body and Blood of thy Son Jesus Christ, whom thou vouchsafest to send for our Redemption, and to offer him up to Death for me, in remembrance whereof he hath commanded me to eat his Body, and drink his Blood, to the end, that by Faith I should be united to him, and made a lively Member of his Mystical Body, and being washed from all my sins, in his Blood. I should lead a new life in all obedience, holiness and righteousness. VOUCHSAFE, I humbly beseech thee for his sake, to endue me with thy holy Spirit, that by casting away the works of darkness, I may walk in the true light of thy holy Spirit, and ever remain in the number of thy holy and elect Children; give me an earnest desire to partake often of this holy Institution, and to lead my life according to thy holy Will in all things, keeping my Body and Soul unspotted and undefiled, as fit receptacles of so heavenly Food, that my Soul may be partaker of the Mysteries thereof by faith in Christ Jesus.

AND now Glory be to God on high, on Earth peace and eternal Consolation in my Conscience; I am sed now with thy Body, and my heart is refreshed with the Cup of the New Testament in thy Blood: Now I am a Member of thy Mystical Body, Flesh of thy Flesh, and Bone of thy Bone. Lord let nothing be ever able to separate me from thee, but since all things work for the good of thy Chosen, let all things more and more unite me to thee, that I may grow from Grace to Grace, and Strength to Strength, till I come to the full measure of thy perfect Age, and not be refused by thee, who hast given thyself for me, and unto me.

Amen.

A Prayer before hearing the Word.

O LORD, Illuminate my dark understanding, to receive thy Word, and prudently retain it; give me Grace that the Seed of thy Word being sown in my heart, it may take deep root downward, and bring forth Fruit upward, to the Credit of thy Gospel, the Comfort of my poor Soul; and above all, to the Glory of thy most holy Name. Let thy spirit rule and guide the Lips of thy Minister, that he may utter nothing but the Word of Truth, with that fervency, that neither fear nor affection may stop the current of the same.

AND because the Harvest is great, and the Laborers but few, I beseech thee, who art Lord of the Harvest, to send forth such into thy Vineyard, as may with a zeal discharge their Ministerial Function; let thy Urim be upon them, as upon thy holy ones, that sincerity of Doctrine, and integrity of Conversation, may adorn their persons. Lord, guide the Heart and Tongue of him whom I shall hear this day, grant he may speak home to my Conscience, and leave no Corruption unbowelled, but that his Words may chase away all sinful affections from me, whereby I may depart from all Iniquity.

BLESS all thy people, and grant that they may be not only hearers of thy Word, but doers of the same, not deceiving their own Souls; and grant that thy Messengers dividing the Word aright, and thy people keeping it carefully, and practicing it conscionably, they may through Jesus Christ, obtain the remission of their sins past, and receive thy Grace for the time to come. Give them light instead of darkness; peace for trouble, and eternal happiness instead of Felicity, that tasting the sweetness of Caelestial Comfort, they may despise Terrestrial, and after this life ended, they may enter into everlasting Glory, through Christ our Lord.

Amen.

A Prayer after hearing the Word.

MOST gracious God, of thy bountiful Goodness, thou hast, through thy Son Jesus Christ, made known, for my instruction and unspeakable comfort, the glorious Gospel, thy Word of Truth, which none can learn but by hearing, and none can hear but by preaching; and none can preach except they be sent; to this end, give me thy grace, I humbly beseech thee, that as I have heard thy word at this time by thy Minister and messenger, so grant, that I and all that have heard, may Know, understand the same, retain and practice it, according to thy Heavenly will, that I may thereby grow in knowledge, increase in Grace, and be a lively instrument of thy Glory unto my lives end,

Amen.

A Prayer for Necessary Blessings of this Life.

O LORD, thou hast promised never to fail those that depend upon thee; thou openest thine hands and fillest all things living with plenteousness, never suffering any of thine to perish, that carefully seek relief from thy most gracious bounty: I humbly beseech thee dermit me not to want necessaries for this present Life; enable me to live without distracting cares; to this end, bless my labors, that I may have a sufficiency for me, and mine, and not be burdensome unto any but rather be able to administer unto others, whatsoever refreshing Comforts they shall stand in need of.

GIVE me neither Poverty, nor Riches, but feed me with Food convenient for me; lest I be full and deny thee, and say, who is the Lord; or lest I be poor and Steal, and take the name of my God in vain afford me such a portion of Health, and Wealth as thou in thy Divine Wisdom shalt think most convenient for me; succor all such as be in want, relieve the oppressed, comfort the Afflicted, raise the lowly, and aid the needy.

AND O Lord, I humbly beseech thee, never let me want thy favorable assistance, but bless my Basket and increase my Store, with thy never failing blessings, that I may be able to live in thy Faith, Fear, and Love, and out of the Depth of misery, and danger of all Men, through Jesus Christ my only Lord, and Savior,

Amen.

A Thanks giving for God's Benefits.

O GOD Almighty, the giver of all good things, thou art my stay, my Comfort and only guide, direct me, I pray thee, to employ that talent which thou hast allotted, me, for the advancement of thy Glory: Lord thou hast been abundantly gracious, and bountiful unto me, and hast blest my Store, insomuch that I have not only what satisfieth my own occasions, but have also sufficient to Relieve others in the time of their necessity.

GIVE me therefore a free Heart, to cast my Bread upon the waters; and to Relieve my poor distressed Brethren, according to the utmost of my ability; to feed the hungry, to cloth the naked, and minister unto thy distressed Saints that I may not live unto myself, but for the help of all those that want my assistance, that I may lay up in Store a good foundation against the time to come, and be found of thee in peace, enjoying Life, and Salvation through Jesus Christ,

Amen.

A Prayer for Wisdom.

O MOST great and glorious Lord God, I confess that whilst I bear about me this Body of sin imprisoning the Soul, my Nature corrupted and depraved with Iniquity, original and actual, seeks by all means possible to oppose the spirit, and do those things which are dissonant and contrary to the motions, inspirations, gracious influences, and working thereof; my Flesh lusteth against the Spirit, so that the things I would do I cannot, and the things which I suppose to be done in much knowledge and wisdom, will be found not only ignorance, and erroneous, but sinful wickedness in thy sight.

WHEREFORE I humbly beseech thee, O holy Father, to send out thy Light and Truth, thy spirit of Wisdom and Revelation, to Teach and Instruct me, to be my God and Guide, to lead me into all Truth. Lord, send down that Wisdom that waiteth about thy Throne, and plant the same in my Heart, that all my sayings and doings, being always ordered by this Wisdom from on high, I may do that which is pleasing in thy sight, and profitable for my own Salvation, and shun the contrary in all things, through Jesus Christ my Lord and Savior.

Amen.

A Prayer for Defense against our Enemies.

O LORD my God, be not far from me in trouble, and in all dangers Ghostly and Bodily, draw near and make haste to help me, I am, I confess, a most sinful Creature, and have justly deserved thy Wrath and Indignation against me, yet, O Lord, for thy mercy sake, turn thee unto me, and have compassion on me; let mine Enemies prevail not in their mischievous devises, lest they be too proud; in thy Mercy convert them, or in thy Justice consound them; make them as stubble before the Wind, and thine Angel scattering them.

LORD, I am in thy hand, and they are within the compass of thy power; stay and allay their fury, let them not take effect in their wicked Imaginations and Attempts against me, but put them to confusion; rid me, and deliver me in thy Righteousness; and be thou a Sun and a Shield unto me, to comfort and protect me.

TO this end cause thine Angels to pitch their Tents round about me, that being defended under the shadow of thy Wings, and armed with the power of thy Might, I may not fear what Man can do unto me. Lord, regard me with the eye of thy Grace, and guard me with the hand of thy power, that being preserved both in Soul and Body, I may live in Piety, Peace and Godliness, unto my lives end.

Amen.

A Morning Prayer for a Family.

O ETERNAL, and All-seeing God, wonderful in thy Majesty, and Infinite in thy Mercy, who hast the Heavens for thy Throne, and the Earth for thy Footstool; the Heavens are full of the Majesty of thy Glory, and cannot contain the same; look down therefore from thence, upon us thy Servants, who now prostrate ourselves before the Footstool of thy Throne of Grace, humbly beseeching thee, for thy dear Sons sake, to be merciful unto us miserable sinners; one deep calleth upon another, the depth of Misery unto the depth of Mercy, have Mercy therefore upon us, O Lord, and in the multitude of thy Mercies do away all our Offences.

WE Confess we are not worthy to think of thee, much less speak unto thee, we being so vile and miserable, thou so glorious and admirable; yet being assured that in forgiving of Sins and helping afflicted Souls, thy fountain of Mercy is never dried up; we thine unprofitable Servants are emboldened to present ourselves this Morning before thee, to offer up unto thee a lively Sacrifice of Prayer and thanksgiving, who didst offer up thy Son upon the Cross to be a propitiation for our Sins: O let this lifting up of our hearts and hands be a morning Sacrifice pure, and acceptable in thy sight: Let not the greatness of our Sins, withhold thy employed Mercy, but wash us from all uncleanness, and remove thy judgments due unto us for them, as far from thy presence, as the East is from the West.

O, BURY them in the Grave with Christ, raise us up by the power of thy Spirit unto newness of Life, that we may walk in all holy obedience before thee this day, and that endeavoring to keep our Faith and a good Conscience void of offense, we may now, and in the hour of death be, and remain always thine, Defend us from all evil, and sense us against the assaluts of Satan, watch over us by the Eye of thy good providence, and cause thy Angels, to pitch their tents about us for our safety and continual preservation.

INTO thy hands, we now commit our Souls and Bodies, guide our thoughts, words, and actions, and if we forget thee, our God at any time, O! do thou in mercy remember us, and forgive us our trespasses; make us to see our Sins in the glass of thy Law, to mourn for them in the Closet of our hearts, and Confess them in the bitterness of our Souls, teach us to cast off the rags of iniquity, and by Faith, put on the Robes of Righteousness: Help us to manage the Sword of the Spirit, and the Helmet of Salvation, that we may be able to fight against the Wiles of the Devil, the vanities of the World, the Lusts of the flesh, and the pride of Life.

BE favorable to Zion, build up the walls of Jerusalem, more particularly, preserve and enlarge these Churches of great Britain, and Ireland; feed them as thy flock, and Family: Dress them, as thy Vineyard, and adorn them, as thy Spouse: Defend our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William, and Queen Mary from all Enemies, at home, and abroad, preserve their Bodies in Health, the Hearts and Souls in soundness and truth, their lives in honor, and their honor from underminers. Bless Katherine the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Princess Ann of Denmark, with the rest of the Royal Family. Bless those which rule in Church and State, all Schools of good Education and sound Learning, all thy Ministers and Magistrates, with all our Relations in the Flesh, and Friends in the Spirit, to whom thou hast any ways made us bounden. O Lord, enable us to requite them, or lay it on thine own account to restore it unto them, and their Posterities.

And here we yield thee all laud and praise, for Creating us when we were nothing, for Predestinating us unto the Adoption, and choosing us in Christ before the Foundation of the World. We thank thee for our Preservation this Night past, and for bringing of us this day to behold thy glorious light. Lord, awake our Souls from Sin, and Carnal Security, that we may be prepared like wise Virgins, with Oil in our Lamps, to meet the sweet Bridegroom of our Souls, whether at the hour of Death, or the Day of Judgment. These and all other Graces, which for blindness, we cannot, and for our unworthiness we dare not ask, we beseech thee to give us, for the worthiness of thy dear Son Jesus Christ our Lord, in whose most holy Name and Words, we conclude these our imperfect Prayers, in that most perfect Form of Prayer, which he himself hath further taught us in his holy Gospel, saying, Our Father, &c.

A Collect for the Day.

LORD bless us, and make thy Face to shine upon us; keep us from Sin and Satan, sickness and sorrow, shame and servitude, loss of Goods and good Names, or of anything more near and dear unto us, if it be thy good pleasure; preserve us evermore in thy Faith and holy Fear, guide us constantly by thy Council, and after that receive us to Glory.

Amen.

An Evening Prayer for a Family.

O GOD, the God of the Spirits of all Flesh, the high and lofty one that Inhabitest Eternity, who hast made the Earth by thy power, Establish'd the World by thy Wisdom, and stretched out the Heavens by thy discretion; the Father of Eternity, and Fountain of Mercy, the giver of all good things, the forgiver of all sins, and the comforter of all such as fly unto thee. Lord, we are here present before thee, be thou present with us, and President amongst us; we appeal from the Seat of thy Justice, to the Throne of thy Mercy, beseeching thee to give us a sense of our own Miseries, and an assurance of thy Mercies; let us not be possessed with over much fear, but that with a holy confidence of thy goodness, we may with joy appear in thy presence, in an humble acknowledgment of our sins.

TO this end, we confess that we have sinned against Heaven, and before thee, and are no more worthy to be called thy Children; we have transgressed thy holy Laws and Commandments, not only by our Thoughts and Words, but by our Deeds and Actions; our Iniquities are more in number than the hairs of our Head, and make us seem vile in our own Eyes, but much more in thy sight. Lord, unto thee we confess our sins, O grant us Pardon and Absolution for them; open unto us Penitents, that ever streaming Fountain of thy Sons Blood, that our sins being Bathed therein, we may appear without blemish in thy sight; by his Death mortify our sinful Corruptions, hide them in his Wounds, and bury them in his Grave, that they may neither rise in this life to shame us, nor in the World to come to condemn us.

GIVE us thy holy Spirit, let him purge our Consciences, heal our Corruptions, illuminate our Understandings, confirm our Memories, and consecrate our Souls and Bodies, that they may be fit Temples for thy holy Ghost to dwell in. Be merciful to thy Church, and enlarge her borders; shower down the choicest of thy blessings upon the heads and hearts of thy Servants, our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, bless them with length of days here, and with a Crown of Glory hereafter; bless Katherine the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Princess Ann of Denmark, with all the rest of the Royal Family. Bless the Nobility, Gentry, Ministry, Magistracy and Commonalty, our Relations in the Flesh, and Friends in the Spirit; protect all that stand up for thy Truth, but as for thy Foes, let them be ashamed and confounded.

AND now seeing thou hast brought the Night upon us, wherein thou hast ordained man to rest in, we humbly beseech thee, who art the Keeper of Israel, who never slumberest nor sleepest, to watch over us by thy Providence; cause thy holy Angels to pitch their Tents round about us, that being freed from the terrors of the Night, and refreshed with moderate rest and sleep, we may the better be enabled to praise thy Name, and to walk before thee in all good Works, and holiness of Conversation, all the days of our lives. Let our Bed, O Lord, put us in mind of our Grave, and our rising from thence of our Resurrection, that whether we wake or sleep, we may be always thine.

AND knowing that thy Name, O Lord, is a strong Tower of Defense, we here commend ourselves this Night, to thy most holy protection; if it be thy Divine Will to call any of us hence in our sleep, O Lord, for thy Sons sake, have mercy upon us, and receive our Souls into thy most blessed Kingdom; but if it be thy heavenly pleasure to add more days unto our lives, add more amendment unto our days, that living we may live in thy Fear, and dying we may die in thy Favor, and in the end, Reign with thee in Glory.

Amen.

A Collect for the Night.

INTO thy hands, O Father, we commend our Spirits, for thou hast redeemed us, O thou God of Truth; into thy most merciful Tuition, and gracious Preservation, do we commend ourselves, our Souls and Bodies, our Relations, our Goods and good Names, all ours, and all that call upon thy Name. Lord, be thou present with them and us, and about our Beds, unto our lives end; let not our fantasies be troubled with vain Imaginations, nor the Dreams and Visions of our heads, like Nebuchadnezzar's, make us afraid, but give us quiet and comfortable rest, that our Souls and Bodies being refreshed, we may when we awake, laud and praise thee, and joyfully perform the business of the next day in our particular Callings.

LET our whole life be a serving and glorifying of thee, that we may live in thy Fear, die in thy Favor, and rest from all our Labors, and be blest with thy glorious Vision, enjoying the presence of our blessed Savior, the comfort of thy holy Spirit, and the Communion of thy most holy Saints and Angels, that we, together with them, may ascribe unto thee the Glory of our Redemption from Sin, Satan, Hell, and Death, World without end.

Amen.

Prayers for several Persons.

The Husbands Prayer.

MOST gracious God, have mercy upon me, and upon all those which appertain unto me; in the beginning thou didst Institute Marriage, for the propagation of Mankind, a remedy to avoid unlawful Lust, and for the mutual Comfort and Consolation of thy Children; give me, O heavenly Father, I humbly beseech thee, the assistance of thy Grace, that I may according to thy Commandments, love and cherish her whom thou hast allotted for my help and comfort in this life.

MORTIFIE in me all fleshly Lusts, and let not the heat of unlawful Concupiscence, take possession of me, but grant that we may live in Peace and Unity, and equally praise thy holy Name: [If any Children] Bless, O Lord, those Children thou hast bestowed upon us, give us understanding hearts and minds, to bring them up in thy Faith and Fear, and give them obedient hearts to thee, and to all thy Commandments; grant that they may not prove a Curse but a Blessing to us, and thereby attain that reward which thou hast promised to those which honor and obey their Parents.

TEACH me, O Lord, to Govern and Instruct my Family, whereby they may walk in thy Fear; and grant that I may, according to my ability, provide what is necessary as well for their Bodies as their Souls: And do thou, O Lord, endue them with thy Grace, that they may perform their Duties, in Fear and Obedience, not with Eye-service, but in singleness of Heart as in thy presence. Give me, O Lord, I beseech thee a competency to maintain that which thou hast committed to my Charge, and grant that we may in all humility rely upon thy blessed Will, who knowest what is fitter for us then we do for ourselves To whom be all Honor and Glory

Amen.

The Wives Prayer.

O LORD, I give thee humble thanks for calling me to the Honorable State of Matrimony; give me, O Lord, thy heavenly Grace, that I may fear thee, and love, reverence, and obey him whom thou hast appointed to be my head in all good things, to live peaceably and quietly with him; suffer me not to be puffed up with the Vanities of the World, but grant that I may frame my mind and habit suitable to the Estate of my Husband, and adorn myself with that which may become a modest Woman to wear. Assist me, O Lord, that I may with his Consent, prudently and with discretion, Govern his Family, and carefully mind that nothing be wasted, nor permit any evil to be committed in his House.

FURNISH me, O Lord, with those Gifts and Graces which the Royal Preacher described in a good Woman, and endue me with such a Care in the Education of my Children, as belongeth unto my part to perform, that I may live and rejoice to see the prosperity of them in this life, and after this life is ended, grant that we all may be received to thy eternal Kingdom, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

The Childs Prayer.

MOST gracious God, to whom the Childs obedience to the Parents is always acceptable, but their disobedience most displeasing, I humbly beseech thee to remove far from me the horrid sin of Disobedience and Rebellion against my Parents; O give me Grace to observe them with all diligence in Duty, obey them in all lawful Commands, and aid and assist them in all their Necessities; give me Grace to receive all their reproofs patiently, and not to perplex them by Stubbornness and bad Courses.

SUFFER me not to scoff or deride at their Age or Infirmary, but rather supply their Wants, and cover their Weaknesses. Forgive, O Lord, the many offenses I have committed against them, increase their days, and preserve them sound in Body and Mind; let them see their Children's Children, to their Comfort and thy Glory; let them Govern me, and the rest of their Family, with Prudence and good Example, that when this life is ended, they may depart hence in peace, and come to thy Kingdom unspotted, through Jesus Christ.

Amen.

The Widows Prayer.

O ALMIGHTY God, who hast promised to be a Father to the Fatherless, and a Husband to the Widow, let thy tender Eye of Compassion look down upon me, and my Children; preserve me and them from all Oppression and Wrong, and relieve us, we beseech thee, in all our Necessities.

BLESS, O Lord, that small portion thou hast lent me, for a competent maintenance of me and mine, O let it be like the Widows Barrel of Meal, never to waste, and like the Cruse of Oil, never to fail. Dispose our hearts to all Obedience, and give us Grace to walk worthy of thee, and thy Mercies which we daily and hourly receive. And lastly, in all our Afflictions, let me put my whole trust and confidence in thee, and praise thy Name for evermore.

Amen.

The Orphans Prayer.

O ALMIGHTY and most merciful Father, thou hast promised that when my Father and my Mother forsaketh me, thou O God, wilt take me up. O Lord, I am now, by thy appointment, deprived of my Parents, who under thee, were the only stay I had in this World. Be thou, O Lord my God, my Father and my Deliverer, teach me to seek thee early, and endue me with thy Grace, that I may be obedient to those whom thou art pleased to place over me.

MAKE me to remember thee my Creator in the days of my Youth, that I may lead my life according to the rule of true Godliness; Govern and Guide, I beseech thee, all my Actions, preserve my Body in health, and my Soul from all evil thoughts which may molest it; add unto me length of Days, Grace and Virtue, and guide my Feet in the way of peace.

Amen.

A Prayer for a Young Man or Maid.

MOST gracious God, vouchsafe to me thy Heavenly Grace now and at all times; more especially in this most dangerous part of my Life, when the heat of Youth, and many temptations do surround me; O preserve me, I beseech thee, as the apple of thine Eye, and though the flesh strives against the Spirit, yet do thou exercise thy power and strengthen my imbecility: Stifle Sin in me at the beginning that it arise not up to a habit, and prevent in me all evil and unworthy thoughts against thy Divine Majesty.

O LORD I recommend unto thee my Soul as a Child that can of itself do nothing; defend me from all enemies Spiritual and Temporal, keep my Soul, and Body, pure, chaste, and undefiled, that I offend not either in thought word, or deed: Give me grace, O Lord, to obey my Parents, and those to whose tuition I am committed; and grant that if thou shalt be pleased to call me to the honorable estate of Matrimony, I may be joined with one, with whom I may serve thee, in peace and holiness, all the days of my Life.

Amen.

A Prayer for a Servant.

O HOLY, and blessed Lord God, who tookest upon thee, the form of a Servant, and wast obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross, that thou mightest work the Salvation of all people, as well bond as free; thou hast been pleased to call me to the State and Condition of a Servant, below many others in the world, O make me humbly submit to it, and always praise and magnify thy holy Name that thou hast given me Health and strength of Body to perform my Duty.

LORD cast forth all murmurings and repinings in me, and all Envy at the prosperity of others; Endue me with meekness and humility, and deliver me from the slavery of Sin, that I may be made a Servant of Righteousness; teach me to understand my duty, and to reverence those whom I serve, accounting them worthy of that honor which appertains to them: Preserve me from Pride, unseemly passions, or disrespectful behavior towards my Superiors; quicken my diligence in business, and grant that whatever I shall take in hand, I may not do it with Eye Service, but in singleness of heart; and obtain thy Grace and favor for Evermore,

Amen.

A Prayer for the fruits of the Earth.

MOST gracious God, thy Works are to be wondered at through the World; thou makest the grass to grow for the Cattel, and Herb for the service of Man: Thou bringest forth food out of the Earth, and blessest the increase of it: look down O Lord, I beseech thee, upon all the dwellers upon earth wherein we inhabit: That our Land may become fruitful and yield forth plenty in its proper Season.

And O thou, who openest thy hand, and fillest all things Living with good things; fill our hearts with wisdom, and all Christian virtues, that we may bring forth abundantly the fruit of good works, to the honor and glory of thy holy Name And: as thou Crownest the Year with thy goodness, and thy Clouds drop fatness: So grant that we may evermore praise thee for all thy Mercies, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, to whom be ascribed all honor, power and glory, now, and forever,

Amen.

A Prayer for Seasonable Weather.

O LORD God, who for our sins art justly displeased at us, and dost now chastise us by keeping back thy rain from watering the Earth; whereby we are in danger of losing the diligent labor of our hands: Pardon, O Lord we humbly beseech our high provocations, and accept of our hearty and true Repentance, and favourably and Mercifully forgive all our transgressions committed against thee.

SHOWER down again thy blessings of Rain upon the Earth, and water it, O Lord, that it may be softened and replenished: But let not immoderately the Floods overflow us, nor the Seed be spoiled under the Clod: But let thy loving kindness renw the face of the Earth' and make the green Pastures rejoice: Hearken unto the Cry of the Poor and Needy, and though we eat our Bread in the sweat of our Face yet punish us not with the Scarcity of it, which is the Staff and Support of our Lives: Lord prosper all our labors, and let us with moderation enjoy the fruit of it, this we beg for thy Sons sake our blessed Lord and Savior.

Amen.

A Thanksgiving after a good Havest.

WE Bless and praise thy holy Name, O Lord, for sending us Rain from Heaven, and fruitful Seasons, whereby thou hast filled our hearts with Food and gladness: Thou hast made the Grass to grow upon the Mountains, and given Food to the Beasts of the field, and hast filled us with the finest of the Wheat flower, thou hast given Seed to the Sower, and Bread to the Eater, and hast loaded the Earth with thy bounty, that our Barns might be filled.

BLESSED forever art thou O Lord, and magnified be thy Name for these and all others this benefits which thou from time to time hast bestowed upon us; O that our hearts may overflow with love, and our Tongues with expressions of thankfulness to thee; grant that we may never forget nor abuse thy loving kindness towards us, but by a sober and charitable use of these thy Mercies, we may be made fit for a continual supply of them, and at the last be made heirs of thy glorious Kingdom.

Amen.

A Prayer for a Woman with Child.

O GOD, the Creator and preserver of all things, who in the beginning didst place mankind in unspeakable happiness, and had there continued, had not our first Parents broke thy Divine precepts given them in Paradise: So that the Earth for their sakes was accursed; and unto us the Daughters of Eve for our transgressions thou hast allotted most grievous pains and torments of Body in bringing forth Children.

LORD extend unto me, and to all Women thy Mercy, mitigate the torments thereof, that we may be able patiently to endure the pains of our travel at the hour appointed: And make that easy and light to us, which our defects have made heavy and burdensome; and that wherewith I am now laden, may graciously be delivered from my frail Body: and send us all, good Lord, a safe deliverance, that we may be made joyful and happy Mothers.

VOUCHSAFE unto me and to all that have conceived with child strength to bring forth that which thine omnipotency hath so wonderfully wrought in us, in our greatest perils, O Lord help us, and mightily deliver us; let thy power, might, and Love, be no less manifest in the delivery, than in the forming of thiy Creature, that being through thy goodness, made a joyful Mother I may obtain my perfect strength again, and live to praise thee for evermore, Amen.

A Prayer for a Woman near the time of her Travel.

O GOD most holy, the speedy helper of all those who rely upon thee, by thy almighty power I was formed, and fashioned in the Womb, by thy tender care I was brought from thence, and by thy Merciful providence, I have been preserved even to this moment in laud and magnify thy holy Name, and implore thy never failing aid in this approaching time of my necessity: O be not far off from me when trouble is nigh at hand, but hear my voice and save me when I call upon thee! mitigate my pains or endue me with patience; and support my Spirits in that great conflict.

LORD perfect what thou hast begun, and what thou hast wrought in secret bring forth I beseech thee into thy most marvelous light; that we may all behold the wonders of thy Wisdom and extol thy power: O Lord in thee alone do I humbly place my Confidence, for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord, thou God of truth; I wholly resign myself unto thee, beseeching thee to have Mercy upon me, and when ever thou shalt be pleased to call me from this Life, Lord fit me for a better, where all sorrows and tears shall be done away, and everlasting joys possess our hearts for evermore.

Amen.

The Midwives Prayer before Deliverance

MOST gracious God, who by thy never failing providence hast kept me even from my Mothers Womb to this moment, and hast now deputed me the unworthiest of all thy Servants to this great office, for a help and comfort, in that great pain and peril of Child birth: Be with me, O Lord, I beseech thee, and assist me in this great work, which I am now ready to undertake; prosper thou, O Lord, the work of my hands, O prosper I beseech thee, my handy work.

O PUT thy fear into my heart, that I may be as sincere to the Poor as to the Rich, to save life and not to destroy, let me not be too timorous, nor too violent, but endue me with those virtues and graces, which thou knowest most convenient for me, and give a Blessing to this undertaking, preserve me I humbly beseech thee, in the dangerous times, from contagion, infection, or any bodily diseases, which may be received from sick Persons.

AND as thou hast by thy Almighty power made her Conceive, and hast now even brought it to the Birth, so give her strength also to bring forth: Support her Spirits in her labor, bless the endeavors of those who are present with her, preserve the life of that which struggles in her Womb to be delivered: And let us behold the operation of thy hands, to all our Joy and Comfort: Lord hear our Prayers, and let our cry come unto thee; save her, and help her, we humbly beseech thee, O Lord. Our Father, &c.

A Thanksgiving after Deliverance.

FORASMUCH as it hath pleased thee, O Almighty God, of thy gracious Goodness, to ease me of my pains and deliver me of my burden, and from the great danger and peril of Childbirth, I here humbly prostrate my Soul and Body before thee, to be unto thee a reasonable, lively, and living Sacrifice, holy and acceptable in thy sight, giving thy Divine Majesty infinite and unfeigned thanks for this thy gracious preservation of me, and delivering me out of this great danger of Death, under which I might have perished, had not thy mercy and goodness embraced me on every side.

TO thee alone, most heavenly Father, be given and ascribed all Praise and Thanksgiving, now and forever; as thou hast been graciously pleased to give me a Child, so Lord, give me thy Grace which is sufficient for me, to devote and consecrate it wholly to thee, and thy service; to this end work mightily in it, by thy holy spirit, sanctify it from the Womb, not whilst it hangs upon the Breasts, but so long as it shall breathe in the Land of the Living, until thou translate it hence to Reign with thee in Glory.

Amen.

A Prayer for one near any Temptation.

O MERCIFUL God, thou exercisest thy Children with sundry Trials and Temptations, leaving them to themselves, as thou didst Hezekiah, to the end he might see his frailty; some like St. Peter, thou exposest to the boisterous Winds of Satan's Winnowings; and others, like St. Paul, to the blows of the Adversaries vehement Buffetings; O God, thine only Son thou didst not exempt from Satan's sharpest and stoutest Trials, when thou conductedst him into the Wilderness to be tempted of the Devil.

IF thou, O Lord, shouldst permit me in like manner to be tried and tempted, suffer me not at any time to be overcome, but hold me up by thy Almighty power, animate by the presence of thy blessed Spirit, and let thy Grace be ever sufficient for me, whereby I may foil my Enemy, and in the end get the Victory; detect his Policies, discover his Subtilties, defeat his doings and dealings which are against me; to this end endue me with such Wisdom, as may make me foresee his Stratagems, such vigilancy as I may avoid his Snares, which he prepares for my Souls destruction.

LET no temptation take me, but what is common to Man, try me not above my strength, but with the temptation make me a way to escape; let me never yield to the motions of Satan, suggesting unto me Death or Desperation, but grant me patience to expect the hour of my Departure, my Souls Separation, the dissolution of my Body, and deliverance from the misery of this wretched World; let my trouble be without distress, my perplexity without despair, my persecution without forsaking, and my casting down without destruction; if Tears fall from my Eyes, in thy good time wipe them away, and preserve them in thy Bottle, that they may be precious in thy sight.

O LORD, if thou leavest me for a while, draw nigh again unto me in great Compassion; cover my head in my spiritual Conflicts; let thy Love be my Banner, thy Faithfulness and Truth my Shield and Buckler; let no trial surprise me, but give me a right Judgment, that I may count it all Joy when I fall into divers Temptations; O let not my heart be hardened by them, as the Israelites were who provoked thee in the Wilderness, but sanctify all thy visitations unto me, that I may be bettered and reformed by them, that my Faith being tried, patience may have her perfect work in me entire, lacking nothing.

I KNOW, O Lord, in all thy Temptations thou ever hast one end, and Satan another; thou triest me to the end, that being faithful, thou mightest give me a Crown of Life, but Satan seeks to seduce me to Wickedness; but O holy Spirit, thou preserver of all Men, keep me by thy Grace, and strengthen me by thy Power, be present with me, and president in me, and as thy sufferings abound in me, so let thy consolation much more abound; and in the midst of my greatest Agonies of Mind, let thy Comforts refresh my disquieted Soul.

LORD, let thy mighty Hand, and stretched-out-Arm, be now and always my Defense, thy mercy and loving kindness in Christ Jesus thy dear Son, my Salvation, thy true and holy Word my Instruction, thy Grace and holy Spirit my Comfort and Consolation.

THE peace of God which passeth all Understanding, keep my Heart and Mind in the love of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord; and the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be with me, and remain with me and mine, and with the whole Church of God, from this time forth, and for evermore.

GOD be merciful unto me, and bless me, the Lord lift up the light of his Countenance upon me, and be merciful unto me, and grant me his everlasting peace.

Amen.

A Prayer for one afflicted in Mind.

O FATHER of Mercy, and God of all Consolation, vouchsafe I beseech thee, relief and succor, unto me a wretched Sinner, who am much tormented in Mind, and afflicted in Conscience; Lord, I am afraid of thy Judgments, and the severe Threatenings written in thy Law against those sins I have committed, but, O Lord, break not the bruised Reed, nor quench the smoking Flax; wound not my humble and contrite Heart, but revive my Spirit that goes mourning all the day long; though Satan thinks thou hast smitten and forsaken me, yet frustrate his hopes and expectations; leave me not destitute of thy Grace, as a prey unto the Enemy of my Soul, but mightily preserve, and evermore defend me.

AND though my Conscience accuses me, my Memory witnesses against me, and my Reason condemns me; though I am overwhelmed in discomfort, and have lost the voice of joy and gladness, and have neither worth to appease thy wrath, nor patience to endure thy trial, yet send me, O Lord, the comfort of thy holy Spirit into my heart, that I may not be swallowed up with overmuch heaviness, but may rejoice in thee with joy unspeakable and full of Glory: Open, and set open, the Gate of thy Mercy, to the greatness of my Misery, for my mind is sorrowful, my heart heavy, my spirit is oppressed, my words are stopped with sighs, and my complaints watered with tears.

IN executing thy Judgments, Lord, remember Mercy, try me not least I be condemned; weigh not my offenses, but pardon my offenses; sanctify all those means unto me which may afford me relief, as Prayer, Conference, Meditation, reading and hearing of thy Word, and receiving the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of thy Son, and my alone Savior and Redeemer; mitigate my extremities, abate my fears, and moderate my afflictions; let not Night Visions, like Nebuchadnezzar's, make me afraid, but when I awake, stay me with Flaggons, and comfort me with Apples, thy precious promises, which are pleasant to the Soul.

RECTIFIE my Understanding, as in the days of Old, and Drink no longer unto me in the Cup of Affliction, but in the Chalice of refreshing, that I may pay my Vows unto thee, and call upon thy Name in the sight of all thy Congregation; but if it be thy good pleasure to try me, and not take away this Cup from me, confirm my Faith, and continue unto me that Hope which is to be revealed; to this end, cause me with the Eye of Faith to look up to thee, who chastisest me, and wait for the appointed time of my delivery out of all my Troubles.

LORD, suffer me not to be swallowed up with despair, but vouchsafe me a full assurance of thy Mercy, that thou wilt never leave me, nor forsake me, but wilt be in life my God, in death my Deliverer, and after death my Eternal Rewarder. Lord hearken, and incline thine Ear unto these my Requests for thy Sons sake, my only Lord and Savior. Our Father, &c.

THE Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God the Father, and the most comfortable Fellowship of God the holy Ghost, be with me, bless, preserve and keep me, both in Soul and Body, in Goods and good Name, in Life, Health, Peace and Godliness, together with thy whole Church, and all that appertain unto me, now, and for evermore.

Amen.

A Prayer to be used in behalf of one troubled in Mind.

ALMIGHTY God, the only Guide and Comfort of our Souls, and to whom alone we fly for succor in all afflictions; O Lord we presume now to appear before thee in behalf of this thy afflicted Servant, Support him I beseech thee, in his greatest conflicts, silence and appease his troubled Spirit, that he may quietly hearken to thy blessed Words of, Come unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

THOU hast solemnly proclaimed, O Lord, in thy holy Scripture, that thou dost not delight in the death of a Sinner, but rather that he should turn from his Wickedness and live. O make him with joy feel his Soul turning to thee, since no satisfactory Comfort can be acquired but only in thy love and favor which to all thy Servants is better than life itself; We beseech thee, speak peace to his Conscience and say unto him and all that are here present, that thou art our Salvation.

ENDUE him with thy Grace, give him peace of Conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost; O give him the Comfort of thy help again, and Establish him with thy free Spirit: quicken him, O Lord, for thy Names sake, and for thy Righteousness sake bring his Soul out of this trouble: Put gladness into his heart, and restore him again if it be thy Blessed will, that he and we may Evermore rejoice in thee, who art the Father of all Mercies and the God of all Consolation, to whom be Glory and Praise now, and for Evermore.

Amen.

Meditations for the Sick.

O GOD, thou dost what thou pleasest in Heaven and in Earth, in the Sea, and in all deep places; thou art full of Compassion and tender Mercy, long suffering and aboundest in goodness and truth, thou alone forgivest Sins and savest all those, that trust in thee, in time of affliction.

I KNOW that all Flesh is Grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field; the grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the Word of thee, our God, shall stand for Ever: In thy word therefore, and gracious promises is my hope, which is my greatest Comfort in my affliction.

IN the multitude of thy thoughts within me, thy Comforts shall delight my Soul; I will rejoice even in the midst of my tribulation, and glory in thy Holy Name, who makest all things work together for good to them that love thee: Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of Death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff doth Comfort me.

WE are but of Yesterday, and know nothing; because our days upon Earth are as a shadow: When thou with rebukes dost correct Man for iniquity, thou makest his beauty to Consume away like a Moth: Surely every Man is vanity; my time is in thy hand: Make thy face to shine upon thy Servant: Save me for thy Mercies sake.

HIDE not thy face from me; put not thy Servant away in thine anger: Thou hadst been my help, leave me not, neither forsake me, O God my of salvation: Thou shalt show me the Path of Life, in thy presence is the fullness of joy, and at thy right hand there are pleasures for Evermore.

WE have had Fathers of the Flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence, shall we not much rather be in Subjection to the Father of Spirits, and live: he draweth the mighty with his power; he riseth up, and no Man is sure of Life.

WE have received good at the hands of God, and shall we not receive Evil? Affliction cometh not forth of the dust; neither doth Travail come forth of the Ground: Let us search and try our ways▪ and turn again to the Lord, for though our outward Man decay, our inward Man is renewed.

WE are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be Condemned with the World: For we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God that raised the dead, who hath delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: And in whom we trust, that he will yet deliver us.

BUT we know that all things work together for good to them that love God: Let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their Souls to him in well doing, as unto ae Faithful Creator. We that are in this Tabernacle, do groan, being burdened.

I KNOW, O Lord, that thy judgments are just, and that thou of very faithfulness hast caused me to be troubled O let this lightaffliction, which will quickly pass away, cause unto me afterward a more excellent and eternal weight of Glory.

REMEMBER, I beseech thee, that thou hast made me as the Clay, and wilt thou bring me into the Dust again? Deliver me, O Lord, from Eternal Death, in that day wherein Heaven and Earth shall be dissolved, when thou comest to judge the Earth, I know thou wilt bring me to Death, and to the House appointed for all Living.

A Prayer to be used by a sick Person.

O GOD, my Creator and Preserver, thou hast made me after thine own Image, in Knowledge, Holiness, and Righteousness, but I have sinned, most holy Father, against Heaven, and against thee, and am no more worthy to be called, or reckoned amongst thy Children; for this Image of thine I have defaced, I have filled my Understanding with Ignorance, my Will with Stubbornness, my Affections with Perverseness, my Heart with Deceitfulness, and my whole Life with Disobedience; ever since I drew my Breath, I have drunk Iniquity like Water, so that I can expect nothing but Death, and to be Arraigned at the Bar of thy Justice, there to receive an irrevocable Doom.

BUT O most merciful God, for thy dear Sons sake, blot out all my Offences, and receive me Graciously; enlarge my patience to endure thy Trial, and lay no more upon me than I am able to bear; give a happy issue unto all Temptations, and make a way for me to escape, and in the end, grant me a full Deliverance. As thou hast made me of Dust, so thou canst take from me my breath, and cast me forth again to that Earth from whence I was taken; but I humbly beseech thee, for to spare me a little, that I may recover my health and strength, before I go hence, and be no more seen.

I CONFESS, O Lord, there is no soundness in my Flesh, because of thy Displeasure, nor any rest in my Bones; by reason of my sin; my heart panteth, my strength faileth, and my beauty consumeth away like a Moth fretting a Garment. O Lord, if it be thy holy Will, ease my Agonies, mitigate my Extremities, be mindful of my Sorrows, and be merciful unto my Sins; redeem my Life from Destruction, strengthen my Weakness, heal my Malady, and cause me again to walk before thee, in the Land of the Living, but if thou hast determined to call me hence, thy Will be done; grant me patience under thy Correction, and a lively Faith in the All-sufficient and Efficacious Merit of Christ my Savior; seal unto me a free, and a full pardon of all my sins, in the Blood of thy dear Son, and say unto my Soul, that thou wilt be my Salvation.

IN assiance of thy merciful Absolution, cause me to confess mine Iniquities, and fill my heart with such a Godly sorrow, as may work my Repentance unto Salvation, never to be repented of; sprinkle me with the Blood of Jesus, and purify me from my daily Pollutions, that being washed, justified, and sanctified, I may be presented unto thee, without spot or wrinkle; let nothing separate me from the love of thee, grant me thy preserving Grace, that dying, thine Angels may convey my Soul into Abraham's Bosom, there to reign with thee, World without end.

Amen.

A Prayer to be said by the Friends of the Sick.

O LORD, our God, and great Creator, thou madest us innocent, but by sin we have brought Death and Destruction upon ourselves, for we have profaned thy Sabbaths, contemned thine Ordinances, cast thy Word behind our backs, lived in all sin and sensuality, spiritual slumber and security, so that thou mightest justly cut us off from the Land of the Living, and give us our Portion with Hypocrites, where there is weeping and gnashing of Teeth.

BUT, O Lord, for thy Mercy sake, and for the Merits of thy Son spare us a little, and give us space of amendment, before we go hence, and be no more seen; correct us in thy Mercy, and not in thy Justice, lest we should be consumed and brought to nothing; whilst we live, teach us to die daily, to mortify the deeds of the Flesh, and to contemn the World, with the Vanities thereof; wean us from inordinate Self-love, that we may not endear ourselves too much to these Transitory lives of ours, but may be ready and willing to depart, when it shall stand with thy good pleasure to call for us; take away from us the bitterness of Death, and sweeten by the Cross of Christ these Waters of Marah, that we may sigh and lament in ourselves, desiring to be delivered from the Bondage of Corruption, into the Glorious Liberty of the Sons of God.

LET our lives, and the life of this thy sick Servant, be now and ever precious in thy sight, look mercifully upon him that is grieved with sickness: Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make him whole, send him therefore help and health from thy holy place, and evermore mightily defend him; let the Enemy have no advantage against him, nor the Wicked approach to hurt him, but be thou present with him, strengthen his Faith, increase his patience under thy Correctinghand, raise him up from his sorrowful Bed, and if thou art pleased longer to exercise him, lend him strength to endure thy Trial.

BUT if thou hast determined to take him hence, Lord, certify unto him how long he hath to live, make him to know his end, and the measure of his days, that by Prayer and Repentance, he may provide wisely for his last end, and be found of thee in peace, and enjoy everlasting happiness; dispose his Meditations aright for Mortality, and at that last hour, make him to deny himself in renouncing his Justification by any inherent worth or righteousness, and in all sorrows and sufferings let thy comforts rejoice his Soul.

TO this end, mortify in him the Corruption of Nature, quicken him with the Soul of new life, and establish him with thy free Spirit; purge his heart from all worldly thoughts, and his mind from carnal desires, motions and affections; wash his Soul and Body with the Blood of Christ, and sanctify him throughout in Spirit, Soul and Body, with the Grace of thy holy Spirit, that departing in the true Faith, not casting away his confidence, nor hope of rejoicing, in full assurance of a blessed Resurrection, he may have boldness in the day of the Lord Jesus, and so pass from Death to Life, and be ever with thee to behold thy Glory; grant this for the sake of thy dear Son, our Lord and Savior.

Amen.

Another Prayer to be used by those that are about the Sick.

O LORD our God, thou art the Judge of all the Earth; we Dust and Ashes, vile and miserable Sinners, do here in all humility cast down ourselves before thee for our Sins, which are the occasion of all the evil of punishment thou▪ inflictest on the Sons and Daughters of Men. Lord hear us, and forgive whatsoever is past, and grant that we may forever hereafter serve and please thee through newness of life, walking before thee in holiness and righteousness all our days; and because the days are evil, give us Grace to redeem the time, that numbering our days aright, we may apply our hearts unto true Wisdom; make us constantly to eschew evil and do good, to seek peace and ensue it.

LOOK with thine Eye of Mercy and Compassion upon this thy Servant, who is grieved with Sickness; sanctify this thy Visitation unto him, that those Graces which thou hast begun to work in him, may be strengthened, increased, and by degrees perfected; restore unto him the voice of joy and health, that the Bones which thou hast broken may rejoice. And seeing we have need of patience, send this thy Servant such a degree of patience and consiency, that he may continue thy Faithful Soldier and Servant unto his lives end; work in him a sense and seeling of sin, and true sorrow for the same, which may cause repentance unto Salvation never to be repented of.

O LORD, if it be not thy good pleasure to raise him up from his Bed of languishing, prepare his heart for Death, and his Soul for Heaven, and wash away his Sins in the Blood of Jesus; wean his affections from the love of this World, and set them on those things which are above, that being absent from the Body, he may be present with thee, O Lord. Repair in this thy Servant thine own Image, and renew it in knowledge, holiness, and righteousness, that thou mayest acknowledge him for thine; raise him up from the Grave unto the Resurrection of Life, and forever satisfy him with thy likeness, and transform him into the same from Glory to Glory.

Amen.

A Prayer to recommend the Soul to God when it is departing the Body.

O MOST Gracious God, we commend into thy holy hands the Soul of this thy Servant, beseeching thee to defend it from all evil, and from thy wrath, which he hath deserved; let thy holy Angels receive this Soul from this ruinous habitation of Clay, and carry it unto the bosom of thy dear Son; O say unto this Soul, this day shalt thou be with me in Paradise, and fear not, for it is my Fathers pleasure to give you a Kingdom.

GIVE unto his decaying Body, a blessed and a glorious Resurrection, to his weary and afflicted, his penitent and redeemed Soul, a portion in the blessed sentence of the right hand amongst the happy Children of thy Father, who shall receive the Kingdom prepared for them from the beginning of the World; let his Soul dwell in heavenly Mansions, be supported with thy hope, comforted with a holy conscience, rejoice in a confirmed pardon, be recreated with the visitation of Angels, and be arrayed in white to follow after the Lamb whither soever he goeth.

A Prayer for a Soul departing.

O LORD, remember the good things which by thy Grace, and by the Inspiration of thy holy Spirit, thy Servant hath performed, and remember not his evil Deeds, nor the frailties of his Youth, which by the weakness of the Flesh, and the temptations of Satan, and the vain contingencies of this World, have afflicted and humbled his poor, but penitent Soul. O God, remember thy only Son did die for these, and thy blessed Spirit occasioned the other; and for whom thou hast given thy Son▪ and to whom thou hast vouchsafed to give thy Spirit, give thy eternal Pardon, and thy everlasting Glories, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

An Act of Resignation when a Friend is deceas'd.

O ETERNAL God, who bringest good out of evil, comfort out of sorrow, and after a gentle visitation dost refresh thy Children, have mercy upon us, and return to us with thy loving kindness, exchanging our present sorrow into the advantages of holiness and blessing. Thy Judgments, O Lord, are unsearchable, and thy ways past finding out, but we will bless thy holy Name at all times, for thou, O Lord, hast given, and hast taken away, blessed be the Name of the Lord.

BE thou now, and forever, what thou hast so graciously promised; a Father of the Fatherless, a Husband to the Widow, and a God of Comfort to them that mourn in secret. Grant that we thy Servants may not weep as them without hope, neither murmur at thy dispensation, nor complain of anything but ourselves, nor desire anything but that thy Will may be done, nor do anything but what is agreeable to thy holy Word and Commandment.

GRANT O Lord, that when thou smitest any of us it may increase thy fear in us, and when thou dost good to any of us in smiting or forbearing, in chastising or Comforting it may increase thy love in us: And let thy holy Spirit so prevail over all our wills and understandings, our Affections, and the outward Man, our interests and our hopes, that we may live in this World pleasing to thee, and may depart out of this World with the peace of a good Conscience, and may attain to a joyful Resurrection in the last day, and to a participation of thy Glory through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

A Meditation after Recovery from Sickness.

O COME hither and behold the Works of the Lord, how wonderful he is in his doings towards the Children of Men: O come hither and hearken all ye that fear God; and I will tell you what he hath done for my Soul: I called unto him with my mouth, and gave him praises with my Tongue: O Lord my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

THOU Lord hast brought my Soul out of Hell: Thou hast kept my Life from them, that go down to the pit: O what great troubles and Adversities hast thou shown me, and yet didst thou turn and refresh me! yea and broughtest me from the deep of the Earth again: Praised be god which  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  not cast out my Prayer, nor  $\bullet\bullet$ ned his Mercy from me.

LORD what is Man that thou hast respect unto him! Or the Son of Man that thou so  $\bullet$ regardest him: The Lord is Righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his Works: The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him; yea all such as call upon him faithfully: He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their Cry and will help them.

SING Praises unto the Lord, O ye Saints of his, and give thanks unto him for a remembrance of his Holiness: for his Wrath endureth but the twinkling of Eye, and in his pleasure is Life: Heaviness may endure for a Night, but joy cometh in the Morning: Praised be the Lord daily, even the God which helpeth us and pouereth his benefits upon us.

HE is our God, even the God of whom cometh Salvation: God is the Lord by whom we escape Death: I will be glad and rejoyce in thy Mercy: For thou hast Considered my trouble, and hast known my Soul in adverbity, thou hast turned my heaviness into joy; thou hast put off my Sackcloth, and girded me with gladness.

PRAISE the Lord, O my Soul: And all that is within me Praise his holy Name: Praise the Lord, O my Soul; and forget not all his benefits, Which forgiveth all thy Sin, and healeth all thine infirmities: Which saveth thy life from destruction and Crowneth thee with Mercy and loving kindness: I shall not die but live, and declare the works of the Lord: The Lord hath chastened me, and corrected me, but he hath not given me over unto Death.

A Thanksgiving after Recovery from Sickness

OMNIPOTENT Lord God the Author of Life, who bringest down to the Grave and raisest up again, I most humbly confess to the Glory of thine infinite Majesty, that if thou hadst not out of thy tender Compassion blessed and sustained me in my sickness, I should have gone down to the Gates of Death; but it was thy goodness, and loving kindness to spare and deliver me from all dangers: Let me forever Praise and glorify thy holy Name for this and all other thy Mercies towards me.

THOU art gracious when thou smitest me, but I cannot express thy infinite sweetness, when thou Relievest my necessity, when thou sustainest my Sorrows, when thou dost deliver me from thy Wrath, when thou hearest my prayers, and when thou pourest thy Benefits upon me: O give unto me thy unworthy Servant a thankful Heart, and obedient and loving Spirit, a carefulness of my Duty, Charity, and Humility, Zeal of thy Glory, and a submission to thy Divine will and Pleasure: that serving thee in all things, I may be conducted at last to thy Heavenly Kingdom.

TEACH me always to remember my latter end, and that this Life is but a shadow, that declineth, and withereth like Grass; But thou O Lord shalt endure forever, for thou art the same, and thy Years shall have no end: Bring me by an unchangeable love and obedience to thee in all the changes and chances of this mortal Life; for his sake who loved me, and gave himself for me, even thy Son, and my alone Savior.

Amen.

A Prayer before a Journey.

O MOST gracious and Merciful Lord God who art a God a far off, as well as nigh at hand, be pleased to send thy holy Angel before me thy Servant, to defend me in this my journey from the heat of the day, and the Cold of the night, from the Arrow that flies at Noon, and the evil Spirits that walk in darkness, from errors and falls, from precipices and fracture of bones, from Robbers, evil intentions, and bad accidents, from violent Weather, and violent Fears, from all impressions of evil Men, and evil Spirits; let this Journey be safe and useful to me thy Servant, Comfortable to my Relations, and holiness to thy great Name.

THE Lord bless me and keep me, the Lord make his Face to shine upon me, and be gracious unto me; keep me from all evil, and lead me into all good by the Conduct of thy good Spirit; let thy providence and love, be my defense and security, thy Grace be my portion, and thy Service my Employment; do thou O Lord, go in and out before me, and keep me in all my ways, and lead me in thy Paths: bring me back again in peace and safety, and prosper all my innocent and holy purposes; and when the few and evil days of my Pilgrimage are ended, do thou of thy infinite Mercy bring me to the Regions of holiness and eternal peace, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

A Thanksgiving after a Journey.

O GOD, the great Creator and preserver of all Men, I give thee humble and hearty thanks for thy great Mercies shown unto me, all the days of my Life; how often O Lord, hast thou turned away thy Face from my sins, and made as if thou perceivest them not? How often mightest thou have withheld thy hand of preservation from me, and yet thy patience hath extended so far towards me, that thou hast suffered no prejudice to befall me? And as I owe thee infinite thanks for thy former preservations, so now I am further obliged to thee, that thou hast at this time not only guided me to the place, whither I designed to go, but hast also brought me back in safety, and in my absence hast preserved all things unto me.

GIVE me thy Grace, O Lord, to be always mindful of these, and all other thy Mercies towards me, and make me truly thankful unto thee for them; and grant that as by this thy Mercy I have well finished my affairs abroad, and am returned safe to this my Temporal habitation; so grant that my Spirit after this Pilgrimage here on Earth, may return to thy Heavenly mansion, and there dwell with thee forever, and that for the sake and merits of Jesus Christ, my Lord and Savior.

Amen.

A Prayer before a Voyage.

OETERNAL God, even the God of our Salvation, the hope of all the ends of the Earth, and of them that remain in the wide Ocean; under the shadow of whose Wings we are always secure, and without whose protection we cannot expect safety; I have been, O Lord, preserved by thee until this moment from many dangers, for which I have not expressed my thankfulness in acknowledging those daily blessings I have received from thee; but O Lord, forget and forgive those manifold sins which I have Committed against thee, and blot them out of thy Book of remembrance.

PURGE me O Lord, I beseech thee from all vile affections, and grant I may bring forth the Fruits of the Spirit; go along with me with thy blessed Spirit in this my Voyage, preserve me from Pirates, Robbers and Enemies, defend me from Rocks, Sands and Shelves, and keep me from Thunder and Lightning, Storms and Tempestuous Weather, or any other danger that may dismay me. To thee, O Lord, I commend my Body and Spirit, to dispose of me according to thy holy Will and Pleasure; if thou art pleased to call for my life upon the surface of the Waters, I know thy Almighty Word can command the Sea to give up her Dead at the last and great audit.

BUT if thou hast determined to bring me safe to my desired Haven, give me thy Grace which is sufficient for me to walk according to thy holy Will in all things; make me to lay hold of eternal Life, which as the Anchor of Hope, is both sure and steadfast; keep me from all temptations Ghostly and Bodily, and from sudden Death, and in thy good time bring me to the Land of the Living, there to reign with thee for evermore.

Amen.

A Thanksgiving after a Voyage.

O IMMORTAL God, I have seen thy Works O Lord, and thy Wonders in the Deep; thou spakest the Word and the stormy Wind arose, which lifted up the Waves thereof, but when we cried unto thee, thou madest the Storm to cease, so that the Waves thereof were still; then did we rejoice because we were at rest, and thou broughtest us safe to that Haven where we would be: O that men would therefore praise thee, O Lord, for thy Goodness, and declare the Wonders thou dost continually for them.

I BLESS thy holy Name, for conducting me through those many dangers which encompassed me, and praise thy Mercy that the Deep hath not swallowed me up, and that I am not gone down into the place of Silence. I also praise thy holy Name, and admire thy loving Kindness towards me, that thou hast not delivered up my Body and Goods as a prey into the hands of unreasonable Men, but hast brought me to my desired Haven, and at last hath returned me back in safety to my Habitation.

O LET me never forget to pay those vows I made to thee, when I was in trouble; but give me an awful sense and apprehension of thy great power, and possess my Soul with a true reverence of thy Divine Majesty; that I may evermore serve thee in holiness and Righteousness all the days of my Life; Endue me with thy holy Spirit that I may become acceptable in thy sight, and may be fitted at length for future Glories this I beg for thy Son Jesus Christ sake, my only Savior.

Amen.

A Prayer in a Storm.

O LORD, our God, thou hast commanded us in the day of Calamity to call upon thy Name, and thou hast promised to hear us; Lord, I fly unto thee, who art a sure refuge, thy Floodgates are opened, and the Floods lift up their lofty waves. But thou O Lord, most high art mightier than the noise of many Waters; yea, than the mighty Waves of the Sea: Thou canst in a moment if it stand with thy Divine will and pleasure, rebuke the Winds and the Sea and this Storm into a Calm

I KNOW I justly deserve, to be cast away and utterly to be rejected by thee; but Lord save us or else we perish, accept of my unfeigned Sorrow for all my sins and transgressions, and endue me with a steadfast resolution to forsake them; be merciful unto us, O God, be merciful unto us, and save us from perishing in these deep Waters; O refresh us with thy Mercy and that soon, lest we go down into the place of silence; O comfort us in this great distress, that though the Sea rage and swell, our hearts may be quiet and still in this time of our disconsolation.

AND as I earnestly desire to be protected from this great Peril and danger which now terrifies us, so I earnestly beseech thee, that thou wilt forever fill my heart with such an awful dread of thy Majesty, that I may fear thy Name and praise thy power in the great Congregation; awake my dull and drowsy Soul, from the sloth of Sin, and renew a right Spirit within me; fill me with the gifts and Graces of thy holy Spirit, that I may live the life of the Righteous, and never forget thy loving kindness; save us now from death I beseech thee, from the merciless Waves who are now ready to swallow us up, and bring us home in safety for thy Son Jesus Christ his sake, our only Lord and Savior,

Amen.

A Thanksgiving after a Storm.

I PRAISE and glorify thy holy Name, O Lord, for all thy mercies and blessings vouchsafed unto me, especially for this thy last great Deliverance, wherein I was encompassed in that wide Ocean, whom thou hast set bounds and limits to; if thou, O Lord hadst not been on my side, the Sea had swallowed me up quick, and I had gone down into the deep of silence; but thou hast been my God and my deliverer, and hast put a new Song into my Mouth, even a Song of Praise, and Thanksgiving unto my God.

I ACKNOWLEDG O Lord, that thou art the God of all the Earth, and of them that remain in the broad Sea; Blessed forever, and magnified be thy Name, that thou hast not cast me out of thy sight, nor turned thy Mercy from me; I have escaped thy raging Sea, and the noise of the proud Waves have done me no harm; if thy Almighty providence had not protected me, the Streams had gone over my Soul: But the stormy wind and Tempest I have narrowly escaped, the storm is ceased, and I am safely delivered.

AND now what shall I render to thee O Lord, for this and all other thy great benefits? I will offer up unto thee, the Sacrifice of thanksgiving, and will pay those vows I so solemnly made unto thee when I was in trouble; I will evermore remember, that my help is in the Lord who made Heaven and Earth, and that thou art that God that can and will deliver me; let this thy mercy and lovingkindness never depart my memory, but let me praise thy goodness and sing of thy power, unto my lives end.

Amen.

A Prayer in time of Thunder and lightning.

O MOST mighty, and terrible Lord God, before whom the Earth shakes and the Heavens drop at thy presence; thou overturnest the mountains by the roots and removest them in thy anger; thou dost great things and thy ways are past finding out; yea thou dost wonders without number: Thy voice O Lord, is very powerful, full of Majesty, that it rends the Air, and casts forth flames of Fire. Thou canst, O Lord, at this time, tear us in pieces, and none can be able to deliver us, for there is none but thee alone that delivers after this sort.

O WHO would not dread thy Allglorious Name, O Lord? Who would not stand in awe of thy Majesty? Who would not fear thy Judgments, when thou shoots forth thy Arrows of Thunder and Lightning? It is of thy mere Mercy, O Lord, that we are not at this time consumed, but that thy tender compassions fail not toward us poor, but miserable Sinners; the blast of the breath of thy Nostrils, can drive us like Chaff before the face of the Wind, and chase us into the bottomless Pit, from whence there is no Redemption.

BUT thine Eye, O Lord, hath spared us, and we are yet alive, O make us living Monuments of thy Mercy, that we may work out our Repentance unto Salvation, and let it be such a Repentance never to be repented of; possess my heart with such a fear and a love of thee, that I may tremble at thy Word, and melt at the sight of thy Judgments; deliver me, I humbly beseech thee, in that great day of thy appearance, and let me not be in the number of Depart ye Cursed, but among those whom thou callest, Come you blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you. This I humbly beg for thy Sons sake, our only Lord and Savior.

Amen.

The Mariners Prayer.

O GOD, the great Creator of Heaven and Earth, thou dost whatsoever thou please in the Sea, and in all deep places; I, the most unworthiest of all thy Servants, am at this time called upon to behold thy Wonders in the Deep, and to perform my Duty in great Waters. Guide me, I beseech thee, in all times and in all places; be thou our skilful Pilot to steer us, and protect us from all Dangers, and rebuke the Winds and the Seas when they molest us; preserve our Vessel from being rent by the loud cracks of Thunder, or from being burnt by Lightning, or any other accident; keep us and save us from tempestuous Weather, from bitter Frosts, Hail, Ice, Snow, or Whirlwinds, and from Captivity and Slavery.

TEACH me, O God, to remember thee my Creator in the days of my Youth, to continually think upon thee, and to praise thy Name for all thy Mercies; bless all our Friends, I beseech thee, that are on Land, and let their Prayers for us be acceptable in thy sight, and grant that our next meeting together may be for the better, and not for the worse, even to the praising and magnifying of thy holy Name, and the Salvation of our own Souls, in the great day of the Lord Jesus, to whom with thee, and thy blessed Spirit, be ascribed all Honor, Power and Glory, Adoration and Subjection, now and for evermore.

Amen.

The Soldiers Prayer.

O MOST Omnipotent Lord God, Heaven is thy Throne, and Earth is thy Footstool, and the whole Host of Heaven continually pays obedience to thee. O Lord, I present myself before thee, acknowledging my own vileness, but thy infinite goodness, my own weakness, but thy infinite Power and Majesty. O thou that teaches our hands to War, and our fingers to Fight, endue me with a courage and resolution to run through those difficulties I may meet withal, and when any engagement presents itself for the public good of my King and Country, then, O my God, animate me with that vigor and Christian fortitude, that I may overcome all those which oppose thee, and thy people.

PRESERVE me, I beseech thee, and bless me in all my Enterprises; save me from Death, and cover my head in our day of Battle; prosper our Arms with good success, make our Religion and Country, like the House of David, grow stronger and stronger, but let the Enemy, like the House of Saul, grow weaker and weaker; let no covetous desires, greediness of spoil, ambition, vain-glory, hatred, malice, uncharitableness, or anything that exalts itself against thee and thy Kingdom; ever take hold of me, keep me from all Atheism, Infidelity, Blasphemy and Profaneness; from all Rioting, Chambering and Wantonness; grant that I may do no violence to any man, nor accuse no man falsely, but be content with my Wages, that when ever Death approaches, I may joyfully, giving up the Ghost, pronounce this saying, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of Righteousness, which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, shall give unto all those which love and fear him, and put their trust in his mercy.

Amen.

The Magistrates Prayer.

O GOD, thou Supreme Judge of the World, thou didst ordain Man through thy Wisdom, and gavest him dominion over thy Creatures, and authority to govern the World, according to equity and righteousness, and to execute Judgment with all uprightness; thou hast appointed me a Minister, O Lord, and a Judge of thy Sons and Daughters, but none can discharge so great a trust, without thy divine power and assistance.

TO thee therefore, O Lord, do I humbly address myself; thou art the Fountain from whence every good and perfect gift cometh, and none can rule without thy Wisdom guides them. Endue me, O Lord, with that wisdom which is from above, which is first pure, and then peaceable; inspire me with an understanding Spirit, that I may discern between Good and Evil, between Light and Darkness, that I may be always ready to pronounce a just sentence in all Causes; let the Scales of Justice be ever even, and let my Eyes be blind, and my Ears deaf, to all gifts or popular applause amongst men; suffer me not to bear thy Sword in vain, but fill me with that Zeal and Courage, that I may be ready to punish Wickedness and Vice, but encourage true Religion and Virtue, so that at the last, when thou shalt be pleased to call me hence, I may give up my accounts with joy, and not with grief, and receive those blessed Words which thou hast pronounced, of Well done thou good and faithful Servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord.

Amen.

A Prayer of a Debtor in Prison.

O GOD, the helper of the poor and needy, and all those who are in adversity; look down, I beseech thee, with an Eye of Pity and Compassion, upon thy afflicted Servant, the place I am in is miserable disconsolate and comfortless, but withdraw not the light of thy countenance from me. O Lord, I confess I have abused all those mercies I have enjoyed, I have not employed that precious time thou hast given me to improve, but on the contrary, I have been negligent and guilty of all profuseness; I have been worse than an Infidel, in not making that provision for my Family which I was obliged in Justice to perform, neither have I paid those due Debts which I became bound to do, therefore as I plunged into this depth of misery.

Divers ways I am apprehensive, I have highly offended thy Divine Majesty, both in thought, word, and deed, for which I earnestly implore thy gracious pardon and forgiveness; I acknowledge thy Divine Goodness and Mercy, that thou hast not snatched me hence, and sent me into everlasting burnings amongst the damned, but thou hast preserved me unto this moment, that I might live and praise thy great Name. My Body, O Lord, is now confined, but I beseech thee enlarge my Spirit, whereby I may offer up the Sacrifice of Prayer and Thanksgiving with all cheerfulness, for all thy innumerable benefits, which I have from time to time received from thee; dispose the hearts of my Creditors to a free compliance, and enable me I beseech thee to make them restitution, that when Ever I shall be released, I may walk more Circumspectly, and redeem that time I have so vainly lost: Bless all those whose Charity have extended to my relief, or have sought to procure my Liberty, and bring us all at last to thy Heavenly Kingdom.

Amen.

A Prayer of a Malefactor in Prison.

O MOST merciful God, thou art Holy in all thy ways, and righteous in all thy Works; vouchsafe thy Grace, O Lord, to a vile wretch and incorrigible sinner; I implore O Lord, that Mercy which formerly I have abused, I sigh and groan now under the Weight of my sins, and they are become a burden too heavy for me to bear; my presumptuous and wicked proceedings stick like so many arrows within me, and when with an awakened Conscience I remember them, I am ready to sink down into the Pit of perdition, and utterly despair of any Mercy or Compassion.

HOW brutish have I been, in hating instruction, and all manner of reproof. I have not obeyed the voice of my Teachers, neither did I incline my Ear to them that admonished me, but like the D•af adder I stopped my Ears and adhered not to wise Council; thy most holy Laws I have broken, thy Sabbath I have profaned by excess of drunkenness and all manner of riot and debauchery, which have been as forerunners of this crime, for which I stand now committed, and the hand of justice hath overtaken me.

But O Lord, I beseech thee, have Mercy upon me even for his sake who redeemed me and all Mankind; accept of his atonement for my sins, and save my Soul for thy Mercies sake; wash away all my sins in his most precious Blood, and blot out all my offenses out of thy remembrance; O show me some taste of thy tender Mercy, whereby the fear of death may be abated, give me some assurance of a hope in thee that when my day of dissolution comes, my unworthy Soul may be received into thy Heavenly Kingdom.

Amen.

A Submission to the sentence of Death.

O ETERNAL God, in all humility of Soul and Body, I cast myself at the Feet of thy Divine Majesty; thou art the Sovereign Judge of the all the World, and hast fully pronounced against me and all sinners, that dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return, in obedience to thy Divine Justice, I wholly resign all the faculties of my Soul and Body to thy sentence pronounced against me, acknowledging it most just and due to me for those infinite Sins I have committed against thee.

O Let it never slip from my Memory, that bloody and shameful Death of thy Son Jesus Christ, who after he had suffered in his Soul unspeakable sorrows, and in his Agony and bloody Sweat offered up himself a Sacrifice for mine, and the sins of the whole World: Never let me never repine at what the hand of Justice hath decreed to my Body, but let me by a sincere repentance, seek thy face to preserve my Soul; the Death I am to suffer is painful and even a shameful death; but thou, O my God canst make my passage Easie.

THOU O my God didst remember the Thief upon the Cross, O remember me I beseech thee in my last Hour, and say unto my Soul, this day shalt thou be with me in Paradise; keep my heart and mouth from pronouncing words which may be offensive to Christian Ears, but let me never be ashamed to confess thy holy Name, and to continue thy Soldier and Servant, manfully fighting under thy Banner, unto my lives end. Strengthen me, O Lord, in this great conflict, and show me the light of thy Countenance for evermore.

Amen.

A Preparation for Death.

MOST gracious God, the Fountain of all goodness, I bless and magnify thy holy Name, for all thy mercies extended to me and all Mankind; I bless thee for my being and well-being, from the hour of my Conception, to the day of my Nativity, from my Minority to my riper Years, and age of full strength, and even to this present moment; I praise thy holy Name for all the means of Grace; and for the hope of Glory, for my Creation, Redemption▪ Preservation, and all the blessings of this life.

I MAGNIFIE thee for all thy mercies, in forgiving my infinite Transgressions; for all thy patience and longsuffering towards me, I have, like the Prodigal Son, absented myself from thee, and at my return thou hast received me graciously. Lord, I humbly beseech thee, raise me up from the death of Sin unto the life of Righteousness, that being made a partaker of the death of Christ, and a follower of his holy life, I may be made a partaker of his Spirit, and of his Promises.

O LET me never charge thee, O my God, foolishly, nor offend thee by my impatience, and uneasy Spirit, nor weaken the hands and hearts of those that charitably minister to my Necessities, but let me pass through this vale of tears, and the valley of the shadow of death, with peace and safety, with a meek spirit, and a sense of thy divine mercies; grant this, eternal God, for the merits of thy only Son, my ever blessed Lord and Savior.

Amen.

A Prayer for Pardon of Sin.

O MOST merciful God, who wouldest not the death of a Sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live, have mercy upon me, and heal my Soul, for I have sinned against thee, I have committed Iniquity with greediness, and have added unto sin daily and hourly, I have made resolutions and purposes of amendment, but in a moment I have started aside like a broken Bow, and have returned to my former custom, like the Dog to his vomit, and the Swine to her wallowing in the mire.

BUT thou art a God, gracious and merciful, pardoning Iniquity, Transgression and Sin, and there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared; therefore to thee, O God, I come like an ungracious Child, but to a gracious Father; I come in all humility of Soul and Body, and appeal from thy Throne of Justice, unto thy Mercy-seat. Mercy good Lord, I beg at thy fatherly hands, for I acknowledge with grief of heart, and sorrow of spirit, that I have infinitely sinned against Heaven, and against thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy Son.

GIVE unto me, O Lord, a new heart, and a right understanding, that I may perceive the evil of my ways, and repent of all my transgressions: Lord, where Iniquity did abound, there let thy Grace much more abound; hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine Iniquities, and receive me graciously; and that for his sake who died for Sin, and knew no Sin; even that Immaculate Lamb, thy dear Son Jesus Christ the Righteous, my only Savior and Redeemer.

Amen.

ADDITIONAL DEVOTIONS.

A Prayer for Christmass- Day.

O BLESSED Lord, who as upon this day took our Nature upon thee, and wast born of a pure Virgin, keep me from defiling myself with sinful pollutions, or abasing, or enthralling it to Satan; let thy Spirit quicken me, thy Flesh nourish me, thy Wisdom guide me, thy Grace sanctify me: Let thy holy Ghost of whom thou wast conceived, beget thee in me, by the Immortal Seed of thy Word; let my Faith conceive thee, my Profession bring thee forth, my Love embrace thee, and Devotion entertain, and continually keep thee with me, unthy second coming.

Amen.

A Prayer for New Years Day.

O Lord, who this day wast Circumcised and Bleddest for my sins, have pity and compassion, who with weeping Eyes and a bleeding heart come unto thee; beseeching thee, that those drops of blood which fell from thee this day, may satisfy for the sin of my unworthy Birth; and as thou hast begun a new Year, begin in me a new reformation, make me, I beseech thee, a clean heart, and renew a right Spirit within me; let me now cast off the old Man, and put on the new; and from this day to the end of my life, walk in newness of life, that I may become a fit guest to be admitted into the new Heaven, where dwelleth Righteousness, and to be entertained at thy Table, and drink new Wine with thee, in thy Heavenly Kingdom, for evermore.

A Prayer for Twelwe Day.

O GOD, thou light of all the World, who guidedst the Heathen Sages by a Star, to seek after thee, give me Grace to hearken to the more sure Word of Prophecy in thy holy Scripture, till the day dawn, and the day-star arise in my heart, the Star guided them, till they approached thy presence, so, O Lord, let the light of Faith guide me in all the Paths of this Life, even till I come to behold thee, not in a poor Stable littered with straw and dung, but in a celestial Palace founded, upon Pearls, and built with Saphyrs; not receiving a present of Gold which fades away, but wearing a never fading Crown of Glory; not having a quantity of Frankingense or Myrh in thy hand, but a golden Censor full of Sweet odors, which are the praises of thy Saints and Angels; amongst which I beseech thee offer up the Prayers of me a Sinner, that I may become a Saint thy Heavenly Kingdom.

Amen.

A Prayer for Ash-wednesday.

O ETERNAL God, who dist fast forty days in the wilderness, accept of my humiliation these forty days; and grant that I may not only fast from accustomed Meats, but that all my senses may be restrained from their usual affections of this World, let no object delight me till I behold my sins removed like a mist, and the light of thy Countenance shine upon me: Let no sound or voice delight my Ear, till I hear thee by thy Spirit, speak peace to my Conscience, and say unto my Soul, I am thy Salvation: Let no other pleasures take hold of me, till with the lower Herbs of Sorrow and anguish I have Eaten the Christian passover, the flesh of thee, that Immaculate lamb, slain from the beginning of the World: Hear me, O belssed redeemer, and as thou wrotest in dust when thou tookest the woman in a adultery: So I beseech thee write my sins in dust and bury them all in the ashes of oblivion.

Amen.

A Prayer on good Friday.

O MOST Merciful and Gracious Lord God, who by thy obedience unto Death, even the Death of the Cross, didst become the Sacrifice of the whole universe, the magnificent example of patience, the Lord of Life, the good shepherd laying down thy Life for thy sheep, and the only Mediator between God and Man; let thy bleeding wounds heal, thy precious blood cleanse, thy shameful death make me to live, and thy holy Spirit make me to work righteousness all my days; that I may by thy aid, and example obey my Heavenly father with all my powers and faculties, reason and affections, with my Soul and Body, time and Estate in prosperity, and in adversity; that I may bear my Cross patiently, do thy work cheerfully, and be ready to benefit mankind, with great Charity and industry, that being a follower of thy Life, and a partaker of thy death, I may receive a part in the Resurrection of the just in thy inheritance for evermore.

Amen.

A Prayer on Easter Day.

O MOST glorious redeemer, thou didst pass from a painful life to an Ignominious death, and from the bitterness of it to the darkness of the Grave, and by thy Divine power didst raise thyself from thence to Life; I give thee thanks for thy infinite love to me and all Mankind; I acknowledge thee to be my Lord, and confess thee to be my God, I adore thy Majesty and rejoice in thy Mercies; I humbly pray thee, to enable me with thy Spirit to believe all thy Doctrines, and obey all thy Commandments, that after a holy and religious life spent in doing honor to thy holy Name, I may be a partaker of thy holy Resurrection, passing from death to life, from the darkness of the Grave, to the light of Heaven, from an imperfect duty to the perfection of holiness in the fruition of the joys of God in thy Heavenly Kingdom.

Amen.

A Prayer upon Ascension Day.

O BLESSED Jesus, thou didst ascend to thy holy Father and didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers; thou hast espoused thy Church unto thyself with the Everlasting circles of thy providence, with thy Love and with thy Care with thy Word and with thy Spirit, thy promises and thy holy intercession; thou hadst a feeling of my infirmities, and art my Merciful high Priest making intercession for me forever; O be thou pleased to represent all my wants, and supply them, and excuse all my infirmities pity all my Calamities, pardon my Sins and send down thy holy Spirit of Grace into my heart, that though I wander here upon Earth, yet my Conversation may be in Heaven, where let my inheritance be forever.

Amen.

A Prayer on Whitsunday.

O GOD, the Father of all Spirits, who didst send thy holy Spirit upon thy Church in the day of pentecost, and hast promised that he shall abide with thy Church forever, let thy holy Spirit lead me into all truth, defend me from all Sins, enrich me with his gifts, refresh me with his Comforts, rule in my heart forever, Conduct me with his truth and lead me in the way Everlasting, that living by thy Spirit and walking in him, I may by him be Sealed up to the day of my redemption; O let thy Spirit witness to my Spirit, that I am thy Child, and make me to be so forever, through Jesus Christ my Redeemer, who liveth and reigneth with thee in the unity of the same Spirit, one God, world without end.

Amen.

A Prayer upon Trinity Sunday.

O HOLY, Blessed and glorious Trinity, the Angels are amazed in the beauties of that glorious presence, how then can I poor sinful wretch praise thee either according to my Duty, or thy Glories; I confess and glory in thy omnipotency, thy omniscience, thy truth, and thy Mercy, O let me also receive thy blessings and gracious influences, that I may adore thee with all my power forever, and serve thee with my best and earliest industry; that being here wholly inebriated with Love, and employed in thy service and the Duty of a holy obedience, I may to all eternity rejoice in the beholding of those Glories which are above all capacities, even those Glories which stream forth from the Throne of the Eternal God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost to whom be Glory and Dominion, Honor and adoration, world without end.

Amen.

A Prayer to be used upon any Apostles Day.

O ALMIGHTY God, who has built thy Holy Church upon the Foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone, I bless and magnify thy holy Name, for thy great Graces thou gavest to thy Apostles, Prophets, and Martyrs, in the days of their Flesh, and this day I have thy Servant [Here name the Apostle] in remembrance, praising thee for the benefit the Church hath received by his Ministry and Example; and I beseech thee give me thy Grace, that obeying thy Doctrine which he taught, and following his Example as he followed Christ, I may also with safety and holiness pass through this Valley of Tears, that serving thee in my Generation, advancing thy Honor, and obeying thy Laws, I may in the Society and Communion of Saints and Angels, Sing eternal Hallelujahs to the honor of thy Mercy, and of thy Majest<sup>e</sup>, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

A Prayer for the Church.

O LORD God Almighty, I beseech thee keep thy holy Church, in Peace, Unity, and Safety, preserve it against all Storms, Temptations and Enemies, that she offering to thy Glory the never-ceasing Sacrifice of Praise and Yhanksgiving, may advance the honor of her Lord, and be partaker of his Glory, through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior.

Amen.

A Prayer for the King and Queen.

ALMIGHTY God, by whom Kings Reign, and Princes decree Justice, I humbly beseech thee to save, and with the choicest of thy Benedictions, bless thy Servants, and our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary; preserve their Royal Persons in Health and Honor, their power in Wealth and Dignity, their Dominions in Peace and Plenty; the Churches under their Protections, in Piety, Knowledge, and a strict and holy Religion. Let not the Wicked approach to hurt them, nor any Weapon that is formed against them prosper, but keep them perpetually in thy fear and favor, and Crown them at last with Glory and Immortality.

Amen.

A Prayer for the Royal Family.

BLESS, O Lord, I beseech thee, Katherine the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Princess▪ Ann of Denmark, with the rest of the Royal Family; keep them in thy fear, and protect them with thy favor, and after this life is ended, Crown them with everlasting happiness in the World to come.

Amen.

A Prayer for the Clergy.

O ALMIGHTY God, protect thy Stars in thy right hand, the mo•• Reverend the Archbishops, the right Reverend the Bishops, with all other Inferior Priests and Deacons; grant that all Congregations committed to their charge, may edify by their Doctrine, and live Godly and Peaceable lives under them, to the saving of their Souls in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Amen.

A Prayer for the High Court of Parliament.

BLESS, O Lord, I beseech thee, the great Council of the Nation, the Lord's and Commons assembled in Parliament, grant that all their Consultations may tend to thy Glory, the good of thy Church, and the Safety, Honor, and Welfare, of our Sovereign Lord and Lady, and their Kingdoms; let Justice run down like a stream, and Righteousness like the mighty Waters, that there may be no leading into Captivity, nor no complaining in our Streets, but that Mercy and Truth may meet together, and Righteousness and Peace may kiss each other; grant this, O Lord, for thy Sons sake, and my alone Redeemer.

Amen.

A Prayer for the Navy and Army.

O ETERNAL God, thou art the Lord of Hosts, and the strength of all Nations is from thee, and no Victory can wait upon the justest Designs, upon the wisest Councils, upon the strongest Armies, if thou teach not their hands to War, and their fingers to Fight. Lend us, O Lord, thy assistance, by Land and Sea, be with our Armies, and the Armies of our Allies and Associates by Land, and be with our Navy at Sea; be not from the one, nor from the other, until thou hast brought them back with Honor, Victory, or a settled Peace: Let not that proud Disturber, and Destroyer of Mankind, any longer Insult over thy People, but turn his Sword into his own Bosom. O Lord, thy Servants are unfeignedly sorrowful for those Sins they have committed against thy Divine Majesty, O do thou pardon us, and receive us graciously, and then we may trust in thy goodness, that thou wilt pour down all thy Blessings upon this, and all other designs and actions of this State, undertaken for thy Glory, the Honor of our most gracious Sovereign Lord and Lady, the Peace and Welfare of the whole Church, and Their Majesty's three Kingdoms; grant this, O Lord, for Jesus Christ his sake, our only Mediator and Advocate.

Amen.

A. Prayer for God's People in General.

MOST gracious God, I humbly beseech thee to bless all thy People, wheresoever dispersed, or howsoever distressed, over the face of the whole Earth, more especially in these Nations of England, Scotland, and Ireland; give us all humble and obedient hearts to thee our God, Loyal hearts to our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, and charitable thoughts one towards another; Convert and bring home thine own People the Jews, and bring in the fullness of the Gentiles; save and have Mercy upon all Asiaticks and Africans, and all those that never heard of a Crucified Savior; this I humbly beg for thy Sons sake, my alone Savior.

Amen.

A Thanksgiving for our deliverance from the Spanish Invasion.

WE laud and magnify thy holy Name for this thy wonderful deliverance from Roman Slavery, and Popish Usurpation, which would have destroyed the Renowned and Glorious Queen Elizabeth and her Kingdom; their Gallies and Ships came to assault us, being full of pride, and nominating themselves Invincible; but thou, O Lord, our strength, didst awake us out of sleep, and like a Giant refreshed with Wine, and smote our Enemies in the hinder parts, and didst put them all to Confusion. Grant, O Lord, that we may never want thankful hearts to praise thee, for this and all other thy Mercies, even to our lives end.

Amen.

A Thanksgiving for our great deliverance from the Powder Treason, and from Popery and Slavery, and Arbitrary Power.

O MOST mighty God, whose Allseeing Eye of Providence didst discover to us that Train which Popish malice had laid to destroy the King, his Nobles and Commons, then assembled in Parliament; they had contrived by their barbarous Invention, to have blown up the Bodies of that great and wise Council, but thou, O God, didst defeat their Bloody Enterprise, whereof we rejoice.

WE likewise praise and extol thy great Name, for this second and never to be forgotten Deliverance; O let after Ages, and the Children that are yet unborn, when they come to understand this thy wonderful Mercy, let it never slip from their memory. Thou, O Lord, didst raise up thy Servant, our Sovereign Lord, King William, who like Moses, stood in the Gap between us and Roman Slavery, which like a Torrent was pouring upon us; O let us never forget thy double Mercy extended towards us this day, thou hast plucked us as a Firebrand out of the burning, and hast restored to us those good and wholesome Laws, and Liberties, which our Ancestors have enjoyed; inspire our hearts that we may extol thy Name, O Lord, for these great Mercies and Deliverances, and let all the people with one voice say,

Amen.

A Thanksgiving for the happy success of Their Majesty's Arms in reducing of Ireland, and for His Majesty's safe return to England.

O GOD, the great Preserver of the Universe, I offer up unto thee all Praise and Thanksgiving, for putting an end to those troubles and disorders which were in Their Majesty's Kingdom of Ireland; thou hast done great things for us, O Lord, whereof I rejoice; thy Servant, and our Dear and Dread Sovereign King William, did expose his Person to the danger of the Enemy, but thou didst protect him from their Malice, gavest Success to his Arms and Royal Undertaking, and didst cover his Head in the day of Battle, and at last, thou hast brought him safe home with Joy and Victory. Prosper, O Lord, I beseech thee, both Their Majesty's with long Life and Happiness, and grant that all their Subjects may be furnished with Loyal and Obedient Hearts towards them, and Love and Charity one towards another; give Peace in our time, O Lord, and put an end to all differences amongst us, for thy Sons sake, our only Lord and Savior.

Amen.

A Prayer for Charity.

GRANT, O Lord I beseech thee, that I may abound in Charity, yielding up myself first to thy service, and then according to thy blessed will to the service and relief of my poor Brethren; let me ever remember, that thou, O Lord, madest thyself poor, that I might be made rich; and he that Soweth sparingly, shall also reap sparingly, but he that Soweth liberally, shall also reap liberally; for thou lovest a cheerful giver: Make me to abound, O Lord, with thy Grace that I may be plentiful in every good word and work; and never let me hide my Face from the poor and needy: Thou, O Lord givest seed to the Sower, and Bread to the Eater, increase my wealth and augment the revenue of my Righteousness, whereby I may be enriched in all frankness of liberality.

Amen.

A Prayer to renounce the World and affect Spiritual things.

O GOD the Father, who raised from the dead, our Lord Jesus Christ, who offered up himself a Sacrifice for the sins of the whole World; to the end he might withdraw our affections from Temporal, and fix them upon that which is Eternal; give us hearts to obey thy truth, and infuse into us thy Spirit, which may produce thy virtues in us: And because we are thy Children, send the Spirit of thy Son into our hearts whereby we may cry Abba Father, that' being thy Children, we may be heirs through Christ, and walk according to the Spirit, not fulfilling the Lusts of the flesh, knowing that what a Man Soweth, that shall he reap, for he that Soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap Corruption, but he that Soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life Everlasting.

LET us glory in nothing; save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world may be drucified unto us, and we unto the World; that in him we may become new Creatures, not growing weary of well-doing, knowing that we shall reap in due season, if we faint not: Wherefore while we have time, let us do good to all Men, but especially unto the Household of Faith, and all they that shall walk according to this rule, peace be upon them, and upon the Israel of God.

A Conclusive Prayer.

O ALMIGHTY God, who hast promised to hear the Petitions of them that ask in thy Sons Name, I beseech thee mercifully to incline thine Ears unto me, who have now made my Prayers and Supplication unto thee, and grant that those things which I have faithfully asked according to thy Will, may be effectually obtained, to the relief of my Necessity, and to the setting forth of thy Glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

The Blessing.

THE Peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep my heart and mind in the knowledge and love of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord; and the blessing of God Almighty the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, with the Virtue of Christ's blessed Cross, Passion, Resurrection and Ascension, be with me now, at the hour of Death, and in the Day of Judgment.

Amen.

GRACES.

A Grace before Meat.

O GOD, who art the giver of every good and perfect Gift, sanctify we beseech thee, these thy Creatures now prepared for us, make them wholesome for our Bodies, and our Souls and Bodies serviceable unto thee for them, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

Or this.

MOST merciful Father, which openest thy hand, and fillest all things with Plenteousness, we pray thee sanctify these thy good Creatures unto us, that we may eat to preserve life, and living serve thee our God, through thine only Son, our Savior Jesus Christ.

Amen.

Or this.

O LORD our God, by whose Providence it is that we live, move, and have our Being, send thy Blessing upon us and our Provision, and grant that whether we Eat, or Drink, or whatsoever we do else, we may do all to the Glory of thy Name, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

After Meat.

THE Lord's most holy Name be now and ever blessed and praised for all his Mercies, and for his blessings at this time bestowed upon us. Lord, as thou hast fed our Bodies with corporal Food, so feed our Souls likewise with spiritual Food unto life Eternal. Save thine Universal Church, these Realms, the King, the Queen, and all the Royal Family, and grant us thy Grace, Mercy, and Peace, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

Or this.

THE God of all Grace and Goodness, who at this time hath fed and plenteously refreshed us, his most holy Name be blessed and praised, from this time forth, and for evermore. God save his Universal Church, &c.

Or this.

WE laud and praise thy Name, O Lord, for all thy blessings and favors, and for feeding us so plentifully at this time, desiring thee of thy Grace, that our thankfulness may not be in Word and in Tongue, but expressed by our careful study to glorify thee our God, in all our Words and Works, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Save thy Universal Church, &c.

P-IA-1. Looking unto Jesus a view of the everlasting gospel, or, the souls eying of Jesus as carrying on the great work of man's salvation from first to last - Ambrose, Isaac, 1604-1664.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS.

A VIEW OF THE Everlasting Gospel: OR, THE SOULS EYING OF JESUS.

As carrying on the great Work of Mans Salvation from First to Last.

By ISAAC AMBROSE, Minister of the GOSPEL.

Isaiah 45.22. Look unto me, and be ye Saved all the Ends of the Earth.

LONDON, Printed for Richard Chiswel, Benj. Tooke, and Thomas Sawbridge, 1680.

To the Right Honorable WILLIAM Earl of BEDFORD, Lord RUSSEL, Baron of THORNEHAUGH.

Right Honorable,

ONce I made bold to prefix an Epistle to Your Honor, before my Book entitled Ultima, since which time, You have continued with increase Your wonted favors; As the Sun that rejoiceth to run his race, and is unwearied after his many revolutions; so Year after Year, have You indefatigably expressed Your great Bounty, whereby both myself and family have been exceedingly refreshed. As I cannot but in way of thankfulness acknowledge thus much; So I shall be a sincere Remembrancer both of your Honor, and Your nearest Relations at the Throne of Grace.

My Lord, I have now composed this Work, containing a necessary practice and high privilege of every Christian; it is by way of supplement to the other duties set down in my Book called Media, but because of my large handling it, I reserved it for a tract by itself. Indeed of all other duties, I prefer it as the chief, and I exceedingly wonder that before this time, it hath not been undertaken by some abler hand. Christians ordinarily go to Prayer, Sacraments, Hearing, Reading, and Meditation of the Word; and sometimes (though more seldom) they set on the exercise of other Duties, as self-trial, self-denial, the improving of experiences, the clearing of evidences, extemporary and deliberate meditation, &c. but in the mean time how is the main, the prime employment, even the duty of duties, of Looking unto Jesus, wholly neglected? If many, or most have been ignorant of it hitherto, I think it is high time, to discover it to the sleepy world; and it may be when day is clear, they will walk in the light, and bless God for finding out a way, wherein they may more immediately have commerce with Jesus Christ. I could have wished that others more able had appeared in this service, in a particular handling of this excellent subject, I find it in print wisht for by a godly Brother, where he complains that Christ's love had been so little studied. Men have been very swift in searching after other truths, but slow in searching after this, An ample exact discovery of this love of Christ, I say of this love (in carrying on our souls salvation from first to last) may well be set down amongst the desiderata, the desirables of Divines, it having been so little handled (unless in some parts or pieces) by any: Surely it is very sad to think, that the knowledge of this love of Christ (in a continued series) being of such necessary and high concernment hath been so little inquired into. O what a gallant Gospel-design were it for someone who is acquainted with the Spirit in a large measure, to go over the whole History of the Gospel (of the everlasting Gospel of Jesus) and to observe the glorious shinings of the love of Christ to Believers in all! it would be precious if some would take it in hand, and perfect it to the purpose, but it is sad to think it hath been neglected so long. As the Lord hath enabled, I have adventured; and if for my rashness in not waiting any longer, to see if any Star of a greater magnitude would have appeared, I must be censured, I fly to your Honor for Patronage. Nor only for Patronage, but I humbly beg of You, and Yours, to peruse and practice this slender Work; who can tell but some of the golden Oile of Grace may come out of Jesus Christ the true Olive-tree, even through these Pipes? and if so, your own experiences will be satisfactory answers to all other censures. Sure I am in this exercise (however the directions may be weak) you will find the advantage of lying at the well-head, and so you may drink more sweetly than others that make use only of the streams. That you (my noble Lord) and your virtuous Lady, with your hopeful Issue, may receive spiritual good by this Treatise, and all other helps which God's good providence, may put into your hands. Is the hearty prayer, My Lord,

Of your Honors thankful, faithful, though very unworthy, servant, ISAAC AMBROSE.

TO THE READER.

AMongst all the duties I formerly mentioned, I omitted one that now I look upon as chief and choice of all the rest: This is the duty I call Looking unto Jesus, and if I must discover the occasion of my falling on it, I shall do it truly and plainly, and in the simplicity of the Gospel, as thus. In the Spring 1653. I was visited with a sore sickness, and as the Lord began to restore my health, it came into my thoughts what my Jesus had done for my soul, and what he was doing, and what he would do for it, till he saved it to the uttermost. In my conceptions of these things I could find no beginning of his actings, but in that eternity before the world was made; nor could I find any end of his actings, but in that eternity after the world should be unmade; only betwixt these two extremities I apprehended various transactions of Jesus Christ, both past, and present, and to come. In the multitude of these thoughts Within me, my soul exceedingly delighted itself, and that delight stirring up in me other affections (for one affection cannot be alone) I began to consider of those texts in Scripture, which seemed at first to impose the working of my affections on so blessed an Object, as a Gospel-duty: then I resolved, if the Lord Jesus would but restore my health, and prolong my life, I would endeavor to discover more of this Gospel-duty, than ever yet I knew: and that my pains therein might not hinder my other necessary labors, my purpose was to fall on this subject in my ordinary preaching, wherein I might have occasion both to search into Scriptures, several Authors, and my own heart. In process of time I began this work, begging of God that he would help me to finish, as he inclined me to begin, and that all might tend to his glory, and the Churches good. In the progress of my labors I found a world of spiritual comfort, both in respect of the object that I handled, Jesus Christ, and in respect of the act, wherein consisted my duty to him, in Looking unto Jesus. 1. For the Object, it was the very subject whereon more especially I was bound to preach; Christ in you the hope of glory (said Paul to his Colosians) and he immediately adds, whom we preach, Col. 1.27, 28. and unto me, who am less than the least of all the Saints, is this grace given; what grace? that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, Eph. 3.8. Ministers ought in duty more abundantly to preach Jesus Christ. Doctor Sibbs is clear, that the special office of the ministry of Christ is to lay open Christ, to hold up the tapistry, & to unfold the hidden mysteries of Christ: and therefore he exhorts that we should labor to be always speaking somewhat about Christ, or tending that way: when we speak of the law, let it drive us to Christ: when of moral duties, let them teach us to walk worthy of Christ: Christ, or some what tending to Christ, should be our theme, and mark to aim at. Sibbs Cantic. p. 428. And I may feelingly say, it is the sweetest subject that ever was Preached on; is it not as an ointment poured forth, whose smell is so fragrant, and whose savor is so sweet, that therefore all the Virgins love him? is it not comprehensive of all glory, beauty, excellency, whether of things in Heaven, or of things on Earth? is it not a mystery sweet and deep? surely Volumes are written of Jesus Christ, there is line upon line, Sermon upon Sermon, Book upon Book, and Tome upon Tome, and yet such is the mystery (as one speaks plainly) that we are all but as yet at the first side of the single Catechism of Jesus Christ: yea, Solomon was but at What is his Name? and I fear many of us know neither Name nor thing. It is a worthy study to make further and further discoveries of this blessed Mystery, and it were to be wished, that all the Ministers of Christ would spend themselves in the spelling, and reading, and understanding of it. Look as some great point doth require the abilities of many Scholars (and all little enough when joined together) to make a good discovery thereof; such is this high point, this holy, sacred, glorious Mystery, worthy of the pains of all the Learned; and if they would all bring their notes together, and add all their studies together (which I have in some measure endeavored in the following Treatise) they should find still but a little of this Mystery known, in comparison of what remains and is unknown; only this they should know, Quod difficile intellectu, dilectabile inquisitu (as Bernad said) That which is hard to understand, is delightful to be dived into; and so I found it. 2. For the act of looking unto Jesus, as it is comprehensive of knowing, desiring, hoping, believing, loving, so also of joying; how then should I but be filled with joy unspeakable and glorious, whilst I was studying, writing, and especially acting my Soul in the exercise of this Looking? If there be any Duty on Earth resembling the Duty of the Saints in Heaven, I dare say, this is it. Mr. Rutherford in his Epistle to Christ dying, writeth thus, An act of living in Christ, and on Christ, in the acts of seeing, enjoying, embracing, loving, resting on him, is that noonday Divinity, and Theology of Beatifical Vision: there is a general assembly of immediately illuminated Divines round about the Throne, who study, lecture, preach, praise Christ night and day: Oh what rays, what irradiations and dartings of intellectual fruition, beholding, enjoying, living in him, and fervor of loving, come from that face, that God-visage of the Lord God Almighty, and of the Lamb that is in the midst of them? And, Oh what reflections, and reachings forth of intellectual Vision, embracing, loving, wondering, are returning back to him again in a circle of Glory? Now if this be the Saints Duty, who are perfect in glory; do not we imitate them, and feel something of Heaven in our imitation, in our looking also unto Jesus? I write what in some measure I have felt; and of which I hope to feel yet more; and therefore whoever thou art that readest, I beseech thee, come, warm thy heart at this blessed fire! O come, and smell the precious ointments of Jesus Christ! O come, and sit down under his shadow with great delight! Oh that all men (especially into whose hands this Book shall come) would presently fall upon the practice of this Gospel-art of looking unto Jesus! if herein they find nothing of Heaven, my skill will fail me; only let them pray, that as they look to him, so virtue may go out of him, and fill their souls.

Reader, One thing more I have to say to thee; if thou wouldest know how to carry on this Duty constantly, as thou dost thy morning, and thy evening prayer; it were not amiss if every day, either morning, or evening, thou wouldest take some part of it at one time, and some part of it at another time, at least for some space of time together. I know some, that in a constant daily course carry on in secret those two necessary duties of meditation and prayer; what the subject matter of their meditation is, I am not very certain; only our experience can tell us, that be it heaven, or be it hell; be it sin, or be it grace, or be it what it will; if we be in exercise of the self-same subject either constantly, or frequently, we are apt to grow remiss, or cold, or formal; and the reason is, one thing tires quickly, unless that one be all: now that is Christ, for He is All, Col. 3.11. if then but once a day thou wouldest make this Jesus Christ thy subject to know, consider, desire, hope, believe, joy in, call upon, and conform unto, in his several respects of plotting, promising, performing thy redemption in his Birth, Life, Death, Resurrection, Ascension, Session, Intercession, and coming again; and that one of these particulars might be thy one days exercise, and so every day thou wouldest proceed from first to last, in thus looking unto Jesus, I suppose thou wouldest never tire thyself; and why so? O there is variety in this matter to be looked unto, and there is variety in the manner of looking on it. Ex. gr. one day thou mightest act thy knowing of Jesus in carrying on the great work of thy salvation in his Eternity; the next day thou mightest consider Jesus in that respect; and the next day thou mightest desire after Jesus in that respect; and the next day thou mightest hope in Jesus in that respect; and so on, till thou comest to the last day of the work; which (besides the object handled at large in every period, in these very actings upon the object) would in all amount to the number of eighty one days. Now would not this variety delight? It is the observation of Mr. Lockyer, on Col. 1.16. that an holy soul cannot tire itself in the contemplation of Jesus: how much less can it tire itself in Looking unto Jesus, which is far more Comprehensive than contemplating of Jesus? come, try this Duty, and be constant in it at least for eighty one days in one year, & so for eighty one days in every year during thy life; and then for thy meditations on any other subject I shall not take thee quite off, but leave the remainder of the year, which is above three parts more, to thy own choice. If thou art so resolved, I shall say no more, but the Lord be with thee, and if sooner or later thou findest any benefit by this work, give God the glory, and remember him, in thy prayers, who hath took this pains for Christ's honor, and thy souls good. So rests

Thy Servant in Christ Jesus, I. A.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS: The first Book.

HEBR. 12.2.

Looking unto Jesus, the beginner, and finisher of our Faith.

CHAP. I. The Proem, Division, and opening of the Words.

THE most excellent subject to discourse, or write of, is Jesus Christ. Augustine having read Cicero's works, commended them for their eloquence, but he passed this sentence upon them, They are not sweet, because the name of Jesus is not in them. And Bernard's saying is near the same; if thou writest, it doth not relish with me, unless I read Jesus there; if thou disputest, or conferrest, it doth not relish well with me, unless Jesus sound there. Indeed all we say is but unsavory, if it be not seasoned with this salt. I determined not to know anything among you (saith Paul) save Jesus Christ, and him Crucified: he resolved with himself before he Preached among the Corinthians, that this should be the only point of knowledge that he would profess himself to have skill in, and that in the course of his Ministry he would labor to bring them to: this he made the breadth, & length, & depth, & height of his knowledge; yea doubtless (saith he) and I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: In this knowledge of Christ there is an excellency above all other knowledge in the World; there is nothing more pleasing & comfortable, more animating & enlivening, more ravishing & soul-contenting; only Christ is the sum & center of all divine revealed truths; we can preach nothing else as the object of our faith, as the necessary element of our souls salvation, which doth not some way or other either meet in Christ, or refer to Christ; only Christ is the whole of man's happiness; the Sun to enlighten him, the Physician to heal him, the Wall of Fire to defend him, the Friend to comfort him, the Pearl to enrich him, the Ark to support him, the Rock to sustain him under the heaviest pressures; As an hiding place from the Wind, and a covert from the Tempest, as Rivers of Waters in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great Rock in a weary Land. Only Christ is that Ladder betwixt Earth and Heaven, the Mediator betwixt God and Man, a Mystery which the Angels of Heaven desire to pry, and peep, and look into. Here's a blessed subject indeed, who would not be glad to pry into it, to be acquainted with it? This is life eternal to know God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent: Come then, let us look on this Sun of righteousness; we cannot receive harm, but good by such a look; indeed by looking long on the natural Sun we may have our eyes dazzled, and our faces blackned; but by looking unto Jesus Christ, we shall have our eyes clearer, and our faces fairer; if the light of the eye rejoice the heart, how much more when we have such a blessed object to look upon? As Christ is more excellent than all the world, so this sight transcends all other sights; it is the Epitome of a Christians happiness, the quintessence of evangelical Duties, Looking unto Jesus.

In the Text we have the act and Object; the act in the Original is very emphatical, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; the English doth not fully express it; it signifies an averting, or drawing off the eye from one object to another; there are two expressions, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; the one signifies a turning of the eye from all other objects; the other a fast fixing of the eye upon such an object, and only upon such. So it is both a looking off, and a looking on. On what? That is the object, a looking unto Jesus; a Title that denotes his mercy and bounty, as Christ denotes his office and function. I shall not be so curious as to enquire why Jesus, and not Christ is nominated; I suppose the person is aimed at which implies them both; only this may be observed, that Jesus is the purest Gospel Name of all other names; Jesus was not the dialect of the Old Testament; the first place that ever we read of this title as given to Christ, it is in Matth. 1.21. Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins. Some observe that this Name Jesus was given him twice; once till death, Matth. 1.21. and afterwards forever, Phil. 2.10. the first was a note of his entering into Covenant with God to fulfill the Law for us, & to die for our sins, the second was a note of so meritorious a person, who for his humility was more exalted than any person ever hath been, or shall be. First, Jesus was the humble name of his deserving grace: now Jesus is the exalted name of his transcendent glory: at first the Jews did Crucify Jesus, and his name; & the Apostle did then distrust whether Jesus was the true Jesus; but now God hath raised him from the dead, & hath highly exalted him, & given him a name above every name, that at the Name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. My meaning is not to insist on this Name in contradistinction to any other names of Christ; he is often called Christ, and Lord, and Mediator, and Son of God, and Emmanuel; Why Jesus is all these; Jesus is Christ, as he is the anointed of God; and Jesus is Lord, as he hath dominion over all the world; and Jesus is Mediator, as he is the reconciler of God & man; and Jesus is the Son of God, as he was eternally begotten before all worlds; and Jesus is Emmanuel, as he was incarnate, and so God with us. Only because Jesus signify Savior, and this name was given him upon that very account, For he shall save his people from their sins; I shall make this my design to look at Jesus more especially, as carrying on the great work of our salvation from first to the last. This indeed is the glad-tidings, the Gospel, the Gospel-privilege, and our Gospel-Duty, Looking unto Jesus.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. The Duty of looking off all other things, confirmed, and cleared.

[Doctrine. 1] BUT first we must look off all other things; the note is this: We must take off our mind from everything, w<sup>ch</sup> might divert us in our Christian Race from looking unto Jesus. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the first word, or first piece of a word in my Text speaks to us thus, hands off, or eyes off from anything that stands in the way of Jesus Christ. I remember 'twas writ over Plato's door, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, there's none may come hither that is not a Geometer; but on the door of my Text is written clean contrary, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, No earthly minded man must enter here: not anything in the world, be it never so excellent, if it stand in the way of Jesus Christ, is to be named the same day; we must not give a look or squint at anything that may hinder this fair and lovely sight of Jesus.

Thus was the Lord's charge to Lot, look not behind thee; he was so far to renounce and detest the lewdness of Sodom; as that he must not vouchsafe a look towards it?

At that day shall a man look towards his maker, and his eyes shall have respect to the holy one of Israel; and he shall not look to the Altars, the work of his hands. This was the fruit of God's chastisement on the Elect Israel, that he should not give a look to the Altars, lest they diverted, or drew his eyes from off his Maker.

We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, saith Paul. A Christians aim is beyond visible things, O when a soul comes to know what an eternal God is, and what an eternal Jesus is, and what an eternal Crown is; when it knows that great design of Christ to save poor souls, and to communicate himself eternally to such poor creatures, this takes off the edge of its desires as to visible temporal things, what are they in comparison?

But what things are they we must look off in this respect? I answer,—1. Good things. 2. Evil things. [Question. 1]

1. Good things. The Apostle tells us of a cloud of witnesses in the former verse, which no question in their season we are to Look unto. But when this second object comes in sight, he scatters the cloud quite, and sets up Jesus himself; now the Apostle willet us 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to turn our eyes from them, and to turn them hither to Jesus Christ q. d. If you will indeed see a sight once for all, look to him: the Saints, though they be guides to us, yet are they but followers to him; he is the arch guide, the leader of them, & of us all, look on him. There is a time when James may say, take my brethren the Prophets who have spoken in the Name of the Lord for an example; but when Jesus comes forth, that said, I have given you an example, an example above all examples, then be silent O all flesh before the Lord. Let all Saints and Seraphims then cover their faces with their wings, that we may look on Jesus, and let all other sights go.

2. Evil things, 1. In general, 2. In special.

1. In general, we must look off all things that are on this side Jesus Christ, and so, so much the rather, if they be evil things; in a word, we must look off all self; whether it be sinful self, or natural self, or religious self; in this case we must draw our eyes off all these things.

2. In special, we must look off all that is in the world; and that the Apostle compriseth under three heads, the lusts of the eyes, the lusts of the flesh, & the pride of life; (1.) Pleasures, Profits, and Honors.

1. we must look off this world in respect of its sinful pleasures; Jude tells us, such as are sensual have not the spirit: we cannot fixedly look on pleasures, and look on Jesus at once. Job tells us, that they that take up the Timbril, and Harp, and rejoice at the sound of the Organ, that spend their days in mirth, are the same that say unto God, depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways; what is the Almighty that we should serve him? and what profit should we have if we pray unto him? We have a lively example of this in Augustine's conversion; he would indeed have had Christ, and his pleasures too; but when he saw it would not be, Oh what conflicts were within him. In his Orchard (as he stories it in his book of confessions) all his pleasures past represented themselves before his eyes, saying, What wilt thou depart from us forever? and shall we be no more with thee forever? O Lord (saith Augustine, writing this confession) turn away my mind from thinking that which they objected to my soul! What filth? What shameful pleasures did they lay before my eyes? At length after this combat, a shower of tears came from him, and casting himself on the ground under a Fig-tree, he cries it out, O Lord, how long, how long shall I say, tomorrow, tomorrow? Why not today Lord, why not today? why should there not be an end of my filthy life even at this hour? Immediately after this he heard a voice, as if it had been a boy or a girl singing by, take up, and read; take up, and read; and thereupon opening his Bible that lay by him at hand, he read in silence the first Chapter that offered itself, wherein was written, Let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering or wantonness, not in strife and envying; but put ye on the Lord Jesus, and make not provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof. Further then this sentence I would not read (saith Augustine) neither indeed was it needful; for presently, as if light had been poured into my heart, all the darkness of my doubtfulness fled away. His eye was now taken off his pleasures, and forever after it was set on Jesus.

2. We must look off this world in respect of its sinful profits: a look on this keeps off our looking unto Jesus. Whosoever loveth the world, the love of the Father is not in him; just so much as the world prevails in us, so much is God's love abated both in us, and towards us; ye adulterers, and adulteresses (saith James) know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Covetousness in Christians is spiritual adultery; when we have enough in God and Christ, and yet we desire to make up our happiness in the creature, this is plain whoring. Now there are degrees in this spiritual whoredom: as, —

1. The minding of this world; ye know there may be adultery in affection, when the body is not defiled; unclean glances are a degree of lust: so the children of God may have some worldly glances, stragling thoughts, when the temptation is strong, the world may be greatned in their esteem and imagination.

2. The setting of the heart upon the world; this is an higher degree of this spiritual adultery: our hearts are due and proper to Christ: now to set them on the world, which should be chaste and loyal to Jesus Christ, what adultery is this? Ye cannot serve God and Mammon: that woman that is not contented with one husband, must needs be an harlot.

3. The preferring of the world before Christ himself. This is the height of covetousness, and the height of this adultery; what, to make the members of Christ the members of an harlot? Why worldlings! those admiring thoughts are Christ's, those pains are Christ's, that love is Christ's, that time, that care, that earnestness is Christ's, they are all Christ's; and will you give that which is Christ's unto the world? and prefer the world before Christ with his own? What, live as professed prostitutes, that prefer everyone before their husbands? how will this expose you to the scorn of men and Angels? at the last day thy will come pointing, and say, This is the man that made not God his strength, but trusted in the abundance of his riches; this is the Gadaren that loved his swine more than Christ Jesus. Love not the world, said John. Christ is never precious in man's apprehension, so long as the world seems glorious to him. As we begin to relish sweetness in Christ, so the world begins to be bitter to us: the more sweetness we taste in the one, the more bitterness we taste in the other.

3. We must look off the world in respect of its sinful honors: what is this honor but a certain inordinate desire to be well thought of, or well spoken of, to be praised, or glorified of men? as if a man should run up and down streets after a feather flying in the air, and tossed hither and thither with the gusts and blasts of infinite men's mouths; it is a question whether ever he get it; but if he do, it is but a feather; such is this pride of life, honor, vain-glory, it is hard to obtain it, but if obtained, it is but the breath of a few men's mouths, that alter upon every light occasion; but that which is worst of all, it hinders our sight of Jesus Christ, not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; worldly honor keeps many back from Christ; and therefore Moses when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaohs daughter, — esteeming the reproaches of Christ greater riches than all the Treasures of Egypt. If the blind Man in the way to Jerico had depended on the breath, or liking, or approbation of the multitude, he had never received the benefit of his sight; for they (saith the text) which went before, rebuked him that he should hold his peace; they dissuaded him from running & crying so vehemently after Christ; experience tells us, how these things pull and draw us off from Jesus Christ, the lusts of the eyes, the lusts of the flesh, and pride of life.

[Question. 2] But why must we look off everything that diverts our looking unto Jesus?

