5. Consider Christ's whipping the buyers and sellers out of the Temple. Sometimes O my soul, thou art in secret; and sometimes thou art in the Assemblies of God's people; and if thou art in duty, wheresoever thou art, consider the especial presence of Christ; and what is that but the presence of his Spirit, and the presence of his Angels? 1. The presence of his Spirit; this we know by his working in us, certainly the Spirit doth not only hover over us, but worketh in us: How in us? I answer by his quickening, feeding, cherishing, healing, mollifying, melting, comforting. In this manner he works in us when we are in Ordinances. Why now is he (I hope) riding with triumph in the midst of the Assembly, now is he in his Chariot, in his Throne, in the hearts of his people, and therefore away, away with all buyers and sellers, out of that Temple of the holy Ghost. —2. The Presence of Christ is the presence of his Angels; as a King is where his Court is, so is Christ the King of Kings especially present where his blessed Angels pitch their Tents. And the presence of Angels is worthy (O my soul) of thy consideration. Certainly they are ministering Spirits, that have a work to do upon thy inward man; I grant the Spirit of Christ can only enlighten the understanding, and determine the will effectually; it is he only can bend, and turn, and form the mind which way soever he pleaseth; but the Angels can speak also to thy spiritual parts, and though the spirit only determine, yet their speaking carries a Power with it.

By way of digression, it is a fine skill to know how the Angels can speak to us, and how we may know when they speak; and how we may discern what is spoken by the immediate inspiration of the spirit, and what by the mediation of the Angels.

1. How do the Angels speak to us? We must conceive if we understand this, first that the Images, or phantasms of things received by the outward senses, are kept, and preserved by the inward senses, as the species of sounds, of shapes, or whatsoever else. 2. That the images phantasms so kept, may be so moved by our spirits, or humors, or some extrinsical things, as that they may move the fancy, and provoke it to represent, and conceive such things as neither appear, nor are at that time perceived by any outward sense at all. This appears, 1.

In our ordinary course, as we can sit in the dark, where we hear and see nothing, and yet there we can multiply a fancy in infinitum, by an act of our own Will. 2. This appears in our dreams, when though we hear or see nothing, yet the humor can stir up the memory of things, and provoke our fancies to the apprehension of this or that. 3. This appears also in sickness, which altering the body, and the humors, and so troubling the fancy, it begets strange fancies, and makes dreadful and fearful representations unto us: now this we must know, that whatsoever an inferior Power can do, that a superior Power can do much more; whatsoever an act of our own Will, or natural Dreams, or preternatural sickness can do, that the Angels can do most orderly, and efficaciously; they know exactly how the Spirits and humors must be moved, that the images or phantasms may be applied to such and such conceptions or apprehensions, most accommodate and fitted for the knowledge of what truth they would suggest. So that to me here is the difference between the converse of Men and Angels; Men can speak to our understandings by the mediation of our external senses, but Angels go a nearer way to work, and speak to the internals first of all: they do no more but come into the memory (the treasurer of all our phantasms and imaginations) and there make such and such compositions even as they please, and then the understanding takes them off, and reads what is written, without more ado.

2. How may we know when the Angels speak to us? I confess it is an hard question, and easily it cannot be solved; only some conjecture we may have; as in a case of evil; thou art in a way of sin, and near to fall into it, it may be on a sudden thou hearest within thee some contrary whisperings, which also are above the whisperings of a natural conscience, common to the wicked; or in case of good, it may be on a sudden thou hearest within thee some independent, supernatural persuasions, and reasonings to this or that good, or to this or that object, which may more easily lead thee to choose the good: in these cases thou mayest conjecturally think, that these whisperings or motions are of the Angels of God. Bodin tells a story of one who desired of God a guidance, and assistance of an Angel; and accordingly he had sensible manifestations of a Spirit that assisted him, and followed him till his death; if in company he spake any unwary words, he was sure to be advertised, and reprov'd for it by a dream in the night; or if he read any Book that was not good, the Angel would strike upon the book, to cause him to leave it.