1. Because we cannot look fixedly on Christ, and such things together, and at once; the eye cannot look upwards & downwards, at once in a direct line; we cannot seriously mind heaven & earth in one thought; no man can serve two masters, saith Christ, especially such as jar, and who have contrary employments, as Christ and Mammon have.
2. Because whiles we look on these things, we cannot see the beauty that is in Christ: suppose a squint look on Christ, whilst we have a direct look on other things; alas, Christ will be of no esteem that while; this was the voice of sinners concerning Christ, he hath no form, nor comeliness; and when we see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. Indeed beauty is the attractive of the soul, the soul must see a beauty in that which it lets out itself to in desiring; but our wishing looks on other things, makes Christ but mean and contemptible in our eyes.
3. Because all other things, in comparison of Christ, are not worthy a look; they are but as vile things, as under-things, as poor, & low, and mean, and base things, in comparison of Christ: I count all things but loss (saith Paul) for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord.—I count them but dung that I may win Christ. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, some translate it chaff, others dogs-meat, others excrements, dung; all agree, it is such a thing as men usually cast away from them with some indignation.
4. Because it is according to the very law of marriage; therefore shall a man forsake father, and mother, and cleave to his wife; the Lord Christ marries himself to the souls of his Saints. I will betroth thee unto me forever; I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness, and in mercies: and for this cause the soul must forsake all, and cleave unto Christ; as married wives use to do, we must leave all for our husband the Lord Jesus; Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear, forget also thy own people, and thy fathers House.
5. Because Christ is a jealous Christ; now jealousy is a passion in the soul, that will not endure any sharing in the object beloved; the woman that hath a jealous husband, must leave all her old companions: if she cast any amorous looks or glances after them, the husband will be jealous, and Jealousy is cruel as the Grave. Christians, our God is a jealous God, our Christ is a jealous Christ; He cannot endure, that we should look on any other things, so as to lust after them.
6. Because all other things can never satisfy the eye; all things are full of labor (saith Solomon) man cannot utter it, the eye is not satisfied with seeing; it is but wearied with looking on divers objects, & yet still desires new ones: but once admit it to behold that glorious sight of Christ, and then it rests fully satisfied. Hence it is that the Daughters of Zion are called to come forth; Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, and behold King Solomon with the Crown wherewith his Mother hath crowned him in the day of his espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart. Go forth O ye daughters of Zion, lay aside all private and earthly affections, and look upon this glory of Christ. As the daughters of Jerusalem sitting or remaining in their chambers, closets, houses, could not behold the glory of King Solomon passing by, & therefore they were willed to come forth of their doors: even so, if we will behold the great King, Jesus Christ, in his most excellent glory (a sight able to satisfy the Eye, & to ravish the Heart) we must come out of our Doors, we must come out of ourselves, otherwise we cannot see his Glory; we are in ourselves shut up in a dark dungeon, and therefore we are called upon to come forth into the clear light of faith, and with the Eyes of Faith to behold in daily meditation, the Glory of Christ Jesus.

SECT. II. An Exhortation to look off all other things.

ONE word of Exhortation. Christians! I beseech you look off all other things, especially all evil things. I know I am pleading with you for an hard thing; I had need of the Rhetoric of an Angel, to persuade you to turn your Eyes from off these things; nay, if I had, all were too little, it is God only must persuade Japheth to dwell in the tents of Shem; and yet let me offer a few considerations, venture at a persuading of you, and leave the issue with God.

1. Consider, that all other evil things are in God's account as very nothing; verily, every man at his best estate is altogether vanity; not only man, but every man; nor every man in his worst condition, but every man at his best estate; nor every man: man at his best estate is little worth, but every man at his best estate is vanity, emptiness, nothing; it may be so in part, nay, but in every part, he is wholly, totally, altogether vanity; would any man think, that a great, rich, honorable Man, whom we look upon with such high admiring thoughts, should be laid thus low in God's esteem? O wonder, wonder! and yet 'tis no such wonder, but one day you shall find the experience of this truth yourselves. Rich men have slept their sleeps, and none of the men of might have found their hands. or as others render it, they have found nothing in their hands; that is, rich men have passed over this life as men do pass over a sleep, imagining themselves to have golden mountains and rocks of diamond; but when they awake at the day of death, they find themselves to have nothing. Why Christian, wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? 1. Observe that riches are not; they are nothing, those things that make men great in the eyes of the world, are nothing in the eyes of God. 2. Observe that God would not have us so much as set our eyes upon them, they are not objects worth the looking on. 3. Observe with what indignation he speaks against those that will set their eyes upon these vanities, Wilt thou set thine eyes upon a thing which is not? q. d. what a vain, unreasonable, sottish, senseless thing is this?

2. Consider that all such things (if they are anything) they are but trifles, deceits, thorns, miseries, uncertain things: this is an ordinary theme; it is every man's object, & every man's subject, & a very easy thing it is, to declaim up the vanity, misery, uncertainty of the creatures; Ay but do you make it the matter of your meditation, & be you serious in it, think of it deeply, and desire God to be in your thoughts! Oh what work will it then make in your breasts? O how would it wean your loves and desires off all these things! Christians! consider all these adjuncts of all sublunary things; when the creatures tempt you, be not enticed by the beauty of them, so as to forget their vanity; say, Here is a flower, fair, but fading; here is a glass that's bright, but very brittle.

3. Consider the difference of these objects, Christ, and all other things; as thus, all other things are vanities, but Christ is a real, solid substantial, excellent, glorious thing; all other things are temporary, fading things, but Christ is an enduring substance, the same yesterday, and today, and forever, which is, and which was, and which is to come: all other things are thorns, vexation of spirit, but Christ is full of joy and comfort, a most ravishing object, all composed of loves, or altogether lovely. O who would make it his business to fill his coffers with pibbles, when he may have pearls, or gold, or silver, or precious things? what, must you look off your sins? why see before you the graces of the Spirit of Christ? must you look off your idel sinful company? see before you the fellowship of the Father, and the Son, the Lord Jesus Christ; must you look off your pomp and glory? see before you the privilege of adoption, you shall be called the sons and daughters of God, heirs and co-heirs with Christ; must you look off your worldly riches? see before you the riches of the graces of Christ: must you look off sinful pleasures? see before you fullness of joy, at Christ's right hand are pleasures evermore: must you look off your own righteousness? see before you the righteousness of Christ Jesus. O what a vast difference is there betwixt these objects, Christ, and all other things?

4. Consider that Christ looked off heaven and heavenly things for you, how much more should you look off the earth and earthly things, the world and worldly things for him? Christ left the glory, the company, the pleasures of Paradise for you, and he made himself of no reputation, he nothing'd himself (as it were) for you; you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that you through his poverty might be made rich. O let that melting love win you to him, and wean you off all other things!

5. Consider that the rational soul of man is oft too high a birth to spend its strength upon other things? the soul of man is of the same nature with Angels; it is a kind of divine spark; now if a man have a golden mill, he would not use it to grind dirt, straws, and rotten sticks in; the soul, the mind, the thinking faculty of man is too high to be exercised in the things of this earth; the soul is of a most excellent capacious nature, it is fit to converse not only with Angels, but with the eternal God himself, with Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; it is of a transcendent being; put all the world into the balance with it, and it is nothing in comparison: the soul of the meanest gally-slave is more precious than heaven and earth, than Sun, and Moon, and stars, and all the host of heaven; now if a man's soul be of such an high-born nature, if the Lord hath put such a spirit into the bosom of man, for him to bestow the strength of it upon low, base, mean, and earthly things, Oh what an evil is this?

9. Consider how short is the time that you have here in this world: this is the argument of the Apostle, because the time is short, therefore let us use the world as if we used it not, therefore let our hearts be taken off these things; yet a few days, and you shall be here no more; time passeth on, many hundred diseases are ready to assault you; you that are reading, hearing, talking or walking, you must very shortly be carried on men's shoulders, & laid in the dust, and there left to the worms in darkness & corruption; you are almost there already; it is but a few days, or months, or years, and what is that when once thy are gone and past? and Oh what is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and then lose his soul?

7. Consider the great account that you are to give of earthly things: it is the sin of most of the sons of men to look on creature-comforts, but they consider not the account thy must give for them. Oh here's a prevailing motive to take off your eyes! Consider the last accounts; what if you were now to die, and to go the way of all flesh, and then to make up your reckoning, what good would it do you to remember all those contentments & pleasures you once enjoyed upon the earth? If the factor, after many years spent in foreign countries, at last returns home with this bill of accounts, thus much for singing, so much for dancing, this for courting, that for feasting, who would not blame him for so fond a reckoning? oh it will be a sad reckoning if the bill come in, that you have spent most of your time in looking and gazing upon earthly things.

SECT. III. Directions how to look off all other things.

1. Study every day more & more the vanity of the creature: Read over the Book of Ecclesiastes well; it is enough, through the assistance of Christ, to teach you that lesson. A serious and fruitful meditation of that word, Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity, what work might it make in your hearts; men usually look on these things through some false glass, or at a distance, which makes them so admire them; but if they could see them truly in themselves, oh how uncomely would they be? or if they could see them as compared to Christ, oh how vain would they be? honors and greatness in that respect would appear as bubbles, pleasures and delights in that respect would appear as shadows.

2. Converse but a little with any evil thing on this side Christ; Have as little to do with the world, the sinful pleasures, profits, riches, manners of it, as possibly you can; the lesser the better; things of this world have a glutinous quality, if you let the heart lie any while amongst them, it will cleave unto them, and if it once cleave to them, there will be no way but either Repentance or Hell fire must part them.

3. Be more and better acquainted with Jesus Christ; get nearer to him, be more in communion with him, get more tastes of Christ and heaven, and earth will relish the worse for them. Oh when I look on Christ, and consider, that he that was the Lord of heaven and earth, put himself into so poor and low a condition, merely for the redeeming of his Elect, how should this but deaden my heart to the world? I account all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, and account them but dung that I may win Christ. If Christ be in view, all the world then is but dung, and dross, and loss in comparison; the Glory of Christ will darken all other things in the world.

4. Set before you the examples of such Saints, who accounted themselves pilgrims and strangers upon earth. The Apostle gives you a Catalogue of such, who confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, and see how they are used, they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword, they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented; who were these? they were they of whom the world was not worthy. Oh when you read, or hear how joyfully these servants of the most high went through their wilderness condition, methinks this should take off your hearts from earthly things.

5. Go in your meditations to heaven, and keep there a while; the mind that is in heaven cannot attend these earthly things; would a man leave his plough & harvest in the field to run with children a hunting after butter-flies? no more will a soul that is taking a survey of heaven and heavenly things, fix his eyes on such poor things below: non vacat exquis, &c. is the character of a truly prudent man; the children of that Kingdom above have no while for trifles, and especially when they are employed in the affairs of the Kingdom. Oh when a Christian hath but a glimpse of eternity, and then looks down on the world again, how doth he contemn and vilipend these things? How doth he say of laughter, thou art mad, and of mirth, what is this thou doest? whilst the Saints are tasting heaven, they feel such sweet that they care not for other things: Christians! how would this meditation wean your hearts? and make you laugh at the fooleries of the world? and scorn to be cheated with such childish toys? If the devil had set upon Peter in the mount, when he saw Christ in his transfiguration, and Moses and Elias talking with him, would he so easily have been drawn to deny his Lord? what, with all that glory in his eye? so if the devil should set upon a believing soul and persuade his heart to profits, or pleasures, or honors of the world, when he is taken up in the Mount with Christ, what would such a soul say, Get thee behind me Satan, wouldest thou persuade me from hence with many trifling toys? wouldest thou have me sell these joys for nothing? is there any honor or delight like this? or can that be profit, which loseth me this? Some such answer would the soul return. Oh if we could keep the taste of our souls continually delighted with the sweetness of Heaven; as a man would spit out aloes after honey, so should we spit out all these baits of the world with disdain.

6. Cry mightily unto God, that he would take off your hearts and eyes, turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity, prays David; either God must do it, or you will be wearied in the multitude of your endeavors; but if the Lord draw off the eye, it will be drawn indeed. Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness, prays David again; if the heart bend down-wards, then go to God to erect it, and to incline it heaven-wards; if it be after covetousness, then cry to God, and say, Lord, not after covetousness, but after thy testimonies incline my heart.

I have hitherto stood only at the door of the Text to call you in; if now you will enter, and be intent and fix your eyes, I will show you a blessed, a most glorious sight. But first I must explain the act, you must look.] Secondly, the object, you must look on Jesus.]

CHAP. III.

SECT. I. An Explanation of the Act and Object.

1. For the act, you must look.] Looking is either ocular, or mental.

First, for ocular vision, there may be some use of that in heaven, for there we shall look on Jesus; with these eyes shall I behold him, saith Job; & we shall see him as he is, saith the Apostle; now we see him, as in a glass, but then we shall see him face to face. But till then we must walk by faith, and not by sight.

Secondly, for mental vision, or the inward eye, that is it that will take up our discourse, and that is it which the Apostle speaks of in his prayers for the Ephesians, that the eyes of their understanding may be opened, that they may know, &c. Now the excellency of this mental sight is far above the ocular sight; for there are more excellent things to be seen by the eye of the mind, than by the eye of the body; we only see a piece of the creation by the eye of the body, but the mind reacheth everything that is in it, yea the mind reacheth to him that made it; God is invisible, & yet this eye sees God; it is said of Moses, that he saw him that is invisible. 2. It is the sight of the mind that gives light and vigor to the sight of the eye, take away the inward light, and the light of the external sense is but as darkness and death. 3. It is the sight of the mind that looks into the worth, use, &c. propriety of anything presented; the eye can see a thing, but not the worth of it; a beast looks on gold as well as a man, but the sight and knowledge of the worth of it is by the internal light of the mind, so the eye can see a thing but not the use of it; a child looks on a tool in the hand of a workman, but the sight and knowledge of the use of it, is only by a man of reason that hath internal light to judge of it: and so the eye can see a thing, but not the propriety of it; a beast looks on his pasture, but he likes it not because it is his, but because it is a pasture, and well furnished. Now we know that the worth, and use, and propriety of a thing, are the very cream of the things themselves, and this the eye of the mind conveys, and not the eyes of the body. It is said of Joseph, that he saw his brethren, and knew them, but they knew not him: this was the reason why Joseph was so exceedingly taken at the sight of his Brethren, that his bowels wrought with joy, and a kind of compassion towards them, but they were before him as common strangers, though they saw Joseph their brother a Prince, yet they were taken no more with the sight of him than of any other man, because they knew him not.

Again, this mental looking is either notional and theoretical; or practical and experimental; the first we call barely the look of our minds; it is an enlightening of our understandings with some measure of speculative sight in spiritual and heavenly mysteries: the second we call the look of our minds and hearts, whereby we not only see spiritual things, but we are affected with them; we desire, love, believe, joy, and embrace them. To this purpose is that rule, that words of knowledge do sometimes signify the affections in the heart, and the effects thereof in our lives. And this was the look which Paul longed for, that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection; (i.e.) that he might have experience of that power, that it might so communicate itself unto him, as to work upon him to all the ends of it. And this was the look that Bernard preferred above all looks. In reading of books (saith he) let us not so much look for science, as savoriness of truth upon our hearts. This I pray (said the Apostle) that your love may abound yet more and more, in knowledge, and in all judgment; (i.e.) in knowledge and feeling. And certainly this feeling, this experimental Looking on Jesus, is that my Text aims at; it is not a swimming knowledge of Christ, but an hearty feeling of Christ's inward workings; it is not heady notions of Christ, but hearty motions towards Christ, that are implied in this inward looking.

2. For the Object, you must look on Jesus.] It is the blessed'st Object that the eye of the mind can possibly fix upon; of all Objects under Heaven, Jesus hath the preeminence in perfection, and he should have the preeminence in our Meditation. It is he that will make us most happy when we possess him, and we cannot but be joyful to look upon him, especially when looking is a degree of possessing. — Jesus, for the name signifies Savior; it is an Hebrew name; the Greeks borrowed it from the Hebrews, the Latins from the Greeks, and all other Languages from the Latins: It is used five hundred times in Paul's Epistles, saith Genebrard: it comes from the Hebrew word Jehoshua, or Joshua, which in the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah (written after the Babylonian captivity) is Jeshua, and so is our Savior's Name always written in the Syriac translation of the New Testament. This name Jesus was given to Christ the Son of God, by his Father, and brought from Heaven by an Angel, first to Mary, and then to Joseph; and on the day when he was circumcised (as the manner was) this Name was given him by his Parents, as it was commanded from the Lord, by the Angel Gabriel. Not to stand on the Name, for the matter it includes both his office, and his natures; he is the alone Savior of man, for there is none other name under Heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved, and he is a perfect and an absolute Savior; he is able to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. I will not deny, but that the work of salvation is common to all the three persons of the Trinity; it is a known rule, all outward actions are equally common to the three persons; for as they are all one in Nature and Will, so must they be also one in Operation; the Father saveth, the Son saveth, and the holy Ghost saveth; yet we must distinguish them in the manner of saving; the Father saveth by the Son, the Son saveth by paying the ransom and price of our salvation, the holy Ghost saveth by a particular applying of that ransom unto men: Now whereas the Son pays the price of our redemption, and not the Father, nor the holy Ghost, therefore in this special respect he is called our Savior, our Jesus, and none but he.

This object, though contained in a word, is very comprehensive; herein is set forth to our view, the offices of Christ, the two Natures of Christ, the qualities of Christ, the excellencies of Christ: O what variety of sweet matter is in Jesus? he hath in him all the powders of the merchants; an holy soul cannot tire itself in viewing Jesus; we know one thing tyres quickly, unless that one be all: which so is Christ, and none else, he is all, and in all, all belonging to being; and all belonging to well-being; in things below Jesus, some have this excellency, and some have that, but none have all, and this withers contemplation at the root; contemplation is soul recreation, and recreation is kept up by variety; but, O what variety is in Jesus? variety of time, He is Alpha and Omega; variety of beauty, he is white and ruddy: variety of quality, he is a Lion and a Lamb, a servant and a Son; variety of the excellency in the world, he is Man, and God. O where shall we begin in this view of Jesus? Who shall declare his Generation? or who shall count and reckon his Age? All the Evangelists exhibit unto us the Savior, but everyone of them in his particular method; Mark describes not at all the genealogy of Jesus, but begins his history at his Baptism; Matthew searcheth out his original from Abraham; Luke follows it backwards as far as Adam; John passeth further upwards, even to the Eternal Generation of this Word that was made flesh: so they lead us to Jesus, mounting up four several steps; in the one we see him only among the men of his own time; in the second he is seen in the Tent of Abraham; in the third he is yet higher, to wit in Adam; and finally, having traversed all ages, through so many generations, we come to contemplate him in the beginning, in the bosom of the Father, in that eternity in which he was with God before all worlds: And there let us begin, still Looking unto Jesus, as he carries on the great work of our salvation from first to last, from everlasting to everlasting.

SECT. II. The main Doctrine, and confirmation of it.

BUT for the foundation of our building take this Note. —

Inward experimental looking unto Jesus, such as stirs up affections in the heart, [Doctrine. 2] and the effects thereof in our life, it is an Ordinance of Christ; a choice, an high Gospel-ordinance.

Or thus,

Inward experimental knowing, considering, desiring, hoping, believing, loving, joying, calling on Jesus, and conforming to Jesus, it is a complicate, fouled, compounded Ordinance of Jesus Christ.

I need not much to explain the Point, you see here is an Ordinance, or a Gospel-duty held forth; many other Duties we have elsewhere described, but this we have kept for this place; and the rather for that this is a choice Duty, a compounded Duty, an high Gospel-ordinance. No question but Watchfulness, Self-trial, Self-denial, Experiences, Evidences, Meditation, Life of Faith, &c. do well in their place and order; yet as oars in a boat, (though it be carried with the tide) may help it to go faster; it is Jesus lifted up, (as Moses lifted up the Serpent) which strikes more soundly into the beholder, than any other way. Looking unto Jesus, is that great Ordinance appointed by God for our most especial good. How many souls have busied themselves in the use of other means, and though in them Christ hath communicated some virtue to them, yet because they did not trade more with him, they had little in comparison? such a one as deals immediately with Christ will do more in a day, than another in a year, and therefore I call it a choice, a complete, a complicate, an high Gospel-Ordinance. Now what this Ordinance is, the Text tells you, it is a Looking unto Jesus.

1. Jesus is the Object; and Jesus as Jesus, as he is our Savior, as he hath negotiated, or shall yet negotiate in the great business of our salvation. 2. Looking unto, is the act; but how? it is such a Look as includes all these acts, knowing, considering, desiring, hoping, believing, loving, joying, enjoying of Jesus, and conforming to Jesus. It is such a look as stirs up affections in the heart, and the effects thereof in our life; it is such a look as leaves a quickening and enlivening upon the spirit; it is such a look as works us into a warm affection, raised resolution, an holy and upright conversation. Briefly, it is an inward, experimental Looking unto Jesus.

For confirmation of the point; this was the Lord's charge to the Gentiles of old, Look unto me, and be ye saved all the ends of the Earth.— And I said, behold me, behold me, unto a Nation that was not called by my Name. And according to this command was their practice; Mine eyes are ever towards the Lord, saith David, and they looked unto him and were lightened, and their faces were not ashamed.— Thus in the Gospel, after this command, Looking unto Jesus, it follows, Consider him that hath endured such contradiction of sinners against himself. And according to this command is the practice of Gospel-believers, We all with open face beholding as in a glass the Glory of the Lord, are changed into the same Image from Glory to Glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. Instead of the veil of Mosaical figures, God hath now given to his Church the clear glass of the Gospel; and hence all believers under the Gospel do by contemplative Faith, behold Christ, together with the glorious light of his mercy, truth, goodness, and the rest of his Divine Attributes; and by means thereof they are made like unto him in the glory of Holiness, and in newness of life.

The reasons why we are thus to Look unto Jesus, will be as so many motives, which we shall reserve to an use of Exhortation; but the reasons why this Looking unto Jesus, is, 1. An Ordinance. 2. An Ordinance of Christ, may be these. —

1. Why an Ordinance? here is only this reason, the will of the Lord: Even so father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. Ordinances are certain impositions set forth by an external mandate of a Lawgiver, having Authority to command. It is the will of Christ to impose this Law on all the sons of men, that they should Look up unto him; and concerning this, what have we to do to enquire into the reason? it is our Duty to obey, and not to know of him why he commands; if 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 was enough in Pythagoras his School, to put the business past disputing amongst his Scholars, I am sure it should be much more in Christ's School; we will therefore enquire no further reason for it.

2. Why an Ordinance of Christ? it is this; because all spiritual Ordinances, Laws, Institutions, do hold on Christ; it is not in the liberty of man to erect any new spiritual Ordinance in the Church of Christ. I will not deny, but the power of man may come in to order such things, as are not proper, but rather common to the Church with other societies, as to meet together in some place, and at some time, &c. according to that rule, Let all things be done decently, and in order; for this is not an institution, but only the dictate of right reason. But when it comes up to an Ordinance, Law, Institution, (i.e.) when something more shall be put on the thing, than nature hath put on it, when by virtue of the institution, there is conjoined to it some kind of spiritual efficacy to work upon the soul, this only holds on Christ. Hence, because in the preaching of the Word, and in the administration of the Sacraments we expect a virtue, a spiritual efficacy, more than they have or can yield in any natural way, therefore we say, these are Ordinances of Christ; & so because in Looking unto Jesus, we expect a virtue, a spiritual efficacy, to go along together with it, more than nature can give it; therefore we call this an Ordinance, and an Ordinance of Christ, to distinguish it from all other Ordinances, Rules, Constitutions of men whatsoever.

SECT. III. Use of Reproof.

WELL then, is inward experimental looking unto Jesus a choice, an high Gospel-Ordinance? [Use 1] how may this reprove thousands? how many are there, that mind not this Duty? the truth is, that as the whole world lies in wickedness, so the eyes of the whole world are misplaced; there's few that have a care of this choice, of this high Gospel-Ordinance: I shall therefore reprove both the ungodly, and godly.

1. For the ungodly, not God, nor Christ is in all their thoughts. Alas! they never heard of such a Duty as this; they cannot tell what it means, to Look unto Jesus. Nor speak I only of poor Indians, and other Savages of the unchristian world, whose souls are over clouded with the blackest mists of irreligion, that the Prince of darkness can possibly enwrap them in, who came into the world, not knowing wherefore; and go out of the world, not knowing whither, an heavy case, which cannot sufficiently be bewailed with tears of blood; But I speak of such as live with in the Paradise of the Christian Church, that have nothing to distinguish them from those Indian miscreants, but an outward conformity, outward formalities, the charity of others, and their own slight imaginations; why alas! these are they that the Lord complains of, that they have eyes, and see not; My people have forgotten me days without number, they have negligently suffered me to be out of their minds, and that for a long time. You will say, is there any such here? Can I tax any of you, that you should not Look up to Jesus? are not your eyes towards Christ in your prayers, praise, soliloquies, public and private Duties? Nay, are not you now in the Duty, whilst I am speaking, and you hearing?

I answer, however you may deem that you do this or that; yet God reckons it as a thing not done in these respects. —

1. When it's not done to purpose; as if our looking to Christ makes us not like Christ; a man may give a thousand glances every day towards Christ, yet if there be no effectual impression upon the heart, Christ takes it as if he had never looked towards him at all.

2. When it's done unwillingly. Sometimes men think of Christ, but they know not how to shun it; the Lord breaks in upon their spirits whether they will or no, whereas their own temper is to follow, & to pursue other objects: thus you drop into our assemblies out of custom, or fashion, or for some sinister end, and here is Christ lifted up upon the pole, he is discovered in his beauties, graces, sweetnesses, excellencies; but when you see him, you say, he hath no form nor comeliness; there is beauty that we should desire him. Let no man deceive himself; though he cast his eyes towards Heaven all the day long, if he love not this work, he doth nothing, he Looks not at Jesus.

3. When it's not done according to the rule; this is not to eat the Lord's Supper, said Paul to his Corinthians; no question they did eat it, but because it was not done after its due manner, he saith, this is not to eat the Lord's Supper. Many think of Christ, and Look up to Jesus, but because their thoughts are not holy, awful and subjecting to the Spirit, in no way proportionable to the goodness and glory of the Son of God, they look loosely, carelessly, and carnally upon him, he therefore reckons it as not done: this is not to Look unto Jesus.

4. When a man makes it not his course and trade to look unto Jesus. A man may come unto a Carpenters house, & take up his tools, & do something at his work, but this makes him not a Carpenter, because it is not his trade. The best Saints sin; yet because it is not their trade and course, they are said, not to sin: whosoever is born of God, sinneth not. And so ungodly men may look, and muse, and meditate, and think of Christ; but because this is not their course and trade, they make it not their work to look to Christ, they are therefore said, not to look to him.

Why now consider, you that plead that you are Christians, & that you mind Christ at this very instant, that you are in the duty, even whilst I am speaking of it, and yet you neither do it to purpose, nor willingly, nor according to rule, nor as it is your trade; is it not with you, as it is with them of whom Christ spake; many will say to me at that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name have done many wonderful works? they will plead at the last day, as you plead now; but for all that, you know the answer, I never knew you, depart from me ye workers of iniquity. Surely Christ will say to you one day, I know you not, I was a stranger to you upon earth; I could not have an eye from you, but when your lazy idle spirits pleased: and now out of my sight, I will never own you, nor look upon you more.

2. For the godly, are not they careless of this Duty? O their excursions from God! sad dejections of spirit! inordinate affections of the world! and in the mean-while, O the neglect of this Gospel-ordinance, even amongst Saints themselves! I know not whether, through want of skill, or through want of will; but sure I am, this duty lies dormant, neglected of most of the people of God: their faults I may express in these respects. —

1. In not sending out their understandings, in not pointing their minds towards Jesus. I write unto you (said the Apostle) to stir up your pure minds, by way of remembrance; it is in the Original 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ,to awaken your pure minds; and it was but need. See how David calls upon himself, Awake my glory! and see how Deborah calls upon herself, Awake, awake Deborah, awake, awake, utter a song. Awaking is a word that imports rouzing, as birds that provoke their young ones by flight to make use of their wings; now, how few are there that thus call upon themselves? it was the Prophets complaint, no man stirs up himself, to take hold of God. O what a shame is this? is it fit that our understandings, which God hath entrusted us withal, should be no more improved? is it fit that our minds (those golden cabinets which God hath given us, to be filled with heavenly treasure) should either be empty, or stuffed with vanity, nothing, worse then nothing? O that such glorious creatures as our souls, should lacquey after every creature, which should be in attendance upon Christ, which should be like Angels, waiting and standing in the presence of our God! O that such glorious things as our immortal spirits, should run after vanity, and so become vain; which if rightly improved, should walk with Angels, should lodge themselves in the bosom of the glorious God! Do we not see how Christ is sending out to us continually? the thoughts of his heart are love, eternal love? and shall not we send out our thoughts towards him? shall not we let our minds run out towards him?

2. In not bending of their minds to this work. It may be the mind looks up, but it's so feeble, that like an arrow shot from a bow weakly bent, it reacheth not the mark. It is the wise man's counsel, Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all they might. O that God's people should be so lazy, dull, sluggish, slothful in this spiritual work! As Jesus said to the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? So may I ask believers in their looking unto Jesus, What went ye out to see? when you crawl, & move, as if you had no hearts nor spirits within you, whom go ye forth to see? what, him that is the Lord of glory? what, him that is the brightness of his Fathers glory, and the express image of his person? what, are such heavy & lazy aspects fit to take in such a glory as this is? you see in what large streams your thoughts fly forth to other things. & are you only languishing, weak, and feeble, in things of so great concernment? Oh that Christians should be cold in spirituals, & hot in the pursuit of earthly temporal things.

3. In not binding of their minds to this object, in not staying the eye on Jesus Christ. Some may give a glance at Christ, but they are presently wheeled off again: but why doth not the eye abide there, at least, till it come to some profitable issue? is not Christ worthy on whom our souls should dwell? Certainly if we love our Jesus, that love will hold us; Christ then will be in our thoughts, and minds, and we cannot off him: as the load-stone having drawn the iron, it keeps it fast to itself; so if love draw our hearts, it holds it fast to the object loved. Christ himself acknowledgeth such an operation of love upon himself, Turn away thine eyes, for they have overcome me; thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse, with one of thine eyes: Christ was held in the galleries, and captivated with love to his people, so that his eyes was ever upon them; nay he could not get his eyes off them, Can a mother forget her child? no more can I forget you; and is Christ so tender in his love towards us, that he ever minds us, and shall our minds be so loose to him? so fluttering, and fleeting? shall there be no more care to bind ourselves in cords of love to him, who hath bound himself in such cords of love to us?

4. In not daily exercising this blessed Duty; it may be now and then they are awakened, and they get up into heaven to see their Jesus, but it is not daily. Oh consider! Is this now and then going to heaven within the veil, to live the life of friends? is this to carry ourselves as children? what, to be so strange at home? but now and then, once in a month, in a year, there to be seldom, where we should always be? is Jesus Christ such a mean thing, that a visit now and then should serve the turn? the Queen of Sheba hearing Solomon's wisdom, Oh said she, Blessed are those thy servants that always stand before thee, and hear thy wisdom; if she were so taken with Solomon, remember that a greater than Solomon is here; and shall we deprive ourselves of that blessedness, which we might enjoy by standing always in the presence of Christ, to hear his Wisdom, and to behold his Glory?

Oh my Brethren, let us take shame to ourselves, that to this day we have been so careless in sending, bending, binding our minds to this blessed object, Jesus Christ; yea, let us blush that we have not made it our daily business. David describes the blessed man by his delighting in the law of the Lord, and by his meditating on that Law day and night; how then is he to be reproved, that neither meditates on the Law of the Lord, nor on the Lord, the Law-maker, day and night? O alas! we keep not a constant course, we are not daily in the exercise of viewing Jesus; nay, I fear, we look upon this Duty of looking unto Jesus, as a questionable thing; it seems to many as a Duty unknown, unheard of, unthought of, it is not in their notice, and how should it be in their practice? But I leave this first Use.

SECT. IV. Use of Exhortation.

IS inward, experimental Looking unto Jesus a choice, and high Gospel-ordinance? [Use 2] One Use of Exhortation, I beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, I beseech you by the mercies of God, I beseech you brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, to look unto Jesus: or if my beseeching will not prevail, why yet look on me as an Ambassador of Christ, consider as though God did beseech you by me, I beseech, I pray you in Christ's stead; it is a message that I have from God to your souls, to look unto Jesus; and therefore set your hearts, to all the words that I testify to you this day, for it is not a vain thing, but it is for your lives.

O that I should need thus to persuade your hearts to look unto Jesus! What, is not your Jesus worthy of this? why then are your thoughts no more upon him? why are not your hearts continually with him? why are not your strongest desires, and daily delights in, and after the Lord Jesus? what's the matter? will not God give you leave to approach this light? will he not suffer your souls to taste and see? why then are these words in the Text? why then doth he cry, and double his cry, behold me, behold me? Ah vile hearts! How delightfully, and unweariedly can we think of vanity? how freely, and how frequently can we think of our pleasures; friends, labors, lusts? yea, of our miseries, wrongs, sufferings, fears? and what, is not Christ in all our thoughts? It was said of the Jews, that they used to cast to the ground the book of Esther before they read it, because the name of God is not in it; and Augustine cast by Cicero's writings, because they contained not the name of Jesus; Christians! thus should you humble, and cast down your sensual hearts, that have in them no more of Christ: O chide them for their willful or weak strangeness to Jesus Christ! O turn your thoughts from off all earthly vanities, and bend your souls to study Christ, habituate yourselves to such contemplations as in the next Use I shall present; and let not those thoughts be seldom or cursory, but settle upon them; dwell there, bath your souls in those delights, drench your affections in those rivers of pleasures, or rather in the sea of consolation; O tie your souls in heavenly galleries, have your eyes continually set on Christ! Say not, you are unable to do thus, this must be God's work only, and therefore all our exhortations are in vain. A learned Divine can tell you, though God be the chief disposer of your hearts, yet next under him you have the greatest command of them yourselves: though without Christ you can do nothing, yet under him you may do much; or else it will be undone, and you undone through your neglect; do your own parts, and you have no cause to distrust whether Christ will do his; it is not usual with Christ to forsake his own people in that very work he sets them on. — Oh but we can do nothing: how nothing? what, are you neither spiritual nor rational creatures? If a carnal Minister can make it his work to study about Christ through all his life time, and all because it is the trade he lives by, and knows not how to subsist without it: why then me thinks a spiritual Christian should do much more; if a Cook can labor and sweat about your meat, because it is the trade that maintains him, though perhaps he taste it not himself; Methinks, you for whom it is prepared, should take the pains to taste its sweetness, and feed upon it. Christians! if your souls were sound and right, they would perceive incomparably more delight and sweetness in knowing, thinking, believing, loving and rejoicing in Jesus Christ, than the soundest stomach finds in his food, or the strongest senses in the enjoyment of their objects. Now for shame never say, you cannot reach it. I can do all things (saith Paul) through Christ that strengtheneth me. Oh it is our sloth, our security, our carnal mind, which is enmity to God and Christ, that keeps us off. Be exhorted! Oh be exhorted in the fear of God!

SECT. V. Motives from our wants in case of neglect.

TO quicken us to this Duty, I shall propound some moving considerations; Ponder and weigh them with an impartial judgment; who knows but through the assistance of Christ they may prove effectual with your hearts, and make you to resolve upon this excellent Duty of Looking unto Jesus.

Consider

- 1. Our wants, in case of our neglect.
- 2. Our riches, in case we are lively in this Duty.

1. For our wants; if Christ be not in view, there is nothing but wants.

Suppose first a Christless soul, a poor creature without any beam or ray of this Sun of righteousness, and what a sad condition is he in? I may say of such a one that—

1. He is without light: there is no oil of saving knowledge, no star of spiritual light arising in his soul; ye were once darkness, saith the Apostle to his Ephesians: not only dark, but darkness itself; they were wholly dark, universally dark, having no mixture, nor glimpse (whilst without Christ) of spiritual light in them. Of such carnal wretches, saith our Savior, they have not known the Father, nor me; they have not known the Father in his Word, nor Me in my Natures, Offices, Sufferings, Exaltations, Communications: very miserable is the carnal man's Ignorance of God and Christ, he hath no saving knowledge of Jesus.

2. Such a one is without Grace, without Holiness; Christ is our wisdom and sanctification, as well as righteousness and redemption. Where Christ is not, there is no spiritual wisdom, no inclination to the ways and works of sanctification.

3. Such a one is without contentation; the soul in this case finds nothing but emptiness and vanity, in the greatest abundance. Let a man have what the world can give, yet if he have not Christ, he is nothing worth; Christ is the marrow and fatness, the fullness and sweetness of all our endowments; separate Christ from them, and they are bitter, and do not please us; empty, and do not fill us.

4. Such a one is without any spiritual beauty; there is nothing in him but sores and swellings, and wounds and putrefaction; from the sole of his foot, to the crown of his head, there is nothing in him but loathsome and incurable maladies; hence the greatest sinner is the foulest monster; bodily beauty without Christ is but as green grass upon a rotten grave; did man see his uncomeliness and deformity without Jesus Christ, he would style himself as the Prophet styled Pashur, Magor-Missabib, fear round about, every way a terror to himself.

5. Such a one is without peace: there is no true, spiritual, heavenly peace, no joy and peace in the holy Ghost without Jesus Christ. Joram asking Jehu, is it peace? was answered, what hast thou to do with peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel, and her witchcrafts are so many? a Christless man asking, is it peace, O Messenger of God? he can look for no other but Jehu's answer, What hast thou to do, O carnal man, with peace, so long as thy lusts are so strong within thee, and thy estrangements from the Prince of peace, so great? the soul that is without Jesus Christ, is an enemy to the God of peace, a stranger to the Covenant of peace, incapable of the Word of peace, an Alien to the way of peace: there is no peace to the wicked, saith my God.

6. Such a one is without acceptance, with God the Father: Christ only is God's beloved, and therefore as Joseph's brethren might not look him in the face, unless they brought their brother Benjamin, so cannot we look God in the face with any confidence or acceptance, unless we bring Christ with us in the arms of our faith; without Christ man is stubble, and God is a consuming fire to destroy him; man is a guilty malefactor, and God a severe Judge to condemn him; the whole of man without Jesus Christ is a very abomination in God's presence.

7. Such a one is without life: he that hath not the Son, hath not life, saith John; Christ lives not in that soul, it is a dead soul, dead in sins and trespasses. As the dead see nothing of all that sweet and glorious light which the Sun casts forth upon them, so the dead in sin have no comfortable apprehension of Christ, though he shine in the Gospel more gloriously than the Sun at noon. And as the dead know not anything; so the dead in sin know nothing at all of the wisdom of Christ guiding them, or of the holiness of Christ sanctifying them, or of the fullness of Christ satisfying them, or of the death of Christ mortifying their lusts, or of the resurrection of Christ quickening their souls, or of the dominion of Christ reigning in their hearts. O what a misery is this!

All this you may say is true to a Christless soul; but what evil to him that may have a title to Christ, and yet minds not Christ, makes not use of Christ, doth not look unto Jesus?

Such a case I confess may be; yea, as many Duties are neglected by some godly, so this main Duty is (I may tremble to think it) exceedingly neglected. But, O the sin, and sadness of those souls! O the wants attending such poor creatures! Consider them in these particulars.

1. They have not that wisdom, knowledge, discerning of Christ, as otherwise they might have. By looking, and serious observing of Christ, we gain more, and more knowledge of Christ; but if we will not look, how should we understand those great mysteries of grace? nor speak I only of speculative knowledge, but more especially of practical and experimental; without looking on Christ, we cannot expect that virtue should go out of Christ; there is but a poor character or cognizance of Christ upon them that are such; they have not so clear, and comfortable, and inward, and experimental a knowledge of Jesus Christ.

2. They do not so taste the goodness of Christ, as otherwise they might; Christ is no other unto them, whilst neglected by them, but as an eclipsed Star, with whose light they are not at all affected; Christ is not sweet to them in his Ordinances, they find not in them that delight and refreshment, that comfort and contentment, which they usually minister: they cannot say of Christ as the Spouse did, I sate down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste; they are in the case of Barzillai, who could not taste what he did eat, or what he did drink; nor could hear anymore the voice of singing-men, or of singing-women: so they cannot taste the things of God, nor hear the spiritual melody which Christ makes to the souls of them that look up to him.

3. They have not that love to Christ, which Christ's beholders have; they meditate not upon Christ, as lovers on their love; they delight not themselves in Christ, as the rich man in his treasure, and the bride in the bridegroom, which they love; their thoughts are rather on the world than Christ; their palates are so distempered, that they have no pleasure in the choicest wine, they cannot say that their souls long after him; and no wonder, for how should they love Christ, who turn their eyes from him who is the fairest of ten thousands to other objects? Surely they have no flaming, burning love to Christ, that will give every base thing a kind of preeminence above Christ.

4. They have not that sense of Christ's love, which those that exercise this Duty have; whilst the soul neglects Christ, it cannot possibly discern the love of Christ; it perceives not Christ applying the Doctrines of his love to the conscience: Christ appears not in his banqueting house, he enables not the soul to pray with confidence, he makes it not joyful in the house of prayer. And hence it is, that such souls move so slowly in God's service; they are just like Pharaohs chariots, without wheels; O they perceive not the Love of Christ, either in the clear revelation of his secrets, or in the free communication of his graces, or in the sanctifying and sweetening of their trials, or in sealing up the pardon of their sins: O they feel not those ravishing comforts, which usually Christ speaks to the heart, when he speaks from his heart in love. O the want! O the misery of this want!

5. They have not that experience of the power of Christ, which they have that are in the exercise of this Duty. Would you know wherein lies the power of Christ? I answer, in casting down the strong holds of sin, in overthrowing Satan, in humbling men's hearts, in sanctifying their souls, in purifying their consciences, in bringing their thoughts to the obedience of Christ, in making them able to endure afflictions, in causing them to grow and increase in all Heavenly graces; and this power they partake of, who rightly and experimentally look up to Christ. But if this Duty be neglected, there is no such thing; hence we call this, the Duty of Duties, the chief Duty, the especial Duty; and for all other Duties, Means, Ordinances, if Christ be not in them, they are nothing worth; In every Duty this is the essential part, that we look through all, unto Jesus; it is only from Christ, that Virtue and Efficacy is communicate in spiritual Ordinances; there were many people in a throng about Christ, but the infirm woman that touched him, was she alone that felt efficacy come from him; we see many attend the Ordinances, frequent the Assemblies, but some few only find the inward power of Christ derived unto their souls. They that neglect, or are grossly ignorant of this great mystery of looking unto Jesus, are no better then strangers to the power of Christ.

6. They have not that sense of the worth and excellency of Christ, that are unacquainted with this Duty; they are not so ravished with his Beauty, they are not so taken with the Sweetness and Pleasantness of the Face of Christ; he is not the fairest of ten thousands in their eyes; and hence it is, that they do not take pleasure, long after, delight or joy themselves in Christ: indeed these affections are the Evidences of our high esteem; they that rejoice not in Christ, nor have any longings after Christ, they put a very unworthy price upon Christ.

7. They have not that sense either of their own wants, or of the worlds vanity, who are not in the practice of this Duty. In this glass we see that man is blind, and no Sun but Christ can Enlighten him; that man is naked, and no garment but Christ's can clothe him; that man is poor, and no treasure but Christ can make satisfaction for him; that man is empty, and none but Christ can fill him; that man is distressed, perplexed, tormented, and none but Christ can quiet him. Why? all this, and much more than this appears in this glass of Jesus: the soul that looks here, cannot but comprehend an end of all other perfection; yea, the further it looks on the creature, the deeper and deeper vanities it discerns. But alas! there is no observation, no sense, no feeling either of man's wants, or of the worlds vanity, or of any suitable good in Christ, to them that are not in this Divine and Spiritual contemplation.

Thus far of their wants, that neglect this Duty of looking unto Jesus.

SECT. VI. Motives from our riches, in case we are lively in this Duty.

2. FOR our riches, in case we are lively in this Duty: Oh the blessed incomes to such souls! we may reckon up here those very particulars which the others wanted. 1. That Christ gives Light unto them; as the receiving of the Sun gives light to the body, so the receiving of the Sun of Righteousness gives light, a spiritual, heavenly, and comfortable light to their souls. 2. That Christ gives grace and holiness unto them; of his fullness we receive grace for grace. As the print upon the wax answers to the seal, or as the characters upon the Son answers to the Father; so there are certain stamps of the grace of Christ upon the Saints, that what good they do, it springs not from external motives only, as in hypocrites, but from Christ working in them an inward principle of new nature; and upon this account doth John tell us, the Law was given by Moses, but grace & truth came by Jesus Christ. 3. That Christ gives contentation or satisfaction unto them: as the pearl satisfied the Merchant in the Parable with treasure, so Christ satisfieth the soul with wisdom in the understanding, with the sense of his love in the heart, with sure and blessed peace in the conscience; they that rightly look unto Jesus, may say as Jacob did, I have enough. 4. That Christ gives glory unto them; he is the glory of Israel, he is both the Author, and the matter of their glory; he is the glory of their justification, as the garment is the glory of him that wears it; he is the glory of their redemption, as the ransomer is the glory of the captive: he is the glory of their sanctification, as Jordan cleansing him from his leprosy was the glory of Naaman; he is their all in all, in whom they glory, and to whom they give all honor, and glory, and power, and praise. 5. That Christ gives peace unto them, God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, he is the Author, and the world is the object of this reconciliation. Christ is our peace; and peace is preached by Jesus Christ; they that hear Christ in the Word, or that look unto Christ by the eye of faith, they have this peace; for Christ only in Ordinances is the revealer, and procurer, and the worker of peace in all the children of peace. 6. That Christ procures acceptance with God for them; he stands betwixt God and such believers; and as they mind him, so he is ever mindful of them, pleading their cause, answering all the accusations of Satan, and praying to his Father in their behalf. 7. That Christ gives life unto them; he that hath the Son, hath life; he that hath Christ in his heart as a root of life living in him, or as a King setting up his throne within him, or as a Bridegroom betrothing himself in loving kindness to him, he hath life, the life of grace, and the earnest of the life of glory. 8. That Christ gives wisdom unto them, Christ hath in him all the treasures of wisdom, and therefore he that looks most to Christ is the wisest man in the world; he that hath the Sun, hath more light than he that hath all other lights in the world, and wants the Sun. 9. That Christ gives a taste of his goodness unto them; they cannot look unto him, but he makes them joyful with the feeling of himself and Spirit: and hence it is that many times they brake out into Psalms, and Hymns, and spiritual songs, and make melody in their hearts unto the Lord. O there is a goodness of illumination, regeneration, sanctification, consolation, contentation, pacification, and spiritual freedom flowing from Christ to the souls of his Saints, which to carnal men is a sealed Well, whose waters their palates never tasted. 10. That Christ gives a sincere and inward love of himself unto their hearts. No sooner is their eye of faith Looking unto Jesus, but presently their hearts is all on fire; such a suitableness is betwixt Christ and their souls, as is betwixt the hearts of lovers; their love to Christ is like the love of Jonathan to David, a wonderful love, and passing the love of women; they love him as the bridegroom to whom their souls are married, as the choicest pearl by whom they are enriched, as the Sun of consolation, by whose beams their souls are comforted, as the fountain by whom their hearts are refreshed, and their desires every way satisfied. 11. That Christ gives the sense of his own love to them; they cannot look on Christ, but they see him loving, and embracing their humble souls; they see him binding up their broken hearts; they behold him gathering to himself, and bearing in the bosom of his love, and comforting with the promises of his Word their wounded spirits; they behold him like Jacob serving in the heat and in the cold for Rachel, serving in manifold afflictions from his cradle to his cross, to make a Spouse unto himself. 12. That Christ gives the experience of his power to them; they that look on Christ, do feel the power of Christ inwardly in their souls, dissolving the works of Satan, casting down his Kingdom, and mighty holds within them, healing all their spiritual maladies, sustaining them in all afflictions, filling their souls with all Spiritual and Heavenly might, making them strong in knowledge, and strong in faith, and strong in love, and strong in motion, and coming to Christ, as a river of much waters is strong in coming home to the Ocean. 13. That Christ gives the sense of his own worth and excellency unto them, they see now in Christ is wisdom surpassing the brightness of the Sun, even all the treasures of wisdom; in Christ is power excelling the strength of rocks, he is not only strong, but strength itself; in Christ is Honor transcending all the Kings of the earth, for he is King of Kings, and Lord of Lord's; in Christ is beauty excelling the Rose of Sharon, and Lily of the valleys, he is fairer than all the flowers of the field, than all the precious stones of the earth, than all the lights in the firmament, than all the Saints and Angels in the highest heavens. 14. That Christ gives the sense of their wants, and of the worlds vanity, and of his suitable goodness unto them, In looking unto Jesus they see themselves in themselves miserable, and all other things miserable comforters: they have learnt the meaning of that Psalm, Put not your trust in Princes, nor in the son of man and in whom there is no help, his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish; happy is the man that hath the God of Jacob for his God, whose hope is in the Lord his God. 15. That Christ gives all things, everything unto them. All things are yours (saith the Apostle) whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours, and you are Christ's, and Christ is God's. All things are yours; First, all the Ministers of Christ from the highest to the lowest, whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas; they are your servants, they are men that watch over you for your salvation. Secondly, the world is yours; indeed the world stands but for your sakes, if your number were but once completed, quickly would the world be set on fire: you will say, ay! but how is the world ours? we find not this, for who hath the world at will? why, though you have not, yet the misery you find in the world, the want of wealth as well as the enjoying of it is yours, (i e.) it tends to your advantage. Thirdly, life is yours, it is a fitting, a preparing, a squaring of you for a better life, even for eternity. Fourthly, death is yours; for you shall die just then when it is best for you, death shall serve but as a servant to your advantage. Fifthly, things present, and things to come, are yours; godliness hath the promise of this life, and of that which is to come. Sixthly, I will add, the Lord himself is yours, take God, and look on him in his greatness, in his mighty power, even this great God, the Lord of heaven and earth, is yours, he is yours, and all that he hath is yours, and all that he doth is yours, and all that he can do is yours, I will be thine (saith God to Abraham) I will be to thee an exceeding great reward. Here is a Catalogue, an Inventory of a Christians riches; have Christ and have all; when an Heathen was but asked; where all his treasure was, he answered, where Cyrus my friend is: and if any ask you, where all your treasure is, you may answer, where Christ your friend is; in this respect you may truly say, there is no end of your riches, they are called the unsearchable riches of Christ; Paul could find no bottom of these riches; O who would not look unto Jesus? If Christ be yours (besides those particulars enumerated in this Text, (1 Cor. 3.22, 23.) God is yours, the Father is yours, the Son is yours, the Spirit is yours, all the promises are yours; for in Christ they are all made, and for him they shall be performed. Come, let the proud man boast in his honor, and the mighty man in his valor, and the rich man in his wealth; but let the Christian pronounce himself happy, only happy, truly happy, fully happy, in beholding Christ, enjoying Christ, having Christ, in Looking unto Jesus.

You have the Motives of our wants, in case of neglect: and of our riches in case we are active, frequent, serious, and lively in this Duty. But for our further encouragement to fall upon it, I shall add a few Motives more.

SECT. VII. More Motives to encourage us in this work.

1 Consider your looking on Jesus will maintain your communion with Jesus; and is not this worth the while? Why Christians! what is this communion with Christ, but very heaven aforehand? hereby we enjoy his person, and all sweet relation to his person, his death, and all the saving fruits, privileges, and influences of his death; hereby we are brought into Christ's banqueting-house, held in his galleries, his banner over us being love: hereby we are carried up into the Mount with Christ, that we may see him (as it were) transfigured, and may say with Peter, Master, it is good for us to be here, and let us here build Tabernacles. Oh it's an happy thing to have Christ dwell in our hearts, & for us to lodge in Christ's bosom! Oh its an happy thing to maintain a reciprocal communication of affairs betwixt Christ and our souls! as thus; he bare our sins, take we his healing: he endured wounds for us, drink we the spiritual balsom that sprang out of his wounds; he took upon him our unrighteousness, do we clothe ourselves with his righteousness: he endured pains for us, come we to him, and take his rest to our souls; he embraced our curse and condemnation, do we embrace his blessing, justification, and salvation. To this end do we look on Jesus, if he hide his face by desertions, rest not till we find him; if we find him, hold him fast, let him not go, disturb him not out of our hearts by our corruptions. Thus if we would prize the presence of Christ, how comfortably should we maintain and increase our Communion with Christ.

2. Consider, that your daily necessities call for a frequent looking up unto Jesus; you have need of Christ, you have need that he pray in you, and need that he pray for you to your heavenly Father; you have need that he work in you, and need that he work for you his own blessed will; you have need that he present you and yours blameless before his Fathers presence in life, and death, and at the judgment day; there's not a moment in your life, wherein you stand not in continual need of Jesus Christ; And can a hungry man forget his bread? can the heart that pants for thirst forget the River? can a man in bonds forget freedom? can a child in distress forget a Father in honor and wealth? Oh then let your necessities drive you to Christ; and mind you of Christ; Is not he the fountain that supplies all wants? Christians! consult your own Experiences; when you look up to Jesus, and lean on Jesus, are you not best at rest? O then why do you not always rest and lean upon him? sometime you say, his Bread is sweet, and his Cup is pleasant, how amiable is his Presence? At such a time you have never done wondering at him; O the sweet impression, that are even then on your spirits! why do you not then always look unto him? or at least, why are you not frequent in his disciples posture, who looked steadfastly towards Heaven as Christ went up? How richly might your idle hours, and spare time be laid out here, to the supply of all necessities, bodily, or spiritual?

3. Consider, that an eye, an heart on Christ, is one of your most unquestionable Evidences of sincerity. Where your Treasure is, there will your hearts be also. If Christ be your Treasure, your hearts will be on Christ; and surely an heart set upon God in Christ is a true evidence of saving Grace. External actions are easiest discovered, but those of the heart are surest Evidences: when thy learning will be no good proof of thy Grace, when thy arguments from thy tongue and hand may be confuted, yet then will this Argument from the bent of thy heart prove thee sincere. Take a poor Christian that hath a weak judgment, a failing memory, a stammering tongue, yet if his heart be set on Christ, I had rather die in this man's condition, and have my soul in his souls case, than in the case of him without such an heart, though he had the most eminent gifts, and parts, and abilities of any in the world. Christians! as you would have a sure testimony of the love of God, and a sure proof of your title to glory, labor to get your hearts on Christ, O look on Jesus. You may be sure Christ will acknowledge that you really love him, when he sees your hearts are set upon him.

4. Consider, that your looking on Jesus, will strengthen patience under the Cross of Christ. This is the very particular Motive of the Text, Let us run with patience the Race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and finisher of our Faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the Cross, despising the shame; and is set down at the right Hand of the Throne of God; for consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your mind. It is storied of a Martyr, that having offered him a Cup of spirits to sustain him, when he seemed to faint under his greatest Trial, he returned this answer, My Lord and Master had Gall and Vinegar given him to drink; as if he had been astonished to see himself fare better than Jesus Christ. How may it strengthen your patience in sufferings to think of Christ's patience? What, are you served ill? Ay, but Jesus Christ was not served so well; can you suffer so much as he hath done? I tell you nay. O then do you stay your murmurings and repinings, bear with patience the little you endure; and to this end, Consider him that hath endured the contradictions of sinners.

5. Consider, that a through-sight of Christ, will increase your inward joy in Christ, Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it, and was glad. A right sight of Christ, will make a right-sighted Christian glad at heart; I wonder not that you walk uncomfortably, if you never tried this Art of Christ-contemplation; can you have comfort from Christ, and never think of Christ? doth anything in the world glad you, when you do not remember it? If you were possessed of all the Treasure in the Earth, if you had title to the highest Dignities, and never thought of them, sure they would never rejoice you. Come look up unto Jesus, fix your eyes, thoughts, and hearts on that blessed objects, and then you may expect David's experience, my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips, when I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate of thee in the night watches. A frequent access to Christ in a way of meditation cannot but warm the soul in spiritual comforts. When the Sun in the spring draws near our part of the earth, how do all things congratulate its approach? the earth looks green, the trees shoot forth, the plants revive, the birds sing sweetly, the face of all things smiles upon us, and all the creatures below rejoice: Christians! if you would but draw near, and look on this Son of Righteousness, Jesus Christ, what a spring of joy would be within you? how would your Graces be fresh and green? how would you forget your winter sorrows? how early would you rise (as those Birds in the spring) to sing the Praise of our great Creator, and dear Redeemer.

6. Consider that your Eye on Jesus will preserve the vigor of all your Graces. As the body is apt to be changed into the temper of the air it breaths in, and the food it lives on, so will your spirits receive an alteration according to the Objects which they are exercised about. You that complain of deadness and dullness, that you cannot love Christ, nor rejoice in his loves, that you have no life in Prayer, nor any other Duty, and yet you never tried this quickening course, or at least you were careless and inconstant in it; what, are not you the cause of your own complaints? say, is not your life hid with Christ in God? O whether must you go but to Christ for it? If you would have light and heat, why then are you not more in the Sun-shine? if you would have more of that grace which flows from Christ, why are you no more with Christ for it? for want of this recourse to Jesus Christ, your Souls are as candles that are not lighted, and your duties are as Sacrifices which have no fire; fetch one coal daily from this Altar, and see if your Offerings will not burn; keep close to this reviving Fire, and see if your affections will not warm. Surely if there be any comfort of hope, if any flames of love, if any life of faith, if any vigor of dispositions, if any motions towards God, if any meltings of a softened Heart, they flow from hence; men are apt to bewail their want of desire, and hope, and joy, and faith, and love to Jesus Christ, whilst this very duty would nourish all these.

7. Consider, it's but equal that your hearts should be on Christ, when the heart of Christ is so much on you. Christ is our Friend, and in that respect he loves us, and bears us in his heart; and shall not he be ours? Surely this is ill requital; this is a great contradiction to the law of Friendship: But Christ is our Lord as well as Friend; and if the Lord of glory can stoop so low as to set his heart on sinful dust, one would think we should easily be persuaded to set our hearts on Jesus Christ. Christians! do you not perceive that the heart of Christ is set upon you! and that he is still minding you with tender love, even when you forget both yourselves and him? Do you not find him following you with daily mercies, moving on your souls, providing for your bodies, and preserving both! doth he not bear you continually in the arms of love, and promise that all shall work together for your good? doth he not give his Angels charge over you, and suit all his dealings to your greatest advantage? and can you find in your hearts to cast him by? can you forget your Lord, who forgets not you? Fie upon this unkind Ingratitude! When the Lord speaks of his thoughts and respects to us, he gives this language, Can a woman forget her sucking-child, that she should not have compassion on the Son of her Womb? yea, they may forget, yet will not I forget. Behold I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands, thy walls are continually before me. But when he speaks of our thoughts to him, the case is otherwise: can a Maid forget her Ornaments, or a Bride her Attire? yet my People have forgotten me days without number, q. d. you would not forget the clothes on your backs, you would not forget your braveries, your Ornaments, your Attires, and are these of more worth than Christ? yet you can forget me day after day.

8. Consider, it's a command of Christ, that we should look to Jesus. Behold me, behold me; lo I, lo I; A command not only backed with Authority, but accompanied with special Ordinances appointed to this end: what is Baptism? and what is the Lord's Supper, but the representation of Jesus Christ? Is it not Christ's command in his last Supper, Do this in remembrance of me? and this do ye as oft as ye drink in remembrance of me? In this Ordinance we have Christ crucified before our Eyes, and can we forget him? Or, can we hold our eyes off him? can we see the Bread broken, & the Wine distinctly severed from the bread, and not call to mind (according to the Scripture) Christ's Agony in the Garden, and on the Cross? can we take, and eat the bread? and take, and drink the cup, and not apprehend Christ stooping down from Heaven to feed our souls? At such a time if we forget the Lord Jesus Christ, it will argue our disaffection, our ingratitude, our disobedience every way.

9. Consider, it's both work and wages to look up unto Jesus. Hence David professed, it is good for me to draw near to thee, and my meditation of him shall be sweet: the word imports a sweetness with mixture, like compound spices, or many flowers. Every thought of Jesus is sweet and pleasant, nay, it's better than wine, we will remember thy love more than Wine; there is more content in contemplating on Christ, more refreshing to the spirit, than wine gives to the body, How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God? look in what kind soever you account a thing precious, so precious are the thoughts of God and Christ to a man, whose heart is in a right frame. Such a one loves every glance of Christ, and the more it sees, the more it loves; It is said of one Eudoxius, that he wished he might be admitted to come near the body of the Sun, to have a full view of it, though it devoured him; he was something rash in his wish: but there is something proportionable in a godly spirit, he so loves Christ, that he could be content to be swallowed up in the beholding of him. Certainly there is a blessing in this work; when we are bid to look unto Jesus, it is but to receive from Jesus: is it anything else but to call and invite us to look on the most pleasing and delightful object? That in the beholding of it, it may convey itself unto us, and we be delighted and filled with it? it is all one as if he should bid us sit down by a well of Life, and drink; or if he should bid us be as the Angels are, who are blessed in the beholding of this Jesus; why come then, if this be a blessed work, why will we unbless ourselves? If the work will exalt us, why will we debase ourselves, in not closing with it? If we might live above heaven, why will we live below? certainly when thoughts of Christ are moving in us, Christ himself is not far off, he will come, and enter too; and how sweet is it for Christ to come and take up his habitation in our souls.

10. Consider how the Angels exceedingly desire to look on Jesus: they stoop down, and pry into the Nature, Offices, and graces of Jesus Christ: which things (saith the Apostle) the Angels desire to look into. He alludes to the manner of the Cherubims looking down into the Mercy-Seat; this is the study, yea this is the delight and recreation of the Elect Angels to look on Jesus, and to look into the several scopes of our salvation by Jesus Christ, to behold the whole frame, and fabric of it, to observe all the parts of it from the beginning to the end, to consider all the glorious Attributes of God, his Wisdom, Power, Justice, Mercy, all shining and glittering in it like bright Stars in the Firmament; this I say is their work, yea, this is their Festivity and Pastime. And shall not we imitate the Angels? shall not we think it our honor to be admitted to the same privilege with the Angels.

11. Consider that looking unto Jesus is the work of Heaven; it is begun in this life (saith Bernard) but it is perfected in that life to come; not only Angels, but the Saints in glory do ever behold the face of God and Christ; if then we like not this work, how will we live in Heaven? the dislike of this Duty is a bar against our entrance; for the life of a blessedness is a life of Vision; surely if we take no delight in this, heaven is no place for us.

12. Consider that nothing else is in comparison worth the minding or looking after. If Christ have not your hearts, who? or what should have them? O that any Christian should rather delight to have his heart among Thorns and Briers, than in the Bosom of his dearest Jesus! Why should you follow after drops, and neglect the Fountain? why should you fly after shadows, and neglect him who is the true substance? if the mind have its currant from Christ toward other things, these things are not only of less concernment, but destructive: they are gone far from me, and have walked after Vanity, and are become vain. How unworthy the world is of the look of Christians, especially when it stands in competition with Jesus, we have discussed before.

Many other Motives might be given, but let this suffice. I have done with the exhortation; In the next place I shall lay open to you the particular way of this Duty, which all this while I have been persuading to.

SECT. VIII. Use of Direction. [Use 3]

IS inward, experimental looking unto Jesus a choice, or an high Gospel Ordinance? why then some directions how we are to perform this Duty. Practice is the end of all sound doctrine, and duty is the end of all right faith; now that you may do what you have heard in some good measure, I shall prescribe the directions in the next part prescribed.

But first in the work observe those two parts of the Text, the act, and object; the act is looking unto; and the Object is Jesus. 1. By looking unto, we mean (as you have heard) an inward experimental knowing, desiring, hoping, believing, loving, calling on Jesus, and conforming to Jesus: it is not a bare swimming knowledge of Christ, it is not a bare thinking of Christ; as Christ hath various excellencies in himself, so hath he formed the soul with a power of diverse ways apprehending, that so we might be capable of enjoying those divers excellencies that are in Christ; even as the creatures having their several uses, God hath accordingly given us several senses, that so we might enjoy the delights of them all: what the better had we been for pleasant odoriferous Flowers, or sweet perfumes, if we had not possessed the sense of smelling? or what good would language, or music have done us, if God had not given us the sense of hearing? or, what delight should we have found in meats, or drinks, or sweetest things, if we had been deprived of the sense of tasting? so what pleasure should we have had even in the goodness and perfection of God and Christ, if we had been without the faculty and power of knowing, desiring, hoping, believing, loving, joying, and enjoying? as the senses are to the body, so are these spiritual senses, powers, affections to the soul the very way by which we must receive sweetness and strength from the Lord Jesus.

2. By Jesus, who is the Object of this Act, we mean a Savior, carrying on the great work of man's salvation from first to last; hence we shall follow this method, to look on this Jesus, as our Jesus in these several periods. 1. In that Eternity before all time until the Creation. 2. In the Creation the beginning of time until his coming. 3. In his first coming, the fullness of time until his coming again. 4. In his coming again the very end of time to all Eternity. In every of these Periods, Oh what a blessed Object is before us! Oh what wonders of love have we to look upon! Before I direct you how to look on him in these respects, I must in the first place propound the Object: still we must lay the colors of this admirable beauty before your eyes, and then tell you the art how you are to look upon them.

You may object, the Apostle in this Text refers this look only to the passion and session of Christ. But a worthy Interpreter tells you out of these words, That Christ our blessed Savior is to be looked on at all times, and in all acts; though indeed, then, & in those Acts more especially. Besides, we are to look unto Jesus, as the Author and finisher of our Faith; and why as the Author and finisher of our Faith, but to hint out to us that we are to stand still, and to behold, as with a steadfast eye, what he is from first to last? You have called us hither (say they in Canticles) to see your Shulamite, What shall we see in him? What saith the Spouse, but as the company of two Armies? that is, many legions of good sights; an Ocean of bottomless depths of manifold high perfections. Or if these words be understood of the Spouse and not of Christ, yet how many words do we find in Canticles expressing in him many goodly sights? Myrrh, Aloes, & Cinamon, all the Trees of Frankincense, all the Powders of the Merchants are in him; he is altogether lovely: he is all every whit of him desirable, he is not one single Star, but a constellation; there is in him a confluence, a bundle, an army of glorious sights, all in one cluster, meeting and growing upon one stalk. There's many glorious sights in Jesus, I shall not therefore limit myself to those two especial ones, but take all those before me I have now propounded.

And now, if ever, stir up your hearts. Say to all worldly business and thoughts, as Christ to the Disciples, Sit you here while I go & pray yonder. Or as Abraham when he went to sacrifice Isaac, left his Servants and Ass below the Mount, saying, Stay you here, and I and the Lad will go yonder, and Worship, and come again to you; so say to all worldly thoughts, Abide you below, while I go up to Christ, and then I will return to you again. Christians! yourselves may be welcome, but such followers may not.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS. The Second Book.

Revel. 1.8, 11.

I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord; which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. — I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; and what thou seest, write in a book, and send it to the seven Churches.

CHAP. I.

SECT. I. Of the eternal Generation of our Jesus.

WE must Look unto Jesus, the beginner and finisher of our faith: we must behold Jesus as with a steadfast eye from first to last. As he is Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last, so accordingly we must Look unto him. 1. He is Alpha, the beginner, (so it is in the Original) 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the beginner, the inceptor, the first wheel of our faith, Heb. 12.2. and of the end of our faith, the salvation of our souls, 2 Thes. 2.13. 2 Tim. 1.9. Tit. 1.2. Now Christ may be called a beginner, in respect of the Decree, or execution. I shall begin with the Decree, wherein he begun before the beginning of time to design our happiness, for the praise of the glory of his Grace, Ephes. 1.6. Many depths are in this passage. To this purpose we told you that Jesus is God's Son, and our Jesus, eternally begotten before all worlds. In this first period we shall look on him, 1. In relation to God. 2. In relation to us.

1. In his relation to God, who shall declare his generation? He is God's Son having his subsistence from the Father alone, of which Father by communication of his essence, he is begotten from all eternity.

For the opening of this eternal generation of our Jesus, we shall consider, 1. The thing begotten. 2. The time. 3. The manner of begetting. 4. The mutual kindness and love of him that begets, and of him that is begotten, which brings forth a third person, or subsistence, which we call the Holy Ghost.

1. For the thing itself, it is Jesus Christ, who must be considered two ways, as he is a Son, and as he is a God. Now as he is a Son, he is the thing begotten, but not as he is a God. As he is God, he is of himself, neither begotten, nor proceeding; the God-head of the Father, and the God-head of the Son is but one and the same thing; and therefore the Son as he is God, he is God of himself, without beginning even as the Father; but as he is a Son, he is not of himself, but the Son of the Father, begotten of him; and hereupon it follows, that the Son is begotten of the Father, as he is a Son, but not as he is a God.

2. For the time of this generation, it hath neither beginning, middle, nor end, and therefore it is eternal before all worlds; this is one of the wonders of our Jesus, that the Father begetting, and the Son begotten, are coeternal. Wisdom in the book of Proverbs (which with one consent of all Divines is said to be Christ) affirmeth thus, When there was no depths I was brought forth, When there were no fountains abounding with water; before the Mountains were settled, before the hills was, I was brought forth; while as yet he had not made the earth, nor the fields, nor the highest part of the dust of the world; when he prepared the heavens, I was there; when he set a compass upon the face of the depth, I was there. And a little before, the Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old, I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the world was; that is to say from eternity; for before the world was made, there was nothing but eternity. It may be alleged to the contrary, that the saying of God the Father, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, is expounded by Paul of the time of Christ's resurrection. And we declare unto you glad tidings (saith Paul) how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again, as it is also written in the second Psalm, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. But we distinguish betwixt generation itself, and the manifestation or declaration of it. Jesus the Son of God from all eternity was begotten; but when he was incarnate, and especially when he was raised again from the dead, then was he mightily declared to be God's Son by nature. And of this declaration or manifestation of his eternal generation is that of the Apostle understood.

3. For the manner of this generation of Jesus the Son of God, understand, there be two manners of begetting; the one is carnal, and outward, and this is subject to corruption, alteration, and time; the other is spiritual, and inward, and such was the beginning of the Son of God, of whose generation there is neither corruption alteration, nor time. But alas! how should we declare his generation? O my soul, here thou mayest admire, and adore with Paul and David, and cry out, O the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways p... finding out? There is no searching for us into the secret counsels of God, which he never revealed in his Word; but so far as he hath revealed himself, we shall in sobriety according to the light of the Scriptures, endeavor a discovery of the manner of this spiritual generation of the Son of God: as thus,—

We must consider in God two things, 1. That in God there is an understanding. 2. That in God this understanding everlastingly acts or works.

For the first, that God hath a most excellent understanding, or that he is understanding himself in the highest degree, is very clear; for he that gives understanding to all his intelligible creatures, must needs have it, and be it most eminently in himself: if fire be the cause of heat in other things, it must needs be, that fire is the hottest of anything; the axiom is common, but the Scripture verifies it, with God is wisdom and strength, he hath counsel and understanding. Nay, that this understanding is his very being is very plain, Counsel is mine, and sound wisdom, I am understanding, and I am strength.

For the second, that this understanding in God everlastingly acts or works, is very clear; for that understanding (which is the nature, essence, and being of God) is a mere act, or the first act, it is all one with the life of God; now as all life is active in itself, so the chief life (such as in the highest degree is to be attributed to God) must needs be active; what is the life of God, but an essential property, whereby the Divine nature is in perpetual action, living and moving in itself? and hereof is that speech in Scripture so often used, the Lord liveth; hereof likewise is that asseveration or oath so often used by God, as the Lord liveth, and As I Live saith the Lord; well then, the understanding of God being active, or working from all eternity, it must needs have some eternal object on which it acts or works; every action requires a suitable object, about which it must act, or be exercised: so then if God's understanding act eternally, it must have some eternal object; and if God's understanding act most perfectly, it must have some most perfect object to act upon; and what is that but only God himself? that God's understanding should act out of himself, would argue his understanding to act upon that which is finite and imperfect: Certainly nothing is infinite, eternal, and perfect, but only himself; and therefore if his understanding will act upon any suitable object, he must act upon nothing but himself.

And now we come to the manner of this high, mystical, spiritual generation of Jesus the Son of God. As the understanding of God doth act and reflect upon itself from all eternity, so it works this effect, that it understands and conceives itself; it apprehends in the understanding an image of that Object which it looks upon, and this very image is the Son of God. This we shall lay out by some similitudes. A man's soul (we know) doth sometimes muse and meditate on other things; as it thinks of Heaven, or it thinks of earth; this we call a right or direct, or emanant thought; but sometimes the soul doth muse, or meditate on itself, as when it thinks of its own Essence, or faculties, or the like; and this we call a reflect thought; why now the soul understands itself, now it hath some Idea, or image of itself, now it conceives itself; this is our phrase, it conceives itself. There is not only a carnal, but a spiritual Conception; as when I understand this or that, I say, I conceive this or that, I have the Idea, or image of this or that, within my Soul. Or as in a glass, a man doth conceive and get a perfect image of his own face by a way of reflection; so God in beholding and minding of himself, doth in himself beget or conceive a most perfect, and a most lively image of himself, which very image is that in the Trinity which we call the Son of God. Thus you read in Scripture that Jesus the Son of God is called the brightness of his Fathers Glory, and the express Image of his person. 1. The brightness of his Fathers Glory, herein God the Father is compared unto a lightsom body, and God the Son unto a beam, or splendor sent forth, or issuing out from that glorious body. 2. The express Image of his Person, herein God the Father is compared unto a seal, and God the Son unto an impression resulting from the seal; Now look as wax upon a seal, hath the engraven Image of the Seal; so the Son of God (which the Father hath begotten or conceived of his own understanding) is the very Image of his Fathers understanding; hence not only the Father, but also the Son is called Understanding itself. I have Counsel and Wisdom, (saith Christ) I am Understanding; whatsoever the Father is, the Son is; indeed the understanding in men, and the thing understood, are not usually one and the same, but in God it is all one: God's conceivings and begettings are the most inward of all; the Father conceives of himself, and in himself; and his conceiving is a begetting, and his begetting abideth still in himself, because his understanding can nowhere meet with anything suitable, but that which he himself is; and that conveying of himself, or begetting of himself is the second subsistence in the Trinity, which we call the everlasting Son of God.

4. For the mutual kindness and lovingness of him that begets, and of him that is begotten, we say this brings forth a third person or subsistence in God. Now for the understanding of this matter, we must consider two things; first, that in the Essence of God, besides his understanding there is a Will. Secondly, that this Will doth work everlastingly upon itself, as his Understanding doth.

For the first, that in the Essence of God, besides his Understanding, there is a Will, is very clear; for he that gives a will to all rational creatures, cannot want it himself; how should he be without will, whose will it is that we will? of necessity it is that there should be some prime or chief will, on whose will all other wills should depend; but the Scriptures are plain, I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me. — My Council shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.

For the second, that this will in God doth everlastingly work upon itself, is clear: for, as doth the understanding, so doth the will; but the understanding of God doth act upon itself as the chief, and most perfect Truth, therefore the will of God doth will himself as the chief and most perfect good. Indeed what other suitable Object can the will of God have besides himself? an infinite will must needs have an infinite good; and in this sense, as our Savior tells us, there is none good but one, that is God; hence it is that the will of God, doth reflect upon itself, and acquiesc in itself as in an infinite good.

And now we come to the manner of this high, mystical, spiritual procession of the Spirit from the Father and the Son. As the Will of God doth act and reflect upon itself from all Eternity; so it works this effect, that it delights itself in the infinite good which it knoweth in itself; for the action of the Will is delight and liking; and this very delight which God or his Will hath in his own infinite goodness, doth bring forth a third person, or Subsistence in God, which we call the holy Ghost: So that indeed, if you would know what the Holy Ghost is, I would answer, it is the mutual kindness, and lovingness, and joy, and delight of the Father and the Son. The Father by this act of Will doth joy and delight in his Son, and the Son by this act of Will doth joy and delight in his Father; and this is it which the Son saith of himself, and of his Father, I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him, q. d. I was from all eternity his delight, and he was from all Eternity my delight: the Father (as it were) from all Eternity aspired in his Will, and Love, and joy unto the Son; and the Son (as it were) from all Eternity aspired in his Will, and Love, and joy unto the Father; and from this common desire and aspiring of either Person the Holy Ghost proceeds, which makes up the whole Tri••y of persons.

I shall lay out this by some similitude or resemblance; As when a man looks in a glass, if he smile, his image smileth too: here's but one face, and yet in this Unity we may find a Trinity: the face is one, the image of the face in a glass is another, and the smiling of them both together is a third, and yet all are in one face, and are of one face, and all are but one face; so the understanding which is in God is one; the reflection, or image of his understanding he beholdeth in himself as in a glass, is a second; and the love and likeing of them both together, by reason of the will fulfilled, is a third; and yet all are in one God, and all are but one God. In this Trinity there is neither first nor last, in respect of time, but all are at once, and at one instant; even as in a glass the face, and the image of the face, when they smile, they smile together, and not one before, nor after another. — For conclusion of all. As we have the Son of the Father by his everlasting will in working by his understanding; so we have the Holy Ghost of the love, and joy, and delight of them both, by the joint working of the understanding and will together; whereupon we conclude three distinct persons, or subsistences, which we call the Father, Son, and holy Ghost, in one spiritual, yet unspeakable substance, which is very God himself. — My meaning is not to insist on the Father, or the holy Ghost, but only on the Son. Yet thus far I have added, that you may better understand the manner of this generation of the Son of God; together with the mutual kindness, lovingness, joy, and delight betwixt the Father and the Son, even from Everlasting.

SECT. II. Of our Election in Christ before all Worlds.

NOW let us look on Christ in his Relation to us before all Worlds. God being thus alone himself from everlasting, and besides himself there being nothing at all, the first thing he did (besides what ye have heard) or the first thing he possibly and conceivably could do, it was this; a determination with himself, to manifest his Glory: Or, a purpose in himself to communicate his glory out of his aloneness everlasting unto somewhat else: I say unto somewhat else, for what is communication but an efflux, an emanation, an issuing from, or a motion betwixt two Terms? I have now brought you to the acts, or actions of God in reference to his Creatures; follow me a little, and I shall anon bring you to Christ in relation to yourselves.

These acts or actions of God were and are. 1. The Decree. 2. The Execution of the Decree of God. I must open these Terms.

1. The Decree is an action of God, out of the Council and purpose of his own Will, determining all things, and all the Circumstances, and order of all things from all Eternity in himself certainly, and unchangably, and yet freely, Who worketh all things (saith the Apostle) after the Counsel of his own will; and this work, or action of God is internal, and forever abiding within his own Essence itself.

2. The execution of the Decree is an act of God, whereby God doth effectually work in time all things as they were fore-known and Decreed. And this action of God is external, and by a temporal act passing from God to the Creatures.

Now for the Decree, that is of diverse kinds: As first, There is a Decree common and general, which looks to all the creatures; and it is either the Decree of creation, or the Decree of Providence and preservation. 2. There is a Decree special, which belongs to reasonable creatures, Angels, and Men, it is called the Decree of Predestination; and it consists of the Decree of Election and Reprobation. Concerning the common and general Decrees we have but little laid down in Scriptures, and it is little, or nothing at all to our purpose; And concerning the special Decree of Angels, there is not much in Scriptures, and that is as little also to our purpose; we have only to deal with Men, and with God's Decree in relation to Mans Salvation before all Worlds.

And this we call Predestination, or the Decree of Election; which is either of Christ, or of the Members of Christ. Christ Himself was first Predestinated: This appears by that Saying of God; Behold My Servant whom I uphold, Mine Elect in whom My Soul delighteth; I have put My Spirit upon him, he shall bring forth Judgment to the Gentiles. These very words the Evangelist interprets of Christ Himself, Matth. 12.18. And Christ being Predestinate, the Members of Christ were Predestinated in Him: So the Apostle; According as He hath chosen us in Him, before the Foundation of the World. We are chosen in Christ as in a common Person; He was the first Person Elected in order, and we in Him. Suppose a New Kingdom to be set up, a New King is chosen, & all his Successors are chosen in him: Why, God hath Erected a Kingdom of Glory, & He hath chosen Jesus Christ for the King of this Kingdom; and in Him He hath chosen us, whom He hath made Kings and Priests unto the most High God. But observe we this of the Apostle; He hath chosen us in Him before the Foundation of the World. 1. He] hath chosen, (i.e.) God the Father hath chosen; not that the Son and Spirit chose not also; for if Three of us had but one Will common to us all, One could not will anything, which the Will of the other Two should not also will: But because the Son sustains the Person of one Elected, and the Spirit is the Witness sealing this Grace unto our Hearts; therefore the Father only is expressed; as the Father alone is often named in Prayer, not that the other Persons are not to be prayed unto; but because the Son is considered as the Mediator, and the Spirit as the Instructor, teaching us to Pray as we ought; therefore the Father only is expressed.

2. He hath chosen us in Him:] This Him] denotes Christ God-man; and this in Him] notes the same Christ God-man, as the Head and first Elect, in whom, and after whom, in order of Nature, all His Body are Elected: Mark here the Order, but not the Cause of our Election; Though Christ be the Cause of our Salvation, yet Christ is not the Cause of our Election: It is only the Fore-knowledge of God, and His free Love, that is the Cause thereof.

3. He hath chosen us in Him before the Foundation of the World.] (i.e.) From all Eternity; but because within Eternity God doth fore-see the Things which are done in time; therefore this Phrase (say some) may be extended not only to respect the Actual Creation, but the Decree itself of the World's Being; q. d. He hath chosen us in order of Nature, before His Decree did lay the Foundation of the World. My meaning is not to enter into Controversies; this all grant, that the ancient Love, which the Lord hath born to us in Christ, is not of Yesterday, but before all Worlds. Paul mentions Grace given us before all Worlds. But that which is the most observable in the Text, as to our purpose, is, that we are chosen in Him. We read of Three Phrases in Scripture speaking of Christ: Sometimes we are said to have Blessings in Him, and sometimes for Him, & sometimes through Him. Sometimes in Him, as here, He hath chosen us in Him; sometimes for Him, as elsewhere, To you it is given for Christ His sake; not only to Believe, but to Suffer; sometimes through Him, as in that of Paul; Thanks be to God, which giveth us the Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Now Blessings come through Christ, in respect that Christ is a Mediator not only of Impetration, but Execution; not only obtaining and receiving from Grace all Good for us, but in executing and applying Efficaciously the same unto us: And Blessings come for Christ, in respect that Christ doth by His Obedience obtain every good Thing, which in time is communicated to us: And we have Blessings in Christ, because that in Christ, as a Common Store-house, everything is first placed, which is to be imparted afterwards to any of us. And thus we are chosen in Christ, as in a common Person. This Grace of Election began first at Christ our Head▪ and so descends downwards on us His Members. Christ is the First Begotten amongst all His Brethren, having the Preeminence; or Christ was the First-born among many Brethren, the First that opened the Womb. Christ was sealed, and set apart to be the Prince of our Salvation, before (in order of Nature) we were Elected. Concerning this Election, or Predestination of Christ, the Apostle puts all out of question; Who verily was fore-ordained before the Foundations of the World, but was manifest in these last Times for you.

SECT. III. Of that Great Treaty, in Eternity, betwixt God and Christ, to save Souls.

NOW was it, that God the Father called forth His Son to perform the Office of the Mediator; that in Him all those that should be Saved, might be Chosen. Concerning this Call of God the Father in a special sort, the Apostle is clear; No man taketh this honor unto himself; but he that is called of God, as was Aaron: So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an High Priest; but He that said unto Him, Thou art My Son, today have I begotten Thee, He called Him unto this Honor. Christ thrust not Himself into this Office; but He came to it by the Will of God the Father, and by his Appointment: For it pleased the Father by Him to Reconcile all things to Himself; and Him that God the Father sealed: And why? but the more to assure us of the good will of God to save us, seeing he hath called his Son unto it: For therefore will he accept of all that Christ should do for us, as that which he himself hath ordained.

And now was it, that God the Son embraced the Call of the Father, and undertook the Office of Mediator: Then said I, Lo I come. No question, it was Truth from Everlasting: Th• Lord God opened mine Ear, and I was not Rebellious, neither turned away back. And, As the Father gave Me Commandment, even so I do. No sooner the Father called, but Christ accepts the Office to which He was designed by the Father: This is plain by those words, Him that God the Father sealed; sealed by Ordination, and sealed by Qualification, and sealed by way of Investiture; as Public Officers are invested in their Places by receiving their Commissions under Seal. And it must needs be so; because whatsoever the Father wills, the Son wills also: I and My Father are One, saith Christ: How One? Why, One in Will, and One in Power, and One in Nature. 1. One in Will: That appears in the words precedent, concerning Christ's Sheep; My Father gave them Me,— and I give unto them Eternal Life: They are both agreed to save Christ's Sheep; the Father is willing, and Christ is willing: Look how much the Will of the Father is in it; so much the Will of the Son is in it: For He and the Father are One. 2. One in Power: That appears likewise in the words precedent; These Sheep shall never perish, (saith Christ) neither shall any Man pluck them out of My Hand: My Father is Greater than All, and no Man is able to pluck them out of My Father's Hand. Here is first the Power of Christ, and all in Him engaged for the Salvation of His Sheep; that, if he have any Power in Him, and be able to do anything, not one of them shall Perish: And he gives the Reason of the Prevalency of his Power, from his Father's Power, engaged as much as his own in this Business; they are alike fast in his Hands, and in his Father's Hands: For He and the Father are One. 3. One in Nature: And of this, I suppose, are the words more especially understood: The Father and Son are both of one Nature, of one Essence, of one Being: And this is not only an Argument that they did both agree, and were like to agree in that Great Transaction of saving Souls; but that they can never disagree: Two that essentially have Two Wills, though for the present agreeing in One; yet they may come to disagree, and will not the same Thing; but if essentially they have but One Will, it is impossible then but that they ever must agree. —So then, the Father from Everlasting calls the Son to the Office of Mediator: [q. d. Come My Son, the Son of My Joy, and high Delight; My beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased: There's a Thought in My Heart to communicate My Self out of this Aloneness everlasting, unto some-what else; and My Thought, or Purpose, or Intention, lies in this Order: First, I intend My own Glory, then Christ, then the Church, then the World; thus is My Providence to dispose everything so much more principally & timely, by how much it is more Excellent: Next to My Glory, & the manifestation of it, I will have a Christ; and this Christ shall be the chief Pattern of the Election of Grace: & next to Christ the Head, I intend a Body, and this Body I will Predestinate to be made like, or to be conformed to the Image of My Son. And now behold, I call Thee to the Office of Mediator; Thou art My Son, today (even in this Day of Eternity) have I begotten Thee; and today (even in this Day of Eternity) do I call Thee to this Honor, to be an High Priest forever. And as the Father calls, so the Son from Everlasting, accepts the Office to which He is designed by the Father: [q. d. Come, Is that the Voice of My Everlasting Father? Why, Lo I come; in the Volume of the Book, it is written of Me to do Thy Will, O God: This is My Mind; yea, and this shall be My Mind forever: When I am Incarnate, this shall be My Meat, to do the Will of Him that sent Me, to finish His Work. Glorious Father, Thy Will is My Will: I seek not Mine own Will, (as if I had a Will distinct from Thine) but the Will of My Father. Now therefore, I accept this Honor: Be it to Me, or be it with Me, even as Thou pleasest. This Call of the Father, and Answer of the Son, is fully confirmed by that Saying of Christ; I was set up from Everlasting.

But concerning the Particular Passages of these Treaties betwixt God, and Christ, to save Souls, I shall show: 1. The Project. 2. The Counsel. 3. The Fore-knowledge. 4. The Purpose. 5. The Decree. 6. The Covenant. We shall find all these in our first Period, in that Eternity, before all Times, until the Creation.

SECT. IV. The Project.

THE Project to save Souls, is diversely laid down by Dissenting Brethren. Some give it in thus: 1. That there should be a Mediator and Redeemer unto Mankind, considered as fallen in the State of Sin. 2. That all such should be received into Favor, as shall Repent, and Believe, and Persevere unto the End. 3. That sufficient and necessary Means of Grace should be offered and administered unto all Men without Exception. 4. That certain singular Persons should be saved, whom God fore-saw would Repent, and Believe, and Persevere. This way is justly opposed by Others, who deny God's Acts in Intention, to be in the same order as we see them in Production: In order of Material Existing, it is granted, that Christ is Revealed, Promised, and Exhibited after Sin; and that we Repent, Believe, Persevere before we are Saved: But in order of God's Intention, Christ is before Sin, and Salvation before Repentance, Faith, Perseverance. The Apostle reckoned the Order, in which Things exist, thus: 1. The World. 2. You, The Elect. 3. Christ. 4. God, 1 Cor. 3.22, 23. But he gives us to understand the Order of Intention thus: As First, God intends His own Glory, then Christ, then the Elect, then the World. Certainly, it is an hard thing to marshal the Eternal, Immanent Acts of the Divine Understanding, or Will, into First, Second, Third, Fourth: All God's Projects are like Himself, who is a whole and perfect Possession of Himself together and at once; so as in Him considered, there is no Prius nor Posterius in any of His acts; but considered in Effects, or in respect of us, one thing may be said to be First, Second, or Third in Nature, Time, & Being, before or after another. And thus in respect of us, we say the End must be in Nature before the Means to the End: Now the Permission of the Fall, Repentance, Faith, Perseverance, are used by God as

Means to bring some to Salvation: God therefore doth first project our Salvation, and then the Means; and both the End, and the Means, are the Product of God's Election, or Predestination. Here then is the Project, That God will glorify His Grace; & to this end He will predestinate Christ, & in Christ He will choose some of the Sons of Men to Salvation; whom, notwithstanding Sin, He will make holy, and without blame before Him in love. This Project, or Plot, or Design of God, will be further enlarged in the next Passage, viz. His Counsels.

SECT. V. The Counsel.

OF the Counsels of God concerning Man, before all Worlds, we read in several Texts. Christ was delivered by the determinate Counsel of God.—For of a truth, against thy Holy Child Jesus, whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod & Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, & the People of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy Hand, & thy Counsel determined before to be done. And thus the Members of Christ are said to Obtain an Inheritance, being Predestinated according to the Purpose of Him, who worketh all Things after the Counsel of His own Will. Of this Counsel of God's Will, we know but little now; yet this will be made known, when we come to Glory; yea, it will be a great Part of the Glory of Heaven, for the Lord to make known the Counsel of His Will; we now know his Will, but we shall then know the Counsel of His Will, & praise Him to all Eternity for it. This shall be the Glory of the Saints, that they shall see into the Counsel of God's Will, in choosing them, and calling them; and passing by others, and letting others go. In the mean-while, thus far we may know; for thus far He hath revealed Himself, concerning His Counsels, about Man from Everlasting.

1. That Man should be a Reasonable Creature; and because that very Creature is unavoidably subject to the Creator, (for He made all things for Himself, and all is to return that Glory to Him, for which He made them) therefore Man should serve Him as all other Creatures must; only his Service should be after a reasonable manner, out of Judgment, Discretion, and Election: Hence David is said to have chosen the Way of Truth; & Moses to have Chosen the Afflictions of God's People, & the Reproaches of Christ, before the Pleasures of Sin, or the Treasures of Egypt. And hence it is, that Holiness, in the Phrase of Scripture, is called Judgment; He shall convince the world of Judgment; & he shall bring forth Judgment unto Victory; and hence it is, that our Service is called a Reasonable Service. God would not set any such determining Law over the Operations of Man, as over other Creatures, that so he might truly work out of Judgment, and stand or fall by his own Election.

2. That if Man should deviate from this Reasonable Service, and break the Law which God would give, and which he himself should have an Original Power to perform, that then he should incur the Displeasure of God; and such a Curse, and such a Penalty should be inflicted. And here comes in the Fall of Man into God's Consideration; He looks upon it as a willful transgression of his Law; and by how much the Law was more just, and the obedience more easy, by so much he judges the transgression more unreasonable, and the punishment more certain and intolerable.

3. That Sin should not pass Unrevenged; and that for these reasons. 1. Because of God's infinite hatred thereof, He is of purer Eyes than to behold Evil; He cannot look on Iniquity; it provokes a Nauseousness and Abhorrency in him; For all these are things which I hate, saith in the Lord,—They are a trouble unto me, I am weary to bear them. 2. Because of his truth, he hath said; In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die, or thou shalt dying die; die Temporally, and die Eternally; and surely God will in no wise abolish this Law, One jot or tittle shall in no wise pass from the Law till all be fulfilled. 3. Because of his terror and fearful Majesty, for God will have Men always tremble before him, and by his terror to be persuaded from sinning. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord we persuade men; and Fear him who is able to destroy both Body and Soul in Hell; I say unto you, fear him: & Let us have Grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with Reverence and Godly Fear; for God is a Consuming Fire. Upon these Reasons God is resolved, Sin shall not pass unrevenged, lest thereby His Justice should be securely abused, his Hatred against Sin the less declared, His Truth questioned, and His dreadful Majesty by Men neglected.

4. That every Man, notwithstanding Sin, should not be utterly destroyed; and that for these Reasons: 1. Because of that infinite Delight, which the Lord hath in Mercy: Why this Delight is it that so disposeth Him to pardon abundantly, & to exercise Loving-kindness on the Sons of Men; Who is a God like unto Thee, that pardonest Iniquity, and passest by the Transgression of the Remnant of Thy Heritage? Thou retainest not Thy Anger forever, because Thou delightest in Mercy. And, I am the Lord, which exercise Loving-Kindness, Judgment, & Righteousness in the Earth; for in these things I delight, saith the Lord. 2. Because of that Delight, which God hath to be actively glorified by His Creatures, voluntary Service and Subjection: Herein is My Father glorified, if ye bear much Fruit; and, I have no Pleasure in the Death of the Wicked, but that he turn from his Way, and live. He delighteth most in unbloody Conquests, when by His Patience, and Goodness, and Forbearance, He subdueth the Hearts, Affections, and Conscienc<sup>s</sup> of Men unto Himself: He esteemeth Himself more glorified in the Services, than in the Sufferings of Men; and therefore in this Eternity, he resolves not to destroy all Men, lest there should be no Religion upon the Earth: When the Angels fell, they fell not all, many were still left to glorify Him actively in their Service of Him; but when Adam fell, all Mankind fell in him; so that there was no Tree in all this Paradise lest to bring forth any Fruit unto God: And this is most certain, that God would rather have His Trees for Fruit, than for Fuel: Hence He resolves, that Mankind, notwithstanding Sin, should not be utterly destroyed.

Hereupon the Trinity calls a Counsel; and the Question is, What is to be done with poor Man? The Learned here frame a kind of Conflict in God's holy Attributes, & by a Liberty, which the Holy-Ghost from the Language of Holy Scripture, doth allow them, they speak of God after the manner of Men, as if he were reduced unto some Straits and Difficulties, by the cross Demands of His several Attributes. Justice calls upon Him for the Condemnation of a Sinful, and therefore worthily Accursed Creature; which Demand is seconded by His Truth, to make good that Threatning; In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the Death. Mercy, on the other side, pleads for Favor and Compassion towards Man, woefully seduced, and overthrown by Satan; and this Plea is seconded by Love and Goodness, and the like Attributes: at last, when the Business comes to Determination, Wisdom finds out a way, which the Angels of Heaven gaze on with Admiration & Astonishment, how to reconcile these different Pleas of his Attributes together. A Jesus is resolved on, One of the same Blessed Trinity, who by His Father's Ordination, His own voluntary Susception, and the Holy Spirits Sanctification should be fitted for the Business. To this purpose this Jesus should be both a Surety, and an Head over sinful Men; a Surety to pay Men's Debts unto God, and an Head to restore God's Image unto Man: And thus in Him Mercy and Truth have met together, Righteousness and Peace have Kissed each other.

This is the great Mystery of the Gospel; this is that which the Angels (as I tell you) pry into; nay, this is that which the Angels and Saints too shall admire, and bless God for, to all Eternity; this is that which set the infinite Wisdom of God on work from all Eternity. If all the Angels in Heaven, and all the Men in the World, had been put to it to find out a way to answer this question, how shall sin be pardoned, the sinner reconciled, and God glorify his justice? they could never have done it; this cost God dear, it cost him the heart-blood of his own Son, and that's a sure sign, that God's heart was much in it; and indeed we are not Christians, until in some measure we see, and have our hearts taken with the glory of God in this mystery. O the wonder of Heaven and Earth! here's the case, man is fallen through sin, and ever since the fall, man and sin are as inseparably joined together as fire and heat; yet God will have mercy on the man, and he will take vengeance on the sin; the Eternal Wisdom of God, hath found out a way to translate this man's sins on another Person, who is able to bear them, and to interest this man's person in another's Righteousness, which is able to cover him; so that now all's one in regard of man, as if the Law had been utterly abrogated; and all's one too, in regard of God, as if the creature had been utterly condemned. And all this is done in our Jesus; on him was executed the curse of the Law, by him was fulfilled the righteousness of the Law, for him was remitted the sin of man, and through him were all things made new again: the world was in Christ as in its Surety, making satisfaction to the Justice of God; and God was in Christ as in his Ambassador, reconciling the world unto himself again. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : O the depths of the riches both of the Wisdom and Knowledge of God: how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out? You have seen the Project, and the counsels of God for man's salvation, before all worlds, it is but dimly, for who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his Counselor?

SECT. VI. The foreknowledge.

OF the knowledge of God in this respect we read in Scriptures, Christ is said to be delivered by the determinate Counsel and foreknowledge of God. And it is said of Christ's members, the called according to his purpose, whom he did foreknow: and elsewhere in the same Epistle, God hath not cast away his people, which he foreknew. And Peter writes to the strangers Elect, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father. Understand, that foreknowledge is ascribed to God in respect of the creature properly; but in respect of God there is nothing past, nothing to come; all things past, and all things to come are present to him, and therefore in that sense he cannot be said to foreknow anything. Now the Lord in respect of us is said in Scripture to foreknow things or persons two ways.

1. Generally, by a general knowledge, of which David's speaks; thine eyes did see my substance, yet being imperfect, and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance, were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.

2. Specially, by a more special foreknowledge, which is a knowledge with love and approbation; the very same which barely comprehendeth that we call Election; so God's choosing is expressed by loving: Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated. And this is that which the Apostle speaks of, the Lord knoweth who are his, (i.e.) the Lord from everlasting knoweth his with love, and with approbation, hath God cast away his people which he foreknew? (i.) which he before loved and approved? hence we gather that after the Project was laid, and the Councils of God were agreed upon it, then God foreknew, or foresaw whom to embrace in his eternal love as his own. At one act he foreknew whom he would choose, and set apart of his own free love to life and salvation. And here you have the cause of God's predestinating his Saints to glory, it was only the foreknowledge, and free love of God: the Lord from everlasting, and before the foundation of the world, fore-ordained or fore-appointed some to salvation, nothing moving him thereunto but his own good pleasure and his own free love. This is it that in order of nature, and strictly goes before, and is the cause of our Predestination; for whom he did foreknow, he also did Predestinate; first he foreknew, and then he did Predestinate; first he loved, and then he Elected; first he embraced them as his own in the Arms of his eternal love, and then of his free love he set them apart to life, and to salvation: hence the Apostle calls it the Election of Grace, signifying that our Election springs out of the womb of love, free love, free grace is the cause of our Election.

Some Object, that we are Predestinated and Elected according to fore-knowledge, (i.e.) say they, according to the fore-knowledge of our Faith, and Repentance, and Perseverance; but if that were Paul's fore-knowledge, why then would he say, that those whom he did fore-know, he also did Predestinate to be conformed to the Image of his Son? if God did fore-know them first conformed, why did he then Predestinate them to be conformed? And if that were Peters foreknowledge, why then would he say, that they were Elect according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father—unto Obedience? if God did fore-know them first Obedient, how then did he fore-know them unto Obedience? I know it is a question, whether God in fore-sight of belief, and perseverance in Faith and Holiness, do choose us to Salvation? For my part, I am for the Negative, upon these well-known grounds.

1. Because Election on Faith foreseen, makes God to go but of himself, looking to this or that in the Creature, upon which his will may be determined to Elect; now this is against the all-sufficiency of God's knowledge, as if he should get knowledge from the things we know, and against the all-sufficiency of God's Will; as if he must be beholding to something in us, before the business of our Election can be determined.

2. Because Election on Faith or Love foreseen, it makes God to choose us when we have chosen him, and to love us when we have loved him first; but this is contrary to Scripture, We love him because he loved us first; —and herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

3. Because Election on faith foreseen, stands not with the freedom of God's Will within himself, but God tells us plainly, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. I know some would not have this Text understood of Election from Eternity, but of Justification, Adoption, Salvation, and yet they grant the truth of it to be alike, whether in reference to Election or Justification: the words, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, are one and the same with those words spoken by God to Moses, I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious; Now to be gracious, as is confessed, properly imports a propenseness of mind and will to do some signal good without any motive or engagement thereunto from without, especially from the person or persons to whom this good is done, or intended; which is a plain Argument, that I will have mercy, is not of that kind of mercy, the exercise whereof is drawn out, or procured by anything whatsoever in those to whom it is shown, but because it pleaseth itself, or him in whom it resideth so to do; and in this respect mercy differs very little, or nothing at all from grace: the Apostle exchanging Moses his words, was but his Interpreter.

4. Because Election on Faith foreseen, is all one as to say, we are ordained to Eternal Life because we believe; but the Scripture speaks contrary, as many as were ordained to Eternal Life believed, and not as many as believed were Ordained to Eternal Life.

5. Because a prime and Eternal cause cannot depend upon the self-same temporal effects which are thereby caused; Now, Election is the prime and eternal Cause whence our Faith, Repentance, and Perseverance were derived; and therefore our Faith, Repentance, and Perseverance cannot be imagined antecedent Causes, Conditions or Motives unto the Divine Election.

6. Because Election on Faith foreseen, or Election of men believing and persevering in Faith and Holiness unto the last gasp, brings with it many absurdities. As, 1. This is to Elect men, not considered as in the State of Innocency, nor of Misery, but as in state of Grace, contrary to their own Tenets. 2. This is not to bring Faith, Holiness, Perseverance out of the gracious benefit of Election, but to bring Election out of the foreseen Acts of believing, obeying, persevering, quite contrary to Scriptures; he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the World, that we should be holy and without blame before him in Love. 3. This were to say that Election or Predestination affords no man any help at all, in the way unto Eternal Salvation; for how can that be the cause leading infallibly in the way unto Eternal Life, which comes not so much as into consideration, until a man have run out his Race (at least in God's foreknowledge) in Faith, and Godliness, and be arrived at Heavens Gates? Such a falsely named Predestination might more truly and properly have been called a Post-destination. But I have too long stood on this Controversy; and indeed it is against my design, which is not to minister questions, but rather, edifying, which is in Faith. I remember what I have Read, and indeed I begin already to feel, that these Controversal Points will but discompose our spirits, and wast our zeal, our love, our delight in Jesus (this lovely subject, and object we are a viewing) even by the interruption and diversion of our contemplations: not a word more in that Kind.

SECT. VII. The Purpose.

OF the Purpose of God concerning man's salvation before all worlds, we read in Scriptures; we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose And it is said of Jacob and Esau, that being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to Election might stand. And in Christ we are said to obtain an inheritance, being predestinate according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. And elsewhere the Apostle speaks of the manifold wisdom of God according to the eternal purpose, which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. And again, he hath saved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. All these hold forth this truth, That God purposed in himself from all eternity to bring them, whom he foreknew, to life, and to salvation. This purpose of God in order of nature comes before predestination, in that we are said to be predestinate according to his purpose, and yet it must needs follow after his foreknowledge and counsel; for first, he loves before he will purpose, and every purpose is established by counsel; yea without counsel, purposes (saith the wise man) are disappointed; why then, first he counsels (I speak after the manner of men) and then he foreknows; (i.e.) either he knows whom he will choose, for God doth not blindly choose he knows not whom; or else he sets his love to life on some, he knows them with a knowledge of approbation, and then he settles a purpose to bring them to life, whom he so foreknows in that especial and unspeakable way.

This purpose of God speaks our stability and certainty of salvation in Christ: when God once purposeth, it is past altering: Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed (saith God) so shall it stand; you may write upon it that God's purposes are immutable. Would not Paul lightly alter purposes taken up by him; when I therefore was thus minded (saith he) did I use lightness? or the thing that I purpose, do I purpose according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea, yea, and nay, nay? would not Paul (I say) alter his purpose? and will God think you alter his? methinks this word speaks to me, as if I heard God say from all eternity, it is my purpose to save a remnant of mankind; though all are lost by sin, yet my wisdom hath found out a way to choose out some; and though those some, those few I have purposed to save, stand in very slippery places, yet I will be the same yesterday, and today, and forever. I foresee indeed many thousands of failings and exasperations, to alter the purpose that I have towards my people, I foresee their daily provocations of my justice; I foresee their many lusts within, and their many enemies without; I foresee that grace inherent I will give them to be as mutable to all the progeny as in their father Adam; and if I leave them in the hands of their own council, they cannot but depart daily from me, even as water, though it could be made as hot as fire, yet being left unto itself, it will quickly reduce, & work itself to its own original coldness again: I foresee them in their best condition, at full Sea, at their highest tide of grace, to be as changeable and movable several ways as wheels; to be as perplexed, hindered, and distracted in themselves, as cross wheels in one another; grace swaying one way, and flesh another way, and what stability can I think in such? why yet (says God) yet I purpose to bring this little flock to heaven; my purpose is in, and from myself; and I am God and not man, and therefore I cannot repent, nor call in the purpose which now I have; have I said, and shall not I do it? have I spoken, and shall I not make it good? yes, yes, my purposes must stand, and for this purpose I will set my Son betwixt my people and myself; so that if they sin, I will look on him, and by that means I will see no iniquity in Jacob, nor transgression in Israel; and for this purpose I will join to the wheels the living creatures, that when the living creatures go, the wheels shall go; and when the living creatures stand, they shall stand; and when the living creatures are lifted up from the earth, the wheels shall be lifted up against them, for the spirit of the living creatures shall be in the wheels: my meaning is, that my Saints shall not have their stability from themselves, for they are like wheels: but they shall have it from me, and from my Son, unto whom by the same spirit of life they shall be united. Thus may I imagine the Lord from all eternity to say and speak, and purpose with himself, and surely his purposes must stand upon this account, for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

SECT. VIII. The Decree.

THE Decree of God concerning man's salvation before the foundation of the world, appears in these texts, I will declare the decree (saith God); what was that? why, concerning Christ, and concerning the Church, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. It was God's Decree to give out of Jews and Gentiles a Church to Christ; and this Decree was made in that day of eternity, when the Son of God was begotten of his Father. This Decree in Scripture-phrase hath several titles, 1. It is the very same with that which we usually call predestination; for what is predestination but a Decree of God concerning the different preparations of Grace, whereby some are guided infallibly unto salvation? predestination is a Decree both of the means and end; a Decree of giving Grace, effectual unto some persons here, and of bringing the same persons unto glory hereafter. This Decree, this predestination, this golden chain of the means and end, is set down by the Apostle, Whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified, and whom he justified, them he also glorified. As God hath predestinated some to life and glory, so he hath predestinated them to be called, and justified before they be glorified; whomsoever the Lord hath decreed to save them hath he also decreed to sanctify before they come to enjoy that salvation. God have chosen us in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be first holy, and then happy. See how these are twisted by the Apostle once and again, God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth. I have heard of some blasphemous reasonings, if we are predestinate to be saved, we may live as we list; for howsoever we live though never so wickedly, yet we shall be saved. O fearful! O devilish reasoning! surely this comes from the Devil, and not from God, or his Word: Mark here one of Satan's depths; in outward things he tempts men to distrust God, and to rely altogether on means; but in heavenly things, and matters of salvation, he tempts men to lay all on God's Decrees and God's purposes, without any regard had to the means. Such men might as well say, the Lord hath appointed that we shall live to such a time, and till then we shall not die, and therefore what need we food in health, or physic in sickness? Oh take heed of these reasonings! God's Decree doth not remove the use of the means, but establish and confirm them.—2. The Decree is the same with that book of life wherein are written the names of the Elect; Paul tells us of some women, with Clement, and other fellow-laborers, whose names are in the book of life. And Christ bids his Disciples rejoice, because their names are written in heaven. And John saw in his vision the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life. As Captains have a book wherein they write the names of their Soldiers; and Citizens have a book wherein they record the names of their Burgesses; So God hath his Decree or book of life, in which he registers all that belongs to him. Some other texts speak of a book of life, as, blot me I pray thee out of thy book which thou hast written, said Moses in his zeal for Israel; to whom the Lord answered whosoever sinneth against me, him will I blot out of my book. But this was not the book (say some) of God's eternal Decree, but the book of his providences; God hath a double book, and both in a figure he hath a book of his resolved Decrees, and a book of his acted providences; this latter is but a transcript, or a copy of the former: those huge original volumes of love and blessings which God hath laid up in his heart for his own people from all eternity is the book I mean: Indeed this book is writing out every day, by the hand and pen of providence in the ordering of all those affairs which concern our salvation.— 3. This Decree is the very same also with God's seal; the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his. A seal is used in three cases; 1. To keep things distinct. 2. To keep things secret. 3. To keep things safe: In every of these respects God's Decrees are seals, but especially in the last; those souls that are sealed by God, they are safe in the love and favor of God; as when Job tells us that God sealeth up the stars, (i.e.) say some, he preserveth the stars in their Orbs, in the places where he hath set them they shall never drop out; so God seals up his Saints, (i.e.) he secures them of the eternal love of God, so that they shall never drop out of his heart. All these titles speak the immutability of God's eternal eminent acts; q. d. I decree, I predestinate, I book it, seal it, that such and such persons shall be eternally saved; and why all this? but to note the certainty, and stability of the thing: shall great Monarchs of the earth do thus? shall they decree, and book, and seal, to show their greatness, and wisdom, that they could so resolve, as no person or power whatsoever should be strong enough to cause them to change their resolutions? and shall not I much more? do not I know, or foresee all that can or will follow? is there any power, or ever shall be to take them out of my hands? Or is it possible that ever I should have a relenting thought at the saving of these souls? Can anything fall out hereafter to make me more provident, more powerful, more wise, more merciful then now I am? it may be in some things I may will a change, but can I in anything truly change my will? no, no, I am the Lord, I change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

SECT. IX. The Covenant.

THE Covenant concerning man's salvation is the last and main particular I instanced in: I dare not be too curious to insist on the order of nature; and the rather, because I believe the Covenant betwixt God & Christ from everlasting is interwoven with the Decree, foreknowledge, and election above. So the Apostle tells us, He hath chosen us in Christ before the foundation of the world; mark that in Christ: There was an eternal plot betwixt the Father and the Son; there was a bargain made (I speak it with reverence) betwixt God and Christ, there was a Covenant betwixt the Lord and his Son Jesus Christ for the salvation of the Elect; and of this observe we especially these following Texts.

In Isaiah 49.1, 2, 3, 4. the Prophet seems to set it Dialogue-wise; one expresseth it thus; First Christ begins, and shows his commission, telling God how he had called him, and fitted him for the work of redemption, and he would know what reward he should have of him for so great an undertaking. The Lord hath called me from the womb, from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name, and he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he bid me. Upon this God answers him, and tells him what reward he should have for so great an undertaking; only at first he offers low, viz. only the elect people of Israel. And he said unto me, thou art my servant O Israel, in whom I will be glorified; or Israel it is in whom I will be glorified by thee. Christ who stood now a making his bargain with him, thought these too few, and not worth so great a labor and work, because few of the Jews would come in, but would refuse him, and therefore he says he should labor in vain, if this were all his recompense, then said I, I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for naught, and in vain; & yet withal he tells God, that seeing his heart was so much in saving sinners, he would do it howsoever for those few, comforting himself with this, that his work, or his reward was with the Lord. Upon this God comes off more freely, and opens his heart more largely to him, as meaning more amply to content him for his pains in dying; it is a light thing that thou shouldst be my servant to raise up the tribe of Jacob and to restore the preserved of Israel: that is not worth the dying for, I value thy sufferings more than so, I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles▪ that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth. Methinks I imagine as if I heard God speak unto Christ from eternity: See here I have loved a remnant of mankind both of Jews and Gentiles with an everlasting love, I know they will sin and corrupt themselves, and so become enemies to me, and liable unto eternal death; now thou art a mighty person, able to do what I require of thee for them; if thou wilt take upon thee their nature and sins, and undertake to satisfy my Justice and Law, and take away that hatred that is in them towards me and my Law, and make them a believing holy people, then I will pardon them, and adopt them in thee for my sons and daughters, and make them co-heirs with thee of an incorruptible crown of life. And then said Christ, loe I come to do thy will O God; then Christ as it were struck hands with God to take upon him the nature and sin of man, and to do and suffer for him whatsoever God required of him. Certainly, this was the whole business of our salvation first transacted betwixt God the Father and Christ, before it was revealed to us. Hence we are said, to be given unto Christ, I have manifested thy ⟨1 page duplicate⟩ ⟨1 page duplicate⟩ name (said Christ) unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world, thine they were, and thou gavest them me, this very giving implies, as if the Father in his Eternity should have said to the Son, these I take to be vessels of mercy, and these thou shalt bring unto me, for they will destroy themselves, but thou shalt save them out of their lost estate. And then the Son takes them at his Fathers hand, and looking at his Fathers will; this is the Fathers will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should loose nothing; he thereupon takes care of such; he would not for a world any of them should be lost which his Father hath given him, they are more dear than so.

In Isaiah 53.10, 11. and in Psal. 40.7. Christ is brought in as a Surety— offering himself for us, and readily accepting of God's will in this very matter: and hence it is that he is called God's servant; and his ears are said to be opened.

In Isa. 42.6. this very Covenant is expressly mentioned. Thus God speaks of Christ, Behold my servant whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my soul delighteth: — I will give thee for a Covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles. Yea, this Covenant and agreement seems to be confirmed with an Oath, in Heb. 7.28. and for this service Christ is required to ask of God, and he will give him the heathen for his Inheritance. Observe how the Church of God is given to Christ as a reward of that obedience which he shown in accepting of the office of a Surety for us This stipulation some make to be that counsel of peace spoken of by the prophet, and the counsel of peace shall be between them both, (i.e.) between the Lord, and the man whose name is the Branch. And for this agreement it is, that Christ is called the second Adam; for, as with the first Adam God plighted a Covenant concerning him, and his posterity, so also he did indent with Christ and his Seed, concerning eternal life to be obtained by him. I deny not but that some promises were made only to Christ in his own person, and not to descend to his children, as, Sit on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool; and he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hands; and ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. But there are other promises made to him and his; as that grand promise, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son; it is first made to him, and then to us: and that special promise of spiritual grace, John 1.16. of justification, Isa. 50.8. of victory and dominion, Psal. 110.2. of the Kingdom of glory, Luke 24 26. they are everyone first made to him, and then to us; — The business from eternity lay thus; here is man lost (said God to his Son) but thou shalt in fullness of time go and be born of flesh and blood, and die for them, and satisfy my justice, and they shall be thine for a portion, and they shall be called the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord, Isa. 62.12. This shalt thou do (said the Father) and upon these terms they shall live that believe. This was God's Covenant with the Son of his Love for us; to whom the Son answered (as it were) again; Content Father, I will go, and fulfil thy pleasure, and they shall be mine forever; I will in the fullness of time die for them, and they shall live in me; burnt-offerings, and sin-offerings thou hast not required, (no, it was self-offering) then said I, loe I Come, in the volume of the Book it is written of me, to do thy will O my God. In what Book was it written, that Christ should come to do the will of God? Not only in the Book of the Law and the Prophets, but also in the Book of God's decrees: In this sense the Lamb was slain from the foundation of the world. His Father from before all time appointed him to be our high Priest, and he from all eternity subscribed to his Fathers pleasure in it.

In Galath. 3.15. Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's Covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham & his seed were the promises made; he saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. There is a question whether this Covenant here mentioned, was made only betwixt God and Christ, or only betwixt God and us, or both betwixt God and Christ, & betwixt God and us. The occasion of this question is in these words, Now to Abraham, & his seed, were the promises made; he saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ. 1. Some argue hence, that there is no Covenant or promise made to us, but only to Christ, or with Christ; Christ stood for us, & artiled with God for us, and performed the conditions for life and glory; so that the promises are made all to him: yet this indeed is confessed, that because we are Christ's, and are concerned in the Covenant, it is therefore sometimes called a Covenant made with us; I will make a new Covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not that the Covenant is really made with us, but only with Christ for us; and when we feel ourselves under the Power of the promise, we begin then to know that we are in that same Covenant. But this is rather (say they) to feel ourselves in that Covenant which God hath made with Christ, than to enter into Covenant with God ourselves.

2. Others argue hence, that there is no Covenant or promise made with Christ personal, but only with Christ mystical, such who are members of Christ, and so united to Christ; for mark the Text say they) the promise is made first to Abraham, and then to his seed; this seed is such a seed as comes to have right to the promise in order from Abraham; now this cannot be Christ personal, but Christ mystical: And whereas the Text says, the promise is not made to seeds, but to one seed, which is Christ, they distinguish of a double seed of Abraham; First, there is a carnal natural seed according to the flesh, and in this sense Christ speaks to those wicked unbelieving Jews, which went about to kill him. I know ye are Abraham's seed, but ye seek to kill me. Secondly, there is a spiritual seed that walk in the faith & steps of Abraham; know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise; now the promise is made to Abraham and his seed, not seeds; (i.e.) not to both seeds, both carnal and spiritual, but only to the one, which is the spiritual, and this seed is Christ, (i.e.) Christ mystical, the body of Christ, the faithful that are knit to Christ by a true and lively faith.

3. Others argue hence, that this Covenant is made both betwixt God and Christ, and betwixt God and us; First, betwixt God and Christ: all the work of redemption and salvation was transacted betwixt God and Christ before the foundation of the world, but this doth not hinder, but that the same promise is afterwards in time made to us also: Look as it is in Covenants amongst men, while the child is yet unborn the father takes conveyance of an inheritance for his child, which he keeps in his own hand till the child be born and come to years, and then he puts it into his own possession; so it is here, we are for a time hid in the womb of God's Election, till we are brought forth by the grace of regeneration; now during this time we are not in ourselves capable of receiving any promise of life made to us; but it is made to Christ in our behalf, and he receives the promise from the Father in our stead: but yet so that when we come to be born anew, the promises are made unto ourselves, and then we are put into possession of them.

Here then is the meaning of the Text, the Covenant is made with Christ; (i.e.) with Christ, and his heirs; principally with Christ, and with Abraham's nature in Christ, and yet personally with believers, who are also the seed of Abraham. All the difference is in that term Christ, what thereby is meant, whether Christ personal, or Christ mystical, or Christ representative: And we say—

1. Not Christ personal, I mean not Christ's person singly considered, for that, 1. Would fight with the scope of Paul, whose bent it is to prove the promise of eternal life to be made to all believers: and that, 2. Would conclude the promise of eternal life to be given only to Christ, and not at all to those that are believers in Christ.

2. Not Christ Mystical, for 1. The promise is made to Christ, In whom the Covenant was confirmed. 2. In whom the nations were blessed. 3. In whom we receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. 4. Who was made a curse for us. Now not any of these can agree to Christ mystical; Christ mystical did not confirm the Covenant, nor bless the Nations, nor give the Spirit, nor was made a curse.

3. It is Christ representative, Christ-Mediator, Christ a public person, to whom the promises were made, for Christ and his heirs, are but all of them one confederate family; and as the Covenant of works was made with Adam, and all his: and there were not two Covenants, so here, the Covenant is made with the second Adam, and his children: But every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, and afterwards they that are Christ's.

I have now propounded the Object we are to look unto; it is Jesus in that eternity before all time until the Creation. Our next business is to direct us in the Art or Mystery of Grace, how we are to look unto him, in this respect.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. Of knowing Jesus carrying on the Great work of our Salvation in that Eternity.

Looking comprehends knowing, considering, desiring, hoping, believing, loving, joying, calling upon Jesus, and conforming to Jesus. If then we will have an inward experimental Look upon Jesus, we must act, and exercise all these particulars.

1. We must know Jesus, carrying on the great work of our salvation in that eternity before all time. Come, learn what this Jesus is, 1. In his relation to God, and so he is God's Son, eternally begotten before all worlds. See above, and learn it thoroughly, who it is that was begotten, for the person, when it was for the time, how it was for the manner, and what was the mutual kindness and love of him that begot, and of him that was begotten: O the height and depth of this knowledge! 2. Come, learn what this Jesus is in his relation to us before all worlds, and to that purpose study close that great transaction betwixt God and Christ for our salvation. 1. Study that project of God, that he would glorify his grace; and to this end, that he would predestinate Christ, and in Christ he would choose some of the souls of men, and amongst the rest, that he would choose thee, whom notwithstanding sin, he would make holy, and without blame before him in love. 2. Study the counsels of God concerning man before all worlds: O 'twas an hard question, how sin should be pardoned, the sinner reconciled, and yet God glorify his justice? none but the wisdom of God could ever find out a way to have had mercy on the man, and yet to take vengeance on the sin; but herein appeared the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, he devised the way to translate this man's sin (suppose thine own sins) on another's person, who was able to bear them; & to interest this man's person (suppose thine own self) in another's righteousness, who was able to cover him. 3. Study the foreknowledge of God, how the Lord knew his from everlasting with a knowledge of love and approbation; after the project was laid, and the counsels of God were agreed upon it, then God fore-knew, or fore-saw whom to embrace in his eternal love: And, O my soul, if thou art one of his, if God in Christ hath of his own free love set thee apart to life and salvation, then know it for thyself, it is inward experimental knowledge we speak of. 4. Study the purpose of God concerning thy salvation; this purpose of God speaks the stability, and certainty of thy salvation in Christ; his purpose is in, and from himself, who is God, and not man and therefore cannot repent; hath he said, and shall he not do it? hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good? 5. Study the decrees of God, they are all one with Predestination, the book of life, the seal of God: what hath the Lord decreed, predestinated, booked, sealed thee for salvation? O how blessed is the people that know this joyful sound! they shall walk in the light of thy countenance, O Lord. 6. Study the Covenant of grace, remember how the business of eternity lay thus: here is every man lost (said God to his Son) but thou shalt in fullness of time go, and be born of flesh and blood, and die for some of them, and satisfy my Justice, and they shall be thine for a portion, and they shall be called the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord. To whom the Son answered, be it so Lord, I will go and fulfil thy pleasure, and they shall be mine forever. Observe, and be acquainted with this Covenant in that very Dialogue: first God demands of his Son that he lay down his life, and for his labor he promiseth that he shall be his seed, and God shall give him many children. And secondly, the Son consents to lay down his life, and saith, here I am to do thy will O God, thou hast given me a body. What, O my soul, that the Father and Christ should transact a bargain from eternity concerning thee? that there should be any communing betwixt the Father and the Son concerning thy happiness and salvation? Surely this is worthy thy pains, and study; O hear it, and know thou it for thy good.

SECT. II. Of considering Jesus in that respect.

2. WE must consider Jesus, carrying on this work of salvation in that eternity. It is not enough to study, and know him, but according to the measure of Knowledge we have attained, we must ponder, and muse, and meditate and consider of him: now consideration is an expatiating, and enlarging of the mind and heart on this or that subject: consideration is a fixing of our thoughts, a steadfast bending of our minds to some spiritual matter, till it work on the affections, and conversation. We may know, and yet be inconsiderate of that we do know; but when the intention of our mind and heart is taken up about someone known object, and other things are not for the present taken notice of, this is consideration. O that, if it were possible, we could so consider Jesus in this first period of eternity, as that for a while at least we could forget all other things! Christians! I beseech you be dead to the world, be insensible of all other things, and look only on Jesus; it is said that men in a frenzy are insensible of what you do to them, because their minds are taken up about that which they apprehend so strongly; and if ever there was any object made known to take up the mind of a spiritual man, it is this, even this: not but that other objects may be deeply and seriously minded of men; it is reported of Archimedes, who was a great Mathematician, that when the City was taken wherein he was, and the warlike instruments of death clattering about his ears, and all was in a tumult, yet he was so busy about drawing his lines, that he heard no noise, nor did he know there was any danger: but if such objects as those could take up the intention of his mind, so as not to regard other things, how much more should this consideration of Christ? If a carnal heart, a man that minds earthly things, be so taken up about them, because they are an object suitable to him, how much more should a gracious heart, that can see into the reality of these things of God & Christ from everlasting, be so taken up with them as to mind nothing else? come then, O my soul, and set thy consideration on work, as thus.—

1. Consider Jesus: in his relation to God, how he was the eternal Son of the Father: I know in some respects we have little reason thus to look on Jesus: as we are sinners, and fallen from God, there is no looking on an absolute Deity: alas, that Majesty (because perfectly and essentially good) is no other then an enemy to sinners as sinners; so as we are sinners, and fallen from God, there is no looking on the Son of God; I mean on the Son of God, considered in the notion of his own eternal being, as coequal, and coessential to God the Father: Alas! our sin hath offended his justice, which is himself: and what have we to do with that dreadful power, which we have provoked? But considering Jesus as Jesus, which sounds a Savior to all sinners believing on him: and that this Jesus contains the two natures of Christ, both the God-head, & man-hood; now we that have our interest in him, may draw near, and (as we are capable) behold the brightness of his glory. To this purpose the Scriptures have discovered to us God the Son, how he is the second person in the Trinity, having the foundation of personal subsistence from the Father alone, of whom by communication of his essence he is begotten from all eternity; when there were no depths I was brought forth,—before the mountains were settled, and before the hills I was brought forth. Ante colles genita eram, before the mountains I was begotten, as some; or, ante colles filiata eram, before the mountains I was sonned his son, as others translate it.—why thus O my soul, consider Jesus, the Son of God, but in this consideration be not too curious; thou hearest of the generation of the Son, and of the procession of the Holy Ghost, but for the manner how the Father begets the Son, or how the Father and Son do spire, and send forth the Holy spirit, be not too busy to enquire; thou mayest know a little, and consider a little, but for the depth and main of this great mystery of grace, let the generation of the Son of God be honored with silence. I remember one being too curious, and too inquisitive, what God was doing on that long Evum of eternity before he made the world? it was answered, he decreed to make hell for such curious inquisitors. Be not therefore too nice in this consideration: keep within bounds of sobriety and humility; and then as thou art able to comprehend, the Scriptures will discover that before God made the world in that long-long Evum of eternity, he was doing these things,—

- 1. Some things in relation to himself.
- 2. Some things in relation to his creatures.

1. Some things in relation to himself; and those things were either proper, or common to the three persons. 1. The things proper to each of the persons were those internal, incommunicable actions of God, as 1. To beget; and that belongs only to the Father, who is neither made, nor created, nor begotten of any. 2. To be begotten; and that belongs only to the Son, who is of the Father alone, not made, nor created, but begotten. 3. To proceed from both; and that belongs only to the Holy Ghost, who is of the Father, and the Son, neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding. And these were God's actions in that eternity before all worlds: the Father was begetting God the Son: the Son was begotten of God the Father, the Holy Ghost was proceeding from God the Father, and God the Son. But what, were these actions of God, never in action during all that eternity? yes; as they are called internal actions, so they are permanent; look as the Sun doth always beget his beams, and both Sun and beams do send forth the heats: So the Father from all eternity ever did, and now doth, and ever will beget his Son, and both the Father and the Son ever did and now do, and ever will aspire and breath forth the Holy Ghost: And therefore Orig•n saith well, Our Jesus is the brightness of God's glory; now the brightness of glory is not once begotten, and then afterwards leaves to be begotten; but as often as the glory riseth from whence the brightness springeth, so often doth the brightness of glory arise. Before the hills, was I brought forth. Some translate thus, ante colles generat, and not as others, generavit me, before the mountains were settled he begetteth me. Surely the Son of God is ever begetting, and the Holy Spirit is ever proceeding.

2. The things common to the three persons in that eternity were those internal actions of God, wherein the three persons did communicate: as 1. That one was in another, and possessed one another; the Father remaining with the Son, the Son with the Father, and the Holy Ghost in, and with them both. Thus we read of Christ, the Lord possessed me, in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. And in the beginning was the word, and the word was with God. And I am in the Father, and the Father in me. 2. That one glorified another, the Father glorified the Son, and the Son glorified the Father, and the holy Ghost glorified both the Father and the Son: And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.

3. That one delighted in another, the Father delighted in the Son, the Son delighted in the Father, and the Holy Ghost delighted in them both; then I was by him, as one brought up with him, and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him. I was daily his delight, in the Original, delights intimating that the Son was variety of delights unto his Father: rejoicing always before him, Christ speaks in terms very quaint and familiar, always rejoicing, q. d. greatly sporting: it is a Metaphor or simile taken from little ones which sport and play before their parents. O see how the Father and the Son rejoice in one another's fellowship: nay, see how they spend that long eternity before the creation in nothing but rejoicing and delights: The Father delights in his Son, and the Son rejoiceth in his Father. Consider O my Soul, thou hast sometimes had a tickling to know, what God was a doing before the Creation? why now be sober, and satisfied with this knowledge: God spent all that time (if I may call it time) in delighting himself in Jesus; why, this was God's work to delight in his Son, and he so delighted in him, that he desired no other pleasure than the company and beholding of him; which accordingly he twice told from heaven, while Christ was on earth, saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased: —in whom I am well pleased. The first sound was at his Baptism, Matth. 3.17. and the second at his transfiguration, Mat. 17.5.

2. Some other things God was a doing in relation to his creatures; they will fall in at our next consideration: only this by the way. As God and Christ rejoiced in the fruition of one another without communicating the notice thereof to any creature; so in the next verse we find them rejoicing in the salvation of men: and my delights were with the sons of men. Amidst the other considerations, O my soul think of this: what, that God from all eternity should delight in thy salvation; why this consideration sets out to purpose the heart and desire of God to save thy soul: for, 1. Delights arise out of the strongest and choicest desires; men are pleased with many things in which they delight not. 2 God and Christ are mentioned here to delight in this work, and in no other work of theirs, not in the Angels, not in the world, nor in anything in it. 3. This their delight is mentioned next to their delighting in each other. 4. This delight is aforehand, whilst God's heart was only in the expectation, and his mind but laying the plot of thy salvation, all these argue how great a matter this was in God's esteem, and how much his heart was in it, even from everlasting. O let these fall into thy consideration?

2. Consider Jesus merely in his relation to us: consider him in that great transaction betwixt God and him for our salvation. And that we may settle our thoughts, and dwell here,—

1. Consider the Project. The great God having entertained thoughts within himself, to communicate himself out of his aloneness everlasting, he lays this plot, that all he would do in that respect, it should be to the praise of the glory of his grace. O my soul consider, meditate and muse on this plot of the Almighty; it is contained by the Apostle in a very few words, do thou weigh them all: here is, 1. The Praise. 2. The glory. 3. Of his Grace. 1. Praise is a setting forth of this or that, by word, or deed, or gesture; it contains in it reverend respect, an high esteem, a strong admiration. 2. Glory is the glorious being, or essence of God, the glory of God in himself. Sometimes we read of the glory of his power, that is, his glorious essence which is most powerful, and sometimes of the glory of his Majesty, that is, his glorious essence which is most Majestical; and sometimes of the glory of his grace, that is, his glorious essence, which is most gracious and merciful; but, 3. Why the glory of his grace? mercy and grace meet both in love, only they differ thus, mercy is love as it helps the miserable, and grace is love as it gives good things, freely without desert; here then is the great design which God from everlasting carried on, that the glorious essence of his free love, free grace, should be especially manifested to his Saints, that so thy might admire it, esteem it, honor it, and sound forth the praises of it. All the other designs of God were but subservient unto this. Some reckon up three great designs of the Almighty communicating himself; as 1. The glory of his Saints. 2. The glory of Christ. 3. The glory of himself, and especially the glory of his grace. 1. That his Saints should be glorious, and to that purpose he made heaven and earth, and he makes them Lord of all, all things are yours. 2. That Christ should be glorious, and to that purpose he makes the Saints, and gives them to Christ, all things are yours, and you are Christ's. And certainly saith the Apostle, at the last day, Christ shall come to be glorified in his Saints, and to be admired in all them that believe. 3. That God himself should be glorified; he made all things for himself. —Bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth, even everyone that is called by my name, for I have created him for my glory. Now this is the high design of God, to which all the rest are subservient; mark the steps, all things are yours, and you are Christ's, and Christ is God's (i.) For God, and for his glory: the two former designs are to which, but not for which God worketh: he that buildeth an house, that he may lay a sure foundation, and that he may raise the frame, he gives it the due filling which belongs to it: but these are not his proper ends, his main design: but that he may have an house for his habitation: So God works, many things to our glory, and that in us Christ may be glorious; but the proper end, that high design which he hath in all, it is his own glory. And yet O my soul, consider a little further, the plot of our salvation, of the Saints glory, and of Christ's glory, as it aims at the glory of God, so especially at the glory of his grace: As if we see that one doth this or that in wisdom, it is the glory of his wisdom: if he do it in strength or power, it is the glory of his power: if he do it out of grace, it is the glory of his grace: so God designed the salvation of our souls out of his mere grace, favor, love, he must needs intend to have his grace notified in us, and to have it (being known) accordingly admired, and praised, and honored by us; not but that God must be glorified in his wisdom, power, justice, holiness, and his other attributes; ay, but especially in this, it is the grace of God in which he most delighteth, even as virtuous Kings affect, above all their other virtues, to be had in honor for their clemency, and bounty. So it is with our God the King of Kings, Lord of Lord's; all he doth is to this end, that his grace may be manifested to his greater glory. And to this end is the glory of Christ, and the glory of Christians referred. Why Lord, that this should be thy plot, to save my soul, that my soul should praise the glory of thy grace? that thy grace should before all worlds think on me for good? O how should I but think on thee, and thy free grace? How should I but admire it, adore it, praise it, exalted it above Sun and Moon, and Stars? how should I but cry out with the Apostle, Oh the depth of the riches of thy grace! for of him, and through him, and to him are all things, to whom be glory forever, and ever, Amen.

2. Consider the counsels of God about thy salvation: he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: and with him is counsel, and with him is understanding. This counsel (as we have discovered) was primarily about that reconciliation of the riches of his grace, and the glory of justice. Consider this, O my soul, thy sin put all the attributes of God to a kind of conflict; hereupon was that great and mighty counsel▪ how God should make way for his love and goodness, and yet satisfy his truth, and justice? at last the wisdom of God found out that glorious and wonderful expedient, the Lord Jesus Christ: is not this the meaning of the Apostle? whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his Blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins. Poulder, and weigh these words! God sets not forth Christ to be a propitiation to declare only his mercy in the forgiveness of sins: how? is there anything but mercy in the forgiveness of sins: yes, there is something else, there is righteousness also, and therefore he hath set forth Christ to be a propitiation, that he might declare his righteousness; nay, see it repeated, to declare I say his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus: not that he might be merciful, but that he might be just in justifying him that believeth in Jesus. This Text Luther had a great deal ado to understand, and he prayed much, before he could get the right meaning of it.

This is the great mystery of the Gospel; no wonder if a poor man could not reach it: This is that which set the infinite wisdom of God on work from all eternity, how to find a way to save sinners, and to be infinitely righteous notwithstanding. — Nay, yet O my soul consider, a little further; not only is the mercy of God in this way glorified, but the glory of his justice is as much, yea more then if the sinner were eternally damned: — It is made good thus.—

1. When God appointed a surety, his Son, and charged our debts upon him to satisfy his justice: in that God would not spare his Son the least farthing token, I mean, not the least degree of punishment; hereby the Lord shows a stronger love to justice then if he had damned ten thousand, thousand creatures. Suppose a Malefactor comes before a Judge, the Judge will not spare the Malefactor, but commands satisfaction to the Law; this shows that the Judge loves justice: but if the Judges own Son be a delinquent, and it appears before all the Country, that the Judge will not spare him, the Judge now doth more honor justice in this, than in condemning a thousand others: So when the Lord shall cast many thousands to Hell there to be tormented forever, and ever, and ever, this shows that God loves justice; but when his own Son shall take our sins upon him, and God will not spare him, (that is the very word in the Scripture, he spared not his own Son) this, surely this declares God's love to righteousness more than if all the World should be Damned.

2. Suppose the sinner that is reconciled had been Damned, then the justice of God had been but in satisfying, and never had been fully satisfied: but in that way that God hath found out to save a sinner, his justice is not only satisfying, but it comes fully to be satisfied, to have enough. As for instance; suppose a man to be a creditor to one, who owes him 100000 l. this man is poor, and the utmost he can pay is but a penny a day; suppose the creditor should lay him in the Goale until he had paid the utmost farthing, it is true he would be receiving day after day, but he would never be paid so long as the debtor lives; now if another rich man should come, and lay down an 100000 l. at once, the creditor is presently satisfied. Why here is the difference betwixt God's satisfying his Justice upon sinners, and upon Jesus Christ; God comes upon the sinner, and requires the debt of punishment, because he did not pay the debt of obedience: God casts him into Prison, and the utmost he can pay, is but (as it were) a penny a day; and hence the poor sinner must still be paying, and paying, and paying to Eternity: this is the ground of their Eternal punishment in Hell, because in any finite time they can never pay enough: But now comes Jesus Christ, and he fully pays the debt at once, so that justice saith, I have enough, I am satisfied: Surely this is the greater Glory to the very justice of God.

These were the counsels of God from all Eternity, how he should make way for his love and goodness, and yet satisfy his Truth and Justice. O my soul, consider and wonder! Jesus Christ was the Expedient, and in Christ not only God's mercy, but his justice is Exalted, yea more Exalted, and more Glorified in thy salvation, then ever it could have been in thy Damnation.

3 Consider the fore-knowledge of God; he knew from everlasting whom he would set apart for life and salvation. All the Saints of God from first to last, they were then present to him, and before him, and he did look on them in his Beloved Christ. Before there was a World, or a man, or any creature in it, he fore-knew Adam, and Abraham, and Isaac and Jacob, and all the Patriarchs, and all the Prophets, and all the Apostles, & all the Disciples of Christ, and Believers in Christ; And O my soul, if thou art one of God's Elect, he foreknew thee with a knowledge of love and approbation, he had thee in his Eye, and Heart: he had thoughts on Jacob, when he was yet unborn, and had done neither good nor evil. Assure thyself, the Lord works not without prevision or fore-knowledge of the things effected; that cannot be in God, which is not to be found in a wise and prudent man; he that builds an house hath the frame of it first in himself: and the Psalmist tells thee, that the eyes of God did see thy substance yet being imperfect: in this Book of knowledge were all thy members written, when as yet there was none of them! yea, he knew thee with a knowledge of singular love; he embraced thee in his Eternal love, as it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated•• will not say, that this love was actually bestowed on thee till due time, yet it was prepared for thee from all Eternity: and hence it is called, an everlasting love; The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee.

O muse, and meditate, and ponder on this love! it contains in it these particulars: as, 1. The eternal good will of God: what else is the love of God towards the Elect, but his everlasting good will to show them mercy, to do them good, and to save their souls? hence the Angels sung that Anthem at Christ's birth, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men. 2. The Eternal pleasure and delight of God in the sons of men; the greatest delight that God hath, or ever had, it is in communicating himself to his Son firstly, and next unto his Saints: nay, such delight he takes in letting out his mercy to his Saints: as that he was well-pleased with the death of his own Son, as a means conducing thereunto. O wonderful! one would think that the death of Christ should be the most abhorring to the heart of God of anything in the world, and yet saith the Scripture, It pleased the Lord to bruise him; he took a pleasure and delight in the very bruising of Jesus Christ: the Lord saw this was the way for him to communicate himself in the fullness of his grace unto his Saints, and therefore though it cost him so dear as the death of his own Son, yet he was well-pleased with it. 3. This love of God contains in it a fore-knowledge and approbation of all those effects of his love, whether they be temporal concerning this life, or Eternal concerning the life to come. Concerning these effects of his love, saith John, Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. q. d. Behold it, stand amazed at it, that children of wrath should become the sons of the most high God: for a beggar on the dunghill, a vagabond, a runagate from God, a prodigal, a stranger to God, whom the Lord had no cause to think on, to be made a Son of God Almighty, O divine love! Pause a while, and muse on this! O my soul, that God should fore-know thee from all Eternity with a knowledge of love and approbation, it is admirable to consider, I say it is admirable to consider.

4. Consider the purpose of God concerning thy salvation: God hath not appointed (or purposed) us wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. As when we have a will to do anything, there follows upon this in the mind a settled purpose to effect it; so when God hath loved some to life, there is in God a settled purpose of bringing them to it: that the purpose of God according to Election might stand, or be sure; it imports God's stability, and steadiness, and constancy, and firmness in saving souls. There is much inconstancy and fickleness in the love of man, or in the love of a woman, but the love of God to his people is a steady love; as the Bridegroom rejoiceth over the Bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee; not only so doth thy God, but so shall thy God rejoice over thee. God's purposes are without any alteration, the love of Christ after thousands of years is still as the love of a Bridegroom upon the wedding day; indeed then ordinarily love is hot, and appears much; so is Christ's love, and so is God's love ever hot; there is no moment of time from Eternity to Eternity wherein God rejoiceth not over his Saints, as the Bridgroom over his Bride; not only as an husband over his wife, but as a Bridegroom over his Bride, we may say of this purpose of God, as it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be World without end.

O my soul, muse and meditate on this purpose of God, and by consequence on the sure mercies of David; it may be it is not always alike sure to thee; the love of God as the shining of the Sun doth not always in the fruits of it shining out so gloriously, but the Sun keeps his course in a steady way: what though it be sometimes clouded? what though at times it shine not so gloriously as at high-noon? yet the purpose of God according to Election must stand. All the Devils in Hell cannot frustrate God's purpose concerning only one soul: this is the Fathers will which sent me (saith Christ) that of all which he hath given me I should lose none.

5. Consider God's decree concerning thy souls salvation, and the means to it. As the purpose of God, so the decree of God speaks the stability and certainty of the thing decreed. The foundation of God standeth sure;(i) The decree of God touching man's Salvation is unchangeable. If the Laws of the Medes and Persians were so absolute, that they could not be reversed, then much less can the decrees of God be reversed: no man that is not Elected can be Elected; and no man that is Elected can possibly be damned. My sheep hear my voice (saith Christ) and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck t•• out of my hand. And it must needs be so, for God's decree is grounded on the Eternal and unchangeable will of God; and hence we say that there is a certain number of the Elect known only to God, which cannot possibly be increased or diminished. I know whom I have chosen, saith Christ. And yet thou canst not, O my soul, hence infer, that thou mayest be secure; for in this decree the end and the means are joined together of God, and they cannot be separated by any man: if thou beest not godly, never expect to be happy: God's decree of Predestination is as well for the giving of grace, as for the giving of glory.

6. Consider the Covenant struck betwixt God and Christ for thy salvation. If thou wouldst fain be acquainted with the very Articles of it, go on then, take Scripture along, and first on God's part thou mayest observe, and meditate, and consider of these particulars. —

1. That there was a designation and appointment of Christ from all Eternity to the office of Mediatorship: whence Christ is said to be sealed by the Father, for him hath God the Father sealed: and chosen of the Father, behold my servant whom I uphold, mine Elect, or chosen one.

2. There was a commandment from the Father to the Son, which he must obey, and submit unto. As first, he had a command what to teach his people, as the Prophet of the Church, for I have not spoken of myself (saith Christ) but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. Secondly, he had a commandment to lay down his life fore those that were given him, no man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself; I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again; this Commandment have I received of my Father.

3. There was a Promise from the Father to the Son: the Father covenants with him in these things; first, that he will give him the Spirit in abundance. Behold my servant whom I uphold;—I have put my Spirit upon him, he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. —And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the Spirit of counsel and might, the Spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord. Secondly, that he will give him assistance and help in this great work of Redemption. I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thy hand; what's that? why, I will strengthen thee with my power, I will so hold thy hand that thou shalt not be discouraged in the work; He shall not fail, nor be discouraged till he have set judgment upon the Earth. Thirdly, that he will give him a blessed success, that he shall not labor in vain, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hands: he shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied. Christ's suffering were as a woman's travail, though she suffer many pains and pangs, yet she sees her Child at last; so shall Christ see many believing on his Name: they are the promise made by the Father to the Son, that Nations that know him not shall run unto him. Fourthly, that he will give him and his Redeemed ones everlasting glory; to Christ himself there is a promise of glory, he hath glorified thee. And to the Members of Christ there is a promise of glory; and this promise of glory to them was made known to Christ from everlasting: it was one of the secrets of God, and Christ brings out that secret from the bosom of his Father, and reveals it to his Disciples. It is my Fathers pleasure (said he) to give you the Kingdom; Christ knew his Fathers will by the Covenant passing betwixt his Father and him, and this will of the Father concerning glory promised to the Saints Christ doth bring forth to light. These were the Articles of the Covenant on God's part; now O my soul, see them on Christ's part in these particulars.—

1. There was an acceptation of the office to which he was designed by the Father; he did not take the office of Mediatorship upon himself, but first the Father calls him to it, and then the Son accepts it: Christ glorified not himself to be made an high Priest, but he that said unto him, thou art my Son, today have I begotten thee; he called him, and then the Son answered, Lo I come.

2. There was a promise on Christ's part to depend and trust upon God for help: And again I will put my trust in him, they are the words of Christ to his Father. And Isaiah brings in Christ as looking for help from God, for the Lord God will help me, therefore shall I not be confounded — And behold the Lord will help me, who is he that shall condemn me? whereto agrees that other passage, and my God shall be my strength.

3. There was a promise of submission to his Fathers will in bearing the reproaches and injuries that should be done to him, and to lay down his life for those, that were given to him by the Father: the Lord God opened my ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back, I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair, I hid not my Face from shame and spitting, and therefore my Father loves me because I lay down my life. Christ first thus Covenanted with his Father, and then he was careful to discharge the same, and at last he tells God, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

4. There was an earnest expectation of that glory which the Father promised Christ and his members: And now O Father glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the World was. And Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me, for thou lovedst me before the Foundation of the World.—These were the Articles of the Covenant on Christ's part, and hence it is that God is called the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, viz. by reason of the Covenant.

O my soul, with what delight mayest thou consider, muse, and ponder on these Articles? what, that God should make a Covenant, and enter into these, and these Articles with his own Son for thy good, and for thy Eternal good? what, that God should bring in the second person in the Trinity to be the head of the Covenant as on thy part? what a mercy is this? O run over and over this meditation, a thousand, and a thousand times! O consider thy hope of Eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began! If thy soul question what promise was there made before the World began? to whom was the promise made? who was there before the World began for God to make any promise to? why now thou hast learned it was only to the Son of God, the second person in the Trinity. There was a most blessed transaction between God the Father and God the Son, before the world began, for thy everlasting good; and upon that transaction depends all thy hope, and all thy salvation. O this is worthy of thy deep, and sad, and serious, and inmost meditation. I have been particular and large in this passage of Looking unto, or considering Jesus, but I shall be brief in the rest.

SECT. III. Of desiring after Jesus in that respect.

3. WE must desire after Jesus carrying on the great work of our salvation in that Eternity. It is not enough to know & consider, but we must desire. Now, desire is a passion looking after the attainment of some good which we enjoy not, and which we imagine to be fitting for us. In this respect we cannot desire after Jesus, as now to carry on that work of our salvation before the World began, for that work is already perfectly done; But these things we may desire after, as, 1. After the manifestation of that work in us. 2. After God and Christ the complotters and actors of that great work for us. 3. After the full and utmost execution, whereby God effectually works in time according to all his workings, or decrees before time.

1. We must desire after the manifestation of this work in us. We have heard of marvelous, excellent, glorious things done by Jesus Christ for his Saints from all Eternity; & oh what desires now should be in us to know that we are of that number? when I hear and consider that there was such a project, and such counsels, and such love, and such a purpose, and such decrees, and such a Covenant betwixt God and Christ for salvation of souls; and withal, that they are but few in comparison concerning whom God and Christ hath all this care, will not this whet on my desires? and make me cry, and cry again, Oh that these loves were mine! how happy were I, if I had a share in these eternal thoughts of God? Methinks we should not hear of such transactions, but it should stir up our hearts in infinite desires; methinks we should pant after assurance, and still be wishing, Oh what is truth? and what is Christ? and what did Christ for me before I was, or before the World was? I would I knew him, I would I could enjoy him, I would I were assured that he had one good thought of me in that Eternity! Christians! if you have any share in those transactions, sooner or later you will feel these desires? nay, if my sinful heart deceive me not, upon the very consideration of these things I feel myself another creature in my desires then I was before. Tell me, you that have took a full view of God & Christ, and of all these wonders of Eternity: do you not sensibly differ from yourselves in your affections? Is not the world, worldly pleasures, worldly profits, and worldly honors fallen too; yea, ten in an hundred with you? have they not lost their price? would you not rather be assured that your names are written in the Book of Life, then to have all the world yours; yea, and all the Devils in Hell subject to your commands? Certainly, if these revelations work nothing in your hearts, if your affections be so strong and hearty to the world, and the vanities of it; if your desires be so impure, and strongly working downwards, that God's ancient loves, and everlasting workings, have no power on your hearts, it is a very sad condition. If David may have his wish, it runs thus, Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us; he would have the manifestation of God's Eternal love; one smile of his countenance (as an image of that countenance which God had towards him before the world began) was more gladness to his heart, then all that which the men of the world had, in the time that their corn, and their wine increased.

2. We may and must desire after God and Christ, the complotters and actors of that great work for us; what, hath the Gospel revealed this truth, that before the Creation God and Christ were busied about our good? yea, and hath Christ especially, that came out of the bosom of his Father, & brought the treasures of his Fathers counsel to the world, discovered such love to men? how then should our desires be after God in Christ? Whom have I in heaven but thee? & there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee. A right beholding of Christ in his eternal workings, will cause a desire of Christ above all desires; the heart now thirsts for nothing but him that is all, all power, all love, all holiness, all happiness: tell such a soul of the world, and gold, and glory; O what are these? the soul will quickly tell you, the world is dung, and gold is dung, & glory is dung, all is but loss & dung for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord. Give me God, & Christ, saith the soul, or I die; Oh my desires are to him who hath done all this for me. Is not this the period still of thy expression at the end of every discourse, would Christ were mine? thou hearest it may be, some worldings talk, such a one, and such a one hath got so much in these times; he that was yesterday as poor as Lazarus, he is this day like that nameless rich man, clothed in purple, and fine linen, and faring sumptuously every day; ay, but dost not thou reply either in word or heart, would Christ were mine, and then I had got more than he? Poor soul, dost thou not gasp only after Christ, when thou fetchest (as I may say) the very deepest breath? canst thou read over the generation of Jesus the Son of God, the time when he was begotten, the manner of his begetting, the mutual kindness and love of him that begets, and of him that is begotten? and dost not thou pant, and breath, and gasp after Jesus at every period? canst thou read over Jesus his acts and decrees in reference to thyself? canst thou turn over those many leaves, in every of which is discovered those everlasting loves of God in his projects, counsels, foreknowledge, purpose, decree, covenant for thy souls happiness? and art thou not ready at every discovery to sing David's Psalm, as the heart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee O God; my soul thirsteth for God, for the living God, O when shall I come and appear before God? O my soul, hadst thou but these pantings, thirstings, breathings after God and Christ, thou mightest comfortably conclude, these are the fruits of God's Spirit, it is the Spirit of the Lord Jesus which makes those sighs and groans in thee, which cannot be expressed. He and thee sigh together, one in another, and one after another; O therefore look, Look unto Jesus, and sigh, and desire after him.

3. We may and must desire after the full and utmost execution whereby God effectually Works in time according to all his workings or decrees before time. God that purposed and decreed from all Eternity, he will not have done the full execution of that purpose or decree till that after-Eternity, in that world without end. Indeed some part is a fulfilling now, but the main, the great part is yet to come: why then as we see the Plot, let us desire after the full accomplishment, let us desire after the glory without end, to which we were predestinated before the beginning. It was Paul's desire to be dissolved, & to be with Christ. As men burdened, so should we desire and groan after the enjoyments of God in the world to come. O my soul, that thou were but cast in the Apostles mould, that they affections were but on the wing, that they might take flight and steer their course towards heaven, and thereupon that thou mightest say, yond is the glorious house, the goodly building, made without hands, which God from all Eternity, decreed to be my home, my rest, my dwelling place to all Eternity; and in yond stately Fabric, is many an heavenly Inhabitant before I come: there are Angels, and there are all the souls of Sain•s, that from Adam to this day have had their pass out of this sinful world: yea, there is Jesus the Son of God; and there is God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost; and if I am predestinated to this fellowship, Lord, when shall I have run through the means that I may come to this end? O my end! where is my end? where is my Lord, my God, my Comforter? where is my rest? where is my end? I cannot be at rest without my end, and therefore come Lord Jesus, come quickly, be like a Roe, or a young Hart upon the Mountains of Spices. Christians! why are not your Spirits always breathing thus after the glory, to which you are predestinated? why do not you long after full enjoyment? the utmost execution of God's decree? why are not your hearts, your souls, your spirits already in heaven? Surely there be your relations; your Father is there, your elder brother is there, and there are many, I dare say most of your other younger brethren: again, there is your interest, your estate is there, if you believe: and therefore, Where should your hearts be, but where your treasure is? come then, come, set in tune those desires of your souls, set your affections on things above, especially on that one thing Jesus Christ: Looking unto Jesus.

SECT. IV. Of hoping in Jesus in that respect.

4. WE must hope in Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in that Eternity. It is not enough to know and consider, and desire; but we must hope, and maintain our hope as to our own interest. Now hope is a passion, whereby we expect, probably or certainly some future good. All the question is, whether that salvation, concerning which the great transaction was betwixt God and Christ, belongs now to me? and what are the grounds and foundations on which my hope is built? I know some exceedingly abuse this Doctrine; If God had before all worlds appointed me to salvation, why then I may live as I list; I need not hear, or pray, or confer, or perform any holy Duty, for I am sure I shall be saved. And thus at once they take away all grounds of hope. It is true, God's decrees are unchangeable, but they do not afford any such inferences or deductions as these: you might as well say, the Lord hath appointed me to live to such a time, and before that time I shall not, cannot die, and therefore I need no meat nor drink, nor clothes, nor any other thing: Ah silly, foolish, devilish, arguing! God's decree is for the means, as well as for the end; whom God hath decreed to save, them also hath he decreed to call, to justify, to sanctify, before he save: O my Soul, look to the grounds whereon they hope is built: if those be weak, thy hope is weak: but if those be strong, thy hope will prove most strong; and certain, and prudent.

In the disquisition of these grounds, say not in thine heart who shall ascend into Heaven? or who shall descend into the deep? seek not above or below: it is not possible for thee to go bodily into Heaven, to see the Records of Eternity, and to read thy name in the Book of Life, but search into these fruits and effects of thy election As—

1. If thou beest within God's decrees for salvation, then, sooner or later, God will cause the power of his Word to come with authority and conviction upon thy conscience: knowing brethren, beloved your election of God, for our Gospel came not unto you in Word only, but also in power. The Apostle speaks thus of others; he might know they were the Elected of God, either by his judgment of charity, or by a spirit of discerning, which was vouchsafed to some in the Apostles times; but how comes he immediately to know this truth? by this glorious effect, our Gospel came not in Word only, but also in power. Oh 'tis good to consider with what power the Word preached falls into thy heart; doth it convince thee, humble thee, mollie thee, soften thee? this argues thou belongest to God. The Word preached will be more than the word of a man, more than a mere human Oration, or verbal declamation, where it comes in power: Oh! it will be like fire in thy bowels, like a two edged Sword in the secret places of thy heart; thou wilt cry out, verily God is here: Oh the power! the conviction, the meltings of my soul that I feel within me!

2. If God hath ordained thee to Salvation, then, sooner or later God will effectually call thee. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; this calling is a calling of the Soul from sin, from amongst the rest of the World unto Jesus Christ; it is such a call as enables the soul to follow Christ; as Matthew being called by Christ, he arose and followed Christ. These two are linked together in Paul's golden chain, predestination and effectual vocation. We are bound to give thanks always unto God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord; and why so? because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation.—Wherunto he called you by the Gospel to the obtaining of the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ. All those that belong to God's election, are sometime or other effectually called by the Word and Spirit of Christ; and it must needs be so, because as the Lord hath put a difference betwixt his Elect and others before the world was, and he will make a final difference betwixt them and others, after the end of the World; so he will have them differenced and distinguished whilst thy are in this World by this inward, effectual, operative calling; they are men of other minds, wills, affections, dispositions, conversations; they are called from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. As the Apostle, ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord. — Be not ye therefore partakers with them.

3. If thou art chosen for salvation, then sooner or later thou shalt have true soul-saving justifying faith; As many as were ordained to eternal life believed. When God hath a people to call home to himself, he either brings them to the means, or the means to them, and those that belong to the Election of Grace believe; O my soul, hast thou this saving faith? not a fancied faith, a dead faith, an easy faith, but saving faith; such a faith as was wrought in thee by the Word and Spirit with power; such a faith as was not in any power to give, nor in any power to receive, until God enable thee by his Spirit; then here is thy ground that thou art ordained to eternal life: for whom he calls he justifies; and we are justified by faith. Not that the essence of faith justifies, but faith justifies instrumentally, in that it lays hold upon that which justifies, even the righteousness of Christ Jesus.

4. If thou art decreed for salvation, then sooner or later the Lord will beget and increase in thee, grace, holiness, sanctification: Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit. God predestinates his people unto holiness; he chose us in Christ before the foundation of the World, that we should be holy, and without blame before him. If God appoint thee to eternal life, he doth here in this World appoint thee to an holy gracious life. No sanctification, no election; no grace, no glory; thou art to be a precious Jewel here, ere God will make thee up at that great day. Observe the chain, Rom. 8.29. If I be sanctified, with the Divine Nature, in which glory is begun, then I am justified; if justified, then I have been called according to purpose; if called, then I was predestinated; and if predestinated to means, then I was foreknown, as one whom God would choose to the end, even immarcessible and eternal glory.

5. If thou art appointed and prepared for glory, then God will give thee a thankful heart for so great a mercy: thou canst no more keep in the heart from over-flowing, when thou art sensible of this everlasting love, then thou canst put bounds to the Sea: See Paul praising God for the Election of himself and others, after I heard of your faith and love, I cease not to give thanks; and Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world. And what glorious triumphs doth Paul in the person of all the Elect make over all kind of enemies that can be thought of? he challengeth every adversary to put forth his sting, and why? even because God hath Elected, and nothing can separate them from this unchangeable love; & this was it that begot his thanksgiving, I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. O my soul, how is thy heart affected with praise and thankfulness in this matter? he that bestoweth great things, looks for great return of thanks, especially this being all thou canst do.

6. If the project, counsel, love, purpose, decree, and Covenant of God with Christ concerned thee, and thy souls happiness, then God will crown thee with perseverance, and a steadfast continuance in the way of grace thou wast first set in: final apostasy, and total backsliding from the ways of God, can never befall those that are thus chosen, they went from us, because they were not of us, said the Apostle; and if it were possible they should deceive the very Elect, said Christ; but it is certainly impossible, and why? I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall never depart from me. Oh what a blessed mercy is this, when there are so many hours of temptation in the world, so many blustering storms and tempests that are able to raise up the very roots, did not that immortal seed preserve them. Of this sign we are sure, if any of the former belongs to us; but to this we cannot actually seal till the end of our life.

Come now, are these, O my soul, the grounds of thy hopes? hath God's word come with power on thy heart? hath the Lord so effectually called thee, that thou hast left all to follow Christ? dost thou believe on the Lord Jesus for life and for salvation? art thou holy? is thy life holy? dost thou walk exactly, as the grace of God which bringeth to salvation teacheth? Canst thou with enlarged thankfulness amplify the love and grace of God in thy election; surely these effects are the very fuel of hope, they are the blessed and clear evidences so thy souls election; and therefore hope well, take strong consolation; it is clear as the Sun, that God hath predestinated thee to life, and that thy name is written in the Book of Life, and that none in Heaven, or on Earth, or in Hell, shall be able to blot it out again. Away with all sad, dumpish, dejected thoughts: Look unto Jesus: hope in Christ, that, that very salvation concerning which that great transaction was betwixt God and Christ, belongs even to thee, and that one day thou shalt see it, and enjoy the happiness of it to all Eternity

SECT. V. Of believing in Jesus in that respect.

5. WE must believe in Jesus, as carrying on that great work of salvation for us in that Eternity. It is not enough to know, and consider, and desire, and hope, but we must believe. Now this is the nature and property of faith, to apply all these ancient and future doings and dealings of God to ourselves, as if they were now present. Some difference there is betwixt hope and faith; as hope hath respect to that which the Word promiseth, rem verbi; but faith respects the word itself, verbum rei; hope eyes chiefly the mercy and goodness of the promise, but faith eyes mainly the authority and truth of the promiser; hope looks upon its object as future, but faith only looks upon the object as present; both make a particular application to themselves, but hope in a waiting for it; and faith in a way of now enjoying it. Hence faith is called, the substance of things hoped for; it is the substance, or confidence of things hoped for, as if we had them already in hand: faith gives the soul a present interest in God, in Christ, in all those glorious things in the Gospel of Christ; even in the things of eternal life. Faith is an appropriating, an applying, an uniting grace; it is a blessed thing to have the sight of God, there is much power in it; but to see God in his Glory as my God, to see all the Majesty, greatness, and goodness of God, as those things that my soul hath an interest in; to see how the eternal counsels of God wrought for me to make me happy, why this is of the nature of Faith; And herein lies the sweetness of faith, in that we believe not Christ only to be a Savior, and righteousness, but my Savior, and my righteousness; And therefore Luther affirmed that the sweetness of Christianity lay in pronounes; when a man can say, my Lord, and my God, and my Jesus. I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.

O my soul! believe for thyself; believe, and be confident of it that those Eternal projects, counsels, love, purpose, decree, and covenant betwixt God and Christ were all for thee: hast not thou a promise? Nay, was there not a promise before the world began? and that very promise the promise of eternal life? Mark the words, in hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, promised before the World began. Here's a promise, and a promise of Eternal life, and a promise of Eternal life made by God, by God that cannot lie, and that before there was a World, or any man in the World; If thou enquirest, to whom then was this promise made? Sweet soul, it was made to Christ for thee; many promises thou hast in Scripture made more immediately to thyself, but this was the grand promise, and all the other promises they are but a draught of that grand promise that God the Father made to his Son before the World began.

O cries the Soul, I cannot believe: what? is it possible that God in his Eternity should have any thought of me? What, of me, being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil? What, of me, born in these last times of the world, the least of Saints, the greatest of Sinners, less then the least of all God's mercies? that of such a one the great God, the Majesty of Heaven and Earth should have a thought, a project, a counsel, a knowledge of approbation, a purpose, a decree: Nay, enter into a Covenant with his Son for my salvation? I cannot believe it. Alas! What am I to God? or what need hath God of me? If all the Nations of the Earth are to him, but as a drop of a bucket; and as the small dust of the Ballance; O what a minime am I of that drop? or what a little, little atom am I of that small dust; and is it probable that the greatness of God the goodness of God, the power of God, the wisdom of God, the Eternal Counsels of God, should work for me, to make me glorious, blessed, happy, to make me one with himself, and one with his Son, and one with his Spirit? what care take I of every dust of the Earth, or of every sand one the Sea-shore? and yet these are my fellow-creatures; there's a thousand times more disproportion betwixt God and me, and would God take care of me before I was, or before the World was? what, would he busy himself and his Son, about such a worthless wretched worm? would he decree Christ to come from the Father for me, to be my Redeemer, my Jesus, my Savior? I cannot, I dare not, I will not believe.

O stay my soul; and be not faithless, but believing, I will take thy argument in pieces: As, 1. Thou sayst, hath God any thoughts of me? Yes: saith God, I know the thoughts that I think towards you, thoughts of peace, and not of evil; and before the World was, my thoughts, and my delights were with the Sons of men. 2. Thou sayst, I have no thoughts, no care of my fellow-creatures, as of the dust, or sand, or atoms? and what then? my thoughts are not as your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord; for as the Heavens are higher than the Earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. What if thou hast no thoughts or care of the smaller creatures? yet God extends his thoughts, and care, and providence not only to thee, but even to them: neither can a Sparrow fall to the ground, nor an hair from thy head, nor a leaf from the tree, without the providence of our heavenly Father? 3. Thou sayest, I dare not believe, I am astonished at, confounded in these thoughts of God's eternal love; it is too high for me, I cannot believe it. I answer, herein thou sayst something: I know it is an hard thing to believe these great things in reference to thyself: But see now how God and Christ stoop and condescend to make thee believe: God stands much upon this, that the hearts of Saints should confide in him: he accounts not himself honored, except they believe, and therefore mark O my Soul, how Christ suits himself to thy weakness; what is it that may beget this Faith, this confidence in thy Son? what is it (saith God) that you poor creatures do one to another, when you would make things sure between yourselves? why, thus; —

1. We engage ourselves by promise one to another. And so will I, saith God: poor soul, thou hast my promise, my faithful promise; I have made a promise both to Jews and Gentiles, and thou art the one of these two sorts; the promise is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. Be only satisfied in that ground of thy hope, that thou art called of God; and then every promise of Eternal life is thine, even thine. Thou mayest find a thousand promises scattered here and there in the book of God; and all these promises are a draught of that promise which was made from all Eternity, and therefore it is so much the more sure; it is as if Christ should say, wilt thou have engagement by promise? this is past long ago; my Father hath engaged himself to me before the World began; yea, and I have made many, and many a promise, since the World began? Read in the Volume, and thou wilt find here and there a Promise, here and there a draught of the first Copy of that great Promise, which my Father made unto me from all Eternity.

2. When we would make things sure to one another, we write it down; And so will I, saith God: thou hast the Scripture, the Holy Writ, those Sacred Volumes of Truth and Life, and therein thou hast the golden Lines of many gracious Promises; are they not as the Stars in the Firmament of the Scripture? thou hast my Bible, and in the Bible thou hast many blessed glorious Truths: but of all the Bible, methinks thou shouldst not part with one of those promises, no, not for a World. Luther observing the many promises writ down in Scripture, expresseth thus, the whole Scripture doth especially aim at this, that we should not doubt, but hope, confide, believe, that God is Merciful, Kind, Patient, and hath a purpose and a delight to save our souls.

3. When we would make things sure to one another, we set to our Seals. And so will I, saith God: thou hast my Seal, the Broad-Seal of Heaven, my Sacraments, the Seals of my Covenant; and thou hast my privy Seal also, the Seal of my Spirit. Grieve not the Holy Spirit, whereby ye are Sealed unto the day of Redemption.

4. When we would make things sure to one another, we take Witnesses. And so will I, saith God: thou shalt have witnesses as many as thou wilt, witnesses of all sorts, witnesses in heaven, and witnesses on earth, for there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one.

5. When we would make things sure to one another, we take an oath. And so will I, saith God: God willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath, q. d. there is no such need of an oath, but I will be abundant to thee, because I would have thee trust me, and confide in me thoroughly: and as I swear (saith God) so will I swear the greatest Oath that ever was, I swear by myself: God swears by God: he could swear by no greater, and therefore he swear by himself: and why thus, but for their sakes who are the heirs of promise? he knows our frame, and members, that we are but dust; and therefore to succor our weakness, the Lord is pleased to swear, and to confirm all by his Oath.

6. When we would make things sure to one another, we take a pawn. And I will give thee a pawn saith God: and such a pawn, as if thou never hadst anything more, thou shouldst be happy: it is the pawn of my Spirit. Who also hath sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts, q. d. I will send my Spirit into your hearts, and this Spirit shall be a pawn, an earnest in your hearts, of all the good that I intend to do for you forever.

7. When we would make things sure to one another, something it may be is presently done, as an engagement of all that which is to come. And thus will I deal with thee, saith God, who livest in these last of times: why thou seest the greatest part of thy Salvation already done, I made a promise from all Eternity of sending my Son into the World to be made a curse for sin; yea, and if thou believest, for thy sin; and this is the greatest work of all that is to be done to all Eternity. Surely, if I would have failed thee in anything, it should have been in this; it is not so much for me now, to bring thee to Heaven, to save thy Soul, as it was to send my Son into the World to be made a curse for sin: but when I have done so great a work, & have been already faithful in that Promise, how shouldst thou but believe my faithfulness in making good all other promises? If a man should owe thee a thousand pound, and pay thee nine hundred, ninety, and nine, thou wouldst think surely, he would never break for the rest; why God hath paid his nine hundred, ninety, and nine; and all the Glory of Heaven is but as one in comparison of what he hath done; we may therefore well believe, that he who hath done so much for us, will not leave the little undone.

Come then, rouse up O my Soul, and believe thy interest in those eternal transactions betwixt God and Christ: is not here ground enough for thy Faith? if thou art but called, the promise of God is thine: or if thou darest not rely on this promise (which God forbid) thou hast his Indenture, his Seal and Witnesses of all sorts, both in Heaven and Earth; or yet, if thou believest not, thou hast an Oath, a Pawn, and the greatest part of thy Salvation already done to thy hand; nay, I will tell thee more poor soul than thus; even Christ himself from all Eternity hath engaged for thee that thou shalt believe; O then put not Christ to be challenged of his engagement by refusing the Gospel! surely when thou believest, thou makest Christ's word good; he that believeth not makes God a liar; though in another sense, and for ought he knoweth, even in this, that he frustrates Christ's undertakings in the Covenant. And therefore believe; yea, and cry, Lord I believe, help thou my unbelief; increase my Faith, till I come to full assurance of Faith. Faith in this sense is the very Eye of the Soul, reading is Name Written in the Book of Life; it is an apprehension of our particular Election. O believe, till thou comest up to this fullness of persuasion of God's Love in Christ.

SECT. VI. Of loving Jesus in that respect.

6. WE must love Jesus, as carrying on that great work of our Salvation in that Eternity. And this is the fruit, or effect of Faith; if once we believe that all those designs, and transactions were for us, even for us; O then how should we but love that God, and love that Christ who thus firstly and freely loved us? God loved us before we loved him; for he loved us in that Eternity before all Worlds, surely then we are bound to love him: First, and above all things. As the Diamond formeth and fashioneth the Diamond, so love formeth and fashioneth Love; or as fire converteth Fuel into Fire, so this ancient love of God and Christ may well cause our love again. O Christ! didst not thou love us? who doubts it, that but reads over the project, council, foreknowledge, purpose, decree, and covenant of God and Christ? who doubts it that but reads the eternal design of God, that Christ should go out of himself, and suffer an ecstasy through the vehemency of his love? that Christ should so far abase his Majesty as to die for us, that we might not die, but live with him? O then how should this but kindle in our hearts a most ardent love towards God and Christ? what more effectual motive to work man's love, then to be prevented by the love & bounty of another? That this fruit doth spring from the sense of our Election, Bernard observes, who is righteous but he that requiteth the love of God with love again? which is never done, except the holy Ghost reveal unto a man by faith, God's eternal purpose concerning his future salvation. And hence it is that the heart is most in frame, when it is a considering the eternal love of God in Christ: As David said of Jonathan, thou hast been very pleasant to me, thy love to me was wonderful; so a poor soul gathering up all the goodness of God in that Eternity, and feeding upon it, and the variety of it, it breaths out in that expression, thou hast been very pleasant to me O God, thy love to me hath been wonderful. O my soul, that thou couldest so live by faith on these eternal passages, as that thou mightest attain to the highest fruits of faith, not only to love God and Christ, but to love them with a burning love, with a mighty love, such a love as lies in the most vigorous prosecution after Jesus Christ, and in the most faithful resignation of thyself to God; such a love as works the most delightful aspect of God and Christ, as makes a man to behold God and Christ with all cheerfulness; such a love as works a man to extol the praises of God. O in these things lies the strength of love.

But alas! this is, or at least this should be thy grief, that thou canst not love so well, and so warmly as thou art beloved: Christ comes towards thee Skipping like the Hart, or Roe on the Mountains of spices, but thy love towards Christ is creeping like the worm in the unwholesome valley. Indeed the best affections have their fits of swooning: it may be for the present thy love is cold: O but come up to this fire, consider how God and Christ loved thee in every of these. —

1. His project to save thy soul sprung out of his love: love was the first wheel that set all the eternal works of God a going; what was that great design of God, but only an expression of his love? it was his pleasure to communicate himself, and the rise of that communication was his love.

2. The Counsels of God were all in love; had not love been as President of the Counsel, where hadst thou been? when all the attributes of God were at a stand, it was the love of God in Christ that resolved the question for thy salvation.

3. The foreknowledge of God was a foreknowledge of love and approbation: in his eternal love he embraced thee as his own; he foreknew thee, (i.) of his free love he set thee apart to life and to salvation; God hath chosen us in Christ before the foundation of the World: he chose us in Christ, but not for Christ; nothing at all moved him to Elect thee but his own good pleasure and free love.

4. The purpose of God was a resolution of love, it speaks his love to be a constant, settled abiding love; no unkindness shall alter it, for having loved his own, he loves them unto the end, nay, he loves them without end, from everlasting to everlasting.

5. The decree of God was an order (as I may call it) or an act of love, to give in time that grace unto his elect, which before all time he decreed should be an effectual means to bring them unto glory.

6. The covenant betwixt God and Christ was an agreement of love: God and Christ struck hands to save our souls; grace was given us in Christ Jesus before the World began. Grace was given us, that is, the gracious love and favor of God in Christ was given us before all secular times. This was God's meaning from everlasting, this was the design, yea the greatest design that ever God had, to set out the infinite glory, and the riches of his love in Jesus Christ. No question but he had other great designs in doing such great things as he hath done; but above all the designs that ever God had in all his works, this is the chief, to honor his mercy, to glorify the riches of his love and grace: had it not been for this he would never have made the World; and therefore in that World to come it will be the delight of God to show his Saints and Angels what he is able to do for a creature; yea, he will to all Eternity declare to them, to what an height of excellency and glory his love and mercy is able to raise poor souls, so that the very Saints and Angels shall admire, & adore, and magnify the name of God everlastingly for it.

O my soul, canst thou ponder on this, and not love him dearly who has thus loved thee? Come, stir up the gift that is in thee; if thou art a Christian thou hast some sparks, though now (it may be) under the ashes: come, rub, chase, and warm thy affections at this fire; love, like a watch, must be wound up, or else it will fall downwards: what dost thou? why stand'st thou idle in the heat of the Day? Christ hath fire in his hand, 'tis but looking up, and reaching out thy hand to take it from him: O take it with both thy hands, and be thankful for it. Prayer, ejaculation, contemplation, judicious observation of the Spirits season, are thy best instruments to kindle this fire of love in thee.

And methinks thy heart should begin now to melt, methinks it should receive more easy impressions from the object before it, methinks these eternal works and acts of God and Christ towards thy poor soul, should begin to overcome thee, and to burn thy heart as with coals of Juniper. Why Lord, is it thus? was I Elected from all Eternity in Christ? was I ordained to a glorious inheritance before there was a World? was this business to make me happy, one of the cheef deep counsels of God? was this one of the works of his wisdom that he was exercised about before the World began? was this the great design of God in making the World, and in making Heaven, the place of glory, to glorify himself, and to glorify such a poor wretch as I am? O then how should this but mightily inflame my heart with the love God, and love of Christ? how should I choose but say as the Martyr did, Oh that I had as many lives, as I have hairs on my head, to lay them down for Christ? Ah what flames of Divine affection, what raptures of zeal, what ravishments of delight, what ecstasies of obedience can be enough for my blessed God, and dearest Redeemer.

SECT. VII. Of joying in Jesus in that respect.

7. WE must joy in Jesus, as carrying on that great work of our salvation in that Eternity. This joy is a passion arising from the sweetness of the Object that we enjoy. O my soul, dost thou believe? and art thou now cast into a pang of love? how then should thy joy but come on? As Christ said to the 70. In this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you, but rather rejoice because your names are written in Heaven; so rejoice not thou in this, that the world is thine, that riches are thine, that thou hast subdued men and devils; but herein rejoice, that thy name is written in the Book of life. O what a comfortable point is this! that the Father and Christ should transact a bargain from Eternity, concerning thee by name, that the Father and the Son should commune together concerning thy heaven, as if their language had been thus; Father, what shall be given to thy justice to ransom such a one, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Mary, Martha, Hannah, &c. why no more but this, thou shalt die my Son, and whosoever believeth in thee shall live forever. Why then saith Christ, I will engage for such, and such a one; I will enter into Bond for such and such a person; Abraham shall believe in time: See, I have writ down his name in the Book of life. And who art thou that readest? art thou a believer? dost thou believe in the Lord Jesus Christ? Christ said the same of thee, and entered into a bond for thee, and entered they name in the Book of life; See the certainty of this in Phil. 4.3. Thou Thomas, Andrew, Peter, Christ knows thee by name, and thy name is written in the Book of life. O go thy way, and rejoice, and take strong consolation! is there not cause? why, I tell thee thy name is in the Book of Heaven, and if this may add to thy joy, know there is none in Heaven or Earth shall ever be able to blot it out again. No, no poor soul, there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus: God hath decreed thy salvation, and God's decree shall stand, let Men and Devils say what they will to the contrary, The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations: it is as possible for God to deny himself, as it is possible for thee a believer to perish. We are kept (saith the Apostle) by the power of God through faith to salvation; and therefore rejoice, and again rejoice; yea, raise up thy joy to that pitch of triumph, which is joy elevated; and elevated so high, that it comes to victoriousness, and magnanimous conquest of heart over all things; say with the Apostle, what, my name written in the Book of life? who shall lay anything to the charge of God's Elect? — who then shall separate me from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? nay, I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor Principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus my Lord.

SECT. VIII. Of calling on Jesus in that respect.

8. WE must call on Jesus, or on God the Father in and through Jesus. This also is included in looking, as David while Praying, unto thee do I lift up mine Eyes, O thou that dwellest in the Heavens. Now this calling on God, or looking to God, contains Prayer, and Praise. 1. We must pray that all these transactions betwixt God and Christ, may be assuredly ours, and that God would clear up our Titles more and more; yea, and seeing all good things tending to Salvation, were from all Eternity prepared for us, we are therefore to pray; that by prayer we may draw them down from Heaven; for what though our Evidences be clear? Yet this must not cast out means; God doth not use to bestow his saving Graces on lazy sluggards; those therefore who from the certainty of Predestination do pretend that the duty of Prayer is superfluous, do plainly show that they have no certainty at all. Aquinas was Orthodox in this, the Predestinate must Pray, because by these effects of Predestination, the Salvation of Souls is best ascertained. The same Spirit which Witnesseth to our Spirit that we are his Chosen, is also the Spirit of Prayer and Supplication; and therefore he that believes that he is one of God's Elect, he cannot but pray for those things which he believeth, that God hath prepared for him before the foundation of the World. — 2. We must praise God: what, that God should look on us, and Predestinate us to Life? That he should pass by so many on the right hand and on the left, and that I should be one whom the Lord did Elect? what, such a vile, and sinful Wretch as I am? was there ever like Love? was there ever like Mercy? may not Heaven and Earth stand amazed at this? O what shall I do to be thankful enough to this dear God? Thus thou that knowest thy interest in Christ, study praise and thankfulness. Say in thyself, who made me to differ from those Cast-away Souls? Alas! we were all framed of the same Mould, hewed out of the same Rock, It is storied of one of the late French Kings, that in a serious meditation, considering his own condition of being King and Ruler of that Nation, Oh (said he) when I was born, a Thousand other Souls were born in this Kingdom with me, and what have I done to God more than they? O my Soul, what difference betwixt thee and those many Thousands of Reprobates that live with thee in the world at this day? nothing, surely nothing but the free mercy, goodness, and love of God in Jesus Christ. O then praise this God, yea, sound forth the Praise of the Glory of his Grace. Remember that was God's design, and that is thy Duty.

SECT. IX. On conforming to Jesus in that Respect.

2. WE must Conform to Jesus: we must fix our Eyes on Jesus for our Imitation, that also is the meaning of this looking in the Text. And in respect of our Predestination the Apostle speaks expressly, he did Predestinate us to be conformed to the Image of his Son: This is one end of Predestination, and this is one end of looking unto Jesus, nay it is included in it. A very look on Jesus hath a Power in it to conform us to the Image of Jesus. We are changed by beholding, saith the Apostle: Oh when I see God's love in Christ to me even from all Eternity, how should this but stir up my Soul to be like Jesus Christ? where there is a dependence, there is a desire to be like even among men; how much more considering my dependence on God in Christ, should I desire to be like Christ in disposition? all the question is, what is this Image of Christ, to which we must be conformed? I Answer, Holiness and Happiness: but because the latter is our reward, and the former is our duty, therefore look to that.

But wherein consists that? I Answer, in that resemblance, likeness, and conformity to Christ in all the passages forementioned: And in every of those must we conform to Christ. As —

1. Christ is the Son of God; so must we be God's Sons. As many as received him, to them he gave Power to become the Sons of God. O what duty lies upon us in this respect; If I be your Father, where is mine Honor? and if ye call on the Father, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear. God looks for more honor, fear, reverence, duty, and obedience from a Son than from the Rabble of the World: if thou art God's Son, thy sins more offend God than the sins of all the reprobates in the world; why alas, thy sins are not mere transgressions of the Law, but committed against the mercy, bounty, and goodness of God vouchsafed unto thee; thy sins have a world of unthankfulness joined with them, and therefore how should God but visit? you only have I known of all the Families of the Earth, therefore will I visit you for all your Iniquities. O think of this, you that are God's Sons; and conform to Christ, for he was an Obedient Son.

2. Christ the Son of God delights in the Father, and his delight is also with the Sons of men; so must we delight in the Father, and delight in his Children. Delight thyself in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desire of thy Heart. And the Saints that are on the Earth are they, in whom is all my Delight, saith David. It is storied of Dr. Taylor, that being in prison he could delight in God; and he rejoiced that ever he came into Prison, because of his acquaintance with that Angel of God, as he called Mr. Bradford. O this is Heaven upon Earth! not only God, but the very Saints of God are sweet Objects of delight. Mark them, and if they be Saints indeed, they are savory in their Discourse, in their Duties, in their Carriages; their Example is powerful, their society profitable, how should we but delight in them?

3. God and Christ laid this Plot from all Eternity, that all he would do, should be to the praise of the glory of his Grace: So must we purpose this as the end of all our actions, whether we eat, or drink, or whatsoever we do, we must do all to the glory of God. But especially if from God we receive any spiritual good, then give all again to the glory of his grace. Blessed be the Name of God forever and ever (said Daniel) for Wisdom and might are his; — and I thank thee, and praise thee O God of my Fathers, who hast given me Wisdom and Might: an excellent spirit of Wisdom and Might wrought in Daniel, and he acknowledges all to the Giver: wisdom and might are his. Christians! if you feel grace in your hearts, I beseech you acknowledge it to Christ: He does all, he subdues Lusts, heals Wounds, stays inward Issues, sets broken Bones, and makes them to rejoice; and therefore let him him the glory of all; do you acknowledge grace in it's latitude to the God of all grace.

4. God and Christ counseled about our Salvation; there was a great conflict in the Attributes of God; justice and mercy could not be reconciled, till the Wisdom of God found out that glorious and wonderful expedient, the Lord Jesus Christ: so let us Counsel about our Salvation: the flesh and the spirit whereof we are compounded, draw several ways, the Flesh draws Hell-ward, and the Spirit Heaven-ward; come then, call we in heavenly and spiritual Wisdom to decide this Controversy; you may hear its Language in Job 28.28. Behold the fear of the Lord, that is Wisdom; and to depart from evil is Understanding. If we would draw heavenward, and save our souls; come then, let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, fear God, and keep his Commandments, for this is the whole duty of Man. Keep his Commandments in an Evangelical sense (i) look at the expedient, Jesus Christ, who hath kept them for us, and in whom, and through whom, our imperfect Obedience is accepted with God.

5. God and Christ loved us with an everlasting Love. So must we love him who hath first loved us: this is the nature of spiritual Love: that it runs into its own Ocean, O love the Lord all ye his Saints! who hath more cause to love him than you have? who hath been loved so much? or who hath so much come under the power of love as you have? hath not Christ loved you, not only with a love of well-wishing, which is from everlasting (some call it the love of Election, the fountain-love, the well-head of salvation) but also with a love of complacency? hath not Christ shed abroad his love into your hearts, and shall he lose by it; will not these cords of love draw up your hearts to love him again? sure it's but reason to love him, who hath first loved you, yea, and loved you when you were unlovely, and had nothing in you worthy of love. Christians! then it was that Christ loved you in rags, it is meet therefore that you should love him in Robes.

6. God and Christ appointed, or purposed us unto salvation, his love was a sure, and settled, and firm, and constant love: the purpose of God according to Election must stand. So must we love him, and cleave unto him forever: I have inclined my heart to perform thy Statutes always even to the end. David's heart was much taken with the Statutes of God, and therefore he gives this expression of the fullness of his heart, always and even to the end. it is a kind of pleonasm, his resolutions were such that he would never depart from his God.

7. God and Christ decreed, booked, and sealed our salvation: and so must we put to our seal that God is true (i) we must believe in Christ? for when we believe, we make Christ's word good. He that believes not, makes God a liar, (as you have heard) in that he frustrates, or endeavors to frustrate Christ's undertaking in his predestination.

8. God and Christ entered into Covenant concerning our salvation: So must we enter into Covenant with him; we must take him to be our God, and give up ourselves to be his people: — Why thus we must in all particulars conform to Christ. The sum of all is this, we must be like Christ in grace, and gracious actings.

O my soul, see to this grace, see to this conformity to Jesus Christ in gracious actings, and this will enable thee to read thy name written in the Book of Life. O abhor, & repel that Devils dart, I am predestinated, and therefore I may live as I list; how contrary is this to the Apostle, he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the World, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love? and as the Elect of God put on bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering, forgiving one another, — Even as Christ forgave you? this conformity to Christ in grace is the very effect of our predestination: O look unto Jesus, and be in grace like unto Jesus: why, Christ is full of grace, a vessel filled up to the lip, or very brim, thou art fairer than the children of men, and grace is poured into thy lips. Christ was as it were grace speaking, Luk 4.22. Grace sighing, weeping, dying, Heb. 2.9. Grace living again, and now dropping, or rather raining down floods of grace on his living members, Ephes. 4.11. Christ is the great Apple-tree, dropping down Apples of Life, Cant. 2.3. and all that falls from this tree, as apples, leaves, shadows, smell, blossoms, are but pieces of grace fallen down from him, who is the fullness of all, and hath filled all things. Christ is the rose of Sharon, and every leaf of this rose is an Heaven; every white and red in it is grace and glory, every act of breathing out it's smell from everlasting to everlasting is Spotless and unmixed grace; why then my soul, if thou wilt conform to Christ, conform in this: Be holy as he is holy; of that fullness of grace that is in him, do thou receive even grace for grace.

Christians! where are we? O that ever men should hear of so much grace, and of such acts of grace in that eternity before all worlds, and yet no impression of grace upon their hearts! O that God and Christ should both be in that business of Eternity: that heaven, hell, justice, mercy, souls, and deep wisdom, should be all in that rare piece, and yet that men should think more of a Farm, an Ox, an house, a pin, a straw, or of the bones of a crazy livelihood; O look up, look up, if thou art Christ's, Consider what he hath done for thy soul; why, thou art predestinate to be conformed to the Image of Christ.

Thus far we have Looked on Jesus as our Jesus, in that Eternity before all time until the creation: Our next work is to Look on Jesus, carrying on the great work of man's salvation in the Creation, the beginning of time, until his first coming.

CHAP. I.

SECT. I. Of Christ Promised by degrees.

IN this period, as in the former, we shall first lay down the Object; and then direct you how to look upon it.

The Object is Jesus, carrying on the work of man's salvation in that dark time before his coming in the flesh.

No sooner is the world made, & the things therein; but man was created, that way might be made for God to show his grace in the salvation of his Elect. And now was it that God's eternal project, and counsel, & fore-knowledge, and purpose, and decree, and Covenant with Christ was to come into execution. Indeed at the first there was no need of Christ; for man at first was made in holiness, the image of God, and to bear rule over the rest of the visible creatures; though this his state was but of a little standing. It was the received opinion in former times, that our first parents fell the very same day in which they were created. Augustine amongst the rest writes, that they stood but six hours: but though we cannot describe the certain time, very probable it is, that it was but short: This we find, that Moses having set down the creation of man, without the interposition of anything else, he comes immediately to the fall; and the Devil no doubt took the first occasion he possibly could, to bring man to the same damnation with himself. Well then, long it was not but Adam by his sin deprived himself, and all his posterity of the image of God: All mankind was in his loins, so by the order and appointment of God all mankind partake with him in the guilt of his sins: Hence is the daily & continual cry, not only of Adam, Abraham, David, Paul, but of every Saint, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? But sweet souls, stay your complaints, here's Gospel-news.—

In this sad hour of temptation God stepped in: he will not leave man without hope; he tells the Devil who begun this mischief; I will put enmity between thee, and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed, it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. At the very instant, when God was pronouncing judgment upon the several delinquents in the fall; nay, before judgment was pronounced on the persons tempted, Jesus is hinred, the Covenant of grace is proclaimed. O the infinite riches of the mercy of God in Christ!

But you will say, how comes Jesus in? how carried he on the great work of our salvation in this dark time?

I answer, 1. By assuming and taking upon him the form and shape of man, and so discharging some special offices in that respect: We read often of Christ's apparition before his Incarnation, and then especially when he had to do with this great Nego•iation of man's Eternal happiness. Some think it not improbable that Christ assumed the form of man when he first created man; and so he made man, not only in his own image which he had as God, In holiness, and true righteousness, but in respect of that form which he had assumed. Howsoever this we find, that after man had sinned, Christ then appeared, first to Adam, then to Abraham, then to Isaac, then to Jacob, then to Moses, &c. — first, he appeared to Adam in the garden, and they heard the voice of the Lord God, walking in the garden in the cool of the day. God as he is God hath neither voice to speak, nor seet to walk, but assuming the form and shape of a man he exercised both: and so he was the first that published that first promise to the World, It shall bruise thy head. — 2. He appeared to Abraham in the plain of Mamre, where the Lord talked with Abraham, and Abraham calls him the Judge of all the Earth, which can be ascribed to none but Christ the Judge of quick and dead. Some from that saying of Christ, your Father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it, and was glad, do gather that Abraham saw Christ, not only with the eyes of faith (as all the rest of the Patriarchs and Prophets did) but also in a visible shape which he assumed, like unto that whereunto he was afterwards to be united; And so it was Christ that renewed the Covenant with Abraham, saying, I will establish my Covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting Covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. — 3. He appeared to Isaac, Gen. 26.2. and to Jacob, Gen. 32.24, 30. and to Moses, Exod. 20.1, 2, 3. and to many others, of which I shall comment in order. And these apparitions of Christ were as praeludiums of his Incarnation. But this is not the way I shall insist upon.

2. Christ carried on the great work of our salvation in that dark time, not by himself exhibited (as when he was Incarnate) but only promised. The great King would first have his Harbingers to lead the way, before he himself would come in person. As the Lord had observed this method in creating the World, that first he would have darkness, and then light, and as still he observes this method in upholding the world, that first he will have dawning, and then clear day; so in the framing and upholding of his Church, he will first have Christ held forth in Ceremonies, Rites, Figures, Types, Promises, Covenants; and then like a glorious Sun, or like the day-spring from on high he would visit the world, to give light to them that sit in darkness. To this purpose we read, that as Christ, so the Covenant of grace (which applies Christ to us) was first promised, and then promulgated: the Covenant of promise was that Covenant, which God made with Adam, and Abraham, and Moses, and David, and all Israel in Jesus Christ; to be Incarnate, crucified, and risen from the dead; and it was meet that the promise should go before the Gospel, and be fulfilled in the Gospel, that so a great good might earnestly be desired, before it was bestowed. In a time of darkness men desire light; as the morning-watch watcheth and longeth for the morning, so the obscure revelation of Christ in a promise, raised the hearts of the Patriarchs to an earnest desire of Christ his coming in the flesh. But in this obscurity we may observe some degrees; before the Law given by Moses the promise was more obscure; the Law being given, even to the time of the Prophets, the promise was a little more clear; in the time of the Prophets, even to John the Baptist, it was clearer yet; as the coming of the messias did approach nearer and nearer, so was the promise clearer and clearer still: Just as the approach of the Sun is nearer or further off, so is the light that goes before it greater or lesser. In like manner was the Revelation that went before Christ more dim or clear, as the rising of the Sun of righteousness was more remote, or nigh at hand. It was the good pleasure of God to manifest the riches of his grace by degrees, and not all at once; we see to this very day, that God in his several approaches of mercy and goodness draws nearer and nearer to his Church: Even now in this marvelous light of the Gospel we have our divine Ceremonies and Sacraments, we see him afar off, we know but in part; but time shall come (even before his second coming) that we, or our children shall see him more clearly, perfectly, immediately. My present business is to hold forth Jesus in the Covenant of grace as promised, and because the promise receives distinction of degrees according to the several breakings out of it to the dark world, we will consider it as it was manifested.

- 1. From Adam till Abraham.
- 2. From Abraham till Moses.
- 3. From Moses till David.
- 4. From David till the Babylonish Captivity, or thereabout.
- 5. From the Captivity, or thereabout, till Christ.

In every of these periods will appear some further and further discoveries of God's mercy in Christ, of the Covenant of grace, of our Jesus carrying on the great work of man's Eternal salvation in that dark time.

You heard before of the Covenant betwixt God and Christ concerning our salvation; but that was not the Covenant of grace which God immediately made with man as fallen; but a particular Covenant with Christ to be the Mediator. Or so far as it was a Covenant of grace, it was then made betwixt God and Christ, and after to be made betwixt God and us: for a time we were hid in the womb of God's Election, and not being then capable to enter into Covenant with God, Christ undertook for us, but yet so that when we come to be regenerate, we are then to strike Covenant ourselves. And hence we read expressly of God's Covenanting with sundry particular persons, as with Adam, and Abraham, and Moses, and David, &c. Of which in the next Sections.

SECT. II. Of the Covenant of promise as manifested to Adam.

THE Covenant of grace in this sense is nothing else but a compact made betwixt God and man, touching reconciliation, and life Eternal by Christ. Now the first breaking forth of this gracious Covenant was to Adam and Eve, immediately after the fall, expressed in these words, I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed, it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

This promise as it is the first; so the hardest to be understood: it contains in it good news of the overthrow of Satan's Kingdom, and of man's freedom by the death of Christ. But the obscurity is such, that Luther exceedingly complains, the Text which of all men should rightly be known, is of no man that I know (saith he) especially and accurately unfolded: amongst the Ancients there is not one that hath explicated this Text according to the dignity of it.

The occasion was this. The Lord looking down from heaven, and seeing how Satan had prevailed against man, and in some sort undone the whole fabric of the creation, he resolves upon Satan's ruin, and man's preservation; And the Lord God said unto the Serpent, because thou hast done this, thou art cursed. This literally is understood of the Serpent, but Spiritually of the Devil; both were as means to draw man unto sin, and therefore they are joined as one in the punishment; The Lord cut off the feet of the Serpent (say the Rabbies) and cursed him; and he cast Samael (the Devil) and his company out of heaven, & cursed them. Indeed man being in the transgression, must also have his punishment, as it follows verse. 17, 18, 19. and yet that God might manifest the riches of his grace, he includes in the Serpents malediction this everlasting Gospel. I will put enmity between thee and the woman, &c.

For the sense of the Words we shall open these terms, as, 1. Who is the Serpent? 2. Who is the woman? 3. What is the seed of the Serpent? 4. What is the seed of the woman? 5. What is that Hu [in our Bible translated it?] 6. What is the Serpents head, and the bruising of it? 7. What is the heel of the seed of the woman, and the bruising of it? 8. Amongst whom was the enmity, or rather enmities? for in the Text we find many Armies; I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed, &c.

1. Who is the Serpent? I find diversity of opinions among Interpreters: Some say, it was only the Serpent, and that which belongs unto Satan is but mystically understood: others say, it was only Satan under the notion of a Serpent, as sometimes he is called the great Dragon, And the great Dragon was cast out, that old Serpent called the Devil, and Satan, which deceived the whole world. Others say, it was both Satan and the Serpent; as men are said to be possessed of Satan, so was the Serpent possessed of the Devil. Satan could not provoke our first parents to sin by any inward temptation, as now he doth by the help of our corruption: nor could he enter into their bodies or minds, because of the holiness and glory that was in them; and therefore he presumed to take a beast of the earth, and by disposing of his Tongue he speaks within him. But what? must the Serpent have punishment, that was only Satan's instrument in the temptation? yes:

Such was God's love to man, that he condemns both the Author and instrument of that that evil: as one that in anger breaks the sword wherewith his son, or his friend was wounded; so God's breaks Satan's sword: the Serpent is punished according to the letter of the Text, and Satan is punished in the spiritual meaning of the Lord.

Who is the woman? Some are all for Allegories, and thy will tell you, that the Serpent and the Woman are the superior & inferior faculties of the Soul; and that ever since the Fall there hath been a continual War betwixt these: but I look at this Commentary as vain and trifling, though it be fathered on some of the Ancients, and of no small note; others say, this Woman is the Blessed Virgin, in relation to which, they read the last words thus, she shall bruise thy head; this reading is not only allowed, but confirmed by the Council of Trent, and in some of their Prayer-books, thy call her The Mother of the Lord, the Tree of Life, the breaker of the Serpents head, and the Gate of Heaven. But I look on this Commentary as ignorant & Idolatrous, and wholly derogatory to the Kingdom of Christ. Others are not so easily misled, and therefore say, that the Woman wheresoever mentioned in this Text, is Eve, and none but Eve; she it was whom the tempter had seduced, and in just judgment for her familiarity with the tempter, God meets with her, I will put enmity (saith God) between thee and the Woman.

3. What is the Seed of the Serpent? in Scripture phrase Seed is sometimes taken collectively, for many at once; as when the Lord said to Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy Seed: and to thee and thy Seed will I give this Land: and I will multiply thy Seed as the sand of the Sea: and sometimes it is taken singularly for one only person; thus Eve called her Son Seth, for God, said she, hath appointed me another Seed instead of Abel: and so it is said of Christ, in thy Seed shall all the Nations of the Earth be blessed. Now in this place the Seed of the Serpent is taken collectively, for all the families of Devils, for the Devil and his Angels (as Christ calls them) and for all the Sons of the Devil (i.) for all reprobate men whose Father and Prince is the Devil; as Christ told the Jews, ye are of your Father the Devil, and the lusts of your Father ye will do: and as John tells us, he that committeth sin is of the Devil — in this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil: and thus both Devils and reprobates are reckoned as the seed of the Serpent.

4. What is the Seed of the Woman?—The Seed of the Woman is that posterity of the Woman which do not degenerate into the Seed of the Serpent: that is the meaning of the first sentence, I will put enmity;—and then it follows, between thy Seed and her Seed: and for this sense we have these arguments. 1. The opposition of the Seeds, for as the Seed of the Serpent is taken collectively, so the Seed of the Woman must be taken collectively, that the opposition may be fit. 2. The enmities fore-spoken do strongly evince it: now the enmities pertain both to Eve and to all her posterity (if godly) to the end of the world; hence all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution, saith the Apostle; And I will put enmity (saith God) between thee & the woman; is that all? no, but also between thy Seed and her Seed: and who can deny but these enmities have been ever since betwixt Satan's brood and the Saints? we are all wrestlers against Principalities and Powers, and Rulers of the darkness of this World, and against spiritual wickednesses in high places.

5. What is that Hu] in our Bible translated, it?] it shall bruise thy head? Some observe this Hu, it] is of the masculine gender; and Zera, Seed, is of the masculine gender; & Jesaphera, shall bruise, is of the masculine gender, which confutes the Translation, that renders it thus, she shall bruise thy head: and which confirms our Translation which is thus, he, or it, or that same Seed, (i.) one singular person of that same Seed, shall bruise thy head. Well then, who is this he? or what one is he?] even Jesus the Son of the Living God. Here is the first hint of Jesus that ever was read, or heard of in this world. This was the Proto-evangel, or first Gospel that ever was published after the Creation. O blessed news, fit for God's mouth to speak, and to break first to the world now fallen! O dear parents! how would you have dispaired, if before sentence you had not heard this blessed tidings! O our first Parents upon Earth! where had you and we been, if this blessed Text had not been? Come, set a Star upon it, write it in letters of Gold, or rather write it on the very Tables of our Hearts: here is the blessedst news that ever was, or ever shall be; but for this we had been all Fire-brands of Hell; yea, but for this, Adam and Eve, and all their Sons and Daughters that are now gone out of this World, had been smoking and frying in Hell-fire. Away with all gross mistakes, Erroneous conceits, and as you love your Souls, yield to this blessed sense! This it] or he] is one of that same Seed, and this one of that same seed is Jesus, and only Jesus, and none but Jesus; and for this sense we have these arguments.

1. Some observe that this Sentence is separated from the former with a Period or great stop: however God goes on to speak of the Seed of the Woman, yet he says not, and that Seed shall bruise thy head, for so we might have thought he had spoken of that Seed collectively as he did before; but stopping there, and not repeating the same word again, he gives it thus; it or he shall bruise thy head; (i.) some individual person of that same Seed, some singular one of that same common Seed of the Woman shall bruise thy head; as David alone of all the Host of Israel goes forth to fight with Goliath, and overcomes him; so Christ alone of all the Seed of the Woman was so to fight with the Serpent by his own power as to overcome him, and to bruise his head.
2. The Seventy in their Translations of this place (with which agrees the Chaldee Paraphrast) renders it 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , he] which needs most denote some singular person, or Son of the woman; and the rather because the Seed spoken of before is rendered 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , to which if the relative had rightly agreed, it should have been 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , or 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , and not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; Hereto we may add, that to this it] or he] the Seed of the Serpent is not opposed as it was in the former sentence; but the Serpent itself, one singular Antagonist; here is singularis 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , a duel, or a combat of two, hand to hand, only Christ and the Serpent; he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.
3. The bruising of the head doth plainly discover this it, or he is Jesus Christ: for non can bruise the Serpents head but only God: the God of peace (saith the Apostle) shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. Now there was none of the Seed of the Woman, that was ever God but only Christ, God-Man, Man-God, blessed forever; and therefore it must needs be Christ; and only Christ that can bruise this Serpents head: O there's a Divine Power, a power and virtue of God in it to bruise the Serpents head; observe but the manner of this Duel: Christ treads on the Serpent; and by this means he comes to have a bruise in the heel, whilst with his heel he bruises the Serpents head; a wonderful thing that Christ should lay at the Serpents head with no other weapon but only with his heel; it were much for any man to strike at any common Serpent with a bare and naked foot: rather would he take a dart, or club, or any other Weapon; but with a foot to bruise Satan's head (that great and fierce, and monstrous Serpent) this exceeds any man's power or any man's daring to attempt: hence it is that someone person of more than human strength must do this deed, and who is that of the Seed of the Woman but only Jesus Christ?
4. God himself in other places of Scripture doth expressly declare that this Seed here promised is Christ, and only Christ: mark but where this promise is repeated to the Patriarchs, as when the Lord said to Abraham, in thy Seed shall all the Nations of the Earth be blessed: and when the Lord said to David, I will raise up thy Seed after thee, which shall be of thy Sons, and I will establish his Kingdom; and you may see it clear that this Seed is Christ, and only Christ, concerning that promise to Abraham, the Apostle so interprets it, now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made; he saith not, and to Seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy Seed, which is Christ: and concerning that promise to David, the Prophet so interprets it, He shall sit upon the Throne of David, and upon his Kingdom to order it, & to establish it,—who is that? in the former verse, his name is Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, (i.) Christ and none but Christ; for unto us a Child is born, and unto us a Son is given, &c. and who is that but Jesus Christ?

5. The accomplishment of this Promise in Christ is expressly and clearly made out in the New Testament. Was not Jesus Christ of the Seed of the Woman, born of a Virgin? was not his heel bruised, himself Crucified? and did he not bruise the Serpents head, break the Power and Dominion of Satan? What saith the Gospel? for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil.—And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the Devils are subject unto us, through thy Name: and he said unto them, I beheld Satan as Lightning fall from Heaven; behold I give unto you power to tread on Serpents, and Scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall by any means hurt you. — And now is the judgment of this world, now shall the Prince of this world be cast out. — And for as much as children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also himself likewise took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Devil. In these and many other places we find this very promise fulfilled in Christ, and only in Christ; and therefore he, and only he is the Seed of the Woman (that Hu, it, or he) that shall bruise the Serpents head. Yet I will not deny, but by way of participation this promise may pertain to the whole Body of Christ; Through him that loved us we are more than Conquerors, saith the Apostle; we may Conquer Satan, though not in our own strength, but Christ's; and so in a secondary sense, by way of communication with Christ, under this Seed all the faithful are and may be contained; 1. Because the Head and Members are all one Body, both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified are all one. 2. Because the faithful are called the seed of Christ, when thou shalt make his Soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed. 3. Because Satan doth not only bruise the heel of Christ, but of all the faithful, all that will live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. 4. Because Satan's overthrow by Christ our Head is diffused to all the Members, and the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. In this sense many of the ancient and modern Divines do extend this seed to the whole Body of Christ: but primarily, originally, especially, and properly, it belongs only to Christ, and to none but the Lord Jesus Christ. He only is the seed by whom the promise is accomplished, though the faithful also are the seed to whom and for whom the promise was made.

6. What is the Serpents head, and the bruising of it? 1. For the Serpents head, it is the power, rage, reign and Kingdom of Satan: It is observed that in the head of a Serpent lies the strength, power, and life of a Serpent; so by a phrase of speech fitted to the condition of this Serpent that was Satan's instrument, God tells the Devil of the danger of his head, (i.e.) of his power and Kingdom: now this power and Kingdom of Satan consists more especially in sin and death; for the sting of death is sin, and the power of death is in Satan. Hence sin and death are usually called the works and wages of Satan; they are his own, he owns them, and carries them at his girdle. 2. For the bruising of this head, it is the overthrowing of Satan's power; he shall bruise thy head, (i.e.) Christ shall break thy power; Christ shall destroy sin, and death, and him that had the power of death, that is the Devil. I say Christ shall do it, though as I have said in a secondary sense the faithful shall do it; Christ overcomes by his own power, and the faithful overcome by the power of Christ; the victory is common to all the seed, but the Author of victory is only Christ the Head and chief of all the seed: ye have overcome the evil one, but how? not of yourselves, no, it is the God of peace that bruiseeth Satan. Well then, here is the sense, the Serpents head is bruised, (i.e.) the Devil, and sin, and death, and hell are overthrown; not only the Devil in his person, but the works of the Devil, which by the fall he had planted in our natures, as pride, vain glory, ignorance, lust, &c. nor only Satan's works, but the fruits and effects of his works, as Death and Hell; so that all the faithful may sing with Paul; O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? thanks be to God which giveth us victory through Jesus Christ our Lord.

7. What is the heel of the seed of the woman, and the bruising of it? 1. For the heel, it is the humanity of Christ, according to which properly Christ hath an heel: Or (as others) it is the ways of Christ, which Satan, by all the means he could possibly would seek to suppress. 2. For the bruising of his heel, it is the miseries, mockings, woundings, Death and Burial of Christ, all which he endured in his heel (i.e.) in his humanity; or it extends further, to all the hurts, reproaches, afflictions, persecutions of the faithful by the Devil and his agents: all which are but as a bruise in the heel, which cannot endanger the spiritual life of their souls. It is observed, that the Serpent hath but one head, but the seed of the woman hath two heels; so that the one may be some help, while the other is hurt; besides, an hurt in the heel is far from the head and heart; and though it may be painful, it is not mortal. Indeed, Christ's heel was bruised (i.e.) He was delivered to death, even to the death of the Cross; yet he rose again from the dead; neither had the Devil any advantage by his death; for as angry Bees stinging once, make themselves droanes, so the Devil, now he may hiss at us, but he cannot hurt us; by that wound which Christ received at his death, he wounded all his enemies irrecoverably; the very sight itself was Christ's triumph; even then was the Kingdom of darkness utterly overthrown; sin, death, and Satan were conquered, and taken captive, and whatsoever might be brought against us, was taken away, as the least bill, or scroll. O blessed riddle! Out of the Eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. In reference to the promise, thou shalt bruise his heel, Christ is said to be the Lamb slain from the foundation of the World. Here's good news betimes.

8. Amongst whom was the enmity, or this hostile war? we find in the Text three Hosts, and three battles: As —

1. Betwixt Satan and the woman; I will put enmity between thee and the woman: (i.e.) Betwixt thee the seducer, and her whom thou hast seduced. This enmity is opposed to the amity and familiarity, which had been between the woman and the Serpent, and upon that account the woman, and not the man is named; not but that enmity must be betwixt the Devil and man, as well as betwixt the Devil and the woman: but because the woman had more tampered with Satan, and being deceived by Satan, was first in the transgression, therefore is she only named, I will put enmity between thee and the woman.

2. Betwixt Satan's seed, and the seed of the woman: I will put enmity, not only between thee, and the woman, but also between thy seed, and her seed, q.d. This enmity shall not cease with the death of the woman, but it shall continue to her seed, and to her seeds seed, even to the end of the World. We see to this day how the Serpent and Serpents seed are striving and warring against the Church; and a wonder it is (considering the malice of the enemy) that there is a Church upon Earth, but only that we have Christ's promise, The gates of Hell shall not prevail against it; and lo I am with you always, even to the end of the World.

3. Betwixt Christ and the Serpent. O this a bloody conflict on both sides, he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. 1. He shall bruise thy head; Christ shall break thy power, thy power, (i.e.) the power of the Serpent, or of the Devil himself: he fights not so much with the seed, as with the Serpent; if Satan be overthrown, his seed cannot stand. 2. Thou shalt bruise his heel; thou shalt afflict him and his, thou shalt cast out of thy mouth a flood of persecutions: thou shalt make war with him, and all them which keep the Commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

I have held you a while in the explication of this first promise, and the rather because of the darkness of it, and the much sweetness that is contained in it; it is full of Gospel-truths: strike but the flint, and there will fly out these glorious sparkles.

1. That a Savior was promised from the beginning of the world. 2. That this Savior should free all his Saints from sin, death, and hell; the head and power of the Devil. 3. That to this end this Savior should be a Mediator; for God would not grant an immediate pardon, but the promised seed must first intervene. 4. That this Mediator should be of the seed of the woman, that is, a man; and yet stronger than the Devil, endued with a Divine power, and so he is God. 5. That this Man-God should according to his Priestly office be a Sacrifice for sin, the Serpent should bruise his heel, he should suffer and die for the people; and yet accordingly to his Kingly office he should overcome Satan; for he should bruise his head, overthrow his Kingdom, and make us more than Conquerors in him that loved us. 6. That this promise of Christ and of our justification is free; God of mere mercy, and free grace brings forth this promise, there could be now after the fall no merit in man; and even now he promiseth remission of sins, and life Eternal in, for, and through the Lord Jesus Christ. No question but in belief of this promise the Patriarchs and Fathers of old obtained life, glory, and immortality: By faith the Elders obtained a good report: by faith Abel obtained witness that he was righteous: by faith Enoch was translated that he should not see Death: by faith Noah became heir of the righteousness of Christ; & how should it but revive us in these last times, to hear, that the first thing that ever God did after the World was fallen, it was this act of mercy, to make a promise of Christ, and to reconcile lost man to himself through the same Jesus Christ? surely he began to do that soon, which he meant to be always a doing, even to the end of the World. Thus far of the promise, as it was manifested from Adam to Abraham.

SECT. III. Of the Covenant of promise as manifested to Abraham

The second breaking forth of this gracious Covenant, was to Abraham; and now it shines in a more glorious light than it did before: at first it was propounded in very dark and cloudy terms, not easy to be understood, and most things sparingly expressed; but in this second rise and manifestation, we have it laid down in plainer terms, I will establish my Covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generation, for an everlasting Covenant, to be a

God to thee, and to thy seed after thee. —For the right understanding of this, we shall examine these particulars.—

- 1. What a Covenant is?
- 2. What is the establishing of this Covenant?
- 3. Betwixt whom is the Covenant to be established?
- 4. For what time is the established Covenant to endure?
- 5. What are the privileges of this Covenant?
- 6. What is the condition of this Covenant?
- 7. Who is the head, both as undertaker, and purchaser, and treasurer, upon whom this Covenant is established?

1. What is a Covenant? It is a contract of mutual peace and good will, obliging parties on both hands to the performing of mutual benefits and offices. Thus was the Covenant betwixt God and Abraham, there was a mutual stipulation in it, on God's part to perform his promises of temporal, spiritual, and Eternal grace; and on Abraham's part to receive this grace by faith, and to perform due obedience and thankfulness to God. Hence a little nearer, we say the Covenant is a mutual compact, or agreement betwixt God and man, whereby God promiseth all good things, especially Eternal happiness unto man; and man doth promise to walk before God in all acceptable, free, and willing obedience, expecting all good from God, and happiness in God, according to his promise, for the praise and glory of his grace. Others, describing the Covenant of grace (for with the Covenant of works we will not meddle) they give it thus, The Covenant of grace is a free and gracious compact, which God of his mere mercy in Jesus Christ hath made with sinful man, promising unto him pardon of sins and eternal happiness; If he will but repent of sin, and embrace mercy reached forth by faith unfeigned; and walk before God in willing, faithful, and sincere obedience. —In this description many things are considerable. As, 1. That the Author of this Covenant is God; not as our Creator, but as our merciful God and Father in Christ Jesus. 2. That the cause of this Covenant is not any worth, or dignity or merit in man, but the mere mercy, love, and favor of God. 3. That the foundation of this Covenant is Jesus Christ, in and through whom we are reconciled unto God; for since God and man were separated by sin, no Covenant can pass betwixt them, no reconciliation can be expected, nor pardon obtained, but in and through a Mediator. 4. That the party Covenanted with, is sinful man; the fall of our first Parents was the occasion of this Covenant, and God was pleased to permit the fall, that he might manifest the riches of his mercy in man's recovery. 5. That the form of this Covenant stands on God's part in gracious and free promises of forgiveness, holiness, happiness; and on man's part in a restitution of such Duties as will stand with the free grace and mercy of God in Christ. 6. That the stipulation on man's part required, is repentance for sin, belief in the promises; and a yielding of fear, reverence, worship, and obedience to God according to his word. These I might insist on, but my purposed brevity will not permit.

2. What is the establishing of this Covenant? Some say, this speaks the duration of it, of which anon; I suppose it intends also the confirmation of it. We find that the Lord had before made a Covenant with Abraham, Gen. 15.4, 5. And now he doth not abolish the former, and make another; but rather, he renews, confirms, and establisheth the former. It may be there was some hesitation or doubting in Abraham; so we see Gen. 15.1, 2. But now God would assure him infallibly of his will and purpose: O when a man hears that God will vouchsafe so much favor as to enter into a covenant with him; he is ready to say as Gideon did, alas, my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in all my Fathers house; and who am I that I should be raised up hitherto? that God should make such promises as these to me? And hence, to prevent such Objections, the Lord will confirm and establish his Covenant; as sometimes by his Promises; sometimes by an oath, sometimes by the blood of Christ himself; sometimes by seals. So here in this very place, God adds the seal of Circumcision, Ye shall circumcise the flesh of your fore-skin (saith God) and it shall be a token of the Covenant betwixt me and you. As sometimes he said of the Rain-bow, I do set my Bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a Covenant between me and the Earth; — That the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh — For I will look upon the Bow, that I may Remember the everlasting Covenant. After this manner are the signs and seals of the Covenant? Circumcise yourselves saith God, and when I see the Circumcision, I will remember my Covenant, and I will make good to you all the promises thereof. — But what is Circumcision to the Covenant? much every way; Circumcision was not without shedding of blood, because the Covenant was not yet established in the Blood of the Messiah, sure there was much in this, howsoever the rite of itself was nothing, yet as it led the faithful Patriarchs to the Blood of Christ, and as it assured the purging away of sin by the Blood of Christ, and as it signed the Circumcision of the heart by the Spirit of Christ, so it found acceptance with God; no sooner he looks on it, but he remembers his Covenant, and confirms it, and makes it good to Abraham, and to his seed after him.

3. Betwixt whom is the Covenant to be established? between me and thee, (saith God) and thy seed after thee The two heads of this Covenant are God and Abraham; on God's part are the whole Trinity of persons, the blessed Angels, and all the Host of Heaven; on Abraham's part are all his seed, and his posterity, yet with this limitation, that all are not Israel, which are of Israel; neither because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children of Abraham; but in Isaac shall thy seed be called; that is, they which are the children of the flesh, are not the Children of God, but the Children of the promise are counted for the seed. No question this Covenant was not to be extended to the Ishmaelites, Idumeans, or Kethureans. Abraham's carnal seed; these quickly departed both out of Abraham's family, and Abraham's faith; No, no, saith God, I will establish my Covenant with Isaac for an everlasting Covenant, and with his seed after him, with Isaac, and with his seed (i.) with the spiritual seed of Abraham; now under the seed, 1. all believing Jews, and 2. All Gentils are comprehended, all may be called the spiritual seed of Abraham that walk in the steps of the faith of Abraham; and indeed thus runs the Promise, in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed. Gen 12.3. And in thee shall all the Nations of the earth be blessed, Gen 8.18. these families and Nations must needs comprehend the Gentiles; the Apostle is very plain: As it is written, I have made thee a Father of many Nations. — That he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised. — That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the spirit through faith.

Christians I here is our happiness the Covenant was not written for Abraham's sake alone, but for us also, if we believe in him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead. You may think all this while we are only discovering the privileges of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and of the Jews; no, blessed be God, Heaven is no freer to a Jew, than to a Gentile; there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, male nor female, &c. But if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and Heirs according to the promise.

4 For what time is the established Covenant to endure? it is not for a few days, or months, or years, but forever and ever; it is an everlasting Covenant; and indeed the word established sounds this way; I will establish my Covenant, that is (say some) I will have it stand and continue forever; as it was said of David, I have made a Covenant with my crosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, thy seed will I establish forever; and again, my mercy will I keep for him for evermore, my Covenant shall stand fast with him. —

Now this Covenant is said to be everlasting, a parte ante. (as we say) and a parte post. 1. A parte ante, as being from everlasting, in respect of the promise made to Christ for us, which was done (as you have heard) before the foundation of the world; it is not an infant of days; this Covenant bears the same date with the divine being itself; As the mercy of God is from everlasting, so the Covenant of grace is from everlasting; the Writs, Evidences, and Charters of our Salvation were concluded, and passed the sign and seal of the blessed Trinity from eternity; the Gospel and this Covenant is not of yesterday, no, no, it is an old counsel of the infinite wisdom of God.

2. A parte post, as continuing from everlasting to everlasting. Hence it is called a Covenant of salt, because it corrupteth not, it faileth not: hence all the blessings of the Covenant are said to be everlasting; forgiveness of sins is everlasting, being once forgiven they are never remembered anymore; peace and joy is everlasting, your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you; salvation is everlasting. Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation; decretal Covenant-mercy was not a lease, but a making the fee-simple (as we call it) of grace and glory to the Saints forever: death may put an end to other Covenants, as betwixt man and man, or betwixt man and wife: but this Covenant betwixt God and us stands fast forever; though Abraham be dead, yet God is Abraham's God still, and by virtue of this Covenant Abraham shall be raised up at the last day.

5. What are the privileges of the Covenant? I answer, the privileges of the Covenant are many, as they are great things, and great blessings which our great God promiseth, so they are very many and numerous; the Covenant is full of blessings, it is a rich storehouse, replenished with all manner of blessings; it is not dry, nor barren, but like the fat Olive or fruitful Vine, it is a Well of salvation, a fountain of good things, a treasure full of goods, or unsearchable riches, which can never be emptied, nor come to an end. Hence it is that our finite narrow capacities can never apprehend the infinite grace that this Covenant contains, yet as we may see things darkly in a Map, so let us endeavor as we are able to view them in some Map, or brief compendium; that by the little we do see, we may be raised up to the consideration of things not seen, which shall be revealed in due time.

The privileges of the Covenant are folded and wrapped up in the promises of it; every promise contains a privilege, but the time of unfolding every promise is not yet come; then only shall the promises of all sorts be unfolded, when the heavens as a vesture shall be folded up. In the mean time we have a right & interest in the privileges of eternity by virtue of the promise; and hence the very terms of Covenant and promise are taken for the same, Ephes.

2.12. Rom. 9.4. I shall for the present confine myself only to those promises and privileges of the Covenant which were manifested to Abraham. And they were, Of things

- Temporal.
- Spiritual.

1. Of things Temporal. Thus we read God promiseth Abraham, I will make of thee a great Nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing, & I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee, and unto thy seed will I give this Land. We may add hereto the repetitions that God makes of these promises over & over; lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, North-ward, and South-ward, and East-ward, and West-ward, for all the Land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the Earth, so that if a man can number the dust of the Earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered.—And the Lord brought forth Abraham abroad, and said, look now towards Heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them; and he said unto him, so shall thy seed be.—And the Lord again appeared to Abraham, and said, — I will make my Covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly, — and thou shalt be a Father of many Nations, neither shall thy name anymore be called Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham, for a Father of many Nations have I made thee; and I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make Nations of thee, and Kings shall come out of thee,—and I will give unto thee, and thy seed after thee, the Land wherein thou art a stranger, all the Land of Canaan for an everlasting possession. — By myself have I sworn saith the Lord, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the Stars of the Heaven, and as the sand upon the Sea-shore, and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies. See here the temporal blessings that God promises Abraham; they are heaped together in Gen. 12.2, 3. —As,

1. I will make of thee a great Nation, and this he promiseth once and again; it seemed a thing incredible, because Abraham was old, and Sarah was barren and old, & it ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of women; yet for all this God is all-sufficient; Abraham shall have his desire, he shall be a Father, not only of a few Children, but of a numerous Nation, yea of many Nations; Ishmaelites, and Midianites, and that famous Nation of the Jews (of whom it is said, what Nation is so great) must all descend from Abraham: Scripture and heathen Authors use three things proverbially, to signify an huge and exceeding great number, the dust of the Earth, the sands of the Sea, and the Stars of Heaven: and all these are brought in to resemble the number into which the Seed of Abraham should break forth.

2. I will bless thee, saith God; and this blessing had relation to his wealth and riches, Abraham was very rich in cattle, in silver and in gold. No question those riches came from this blessing; the blessing of the Lord it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it. This was God's care of the children of Abraham, that he would give them riches, but lest their hearts should be lifted up, and they should forget the Lord in the midst of their riches, he learns them and bids them remember this lesson; say not in thine heart, my power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth; but remember the Lord thy God, for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth; that he may establish his covenant, which he sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day. True riches come from God, and by virtue of this covenant; O that none of us had any wealth, but such as comes by virtue of a promise, and of the covenant of grace!

3. I will make thy name great, saith God; no Monarch was ever so famous in conquering nations, or the whole world, as Abraham for his faith and obedience; God hath magnified his name amongst the Hebrews, who for these three thousand years and upwards have acknowledged none (except Moses) greater than Abraham; the Jews could say to very Christ, art thou greater then our father Abraham? — whom makest thou thyself? and God hath so magnified his name amongst Christians, that all believers look upon it as a glory to be called children of Abraham; nay, we cannot be Christ's, we have no part in Christ, unless we are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise.

4. Unto thy seed I will give this Land, saith God, as an everlasting possession, Gen. 17.8. but how should that which the Israelites possessed only for a time, be called an everlasting possession? The answer is, that the word translated everlasting, doth not ever signify that which shall have no end, but an age, a term, or continuance; as it was said of Samuel, he should appear before the Lord, and there abide forever, (i.) as long as he lived: and I will praise the Lord (said David) forever and ever, (i.) whiles I live will I praise the Lord, as long as I shall have any being I will sing praises unto my God. And the desolations of the captivity were called perpetual desolations, (i.) long desolations, even for seventy years.

Touching these blessings, or privileges, I have no more to say but this, that God gave more of the temporal, less of the spiritual, to the natural seed in the first ages; but in the latter ages more of the spiritual privileges, and less of the temporal; yea, and thus it is this day for the most-what among the Christian seed of the Gentiles; for ye see your calling brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called.

2. Of things spiritual, thus we read, fear not Abraham, I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward; I am God all-sufficient or omnipotent, the almighty God, & I will be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. O what precious promises are these? 1. I am thy shield, to keep thee from all evil; such a shield that no creature can pry through, such a shield as shall cover thee over; nay, such a shield as shall cover thee about; as sometimes God spoke of Jerusalem, I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about. So here, I will be a shield, a wall of fire round about; not only a wall to keep thee safe, but a wall of fire to consume all them that are against thee; as a fire which stands about like a wall, doth not only defend those that are within, but it burns those without that come near unto it; so is God to his people. 2. I am thy exceeding great reward; I am the almighty God; I will be a God unto thee. This is the very soul of the covenant, and of all the promises of God: q. d. quantus, quantus sim vester ero; all I am is thine, myself, my goods, my grace, my glory; whatsoever is in me, all that I have, and all my attributes are thine; my power, my wisdom, my counsel, my goodness, my riches, whatsoever is mine in the whole world; I will give it thee for thy portion; I, and all that I have are thine, for thy use; Christians! was not this an exceeding great reward? who can understand the height, and depth, and length, and breadth of this reward? surely happy is the people that is in such a case, yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord, but more of this hereafter.