3. But how should we discern what is spoken by the immediate inspiration of the spirit, and what by the mediation of the Angels? here indeed we are at a stand; and therefore my best resolution is that of Calvin, That in such secrets we should keep one rule of modesty and sobriety; and that we should neither speak, nor think, nor yet desire to know any other thing than such as hath been taught us by God's Word. I know not any great use there may be of this Question, and therefore I shall not amuse myself in giving any account of it; only these remain as sure truths. 1. That the things communicated to our inward man, (I mean those inward motions, and suggestions to holiness and obedience) are frequently and usually by the administration of Angels. 2. That the same things communicated to our inward man, are ever originally and primarily from the Spirit of Christ; and hence it is that commonly we put them all on that score, we give them all to Christ's Spirit. 3. That 'tis proper to the spirit to enlighten the, understanding and to determine the will effectually; the Angels are but Cisterns, the spirit is the fountain; the Angels may speak and move us to our duties, but the blessing, the efficacy is of the Spirit, and in this respect we leave to Christ and his Spirit the all in all. Well then, O my soul, consider (especially in Church assemblies, and in the enjoyment of Ordinances) the especial presence of Christ, in the presence of his spirit, and in the presence of his Angels: What? dost thou feel any stirrings, actings, movings in thy spirit? dost thou feel any quickening, warming, feeding, cherishing, healing, mollifying, melting, comforting, strengthening in thy inward parts? say then, Surely the Lord is in this place,—this is none other but the House of God, this is the gate of Heaven. O here is the Spirit, and here are the Angels ascending, and descending; and therefore avoid Satan! avoid all profane thoughts, and earthly-mindedness! avoid dullness, deadness, drowsiness! avoid looseness, lasciviousness, and all irreverence, because of the Angels; and because of the Spirit; and because of the especial presence of Christ which encauses them both.

6. Consider the the Preaching of Christ. O the admirable Sermons of this great Prophet! the Spouse tells us, His Lips like Lilies dropped sweet smelling Myrrh, his Doctrine was sweet as the Lilies, and sound as the Myrrh; His Lipps were like Lilies, as certain odoriserous Lilies, that cast forth a sweet smelling savor; they were full of Heavenly Grace and sweetness; Grace, saith the Psalmist, was poured into his lips, and they dropped sweet-smelling Myrrh; the nature of this Herb is to keep from putrefaction, as it is sound itself, so it makes other things sound. Error is of a putrifying nature, corrupting, and defiling the soul; but the Doctrine of Christ keeps the soul sound; it is the souls preservative, it keeps the soul free from all corruption and defilement. See here the prophetic office of Christ held forth in similitudes, his lips were ever dropping, distilling, publishing sweet and sound truths.—Read and peruse those Sermons he hath left on record; yea ruminate and meditate on them, in order to piety and an holy life: How sweet was the first Sermon of Christ? Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand; And how Spiritual was that Sermon of Christ? Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God; It may be thou art a Doctor, a Master of Israel, thou art a learned Scholar, thou art a man of parts and abilities in other things; it may be thou hast read so long in the Bible, thou hast heard so many, and so many Sermons, &c. but ah! miserable soul, it may be all the work is to do still within; Come, say this Sermon of Christ to thine own soul; Unless I be born again, I cannot enter into Heaven; born again? O Lord what is that? was ever such a thing done upon me? was ever I cast into the pangs of a new birth? and continued I in those pangs until Christ Jesus was formed in me? are old things done away, and are all things now become new? is the old man, the old lusts, the old conversation quite abandoned and left? are my principles new? my aims and ends new? my life and conversation new? Thus might I paraphrase on all the Sermons: but I intend brevity; only consider O my soul; as if this Sermon, and all the rest had been preached to thee: Realize Christ standing by thee, and opening his mouth, and teaching thee, thus and thus; surely there is a speaking of Christ from Heaven; See that ye refuse not him (saith the Apostle) that speaketh from Heaven. And besides, he hath his Ministers here on earth, and they are daily Preaching over these Sermons of Christ, again, and again; they Preach such things as were first spoken by the Lord himself, they beseech, and pray thee in Christ's stead. O then, meditate on these things, and give thyself wholly to them, that thy profitting may appear to all.