6. What is the condition of this covenant? I answer, the condition of the covenant of grace is faith, and only faith; to this purpose it is said of Abraham, he believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. This text is often alleged by the Apostles; the word believed imports, that he thought the Word of God to be sure, certain, stable, and constant; it is such a belief as is opposed to fainting, as it is said of Jacob when he heard the report of his sons that Joseph was alive, his heart fainted, because he believed not; but when he believed, his heart revived; and David saith of himself, I had fainted, unless I had believed. So that it is a lively motion of the heart, assenting unto, and trusting in God, and in the word of God as firm and constant. This was the very condition of the covenant which God required of Abraham; q. d. Abraham, dost thou believe that such a Messiah shall be sent into the world? art thou able to believe? yes, I believe Lord, said Abraham; well saith God, I will put thee to the trial; I will give thee a Son, though thou art as a dead man, and Sarah as a dead woman; yet I will promise thee a son, art thou able to believe? again, thou seest the land of Canaan, thou hast not one foot in it, yet I will give thee this land in the length and breadth of it for thy possession, art thou able to believe this? you will say, what are these to the condition of the covenant, which is only to believe in God, and to believe in Jesus Christ? O yes, 1. These were shadows of the great promise, Christ; and therefore that act of faith, whereby Abraham believed that he should have a son, and that his Children should possess the land of Canaan was likewise a branch, a shadow, a pledge of that main act of faith whereby he believed the promised seed, in whom himself & all the Nations of the earth should be blessed. But 2. Let this be remembered that Abraham did not only believe the temporal promises, but every promise; as I will be thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward; now who is our shield but Christ; and who is our reward but Christ? but especially he believed the promise of the seed, and who is the head of the seed but Christ? yea, he believed in that promised seed in whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and who was that but Christ? your father Abraham (saith Christ) rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it, and was glad. He saw it? how could he see it? thou art not yet fifty years old (said the Jews) and hast thou seen Abraham? or could Abraham see thee, or thy day? yes, even then he saw it when he believed in Christ? he could see it no other ways but by an eye of faith? & therefore no question he believed in Christ, and that was counted to him for righteousness.

But (may some say) if faith alone be the condition of the covenant, then what need is there of any obedience, or works of holiness? — this was the old plea of loose libertines in the Apostles times, to whom James gave answer, But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead: a good tree (saith Christ) is known by its fruits; and so is right and sound faith; let a man believe in truth, and he cannot but love; and if he love, he cannot but be full of good works; thus Abraham was justified by faith, Abraham believed God (saith the Apostle) and it was imputed to him for righteousness; but was not this faith accompanied with works; observe but (saith the Apostle) when God bade him offer his son, did he not do it? and was not that an exceeding great work, surely his faith wrought with his works, and by faith was his works made perfect.

7. Who is the head both as undertaker, and purchaser, and treasurer upon whom this Covenant is established? I answer, Christ, and none but Christ. All the promises of God in him are Yea, and Amen, unto the glory of God by us. This was very darkly held forth in the first manifestation of the Covenant to Adam, but now in this second breaking forth of it, it is very fully expressed and often repeated; thus Gen. 12.3. in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed; and Gen. 18.18. all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in Abraham, and Gen. 22.18. in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. In comparing these texts we have a clear understanding thereof; in thee, in Abraham shall all the families, and nations of the earth be blessed; but lest Abraham himself should be thought author of this universal blessing, therefore is the explication, in thee, (i.) in thy seed; and this seed, saith the Apostle very expressly, is Jesus Christ; now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made; he saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ. So then here is the sense; out of thy posterity shall spring the Messiah, by whom not only thy posterity, but all the nations of the earth shall be blessed. You may remember in the first promise Christ was called the seed of the woman; but now the seed of Abraham; Christ was the Son of Eve, or (if you will) the Son of Mary, and so the seed of the woman; and Mary was a daughter of Abraham, and so Christ, and Mary, and all upwards were of the seed of Abraham. But where shall we find mention of the passion of Christ in this expresse of his Covenant to Abraham? in the first manifestation it was included in that phrase of bruising his heel, and surely this is essential to the covenant of grace in any overture of it: some answer that this is thrice put on in the passage of this covenant with Abraham: first, in the federal confirmation by the sm•aking furnace, and burning lamp, that passed between those pieces of the sacrifice: as the sacrifice was divided, so was Christ's body torn: and as the smoking furnace, and burning lamp passed between the divided pieces, so the wrath of God run betwixt (as I may say) and yet did not consume the rent and torn nature of Christ. 2. In that federal confirmation by the sign of circumcision: there could not be circumcision without shedding of blood, and where God commands shedding of blood in any of his ancient ordinances, it doth certainly reach to the blood of Christ, and his everlasting testament. 3. In the resolved Sacrifice of Isaac, which was a plain type of the death of Christ. See it in these particulars. 1. Isaac was Abraham's son, his only son; his innocent son, the beloved son of his Father, and yet Abraham freely offers up his son; so Christ was the son of God, his only Son, his innocent son, like to us in all things, sin only excepted; and the beloved son of his Father, this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; and yet God more freely offers up his Son out of his own bosom. 2. Abraham by God's commission rose early in the morning to sacrifice his Son; and the Jews by God's permission rise early in the morning to condemn the Son of God: and hence he is called the Hind of the morning, compassed with dogs that hunted and pursued his life. 3. Abraham must offer his Son upon the Mount, the very Mount on which Solomon's Temple was built, which typified the body of Jesus Christ, Joh. 2.19. So God offered his Son upon the Mount, if not on the same Mount (as Augustine thinks) yet on a Mount not far distant from it; Golgotha was the very skirt of Moriah; the one being within the gate of the City, and the other not far without, the very nearest to the City of all. 4. Abraham first laid the wood on Isaac, and then he laid Isaac on the wood; so God first lays the Cross on Christ, He bearing his Cross, went forth into a place called the place of a skul, and then he lays Christ on the Cross, there they crucified him saith John; or there they bound him to the Cross, and fastened his hands and feet thereto with nails. 5. Isaac must be offered alone, the servants must stay at the foot of the hill, little knowing the business and sorrow in hand; so Christ must tread the wine press alone: the disciples fear and fly, and little consider the agony of their Master. 6. Abraham carries in his hand the sword and fire against his Son, so God carries in his hand the sword and fire; the sword signifying the Justice of God, the fire his burning wrath against the sins of men; and both these were bent against Christ, in whom the justice of God is satisfied, and the flame of his wrath extinct and quenched. That this was a plain type of Christ's passion is hinted at in the blessing that God speaks to Abraham after this trial, by myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy Son, thine only Son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. All believers are blessed in the death of Christ, who was that seed of Abraham, typified by Isaac, Abraham's Son; for as Abraham intended, so God truly sacrificed his Son, his only Son, to take away sin.

Thus far of the Covenant of promise as it was manifested from Abraham to Moses.

SECT. IV. Of the Covenant of promise as manifested to Moses.

THE next breaking forth of this gracious Covenant was to Moses. The revenging justice of God had now seized on mankind for many generations, even thousands of years, so that now it was high time for God in the midst of wrath to remember mercy, and to break out into a clearer expression of the promise, or Covenant of grace. To this purpose the Lord calls up Moses to Mount Sinai, and there of his infinite love and undeserved mercy he makes, or renews his Covenant with him and the children of Israel. I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage, thou shalt have no other gods before me.

For the right understanding of this, we shall examine these particulars.

- 1. whether the Law was delivered in a Covenant-way?
- 2. In what sense is the Law a Covenant of grace?
- 3. How may it appear that the Law in any sense is a Covenant of grace?
- 4. Why should God in the Law deal with us in a Covenant-way rather than a mere absolute supreme way?
- 5. What are the good things promised in this expresse of the Covenant?
- 6. What is the condition of this Covenant on our part, as we may gather it hence?

- 7. Who was the Mediator of this Covenant?
- 8. What of Christ, and his death, do we find in this manifestation of the Covenant?

For the first, whether the Law was delivered in a Covenant-way? it is affirmed on these grounds. 1. In that it hath the name of a Covenant. 2. In that it hath the real properties of a Covenant. 1. The name of a Covenant as it appears in these Texts. And the Lord said unto Moses, write these words, for after the tenor of these words, I have made a Covenant with thee, and with Israel: and he was there with the Lord forty days, and forty nights, he did neither eat bread, nor drink water, and he wrote upon the tables the words of the Covenant, the ten Commandments.— And he declared unto you his Covenant, which he Commanded you to perform, even the ten Commandments, and he wrote them upon two tables of stone.— When I was gone (says Moses) up into the Mount to receive the two tables of stone, even the tables of the Covenant which the Lord made with you, then I abode in the Mount forty days and forty nights; I neither did eat bread nor drink water.— And it came to pass at the end of forty days, and forty nights, that the Lord gave me the two tables of stone, even the tables of the Covenant.— So I turned and came down from the Mount, and the mount burned with fire, and the two tables of the Covenant were in my two hands. It appears plainly and expressly in these Texts that the Law is a Covenant.

2. The Law hath the real properties of a Covenant, which are the mutual consent and stipulation on both sides. You may see a full relation of this in Exod. 24.3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. And Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, all the words which the Lord hath said will we do: and Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and built an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel? and he sent young men of the Children of Israel, which offered burnt-offerings, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the Lord; and Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basons, and half of the blood he sprinkled on the Altar, and he took the book of the Covenant, and read in the audience of the people, and they said, all that the Lord hath said, will we do, and be obedient; and Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the Covenant which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words. This very passage is related in the Epistle to the Hebrews, when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people, according to the Law, he took the blood of calves and goats, with water and scarlet-wool, and hissop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people, saying, this is the blood of the Testament, (or Covenant) which God hath enjoined unto you. In the words you may observe these properties of a Covenant? 1. That God on his part expresseth his consent and willingness to be their God: this will appear in the preface of the Law, of which hereafter. 2. That the people on their part give their full consents, and ready willingness to be his servants. Both these appear in that, 1. Moses writes down the Covenant Covenant-wise. 2. He Confirms the Covenant by outward signs, as by the blood of Calves and Goats; whereof one half he puts in basons, to sprinkle it on the people; and the other half of the blood he sprinkles on the Altar; that sprinkling on the people signified their voluntary Covenanting with God, and the blood sprinkled on the Altar signified God's entering into Covenant with the people. Thus we have real Covenanting when the Law is given.

2. In what sense is the Law a Covenant of Grace? I answer, The Law may be considered in several senses; as 1. Sometimes it signifies largely any heavenly doctrine, whether it be promise or precept, and in this sense the Apostle tells us of the Law of works, and of the Law of faith. 2. Sometimes it signifies any part of the Old Testament in which sense Jesus answered the Jews, Is it not written in your Law, I said ye are gods? Now where was that written but in the book of the Psalms? 3. Sometimes it signifies the whole economy, and peculiar dispensation of God's worship unto the Jews, according to the moral ceremonial, and Judicial Law, in which sense it is said to continue until John, the Law and the Prophets were until John: but since that time the Kingdom of God is preached. 4. Sometimes it is taken synechdochically for some acts of the Law only. against such there is no Law. 5. Sometimes it is taken only for the Ceremonial Law, the Law having a shadow of good things to come. 6. Sometimes it is used in the sense of the Jews? as sufficient to save without Christ; and thus the Apostle generally takes it in his Epistle to the Romans, and Galatians. 7. Sometimes it is taken for that part of the Moral Law which is merely mandative and preceptive, without any promise at all. 8. Sometimes it is taken for the whole moral Law, with the preface and promises added to it; and in this last sense we take it, when we say it is a Covenant of grace?

3. How may it appear that the Law in this sense is a Covenant of grace? it appears, 1. By that contract betwixt God and Israel before the promulgation of the Law. If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my Covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people, for all the earth is mine? and ye shall be unto me a Kingdom of Priests and an holy nation. Whereunto the Prophet Jeremy hath reference, saying, obey my voice and do them according to all which I command you, so shall you be my people, and I will be your God. Both these Scriptures speak of the moral Law, or ten Commandments, containing the preface and promises; and how should that Law, be any other but a Covenant of grace, which runs in this tenor, I will be your God, and you shall be my people; my peculiar treasure; a Kingdom of Priests, an holy Nation, if you will but hear and obey my Commandments? Surely these privileges could never have been obtained by a Covenant of works; what? to be a Kingdom of Priests, an holy Nation, a peculiar treasure to the Lord? what? to be beloved of God as a desirable treasure (for so it is in the original) which a King delivers not into the hands of any of his Officers, but keepeth it to himself? this cannot be of works; No no, these are privileges vouchsafed of mere grace in Jesus Christ; and therefore Peter applies this very promise to the people of God under the Gospel, 1 Pet. 2.9.

2. It appears by that contract betwixt God and Israel in the promulgation of the Law; then it was that God proclaimed himself to be the God of Israel; saying, I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, out of the House of bondage. Some hold this to be the affirmative part of the first Commandment; in which the Gospel is preached, and the promises therein contained are offered. We say it is a preface to the whole Law, prefixed as a reason to persuade obedience to every Commandment. But all universally acknowledge that it is a free Covenant, which promiseth pardon of sin, and requireth faith in the Messiah; when God saith to Israel I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, doth he not propound himself as their King, Judge, Savior, and Redeemer? Yea, and spiritual Redeemer, from their bondage of sin and Satan, whereof that temporal deliverance from Egypt was truly a type? the Lord begins his commandments with an evangelical promise? and it is very observable, that as these words, I am the Lord thy God, are prefixed immediately to the first Commandment, so in sundry places of Scripture they are annexed to all the rest; ye shall fear every man his Mother, and his Father; and keep my Sabbaths, I am the Lord your God: ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another, and ye shall not swear by my Name falsely, neither shalt thou profane the Name of thy God; I am the Lord. — Neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbor, I am the Lord. — In a word thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, I am the Lord; or if that contain only the second Table, therefore shall ye observe all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them; I am the Lord. Add we to this, that in the second Commandment God is described to be one showing mercy unto thousands; all which must needs argue the Law to be a Covenant of grace.

3. It appears by the Contract betwixt God and Israel after the promulgation of the Law: is it not plainly expressed by Moses, Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God; and to walk in his ways, and to keep his statutes and Commandments.—And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldst keep his commandments? Yea, and after this in the Land of Moah, Moses was commanded by the Lord to make a Covenant with the children of Israel, besides the Covenant which he made with them in Horeb; now this was the very same that God made with them on Sinai, only it must be renewed, and it is expressly said, ye stand this day to enter into a Covenant with the Lord your God:—That he may establish you to be a people unto himself, and that he may be a God unto you, as he had sworn to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Surely this must needs be a Covenant of grace, how should it be but of grace that God promised to be the God of Israel? here are many sweet & precious promises, and they are all free and gracious; and therefore we conclude the Law, in the sense aforesaid, to be a Covenant of grace.

4. Why should God in the Law deal with us in a Covenant-way, rather than a mere absolute supreme way? I answer, 1. In respect of God; it was his pleasure in giving the Law not only to manifest his Wisdom, and Power, and Sovereignty, but his faithfulness, and truth, and love, and the glory of his grace; that he might make known (as the Apostle speaks) the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory. God's love is apart of his name, for God is love, and God's faithfulness is a part of his name, I saw Heaven opened (said John in a vision) and behold a white horse, & he that sate upon him was called faithful and true: now, how should we ever have known God's love at least in such a measure? or how should we ever have known God's faithfulness & truth at all, if he had not entered into a Covenant with us? it is true, if he had given the Law in a mere absolute supreme way, if he had given the precept without any promise, he might fully have discovered his illimited supreme power, but his so dear love and faithfulness could not have been known: now therefore let the world take notice of his singular love, and of his faithfulness; as Moses said to Israel, Because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the hands of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, Know therefore that the Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth Covenant and mercy with them that love him, and keep his Commandments, to a thousand generations.

2. In respect of us, God would rather deal with us in a covenant-way, than in a mere absolute supreme way, upon these grounds—

1. That he might bind us the faster to himself: a covenant binds on both parts: the Lord doth not bind himself to us, and leave us free; No, I will bring you (saith God) into the bond of the Covenant. The Lord sees how slippery and unstable our hearts are, how apt we are to start aside from our duty towards him, we love to wander; and therefore to prevent this inconstancy and unsettledness in us, and to keep our hearts more stable in our obedient walking before him, it pleased the Lord to bind us in the bond of Covenant, that as we look for a blessing from God, so we look to it to keep Covenant with God: you may say a command binds as well as a Covenant; it is true, but a Covenant doth as it were twist the cords of the Law, and double the precept upon the soul; when it is only a precept, then God alone commands it, but when I have made a promise to it, then I command it and bind it upon myself.

2. That our obedience might be more willing and free; an absolute Law might seem to extort obedience, but a Covenant and agreement makes it clearly to appear more free and willing. This is of the nature of the Covenant of grace; first, God promiseth mercy, to be our exceeding great reward; and then we promise obedience, to be his free, and willing people; & thus we become gods, not only by a property founded in his sovereign power & love, but by a property growing out of our own voluntary consents; we are not only his people, but his willing people; we give him our hand, when we become his, and enter into Covenant with him: See the expression, Ezek. 17.18. He despised the oath by breaking the Covenant, when loe he had given his hand. We are his, as the wife is her husbands. I entered into Covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine; now in marriages, free and mutual consent you know is ever given, and so it is here.

3. That our consolations might be stronger; that in all our difficulties and distresses we might ever have recourse to the faithfulness and love of God. 1. To the faithfulness of God. This was David's stay, and this may be ours; though friends be unfaithful, and may deceive, yet the Lord is faithful, and cannot fail his people, his promises are Yea, and Amen, we may build upon it. 2. That we might have recourse to the love of God: this indeed was the prim end why God delivered his Law in way of a Covenant, that he might sweeten and endear himself to us, and so draw us to him with cords of love; had God so pleased, he might have required all obedience from us, and when we had done all, he might have reduced us into nothing, or at least not have given us heaven for an inheritance, or himself for a portion; but his love is such, that he will not only command, but he will Covenant, that he might further express and communicate his love: how then should this but encourage us to go to God in all distresses? O what thankful loving thoughts should we have of God that would thus infinitely condescend to Covenant with us!

5. What are the good things Promised in this expresse of the Covenant? not to reckon up the temporal Promises of riches, honor, victory, peace, and protection in a land of Oil, Olive, and Honey, the great mercies of God are expressed in these terms, I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. This is the great Promise of the Covenant, it is as great as God himself: That we may better see it, and know it, I shall take it in pieces; the gold is so pure, that it is pity the least filing should be lost. Here God describes himself by these notes. 1. By his only eternal and Perfect Essence, I am the Lord. 2. By the Plurality of persons in that one essence, I am the Lord God, Jehovah Elohim. 3. By the propriety his people have in Jehovah Elohim, I am the Lord thy God. 4. By the fruit of that Propriety in reference to Israel, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

1. I am Jehovah: we read that he appeared to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob by the name of God Almighty, but now he was known to the Israelites by his name Jehovah, I am the Lord. Why, was it not by that name that he appeared to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? no, no, saith God; by my name Jehovah was I not known to them. This hath occasioned a question, how can this be? do we not read expressly that God said to Abraham, I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees? and again; I am the Lord God of Abraham thy Father, and the God of Isaac? how then is it said that by his name Jehovah he was not known unto them? This place hath perplexed many of the learned: but the meaning seems to be this, that though he was known to the Patriarchs by his name Jehovah, as it consists of letters, syllables, and sounds; yet he was not experimentally known unto them in his constancy to perform his promise in bringing them out of the land of Egypt until now. This name Jehovah denotes both his being in himself and his giving of being, or performance to his word, and promise; thus indeed he was not known, or manifested to the Patriarchs: they only were sustained by faith in God's almighty power, without receiving the thing promised; it is said of Abraham, that while he was yet alive, God gave him no inheritance in Canaan, no not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him; and now when his seed came to receive the Promise, and to have full knowledge and experience of his Power and goodness, then they knew the efficacy of his name Jehovah. So upon performance of further promises, he saith, they shall know him to be Jehovah, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.—therefore my people shall know my name, they shall know in that day that I am he that doth sepak, behold it is I.

2. I am Jehovah Elohim, this denotes the plurallity of Persons; God in delivering of the law, doth not only show his being but the manner of his being; that is, the three manners of subsisting in that one simple and eternal being; or the Trinity of persons in that Unity of Essence, the word signifies strong, potent, mighty; or if we express it plurally, it signifies the Almighty's, or Almighty powers; hence the Scriptures apply the general name, God, to the Persons severally, the Father is God, Heb. 1.1, 2. the Son is God, Act. 20.28. and the holy Ghost is God, Act 5.3, 4. Now God is said to be Author of these Laws delivered in a Covenant-way by Moses, that so the greater authority may be procured to them; and hence all Law-givers have endeavored to persuade the people, that they had their Laws from God.

3. I am the Lord thy God; herein is the propriety, and indeed here is the mercy that God speaks thus to every faithful Soul, I am thy God, by this appropriation God gives us a right in him, yea a possession of him. 1. A right in him; as the woman may say of him to whom she is Married, this man is my husband, so may every faithful soul say of the Lord, he is my God. 2. A possession of him; God doth not only show himself unto us, but he doth communicate himself unto us in his holiness, mercy, truth, grace, and goodness; hence it is said, we have *fellowship with the Father and with the Son Jesus Christ, and Christ is said to come and sup with us; and to kiss us with the kisses of his mouth; and to be near to us in all that we call upon him for; surely this is the highest happiness of the Saints, that God is their God; when they can say this, they have enough; if we could say, this House is mine. this Town, this City, this Kingdom, this World is mine, what is all this? O but when a Christian comes at length, and says, this God that made all the world is mine, this is enough, indeed this is the greatest promise that ever was made or ever can be made to any creature. Angels or Men; herein (if we observe it) God gives himself to be wholly ours, consider God essentially, or personally; Consider Jehovah Elohim, all is ours; God in his essence, and glorious attributes communicates himself to us for good, and God personally considered, as Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, they all enter into Covenant with us.*

1. The Father enters into Covenant with us; he promiseth to be a father to us, hence saith the Lord, Israel is my Son, my first born; and again, is Ephraim my dear Son? is he a pleasant Child? the Lord speaketh as through he were fond of his Children; as delighting in them, for so it is said, the Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him: or as pitying of them, for so it is said likewise, like as a father pitieth his Children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him.

2. The Son is in Covenant with us, and speaks to us in this language, thou art mine; how comes that about? why, I have redeemed thee, I have called thee, by thy name, and therefore thou art mine, this is Christ's Covenant with us; he brings us back to his Father, from whose presence we were banished, and sets us before his face forever; he undertakes for us to take up all controversies which may fall out between God and us; he promiseth to restore us to the Adoption of Sons; and not only to the title, but to the inheritance of Sons, that we might be where he is.

3. The Holy Ghost makes a Covenant with us. By one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified; whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness and a worker. — This is the Covenant that I will make with them, I will put my Law into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them. I know the Father is implied in this, yet here is the proper work of the Holy Ghost: what the Father hath purposed for us from all Eternity, and the Son hath purchased for us in his time, that the Holy Ghost effects in us, and for us as in our time, he applies the blood of Christ for the remission of Sins: he writes the Law in our hearts: he comforts us in our sadness: he supports us in our faintings, and guides us in our wanderings. Now he that effects these things for us, and in our behalf he is therefore said to make a Covenant with us. Thus Elohim, God personally considered, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are in Covenant with us.

4. This is the great promise, what can be greater? when God said to Abraham, I will be thy God, what could he give more? so when God tells us, I am the Lord thy God, what could he say more? God having no greater to swear by, (saith the Apostle) he swore by himself. So God being minded to do great things for his People; and having no greater thing to give, he gives himself. O the goodness of God in Christ! I am the Lord thy God.

5. Let us see the fruit of this in reference to Israel; which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. This was God's promise long before to Abraham, know of a surety, that thy seed shall be a stranger in a Land that is not theirs, and shall serve them, and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that Nation whom they shall serve will I judge, and afterwards they shall come out with great substance. See here Israel must be strangers in Egypt, and serve the Egyptians four hundred years, but then he will bring them out of the land of Egypt, and out of their servile bondage: why this argues that God is Jehovah: now he has performed what he had foretold, and this argues that God in Christ is our Redeemer: for what was this redemption from Egypt, but a type of our freedom from sin, death, and hell? here is the work of redemption joined with that great name Jehovah Elohim, to signify that such a redemption is a clear testimony of a true and mighty God. Whether this were laid down only as a peculiar argument to the Jews to keep the Commandments, or it belongs also to us, being grafted in, and become of the same stock with them, I shall not dispute: this is without any controversy that their bondage was typical, and ours spiritual: you see the good things promised in this Covenant.

6. What is the condition of this covenant on our part as we may gather it hence? The condition of this covenant is faith in Jesus, which is implied in the promise, I will be thy God, or I am the Lord thy God: and commanded in the precept built upon it, thou shalt have me to be thy God, or thou shalt have no other God's before me. But where is faith in Jesus Christ mentioned either in promise or precept? I answer, if it be not expressed, it is very plainly intended, or meant: God is not the God of Israel, but in and through the Mediator: neither can Israel take God to be their God, but by faith in the Messiah. In the prophets we read frequently these exhortations,; trust in the Lord, commit thyself unto the Lord, lean upon the Lord, and roll, thy burden upon the Lord: but what the Prophets exhort unto, that is commanded in this expresse of the Covenant? and who can trust in the Lord, or commit himself to the Lord, or lean upon the Lord, or roll his burden on the Lord, if he be a sinner, unless it be in and through a Mediator? Israel must walk before God in all well-pleasing; and the Apostle tells us, that without faith it is impossible to please God. But to go further, what is the meaning of this first commandment in the affirmative part, but to have one God in Christ to be our God by faith? it is true, there is no mention made of Christ, or faith, but that is nothing; is there is no mention of Love, and yet our Savior discovers and commands it there; when the Lawyer tempted Christ, Master, which is the great Commandment in the Law? you know Christ's answer, thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, this is the first and great Commandment, Mat. 22, 36, 37, 38. Now as our Savior discovers love there, so in like manner is faith and Christ there the necessary consequents. But you may object, what say we to obedience? is not that rather the condition of this covenant thus shining in the Law?

Indeed the Law and obedience are Correlatives. But in this case we are not to look to the Law as merely mandatory; we gave you the sense of the word, and how it is used as a covenant of grace? remember only this; the Law is considered either more strictly, as it is an abstracted rule of righteousness, holding forth life upon no other terms but perfect obedience; or more largely, as that whole doctrine delivered on Mount Sinai, with the preface and promises adjoined: in the former sense it is a Covenant of works? but in the latter sense it is a covenant of grace. — And yet I dare not say, that as the Law is a covenant of grace, it doth exclude obedience. In some sort obedience as well as faith may be said to be a condition of the covenant of grace; I shall give you my thoughts in this distinction, obedience to all God's commandments, is either considerable as a cause of life, or as a qualification of the subject; in the former sense it cannot be a condition of the covenant of grace, but in the latter sense it may, if by condition we understand whatsoever is required on our part, as precedent concomitant, or subsequent to the Covenant of grace, repentance, faith, and obedience are all conditions; but if by Condition we understand whatsoever is required on our part as the cause of the good promised, though only instrumental, why then faith, or belief in the promises of the covenant is the only condition: faith and obedience are opposed in the matter of justification and salvation in the Covenant, not that they cannot stand together in one subject, for they are inseparable united; but because they cannot concur and meet together in one court, as the cause of justification or salvation. Now when we speak of the condition of the Covenant of grace, we intend such a condition as is among the number of true causes; indeed in the Covenant of works, obedience is required as the cause of life; but in the Covenant of grace, though obedience must accompany faith, yet not obedience, but only faith is the cause of life contained in the Covenant.

7. Who was the Mediator of this Covenant? to this we distinguish of a double Mediator, viz. Typical, and Spiritual; Moses was a typical, but Christ was the spiritual Mediator: and herein was Moses privileged above all before him; he was the Mediator of the Old Testament, Christ reserving himself to be the Mediator of a better Covenant, (i.) of the New Testament. Moses received the Law from God, and delivered it to the people, and so he stood a Mediator between God and the people; never was mortal man so near to God as Moses was; Abraham indeed was called God's friend; but Moses was God's favorite; and never was mortal man either in knowledge, love or authority so near unto the people as Moses was (which makes the Jews (O wonder) to Idolize him to this very day. Moses was called in as a Mediator on both parts. 1. On God's part, when he called him up to receive the Law, & all those messages which God sent by him to the people. 2. On the people's part when they desired him to receive the Law; for they were afraid by reason of the fire, and durst not go up into the Mount: mark how he stiles himself as a Mediator: At that time (saith he) I stood between the Lord and you to show you the word of the Lord: He was God's mouth to them, and he was their mouth to God; and he was a prevailing Mediator on both parts: he prevailed with God for the suspending of his Justice, that it should not break out upon the people; and he prevailed with the people to bind them in Covenant unto God, and to make profession of that Obedience which the Lord required and called for; yet for all this, I call him not a Mediator of Redemption, but Relation: A great deal of difference there is betwixt Moses and Christ: as 1. Moses only received the Law, and delivered it to the people; but Christ our true Moses fulfilled it. 2. Moses broke the Tables, to show how we in our Nature had broken the Law, but Christ our true Moses repairs it again. 3. Moses had the Law only writ in Tables of Stone, but Christ writes it in the Tables of our hearts. 4. Moses was mere man, but Christ is God as well as man: Moses was only a Servant in God's House, but Christ is a Son; yea, Christ is Lord of his own House the Church: Moses mediation was of this use, to show what was the true manner of worshipping God, but he did not inspire force and power to follow it; he could not reconcile men to God as of himself, and therefore it appeared that there was need of another reconciler, viz. the Lord Jesus Christ.

8. What of Christ, and of his death do we find in this manifestation of the Covenant? I answer, 1. In delivering the Law, we find something of Christ: there is a question whether the Lord himself immediately in his own person delivered the Law? and some conclude affirmatively from the Preface, God spake these words, and said] and from that passage of Moses, these words the Lord spake unto all your Assembly in the Mount out of the midst of the fire, — and wrote them on two Tables of Stone, and delivered them unto me. But others are for the negative, and say, this proves not that they were pronounced or delivered immediately by God; for we find in Scripture, that when the Angels were the immediate persons, yet the Lord himself is reported to have spoken unto men, Gen. 18.2, 13. Exod. 3.2, 6, 7. And Augustine is resolute, that Almighty God himself in the time of the Old Testament did not spake to the Jews with his own immediate voice, but only by Christ, or by his Angels, or by his Prophets; and for this Ministerial voice of his Angels some produce these Texts: who have received the Law by the Ordinance of Angels, and wherefore then serveth the Law? it was added because of transgressions till the seed should come, to whom the promise was made, and it was ordained by Angels in the hand of a mediator. And, if the word spoken by Angels was steadfast, &c. For my part, it hath puzzled me at times, whether of these opinions to take; but others say (and I am now as apt to join with them as with either of the former) that Jesus Christ the second person of the Trinity, to be incarnate, who is called the Angel of the Covenant, Mal 3.1. and the Angel of his presence, Isa. 63.9. was he that uttered and delivered the Law unto Moses; and to this purpose are produced these Texts, This Moses is he that was in the Congregation with the Angel, which spake to him in the Mount Sinai. Now this Angel was Christ, as it is cleared in the following verse; whom (or which Angel) our Fathers would not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt. They would not obey the Angel, but thrust him from them, (i.) they tempted the Angel whom they should have obeyed; and who was that but Jesus Christ? as it is cleared more fully and expressly by the Apostle, Neither let us tempt Christ as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of Serpents. Some of the Learned are of opinion that Christ the Son of God did in the shape of a man deliver the Law. But I leave that.

2. In the Law itself, as it is a Covenant of Grace, we find something of Christ; in the preface he proclaims himself to be our God; and in the first Commandment we are bound to take this God to be our God; and in the second, he gives us a double Reason or Motive to obey; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, I show mercy unto thousands of them that love me and keep my Commandments. And in the fifth Commandment he gives a promise of long life in Canaan, which is either to be looked at as a type of Heaven, or literally, for a prosperous condition here on earth; but howsoever it is by virtue of the Covenant, and as a testimony of God's love; now all these promises are made in Christ: God is not our God but in and through Jesus Christ; God will not show mercy unto thousands, nor unto one of all the thousands of his Saints, but as they are in Jesus Christ: God will not give us long life here, or eternal life hereafter, but in, for, and through the Lord Jesus Christ: what if Moses writ not down the word Christ] yet certainly Moses writ of Christ] his words imply Christ, as Christ himself told the Jews, Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for Moses wrote of me; and as Philip told

Nathanael, we have found him of whom Moses in the Law and the Prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, John 1.45. Surely Christ was, if not the only subject, yet the only scope of all the writings of Moses; and therefore in the Law itself you see we find something of Christ.

3. In the Exposition of the Law, as Moses gives it here and there, we find something of Christ. Yea if we observe it, Moses brought something more to the expression of Christ, and of the Covenant of Grace, than ever was before: in the first promise it was revealed that Christ should be the Seed of the woman; in the second manifestation of the promise, it was revealed that Christ should be of the Seed of Abraham; but in Moses writings, and Moses time, we learn more expressly that Christ was to be incarnate, and to have his Conversation amongst men: The promise runs thus; And I will dwell among the Children of Israel, and will be their God, and they shall know that I am the Lord their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell amongst them; I am the Lord their God. The same promise is renewed or repeated; and I will set my Tabernacle amongst you, and my Soul shall not abhor you; and I will walk among you, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people; this promise was punctually fulfilled when Christ was incarnate; for then was the Word made flesh, and dwelt amongst us, John 1.14. or if it be referred to the habitation of God by his Spirit amongst the spiritual seed of Abraham, then it implies the incarnation of Christ, because that was to go before the plentiful habitation of Christ's Spirit in the Saints. Again, Moses writing of Christ, The Lord thy God (saith he) will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy Brethren like unto Me, unto him shall ye hearken. Was not this a plain expression? Peter in his Sermon to the Jews, preacheth Jesus Christ, and he tells the Jews that this Jesus Christ was preached unto them before: when before? even in Moses time; and for proof he cites this very Text, For Moses truly said unto the Fathers, a Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you, of your Brethren, like unto Me, him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you.

4. In the confirmation of the Law we find something of Christ. It was confirmed by Seals and Sacrifices, &c. What, were all these but a type of Christ, in the formed expression of the Covenant we found the Seal of Circumcision, but now it pleased God to add unto the former another Seal for Confirmation of their Faith, sc, the Passover: and was not this a type of Christ, the immaculate Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world? Again, in this manifestation Moses brought in the Priesthood as a settled Ordinance to offer sacrifices for the people: and was not this a type of Christ, our true and unchangeable High Priest? I have sometimes seen the Articles of a believing Jews Creed, collected out of Moses Law; as thus, I believe that the Messiah should die to make satisfaction for sin: this they saw in their continued bloody Sacrifices, and their deliverance from Egypt by the death of a Lamb, taught them no less. 2. I believe that he shall not die for his own sins, but for the sins of others: this they might easily observe in every sacrifice, when (according to Law) they saw the most harmless birds and Beasts were offered. 3. I believe to be saved by laying hold upon his merits: this they might gather by laying their right hand upon the head of every Beast that they brought to be offered up, and by laying hold on the horns of the Altar, being a Sanctuary or Refuge from pursuing vengeance. Thus we might go on: No question the Death and Resurrection of Christ, the Priesthood and Kingdom of Christ were prefigured and typed by the Sacrifices, and the Brazen Serpent, and the Priesthood of Aaron, and the Kingdom of Israel: And I cannot but think that the godly spiritual Jews understood this very well; and that these did not rest in Sacrifices or Sacraments, but that by faith they did really enjoy Christ in every of them.

5. In the intention of God's giving the Law we find something of Christ. The very end of God in holding forth the Law, was, that upon the sense of our impossibility to keep it, and of our danger to break it, we should desire earnestly, and seek out diligently for Jesus Christ: to this purpose saith the Apostle, Christ is the end of the Law for righteousness to everyone that believeth. Christ is the end of the Law (i.) Christ is the end of intention; God by giving so holy a Law, and by requiring such perfect obedience, he would thereby humble and debase the Israelites, so that they should earnestly fly to Christ: in this sense the Law is our School-master to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. A School-Master (you know) doth not only whip or correct, but also teach and direct: so the Law doth not only threaten and curse if the work be not done, but it shows where power and help is to be had, viz. from the Lord Jesus Christ. If this be so, how much to blame are they, that under pretence of Free-Grace and Christ, cry down the Law? Rather let us cry it up, and this is the way to set up Free-Grace and Christ. Surely he that discovers his defects by the perfect rule of the Law, and whose Soul is embittered and humbled because of those defects, he must needs prize Christ, desire Christ, advance Christ in his thoughts above all the men in the world.

And thus far of the Covenant of Promise as it was manifested from Moses to David.

SECT. V. Of the Covenant of Promise, as manifested to David.

THE next breaking forth of this Gracious Covenant was to David; and in this manifestation, appears yet more of Christ; the expression of it is chiefly in these words. Although my House be not so with God, yet he hath made with me an everlasting Covenant, ordered in all things and sure.

For the right understanding of this, we shall examine these Particulars.—

- 1. Who is the Author of this Covenant?
- 2. To whom is the Covenant made?
- 3. What is this, that the Covenant is said to be made?
- 4. How is the Covenant ordered?
- 5. Wherein is the Covenant sure?
- 6. Whether is Christ more clearly manifested in this breaking forth of the Covenant, than in any of the former?

1. Who is the Author of this Covenant? David says, he hath made it: he (i.) God; the Rock of Israel, the everlasting Rock; The Rock of their Salvation, Psal. 19.5. The Rock of their Strength, Psal. 62.7. The Rock of their Heart, Psal. 73.26. The Rock of their Refuge, Psal. 94.22. Their Rock and their Redeemer, Psal. 19.14. The Psalmist is frequent and ordinary in this style, to show that God is the mighty, stable and immutable foundation and defense of all the faithful, who fly unto him, and will trust in him; he is such a Rock as will not shrink nor fail his Creatures; man is unstable, but he is God, and not man, who is the Author of this Covenant.

2. To whom is the Covenant made? why, saith David, He hath made with me an everlasting Covenant; (i.) either with Christ the Antitype, or else with David himself, the type of Christ. To the former sense we have spoken elsewhere; the latter I suppose more genuine; the Covenant indeed was first made with Christ, and then with David as a member of Jesus Christ. Some are wholly for a Covenant betwixt God and Christ, and they deny any such thing as a Covenant betwixt God and man; but are not the Testimonies express? Take heed to yourselves, lest you forget the Covenant which the Lord hath made with you. And, I will make a new Covenant with the House of Israel; and with the House of Judah. And by name do we not see God Covenanting with Abraham, with Isaac and with Jacob? Gen. 17.7. Gen. 26.2. Gen 35.12. Levite. 26.42. And here do we not see God Covenanting with David? I have made a Covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David; and once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David, and the Lord hath sworn in truth unto David, he will not turn from it. Oh take heed of such Doctrines as tend unto Liberty & Licentiousness! the Covenant God's makes with us, binds us faster to God: and if there be no Covenant betwixt God and us, it opens a gap to the looseness of our spirits; for how should we be charged with unfaithfulness unto God, if we have not all entered into a Covenant with God

3. What is this that the Covenant is said to be made? this holds forth to us the freeness of God's entering into Covenant with us: I will make my Covenant between me and thee, saith God: or, I will give my Covenant, I will dispose my Covenant between me and thee, so it is in the Original. And elsewhere it is plain, Behold I give unto him my Covenant of peace: when God makes a Covenant, then he gives the Covenant of Grace unto all that he takes into Covenant with him: The Lord set his love upon you (said Moses to Isreal) to take you into Covenant with him, not because ye were more in number than other people, but because he loved you, and chose your Fathers; as noting out the freeness of his love towards them: he loved them: Why? He loved them because he loved them. This freeness of his Grace in giving a Covenant, may appear in these Particulars.

1. In that God is the first that seeks after us, to draw us into Covenant with him; we seek not him, but he seeks us; we choose not him, but he chooseth us; he loves us first; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, behold me, behold me, unto a Nation that was not called by my name.

2. In that there is nothing in us, to draw God into a Covenant with us: many a man seeks first after the unmarried Virgin, but then there is Beauty, or there is Dowry, or there is something or other which draws on the man; but there is no such thing in us: this made David say, when he heard of God's Covenant with him and his, Who am I, O Lord God? and what is my Fathers House that thou hast brought me hitherto? — and is this the manner of man, O Lord God? q. d. O Lord God, thou dealest familiarly with me as a man dealeth with man; or as it is elsewhere, Thou hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree. It would make any soul cry out, that deeply weighs the freeness of this Covenant; Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man, that thou visitest him?

3. In that there is enough in us to keep off the Lord from ever owning us; we are as contrary to God as darkness is to light, or as evil is to good: The carnal mind is enmity against God (saith the Apostle) it is not subject to the Law of God, neither indeed can it be. We are a crooked Generation, that cannot abide the straight ways of the Lord; our whole nature is sinful and corrupt before him, and for the most part when we are most averse and backward, and have least thought of ever seeking after him, then it is that he seeks us, to take us unto himself; thus the Lord called Saul when he was Persecuting, and raging, and breathing out slaughter against the Lord, and against his Saints: and thus the Lord called those Jews that mocked the Apostles when they spake diverse Languages, These men are full of new wine; ay but the next word that they spake, is, Men and Brethren, what shall we do? O the free and unexpected Grace of our God!

4. In that we are by nature no better than others that are without God, and without Covenant: what makes the difference betwixt us and them, but this free Grace of God? Is there any reason in us why one is taken into a Covenant, and another is not? Nay, I will tell you a wonder; so it pleaseth the Lord, that sometimes God chooseth the worst, and leaves those that are better than they; We read that Publicans and Harlots were taken in, and the righteous Generation which justified themselves, and were justified by others, were passed by: surely God respects none for anything in them; his design is that the freeness of his Grace might be seen in those whom he takes to himself. Hence the Apostle, God chooseth the foolish things of this world, and the weak things of this world, base and despised things; whilst in the mean time he passeth by the wise and mighty, and things of high esteem, that all men might see, it is the Grace of God, and not anything in man, by which we are taken into Covenant with him.

5. How is the Covenant said to be ordered? The word ordered will help us in the Answer: it sets out to us a marshalling, and fit laying of things together, in opposition to disorder and confusson; the Septuagint renders it 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which signifies marshalled, disposed, prepared, set forth, as an Army in comely order: the same word is in Judge. 20.22. And the men of Israel encouraged themselves, and set their Battle again in array. As we see in an Army, everyone is set in rank and file; so is everything in this Covenant ranked, disposed, ordered, that it stands at best advantage to receive and repel the enemy: a poor Christian that hath a troubled spirit, he sets himself against Free Grace and this everlasting Covenant, he raiseth thousands of objections against it; but now the covenant is ordered, it stands like a marshall'd Army to receive him, and repel him. Come, let us see how it is ordered in all things. I shall instance only in these particulars: As, —

1. It is well ordered in respect of the Root out of which it grew: This (say Divines) was the Infinite Sovereignty, and Wisdom, and Mercy of God. 1. It was founded in God's Sovereignty; he had a right to do what he would with his fallen Creatures: he might damn or save whom he pleased: Hath not the Potter Power over the Clay, of the same lump to make one Vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor? 2. It was founded in wisdom: The Covenant of Grace was a result of Council; it was no rash act, but a deliberate act with infinite wisdom: God being the Sovereign of all his Creatures, and seeing mankind in a perishing condition, he determined within himself deliberately to make such a Covenant of Peace, first with Christ, and then with all the Elect in Christ. 3. It was founded in Mercy, (i e.) in the goodness of God flowing out freely to one in misery: for mercy, we say, is made up of these two Acts. 1. There must be an Object of Misery. 2. There must be a free efflux of goodness on that Object. Now the Covenant of Grace was founded on these; as, 1. There was an Object of Misery, lost man, wretched man, undone by sin: and, 2. There was an efflux of God's Goodness, his very bowels moved within him, and they could not hold: I have loved thee, with an everlasting love (saith God) therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee. Surely this was well ordered; a perplexed soul may have his spirit up in arms against the Covenant of Grace, O, cries the Soul, in its sad condition, I am miserable, I shall not live, but die, my sins will damn me, I am lost forever. Why, but see how the Covenant is ordered in respect of the root or rise: it stands like a well marshalled Army to receive, and to repel those doubts: as, 1. God acted in a way of Soveraginty, and cannot God save thee if he will? 2. God acted in a way of Wisdom, and though thou seest no way but one with thee, Death and Damnation; yet cannot infinite wisdom contrive another way? 3. God acted in a way of Mercy, and O thou afflicted tossed with tempests, and not comforted, is not infinite Mercy above all thy Misery? Why see, see poor soul how the Covenant repels all thy oppositions in respect of its rise.

2. It is well ordered in respect of the persons interested in it from all eternity, and they are God the Father, and in Jesus Christ his Son; as for the Saints Elect, they were not then, and therefore the Covenant could not be immediately struck with them; now there was great need of this order; for should the Covenant have been made betwixt God the Father and the Elect from all eternity, and that immediately, a troubled soul would have opposed it thus. 1. If it was from all eternity, how then shall I be capable of it? alas my being was not so long since. 2. If it were made with me immediately, then I had some part to perform of mine own Power and Strength; but alas I have failed, I can do nothing: O but now the Covenant is a well ordered Covenant, in these respects: For,

1. Christ hath been from all eternity? and thou, as an Elect Vessel hadst thy being in him, as he was thy Head. 2. Christ is able to perform the Covenant, and being contractor, it lies upon his score to satisfy his Father; he that first made the bargain, must look to fulfill it; and for thy part, if thou dost anything, it must be through him. Without me ye can do nothing. Why, see now, see how the Covenant repels all thy oppositions in respect of the Persons interested in it from all eternity; God hath his place, and Christ his place, and Faith his place, and the Sinner his place.

3. It is well ordered in respect of the method of the Articles in their several workings? first God begins, then we come on: first, God, on his part, gives Grace and Glory, and then we, on our parts, act Faith and Obedience: God hath ever the first work; as first, I will be your God, and then ye shall be my People: first, I will take away the stony heart, and give an heart of Flesh, and then you shall loath yourselves for your iniquities and for your abominations: first, I will sprinkle water upon you, and then ye shall be clean from all your filthiness: first, I will put my Spirit into you, and cause you to walk in my Statutes, and then ye shall keep my Judgments and do them: first, I will pour out my Spirit of Grace and supplication upon you, and then ye shall mourn as a man mourning for his only Son: first, I will do all, and then ye shall do something: A perplexed troubled spirit is apt to cry out, O! alas I can do nothing; I can as well dissolve a Rock, as make my heart of stone a heart of flesh! Mark now how the Covenant stands well ordered like an Army: I will do all, saith God, and then thou shalt do something? I will strengthen and quicken you, and then ye shall serve me, saith the Lord.

4. It is well ordered in respect of the end and aim, to which all the parts of the Covenant are referred; the end of the Covenant is the praise of the Glory of his Grace: the parts of the Covenant are the Promise and the Stipulation; the Promise is either Principal or Immediate, and that is God and Christ; or secondary and consequential, and that is Pardon, Justification, Reconciliation, Sanctification, Glorification; and the Stipulation on our parts are Faith and Obedience: we must believe in him that Justifies the ungodly, and walk before him in all well pleasing. Observe now the main design and aim of the Covenant, and see but how all the streams run towards that Ocean: God gives himself to the Praise of the Glory of his Grace, God gives Christ to the Praise of the Glory of his Grace, God gives pardon, justification, sanctification, salvation to the praise of the Glory of his Grace; and we Believe, we Obey to the Praise of the Glory of his Grace; and good reason, for all is of Grace, and therefore all must tend to the Praise of the glory of his grace: it is of Grace that God hath given himself, Christ, pardon, justification, reconciliation, sanctification, salvation to any Soul; it is of grace that we believe; By grace ye are saved through faith, not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. O the sweet and comely order of this Covenant! All is of Grace, and all tends to the praise and glory of this grace, and therefore it is called a Covenant of grace: Many a sweet soul is forced to cry, I cannot believe, I may as well reach heaven with a finger, as lay hold on Christ by the hand of faith; but mark how the Covenant stands like a well marshalled army to repel this doubt; if thou canst not believe, God will enable thee to believe; to you it is given to believe: O the Covenant of Grace is a gracious Covenant: God will not only promise good things, but he helps us by his Spirit to perform the condition: He works our hearts to believe in God, and to believe in Christ, all is of Grace, that all may tend to the praise of the glory of his grace.

5. Wherein is the Covenant sure? I answer, it is sure in the performance and accomplishment of it. Hence the promises of the Covenant are called the sure Mercies of David; not because they are sure unto David alone, but because they are sure, and shall be sure unto all the Seed of David, that are in Covenant with God, as David was: the Promises of God's Covenant are not Yea and Nay, various and uncertain, but they are Yea and Amen, sure to be fulfilled. Hence the stability of God's Covenant is compared to the firmness and unmovableness of the mighty Mountains; nay Mountains may depart, and the hills be removed by a Miracle, but, my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the Covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee. Sooner shall the Rocks be removed, the Fire cease to burn, the Sun be turned into darkness, and the very heavens be confounded with the earth, than the promise of God shall fail. The testimony of the Lord is sure, saith David: Christ made it, and writ it, with his own blood; to this very end was Christ appointed, and it hath been all his work to ensure Heaven to his Saints. Some question whether it be in God's present power to blot a name out of the Book of Life? We say no; his deed was at first free, but now it is necessary, not absolutely, but, ex Hypothesi, upon supposition of his eternal Covenant. Hence it is, that the Apostle says; If we confess our Sins, He is Faithful, and Just to forgive us our Sins: It is Justice with God, to pardon the Elect's Sins, as the Case now stands. Indeed Mercy was all that saved us primarily; but now Truth saves us, and stands engaged with Mercy, for our Heaven: And therefore, David prays, Send forth Mercy and Truth, and save me. We find it often in the Psalms, as a Prayer of David; Deliver me in Thy Righteousness; and, Judge me according to Thy Righteousness; and, Quicken me in Thy Righteousness; and, In Thy Faithfulness answer me; and, In Thy Righteousness. Now, if it had not been for the Covenant of Grace, surely David durst not have said such a word. The Covenant is sure in every respect; I will make an Everlasting Covenant with you (saith God) even the sure Mercies of David.

6. Whether is Christ more clearlier manifested in this Breaking-forth of the Covenant, than in any of the Former? The Affirmative will appear, in that we find in this Manifestation, these Particulars:—

1. That He was God, and Man, in One Person; David's Son, and yet David's Lord: The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on My Right Hand, until I make Thine Enemies Thy Foot-stool.

2. That He suffered for us; and in His Sufferings, How many Particulars are discovered? As first, His Cry, My God, My God, Why hast Thou forsaken Me? Secondly, The Jews Taunts; He trusted on the Lord, that He would deliver Him; let Him deliver Him if He delight in Him. Thirdly, The very Manner of His Death; They pierced My Hands, and My Feet; I may tell all My Bones, they look and stare upon Me: they part My Garments among them, and cast Lots upon My Vesture.

3. That He Rose again for us; Thou wilt not leave My Soul in Hell, neither wilt Thou suffer Thine Holy One to see Corruption.

4. That He Ascended up into Heaven; Thou hast Ascended on High, Thou hast led Captivity Captive, Thou hast received Gifts for Men.

5. That He must be King over us, both to Rule and Govern His Elect, and to bridle and subdue His Enemies: I have set My King upon My Holy Hill of Zion; I will declare the Decree, the Lord hath said unto Me, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee.— The Lord said unto My Lord, Sit Thou at My Right Hand, until I make Thine Enemies Thy Foot-stool. The Lord shall send the Rod of Thy Strength out of Zion, Rule Thou in the midst of Thine Enemies.

6. That He must be Priest, as well as King; and Sacrifice, as well as Priest; *The Lord hath Sworn, and will not Repent; Thou art a Priest forever, after the Order of Melchizedek. — Thou lovest Righteousness, and hatest Wickedness; therefore God, Thy God, hath anointed Thee with the Oil of Gladness, above Thy Fellows: (i.e.) Above all Christians, who are thy Fellows, Consorts, and Partners, in the Anointing: Sacrifice and Burnt-Offering Thou wouldst not have; but mine Ear hast Thou bored; Burnt-Offering, and Sin-Offering hast Thou not required. Then said I, Loe I come: In the Volume of the Book it is written of me, That I should do Thy Will, O God. Mine Ears hast Thou bored, or digged open; The Septuagint, to make the Sense plainer, say; But a Body hast Thou fitted me, or prepared for me: Meaning that His Body was ordained, and fitted to be a Sacrifice for the Sins of the World, when other legal Sacrifices were refused as unprofitable. O see, how clearly Christ is revealed in this Expressure of the Covenant! It was never thus before.*

And thus far of the Covenant of Promise, as it was manifested from David till the Captivity.

SECT. VI. Of the Covenant of Promise, as manifested to Israel, about the Time of the Captivity.

THE great Breaking-forth of this Gracious Covenant was to Israel about the Time of their Captivity. By reason of that Captivity of Babylon, Israel was almost clean destroyed; and therefore, then it was high time, that the Lord should appear like a Sun after a stormy Rain, and give them some clear Light of Christ, and of this Covenant of Grace than ever yet. He doth so, and it appears especially in these words; Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new Covenant with the house of Israel, and with the House of Judah; not according to the Covenant which I made with their Fathers, in the day that I took them by the Hand, to bring them out of the Land of Egypt; which my Covenant they break, although I was an Husband unto them, saith the Lord; but this shall be the Covenant that I will make with the House of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my Law in their Inward Parts, and write it in their Hearts; and I will be their God, and they shall be My People; and they shall teach no more, every Man his Neighbor, and every Man his Brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know Me from the Least of them unto the Greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their Iniquity, and remember their Sin no more. In this Expressure of the Covenant, we shall examine these Particulars:—

- 1. Why it is called a New-Covenant?
- 2. Wherein the Expressure of this Covenant doth excel the former, which God made with their Fathers?
- 3. How doth God put the Law into our inward Parts?
- 4. What is it to have the Law written in our Hearts?
- 5. How are we taught of God, so as not to need any other kind of Teaching comparatively?
- 6. What is the Universality of this Knowledge, in that All shall know me, saith the Lord?
- 7. How is God said to forgive Iniquity, and never more to remeber sin?

1. Why is it called a New Covenant? I answer; It is called New, either in respect of the late and new Blessings, which God vouchsafed Israel, in bringing back their Captivity with Joy, and planting them in their own Land again; or it is called New, in respect of the Excellency of this Covenant: Thus the Hebrews were wont to call anything Excellent, New. O sing unto the Lord a New Song, Psal. 96.1. that is, an Excellent Song: Or it is called New, in contradiction to the Covenant of Promise before Christ came. In this latter Sense, the very same words here, are repeated in the Epistle to the Hebrews: Behold the Dayss come, saith the Lord, when I will make a New Covenant with the House of Israel, and the House of Judah.— In that He saith a New Covenant, He hath made the First Old; now, that which decayeth, and waxeth old, is ready to vanish away. The New-Covenant is usually understood in the latter Sense; it is New, because diverse from that which God made with the Fathers before Christ; it hath a new Worship, new Adoration, a new Form of the Church, new Witnesses, new Tables, new Sacraments and Ordinances; and these never to be abrogated or disannulled, never to wax Old, as the Apostle speaks: Yet in respect of those new Blessings, which God bestowed upon Israel immediately after the Captivity, this very Manifestation may be called New: And in reference to this; Behold the Days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the Children of Israel out of the Land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, which brought up, and which led the Seed of the House of Israel out of the North-Country, and from all Countries whither I had driven them, and they shall dwell in their own Land.

2. Wherein doth the Expressure of His Covenant excel the former, which God made with their Fathers? I answer, —

1. It excels in the very Tenor, or outward Administration of the Covenant; for this Covenant, after it once began, continued without Interruption until Christ, whereas the Former was broken, or did expire. Hence God calls it a New-Covenant;— Not according to the Covenant, which I made with their Fathers in the Day that I took them by the Hand, to bring them out of the Land of Egypt, which my Covenant they brake, although I was an Husband unto them, saith the Lord. In this respect it might be called New, or, at least it may be called an Inchoation of the New, because it continued till Christ, which no other Expressure of the Covenant did before, and so it excelled all the former.

2. It excels in the Spiritual Benefits and Graces of the Spirit. We find, that under this Covenant they were more plentifully bestowed upon the Church, than formerly. Mark the Promises: I will set My Eye upon them for Good, and I will bring them again to this Land; and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not bluck them up; and I will give them a Heart to know Me, that I am the Lord; and they shall be My People, and I will be their God; for they shall return unto Me with their whole Heart. — Again, I will shake all Nations, and the Desire of the Nations shall come, and I will fill this House with Glory, saith the Lord of Hosts: The Silver is mine, and the Gold is mine, saith the Lord of Hosts; the Glory of this latter House shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of Hosts. And I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write it in their Hearts, and I will be their God, and they shall be my People, and they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his Brother, saying, know the Lord; for they shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquities, and I will remember their Sins no more.

3. It excels in the discovery and revelation of the Mediator, in and through whom this Covenant was made: In the former expression we discovered much, yet in none of them was so plainly revealed the time of his coming, the place of his birth, his name, the passages of his nativity, his humiliation and kingdom, as we find them in this. —

1. Concerning the time of his Coming; Seventy weeks shall be determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy City, to finish the Transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophesy, and to anoint the most holy.

2. Concerning the place of his Birth: But thou Bethlehem Ephrata, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting.

3. Concerning his Name: Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the Government shall be upon his Shoulders; and his Name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. — In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely, and this his Name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness.—Behold a Virgin shall conceive, and bear a Son, and thou O Virgin shalt call his Name Immanuel.

4. Concerning the passages of his Nativity, that he should be born of a Virgin, Isa. 7.14. That at his Birth all the Infants round about Bethlehem should be slain. Jer 31.15. That John the Baptist should be his Prodromus, or forerunner, to prepare his way, Mal. 3.1. That he should flee into Egypt, and be recalled thence again, Hos. 11.1. I might add many Particulars of this kind.

5. Concerning his Humiliation: Surely he hath born our griefs and carried our sorrows, yet we did not esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted; but he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes were we healed.—He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his Mouth.—He was taken from Prison, and from Judgment, and who shall declare his Generation? he was cut off out of from the Land of the Living; for the transgression of my people was he stricken.—It pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief.—Therefore I will divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong, because he hath poured out his Soul unto Death, and he was numbered with the transgressors, and he bare the Sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors. One would think this were rather a History than a Prophecy of Christ's sufferings; you may if you will take the pains, see the circumstances of his sufferings, as that he was sold for thirty pieces of silver, Zech. 11.12. and that with those thirty pieces of silver there was bought afterwards a Potters field, Zech. 11.13. That he must ride into Jerusalem before his Passion on an Ass. Zech. 9.9. I might seem tedious if I should proceed.

6. Concerning his Kingdom. Rejoice greatly O Daughter of Zion, shout O Daughter of Jerusalem, behold thy King cometh unto thee; he is Just, and having Salvation, lowly, and riding upon an Ass, and upon a Colt the Foal of an Ass. Behold a King▪ behold thy King, behold thy King cometh, and he comes unto thee. 1. He is a King, and therefore able. 2. He is thy King, and therefore willing; wonderful Love that he would come, but more wonderful was the manner of his coming: He that before made man a Soul after the Image of God, then made himself a Body after the Image of Man. And thus we see how this Covenant excels the former in every of these respects.

3. How doth God put the Law into our inward parts? I answer, God puts the Law into our inward parts by enlivening or qualifying of a Man with the Graces of God's Spirit, suitable to his Commandment; first, there is the Law of God without us, as we see it or read it in Scriptures; but when it is put within us, then God hath wrought an inward disposition in our minds, that answers to that Law without us; for example, this is the Law without; Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy Heart, and with all thy Soul, and with all thy Strength; To Answer which, there is a promise; I will circumcise thy Heart, and the Heart of thy Seed, to Love the Lord thy God with all thy Heart, and with all my soul; now when this promise is fulfilled, when God hath put the affections and grace of Love within our hearts, when the habit of Love is within, answerable in all things to the command without, then is the Law put into our inward parts. Again, this is the Law without, Thou shalt fear the Lord, and keep his Ordinances, and his Statutes, and his Commandments to do them: to answer which, there is a promise; I will make a Covenant with you, and I will not turn away from you to do you good, but I will put my fear into your hearts, and you shall not depart from Me; now when this promise is accomplished, when God hath put the affection and grace of fear within our hearts, when the habit of fear is within, answerable to that Command without, then is the Law put into our hearts. Surely this is Mercy that God saith in his Covenant, I will put my Law in their inward parts; many a time a poor Soul cries out, he is troubled with such and such a lust, and he cannot keep this and that Commandment, he cannot out-wrestle such and such strong inclinations to evil, O but then go to God, and press him with this, Lord, it is a part of thy Covenant, thou hast said, thou wilt circumcise my heart; thou hast said, thou wilt put thy Law in my inward parts; thou hast said, thou wilt dissolve these lusts, Lord, I beseech thee do it for thy Covenants sake.—But here's another Question:

How may we know this inward work of Grace, this Law in our inward parts? the best way to satisfy our doubts in this, is to look within; open we the door and closet of our hearts, and see what lies nearest and closest there; that we say is intimate and within a man, which lies next to his heart: He that loveth Father or Mother more than Me (saith Christ) is not worthy of Me: We know the love of Father and Mother is a most natural thing; it comes not by teaching, but it is in-bred in us as soon as we are born; and yet if we love not Christ more than these, if Christ lie not closer to our hearts than Father or Mother, we are not worthy of Christ; our natural life is a most inward and deep thing in a man, it lies near the heart; Skin for Skin (said the Devil once truly) and all that a man hath will he give for his Life; but he that hates not Father and Mother—yea and his own life also (said Christ) he cannot be my Disciple. Hence the Apostle, to express this intimate, inward life of grace, he saith, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. What an emphatical strange expression is this? I live, yet not I but Christ liveth in me; q. d. I live not the life of sense, I breath not bodily breath, that is, comparatively to the life of faith; his very natural life, though inward, is said not to be lived, in respect of his life of grace, which is more inward. And let this serve for resolution to that question.

4. What is it to have the Law written in our hearts? This writing contains the former, and is something more; the Metaphor is expressed in these Particulars.—

1. It is said to be written, that there might be something within, answerable to the Law without; it was written without, and so it was written within. This writing is the very same with copying or transcribing. The writing within is every way answerable to the writing without: Oh what a mercy is this, that the same God who writ the Law with his own finger in the Tables of Stone, should also write the same Law with the finger of his Spirit in the Tables of our Hearts! as you see in a Seal, when you have put the Seal on the Wax, and you take it off again, you find in the Wax the same Impression that was on the Seal: So it is in the hearts of the faithful, when the Spirit hath once softened them, then he writes the Law (i.e.) he stamps an inward aptness, an inward disposition on the heart, answering to every particular of the Law; this is that which the Apostle calls the Law of the mind, I see another Law in my Members warring against the Law of my mind: Now what is this Law in the mind, but a disposition within, to keep in some measure every Commandment of the Law without? and this is the writing of the Law (or if you will) the copying or transcribing of the Law within us.

2. It is said to be written, that it might be rooted and rivetted in the heart, as when Letters are engraven in Marble; so is the manner of God's writing: if God write, it can never be obliterated or blotted out: Letters in Marble are not easily worn out again; no more are the writings of God's Spirit: Some indeed would have them as writings in dust: but if Pilate could say, What I have written, I have written; how much more may God? Hence are all those promises of perseverance; My Covenant shall stand fast with him, Psal. 89.28. and, The root of the righteous shall not be moved, Prov. 12.3. and, Even to your old Age I am he; and even to hoary hairs will I carry you, Isa. 46.4. I deny not, but men of glorious gifts may fall away; but surely the poorest Christian that hath but the smallest measure of Grace, he shall never fall away; if the Law be written in our hearts, it still remains there; Grace habitual is not removeable: sooner will the Sun discard its own beams, than Christ will desert or destroy the least measure of true Grace which is a Beam from the Sun of Righteousness.

3. It is said to be written, that it might be as a thing legible to God, to others, and to ourselves.

1. To God, he writes it that he may read it, and take notice of it; he exceedingly delights himself in the graces of his own Spirit: and therefore the Spouse after this writing, after the planting of his grace in her, she desires him to come into his Garden, and eat his pleasant Fruits; q. d. Come, read what thou hast written; come, and delight thyself in the graces of thy own Spirit: the only delight that God has in the world is in his Garden, a gracious soul; and that he might more delight in it, he makes it fruitful: and those fruits are precious fruits; as growing from plants set by his own Hand, relishing of his own Spirit, and so fitted for his own taste.

2. The Law is written that it might be legible to others. So Paul tells the Corinthians, You are manifestly declared to be the Epistle of Christ: How manifestly declared? why, known and read of all Men. As we are able to read Letters graven in stone, so may others read and see the fruits and effects of this Law written in our Hearts. And good reason; for wheresoever God works the principles of grace within, it cannot but show itself in the outward life and conversation: it is God's promise, first I will put my Spirit within them, and then I will cause them to walk in my statutes; and it is God's truth, Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. What the mind thinketh, the hand worketh.

3. The Law is written that it may be legible to ourselves; a gracious heart is privy to its own grace and sincerity, when it is in a right temper: if others may read it by its fruits, How much more we ourselves, who both see the fruits, and feel that habitual disposition infused into us? Nor is this without its blessed use; for by this means we come to have a comfortable evidence both of God's Love to us, and of our Love to God. You see now what we mean by this writing of the Law within us.

5. How are we taught of God, so as not to need any other kind of teaching comparatively? I answer.—

1. God teacheth inwardly, In the hidden part thou hast made me know wisdom, saith David; and again, I thank the Lord that gave me counsel, my reins also instruct me in the night season. The reins are the most inward part of the Body, and the night season the most retired and private time; both express the intimacy of divine teaching; man may teach the brains, but God only teacheth the reins: the knowledge which man teacheth, is a swimming knowledge; but the knowledge which God teacheth, is a soaking knowledge. God who commanded light to shine out of darkness, hath shined into our hearts. Mans light may shine into the head, but God's light doth shine into the heart: His Chair is in Heaven that teacheth hearts, saith Austin.

2. God teacheth clearly, Elihu offering himself instead of God to reason with Job, he tells him, My words shall be of the uprightness of my heart, and my lips shall utter knowledge clearly. If ever the Word come home to an heart, it comes with a convincing clearness. So the Apostle, Our Gospel came unto you, not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much full assurance. The word hath a treble Emphasis, assurance, full assurance, and much full assurance; here is clear work.

3. God teacheth experimentally; the soul that is taught of God can speak experimentally of the Truths it knows. I know whom I have believed, saith Paul; I have experienced his faithfulness and all-sufficiency, I dare trust my all with him, I am sure he will keep it safe to that day. Common knowledge rests in generals, but they that are taught of God, can say, As we have heard, so we have seen; they can go along with every truth, and say, It is so indeed, I have experienced this and that Word upon my own Heart. In this case the Scripture is the Original, and their Heart is the Copy of it, as you have heard; they can read over the Promises and Threatenings, and say Probatum est. David in his Psalms, and Paul in his Epistles speaks their very Hearts, and feels their very temptations, and makes their very objections: they can set to their Seal, that God is true; they can solemnly declare by their lives and conversations that God is true and faithful in his word and promises.

4. God teacheth sweetly and comfortably: Thou hast taught me, saith David, and then it follows, How sweet are thy words unto my taste? Yea, sweeter than the Honey to my Mouth? He rolled the word and promises as Sugar under his Tongue, and sucked from thence more sweetness than Sampson did from his Honey-comb: Luther said, he would not live in Paradise if he must live without the Word; but with the Word (said he) I could live in Hell. When Christ put his hand by the hole of the door to teach the heart, her bowels were moved, and then her fingers drop upon the handles of the Lock sweet smelling myrrh, Cant. 5.5. The teachings of Christ left such a blessing upon the first motions of the Spouses heart, that with the very touch of them she is refreshed, her fingers drop myrrh, and her bowels are moved as the very monuments of his gracious teachings; So in Cant. 1.3. Because of the savor of thy Oynement, thy Name is as an Ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love thee. Christ in Ordinances doth as Mary, open a Box of Oyntments, which diffuseth a spiritual savor in Church-Assemblies, and this o'lie the spiritual Christian feels. Hence the Church is compared to a Garden shut up; a Fountain sealed; wicked men are not able to drink of her delicacies, or smell of her sweetness; a spiritual Sermon is a Fountain sealed up, the spiritual administration of a Sacrament is a Garden enclosed: Sometimes, O Lord, thou givest me a strange motion, or affection (said Augustine) which if it were but perfected in me, I could not imagine what it should be but eternal life. Christians! these are the teachings of God, and in reference to this, we shall no more teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord. God's teaching is another kind of teaching than we can have from the hands of men, there is no man in the world can teach thus; and therefore they whom God teacheth, need not any other kind of teaching respectively or comparatively.

6. What is the universality of this knowledge; They shall all know m<sup>e</sup> from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord? The meaning is, that all that are in the Covenant of grace, shall be so taught of God, as that in some measure or other they shall everyone know God inwardly, clearly, experimentally, sweetly and savingly. I know there are several degrees of this knowledge; God hath several Forms in his School: there are fathers for experience, young men for strength, and babes for the truth and being of Grace: as one Star differeth from another in glory, so also is the School of Christ: But here I am beset on both sides. 1. Many are apt to complain, alas they know little of God! sweet babes consider, 1. It is free grace you are stars; though you are not stars of the first and second magnitude: it is of the Covenant of grace, that God hath let into your souls a little glimmering, though not so much light as others possibly may have in point of holy emulation (as one notes well) we should look at degrees of grace, but in point of thankfulness and comfort, we should look at the truth▪ and being of grace. 2. If you know but a little, you may in time know more: God doth not teach all his lessons at first entrance; it is true, The entrance of thy Word giveth Light; but this is as true, that God lets in his Light by degrees; it is not to be despised if God do but engage the heart in holy desires and longings after knowledge, so that it can say in sincerity, My Soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times.

Others on the contrary, ground themselves so learned from this very promise, that they exclude all teachings of men. The anointing (say they) teacheth us all things, and we need not that any man teach us: and they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord, for they shall all, &c. I answer, the words either relate to the grounds of Religion, and so in Gospel-times Christians need not to be taught in these fundamental points; for now all know the Lord, from the least to the greatest; or else these words are an Hebraism, which deny positively, when they intend it only comparatively, or secundum quid, as when God and men are compared together, man is vanity, lighter than vanity, and a very nothing: here is a comparison of knowledge in Gospel-times with the knowledge of Israel in those dark times when God brought them out of the Land of Egypt; then all was dark, and they were fain to teach one another the very Principles, the Rudiments of Religion, there was very little effusion of God's Spirit in those times; but in Gospel-times (saith the Prophet) the Spirit of grace and knowledge shall be so abundant, that rather God himself shall be the teacher, than one man shall teach another. There shall be such exuberancy and seas of knowledge under the new Covenant, above the Covenant made with his people when he brought them out of Egypt, that men shall not need to teach one another comparatively; for all shall know the Lord, who are taught of God from the least to the greatest: An high-way shall be there, and it shall be called the way of holiness— the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.

7. How is God said to forgive iniquity, and never more to remember Sin?

For the first, God is said to forgive iniquity when guilt of sin is taken away; and for the second, God is said never more to remember Sin, in that the Sinner, after pardon, is never more looked on as a Sinner. Is not this the Covenant? q. d. I will remove thy Sins, and do them away, as if they had never been; I will blot them out of the Book of my Memory; I will obliterate the Writing, that none shall be able to read it. But you will say, If Sin remain still in the Regenerate, How are they so forgiven, as to be remembered no more? Divines tell us of Two Things in every Sin; there is macula & reatus; the Filth, and the Guilt: This Guilt some again distinguish into the Guilt of Sin, which they call the Inward Dignity, and Desert of Damnation; and the Guilt of Punishment, which is the Actual Ordination of a Sinner unto Damnation. Now, in different Respects we say, That Sin remains still in Believers, and Sin doth not remain in Believers: First, If we speak of the Filth of Sin, or of the Desert of Damnation; so it remains still: but if we speak of the actual Obligation of a Sinner to Condemnation, so it remains not after Pardon; but the Sinner is as free as if he had never sinned.

But you will say, Is not the Filth of Sin done away, when Sin is remitted? I answer, The Filth of Sin is not done away by Remission, but by Sanctification and Renovation; and because in this Life we have not a perfect inherent Holiness, (Sanctification at best being but Imperfect, and wrought in us by degrees) therefore during this Life, there is something of the Filth of Sin, and especially of the Effects of Original Sin, sticking and still cleaving to us. But, here is our Comfort, and herein lies the sweet of the Promise, that when God hath pardoned Sin, He takes away the Guilt, as to Condemnation; He acquits the Sinner of that Obligation; He now looks upon him not as a Sinner, but as a Just Man; and so in this Sense He will forgive, and never more remember his Sin. Ah Christians! Take heed of their Doctrine, who would have Justification an Abolition of Sin in its real Essence, and Physical in-dwelling; let us rather say with Scripture, that all justified Saints must take down their Top-sail, and go to Heaven halting, and that they carry their Bolts and Fetters of in-dwelling sin through the Field of Free-Grace, even to the Gates of Glory: Christ daily Washing, and we daily Defiling, to the end that Grace may be Grace.

I have run through all the manifestations of the Covenant of Grace, as we have them discovered in the Old-Testament: And yet, that we may see the better how these things concern us, I shall only propound these Two Queries more, and then we have done.

1. Whether is the Covenant of Grace the same for Substance, in all Ages of the World? We answer, Yea: The Fathers before Christ had but one Covenant, and we another; but the same Covenant of Grace belongs to us both. This appears, in that first, they had the same Promise; secondly, they had it upon the same Grounds.

1. They had the same Promise; as, I will be your God, and you shall be My People. And Happy art thou, O Israel, saved by the Lord. And, The Lord is our King, and He will save us. They had not only the Hopes of an Earthly Inheritance in Canaan, (as some fondly imagine) but of an Heavenly Inheritance in the Kingdom of God: And to this purpose, our Savior speaks expressly; Many shall come from the East and West, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdom of Heaven.

2. As they had the same Promise, so they had it upon the same ground that we have; even by Faith in Christ Jesus: Abraham saw My Day, said Christ; and, Christ is the same Yesterday, and to Day, and for Ever: He is the same not only in regard of Essence, but also in regard of the Efficacy of His Office, from the Beginning to the End of the World. We believe (said Peter) that through the Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, we shall be saved even as they: And, Unto us was the Gospel Preached (saith Paul) as unto them. Some may think they had no Gospel, but only the Law, before Christ: But, What say you? Have we not observed a Thred of the Gospel, and of the Covenant of Grace, to run through all the Old-Testament, from First to Last? And, How plain is the Apostle? For, this cause also was the Gospel preached also to them that are Dead. Dead long since; for he speaks of them, who lived in the Days of Noah. Nay, the Apostle to the Hebrews, gives us a Catalogue of Old-Testament-Believers: By Faith, Abel offered up unto God a more excellent Sacrifice, than Cain. — By Faith, Enoch was Translated, that he should not see Death. — By Faith, Noah being warned by God, prepared an Ark. — By Faith, Abraham, when he was called to go into a Place which he should after receive for an Inheritance, obeyed, and he went out, not knowing whither he went. — These all died in Faith, not having received the Promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them. Besides these, he reckons up the Faith of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and Joseph, and Moses, and Rahab, and Gideon, and Barak, and Samson, and Jephthah, and David, and Samuel, and of all the Prophets; who through Faith did marvelous things, as it there appears. Surely they had the same Doctrine of Grace as we have; it is the very same for Substance, without any difference.

2. Wherein is the Difference then betwixt the Old and New-Testament, or betwixt the Old and New Manner of the Dispensation of the Covenant of Grace?

They are one for Substance; but in regard of the manner of Dispensation, and revealing in the several Times, Ages, States, and Conditions of the Church, there is a difference. I shall reduce all to these Particulars: They are distinguished, —

1. In the Object: In the Old Administration Christ was promised; but in the New-Covenant Christ is exhibited: It was meet, the Promise should go before the Gospel, and be fulfilled in the Gospel, that so great a Good might earnestly be desired before it was bestowed.

2. In the Federates: Under the Old Dispensation they are compared to an Heir under Age, needing a Gardian, Tutor, or School-master; little differing from a Servant: But in the New-Testament they are compared to an Heir come to ripe Years; see Gal. 4.1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

3. In the Manner of their Worship: In the Old-Testament they were held under the Ceremonial Law; and Oh, What an heap of Ceremonies, Rites, Figures, & Shadows did they use in their Worship! Certainly these declared the Infancy and Non-age of the Jews, who being not capable of the high Mysteries of the Gospel, they were taught by their Eyes, as well as their Ears. These Ceremonies were as Rudiments, & Introductions fitted to the gross and weak Senses of that Church, who were to be brought on by little and little, through such Shadows and Figures, to the true Image, and thing signified: But in the New-Covenant or Testament, our Worship is more spiritual: Our Savior hath told us, That as God is a Spirit; so, They that worship Him, must worship Him in Spirit & Truth. The Hour cometh, and now is (saith Christ) when the true Worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit, and in Truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship Him.

4. In the Burthen of Ceremonies: Peter calls the Ceremonies of old, A Yoak, which niether our Fathers nor we (saith he) were able to bear. And no wonder, if we consider. 1. The burden of their costly Sacrifices; if any had but touched an unclean Thing, he must come and offer a Sacrifice; as sometimes a Bullock, and sometimes a Lamb: You that think everything too much for a Minister of Christ, if for every Offence you were to offer such Sacrifices now, you would count it an heavy Burthen indeed. 2. They had long and tedious Journeys to Jerusalem; the Land lay more in length than breadth, and Jerusalem stood almost at one End of it; and thither Thrice a Year all the Males were to go and appear before God. 3. They were tied to the Observation of many Days, the New Moons, and many Ceremonial Sabbaths; and they were restrained from many Liberties, as in Meats, and the like: Oh, What Burthens were upon them! But in the New-Covenant, or Testament, the Yoak is made more easy: We are bound indeed to the Duties of the moral Law, as well as they, yet a great Yoak is taken off from us; and therefore Christ, inviting us to the Gospel, He gives it out thus; Take My Yoak upon you, (saith He) for My Yoak is easy, and My Burthen light.

5. In the Weakness of the Law of old: The Law then was unable to give Life, to purge the Conscience, to pacify God's Wrath; and therefore, saith the Apostle, There is verily a dis-annulling of the Commandment going before, for the Weakness & Unprofitableness thereof. Hence they are called weak and beggarly Rudiments; in comparison of the New-Testament, there was then a less forcible Influence of the Spirit accompanying that Dispensation of the Covenant: The Spirit was not then given in that large Measure as now; Because Christ was not then glorified. It appears in these Particulars:

1. There was less Power of Faith in the Saints, before Christ; when the Doctrine of Faith was more fully revealed, then was Faith itself more fully revealed in the hearts and lives of God's People. Before Faith came (saith the Apostle) we were kept under the Law, shut up unto the Faith, which should afterwards be revealed. Surely this implies there was a Time, when there was less Faith in God's People; and that was the Time of the Law.

2. There was less Power of Love in the Saints before Christ; according to the measure of our Faith, so is our Love: The less they knew the Loving-kindness of God towards them in Christ, the less they loved. It may be, they were more drawn by the Terrors of the Law, than by the Promises of Grace; and therefore, they had less Love in them.

3. They had a less Measure of Comfort to carry them on in all their Troubles. Christ exhibited, is called the Consolation of Israel: and therefore the more Christ is imparted, the more means of Comfort: Hence the Primitive Saints after Christ, are said to walk in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost. Certainly the Spirit was poured in less plenty on the faithful in the Old Testament, because that benefit was reserved to the times of Christ, who was first to receive the Spirit above measure in his human Nature, and thence to derive Grace to his Saints.

6. In the darkness of that administration of Old, Christ was but shadowed out to the Fathers in Types and Figures, and dark Prophecies, but now we see him with open Face. Observe the difference in reference to the person of Christ, and to the Offices of Christ, and to the benefits that come by Christ. 1. Concerning the Person of Christ; it was revealed to them that he should be God, Isa. 9, 6. And that he should be man, Isa. 9.6. The same verse speaks of a Child that is born, and of a mighty God. But how he should be God and man in one person, it was very darkly Revealed. 2. Concerning the Offices of Christ; his Mediatorship was Typed out by Moses; his Priesthood was Typed out by Melchizedek among the Canaanites, and Aaron among the Jews; his Prophetical Office was typed out by Noah, a Preacher of Righteousness; his Kingly Office was typed out by David: but how dark these things were unto them, we may guess by the Apostles, who knew not he should Die, who dreamed of an earthly Kingdom; and till the Holy Ghost came, were ignorant of many things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. 3. Concerning the Benefits that come by Christ; Justification was signified by the sprinkling of Blood, and Sanctification by the water of Purification, Heaven and glorification by their Land flowing with Oil, Olive, and, Honey: Thus the Lord shown the Jews these principal Mysteries, not in themselves, but in Types and Shadows, as they were able to see them from day today: But in the new Covenant Christ is offered to be seen in a fuller view: the Truth, and Substance, and body of the things themselves is now exhibited; Christ is clearly Revealed without any Type at all to be our Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification and Redemption.

7. In the number of them that partake of the Covenant; at first the Covenant was included in the Families of the Patriarchs, and then within the Confines of Judea, but now is the partition Wall betwixt Jew and Gentile broken down, and the Covenant of Grace is made with all Nations, He is the God of the Gentiles also, and not of the Jews only. Christians! here comes in our happiness; Oh how thankful should we be? that our Fathers for many Hundreds and Thousands of years together should sit in darkness, and that we should partake of this Grace! What? that we that were Dogs before, should now be set at the Children's Table? The very Jews themselves hearing of this, are said to glorify God. When they heard these things, they held their peace and glorified God, saying, then hath God also to the Gentiles granted Repentance unto Life. If they praised God for it, how much more should we do it ourselves? But of that hereafter.

I have now propounded the Object we are to look unto; it is Jesus, as held forth in a way of Promise or Covenant; in that dark time from the Creation, till his first coming in the Flesh: Our next Business is to direct you in the Art or Mystery of Grace, how you are to look to Him in this respect.

CHAP. II.

SECT. Of knowing Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our Salvation from the Creation until his first Coming.

Looking comprehends knowing, considering, desiring, &c. as you have heard; and accordingly that we may practice.

1. We must know Jesus carrying on the great work of our Salvation in the beginning, and from the beginning of the World: Come let us learn what he did for us so early in the morning of this World: He made it for us, and he made us more especially for his own Glory; but presently after we were made, we sinned and marred the Image wherein God made us; this was the saddest Act that ever was; it was the undoing of man, and (without the mercy of God) the damning of all Souls, both of men and women to all Eternity; and, O my Soul, know this for thyself, thou wast in the loins of Adam at that same time, so that what he did, thou didst; thou wast partaker of his Sins, and thou wast to partake with him in his punishment: but well mayest thou say, Blessed be God for Jesus Christ; at the very instant when all should have been, damned, Christ intervened; a Covenant of Grace is made with man, and Christ is the Foundation, in and through whom we must be reconciled unto God: Come soul, and study this Covenant of grace in reference to thyself; had not this been, where hadst thou been? nay, where had all the World been at this day? Surely it concerns thee to take notice of this great Transaction. After man had fallen by Sin, Christ is promised; & that all the Saints might partake of Christ, a Covenant is entered; this at the beginning of the World, was more dim, but the nearer to Christ's coming in the Flesh, the more and more clearly it appeared: Howsoever dimly, or clearly, thus it pleased God in Christ to carry on the great work of our Salvation at that time, viz. by a Promise of Christ, and by a Covenant in Christ, and for thy better knowledge of it, study the Promise made to Adam, and Abraham, and Moses, and David, and Israel. Come Soul, study these several breakings out of the Covenant of Grace; it is worth thy pains, it is a Mystery which hath been hid from Ages, and from Generations, but now is made manifest to the Saints. Here lies the first and most firm Foundation of a Christians comfort; if thou canst but study this, and assure thyself of thy part in this, thou art blessed forever; O how incomparably sweet and satisfying is it to a self-studying Christian, to know the faithful engagements of the Almighty God, through that Son of his Loves, in a Covenant of Grace.

SECT. II. Of Considering Jesus in that Respect.

2. WE must consider Jesus carrying on the the great work of our Salvation in that dark time; it is not enough to study it and know it, but we must seriously muse, and meditate, and ponder, and consider of it, till we bring it to some profitable Issue: This is the Consideration I mean, when we hold our thoughts to this or that spiritual subject, till we perceive success, and the work do thrive and prosper in our hands. Now to help us in this, —

1. Consider Jesus in the first Promise made to man; It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. When all men were under guilt of sin, and in the power of Satan; and when thou, my Soul, wert in as bad a case as any other, then to hear the sound of this glad tidings, then to hear of Jesus, a Savior, and Redeemer, sure this was welcome News. Come, draw the case nearer to thyself; thou wast in Adams Loins, suppose thou hadst been in Adams stead; suppose thou hadst heard the Voice of the Lord walking in the Garding, suppose thou hadst heard him call, Adam, where art thou? Peter, Andrew, Thomas, where art thou? What? hast thou eaten of the Tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat? Why then Appear and come to judgment, the Law is irrevocable, in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die; there is nothing to be looked for but death temporal, and death spiritual, and death eternal; O what a fearful condition is this! no sooner to come into the world, but presently to be turned over into Hell? for one day to be Monarch of the World, and of all Creatures in the world, and the very next day to be a slave of Satan, and to be bound hand and foot in a darksome dungeon? for a few hours to live in Eden, to enjoy every tree in the Garden, Pleasant to the sight, and good for food, and then to enter into the confines of eternity, and ever, ever, ever to be tormented with the Devil and his Angels? It is no wonder if Adam hid himself from the presence of the Lord God amongst the trees of the Garden: O my soul, in that case thou wouldest have cried to the Rocks, and to the Mountains, fall on me, and hide me from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne. If God be angry, who may abide it? When the great day of his wrath is come, who shall be able to stand? And yet despair not, cheer up O my soul? for in the very midst of wrath God is pleased to remember Mercy; even now when all the world should have been damned, a Jesus is proclaimed and promised; and he it is that must die according to the Commination; for he is our surety, and he it is that by Death must overcome Death and the Devil; it shall bruise thy Head, said God to Satan, q. d. Come Satan, thou hast taken Captive ten thousands of souls? Adam and Eve are now ensnared, and in their loins all the men and women, that ever shall be from this beginning of the world to the end thereof; now is thy day of triumph, now thou keepest Holy-day in Hell; but thou shalt not carry it thus. I foresaw from all Eternity what thou hast done, I knew thou wouldest dig a hole through the comely and beautiful frame of the Creation; but I have decreed of old a Counter-work; out of the seed of the woman shall spring a Branch, and he shall bruise thy head, he shall break thy Power, he shall tread thy Dominion underfoot, he shall lead thy Captivity Captive, he shall take away sin, he shall point out to Men and Angels the glory of heaven, and a new world of free grace. In this promise, O my soul, is foulded and wrapped up thy hope, thy heaven, thy salvation; and therefore consider of it, turn it upside down look on all sides of it, view it over and over; there is a Jesus in it, it is a field that contains in the bowels of it a precious treasure, there is in it a Savior, a Redeemer, a Deliverer from sin, death and hell: are not these dainties to feed upon? are not these rarities to dwell on in our meditations?

2. Consider Jesus in that next promise made to Abraham: I will establish thy Covenant between me and thee, and thy Seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting Covenant, to be a God to thee and to thy Seed after thee: in respect of this Covenant Abraham is called the Father of the Faithful, and they which are of the Faith are called the Children of Abraham: And O my soul, if thou art in Covenant with God, surely thou dost by Faith draw it through Abraham, to whom this promise was made; for if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's Seed, and heirs according to the promise: Consider, what a mercy is this, that God should enter into a Covenant with thee in the loins of Abraham? God made a promise of Christ, and inclusively a Covenant of Grace in his comforting Adam; but he makes a Covenant expressly under the name of Covenant, with

Abraham and his seed. O muse, and be amazed! What? that the great and glorious God of heaven and earth should be willing to make himself a debtor to us? O my soul think of it seriously; he is in heaven, and thou art on earth, he is the Creator and thou art his Creature: Ah what art thou! or what is thy Fathers house that thou shouldst be raised up hitherto! The very Covenant is a wonder; as it Relates to God and us; what is it but a compact, an agreement, a tying, a binding of God and us; When Jehoshaphat and Ahab were in Covenant, see how Jehoshaphat expresseth himself, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses: So it is betwixt God and us. If once he gives us the Covenant, then his strength is our strength, his power is our power, his armies are our armies, his attributes are our attributes, we have interest in all; there is an offensive and a defensive Language, (as I may say) betwixt God and us; and if we put him in mind of it in all our straits, he cannot deny us. As it was with the Nations allied to Rome, if they fought at any time, the Romans were bound in honor to defend them; and they did it with as much diligence as they defended their own City of Rome; so it is with the people allied to God, he is bound in honor to defend his People, and he will do it if they implore his aid; how else, is it possible God should break his Covenant? will he not stir up himself to scatter his, and our spiritual enemies? Certainly he will. Thus runs the tenor of his Covenant, I will be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee. This is the general promise; I may call it the Mother-Promise, that carries all other Promises in its womb; & we find a Jesus in this promise, consider that it is God in Christ that is held forth to us in this phrase, I will be as a God to thee: O sweet! Here is the greatest promise that ever was made; Christ God is more than Grace, Pardon, Holiness, Heaven, as the Husband is more excellent than the Marriage-Robe, Bracelets, Rings; the Well and Fountain of Life is of more excellency than the streams; Christ Jesus the objective happiness, is far above a created and formal Beatitude which issueth from him. O my Soul is not this worthy of thy inmost consideration? But of this more in the next.

3. Consider Jesus in that promise made to Moses and the Israelites, I am the Lord thy God who brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, out of the House of Bondage. Much hath been said to this Promise before as matter of thy Consideration; but to contract it, consider in the Promise the sufficiency and propriety; 1. Here is sufficiency: it is a promise of infinite worth, an hid treasure, a rich possession, an overflowing blessing which none can rightly value; it is no less than the great, and mighty, and infinite God; if we had a promise of an hundred worlds, or often heavens, this is more than all; heaven indeed is beautiful, but God is more beautiful; for he is the God of heaven: and hence it is that the Saints in heaven are not satisfied without their God; it is a sweet expression of Bernard, As whatsoever we give unto thee, Lord, unless we give ourselves, cannot satisfy thee; so whatsoever thou givest unto us, Lord, unless thou givest thyself, it cannot satisfy us: and hence it is, that as God doth make the Saints his Portion, so God is the Portion and Inheritance of his Saints. Consider the greatness, the goodness, the all-sufficiency of this promise, I am the Lord thy God! No question but Moses had many other rich promises from God, but he could not be satisfied without God himself: if thy presence be not with us, bring us not hence. And no wonder, for without God all things are nothing; but in the want of all other things, God himself is instead of all: It is God's alone Prerogative to be an universal good. The things of this world can but help in this or that particular thing: as Bread against hunger, Drink against thirst, Cloaths against cold and nakedness, House against wind and weather, Riches against poverty, Physic against sickness, Friends against solitariness: but God is an all-sufficient good; he is all in all both to the inner and outward man. Are we guilty of Sin? there is mercy in God to pardon us. Are we full of infirmities? there is Grace in God to heal us. Are we strong in Corruptions? there is power in God to subdue them in us. Are we disquieted in Conscience? there is that Spirit in God that is the Comforter, that can fill us with Joy unspeakable and glorious: And for our outward man all our welfare is laid up in God, he is the God of our Life Psal. 42.8. he is the strength of our Life. Psal. 27.1. he is a quickening Spirit, 1 Cor. 15.45 Which though it be in regard of the inner man, yet there it is spoken of the inward man, which the Lord shall quicken after death, and doth now keep alive by his mighty power; for in him we live, and move, and have our being.

O my Soul, that thou wouldst but ruminare, and meditate, and consider this promise in all thy wants & discontents: when means fail, and the streams run no more, O that thou wouldest then go to the Fountain, where the waters run sweeter, and more sure: for as Joseph said to Pharaoh it is not in me, God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace: So may Silver and Gold, and such things say to thee, It is not in us; God shall give enough out of himself: have God, and have all: want God, and there is no content in the enjoyment of all: It was the Apostles case as having nothing, and yet possessing all things: Surely he lived to God and enjoyed God, and he was an all-sufficient good unto him: God may be enjoyed in any condition, in the meanest, as well as the greatest, in the poorest as well as the richest: God will go into a wilderness, into a prison with his people, and there he will make up all that they are cut short of. Thy discontents therefore arise not from the want of outward means, but from want of inward fellowship with God: and if thou dost not find a sufficiency, it is because thou dost not enjoy him who is thy all-sufficient good: O stir up Faith, and consider the Covenant, think seriously on this promise, I am God all-sufficient: I am the Lord thy God.

2. Here is the propriety of Saints, the Lord thy God. O what is this, that God is thy God? Heaven and Earth, Angels and Men may stand astonished at it: What, that the Great and Mighty God, God Almighty, and God all-sufficient should be called thy God! It is observable what the Apostle speaks, God is not ashamed to be called their God: Would not a prince be ashamed to take a Beggar, a Runagate, a base and adulterous Woman to be his Wife? But we are worse than so, and God is better than so; sin hath made us worse than the worst of women, and God is better, holier, higher than the best of Princes: and yet God is not ashamed to own us, nor ashamed that we own him as our own, I am thy God. It is as if the Lord should say, use me, and all my Power, Grace, Mercy, Kindness, as thine own: go through all my Attributes; consider my Almighty Power, consider my Wisdom, Council, Understanding, consider my Goodness, Truth, Faithfulness: consider my Patience, Long-suffering, Forbearance, all these are thine: as thus, My Power is thine, to work all thy works for thee and in thee, to make passage for thee in all thy straits, to deliver thee out of six troubles and out of seven; my Wisdom is thine, to counsel thee in any difficult cases, to instruct thee in things that be obscure, to reveal to thee the Mysteries of Grace, and the wonderful things contained in my Law: my Justice is thine, to deliver thee when thou art oppressed, to defend thee in thy Innocency, and to vindicate thee from the injuries of men: what needs more? O my Soul, think of these, & all other God's Attributes: say in thyself all these are mine: nay more, think of God in Christ (for otherwise what hast thou to do with God in a Covenant of grace?) and say in thy heart Jesus Christ is mine, my Savior, my Redeemer, my head, my elder brother: his doings are mine, and his sufferings are mine, his Life and his Death, his Resurrection and Ascension, his Session and Intercession, all are mine: nay more, if Christ be mine, why then all good things are mine in Christ; I say in Christ, for they come not immediately, but through the hands of a sweet Redeemer; and though he be a man who redeemed us, yet because he is God as well as Man, there is more of God and Heaven, and free-love in all our good things, than if we received them immediately from God: Ravens have their food, and Devils have their being from God by creature-right; but we have all we have from God in Christ by Covenant-right; this surely, this very promise is the main and principal promise of the Covenant; it is the very substance, Soul and life of all: O then how careful shouldst thou be to improve the strength of thy mind, thoughts, and affections on this only subject?

4. Consider Jesus in that promise made to David, He hath made with me an everlasting Covenant, ordered in all things, and sure. 1. An everlasting Covenant: consider this in the eternal efficacy, and not in the outward administration? it is Christ that hath built and prepared a Kingdom, that shall never fade, a spiritual and an heavenly Kingdom which shall never cease: and as he hath prepared it, so if thou believest, he hath entered into a Covenant with thy soul to bestow it on thee; it is an everlasting Covenant, and he will give thee everlasting Life. 2. It is ordered in all things: the Covenant of grace is so marshalled and ordered, that it stands at best advantage to receive and repel all thy objections. Many and many an objection hast thou raised; how often have such thoughts been in thee? Oh I am miserable, I shall not live but die, my sins will damn me, I am lost forever! And again, If God hath made with me a Covenant, why then have I something to do on my part? for this is the nature of the Covenant, to bind on both parts; but alas I have failed, I can do nothing, I can as well dissolve a Rock as make my heart of stone a heart of flesh, I can as well reach heaven with a finger as lay hold on Christ by the hand of Faith! Have not such arguings as these been many and many a time in thy heart? O consider how the Covenant is ordered and marshalled in respect of the Author of it, of the Persons interested in it, of the parts of which it consists, of the end and aim to which it refers: and in some of these, if not in all of these, thou wilt find thy Objections answered, removed, routed. 3. It is sure: God is not fast and loose in his Covenant? heaven and earth shall pass away, before one jot or tittle of his Word shall fail: consider O my Soul, he both can and will perform his Word; his Power, his Love, his Faithfulness, his Constancy, all stand engaged. What sweet matter is here for a Soul to dwell upon? what needs it go out to other objects, whilst it may find enough here? but especially what needs it to bestow itself upon vain things? O that so much precious sand of our thoughts should run out after Sin, and so little after grace, or after this Covenant of grace!

5. Consider Jesus in that new Covenant or Promise which God made with Israel and Judah, I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and I will be their God and they shall be my People; and they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord; for they shall all know me from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord, for I will forgive their Iniquity, and I will remember their Sins no more. Oh what an error is it, that there is no inherent righteousness in the Saints, & there is no grace in the soul of a believer, but only in Christ! is not this the ordinary Scripture phrase? I will put my Spirit within you: and the water that I shall give you, shall be in you a Well of water springing up into everlasting Life: and the anointing which you have received of him, abideth in you: and Christ in you the hope of glory. Observe how the spirit of the Living Creatures was in the Wheels, so that when the Spirit went, they went, and when the Spirit was lifted up, they were lifted up; even so is the Spirit of Christ, acting, and guiding, and framing and disposing them to move and walk according to his Laws. The Kingdom of heaven is within you, saith Christ: and I delight to do thy Will, O God, (saith David) yea thy Law is within my heart. O my Soul, if thou art in Covenant with God, besides the in-dwelling of the Spirit, there is a certain spiritual Power or Principle of Grace, which Christ by his Spirit hath put into thy heart, enabling thee in some measure to move thyself towards God. And this Principle is sometimes called a new Life, Rom. 6.4. Sometimes a Living with Christ, Rom. 6.8. Sometimes a being alive to God, Rom. 6.11. Sometimes a revealing of his son in man, Gal. 1.15. And sometimes a putting of the Law into our inward parts, and a writing of the Law within the heart, Jer. 31.33. O consider of this inward Principle, it is an excellent subject, worthy of thy consideration!

2. I will be their God, and they shall be my people: Consider God essentially, and personally, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, God in himself and God in his Creatures: this very promise turns over heaven, and earth, and sea, and land, and bread, and cloths, and sleep, and the world, and life, and death, into free grace. No wonder if God set this promise in the midst of the Covenant, as the heart in the midst of the Body, to communicate life to all the rest; this promise hath an influence into all other promises; it is the great promise of the new Covenant, it is as great as God is, though the heavens, and heaven of heavens be not able to contain him: yet this Promise contains him; God shuts up himself (as it were) in it. I will be their God, 2. They shall be my People (i.e.) They shall be to me a peculiar People, Tit. 2.14. The word hath this Emphasis in it, that God looks upon all other things as accidents in comparison, and his substance is his People; they are his very Portion: for the Lord's Portion is his People, Jacob is the Lot of his Inheritance. They are his treasure, his peculiar treasure: his peculiar treasure above all People: If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my Covenant, then shall ye be a peculiar treasure unto me, and above all people; for all the earth is mine: Observe O my soul, all the earth is mine, q. d. All people is my people; but I have a special interest in my covenanted people, they are only my portion, my peculiar treasure. Blessed be Egypt my People, Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine Inheritance. I have made all People; Egypt and Assyria, and all the world is mine, but only Israel is my inheritance: the Saints are those that God satisfies himself in; the Saints are those that God hath set his heart upon; they are children of the high God, they are the Spouse that are Married to the Lamb, they are nearer God in some respects than the very Angels themselves, for the Angels are not in a mystical union so Married to Christ as God's People are. O the happiness of Saints! I will be their God, and they shall be my People.

3. They shall teach no more every man his Neighbor, and every man his Brother, saying, know the Lord; for they shall all know me from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord. Consider of this! O poor Soul, thou complainest many a time of thy weakness, thou knowest little or nothing: why, see here a Glorious promise; if thou art but in Covenant with God, thou shalt be taught of God, and then thou shalt know God far more clearly than the Jews of old; he will open to thee all his treasures of wisdom and knowledge, he will bestow on thee a greater measure of his Spirit, so that out of thy belly shall flow Rivers of Living waters. We say a good Tutor may teach more in a day than another in a week, in a month; now the promise runs thus, that all thy Children shall be taught of God; not that private instruction, or public Ministry must be excluded, we know these are appointed under the New Testament, and are subordinate to the Spirits teaching; but that the teachings of God do far surpass the teachings of men, and therefore the knowledge of God under the New Testament shall far surpass that under the old: herein appears the excellency of Christ's prophetic Office, He is such a Prophet as enlightens every man within, that comes into the World: He is such a Prophet as baptizeth with the Holy Ghost and with Fire: He is such a Prophet as makes men's hearts to burn within them, when he speaks unto them: He is such a Prophet as bids his Ministers, Go, teach all Nations, and I will be with you; and I will make you able Ministers, not of the Letter, but of the Spirit: He is such a Prophet as teacheth inwardly, clearly, experimentally, and sweetly: no man in the world can say this, or do this, but Jesus Christ, the great Prophet of the Church, whom God hath raised up like unto Moses, or far above Moses; Oh my Soul consider if thou art thus taught of God.

4. I will forgive their Iniquity, and I will remember their Sins no more. Consider of this! Blessed are they whose Iniquities are forgiven, and whose Sins are covered. Consider O my soul, suppose thy case and thy condition thus: As thou livest under Laws of men, so for the transgression of those Laws thou art called to account; the Judge weighs, and gives an impartial and just judgment, he Dooms thee to the Axe, or Rack, or Wheel; and because of the aggravation of thy Crime, he commands thee to be tortured leisurely, that Bones, Sinews, Lights, Joints might be pained, for twenty, thirty, forty, fifty years; that so much of thy flesh should be cut off every day; that such and such a Bone should be broken, such and such a day; and that by art the flesh should be restored, and the Bone cured again; that for so many years as is said, thou mightest be kept every day dying, and yet never die; that all this while thou must have no Sleep, nor Ease, nor Food, nor Cloathing convenient for thee; that Whips of Iron, Lashes and Scourges of Scorpions, that Racks, Wheels, Cauldrons full of melted Lead, should be prepared instruments of thy continual, horrible, terrible Torments; in this case, suppose a mighty Prince, by an Act of free and special Grace, should deliver thee from this Pain and Torture, and not only so, but should give thee a Life in perfect health, should put thee into a Paradise of Pleasures, where all the honor, acclamations, love, and service, of a world of Men and Angels should await thee, and where thou shouldst be elevated to the top of all imaginable Happiness, above Solomon in the highest Royalty, or Adam in his first Innocency; where not this mercy? wouldest thou not thing it the highest Act of Grace and Love, that any creature could extend to his fellow-creature? and yet O my Soul, all this is nothing but a shadow of grace in comparison of the love and rich grace of God in Christ in the justification of a sinner. If thou hast a right to this promise, I will forgive thy Iniquity, and I will remember thy sin no more. Thou art delivered from eternal Death, and thou art entitled to an eternal Kingdom; O know thy blessedness aright! Consider how infinitely thou art engaged to God, and Christ, and mercy, and free grace! This promise sounds forth nothing but grace and blessing; grace from God, and blessing on us; it is grace, because nothing but grace and mercy can forgive: it is grace, because God, if he will, hath power in his hand to Revenge; he doth not pass by sin as men do offenses, when they dissemble forgiveness; they may forgive, because they have not power to avenge: it is otherwise with God; To me belongs Vengeance and Recompence, saith God: He is able to destroy and yet he chooseth to forgive; this is his Name, strong and gracious.

O my Soul thou art apt to complain, what? will the Lord forgive my Sins? What reason hath God to look on me, to Pardon me, to pluck me as a firebrand out of the Fire of Hell? why should God forgive me? But now consider (if thy heart be humbled) — the Lord will do it. —

1. Because he delighteth in Mercy; it is a pleasure to God to forgive Sins: never did we take more pleasure, nor so much pleasure in acting and committing of sin, as he doth in the pardoning of sin; he is the Father of Mercies, he delights in mercy as a Father in his Children; it doth him good to see the Fruits of his own mercy, in taking away the sins of his own people.

2. Because it is his purpose which he hath purposed within himself from all Eternity; this was the great design of God (as you have heard) to make his grace glorious in those whom he intends to save; he will have the praise of the glory of his Grace: he will not lose his glory; he will be admired in his Saints; he will make the World to wonder, when it shall be known what sin hath been committed by them, and pardoned by him. And hence it is that God's people are called Vessels of Mercy, that he might make known the Riches of his Glory on the Vessels of Mercy; for, as Vessels are or may be filled up to the brims, so the Vessels of Mercy shall be filled with Mercy, up to the Brim, that the Riches of his Glory in the pardon of Sin, may be seen and known to the wonder of all the world.

3. Because it is his Nature and Inclination to pardon Sin: this appears, 1. In the Proclaiming of his Name, the Lord, the Lord, Merciful, and Gracious, Long-suffering, abundant in Goodness and Truth, keeping Mercy for Thousands, forgiving Iniquity, and Transgression, and Sin.

2. In his gracious Invitations; Come unto me, saith Christ, if sin burden you, I will ease you. 3. In his patience and waiting for Repentance; he waits to this very end that he might be gracious, and that he may have mercy, for the Lord is a God of judgment.

4. Because it is his promise to pardon sin; I, even I, am he that blots out thy transgressions for my own sake, and will not remember thy sins. This promise of Pardon is one of the great blessings of the Covenant of Grace; you hear the words in this very expresse of it, I will forgive their Iniquity, and I will remember their sins no more.

Now come, consider O my soul, of every particular in this gracious Covenant, and O be serious in thy Consideration; surely there is too much expense of thy spirit upon vain, and transitory, and worldly things; alas, alas, thou hast but a short time to live; and the strength of thy mind, that I call for, it is the most precious thing thou hast; O then let the business and activeness of thy mind, let thy inmost thoughts and deep affections be acted and exercised on this Subject; be careful that none of these waters run besides the Mill. If God and Jesus, and all thy good be included here, why should not thy whole soul be intent on this? Why shouldst thou spend it on the Creature? why shouldst thou be so subject to carnal griefs and fears? surely all these are fitter to be fixed on God in Christ, on Jesus in a Covenant of Grace.

SECT. III. Of Desiring Jesus in that respect.

3. WE must desire after Jesus, carrying on the great work of our Salvation in a way of Covenant before his coming in the flesh. It is not enough to know and consider, but we must desire. Thus is the order of God's work, no sooner hath his Spirit clearly revealed the goodness of the Promise that we come to know, but the soul considers of it, turns it upside down, views it in all its Excellencies, weighs it in the Ballance of its best and deepest meditation. This done, the Affections begins to stir, and the soul begins thus to reason; O happy I, that I see the goodness of this gracious Promise; but miserable I, if I come to see this, and never have a share in it. O why not I Lord? Why not my Sins Pardoned? Why not my Corruptions Subdued? Why not the Law Written in my Heart, and put into my inward parts? Why may not I say, my Lord and my God? or I am my Beloveds, and my Beloved is mine? Why not this Covenant established between God and me? Now my Soul thirsts after this as a thirsty Land, my affections hunger after Jesus in a Covenant of Grace: Oh, I would fain be in Covenant with God; for this is all my Salvation and all my desire, 2 Sam. 23.5. — But here is an Objection. —

The Object of this desire is apprehended as absent and distant; we do not covet those things that we do enjoy; if they are present, we rather rest in them, than move towards them, or desire after them; how then should David or any soul already in a Covenant of grace desire after the Covenant; What is this? He hath made with me an everlasting Covenant, ordered in all things, and sure, for this is all my Salvation and all my Desire.

It is true, the Object of desire qua tale, is something absent, yet not always absent in the whole, but in the parts and degrees of it; the very presence of a good thing, doth in some sort quicken the desires towards the same thing, so far forth as it is capable of improvements or augmentation: As we see in external Riches of the Body, none desire them more eagerly than those that possess them; and the more gracious the Soul is, the more is the heart enlarged in the appetite of a greater measure of Grace; as the putting in of some water into a Pump, doth draw forth more: no man is so importunate in praying, Lord help my unbelief, as he that can say, Lord, I believe: things may be desired in order to improvement and further degrees of them. Again, things present may be the Object of our desires unto continuance; as he that delighteth in a good thing that he hath, he desireth the continuance of that delight; so the soul of a man having a reach as far as immortality, it may justly desire as well the perpetuity, as the presence of those good things it enjoyeth. —

Come then, O my soul, and whet on thy desires in every of these respects; as, 1. Desire after thy interest in the Covenant. 2. Desire after thy improvement of the Covenant. 3. Desire after the continuance of thy Covenant-state. 4. Desire after Jesus the great business, or the all in all in a Covenant of Grace.

1. Desire after thy interest in the Covenant; O say in thyself, is it thus? is the Lord willing to receive me to his Grace? was that his voice in the streets, how long ye simple ones will ye love simplicity? turn ye at my reproof, behold I will pour out my Spirit unto you? was that his Proclamation, Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, incline your ear and come unto me,— and I will make an everlasting Covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David? and are these the promises offered in the Covenant, I will put my Law into their inward parts, and I will write it in your hearts, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my People? Oh the Blessed condition of those People that are in Covenant with God! Blessed art thou O Israel, who is like unto thee, a People saved by the Lord; Oh happy is the People that be in such a case, yea, happy is that People whose God is the Lord. But ah! what can I say? no sin like unto my sin, no misery like unto my misery; alas, I am an alien to God, I am separated from his People, I am out of the Covenant; like a poor Prodigal, I die for hunger, whilst those that are in my Fathers house have bread enough: Oh that I were in their condition! never did David long more for the waters of the well of Bethlehem, than my Soul now touched with the sense of Sin, doth desire to be at peace with God, and in Covenant with God; O I thirst, I pant, I gasp after him, I long for Communion, and Peace with him; with my soul do I desire thee in the night, yea, with my Spirit within me do I seek thee early.

2. Desire after the Improvement of the Covenant; it may be God hath given thee an interest in it, but alas thy hold is so weak that thou scarce knowest the meaning of it; the Lord may answer, but yet he speaks darkly, as sometimes he spake to the woman, go thy way and Sin no more; it is a middle kind of expression, neither assuring that her Sin was pardoned, nor yet putting her out of hope but it might be pardoned; so it may be God hath given thee some little ease, but he hath not spoken full peace; go on then and desire more and more after confirmation: say in thine heart, O Lord thou hast begun to show grace unto thy Servant, but oh manifest to me all thy goodness; thou hast given me a drop, and I feel it so sweet, that now I thirst, and long to enjoy the Fountain; thou hast given me a kiss of thy mouth, and now I pant to be united to thee in a more perfect and consummate marriage; thou hast given me a taste, but my appetite and desire is not thereby diminished, but enlarged; and good reason, for what are these drops, and tastes, but only the first fruits of the spirit? and earnest of the spirit? oh then what are those harvests of Joy? what are those treasures of wisdom, and free grace hid in God? I have indeed beheld a feast of fat things, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees, of wines on the lees well refined; but O what a Famine is yet in my spirit! O Lord I have longed for thy Salvation, I am ready to swoon for further union, and clearer manifestation of my share and interest in this Covenant of grace, come Lord Jesus come quickly.

3. Desire after continuance of the Covenant-state: many a sweet soul cannot deny but that the Lord hath shown mercy on him, but he fears that he shall not hold out: he feels within such a Power of corruption, such strong temptations, so many lusts, that now he doubts, O what will become of my poor Soul? what will be the issue of this woeful work? why come now and desire after perseverance: when Peter was ravished on the mount, it is good being here (says he) let us build three Tabernacles; his desire was to have continued there forever; and it was the prayer of Christ in Peters behalf, I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not; what was this Prayer but Christ's vehement desire of Peters continuing in the faith? shall Christ desire, and will not thou desire after thy own perfection? O come with these Pantings, and Breathings after God; put forth thy desires in these or the like expressions, O Lord thou hast said I will betrotth thee unto me forever; and what means this but that the conjugal love of Christ with a gracious soul shall never be broken? what means this but that the bond of union in a believer to Christ is fastened upon God, and the spirit of God holds the other end of it, and so it can never be broken? 2. O Lord thou hast discovered in thy Word, that this union is in the Father, who hath laid a sure foundation, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his: and that this union is in the Son, who loves his to the end: and that this union is in the spirit who abides in the elect forever. 3. Thou hast discovered, that the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee. 4. Thou hast said that the Saints shall be kept by the Power of God. q. d. The special Power I mean to put forth in this world, it is to uphold the spirits of my saints; the special work I have in the world to exercise my power about, it is to keep Christ and the saints together; it is through the power of God that heaven and earth is kept up, but if God must withdraw his Power from the one of these, sooner should heaven and earth fall in pieces, than God would not uphold one gracious soul that hath Union with his Son Jesus Christ. And if these be thy sayings, why then Lord I desire the accomplishment; O fulfil what thou hast said; it would break my heart if ever the Covenant should be broken betwixt me and thee: my desire is towards thee, and the more I enjoy thee, the more and more I desire and pant after thee; my desires are like thyself, infinite, eternal, everlasting desires.

4. Desire after Jesus, the great business, or the all in all in a Covenant of Grace: the most proper object of desire, especially to man fallen, is Jesus Christ: hence it is that a poor sinner under the sense of sin, cries out with the vehemency of desire, Christ, and none but Christ; give me Christ or I die, I am undone, I am lost forever. But what is Christ or Jesus to a Covenant of grace? I answer, he is the great business, he is the all in all. Christ hath at least a Six-fold relation to the Covenant of grace. 1. As he is more than a creature, he is the Covenant himself. 2. As he deals betwixt parties, he is the messenger of the covenant. 3. As he saw, and heard, and testifieth all, he is the witness of the covenant. 4. As he undertaketh for the parties at variance, he is the surety of the covenant. 5. As he standeth between the contrary parties, he is the Mediator of the covenant. 6. As he signifieth the covenant, and closeth all the Articles, he is the Testator of the covenant. Oh here is abundance of fuel for thy desire to work upon. 1. Consider the fuel, and then set on the flame thy desire,

1. Christ is the covenant itself. I gave thee for a covenant of the People, for a light of the gentiles. And I will preserve thee, and give thee for a Covenant of the People. Christ, God and Man, is all the Covenant: 1. Fundamentally, he is the original of the Covenant; the Covenant of grace takes its being and beginning from Christ; he is the covenant-maker, undertaker, manager, dispatcher, he doth everything in the covenant; 2. Materially, the very substance of the covenant stands in this, I will be their God, and they shall be my People; now Christ he is both these in himself; he is God unto his People, and he is the People representatively unto God, and before God. 3. Equivalently; many branches or fruits of the Covenant are to be fulfilled to believers in their season, but as soon as ever they are Justified, Christ is said to be the Covenant, as a present pawn or earnest delivered into the hands of a man at the very instant of his justification; and this pawn is of equal value and worth with the whole Covenant when it is fulfilled to the uttermost. Thus Christ in every of these respects is the Covenant itself; he is very peace, and reconciliation itself, and this man shall be the Peace when the Assyrian shall come into our Land. As fire is hot for itself, and all other things hot for it, as they participate of it; so Christ is the Covenant itself, and all we are so far in Covenant to Christ, as we have anything of Christ; want Christ, and want peace, and want the Covenant of grace.

2. Christ is the messenger of this Covenant. The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his Temple, even the messenger of the Covenant whom ye delight in. Christ travels with tidings between parties of the Covenant. 1. He reports of God to us, he commends his Father unto us, my Father is the husband man; and this is the Fathers will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I shall lose nothing; and he commends himself to us, it became the Lord Jesus to commend himself, I am the bread of Life, I am the Light of the world, I am the Door, I am the good Shepherd. It is a wonderful thing how Christ is a broker, (as I may say) for Christ; wisdom crieth out, she uttereth her voice in the streets; come, eat of my bread, and drink of my wine which I have mingled: Ministers cannot speak of Christ, and of his Father, as he can do himself. O my Soul to excite thy desires, come, and hear Christ, speak of Christ, and of his Father, and of Heaven, for he saw all. 2. He reports of us to God; he commends us to his Father; O righteous Father the world hath not known thee, but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me. Christ gives a good report of the Saints in Heaven; the Father and the Son are speaking of him (as I may say) behind back, and surely a good report in heaven is of high esteem; Christ tells over Ephraim's prayers behind his back, I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself thus, Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a Bullock unacustomed to the yoke, turn thou me and I shall be turned, thou art the Lord my God: and thereupon God resolves, Is Ephraim my dear Son? Is he a pleasant Child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still, therefore my bowels are troubled for him, I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord. Happy souls of whom Christ is telling good Tidings in heaven; for he is the Angel of the Covenant.

3. He is the witness of the covenant; he saw, and heard all, Behold I have given him for a witness to the people. And he is called the faithful witness. The Amen: The faithful and true witness. The covenant saith, The Son of man came to seek, and to save that which was lost; Amen, saith Christ, I can witness that to be true; the covenant saith, Christ died, and rose again for sinners; Amen saith Christ, I was dead, and behold I live for evermore; Amen. There's not anything said in the covenant, but Christ is a witness to it; and therefore we read in the very end of the Bible, this Subscription (as I may call it) in relation to Christ: He which testifieth these things, saith, surely I come quickly. Amen.

4. Christ is the Surety of the covenant. In as much as not without an oath he was made a Priest, — by so much was Jesus made a surety of a better Testament. The covenant of works had a promise, but because it was to be broken, and done away, it had no oath of God, as this hath; O doubting soul, thou sayest thy salvation is not sure, think on this Scripture, thou hast the oath of God for it; it is a sworn article of the covenant, Believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be Saved; and to this end is Christ a Surety. 1. Surety for God, he undertakes that God shall fulfil his part of the covenant, Fear not little flock, for it is your Fathers good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. And all that the Father giveth me, shall come to me, and him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out. 2. Surety for us; and to this purpose he hath paid a ransom for us; and giveth a new heart to us; and he is engaged to lose none of us. Those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost.

5. Christ is the Mediator of the covenant: the Apostle calls him Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant: He hath something of God, as being true God; and something of man, as sharing with us of the nature of man; hence he is Mediator by office, and layeth his hands on both parties, as a days-man doth; and in this respect he is a friend, a reconciler, and a servant. 1. A friend to both parties, he hath God's heart for man, to be gracious, and he hath man's heart for God to satisfy justice. 2. A reconciler of both parties; he brings down God to a treaty of peace, and he brings up man by a ransom paid, so that he may say unto both, Father come down to my brethren, my kindred and flesh; and thou my Sister and Spouse come up to my Father, and my Father, to my God, and thy God. 3. He is a servant to both parties, Behold my servant, saith God, my righteous servant. Yea, and our servant, He came not to be served, but to serve, and to give his life a ransom for many.

6. Christ is the Testator of the covenant: He died to this very end, that he might confirm the covenant, Where a Testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the Testator, for a Testament is of force, after men are dead, otherwise it is of no strength at all, whiles the Testator liveth. Christ then must die, and Christ's blood must be shed, to seal the covenant of grace; it is not every blood, but Christ's blood that must seal the everlasting covenant, Heb. 13.20. And his blood being shed, he is then rightly called the Testator of the covenant.

O what fuel is here to set our desires on flame? come soul, and bend thy desires towards Christ, as the Sun-flower towards the Sun, the Iron to the Loadstone, and the Loadstone to the Pole-star; yea, the nearer thou drawest towards Christ, the more and more do thou desire after Christ; true desires never determine or expire: He that thirsts let him thirst more (saith Bernard) and he that desires let him desire, yet more abundantly. Is there not cause? O what excellencies hast thou found in Christ? Poor soul, thou hast undone thyself by sin, there's but a step betwixt thee and damnation; but to save thy soul, Christ comes leaping on the Mountains, and skipping on the Hills; he enters into a covenant with God; he is the covenant, the Messenger of the covenant, the Witness of the covenant, the Surety of the covenant, the Mediator of the covenant, the Testator of the covenant, the great business, the all in all in a covenant of grace; If David could say, My soul breaks for the longings that it hath to thy judgments at all times, how mayst thou say, My soul breaks for the longings that it hath to thy mercies, and my Jesus at all times? Oh I gasp for grace, as the thirsty land for drops of rain; I thirst, I faint, I languish, I long for an hearty draught of the Fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Oh that I could see Jesus flying through the midst of heaven, with the Covenant in his hand! Oh I long for that Angel of the Covenant; I long to see such another vision as John did, when he said, And I saw another Angel fly in the midst of Heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to Preach unto them that dwell upon the Earth. What? Is that Covenant in the hand of Christ? and is my name written in that roll? Say Lord; Is my name written on the Heart of Christ? Oh! if I had the glory and possession of all the world, if I had ten thousand worlds, and ten thousand lives, I would lay them all down, to have this poor trembling soul of mine assured of this: Oh my thirst is insatiable, my bowels are hot within me, my desire after Jesus in reference to the Covenant is greedy as the grave, the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame.

SECT. IV. Of hoping in Jesus in that Respect.

WE must hope in Jesus carrying on the great work of our salvation in a way of Covenant; now what is hope but a good opinion of enjoying its object; indeed a good opinion is so necessary for hope, that it makes almost all its kinds and differences; as it is greater or lesser, so it causeth the strength or weakness, the excess or defect of this passion, hope: This good opinion is that which renders hope either doubtful, or certain; if certain, it produceth confidence or presumption; presumption is nothing but an immoderate hope without a ground: but confidence is that assurance of the thing hoped for in some measure, as if we had it already in hand. Hence it is that we usually say we have great, and strong, and good hopes, when we would speak them assured; which hath occasioned some to define it thus: Hope is a certain grounded confidence that the desired good will come; not to insist on this; all the question is, Whether those promises contained in the Covenant of grace belong unto me? and what are the grounds and foundations on which my hope is built? If the grounds be weak, then hope is doubtful, or presumptuous; but if the grounds be right, then hope is right, and I may cast Anchor, and build upon it.

In the disquisition of these grounds, we shall only search into those qualifications, which the Scripture tells us they are qualified with, with whom the Lord enters into a Covenant of grace; and these we shall reduce, 1. To the condition of the Covenant. 2. To the promise of the Covenant. As —

1. If thou art in Covenant with God, then hath God wrought in thee that condition of the Covenant, a true, and lively, and soul-saving, and justifying faith. Believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved. If thou believest, thou shalt be saved. The promise of life contained in the Covenant is made only to believers; This is so sure a way of trial, that the Apostle himself directs us thereunto, Examine yourselves whether ye be in the Faith; Ay, But how shall I examine, for there are many pretenders to faith in these days? Why thus, 1. True faith will carry thee out of thyself into Christ, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; a faithful man hath not his life in himself, but in Christ Jesus: he hath his spiritual being in the Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ; he is joined to the Lord, and is one Spirit; he seeth the Father in the Son, and the Son within himself, and also the Father within himself through the Son; Know ye not that Christ Jesus is in you, except ye be reprobates? Ye shall know me (saith Christ) that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you. By faith we enjoy the glory of union. The glory which thou hast given me, I have given them that they may be one even as we are one, I in them, and thou in me; though we have not the glory of equality, yet we have the glory of likeness; we are one with Christ, and one with the Father by faith in Christ.—2. True faith will carry thee beyond the world; a believer looks on Christ overcoming the world for him, and so by that faith he overcomes the world through him; This is the Victory that overcometh the world, even your faith: Hence it is that the Saints are said To be clothed with the Sun, and to have the Moon under their feet; when through faith they are clothed with The Son of Righteousness, the Lord Jesus; then they trample upon all sublunary things, as nothing worth in comparison of Christ. 3. True faith is ever accompanied with true love: if once by faith thou apprehendest God's love, and Christ's love to thee, thou canst not but love that God, and love that Christ who loved thee, and gave himself for thee; We love him, because he first loved us; he that loveth not God, hath not apprehended God's love to him; if ever God in Christ be presented to thee for thy justification, it is such a lovely object, that thou canst not but love him; He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love. 4. True faith purifies the heart, and purgeth out sin; When God discovers this, that he will heal backsliding, and love freely, and turn away his anger, then Ephraim shall say, What have I anymore to do with Idols? if ever Christ reveal himself as the object of our Justification, he will be sure to present himself as the pattern of our Sanctification: the knowledge of God's Goodness will make us in love with holiness; they shall fear and tremble, for all the goodness, and for all the prosperity, that I procure unto them, saith the Lord: The golden chain of Mercy let down from Heaven, doth bind us faster to the service of our God. 5. Above all, observe the rise: true faith, if it be true, it is ever bottomed upon the sense and pain of a lost condition; spiritual poverty is the nearest capacity of believing; this is faiths method, be condemned to be saved: be sick and be healed. Faith is a flower of Christ's own planting, but it grows in no Soul but only on the margin and bank of the Lake of fire and brimstone; in regard there's none so fit for Christ and Heaven, as those who are self-sick, and self-condemned to Hell. They that be whole, need not a Physician (saith Christ) but they that are sick. This is a Foundation of Christ, that because the man is broken, and hath not bread, therefore he must be sold, and Christ must buy him, and take him home to his fire-side, and clothe him, and feed him there. I know Satan argues thus, Thou art not worthy of Christ, and therefore what hast thou to do with Christ? but Faith concludes otherwise, I am not worthy of Christ, I am out of measure sinful, I tremble at it, and I am sensible of it, and therefore ought I, and therefore must I come to Christ; this arguing is Gospel-logic, and the right method of a true and saving-faith: for what is faith, but the act of a sinner humbled, weary, laden, poor, and self-condemned? Oh take heed of their doctrine who make faith to act of some vile person never humbled, but applying with an immediate touch, his hot, boiling, and smoking Lusts, to the bleeding blessed Wounds, and Death of Jesus Christ.

2. If thou art in Covenant with God, then hath God fulfilled in some part the promises of this Covenant to thy Soul: As —

1. Then hath God put the Law into thy inward parts, and writ it in thy heart: look as Indenture answers to Indenture, or as a face in the glass answers to a face, so the conformity of thy heart, and inwards to the Law of God; thou obeyest God's Will, and delightest in that obedience; Thou sayest with David, I delight to do thy Will O God; yea, thy Law is within my Heart.

2. Thou hast a covenant-relation to God, and a covenant-interest in God; and thou art by covenant as one of the people of God. Christ hath thy soul, thy body, thy affections, thy love to the very uttermost; God hath a propriety, and a peculiarity in thee; thou art Christ's by Marriage; thou hast past over thyself unto him to be his Jewel, his Spouse, his Diadem, his Crown, his Servant, his Child forever.

3. Then art thou clearly taught to know the Lord; thou knowest him in another manner than thou didst before; I will establish my Covenant with thee, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord. There is a double knowledge. 1. A speculative knowledge, and thus men may know much, but they are not affected according to the things they know. 2. A practical knowledge; and thus if we know the Lord, we shall see in him that excellency and beauty, that our Hearts will be affectioned towards him, and we shall be able to say, that we love him with all our Heart, and with all our Soul, and with all our Strength.

4. Then hath God pardoned thy sins, and He will remember thy sins no more? But how should I be assured of that? Why thus, — 1. If thou hast sincerely confessed, bewailed, and forsaken thy sins; Wash ye, make ye clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine Eyes, cease to do evil: — And presently it follows, come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as Scarlet, they shall be as white as Snow, though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. To the same purpose, Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have Mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly Pardon. 2. If thy heart, after many storms and troubles be calmed, and quieted through saith in Christ; Being justified by faith, we have peace with God; What? hast thou peace with God? and hath God stilled thy soul with peace? this is an argument of thy sins pardon — 3. If thine Heart be singularly inflamed with the love of Christ; the Woman that Had many sins forgiven her by Christ, she loved him much. Upon that account she wept, and washed his feet with her tears, and so wiped them with the hairs of her head; she kissed his feet, and anointed them with Ointment, nothing was too good for Christ, who had forgiven her all her sins.— 4. If thy heart, and soul, and all that is within be singularly enlarged to praise God for his pardons; Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits, who forgiveth all thine iniquities. If thine heart feel his pardons, thy mouth will sing his praises; and hereby thou mayest be assured that God hath pardoned all thy sins.

Come now; are these, O my soul, the grounds of thy hopes? a lively faith in Jesus? an accomplishment in some measure of the promises of the Covenant? why, these are the fuel of hope; if this be thy case, act thy hope strongly on Christ, and on the covenant of grace; say not, hope is only of things future, and therefore if I be already in covenant, What need I hope? For whether thou art in covenant or no, it is the main question here; nay, though it be granted that thou art in covenant, and that hope is swallowed up in the complete presence of its object; yet it is not at all diminished, but rather increased by a partial presence. As in massy bodies, though violent motion be weakest in the end, yet natural motions are ever swiftest towards the center: so in the hopes of men, though such as are violent and groundless, prove weaker and weaker, yet those that are stayed and natural (or rather gracious) are evermore stronger and stronger, till they procure the utmost presence and union of their object. The nearer we come to a fruition of a good, the more impatient we are to want it. O then hope in Jesus! draw on thy hope yet more and more in this Covenant of grace! be not content only with an hope of expectation, but bring it on to an hope of confidence, or assurance; thou canst not fail if thou hangest thy hope on Jesus: Christ is not fastened as a loose nail, or as a broken rotten hedge in the covenant of grace; he is there As a nail in a sure place; and they shall hang on him all the glory of his Fathers house; the offspring and the issue; all vessels of small quantity, from the vessels of cups, even to all the vessels of flagons. Come soul, thou art a vessel of small quantity, hang all thy weight on Christ, he is a nail that cannot break.

SECT. V. Of Believing in Jesus in that Respect.

5. WE must believe on Jesus carrying on this great work of our salvation in a way of covenant. Many a time Satan comes and hurles in a temptation, What? Is it likely that God should enter into a covenant with thee? yea, sometimes he so rivets in this temptation, that he darkens all within, and there's no sight of comfort in the soul: O but now believe! now if ever is the season for faith to act; little evidence and much adherence speaks saith to purpose. We read of some who could stay themselves upon the Lord, whiles they walked in darkness upon the margin, and borders of a hundred deaths. David fears no evil, though he walked through the valley of the shadow of death; for his faith told him, that God was with him. Heman could say, thy wrath lieth hard upon me, thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves; sure he thought, God could do no more to drown him; not only a wave or two, but all God's waves were on him, and over him; and yet he believes, Lord I have called daily upon thee. Hezekiah's comforts were at an hard pinch. Mine eyes fail with looking upwards: O Lord I am oppressed; yet praying argues believing, Lord undertake for me. Christ's sense of comforts was ebb and low, when he wept, and cried, that he was forsaken of God; yet then his faith is doubled, as the cable of an Anchor is doubled when the storm is more than ordinary, my God, my God.

Poor soul! thou standest wondering at this great condescension of God; What? That God should enter into covenant with me? What? that God should make such great and precious promises with me? Surely these comforts, and these privileges, are too high for me, or for any soul breathing. — It may be so; and yet be not discouraged, for God will magnify his grace, and therefore he will do this great thing; all that thou hast to do, and all that God requires of thee, in this case, is only to believe; indeed thou hast no part in Christ, no part in the covenant of grace, if thou wilt not believe; faith is the condition of the covenant of grace; and therefore either believe, or no covenant.

I know it is not easy to believe; nay, it is one of the hardest things under heaven to persuade a soul into faith: What? Will the great God of heaven make a Covenant with such a wretch as I am? I cannot believe it. Why, What's the matter? Ah my sins, my sins, my sins! God is a consuming fire against such, he cannot endure to behold iniquity: little hopes that ever God should enter into a covenant with me. But to help on, or to allure a soul in, consider, O thou soul, of these following passages.

1. Consider of the sweet and gracious nature of God: that which undoes broken hearts, and trembling souls, it is misconceivings of God: we have many times low, diminishing, exenuating thoughts of God's goodness; but we have large thoughts of his power and wrath: now to rectify these misapprehensions, consider his name, and therein his nature, the Lord, the Lord, Merciful, and Gracious, Long-suffering, and abundant in Goodness, and Truth, keeping mercy for Thousands forgiving Iniquity, Transgressions, & Sins; and will by no means clear the guilty, visiting the Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children, and upon the Children's Children, unto the Third and Fourth Generation. O terrible Text! says the Soul, alas I am guilty of thousands of sins; and if this be his Name I am undone, woe to me and mine, unto the Third and Fourth Generation. But consider again, and in this description of God we shall find an Ocean of Mercy to a Drop of Wrath; a Sea of Oil to an half drop of scalding Lead. For,—

1. God doth not begin, the Lord, the Lord, that will by no means clear the guilty; but, the Lord, the Lord, Merciful, and Gracious, Long-suffering; this is the first and greatest part of his Name; God is loath to speak in justice, and wrath; he keeps it to the last; m•rcy lies uppermost in God's heart; if the sentence must come, it shall be the last day of the Assize.

2 Many words are used to speak his goodness: Merciful, Gracious, Long-suffering and abundant in Goodness, keeping Mercy for Thousands, forgiving Iniquity, Transgression and Sin; here be six several phrases, to show the Riches of his Goodness, but when he speaks his wrath, what haste makes he over it? there's only two expressions of that; it was a Theam he took no delight in; Judgment is *his Work, his strange Work;*for he doth not afflict willingly nor grieve the Children of Men.

3. There's a difference in the expression; when God speaks of mercy, he expresseth it thus, abundant in Mercy; keeping Mercy for Thousands. But in visiting sins, it is not to thousands, but only to the Third or Fourth Generation. Surely Mercy rejoiceth against Judgment. God would show Mercy to Thousands, rather than he would destroy three or four.

4. What if by no means God will clear the guilty? stubbornly guilty? yet never will he destroy humble souls that lie at his feet, and are willing to have mercy on his easy terms. How shall I give thee up Ephraim, how shall I deliver thee O Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? How shall I set thee as Zeboim? My heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together, I will not execute the fierceness of Mine anger, I will not destroy Ephraim, for I am God and not Man, the Holy One in the midst of ••ee; O my soul! why standest thou at a distance with God? Why dost thou fancy a Lion in the way? O b•lieve in God, believe in Jesus! and believe thy portion in this Covenant of grace! have sweet and delightful thoughts of God's nature, and thou wilt not, thou canst not sly from him: some are of opinion that a soul may fetch more encouragements to believe, from the consideration of God's gracious and merciful nature, than from the promise itself.

2. Consider of the sweet and gracious nature of Jesus Christ: our thoughts of God are necessarily more strange than of Jesus Christ, because of our infinite distance from the Godhead; but in Christ, God is come down into our nature, and so infinite goodness, and mercy is incarnate; art thou afraid, O my soul, at his name Jah, and Jehovah! O remember his name is Immanuel; the Lyon is here disrobed of his garment of terror; his rough hair is turned into a soft wool; see thy God disrobed of his terrible Majesty, see thy God is a man, and thy Judge is a Brother; mince Jehovah with Jesus, and the Serpent wi•l be a rod; O that Balsamy name, Jesus; that name that founds healing for every wound, settlement for every distraction, comfort for every sorrow: but here's the misery, souls in distress had rather be poring on hell than heaven; rather frightening themselves with the terrors of justice, than staying themselves with the fl•ggons of Mercy. O my soul, how canst thou more contradict the nature of Christ, and the Gospel-description of Christ, than to think him a destroyer of men? but wherein appears the gracious nature of Christ? I answer, in his being incarnate, O how could Jesus have manifested more willingness to save, than that the God-head should condescend to assume our nature? surely this is ten thousand times more condescension, than for the greatest King to become a sly, or a toad, to save such creatures as toads and flies. 2. In his tender dealing with all sorts of sinners, he professed that he came into the world, not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. He wept over Jerusalem, saying, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered thee as an Hen gathereth her chickens under her wings? but ye would not. I would, but ye would not And when his Disciples would have had fire come down from Heaven to consume those that refused him, he reproveth them, and tells them, they know not of what spirits they were of. 3. In his care of his own; not caring what he suffered, so they might be saved. Alas, alas, that the Lord Jesus should pass through a life of misery, to a death more miserable, to manifest openly to the world the abundance of his love; and yet that any soul should suspect him of cruelty, or unwillingness to show mercy! Ah my soul, believe; never cry out, my sins, my sins, my sins; there is a gracious nature and inclination in Jesus Christ to pardon all.

3. Consider of that office of saving, and showing mercy, which Christ hath set up; this is more than merely a gracious inclination; Christ hath undertaken and set up an office to seek, and to save that which was lost; to bring home straying Souls to his Father, to be the great Peace-maker between God and Man, to reconcile God to man, and man to God, and so to be the Head and Husband of his People. Is not here a world of encouragement to believe in Jesus? what? to consider him as one who hath made it his office to heal, and relieve, and to restore, and to reconcile? Among Merchants I remember they have an office of security, that if you dare not adventure on Seas, yet there you may be ensured, if you will but put in at that Office: in this manner Christ hath constituted and assumed the office of being a Mediator, the Redeemer, and the Savior of men; he hath erected, and set up on purpose an office of mere love, and tender compassion, for the relief of all poor distressed sinners: if they dare not venture otherwise, yet let them put in at this office. O what jealous hearts have we that will not trust Christ, that will not take the word of Christ without an office of security? surely Christ never so carried himself to any soul, that it need be jealous of his love and faithfulndess, yet this dear husband meets with many a jealous spouse: O my soul take heed of this! Satan hath no greater design upon thee than to persuade thee to entertain hard thoughts of Christ: believe! never say God will not take thee into Covenant, for to this purpose he hath erected an office to save and have mercy.

Consider of those tenders and offers of Christ, those entreaties and beseechings to accept of Christ, which are made in the Gospel. What is the Gospel? or what is the sum of all the Gospel, but this? O take Christ, and life in Christ, that thou mayest be saved: what mean these free offers, Ho everyone that thirsteth come to the waters, and whosoever will, let him take of the Waters of Life freely: and God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. God is the first suitor and solicitor, he first prays the Soul to take Christ. Hark at the door! who is it that knocks there? who is it that calls now, even now? open unto me my Sister, my Love, my Dove, my undefiled, for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night? See him through the windows, this can be none but Christ: his sweet language of Sister, Love, and Dove, bespeaks him Christ; his suffering language, that his head is filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the Night? bespeaks him Christ; But hearken the motion he makes to thy Soul; Soul! consider what price I have given to save thee; this my body was crucified, my hands and feet nailed, my heart pierced, and through anguish I was forced to cry, my soul is heavy, heavy unto death, and now what remains for thee but only to believe? See all things ready on my part, remission, justification, sanctification, salvation; I will be thy God and thou shalt be of the number of my People; I offer now myself and merits, and benefits flowing there-from, and I entreat thee accept of this offer. O take Christ, and Life, and Salvation in Christ What is this the voice of my beloved? are these the entreaties of Jesus? and O my soul, wilt thou not believe? wilt thou not accept of this Gracious offer of Christ? O consider who is this that proclaimeth, inviteth, beseecheth? if a poor man should offer thee mountains of gold thou mightest doubt of performance, because he is not of that Power; if a covetous rich man should offer thee thousands of silver, thou mightest doubt of performance, because it is contrary to his nature; but Christ is neither poor, nor covetous; as he is able, so his Name is gracious, and his nature is to be faithful in performance; his Covenant is sealed with his blood, and confirmed by his oath, that all shall have pardon that will but come in, and believe: O then let these words of Christ (whose lips like lilies are dropping down pure myrrh) prevail with thy soul, say Amen to his offer, I believe, Lord help my unbelief.

5. Consider of those Commands of Christ, which notwithstanding all thy excuses and pretences, he fastens on thee to believe: And this is his Commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ. Surely this Command should infinitely outweigh and prevail against all other Countermands of Flesh and Blood, of Satan, Nature, Reason, Sense, and all the World. Why this Command is thy very ground and warrant, against which the very Gates of Hell can never possibly prevail: when Abraham had a command too kill his own only dear Son, with his own hand, though it was matter of as great grief as could possibly pierce his heart; yet he would readily and willingly submit to it; how much more shouldst thou obey, when God commands no more, but that thou shouldst believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ? There's no evil in this Command; no, no, it comprehends in it all good Imaginable; have Christ, and thou hast with him the excellency and variety of all blessings both of heaven and earth; have Christ, and thou hast with him a discharge of all those endless and easless torments of Hell; have Christ, and thou hast with him the glorious Deity itself, to be enjoyed through him to all Eternity. O then believe in Jesus! suffer not the Devils cavils, and the groundless exceptions of thine own heart to prevail with thee against the direct Commandment of Almighty God.

6. Consider of these Messages of Christ, which he daily sends by the hands of his Gospel-Ministers. Now then we are Ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye Reconciled unto God. What a wonder is here! Would not an earthly Prince disdain and hold it in foul scorn to send unto his inferior rebellious slaves for reconcilment? It is otherwise with Christ; he is content to put up at our hands all indignities and affronts; he is glad to sue to us first, and to send his Ambassadors day after day, beseeching us to be reconciled unto him: O incomprehensible depth of unspeakable Mercy, and Encouragement to come to Christ! That I may digress a little, say thou that readest, wilt thou take Christ to thy Bridegroom, and forsake all others? This is the Message which God hath bid me (unworthy Ambassador) to deliver to thee: the Lord Jesus expects an answer from thee; and I should be glad at heart to return a fit answer to him that sent me; say then, dost thou like well of the Match? wilt thou have Christ for thy Husband? wilt thou enter into Covenant with him? wilt thou surrender up thy Soul to thy God? wilt thou rely on Christ, and apply Christ's merits particularly to thyself? wilt thou believe? for that is it I mean by taking, and receiving, and marrying of Christ: Oh happy if I could but Join Christ and thy Soul together this day! Oh happy thou, if thou wouldst this day be persuaded by a poor Ambassador of Christ! Blame me not if I am an importunate Messenger; if ever I hear from thee, let me hear some good News, that I may return it to Heaven, and give God the Glory. Come, say on; art thou willing to have Christ? wouldst thou have thy name enrolled in the Covenant of Grace? shall God be thy God, and Christ thy Christ? wilt thou have the Person of Christ, and all those privileges flowing from the Blood of Christ? sure thou art willing, art thou not? stay then; thou must take Christ on these terms; thou must believe on him (i e.) Thou must take him as thy Savior and Lord, thou must take him, and forsake all others for him. This is the true Faith, the condition of the Covenant: O believe in Jesus, and the Match is made, the hands are struck, the Covenant established, and all doubts removed.

SECT. VI. Of loving Jesus in that respect.

6 WE must love Jesus, as carrying on this great work of our Salvation in a way of Covenant. I know Love is reckoned as the first and fundamental Passion of all the rest; some call it the first springing and out-going affection of the Soul; and therefore I might have put it in the first place, before Hope or Desire; but I choose rather to place it in this Method, as (me thinks) most agreeing (if not to the order of Nature, yet) to the Spiritual workings, as they appear in my Soul. When a Good is propounded<sup>d</sup> first I desire, and then I hope, and then I believe, and then I love. And some describing this spiritual love, they tell me, it is an holy disposition of the heart, arising from Faith. But to let these niceties pass for a Spiders web (curious, but thin) certain it is that I cannot believe all these transactions of God, by Christ in a Covenant-way for me, but I must needs love that God, & love that Christ who hath thus firstly & freely loved my soul; go on then O my Soul, put fire to the harth, blow on thy little spark, set before thee God's Love, and thou canst not but love; and therein Consider, 1. The Time. 2. The Properties. 3. The Effects of God's love. 1. For The Time; He Loved thee before the World was made: hast thou not heard? and wilt thou ever forget it? were not those ancient Loves from all eternity admirable, astonishing, ravishing Loves? 2, He Loved thee in the very beginning of the world: was not the promise expressed to Adam intended for thee? as thou sinnedst in his loins, so didst thou in his loins receive the Promise, It shall bruise thy head: And not long after, when God established his Covenant with Abraham and his Seed, wast not thou one of that Seed of Abraham? If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's Seed, and heirs according to the Promise. 3. He loves thee now more especially, not only with a Love of benevolence, as before; but with a love of complacency: not only hath he struck Covenant with Christ, with Adam, with Abraham in thy behalf, but particularly and personally with thyself; and O what Love is this? If a woman lately conceiving, love her future fruit; how much more doth she love it when it is born and embraced in her Arms? So if God loved thee before thou hadst a being, yea before the world or any Creature in it had a being, how much more now? O the height, and depth, and length and breadth of this immeasurable Love! O my Soul, I cannot express the Loves of God in Christ to thee; I do but draw the Picture of the Son with a coal, when I endeavor to express God's love in Christ.

2. For the properties of this Love: 1. God's Love to thee is an eternal Love. He was thinking in his eternity of thee in this manner, At such a time there shall be such. Man and such a Woman living on the earth: in the last times such a one (I mean thou that readest, if thou believest) and to that Soul I will reveal myself, and communicate my loves; to that soul I will offer Christ, and give it the hand of Christ to lay hold on Christ; and to that purpose now I write down the Name in the Book of Life, and none shall be able to blot it out again. Oh eternal Love! Oh the blessed transactions between the Father and the Son, from all eternity to manifest his Love to thy very Soul!

2. God's love to thee is a choice Love; it is an elective, separating Love: when he passed by and left many thousands, then, even then he sets his heart on thee: Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith God, yet I loved Jacob, and hated Esau. So, wert not thou such an ones Brother, or such an ones Sister that remained wicked and ungodly? wert not thou of such a Family; whereas many, or some are passed by, yet God hath loved thee, and pitched his Love on thee: Surely this is choice Love.

3. God's Love to thee is a free Love: I will love them freely, saith God, And the Lord did not set his Love upon you, and choose you, because ye were more in number than any people, — but because the Lord loved you; there can be no other reason why the Lord loved thee, but because he loved thee. We use to say, this is a woman's reason, I will do it because I will do it; but here we find it is God's reason, though it may seem strange arguing; yet Moses can go no higher, he loved thee, why? because he loved thee.

God's love to thee is the Love of all relations: look what a friends Love is to a friend, or what a Fathers Love is towards a Child, or what an Husbands Love is towards a Wife; such is God's Love to thee; thou art his Friend, his Son, his Daughter, his Spouse; and God is thy All in All.

3. For the Effects of his Love: 1. God so Loves thee, as that he hath entered into a Covenant with thee. O what a Love is this? tell me, O my soul, is there not an infinite disparity betwixt God and thee? He is God above, and thou art a Worm below: He is the High and lofty one that inhabiteth eternity, whose Name is Holy: and thou art less than the least of all the Mercies of God: O wonder at such a condescension! that such a Potter, and such a Former of things should come on terms of bargaining with such clay as is guilty before him! Had we the tongues of Men and Angels, we could never express it!

God so loves thee, as that in the Covenant he gives thee all his Promises? Indeed what is the Covenant but an accumulation, or heap of Promises? As a cluster of stars makes a Constellation; so as a mass of promises concurrereth in the Covenant of Grace; where-ever Christ is, clusters of divine promises grow out of him; as the motes, rays and beams are from the Sun. I shall instance in some few. As, —

1. God in the Covenant gives the world. All is yours, whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas or the World, 1 Cor. 3.22. First seek the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. These temporary blessings are a part of the Covenant which God hath made to his People; It is he that giveth thee Power to get wealth, that he may establish his Covenant which he sware unto thy Fathers. Others, I know, may have the World, but they have it not by a Covenant-right; it may be thou hast but a little, a very little of the world; well, but thou hast it by a Covenant-right, and so it is an earnest of all the rest.

2. As God in the Covenant gives thee the world, so in comparison of thee and his other Saints, he cares not what becomes of all the world. I loved thee, saith God, therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy Life: If the case be so, that it cannot be well with thee, but great evils must come upon others, kindred, people and nations, I do not so much care for them, saith God, my heart is on thee, so as in Comparison of thee, I care not what becomes of all the world: O the love of God to his Saints!

3. God in the Covenant pardons thy sins; this is another fruit of God's love: Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins by his own blood; it cost him dear to pardon our sins; even the heart-blood of Christ: such were the transactions betwixt God and Christ: if thou wilt take upon thee to deliver souls from sin (saith God to his Son) thou must come thyself, and be made a Curse for their Sin: Well (saith Christ) thy will be done in it; though I lose my Life, though it cost me the best blood in my heart, yet let me deliver them from sin: This exceedingly heightens Christ's Love, that he should foresee thy sin, and that yet he should Love. Many times we set our Love on some outward unthankful Creatures, and we say, could I but have foreseen this untowardness, they should never have had my Love: but now the Lord did foresee all thy sins, and all thy ill requitals for love, and yet it did not once hinder his love towards thee, but he puts this in the Covenant, I will forgive their Iniquities, and remember their sins no more.

4. God in the Covenant gives thee Holiness and Sanctification. I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean from all your filthiness, and from all your Idols will I cleanse you: this Holiness is our excellency in the eyes of Men and Angels: this is the Crown and Diadem upon the heads of Saints: whence David calls them by the name of excellent ones. Holiness is a Spirit of Glory, 1 Pet. 4.14. it is the delight of God: as a Father delights himself in seeing his own Image in his Children, so God delights himself in the Holiness of his Saints: God loved them before with a love of benevolence and good-will, but now he loves them with a love of complacency: The Lord takes pleasure in those that fear him; the Lord takes pleasure in his People. Holiness is the very Essence of God, the Divine Nature of God: O what is this, that God should put his own nature into thee? You are partakers of the Divine Nature. O what a love is this that God should put his own Life into thee? that he should enable thee to live the very same life that he himself lives? remember that piece of the Covenant, I will put my Law into their inward parts, and write it in their hearts.

5. God in the Covenant gives thee the knowledge of himself: it may be thou knewest him before: but 'tis another kind of knowledge that God now gives thee than thou hadst before. When God teaches the Soul to know him, it looks on God with another eye: it sees now another beauty in God than ever it saw before: for all that knowledge that it had before, bred not love: only Covenant-knowledge of God works in the Soul a true Love of God. But how doth this Covenant-knowledge work this Love? I shall tell you my own experiences: I go through all the Virtues, Graces and Excellencies that are most amiable: and I look in the Scriptures, and there I find them in God alone: if ever I saw any excellency in any man, or in any Creature, I think with myself, there is more in God that made that Creature: He that made the Eye, shall not he see? And so he that made that Loveliness, is not he Lovely? Now when by these Mediums I have presented God thus lovely to my Soul, then I begin to feel my heart to warm. As when I conceive such an Idea of a man, that he is of such a carriage, behavior, disposition, that he hath a mind thus, and thus framed, qualified and beautified, why then I love him; so when I apprehend the Lord aright, when I observe him as he is described in his Word; when I observe his doings, and consider his workings, and learn from all these together a right Idaea, opinion or apprehension of him, then my will follows my understanding, and my affections follow them both; and I come to love God, and to delight in God. O here's a sweet knowledge! surely it was God's Love in Christ to put this blessed Article into the Covenant of grace; They shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord.

6. God in the Covenant of grace gives thee his Son. God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Nay more, as God hath given thee his Son, so he hath given thee himself. O my Soul, wouldest thou not think it a marvelous love, if God should say to thee, Come Soul, I Will give thee all the World for thy Portion; or that I may give thee a testimony that I love thee, I will make another world for thy sake, and I will make thee Emperor of that world also. Surely thou wouldst say, God loves me dearly; ay but in that God hath given thee his Son, and given thee himself, this is a greater degree of Love. Christi•ns! stand amazed; Oh what love is this to the Children of men! Oh that we should live to have our ears filled with this sound from Heaven! I will be a God to thee and to thy Seed after thee, I am the Lord thy God; I will be their God, and they shall be my People. O my Soul, where hast thou been? rouse up, and recollect, and set before thee all these passages of God's Love in Christ; are not these strong attractives to gain thy love; what wilt thou do? canst thou choose to love the Lord thy God? shall not all this love of God in Christ to thee constrain thy love? It is the expression of the Apostle, The Love of God constrains us: God in Christ is the very Element of Love, and whither should Love go but to the Element? Air goes to Air, and Earth to Earth, and all the Rivers to the Sea: every Element will to its proper place: Now God is Love, and whither should thy Love be carried, but to this Ocean, or Sea of Love? Come my Beloved (said the Spouse to Christ) let us get up early to the vineyards, let us see if the Vines flourish, whether the tender grapes appear; there will I give thee my Loves: The flourishing of the Vine, and the appearing of the tender grapes are the fruits of the graces of God in the Assemblies of his Saints; now wheresoever things appear, whether in Assemblies, or in secret Ordinances, then and there (saith the Bride) will I give thee my Loves; when thou comest to the Word, Prayer, Meditation, be sure of this, to give Christ thy Love: What? doth Christ manifest his presence there? is there any abounding of his graces there? O let thy Love abound: by how much more thou feelest God's Love towards thee, by so much more do thou love thy God again: many sins being forgiven, how shouldst thou but Love much?

SECT. VII. Of joying in Jesus in that respect.

WE must joy in Jesus as carrying on the great work of our Salvation in a way of Covenant. I know our joy here is but in part; such is the excellency of Spiritual joy, that it is reserved for Heaven; God will not permit it to be pure and perfect here below: and yet such as it is (though mingled with cares and pains) it is a blessed duty; it is the light of our souls: and were it quite taken away, our lives would be nothing but Horrour and Confusion: O my Soul, if thou didst not hope to encounter joy in all thy Acts, thou wouldst remain languishing and immovable, thou wouldst be without action and vigor, thou wouldst speak no more of Jesus, or of a Covenant of grace, or of God, or Christ, or Life, or glory. — Well then go on O my Soul, and joy in Jesus; if thou lovest him, what should hinder thy rejoicing in him? It is a Maxim, that as Love Proceeds, so if there be nothing that retains the Appetite, it always goes from Love to Joy. One motion of the Appetite towards good is to be united to it, and the next Appetite towards good is to enjoy it: now Love consists in union, and joy in fruition; for what is fruition, but a joy that we find in the possession of that thing we love? Much ado there is amongst Philosophers concerning the differences of Love and Joy. Some give it thus; As is the motion of fluid Bodies which run towards their Center, and think to find their rest there; but being there, they stop not, and therefore they return, and scatter themselves on themselves, they swell and overflow: So in the passion of Love, the Appetite runs to the beloved Object, and unites itself to it, and yet its motion ends not there; for by this passion of joy, it returns the same way; again it scatters itself on itself, and overflows those Powers which are nearest to it; by this effusion the soul doubles on the Image of the good it hath received, and so it thinks to possess it more; it distills itself into that faculty, which first acquainted it with the knowledge of the Object, and by that means it makes all the parts of the Soul concur to the possession of it. Hence they say, That joy is an effusion of the Appetite, whereby the Soul spreads itself on what is good, to possess it the more perfectly.

But not to stay in the inquiry of its Nature, O my Soul, be thou in the exercise of this Joy; Is there not cause? come see, and own thy Blessedness; take notice of the great things the Lord hath done for thee. As,— 1. He hath made a Covenant with thee of temporal mercies; thou hast all thou hast by free-holding of Covenant-Grace: thy Bread is by Covenant, thy sleep is by Covenant, thy safety from Sword is by the Covenant, the very tilling of thy Land is by a Covenant of Grace, Ezek. 36.34. O how sweet is this? Every Crum is from Christ, and by virtue of a Covenant of Grace.

2. He hath made a Covenant with thee, of spiritual mercies; even a Covenant of Peace, and Grace, and Blessing, and Life for evermore; God is become thy God, he is all things to thee; he hath forgiven thy sins, he hath given thee his Spirit, to lead thee, to sanctify thee, to uphold thee in that state wherein thou standest; and at last he will bring thee to a full enjoyment of himself in Glory, where thou shalt bless him, and rejoice before him with joy unspeakable and full of glory. O pluck up thy heart, lift up thy head, strengthen the weak hands and the feeble knees; serve the Lord with gladness and joyfulness of Spirit, considering the day of thy Salvation draweth nigh. Write it in Letters of Gold, that thy God is in Covenant with thee, to love thee, to bless thee, and to save thee. Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and receive thee to himself, and then thou shalt fully know what it is to have God to be thy God, or to be in Covenant with God. I know these Objects rejoice not every heart; a man out of Covenant, if he look on God, he is a consuming fire: if on the Law, it is a Sentence of Condemnation; if on the Earth, it brings forth Thorns by reason of sins; if on Heaven, the Gate is shut; if on the Signs in Heaven, Fire, Meteors, Thunder, strike in him a terror. But O my Soul, this is not thy case: a Man in Covenant with God, looks on these things with another eye; if he look on God, he saith, This is my Father; if on Christ, this is my elder Brother; if on Angels, these are my Keepers; if on Heaven, this is my House; if on the Signs of Heaven, Fire, Meteors, Thunder, these are but the effects of my Fathers Power; if on the Law, the Son of God hath fulfilled it for me; if on Prosperity, God hath yet better things for me in store; if on Adversity, Jesus Christ hath suffered much more for me than this; if on the Devil, Death, and Hell, he saith with the Apostle, O Death! where is thy Sting? O Grave! where is thy Victory? Come poor soul, is it not thus with thee? what? art thou in Covenant with God, or art thou not? If yet thou doubtest, review thy grounds of hope, and leave not there, till thou comest up to some measure of assurance: but if thou art persuaded of thy Interest, O then rejoice therein; is it not a Gospel-duty to rejoice in the Lord, and again to rejoice? The Lord is delighted in thy delights: he would fain have it thy constant frame and daily business to live in joy, and to be always delighting thyself in him.

This one Promise, I am the Lord thy God, is enough to cause thy appetite to run to it, and to unite itself to it by Love; and to scatter itself on it, and to overflow those powers of the Soul that are nearest to it, that every part of the Soul may concur to the possession of it. Bless the Lord, O my Soul (saith David) and all that is within me bless his holy Name. So rejoice in the Lord, O my Soul, and all that is within me, rejoice in the Name of God. This is true joy, when the soul unites itself to the good possessed in all its parts: And was there ever such an object of true joy as this? Hark, as if Heaven opened, and the voice came from God in Heaven; I will be a God to thee, and to thy Seed after thee: I am the Lord thy God; and I will be thy God. What? doth not thy heart leap in thy bosom at this sound? John the Baptist leaped in his mothers womb for joy, at the sound of Mary's Voice; and doth not thy soul spring within thee at this voice of God? O wonder! some can delight themselves in sin; and is not God better than sin? Others more refined, and indeed sanctified, can delight themselves in remission of Sin, in Grace, Pardon, Holiness, Fore-thoughts of Heaven; how exceedingly have some gracious hearts been ravished with such thoughts? But is not God, the objective happiness, the Fountain-blessedness, more rejoicing than all these? Why? Dear soul if there be in thee any rejoicing faculty, now awake, and stir it up; it is the Lord thy God whom thou art to rejoice in; it is he whom the glorious spirits joy in: it is he who is the top of Heavens joy, their exceeding joy: and it is he who is thy God as well as their God. Enough! enough! or if this be not enough, hear thy Duty as the Lord commands thee: Rejoice in the Lord, Phil. 3.1. Be glad ye Children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God, Joel 2.23. Rejoice in the Lord all ye Righteous, for praise is comely for the upright, Psal. 33.1. Rejoice in the Lord ye Righteous, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness, Psal. 97.12. Let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice, let them ever shout for joy, because thou defendest them; let them also that love thy Name be joyful in thee, Psal. 5.11. Let the Righteous be glad, let them rejoice before God, yea let them exceedingly rejoice, Psal. 68.3. Glory ye in his holy Name, let the heart of them rejoice that seek the Lord, Psal. 105.3. Let Israel rejoice in him that made him, let the Children of Zion be joyful in their King, Psal. 149.3. Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice O ye Righteous, and shout for joy all ye that are upright in heart, Psal. 23.11. O what pressing Commands are these?

SECT. VIII. Of calling on Jesus in that respect.

1. WE must call on Jesus, or on God the Father in and through Jesus in reference to this gracious Covenant: Now this calling on God contains Prayer and Praise.

1. We must pray: we must use Arguments of Faith challenging God, Turn thou me, and I shall be turned: Why? for thou art the Lord my God. This Covenant is the ground on which all Prayers must be bottomed; the Covenant we know contains all the Promises, and what is Prayer but Promises turned into Petitions? Thus prayed the Prophet Jeremy, Do not abhor us for thy Names sake, do not disgrace the Throne of thy Glory, remember, break not thy Covenant with us.—Why? Art not thou he the Lord our God? And thus prayed the Prophet Isaiah, Be not wroth very sore, neither remember iniquity forever, behold we beseech thee; and why so? we are all thy People: q. d. Everyone doth for its own: the Prince for his People, the Father for his Children, and the Shepherd for his Sheep: and will not God do for his own in covenant with him? Be thy soul in the saddest desertion, yet come and spread the Covenant before God: A Soul in the greatest depth, swimming on this Covenant of Grace, it keeps it from sinking; whence Christ in his blackest, saddest hour, prayed thus, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Be thy Soul in trouble for sin and prevailing corruption: yet go to God, and plead his Promise and Covenant: say as Johoshaphat, Lord, I am so born down by the power of my sin, that I know not what to do, only mine eyes are unto thee; O do thou subdue mine iniquities. Be thy soul troubled for want of strength to do this or that duty; yet go to God and Christ in the Covenant of Grace, and say, Lord thou knowest I have no strength of myself, I am a barren Wilderness, but thou hast entered into a Covenant of Grace with me, that thou wilt put thy Law into my inward parts, thou wilt cause me to keep thy judgments, and do them. Ezek. 36.27. As sometimes thou saidst to Gideon; I have sent thee, therefore I will be with thee, Judge. 6.16. Many are apt to set upon their duties in their own strength; but Oh my soul, look thou to the promise of Grace, and of the Spirit, and put them in suit, and allege them unto Christ. Many are apt to work out their sanctifications by their Watchfulness, Resolutions, Vows, Promises made unto God; but alas, were there not more help in God's Promises which he makes to us, than in our Promises which we make to him, we might lie in our pollutions forever. O here's the way; in every want, or strait, or necessity, fly to God and Christ, saying, Thou art our Father, and we are thy People, O break not thy Covenant with us. I confess strong expressions and affections are good in Prayer, but surely strength of Faith in the Covenant of God is the greatest strength of our Prayer.

Here it may be some Soul will object, O if I were assured that I were in Covenant with God, thus would I pray: but alas, I am a Stranger, an Alien, and so have been to this very day, I have no part in the Covenant.

I Answer, If thou art not actually in Covenant, yet thou mayest be in Covenant in respect of God's purpose and gracious intention. Howsoever, to encourage all to seek unto God, consider these Particulars.—

1. The Freeness of the Promise in this Covenant of Grace; Come and buy Wine without Money or Money-worth, come, and drink of the Waters of Life freely.

2. The extent of the Promise in this Covenant of Grace: I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; hence the Gospel is compared to a Feast, and God invites universally: As many as you find, bid to the Marriage. As persons are in estate, so they invite, and so they feast: now Christ is a great King over all the Earth; he hath one House that will hold all; he hath one Table that will hold all: yea, he hath one Dish that will serve all; and answerably he invites all: Ho everyone that thirsteth.

3. The forwardness of Christ, that gives to everyone that asketh, according to his Promise. Hadst thou but asked (said Christ to the Samaritan Woman) I would have given thee living water. Mark here the occasion of Christ's words; Christ being weary and thirsty by reason of his Journey, he asked of the Woman a Cup of water to drink; no great matter; he asks but a Cup of water, and the Woman stands at the Well-side where was water enough; yet she gives not, but stands wondering that he being a Jew should ask water of her that was a Samaritan; well, saith Christ, thou deniest me a Cup of cold water, being weary and thirsty, but hadst thou asked of me, I would have given thee water of Life. Wonderful! Christ is more ready to give water of Life, the very Spirit of God, to a poor sinner, than we are to give a cup of common water to a thirsty Soul. Go then, thou that hast denied the least mercy and kindness to Christ in any of his Members, yet seek Grace from him, O look up unto Jesus! ask his Spirit, entreat him to make thy heart new within thee; plead the promise of his Covenant, and wait in hope.

2 We must praise: 1. If we would have the blessing, let us seek it with the same mind that God offers it (i.e.) with a purpose and desire to have Grace exalted; thus Moses sought pardon to this very end, that his mercy might appear; If thou wilt pardon their sin, thy mercy shall appear] and we shall be thankful unto thee for it; so the words are made out by expositors, which in the text are either passionately or modestly suspended. These are prevailing requests with God, when we plead for the Glorifying of his own Grace. Father, Glorify thy Name, said Christ; and presently there comes a voice out of the Cloud, I have Glorified it, and I will Glorify it again. 2. If we have the blessing already, then be sure to ascribe the Glory unto him, that hath made good his promise unto us: who is a God like unto thee, who passest by the transgressions of the remnant of thy Heritage? We should make the praise of his grace to ring through the world, that Heaven and Earth might take notice of it, and wonder at the grace that hath been shown us. I will mention the loving kindness of the Lord, and the Praises of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness towards the House of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them, according to his Mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving Kindnesses. See how the Prophet mentions the kindnesses, the loving kindnesses, the multitude of his loving kindnesses; the goodness, and the great goodness of God; he could hardly get off it; he would have God and Grace to have all the Glory: O my Soul, hath God entered thee into a Covenant of Grace? why then bless the Lord O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy Name; But of this more anon.

SECT IX. Of Conforming to Jesus in that respect.

9 WE must conform to Jesus, in reference to this Covenant of Grace: We are changed by beholding, into the same Image. If we look unto Jesus in this respect, this Look will have such an influence upon us, that we shall conform to Jesus. But wherein consists this Conformity? I answer, in these several particulars:

1. God in Christ offers his Covenant to us; so we through Christ should embrace his Offer.
2. God in Christ keeps Covenant with us; so we through Christ should be careful to keep Covenant with him.
3. God in Christ hath highly honored us as we are his People: so we through Christ should highly honor him as he is our God.

1. God in Christ offers a Covenant of Grace to us; so we through Christ should embrace this gracious Offer. His Offers have appeared from first to last: as, 1. To Adam. 2. To Abraham. 3. To Moses. 4. To David. 5. To Israel, and to Judah. Take notice of it in that great promise of the Covenant, I will be thy God: q. d. Come Soul, if thou wilt but have me, I am thine, here I offer myself, my son, my spirit, Justification, Sanctification, Adoption, Salvation: whatsoever I am, or whatsoever I have, all is thine, if thou wilt but accept of me: Look over all this wide, wide world, and if there be anything in it that can please thy soul; and when thou hast gone through all the world, then come and take a view of me, and see me in my glory, beauty and excellency; view me in my Attributes, and see if thou findest not enough in me worthy of thy acceptance: all this, and more than this, nay more than eye can see, or ear can hear, or heart can conceive I offer to thee, if thou wilt but have me; Loe, I will be thy God. So Christians! God is first with us, he is the first mover, he begins with us before we begin with him: I will bring them (saith God) into the bond of the Covenant. Now in this let us conform; doth he offer? O let us embrace the offer! doth he lead the way? O let us follow him step by step in that very way as he goes before us! Let us not prescribe unto God, let not us presume to appoint the Conditions of the Covenant; let us not seek to wind about the Promise of Grace to our own Mind and Will: let us not say, We will have it thus, thus and thus it shall be or else we will admit of no conditions of peace: But, O come, take God and Christ upon his own Terms; submit to that way of the Covenant, and to those conditions of peace which the Lord prescribeth; why? this is to conform to his gracious offers. There is much of this offer of Christ and conforming to Christ, and therefore give me leave to enlarge. As in the offer God usually scatters some little seeds of Faith in the hearts of those that he will bring to himself; so it is worth the while to observe the work of Faith in receiving and accepting of this gracious offer; only I shall not herein limit the Lord; but I will show what some conceive the most usual and ordinary course of Faiths working, and of the souls conforming to Jesus Christ in its closing with Christ. As thus—

1. Faith hearing the great things proposed in the Covenant of Grace, it stirs up in the heart a serious consideration of their blessed condition, that are in covenant with God; Blessed art thou O Israel, a People saved by the Lord—What Nation in the Earth is like thy People, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem for a People unto himself? Time was, (saith the Soul) that I counted the proud blessed, and the rich blessed, and the honorable blessed; time was when I placed my blessedness in other things, as in Riches, Preferments, Favor, Credit with men; but now these are become vile, and things of no value; Faith makes us change our voice, and to speak as the Psalmist, Blessed are the People whose God is the Lord.

2. Faith stirs in the heart a longing desire after this condition; good being believed, cannot but be desired and longed for; Desire naturally springs from the apprehension of any good being made known; hence Faith (we say) is both in the understanding and in the will; as it is in the understanding, it opens the eye to see, and clearly to discern the Blessing of the Covenant; as it is in the will, it pursues and desires the attaining of the Grace revealed; nor are these desires faint desires, but very earnest, eager, violent; sometimes it is called a thirsting after God; and sometimes a panting after God; and sometimes a gasping after God: it is such a desire as cannot be satisfied by anything without God himself.

3. Faith stirs in the heart some hope to enjoy this condition; I say some hope; for Faith being as yet in the Bud, or in the Seed, though its desire be strong, yet hope of obtaining is but feeble and weak; hence Faith is taken up with many thoughts: fain would the Soul be joined to Christ, but being as yet dismayed with the sense of Sin, it stands like the Publican, afar off; as yet Faith can scarce speak a word to God, only with Jonah, it can look towards his holy Temple. As a poor weak babe who lies in the Cradle sick, and weak, and speechless, only it can look towards the Mother for help; the cast of the eye expresseth in some sort what it would say; thus Faith being weak, it would speak to God, but it cannot, or dares not; only it hath its eye towards Heaven; as Jehoshaphat sometimes said, Our eyes are towards thee. It feels a need, and fain would have; but sense of unworthiness, and the sense of the Law strikes such a fear into the heart, that it dares not come near. Consider Israel's Case, and we shall find it parallel to this: God proclaims on the Mount, I am the Lord thy God: what was this, but God's offer to be in Covenant with Israel? and yet the terror of the Thunder was so great, that Israel durst not come near: a poor Soul hearing the Lord to offer himself to be in Covenant in him, Come soul, I am the Lord thy God. Why alas it dares not come near: What am I the Lord? or what is my Fathers House, that I should enter into a Covenant with the most high God? The Soul is unquiet within itself, it is hurried to and fro, and finds no rest; it hears of Peace with God, but feels it not; there is much ado with the Soul to sustain its hope; only Faith sets the mind again and again to consider the promises, invitati•••, and all other encouragements which God hath given in his Word.

4. Faith stirs in the heart some resolves to go to God's Throne, and to sue for Grace; Faith speaks within as they did, Who can tell whether the Lord will return? And, it may be the Lord God of Hosts will be gracious to the remnant of Joseph. So, Who can tell? saith the Soul; It may be the Lord will, saith the Soul: and this begets some resolves as those Lepers in Samaria knew they were sure to perish, if they sate still; therefore they resolved to try whether the Aramites would save them: Or as Esther, knowing all was undone if she would not stir, she would try whether the King would hold out his Golden Scepter: So the poor Soul, knowing there is no way but perishing, if it continue in its Natural State, therefore it resolves to go to God: Doth the Lord say, Seek my Face? Why,thy Face Lord will I seek.—Doth the Lord say, Come unto Me? Why, Behold Lord, I come unto Thee; for Thou art the Lord our God. And now, the Soul betakes itself unto God, it sends up Complaints of itself, it laments its own sinful Rebellions, it puts out a whole Volley of Sighs, Groans, and strong Cries towards Heaven; it confesseth with Grief and bitter Mourning, all its former Iniquities; it smites, with Repenting Ephraim, upon its Thigh; it lies down at God's Foot-stool, it puts its Mouth in the Dust; it acknowledgeth God's Righteousness if He should condemn, and cast off forever; and yet withal, it pleads for Grace, that it may be accepted as one of His: It says unto God; Lord, I have nothing to plead, why Thou mayest not Condemn me; but if Thou wilt receive me, Thy Mercy shall appear in me: O let Thy Mercy appear, take away all Iniquity, and receive me graciously. Thus the Soul lies at God's Throne, and pleads for Grace.

5. As Faith is thus earnest in suing to God for Grace, so it is no less vigilant and watchful in observing what Answer comes from the Lord; even as the Prisoner at the Bar, not only cries for Mercy, but he marks every Word which falls from the Judges Mouth, if anything may give him Hope; or as Benhadad's Servants lay at catch with the King of Israel, to see if they could take occasion by anything which fell from him, to plead for the Life of Benhadad: So the poor Soul that is now pleading for Life and Grace, it watcheth narrowly, to see if anything may come from God, any Intimation of Favor, any Word of Comfort, that may tend to Peace. O let me hear Joy and Gladness.—I will hear what the Lord will say; for He will speak Peace unto His People.

6. As Faith waits for an Answer, so accordingly it demeans itself.

1. Sometimes God answers not, and Faith takes on, and follows God still, and cries after Him with more Strength; as resolving never to give over, till the Lord either save or destroy: Nay, if the Lord will destroy, Faith chooseth to die at God's Feet; as when Joab was bidden to come forth from the Horns of the Altar, and to take his Death in another Place; Nay, (saith Joab) but I will die here: Or, as when Christ saw no Deliverance come in His Agony, He Prayed more earnestly: So a poor Soul, in the Time of its Agony, when it is striving as for Life and Death, if Help come not at first Call, it prays again, and that more earnestly. Faith is very urgent with God; and the more slack the Lord seems in answering, the more earnest is Faith in plying God with its Prayers: It will wrestle with God, as Jacob with the Angel; it will take no Denyal, but will crave still: Bless me, even me also; O send me not away without a Blessing!

2. Sometimes God answers in part; He speaks as it were out of a Dark Cloud; He gives some little Ease, but He speaks not full Peace: In this manner He speaks to the Woman; Go thy way, and sin no more: He doth not say; Go in Peace, thy Sin is forgiven thee; No, no; but, Go thy way, and sin no more. Hereby Faith usually gets a little Strength, and looks after the Lord with more Hope; It begins to plead with God, as Moses did; O Lord, Thou hast begun to show Grace unto Thy Servant; go on, Lord, to manifest unto me all Thy Goodness. Here Faith takes a little hold on the Covenant of Grace: It may be the Hand of Faith is feeble, shaking and trembling; yet it takes a little Hold, it receives some Encouragement, it finds that its former Seeking is not in vain.

3. Sometimes God answers more fully and satisfactorily; He applies some Promise of Grace to the Conscience by His Spirit; He lets the Soul feel & taste the Comforts of himself, or of such and such a Promise, more effectually than ever before: Fear not, (saith God) for I am thy God. Here Faith waxeth bold, and with a glad Heart entertains the Promise brought Home unto it. The Apostle calls this the Embracing of the Promises: Now, Embracing implies an Affectionate Receiving with both Arms opened: So the Soul embraceth the Promise, and the Lord Jesus in the Promise; and having Him, like Simeon, in his Arms, it lays Him in the Bosom, it brings Him into the Chamber of the Heart, there to rest and abide forever. And now is the Covenant struck betwixt God, and the Soul: Now the Soul possesseth God in Christ, as her own; it rests in Him, and is satisfied with Him, it praiseth God for his Mercy, as Simeon did, when he had Christ in his Arms; it commits itself wholly, and forever to that Goodness and Mercy, which hath been revealed to it.

O my Soul, Hast thou come thus by little and little, to touch the Top of Christ's Golden Scepter? Why then, Is thy Hand given to God? Then art thou entered into a Covenant of Peace? Christ's Offering, and thy Receiving the Covenant of Grace, bears a sweet Agreement, an harmonious Conformity.

2. God in Christ keeps Covenant with us; so we through Christ should be careful and diligent to keep Covenant with God: In the Things of this Life, a strict Eye is had to the Covenants we make. Now, it is not enough for us to enter into Covenant with God; but we must keep it: The Lord never will, never hath broken Covenants on His Part; but Alas! we on our Parts have broken the first Covenant of Works: Take heed we break not the second; for then there remains not anymore place for anymore Covenants. As the Lord keeps Covenant with us; so let us keep Covenant with Him: and therein is the Blessing; The Mercy of the Lord is from Everlasting to Everlasting,—to such as keep his Covenant.

There is much also in this keeping of the Covenant; and therefore, give me leave a little to enlarge. Sundry Acts of Faith are required to this keeping of the Covenant: As thus,—

1. Faith in keeping the Covenant, hath always an Eye to the Rule and Command of God: As in Things to be believed, Faith looks on the Promise; so in Things to be practiced, Faith looks upon the Command. Faith will present no strange Fire before the Lord; it knows that God will accept of nothing, but what is according to His own Will.

2. As Faith takes Direction from the Rule; so in keeping of the Covenant, it directs us to the right End, that is, to the Glory of God. We are of Him, and live in Him; and by Faith we must live to Him, & for Him: For none of us liveth to himself, and no Man dieth to himself; for whether we live, we live unto the Lord; & whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's. Again, He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them. This God claims as His right and due: Thou shalt glorify Me, saith God: Yes, saith Faith, I will glorify thee forever.

3. Faith in keeping the Covenant, shields the Soul against all Hinderances that it meets withal: As for instance, Sometimes we are tempted on the Right Hand by the Baits and Allurements of the World; All these will I give thee, saith the World, if thou wilt be mine; but then

Faith overcomes the World, by setting afore us better Things than these: Sometimes we are tempted on the Left Hand, by Crosses, Afflictions, Persecutions, and Sufferings for the Name of Christ; but then Faith helps us to overcome, and makes us Conquerors through Christ that loved us, by setting before us the End of our Faith and Patience. It is said of Jesus, That for the Joy that was set before Him, He endured the Cross and despised the Shame.

4. Faith encourageth the Soul, that the Lord will have a Gracious Respect unto its keeping Covenant: In every Nation he that feareth Him, and worketh Righteousness, is accepted with Him. Surely this is no small Encouragement to well-doing: What would not a Servant do, if he knew his Lord will take it in good part? Now, Faith assures the Soul, there is not one Prayer, one Holy Desire, or one Good Thought, or Word which is spoken or done to the Glory of God, but God takes notice of it, and accepts it in good part. Then they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it; and a Book of Remembrance was written before Him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon His Name.

5. Faith furnisheth the Soul with Strength and Ability to keep the Covenant: By Faith we get a Power and Strength of Grace. As thus: —

1. By Faith we look at Christ, as having all Fulness of Grace in Himself; It pleased the Father, that in Him should all Fulness dwell: All others have but their Measures, some more, some less, according to the Measure of the Gift of Christ; but Christ hath received the Spirit, not by Measure, but in the Fulness of it.

2. By Faith we know, that whatever Fulness of Grace is in Christ, He had it not for Himself only, but for us: He received Gifts for Men, said the Psalmist; not for Himself merely, but for Men: Of His Fulness we receive Grace for Grace, saith John: His Wisdom to make us wise, His Meekness to make us meek, and His Patience to make us patient.

3. By Faith we look at Christ, as Faithful to distribute such Grace unto us, as He received for us: He is Faithful in all the House of God; He is Faithful in dispensing all the Treasures of Grace committed unto Him, for His Churches Good: He keeps nothing back: His Faithfulness will not suffer Him to keep that to Himself, which He hath received for us. Hence as the Psalmist saith, He received Gifts for Men; so the Apostle renders it, He gave Gifts unto Men: As he receives, so he gives; being faithful in all that is committed to Him.

4. By Faith we seek God, and beg Performance of his Promises according to our need: Do we want Wisdom, Meekness, Patience, or any other Grace? Faith carries us by Prayer unto the Fountain, and in this way waits and expects to receive the Grace we want. As the Child by sucking the Breast, draws forth Milk for its own Nourishment, and thereby it grows in Strength; so do we by the Prayer of Faith, suck from Christ, and from the Promise of Grace, and by that means derive Strength to our inner Man, to fulfil the Covenant which we have made with God.

6. As Faith strengthens us; so if at any times, by occasion or temptation, we fail in our Covenant-keeping, Faith recovers us, and restores us again to our former Estate: I do not say, the Covenant can be broken betwixt God and Us; we may offend God, and fail in the Service of God; but till we refuse God, and leave God, and choose another Master, Lord, and Husband besides God, there is no Dissolution of the Covenant of Grace. Now, this a true Believer cannot do; He may fall, and fall often; yet he doth not fall, but he rises again: he may turn aside, but yet he returns again into the way of the Covenant. What a sweet Point is this? Christians, We may, and sometimes we do walk weakly, in keeping of Covenants; our feet slip, and we step aside out of God's Path; yet Faith brings us back again to God: It casts Shame on our Faces, that after all the Grace shown us, we should so ill requite God: It reminds us of those Promises, Return unto Me, and I will return unto you. — Ye have done all this Wickedness, yet turn not aside from following the Lord: — For the Lord will not forsake his People, for his Great Names sake, because it hath pleased the Lord to make you his People. In the minding of these, and such other Promises, Faith doth encourage us to return unto God, to take words unto ourselves, and to plead the Covenant of his Grace towards us: This Work of Faith brought Peter back to Christ; whereas Judas wanting this Faith, lies down in desperate Sorrow, never able to rise up, or to recover himself.

O my Soul! Art thou acquainted with these Acts of Faith, enabling thee in some good measure to keep Covenant with God? Then is there a sweet Conformity betwixt Thee, and Jesus.

3. God in Christ hath highly honored us, as we are his People; so we through Christ should honor Him highly, as He is our God: This is the main End of the Covenant; and I shall end with this: O my Soul, be like to God, bear the Image and Resemblance of God thy Father, in this Respect: He hath humbled Himself to advance thee; O then humble thyself to advance Him; endeavor every way to exalt his Name.

We are willing to be in Covenant with God, that we may set up ourselves, that we may sit upon Thrones, and possess a Kingdom: But we must think especially of setting up the Lord upon his Throne: Ascribe Greatness to our God, saith Moses; make it a Name, and a Praise unto Him, that he hath vouchsafed to make us his People, and to take us into Covenant with Himself: Honor Him as he is God; but honor Him more abundantly, as he is our God: Who should Honor Him, if his People will not? The World knows Him not; The Wicked will not seek after God, — God is not in all his Thoughts. And, Shall God have no Honor? Shall He that stretched out the Heavens, and laid the Foundations of the Earth, and formed Man upon it, have no Glory? O yes! The Lord Himself answers; This People have I formed for My Self, they shall show forth My Praise: Surely, God will have Praise from his own People, whom he hath taken unto Himself: He will be glorified in all those that come near Him.

But, How should we honor God? I answer: —

1. We must set Him up as chief and highest in our Esteem: Kings account not themselves honored, if they be not set above other Men: And hence God's People have used such Expressions concerning God, as do single Him forth beyond the Comparison of all Creatures. Thus Moses; Who is like unto Thee amongst the God's? Who is like unto Thee, glorious in Holyness▪ fearful in Praises, doing Wonders? Thus David; Thou art Great, O Lord God, for there is none like Thee, neither is there any God besides Thee, according to all that we have heard with our Ears. Thus Solomon; Lord God of Israel, there is no God like unto Thee in Heaven above, or in the Earth beneath;

who keepst Covenant and Mercy with Thy Servants? Thus Micah; Who is a God like unto Thee, which passest by the Transgressions of the Remnant of thine Heritage? And thus should we rise up in our Thoughts and Apprehensions of God, until we come to an Holy Extasie and Admiration of God.

2. We must count it our Blessedness, and highest Dignity, to be a People in Covenant with God: Are we Honorable? Yet esteem this as our greatest Honor, that God is our God: Are we low and despised in the World? Yet count this Honor enough, that God hath lifted us up to be his People. Christians, if when we are counted as things of naught, we can quiet ourselves in this, that God is our God; if when we are persecuted, imprisoned, distressed, we can say with Jacob, I have enough, because the Lord hath Mercy on me, and hath taken me into Covenant with Him: surely then we do bear Witness of God before Heaven and Earth, that He is better to us than Corn, or Wine, or Oil, or whatsoever this World affords.

3. We must lie under the Authority of every Word of God, and we must conform ourselves to the Examples of God; that is, we must labor to become Followers of God, and imitate his Virtues. It is a part of that Honor which Children owe to their Parents, to obey their Commands, and to imitate their Godly Example: we cannot honor God more, than when we are Humbled at his Feet to receive his Word, than when we renounce the Manners of the world, to become his Followers as dear Children. O think of this! for when we conform indeed, then are we Holy as he is Holy, and Pure as he is Pure; and then, How should this but tend to the Honor and Glory of our Good God?

Thus far we have Looked on Jesus, as our Jesus, in that dark Time, before His Coming in the Flesh: Our next Work is to Look on Jesus, carrying on the Great Work of Man's Salvation, in His First Coming or Incarnation.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS In His Birth. The Fourth Book.

CHAP. I.

Luke 2.15. Let us now go even to Bethlehem, and see this Thing.

SECT. I. Of the Tidings of Christ.

IN this Period, as in the former, we shall first lay down the Object; and secondly, direct you how to Look unto it.

The Object is Jesus, carrying on the Work of Man's Salvation, in His first Coming in the Flesh, until His Coming again. But because in this long Period we have many Transactions, which we cannot with Conveniency dispatch together; we shall therefore break it into smaller pieces, and present this Object, Jesus Christ: 1. In his Birth. 2. In his Life. 3. In his Death. 4. In his Resurrection. 5. In his Ascension, Session at God's Right Hand, and Mission of his Holy Spirit. 6. In his Intercession for his Saints; in which Business he now is, and will be employed till his Second Coming to Judgment.

1. First, For the Transactions of Jesus in His Birth: Some things we must propound before, and some things after his Birth; so that we shall continue this Period till the Time of John's Baptism, or the Exercise of his Ministry upon Earth. Now in all the Transactions of this Time, we shall especially handle these: 1. The Tidings of Christ. 2. The Conception of Christ. 3. The Duplicity of Natures in Christ. 4. The real Distinction in that Duty. 5. The wonderful Union, notwithstanding that Distinction. 6. The Birth of Christ. 7. Some Consequents after his Birth, whilst yet a Child of Twelve Years old.

The First Passage in Relation to his Birth, is, The Tidings of Christ: This appears, Luk. 1.26, 27, 28, &c. And in the Sixth Month, the Angel Gabriel was sent from God, &c. I shall a little ins•st on some of these Words.

1. The Messenger is an Angel. Man was too mean to carry the News of the Conception of God: Never any Business was Conceived in Heaven, that did so much concern the Earth, as the Conception of the God of Heaven in a Womb of Earth; no less therefore than an Angel was worthy to bear these Tidings; and never Angel received a greater Honor, than of this Embassy. Angels have been sent to divers; as to Gideon, Manoah, David, Daniel, Elijah, Zechariah, &c. And then the Angel honored the Message; but here's a Message that doth honor the Angel; he was highly glorious before; but this added to his glory, Indeed, the Incarnation of God could have no less a Reporter than the Angel of God: When God intended to begin his Gospel, he would first visit the World with his Angel, before he would visit the World with his Son; His Angel must come in the Form of Man, before his Son must come in the Nature of Man.

This Angel salutes the Virgin; Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among Women. Many Men and Women have been, and are the Spiritual Temples of God; but never was any the material Temple of God, but only Mary; and therefore, Blessed art thou amongst Women: and yet we cannot say that she was so Blessed in Bearing Christ, as she was in Believing in Christ; her Bearing indeed was more Miraculous, but her Believing was more Beneficial to her Soul: that was her Privilege, but this was her Happiness. Christians, If we believe in Christ, and if we obey the Word of Christ, we are the Mothers of Christ: Whosoever doth the Will of My Father which is in Heaven, he is my Brother, and Sister, and Mother. Every renewed Heart is another Mary, a spiritual Sanctuary of the Lord Jesus. It was the Woman's Acclamation, Blessed is the Womb that bare thee, and the Paps that gave thee suck: True, said Christ; but that Blessing extends only to one: I will tell you how many are Blessed, and rather Blessed; yea, rather Blessed are they that hear God's Word, and keep it: Blessed are they that so incarnate the written Word by doing it, as the Blessed Virgin gave Flesh to the Eternal Word by bearing it; those that hear and keep God's Word, are they that Travel in Birth again, until Christ be formed in them. Hearing, they Receive the Immortal Seed of the Word, by a firm Purpose of doing they conceive, by a longing Desire they quicken, by an earnest Endeavour they travel, and when the Work is wrought, then have they incarnate the Word, and Christ is formed in them. In this Respect was Mary blessed; and I make no question, but in this Respect also the Angel calls her Blessed, and Elizabeth calls her Blessed, and Simeon calls her Blessed, and She calls herself Blessed, and all Generations call her Blessed, and God Himself calls and makes her Blessed; yea, as Paul said, Cometh this Blessedness on the Circumcision only? so, cometh this Blessedness on the Virgin only? No, even Blessed are the Poor in Spirit, Blessed are they that mourn, & Blessed are the Meek; and Blessed are they, whose Sins are not imputed. Even these hath God blessed with Spiritual Blessings in Heavenly Places; and these shall Christ entertain with a Come ye Blessed of My Father.

3. This Virgin is Troubled at this Salute. She might well be troubled; For, 1. If it had been but a Man that had come in so suddenly, when she expected none; or so secretly, when she had no other Company; or so strangely, the Doors being probably shut; she had cause to be troubled: How much more, when the shining Glory of the Angel so heightened the Astonishment? 2. Her Sex was more subject to fear: If Zacharias were amazed with the sight of this Angel, How much more the Virgin? We flatter ourselves how well we could endure such Visions; but there is a difference betwixt our Faith, and our Senses; to apprehend here the Presence of God by Faith, this goes down sweetly: But should a Glorious Angel appear among us, it would amaze us all. But for this, the Angel comforts her; Fear not Mary, for thou hast found Favor with God. The Troubles of Holy Minds ever end in Peace or Comfort; Joy was the Errand of the Angel, and not Terror; and therefore, suddenly he revives her Spirit with a cheerful Excitation: Fear not; q. d. Let those fear who know they are in Displeasure, or know not they are gracious: Thine happy Estate calls for Confidence, and that Confidence calls for Joy: What should they fear, that are favored of Him at whom the Devil's Tremble? O Mary! How should Joy but enter into thy Heart, out of whose Womb shall come Salvation? I question, not but these very words revived the Virgin: What remote Corner of her Soul was there, into which these Beams of Consolation did not shine?

4. Here is the Foundation of her Comfort, and our Happiness; Behold, thou shalt Conceive in thy Womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call His Name Jesus. Never was Mortal Creature thus honored, that her Womb should yield that Flesh, which was personally united to the Godhead; that she should bear Him that upholds the World. There's one Wonder in the Conception, another in the Fruit; both are marvelous: but the latter, I take it, is more Mysterious, and fuller of Admiration; the Fruit of the Womb is Jesus, a Savior, the Son of the Highest; a King, God shall give Him a Throne, and He shall Reign forever; for of His Kingdom there shall be no End Here was a Son, and such a Son as the World never had before; and here was the Ground of Mary's Joy: How could she but rejoice, to hear what her Son should be before He was? Surely, never was any Mother so glad of her Son Born, as this Virgin was of her Son before He was Conceived.

The Ground of this Joy lay more especially in that Name Jesus. Here Christians! Here is the Object that you are to Look unto. The first Title that the Angel gives our Savior, it is Jesus, a Savior. O come! let us dwell a little here: Without Jesus we had never known God our Friend; and without Jesus, God had never known us for any other than His Enemies. This Name Jesus is better to us, than all the Titles of God: Indeed there is Goodness and Greatness enough in the Name Jehovah; but we merited so little Good, and demerited so much Evil, that in it alone there had been small Comfort for us; but in the Name Jesus there is Comfort, and with the Name Jesus there is Comfort in the Name of God. In old times, God was known by His Names of Power, and of Majesty, and of His Nature; but His Name of Mercy was reserved till now, when God did purpose to pour out the whole Treasure of his Mercy, by the Mediation of his Son. And as this Name is exalted above all Names; so are we to exalt his Mercy above all his Works. O it is an useful Name! In all Depths, Distresses, Miseries, Perplexities, we beseech God by the Name of Jesus, to make good his own Name, not to bear it for naught; but as He is a Savior, so to save us: And this is our Comfort, that God will never so remember our wretched Sins, as to forget His own Blessed Name; and especially this Name Jesus. O it is the Highest, the Dearest, the Sweetest Name to us of all the Names of God.

The reason of this Name was given by the Angel to Joseph: Thou shalt call his Name Jesus, for He shall save His People from their Sins. But why from their Sins? We seem rather willing to be saved from Poverty, Ignominy, Plague, Prison, Death, Hell, the Devil. Sin is a thing that troubles but a few: O how few! how very few be there, that break their sleep for their Sins? Alas, alas! Sin (if we understand) is the very worst of Evils: There is no Poverty but Sin, there is no Shame but Sin, there is no Plague to that of Sin; there is no Prison, but that Prison is a Paradise without Sin; there is no Death that hath any Sting in it, but for Sin; The Sting of Death is Sin, saith the Apostle; take out the Sting, and you may put the Serpent in your Bosom: Nay, I will say more, there is no Hell, but for Sin; Sin first kindled the Fire of Hell, Sin fuels it; take away Sin, and that tormenting Flame goes out. And for the Devil; Sin is his Instrument, whereby he works all mischief: How comes a Man to be a slave to Satan, but by Sin? But for Sin, the Devil had no Business in the World; but for Sin he could never hurt a Soul.

What abundance of Benefits are here in one word; He shall save His People from their Sins? There is no Evil incident to Man, but it ceaseth to be Evil when Sin is gone. If Jesus take away Sin, he doth bless our very Blessings, and sanctify our very Afflictions: He fetcheth Peace out of Trouble, Riches out of Poverty, Honor out of Contempt, Liberty out of Bondage; He pulls out the Sting of Death, puts out the Fire of Hell: As all Evils are wrapped up in Sin; so he that saves us from Sin, he saves us from all Evils whatsoever.

But, Is not Christ as precious a Name as Jesus is? I answer, No, For, 1. Christ is not the Name of God: God as he is God, cannot be anointed; but Jesus is the Name of God, and that wherein He more especially delights. 2. Christ is Communicated to others; Princes are called Christ's; but Jesus is proper to Himself: There is no Savior but He. 3. Christ is anointed; To what End, but to be a Savior? Jesus is therefore the End, and the End is always above the Means. — Why? this is that Jesus, the Son of God's Love, the Author of our Salvation, In whom alone God is well pleased; and whom the Angel published afore He was Conceived: Thou shalt Conceive, and bring Forth a Son, and shalt call His Name Jesus.

SECT. II. Of the Conception of Christ.

2. THE Conception of Christ, was the Conclusion of the Angel's Message: No sooner had the Virgin said, Be it to me according to Thy Word; but according to that Word it was: immediately the Holy Ghost over-shadowed her, and Forms our Savior in her Womb. Now Christians! Now was the Time of Love; especially, if we relate to His Conception and Birth: Well may we say, Now was it that the Day brake up, that the Sun arose, that Darkness vanished, that Wrath and Anger gave place to Favor and Salvation: Now was it, that Free-Grace came down from Heaven, Thousands of Angels waiting on her; the very Clouds part (as it were) to give her way; the Earth springs to welcome her; the Clouds clap their Hands for Joy; the Heavenly Hosts sing as she goes along, Glory to God in the Highest, Peace upon Earth, Good Will towards Men: Truth and Righteousness go before her, Peace and Prosperity follow after her, Pity and Mercy waits on either Hand; and when she first sets Foot on the Earth, she cries a Jesus, a Savior! Hear ye Sons of Men! The Lord hath sent me down to bring you News of a Jesus! Grace and Peace be unto you: I will live with you in this World, and you shall live with me in the World to come. O here was Blessed News! Why, this is Gospel, pure Gospel; this is the Glad Tidings: Free Grace proclaims a Jesus; and a Jesus is made up (as it were) all of Free-Grace. O what Eternal Thanks do we owe to the Eternal God! If there had not been a Jesus (to borrow that Expression) made all of Grace, of Grace itself, we could never have had Dealing with God. O how may we say with the Angels; Glory to God: Blessed be God, for Jesus Christ!

But in this Conception of Christ are so many Wonders, that e're we begin to speak them, we may stand amazed: Without Controversy, great is the Mystery of Godliness; God manifested in the Flesh. Say, Is it not a Wonder, a Mystery, a great Mystery, a great Mystery without all Controversy, that the Son of God should be made of a Woman, even made of that Woman which was made by Himself? Is it not a Wonder, that her Womb then, and that the Heavens now, should contain Him, whom the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain? Concerning this Conception of Christ, I shall speak a little, and but a little: What Man can conceive much of this Conception, which was a Conception without Help of Man? Our greatest Light we borrow from the Angel, who describes it thus; The Holy-Ghost shall come upon thee, and the Power of the Highest shall over-shadow thee.

Out of these Words, observe, 1. The Agent or Efficient. 2. The Fruit or Effect.

1. The Agent or Efficient Cause of Christ's Conception, is the Holy-Ghost. This agrees with that Speech of the Angel to Joseph; That which is Conceived in her, is of the Holy-Ghost. Here it may be demanded, why the Conception of Christ should be ascribed to the Holy-Ghost, which is common to all the Actions in the Trinity? I answer, Not to exclude the rest; but first, to show it was the free Grace of God, which is often termed the Holy-Ghost. 2. Because the Father and the Son effected it by the Holy-Ghost, so was it his Work immediately, and in a special manner: Good reason have we to be thankful to all the Three Persons; to the Father, for ordaining this Garment; to the Holy-Ghost, for weaving it; to the Son, for wearing it; to the whole Deity, for clothing us with it, and making us Righteous by it —Neither yet is the Holy-Ghost Christ's Father; he did not beget Him, he did not form Him, he did not minister Matter from his own Substance whereof Christ was made; but took a part of Humane Nature from the Virgin, and of that he made the Body of Christ within her. Away with all gross Opinions, and old Heresies! This Conception of Christ was not by any Carnal Effusion of Seminal Humour; but by way of Manufacture, (i.) by Handy-work, or Operation, or Virtue of the Holy-Ghost; or else by the Energetical Command and Ordination of the Holy-Ghost, whereby that part of the Virgin's Blood, or Seed, whereof the Body of Christ was to be framed, was so cleansed and sanctified, that in it there should be neither Spot nor Stain of Original Pollution.

2. The Fruit or Effect was the Framing of Christ's Manhood, in which we may observe the Matter and Manner. 1. For the Matter: Observe we the Matter of the Body, and of the Soul of Christ. 1. The Matter of the Body of Christ, it was the very Flesh and Blood of the Virgin: He was made of Woman, saith the Apostle, (i.) of the Flesh and Blood, & Substance of the Woman: And He was made of the Seed of David (saith the Apostle) according to the Flesh, otherwise He could not have been the Son of David, according to the Flesh: And, if it be true which the Philosophers say, That the Seed of the Man doth not fall into the Substance of the Child, but only doth dispose the Seed of the Woman, (as a Workman frameth and disposeth his Work) to make the same into the Form of a Man: Why then, I know not wherein the Conception of Christ should differ in the Matter at all from our Conception; save only in the Agent, or Worker of his Substance, who was the Holy-Ghost. 2. The Matter or Substance of the Soul of Christ, was not derived from the Soul of the Virgin, as a part thereof; but it was made as the Souls of other Men be, (i.) of nothing, by the Power of God; and so infused into the Body by the Hand of God: But of these Things (of His Body and Soul, and Humane Nature) we shall speak more largely in the next Section.

2. For the manner of forming Christ's human Nature, it was miraculous. The Angel ascribes two actions to the Holy Ghost in this great work; the one to come upon the Virgin, the other to overshadow her; by the first is signified the extraordinary work of the Holy Ghost in fashioning the human Nature of Christ; as it was said of Sampson, The spirit of the Lord came upon him, (i.e.) the Holy Ghost inspired him with an extraordinary strength; so the Spirit of the Lord came upon her (i.e.) the holy Ghost wrought in her in an extraordinary way. As for instance; in ordinary generation our substance and parts are framed successively by degrees, as first, the seminal humor becomes an Embryo, then a body in organical; then are fashioned the Liver, Heart, and Brain, and then the rest one after another? and it is at least forty days before the body of a Child be fully formed: now it was otherwise with the Body of Christ; for in the very instant of his conception, he was made perfect in Body and Soul, void of Sin, and full of Grace; in the very instant of his Conception he was perfectly framed, and instantly united unto the eternal Word, perfect God and perfect Man. Surely this was extraordinary, and this is the property of the Holy Ghost subito operari, to work instantly and perfectly; as soon as ever the flesh was conceived, it was presently united, and made the flesh of the Son of God; it was suddenly made, perfectly made, holily made.

The second action ascribed to the holy Ghost, is adumbration, or overshadowing of the Virgin; this teacheth us that we should not search overmuch into this great Mystery. Alas it is too high for us; if the course of ordinary generation be a secret, how past all comprehension, is this extraordinary operation? the holy Ghost did cast a shadow over the Virgin, and withal a shadow over this Mystery? why should we seek a clear light where God himself will have a shadow? I know the Word was made flesh (saith Chrysostom) but how he was made I know not.

1. In way of confutation, this word conception is the bane of divers heresies. 1. That [Use 1] of the Manichee, who held he had no true body; if so, as one says well, that had been Virgo

decipiet, not concipiet, rather a deceiving of us, than a conceiving of him. 2. That of the Valentinian, revived lately in the Anabaptists, who hold, that he had a true body, but made in heaven, and sent into the Virgin here on earth; and if so, that had been virgo recipiet, not concipiet, rather a receiving, than conceiving; yet I cannot but wonder how confidently the Anabaptists tell us, that the Flesh of Christ came down from heaven, and passed through the Virgin Mary, as water through a Conduit-pipe, without taking any substance from her: Their objections are raised out of these Texts;—

1. No man ascendeth into heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the son of man which is in heaven. I answer, first, this speech must be understood, firstly in respect of the God-Head, which may be said in some sort to descend, in that it was made manifest in the Manhood here on earth. 2. This speech may be understood truly of the whole person of Christ, to whom the properties of each Nature (in respect of the communication of properties) may be fitly ascribed: but this doth no way prove that this flesh which he assumed on earth, descended from heaven.

2. The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. — heavenly. I answer, 1. This holds forth that Christ was heavenly-minded, as sometimes he told the Jews, you are from below: I am from above: you are of the World, I am not of this World: Christ was not worldly-minded, or swayed with the lusts of the Flesh, or any way earthly affected: as sometimes he could tell his Apostles, ye are not of the world: so much more might he say of himself, that he was not of this world, but his Conversation was in heaven. Or, 2. This holds forth that Christ was heavenly, or from heaven, in respect of the glorious qualities which he received after his Resurrection: and not in respect of the substance of his Body: many glorious qualities was Christ endowed with after he was raised (I shall not now dispute them) which he had not before: and in respect of these he might be called heavenly, or from heaven. 3. This holds forth that Christ also was in some sort heavenly, or from heaven in his human nature, in that the human nature was united to the divine, and withal in that the human nature was formed by the holy Ghost; so John's Baptism is said to be from heaven: though neither he, nor the water wherewith he Baptized, descended from heaven: but because he received it from God who is in heaven. Christ was conceived (as you heard) by the Holy Ghost, and in that regard his generation was divine and heavenly, or from heaven.

2. In way of comfort and encouragement, Christ was thus conceived that he might [Use 2]sanctify our conceptions; as the first Adam was the root of all Corruption; so is the second Adam the root of all sanctification: Christ went as far to cleanse us, as ever Adam did to defile us; what? were our very Conceptions defiled by Adam? in the first place Christ takes course for this; you see he is conceived by the Holy Ghost: and he was not idle whilst he was in the womb; for even then and there he ea'e out the Core of corruption, that cleaved close to our defiled natures; so that now God will not account evil of that nature, that is become the nature of his own dear Son. O the Condescensions of our Jesus! O that ever he would be conceived in the womb of a Virgin! O that he would run through the Contumelies of our fordid Nature; that he would nor refuse that which we ourselves in some sort are ashamed of! Some think it a reason why the Anabaptists and some others run into such Fancies, and deny this Conception of Christ, only to decline those soul indignities (as they take them) for the great God of heaven to undergo: but certainly this was for us, and for our sakes; and therefore far be it from us to honor him the less, because he laid down his honor for our sakes; no, no, let us honor him more, and love him more; the lower he came for us, the dearer and dearer let him be unto us: consider in all these transactions Christ was carrying on the great work of our salvation, otherwise he had never been conceived, never had assumed to his Person human Nature, never had been Man.

SECT. III. Of the Duplicity of Natures in Christ.

3. THE duplicity of Natures in Christ appears, in that he was truly God and truly Man. To us a Child is born, saith the Prophet; there is a Nature human; and he shall be called the Mighty God; there is a Nature divine: God sent his Son, saith the Apostle, therefore truly God: and this Son made of a Woman, therefore truly Man: one would have thought this truth would never have come into controversy in our days; but these are the last days, and that may take off the wonder; In the last days shall come perilous times. — Men shall resist the Truth, &c. In the last days I know there will be abundance of Truth revealed. The Knowledge of the Lor• shall be as the waters that cover the Sea, and every Child shall be as David. And the Book that was sealed, must be opened, and knowledge shaall be increased; but Satan even then will be busy to sow his Tares, as God is in sowing of his Wheat; then is Satan active to communicate errors, when he sees God begin to discover truths; he hopes in the heat of the Market to vent his own wares; and I believe this is one reason why now the Devil sets on foot so many dangerous errors, that so he may prejudice the hearts of God's People in the receiving and entertaining of many Glorious truths. But that we may not pass over such a Fundamental Error as this; some saying with Martian, that he is God, but not man; and others with Arius, that he is man, but not God; I shall therefore confirm this truth of the two Natures of Christ against the Adversaries of both sides.

And 1. That Christ is true God, both apparent scriptures, and unanswerable Reasons drawn from scriptures, do plainly evince.

1. The scriptures call him God. In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God.— And unto the son he saith, Thy Throne, O God, is forever. And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord, and my God; and take heed to yourselves, and to all the flock — To feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own Blood. And hereby perceive we the Love of God, because he laid down his life for us. And we know that the Son of God is come.— This is the true God, and eternal Life. And without Controversy great is the Mystery of Godliness, God was manifested in the Flesh.

2. Unanswerable Reasons drawn from Scriptures, prove him God: Thus it appears. —

1. From those incommunicable properties of the Diety, which are properly ascribed unto him: He is eternal as God, Rev. 1.17. He is infinite as God, Mat 28.20. He is omniscient as God, Mat. 9 4. He is omnipotent as God. He that cometh from above is above all. — He is able to subdue all things unto himself. — He hath the keys of hell and death.

2. From these Relations he hath with God, as to be the only begotten Son of God, John 1.18. The Image of the Father, 2 Cor. 4.4. Col. 1.15.

3. From those Acts ascribed to him which are only agreeable to the divine Nature; as, to be the Author of our Election, John 13.18. To know the Secrets of our Hearts, Ma. 9.4. To hear the prayers of his people, John 14.14. To judge the quick and the dead, John 5.22. And thus he creates as God, John 1.4. He commands as God, Mat. 8.26. He forgives as God, Mat. 9.6. He sanctifies as God, John 1.12. He glorifies as God, John 10.28.

4. From all those acknowledgments given to him by the Saints, which are only proper unto God; and thus he is believed on as God, John 3.18. He is loved as God, 1 Cor. 16.22. He is obeyed as God, Mat. 17.5. He is prayed to as God, Acts 7.59. He is praised as God, Rev. 5.13. He is adored as God, Heb. 1.6. Phil. 2.10. Surely all these are strong demonstrations, and prove clearly enough, that Christ Jesus is God. But why was it requisite that our Savior should be God? I answer, 1. Because none can save Souls, nor satisfy for sin, but God alone; There is none (saith the Psalmist) that can by any means redeem his Brother, or give a ransom for him. — but God will redeem my soul from the power of Hell. 2. Because the satisfaction which is made for sin, must be infinitely meritorious: an infinite wrath cannot be appeased, but by an infinite merit; and hence our Savior must needs be God, to the end, that his obedience and sufferings might be of infinite price and worth — 3 Because the burden of God's wrath cannot be endured, and run through by a finite Creature: Christ therefore must be God, that he might abide the burden, and sustain the Manhood by his divine power. 4. Because the enemies of our salvation were too strong for us: How could any creature overcome Satan, Death, Hell, Damnation? Ah! this required the power of God; there's none but God that could destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Devil.

2. As Christ is God, so he is true man; he was born as man, and bred as man, and fed as man, and slept as man, and wept as man, and sorrowed as man, and suffered as man, and died as man; and therefore he is man.

But more particularly. 1. Christ had a human body; Wherefore when he came into the world, he said, Sacrifice and Offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me. And when the Apostles thought they had seen a Phantasm, or a Spirit, he said unto them, Handle me and see, because a Spirit hath no flesh and bones, as you see me have. Here's a truth clear as the Sun; and yet, O wonder! Some in our times (as Cochlaeus witnesseth) do now avouch, that he had but an imaginary body, an aerial body, a phantasm, only in show, and no true body.

2. Christ had an human reasonable Soul. My Soul is heavy unto Death, said Christ; and again, Father, into thy hands I commend my Spirit. Surely (saith Nazianzen) either he had a Soul, or he will not save a Soul. The Arians opposed this, saying, Christ had no human Soul, but only a living flesh; because the Evangelist saith that the Word was made flesh; but this is a Synecdoche, very usual in Scripture, to put the part for the whole; and signifieth as much as that he had said, the Word was made man. I know some reasons are rendered why the Evangelist saith, he was made flesh, rather than he was made man; as, 1. To show what part of Christ was made of his Mother; not his Deity, nor his Soul, but only his flesh. 2. To express the greatness of God's Love, who for our sakes would be contented to be made the vilest thing, flesh, which is compared to grass. All flesh is grass. 3. To show the greatness of Christ's humility, in that he would be named by the meanest name, and basest part of man; the soul is excellent, but the flesh is base. 4. To give us some confidence of his love and favor towards us, because our flesh, which was the part most corrupted, is now united to the Son of God.

3. Christ had all the properties that belong either to the soul or body of a man: nay more than so, Christ had all the infirmities of our Nature, sin only excepted: I say the infirmities of our nature, as cold, and heat, and hunger, and thirst, and weariness, and weakness, and pain, and the like; but I cannot say that Christ took upon him all our personal infirmities; infirmities are either natural, common to all men, or personal; and proper to some men; as to be born lame, blind, diseased; as to be affected with Melancholy, Infirmity, Deformity: how many deformed Creatures have we amongst us? Christ was not thus; his Body was framed by the holy Ghost of the purest Virgins Blood; and therefore I question not, it was proportioned in a most equal symmetry, and correspondency of parts; He was fairer than the sons of men; his countenance carried in it an hidden veiled star — like brightness (saith Jerome) which being but a little revealed, it so ravished his Disciples hearts, that at the first sight thereof they left all, and followed him: and it so astonished his enemies, that they stumbled and fell to the ground. So then he had not our personal infirmities, but only our natural; and good reason, for indeed he took not upon him an human person, but only an human nature united to the person of his Godhead.

But why was it requisite that our Savior should be Man? I answer, 1. Because our Savior must suffer and die for our sins, which the Godhead could not do. 2. Because our Savior must perform obedience to the Law, which was not agreeable to the Lawgiver; the Godhead certainly is free from all manner of subjection. 3. Because our Savior must satisfy the justice of God in the same nature wherein it was offended; For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. 4. Because by this means we might have free access to the Throne of Grace, and might find help in our necessities, having such an High Priest as was in all things tempted like unto us, and was acquainted with our infirmities in his own person, Heb. 4.15. — 5.2.

SECT. IV. Of the distinction of the two Natures of Christ.

4. A Real distinction of these two Natures is evident. 1. In regard of essence, the Godhead cannot be Manhood, nor can the Manhood be the Godhead. 2. In regard of proprieties, the Godhead is most wise, just, omnipotent, yea wisdom, justice, omnipotency itself, and so is not the Manhood, neither can it be. 3. They have distinct Wills; Not my Will, but thy Will be done, O Father! Plainly differencing the Will of a Creature, from the Will of a Creator. 4. The very actions in the work of Redemption are indeed inseparable, and yet distinguishable; I lay down my life, and take it up again: to lay it down was the action of man, not of God; and to take it up, was the action of God, not of man; in these respects we say each nature remains in itself entire, without any conversion, composition, commixtion, or confusion: there is no conversion of one into the other, as when he changed water into wine; no composition of both, no abolition of either, no confusion at all. It is easy to observe this real distinction of his two natures from first to last; as first, He was conceived as others, and so he was man; but he was conceived by the holy Ghost, as never man was; and so he is God. 2. He was born as others, and so he was man; but he was born of a Virgin, as never man was; and this speaks him a God. 3. He was crucified, died, and was buried, and so he was man; but he rose again from the dead, ascended into Heaven, and from thence shall come at last to judge the quick and the dead, and so he is God.— Or if from the Apostles Symbol we go to the Gospel, which speaks both natures at large; we find there, 1. He was born of his Mother, and wrapped in swaddling-clouts, as being a man; but the Star shines over him, and the wise men adore him, as being a God. 2. He was Baptized in Jordan, as being a man; but the holy Ghost from heaven descended upon him, as being a God. 3. He is tempted of Satan; as being a man; but he overcame Satan, and dispossessed Devils, as being a God. 4. He travelled, and was thirsty, and hungry, and weary, as being a man; but he refreshed the weary, and fed the hungry, and gave drink, even water of life to the thirsty, as being a God. 5. He slept in the Ship, and his Disciples awoke him, as being a man; but he rebuked the winds, and stilled the raging of the tumultuous Seas, as being a God. 6. He was poor and needy, had not an house to put his head in, as being a man; but he was, and is rich and mighty, and cannot be contained in the heaven of heavens, as being a God. 7. He was sorrowful and sad, he wept and he prayed, as being a man; but he comforts the sorrowful, and heareth the prayers of all his Saints, as being a God. 8. He was whipped, and rent, and torn, and crucified, as being a man: but he rent the veil of the Temple, and caused the Sun to hide his face for shame, when he was crucified, as being a God. 9. He cried out on the Cross, Eloi, Eloi, lamasabachthani, as being a man; but he could say to the Thief, To day shalt thou be with me in Paradise, as being a God. 10. He died and was buried, and lay in the grave, as being a man; but he overcame death, and destroyed the Devil, and raised up himself to life again, as being a God. 11. After his Resurrection he appeared to his Disciples, and ate with them, and talked with them, as being a man; but he provided meat, and vanished out of their sight, as being a God. 12. He ascended into heaven, and the heavens now contain him, as he is Man; but he sustains the Heavens, and commands all therein, and rides on the same, as being a God. Thus we see all along two real distinct natures still continuing in Christ; God being become Man, the Deity being abolished, but the human nature was adjoined; according to the old Distich, Sum quod eram, nec eram quod sum, &c. I am that I was, but I was not that I am. You will say, How then is it said the word was made flesh, or God became Man? I answer, one thing may become another either by way of change, as when the water was turned into wine; but thus was not Christ: the Godhead was for a time concealed, but it was never cancelled: or one thing may become another either by way of union, as when one substance is adjoined unto another, and yet is not transferred or changed into the nature of the other; thus a Soldier putting on his Armor, is an armed man; or a man wearing on his Garments, is no more a naked, but a clothed man; and yet the Armor and the Soldier, the man and his Apparel are distinct things: and thus was it with Christ; the flesh is said to be deified, and the Deity is said to be incarnate; not by the conversion of either into the nature of the other, but by assuming, and adjoining the human nature to the divine; and yet still the human nature, and the divine are distinct things; both the natures in Christ do remain entire, and inconfused; indeed the humanity is much magnified by the divinity; but the divinity is nothing altered by the humanity: Thus much for the distinction of his two Natures.

SECT. V. Of the Union of the two Natures of Christ in one and the same Person.

5. The Union of two Natures of Christ, in one and the self-same person, is that great wonder which now we must speak of as we are able; but alas! how should we speak this union, and not be confounded in ourselves? It is a great mystery, a secret, a wonder; many wonders have been since the beginning of the world; but all the wonders that ever were, must give place to this, and in respect thereof, cease to be wonderful: neither the Creation of all things out of nothing, nor the restauration of all things into their perfect being; I mean neither the first work, nor the last work of God in this world (though most admirable pieces) may be compared with this. This Union of the two Natures of Christ into one person, is the highest pitch (if anything may be said highest in that which is infinite) of God's wisdom, goodness, power, and glory; well therefore, said the Angel to Mary, The power of the highest shall overshadow thee: and if God did overshadow this Mystery with his own Vail, How should we presume with the men of Bethshemesh, to look into it? Christians! If you will needs put it to the question, How that wonderful connection of two so infinitely differing natures, in the unity of one person should be effected? I must answer you with the Apostle, Who is sufficient for these things? Certainly these are the things which the Angels desire to stoop and look into: It is an Inquisition fitter for an Angelical intelligence, than for our shallow capacity; and yet as Moses could not choose but wonder, though he must not draw nigh to the Bush burning with fire, and not consumed: so though we dare not draw too nigh to see this great sight, How poor dust and ashes should be assumed into the unity of God's own person, and that in the midst of those everlasting burnings the Bush should remain unconsumed, and continue fresh and green for evermore; yet what doth hinder, but we may stand aloof off, and wonder at it? this is one piece of our duty, to recite all the long-fore-passed acts, and benefits of God (as well as we may; Scripture still going along) that thereby we may admire and adore, and express our Love, and Thankfulness unto God.

For the untying of this Knot, I cannot but wonder, what a world of questions have been tossed in Schools. As,

1. Whether the union of the Word incarnate was in the Nature? — 2. Whether the union of the Word incarnate was in the Person? — 3. Whether the human Nature was united to the Word by way of accident? — 4. Whether the union of the divine Nature be something cremated? — 5. Whether the union of the Word incarnate be the same with assumption? — 6. Whether the union of the two Natures of Christ be the chief of all unions? — 7. Whether the union of the two Natures of Christ was made by Grace? — 8. Whether it was convenient for the divine person to assume a created Nature? — 9. Whether a divine Person could assume the Nature human? — 10. Whether more persons divine could assume one Nature human? — 11. Whether it was more convenient that the person of the Son should assume human nature, than any other of the persons in the Godhead? — 12. Whether the human nature was more assumptible by the Son of God than any other nature? — 13. Whether the Son of God did not assume the person of man? — 14. Whether the Son of God assumed the human nature in all its Individuals, or as abstracted from all Individuals? — 15. Whether the Son of God assumed a true Body, Soul, and all its Intellects? — 16. Whether the Son of God in respect of nature, though not of time, did first assume the Soul, and then the Body of man? — 17. Whether the Son of God in human nature assumed all the defects of the Body? — 18. Whether the Son of God assumed all the defects of the Soul of man? — 19. Whether by Virtue of this union those things which are agreeable to the Son of man, may be predicated of the Son of God, and e converso? — 20. Whether Christ be one or two? and whether in Christ be one or two Wills? one or more Operations? These and many other like Questions are raised, that in their discussions make up large Volums; but I shall leave them all to the Schools.

In the explication of this union, that which I shall insist on (as the most necessary for our understanding) is, 1. The Union itself. 2. The Effects, or Benefits of it.

1. For the Union itself we shall discuss, 1. Of the sorts of Union, and of what sort this is. 2. Of the very thing itself, wherein this union consists. 3. Of the Scriptural Texts that confirm this union. 4. Of the similitudes that hold forth this union. 5. Of the person assuming; and of the nature assumed; and of the reason of this way. And of these, as briefly as I may: I would rather say much in a little, than a little in much.

1. Union is of divers sorts, as natural and mystical, accidental and substantial, essential and integral. But I shall pass these by; and speak only of these sorts. 1. When one of the things united is turned into the other; as when a drop of water is poured into a vessel of Wine. 2. When both the things united are changed in nature and essence; as when the Elements are united, to make mixed or compounded bodies. 3. When there is no change of things united, but the constitution of a third nature out of them both, as is the union of the soul and body. 4. When there is neither a change of natures united, nor constitution of a third out of them both; but only the founding, settling, and staying of the one of the things united in the other, and the drawing of it into the unity of the personal being, or subsistence of the other: so the Branch of a Tree being put upon the stock of another Tree, it is drawn into the unity of the subsistence of that Tree into which it is put: and whereas if it had been set in the Ground, it would have grown as a separate Tree in itself; now it groweth in the Tree into which it is grafted, and pertaineth to the unity of it: and this kind of union doth, of all others, most perfectly resemble the personal union of the two Natures of God, and man in Christ; wherein the nature of man, that would have been a person in itself, if it had been left to itself, is drawn into the unity of the divine person, and subsisteth in it, being prevented from subsisting in itself, by this personal union and assumption.

2. For the thing wherein this union of two natures consists; we say that this union consists in that dependence of the human nature on the person of the Word, and in that communicating of the person, or substance of the Word, with the human nature that is assumed; so that it is an hypostatical or personal union; that is, such an union as that both natures do make but one person of Christ: for the better understanding of this, we must consider what the difference is betwixt Nature and Person, and what makes an individual Nature to be a Person: briefly thus; To be this or that, we say, is an individual nature; to be this or that, in or for itself, is a person or subsistence; to be this or that, in or for another, is to pertain to the person or subsistence of another. Now amongst those created things which are naturally apt to make a personal being, or to subsist in and for themselves, there is a very great difference: for,—

1. Some things of this kind may become parts of another more entire thing of the same kind: as we see in all those things wherein every part hath the same nature that the whole hath; as every drop of water is water, and being left to itself, it is a subsistence in itself, and hath its quality, nature, and being in, and for itself; but if it be joined to a greater quantity of water, it hath now no being, quantity, nor operation, but in and for that greater quantity of water, into which it is poured.

2. Other things of this kind cannot naturally put themselves into the unity of any other thing; and yet by the help of some foreign cause they may be united; as the branch of a Tree of one kind (which put into the ground, would be an entire, distinct Tree in itself) may by the hand of a man be put into the unity of a Tree of another kind; and so grow, move, and bear fruit, not distinctly in and for itself, but jointly in and for that Tree into which it is planted.

3. Other things of this kind cannot by force of natural causes, nor by the help of any foreign thing, ever become parts of any other created thing or pertain to the unity of the substance of any such thing; as the nature of man, and the nature of all living things; and yet by divine and supernatural working, it may be drawn into the unity of the subsistence of any of the Persons of the blessed Trinity, wherein the fullness of all being, and the Perfection of all created things, is in a more eminent sort than in themselves; for though all created things have their own being, yet seeing God is nearer to them than they are to themselves, and they are in a better fort in him than they are in themselves, there is no question but that they may be prevented and staid from being in and for themselves, and caused to be in, and for one of the divine persons of the blessed Trinity.

So that as one drop of water, that formerly subsisted in itself, if it be poured into a vessel containing a greater quantity, it becomes one in subsistence with the greater quantity of water; and as a branch of a Tree, that being set in the ground, and left to itself, would be an entire and independent tree, becomes one in subsistence with that tree into which it is grafted; so the individual nature of man assumed into the unity of one of the Persons of the Blessed Trinity, it looseth that kind of being, that naturally left to itself, it would have had, and it becomes one with the Person; for now it is not in, and for itself, but hath got a new Relation of dependence and being in another.

But you will say, all the Creatures in the world have their being in God, and dependence on God; and therefore all Creatures, as well as Man, may pertain to the Person, or Subsistence of God.

I Answer, it is not a general being in, and dependence on God, but a strict dependence on man's part, and a Communicating of the subsistence on God's part that makes up this union. Hence we say that there are four degrees of the presence of God in his Creatures; the first is his general presence, whereby he preserves the substances of all Creatures, and gives unto them to live, and to move, and to have their being; and this extends itself to all Creatures good and bad.

The Second degree is the presence of Grace, whereby he doth not only preserve the substance of his Creature, but also gives Grace unto it; and this agrees to the Saints and God's People on earth. The third degree is the presence of glory peculiar to the Saints and Angels in heaven, and hereby God doth not only preserve their substances, and give them plenty of his Grace, but he also admits them into his Glorious presence, so as they may behold him face to face. The fourth and last degree is that whereby the God-Head of the Son is present with, and dwells in the Manhood, giving unto it in some part his own subsistence, whereby it comes to pass that this Manhood assumed is proper to the Son, and cannot be the Manhood of the Father, or of the Holy Ghost, or of any Creature whatsoever. And this is a thing so admirable and unspeakable, that though we may find some similitudes, yet there cannot be found another example hereof in all the World.

Hence it follows that in the Manhood of Christ, consisting of Body and Soul, there is a Nature only, and not a Person; because it doth not subsist alone as other men, Peter, Paul and John do, but it wholly depends on the Person of the Word into the unity whereof it is received; and this dependence of the human nature on the person of the Word, and the communicating of the Person or subsistence of the Word with the human nature, is the very thing itself wherein this union consists.

3. For the Scriptural texts that confirm this Union, you see the Well is very deep; but where is the Bucket? What texts of Scripture have we to confirm this wonderful Union of two Natures in one Person? Amongst many I shall only cite these; —

When Christ asked his Apostles, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? — Simon Peter answered, Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God: Now, if but one Christ, then surely but one Person; and if the Son of man be the Son of the Living God, then surely there are two natures in that one Person: Observe how the Son of man, and the Son of God, very Man and very God, concenter in Christ: as the Soul and the Body make but one man, so the Son of man and the Son of God make but one Christ: Thou art Christ, saith Peter, the Son of the Living God.