7. Consider the miracles of Christ in pursuance of the Doctrine delivered in his blessed Sermons. Here's a world of matter to run over; such miracles are done by Christ as never man did before. Moses indeed smote the Rock, and the waters gushed out, but he could not turn Water into Wine; Elisha raised a Child that was dead, to life, but Jesus raised one who had been dead four days, yea who was buried and corrupted; Elias and Samuel, and all the Prophets, and the succession of the high Priests in both the Temples, put all together, never did so many, and so great miracles as Jesus did: he turned water into Wine; he healed the Noble-man's Son even at the point of death; he cured the Leaprous by his touch; he made the lame man to walk; and the crooked limbs to become straight; he made habitual diseases, and inveterate, of eighteen years continuance (and once of thirty eight years) to disappear at his speaking, even as darkness at the brightness of the Sun; he fed thousands of People with two small fishes, and five loaves; he cast out Devils, and commanded them whithersoever he pleased; he restored sight to the blind; in a word, he did such miracles as no man else ever did; and the poor blind man proved it by instance of himself. It was never heard that any man opened the Eyes of one that was born blind. O my Soul, consider of these miracles, and believe that Doctrine which was ratified with Arguments from above! how shouldst thou but assent to all those mysterious truths which were so strongly confirmed by an Almighty hand?—What? dost thou think a meditation needless in this respect? art thou fully satisfied of the truth of Scriptures? It is well? I hope thou art; and yet who knows how soon thou mayst be put to it by an enemy, or a strong temptation? One can tell us in print, Some are now talking of a toleration of all Religions; and some desire that the Jews may have a free commerce amongst us: it is good therefore to be well armed at this point; and the best Argument to prove the verity of the Gospel, next to the inward testimony of the Spirit, is this demonstration, or common place of the miracles of Christ.

8. Consider Christ's ordination of his Apostles. He chose twelve, whom he Named Apostles: and what was the office of these Apostles, but to Go and teach all Nations? The Gospel was first Preached in Jewry, but afterwards the sound of it came unto us. Out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Gildas affirms plainly, That Britain received the Gospel in the time of Tiberius, under whom Christ suffered: and that Joseph of Arimathea, after the dispersion of the Jews, was sent of Philip the Apostle from France to Britain, and here remained in this Land all his time. Nicephoras adds, That Simon Zealots did spread the Gospel Christ to the West Ocean, and brought the same into the Isles of Britain. Howsoever it was brought hither, of this we are sure; that Christ was first discovered to his Apostles, and from the Apostles was discovered to our fore-Fathers, and from them unto us, and from us will be the discovery to others to the end of the world. O the goodness of God in Christ! What? That repentance and remission of Sins, should be preached in his Name, beginning at Jerusalem; and afterwards among all Nations? Of what near concernment, O my soul, is this to thee? What art thou but a sinner of the Gentiles? Understand that term! When the Apostle would express the greatest sinners that the World had, he calls them Sinners of the Gentiles; Why? the Gentiles knew not God, the Gentiles were unacquainted with Christ, the Gentiles walked in nothing but sin; O then what a love is this, that God should ever have thought of good will towards thee? surely this is one of the great mysteries of Godliness, God manifested in the flesh, Justified in the Spirit, seen of Angels, preached unto the Gentiles: What? that sinners, and the worst of sinners, should be made the subjects of the utmost discovery of Christ, and the Gospel of Christ? this is a mystery indeed; had Christ sent his Apostles to proclaim the riches of his Grace to some Jews only, or to some unspotted souls among the Gentiles (if any such were) whose hearts might presently have fallen down before it, this had been something suitable; but, that sinners of the Gentiles, that Children of wrath should be the subject of this great design. O the Mystery! q. d. Go my Apostles into all the Nations of the world; and amongst them all, go into Britain, into that corner of the world England, and there open the mystery of Christ, there preach life, and reconciliation, and redemption, and Glorification to those poor Souls; lay you (or at least some of you) the foundation of the Christian Fath amongst those heathens, those sinners of the Gentiles; and after you, I will raise up some other Ministers of the Gospel to confirm the same: Yea in the last times I will raise up many Worthyes, as Juel, Usher, Downham, Perkins, Hooker, Rogers, Shepherd, Bolton, Ash, Whittaker, &c. who shall be as bright Stars in the Firmament of that Church; and after them I will raise up others to discover this great design to their generations, amongst whom shall live such and such men, such and such women (and herein O my soul think of thyself, and if thou wilt of thine own family and relations) for I owe a good will towards England, it shall be said of England, as sometimes of Zion, out of England the perfection of beauty, hath God shined. O my Soul! how shouldst thou be ravished in this one meditation? what? that Christ should cause the Sun of his Gospel to come into this Zodiac, and that now in these latter times (when the Sun is set in Zion, where it first arose) it should make a Noon with us, and shine more brightly here (for ought I know, or can yet learn) than in any other Nation, Country, Kingdom, throughout all the World? O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and council of God, how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out?

9. Consider Christ's reception of sinners. He sent forth his Apostles to call them in, and if they would but come, how ready was he to receive them? This was Christ's errand from Heaven, this was the work he came to do; I came down from Heaven, not to do mine own Will, but the Will of him that sent me; and this is the Fathers Will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing. He must receive all his