So Paul, speaking of Jesus the Son of God, he tells us, that he was made of the seed of David according to the Flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit. 1. Made of the Seed of David; of the substance of the Virgin, who was David's posterity. 2. Declared to be the Son of God: not made the Son of God, as he was made the Son of Man; but declared to be the Son of God: The word in the Original signifies a Declaration by a solemn sentence or difinitive judgment. I will declare the Decree; the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son. That which I point at, he is the Son of David, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in respect of his Manhood; and he is the Son of God 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in respect of his Godhead; here be the two Natures; but in the words before, these two natures make but one Son, Jesus Christ our Lord: and 〈◇〉 every words themselves he is declared to be the Son of God; he doth not say, Some 〈◇〉 two; but his Son Jesus Christ, first before, and then after; to show unto us, therefore his making, so after his making, he is still but one Son, or one person of the 〈◇〉 distinct natures subsisting.

To the same purpose is that same Text, In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily; by the union of the divine nature with the human in the unity of his person, the Godhead dwelleth in Christ as the Soul in the Body: it dwelleth in him bodily; not seemingly, but really, truly, and indeed; not figuratively, and in a shadow, as he dwelleth in the Temple; not by power and efficacy, as he dwells in all the Creatures; not by Grace, as in his People; nor by Glory, as in the Saints above; but essentially, substantially, personally, the human nature being assumed into Union with the person of the Word. Observe the passages; he in whom that fullness dwells, is the Person; that fullness, which doth so dwell in him, is the Nature; now there dwells in him not only the fullness of the Godhead, but the fullness of the Manhood also; for we believe him to be both perfect God, begotten of the substance of his Father before all Worlds; and perfect man, made of the substance of this Mother in this World; only he in whom the fullness of the Godhead dwelleth, is one; and he in whom the fullness of the Manhood dwelleth, is another; but he in whom the fullness of both these natures dwelleth, is one and the same Immanuel, and consequently one and the same person; in him, (i.) in his person dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead, and all the fullness of the Manhood: In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.

4. For the similitudes that resemble, or set forth this mystery, many are given: but for our better understanding, let us consider these few.

The first is of the soul and body, that make but one man: as the soul and body are two distinct things, and of several natures: yet being united by the hand of God, they make one Person: so the Godhead and Manhood are two distinct things, and of several Natures: yet being united by the hand of God, they make but one Person. Indeed herein is the similitude defective: first in that the Soul and Body being imperfect natures, they concur to make one full and perfect nature of a man: Secondly, in that the one of them is not drawn into the unity of the substance of the other, but both depend on a third substance, which is that of the whole.

The second is of Light and Sun: as after the Collection of, and Union of the Light with the Body of the Sun, no man can pluck them asunder: nor doth any man call one part the Sun, and another part the Light: but both of them jointly together, we call the Sun: even so after the Union of Flesh with that true Light the Word, no man doth call the Word apart to be one Son of God, and the Son of Man another Son of God: but both of them jointly together, we call one and the self-same Christ. I know in this similitude are many defectives: yet if hereby we be not altogether able to attain the truth of this great Mystery, certainly we have herein a most excellent similitude, which will greatly help, and contentedly suffice the godly and moderate searchers of this divine truth.

The third is of a fiery and flaming Sword: as the subsistences of the Fire and Sword are so nearly conjoined, that the operations of them for the most part concur: for a fiery sword in cutting, burneth, and in burning, cutteth: and we may say of the whole that this fiery thing is a sharp piercing Sword, and that this sharp piercing Sword is a fiery thing: even so in the union of the two natures of Christ, there is a communication of properties from one of them to the other, as shall be declared, if the Lord permit: only this similitude is defective in this, in that the nature of the Iron is not drawn into the unity of the subsistence of fire, nor is the nature of the fire drawn into the Unity of the subsistence of Iron: so that we cannot say, this fire is Iron, or this Iron is fire.

The fourth is of one man having two qualities, or accidental natures: as a man that is both a Physician and a Divine; he is but one person, and yet there are two natures concurring and meeting in that same one Person; so we may rightly say of such a one, this Physician is a Divine, and this Divine is a Physician; this Physician is happy in saving souls, and this Divine is careful in curing bodies: even so is Christ both God and Man, and yet but one Christ; and in that one Christ, according to the several natures, are denominations of either part; as that this man is God, and this God is man; or that this man made the world: and this God died upon the Cross: but in this similitude is this defect, in that the different natures are accidental, and not essential or substantial.

The fifth and last, is of the Branch and Tree into which it is engrafted; as suppose a Vine-branch and an Olive-tree: now as this Olive-tree is but one, but hath two different natures in it, and so it beareth two kinds of fruit: and yet between the Tree and the Branch there is a composition, not hujus ex his, but hujus ad hoc (i.e.) not of a third thing out of the two things united, but of one of the two things united or adjoined to the other: even so Christ is one, but he hath two different natures, and in them he performs the different actions pertaining to either of them: and yet between the different natures (the Divine and Humane nature) there is a composition, not hujus ex his but hujus ad hoc, not of a third nature arising out of these but of the human nature added or united to the Divine, in unity of the same person: so that now we may say, as this Vine is an Olive-tree, and this Olive-tree is a Vine: or as this Vine bears Olives, and this Olive-tree bears Grapes, so the Son of man is the Son of God, and the Son of God is the Son of Man: or this Son of Man laid the Foundation of the Earth, and this Son of God was born of Mary, and crucified by the Jews. This similitude (I take it) is the aptest and fullest of all the other, though in some things also it doth fail; for the branch hath first a separate subsistence in itself, and losing it after, then it is drawn into the unity of the subsistence of that Tree into which it is implanted; but it is otherwise with the human nature of Christ; it never had any subsistence of its own, until it was united to the person or subsistence of the Son of God.

5. For the person assuming, and the nature assumed, and for the reason of this way; we say, 1. That the person assuming was a Divine person; it was not the Divine nature that assumed an human person, but the Divine person that assumed an human nature; and that of the three Divine persons, it was neither first, nor the third; neither the Father nor the Holy Ghost that did assume this nature; but it was the Son, the middle person, who was to be the middle one, that thereby, 1. He might undertake the mediation between God and us. 2. He might better preserve the integrity of the blessed Trinity in the Godhead. 3. He might higher advance man-kind by means of that relation which the second person, the Mediator did bear unto his Father: for this very end, saith the Apostle, God sent his own Son made of a woman, that we might receive the Adoption of Sons; wherefore thou art no more a servant but a Son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ; intimating thereby, that what relation Christ hath unto God by nature, we being found in him, have the very same by Grace, he was God's Son by nature, and we are his Sons by Grace; he was in a peculiar manner the first born among many Brethren: and in him, and for him, the rest of the Brethren by grace of Adoption are accounted as first-born, Heb. 12.23.

2. The nature assumed was the seed of Abraham: for verily he took not on him the nature of Angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham: elsewhere the Apostle calls it the seed of David: He is made the seed of David according to the Flesh: and elsewhere he is called the seed of the Woman: I will put enmity between thee and the Woman, and between thy seed and her seed: and when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his son made of a woman: no question she was the passive and material principle of which that precious flesh was made, and the Holy Ghost the agent and efficient: that blessed womb of her was the Bride-Chamber, wherein the holy Ghost did knit that indissoluble knot betwixt our human Nature and his Deity: the Son of God assuming into the unity of his person that which before he was not, even our human Nature. O with what astonishment may we behold our dust and ashes assumed into the unity of God's own Person!

3. For the reason of this way: why did the person assume a Nature? or rather, why did not the person of the Son of God join itself to a perfect person of the Son of man? I answer.

1. Because then there could not have been a personal union of both natures, and so Christ had not been a perfect Mediator.

2. Because then the work of each of the Natures of Christ could not have been counted the works of the whole person; whereas now by this union of both natures in one person, the obedience of Christ performed in the Manhood, is become of infinite merit, as being the Obedience of God; and thereupon God is said to have purchased the Church with his own Blood.

3. Because if the Person of the Son of God had been joined to the Person of man, there should have been four Persons in the Trinity. It is very observable, how for the better preservation of the integrity of the blessed Trinity in the Godhead, the human Nature was assumed into the unity of the second person; for if the fullness of the Godhead should have dwelt in any human Person; there should then have been a fourth Person necessarily added unto the Godhead; and if any of the three Persons besides the second, had been born of a Woman, there should then have been two Sons in the Trinity; whereas now the Son of God, and the Son of Man, being but one Person, he is consequently but one Son; and so no alteration at all made in the relations of the Persons of the Trinity, but they are still one Father, one Son, and one Holy Ghost.

These are the deep things of God, and indeed so exceedingly mystical, that they can never be perfectly declared by any man. Bernard compares this ineffable mystery of the union of two natures, with that incomprehensible mystery of the Trinity in unity. In the Trinity is three Persons and one Nature; in Christ is two Natures and one Person; that of the Trinity is indeed the greatest, and this of the Incarnation, is like unto it; they both far exceed man's capacity; for his way is in the Sea, and his path in the great waters, and his footsteps are not known.

2. For the effects and Benefits of this Hypostatical Union; they are either in respect of Christ, or in respect of Christians.

1. Those in respect of Christ, are, 1. An exemption of all sin. 2. A Collation of all Graces. 3. A Communication of all the properties,

1. We find that although Christ appeared as a sinner, and that he was numbered among the wicked or with the Transgressors. Isa. 53.12. Yet in very Deed and Truth he did no sin, neither was any guile found in his mouth, 1 Pet. 2.22. The Apostle tells us, he was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from Sinners: he assumed the nature of man, yet by reason of his pure Conception, and of this Hypostatical Union he was conceived, and born, and lived without sin; he took upon him the seed of man, but not the Sin of man, save only by imputation: but on this point I shall not stay.

2. The Graces collated unto the humanity of Christ by reason of his union, are very many: I shall instance in some: As, —

1. That the Manhood hath its subsistence in the second Person of the Trinity, whereof itself (as of itself) is destitute.

2. That the Manhood is a peculiar Temple for the Deity of Christ to dwell in: it is the place wherein the Godhead shows itself more manifestly and more Gloriously than in any other Creature whatsoever: it is true, that by his providence he shows himself in all his Creatures, and by his Grace in his Saints: but he is only most Gloriously, eternally, according to the fullness of his Deity, and by an Hypostatical Union in the humanity of Jesus Christ, in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily: Some are of opinion that as now in this Life, No man cometh unto God but by Christ; so hereafter in the next life, no man shall see God, but in the face of Jesus Christ.

3. That in the Manhood is a nearer familiarity with the Godhead than any other Creature, whether Men or Angels: as sometimes he said, My Father and I are one: (i.e.) one essence; so he may as truly say, the Manhood and I are one (i.e.) one person forever.

4. That the Manhood of Christ, according to its measure, is a partner with the Godhead in the work of Redemption and Mediation: as he is Immanuel in respect of his person, so he is Immanuel in respect of his office. He must needs be man as well as God, that he might be able to send this comfortable message to the Sons of men; go to my Brethren, and say to them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God. I, as man, am in the work of redemption, and in the work of mediation, as well as God: my Flesh is indeed the Bread of Life.

5. That the Manhood of Christ, together with the Godhead, is adored and worshipped with Divine honor: as in like case, the honor done to the King, redounds to the Crown upon his head; not that we worship the Manhood alone, as merely a Creature; but that we adore the person of Christ which consisteth of the Manhood and of the Godhead.

6. That the Manhood hath an extraordinary measure, without measure, of habitual Graces, poured into it; in this he excels the very Angels, for to them was given Grace only by measure; but to the humanity of Christ was given Grace without measure; even so much as a Creature is any ways capable of. I know it is said that Jesus increased in Wisdom, and Stature, and in favor with God and Man; but this increase or growth in Wisdom, is not to be understood in respect of the essence or extension of the habit (for that he had from the beginning, even from the first moment of his incarnation; and he brought it with him out of the womb) but in respect of the act and use of it, or in respect of his experimental knowledge, so he increased, and not otherwise. Never was there any but Christ, whose Graces were no way stinted, and that was absolutely full of Grace: Divines tell us of a double Grace in Christ; the one of union, and that is infinite; the other of unction (which is all one with Grace habitual) and that is in a sort infinite; for howsoever it be but a finite and created thing, yet in the nature of Grace, it hath no limitation, no bounds, no stint, but includeth in itself whatsoever any way pertains to Grace, or that cometh within the compass of it. The reason of this illimited donation of Grace bestowed on the Nature of man in Christ, was, for that Grace was given to it as to the universal cause, whence it was to be derived unto all others; he is the Fountain of Grace, and of his fullness we receive Grace for Grace.

3. For the Communication of the Properties. It is a kind, of phrase of speech peculiar to the Scriptures, when the properties of either Nature of Christ considered singly and apart, are attributed to the person of Christ, from which soever of the natures they be denominated. For the understanding of this, observe, 1. That words are either abstractive or concreateive; the former speaks the Nature of things, the latter speaks the person that hath that nature; as the God-Head and God; the Man Hood and Man; Holiness and Holy. 2. Observe that abstractive Words noting precisely the distinct Natures, cannot be affirmed one of the other; we cannot say, the God head suffered, or the Man-hood created; but we may truly say, that God suffered, and man created; because the person which these concreateive words imply, is one: and all actions, passions, and qualities agree really to the person, though in respect sometimes of one nature, and sometimes of another: thus God purchased the Church with his own blood: not that the God-head shed blood, but the person which was God: and thus the Son of man talking with Nicodemus, is said to be in Heaven; not that the Man-hood was in Heaven while he was on earth, but the person of the Son of Man. Thus we may say that God was born of a Virgin, and that God suffered, and God was crucified; not simply in respect of his God-head, but in respect of his person; or in respect of the human nature which God united to himself: because God here is a concrete word, and not an abstract, and signifieth the Person of Christ, and not the divine nature of Christ. And thus we may say, that the Man Christ is Almighty, Omniscient, Omnipresent, yet not simply in respect of its Man-hood, but in respect of the Person which is the same God and Man: or in respect of the divine nature of the man Christ Jesus: for that here also Man is a concrete word, and not an abstract, and signifieth the whole person of Christ, and not the human nature: but on the contrary, we may not say, that the God-head of Christ was born of a Virgin, or suffered, or was crucified: nor may we say, that the Manhood of Christ is Almighty, Omniscient, Omnipresent; because the Godhead and Manhood are abstract words (i.e.) such words as note to us the two natures of Christ, the one divine, the other human, and not the person of Christ.

And this I think is the mind of Luther and his Followers, and yet (O wonder) what a deal of objections are made to the multiplying of needless and fruitless contentions? The Lutherans confess (however they hold the ubiquitary presence of the humanity of Christ) that his Body is only in one place locally: If we ask them (saith Zanchius) whether Christ's body be everywhere? they answer, that locally it is but in one place, but that personally it is everywhere: now if they mean (saith he) that in respect of Essence, his Body is finite, and confined to one certain place: but in respect of the being of subsistence, or of his person, it is infinite, and everywhere: they say the truth, and there is no difference amongst us. Happy are the Reconcilers of dissenting Brethren: Unto their Assembly mine honor be thou united.

2. The Effects or benefits of this hypostatical union in respect of Christians, are their spiritual union and communion with God and Christ.

1. There is a spiritual union of Christians with God in Christ; O the wonder of these two blessed unions; first of the personal or hypostatical union; secondly of this spiritual or mystical union; in the personal union, it pleased God to assume and unite our human Nature to the Diety; in this spiritual union, it pleased God to unite the person of every Believer to the person of the Son of God. This union is mystical, and yet our very Persons, natures, bodies, souls are in a spiritual way conjoined to the Body and Soul of Christ; so that we are members of the Body of Christ, and of the Flesh of Christ, and of the Bones of Christ; and as this conjunction is immediately made with his human nature; so thereby we are also united to the divine nature; yea, the person of the Believer is indissolubly united to the Glorious person of the Son God.

Now concerning this union, for our better understanding, observe these four things.

1. It is a most real union; it is not a mere notional and intellectual union, that consists only in the understanding and without the understanding is nothing; it is not an imaginary thing, that hath no other being but only in the Brain; no, no, it is a true, real, essential, substantial union; In natural unions, I confess, there may be more evidence, but there cannot be more truth; spiritual Agents neither have, nor put forth less virtue, because sense cannot discern their manner of Working; even the Load-stone, though an earthen substance, yet when it is out of sight, whether under the table, or behind a solid partition, it stirreth the needle as effectually as if it were within view. Shall not he contradict his senses, that will say, It cannot work, because I see it not? Oh my Savior! thou art more mine, than my Body is mine: my sense feels that present, but so as that I must lose it: but my faith so feels, and sees thee present with me, as that I shall never be parted from thee.

2. It is a very near union: You will say, how near? If an Angel were to speak to you, he cannot satisfy you in this: only as far as our understanding can reach it, and the Creatures can serve to illustrate these things, take it thus: Whatsoever by way of comparison can be alleged concerning the combination of any one thing with another: that, and much more may be said of our union with Jesus Christ. To give instance out of the Scripture: see what one stick is to another being glued together: see what one friend is to another, as Jonathan and David, who were said to be woven and knit each one to other: see how near the father and the child are: how near the husband and the wife are: see what union is between the Branches and the Vine, the members and the head; nay, one thing more; see what the the soul is to the body: such is Christ, and so near is Christ, and nearer to the person of every true believer: I live, yet not I (saith Paul) but Christ liveth in me: q. d. as the soul is to the body of a natural man, that acts and enlivens it naturally, so is Jesus Christ to my soul and body. O there is a marvelous nearness in this mystical union.

3. It is a total union; (i.e.) whole Christ is united to the whole believer, soul and body. If thou art united to Christ, thou hast all Christ: thou art one with him in his nature, in his name: thou hast the same Image, Grace, and Spirit in thee, as he hath; the same precious Promises, the same access to God by prayer as he; thou hast the same love of the Father; all that he did or suffered, thou hast a share in it: thou hast his life and death: all is thine: so on thy part, he hath thee wholly, thy nature, thy sins, the punishment of thy sins, thy wrath, thy curse, thy shame: yea, thy wit, and wealth, and strength, all that thou art, or hast, or canst do possibly for him. It is a total union: My beloved is mine, and I am his: whole Christ from top to toe is mine, and all that I am, have, or can do, for evermore is his.

4. It is an inseparable union, it can never be broken. I will make (saith God) an everlasting Covenant with them, and I will not turn away from them to do them good, I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. This is a glorious promise: some poor souls may say. True Lord, thou wilt not turn away from me: I know thou wilt not: Oh, but I fear I shall turn away from thee: Oh alas, I turn every day towards sin and Satan! Nay, saith God, I will put my fear in their heart, that thou shalt not turn away from me: q. d. We shall be kept together for evermore and never be separated. Hence Paul triumphantly challenges all enemies on earth, (or rather in hell) to do their worst to break this knot: Who shall separate us from the love of God in Christ? shall tribulation, Distress, Famine, Nakedness, Peril or Sword? Come all that can come, and see if that blessed union betwixt me and Christ, shall ever be broken, by all that you can do. Thus for this union.

2. There is a spiritual communion with God in Christ. Both these are the effects of Christ's personal or hypostatical union: first, union to his person, and then communion with his benefits: union in proper speaking is not unto any of the benefits flowing to us from Christ: we are not united to forgiveness of Sin, Holiness, Peace of Conscience, but unto the person of the Son of God himself: and then secondly, comes this communication of all the benefits arising immediately from this union to the Lord Jesus: that as Christ was Priest, Prophet, and King: so we also by him, are after a sort Priests, Prophets and Kings: for being made one with him, we are thereby possessed of all things that are his, as the Wife is of the wealth of her Husband; now all things are yours, (saith the Apostle) whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, or the World, &c.—

Hitherto have we took a view of Christ in his Mothers Womb; and O what marvels there! Did ever womb carry such a fruit? Well might the Angel say, Blessed art thou amongst Women! and well might Elizabeth say, Blessed is the Fruit of thy Womb! but the blessing is not only in conceiving, but in bearing; and therefore we proceed.

SECT. VI. Of the Birth of Christ.

6. THE birth of Christ now follows. Now was it that the Son of Righteousness should break forth from his bed, where nine months he had hid himself, as behind a fruitful cloud: this was the worlds wonder; a thing so wonderful, that it was given for a sign unto believers seven hundred and forty years before it was accomplished: therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; behold a Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son. A wonder indeed! and great, beyond all comparison: that the Son of God should be born of a Woman: that he who is the true Melchizedek, without Father, and without Mother, must yet have a mother-Virgin: that he that is before Abraham was, should yet be born after Abraham a matter of two thousand years: that he who was David's Son, & therefore born in Bethlehem, should yet be David's Lord; wonderful things are spoken of thee, O thou Son of God: before he was born, the Prophets sing, the Sybil's prophesy, the Patriarchs typisie, the Types foretell, God promiseth, and the Son of God performeth; when he was born, Angels run errands, Gabriel brings tidings, the glory of Heaven shines, a Star displaies, and wise men are the Heralds, that proclaim his Birth. But come yet a little nearer, Let us go to Bethlehem (as the Shepherds said) and see this thing which is come to pass! if we step but one step into his lodging, Heavens wonder is before our eyes; now Look upon Jesus! look on him as in fullness of time he carried on the great work of our Salvation: here now you may read the meaning of Adams Covenant, Abraham's promise, Moses revelation, David's succession; these were but veils; but now shall we draw aside the Curtains? come, take a view of the truth itself; O wonder of wonders! whom find we in this lodging? a Babe in a Cratch, a Mother-maid, a Father-virgin: is this the Babe whom we look unto as our Jesus? is this a Mother (as Austin) scarce fourteen years of age? is this the Father that knew her not, until she had brought forth her first-born Son? what a strange birth is this? Look on the Babe, there is no Cradle to rock him, no Nurse to Lull him, no Linnens to swaddle him, scarce a little food to nourish him; look on the Mother, there's no Mid-wives help, no downy pillows, no linen hangings, scarce a little straw where she is brought a-bed: look on Joseph the reputed Father: he rather begs, than gives a blessing: poor Carpenter! that makes them a Chamber of an Ox-stall, and carves him a Cratch to be his Cradle: Mary that sees with her eyes, and ponders all in her heart, how doth modest shame fac'dness change her colors so often as her imagination works? she must bear a Son: an Angel tells her, the Holy Ghost overshadows her, the days are accomplished, and she is delivered; each Circumstance is enough to abash a modest Virgin: But who will not wonder? a Maid believes, a Maid conceives, a Maid brings forth, and a Maid still remains: How might we descant on this Subject? but I shall contract myself, and reduce all wonders to this word, I am the Vine.

It is a blessed Parable: in which, under the shadow of a Vine, Christ elegantly sets forth himself. Christ in many resemblances is a precious Vine; but why a Vine, rather than a Cedar, Oak, or some of the strongest, tallest trees? Many reasons are given: as, 1. Because of all Trees the Vine is the lowest: it grovels, as it were, on the ground. 2. Because of all Trees the Vine is weakest; hence they that have Vines, have also their Elms to support them, and hold them up. 3. Because of all Trees, the Vine hath the meanest Bark and outside: it is of little worth or reputation. 4. Because of all Trees, the Vine is fruitfulest: and therefore it is called the Fruitful Vine. In every of these respects, Christ is called a Vine, who by his Incarnation took upon him the lowest condition, and made himself, by emptying himself, of no Reputation: but he was the fruitfullest Vine that ever the earth bore: and in this respect no Vine, nor all the Vines on the Earth were worthy to be compared with him, or to be so much as resemblances of him. I shall not prosecute the resemblances throughout; for, so I might pass from his Birth to his Life: and from his Life to his Death; when the blood of the Grapes was pressed out: only for the present we'll take a view of this Vine. 1. In its Plant. 2. In its Bud. 3. In its Blossom. 4. In its Fruit; and so an end.

1. For the Plant: the way of Vines is not to be sowed, but planted; that thus translated, they might better fructify: so our Jesus, first sprung from his Father, is planted in a Virgins womb; God from God, coeternal with God; but by his Incarnation made that he was not, and yet remaining that he was; God of his Father, and Man of his Mother; before all time, yet since the beginning. Bernard tells us, that this Vine sprung of the Vine, is God begotten of God, the Son of the Father, both coeternal and consubstantial with the Father; but that he might better fructify, he was planted in the Earth; (i.e.) he was conceived in a Virgins womb. There is indeed a resemblance in this; in this resemblance, we must be careful to observe that communication of properties; of which I told you, we may truly say, that God was planted, or conceived, but not the Godhead; God is a concrete word, and signifies the Person of Christ: and his Person was planted or conceived, not simply as God: but in respect of the Manhood united to it: and thus he that is infinite, was conceived; and he that is eternal, even he was born: the very fullness of all perfection, and all the properties of the Divine Essence are by this communication given to the nature of man in the Person of the Son of God: no wonder therefore, that we say, that this Vine (the Son of God) is planted in Mary; I know some would have the Plant more early: and therefore they say, that Christ was a Vine planted in Adam, budded in David, and flourished in Mary: but I take this but for a flourish: all before Mary were but Types, now was the Truth: now in Mary was Christ planted, and not before: as in the beginning, there was not a Man to Till the Ground:— but out of the ground the Lord made to grow every Tree:—and a River went out of Eden to water the Garden: so there was no man that tilled this Ground: but out of this Ground (the Virgin) the Lord made to grow this Plant, watering it by his Spirit: The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the Power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: Of this conception, and of the Holy Ghosts efficiency, I believe, spake the Prophet, when there was such longing after Christ's coming in the flesh: Drop down ye Heavens from above, and let the Sky pour down Righteousness, let the Earth open, and bring forth Salvation. But of this Conception before.

2. For the Bud: the nature of Vines is to Bud, before it Blossom or bring forth its fruit: so was it said of Christ before he came, Truth shall Bud out of the Earth; now what was this budding of Truth out of the Earth, but Christ born of a Woman? What was the Truth (saith Irenaeus and Augustine) but Christ? and what the Earth, but our flesh? and what Truth budding, but Christ being born? Here let us stay a while: surely it is worth the while (as the Spouse said in another place) to get up early to the Vineyards, and to see how the Vine did flourish, and how the tender Grape did open.

In Christ's carrying on the great Work of our Salvation before all Worlds, we told you of God's Councils, as if he had been reduced to some straits and difficulties by the cross demands of his several Attributes: but Wisdom found out a way, how to reconcile these differences by propounding a Jesus, and in him Mercy and Truth met together, Righteousness and Peace kissed each other. That reconciliation was in the Counsel of God from all Eternity: but for the execution of this Counsel, it was now in the fullness of time, even at this time when Christ was born: Now in deed and in truth, in execution and performance, was the reconciliation of all differences: and of this time was the Psalmists Prophecy more especially meant: Mercy and Truth shall meet together, Righteousness and Peace shall kiss each other: and Truth shall bud out of the Earth, and Righteousness shall look down from Heaven.

In these words we find, first a meeting of God's blessed Attributes; and secondly, this meeting at a birth, the birth of Truth: at which meeting thirdly was that glorious effect, that Righteousness looked down, and indeed came down from Heaven; I desire a little to invert the words, and shall first speak to Christ's Birth; secondly, to the effects of his Birth, of Righteousness looking down from Heaven; thirdly, to the meeting and agreement of all God's Attributes as the issue and effect of all; When Mercy and Truth met together, and Righteousness and Peace kissed each other.

1. For his Birth; our Vine doth Bud, Truth shall Bud out of the Earth, (i.) Christ shall be born upon the Earth, or Christ shall be born of a Woman; for Truth is Christ, Bud is born, and the Earth] is a Woman. 1. Truth] is Christ: I am the Way and Truth, said Christ; he is the truth of all Types, and the truth of all Prophecies, and the truth of all promises; for in him are all the Promises, Yea and Amen. 2. Bud] is born: the Vine budding is the first putting forth of the Grape; so Christ being born, was Truth budding out of the Earth, he then first shown himself to the World, and was first seen (like the Vine springing forth) above ground. 3. The Earth] is the Woman; thus some render that Text, Let the Earth bring forth a Savior: look how the Field-flowers spring forth of themselves without any Seed cast in by the hand of Man; so the Virgin brings forth Christ. It is observable that in the Creation of Adam was laid the Prognostics of this future birth: begin with the first Man Adam, and you may see him parallel'd in this second Adam, Christ. Adam was created of the Virgin-Earth, Christ was born of a Virgin-Mother; the Earth had no Husbandman, yet brought forth without Seed: Mary had no Husband, yet brought forth without Seed of Man: in the Creation God said, Let us make Man: and now saith the Holy Ghost, the Word is made flesh, or the Word is Man indeed: those were but Types, but Christ is the Truth: he is the Vine that Buds, the Messiah born; the Angels own him, the Star designs him, the Prophets foreshow him, the Devils confess him, his Miracles declare him, the Sages seek him, and Heaven and Earth Rings with the News, that Truth is Budded out of the Earth.

2. For the effect of this Birth, Righteousness shall look down from Heaven. No sooner Christ born, but Righteousness looked down from Heaven; she cast her eye upon Earth, and seeing Truth freshly sprung there, she looked and looked again; certainly it was a sight to draw all the eyes of Heaven to it. It is said of the Angels that they desired to look into these things: they looked wishly at them, as if they would look through them: no question but Righteousness looked as narrowly and piercingly as the Angels. Some observe that the Hebrew word, she looked down, signifies that she beat out a window; so desirous was Righteousness to behold the sight of the Vine Budding, of Christ being born, that she beats out a Window in Heaven: before this time, she would not so much as look down towards the Earth: Righteousness had no prospect, no window open this way: she turned away her eyes, and clapt to the Casement, and would not abide so much as to look on such sinful wretches, forlorn sinners as we are; her eye was purer than to behold Iniquity, she abhorred it, and us for it: and therefore would not vouchsafe us once to cast off her eye. O but now the case is altered: no sooner doth our Vine Bud upon the Earth, but she is willing to condescend, and so willing, that she breaks a Window through the Walls of Heaven to look down upon this Bud: and nomarvail: for, what could Righteousness desire to see, and satifie herself in, that was not to be seen in Jesus Christ? He was all righteous, there was not the least spot of sin to be found in him: his Birth was clean, and his Life was holy, and his Death was innocent; both his Soul and Body were without all sin; both his Spirit and his Mouth were without all guile; whatsoever satisfaction Righteousness would have, she might have it in him, lay Judgment to the Line, and Righteousness to the Balance, and there is nothing in Jesus but Streight for the Line, and full Weight for the Balance.

3. For the meeting and agreement of all God's Attributes, as the issue and the least effect of this budding Vine, the Verse before tells us; that Mercy and Truth are met together, Righteousness and Peace have kissed each other: This meeting presupposeth a distance before they met: for they that meet come from divers coasts. Here then are two things considerable; first the distance, and secondly, the meeting. But you will say, how came this distance? Are they not all the Attributes of God's undivided essence? are they not all four in the bosom of God from all eternity? I answer, Yes: they are undivided in themselves, but they were divided about us; it was Adam's sin, and ours in him, that first divided Heaven, yea the very Attributes of God, and in a sort, God himself: I shall speak to both these, that you may first see the Differences, and then the Agreement and blessed Harmony of these glorious Attributes.

1. The Difference; immediately after the Fall, the great question (which before you heard of in the Decree and Councils of God) was actually propounded, What should be done with sinful Man? in this case we must speak of God after the manner of men; and I hope you will give me the liberty that others (I suppose warrantably) take: Come, saith God, What shall be done with sinful Man? He hath violated my Law, broken my Command, and as much as lies in him, unpinn'd the Fabric of the World, spoiled my Glorious Work of Heaven, and Earth, and Sea, and all therein: undone himself forever and ever, and ever. O what shall be done with this sinful, rebellious, forlorn unhappy Creature, Man? Silence being a while in Heaven, and all struck into amaze, to see the great God of Heaven stirred up in wrath, at last Mercy and Peace stand up, and they seek with sweet, gentle entreaties to pacify God's Anger: but Righteousness and Truth are on the contrary side: and they provoke God Almighty to go on, and to manifest himself (as he is indeed) a consuming Fire, a sin-revenging God. The Plea is drawn up, and reported at large by Bernard, Andrew's, and others.

1. Mercy began; for out of her readiness to do good, she is ever foremost: her inclination is to pity, or rather she herself is an inclination to pity those that are in misery: and if she can but relieve them, let them deserve what they will, be sure she will relieve them: for she looks not to the party what he is, nor what he hath done, nor what he he deserved: but (which is the comfort of us miserable sinners) she looks at what he suffers, and in how woeful and wretched a case he is. Her Plea was thus; What Lord hast thou made all Men in vain? wilt thou now destroy him for whom thou madest the World? shall the householder be cast out, and thrown into prison, and there remain till he hath paid the utmost Farthing? shall all the Men and Women in the World, from first to last, be damned forever and ever? alas! What profit is in their Blood? What will it avail to crowd Men and Devils together in Hell-flames? Will not those Devils, the grand Enemies of God, rejoice at this? And what then will become of thy great Name on Earth? Is not this thy Name? The Lord, the Lord, Merciful, and Gracious, Long-suffering, and abundant in Goodness and Truth, keeping Mercy for Thousands, forgiving Iniquity, Transgressions and Sins? What will the Lord undo his Name? Will the Lord cast off forever? And will he be favorable no more? Is his Mercy clean gone forever? Will he be no more entreated? hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath he in Anger shut up his tender Bowels? With these, and such like holy whisperings or mutterings did Mercy enter into God's bowels, and make them yern, and melt again into compassions.

But 2. Truth must be heard as well as Mercy; and she lays in matter of exception, and her Plea was thus; What is God but his Word? Now this was thy word to Adam, In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the death; and this was thy word to all the Sons of Adam, the soul that sinneth, that soul shall die. And God may not falsify his word: his word is truth; falsify truth? That may not be: all men are liars: but God is true, even truth itself.— This Plea of Truth is seconded by Righteousness; and thus she bespeaks God; shall not the Judge of all the world do right? Thou hast declared thyself over and over to be just and righteous; O Lord God of Israel thou art righteous:— Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy Judgments.—Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shall be:—Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy Judgments,—Yea the Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works: and wherein consists this righteousness, but in rendering to everyone according to his due? And what is the sinners due, but Death? The wages of sin is Death: What shall not those sinners die the Death? That were (as before) to make Truth false, so here to do Right Wrong.

These were the Controversies at that time: so that Peace could not tell how to speak a prevailing word amongst them: nay the controversy grew so high, that they made it their own cases: what shall become of me (said Mercy) if God spare not sinners? and what shall become of me (said Justice) if God do spare sinners? what shall become of me (said Mercy) if God will show no mercy? And what shall become of me (said Justice) if God will do no Justice? why, alas perish (said Mercy) if thou wilt not pity: if man die, I die also: and I perish (said Justice) if thou wilt have mercy: surely I die, if man die not. To this it came, and in these terms brake up the Assembly, and away they went one from another. Truth went to Heaven, and was a Stranger upon Earth, Righteousness went with her, and would not so much as look down from Heaven: Mercy, she staid below still; for where should Mercy be, if not with the miserable? As for Peace, she went between both, to see if she could make them meet again in better terms: in the mean while, our Salvation lies a bleeding; the Plea hangs, and we stand as Prisoners at the Bar, and know not what shall become of us; for though two be for us, yet two are against us, as strong, and more stiff than they: so that much depends upon this meeting; for either they must be at peace between themselves, or they cannot be at peace with us, nor can we be at peace with God.

Many means were made before Christ's time for a blessed meeting, but it would not be; Sacrifice and Burnt-Offering thou wouldst not have: these means were not prevalent enough to cause a meeting. Where stuck it? you will say: Surely it was not long of Mercy, she was easy to be entreated: she looked up to Heaven, but Righteousness would not look down; and indeed here was the business: Righteousness must and will have satisfaction, or else Righteousness should not be Righteous; either some satisfaction for sin must be given to God, or she will never meet more; better all men in the World were damned, than that the Righteousness of God should be Unrighteous. And this now puts on the great transaction of our Savior's Birth.

Well then, our Savior is born; and this birth occasions a gracious meeting of the Attributes: such an attractive is this Birth, this Bud of Christ, that all meet there; indeed they cannot otherwise but meet in him in whom all blessed Attributes of God do meet. It is Christ is Mercy, and Christ is Truth, and Christ is Righteousness, and Christ is Peace. 1. Christ is Mercy; thus Zacharias prophesied: That through the tender Mercy of our God the day-spring (or Branch) from on high hath visited us. And God the Father of Christ, is called the Father of mercies; as if Mercy were his Son, who had no other Son but his dearly beloved Son in whom he is well pleased.— 2. Christ is Truth; I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life. That Truth in whom is accomplished whatsoever was prefigured of the Messiah. God shall send forth his Mercy and his Truth: And, O prepare Mercy and Truth. And this is his Name, the Lord, the Lord,—abundant in Goodness and Truth. He is a God of Truth, saith Moses; plenteous in Mercy and Truth, saith David; full of Grace and Truth, saith John; for the Law was given by Moses, but Grace and Truth came by Jesus Christ. He is Truth by Name, and Truth by Nature, and Truth by Office.—3. Christ is Righteousness. This is his Name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness. And, unto you that fear my Name, shall the Son of Righteousness arise with healing under his Wings. And, Christ of God is made unto us Wisdom, Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption. And according to his Type Melchizedek, this was his Style, King of Righteousness.—4. Christ is Peace. This is his Name wherewith he is called, wonderful Counselor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. And, Christ is our Peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle Wall of Partition between us. And therefore prays the Apostle, now the Lord of Peace himself (or, the Lord himself, who is Peace) give you peace always by all means. And according to his Type Melchizedek, as he was King of Righteousness, so also he was King of Salem, which is King of Peace.—Thus Christ is Mercy, and Christ is Truth, and Christ is Righteousness, and Christ is Peace: Now where should all these meet but in him who is them all? Surely there they meet, and at the meeting, they all ran first and kissed the Son; and that done, Truth ran to Mercy, and embraced her, and Righteousness to Peace, and kissed her; they that so long had been parted, and stood out in difference, now they meet, and are made Friends again. O the blessed effects of this Birth of Christ! it is Christ that reconciled them, and that reconciled us and them; He reconciled all things (saith the Apostle) whether they be things in Earth, or things in Heaven. Now is Heaven at peace with itself, and Heaven and Earth at peace one with another; and that which glues all, and makes the Peace, is this Birth of Christ; the budding of this Vine. Truth shall Bud out of the Earth, and then Mercy and Truth shall meet together, &c.

3. For the Blossom. The nature of Vines is, in its season to Blossom, or to bear sweet flowers. Pharaoh's Butler, you know, dreamed of a Vine, that not only budded, but Blossomed; Her Blossomes shot forth: and thus Christ, our Vine, both Budded and Blossomed; he was full of the sweetest Flowers; now what were these Flowers and Blossoms of Christ, but his virtues and blessed graces? In this only Christ differs from the Vine, in that in him was seen not only one sort or kind of Flowers, but every kind. Bernard reckons up the violet of humility, the lilly of chastity, the rose of patience, the saffron of abstinence; I may not so far enlarge myself; but in reference to his Birth, I cannot but admire at his humility, patience, and infinite condescensions; that the Creator should become a creature, though an Angel, it were a great Gulf, which no created understanding could measure; but that he should reject Angels, and take the Seed of Abraham: that he should be made lower than the Angels, who is God over all; that he would be conceived, who is the uncreated wisdom: in the dark Prison of the Womb, who is the Light of the World: and that of a Woman, the weaker, first sinning sex, who is the holy one and power of God; that he would be born, who beareth all things: the Lord of all, of a lowly handmaid: in fullness of time, who is eternity: in the night-time, who is the Son of Righteousness: in the Winter, who gives life and heat: in a time of public taxation, who is Lord of Lord's: and that not at Rome, the Lady of Nations; nor at Jerusalem, the Glory of the East, but at Bethlehem the least of the Thousands of Judah; not in a Palace prepared, nor in his Mothers House, but in an Inn; not in the best Room, nor in any Room of the House, but in a Stable of Beasts; not attended there with a royal Guard, but with Joseph and Mary; not adorned in Robes, but swaddled in Clouts; not stately Enthronized, but laid in a Manger; nor lastly, his Birth Proclaimed by the Kings at Arms, but by poor Shepherds.

That the Word should be an infant not able to speak a word; that life should be mortal; that Power should be subject to a poor Carpenter; that the Lord of the Covenant should be Circumcised; that the God of the Temple should be presented in the Temple; that Wisdom should be instructed; infiniteness should grow in stature; that the feeder of all things should be fed; that all these are preludes, and but beginnings of his sufferings; O wonderful condescension! O admirable patience! O rare humility! how strange are the Blooming Blossoms of this Vine.

4. For the Fruit: the nature of Vines is to cast sweet savors, but to bear sour Grapes: Christ that was blameless before God and Man, yet bore the heavy burden of our sin. O the sweetness of his savors! because of the savor of thy good Ointments, thy Name is an Ointment poured forth; whether by savors, we mean his words, the very Officers of the Jews can say, Never Man speak like this Man: or whether by savors, we mean his deeds, his very Enemies confess him a just Man; so Pilate's Wife could send her Husband word, Have thou nothing to do with that just Man: the wise Men that brought their Offerings give him Gold, Frankincense, and Myrrh; Gold is given him as to a potent King, Frankincense as to a gracious God, and Myrrh as to an holy Priest: He is a King to rule, a God to save, and a Priest to mediate: thus far he casts sweet savors; but digest them better, and they prove sour Grapes; a King he was, but mocked with the Title, Hail King of the Jews: a God he was, but he emptied himself; He made himself of no Reputation: an holy Priest he was, but such a Priest as must offer up himself for a Sacrifice: The wise men that came from the East, they saw his Infirmity, and yet adore his power; they saw his infancy, yet adore his wisdom; they saw his poverty, yet adore the riches of his mercy; they saw him whom they inquired after, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? The very Title cast sweet savors, but it bears sower Grapes; he is a King, that's a title of honor; but he is King of the Jews, that's a word of reproach.

All along his life you may see these two, sweet savors, but sour Grapes: vidisti vilia, audi mirifica, saith Ambrose; the things you see are mean, but the things you see and hear are wonderful; mean it was to see a sort of Shepherds, wonderful it is to see a troop of Angels; mean it was to hear one say, laid in the Cratch below; wonderful it is to hear many sing Glory to God on high; mean it was to see him man; wonderful it is to know him God. Here's a little Child fainting and groaning, yet a powerful God ruling and commanding; hungry himself, to show our nature; yet feeding five thousand, to show his power: dying on the Cross, as the Son of Adam; disposing of Paradise, as the Son of God. As it was said of Bethlehem, Minima & non Minima; the least of the thousands, Micah 5.2. Not the least of thousands, Mat. 2.6. So we say of this Bethlehemite, Minimus & non Minimus; he shall sit upon the Throne of David, Isa. 9.7. Yet he hath born our griefs, and carried our sorrows, Isa. 53.4. His Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom, Dan. 7.27. Yet his end shall be, and he shall have nothing, Dan. 9.26. Thus all along from his Cratch to his Cross, sweet Savours, but sour Grapes; at last indeed the Grapes grew to a ripeness, and then he was pressed, and his dearest heart-blood run out in abundant streams; this was the sweet juice of our Garden-Vine; God planted it, the Heavens Water it, the Jews prune it; what remains now, but that we abide in it? but of that when we come to the Directions how we are to look.

SECT. VII. Of some Consequents after Christ's Birth.

Some Consequents after the Birth of Christ may be touched, whilst yet he was but a Child of twelve years old. As,—

1. When he was but eight days old, he was Circumcised, and named Jesus. As there was shame in his Birth, so there was pain in his Circumcision; a sharp Razor paseth through his skin presently after he is born; not that he needed this Ceremony, but that for us he was content to be legally impure. In this early humiliation he plainly discovers the Riches of his Grace; now he sheds his Blood in drops, and thereby gives an earnest of those Rivers which he afterwards poured out for the cleansing of our Nature, and extinguishing the wrath of God; and for a further discovery of his Grace, at this time his Name is given him, which was Jesus. This is the name which we should engrave in our hearts; rest our Faith on, and place our help in, and love with the overflowings of Charity, and Joy, and Adoration; above all things we had need of a Jesus, a Savior for our Souls, and from our sins, and from the everlasting destruction which sin will otherwise bring upon our Souls; hence this Name Jesus and this Sign Circumcision are joined together; for by the effusion of his blood he was to be our Jesus, our Savior: Without shedding of Blood is no remission of Sins, no Salvation of Souls. Circumcision was the Seal, and now was it that our Jesus was under God's Great Seal to take his Office: We have heard how he carried on the great Work of our Salvation from Eternity; this very Name and Office of Jesus, a Savior, was resolved on in God's fore-council, and given forth from the beginning; and we have heard of late how it was promised and foretold by an Angel; but now it is Signed and Sealed with an absolute Commission and fullness of Power; Him hath God the Father fealed, John. 6.27. It is his Office and his very profession to save, that all may repair unto him to that end: Come unto me all ye that are weary; and him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out; in which respect he is called the Savior of the world (i.e.) of Samaritans, Jews, Gentiles, Kings, Shepherds, and of all sorts of men.

2. When he was forty days old, he was brought to Jerusalem, and presented to the Lord; as it is written in the Law of the Lord, every Male that openeth the womb shall be called Holy to the Lord. O wonder! there was no impurity in the Son of God, and yet he is first circumcised, and then he is brought and offered to the Lord; he that came to be sin for us, would in our Persons be legally unclean, that by satisfying the Law, he might take away our uncleanness; he that was above the Law, would come under the Law, that he might free us from the Law; we are all born sinners; but O the unspeakable Mercy of our Jesus, that provides a remedy as early as our sin: first, he is conceived, and then he is born, to sanctify our Conceptions and our Births; and after his Birth, he is first Circumcised, and then he is presented to the Lord; that by two holy acts, that which was naturally unholy might be hallowed unto God: Christ hath not left our very Infancy without redress, but by himself, thus offered, he cleanseth us presently from our filthiness.—Now is Christ brought in his Mothers Arms to his own House, the Temple; and as Man, he is presented to himself, as God. O how Glorious did that Temple seem, now the Owner was within the walls of it! Now was the Hour, and Guest come, in regard whereof the second Temple should surpass the first; this was the House built for him, and dedicated to him; there had he dwelt long in his Typical presence, nothing was done there whereby he was not resembled; and now the body of these shadows is come, and presents himself, where he had ever been represented. You will say, what is this to me, or to my Soul? O yes! Jerusalem is now everywhere; there is no Church-Assembly, no Christian heart which is not a Temple of the Living God; and there is no Temple of God wherein Christ is not presented to his Father: Thus we have the benefit of Christ's fulfilling the Law of Righteousness; God sent his Son, made of a Woman, made under the Law, that he might redeem them that were under the Law, that we might receive the Adoption of Sons. It is, as if the Father should have said to Christ, Come my dear Son, here are certain Malefactors under the Law, to suffer and to be executed; what say you to them? Why, I will become under the Law (saith Christ) I will take upon me their Execution, and suffer for them; and to this purpose he is first circumcised; and then he is presented to the Lord.

3. When he was yet under one year old, as some; or about two, as others, he fled into Egypt. As there was no room for him in Bethlehem, so now there is no room for him in all Judea; no sooner he came to his own, but he must fly from them; what a wonder is this? Could not Christ have quit himself from Herod a thousand ways? what could an Arm of flesh have done against the God of Spirits? had Jesus been of the spirit of some of his Disciples, he might have commanded fire from Heaven on those that should have come to have apprehended him; but hereby he taught us to bear the yoke even in our youth; thus would he suffer, that he might sanctify to us our early afflictions, he flies into Egypt, the slaughter-house of God's People, the sink of the world, the surnace of Israel's ancient afflictions: what a change is here; Israel, the first-born of God •lie out of Egypt into Judea; and Christ the first-born of all Creatures flies out of Judea into Egypt; Eusebius reports that the Child Jesus arriving in Egypt, and being by design carried into a Temple, all the Statutes of the Idol-God's fell down like Dagon at the presence of the Ark; and to this purpose he cites Isaiah's Prophecy; Behold, the Lord shall come into Egypt, and the Idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence. Now is Egypt become the Sanctuary, and Judea the inquisition-house of the Son of God; surely he that is everywhere the same, knows how to make all places alike to his; he knows how to preserve Daniel in the Lions den; the three Children in a fiery furnace; Jonah in a Whales belly, and Christ in the midst of Egypt.

4. When he was now some five years old, say some; or but two years and a quarter old, say others; an Angel appears again in a Dream to Joseph, saying, Arise and take the young Child and his Mother, and return again into the land of Israel, for they are dead which sought the young Child's Life. Herod, that took away the lives of all the Infants in or about Bethlehem, is now himself dead, and gone to his own place, and by this means the Coast is clear for the return of that holy Family. O the wonderful dispensation of Christ in concealing of himself from men! all this while he carries himself as an Infant, and though he know all things, yet he neither takes, nor gives any notice of his removal or disposing, but appoints that to be done by his Angel, which the Angel could not have done but by him. As Christ was pleased to take upon him our Nature, so in our Nature he was pleased to be a perfect Child; for that is the word; take the young Child and his Mother; he suppressed the manifestation and exercise of that Godhead, whereto the Infant-nature was conjoined, as the Birth of Christ, so the infancy of Christ was exceeding humble: Oh how should we magnify him, or deject ourselves for him, who himself became thus humble for our sakes?

5. When he was twelve years old, he with his Parents go up to Jerusalem after the custom of the Feast. This pious act of his younger years intends to lead our first years into timely devotion; but I shall not insist on that; I would rather observe him sitting in the midst of the Doctors, both hearing them and asking them Questions; whilst the Children of his age were a playing in the streets, he is found of his parents sitting in the Temple; not to gaze on the outward glory of that house, of the Golden Candlesticks, or Tables, or Cherubims, or the Pillars, or the Molten Sea, or the Altar of Gold, or the Vessels of pure Gold; no, no, but to hear and oppose the Doctors. He, who as God, gave them all the Wisdom they had, doth now, as the Son of man, hearken to the Wisdom he had given them; and when he had heard, then he asks; and after that, no doubt he answers; his very questions were instructions; for I cannot think that he meant so much to learn, as to teach those Doctors of Israel. Surely these Rabbins had never heard the voice of such a Tutor; they could not but see the very Wisdom of God in this Child; and therefore, saith the Text, they all wonder; or they were all astonished at his understanding and answers; their eyes saw nothing but a Child, but their ears heard the wonderful things of God's Law; betwixt what they saw, and what they heard, they could not but be distracted and amazed. But why did ye not (O ye Jewish teachers) remember now the Star and the Sages, and the Angels, and the Shepherds; why did ye not now bethink yourselves of Herod, and of his enquiry, and of your answer, that in Bethlehem of Judea Christ should be born? You cited the prophets, and why did you not mind that Prophecy now, that, unto us a Child is born, and unto us a Son is given, and his Name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace? Fruitless is the wonder that endeth not in Faith; no Light is sufficient, where the eyes were held through unbelief and prejudice.

6. After this, from twelve to the thirtieth year of his Age, we read nothing of the Acts of Christ, but that he went down with his Parents unto Nazareth, and was subject to them; as he went up to Jerusalem to Worship God, and in some sort to show himself God; so now he goes down to Nazareth to attend his particular Calling. This is the meaning of those words, and he was subject to them: Christ's subjection to his Parents extends to the profession and exercise of his life; certainly Christ was not all that time from twelve to thirty years, idle; as he was educated by his Parents, so of his reputed Father he learnt to be a Carpenter; this, I take it, is plain in these words, Is not this the Carpenter, the Son of Mary? It appears (say our English Annotations) that Christ exercised that Trade in his younger years. I know Matthew renders it thus, Is not this the Carpenters Son, is not his Mother called Mary? But Mark thus, is not this the Carpenter? &c. Some comment thus, that while Joseph was alive, Christ wrought with him in the Trade of a Carpenter, and when Joseph died, which happened before the manifestation of Jesus unto Israel, he wrought alone, and was no more called the Carpenters Son, but the Carpenter himself: here's comfort for men of the meanest Callings; as Husbandry was honored in the Person and Condition of the first Adam before his Fall, so now the Handicraft. O the Poverty, Humility, Severity of Jesus! it appears at this time especially, in his Labouring, Working, Hewing of Wood, or the like; here's a sharp reproof to all those that spend their time in idleness, or without a particular Calling, that take no pains at all, unless in pursuit after Vain, Foolish, Superfluous, Sinful things; what! are they wiser than Christ? Our Jesus would not by any means thus spend his time. Indeed for the while he did nothing famous, or of public note; but neither was this without a Mystery: In doing nothing Public, saith one, He achieved great, and sumptuous, and praise-worthy acts: There is a season and time to every purpose under heaven: as there is a time of silence, and a time to speak, so there is a time for public, and a time for private Negotiations; as yet Christ conceals his virtues, and conforms himself to the conversation of men, that the Mystery of his Incarnation might not be thought a Phantasm; then he would have his Virtues and Graces to shine out, when men usually come to their vigor and strength both of body and mind. And besides, as it was said of a Divine, that he would never Preach a Sermon, but he would first endeavor to practice it himself; so I am sure did Christ; he would not teach the World, saying, Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, but first he would practice; first do, then teach; as Luke tells Theophilus, he had writ all that Jesus began both to do and teach.

But concerning this time of his youth, because in Scripture there is so deep a silence, I shall therefore pass it by.

Thus far have I propounded the Object we are to look unto; it is Jesus in his first coming, or incarnation, whiles yet a Child of twelve years old: Our next Work is to direct you in the Art or Mystery, how we are to look unto him in this respect.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. Of knowing Jesus as carrying on the great Work of our Salvation in his Birth.

What Looking] comprehends, you have heard before: And that we may have an inward experimental look on him whom our souls pant after, let us practice all these Particulars: As—

1. Let us know Jesus, carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his Coming or Incarnation. Come let us learn what he did for us when he came amongst us. There is not one Passage in his first appearing, but it is of mighty concernment unto us: Is it possible that the great God of Heaven and Earth should so infinitely condescend (as we have heard) but on some great Design? And what Design could there be, but only his Glory, and the Creatures good? O my Soul! If thou hast any interest in Christ, all this concerns thee; the Lord Jesus in these very transactions had an eye to thee; he was Incarnate for thee, he was conceived, and born for thee; look not on these things as Notionals, or Generals; look not on the bare history of things; for that is but unprofitable; the main duty is in eying the end, the meaning, and intent of Christ; and especially as it relates to thee, not to others, but to thyself. Alas! what comfort were it to a poor prisoner, if he should hear that the King or Prince, of his mere grace and love, visited all the Prisoners in this and that Dungeon, and that he made a Goal-delivery, and set all free, but he never came near the Place where he poor wretch lies bound in Fetters and cold Irons? or suppose he gives a visit to that very man, and offers him the tenders of Grace and Freedom, if he will but accept of it; and (because of his waywardness) Perswades, Intreats, Commands him to come out, and take his liberty; and yet he will not regard, or apply it to himself, what comfort can he have? what fruit, what benefit shall he receive? Dear soul, this is thy case, if thou art not in Christ, if thou hadst not heard the Offer, and embraced and closed with it, then what is Christ's Incarnation, Conception, Nativity unto thee? Come! learn! not merely as a Scholar, to gain some notional-knowledge; but as a Christian, as one that feels virtue coming out of Christ in every of these respects: Study close this great transaction in reference to thyself. I know not how it happens, whether out of the generality of some Preachers handling this Subject, or whether out of the Superstition of the time wherein it usually hath been handled, it either savors not with some Christians, or it is seldom thought of by the most; O God forbid we throw out of the doors, such a blessed necessary truth! If rightly applied, it is a Christians joy; Behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy that shall be to all People; for unto you is born in the City of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. Sure the Birth of Christ is of mighty concernment unto thee; unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; there is not any piece of this transaction, but it is of special use and worth thy pains. How many break their brains, and waste their Spirits in studying Arts and Sciences, things in comparison of no value; whereas Paul otherwise determined not to know anything among you but Jesus Christ? To know Jesus Christ in every piece and point, whether in Birth, or Life, or Death, it is saving knowledge. O stand not upon Cost, whether Pains or Study, Tears or Prayers, Peace or Wealth, Goods or Name, Life or Liberty; sell all for this Pearl. Christ is of that worth and use, that thou canst never over-buy him, though thou gavest thyself and all the World for him; the study of Christ is the study of studies; the knowledge of Christ is the knowledge of everything that is necessary, either for this World, or for the World to come. O study Christ in every of the foresaid respects.

SECT. II. Considering Jesus in that respect.

2. Let us consider Jesus, carrying on this great work of our Salvation at his first Coming or Incarnation. It is not enough to study and know these great Mysteries; but according to the Measure of Knowledge we have, we must Muse, Meditate, Ponder, and Consider of them. Now this Consideration brings Christ nearer and closer to the soul. Consideration gathers up all the long fore-passed Acts and Monuments of Christ, and finds a deal of sweetness and power to come flowing from them. Consideration fastens Christ more strongly to the Soul, and as it were, rivets the Soul to Jesus Christ, and fastens him in the heart. A soul that truly considers and meditates of Christ, thinks and talks of nothing else but Christ; it takes hold, and will not let him go. I will keep to thee (saith the soul in meditation) for thou art my life. Why thus, O my Soul, consider thou of Christ, and of what he did for thee when he was incarnate! and that thou mayest not confound thyself in thy meditations, consider a part of these particulars. — As, —

1. Consider Jesus in his Fore-runner, and the blessed tidings of his coming in the flesh; now the long-looked for time drew near, a glorious Angel is sent from Heaven, and he comes with an Olive-branch of peace; first he presents himself to Zacharias, and then to Mary; to her he imparts the Message on which God sent him into this nether World; Behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his name Jesus. Till now Humane Nature was less than that of Angels; but by the Incarnation of the Word, it was to be exalted above the Cherubims. What sweet News? What blessed Tidings was this Message? The Decree of old must now be accomplished, and an Angel proclaims it upon Earth; hear O ye Sons of Adam, this concerns you as much as the Virgin: Were ye not all undone in the Loins of your first Father? Was not my Soul, and thy Soul in danger of Hell-fire; was not this our case and condition; that after a little life upon Earth, we should have been thrown into eternal torments, where had been nothing but Weeping, Wailing, and Gnashing of Teeth? And now that God and Christ should bid an Angel tell the News, Ye shall not die; lo, here a Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and he shall be your Jesus; he shall save you from this Hell, and Death, and Sin: he shall deliver your Souls, he shall save you to the utmost; his Name is Jesus, and he shall not bear his Name for naught; believe in him, and ye shall live with him in Glory. O blessed news! Men may talk what they will of this and that news, everyone gapes after it: but there is no news so welcome to one even now ready to perish, as to hear of a Savior; tell a man in his Sickness of one that will make him well again: tell a man in Captivity of one that will rescue him, and set him free again; tell a man in Prison, condemned to die, of one with a pardon, that will save his life; and everyone of these will say, this is the best news that ever was heard: O then, if it be good tidings to hear of a Savior, where is only a matter of loss of life, or of this Earth; how much more when it comes to the loss of Heaven, to the danger of Hell, when our Souls are at stake, and likely to be damned for evermore; what glad tidings would that be to hear of one that could save our souls from that destroyer? is not such a Savior worth the hearkening after? were not the birth of such a one good news? O my soul, ponder on these words, as if an Angel, seeing thee stand on the brim of Hell, should speak to thee, even to thy soul.

2. Consider Jesus in his Conception; no sooner the news heard, but Christ is conceived by the Holy Ghost in the Virgins Womb; this Conception is worthy our consideration: what, that the great God of Heaven should condescend so far as to take our Nature upon him, and to take it in the same way, and after the same manner as we do? the Womb of the Virgin was surely no such place, but he might well have abhorred it; true, but he meant by this to sanctify our very Conceptions; and to that purpose, he is conceived in an holy manner, even by the holy Ghost; we must not be too curious to enquire after the manner of the holy Ghosts operation, who therefore overshadowed the Virgin; this is work for our hearts, and not merely for our heads: humble Faith, and not curious inquisition shall find the sweetness of this Mystery. It was David's Complaint, Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my Mother conceive me. O my Soul, this was thy case in thy very first being or beginning, and hadst thou died in that condition, the word is express, that nothing defiled nor unclean shall enter into the City of Glory; but here's the remedy, thy sinful Conception is sanctified by Christ's holy Conception: the holiness of thy Jesus serves as a Cover to hide thy Original pollutions from the eyes of God. O consider this! Jesus Christ was not conceived in vain; he was not idle, doing nothing whiles he was in his Mothers Womb; he that from all eternity began, he was then carrying on the great work of our salvation for us: O consider this Conception thus, till thou bring'st it near and close to thy soul; till thou feelest some sweetness and power coming, and flowing from Jesus in the Womb.

3. Consider the duplicity of Natures in Jesus Christ: The Word was made Flesh; no sooner was he conceived, but he was God-Man, Man-God; he was perfectly framed, and instantly united to the eternal Word: God sent his Son, there's the Nature Divine; made of a Woman, there's the Nature Humane. Certainly great is this Mystery, that the Word is made Flesh; that the Son of God is made of a Woman; that a Star gives Light to the Sun; that a Branch doth bear the Vine; that a Creature gives being to the Creator; that the Mother was younger than what she bear, and a great deal lesser than what she contained. Admire O my Soul at this! but withal consider, that all this was for us and our Salvation; he was Man, that he might die for us: and he was God, that his death might be sufficient to save us: had he been Man alone, not God, he might have suffered, but he could never have satisfied for sin; he could not have been Jesus, a Savior of Souls; and had he been God alone, not Man, he had not been of kin to our Nature offending; and so he could not have satisfied the Justice of God in the same Nature wherein it was offended; neither could he, as God alone, have died for Sin; and the Decree was out, that our Redeemer must die for Sin: for without shedding of Blood there is no Remission: and no shedding of Blood, no Passion could possibly befall the Godhead of Jesus Christ. I shall not dispute the power of God, whether he was able to lay down another kind of way of man's Redemption, than by the Incarnation of the Son of God: without controversy this was the Will of God, and he appointed no other way, because he would not. O my Soul, consider of this in relation to thyself, he is God-man, that he might suffer and satisfy for thy sins: he is Godman, that he might be able and fit, most fully to finish the work of thy salvation; as God, he is able, and as man, he is fit to discharge the Office of Mediator; as God, he is able to bear the punishment of sin; and as man, he is fit to suffer for sin: O the wisdom of God in this very way! Mans Nature can suffer Death, but not overcome it; the Divine Nature can overcome death and all things; but he cannot suffer it: and hence there is a duplicity of natures in Jesus Christ: O muse on this; it is a matter worthy of thy serious consideration.

4. Consider the real distinction of these two Natures in Christ. As the unapproachable light of the God-head was put into the dim and dark Lanthorn of human flesh, so these two natures remained entire, without any conversion, commixion, or confusion; they were not as Wine and Water, that become one by mixing; there is no such blending the divine and human nature; they were not as Snow and Water, that become one by dissolving of the Snow into the Water; there is no such changing of the Humane Nature into the Divine, or of the Divine Nature into the Humane: Some say indeed, that the God-head was more plentifully communicated with the Manhood after his Resurrection, than now at his Conception; but howsoever, it did not then swallow up the Truth of his Manhood, as a whole Sea would swallow up one drop of Oil; look as at first moment of his Conception, he was God and man, so these two Natures continued still, distinct in substance, properties, and actions. Why consider this, O my soul, in reference to thyself; O there's comfort in this! by this means thou hast now free access unto the Throne of Grace, that thou mayest find help in thy necessities; and as thou hast free access, so thou mayest boldly draw near; his Deity indeed confounds, but his Humanity comforts faint and feeble Souls; his Divine Nature amazeth, but his Humane Nature encourageth us to come unto him; even after his Resurrection he was pleased to send this comfortable message to the sons of men, Go to my Brethren, and say unto them, I ascend to my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God; now as long as he is not ashamed to call us Brethren, God is not ashamed to be called our God. O the sweet fruit, that we may gather of this Tree, the real distinction of two Natures in Christ. As long as Christ is man as well as God, we have a motive strong enough to appease his Father, and to turn his favorable countenance towards us; here is our happiness, that there is one Mediator between God and Man, the Man Christ Jesus.

5. consider the Union of the two natures of Christ in one and the same Person; as he was the branch of the Lord, and the fruit of the Earth, so these two natures were tied with such a Gordian knot, as sin, hell, and the grave were never able to untie; yea, though in the death of Christ there was a separation of the soul from the body; yet in that separation, the hypostatical Union remained firm, unshaken and indissoluble: in this Meditation thou hast great cause, O my Soul, to admire and adore; wonderful things are spoken of thee, O Christ! he is God in a Person of a God-head, so as neither the Father, nor the Holy Ghost were made flesh; and he is man in the nature of man, not properly the Person, the human nature of Christ never having any Personal subsistence out of the God-head; this is a mystery, that no Angel, much less man is able to comprehend: we have not another example of such an Union (as you have heard) only the nearest similitude, or resemblance we can find, is that of the Branch and Tree into which it is engrafted; we see one Tree may be set into another, and it groweth in the Stock thereof, and becometh one and the same Tree, though there be two natures or kinds of fruit still remaining therein; so in the Son of God made man, though there be two natures, yet both being united into one Person, there is but one Son of God and one Jesus Christ. If thou wilt consider this great mystery of Godliness any further, review what hath been said in the object propounded, where this union is set forth more largely and particularly; but especially consider the blessed effects of this union in reference to thyself; as our nature in the person of Christ, is united to the God-head, so our persons in and by this Union of Christ, are brought nigh to God. Hence it is that God doth set his Sanctuary and Tabernacle among us; and that he dwells with us; and which is more, that he makes us houses and habitations, wherein he himself is pleased to dwell by his holy Spirit. Ye are the Temple of the Living God, as God hath said I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my People, 2. Cor. 6.16. Was not this Christ's Prayer in our behalf? I pray not for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me, I in them, and thou in me, that they may be perfect in one, and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me. By reason of this hypostatical union of Christ, the Spirit of Christ is given to us in the very moment of our regeneration. And because ye are Sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba Father; and hereby we know that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit. As the members of the Body howsoever distinct amongst themselves, and all differing from the head, yet by reason of one soul informing both the head and members, they all make one compositum, or man; so all believers in Christ, howsoever distinct Persons amongst themselves, and all distinct from the Person of Christ, and especially from the Godhead which is incommunicable, yet by one and the same spirit abiding in Christ, and all his Members, they become one, there is one body, and one spirit: he that is joined to the Lord, is one Spirit. O my Soul, consider of this; and in considering, believe thy part in this, and the rather, because the means of this union on thy part is a true and lively faith; faith is the first effect and instrument of the Spirit of Christ, disposing and enabling thy soul to cleave unto Christ, and for this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ—that Christ may dwell in your hearts by Faith.

6. Consider the birth of Christ, this man-God, God-man, who in his divine generation was the Son of God, in his human generation was born in a stable, for the saving of the Children of men, who were as the ox and mule having no understanding. It were a fruitful meditation to consider over and over that sweet resemblance of Christ being a Vine; methinks I hear the Voice of my beloved, rise up my love—the fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vine with the tender grapes gives a good smell; arise my love, my fair one, and come away; if Christ knocks at the door, who will not awake, and arise? if Christ comes in view, who will not look unto Jesus? if Christ the Vine calls us to come see the vine with the tender grape, who will not taste the goodness, smell the sweetness? and after a little taste of that goodness, and sweetness that is in him, who would not long after more, till we come from the first fruits to the last-fruits of the Spirit, even to those visions and fruitions of Christ in Glory? Consider, O my soul, of this Vine, till thou hast brought Christ near and close unto thyself. Suppose thy heart, the Garden wherein this Vine was planted, wherein it budded, blossomed, and bare fruit, suppose the holy Ghost to come upon thee, and to form and fashion in thee Jesus Christ; (thus Paul bespeaks the Galatians, my little Children, of whom I travel in Birth again until Christ be formed in you,) would not this affect? would not the whole soul be taken up with this? come, receive Christ into thy soul, or if that work be done, if Christ be formed in thee, O Cherish him! (I speak of the Spiritual birth) O keep him in thy heart! let him there bud, and blossom, and bear fruit; let him fill thy soul, with his Divine Graces; O that thou couldst say it feelingly, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: O that this were the Issue of thy meditation on Christ's Birth! even whiles thou art going with the shepherds to Bethlehem, and there findest thy Savior lying in a Cratch, that thou wouldst bring him thence, and make thy heart to be his Cradle! I would not give a farthing for a meditation merely on the History of Christ's Birth; either draw virtue from him, by feeling him within, or thy meditation will be fruitless.—

7. Consider those few consequents after Christ's Birth; every action of Christ is our instruction; here are many particulars, but none in vain; Christ is considered under much variety of notion, but he is still sweet under all. Is it possible, O my soul, that thou shouldst tire thyself in the contemplations of Jesus Christ? if one flower yield thee not pleasure, or delight, go to a second, a third; observe how the Bees gather honey, after a while that they have sucked one flower, they go to another; so for a while observe the circumcision of Jesus Christ, and suck there, and gather some honey out of that flower; Christ had never been, Circumcised but that the same might be done to our souls, that was done to his Body, O that the same Christ would do that in us, that was done to him for us. Again, observe Christ's presentation in the Temple, this was the Law of those that first opened the womb; now Christ was the firstborn of Mary, and indeed the first-born of all Creatures; and he was consecrate unto God, that by him we might be consecrate, and made holy; and that by him we might be accepted, when we are offered unto the Lord. Again, observe Christ's flight into Egypt; though the infancy is usually most quiet, and devoyd of trouble, yet here life and toil, began together; and see how speedily this comes after Christ's dedication unto God: Alas! Alas! We are no sooner born again, then we are persecuted; if the Church travel, and bring forth a Male, she is in danger of the Dragons streams. Again, observe Christ's return into Judea, he was not sent but to the lost Sheep of the House of Israel; with them alone he was personally to converse in his Ministry, in which respect he was called a Minister of Circumcision. And where should he be trained, and show himself, but amongst them to whom God had sent him? The Gospel first began there, and as a preparation to it, Christ now in his Childhood returns thither. Again, observe Christ Disputing with the Doctors in the Temple; in his very non-age Christ gives a taste of his future proof, see how early his divine graces put forth themselves, In Him were hid (saith the Apostle) all the Treasures of Wisdom and Knowledge; all the treasures were hid in him, and yet some of those treasures appeared very early betimes: his wisdom in his very infancy is admired at, nor is it without our profit, for of God he is made wisdom unto us. Again, observe how he spent the remainder of his Youth, in all his examples he meant our Instructions, He went down with his Parents, and was subject to them; he was not idly bred, but serves his Generation in the poor way of a Carpenter; It is every way good for a Man to bear God's Yoke even from his Infancy. Christ is enured betimes to the hardship of life, and to the strict observation of the Law, both of God and Nature.

See, O my Soul, what a world of matter is before thee to consider of, here is Jesus under many a Nation, here's the annuntiation of Jesus, the conception of Jesus, the duplicity of natures in Jesus, the real distinction, the wonderful union, the nativity of Jesus, together with some consequents after it. Go over these with often and frequent thoughts, give not over till thou feelest thy Heart begin to warm; true Meditation is as the bellows of the Soul that doth kindle, and inflame holy affections, and by renewed, and more forcible thoughts, as by renewed, and stronger blasts it doth renew, and increase the flame.

SECT. III. Of Desiring after Jesus in that Respect.

3. LET us desire after Jesus, carrying on the great work of our Salvation at his first coming, or incarnation. It is not enough to know, and consider, but we must desire. Now, What is desire, but a certain Motion of the Appetite, by which the Soul darts itself towards the absent good, purposely to draw near, and to unite itself thereunto? The incarnation of Christ according to the Letter, was the desire of Nations; so the Prophet, I will shake all Nations, and the Desire of all Nations shall come. O how they that lived before Christ, Desired after this coming of Christ! Abraham Desired to see that day, Two Thousand Years and more before it came: it was the expectation of all the Patriarchs, O when will that day come? And surely the incarnation of Christ in the fruit, or efficacy, or application is, or should be the Desire of all Christians. There is merit, and virtue in Jesus Christ, in every passage of Christ, in his conception, incarnation; in his birth, and in those consequents after his birth; now to make these ours, that we may have our share, and part, and interest in them, we must here begin; O my soul do thou desire, do thou seek to possess thyself of Christ, set thy desire (as the Needle point) aright, and all the rest will follow: never will union be with the absent good, but the Soul by Desire, must first dart itself towards it. True it is, and pity it is, Millions of Souls stand at a distance from Jesus Christ, and why? they have no desire towards him: but, O that my soul, and thy soul (whosoever thou art that readest) would Desire! O that we could Desire, and long after him until we languish, and be compelled to cry out with the spouse, Stay me with flagons, and comfort me with Apples, for I am Sick of Love.

Is there not good reason for it? What is there in Christ that is not Desirable? view over all those excellencies of his conception; of his two natures, really distinguished, and yet wonderfully united; of his birth; of those few consequents after his birth: but above all, see the fruit of all; he was conceived that our conceptions might be sanctified: he was the Son of man that he might suffer for us, and the Son of God that he might satisfy divine justice: he was God▪ and Man in one person, that we might be one with him, Members of his Body, and of his Flesh, and of his Bones; he was born of the Virgin, that there might be a spiritual conception and birth of Christ in our Virgin-hearts; or he was conceived, and born that we might conceive the grace of Christ in our hearts, and bring it forth in our lives; What? Are not these desirable things? Never tell me of thy present enjoyments, for never was Christ so enjoyed in this life, but thou hast cause to desire yet more of Christ; It is worth thy observation, that Spiritual desires after Christ, do neither load, nor cloy the heart, but rather open, and enlarge it for more and more; Who was better acquainted with God than Moses? and yet, Who was more importunate to know him better? I beseech thee show me thy glory: And, Who was more acquainted with Christ than Paul? and yet who was more importunate to be with him nearer? I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ. Further and further union with Christ, and communion with Christ, are most desirable things, and are not these the fruits of his incarnation? the effects of his hypostatical, personal union? more and more peace, and love, and reconciliation betwixt God and us are desirable things; and are not these the fruits of Christ's birth, the effects of his budding out of the earth, was it not then That Righteousness looked down from Heaven? That Mercy and Truth met together, and Righteousness and Peace kissed each other? an higher degree of holiness, sanctification, likeness to God and Christ are desirable things; and are not these the fruits of his circumcision, and presentation to the Lord? the effects of all those consequents that follow after his birth? Come, Soul, and stir up thy desires; true desires are not wavering and dull, but resolute and full of quickness; observe how the nature of true desires in Scripture is set forth by the most pathetic and strong similitudes of Hunger and Thirst, and those not common neither, but by The panting of a tired Hart after the rivers of waters, and by the gaping of dry ground after some seasonable showers. O then! How is it that the passages of thy desires are so narrow, and almost shut up? Nay, How is it that thy vessels are so full of contrary qualities, that there is scarce any room in thy Soul for Christ, and all his Train? Will not the desires of the Patriarchs witness against thee? How cried they after Christ's coming in the Flesh, Bow the Heavens O Lord, and come down, Psal. 144.5. Oh that Thou wouldst rent the Heavens, that Thou wouldst come down, Isa. 64.1. Drop down ye Heavens from above, and let the Skies pour down Righteousness, let the Earth open, and bring forth Salvation, Isa. 45.8. Is it possible that their desires should be more vehement after Christ than ours? They lived on the dark-side of the cloud, but we on the bright-side; the veil was upon their hearts, which veil is done away in Christ; they saw Christ afar off, and their sight was very dim, and dark; But we all with open face, as in a glass, behold the glory of the Lord. One would think, the less anything is known, the less it should be desired; O my soul, either thou art more ignorant of Christ, than the Patriarchs of old, or thy heart is more out of frame than theirs; suspect the latter, and blame thy heart, it may be thy turpid and sluggish nature hath laid thy desires asleep; if an hungry man will sleep, his hunger will sleep with him: But, O stir up, and awake thy desires! Present before them that glorious object, the incarnation of Jesus Christ; it is an object which the very Angels desire to look into; and, Art not thou more concerned in it than the Angels? is not the fruit of the incarnation thine, more especially thine? Come then, stir up those motions of thy appetite, by which the soul darts itself towards the absent good; draw nearer and nearer till thou comest to union and enjoyment, cry after Christ, Why is his Chariot so long in coming? Why tarry the Wheelles of his Chariots?

SECT. IV. Of Hoping in Jesus in that Respect.

4. LET us Hope in Jesus, carrying on the great Work of our Salvation at his first coming, or incarnation. Only here remember, I speak not of every hope, but only of such an hope as is grounded on some certainty and knowledge. This is the main question, whether Christ's incarnation belongs unto me? the Prophet tells us, that Unto us a Child is born, and unto us a Son is given. But how may I Hope that this Child is born to me? and that this Son is given to me? what ground for that? Out of these words of the Prophet, I shall draw a double Evidence, which may be instead of all: our first Evidence from the former words, Unto us a Child is born; our second Evidence from the latter words, unto us a Son is given. 1. From the former words I lay down this position, unto us a Child is born, if we are new born; the surest way to know our interest in the birth of Christ, it is to know Christ born in us, or formed in us, as the Apostle speaks. The new birth is the effect of Christ's birth, and a sure sign that Christ is born to us. Say then, O my soul, Art thou born anew? is there in thee a new nature, a new principle? is the Image of God, and of Christ in thy soul? so the Apostle stiles it, the bearing of the Image of the heavenly; why then was Christ incarnate for thee; if thy new birth be not clear enough, thou mayest try it further by these following rules?

1. Where this new birth is, there is new desires, new comforts, new contentments. Sometimes with the prodigal thou wast content with husks, but now nothing will satisfy thee, but thy Fathers mansion, and thy Fathers feasts; sometimes thou mindest only earthly things, but now the favor of God, the light of his countenance, society with him, and enjoying of him, are thy chief desires; This is a good sign! David's heart and flesh, and all breathed after God; My soul longeth; yea even fainteth for the Courts of the Lord, my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God. Men truly regenerate, do not judge it so happy to be wealthy, great, and honored in the world, as to have the light of God's favor shine upon them; O my soul, dost thou see the glory of the world, and thou fallest down to worship it? dost thou say in the increase of worldly comfort, it is good to be here? Then fear thyself; but if these things compared with Christ, are vain, and light, and of poor and mean esteem, then hope well, and be assured that thou art born again, and that Christ is formed in thee.

2. Where this new birth is, there is new words, new works, new affections, a new conversation, Old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new. Paul once a persecutor, but Behold now he prayeth. And Such were some of you, but now ye are washed, now ye are sanctified, now ye are justified in the Name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God; As every man is, so is he affected, so he speaks, and so he lives; if thy life be supernatural, so is thy affections, so is thy words, so is thy conversation; Paul lived a life once of a bloody persecutor, he breathed out threatenings against all the Professors of the Lord Jesus, but now it is otherwise; The life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. O my soul, Hast thou the old conversation, the old affections, the old discourse, the old passions thou used to have? What? Is thy heart a den of lusts, a cage of unclean imaginations? Then fear thyself, there cannot from a sweet fountain come forth bitter streams; there cannot from a refined spirit, as refined, come forth corrupted actions or imaginations; a Thorn cannot send forth Grapes, saith Christ; so neither can a Vine send forth Thorns, say we. I know there is in the best, something of flesh, as well as of the spirit; but if thou art new born, then thou canst not but strive against it, and wilt endeavor to conquer it.

3. Where this new birth is, there is a new nature, a new principle; Peter calls it the hidden man of the heart, the divine nature. Paul calls it the inward man; the new creature, it is compared to a root, to a fountain, to a foundation, and for want of this foundation, we see now in these sad times so much inconstancy, and unsettledness in some professors themselves, many have gotten new and strange notions, but they have not new natures, new principles of grace; if grace were but rooted in their hearts, though the winds did blow, and storms arise, they would continue firm and stable, as being founded upon a Rock. Never tell me of profession, show, outward action, outward conversation, outward duties of Religion; all this may be, and yet no new creature; you have some bruits that can act many things like men, but because they have not an human nature, they are still brutish; so many things may be done in a way of holiness, which yet come not from this inward principle of renovation, and therefore it is but copper, and not gold; mistake not O my soul in this, which is thy best and surest evidence: though I call the new birth a new creature, my meaning is not as if a new faculty were infused into him that is new born; a man when he is regenerate, hath no more faculties in his soul than he had before his regeneration; only in the work of regeneration, those abilities which the man had before, are now improved, and made spiritual; and so they work now spiritually, which before wrought naturally. As in the resurrection from the dead, our bodies shall have no more, nor other parts and members than they had before, only those parts and members which now are natural, shall then by the power of God be made spiritual, It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body; there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body; so the same faculties, and the same abilities which before regeneration were but natural, are now spiritual, and work spiritually, they are all brought under the government of the Spirit of Christ; a lively resemblance of this change in the faculties of the soul, we may discern in those natural and sensitive faculties, which we have common with beasts; as to live, to move, to desire, to feel, the beasts having no higher principle than sense, use them sensually; but a man enjoying the same faculties under the command of a reasonable soul, he useth them rationally: so is it in a regenerate man; his understanding, will, and affections, when they had no other command but reason, he only used them rationally, but now being under the guiding of the Spirit of Christ, they work spiritually, and he useth them spiritually; and hence it is that a regenerate man is everywhere in Scripture, said to Walk after the Spirit; to be led by the Spirit, to walk in the Spirit; the Spirit (by way of infusing or shedding) gives power, an ability, a seed, a principle of spiritual life, which the soul had not before; and from this principle of spiritual life planted in the Soul, flows or springs those spiritual motions and operations (as the Spirit leads them out) according to the habit, or principle of the new creature, the divine nature, the spiritual life infused. Come then, look to it O my soul, What is thy principle within? consider not so much the outward actions, the outward duties of Religion, as, that root from whence they grow, that principle from whence they come: they are fixed ones, settled ones by way of life in thee? Clocks have their motions, but they are not motions of life, because they have no principles of life within. Is there life within? then art thou born again, yea even unto thee a Child is born. This is one evidence.

2. From the latter words, I lay down this position; unto us a Son is given, if we are God's Sons. The best way to know our Interest in the Son of God, it is to know ourselves to be God's Sons by grace, as Christ was God's Son by nature: Christians to whom Christ is given, are coheirs with Christ, only Christ is the first-born, and hath the preeminence in all things; our sonship is an effect of Christ's sonship, and a sure sign that unto us a Son is given. Say then, O my soul,

Art thou a Son of God? Dost thou resemble God (according to thy capacity) being holy, even as he is holy? Why then? Christ was incarnate for thee, he was given to thee. If thy sonship be not clear enough, thou mayst try it further by these following Rules.

1. The Sons of God, Fear God, If I be a Father, Where is my Honor? (saith God) if I be a Master, Where is my Fear? If I be a Son of God, there will be an holy Fear and Trembling upon me in all my approaches unto God. I know there is a servile mercenary Fear, and that is unworthy, and unbecoming the Son of God; but there is a filial Fear, and that is an excellent check, and bridle to all our wantonness: What Son will not Fear the frowns and anger of his loving Father? I dare not do this (will he say) my Father will be offended; and I, whether shall I go? Agreeable to this is the Apostles advice, If ye call on the Father, pass your sojourning here with Fear.

2. The Sons of God Love God, and Obey God out of a principle of Love. Suppose there were no Heaven, or Glory to bestow upon a regenerate person, yet would he Obey God out of a principle of Love; not that it is unlawful for the Child of God to have an Eye unto the recompense of reward; Moses reason of esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasure of Egypt, was, for that he had respect unto the recompense of reward: he had respect, in the original, he had a fixed intent Eye; there was in him a Love of the reward, and yet withal a Love of God, and therefore his Love of the reward was not mercenary: but this, I say, though there were no reward at all, a Child of God hath such a principle of Love within him, that for Loves sake he would Obey his God; he is led by the Spirit, and therefore he Obeys; now the Spirit that leads him, is a Spirit of Love; and as many as are led by the Spirit of God, are the Sons of God.

3. The Sons of God imitate God in his Love and Goodness to all Men. Our Savior amplifies this excellent property of God, He causeth his Sun to shine upon good and bad; and thence he concludeth, Be ye perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect. Goodness to bad men is the highest degree of Grace, and as it were the perfection of all: O my Soul, Canst thou imitate God in this? Consider how thy Father bears it; though the wicked provoke him day by day, yet for all that he doth not quickly revenge; vengeance indeed is only his, and he may in justice do what he will that way; and 'tis the opinion of some, that if the most patient man in the world should but sit in God's Throne one day, and see, and observe the doings, and miscarriges of the Sons of Men, he would quickly set all the World on Fire; yet God seeth all, and for all that He doth not make the Earth presently to gape, and devour us; He puts not out the glorious Light of the Sun, He doth not dissolve the Work of Creation, He doth not for Mans Sin presently blast everything into Dust: What an excellent pattern is this for thee to Write after? Canst thou but forgive thy Enemies? Do well to them that do evil to thee? O this is a sure sign of Grace and Sonship! It is storied of some Heathens, who beating a Christian almost to Death, asked him, What great matter Christ did ever do for him? Even this (said the Christian) That I can forgive you, though you use me thus cruelly; here was a Child of God indeed: It is a sweet resemblance of our Father, and of our Savior Jesus Christ, to Love our Enemies, to Bless them that Curse us, to do Good unto them that Hate us, to Pray for them that Despitefully use us, and Persecute us. O my Soul look to this, consult this ground of Hope; if this Law be written in thy Heart, write it down amongst thy Evidences, that thou art God's Son, yea that even unto thee a Son is given.

To Review the Grounds: What? is a Child born to me? and a Son given to me? What? am I indeed new born? am I indeed God's Son, or Daughter? do I upon the search find in my Soul new desires, new comforts, new contentments? What? are my words, my works, and affections, and conversation new? is there in me a new nature, a new principle? hath the Spirit by way of infusing or shedding, given me a new Power, a new Ability, a Seed of Spiritual Life, which I had not before? do I upon the search find that I fear God, and love God, and imitate God in some good measure in his love and goodness towards all Men? can I indeed, and really forgive an Enemy, and according to opportunity and my ability, do good unto them that do evil unto me? Why should I not then confidently and comfortably hope, that I have my share and interest in the birth of Christ, in the blessed incarnation, and conception of Jesus Christ? Away, away all despair, and dejections, and despondencies of Spirit! If these be my grounds of Hope, it is time to hold up head, and heart, and hands, and all with cheerfulness and confidence, and to say with the Spouse, I am my beloveds, and my beloved is mine.

SECT. V. Of Believing in Jesus in that Respect.

5. Let us Believe on Jesus, carrying on the great work of our Salvation at his first coming or incarnation. I know many staggerings are oft in Christians, What, is it likely that Christ should be incarnate for me? That such a God should do such a thing, for such a sinful, woeful, abominable wretch as I am? Ah my Soul, put thy propriety in Christ's incarnation out of dispute, that thou mayst be able to say, As God was manifest in the flesh, and I may not doubt it; so God is manifest in me, and I dare not deny it.

But to help the Soul in this choice Duty, I shall first propose the hindrances of Faith. 2. The helps of Faith in this Respect. 3. The manner how to act our Faith. 4. The encouragements to bring on the soul to believe its part in this blessed incarnation of Jesus Christ.

For the first, there are but three things that can hinder Faith; As —

1. The exceeding unworthiness of the soul; and to this purpose are those complaints, What? Christ incarnate for me? for such a dead Dog as I am? What King would dethrone himself, and become a Toad to save Toads? and am not I at a greater distance from God, than a Toad is from me? hath not sin made my soul more ugly in God's Eye, than any loathsome Toad can be in my Eye? O I am less than the least of all God's Mercies, I am fitter for Hell and Devils, than for Union and Communion with God and Christ, I dare not, I cannot Believe.

2. The infinite exactness of divine justice which must be satisfied; a soul deeply and seriously considering of this, it startles thereat, and cries, O what will become of my soul? one of the least sins that I stand Guilty of, deserves Death, and eternal Wrath, The wages of sin is death: and I cannot satisfy; though I have trespassed to many millions of talents, I have not one mite of mine own to pay; O then how should I believe? What thoughts can I entertain of God's Mercy and Love to me-ward? God's Law condemns me, my own Conscience accuseth me, and Justice will have its due.

3. The want of a Mediator, or some suitable Person, which may stand between the Sinner and God. If on my part there be unworthiness, and on God's part exact and strict, and severe Justice; and withal I see no Mediator, which I may go unto, and first close withal before I deal with the infinite glory of God himself, how should I but despair, and cry out? O wretched man that I am! O that I had never been! or if I must needs have a being; Oh that I had been a toad, or serpent, or any venomous creature rather than a man; for when they die they perish, and there's an end of them; but the end of a reprobate sinner is torments without end: O woe and alas! I cannot believe, there's no room for faith in this case! these are the hindrances.

2. The helps of faith in this sad condition are these.

1. A consideration that God is pleased to pass by, and to overlook the unworthiness of his poor creatures; this we see plain in the very act of his incarnation; himself disdains not to be as his poor creatures, to wear their own flesh, to take upon him human nature; and in all things to become like unto man, sin only excepted.

2. A consideration that God satisfies Justice, by setting up Christ who is Justice itself; now was it that mercy and truth met together, and righteousness and peace kissed each other; now was it that free grace and merit, that fullness and nothingness were made one; now was it that all things became nothing, and nothing all things; our nature which lay in rags, was enriched with the unsearchable treasures of glory; now was it that God was made flesh; and so that flesh which was so weak, as not able to save its own life, was now enabled to save millions of souls, and to bring forth the greatest designs of God; now was it that truth ran to mercy, and embraced her, and righteousness to peace, and kissed her, in Christ they meet, yea in him was the infinite exactness of God's Justice satisfied.

3. A consideration that God hath set up Christ as a Mediator: that he was incarnate in order to reconciliation, and salvation of souls, but for the accomplishment of this design Christ had never been incarnate; the very end of his uniting flesh unto him, was in order to the reconciliation of us poor souls, alas we had sinned, and by sin deserved everlasting damnation, but to save us, and to satisfy himself, God takes our nature and joins it to his Son, and calls that Christ a Savior: This is the Gospel-notion of Christ, for what is Christ, but God himself in our nature, transacting our peace? In this Christ is that fullness, and righteousness, and love, and bowels to receive the first acts of our faith; and to have immediate union and communion with us; indeed we pitch not our faith first or immediately on God himself; yet at last we come to him, and our faith lives in God (as one saith sweetly) before it is aware, through the sweet intervention of that person which is God himself, only called by another name, the Lord Jesus Christ; and these are the helps of faith in reference to our unworthiness, God's justice, and the want of a Mediator betwixt God and us.

3. The manner how to act our faith on Christ incarnate, is this—

1. Faith must directly go to Christ: we find indeed in the Bible some particular promises of this and that grace: and in proper speaking the way to live by faith, it is to live upon the promises in the want of the thing, or to apprehend the thing itself contained in the promise: but the promises are not given to the elect immediately without Christ; no, no, first Christ, and then all other things, Incline your ears, and come unto me; 1. Come unto Christ, and then, I will make an everlasting Covenant, (which contains all the promises) even the sure Mercies of David. As in marriage, the woman first consents to have the man, and then all the benefits that necessarily follow; so the soul by faith, first pitcheth upon Christ himself, and then on the privileges that flow from Christ. Say Soul, dost thou want any temporal Blessing? suppose it be the payment of Debts, thy daily Bread, Health, &c. Why? look now through the Scripture for promises of these things, and let thy faith act thus, If God hath given me Christ, the greatest blessing, then certainly he will give me all these things so far as they may be for my good: in the twenty thirteenth Psalm we find a bundle of promises, but he begins thus, The Lord is my Shepherd, saith David, and what then? Therefore I shall not want; the believing Patriarchs through faith subdued Kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stoped the mouths of Lions, did wonders in the world; but what did they chiefly look to in this their Faith? Surely to the promise to come, and to that better thing, Christ himself; and therefore the Apostle concludes, having such a cloud of witnesses, that thus lived and died by faith, let us look unto Jesus, the Author and finisher of our Faith.

2. Faith must directly go to Christ as God in our flesh; some think it a carnal apprehension of Jesus Christ, to know him as in flesh; I confess to know him only so, and absolutely so; to consider Jesus no other way, but as having flesh, and going up and down in weakness; it is no better than a carnal apprehension; but to consider Christ as God in flesh, and to consider that flesh as acted by God, and filled with God, it is not a carnal, but a true and spiritual apprehension of Jesus Christ; and hither is faith to be directed immediately, and in the first place; suppose a case of danger by some enemies, and I find a promise of protection from my enemies, I look on that; but in the first place thus I argue, if the Lord hath given me Christ (God in the flesh) to save me from Hell, then much more will he save me from these fleshly enemies. Thus Judah had a promise, that Syria should not prevail against Judah, they doubted of this, but how doth the Lord seek to assure them? why thus, a Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and his name shall be Immanuel: this seems a strong reason to flesh and blood; I knew one turn Infidel, and to deny Jesus Christ upon this very argument. Ah (thought he) what a grand imposture is this, that Christ's conception, and Christ's birth many years after, should be a present sign of ruin of Rezin King of Aram, and of the preservation of Ahaz King of Judah? alas poor soul, he was not acquainted with this art of living by faith; he might have seen the very same reason elsewhere, the yoke of their burden, and the stuff of their shoulder, and the rod of their oppressor shall be broken—for unto us a child is born, and unto us a Son is given; if their faith had not first respected Christ incarnate, they could never have expected any temporal deliverance by that promise of deliverance, first laid down; But in this way they might, and so may we.—You will say what's this to us? they looked for Christ to come in the flesh, but now he is come, and that time and design is gone and past many a year since; I answer no, the time is gone, but the design is not; Christ remains God in the flesh to this very day; he came not as once to manifest himself in flesh, to satisfy God's justice in the flesh for sin, and so to lay it down again; that flesh remains, and shall remain; nor is it without use, for all the spirit and life which the Saints now have, or which the Saints shall have unto the end of the World, it is to be conveyed through that flesh, yea the Spirit itself dwells in it, and is conveyed through it, and therefore if they had so much Gospel-Spirit in the time of the Old Testament (which indeed was rare) how much more should we go to Christ as God in the flesh, and look upon it as a standing Ordinance, and believe perfectly on it?

3. Faith must go and lie at the feet of Christ; faith must fix and fasten itself on this God in our flesh: some go to Christ, and look on Jesus with loose and transient glances, they bring in but flashy, secondary, ordinary actings of faith, they have but course and common apprehensions of Jesus Christ. Oh but we should come to Christ with solemn serious spirits; we should look on Jesus piercingly, till we see him as God is in him, and as such a person thus and thus qualified from Heaven; we should labor to apprehend what is the riches of this glorious mystery of Christ's Incarnation; we should dive into the depths of his glorious actings; we should study this mystery above all other studies; nothing is so pleasant, and nothing is more deep; that one person should be God and Man, that God should be man in our nature, and yet not assume the person of a man; that blessedness should be made a curse, that Heaven should be let down into Hell, that the God of the world would shut himself up (as it were) in a body; that the invisible God should be made visible to sense; that all things should become nothing, and make itself of no reputation; that God should make our nature, which had sinned against him, to be the great Ordinance of Reconciling us unto himself, that God should take our flesh, and dwell in it with all his fullness, and make that flesh more Glorious than the Angels, and advance that flesh into oneness with himself, and through that flesh open all his councils and rich discoveries of love and free grace unto the Sons of men; that this Man-God, God-Man should be our Savior, Redeemer, Reconciler, Father, Friend; Oh what mysteries are these! no wonder if when Christ was born, the Apostle cries, we saw his glory, as of the only begotten Son of God; noting out, that at first sight of him, so much glory sparkled from him as could appear from none, but a God walking up and down the world. O my soul, let not such a treasury be unlookt into; set faith on work with a redoubled strength; surely we live not like men under this great design, if our eye of faith be not firmly and steadfastly set on this. O that we were but insighted into these glories! that we were but acquainted with these lively discoveries? how blessedly might we live by the Faith of the Son of God who loved us, and gave himself for us?

4. Faith must look principally to the end and meaning of Christ as God coming in the Flesh. Now what was the design and meaning of Christ in this? The Apostle answers, Rom. 8.3. God sent his Son in the likeness of sinful Flesh, to condemn sin in the Flesh, (i.e.) God the Father sent into the World his eternal and only begotten Son, whom in his eternal counsel he had designed to the Office of a Mediator, to take away or abolish in the first place Original Sin. Mark these two words, he condemned Sin in the Flesh; the first word condemned] is by a Metonymy put for that which follows Condemnation, namely for the abolishing of sin; as condemned persons used to be cut off, and to be taken out of the World, that they may be no more; so Christ hath condemned or abolished this Sin. For the second word, in the Flesh] is meant that Humane Nature which Christ assumed: he abolished sin altogether in his own nature; and that Flesh of his being perfectly holy, and the holiness of it being imputed unto us, it takes away our guilt in respect of the impureness of our Nature also. Some may object, if this were so, then were we without Original sin? I answer, the Flesh or the Nature which Christ took upon him, was altogether without sin; and by imputation of it we are in proportion freed from sin; Christ had not the least spot of Original sin; and if we are Christ's, then is this sin in some measure abolished and taken out of our hearts. But howsoever the filth of this sin may remain in part, yet the guilt is removed: in this respect the purity of Christ's Humane Nature is no less reckoned to us for the curing of our defiled Nature, than the sufferings of Christ are reckoned to us, for the remission of our actual Sins. O my Soul, look to this end of Christ as God in the Flesh; if thou consider him as made Flesh and Blood, and laid in a Manger, think withal, that his meaning was to condemn sin in our Flesh; there flows from the Holiness of Christ's Nature such a power, as countermands the power of our Original sin, and acquits and discharges from the condemnation of the same Sin: not only the Death, and Life, but also the Conception and Birth of Christ hath its influence into our Justification. Oh the sweet that a lively Faith may draw from this Head!

4. The Encouragements to bring on Souls to believe on Christ Incarnate, we may draw—

1. From the excellency of this Object. This very Incarnation of Christ is the Foundation of all other actings of God for us; it is the very Hinge or Pole on which all turn; it is the Cabinet wherein all the Designs of God do lie; Election, Redemption, Justification, Adoption, Glorification, are all wrapped up in it; it is the highest pitch of the Declaration of God's Wisdom, Goodness, Power and Glory; Oh what a sweet Object of Faith is this! I know there are some other things in in Christ which are most proper for some Acts of Faith; as Christ dying is most proper for the pardon of actual sin; and Christ rising from the dead is most proper for the evidencing of our Justification; but the strongest purest Acts of Faith are those which take in Christ as such a Person, laid out in all this Glory. Christ's Incarnation is more general than Christ's Passion, or Christ's Resurrection, and (as some would have it) includes all; Christ's Incarnation holds forth in some sort Christ in his fullness, and so it is the full and complete subject of our Faith; or if it be only more comprehensive, why then it requires more comprehensive Acts of Faith, and by consequence we have more enjoyments of Christ this way, than any other way: Come poor Soul, I feel, I feel thy eyes are running to and fro the World, to find comforts and happiness on Earth: O come, cast thy eyes back, and see Heaven and Earth in one Object! look fixedly on Christ Incarnate! there is more in this, than in all the variety of this World, or of that World to come. Here is an Object of Faith, and Love, and Joy, and Delight; here is a Compendium of all Glories; here is one for a heart to be taken with to all Eternity. O lay thy mouth to this Fountain; suck and be satisfied with the breasts of his Consolation; Milk out and be delighted with the brightness of his Glory.

2. From the suitableness of this Object. Christ Incarnate is most suitable for our Faith to act upon. We are indeed to believe on God; but God essentially is the utmost Object of Faith; we cannot come to God, but in and through Christ; alas, God is offended, and therefore we cannot find ground immediately to go to God; hence you heard that Faith must directly go to Christ as God in our Flesh. O the infinite condescensions of God in Christ! God takes up our Nature, and joins it to himself as one person, and lays out that before our Faith; so that here is God, and God suited to the particular state and condition of the sinner. Oh now with what boldness may our souls draw nigh to God? Why art thou strange poor soul? Why standest thou afar off, as if it were death to draw nigh? Of whom art thou afraid? Is God come down amongst men, and canst thou not see him, lest thou die and perish? Oh look once more, and be not discouraged! See, God is not come down in fire, God is not descended in the Armor of Justice and everlasting burnings; No, no, he is clothed with the Garments of Flesh, he sweetly desires to converse with thee after thine own form; he is come down to beseech thee, to see with thine own eyes thy eternal happiness. q. d. Come poor Soul, come, put in thy hands, and feel my heart how it beats in love towards thee. O the wonder of Heaven! it is the cry of some poor souls. Oh that I might see God! loe here God is come down in the likeness of man, he walks in our own shape amongst us; it is the cry oft others, O that I might have my heart united to God! Why he is come down on this very purpose, and hath united our nature unto himself. Surely God hath left all the World without excuse: Oh that ever there should be an heart of unbelief, after these sensible demonstrations of Divine Glory and Love? Why soul, wilt thou now stand off? Tell me, what wouldst thou have God do more? Can he manifest himself in a more taking, alluring, suitable way to thy condition? Is there anything below flesh wherein the great God can humble himself for thy good? Come, think of another, and a better way, or else forever believe. Methinks it is sad to see Believers shy in their approaches to God, or doubtful of their acceptance with God, when God himself stoops first, and is so in love with our acquaintance, that he will be of the some nature that we are. O let not such a Rock of strength be slighted, but every day entertain sweet and precious thoughts of Christ being incarnate; enure thy heart to a way of believing on this Jesus, as he carries on the great Work of thy Slavation at his first Coming or Incarnation.

3. From the Gospel-tenders and offers of this blessed Object to our Souls. As Christ is come in our nature to satisfy, so he comes in the Gospel freely and fully to offer thee terms of Love; therein are set out the most rich and alluring expressions that possibly can be; therein is set out that this Incarnation of Christ was God's own acting, out of his own Love and Grace, and Glory; therein is set out the Birth, and Life, and Death of Christ; and this he could not do, but he must be Incarnate: God takes our Flesh, and he useth that as an Organ, or Instrument whereby to Act; he was Flesh to suffer, as he was Spirit to satisfy for our sins. Methinks I might challenge Unbelief, and bid it come forth; let it appear if it dare before this Consideration: What is not God Incarnate enough to satisfy thy Conscience? Come nigh poor Soul! hear the Voice of Christ inviting, Come unto me all ye that are weary, and heavy laden with Sin; and O let these rich and glorious openings of the heart of Christ overcome thy heart: Suppose the case thus; what if God should have done no more than this? Had he only looked down from Heaven, and hearing sinners cry out, O woe, woe unto us forever! we have broke God's Law, incur'd the penalty, damned our own souls; O who should deliver us? Who will save us from the Wrath to Come? Who will keep us out of Hell, our deserved Dungeon, where the fury of the great Judge burns in a fiery Brimstone, and his revenge boyls in a fiery Torrent limitless and unquenchable. In this case, if God hearing sinners thus crying out; had he, I say, only looked down and told them in sweet Language, Poor souls, I will pardon your Sins by my own Prerogative, I made the Law, and I will dispense with it; fear not, I have the Keys of Life and Death, and upon my word you shall not perish; What soul would not have been raised up even from the bottom of Hell at this very voice? I know a poor soul would have scrupled at this, and have said, What then should become of infinite Justice? shall that be dishonored to save my Soul? This would have been a scruple indeed, especially considering that great controversy (as we have heard) of Mercy and Truth, and Righteousness and Peace: but to remove all controversies, God hath not only spoken from Heaven by himself, but he himself is come down from Heaven to Earth to speak unto us: O see this Miracle of Mercy! God is come down in Flesh, he is come as a price; he himself will pay himself according to all the demands of his Justice and Righteousness before our eyes; and all this done, now he offers and tenders himself unto thy soul. Oh my soul, why shouldst thou fear to cast thyself upon thy God? I know thy Objection of vileness; notwithstanding all thy vileness, God himself offers himself to lead thee by the hand; and to remove all doubts, God himself hath put a price sufficient in the hands of Justice to stop her Mouth: or if yet thou fearest to come to God, why come then to thy own Flesh, go to Christ, as having thy own nature; it is he that calls thee: How? Go to Flesh? Go to thy own Nature? What can be said more to draw on thy trembling heart? If God himself, and God so fitted and qualified (as I may say) will not allure, must not men die and perish in unbelief? What, O my soul! (give me leave to chide thee) Is God come down so low to thee? and dost thou now stand questioning whether thou shouldst go, or come to him? What is this but to say, all that God is, or does, or says, is too little to persuade me into Faith? I cannot tell, but one would think that unbelief should be strangled, quite slain upon this consideration; all this, O my soul, thou hearest in the Gospel; there is Christ incarnate set forth to the life; there is Christ suing thy Loves, and offering himself as thy beloved in thy own nature; there it is written that God is come down in flesh, with an Olive-branch of eternal peace in his hand, and bids you all be witness, he is not come to destroy, but to save. Oh that this encouragement might be of force to improve Christ's glorious design to the supplying of all thy wants, and to the making up of all thy losses! believe, Oh believe thy part in Christ incarnate!

SECT. VI. Of loving Jesus in that respect.

LET us love Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our Salvation at his first Coming or Incarnation. Now what is Love but an expansion or egress of the heart and spirits to the Object loved; or to the Object whereby it is drawn or attracted? Mark O my soul, whatsoever hath an attractive power, it is in that respect an Object, or general cause of Love; and canst thou possibly light on any Object more attractive than the Incarnation of Jesus Christ? If Love be the Load-stone of Love, what an attractive is this before thee? methinks the very sight of Christ incarnate is enough to ravish thee with the apprehension of his infinite goodness: see how he calls out, or (as it were) draws out the soul to Union, Vision, and Participation of his Glory! O come, and yield up thyself unto him; give him thyself, and conform all thy Affections and Actions to his Will: O love him, not with a divided, but with all thy heart.

But to excite this Love, I shall only propound the Object, which will be Argument enough. Love causeth Love; now as God's first Love to man was in making man like himself; so his second great Love was in making himself like to man; stay then a while upon this Love; for (I take it) this is the greater Love of the two: Nay, if I must speak freely, I believe this was the fullest visible demonstration of God's Love that ever was: The Evangelist expresseth it thus, God so loved the World, that he gave his only begotten Son; he gave him to be incarnate, to be made flesh, and to suffer Death; but the extension of his Love lies in that expression, he so loved] So! how? Why, so fully, so fatherly, so freely, as no Tongue can tell, no heart can think: In this Love God did not only let out a mercy, give out a bare grace in self, but he took our nature upon him. It is usually said, that it is a greater love of God to save a soul, than to make a World; and I think it was a greater Love of God to take our nature, than simply to save our souls; for a King to dispense with the Law, and by his own prerogative to save a Murderer from the Gallows, is not such an Act of Love and Mercy as to take the Murderers Cloaths, and to wear them as their Richest Livery? Why, God in taking our nature hath done thus, and more than thus; he would not save us by his mere Prerogative; but he takes our Cloaths, our Flesh, and in that Flesh he personates us, and in that Flesh he will die for us, that we might not die, but live through him for evermore. Surely this was Love, that God will be no more God (as it were) simply, but he will take up another nature, rather than the brightness of his Glory shall undo our souls.

It will not be amiss (whilst I am endeavoring to draw a Line of God's love in Christ, from first to last in saving Souls) that here we look back a little, and summarily contract the passages of Love from that eternity before all Worlds, unto this present. 1. God had an eternal design to discover his infinite love to some besides himself; O the wonder of this! was there any need or necessity of such a discovery? Though God was one, and in that respect alone (as we may imagine) yet God was not solitary; in that eternity within his own proper essence or substance, there were three Divine Persons, and betwixt them there was a blessed Communication of Love; Christ on Earth could say, I am not alone, because the Father is with me; and then before the Earth was, might the Father say, I am not alone, for the Son is with me; and the Son might say, I am not alone, for the Father is with me; and the Holy Ghost might say, I am not alone, for both the Father and the Son are with me; though in that eternity there was no Creature to whom these three Persons should communicate their Love; yet was there a glorious communication, and breaking out of Love from one to another; before there was a World, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost did infinitely glorify themselves, Joh. 17.5. Surely they loved one another, and they rejoiced in the fruition of one another, Prov. 8.30. What need then was there of the discovery of God's love to any one besides himself? O my soul, I know no necessity for it, only thus was the pleasure of God; Even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight: such was the love of God, that it would not contain itself within that infinite Ocean of himself, but it would needs have Rivers and Channels, into which it might run and overflow.

2. God in prosecution of his design, creates a World of Creatures; some rational, and only capable of Love; others irrational, and serviceable to that one Creature, which he makes the top of the whole Creation; then it was that he set up one man Adam, as a common person, to represent the rest; to him he gives abundance of glorious qualifications, and him he sets over all the work of his hands, as if he were the very Darling of Love; if we should view the excellency of this Creature either in the outward, or the inner man, who would not wonder? his body had its excellency, which made the Psalmist say, I will praise thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made,—and curiously wrought in the lowest part of the Earth. It is a speech borrowed from those who work Arras-work; the body of man is a piece of curious Tapestry, or Arras-work, consisting of Skin, Bones, Muscles, Sinews, and the like; what a goodly thing the body of man was before the Fall, may be guessed by the excellent gifts found in the bodies of some men since the Fall; as the Complection of David, 1 Sam. 16.12. the swiftness of Hazael, 2 Sam. 2.18. the beauty of Absalom, 2 Sam. 14.25. If all these were but joined in one, as certainly, they were in Adam, what a rare Body would such a one be? but what was this body in comparison of that soul? the soul was it, that was especially made after the Image of God; the soul was it, that was tempered in the same Mortar with the Heavenly Spirits; the soul was God's sparkle, a beam of his divine Glory, a ray, or emanation of God himself; as man was the principal part of the Creation, so the Soul was the principal part of man: here was it that God's Love and Glory were centred for the time; here was it that God's love set and fixed itself in a special man, whence flowed that Communion of God with Adam, and that familiarity of Adam with God.

3. Within a while, this man, the object of God's Love, fell away from God, and as he fell, so all that were in him; even the whole World fell together with him; and hereupon God's Face was hid; not a sight of him but in flaming fire, ready to seize on the Sons of Men. And yet God's Love would not thus leave the Object; he had yet a further reach of Love, and out of this dark Cloud he lets fall some glimpses of another discovery: These glimpses were sweet: but alas, they were so dark that very few could spell them, or make any sense, or comfortable application of them: but by degrees God hints it out more; he points it out with the Finger by Types and Shadows, he makes some models of it in outward Ceremonies, and yet so hid and dark, that in four thousand years, men were but guessing, and hoping through promises, for a manifestation of God's Love; this is the meaning of the Apostle, who tells us of the Mystery that was hid from Ages, and from Generations, but now is made manifest to his Saints: This Love of God was hid in the breast of God from the Sons of Men for an Age, so that they knew not what to make of this great Design: I speak of the generality of men; for in respect of some Particulars, as to Adam, and Abraham, and Moses, and David, and the Patriarchs, you have heard the Lord made his Loves clear to them in a Covenant-Way; and still the nearer to Christ, the clearer and clearer was the Covenant of Grace.

4. At last God fully opens himself; in the fullness of time God takes the flesh of those poor sinners which he had so loved, and joins it to himself, and calls it Christ, a Savior: O! now was it that God descended, and lay in the Womb of a Virgin; now was it that he is born as we are born; now was it that he joined our Flesh so nigh to himself, as that there is a Communication of properties betwixt them both, that being attributed to God which is proper to Flesh, as to be born, to suffer; and that being attributed to flesh which is proper to God, as to create, to redeem: who can choose but wonder when he thinks of this phrase, that a piece of Flesh should be called God? and that God should be made flesh and dwell amongst us? that flesh should infinitely provoke God, and yet God in the same flesh should be infinitely pleased? that God should veil himself and darken his Glory with our flesh, and yet unveil at the same time the deepest and darkest of his designs in a comfortable way to our souls? O my soul, how shouldst thou contain thyself within thyself? how shouldst thou but leap out of thyself (if I may so speak) as one that is lost in the admiration of this Love? Surely God never manifested himself in such a strain of Love as this before; herein was love manifested and commended indeed, that God would come down in our nature to us. One observes sweetly, that God did so love the very Nature of his Elect, that though for the present he had them not all with him in Heaven, yet he must have their Picture in his Son to see them in, and love them in; in this respect I may call Christ incarnate, a Statue and Monument of God's own infinite Love unto his Elect forever.

Well, hitherto we have followed the passages of his Love; and now we see it in the Spring, or at full Sea; If anything will beget our love to God, surely Christ incarnate will do it: Come then, O my Soul, I cannot but call on thee to love thy Jesus; and to provoke thy Love, O fix thy eye on this lovely Object; come, put thy Candle to this Flame; what? doth not thy heart yet burn within thee? dost thou not at least begin to warm? why, draw yet a little nearer; consider, what an heart of Love is in this Design: God is in thy own nature, to take upon him all the miseries of thy Nature; mark it well, this is none other than God's heart leaping out of itself into our bosoms; q. d. Poor souls, I cannot keep from you, I love your very Nature; I will be nothing, so you may be something; my Glory shall not hinder me, but I will veil it rather than it shall hurt you; so I may but show myself kind and tender unto you, and so I may but have Communion with you, and you with me, I care not if I become one with you, and live with you in your very flesh. Oh my heart, art thou yet cold in thy Loves to Jesus Christ? canst thou love him but a little, who hath loved thee so much? how should I then but complain of thee to Christ? and for thy sake beg hard of God, Oh thou sweet Jesus, that cloathest thyself with the Clouds as with a garment, and as now thou cloathest thyself with the Nature of a man: O thou that wouldst inflame my Spirit with a Love of thee, that nothing but thyself might be dear unto me, because it so pleased thee to vilify thyself, thine own self for my sake.

SECT. VII. Of joying in Jesus in that respect.

7. LET us joy in Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our Salvation for us at his Coming or Incarnation. If it be so that by our Desire, and Hope, and Faith, and Love, we have indeed and truth reached the Object which our souls pant after, how then should we but joy and delight therein? the end of our motion is to attain quiet and rest; now what is joy, but a sweet and delightful Tranquility of mind, resting in the fruition and possession of some good? what! hast thou in some measure attained the presence and fruition of Christ (as God incarnate) in thy Soul? it is then time to joy in Jesus; it is then time to keep a Sabbath of thy thoughts, and to be quiet and calm in thy Spirit: But you will say, how should this be before we come to Heaven? I answer, there is not indeed any perfection of joy whilst we are here, because there is no perfection of Union on this side Heaven; but so far as Union is, our joy must be; examine the grounds of thy Hope, and the actings of thy Faith, and if thou art but satisfied in them, why then lead up thy joy, and bring it up to this Blessed Object; here is matter for it to work upon; if thou canst possibly rejoice in anything at all, O rejoice in the Lord, and again I say rejoice.

Is there not cause? read and spell what's the meaning of the Gospel of Christ? what is Gospel, but Good spell, or good tidings? and wherein lies the good tidings according to its emency? is it not in the glorious incarnation of the Son of God? behold I bring you a Gospel, so it is in the Original, or, behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all People; for unto you is born this day in the City of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. The Birth of Christ to them that have but touched hearts, is the comfort of comforts, and the sweetest balm and confection that ever was. Oh my Soul what ailes thee? Why art thou cast down and disquieted within me? Is it because thou art a sinner? why, unto thee is born a Savior; his Name is Savior, and therefore Savior, because he will save his people from their sins. Come then, and bring out thy Sins, and weigh them to the utmost aggravation of them, and take in every Circumstance both of Law and Gospel, and set but this in the other Scale, that unto thee is born a Savior, surely all thy iniquities will seem lighter than vanity, yea they will be as nothing in comparison thereof; My Soul doth Magnifie the Lord (said Mary) and my spirit rejoiceth in God my Savior. Her soul and her spirit within her rejoiced at this Birth of Christ; there is cause that every Soul, and every Spirit should rejoice, that hath any interest in this Birth of Christ: O my soul, how shouldest thou but rejoice if thou wilt consider these particulars.

1. God himself is come down into the World; because it was impossible for thee to come to him, he is come to thee; this consideration made the Prophet cry out, Rejoice greatly O thou Daughter of Zion, shout O Daughter of Jerusalem, behold thy King cometh unto thee; he is called a King, and therefore he is able; and he is thy King, and therefore he is willing; but in that thy King cometh unto thee, here is the marvilous love and mercy of God in Christ; Kings do not usually come to visit and wait upon their Subjects; it is well if poor Subjects may come to them, and be admitted into their Presence to wait on them: O but see the great King of Heaven & Earth, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lord's stooping, and bowing the heavens to come down to thee; surely this is good tidings of great joy, and therefore rejoice greatly O Daughter of Zion. A little joy is too scant and narrow for this news; hearts should be enlarged, the doors and gates should be set wide open for this King of Glory to come in: as Balaam said of Israel, God is with him and the shout of a King is amongst them? so now may we say, God is with us, and the shout of a King is amongst us; Rejoice Zion, Shout O Daughter of Jerusalem.

2. God is come down in flesh; he hath laid aside, as it were, his own Glory, whilst he converseth with thee; when God manifested himself, as on Mount Sinai, he came down in Thunder and Lightning; and if now he had appeared in Thunder and Lightning, if now he had been guarded with an innumerable Company of Angels, all having their Swords of vengeance and justice drawn, well might poor souls have trembled, and have run into corners; for who could ever be able to endure his coming in this way? but lo poor Soul, God is come down in flesh, he hath made his appearance as a man, as one of us, and there is not in this regard the least distance betwixt him and us. Surely this is fuel for joy to feed upon: O why should God come down so suitably, so lowly, as in our nature, if he would have thy poor soul to be afraid of him? doth not this very design intend consolation to thy soul? O gather up thy Spirit, anoint thy heart with the Oil of gladness; see God himself is come down in flesh to live amongst us, he professeth he will have no other life but amongst the Sons of men; see what a sweet way of familiarity and intercourse is made betwixt God and us, now he is come down in human frailty.

3. God hath took on him our Nature as a vast pipe to his Godhead, that it may flow out in all manner of sweetness upon our hearts; if God had come down in flesh, only to have been seen of us, it had been a wonderful condescension, and a great mercy: if I have found favor in thy eyes (said Moses) show me thy way that I may know thee; but to come down in flesh, and to come down in flesh, not only to be seen, but to dispatch the great business of our souls Salvation, here's comfort indeed: with what joy should we draw water out of this well of salvation? Surely the great reason of the shallowness of our Comforts, shortness of our Hopes, the faintness of our spirits, the lowness of our Graces, is from the not knowing, or the not heeding of this particular; Christ in flesh stands not for a Cypher, but it is an Organ of life and grace unto us; it is a fountain of comfort that can never run dry. In this flesh there is laid in on purpose such a fullness of the Godhead, that of his fullness we might receive in our measure grace for grace. O my soul, thou art daily busy in eying this and that; but above all, know that all the fullness God lies in Christ incarnate, to be emptied upon thee: this was the meaning of Christ taking on him flesh, that through his flesh he might convey to thee whatsoever is in himself as God. As for instance, God in himself is Good, and Gracious, and Powerful, and All-sufficient, and Merciful, and what not? Now by his being in flesh, he suites all this, and conveys all this to thee; observe this for thy eternal comfort, God in and through the flesh makes all his Attributes and Glory serviceable to thy soul.

4. God in our Nature hath laid out the Model and Draught of what he will do unto all his Saints forever; human nature was never so advanced before; what? to be glorified above the Angels? to be united in a Personal union with the second person of the Godhead? surely hence may be expected great matters; here's a fair step for the bringing of our Persons up to the enjoyment of God; if God be come down in the likeness of man, why, then he will bring us up into the likeness of God; look what was done to our nature in Christ, the very same (as far as we are capable) shall be done to our persons in Heaven. Think of it, O my soul, why hath God made flesh so glorious, but to show that he will by that make thee glorious also? Christ is the great Epitome of all the designs of God, so that in him thou mayest see what thou art designed unto, and how high and rich thou shalt be in the other world. Beloved, now are we the Sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know when he shall appear, we shall be like him; he is now like us, but then (saith the Apostle) we shall be like unto him; he will change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his Glorious body. Oh consider what a frame of eternal comfort may we raise up from this ground of Christ incarnate, God in the flesh?

5. God in the flesh is the first opening of his eternal plot to do us good; the Seed of the woman was the first word of comfort that ever was heard in the world after man was fallen; the Plot was of old, but the execution was not till after the Creation, and then was a dim discovery of it, even in the beginning of time, though no clear manifestation till the fullness of time. Well, take it as we please, whether in the beginning of time, or in the fullness of time; whether in the promise, or in performance, this discovering of Christ incarnate is the first opening of all God's heart and Glory unto the Sons of men; and from this we may raise a world of comfort; for if God in the execution of his Decrees, begins so gloriously, how will he end? if God be so full of love, as to come down in flesh now in this world, Oh what matter of hope is laid up before us, of what God will be to us in that world to come? if the Glory of God be let out to our souls so fully at first, what Glorious openings of all the Glory of God will be let out to our souls at last? Christians! what do you think will God do with us, or bring us unto, when we shall be with him in heaven? you see now he is manifested in flesh, and he hath laid out a world of Glory in that: but the Apostle tells us of another manifestation, for we shall see him as he is; he shall at last be manifest in himself; now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face; now we know in part, but then we shall know even as also we are known. To what an height of knowledge or manifestation this doth arise, I am now to seek, and so I must be whilst I am on this side Heaven; but this I believe, the manifestation of God and Christ is more in Heaven, than is, or ever hath been, or ever shall be upon earth; thine eyes shall see the King in his Beauty, or in his Glory saith Isaiah: there is a great deal of difference betwixt seeing the King in his ordinary, and seeing him in his Robes, and upon his Throne, with his Crown on his head, and his Scepter in his hand, and his Nobles about him in all his Glory: the first openings of Christ are glorious; but O, what will it be to see him in his greatest Glory that ever he will manifest himself in? we usually say that workmen do their meanest work at first, and if the Glorious incarnation of Christ be but the beginning of God's works, in reference to our souls salvation, what are those last works?

O my soul, weigh all these passages, and make an application of them to thyself; and then tell me if yet thou hast not matter enough to raise up thy heart, and to fill it with joy unspeakable and full of Glory; when the wise men saw but the Star of Christ, they rejoiced with an exceeding great joy; how much more when they saw Christ himself? Your Father Abraham (said Christ to the Jews) rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it, and was glad; he saw it indeed, but afar of, with the eyes of Faith; they afore Christ, had the promise, but we see the performance; how then should we rejoice? how glad shouldst thou be, O my Soul, at the sight and effect of Christ's Incarnation? if John the Baptist could leap for joy in his Mothers belly, when Christ was but yet in the womb, how should thy heart leap for joy, who canst say with the Prophet, unto me a Child is born, and unto me a Son is given? if Simeon waiting for the consolation of Israel, took him up in his arms for joy, and blessed God; how shouldst thou with joy embrace him with both arms, who knowest his coming in the flesh, and who hast heard him come in the Gospel, in the richest and most alluring expressions of his Love? If the Angels of God, yea, if multitudes of Angels could sing for joy at his Birth, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will towards men; how much more shouldst thou, whom it concerns more than the Angels, join with them in consort, and sing for joy this joyful song of good will towards men? Awake, awake O my Soul, awake, awake, utter a Song! tell over these passages, that God is come down into the world, that God is come down in flesh, that God is come down in flesh in order to thy reconciliation; that God is come down in the likeness of man, that he may bring thee up into the likeness of God; and that all these are but the first openings of the Grace, and goodness, and Glory of God in Christ unto thy Soul; and Oh what work will these make in thy Soul, if the Spirit come in, who is the comforter.

SECT. VIII. Of Calling on Jesus in that Respect.

8. LET us call on Jesus, or on God the Father in and through Jesus. Now this calling on Jesus contains Prayer and Praise. 1. We must pray that all these transactions of Jesus at his first coming or incarnation may be ours; and is not here encouragement for our Prayers? If we observe it, this very point of Christ's Incarnation opens a door of rich entrance into the presence of God; we may call it a blessed Portal into Heaven, not of Iron, or Brass, but of our own flesh; this is that new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, through the Vail, that is to say, his flesh; with what boldness and freeness may we now enter into the Holiest, and draw near unto the Throne of Grace? why, Christ is incarnate, God is come down in the flesh; though his Deity may confound us (if we should immediately and solely apply ourselves unto it) yet his humanity comforts our faint and feeble souls, God in his humility animates our souls to come unto him, and to seek of him whatsoever is needful for us. Go then to Christ; away, away O my soul, to Jesus, or to God the Father, in and through Jesus; and O desire that the effect, the fruit, the benefit of his Conception, Birth, and of the wonderful union of the two natures of Christ may be all thine. What? dost thou hope in Jesus, and believe thy part in this Incarnation of Christ? why then pray in hope, and pray in Faith; what is prayer, but the stream and river of Faith, an issue of the desire of that which I joyfully believe? Thou, O Lord God of Hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed to thy Servant, saying, I will build thee an house, therefore hath thy servant found in his heart, to pray this Prayer unto thee.

2. We must praise. This was the special duty practiced by all Saints and Angels at Christ's Birth, My Soul doth magnify the Lord (saith Mary) and my Spirit rejoiceth in God my Savior. And blessed be the Lord God of Israel (said Zacharias) for he hath visited and redeemed his People; and Glory to God in the highest, said the Heavenly Host; only one Angel had before brought the News, unto you is born this day in the City of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord: but immediately after there were many to sing praises; not only six Cherubims as Isaiah saw; nor only four and twenty Elders, as John saw; but a multitude of Heavenly Angels like Armies, that by their Heavenly Hallelujahs gave Glory to God. O my soul, do thou endeavor to keep consort with those many Angels: O sing Praises, sing Praises unto God, sing Praises. Never was like case since the first Creation: never was the wisdom, truth, justice, mercy, and goodness of God so manifest before; I shall never forget that last speech of a dying Saint upon the stage, Blessed be God for Jesus Christ. O my soul, living and dying let this be thought on: What? Christ incarnate for me? why bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy Name.

SECT. IX. Of conforming to Jesus in that respect.

9. LET us conform to Jesus in reference to this great transaction of his Incarnation. Looking to Jesus contains this, and is the cause of this; the sight of God will make us like to God; and the sight of Christ will make us like to Christ; for as a Looking-Glass cannot be exposed to the Sun, but it will shine like the same; so God receives none to contemplate his face, but he transforms them into his own likeness by the irradiation of his light; and Christ hath none that dive into these depths of his glorious and blessed Incarnation, but they carry along with them sweet impressions of an abiding and transforming nature. Come then, let us once more look on Jesus in his Incarnation, that we may conform, and be like to Jesus in that respect.

But wherein lies this conformity or likeness to Jesus? I answer, in these and the like particulars.—

1. Christ was conceived in Mary by the Holy Ghost; so must Christ be conceived in us by the same holy Ghost. To this purpose is the seed of the Word cast in, and principles of Grace are by the Holy Ghost infused; he hath begotten us by the Word, saith the Apostle, Jam. 1.18. How Mean, Contemptible, or Impotent Men may esteem it, yet God hath appointed no other means to convey supernatural life, but after this manner: Where no Vision is, the People perish: where no preaching is, there is a worse judgment than that of Egypt, when there was one dead in every Family. By the Word and Spirit the Seeds of all Grace are sown in the heart at once, and the heart closing with it, immediately Christ is conceived in the heart.

Concerning this spiritual Conception or Reception of Christ in us, there is a great question, Whether it be possible for any man to discern how it is wrought? But for the Negative are these Texts, Our Life is hid with Christ in God, Col. 3.3. and the Wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth, Joh. 3.8. It is a wonderful, hidden and secret Conception. The holy Ghost sets out that state of unregeneracy, in which Christ finds us, by the name of Death, Eph. 2.1. So that it must needs be as impossible for us to discover how it is wrought, as it is impossible for one to know how he receives his own life. Some say, the first act of infusing or receiving Christ or Grace (they are all one) is wrought in an instant, and not by degrees; and therefore it is impossible to discern the manner: And yet we grant that we may discern both the preparations to Grace, and the first operations of Grace. 1. The preparations to Grace are discernible; such are those terrors and spiritual agonies, which are often before the work of Regeneration; they may be resembled to the heating of metals before they melt, and are cast into the Mold to be fashioned; now by the help of Natural Reason one may discern these. 2. Much more may the first Motion and Operations of Grace be discerned by one truly regenerate, because that in them his Spirit works together with the Spirit of Christ; such are sorrow for sin as sin, and seek rightly for comfort, an hungering desire after Christ and his Merits; neither do I think it impossible for a regenerate man to feel the very first illapse of the Spirit into the Soul; for it may bring that sense with itself, as to be easily discerned, although it doth not always see, nor perhaps usually see; it is true that the giving of Spiritual Life, and the giving of the sense of it, are two distinct acts of the Spirit; yet who can deny, but that both these acts may go together; though always they do not go together? Howsoever it is, yet even in such Persons as in the instant of Regeneration may feel themselves in a regenerate estate: this Conclusion stands firm, viz. They may know what is wrought in them, but how it is wrought, they cannot know, nor understand; we feel the Wind, and perceive it in the motions, and operations thereof; but the Originals of it we are not able exactly to describe: some think the beginnings of Winds are from the flux of the Air, others from the exhalations of the Earth; but there is no certainty: so it is in the manner of this Conception, or passive Reception of Christ and Grace into our hearts; we know not how it is wrought, but it nearly concerns us to know that it is wrought; look we to his conformity, that as Christ was conceived in Mary by the Holy Ghost; so, that Christ be conceived in us, in a spiritual sense, by the same Holy Ghost.

2. Christ was sanctified in the Virgins Womb; so must we be sanctified in ourselves, following the Commandment of God; Be ye holy as I am holy: Souls regenerate must be sanctified; Every man (saith the Apostle) that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure. I know our hearts are (as it were) Seas of corruptions, yet we must daily cleanse ourselves of them by little and little: Christ could not have been a fit Savior for us, unless first he had been sanctified; neither can we be fit Members unto him, unless we be in some measure purged from our sins, and sanctified by his Spirit. To this purpose is that of the Apostle; I beseech you Brethren, by the Mercies of God, that ye present your Bodies a living Sacrifice, Holy, acceptable unto God. In the Old Testament they did after a corporal manner slay and kill Beasts, presenting them, and offering them unto the Lord; but now we are in a spiritual manner to crucify and mortify the flesh with the affections and lusts, all our inordinate passions, all our evil affections of anger, love, joy, hatred, are to be crucified; and all that is ours must be given up to God; there must be no love in us but of God; and in reference to God; no Joy in us, but in God, and in reference to God; no fear in us, but of God, and in reference to God; and thus of all other the like passions. O that we would look to Jesus, and be like unto Jesus in this thing! if there be any Honor, any Happiness, any Excellency, it is in this, even in this; we are not fit for any holy duty, or any religious approach unto God without sanctification; this is the Will of God (saith the Apostle) even your Sanctification. All the commands of God tend to this; and for the comfort of us Christians, we have under the Gospel, promises of sanctification to be in a larger measure made out unto us: In that day there shall be upon the Bells of the Horses Holiness unto the Lord;—yea every pot in Jerusalem and Judah shall be Holiness unto the Lord; every Vessel under Christ and the Gospel, must have written upon it Holiness to the Lord; thus our spiritual services, figured by the Ancient Ceremonial services, are set out by a larger measure of holiness than was in old time: it is a sweet resemblance of Christ to be holy; for so he is styled, the holy Child Jesus: he was sanctified from the womb, and sanctified in the womb for our imitation: for their sakes I sanctify myself, (saith Christ) that they also might be sanctified.

3. Christ the son of man is by nature the son of God; so we poor sons of men must by Grace become the sons of God; even of the same God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; for this very end God sent his own Son made of a woman, that we might receive the Adoption of Sons,—wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a Son, then an heir of God through Christ. This intimates that what relation Christ hath unto the Father by nature, we should have the same by Grace; by nature he is the only begotten Son of the Father, and as many as received him (saith John) to them he gave power to become the Sons of God, even to them that believe on his Name. It is true, Christ reserves to himself the preeminence; he is in a peculiar manner the first born among many Brethren; yet in him, and for him all the rest of the brethren are accounted as first borns: So God bids Moses say unto Pharaoh, Israel is my son, even my first born; And I say unto thee, let my Son go, that he may serve me; and if thou refuse to let him go, behold I will slay thy Son, even thy first-born, And the whole Church of God, consisting of Jew and Gentile, is in the same sort described by the Apostle to be the General Assembly and Church of the first-born enrolled in Heaven; by the same reason that we are sons, we are first-borns; if we are Children, then are we heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. O who would not endeavor after this privilege? who would not conform to Christ in this respect?

4. Christ the Son of God, was yet the Son of Man; there was yet in him a duplicity of Natures really distinguished; and in this respect, the greatest Majesty, and the greatest humility that ever was, are found in Christ; so we, though sons of God, must remember ourselves to be but sons of men; our privileges are not so high, but our poor conditions, frailties, infirmities, sins, may make us low: who was higher than the Son of God? and who was lower than the son of man? as he is God, he is in the bosom of his Father; as he is man, he is in the Womb of his Mother; as he is God, his Throne is in Heaven; and he fills all things by his emmensity; as he is man, he is circumscribed in a cradle, I mean a Manger, a most uneasy Cradle sure; as he is God, he is clothed in a robe of Glory; as he is man, he is wrapped in a few course swaddling bands; as he is God, he is encircled with millions of bright Angels; as he man, he is in company of Joseph and Mary, and the Beasts; as he is God, he is the eternal Word of the Father, all-sufficient, and without need; as he is man, he submits himself to a condition imperfect, inglorious, indigent, and necessitous: well, let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but he made himself of no Reputation, and took upon him the form of a Servant, and was made in the likeness of men, and being founded in fashion as a man, he humble himself: he that thought it no robbery to be equal with God, humbled himself to become man; we should have found it no robbery to be equal with Devils, and are we too proud to learn of God? what an intolerable disproportion is this, to behold an humble God, and a proud man? who can endure to see a Prince on foot, and his Vassal mounted! shall the Son of God be thus humble for us, and shall not we be humble for ourselves? I say for ourselves, that deserve to be cast down amongst the lowest Worms, the damnedst Creatures? What are we in our best condition here on earth; had we the best natures, purest conversations, happiest endowments that accompany the Saints, pride overthrows all; it thrust proud Nebuchadnezzar out of Babel, proud Haman out of the Court, proud Saul out of his Kingdom, proud Lucifer out of Heaven; poor man how ill it becomes thee to be proud, when God himself is become thus humble? O learn of me (saith Christ) for I am meek, and humble, and lowly in spirit, and you shall find rest unto your souls.

5. The two natures of Christ, though really distinguished, yet were they inseparably joined, and made not two, but one person; so must our natures and persons though at greatest distance from God, be inseparably joined and united to Christ, and thereby also to God. I Pray (saith Christ) that they all may be one as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us. That union of Christ's two natures we call a personal hypostatical union, and this union of Christ with us, we call a mystical and Spiritual union; yet though it be mystical and Spiritual, this hinders not but that it is a true, real, essential, substantial union, whereby the person of the believer is indissolubly united to the glorious person of the Son of God. For our better understanding we may consider (if you please) of a threefold unity, either of persons of one nature, or of natures in one person, or of natures and Persons in one spirit; in the first is one God; in the second is one Christ; in the third is one Church with Christ; our union unto Christ is the last of these, whereby he and we are all spiritually united to the making up of one mystical body, O what a privilege is this! a poor believer, be he never so mean or miserable in the eye of the world, yet he is one with Christ, as Christ is one with the Father; our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ: every Saint is Christ's fellow; there is a kind of analogical proportion between Christ and his Saints in everything; if we take a view of all Christ, what he is in his Person, in his Glory, in his Spirit, in his Graces, in his Fathers Love, and in the access he hath to the Father, in all these we are in a sort fellows with Christ; only with this difference, that Christ hath the preeminence in all things; all comes from the Father first to Christ, and all we have is by Marriage with Jesus Christ; Christ by his union hath all good things without measure, but we by our union have them only in measure, as it pleaseth him to distribute. But herein if we resemble Christ, whether in his union with the Father, or in his union of the two natures in one Person of a Mediator; if by looking on Christ, we come to this likeness, to be one with Jesus Christ, Oh what a privilege is this! had we not good warrant for so high a challenge, it could be no less than a Blasphemous arrogance to lay claim to the Royal blood of Heaven; but the Lord is pleased to dignify a poor worm, that every believer may truly say, I am one with Jesus Christ, and Jesus Christ is one with me.

To sweeten this union to our thoughts I shall acquaint you with the privilege flowing from it, and let the same stir you up to conform.

Hence it is that Christ lives in us, and that Christ both gives life, and is our life. When Christ which is our life shall appear, Christ is to me to live, and I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. There is a spiritual and natural life; for the natural life what is it but a bubble, a vapor, a shadow, a dream, a nothing? but this Spiritual life is an excellent life, it is wrought in us by the Spirit of Christ; there is a world of difference betwixt the natural and the spiritual life, and that makes the difference betwixt what I do as a man, and what I do as a Christian; as a man I have eyes, ears, motions, affections, understandings, naturally as my own; but as a Christian I have all these from him with whom I am spiritually one, the Lord Jesus Christ; as a man I have bodily eyes, and I behold bodily and material things; but as a Christian I have spiritual eyes, and I see invisible and eternal things, as it is said of Moses, that he endured, as seeing him who is invisible; as a man I have outward ears, and I hear outward sounds of all sorts whether articulate, or inarticulate; but as a Christian I have inward ears, and so I hear the voice of Christ, and of God's Spirit, speaking to my soul; as a man I have bodily feet, and by them I move in my own secular ways; but as a Christian I have spiritual feet, and on them I walk with God in all the ways of his Commandments; as a man I have natural affections, and so I love beauty, and fear pain, and hate an enemy, and I rejoice in outward prosperity, or the like; but as a Christian I have renewed affections, and so I loved goodness, and hate nothing but sin; and I fear above all the displeasure of my God, and I rejoice in God's favor, which is better than life. Surely this is a blessed life; and as soon as ever I am united to Christ, why then I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. First, Christ is conceived, and then Christ is formed, and then Christ is born, and then grows in me to a blessed fullness: My little Children of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you; formation follows conception, and travail implies a birth: then after this we are babes in Christ, or Christ is as a babe in us; from thence we grow up to strength of youth. I have written unto you young men because ye are strong; and at last we come to Gospel perfection even towards the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Is this all? nay, if my union be firm, and Christ live in me, why then I go on, and in this condition I am dead with Christ, and I am buried with Christ, and I am alive again unto God through Christ, and I am risen with Christ, and I am glorified with Christ. Nay, yet more, my sufferings are Christ's, Col. 1.24. and Christ's sufferings are mine, Rom. 8.17. I am in Christ an heir of Glory, Rom. 8.17. and Christ is in me the hope of Glory, Col. 12 7. O my Christ, my life, what am I, or what is my Father's house that thou shouldst come down into me, that thou shouldst be conceived in the womb of my poor sinful heart, that thou shouldst give my soul a new and spiritual life, a life begun in Grace and ending in eternal Glory? I shall not reckon up anymore privileges of this union, methinks I should not need; if I tell you of Grace and Glory, what can I more? Glory is the highest pitch, and Christ tells you concerning it, the Glory which thou gavest me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one. Ah my brethren! to be so like Christ as to be one with Christ, it is near indeed: O let us conform to Christ in this; he is one with our nature in an hypostatical, personal union; let us be one with him in a spiritual, holy and a mystical union; if God be not in our persons as truly, though not as fully as in our nature, we have no particular comfort from this design of his personal, hypostatical, and wonderful union.

6. Christ was born, so must we be new-born; to this I have spoken when I laid it down as an evidence that unto us a Child is born, and unto us a son is given; only one word more, we must be new born; as once born by nature, so new born by Grace; there must be some resemblances in us of Christ born amongst us. As 1. Christ born, had a Father in Heaven, and a Mother on Earth; so in our new Birth we must look on God as our Father in Heaven, and on the Church as our Mother on Earth; it was usually said, out of the Church no salvation; and to this the Apostle alludes, Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the Mother of us all: indeed out of the Church there is no means of Salvation, no Word to teach, no Sacraments to confirm, nothing at all to hold forth Christ to a soul, and without Christ how should there be the Salvation of souls? so that we must look on the Church as our Mother, and on God as our Father; not that we deny some to be as spiritual Fathers unto others. Paul tells the Corinthians, that he was their Father, though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many Fathers, for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel; but all such Fathers are but ministerial Fathers; and therefore Paul seems to correct himself, who is Paul? and who is Apollo? but Ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? it is God only is our Father principally, originally, supremely; God only puts Grace and virtue into the womb of the Soul; it is not possible that any creature should be a Creator of the new Creature. O then let us look up to Heaven and say, O Lord now make me, now Create me, O be thou my Father.

2. When Christ was born all Jerusalem was troubled; so when this new birth is, we must look for it, that much commotion, and much division of heart will be; the Devil could not be cast out of the professed person, but he would exceedingly fear and torment, and vex the possessed person; the truth is, we cannot expect that Christ should expel Satan from those holds and dominions he hath over us, but he will be sure to put us to great fear and terror in heart. Besides, not only the evil Spirit, but God's Spirit is for a while a Spirit of Bondage, to make everything as a mighty burden unto us; there are many pretenders to the grace of God in Christ, but they cannot abide to hear of any pains or pangs in this new Birth; O this is legal, but I pray thee tell me, dost thou ever know any woman bring forth in her sleep, or in a dream, without feeling any pain? and how then should the heart of man be thus new changed and molded without several pangs? look as it is in the natural birth, there are many pangs and troubles, in in sorrow shalt thou bring forth Children; so it is, and must be in our spiritual birth; there is usually (I will not say always to such or such a degree) many pangs and troubles, there's many a throb, and many an heart-ach ere Christ can be formed in us.

3. When Christ was born, there was a discovery of many of the Glorious attributes of God; then Mercy and Truth met together, and righteousness and peace kissed each other; then especially was a discovery of the Goodness, and Power, and Wisdom, and Holiness of God. So when this New Birth is, we must look upon it as a glorious discovery of those lovely Attributes. As, 1. Of his Mercy, Goodness, Love; how often is this called his Grace, and the riches of his Grace? Christians! you that know what the New Birth means, do you not say, The Goodness of God appears in this? surely it was God's Goodness to make a World, but this is the riches of his Goodness to create a New Heart in you; when Man by his sin was fallen, he might have been thrown away as refuse, fit fuel only, for everlasting flames; it might have been with mankind as it was with Devils, in their deluge God did not provide an Ark to save so many as eight persons, not one Angel that fell was the Object of God's Grace; And that God should pass by all those Angels, and many thousands of the Sons Men, and yet that he should look upon you in your Blood, and bid you Live: O the goodness of God!

2. As of the Goodness, so in this New Birth there's a discovery of God's power: and hence it is called a New Creature. The very same Power that framed the World, is the framer of this New Creature; the work of Conversion is set forth by the Work of Creation; God only creates Man, and God only converts Man; in the Creation God said, Let there be Light, and there was Light; in our conversion God saith, Let there be Light; and presently the same God shines in our hearts; Nay, this Power of conversion in some sense far passeth the Creation, To whom is the Arm of the Lord revealed? the Lord puts to his Arm, his Power, his Strength indeed in Conversion of Souls; when he made the World, he met with nothing to resist him, he only spake the word and it was done; but in the conversion of a sinner, God meets with the whole frame of all creatures opposing and resisting him; the Devil and the World without, and sin and corruption within; here then must needs be a Power against all Power.

3. As of the Goodness and Power of God, so in this New Birth there's a discovery of the Wisdom of God. I might instance in many particulars; As, 1. In that the regenerate are most-what of the meanest and contemptiblest persons; not many wise, not many noble, &c. 2. In that many times God takes the worst Weeds and makes them the sweetest Flowers; thus Paul, Zacchaeus, the Publicans, and Harlots. 3. In that the regenerate are of the fewest, and least number; many are called, but few are chosen. 4. In that God chooseth such a time to be his time of love, wherein he usually discovers many concurrences of strange love meeting together; read Ezek. 16.4, 5, 6, 8, 9. in all these particulars is his Wisdom wonderful.

4. As of the Goodness, Power, and Wisdom of God, so in this New Birth there's a discovery of the holiness of God. If a clod of Earth, or a piece of Muck should be made a glorious Star in Heaven, it is not more wonderful, than for a sinner to be made like an Angel, doing the Will of God; it argues the Holiness of God, and his love of Holiness to make man holy; He tells us that without Holiness, none shall see God; and therefore first he will make us holy, and then he will bring us to himself; O here's a blessed Conformity! as Christ was Born, let us be New Born.

7. Christ after his Birth did and suffered many things in his Childhood, (I should be too large to speak to every particular) so should we learn to bear God's Yoak even in our Youth. It is good to imitate Christ even betimes, Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy Youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say I have no pleasure in them. Do ye not see by experience what a blessed thing a gracious and an holy education is? Train up a Child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. O ye Parents, that ye should do your duties, and in that respect imitate Joseph and Mary in their care and nature of the Holy Child Jesus; and O ye Children, that you would do your duties, and imitate Jesus, the Blessedst pattern that ever was, that as you grow in Stature, you also might grow in favor with God and Man. Observe him in the Temple when he was but twelve years Old, see Him in the midst of the Doctors, both hearing them, and asking them Questions; Children whiles little (if but capable of instruction) should with their Parents wait on God in the midst of our assemblies; Moses told Pharaoh they must have their young ones with them to the solemn Worship; and when Joshua read the Law of God to the Congregation of Israel, they had their little ones with them in that solemn assembly. Observe Christ also in Nazareth, where during his minority he was ever subject to his Parents; so Children obey your Parents in the Lord, for this is right: not only the Law of God, but the Gospel of Christ makes mention of this, Honor thy father and Mother, which is the first Commandment with Promise; I know the subjection of Christ's extends to his particular calling, and this also is for your imitation; in obedience to his supposed Father the Holy Child would have a particular employment, something must be done for the support of that holy Family wherein Jesus lived, and to that purpose he puts to his own hands, and works in the trade of a Carpenter; such as will live idle, and without a calling, that serve for no other use but to devour God's Creatures, and to make a dearth, O how unlike are they to Jesus Christ? It is noted for a grievous sin, and a chief part of the corruption of our nature to be unprofitable to the Generation with whom we live; They are altogether become unprofitable, there is none that doth good; Religion and Grace where ever it prevaieth, makes Men profitable; and in this respect the poorest Servant and drudge may have more comfort in his estate, than the greatest Gentleman that hath nothing to do but to Eat, and Drink, and Play.

Thus far we have looked on Jesus as our Jesus in his Incarnation, or his first coming in the Flesh. Our next work is to look on Jesus carrying on the great work of Mans Salvation during his life, from John's Baptism, until his suffering and dying on the Cross.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS In His Life. The Fifth Book. PART II.

CHAP. I.

1 John 1.2. For the Life was manifested, and we have seen it.

SECT. I. Of the Beginning of the Gospel.

IN this piece, as in the former, we must first lay down the Object, and then direct you how to look to it.

The Object is Jesus carrying on the work of Mans Salvation during the time of his Life. Now in all the transactions of this time, we shall observe them as they were carried on successively in those three years and an half of his ministerial Office, or if you will in those four complete Years before his Passion and Death.

For the first Year, and his actings therein, the Evangelist Mark begins thus, The Beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God; q. d. the beginning of that age of the World, which the Prophets pointed out for the time of good things to come; or the beginning of the exhibition and completion of that Gospel, which in respect of the promise, figures, and signification was from the beginning of the World. This beginning of the Gospel, the Prophets sometimes expressed by the term of the last days, and it shall come to pass in the last days: sometimes by the term of the acceptable year of the Lord, the Spirit of the Lord is upon me, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord: sometimes by the term of the Kingdom of God; And in the days of these Kings, shall the God of Heaven set up a Kingdom, which shall never be destroyed. Sometimes by the term of a New Heaven, and a New Earth, behold I create New Heavens, and a New Earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come in mind. Howsoever it is called, this is concluded, that the beginning of the Gospel is not to be reckoned from the birth of Christ, but from the beginning of the Ministry and Preaching of John the Baptist; *from the days of John the Baptist until now (said Christ) the Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence; for all the Prophets and the Law prophesied until John; and when the Apostles were ready in the Room of Judas to choose a new Apostle, it is said, that of those men which companied with them all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out amongst them, beginning from the baptism of John, unto the day that he was taken up, must one be ordained to be a witness. And Peter Preaching to Cornelius and his friends, he tells them that the Word (or Gospel) was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the Baptism which John preached: and see but how immediately these words follow, The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God: as it is written in the Prophets behold I send my Messenger before thy face, which shall prepare the way before thee: I know that Johns Ministry was six months before Christ's; and yet that now was the beginning of the Gospel, it appears, 1. In that Baptism (which was only used amongst the Jews for the admission of Proselytes or Heathens to their Church) is now published and proposed to the Jews themselves; showing, 1. That now they were to be entered and transplanted into a new Profession; and, 2. That the Gentiles, and they were now to be knit into one Church and Body. And, 2. It appears in that the Doctrine and Preaching of John was of a different strain, from the literal Doctrine of the Law; as it is taken in the sense of the Jews; for that called all for works; and for exact performance, do this and live; but John called for Repentance, and for renewing of the mind, and for belief in him that was coming after, disclaiming all righteousness by the works of the Law; so that here was new Heavens, and a new Earth began to be created, a new* Commandment given, a new Church founded, Justification by works cried down, and the Doctrine of Faith and Repentance advanced and set up.

Hence one observes that the Evangelist Luke points out this year in a special manner; it was the fifteenth year of Tiberius Caesar; at which time (says he) Pilate was Governor of Judea, Herod was Tetrarch of Galilee, Philip was Tetrarch of Iturea, Lysanias was Tetrarch of Abilene, and Annas and Caiaphas were high Priests. And then, even then, the Word of God came unto John, the Son of Zacharias, in the Wilderness. See how exact the Evangelist seems, that so remarkable a year of the beginning of the Gospel might be fixed and made known to all the World. In this respect, I shall begin the first year of Christ's Life with the beginning of John's Preaching, which was six months current before the Ministry of Christ; and in the compass of this first year, I shall handle these Particulars,—

1. The Preaching of John Baptist. 2. The Baptism of Christ Jesus. 3. The Fasting and Temptation of Christ in the wilderness. 4. The first manifestation of Jesus by his several witnesses. 5. Christ whipping the buyers and sellers out of the Temple. Observe that every of these four years, I shall end at one of the Passovers, of which we read during Christ Ministry; as of the first Passover in John 2.13. of the second Passover in John 5.1. of the third Passover, John 6.4. of the fourth Passover, John 13.1. And first, of the first year to end at the first Passover.

SECT. II. Of the Preaching of John Baptist.

FOR the Preaching of John the Baptist; now was it that the Gospel began to dawn, and John like the Morning-Star, or the blushing day, springing from the windows of the East, foretells the approaching of the sun of Righteousness; now was it that he laid the first rough, hard, and unhewn stone of the building in Mortification, self-denial, and doing violence to our natural affections. I read not that ever John wrought a Miracle; but he was a man of an austere Life: and good Works convince more than Miracles themselves. It is storied of one Pachomius, a soldier under Constantine the Emperor, that his Army being well-near starved for want of necessary Provision, he came to a City of Christians, and they of their own Charity relieved them speedily and freely; he wondering at their so free and cheerful dispensation, inquired what kind of people those were whom he saw so bountiful? It was Answered, they were Christians, whose profession is to hurt no man, and to do good to every man; hereupon the soldier convinced of the excellency of this Religion, he threw away his Arms, and became a Christian and a Saint. To this purpose, I suppose, John the Baptist spent his time in Prayer, Meditation, affections, and Colloquies with God, eating flies and wild honey in the wilderness, that he might be made a fit Instrument of preparation, and dissemination of the Gospel of Christ.

In his Sermon he sometimes gave particular Schedules of Duty to several states of Persons; he sharply reprov'd the Pharisees for their hypocrisy and impiety; he gently guided others into the ways of Righteousness, calling them the straight ways of the Lord; and by such discourses and a Baptism, he disposed the spirits of men for the entertaining of the Messias, and the Doctrine of the Gospel. John's Sermons were to the Sermons of Jesus as a Preface to a Discourse.

But observe this, that his most usual Note was Repentance, the Axe to the Root, the Fan to the Floor, the Chaff to the Fire: As his Rayment was rough, so was his Tongue; and thus must the way be made for Christ in stubborn obstinate hearts; plausibility, or pleasing of the flesh is no fit Preface to Regeneration; if the heart of Man had continued upright, Christ might have been entertained without contradiction; but now violence must be offered to our Corruptions, ere we can have room for Grace; if the great way-maker do not cast down Hills, and raise up Valleys in the bosoms of Men, there is no passage for Christ; never will Christ come into that soul, where the Herald of Repentance, either on one motive or other hath not been before him.

Shall we hear that Sermon that John Preached in his own words? Matthew in brief gives it in thus; Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at Hand: these are the words when he first began to Preach the Gospel of Christ; and indeed we find Christ himself doth preach the same Doctrine in the same words: Jesus began to Preach, and to say, Repent; for the Kingdom of Heaven is at Hand. In this Sermon we must observe these two parts: here's, 1. A Duty; and, 2. A Motive to this Duty. 1. The Duty is Repent.] It is not a Legal, but an Evangelical Repentance that is here meant; indeed the Law strictly takes no notice of Repentance, but the Gospel; true, and through, and consummate repentance is a Gospel-Grace. 2. The Motive is this; for the Kingdom of Heaven is at Hand. This Phrase, The Kingdom of Heaven, hath several acceptations, and accordingly it hath occasioned some differences. 1. Sometimes it is taken for that glorious condition of the other World; this may be implied; but this I suppose few understand to be the sense of this place. 2. Sometimes it is taken for the Church of Christ, q. d. Repent, for now the Pedagogy of the Jews is expiring, or breathing its last; and the Church of Christ is at hand, a People that shall bear the very style of Christians; that shall profess Christ, and close with Christ as their Savior and Messiah; of which Church, that you may be a part, prepare for it; Repent. 3. Sometimes it is taken for the spiritual Kingdom of Christ, in opposition to those earthly temporal Kingdoms which bear the sway, and domineered over all the World with Cruelty and Tyranny before Christ's coming; of this Daniel prophesied; And in the days of these Kings shall the God of Heaven set up a Kingdom which shall never be destroyed. Now what was this Kingdom, but the Kingdom of Grace? It is by an Hebraism called the Kingdom of Heaven, that is an Heavenly Kingdom; the Jews expected the Messiah, and dreamed of an outward, glorious and pompous Kingdom: now, saith John, the Messiah is come, and his Kingdom is come; but 'tis not an Earthly, but an Heavenly Kingdom; and therefore Repent. 4. Sometimes it is taken for the Preaching of the Gospel, or for the preaching of the Kingdom of Grace and Mercy of God in Christ unto men; q. d. O Sirs! look about you, there's now a discovery made of the Glory and Grace of God in another way than ever formerly; and therefore prepare for it: Repent. 5. Sometimes it is taken for the Gosspel of Christ, as it is Published and Preached unto all Nations: Observe, I do not only say, for the Gospel as it is Preached; but as it is Preached to the Gentiles, or among all Nations, and this shows how proper and pregnant an Argument this was to enforce the Doctrine and Practice of Repentance upon the Jews, because the calling of the Gentiles was near at hand, which would prove their rejection and casting off, if they did not repent.

Oh how seasonable is this Sermon to us? Christians! hath not the Kingdom of Heaven approacht unto us? Take the Kingdom of Heaven for the Kingdom of Glory, are we not near to the door of Glory, to the Confines of Eternity? What is our Life but a Vapour that appeareth for a little time, and after it vanisheth away? We know not but ere the Sun have run one Round, our souls may be in that World of souls, and so either in Heaven or Hell. Or take the Kingdom of Heaven for the Church of Christ, and what expectations have we now of the flourishing state of Christ's Church here upon Earth? Then shall the Children of Israel and Judah be gathered together—for great shall be the day of Jezreel, Hos. 1.11. A time is at hand, that Israel and Judah shall be called together, that the fullness of the Gentiles shall come in: and what is this but the great day of Jezreel? Oh then what manner of Persons ought we to be? How Spiritual? How Heavenly-minded? Arise, arise, shake off thy dust; for thy Light is coming, and the glory of the Lord is rising upon thee. Or, take the Kingdom of Heaven for the Preaching of the Gospel of Grace, Mercy and Goodness of God in Christ, what Preachings are now in comparison of what have been formerly? How doth the Lord set forth his free Love, and free Grace in the Churches of Christ? No question but many former ages have enjoyed their discoveries in some sweet measure, and yet after-ages wonder that they have known no more; and how much of the Kingdom of Heaven do Saints find in this Age, as if there were a new manifestation of God unto the World? And yet I must tell you, that the Ages to come shall know more of this Kingdom, there shall be further and further openings of this great Mystery of Grace unto the Sons of Men. Mark the Apostle, That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his Grace, in his kindness towards us through Jesus Christ, Eph. 2.7. How is this? Had not God revealed grace enough in the former ages? Or had not God revealed Grace enough in that present Age? Did he not then call in the Gentiles? were not many thousands converted at one only Sermon? What a deal of that Grace had Paul himself received? He tells us that the Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ was exceeding abundant to him-wards; and is there yet more Grace to be revealed? O yes! herein lies the Mystery of Grace, that he hath reserved exceeding riches of Grace for the Ages to come; Grace that never saw Light before; and I believe there is yet a fuller Magazine of the Riches of his Grace for latter Ages, even for the Ages to come, to be discovered, that ever was yet. Oh then repent, repent; Why? For the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. The very openings of God's Love and Grace unto Souls, is a Way and Motive to draw our Souls unto God. Or, take the Kingdom of Heaven for the preaching of the Gospel to all Nations, Jews and Gentiles, what fears and jealousies may this breed in us as well as the Jews: O boast not against the Branches! it may be thou wilt say, The Branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in: well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by Faith; be not high-minded, but fear: For if God spared not the natural Branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God; on them which felt severity: but towards thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise thou shalt be cut off. But I will not dwell on this: my design is to consider of Jesus, and of the transactions of Jesus in reference to our souls health: now John's Sermons were only a preparative to the manifestation of Jesus; he was only the Forerunner of Christ, and not Christ himself, as himself witnesseth.

SECT. III. Of the Baptism of Jesus.

2. FOR the Baptism of Christ. He that formerly was circumcised, would now be baptized; he was circumcised to sanctify his Church that was, and he was baptized to sanctify his Church that should be; we find him in both Testaments opening a way into Heaven. This was the first appearing of Christ in reference to his Ministerial Office, he that lay hid in the counsel of God from all eternity, and he that lay hid in the womb of his Mother for the space of forty weeks, and he that lay hid in Nazareth for the space of thirty years; now at last he begins to show himself to the World, and He comes from Galilee to Jordan, to John to be baptized of him. The day was but a little broke in John the Baptist, but Christ the Son of Righteousness soon entered upon our Hemisphere; indeed now was the full time come, that Jesus took his leave of his Mother, and his Trade, to begin his Fathers work, in order to the Redemption of the World. For the clearer understanding of Christ's Baptism, we shall examine these Particulars.—

1. What Reason had Christ to be Baptized?
2. How was it that John knew him to be Christ?
3. Wherein was the glory of Christ's Baptism?
4. What was the Prayer of Christ, at, or after his Baptism?
5. Why was it that the Holy Ghost descended on Jesus?
6. Upon what account was it that the Holy Ghost should reveal himself at this time? and why in the form of a Dove rather than some other form?

1. What reason had Christ to be Baptized? we find John himself wondering at this; I have need to be Baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? Many Reasons are given for Christ's Baptism: As, 1. That by this symbol he might enter himself into the Society of Christians; just like a King, to endear himself to any City of his Subjects, he condescends to be made a free-man of that City. 2. That he might bear witness to the Preaching and Baptism of John, and might reciprocally receive a Testimony from John. 3. That by his own Baptism, he might sanctify the water of Baptism to his own Church. 4. That he might give an example himself of the performance of that, which he enjoined others. 5. That he might receive Testimony from Heaven, that he was the Son of God. 6. That he might fulfil all Righteousness: not only the Moral, but the Figurative, Ceremonial and Typical: Some think, that the Ceremony, to which our Savior looked at in these words, was the washing of the Priests in water, when they entered into their Function: And Aaron and his Sons thou shalt bring to the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and shalt wash them with water. And surely this was the main reason of Christ's being Baptized, that by this Baptism he might be installed into his Ministerial Office.

2. How did John know him to be Christ? It is very probable he had never seen his Face before; they had in their Infancy been driven to several places, and they were designed to several employments, and never met (as we may well conceive) till now: besides, the Baptist speaks expressly, I knew him not, but he that sent me to Baptize with water, the same said unto me, on whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and abiding on him, the same is he that Baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. Now this descent of the Holy Ghost, was not till after Baptism; how then did he know him to be Christ?

The Answer is given by some thus; that John knew Christ in some measure before his Baptism; but he knew him not so fully as after, when the Holy Ghost had descended on him. Others thus; that John knew Christ before his Baptism, by a present revelation, and after Baptism by a present sign; it is not unlikely but John knew Christ at his first arrival by revelation; for if whiles he was in his Mothers womb, he knew Christ being yet unborn, how much more might he know and acknowledge him now at his Baptism? Thus Samuel knew Saul; and thus John might know Christ. But for that knowledge he had after Baptism, it was a further confirmation of that same knowledge that he had before Baptism, and that not so much for his own sake, as for the Peoples. I saw, and bear record that this is the Son of God.

3. Wherein was the Glory or excellency of Christ's Baptism? The Ancients give many Encomiums to it, and in some respects prefer it to the Birth of Christ; thus Augustine; Many great Miracles were at Christ's Birth, but they were far greater at his Baptism; the Holy Ghost overshadowed him in the Womb, but he brightly shone on him in the River; then was the Father silent, not a word from him, but now a loud voice is heard from Heaven, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; then was the Mother under suspicion, because she was found with Child without a Father; but now is the Mother greatly honored, in that the Holy Child is Fathered by God himself: then was Christ hid to the world; and this made John the Baptist say, there stands one amongst you whom ye know not: He was before his Baptism as the Sun in a Cloud, or a Pearl in a shell, or a Goldmine in a Field: but now he appears in public; and to manifest his Glory, the Heavens open, and from the Heavens the Holy Ghost descends, and alights upon his sacred head; and God the Father gives a voice from Heaven, declaring his Divinity to the world. If the Jews require a sign, here is not one, but many signs at once; which as Beams do discover a Sun, so they discover this Sun of Righteousness to be risen amongst them; and herein was the Glory of Christ's Baptism.

4. What was the Prayer of Christ, at, or after his Baptism? The Evangelist Luke speaks of his Prayer. It came to pass that Jesus being Baptized, and Praying, the Heavens were opened. This was the manner of those that were Baptized, as soon as they were Baptized, to come out of the water and Pray; and some think that these words, they were Baptized of him in Jordan confessing their sins, hath reference to this: if so, then Christ having no sins to confess of his own, the tenor of his prayer must needs be to some other purpose: But to what purpose? some say, to the same purpose as his Prayers were usually; as in John 17. that his Father would preserve his Church in Unity and Truth; and that he would Glorify his Church, that they also might be one, even as he and his Father are one; and especially that many might be converted by his Ministry, which he was now beginning. Others think that this Prayer at this time, was for that which followed upon his very prayer (i.e.) that the Holy Ghost might descend, and that the Father would Glorify the Son by a Testimony from Heaven: Indeed, the Text hath laid his Prayer, and the opening of the Heavens so close together, as that it seems to point out what was the tenor of his Prayer, by the consequent of it. Before the Heaven was mured up, no Dove to be seen, no Voice to be heard, but straight upon it (as if they had but waited the last word of his prayer) all of them follow: and in another place, we find the like return upon the like prayer; Father, Glorify thy Name: then came there a voice from Heaven, saying, I have both Glorified it, and I will Glorify it again: one reason more, if we consider that Christ was now to enter upon the great Work of our Redemption, and the preaching of the Gospel, it will be no less strange to conceive that he prayed for the visible sealing of him to that Work and Office, by the coming of the Holy Ghost. To this purpose is that of the Evangelist; for him hath God the Father sealed; it is a Phrase borrowed from them, who give their Commissions under hand and seal; and this is certain that upon his Prayer God sent the holy Spirit, who sealed him, or allowed, and confirmed him to the Office of our Redemption; and therefore very probable it is, that his Prayer might tend to that purpose; but herein take heed of excluding what was mentioned in the former opinion; for my part, I suppose Christ's prayer was both for himself, and all Believers; that the holy Ghost might now be joined to the water; and that all others as should ever after believe in his Name (as afterwards he enlargeth his Prayer) might have the Holy Ghost descend upon them, John 17.20.

5. Why was it that the Holy Ghost descended on Jesus? I answer, for these reasons, 1. That John the Baptist might be satisfied; for this Token was given John, when he first began to preach, that upon whom he should see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is He which Baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. It was a sure sign to the Baptist, whereby to know the Christ, whose Harbinger and Prodromus he was. 2. That Christ himself might be anointed or installed to his Function. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because the Lord hath anointed me to Preach good tidings unto the meek, &c. As Aaron and his Sons were anointed with material Oil, when they entered into their Offices, so Christ was by the Spirit (as it were) anointed, that so he might receive this Consecration and Institution for the Office that he was to enter on, viz. the Preaching and Ministry of the Gospel.

6. Upon what account was it that the Holy Ghost should reveal himself at this time? and why in form of a Dove, rather than some other form?

To the first I answer, the Holy Ghost now revealed himself, because the Spiritual Kingdom and Scepter of Christ, in and by which he was to rule all Nations forever, was now at hand. It was agreeable (saith my Author) that the spiritualness of this Kingdom should be sealed and confirmed by the Holy Spirits showing himself even in the beginning of it. The carnal Rites of Moses were now to vanish, and his Corporal and Ceremonial Observances were now to be changed into a Spiritual Worship; and neither at Jerusalem, or at Mount Gerazim, nor elsewhere, must there be anymore adoration with fleshly and earthly Ceremonies; but he that will Worship God, must worship him in Spirit and Truth; and therefore it is no wonder, if now the Holy Ghost doth reveal himself; I say now, when his Spiritual Dominion by sanctification is to begin. Secondly, Because the Holy Ghost was now in especial manner to be restored again: Some observe, that he was visibly departed from Israel after the Death of the last Prophets; and therefore now at his restoring, he comes in a visible and apparent form; and he lights on him, to whom it belongs to give the Spirit, and his gifts to whom he pleaseth. As John had preached that Christ should baptize with the Holy Ghost, so now the Holy Ghost comes and abides on Jesus Christ, in the sight of John; as if the Father should have said, Now I seal that Power and Privilege to Christ my Son, which John hath spoken: now the Holy Ghost is upon himself, and hereafter he shall baptize others with the same Holy Ghost. Thirdly, Because at the beginning of the Gospel it was most suitable, that a full, clear, and sensible demonstration of the whole Trinity should be made. The Learned observe, that the Holy Ghost in Scripture hath a special regard to express this Mystery of the Trinity upon singular occasions; so the very first thing that is taught in all the Bible, is this same Mystery; In the Begining God Created; there is the Father: and God said; there is the Word, or the Son; and the Spirit of God moved; there is the Holy Ghost. And the very first word of the Bible that speaks of a man, it holds out the Trinity as creating him: and God said, Let us make Man in our own Image; he saith, let us] to show the Trinity of persons; and he saith in our Image] not in our Images, to show the Unity of Essence. And when Moses begins to rehearse the Law to Israel, the first thing he teacheth them, is the Trinity in Unity, and Unity in Trinity. Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one. The last word One denotes the Unity; the three words, the Lord our God, answer the three Persons; and the middle word our God, decipheres fitly the second Person, who assumed our Nature: how fit then was it, that at the beginning of the new world, and the new Law, and the Baptism of Christ, the three persons should be revealed; especially since he ordained Baptism to be admitted in all their names? Baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghost: But where is it revealed? see Mat. 3.16, 17. where the Father speaks from Heaven, the Son comes out of the water, and the holy Ghost appears in the likeness of a Dove. This was the greatest meeting that ever was upon the earth; every person of the Trinity gives some sensible evidence of his presence at it.

To the second; why in the form of a Dove, rather than some other form? Many reasons are given; as,—

1. To show Christ's innocence, purity, simplicity, charity, and love.
2. To show what innocence and harmlessness should be in those that are baptized.
3. To answer the Figure in Noah's Flood; for as a Dove at that time brought tidings of the abatings of the waters, so now it brings tidings of the abating of God's wrath upon the preaching of the Gospel: the first Dove we find in the Bible, is Noah's Dove, with the Olive-Branch in her Bill, proclaiming peace; the next is David's Dove with Feathers silver-white, as noting sincerity; then Esays Dove, mourning with her voice, as signifying patience; and lastly, Christ's Dove, innocent and harmless; now all these properties meet in this Dove, the Spirit of God. Much more might I add to these; but I desire to hasten to some more edifying truths.

From this Baptism of Christ, we may learn a practical necessary Truth; There is a Generation that cries down Baptism of water, and upon this score, because they suppose it was proper to John to Baptise only with water; and to Christ to Baptise only with the holy Ghost, and with fire. Indeed Christ in his own person Baptized none otherwise, but with the holy Ghost; immediately after his Ascension, he sent his Spirit upon the Church, and baptized them with fire, the spirit appearing like a flame; and to this day (though not visibly) he Baptizeth all his Saints with the Holy Ghost, and with fire: but for all this, he appointed John, and not only John, but all his Apostles, and their Successors forever, to Baptise with water; and they did so, and yet do so, obeying the preceptive words of Christ, which are almost the last words that he spake upon the earth. And though Christ did not Baptize with water, yet Christ himself (we see here) was Baptized with water; he himself enters at that door, by which his Disciples must forever follow after him; and indeed therefore he went in at that door of Baptism, that he might hallow, or sanctify the entrance which himself made to the house he was now a Building. And for the difference they make betwixt Christ's Baptism, and John's Baptism: what's this to the purpose? we all know, that in Baptism are two parts, the outward part, and the inward part; you may call them (if you please) the outward Baptism, and the inward Baptism: the outward Baptism is of the Minister, but the inward Baptism is of Christ. But must we separate these? or rather Join them (if these in ordinary must be joined) as we find them in Christ, and as we desire they may be in us? I cannot see, but the Baptism we use, and the Baptism of John are in nature and substance one, and the very same. 1. John preached the Baptism of Repentance for the remission of Sins; they have therefore the same Doctrine; and the same Promise. 2. The Baptism Ministred by John, pertained to the fulfilling of all Righteousness; and Luke testifies, that the Publicans and People being Baptized of John, they Justified God; but the Pharisees despised the Council of God against themselves, and were not Baptized: only herein lies the difference, that John Baptized in Christ that should die and rise again: but we Baptize into the Name of Christ that is dead, and risen again; it is a difference in respect of Circumstance, but not of the Substance: Oh take heed of throwing away the Baptism of water, upon the pretence of Baptism, only with Fire! Christ (we see) hath joined them together, and let no man separate them asunder: Christ himself was Baptized with fire, and yet Christ himself was Baptized with water.

SECT. IV. Of the Fasting and Temptation of Christ.

3. FOR the Fasting and Temptation of Christ in the Wilderness. No sooner is Christ come out of the water of Baptism, but he presently enters into the fire of temptarion; no sooner is the holy Spirit descended upon his head, but he is led by the same holy Spirit to be tempted in the wilderness; no sooner doth God say, This my Son; but Satan puts it to the question, if thou be the Son of God; all these are but Ghrist's preparatives to his Prophetical Office; in the former Section, Christ was prepared by a solemn Consecration, and now he is to be further prepared by Satan's Temptations; there is much in this particular, and therefore in the same method as the Evangelist lays it down, Mat. 4.1.2, 3. to v. 12. I shall proceed. Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the Wilderness to be tempted of the Devil, &c. In the whole, we may observe these several Branches, as, First, the place where the Temptation was; to wit, the Wilderness. Secondly, the cause of Christ's going into the Wilderness; the Spirits leading. Thirdly, the end of the spirits leading Christ into the wilderness; to be tempted of the Devil. Fourthly, the time and occasion of the Devils onset; at the end of forty days fast, and when he was an hungered. Fifthly, the Temptations themselves which are in number three; to which are added as many Victories, which Christ had over the Tempter; who therefore left him, and so the Angels came, and ministered unto him. I shall begin first with the place where the Temptation was; to wit, in the Wilderness.

This wilderness was not that same wilderness, or not that same place of the wilderness wherein John Baptist lived, Mat. 3.1. For that wherein John Baptist lived, was a place inhabited; there was in that place Cities and Towns, and a number of people to whom John Preached; but this wilderness was devoid of men, full of wild beasts; so saith Mark, He was tempted of Satan, and was with the wild Beasts. As Adam in his Innocency lived with wild Beasts and they hurt him not; so Christ, the second Adam lives, here in a wilderness with wild Beasts, and he has no hurt at all; he is Adam-like in his safety and security; but above Adam in the resisting of temptation. Some say that in this wilderness, during his forty days abode, Christ was perpetually disturbed and assaulted with evil Spirits; however the last brunt is only expressed, because it was most violent; now whether they appeared in any horrid and affrighting shapes during that time, it is not certain; but 'tis most likely, that to a Person of so great sanctity, and high designation as Jesus was, they would appear more angelical and immaterial, and in representments intellectual, because Jesus was not a Person of those low weaknesses, to be affrighted or troubled with any ugly phantasmes; 'tis not much material to enquire of this; but in the wilderness (say they) Christ was perpetually tempted; and in this respect I know not, but the Devil had more advantage now he had Christ in a wilderness; solitariness is no small help to the speed of a Temptation; Woe to him that is alone, for if he fall, there is not a second to take him up. Others say, that in this wilderness, during his forty days abode, Christ was continually exercised in Prayer and Fasting; all that while he had his immediate Addresses and Colloquies with God; he knew he had a great work of Redemption to promote; and therefore his Conversation for this interval must be preparatory to it; in this respect I know not but the wilderness might be an advantage to Christ's Design: In this solitary place he could not but breath out more pure inspiration; Heaven usually is more open, and God usually is more familier and frequent in his visits in such places. I know not what other experiences may be; but if I have found anything of God, or of his Grace, I may thank a Wood, a Wilderness, a Desert, a solitary place, for its accommodation; and have I not a blessed Pattern here before me? It was Solitude and Retirement in which Jesus kept his Vigils; the desert places heard him pray; in a privacy he was born, in the wilderness he fed his thousands, upon a Mountain apart he was transfigured, upon a Mountain he died, and from a Mountain he ascended to his Father: I make no question but in these Retirements his Devotion received the advantage of convenient Circumstances, especially of time and place. And yet I dare not deny the firster opinion; for I suppose both Christ and the Devil had their advantages of this Wilderness, the one is to pray, and the other to tempt.

2. The cause of Christ's going into the Wilderness was the Spirits leading. Then was Jesus led of the Spirit into the Wilderness; Christ was led by the good Spirit, to be tempted by the evil Spirit: O wonder! that same Spirit which was one with the Father and the Son; that same Spirit whereby Christ was conceived, now drives him or leads him into the wilderness to be tempted of the Devil: The manner of Christ's leading is a question; some think he was led or caught away from Jordan in some visible rapture towards the wilderness: But to leave that, and to come to Truths more necessary; Christ taught us to Pray unto his Father, Lead us not into temptation; and yet he himself is now led into the same temptation which we must pray against; surely this is for our instruction: we are not to thrust ourselves upon temptation;

Christ himself would not go into the Combat uncalled, unwarranted, how then should we poor weaklings presume upon any abilities of our own? who dares grapple with the Devil in his own strength? O take heed! if we are to pray not to be led into temptation, much more are we to pray not to run into temptation before we are led; and yet for the comfort of God's people, if it be so that we are led; if by divine permission, or by an inspiration of the holy Spirit, we are engaged in an action, or in a course of life that is full of temptations, and empty of comforts, let us look upon it as an issue of divine Providence in which we must Glorify God; but no argument of disfavour or dislove of God: and why? because Christ himself who could have driven the Devil away by the breath of his mouth, yet was, by the Spirit of his Father, led to a Trial by the Spirits of Darkness. My Brethren, count it all joy (saith James) when ye enter into divers temptations, knowing that the trial of your Faith worketh Patience.

3. The end of the Spirits leading Christ into the wilderness, it was either immediate, or remote. 1. For the immediate end; it was to be tempted of the Devil: to this purpose was Christ brought thither, that Satan might tempt him. One would think it a very strange design that the Son of God should be brought into a wilderness to be set on by all the Devils in Hell; but in this also God had another remote end (i.e.) his own Glory, and our good. 1. His own Glory appeared in this; had not Satan tempted Christ, how should Christ have overcome Satan? The first Adam was tempted, and vanquished; the second Adam, to repay and repair that Foil, doth vanquish in being tempted; now herein was the Power of Christ exceedingly manifested: the Devil having the Chain let loose, he lets fly at Christ with all his might; and Christ, that without blows could not have got a Victory, by this furious assault of Satan, he both overcomes him, and triumphs over him. And herein were the Graces of Christ exceedingly manifested; how was the Faith, Patience, Humility, Zeal and Valour of Christ set forth, which they could not have been, if he had always lain quietly in Garrison, and never had come into the Skirmish? Who could have felt the Odoriferous smells of those Aromatical Spices, if they had not been punned and bruised in this Mortar of Temptation? It was by this means that the Graces of Christ clearly shined forth to his eternal Praise. 2. As it was for his Glory, so also for our Good. Now we see what manner of Adversary we have, how he fights, and how he is resisted, and how overcome; now we see the dearer we are to God, the more obnoxious we are to a trial of temptation; now we see that the best of Saints may be tempted or allured to the worst of evils; since Christ himself is solicited to Infidelity, Covetousness and Idolatry: now we see that we have not a Savior and High Priest, that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but such a one as was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sin; and therefore we may go boldly to the Throne of Grace, that we may receive Mercy, and find Grace of help in time of need.

4. The time and occasion of the Devils Onset; it was at the end of forty days Fast, and when he was an hungered. Some say (as you have heard) that all those forty days, when Christ was in the Wilderness, he was tempted only invisibly: for Satan during that time, assumed not any visible or conspicuous shape, which it the end of forty days, (say they) he did: my meaning is not to controvert these points. Howsoever for his tempting, yet for his fasting forty days and forty nights, there is no controversy; and of that we had some Types before Christ came into the World; thus Moses fasted forty days at the delivery of the Law; and Elias fasted forty days at the restitution of the Law; and to fulfil the time of both these Types, Christ thinks it fit to fast forty days at the accomplishment of the Law, and the promulgation of the Gospel. In fasting so long, Christ manifests his Almighty Power; and in fasting no longer, Christ manifests the truth of his Manhood, and of his weakness: that he might approve that there was no difference betwixt him and us, but sin, he both fasted, and was an hungered; we know well enough, that Christ could have lived without meat, and he could have fasted without hunger; it had been an easy matter for him to have supported his Body without any means of nourishment or Life; but to show that he was man, as well as God, and so fit a Mediator betwixt God and Man, he would both feed and fast; make use of the Creature, and withal suffer hunger.—And now our Savior is an hungered; this gives occasion to Satan to set upon him with his fierce and violent temptations; he knows well what baits to fish withal, and when and how to lay them; he hath Temptations of all sorts; he hath Apples to cozen Children, and Gold for Men; he hath the Vanities of the World for the intemperate, and the Kingdoms of the world for the ambitious; he considers the temper and constitution of the Person he is to tempt; and he observes all our exterior Accidents, Occasions, and Opportunities; but of this hereafter.

5. The Temptations themselves are in number three; whereof the first was this: If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. What an horrible Entrance is this? if thou be the Son of God; no question Satan had heard the glad tidings of the Angel, he saw the Star, and the Journey, and the Offerings of the Sages; he could not but take notice of the congratulations of Zacharias, Simeon, Anna; and of late he saw the Heavens open, and he heard the Voice that came down from Heaven, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased: and yet now that he saw Christ fainting with hunger, as not comprehending how infirmities could consist with a Godhead, he puts it to the question, if thou be the Son of God. Oh here's a point in which lies all our happiness! how miserable were we, if Christ were not indeed and in truth the Son of God? Satan strikes at the root in this supposition; If thou be the Son of God: Surely all the work of our Redemption, and all the work of our Salvation depends upon this one necessary Truth, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. If Christ had not been the Son of God, how should he have ransomed the world? how should he have done, or how should he have suffered that which was satisfactory to his Fathers wrath? how should his Life or Death have been valuable to the sins of all the world? If Christ be not the Son of God, we are all gone; we are lost, we are undone, we are damned forever: O alas! farewell Glory, farewell happiness, farewell Heaven: If Christ be not the Son of God, we must never come there; well Satan, thou beginnest thy assault like a Devil indeed, if thou be the Son of God; but what then? Command that these stones be made Bread. He knew Jesus was hungry; and therefore he invites him to eat Bread only of his own providing, that so he might refresh his Humanity, and prove his Divinity: Come, says he, break thy fast upon the expense of a Miracle; turn these stones into Bread, and it will be some Argument thou art the Son of God. There is nothing more ordinary with our Spiritual enemy, than by occasion of want to move us to unwarrantable courses; If thou art poor, then steal; if thou canst not rise by honest means, then use indirect means: I know Christ might as lawfully have turned stones into Bread, as he turned water into Wine: but to do this in a distrust of his Fathers Providence, to work a Miracle of Satan's choice, and at Satan's bidding, it could not be agreeable with the Son of God: And hence Jesus refuseth to be relieved; he would rather deny to manifest the Divinity of his Person, than he would do any act which had in it the intimation of a different spirit. O Christians! it is a sinful, impious, wicked care, to take evil courses to provide for our necessities: Come, it may be thou hast found a way to thrive, which thou couldst not do before; O take heed; was it not of the Devils prompting to change stones into Bread? sadness into sensual Comforts? if so, then Satan hath prevailed: alas, alas, he cannot endure thou shouldst live a life of austerity, or self-denial, or of mortification; if he can but get thee to satisfy thy senses, and to please thy natural desires, he then hath a fair field for the Battle; it were a thousand times better for us to make stones our meat, and tears our drink, than to swim in our ill-gotten Goods, and in the fullness of Voluptuousness.

But what was Christ's Answer? why thus; it is written, man shall not live by Bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the month of God. 1. It is written] He easily could have confounded Satan by the Power of his Godhead, but he rather chooses to vanquish him by the Sword of the Spirit; surely this was for our Instruction; by this means he teacheth us how to resist and to overcome; nothing in Heaven or Earth can beat the Forces of Hell, if the Word of God cannot do it: O then how should we pray with David, Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes— and take not from me the words of truth, let them be my songs in the house of my pilgrimage,— so shall I make answer to my blasphemers. 2. Man shall not live by bread, &c. Whiles we are in God's work, God hath made a promise of the supply of all provisions necessary for us; now this was the present case of Jesus, he was now in his Father's work, and promoting of our interest, and therefore he was sure to be provided for according to God's Word. Christians! are we in God's service? God will certainly give us bread; and till he does, we can live by the breath of his mouth, by the light of his countenance, by the refreshment of his promises, by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God; every word of God's mouth can create a grace, and every grace, can supply two necessities, both of the body, and of the Spirit: I remember one kept straitly in prison, and sorely threatened with famine, he replied, That if he must have no bread, God would so provide, that he should have no stomach; if our stock be spent, God can lessen our necessities: If a Tyrant will take away our meat, God our Father knows how to alter our faint, and feeble, and hungry appetites.

The second temptation is not so sensual; the Devil sees that was too low for Christ, and therefore he comes again with a temptation something more spiritual; He sets him on a Pinnacle of the Temple, and saith unto him, if thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down, for it is written, he shall give his Angels charge concerning thee, &c. He that was content to be led from Jordan into the Wilderness, for the advantage of the first temptation, he yields to be led from the Wilderness to Jerusalem, for advantage of the second; the Wilderness was fit for a temptation arising from want, and Jerusalem is fit for a temptation arising from vain-glory; Jerusalem was the glory of the World, the Temple was the glory of Jerusalem, the pinnacle was the highest piece of the Temple, and there is Christ content to be set for the opportunity of temptation. O that Christ would suffer his pure and sacred body to be transported and hurried through the air by the malicious hand of the old Tempter! But all this was for us, he cared not what the Devil did in this way with him, so that he might but free us from the Devil. Methinks it is a sweet contemplation of an Holy Divine: He supposed as if he had seen Christ on the highest Battlements of the Temple, and Satan standing by him, with this Speech in his mouth, Well then, since in the matter of nourishment, thou wilt needs depend upon thy Fathers providence, take now a further trial of that providence, in thy miraculous preservation, cast down thyself from this height; behold, thou art here in Jerusalem, the famous and holy City of the World; here thou art on the top of the Pinnacle of that Temple which was dedicated to thy Father; and if thou beest God, why now the eyes of all men are fixed upon thee, there cannot be devised a more ready way to spread thy Glory, and to proclaim thy Deity, than by casting thyself headlong to the Earth; all the World will say, there is more in thee than a man; and for danger (if thou art the Son of God) there can be none: what can hurt him that is the Son of God? and wherefore serves that glorious Guard of Angels, which have by Divine Commission taken upon them the Charge of thy Humanity? Come, cast thyself down; here lies the temptation, Come, cast thyself down (saith Satan) but why did not Satan cast him down? He carried him up thither; and was it not more easy to throw him down thence? O no, the Devil may persuade us to a fall, but he cannot precipitate us without our own act; his malice is infinite, but his power is limited; he cannot do us any harm, but by persuading us to do it ourselves; and therefore saith he to Christ, cast thyself down.

To this Christ answers, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. Though it is true, that God must be trusted in, yet he must not be tempted; if means be allowed, we must not throw them away upon a pretence of God's protection: we read of one Heron, an Inhabitant of the Desert, that he suffered the same temptation, and was overcome by it; he would needs cast himself down, presuming on God's promise, and he sinfully died with his fall. Christ knew well enough that there were ordinary descents by stairs from the top of the Temple, and therefore he would not so tempt God to throw him himself headlong; What? To make trial of God's Power, and Justice, and Mercy, and extraordinary preservation, where there was no need: all the Devils in Hell could not so tempt Christ, as to make him tempt his God.

The third temptation is yet more horrid; the Temple was not high enough; so that now Satan takes him up to the top of an exceeding high mountain, and he shows him all the Kingdoms of the World, and the Glory of them, saying, all these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me, Not to insist on those many Queries; how should all the Kingdoms of the World be presented to Christ's eye? Or if they were only presented to his imagination, why could not the Valley have served the Devil's turn, as well as an hill? or whether was not Rome the object that the Devil presented? because at that time, Rome was the top of all the Kingdoms of the world, and the Glory of them? For my part, I think, in this Temptation, the Devil united all his Power of stratagems, and by an angelical Power he drew into one center, the several Species and Idea's, from all the Kingdoms and Glories of the world; and he made an admirable Map of Beauties; and represented them to the eyes of Jesus; he thought Ambition more likely to ruin him, because he knew it was that which prevailed upon himself, and all those fallen stars, the Angels of darkness; and therefore, come (saith Satan) all these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. How? God worship the Devil? was ever the like Blasphemy since the first Creation? indeed now we have many fearful, execrable, cursed Blasphemies belched out, and Idolatry, I believe, is the spreading'st sin in the World; but was ever the like Blasphemy, or Idolatry to this, that not only a Creature, but the Creator himself must fall down before the Devil, and give worship unto him? The Lamb of God, that heard all the former Temptations with patience; he could by no means endure this; our own injuries are opportunities of patience; but when the Glory of God, and his immediate Honor is the question, then our Zeal should be all on a flame; now Christ bids him avoid; as soon as he observes his demands so impudent and Blasphemous; he commands him away, and tells him, it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Now was the Devil put to flight, and in his stead the Angels came and ministered unto Jesus; (i.e.) after his Fast, they ministered such things as his necessities required of them.

O Christians! what shall we say to this? if Christ was thus tempted by Satan, what may we look for: Sometimes it cheers my heart to think that Christ was tempted; because thereby he knows how to succor those that are tempted; and sometimes it affrights my Soul to think that Satan durst be so bold with Jesus Christ: Oh what may he do with me? how easily may he prevail against my Soul? when he came to tempt Christ, he found nothing in him to join with him in the temptation, but in my heart is a world of Corruptions; and unless the Lord prevent, I am quickly gone. I may not here fall on the Doctrine of Temptations; only a few words. 1. Of Satan's Stratagems. 7. Of some general means to withstand his Stratagems, and I have done.

1. His Stratagems are very many, and very dangerous; As, —

1. He observes, and fits his temptations to our dispositions; for example, if he find a man ambitiously affected, then he covers his hook with the Bait of Honors; and thus he tempted Abimelech to murder his Brethren, that he might obtain the Sovereignty; or if he find a man Voluptuously given, then he tempts him with the bait of Pleasures, and thus he allured Noah to Drunkenness; David to Adultery; Solomon to Idolatry; or if he find a man Covetously given, then he lets in the Golden hook; and thus he enticed Balaam, by offering him money to curse the people, whom God had Blessed; and thus he allured Judas for thirty pieces of Silver to betray his Master; but what need we Instances, when we see this day so many thousands entangled in this golden Net?

2. He observes, and fits his Temptations to our Complexions; and thus he tempts the choleric to quarrels and brawls; the flegmatick to idleness and sloth; the melancholy to malice and revenge; the sanguine to pleasure and fleshly lusts; and hence it is that the Apostles tells us, that whosoever is tempted, he is drawn away by his own Concupiscence. Satan never assaults us, but he is sure there is something within us, that will further him in his temptations.

3. He observes, and fits his temptations to our outward conditions; thus if we are in prosperity, then he tempts us to pride and forgetfulness of God, to contempt of our Brethren, to the love of the world, to coldness in Religion, carnal security, and the like: or if we are in adversity, then he tempts us to the use of unlawful means, to the distrusting of God's all-ruling providence, and never deceiving-promises; or, it may be, to despair, murmur, and repining against God; by this temptation he confidently presumed to have moved Christ to distrust God's providence, and to shift for himself, by turning stones into Bread.

4. He observes, and fits his temptations to our spiritual estate; thus, if we are notoriously wicked, then he tempts us to Atheism, contempt of God's worship, swearing, blaspheming, prophaining of the Lord's days; to disobedience, murders, adulteries, drunkenness, theft, covetousness, and all devilish practices; or if we are civilized, and run not with others into such an excess of riot and sin, why then he tempts us to a good opinion of such a condition, I thank thee, O Father, that I am not as other men, &c. I deal justly and uprightly with all my Neighbors; I have a good meaning towards God, though I am ignorant of Scripture, and of the Principles of Religion: or if we are professors of God's Truth, and can tip our tongues with Glorious words of Religion, Holiness, Christ, why then he tempts us with resting on this: What needs more? If I can but outwardly perform the Duties of Piety, as the hearing of God's word, receiving of the Sacraments, public and private calling on God; in this I am a true Protestant: that Charity, Love, good Works, and all the duties of the second Table can never Justify me, or save me, but only Faith; I believe, and I make a profession of Religion, and I hope this will suffice: Or if we are sincere professors, and but weak in the Faith, why then he tempts us with sad thoughts of our sins; he sets before us their number, and nature, and odiousness in every aggravation; and if therewith he cannot overwhelm us, he adds (it may be) unto them some of his own sins; thus he casteth into our minds many outrageous Blasphemies, such Blasphemies as he propounded to Christ, to worship him for our God, to deny Jesus Christ as our God, our Lord, our Savior, our Redeemer; to say in our hearts there is no God, but Nature; no Scripture, no Holy Ghost: many a precious Soul feels these injections of Satan; and I cannot wonder at it, when I see the Devil tempting Christ himself to diffidence, presumption, vain-Glory, yea, and to the worshiping of the Devil himself; or if we are strong Christians, grown men, and still growing towards the fullness of Christ, why then he tempts us to sins of presumption against knowledge; or if he cannot so prevail, he will Transform himself into an Angel of light, and tempt us to the doing a less good, that we may neglect a greater; or to the doing of a greater good, but very unseasonably. When as some other duties in respect of present occasion are more necessary far; thus many times in the hearing of God's Word, he will cast into our minds meditations of this or that excellent subject, on purpose to distract our minds, and to make us hear without profit; and in Prayer to God, he will bring into our memories this or that profitable instruction, which we have heard at such, or such a Sermon, on purpose to disturb our Spirits in that holy exercise, and to keep us from lifting up our hearts wholly and purely unto God: I might add a thousand of these stratagems of the Devil, and yet not perhaps tell one of a thousand: the Apostle could say indeed, that he was not ignorant of his devices; and of some of his devices, you see, we are not ignorant; but alas! who can discover all his Methods, Wiles, Depths, fiery Darts? For my part I cannot do it, I am yet to learn.

2. The general means to withstand his Stratagems are such as these.—

1. A continual reminding of Christ's Commands in this very thing; Be strong in the Power of his might: put on the whole Armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil; him resist in the Faith.

2. An avoiding of the first suggestions of Satan; if this gliding Serpent can but thrust in his head, he will easily make room for his body; and therefore we must nip, and bruise him in the head; Give no place to the Devil.

3. An objecting of Christ against all his temptations; for example, if Satan tell us that we are miserable sinners; we may answer, that Christ came into the World to save sinners; and that he was wounded for our transgressions, and broken for our iniquities,— and with his stripes are we healed: If Satan tell us that we are subject to God's wrath; we may answer, that Christ did bear his Fathers wrath, that he might make our peace: If he tells us, that we are subject to the Curse of the Law; we may answer, that Christ hath redeemed us from the Curse of the Law, when he was made a Curse for us: If he tell us, that we are his bondslaves, we may answer, that we were so indeed in times past; but Christ hath paid his Father the price of our Redemption, and hath set us free▪ if he tell us, that we are unjust, and therefore shall be condemned before God's judgment-seat, we may answer, that Christ, who was Innocent, was therefore condemned, that we, who are guilty, might thereby be acquitted; and that he that came to save us, will himself judge us, and therefore we need not doubt of mercy, if we plead the merits of Christ: or if Satan will not be thus answered by us; why then Christians! there's no other way, but to send him to Christ: to this purpose, we may tell him that Christ is our Advocate; and if he will needs dispute, let him go to Jesus; he is both able to plead our cause, and to answer to all the Suits that are made against us.

4. I may add hearing, reading, meditating on God's Word, holy Conferences, busy employment in the works of our particular callings; living by Faith, I must not stay on all these means, only remember amongst the rest, that one of Christ: Watch and Pray, that ye enter not into temptation; Praying against it, is a denying of it, and a great part of the victory; for it is a disclaiming the entertainment of it; it is a positive rejection of the crime; it is a calling in auxiliaries from above, to make the victory more certain to us. Hence one sweetly adviseth, If temptation sets upon thee, do thou set upon God; for he is as soon overcome as thou art; as soon moved to good, as thou art to evil; he is as quickly invited to pity thee, as thou art to ask him; provided thou dost not finally rest in the Petition, but pass into action, and endeavor by all means to quench the flame newly kindled in thy bowels, before it come to devour the marrow that is in thy bones: indeed a strong prayer, and a lazy, incurious, unobservant walking are contradictions in Religion; and therefore Watch and Pray, and pray and watch.

SECT. V. Of the first Manifestation of Christ.

4. FOr the first Manifestation of Jesus by his several witnesses; now it was time that the Sun of Righteousness should arise, and shine in the view of the world: and (because of unbelief which had blinded the world) that some especial witnesses should be chosen out, both to anoint our eyes, and to point to the light, saying, This is he of whom Moses in the Law and the Prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth the Son of Joseph: to this purpose we read much of the manifestation of Jesus; God was manifest in the flesh. And Christ verily was fore-ordained before the foundations of the World, but was manifest in these last times for you. In that first Miracle that ever he wrought, this is written upon it, he manifested forth his Glory. And John the Divine, in his setting out of Jesus, he tells us, that the Life was manifested; and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal Life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us.

And there is reason for this manifestation. 1. Because every manifestation was an approbation of his Mission and Divinity. 2. Because in the manifestation of Christ, there was a manifestation of the Grace of God; and this was the Will of God, that he would not only act free Grace, but he would have it known, and published to all the world; this is the Glory of Grace, and sets it out: And therefore saith the Apostle, The grace of God that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men. At the opening and discovery of Jesus Christ, the kindness, and pity, and love of God our Savior towards man appeared. 3. Because this manifestation hath something in it of the removal of sin; it is the voice of Christ unto such as are in sin, Behold me; the first step towards the remission of Sins, is the beholding of Christ; now we cannot behold him that will not come into view: and therefore saith the Apostle, ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins. 4. Because this manifestation hath something in it to the overthrowing of Satan; for the while that Christ hid himself, Satan blinded the minds of men; but when once Christ the Image of God shone forth, then Satan, like Lightning fell down from Heaven; for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil. 5. Because this manifestation tends to our believing in Christ, and by consequence to our Salvation through Christ: Many signs Christ did in the presence of his disciples which are not written; but these are written, (saith John) that ye might believe that Jesus is Christ the Son of God; and that believing, ye might have life through his Name.

Well, but wherein was this first manifestation of Jesus? I answer, in those several witnesses that held him forth: It is written in the Law (saith Christ) that the testimony of of two men is true; but to manifest Christ, were many witnesses. As, 1. From Heaven the Father is witness; for see, saith Christ, the Father that sent me, beareth witness of me: and the Son is witness; for so saith Christ: I am one that bear witness of myself; and though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true; for I know whence I came, and whither I go: and the Holy Ghost is witness; so saith Paul: The Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: and to that purpose he descended like a Dove, and light upon him. 2. On Earth John the Baptist is witness: for so saith Christ; ye sent unto John, and he bare witness unto the truth,—he came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through Christ might believe. No sooner was John confirmed by a sign from Heaven, that Jesus was the Christ, but he immediately manifests it to the Jews; and first to the Priests and Levites sent in legation from the Sanhedrim, he professed indefinitely in answer to their question, that himself was not the Christ, nor Elias, nor that Prophet, whom they by a special tradition expected to be revealed, though they knew not when; and secondly, to all the People he professeth definitely, wheresoever he saw Jesus Christ, this is he: yea, he points him out with his finger, Behold the Lamb of God that takes away the sins of the World. Then he shows him to Andrew, Simon Peter's Brother, and then to another Disciple with him, who both followed Jesus, and abode with him all night. Andrew brings his Brother Simon with him, and Christ changes his Name from Simon to Peter, or Cephas, which signifies a Sone. Then Jesus himself finds out Philip of Bethsaida, and bade him follow him; and Philip finds out Nathanael, and bids him come and see, for the Messiah was found; when Nathanael came to Jesus, Christ saw his heart, and gave him a blessed Character; Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile. Thus we see no less than five Disciples found out at first, which must be as so many witnesses of Jesus Christ.

And yet we find more witnesses; The works (saith Christ) that I do, in my Fathers name, they bear witness of me. These Works or Miracles of Christ were many; but because we are speaking of his first manifestation, I shall instance only in his first work, which was at a Marriage in Cana of Galilee. The power of Miracles had now ceased since their return out of Captivity; the last Miracle that was done by man till this very time, was Daniel's tying up the mouth of the Lions; and now Christ begins. He that made the first Marriage in Paradise, bestows his first Miracle upon a Marriage-Feast: O happy Feast, where Christ is a Guest! I believe this was no rich or sumptuous Bridal; whoever found Christ at the magnificent Feasts, or Triumphs of the great? The state of a Servant (in which state Christ was) doth not well agree with the proud pomp of the World: This poor needy Bridegroom wants drink for his Guests; and as soon as the Holy Virgin hath notice of it, she complains to her Son: whether we want Bread, or Water, or Wine, Necessaries, or Comforts, whether should we go but to Christ? The Lord is my Shepherd; and if that be so, it wall surely follow, I shall not want: But Jesus answered her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come. This shows, that the work he was to do, must not be done to satisfy her importunity, but to prosecute the great work of divine designation. In works spiritual and religious, all outward relation ceaseth: Matters of Miracle concerned the Godhead only; and in this case, O Woman, what have I to do with thee? We must not deny Love, and Duty to Relations; but in the things of God, natural Endearments must pass into spiritual; and like Stars, in the presence of the Sun, must not appear. Paul could say, Henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more.

At the Command of Jesus, the water pots were filled with water, and the water by his Divine Power is turned into Wine; where the different dispensation of God and the world is highly observable: Every man sets forth good Wine at first and then the worse: But Christ not only turns water into Wine, but into such Wine that at the last Draught is most pleasant: the world presents us with fair hopes of pleasures, honors, and preferments, but there's bitterness in the end: every sin smiles in the first address; but when we have well drunk, then comes that which is worse; only Christ turns our water into Wine; if we fill our water-pots with water; if with David, we water our Couch with our tears for sin, Christ will come with the Wine of gladness sooner or latter; and he will give the best wine at the last. O how delicate is that new Wine, which we shall one day drink with Christ in his Fathers Kingdom? These were the first manifestations of Jesus: you see he had several witnesses to set him forth; some from Heaven, and some on earth; the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost witness from Heaven; The Baptist, Disciples, and his works witness on earth; and there's no disagreement in their witness, but all bring in this testimony of Jesus, that he is the Messiah; that is being interpreted, the Christ.

But what are those manifestations to us? or to that great design of Christ in carrying on our souls salvation? Much every way. For either must Christ be manifested to us even by these witnesses, in the preaching of the Gospel, and manifested in us by that one witness, his holy spirit, or we are undone forever.

1. Christ must be manifested to us in the preaching of the Gospel: This mercy we have this day; nay, you see every Sabbath day all the witnesses speak in us: What do we, but in God's stead, in the Baptist's stead, in the Disciples stead, manifest Christ to you in every Sermon? It is the Commission which Christ hath given us of the Ministry, Go, preach the Gospel to every Creature. Observe but how open Christ's heart is towards you; he cannot contain his Love and Grace within himself, he cannot keep his own councils that are for the good of your souls, but all must be manifest, and that in the openest way, by Preaching and Proclaiming them to the world, Christ must be laid out to open view: Christ will have nothing of his Love kept back; he wills and commands us of the Ministry, instead of all those former witnesses, to make all known what he is, and what he hath done and suffered for you. Oh Christians! how cheap are the mysteries of the Gospel to you ward? you may know them, if you will but lend an ear, and listen to them: the word is nigh you, even in your mouths; Christ is proclaimed in your very streets; you may have him if you will, without money or money-worth: Come, buy Wine, and Milk, without Money, and without Price: Do you not hear? Christ is laid open for every man's good and profit: Christ deals not under-hand with you; he must be manifested, that you may see what you buy: if I should tell you the meaning of the Commission which Christ hath put into our hands, he bids me say thus to your souls, Come poor Creatures, you that stand in need of Jesus Christ, here is Christ for you; take him and do with him in an holy manner what you will, he is of infinite use for wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. What is our preaching, but a manifesting of Christ in this manner? what is the sum of all our Sermons, but a discovery of this, that life and light is in Christ for you, that eternal Love waits and attends on you, that whatever may do you good, is provided and made ready for you? Oh will souls now refuse Christ, when thus and thus manifested? God forbid.

2. Christ must be manifested in us by his holy Spirit. Christians! look to your hearts; what manifestations of Christ are there? When Paul speaks of the Gospel in general, he adds in particular, that it pleased God to reveal Christ in me. And when Peter speaks of the Word of God, he adds that we take heed thereunto,—until the day dawn, and the day-star (that is, Christ, Rev. 22.16.) arise in our hearts; till then, though we be circled with Gospel discoveries, our hearts will be full of darkness; but when Christ, whom the Prophet calls the Son of Righteousness, and Peter the day-star shall arise within us, we shall be full of light. Sometimes, I confess, I wonder that in these days there should be such glorious discoveries of the beauties, and sweetness, and excellencies of Jesus Christ, and yet that men's hearts are generally so full of darkness: but this takes off the wonder, hearts are carnal, Light shines in darkness, but darkness comprehendeth it not: Lead a blind man through a glorious City, and though there be such and such things in it, yet he tells you, he cannot prize them; he sees them not: though Jerusalem should come down from God out of Heaven (as John saw it in his Vision) prepared as a Bride adorned for her Husband; yet the natural man sees neither Walls, nor Gates, nor Streets; you may tell him, all is Gold, and Jasper, and Precious Stones, but for all this, he cannot prize them; alas, he sees them not: how many glorious Objects do the unregenerate slight? they see no beauty in Jesus Christ; they feel no sweet in Ordinances, the Sabbath is a trouble, and no delight to them; and whence all this? it is because there is no light, no manifestation of Christ within them; the Spirit of Christ hath not witnessed Christ, hath not manifested Christ within their souls, and therefore they remain in darkness.

SECT. VI. Of Christ's Whipping the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple.

5. Concerning Christ's whipping the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple: we read in the Gospel, That the Jews Passover being at hand, Jesus went up to Jerusalem: Thither, if we follow him, the first place that we find him in, is the Temple; where, by the occasion of the National Assembly, was an opportune Scene for Christ's transactions of his Fathers business. In that Temple Christ first espies a Mart; there were divers Merchants, and Exchangers of Money, that brought Beasts thither to be sold for sacrifice against that great Solemnity; at the sight of which, Jesus being moved with Zeal and Indignation, he makes a Whip of Cords, and according to the custom of the Zealots of the Nation, he takes upon him the Office of a private inflictor of punishment, he drives them all out of the Temple, he overthrows the accounting Tables, and commands them that sold the Doves, to take them from thence; and being required to give a sign of this fact; he only foretells the Resurrection of his Body, after three days death, expressing it in the Metaphor of the Temple, which was never rightly understood till it was accomplished.

In this heroical act, we may see how Christ is carried on with a Zeal for God, insomuch, that it brings to mind that saying of the Psalmist, The Zeal of thine House hath eaten me up; a Metaphor taken from Men that receive nourishment, which after its several concoctions, is assimilated into the nature of them that receive it. Zeal doth totally surprise us in what concerns God; in our Zeal we do so mind the things of God, as if we minded no nothing else. To what dangers, hazards, and censures, did Christ here in the exercise of the Zeal expose himself? His eminent Zeal appears,—

1. In the weakness of his means, whereby he did both attempt, and effect the work: we find him not armed with any weapons, that might carry dread and terror with them; at most but with a Whip made of a few small Cords, which probably were scattered by the Drovers which came thither to sell their Cattel.—2. In the strength that the opposite power did hold out, which makes the encounter so much the more dangerous: As, 1. A Garrison of Soldiers ready at hand, to appease occasional tumults. 2. The temper of those men's spirits with whom the business was; they were men set upon gain, the World's God. 3. The great Confluence of the people, it being the most solemn Mart of the Passover: O what a Zeal was this! that neither the weakness of the means, on the one side, to effect it, nor the greatness of the power, on the other side, to hinder it, did at all dismay him, or cause him to desist; seem he never so weak, or be they never so strong, he whips them out of the Temple, and bids them be gone.

This action of Christ fulfils that Prophecy of Malachi, The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his Temple; but who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like Refiners fire, and like Fullers Sope; and he shall sit as a Refiner and Purifier of Silver, and he shall purify the Sons of Levi, and purge them as Gold and as Silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an Offering in Righteousness.

From the main we may observe, that a persuasion of Christ's presence in our Church-assemblies, is a special means or motive to bring all into order.

But what is this presence of Christ in Church-assemblies? If by Christ's presence, we mean his bodily presence, it is true, that Christ in his Humanity, whipped the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple of Jerusalem; then in his Manhood he was upon Earth, and accordingly he vouchsafed his bodily presence to their assemblies and public places; but now his Manhood is in Heaven; and the Heavens must contain him till the times of restitution of all things: Now therefore we cannot expect his bodily presence, unless we will maintain the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, or of Consubstantiation; which far be it from us.

2. If by Christ's presence, we mean his spiritual presence; then the question is, what is this spiritual presence of Christ? for if we say, it is his presence as he is God, I should then query, how God is said to be present with men in one place more than another? God in his essence is fully everywhere, and inclusively nowhere: Heaven is his Throne, and Earth is his Footstool, and yet nor Earth, nor Heaven, nor the Heaven of Heavens is able to contain him: whiles we speak spiritually of Christ's presence in the assemblies of his People, we cannot mean his Universal presence, but his especial presence; and therefore as yet I suppose we have not the meaning of it.

3. If by Christ's presence we mean the presence, of his Spirit either in himself, or especially in his workings, stirrings, actings and movings in our Spirit, I should then subscribe; only I think this is not all that is included in his especial presence; true it is that when Christ was upon Earth, he told his Disciples that he must go away; for if he went not away, the Comforter would not come unto them; But if I depart (said he) I will send him unto you; and accordingly, when that Church-assembly was convened at Pentecost, God sent the Holy Ghost; much people being then gathered at Jerusalem, that it might be divulged to all the World. To all the Assemblies of the Saints, Christ promised his Spirit, though not always in a visible manner; Where two or three are gathered together in my name (saith Christ) there I am in the midst of them. Christ in his Spirit is in the midst of us, stirring and moving in our spirits: or the spirit of Unity is with united spirits. O he is a sweet Spirit, a Spirit of Love, and Concord, and Peace, and Glory; and therefore where should he be but with those that make harmony upon Earth? He is with them, and amongst them, and in them; Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you, and worketh in you?

4. If by Christ's presence, we mean the presence of his Angels, I shall then say, we have said enough; as a King is said to be where his Court is, where his Train or Retinue are, so Christ the King of Kings is there especially present, where the Heavenly Guard, the blessed Angels keep their sacred Station and Rendezvous, wheresoever it is. Now that this is Christ's special presence, it will appear in sundry Texts.

1. When Jacob saw that vision in Bethel, of the Ladder reaching from Earth to Heaven, and of the Angels of God ascending and descending upon it, Surely (saith Jacob) the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not; and he was afraid, and said, how dreadful is this place? this is none other but the House of God, and this is the Gate of Heaven: He calls it God's House, where God and his holy Angels, who are of his Household are especially present; and he calls it the Gate of Heaven, Heaven's Guild-Hall, Heaven's Court, namely, because of the Angels; for the Gate, Guild-Hall, or Court was wont to be the judgment-Hall, and the place where Kings and Senators used to sit, attended by their Guard and Ministers. The Chaldee addeth, This is no common or private place, but a place wherein God taketh pleasure, and over against this place is the Gate of Heaven.

2. When the Lord descended upon Mount Sinai to give the Law, some place the specification of God's presence in the Angels, to which purpose are alleged these Texts; Who have received the Law by the disposition of Angels, and have not kept it: and again, The Law was ordained by Angels in the Hand of a Mediator. Again, the Apostle calls the Law the Word spoken by Angels. I have already delivered my thoughts concerning these Angels; but some (I say) conclude from hence, that the special presence of the Divine Majesty consists in the encamping of his sacred Retinue, the blessed Angels; for that the Lord of himself, who filleth Heaven and Earth, could not descend, or be in one place more than another: There's yet another Text very pertinent to this. And he said, the Lord came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir unto them, he shined forth from Mount Paran, and he came with ten thousands of his Saints, from his right hand went a fiery Law for them: the words translated ten thousand of his Saints, are in the Original ten thousands of Sanctity, or holy ten thousands, or holy Myriads; which in my apprehension, points to the Angels, rather than his Saints: and the Psalmist puts it out of question: The Chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of Angels, the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy Place.

3. After the Law given, this presence of God was fixed to the Temple; and what that was, Isaiah describe thus; I saw also the Lord sitting upon a Throne, high, and lifted up, and his train filled the Temple; about it stood the Seraphims; They were God's Train, and they filled the Temple. And hence David addresses to God were said to be in the presence of Angels: Before the God's will I sing praises to thee, I will worship towards thy Holy Temple. The Septuagint translates it thus 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, before the Angels. I know in the time of the Gospel, we do not so fix God's presence to our Temples, or places of public assembling for the worship of his Name; but to our Church-assemblies in such places, why may we not? Were the Rudiments of the Law worthy of an attendance of Angels, and are the Churches of the Gospel destitute of so glorious a Retinue? Did the blessed Spirits wait upon the Types, and do they decline the Office at the ministration of the substance? Is the Nature of Man made worse, since the Incarnation of the Son of God? Or have the Angels purchased an exemption from their Ministry, since Christ became our Brother in the flesh? We have little reason to think so; the Apostle treating of a comely and decent demeanor to be observed in Church-assemblies, and in particular, of women's being covered or veiled there, he enforces it from this presence of Angels: For this cause ought the Woman to have a covering on her head, because of the Angels; namely, which are there present. Upon this ground, Chrysostom reproves the irreverent behavior of his Auditory; The Church, (saith he) is not a Shop of Manufactures or Merchandize, but the place of Angels, and of Archangels, the Court of God, and the Image and Representment of Heaven itself.—I know thou seest them not; but hear, and know that Angels are everywhere, and especially in the House of God, where they attend upon their King, and where all is filled with incorporeal powers. By this time, I hope, we know what is the meaning of Christ's presence in Church-assemblies; to wit, the presence of his Spirit, and the presence of his Angels.

And if it be so, would not a persuasion of this presence of Christ in our Church-Assemblies, be a special means or motive to bring all into order? Sometimes I wonder at the irreverent carriage of some Hearers, Laughing, Talking, Prating, Sleeping, in our congregations, what, is this a demeanour beseeming the presence of Angels, and the Spirit of Christ? wouldst thou carry thyself thus in the presence of a Prince, or of some earthly Majesty? If thou goest but into a Kings Palace (as Chrysostom speaks) thou composest thyself to a comeliness in thy habit, look, gate, and all thy guise, and dost thou laugh? I may add, dost thou any way carry thyself undecently in God's Presence? some there are, that in the very midst of Ordinances the Devil usually rocks them asleep; but Oh! dost thou not fear that thy damnation sleeps not? how justly might Christ come against thee in his wrath, and whip thee out of the Temple into Hell? surely we should do well to behave ourselves in such a presence with the thoughts and apprehensions of Heaven about us; our business here is an errand of Religion, and God himself is the object of our worship: how then should our actions bear at least some few degrees of a proportionable address to God, and Christ, and the Spirit of Christ? what? is Christ's Presence in his Spirit, and his Angels here? Oh let us walk with God as Enoch did, let us do all we do as in the Presence of Christ, and his Holy Angels.

And now was the first passover after Christ's Baptism; as it is written, and the Jews Passover was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

This was the first year of Christ's Ministry; whereof the one half was carried on by his Prodromus, or fore-runner, John the Baptist: and the other half (betwixt his Baptism, and this first Passover) was carried on by himself. And now hath Christ three years to his death; according to the method propounded; I shall come on to the second year, and to his actings therein in reference to our Souls Salvation.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. Of the second Year of Christ's Ministry, and of his Acts in general for that Year.

NOW was it that the Office of the Baptist was expired; and Christ beginning his Prophetical Office, he appears like the Sun, in succession of the Morning-Star; he takes at John, and preacheth the Sum of the Gospel, Faith and Repentance: Repent ye, and believe the Gospel, Mark 1.15. Now, what this Gospel was, the sum and series of all his following Sermons expressed and declared: it is fully contained in the new Covenant, of which we have spoken, for what is the Gospel but a Covenant of Grace, wherein all the imperfections of our works are made up by the perfection and Grace of Jesus Christ? the Gospel is not a Covenant of works (i.e.) it is not an agreement upon the stock of innocence, requiring strict and exact obedience without any allowance of Repentance; no, no, be Holy, saith the Gospel, and where that fails, Repent, and believe. By this time the work in his hand was grown high and pregnant, and Jesus saw it Convenient to choose more Disciples; with this Family he goes up and down the whole Galilee, Preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, healing all manner of Diseases, curing Demoniacks, cleansing Leapers, giving strength to Paraliticks, and to lame People.

It is not my purpose to enlarge on all the Sermons, Miracles, Conferences, or Colloquies of Christ with men; I am not for large Volumes, and I suppose with John, that if all the Acts of Christ should be written with Commentaries on them, that even the world itself could not contain the Books that should be written.

In this year therefore I shall contract and limit myself to the Consideration of Christ in these two particulars. As first to his Preaching. 2. To his Miracles; both these relate to the use and exercise of his Prophetical Office.

SECT. II. Of Christ's Sermons this Year.

1. His Preaching this year was frequent, and amongst others his Sermons; now it was that he delivered the first Sermon, Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.

2. Now was it that he delivered that spiritual and mystical Sermon of Regeneration, at which Nichodemus wonders, how can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his Mothers womb and be born? But Jesus takes off the wonder, in telling him, this was not a work of flesh and blood, but of the Spirit of God, for the Spirit bloweth where it listeth; and is as the wind certain and notorious in the effects, but secret in the Principle, and manner of production. Then Christ proceeds in his Sermon, telling him yet of higher things, as of his descent from Heaven, of his Passion and Ascension, and of the Mercy of Redemption, which he came to work and effect for all that believe; of the Love of the Father, the Mission of the Son, the Rewards of Faith, and Glories of Eternity: and this was the Sum of his Sermon to Nichodemus, which was the fullest of mystery and speculation that ever he made, except that which he made immediately before his death.

3. Now was it that the throng of Auditors forcing Christ to leave the shore, he makes Peter's ship his Pulpit; never were there such Nets cast out of that Fisher-boat before; while he was upon land, he healed the Sick bodies by his touch; and now he was upon Sea, he cured the sick souls by his Doctrine; he that made both Sea and Land, causeth both to conspire to the opportunities of doing good to the souls and bodies of men.

4. Now it was that he Preached that blessed Sermon on that text, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to Preach the Gospel to the Poor: no question but he Preached both to poor and rich, Christ Preached to all: but for the Power and Fruit of his Preaching, it was only received and entertained by the poor in spirit. In the following particulars, his Office is set out still in an higher tenor, To heal the broken hearted, to Preach deliverance to the Captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, or as it is in Isa. 61.1. the opening of the Prison to them that are bound; a sad thing to be in captivity, but sadder to be bound in chains, or locked up in a prison there; but 'tis most sad of all to be imprisoned, having ones eyes put out; as it was the case of Sampson and Zedekiah; Now the Evangelist willing to render the Prophet to the highest comfortable sense that might be, he useth an expression that meets with the highest mystery; that is, when a man is not only shut up in a blinded Prison, when he himself also hath his eyes put out; and to such Christ should Preach; Preach what? not only deliverance to the Captives, but also restoring of Light to Captive Prisoners, nay yet more, recovering of sight to blinded Prisoners, as the Evangelist renders it.

5. Now it was that he delivered the admirable sermon, called The Sermon upon the Mount. It is a breviary of all those Precepts which are truly called Christian; it contains in it all the moral Precepts given by Moses, and opens a stricter sense, and more severe exposition than the Scribes and Pharisees had given; it holds forth the Doctrines of meekness, poverty of spirit, Christian mourning, desire of Holy things, mercy, and purity, peace, and patience, and suffering of injuries; he teacheth us how to pray, how to fast, how to give Alms, how to contemn the world, and how to seek the Kingdom of God, and its appendent righteousness.

And thus Christ being entered upon his Prophetical Office; in these and the rest of his sermons he gives a clear testimony that he was not only an interpreter of the Law, but a Law-giver; and that this Law of Christ might retain some proportion at least with the Law of Moses, Christ in his last sermon went up into a Mountain, and from thence gave the Oracle. I cannot stand to paraphrase on this, or any other of his sermons, but seeing now we find Christ in the exercise of his Prophetical Office, let us observe first his Titles in this respect. 2. The reasons of his being a Prophet. 3. The Excellency of Christ above all other Prophets, and then we have done.

SECT. III. Of Christ's Prophetical Office.

1. The Titles of Christ in respect of his Prophetical Office were these: 1. Sometimes he is called Doctor, or Master, Be ye not called Masters, for one is your Master, even Christ. The word is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 which signifies a Doctor, Moderator, teaching-Master, a guide of the way. 2. Sometimes he is called a Law-giver, There is one Law-giver, who is able to save and to destroy; the Apostle speaks of the internal Government of the Conscience, in which case the Lord is our Judge, The Lord is our Law-giver, the Lord is our King, he will save us: we must hear no voice in our Consciences but God's, no Doctrine in the Church but Christ's; No Offices, institutions, and worship must be allowed, but such as he hath appointed; and therefore when men brought in Forreign Doctrines, it is said that they did not hold the head. 3. Sometimes he is called a Counselor, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor; Counsel is mine and sound Wisdom, saith Christ, I am understanding, and I have strength. Christ by his Office counsels men how to fly sin, and how to please God, and how to escape Hell, and how to be saved. 4. Sometimes he is called the Apostle of our profession, Wherefore holy brethren, partakers of the Heavenly calling, consider the Apostle, and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus. God sent him as an Ambassador to make known his will; he came not unsent, the very word imports a Mission, a sending, How shall they preach except they be sent? let all those who run before they be sent, take notice of this, for this would not Christ do; he was sent, he was the Apostle of our profession. 5. Sometimes he is called the Angel of the Covenant, even the Angel of the Covenant whom ye delight in. Christ was the publisher of the Gospel-Covenant, he declared the Gracious purpose of God towards the Elect held forth in the Covenant; and in this respect he is called a Prophet, Acts 3.22. and the Prophet, John 7.40. and that Prophet, John 6.14. this is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the World; whose Office it was to impart God's will unto the Sons of Men, according unto the name, Angel. 6. Sometimes he is called the Mediator of the New-Covenant, for this cause he is the Mediator of the New-Testament, saith the Apostle; now, a Mediator is such a one as goes betwixt two parties at variance, imparting the mind of the one to the other, so as to breed a right understanding, and thereby to work a compliance betwixt both: and thus Christ is a Mediator betwixt God and us. By him it is that the mind and will of God is imparted to man, no man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him: and by him it is that we impart our mind unto God, The smoke of the incense which goes with the prayers of the Saints, ascends up before God out of the Angels hand. This was typified in Moses, I stood between the Lord and you at that time, to show you the Word of the Lord. The Vulgar renders it thus, Ego sequestor & medius, I was a Mediator, a Midler betwixt God and you: and so Christ Jesus he is a Mediator, a Midler, an Interpreter, an Intermessenger betwixt God and his People.

2. The Reasons of Christ's being a Prophet, were these: 1. That he might reveal and deliver to his people the will of his Father. 2. That he might open and expound the same being once delivered. 3. That he might make his Saints to understand, and to believe the same being once opened.

1. As a Prophet he delivers to the people his Fathers will, both in his own Person, and by his Servants the Ministers. In his own Person when he was upon earth as a Minister of the Circumcision; and by his Servants the Ministers from the beginning of their mission till the end of the World; Thus the Gospel is called, A great Salvation which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him. Christ in his own personal preaching is said but to have begun to teach, Acts 1.1. and the consummate publication was the sending of the holy Ghost to these Select Vessels, who were to carry abroad this Treasure unto all the world; it was begun by the Lord, and it was confirmed by them that were the Disciples of the Lord. In this respect we cannot look on the publishing of the Gospel to the world, but as very glorious; was there not a resemblance of state and glory in the preaching of Christ? You have heard how a forerunner was sent to prepare his way, as an Herald to proclaim his approach, and then was revealed the glory of the Lord; but because the publication was not consummate till afterwards, Christ carries it on in greater state afterwards than he did before; When he ascended up on high, he then led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men, as Princes in time of their solemn inauguration do some special Acts of magnificence and Honor; they proclaim Pardons, open Prisons, Create Nobles, fill Conduits with wine; so Christ to testify the glory of his Gospel, at the day of his instalment, and solemn readmission into his Fathers glory, he proclaims the Gospel, gives gifts unto men for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Ministry, for the edifying of the Body of Christ.

2. As a Prophet he opens and expounds the Gospel. Thus being in the Synagogue on the Sabbath-day, he opened the book, and he found the place where it was written, the Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor, &c. and then he closed the book—and said, this day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears. And thus joining himself with two of his Disciples, going towards Emmaus, he begun at Moses, and all the Prophets, and he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself; the Prophecies of Christ were dark and hard to be understood, and therefore Christ came down from Heaven to discover such truths; No man hath ascended up to Heaven, (i.e.) to be acquainted with God's secrets, but he that came down from Heaven; the gracious purpose of God towards lost mankind, was a secret locked up in the breast of the Father; and so it had been even to this day, had not Christ who was in the bosom of the Father, and one of his Privy Council, revealed it unto us; hence Christ is called the Interpreter of God, no man knoweth the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him, by his interpretation.

3. As a Prophet he gives us to understand, and to believe the Gospel. Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures; and thus was the Case of Lydia whose heart the Lord opened; he that first opens Scriptures, at last opens hearts; He is that true light which enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world: he enlightens every believer, not only with a common natural light, but with a special supernatural light, of saving, spiritual, and effectual knowledge; now there is no Prophet can do this save only Jesus Christ, he only is able to cause our hearts to believe, and to understand the matter which he doth teach and reveal; other Prophets may plant, and water, Paul may plant, and Apollo may water, but he, and only he can give the increase; other Prophets may teach and Baptize, but unless Christ come in by the powerful presence of his Spirit, they can never be able to save any one poor soul. We as lively stones are built up a spiritual house, saith Peter; but except the Lord do build this house, they labor in vain that build it. O alas, who is able to breath the Spirit of life into these dead stones, but he of whom it is written. The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear it shall live? Who can awaken a dead soul out of a dead sleep? And who can give light unto these blind eyes of ours, but he of whom it is written, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

3. The Excellencies of Christ above all other Prophets are in these respects.—

1. Other Prophets were but Types and shadows of this great Prophet; even Moses himself was but a figure of him; A Prophet shall the Lord God raise up unto you of your brethren like unto me: saith Moses; these words, Like unto me] do plainly show that Moses was at the best but an image and shadow of Christ; now as substances do far excel shadows, so doth Christ far excel all the Prophets; they were but shadows and forerunners to him.

2. Other Prophets revealed but some part of God's will, and only at sometimes. God (saith the Apostle) at sundry times, and in divers manners spake in time-past unto the Fathers by the Prophets; (i.e.) he let out his light by little and little, till the Day-star and Sun of Righteousness arose; but in these last days he hath spoken by his Son, (i.e.) he had spoken more fully and plainly; in this respect saith the Apostle, the heirs of Life and Salvation were but children before Christ's incarnation. As now we see but through a glass darkly, towards what we shall do in the life to come; so did they of old in comparison of us; their light in comparison of ours, was but an obscure and glimmering light; Christ's discovery of himself then was but a standing behind the wall, a looking forth of the window, a showing of himself through the lattice.

3. Other Prophets spake only to the ears of men, but Christ spake, and still speaks to the heart; He hath the Keys of David, that openeth, and no man shutteth, that shutteth, and no man openeth; it is a similitude taken from them that keep the Keys of a City, or Castle, without whom none can open or shut; no more can any man open the heart or break in upon the Spirit, but Christ; he only is able to open the eyes of the mind by the secret, kindly, and powerful working of his own Spirit.

4. Other Prophets preached wisdom unto men, but only Christ preacheth men wise; other Prophets warned men by telling them of their sins, and denouncing the judgments of God, but Christ reclaimed them and turned them from sin; hence it is said, that he taught as one having Authority, and not as the Scribes; it came daily and coldly from them, but it came from him as being full of conviction and reproof, full of the evident demonstration of the Spirit, and of power.

5. Other Prophets might not preach themselves; the Apostle inveighs against self-commenders, We dare not (saith he) make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves. Yea, Christ himself relating to himself, as a mere man, saith, that his witness is not true if he bear witness of himself. But in another place, relating to himself as Mediator, he speaks clean contrary, Though I do bear record of myself, yet my record is true. Here then is a wide difference betwixt other Prophets in respect of their Office and Christ's; they might not preach themselves, but he bears witness of himself, because he hath not a greater in the point of our Justification, Sanctification, and Salvation, to bear witness of them himself. And hence are those self-predications of his which we find in Scriptures, as, Look unto me, and be ye saved all the ends of the earth. Come unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden. And conferring with the two Disciples, it is said, that beginning at Moses and all the Prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. Surely it commends to us the Prophecy of Christ, that he might preach and commend himself without any blot of Arrogancy, or taking too much upon him.

6. Other Prophets had their Commission and Authority from him, The words of the wise are as goads and as nails fastened by the Masters of the Assemblies, which are given from one Shepherd, (i.e.) the words of the wise are divine and Heavenly instructions; the Masters of Assemblies are Gospel-Ministers, and Christ is that one Shepherd from whom these words are given, and from whom these Masters have their Authority; are they not called Ambassadors for Christ? and doth not Ezekiel tell us, that he must drop his words towards the South? Now what is the meaning of that dropping? It is a phrase borrowed from rain; as the clouds, from whence the rain descends, have not their water Originally and natively in themselves, but from the Sea; so have not the Prophets a spirit of Prophecy of themselves, but all is drawn up out of Christ, as out of a full Sea of all excellent Wisdom and knowledge. In him are all the Treasures, a Sea, an Ocean of knowledge, and from him all the Prophets derived whatsoever they had.

SECT. IV. Of Christ's Miracles.

2. The Miracles of Christ this year were many; now what were these Miracles, but a pursuance of the Doctrines delivered in Christ's Sermons? One calls them A verification of Christ's Doctrine, a signal of Christ's Sermons; If we observe, we shall find him to work most of his Miracles in actions of mercy; indeed once he turned water into wine, and sometimes he walked upon the waters, but all the rest were actions of relief according to the design of God, who would have him manifest his power, in showing mercy and relief to men.

Amongst all his Miracles done this year, now was it that at Cana, where he wrought the first Miracle, he does a second; a certain Noble man, or Courtier, or little King (as some would have it) came to Jesus, and besought him to come down to his house, and to heal his Son, who was at the point of Death. We do not find Christ often attended with Nobility, but here he is; Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called, yet God forbid but that some are, and may be; this noble Ruler listens after Christ in his necessity; happy was it for him that his Son was sick, for else he had not been so well acquainted with his Savior; O we are loath to come to Christ till we see a need, a necessity for it, and hence it is that Christ sends weakness, sicknesses, infirmities, oppositions, and many afflictions, that he may be sought unto: Come then, are we afflicted? whither should we go but to Cana to seek Christ? whither should we go but to that Cana of Heaven, where our water will be turned into wine, where our Physician lives that knows how to cure souls, and bodies and all; that we may once say, It is good for me that I was afflicted. The first answer Christ gives this Nobleman is a word of reproof, Except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe: Incredulity was the common disease of the Jews, which no receipt could cure but wonders, A wicked and Adulterous generation seeks after signs; the Doctrine of Christ, and all the Divine words that he spake, must be made up with Miracles, or they will not believe; it was a soul fault, and a dangerous one, Ye will not believe. What is it that condemns the world but unbelief? Here's a Noble Capernaite that probably had heard many a Sermon of Jesus Christ; and yet here is Taxed with unbelief; if such as we that live under the clear Sun-shine of the Gospel shall not believe, O what a sin is this? Christ's next answer to this Nobleman is a word of comfort, Go thy way, thy Son liveth: Oh the meekness and mercy of Jesus Christ! when we would have looked that he should have punished this Suitor for not believing, he condescends to him that he may believe: as some tender mothers that give the breast to their unquiet children instead of the rod; so usually deals Christ with our perverseness, Go thy way, thy Son liveth; with one word doth Christ heal two Patients, the Son and the Father; the Sons fever, and the Fathers unbelief; we cannot but observe here the steps of Faith, he that believed somewhat ere he came, and more when he went, he grew to more and more saith in the way, and when he came home he enlarged his faith to all the skirts of his family. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way; and in the way one meets him and tells him, Thy Son liveth; which recovery he understands to be at the same time that Christ had spoken those Salutary and healing words, and himself believed and his whole house.

2. Now was it that a Centurion came unto Christ, beseeching him, and saying, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy grievously Tormented. Many Suitors come to Christ, one for a Son, another for a daughter, a third for himself, but I see none come for his servant but this one Centurion; and if we observe Christ's answers to his suit, we see how well pleased is Christ with his request; And Jesus saith unto him, I will come and heal him. When the Ruler entreated him for his Son, Come down ere he die, Christ stir'd not a foot, but now this Centurion complains only of his servants sickness, and Christ offers himself, I will come, and heal him; he that came in the shape of a servant, would rather go down to the sick servant than to the Rulers Son: He is no respecter of persons, but he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him: It may be this poor sick servant had more grace, or very probable it is he had more need, and therefore Christ (to choose) will go down to visit this poor sick servant. Nay says the Centurion, I am not worthy Lord, that thou shouldst come under my roof, q. d. Alas Lord, I am a Gentile, an Alien, a man of blood, but thou art holy, thou art omnipotent; and therefore only say the word, and my servant shall be whole; Mark this, O my soul, it is but a word of Christ, and my sins shall be remitted, my soul healed, my body raised, and soul and body glorified forever. The Centurion knew this by the command he had over his own servants, I say to this man go and he goes, and to another come and he comes, and to a third do this and he doth it: In way of Application; Oh that I were such a servant to my heavenly Master. Alas, every of his commands says, Do this, and I do it not; every of his inhibitions says, Do it not, and I do it: He says, Go from the world, and I run to it; He says, Come to me, and I run from him. Woe is me, this is not service, but enmity; Oh that I could come up to the faith and obedience of this exemplar, that I could serve my Christ as these Soldiers did their Master! Jesus marvels at the Centurions faith; we never find Christ wondering at Gold, or Silver, or costly and curious works of human Skill, yea when the Disciples wondered at the Magnificence of the Temple, he rebuked them rather, but when he sees the grace or acts of Faith, he so approves of them that he is ravished with wonder; he that rejoiced in the view of his Creation, rejoiceth no less in the reformation of his Creature, Behold thou art fair my love, behold thou art fair, there is no spot in thee: my sister, my spouse, thou hast wounded my heart, thou hast wounded my heart with one of thy eyes, Cant. 4.7, 9. To conclude, he that both wrought this faith, and wondered at it, doth now reward it; Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it unto thee, and his servant was healed in the self same hour.

3. Now it was, even the day after, that Jesus goes into the City of Naim. The fruitful clouds are not ordained to fall all in one field, Naim must partake of the bounty of Christ as well as Cana, or Capernaum. Thither come, he no sooner enters in at the gate of the City, but he meets a funeral; a poor widow, with her weeping friends, is following her only Son to the grave; Jesus observing her sad condition, he pities her, comforts her, and at last relieves her: here was no Sollicitor but his own compassion; in his former Miracles he was sought and sued to; his Mother at the Marriage-feast begged a supply of Wine, the Ruler came to him for a Son, the Centurion came to him for a servant, but now Christ offers a cure, to give us a lesson, that whiles we have to do with the Father of mercies, our miseries and afflictions are the most Powerful Suitors. Christ sees and observes the Widow's sadness, and presently all parts of Christ conspire her good, his heart melts into Compassion of her, his tongue speaks cheerfully and comfortably to her, Weep not; his feet carry him to the Bier, his hand toucheth the Coffin, and he said, young man I say unto thee, arise; see how the Lord of Life speaks with Command; the same voice speaks to him, that shall one day speak to us, and raise us out of the dust of the earth; neither sea, nor death, nor hell can detain their dead, when he charges them to be delivered; we see not Christ stretching himself on this dead Corpse, as Elijah, and Elisha upon the Sons of the Shunamite, and the Widow of Sarephta; nor see we him kneeling down and praying, as Peter did for Dorcas; but we hear him so speaking to the dead, as if the dead were alive, and so speaking to the dead, that by the word he speaks, he makes him alive, Young man, I say unto thee, arise, and he that was dead sate up, and began to speak. So at the sound of the last Trumpet, by the Power of the same voice, we shall arise out of the dust, and stand up

Gloriously; This mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption. And least our weak faith should stagger at the assent of so great a difficulty, by this he hath done; Christ gives us tastes of what he will do; the same Power that can raise one man, can raise a thousand, a million, a world; Christ here raised a Widows Son, and after Jairus's Daughter, and then Lazarus, and lastly at his resurrection he raised a many at once; he raised one from her Bed, another from his Bier, another from his grave, and many at once from their rottenness, that it might appear no degree of death can hinder the efficacy of his Almighty Power.

4. Now it was that in the Synagogue he finds a man that had a Spirit of an unclean Devil. This, I take it, is the first man that we read of as possessed with a Devil. And he cried let us alone, what have we to do with thee? &c. In these words the devil dictates, the man speaks; and whereas the words are plural, Let us alone, it is probable he speaks of himself, and the rest of the men in the Synagogue with him. So high and dreadful things are spoken concerning the coming of Christ, (Mal. 3.2. Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?) that the Devil by this takes opportunity to affright the men of the Synagogue with the presence of Christ; he would dissuade them from the receiving of Christ, by the terrors of Christ, as if Christ had come only to destroy them: Thou Jesus of Nazareth, art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the holy one of God.

And Jesus rebuked him, saying, hold thy peace, and come out of him. The word hold thy peace, is in the original 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, be muzzled; it was not a bare command of silence, but there was such Power in it, that it cast a muzzle upon the mouth of Satan, that he could speak no more; and when the unclean Spirit had torn him, not with any gashes in his flesh, or dismembering of his Body, for he hurt him not, but with some Convulsion fits (as it is supposed) then he threw them in the midst, and made an horrid cry, and so came out.

From this Miracle, they all take special notice of the Doctrine attested by so great a Miracle, What a word is this? or as the other Evangelist, What a thing is this? what new doctrine is this? surely this was the great design of all the Miracles of Christ, to prove his mission from God, to demonstrate his Power unto men, to confirm his Gospel, to endear his Precepts, to work in us faith to help us Heaven-ward: These signs are written that we might believe,—and that believing we might have Life through his Name.

I have given you several instances of the Miracles of Christ in this second year of his Ministry; only a few words on this Doctrine of Miracles for our information, as

- 1. What they are?
- 2. Why they are?
- 3. Whether they are chained and continued in this great transaction of our souls salvation? and I have done.

For the first, what they are? Miracles are unusual events wrought above the course or possibility of Nature; such were the Miracles of Christ, and such were the Miracles of the Prophets, and of the Apostles of Christ; for what they did was above Nature; and all the difference betwixt their Miracles and the Miracles of Christ was only in this, viz. they wrought them not in their own Name and Power as Jesus Christ did; Thus when Elisha with twenty loaves and some full ears of corn fed an hundred men, Give unto the people (says he) that they may eat; and his servitor said, what should I set this before an hundred men? He said again, give the people that they may eat, for thus saith Lord, they shall eat and shall leave thereof.

And when Peter cured Aeneas, which had kept his Bed eight years, and was sick of a Palsy, Peter said unto him, Aeneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole. And when he cured that man that was lame from his Mothers womb, whom they laid daily at the gate of the Temple, Silver and gold have I none, (said Peter) but such as I have give I thee; in the Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up, and walk. But our Savior comes in an higher strain to the dead damosel, I say unto thee, arise: and in an higher strain to the stormy Winds and Seas, Peace, and be still: and in an higher strain to the raging Devil in the possessed, Be muzzled, and come out of the man. Heres the difference betwixt the Lord and his servants; but in this they agree, their miracles were not miranda, but miracula; not only wonders, but miracles indeed; they were unusual events wrought above nature, or the course of nature.

For the second, why they are? Many Reasons are given, of which I hinted before, but in reference to Scriptures, (which is the great controversy) this is the main and the only true Reason; Miracles are wrought for the grounding or confirming of some divine truth or doctrine at its first settling. To this purpose Miracles were as the Trumpets or Heralds, by which the Gospel was first commended unto us; as the Law of Moses was first authorized by manifold Miracles wrought in Sinai, and in the Desert, which afterward ceased when they came to, and were settled in the promised Land; so the Gospel of Christ was first authorized by manifold Miracles, but the sound thereof having now gone through all the world, these Miracles cease: if new additions of Miracles for the confirmation of Scriptures should be expected in every Age, the former Miracles of Christ and his Apostles would be slighted of all; indeed, Christ tells us of great signs and wonders that shall be in the last days; but withal, he tells us of false Christ's, and false Prophets, that must work them; it may be disputed, whether those are true miracles, or mere deceptions and magical pretences, but because they are such as the People cannot discern them from miracles really such, therefore it is all one as to them; here then is Christ's Rule, Believe them not,—behold I have told you before; he that foretold us of the man, foretold us also of the imposture, and commanded us not to trust him; in this respect it had been more likely for Antichrist to have prevailed upon Christians by doing no miracles, than by doing any; for if he had done none, he might have escaped without discovery; but by doing miracles, or wonders, he both verified the Wisdom and prescience of Christ, and he declared to the Elect that he was the very enemy of Christ. As all the Prophets that speak of Christ, bade us believe him for his Miracles; so all that foretold of Antichrist, bade us disbelieve him for his Miracles; which occasioned Augustine to say, Against such Miracle-mongers God hath armed me to take heed. Go not forth unto such, saith Christ, Matth. 24.26. and therefore Brethren stand fast, saith Paul, 2 Thes. 2.15. The great Beast deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by means of miracles; these are the words of John, Rev. 13.14. but if any man have an ear let him hear (i.e.) let him beware, Rev. 13.9. True miracles that proceed from God, are wrought for the grounding of Doctrine at the first settling; but being once grounded, and settled, and a plat-form described for the right continuing of it, then we are left to the Scripture, and are not to expect any new miracles for the confirming of it.

For the third, whether they are chained and continued in this great transaction of our souls salvation? I answer, yea; in this respect miracles cease not; it's without controversy that Jesus Christ in carrying on our souls Salvation is adding miracle to miracle; there is a chain of miracles in the matter of our salvation from first to last: As.—

1. It was a miracle that God in his Eternity, before we had a being, should have once thought of us; especially that the Blessed Trinity should sit in council, and contrive that most admirable and astonishing plot of the Salvation of our souls: Oh what a miracle was this!

2. It was a Miracle that God for our sakes should create the world, and after our fall in Adam, that God should preserve the world, especially considering that our sin had unpin'd the whole frame of the Creation; and that God even then sitting on his Throne of Judgment, ready to pass the doom of death for our first Transgression, should unexpectedly give a promise of a Savior, when justly he might have given us to the devil, and to Hell, according to his own Law, In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt die the death.

3. It was a Miracle that God's Son should take upon him our nature, and that in our nature he should Transact our peace; that he should Preach Salvation to us all if we would believe; and to the end that we might believe, that he would work so many signs and Miracles in the presence of his Disciples, and of a world of men: was not Christ's Birth a Miracle? and Christ's Life a Miracle? and Christ's Death a Miracle? and Christ's Resurrection a Miracle? and Christ's Ascension a Miracle? was not Christ's Ministry a miracle? and was it not a miracle, that Christ's Word should not be credited without a world of miracles to back it, and confirm it to the Sons of men? Without controversy great is the miracle, as well as mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of Angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the World, received up into glory.

4. It was a Miracle that God should look upon us in our blood; what a sight was it for God, when thy navel was not cut, when thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all when thou wast cast out in the open field to the loathing of thy person? yet that then, even then the Lord should pass by thee, and see thee polluted in thy own blood, and should say unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, live; yea, say unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, live. O miracle of mercies! If creation cannot be without a miracle, surely the new creature is a miracle indeed. So contrary is our perverse natures to all possibilities of Salvation, that if Salvation had not marched to us all the way in a miracle, we should have perished in the ruins of a sad eternity. Election is a miracle, and Creation is a miracle, and Redemption is a miracle, and Vocation is a miracle; and indeed every man living in the state of grace, is a perpetual miracle; in such a one his reason is turned into faith, his soul into spirit, his body into a Temple, his earth into heaven, his water into wine, his Aversations from Christ into intimate Union with Christ; and Adhesions to Christ. O what a Chain of Miracles is this? Why Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean; say thus, you that are yet in your blood, why Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean. O Lord I believe, help thou my unbelief.

After this there was a feast of the Jews, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem: Some would have this feast to be Pentecost; and to speak truly, the most of our Commentaries run that way: others take this for the feast of the Passover, and the rather, because the Evangelist John reckons the time of Christ's public Ministry by the several Passovers; now if this feast were not a Passover, we cannot find in the Gospel so many Passovers as to make up Christ's Ministry three years and an half. On this ground I join with the latter Opinion; and so here I end the second year of Christ's Ministry, and come to the third, and to his Actings therein in reference to our souls Salvation.

CHAP. III.

SECT. I. Of the third year of Christ's Ministry, and generally of his Actings in that year.

Hitherto all was quiet; neither the Jews, nor the Samaritans, nor Galileans did as yet malign the Doctrine or Person of Jesus Christ; but he preached with much peace on all hands till the beginning of this year. I shall not yet speak his sufferings; neither shall I speak much of his doings: many things were done and spoken this year, which I must pass, least I be too prolix; only such things as refer more principally to the main business of our souls Salvation, I shall touch in these particulars. As, 1. In the Ordination of the Apostles. 2. In his Reception of Sinners. 3. In the easiness of his yoke, and the lightness of his burden which he imposeth on men.

SECT. II. Of Christ's Ordination of his Apostles.

1. IN the Ordination of his Apostles, are many considerable things, the Evangelist Luke lays it down thus. And it came to pass in those days that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God; and when it was day he called unto him his Disciples, and of them he Chose Twelve, whom also he named Apostles. Till now Christ taught alone, but because after his Ascension he must needs have a Ministry till the end of the world, in the first place he choseth out some whom he would have on purpose to wait upon him all the time of his Ministry, till he was taken up into Heaven In this Election, or Ordination, here is first the person by whom they are Chosen, Jesus Christ. 2. The place were they are chosen, viz. in a mountain. 3. The time when they were Chosen, after his watching and praying all night, and when it was day. 4. The company out of whom they were Chosen, they were his Disciples, and out of them he makes this Election. 5. The number of them that were Chosen, they were Twelve, nor more, nor less. 6. The end to which they were chosen, it was to an Apostleship, he Chose Twelve, whom he also named Apostles.

1. The person by whom they are Chosen is Jesus Christ. They Chose not themselves, but were chosen of Christ; this call was immediate, and therefore most excellent; but now we look not after such calls, and therefore I shall not insist on that; only by the way, Ministers of the Gospel must be Ministers of Christ, either immediately, or mediately called.

2. The place where they were chosen, it was on a mountain; mountainous places have their situation nearest to Heaven; which shows that they were called to high and heavenly things: mountains are open and in view, which shows their Ministry must be public; they cannot lie hid in a mountain, a City that is set upon a hill is exposed to the view of all: Again, mountains are subject to Winds and Tempests, which show their Callings must meet with many oppositions; and this occasioned Christ to hold up their hearts with Cordials, Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake—for so persecuted they the Prophets which were before you. The Ministers of Christ are sure of opposition, the Disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord; if they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?

3. The time when they were chosen, when it was, and after he had continued all night in prayer to God; he goes not to Election, but first he watches, and prays all the night before; this shows the singular care that Christ had in this great employment: what? to set men apart to witness his Name, and to publish to the world the Gospel of Christ? this he would not do without much prayer. Sometimes we find Christ praying alone, as elsewhere, He went up into a mountain apart to pray; and here on this mountain without any of his Disciples, or Domesticks about him, he prays alone; thus, When thou prayest enter into thy closet (saith Christ) and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. Sometimes we find Christ praying at night: In the daytime he was teaching in the Temple, and at night he went out and abode in the Mount, that is called the mount of Olives: See Christ in the exercise of his double Office, he preacheth all day, and prays all night; this Text tells us, He continued all night in prayer. Night prayers have their special, spiritual advantages. 1. It is a time fitter for compunction, and heart-contrition. All the night make I my bed to swim, I water my Couch with my Tears. As some things are by heat parched in the day, but cooled in the night; so many sins contracted in the day, are seasonably repented at night; night tears are as sweet dews that cool the heat and pride of our spirits. 2. It is a time of silence and free from distraction; then all Tumults cease, and in the secret of our souls we may silently go and speak with our heavenly Father. In this respect we have a blessed example of Christ praying at night, and especially now; O he was about the great work of sending his Ministers through all the world, and therefore now he spends all the night long in prayer to his Father; A great and extraordinary work is not to be set upon, without extraordinary prayer.

4. The company out of whom they are chosen, He called unto him his disciples, and out of them he chose twelve: A Disciple of Christ is one thing, and an Apostle of Christ is another thing; those were Christ's Disciples that embraced Christ's Doctrine of Faith and Repentance; it was not material to the constituting of a Disciple of Christ, whether they followed Christ as many did, or they returned to their own homes, as some others did. The man out of whom the Legions of devils was cast, besought Christ that he might be with him, but Jesus sent him away, saying, return to thine own house, and show how great things God hath done to thee. I make no question but Christ at the Election of his Apostles had many Disciples both waiting on him, and absent from him; and out of them that waited on him his Apostles were chosen, Christ's Ministers should be first Disciples. O how unfit are any to take upon them the Ministry of Christ that were never yet the Disciples of Christ? first the grace of God within us, and then must that grace of God be discovered by us.

5. The number of them that were chosen; they were Twelve: very propable it is that there was some peculiar reason in this account, the number (say some) was figured out to us in many particulars, as in the Twelve Patriarchs, in the Twelve Wells of Elim, in the Twelve precious stones on the breast of the Priest, in the Twelve Tribes of Israel, in the Twelve hours of the day; Christ tells them of sitting on Twelve Thrones, and judging the Twelve Tribes of Israel; but I delight not curiously to descant on these things. This I am sure, that the doings of Christ were done in weight, measure, and number.

6. The end to which they were chosen, it was to an Apostleship (i.e.) that they might be Christ's Legates to the Sons of men, that they might be sent up and down the world to persuade men to Salvation. The dispensers of God's Word must look to their mission, they must not intrude upon so sacred a business before they are sent. Now this mission is either extraordinary by immediate instinct, and revelation from God, which is ever accompanied with immediate and infused gifts, and this was the case of the Apostles; or ordinary, by imposition of hands and Ecclesiastical designation: and in this likewise is required fidelity, and ability. 1. Fidelity, it is required of Stewards, that a man be found faithful, that he defraud not Christ of his purchase, which is the souls of men, nor men of their price and privilege, which is the blood of Christ; that he watch as a Seer, that he speaks as an Oracle, that he feed as a Shepherd, that he labor as an Husbandman, that he be instant in season and out of season, to exhort, rebuke, instruct, to do the work of an Evangelist, to make full proof of his Ministry, because he hath an account to make. 2. Ability both for right information of the consciences of men, and for the seasonable application of truth to particular Circumstances, which is that which makes a wise builder. Ah! Who is sufficient for these things? How should we but detest the presumption of those men, who run before they be sent, who leap from their manual trades into this sacred and dreadful office, unto which heretofore the most learned and pious men have trembled to approach?

This may inform us of our duty: and this may inform you of your happiness. 1. Here's our duty; I mean ours of the Ministry, Christ ordained his Apostles to preach the Gospel; and Paul's motto may be ours, Woe unto me, if I preach not the Gospel: what though I preach the Gospel, I have nothing to glory of, for a necessity is laid upon me. This day Christ sent me on this errand, Go preach, saying, Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Surely the Lord hath put this message into my mouth, Repent swearers, repent drunkards, repent sinners, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand; Gospel-discoveries are made every day, Christ is arising and shining in our Horizon more and more clearly, that great design of God's love to our souls is manifested in every Sermon, on every Sabbath: is not this Gospel-preaching? what is the Gospel, but the Treasure of God's love in Christ opened to us? Oh it is a pleasant work in this respect to be a Minister of the Gospel to be always searching into the Treasures of love, and to make them known to poor souls for the gaining of them unto God. 2. Here is your Happiness, Christ hath not erected any standing Sanctuary, or City of refuge for men to fly to for their Salvation, but he hath appointed Ambassadors to carry this Treasure unto men's houses, where he invites them, and entreats them, and requires them, and commands them, and compels them to come in. Oh the unsearchable riches of Christ! 1. In respect of the Messengers, 2. In respect of their Message.

1. In respect of the Messengers; they were first Apostles; now Ministers, poor Earthen Vessels. Had Christ himself come in his glorified body, attended with his Angels, it might in some measure have represented his Majesty: but alas! how would this have dazzled your weakness? or if Christ had made use of his Angels, as he did at his birth, to preach his Gospel; had they continually come in state and proclaimed Salvation to the Sons of men, this would have shown more glory; but alas, how unsuitable had this been to your weak conditions? here then is the riches of his grace, that earthen vessels should carry this treasure, that salvation should come out of the mouths of sinful creatures, that hearts should be broken, souls should believe, life should be infused by the ministerial breath of a weak worthless man; We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us; God's power is more Honoured this way, than if an Angel had come in person; it may be in that Case a sinners Conversion would have been attributed to the power and Efficacy of the Angel; but to prevent this, and to preserve the glory of his power and grace, Christ takes the Treasure, and he puts it into Earthen Vessels; it is in the Original vessels of shell, as precious Pearls are found in Shells, so the Pearl is the Gospel, and the Shell or Mother of Pearl are the Apostles and Pastors; it is true, they are Vessels of small price, and subject to many knocks and falls, yet in them is the most excellent Treasures of the Wisdom of God, and of the Gospel of Christ. And it is in them on purpose, that the excellency may reflect on God, and not on them.

2. In respect of the Message; O the unsearchable riches of Christ! What is the message of these men? what is the Treasure they bring, but the Blood of Christ, the Promises of the Gospel, the Word of Grace? I might sum up all in one word, They bring unto men an invitation from heaven, to heaven; Observe it Christians; the Gospel is a message, the Lord sends his Son up and down, carries him from place to place; he is set forth before men's eyes, he comes, and stands, and calls, and Knocks at their doors, and beseecheth them to be reconciled: O the free grace of God! O that mercy, pardon, preferment, eternal life and Salvation should go a begging, and suing for acceptance! O the love of sin, and madness of folly in wicked men, to Trample on such Pearls, and to neglect so great Salvation when it is tendered unto them! O what a heavy charge will it be for men at the last day, to have the mercy of God, the humility of Christ, the entreaties of the Spirit, the proclamations of pardon, the approaches of Salvation, the days, the years, the ages of peace, the Ministry of the Word, the Book of God, the great Mystery of Godliness, to rise up in judgment, and to testify against their souls? O the condescensions of Christ! who are ye, that the Lord should send after you? what need hath God of you? suppose you should go on in the ways of death, and perish everlastingly, what shall God lose by it? Christ might say, If you will go on, go on and perish; if you love sin so well, take your pleasure in it, and be damned evermore. Ah no, saith the mercy of God, and the mercy of Christ, before that be, message after message, Precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little. This was the design of Christ's choosing his Apostles, Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel unto every Creature, that poor sinners may turn from sin, and be saved.

SECT. III. Of Christ's Reception of sinners.

2. For Christ's Reception of sinners; I cannot limit this only to one year of Christ's Ministry, but I shall only mention it this year. Now this will appear, 1. In the Doctrine of Christ. 2. In the Practice of Christ.

1. In his Doctrine, Christ lays it down expressly, Come unto me all ye that labor and are Heavy laden, and I will give you rest. It is no more but come, and welcome. The Gospel shuts none out of Heaven, but those that by unbelief lock the door against their own souls. Again, All that the Father giveth me shall come unto me, and him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out; here is laid down the full intent and purpose of God and Christ to pardon and receive sinners; the Father is willing, and the Son is willing. 1. The Father is willing, This is the Fathers will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose none; the Father is engaged, in that first he sent Christ on that errand, to receive sinners. Secondly, in that he gave unto Christ all that he would have to be saved by Christ, with a charge to lose none. Sinners were given to Christ by his Father as so many Jewels to look to, and to save. 2. The Son is willing, for he that cometh unto me (saith Christ) I will in no wise cast out. Christ is so willing to receive sinners, as that he sets all his doors open, he keeps open house, and he casts out none that will but come in; and why so? For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. 1. I came down from Heaven, it was a great journey from heaven to earth, and this great journey I undertook for no other purpose but to save sinners. Great actions (as one says well) must needs have great ends; now this was the greatest thing that ever was done, that the Son of God should come down from Heaven; and what was the end, but the Reception and Salvation of sinners? For the Son of man is come to seek, and to save that which was lost: had not Christ come down, sinners could not have gone up into Heaven, and therefore that they might ascend, he descends. 2. I come down from Heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me; his Father had sent him on purpose to receive, and to save sinners; and to this purpose, he is called the Apostle of our profession, — who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house: His Father could not send him on any errand, but he was sure to do it; his Fathers mission was a strong demonstration, that Christ was willing to receive those sinners that would but come to him.

Again, Jesus stood and cried, saying, if any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink: the very pith, heart, and marrow of the Gospel is contained in these words: the occasion of them was thus: on that last day of the Feast of Tabernacles, the Jews were wont with great solemnity to draw water out of the fountain of Siloam, at the foot of Mount Zion, and to bring it to the Altar, singing out of Isaiah, With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of Salvation; now Christ takes them at this Custom, and recalls them from earthly to heavenly waters, alluding to that of Isaiah, Ho everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters. — Incline your ears, and come unto me, and your souls shall live. The Father saith come, the Son saith come, the Spirit saith come, yea, the Spirit and the Bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is a thirst come, and whosoever will, let him drink of the water of life freely. All the time of Christ's Ministry we see him tiring himself in going about from place to place, upon no other errand than this, to cry at the markets, Ho everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters! if any sinners love life, if any will go to heaven, let them come to me, and I will show them the way to my Fathers bosom, and endear them to my Fathers heart.

Again, hither tend all those Arguments of God and Christ, to draw souls to themselves. Thus God draws, 1. From his equity, Hear now O house of Israel, is not my way equal? or are not your ways unequal? q. d. I appeal to your very consciences, is this equal, that sinners should go on in sin, and Trespass against him that is so willing to receive and save poor sinners? 2. From our ruin, in case we go on in sin, Cast away from you all your Transgressions, whereby ye have Transgressed, and make you a new heart, and a new Spirit, for why will ye die, O house of Israel? 3. From his own dislike and displeasure at our ruin, I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God, wherefore turn your souls, and live ye. 4. From his mercy and readiness to pardon sinners, Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. 5. From the freeness of his love, I will love them freely, and God so loved the world, so fully, so fatherly, so freely, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. and I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. 6. From the sweetness of his Name, The Lord, the Lord, merciful and gracious, longsuffering and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, Transgression and sin. 7. From the benefits that would follow, O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments, then had thy peace been as a River, and thy righteousness as the waves of the Sea; thy seed also had been as the Sand, and the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof. 8. From his Oath; As I live, saith the Lord, I desire not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live: O happy creatures (saith Tertullian) for whom God swears! O unbelieving wretches, if we will not trust God swearing! 9. From his expostulations, Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel?—O my people, what have I done to thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me,—what could I have done more for my vineyard than I have done? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes? 10. From his appeals, Judge now, O ye inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem—and hear O ye mountains the Lord's controversy: and ye strong foundations of the earth, for the Lord hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel. 11. From his groans, Oh that there were such an heart in them that they would fear me, and keep my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and their children forever. And oh that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end. 12. From his loathness to give men up, How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee O Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? my heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together. O the goodness of God!

And as God the Father, so God the Son draws Arguments to win souls to himself, 1. From his coming; it was the very purpose and design of his coming down from Heaven to receive sinners, This is a faithful saying (says Paul) and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. 2. From his fair demeanour and behavior towards sinners; this was so open and notorious, that it was turned to his disgrace and opprobry, Behold a friend of Publicans and sinners: And the Scribes and Pharisees murmured at him, and his Disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with Publicans and Sinners? 3. From his owning of sinners, and answering for them in this respect, And Jesus answering said unto them, they that are whole need not a Physician, but they that are sick; I came not to call the righteous but Sinners to repentance. 4. From his rejoicing at sinners conversion: indeed we never read of Christ's Laughter, and we seldom read of Christ's joy; but when it is at any time recorded, it is at the Conversion of a poor soul; he had little else to comfort himself in, being a man of sorrows: but in this he rejoiced exceedingly, In that hour Jesus rejoiced in Spirit; it was in that hour when he saw an handful of the fruit of his Disciples Ministry, as an earnest of the many thousands that should afterwards come in; And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there (said Christ when Lazarus was dead:) But why was he glad? It follows, to the intent ye might believe. He rejoiced if any of his got faith, a little more faith, more and more faith. 5. From grief in case of sinners not repenting; witness his tears over Jerusalem, and those speeches of his; And when he was come near, he beheld the City, and wept over it, saying, if thou hadst known, even thou at least in this thy day the things which belong unto thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes? Look as it is with a man carrying to be buried, his wife weeps, his children weep, his friends weep, so our Savior follows Jerusalem to the grave, and when he can do no more for it, he rings out this doleful passing-bell, O that thou hadst known, &c. 6. From his wishes, groanings; O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the Prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as an hen gathers her Chickens under her wings; and ye would not? In this Argument, before we pass it, observe we the several passages; here's first, the groan; Oh! this Aspiration argues a compassionate pang of grief; it ran to the very heart of Christ, that Jerusalem had neglected their souls salvation, Oh Jerusalem! Secondly, here's an ingemination, or a double calling on Jerusalem, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! the name doubled expresseth great affection in the speaker, as when David doubled the name Absalom, it is said, the King was much moved, and so he cried, O my Son Absalom, my Son, my Son Absalom; thirdly, here's the monstrous sin wherewith the Lord charges Jerusalem, Thou that killest the Prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee; Jerusalem was the very slaughter-house of the Prophets, in so much that very few of the Prophets had been murdered elsewhere, and so comparatively Christ speaks, it cannot be that a Prophet perish out of Jerusalem. Fourthly, here's Christ's willingness to save Jerusalem, which he discovers. 1. In his frequent applications to it, how often? q. d. not once, nor twice, nor thrice, but many and many a time have I come to Jerusalem, and spoke to Jerusalem, and wooed Jerusalem, how often? 2. In the acting, exercising, and putting forth of his will, how often would I have gathered thy children together? The will of Christ was serious, though not absolute; I know his divine will absolutely considered could not have been resisted; but this was not his absolute will, but only a will of divine complacency; and so he would not have the death of any, but that all should live; or he speaks here of his human ministerial will (say some) and not of his divine: many a Sermon had he preached, and many an Exhortation had he dropped, and every Sermon, every Exhortation proclaimed his willingness, I would, yea, that I would have gathered thy children together. 3. In resemblance of his willingness, Christ would have gathered Jerusalem's children as the hen gathers her chickens under her wings; in the metaphor Christ's care is admirably displayed. 1. As the hen with her wings covers the unfeathered chickens. 2. As the hen provides for their food, not eating herself till they are filled. 3. As the hen defends her chickens from the ravenous birds, so that to blood she will fight in their defense; so hath Christ's care been for Jerusalem. No bird (saith Austin) expresseth such tender love to her young ones as the hen doth; no fowls so discover themselves to be mothers, as hens do; other birds we know to be mothers, when we see them in their nest, but no other way; only the hen discovers herself to be a mother, when her chickens do not follow her; for then her feathers stand up, her wings hang down, she clocketh mournfully, and goeth feebly; now in respect of this singular love, Christ compares himself to an hen; As an hen gathers her chickens, so would I have gathered Jerusalem. 4. In that he adds so dolefully, but ye would not; I would, but ye would not; q. d. in me no care so great as to save your souls, in you no care so little as your souls Salvation; I strove towards you in acts of love, and you strove towards me in acts of ingratitude; I would have done you good, but you would not receive it; I would, yea how often would I? but ye would not.

2. Christ's reception of sinners appears yet more in his practice. How welcome were all sorts of sinners unto him? He casts out none that acknowledged him for the Messiah, he turned none away that gave up their souls to be saved by him in his own way. This he manifests: 1. Parabolically. 2. Really.

1. Parabolically, especially in those three Parables, of the lost Groat, and of the lost Sheep, and of the lost Son; I shall instance in this last, which may well serve for all the rest.—When the Prodigal was yet afar off, his Father saw him, and had compassion on him, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. In these words, observe, 1. His Father sees him before he sees his Father; no sooner a sinner thinks of Heaven, but the Lord spies him and takes notice of him. 2. The Lord sees him whiles he was yet a great way off; he was but in the beginning of his way: his Father might have let him alone till he had come quite home to his house, and it had been a singular mercy to have bid him welcome then; but he takes notice of him yet a great way off: sinners may be far off from God in their own apprehensions, and yet the Lord even then draws near, whiles thus they apprehend. 3. His Father had pity or compassion on him; the Lord's bowels even yearn, and work, and stir within him at the sight of his returning prodigals; when Ephraim had bemoaned himself, Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke; why then cries God; Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still; therefore my bowels are troubled for him, I will surely have mercy upon him saith the Lord.—4. His Father run: there is much in this: As, 1. It had been mercy though his Father had stood still, till his Son had come. 2. What a mercy is this, that his Father will go, and give his Son the meeting? 3. But above all, oh what abundant mercy call we this, that the Father will not go, but run? If he would needs meet his Son, might he not have walked towards him in a soft slow pace? O no, if a sinner will but come, or creep towards Christ, mercy will not go a foot-pace, but run to meet him; bowels full of mercy out-pace bowels pinched with hunger; God's mercy is over all his works, and so it is over all our needs, and over all our sins. 5. He ran, and fell on his neck; (i.e.) he hugged and embraced him; O wonder! who would not have been loath to have touched him? was he not in his loathsome stinking rags? smelt he not of the hogs and swine he lately kept? would not some dainty stomachs have been ready to have cast all up upon such embracements? we see mercy is not nice, When I passed by (saith God) I saw thee polluted in thy own blood, and I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, live; yea, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, live; that very time of her blood, was the time of love; then the Lord spread his Spirit over her, and covered her nakedness, and swore unto her, and entered into a Covenant with her, and she became his. 6. He ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him; who would have brooked a person in so filthy a pickle? what? kiss those lips that have been so lately lapping in the hogs trough? those lips that had so often kissed those base, and beggarly, and abominable Harlots? one would think he should rather have kicked, than kissed him: there is a passage somewhat like this, and Esau ran to meet Jacob, and he embraced him, and fell on his neck, and kissed him; before he had thought to have killed him, but now he kissed him; its not to tell how dear the Father was to his Prodigal Son, when he ran, and fell on his neck, and embraced, and kissed him. The scope of the Parable is this, that Christ is willing and glad to receive sinners: Turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways; for why will ye die O house of Israel?

2. Christ manifests this willingness in his practice really; amongst many instances I shall insist only on one, a notable instance of this year: One of the Pharisees named Simon invited Christ to eat with him: into whose house when he had entered, a certain woman that was a sinner abiding there in the City, heard of it; a widow she was, and prompted by her wealth and youth to an intemperate life: she came to Jesus in the Pharisees house, and no sooner come, but she lays her burden at Jesus's feet, and presents him with a broken heart, and weeping eye, and an Alabaster Box of Ointment. She stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with her tears, and to wipe them with the hairs of her head; and she kissed his feet, and Anointed them with Ointment. 1. She stands at his feet, a sign of her humility: O what a change! She that was before married to a Noble personage, a Native of the Town & Castle of Magdal, from whence she had her name of Magdalene; and she that now was a widow, and therefore took her liberty of pride and lust, who so proud and vile as Mary Magdalene? at this time she comes in remorse and regret for her sins, and throwing away her former pride, she stoops, and waits, and humbly stands at Jesus feet. 2. She stood at his feet behind him; a blushing sign of faith; it comprehends in it a Tacite confession of her Sins, she knew herself unworthy of Christ's presence; she durst not look him in the face, but believingly she waits behind him: her shame speaks her repentance; and her waiting on him, and not flying from him, bespeaks her faith. 3. She stood at his feet behind him weeping, her grief burst out in tears: she heeds not the feast, or feaster, though usually they are accompanied with joy, and mirth, and music; and such feasts attended with such vanities she many a time had probably observed, yet now she comes in trembling to this feast, and falling down before Christ, she weeps, and weeps bitterly for her sins. 4. She began to wash his feet with tears; her tears were not feigned, but fruitful; she wept a shower of tears; one considering her tears, cries it out, Terra rigat coelum, the very earth bedews heaven; her eyes that before were abused to lust, are now fountains of tears; she pours out a flood, great enough to wash the feet of her blessed Jesus; this was the manner of the Jews, to eat their meat lying down, and Leaning on their Elbows; or if many eat together, leaning in the bosoms of one another; thus at the Passover it is said that there was leaning on Jesus bosom one of his disciples whom Jesus loved; And in this posture Jesus sitting or lying at meat, Mary had the convenience to weep on his feet, which he had cast behind his fellow; and O how she weeps a main! the Tears so Trickle, that she begins to wash Christ's feet; she not only waters them, but washes them; that which Jeremy wished, Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a Fountain of Tears! Mary fulfills; for her head is waters, and her eyes are fountains; Rivers of Tears run down her eyes; O she had pierced Christ with her sins, and now she weeps over him whom she had pierced; crying out as we may imagine, O my sins! and O my Christ! O foul sins! and O sweet Jesus! 5. She wipes his feet with the Hairs of her Head; her hair added to her beauty, sometimes in curling rings, or in seemly sheds, she made it a snare for men; but now she consecrates it to her Lord, and makes it a Towel to wipe Christ's feet withal: O here's a worthy fruit of serious repentance, the Apostle calls it an holy revenge. 6. She kissed his feet; in token of her new choice, and new love, and new affection; her kisses had formerly been to wantons, but now she bestows them on the feet of Christ. 7. She anointed them with ointment; which expression was so great an ecstasy of love, and sorrow, and adoration, that to anoint the feet of the greatest Monarch was long unknown, and in all the pomps of Roman prodigality, it was never used till Otho taught it Nero. When Simon observed this sinner so busy in the expresses of her Religion, he thought within himself that Christ was no Prophet, that he did not know her to be a sinner; for although the Jews Religion did permit harlots to live, and to enjoy the privileges of the Nation, save that their oblations were refused; yet the Pharisees who pretended to a greater degree of sanctity than others, would not admit them to civil usages, or to the benefits of ordinary society: and hence Simon made an objection within himself, which Jesus knowing (for he understood his thoughts as well as words) first he makes her Appology, and then his own; the scope givign us to understand, that Christ was not of the same superciliousness with the Pharisees, but that repenting sinners should be welcome unto him; and this welcome he publisheth first to Simon, Her sins which are many are forgiven; and then to the woman, Thy sins are forgiven thee, thy faith hath saved thee, go in peace.

I have been long in the proof: but a word of use, and I have done. What? is Christ most willing to receive sinners? O then be exhorted! who would not come to Jesus Christ? methinks now all sinners of all sorts should say, though I have been a drunkard, a swearer, an unclean person, yet now I hear Christ is willing to receive sinners, and therefore I will go to Jesus Christ. This is my exhortation, O come unto Christ, come unto Christ! behold here in the name of the Lord I stand, and make invitation to poor sinners; O will ye not come? how will ye answer it at the great day, when it shall be said, the Lord Jesus made a tender and offer of mercy to you, and you would not accept of it? Oh come to Christ, and believe on Christ; as Christ is willing to receive you, so be you willing to give up your souls to him; the motives to this I may lay down in these particulars.—

1. The Doctrine of Christ, Come unto me,— and him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out. All the arguments of God and Christ, of which you have heard, the practice of Christ whiles he was upon earth, and the heart of Christ now in Heaven; lay these together, and apply them to your own souls. Oh what work will they make!

2. The calls of God, and Christ; as they are frequent in Scriptures; consider that Text, Ho, everyone that thirsts, come ye to the waters! Isa. 55.1. [Ho] he begins proclamation-wise; we usually say, vocations, interjections speak very affectionate motion towards the distressed; certainly Christ's love is a very affectionate love, he lays his mouth to the ears of those that are spiritually deaf, and cries aloud, Ho [everyone] Christ invites all: As many as ye shall find, bid them to the Marriage, Matth 22.9. As the Heavens are general in their influence, not one grass on the ground but 'tis bedewed; so are Christ's invitations to his feast, not one man in the world but he is invited? Ho, everyone that thirsteth] so the Apostle, Let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will, let him take the water of Life freely, Revel. 22.17. A thirst and a will is one and the same, it is your will that makes up the match; if you will but sit down at God's Table, if you will but have the honey-comb with the honey, if you will but drink his Wine with his milk, if you will drink, yea drink abundantly of the flagons of the new wine of his Kingdom; why then come, Come ye to the waters; come unto me and drink. Christ's arms are spread abroad to receive sinners; he calls and knocks; and calls and waits; and calls and beseeches; every word here hath so much sweetness and dearness in it, as it plainly speaks him free and willing to receive you, if you will but come.

3. The wooings of Christ to gain your hearts; consider him bowing the Heavens, and coming down, and laying aside his Robes of Majesty, and putting on your filthy garments; consider him going about from place to place, on no other errand, but to gain your hearts, and win your Souls; and whoever spake such effectual words as Christ spake when he was upon the earth? whoever gave such precious jewels to a Bride, as Christ gave to his Spouse? whoever put on such apparel, as Christ did when he wooed his Church? the Prophet wonders at it; Who is this that cometh from Edom, with died garments from Bozrah?—Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the Wine Fat? Isa. 63.1, 2. Whoever gave such a love-token, as Christ gave when he laid down his Life? Oh consider him living, or dying, and say, Never like Love to this. Ah poor sinner, see your Jesus hanging on the Cross, dropping out his last blood, breathing out his last breath, stretching out his dying arms to incircle sinners; and come, Oh come and throw yourselves into his bleeding arms! away with all prejudicate opinions! who shall say, Christ is not willing to save him, and not blaspheme eternal love? speak truth; corrupt hearts speak truth; say not Christ is unwilling, but you are unwilling; I would, but ye would not.

4. The weepings of Christ if he cannot prevail. Thus we find him in the Gospel expressing himself, not only in words, but in tears. And when he was come near Jerusalem, he beheld the City and wept over it, Luke 19.41. Christ coming to the City and seeing it, and foreseeing the desolation that should come upon it, his bowels yearned within him towards the People, and he mourned secretly within himself. q. d. O Jerusalem, thou hast had many Priests to advise thee, and many Prophets to instruct thee in the ways of life, but now those days are gone and past; nay, the great Prophet of the World is come to woo thee, but yet thy heart is hardened, and thou wilt not receive the things belonging to thy peace, and therefore I will turn my preaching into mourning and sighing. O that thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things belonging to thy peace—and then his heart even breaks, and he weeps again, but now are they hid from thine eyes! sinners, suppose Christ should come and weep over you, as he did over Jerusalem, saying, O ye sinful souls, had but you known, even you in this your day, the things belonging to your peace! and suppose that you should see one tear trickling down after another; what? Christ to weep for you, over you? Methinks if you had hearts of stone, it should melt your hearts; surely it is no light matter that makes Christ weep;

Children weep often, but Wise-men seldom, yet here the wisest of men weeps for them that would not weep for themselves; O Jerusalem, Jerusalem.

SECT. IV. Of Christ's easy Yoak, and light Burthen.

3. For the easiness of Christ's Yoak, and the lightness of Christ's burden, Christ delivers it in these words, Take my Yoak upon you and learn of me,—for my Yoak is easy, and my Burthen is light. See the actings of Christ this year in reference to our souls health. 1. He commissionates his Apostles to call sinners in. 2. He stands ready to receive them if they will but come in. 3. He sweetens the way of Christianity to them when they are come in. Many fears and jealousies are in the hearts of men, of the difficulty, austerity, and severity of Christ's institutions; and therefore to remove that objection, he tells them plainly, there is no such thing, but rather clean contrary, For my Yoak is easy, and my Burthen is light.

My Yoak (i.e.) my Commandments, so the Apostle John gives the interpretation, His Commandments are not grievous. My Yoak is easy; (i.e.) my Commandments are without any inconvenience; the trouble of a Yoak is not the weight, but the uneasiness of it, and Christ speaks suitably, My Yoak is easy, and my Burthen (i.e.) my institutions; the word primarily signifies the freight or balast of a Ship, which cuts through the Waves, as if it had no burden; and without which burden there were no safety in the Ship: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , a ferendo, a burden which either is laid upon the shoulder, or rather which is put into a Ship, that it may go steadily and safely. My Burthen is light, the Yoak of the Law was heard, and the Burthen of the Pharisees was heavy, but Christ's Yoak is easy, and his Burthen is light, every way sweet, and pleasant.

Christian Religion, and the practice of it, are full of sweetness, easiness, and pleasantness; My Yoak is easy, and my Burthen is light.

The Prophets prophesying of this, say thus, Every Valley shall be exalted, and every Mountain and Hill shall be laid low; the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain; the meaning is, that the ways of Christianity should be levelled and made even; and that all lets and impediments should be removed out of the way; that so we might have a more easy and convenient passage unto Heaven; to the same purpose is that other prophesy, And an high-way (or causway) shall be there; and a way, a causway, and a way; (that is, a way cast up) Isa. 62.10. and it shall be called the way of holiness, (or a way for the Saints of God, and not for the wicked, Matth. 7.14. The unclean shall not pass over it, but it shall be for those: (or he shall be with them, or be a guide unto them by his Word and Spirit, Isa. 30.21.) The Wayfaring men though fools shall not err therein; Christ's way is so easy that the simplest so conducted by his Word and Spirit shall not miss of it, The meek will he guide in Judgment, and the meek will he teach his way.

The Apostles are yet more clear; For this is the love of God, that we keep his Commandments, and his commandments are not grievous. And the Law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the Law of sin and Death. And now are we delivered from the Law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of Spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter. Christ

Jesus came to break off from our necks those two great yokes, the one of Sin, by which we are kept in fetters and prisons; the other of Moses Law, by which we are kept in pupillage and minority; and now Christ having taken off these two, he hath put on a third; he quits us of our burden, but not of our duty; he hath changed the yoke of sin, and the yoke of the Law strictly taken, into the sweetness of his Fatherly Regiment, whose very precepts carry part of their reward in hand, and assurance of Glory afterward.

The reasons of the sweetness, easiness, and pleasantness of Christian Religion, and the practice of it, I shall reduce into these heads.

1. Christian Religion is most rational. If we should look into the best laws that the wisest men in the World ever agreed upon, we shall find that Christ adopted the quintessence of them all into this one Law; the highest pitch of reason is but as a spark, a taper, a lesser light, which is involved and swallowed up in the Body of this great light, that is made up by the Son of Righteousness. Some observe that Christ's discipline is the Breviary of all the wisdom of the Best men, and a fair copy and transcript of his Fathers wisdom; there is nothing in the laws of Christian Religion, but what is the perfective of our Spirits, rare expedient of obeying God, and of doing duty and benefit to all capacities and orders of men. Indeed the Greeks, whom the World admired for their human wisdom, accounted the Preaching of the Gospel foolishness, and thereupon God blasted their wisdom, as it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the Prudent, 1 Cor. 1.19. the Gospel may be as foolishness unto some, but unto them which are called—Christ the Power of God, and the wisdom of God.

2. Christian Religion hath less trouble and slavery in it than sin, or anything that is contrary to it; as for instance; he that propounds to himself to live a low, a pious, an humble and retired life, his main employment is nothing but sitting Religiously quiet, and undisturbed with variety of impertinent affairs; but he that loves the world entertains a thousand businesses, and every business hath a world of employments: how easy a thing is it to restore a pledge? but if a man means to defeat, or to cozen him that trusts him, what a world of arts must he use to make pretences? as first to delay, then to excuse, then to object, then to intricate the business, then to quarrel; and all the way to palliate the crime, and to represent himself an honest man: the ways of sin are crooked, desert, rocky, and uneven ways: the Apocryphal Book of Solomon brings in such men, as if in hell they were speaking this language, We wearied ourselves in the way of wickedness, yea we have gone through deserts, where there lay no way; but as for the way of the Lord we have not known it. Wicked men are in thralldom, but where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom. O the pains, troubles, expenses that men are at to serve their sensuality! see how the ambitious man riseth early, and goes to bed late; see how he flatters, dissembles, solicits to obtain nothing but a little wind, a puff, a breath of vain men's mouths! see how the covetous man toils, as if he were tied in a gally by the leg with a chain to serve by rowing forever; so I have heard, that Turks use some Christians; but this is a thousand times worse servitude, for such a one is in servitude to a more base Creature than a Turk, and he lies bound not only by the feet, but also by the hands ears, eyes, heart, and all; only the Christian is at liberty; only Christian Religion and the practice of it sets men at liberty; If ye continue in my word, (saith Christ) then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

3. Christian Religion is all composed of peace; her ways are the ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace, Prov 17.3. Christ framed all his Laws in compliance of this design of peace; peace within, and peace at home, and peace abroad; 1. It holds forth a certain Heavenly peace, and tranquility within; Great peace have they which love thy Law, and nothing shall offend them. But on the contrary; The wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt; there is no peace saith my God to the wicked: their passions were never yet mortified; and such passions usually range in wicked men as are most contrary, and demand contrary things; the desire of honor cries spend here, but the passion of avarice cries, hold thy hands; lost cries, venture here; but pride saith, no such thing, it may turn to thy dishonor; anger cries, revenge thyself here, but ambition says, it's better to dissemble. And here is fulfilled that of the Psalmist, I have seen violence and strife in the City; the vulgar renders it, I have seen iniquity and contradiction in the self-same City: First, Iniquity, for all the demands of these passions are unjust; And, 2. Contradiction, for one passion cries out against another. But now great peace have they that love thy Law; for by the aid of Christ and his Grace, their passions are in some sort subdued: and they pass on their life most sweetly and calmly, without any perturbations much troubling their Spirits; they have that Peace which passeth all understanding, which the World can neither give nor taste of, as Christ affirmeth.

2. It holds forth peace at home; the Laws of Jesus teach us how to bear with the infirmities of our Relatives, and indeed whosoever obeys the Laws of Jesus Christ, he seeks with sweetness to remedy all differences, he throws water upon a spark, he lives sweetly with his Wife, affectionately with his Children, discreetly with his Servants; and they all look upon him as their Guardian, Friend, and Patron; but look upon an angry man, not subject to these Christian Laws, and when he enters upon his threshold, it it gives an alarm to his house, every little accident is the matter of a quarrel, and every quarrel discomposes the peace of the house, and sets it on fire, and no man can tell how far it may burn. O the sweetness, easiness, pleasantness of Christian Religion! where that is embraced and followed, the man is peaceable, and charitable, and just, and loving, and forbearing, and forgiving; and how should there be but content in this blessed Family?

3. It holds out peace abroad, it commands all Offices of kindness, gentleness, love, meekness, humility, lowliness of mind towards others; and such sweet dispositions are usually received with fondness, and all the endearments of the neighbourhood; it prescribes an austere, and yet a sweet deportment; it commands all those labors of love, as to relieve the stranger, to visit the sick, to wash the feet of the poor; it sends us upon charitable embassies, to unclean prisons, nasty dungeons, and in the cause of Christ to lay down our lives one for another; it teacheth us how to return good for evil, kindness for injuries, a soft answer for the rough words of an Enemy; Oh when I think of this, I cannot but think of him who said, That either that this was not the Christian Religion, or we were not Christians. For my part I am easily persuaded, that if we would but live according to the discipline of Christian Religion, one of those great plagues that vexeth the world (I mean the plague of war) would be no more; certainly this was one of the designs of Christianity, that there should be no wars, no jars, no discontents amongst men; and if all men that are called Christians, were indeed charitable, peaceable, just, loving, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, what sweet peace should we have? how would this world be an Image of Heaven, and of the society of Saints and Angels above in Glory?

4. Christian Religion affords to us all assistances both outward and inward. In some respects, I know the duties of Christianity are hard and heavy; but whatsoever Christ hath imposed as heavy and hard, he hath made it light in aids: I shall show the helps in these particulars. As—

1. The holy Scriptures be our helps; this was the very scope and aim for which the sacred Volume was sent from Heaven, viz. that we might decline from evil, and do good, that we might die to old Adam, and live to Christ; that we might crucify sin, and follow Virtue; what are the Scriptures but the Registers of God's Will, the letters of God's Love to invite us to Grace, and to dehort us from vice? O the persuasion, directions and commands of God that we might become holy; and O the dissuasions diversions, threatenings, and terrifying of God that we might fly profaneness!

2. The Ministers of Christ be our helps: thou hast the Scriptures, but it may be thou canst not read, or thou canst not understand the sense and meaning thereof; Christ therefore for thy help hath set up a ministry for the edifying of the Body of Christ. These are the watchmen over the house of Israel to cry like trumpets, and to blazon the sins of the house of Israel; these are the suitors of God and Christ to speak out his good will in thine ears; they call, they cry, they wait, they woo, they Pray you in Christ's stead, that you will be reconciled unto God.

3. The lives of Saints be our helps; we have not only Teachers in word, but the Saints in all Ages, as so many Stars, have given us light how to walk in the darkness of this life. The examples of the godly are very drawing, and much for our imitation, and therefore the Psalmist bids us, Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. O it's a blessed help to a Christian life to read over, much more to mark, and observe the holy and godly lives of the Saints of God; how doth their Zeal condemn our coldness, their diligence our negligence, their watching and prayer, our sluggishness and indevotion? And how are they as spurs to quicken us forwards in our spiritual voyage towards Heaven?

4. Christ's Ordinances be our helpers; as the Word, and Sacraments, and Prayer, and Meditation, and Conference, &c. What are they but Fountains of grace, conduits and conveyances of the blood of Christ? To what end were they instituted, but for the watering of our souls to the increase of grace, and to the supplanting of sin and vice, and all manner of evil?

5. The encouragements of reward be our helps. Now in the practice of Christian Religion there is a double reward. 1. The reward of duty, In the keeping of thy Commandments there is great reward; he saith not, for keeping them, but in keeping them there is great reward, there is a grace, a beauty, an excellency in every gracious acting. 2. The reward according to the duty; to this exercise of Religion Christ hath annexed many sweet and gracious Promises both for this life, and that to come; and these Promises may be used as helps; He had respect unto the recompense of reward. To this purpose are the glorious things of Heaven set open before us, that we may have an eye to them, and be encouraged by them. So run that ye may obtain.

6. The openings and discoveries of the pains of Hell are as helps to restrain us from sin, and to keep us in the way to Christ. This, some call legal, but Christ in the Gospel tells us of this; in the Gospel we find a description of hell-pains, set out by weeping, and wailing and gnashing of teeth; by a worm never dying, and a fire never going out; Oh when I think of those unquenchable flames, those remediless torments, without hope of recovery, remission, or mitigation; when I think of that privation and loss of the sight of God's face, prepared only for those that serve him in holiness, how should I but look about me, and prepare for my reckoning? Nay how easy should I think any pains in comparison? Some persons in affrightment have been seen to carry burdens, and to leap ditches, and climb walls, which their natural power could never have done; and if we understood the sadness of a cursed eternity, from which we are commanded to fly, and yet knew how near we are to it, and how likely to fall into it, if we continue in sin, it would be able to create fears greater than a sudden fire, or a mid-night alarm.

7. A principle of love (wheresoever it is planted) is our help; be the Yoak never so uneasy, yet love will make it light; Solomon compares the estate of the Church to a chariot, and it is described to have Pillars of Silver, and a Bottom of Gold, and a Covering of Purple, the midst thereof being paved with Love; a strange expression, that the midst of a Chariot should be paved with love; but 'tis plain, the Chariots wherein Christ carries his people up and down in the World, and brings them to himself, is such a Chariot as the midst thereof is paved with love; in this case if there were neither Heaven, nor Hell, yet a soul would be in the duties of Christianity. I remember how Ivo, Bishop of Chartres, meeting a grave Matron on the way with fire in one hand, and water in the other, he asked her what those symbols meant? and what she meant to do with her fire and water? she answered, My purpose is with the fire to burn Paradise, and with the water to quench the flames of Hell, that men may serve God (said she) without the incentives of hope and fear, and purely for the love of God, and Jesus Christ. Surely it was an high expression; for my part I dare not separate those things which God hath joined together; only this I say, that where true love is, there is an excellent help in our way Heaven-wards.

8. The Angels be our helps; They are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of Salvation, Heb. 1.14. and the kind of their ministration is excellently set forth by the Psalmist, They shall keep thee in all thy ways, they shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone, Psal. 91.11, 12. in this place the Angels are compared to Nurses that have a charge over weak Children to keep them and guard them; so the Angels do all the offices of a Nurse, or Mother; they keep us, guard us, instruct us, admonish us, correct us, comfort us, preserve us from evil, and provoke us to good.

9. The Motions, Inspirations, blessed Influences of the Spirit of Christ be our helps; many a time the Spirit cries, and calls on our hearts, saying, This is the way walk therein: as the evil Spirit, or Devil in wicked men is continually moving, and inclining them to all evil thoughts, affections, and desires; so the good Spirit of God in good men doth incline, and move them to good thoughts, good affections, good actions; and hence they are said to be led by the Spirit;

there are indeed several acts of the Spirit, as sometimes, there is a breathing or stirring; sometimes a quickening, or enlivening; sometimes a powerful effectual inclining, or bending of our hearts unto good things; now in some of these works the Spirit is most-what, for in the progress of sanctification, we need a continual help, and influence, from God's holy Spirit; and when we obey these conducts, we are said to walk in the Spirit; and as all these are helps in the ways of Christianity, so by these helps and assistance of Christ's Holy Spirit, Christianity is made very easy unto us.

10. The Grace of God is our help; many feeling the strength of corruption cry out with Paul, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death? O I find a law in my members warring against the law of my mind; but they consider not the comfortable saying of Christ to Paul, My grace is sufficient for thee; by the assistance of grace Paul could do anything; I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me; yea, In all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us: the Psalmist hath a notable expression to this purpose, I will run the way of thy Commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart; this enlargement of heart was by the grace of God; grace is compared to oil: as a dry purse is softened and enlarged by anointing it with Oil, so the heart drawn together by sin, is opened and enlarged by the pouring of grace into it; and if grace be present, then saith David, I will run the way of thy Commandments; not walk, but run; it is an allusion to a Cart-Wheel, which crieth and complaineth under a small burden being dry, but when a little Oil is put into it, it runs merrily, and without noise; and if David could say thus in his time, how much more should we that live in these Gospel-times, when grace in greater measure is effused, and poured out? by the grace of Christ (should we say) we will walk, and run, and fly in the way of his Commandments.

Well then, is Christian Religion and the practice of it, full of sweetness, easiness, and pleasantness? in the first place for conviction, this may take away the cavils of some men; what is said in way of objection I shall reduce to these particulars.—

1. They object that Christ himself confesseth it to be a Yoak, and a burden; but no that we answer with Christ, his Yoak is easy, and his Burthen is light. Certainly there are burdens which grieve not the bearers at all, as the burden of feathers upon a Birds back; it is nothing grievous to her, but rather bears her up; and a burden of Gold and Jewels upon a man's back (supposing it the reward of his portage, and the hire of his labor) it is nothing grievous to him, but rather cheers him up. Men, Brethren, and Fathers, if we will but come and close with Christ, the Spirit is given to enable us, and Heaven is promised to encourage us; the one gives power, and the other stirs up our affections, and how then should we complain of pressure? O it is a sweet burden! sweetened by his Grace, and sweetened by his Spirit, and sweetened by a principle of love, O how I love thy Law? and sweetened by a principle of delight, Thy Law is my delight; and sweetened with a promise of reward, In the keeping of thy Commandments there is great reward.

2. They object; we feel no such thing; you tell us of sweetness, easiness, pleasantness; but if we must speak out our own experiences, O what a weariness is it?— when will the New-moon be gone, that we may sell Corn? and the Sabbath, that we may set forth wheat? We feel a sweetness in these present enjoyments of the World, but as for Holiness, Grace, Religion, the Discipline of Christ, we wonder where the sweetness is, we can find no such secret golden Mines in these spiritual diggings.

I answer, 1. This indeed is the speech of carnal and profane men, they feel no sweetness, easiness, pleasantness in God's ways; The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned: but he that is spiritual judgeth or discerneth all things. Poor souls! till God speak to your hearts you cannot understand this hidden Manna: It is observed that God never sent the pleasant Manna unto Israel so long as their Flower and Bread of Egypt lasted; so never will you taste how good the Lord is, so long as you doat on sin and vanity.

2. Though you feel not these things for the present, yet in time you may do; yea certainly if you belong to God, in time you will do; O but when? you will say, when? I answer, the first taste of this sweetness is usually at the first taking of Christ's yoke upon us; as Merchants desire us to sell their waters, are content in the first place to let you see, and handle, and taste, thereby to induce you to buy: so Jesus Christ willing (as it were) to part with Heaven, he is content in the first place to impart a certain taste before hand, and to sweeten the ways of goliness unto us; Behold, I will allure her (saith God) and bring her into the Wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her. What is it that God means by alluring of his people? I answer, it contains these things. As,—

1. A discovery of the beauty of holiness; when God first effectually calls the soul home to himself, he sets open the beauty of his service; naturally the heart is possessed with much prejudice against the ways of Religion, Oh what a strict rule is this to carnal men, to pull out their right eyes, to cut off their right hands, to hate Father, and Mother, and Wife, and Lands, and Life for the Name of Christ, to cross their own desires, to deny their own selves, to mortify their earthly members, to follow the Lamb through evil report and good report, through afflictions, and persecutions, and manifold temptations whithersoever he goeth, to war with principalities, and powers, and spiritual wickednesses in high places? and hence it is that the Lord is forced to set forth the ways of Christ as beautiful, even under crosses and afflictions; thus when the watchman smote the Church, and wounded her, and took away her veil, yet she still acknowledged Christ (for whose sake she suffered) to be white and ruddy, the fairest of ten thousands. Christ sets forth himself and his ways in all the grace, and goodness, and beauty, and sweetness, and loveliness that possibly may be; q. d. by these I will allure them that belong unto me.

2. An out-bidding of all the temptations of other Lovers; before Christ come, souls go a whoring from Christ, their hearts are allured by other lovers; the world, the flesh, and the Devil come in, and they proffer Souls such and such contentments; but when Christ comes; he deals with souls in a more Powerful way, and he out-bids all their former lovers, q. d. Did their lovers proffer them comfort? I will bid more comfort; Did their lovers proffer gain? I will bid more gain; Did their lovers proffer honor and respect? I will out-bid them in that also. And indeed, then hath the Gospel a true, and full, and gracious work upon the heart, when it yields to the proffers of the Gospel, as finding that all that the World can bid is now out-bidden; you know, when one comes to offer so much for a commodity, and another out-bids him, he carries it away; so when the World, and lust, and sin proffer to the soul such and such contents, then comes Christ and out-bids all, and so the bargain is made up, and Christ carries the heart away; sinners, it may be as yet you feel none of these things, but in time you may do, and in the mean time you see here is a word for it, Behold I will allure her, &c.

3. They object, the Saints themselves feel no such things, for ought appears to the World; whose spirits are more heavy and sad? as it is said of Christ himself, that he never laughed, and as David said of himself, Why art thou cast down O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? So it may be said of some Christians, if they are strict, that they are seldom merry, or pleasant.—

But I answer—1. Christians that keep indeed close to the rule, are for the most part serious, and the word may suppose them, as sad.

2. It may be they are not in their element, in the acts of Religion, and therefore they cannot express their spiritual cheerfulness; a fish cannot delight itself on the Earth, but when it is in the water; a Bird doth not sing on the ground, but when it is got up into the air; God's people cannot rejoice in sin, as drunkards and revellers do; but when their hearts are in Religious exercises, and in communion with God, they are merry and pleasant.

3. It may be they are in such company as may make them sad: the men of the World object against Saints, that they are heavy, and sour, and melancholy men; but in the mean time they consider not that their swearing, revelling, and dishonoring of God hath made them so pensive. Why sinners! your carriage grieves the very Spirit of God, You grieve God at the heart, as it is expressed, Gen. 6.6. and therefore no wonder if the godly cannot rejoice in your sinful society; you are the cause of their sadness; but admit them once into the company and fellowship of the Saints, and they know how to be joyful.

4. If it be so, that usually they are pensive and sad, it is not because of Religion, but because they are not more Religious; because they find so much want of godliness in their own hearts; this was the cause of Paul's heaviness, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death? And yet know, that all these sadnesses are true preparatives to joy; and therefore in the very next words, the Apostle breaks out into that sweet Doxology, I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Never was true sorrow for sin, but it ended in rejoicings, and praises, and thanksgiving to God,

Why then be convinced; Ah deceived souls! say not that God is an hard Master, reaping where he sowed not, and gathering where he strawed not; say not that his ways are tedious, and irksome, and uncomfortable ways; but rather taste, and see, and try how good the Lord is; experience the truth of these words, My Yoak is easy, and my Burthen is light: What is lighter than that Burthen, which instead of burthening Cheers up the party on which it is laid? Just like those burdens of Cinnamon, that refresh those that carry them through the deep sands of Arabia. An holy Divine once endeavoring to convince men of the sweetness and pleasantness of God's ways by his own experiences; I call H•aven and Earth to Record (saith he) that these things are truths of God; they are not notions, or conceits, but certain realities: Another flies somewhat higher; If men would in earnest (says he) abandon the Devils service, and give up their names to Christ in truth; and try, I dare assure them in the Word of Life and Truth, they would not exchange the saddest hour of all their life afterward, with the prime and flower of all their former sensual pleasures, might they have ten thousand worlds to boot; her ways are ways of pleasure, saith Solomon.

2. You that are so convinced, I beseech you carry on the work of God sweetly, comfortably, and with delight: the Psalmist says, Blessed is the man that delights in the Law of the Lord. And Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk cheerfully in the Law of the Lord. And blessed is the man that delighteth greatly in his Law. And it is written upon the heart of Christ, I delight to do thy will O my God, yea they Law is within my heart; as God loves a cheerful giver, so a cheerful server; Come take my Yoak upon you, saith Christ, for my Yoak is easy; it is not an Iron Yoak of Bondage, but a Chain of heavenly Pearls to adorn your souls.

[Quest. 1] Oh, but how should we carry on the Work, the Yoak, the Duty, the Practice of Piety, and of Religion pleasantly? I answer.

1. Be sure to keep the heart right and upright within; let all we do be in sincerity, and let all we are in respect of the inner man be at peace within; sense and reason can tell us, that according to the tempter within, so there is the relishing of things without; he that acts in sincerity, and hath peace within, can easily go through the duties that are required without, with joy and comfort.

2. Exercise saith in the work and office of the Holy Ghost; I mean that work and office to which the Holy Ghost is designed, by the Father, and the Son, both to help his people, and to be the Comforter of his people. 1. The holy Ghost is designed to help his people; Likewise the Spirit helpeth our infirmities; the word in the Original doth properly imply such an help, as when another man of strength and ability steppeth in, to sustain the burden that lieth upon weak shoulders; why, this makes Christ's Burthen light, we do not bear all the weight, for the holy Ghost puts under his shoulder. 2. The Holy Ghost is designed to comfort his People. Christ calls him the Spirit, the Comforter; because he brings in a kind of spiritual joy, and spiritual comfort. Mark, it is not a natural, but a spiritual joy; Oh what a vast difference is there betwixt the comforts of a carnal heart, and the comforts of the godly? The one comes from a little meat, or drink, or creature vanity; but the other comes from the exercise of Faith, about the office of the Holy Ghost, who is designed to this work? surely here is the way to carry on duty sweetly, and comfortably, and with delight (i.e.) to be in the exercise of faith on the work and office of the Holy Ghost, as he is our Helper and Comforter, 1 Pet. 2.9.

3. Understand what is in Christian Religion, and in the practice of it to cause delight. As.—

1. In every duty and gracious acting of it, there is more of the Glory of God, than in the whole frame of Heaven and Earth besides; Herein is my Father glorified, that you bear much Fruit, John. 15.8. Oh, if we but thus looked at the profession and practice of Christian Religion, we could not but take pleasure in it.

2. In every duty and gracious acting of it, there is the seed of glory, and eternal life; sometimes there breaks out in the very exercise of duty a joy in the Holy Ghost, a foretaste of Glory; but howsoever there is the seed of Glory; and though the seed of Glory be not seen, but lie as it were under ground dead, and unseen, yet in time it will spring up unto eternal life: why, thus look at the practice of Religion, and it will be sweeter to us than Honey and the Honey-Comb, it will be more precious than Gold, yea than much fine Gold.

But how should we know the difference betwixt the natural pleasantness, and this [Quest. 2] spiritual pleasantness in Religion? I know Christians may put a luster upon the ways of God by their natural pleasantness, and cheerfulness of spirit; but because we speak of a spiritual joy, and comfort, and not of a natural, wherein lies the difference? I answer.—

1. If it be a spiritual pleasantness, it will be serious; I have said of laughter it is mad, and of mirth what doth it? There is much lightness and vanity in such breakings out of natural pleasantness, but in spiritual pleasantness all is grave, and sober, and exceeding serious.

2. If it be a spiritual pleasantness, it can stand with repentance, and humiliation, and the fear of God, rejoice with trembling, saith the Psalmist; spiritual rejoicing may consist with trembling: And blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his Commandments; the fear of God may consist with these spiritual delights in the Commandments of God.

3. If it be spir••ual pleasantness, it is our strength; The joy of the Lord is our strength, saith Nehemiah; nothing animates souls more in duties than joy doth; it carries on the soul more fully: it is as oil that causeth the wheels of Christian practice to go on more freely: we may be naturally pleasant, and then coming to spiritual duties our hearts are dead; but if our pleasantness be spiritual, our hearts will be strengthened in the ways of God.

4. If it be a spiritual pleasantness, it will bear up the heart in want of all outward pleasantness; Although the Fig-Tree shall not Blossome, neither shall fruit be in the Vines, the labor of the Olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat, the Flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls, yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. When all is dark abroad in the World, the soul in this frame will rejoice in God alone; on the contrary, the soul that hath only a natural pleasantness of Spirit, when affliction comes, it is all amort, and down; I appeal to you that have the most delightful spirits, when you have friends, and means, and all you like, you are jocund and merry; but when affliction comes, how quickly are your spirits down? surely your pleasantness is not spiritual, for if so, it would bear up your hearts joyful in affliction.

And now again the Passover, a Feast of the Jews was nigh: our English Annotations on these words can tell us, that this seems to bethe third Passover after Christ's baptism. And therefore here I conclude the third year of Christ's Ministry; there is but one year more before Christ's death, to which now I come, and to some passages therein, most observable in reference to our Souls salvation.

CHAP. IV.

SECT. I. Of the fourth Year of Christ's Ministry, and generally of his Actings in that Year.

THIS was the last year of Christ's ministry, in which were thousands of passages: The Evangelist John relates more of Christ this year than in all the former; and if I studied not brevity, we might dwell more on his actings for us this year, than hitherto we have done from the beginning of his ministry. Now it was that he was transfigured; now it was that he instituted that Sacrament called the Lord's Supper; now it was that after supper he made his farewell Sermon, rarely mixed of sadness and joys, and studed with mysteries as with Emeralds; now it was, that after Sermon he blessed his Disciples, and prayed for them, and then having sung an Hymn, he went out into the Mount of Olives, where in a Garden he began his sufferings. On these passages I had thought to have enlarged, but I see the Book swells under my hands, and now that I am drawing near Christ's sufferings, I shall only touch one point, which hitherto I have pretermitted, and is the most comprehensive of any passage I can touch.

Many Questions are about the Holiness, or Righteousness, or Obedience of Christ. As whether it belong to us? And whether it be the matter of our justification? And whether Christ was bound to observe the law of works as a Mediator, or only as a mere man? And whether we are not justified by the passive Righteousness of Christ only? and seeing now we are discovering Christ's actings in reference to our souls salvation, we cannot pass this main business, whereof much relates to Christ's life, as well as to his conception, or birth, or death, or sufferings.

SECT. II. Of the distinctions, or several divisions of Christ's Righteousness.

FOR the better understanding of Christ's Righteousness, we usually distinguish, that Christ's Righteousness is either that righteousness inherent in him, or performed by him; the righteousness performed by him, is either his fulfilling the Commandments, or his satisfying the curse of the Law. The same distinction is given by others in these terms, Christ's Righteousness is either his original conformity, or his active and passive obedience unto the Law: his original conformity, is that gracious inherent disposition in Christ from the first instant of his conception, whereby he was habitually conformable to the Law; and this original righteousness answered for our original unrighteousness; his active obedience is his doing of legal obedience unto the command, and his passive obedience is his suffering of punishment due unto us for our sins.—I shall yet a little further enlarge this distinction of the righteousness of Christ, and give it in thus; viz. The righteousness of Christ is either negative (if I may so speak) or positive; by the negative I understand the absence of all sins and vices, forbidden in the Law; by the positive, I mean both a presence of all virtues, and duties, required to the perfect fulfilling of the Law, as also a voluntary suffering of the penalty, to satisfy the commination and curse of the Law.

1. The negative righteousness is that which we call the innocence of Christ: we read often in Scriptures that he was both blameless and spotless. 1. Blameless, free in himself from all imputation of sin; to this purpose Christ challenged the Jews: Which of you convinceth me of sin?

In all his life he was unblameable and unreprouable; and therefore now towards the end of his life he asks the people with whom he had conversed, Which of you convinceth me of sin? Spotless, free from all infection of sin; Peter calls him a Lamb without blemish, and without spot; and Paul, an high Priest, Holy, Harmless, and undefiled; one who never did evil, nor spake evil; he did no sin (saith the Apostle) neither was guile found in his mouth; one who never offended so much as in thought but was absolutely and in all respects < in non-Latin alphabet > ,without all sin.

2. The positive Righteousness of Christ is twofold, his perfect fulfilling of all things commanded, and his perfect satisfying of the punishment threatened: The former is the holiness of Christ; this also is twofold, the holiness of his nature, and the holiness of his life and conversation; the former is that we call his habitual Righteousness, the latter is that we call his actual obedience. And thus much of the distinction of the Righteousness of Christ.

SECT. III. Of the Holiness of Christ's Nature.

NOW in the first place, for the holiness of his Nature, the Psalmist tells us, Thou art fairer than the Children of men, and grace is poured into thy lips. Which is all one with that description of Christ by the Spouse, My beloved is white and ruddy, the chiefest of ten thousands. As in the fairest beauty, there is a mixture of these two colors, white and ruddy, so in Christ there is a gracious mixture, and compound of all the graces of the Spirit; there is in him a sweet temper of gentleness, purity, righteousness, meekness, humility; and what not? In him are hid all the treasures of Wisdom, and Knowledge; and I may add, of all other gifts and graces; not a grace but it was in Christ, and that in an higher way than in any Saint in the World; and therefore he is called fairer than all the children of men. Observe, There was more habitual grace in Christ than ever was, or is, or shall be in all the Elect, whether Angels or Men. He received the Spirit out of measure; there was in him as much as possibly could be in a creature, and more than in all other creatures whatsoever. As the Sun is the Prince of Stars, as the Husband is the head of the Wife, as a Lion is the King of the Beasts, so is this Sun of Righteousness, this Head of the Church, this Lion of the Tribe of Judah, the chiefest of ten thousands; if we look at anything in Heaven or Earth, that we observe as eminently fair, by that is the Lord Jesus in respect of his inward beauty set forth in Scriptures, he is the Sun of Righteousness, the bright Morning-Star, the Light of the World, the Tree of Life, the Lily and the Rose; fairer than all the Flowers of the Field, than all the precious Stones of the Earth, than all the Lights in the Firmament, than all the Saints and Angels in Heaven.

You will say, What's all this to us; Certainly much every way; the Apostle tells you, That the Law of the Spirit of Life which is in Jesus Christ, hath freed me from the Law of sin & of Death; let us enquire into these words, the law of the Spirit of life; the Spirit of life is here put for life, as else where, After three days & an half, the Spirit of life coming from God shall enter into them. Now life is that whereby a thing acteth and moveth itself, and it is the cause and beginning of action and motion: and this Spirit of life, or life itself, being here applied to Christ, it is that in Christ which is the beginning and cause of all his holy actions; and what was that but his Original holiness, or the holiness of his human Nature? But why is the holiness of Christ's nature called the Spirit of life? I answer, 1. Because it was infused into his manhood by the Spirit of God, The holy Ghost shall come upon thee—therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God. 2. Because it is a most exact, and absolute, and perfect holiness; the Scripture-phrase setting out things in perfection or fullness, usually adds the word Spirit unto them; as the spirit of pride, the Spirit of truth, and the Spirit of error; so then the meaning of the Spirit of life is all one with the most absolute and most perfect purity, and holiness of the nature of Christ. It is briefly, as if the Apostle had said, the law of the Spirit of life, or the power of the most absolute and perfect holiness of the nature of Christ, hath freed me from the law of sin and death; hath acquitted me from the power of my sinful nature, and from the power of death due to me in respect of my sinful and corrupt nature. We might draw from hence this conclusion, that—The benefit of Christ's habitual righteousness infused at his first conception, is imputed to believers to their justification. As the obedience of his life, and the merit of his death, so the Holyness infused at his very conception, hath its influence into our justification: it is by the obedience of his life that we are accounted actually holy, and by the purity of his conception (or habitual grace) that we are accounted personally holy. But I must not stay here; Thus much of the Holiness of Christ's Nature.

SECT. IV. Of the Holiness of Christ's Life.

2. For the holiness of Christ's life, the Apostle tells us, that by the obedience of one many shall be made righteous; here's the obedience of Christ, and its influence on us. 1. The obedience of Christ is that whereby he continued in all things written in the book of the Law to do them: Observe, Christ's life was a visible commentary on God's Law, For proof, Think not that I am come to destroy the Law, or the Prophets (saith Christ) but to fulfil them. And, the Father hath not left me alone (saith Christ) for I do always those things that please him. Hence Christ in Scripture is called Holy and Just, and the Holy One, Acts 2.27. The most Holy, Dan. 9.24. by his actual holiness Christ fulfilled in act every branch of the Law of God; he walked in all the Commandments of God; he performed perfectly both in thought, word, and deed whatsoever the Law of the Lord required.—I do not, cannot limit this obedience of Christ to this last year of his Ministry, for his whole life was a perpetual course of obedience, he was obedient unto death, saith the Apostle 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, even until his death; and yet because we read most of his holy actings this year, and that this was the year wherein both his active and passive obedience did most eminently shine, and break forth; the year wherein he drew up all the dispersions of his precepts, and cast them into actions, as into sums total; therefore now I handle it, and I shall make it out by the passages following, only in this one year. As—

1. Now he discovered his charity in feeding the hungry, as at once five thousand men with five Loaves and two Fishes, John 6.9, 10, 11. and at another time four thousand men with seven Loaves, and a few small Fishes, Matth. 15.32.

2. Now he discovered his self-denial, and contempt of the World, in flying the offers of a Kingdom; when the people were convinced that he was the Messiah from that miracle of feeding five thousand men with five Loaves, presently they would needs make him a King; but he that left his Fathers Kingdom for us, he fled from the offers of a Crown and Kingdom from them, as from an enemy, When Jesus perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a King, he departed again into a Mountain himself alone.

3. Now he discovered his mercy, in healing the Woman's Daughter that had an unclean spirit; the Woman was a Greek, a Syrophenician by Nation; and in that respect Christ called her a Dog, and yet Christ gave her the desire of her soul: O the rich mercy of Christ, that he would admit a Dog to his Kingdom! O grace! O mercy! that Christ should black his fair hands in washing foul and defiled Dogs! what a motion of free mercy was this, that Christ should lay his fair, spotless, and chaste love, upon the black, defiled, and whorish souls? O what a favor, that Christ maketh the Leopard and Ethiopian white for Heaven?

4. Now he discovered his bounty, in giving the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven to his Apostles, and to their Successors; this was a power which he had never communicated before; it was a gift greater than the great Charter of Nature, and the Donative of the whole Creation. Indeed at first God gave unto man a dominion over the Fish of the Sea, and over the Fowl of the Air, and over the Cattel, and over the Earth; but till now Heaven itself was never subordinate to human Ministration; herein was the acting of Christ's bounty, he gives unto his Ministers the Keys of Heaven, that Whatsoever they shall bind on Earth, shall be bound in Heaven, and whatsoever they shall loose on Earth, shall be loosed in Heaven.

5. Now he discovered his patience, in suffering all injuries; from hence forward to the death of Jesus, we must reckon his days like the Vigils, or Eves of his Passion; for now he began, and often did ingeminate those sad predictions of the usage he should shortly find, that he should be rejected of the Elders, and chief Priests, and Scribes, and suffer many things at Jerusalem, and be killed, and be raised up the third day, and in the mean time he suffers both in word and deed; they call him a Glutton, a Drunkard, a Deceiver, a Sinner, a Mad-Man, a Samaritan, and one possessed with a Devil; sometimes they take up stones to stone him, and sometimes they lead him to an Hill, thinking to throw him down headlong, and all this he suffereth with patience; yea with much patience he possesseth his soul.

6. Now he discovered his glory, in being transfigured on the Mount; however the Person of Christ was usually depressed with poverty, disgrace, ignominy; so that neither Jews nor Gentiles, nor the Apostles themselves could at first discern the brightness of his Divinity; yet now Christ gave an excellent probation of that great Glory, which in due time must be revealed to all the Saints; For taking with him Peter, James and John, he went up into the Mountain to pray, and while he prayed, he was transfigured before them, and his face did shine like the Sun, and his garments were white and glistening, and there appeared talking with him Moses and Elias, speaking of the decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem; the embassie of Christ's death was delivered in forms of Glory, that so the excellency of the reward might be represented together with the sharpness of his sufferings. Now if ever, whiles he was upon Earth, was the beauty of Christ seen at height, Peter saw it; and was so ravished at the sight, that he talked he knew not what. In respect of this glorious beauty, his face is said to shine like the Sun. I cannot think, but his shine exceeded Sun, and Moon, and Stars; but the Sun is the brightest thing we know, and therefore it is spoken to our capacity; Here's one strain of exaltation, though mostly all Christ's life was a state of humiliation; it learns us to be content with, yea to expect most humiliation, little exaltation here; we may have a taste, but no continued comforts till we come to Heaven.

7. Now he discovered his meekness in riding upon an Ass, and a colt the foal of an Ass; which was according to the Prophecy, Behold thy King cometh unto thee meek; and especially in rebuking the furious, intemperate zeal of James and John, who would fain have called for fire from Heaven to have consumed the Inhabitants of a little Village, who refused to give Christ entertainment. Ah, saith Christ, Ye know not of what spirits ye are of: q. d. you must learn to distinguish the spirit of Christianity, from the spirit of Elias; why, Christ came with a purpose to seek and to save men's lives, and not to destroy them: it were rashness indeed to slay a man on some light displeasure, whose redemption cost the effusion of the dearest heart-blood of the Son of God. See here the meekness of Christ, in opposition to the fury and anger of his own Disciples.

8. Now he discovered his pity and compassion, in weeping over Jerusalem; And when he was come near, he beheld the City, and wept over it, saying, if thou hadst known, even thou, &c. We read of Joseph, that there was in him such a brotherly and natural compassion, that his bowels yearned upon his Brethren, and he could not refrain himself before all them that stood by him: his love was like an hot Furnace: now Jesus Christ hath the same heart and bowels of a man; and I conceive as Christ was a man void of sin, so the acts of natural virtues (as to pity the afflicted, to compassionate the distressed) were stronger in him than possibly they could be in any other man; sin blunteth natural faculties, especially such as incline to laudable and good acts, as to love, and pity, and compassionate, the miserable; in this respect Joseph was nothing to Christ; when Christ saw Jerusalem, he wept, and wept; his compassion strangled, and enclosed within him, it must needs break out; it may be in some measure it eased Christ's mind, that his bowels of mercy found a vent; we read that pity kept within God's bowels, pains his very heart; so that it must needs come out, Mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together.

9. Now he discovered his humility, in washing his Disciples feet; Supper being ended, he laid aside his garments, and took a towel, and girded himself, and poured water into a bason, and began to wash his Disciples feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded. In this ceremony, and in the discourses following he instructs them in the Doctrine of humility; yea, he imprints the lesson in lasting Characters, by making it symbolical. But why would he wash their feet, rather than their hands, or heads? I answer, it is probable on this account, that he might have the opportunity of a more humble posture. See how he lays everything aside, that he might serve his servants; Heaven stoops to Earth, on abiss calls one another, the miseries of man which were next to infinite, are excelled by a mercy equal to the immensity of God. It is storied of one Guericus, that upon the consideration of this humility of Christ in washing his Disciples feet, he cried out, Thou hast overcome me, O Lord, thou hast overcome my pride, this example hath mastered me.

10. Now he discovered his obedience to his Father, in preaching the Gospel up and down. He foresaw that the night drew on in which no man could work, and therefore now he hastened to do his Fathers business, now he pours out whole Cataracts of holy Lessons; and still the people drew water from this Fountain, which streamed out in continual emanations; he added wave to wave, and line to line, and precept to precept; and at last he gave them his farewell Sermon, which is the most spiritual and comfortable piece that ever was uttered, it comprehends the intentions of his departure to prepare places for his Saints in Heaven; and in the mean while he would send them the holy Ghost, to supply his room, to furnish them with proportionable comforts, to enable them with gifts, to lead them into all truth, and to abide with them forever. In conclusion of all, he gave them his blessing, and prayed for them, and then having sung an hymn, he goes away and prepares for his sufferings.

2. Hitherto of the obedience of Christ; what was it but a visible commentary of God's Law? but now for its influence on us, By the obedience of one, many shall be made righteous. Observe, The righteousness of the Law fulfilled, and fully accomplished in the person of Christ, is as truly ours, if we believe in Christ, as if it were in ourselves, or as if the Law had been fulfilled in our own persons. Thus Christ is the end of the Law (saith the Apostle) for righteousness to everyone that believeth. Christ hath not only determined, and put an end to the Ceremonial Law, but he is also the end of the moral Law, he hath perfectly in his own person accomplished the Moral Law, and that not for himself, but for righteousness to everyone that truly believes in him. And God sent his Son— that the righteousness of the Law might be fulfilled in us: These words in us] much trouble Interpreters, for though we believe, yet are we imperfectly holy, how then should the Law be fulfilled in us? But 'tis answered, that the righteousness of the Law is fulfilled in us, not by inhesion, or sanctification, but by imputation, and application; (i.e.) in our nature which Christ took upon him; it was in Christ, and is imputed unto us, and so the righteousness of the Law is fulfilled in us. It is well observed of Beza, that the Apostle saith not, That the Righteousness of the Law might be fulfilled by us, or of us, or by any Righteousness inherent in our own persons, but in us because it is to be found in Christ, whose members we are, who walk not after the Flesh, but after the Spirit. The point is sweet, but I cannot stay on it. In reference to what I have spoken of the righteousness of Christ, habitual and actual, a great controversy is risen in our days; of which in the next Section.

SECT. V. Of the great controversy, whether we are not justified by the passive righteousness of Christ only, without any consideration had to the righteousness of Christ either inherent in him, or performed by him.

FOR my part I am for the negative, upon these well known grounds.

[Argu. 1] 1. By what alone the Law is not fully satisfied, by that alone we are not justified; but by the passive obedience of Christ alone, the Law is not fully satisfied, therefore by his passive obedience only we are not justified. Thus far I grant that the Law is fully satisfied by his passive obedience in respect of the penalty therein threatened, but not in respect of the Commandment for the obtaining of the blessedness therein promised; and the righteousness of the Law is thus described, that the man which doth these things shall live by them.

Against this are divers exceptions of the Adversaries. As, 1. That the Law is satisfied either by doing that which is commanded, or by suffering the punishment which is threatened. Answ. It is true in respect of the penal Statutes of men, but not in respect of the Commandments of God, in which there is not only a penalty threatened, but a blessedness promised: if man had continued in his integrity, the Law might have been satisfied by obedience only; but being fallen into a state of disobedience, two things are necessarily required to the fulfilling of the Law, (i.e.) the bearing of the penalty, and the performing of the Command; the one to escape Hell, and the other to obtain Heaven. 2. They except that whosoever are freed from Hell, are also admitted to Heaven. Answ. The reason thereof is because Christ who did bear the punishment to free us from Hell, did also fulfil the Commands to bring us to Heaven; but howsoever these two benefits of Christ do always concur in the party justified, as the causes thereof concurred in Christ, who not only did both obey and suffer, but in obeying suffered, and in suffering obeyed; yet both the causes between themselves, and the effects between themselves, are carefully to be distinguished; for as it is one thing to obey the Commandment, and another thing to suffer the punishment; so it is one thing to be freed from Hell by Christ his suffering the penalty, and another thing to be intitled to Heaven, by Christ his fulfilling the Commandments. 3. They except, that God is a most free Agent, and therefore he may if he will, justify men by the passive righteousness of Christ only, without fulfilling of the Law. Answ. What God may do, if he will, I will not dispute; but sure I am, that he justifieth men according to his will revealed in his Word; and there we find, that as we are justified from our sins by the Blood of Christ, so also we are made just by the active (though not only by the active) obedience of Christ; For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. And if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we shall be saved by his life: by his life which he lived before his death, and by his life which he lived, and doth live after his death; by the acts of his life before his death meritoriously, and by the acts of his life after his death (as by his resurrection, ascension, session, and intercession) effectually. Christ is made unto us of God (saith the Apostle) both redemption and righteousness: redemption to deliver us from sin; and righteousness to bring in everlasting righteousness. 4. They except, that if we are justified by Christ his fulfilling the Law, then we are justified by a legal righteousness, but we are not justified by a legal righteousness, but by such a righteousness as without the Law is revealed in the Gospel. Answ. The same righteousness by which we are justified, is both legal and evangelical in divers respects; legal in respect of Christ, who being made under the Law, that he might redeem us who were under the Law, perfectly fulfilled the Law for us; and evangelical in respect of us unto whom his fulfilling of the Law is imputed. And herein stands both the agreement and difference betwixt the Law and the Gospel; the agreement, in that both require the perfect fulfilling of the Law unto justification; the difference, in that the Law requireth perfect obedience to be performed in our own persons; but the Gospel accepts of perfect obedience performed by Christ our surety, and imputed to us; and so it is all one as if it had been performed in our own persons.

2. If Christ by his conformity to the Law fulfilled the Law for us, then are we justified by his habitual and actual righteousness, and not merely by his passive; but Christ by his conformity to the Law, fulfilled the Law for us; for so we read, He was born for us, Luke 2.11. He was made subject to the Law for us, Gal. 4.4, 5. and for our sakes he sanctified himself, John 17.19. and for our sakes he did the Will of God, Then said I, loe I come to do thy will O God; by the which Will we are sanctified, Heb. 10.7, 10.

Against this are divers exceptions: As, 1. That Christ obeyed the Law, or conformed to the Law (as need was) for himself, Christ (say they) as he was a man, was bound to obey the Law for himself. Answ. This Assertion detracts from the merit of his obedience, and from the dignity of his Person. 1. From his merit, for if his obedience were of duty, then it were not meritorious, Luke 17.10. and if this be true, then have we no title to Heaven. 2. From the dignity of his Person, as if he needed either to obey for himself, or by his obedience were any way bettered in himself. O that these men would remember that the Person who did obey the Law was, and is, not only man, but God also; Christ fulfilled the Law not only as man, but as God-man, Mediator; and therefore as his blood was God's blood, so his obedience was the obedience of God, Who being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God—And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, or until death. We find him here God-man; and from hence we conclude, that all the legal actions of Christ from his Incarnation to his Passion inclusively, were the actions of Christ God-man, Mediator, and Surety for us in a way of covenant; and consequently they were not performed of duty, nor for himself. 2. They except, that if Christ obeyed the Law for us, that by his obedience we might be justified, then shall not we ourselves need to obey the Law; but the Consequent is absurd, therefore the Antecedent. Answ. We need not to obey the Law to that end, that we may be justified thereby, for this is impossible to us by reason of the flesh, and therefore our Savior fulfilled it for us; and yet it follows not but that we may endeavor to obey the Law for other ends; as to glorify God, to obey his Will, to testify our thankfulness, to edify our Brethren, to assure ourselves of our justification, and so to make our calling and election sure: in this Study and Practice of Piety consisteth our new obedience, which we must therefore be careful to perform, though Christ as to justification hath performed it for us. 3. They except, that if Christ by his active obedience fulfilled the Law for us, and that so we are justified from all kind of sin both original and actual, then Christ's suffering was in vain. Answ. Christ's active obedience is an essential part of our justification, but not all our justification; the material cause of our justification is the whole course of the active and passive obedience of Christ, together with his original righteousness, or habitual conformity unto the Law; I say together with his original righteousness, because many Authors express no more, but only Christ's active and passive obedience; but they are to be understood, as asserting his original righteousness implicitly, the act presupposing the habit. And here observe the difference betwixt the Law in case of innocence, and the Law in case of sin; the Law in case of innocence required only doing, but the Law in case of sin cannot be satisfied without doing and suffering, Gal. 3.10. Gen. 2.17. Original justice and active obedience was sufficient to justify man in his innocence, but not to justify man fallen; and therefore we do not separate these, the original, the actual, and the passive righteousness of Christ, as to the matter of justification, but we imply all.

[Argu. 3] 3. We read in Scripture of two parts of justification, viz. the absolving of a believing sinner from the guilt of sin, and death; and the accepting of a believing sinner as righteous unto life. The former is wrought by the sufferings of Christ imputed as a full satisfaction for sin, the other by imputation of Christ's perfect obedience, as a sufficient merit of eternal life; by the former we are freed from Hell, by the latter we are entitled to the Kingdom of Heaven, of them both the Apostle speaks, We are justified by his blood, Rom. 5.9. and we are made righteous by his obedience, Rom. 5.19.— Our Adversaries deny these two parts of justification, saying that it consists wholly in remission of sin. But we reply in every mutation, though it be but relative, we must of necessity acknowledge two terms, terminum a quo, & terminum ad quem, the denomination being commonly taken from the latter: as in justification there is a motion or mutation from sin to justice, (from which term justification hath its name) from a state of death and damnation, to a state of life and salvation; but if justification be nothing else but bare remission of sins, then is there in it only a not imputing of sin, but no acceptation as righteous; a freedom from Hell, but no title to Heaven.—They say indeed, that to whom sin is not imputed, to them righteousness is imputed; and we grant that these things do always concur; but yet they are not to be confounded, for they differ in themselves, and in their causes, and in their effects. 1. In themselves; for it is one thing to be acquitted from the guilt of sin, and another thing to be made righteous, as we see daily in the pardon of Malefactors. 2. In their causes, for the remission of sin is to be attributed to Christ's satisfactory sufferings, and acceptation as righteous unto life to Christ's meritorious obedience. 3. In their effects, for by remission of sin we are freed from Hell, and by imputation of Christ's obedience we have right unto Heaven. I will not deny but that to Christ's habitual and actual righteousness is sometimes attributed freedom from Sin and Hell, as in Rom. 8.2. The Law of the Spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the Law of Sin and Death; and on the contrary side to Christ's passive obedience is sometimes attributed a right unto Heaven, as in Heb. 9.15. That by means of his death,—they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance; but such places as these, are to be understood by a Synecdoche, which puts only one part of Christ's obedience for the whole obedience of Christ. But I must recall myself, my design in this work was not for controversies; I leave that to others; See Downham, Burgess, Norton, &c. for my part I am sure I have before me a more edifying work, which is to take a view of this Jesus, not only for intellection, but for devotion, and for the stirring up of our affections.

Thus far I have held forth Jesus in his life, or during the time of his Ministry, till the last Passover, and now was it that Jesus knew his hour was come, and that he should depart out of this World unto the Father; but of that hereafter; our next business is to direct you in the Art or Mystery, how we are to look unto Jesus in respect of his Life.

CHAP. V.

SECT. I. Of knowing Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his Life.

FROM the Object considered, that we may pass to the Act.—

1. Let us know Jesus, carrying on the great work of our salvation during his life. We have many Books of the lives of men, of the lives of heathens, of the lives of Christians, and by this we come to know the Generations of old; Oh but above all, read over the Life of Jesus, for that is worth thy knowing. To this purpose we have four Evangelists, who in Blessed harmony set forth his life; and to this purpose we have the Book of the generation of Jesus Christ. Now these should be read over and over; Then shall we know (saith the Prophet) if we follow on to know the Lord. Ah my soul! that which thou knowest of Christ already, it is but the least part of what thou art ignorant of; We know but in part, saith Paul of himself and others; the highest knowledge, which the most illuminate Saints have of Jesus Christ, is but defective and imperfect. Come then, and follow on to know the Lord: still inquire after him; imitate the Angels whoever desire to stoop down, and to pry into the actings of Christ for us men, and for our Salvation; it is their study, yea it is their delight and recreation; Paul seemed to imitate them, when he said, I determine not to know anything among you, but Jesus Christ: if there be anything in the world worth the knowing, this it is. And for thy better knowledge that it may not be confused, but distinct; 1. Study over those passages in the first year of Christ's ministry; as the preaching of John, the Baptism of Christ, his fasting and temptation in the Wilderness, his first manifestation by his several Witness•s, his whipping of the buyers and sellers out of the Temple. 2. Study over those passages in the second year of Christ's Ministry; as those several Sermons that he Preached; and because his Miracles were as signals of his Sermons, study the several Miracles that he wrought: thou hast but a few Instances in comparison of all his Miracles, and yet how fruit-are they of spiritual instructions? 3. Study over those passages in the third year of Christ's Ministry: as his commissionating his Apostles to call sinners in, his readiness to receive them that would but come in; and his sweetening the ways of Christianity to them that are come in; For his yoke is easy, and his burden is light. 4. Study over those passages in the last year of his Ministry; as the holiness of his nature, and the holiness of his Life, which appeared especially in the exercises of his Graces, of Charity, and self-denial, and mercy, and bounty, and meekness, and pity, and humility, and obedience. O what rare matter is here for a Christians study! Some have took such pains in the study of these things, that they have writ large volumes; men have been writing and preaching a thousand six hundredth years of the Life of Christ, and they are writing, and preaching still; O my soul! if thou dost not write, yet study what is written; come with fixed thoughts, and beat thy brains on that blessed subject, that will make thee wise unto Salvation; Paul accounted all things but dung, or dogs meat, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord; if thou didst truly understand the excellency of this knowledge, thou couldst not but account all things loss in comparison of this one necessary thing.

SECT. II. Of Considering Jesus in that Respect.

2. LET us consider Jesus carrying on the great work of our Salvation during his Life. It is not enough to study and know, but we must muse and meditate, and consider of it, till we bring it to some profitable issue. By meditating on Christ we may feel or find a kind of insensible change, we know not how; as those that stand in the sun for other purposes, they find themselves lightened and heated; so in holy meditation our souls may be altered and changed in a secret insensible way; there is a virtue goes along with a serious meditation; a changing, transforming virtue; and therefore look further, O my soul, have strong apprehensions of all those several passages of the Life of Christ.

1. Consider the Preaching of John the Baptist, we talk of strictness, but show me among all the Ministers or Saints of this Age, such a pattern of sanctity and singular austerity; the sum of his sermons was repentance, and dereliction of Sin, and bringeth forth fruits worthy of amendment of life. In the promoting of which Doctrine, he was a severe reprehender of the Pharisees, and Sadducees, and Publicans, and Soldiers, and indeed of all men, but especially of those that remained in their impenitency; for against them he denounced judgment, and fire unquenchable; Oh, he had an excellent zeal, and a vehement Spirit in Preaching; and the Commentary upon all his Sermons was his own life; he was clothed in Camels hair, his meat was locusts and wild honey; he contemned the world, resisted temptations, despised to assume false honors to himself, and in all passages was a rare example of self-denial, and mortification; and by this means he made an excellent, and apt preparation for the Lord's coming. O my Soul, that thou wouldst but sit a while under this Preacher; or that thou wouldst but ruminare, and chew the cud; think over his Sermons of repentance, and righteousness, and temperance, and of the judgment to come; and see what influence they have; when Paul preached such a Sermon to Felix, it is said that he trembled; a Sermon of the chaffs burning with unquenchable fire, is enough to make thy heart tremble, if Powerfully delivered, and affectionately received; but see, what effect doth it work on thy heart and life? dost thou feel in thee a Spirit of mortification? dost thou with the Baptist die to the world? dost thou deny thy will of all its natural sinful desires; dost thou abstain from pleasures, and sensual complacencies, that the Flesh being subdued to the Spirit, both may join in the service of God? dost thou kill the lusts of the flesh, by taking away the fuel and incentives of Lusts? this is the work of meditation; it first employs the understanding in consideration of things, and then the will in the reception of things; and both these in order to Grace and a pious conversation: that meditation which determines in notions, or speculations of knowledge, is like the winter Sun that shines, but warms not: O my Soul, consider: and so long consider on the preaching of this prodromus, or forerunner of Christ, till thou feelest this consideration to have some warmth in thy heart, and influence on thy life in order to holiness, self-denial, and mortification.

2. Consider of the Baptism of Christ; he that never sinned was made sin for us, and so it was proper enough for Christ to take upon him the Sacrament of sinners, or of repentance for sin; but especially he was baptized, that in the symbol he might purify our nature, whose stains and guilt he had undertaken. Consider of this, O my soul, and bring it home to thyself, surely every soul that lives the life of Grace, is born of water, and the Spirit: and to this purpose Christ, who is our life, went down into the waters of Baptism, that we who descend after him might find the effects of it; as pardon of Sin; adoption into the Covenant of Grace, and holiness of life. Had not Christ been Baptized, what virtue had there been in our Baptism? As it became him to fulfil all righteousness, and therefore he must needs be baptized; so he fulfilled it not for himself, but for us; Christ's obedience in fulfilling the Law, is imputed to all that believe unto righteousness, as if themselves had fulfilled; so that he was Baptized for us, and the virtue of his Baptism is derived unto us; O the sweet of this meditation! Christ was Baptized; and when Baptized, the Heavens were opened, and the Holy Ghost descended, and a voice from Heaven proclaimed him to be the Son of God, and one in whom the Father was well pleased; and the same ointment that was cast upon the head of our High Priest, went unto his beard, and thence fell to the borders of his garment; for as Christ our Head felt those effects in manifestation, so through Christ do we believe the like effects in our very Baptism; the Heavens then (as it were) opened unto us, and the holy Ghost then descended upon us, and then were we consigned to the inheritance of Sons, in whom the Father through his Son is also well pleased. O my soul! what a blessing is there in the Baptism of Christ? and how mayest thou suck and be satisfied, if thou wilt put thy meditation to the right use? the Baptism of Christ is as a field of flowers, wherein is a world of privileges, as justification, adoption, regeneration, sanctification, glorification; O then fix thy soul at least on some of these flowers, and leave them not without carrying some honey away with thee; if thou art in Christ thou art Baptized into his death, and Baptized into his Baptism; thou partakest of the fruit and efficacy both of his death and life, and baptism, and all.

3 Consider the fasting and temptation of Christ in the Wilderness. Now we see what manner of adversary we have, how he fights, how he is resisted, how overcome; in one assault Satan moves Christ to doubt of his Fathers providence; in another to presume on his Fathers protection, and when neither diffidence nor presumption can fasten upon Christ, he shall be tried with honor: and thus he deals with us; if he cannot drive us down to despair, he labors to lift us up to presumption, and if neither of these prevail, then he brings out pleasures, profits, honors, temptations on the right hand, which are indeed most dangerous: O my soul, whilst thou art in this warfare, here's thy condition; temptations, like waves, break one in the neck of another; if the devil was so busy with Christ, how shouldst thou hope to be free? how mayest thou account, that the repulse of one temptation will but invite to another? well, but here's thy comfort, thou hast such a Savior as was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sin; how boldly therefore mayst thou go to the Throne of Grace to receive mercy, and to find grace of help in time of need? Christ was tempted, that he might succor them that are tempted, never art thou tempted O my soul, but Christ is with thee in the temptation; he hath sent his Spirit into thy heart to make intercession for thee there, and he himself is in Heaven, making intercession, and praying for thee there; yea his own experience of temptations hath so wrought it in his heart, that his love and mercy is most of all at work when thou art tempted most. As dear parents are ever tender of their Children, but then especially when they are sick, and weak, and out of frame; so though Christ be always tender of his People, yet then especially when their souls are sick, and under a temptation; O then his bowels yearn over them indeed.

4 Consider Christ's first manifestations by his several Witnesses; we have heard of his Witnesses from Heaven, the Father, Son, and holy Ghost; and of his Witnesses on Earth, the Baptist, his Disciples, and the works that he did in his Fathers Name? and all these Witnesses being lively held forth in the preaching of the Gospel, they are Witnesses to us; even to this day is Christ manifested to us, yea and if we are Christ's, even to this day is Christ manifested within us. O my soul, consider this above all the rest! O it is this manifestation within, that concerns thee most, because ye are Sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts; if Christ be not manifested in thy heart by his blessed Spirit, thou art no Son of God; and therefore the Apostles puts thee seriously on this trial, Examine yourselves whether ye be in the Faith, prove yourselves, know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ in you, except ye be reprobates? Is Christ manifested in thee? surely this is more than Christ manifested to thee; the bare history is the manifestation of Christ unto thee, but there's a mystery in the inward manifestation. The Apostle speaking of the Saints, he adds, To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is, Christ in you the hope of glory. O the Riches of the Glory of this mystery! consider it, Oh my soul; God might have shut thee up in blindness with the world, or he might only have given thee parts and gifts; or at most he might have enlightened thy reason, to have taken in the outward notions of the Gospel; but hath he revealed Christ in thee? hath he let thee see into the wonders of his Glory; hath he given thee the light of his Glory within? Oh this argues the witness of Christ's Spirit! this only the experimental Christian feels: Chrysostom sometimes speaking of the more hidden, and choice principles of Christianity, he useth this phrase, Sciunt initiati quid dico, those that are initiated or admitted into our mysteries, know what I mean: so may the Ministers of Christ Preaching of these inward Manifestations, say, Sciunt initiaty, &c. it is only the Spiritual man can know these things, for they are spiritually discerned. O my soul, meditate on this until thou feelest God's Spirit working in thy Spirit these inward Gracious, Glorious manifestations. It is Christ in thee is the hope of Glory.
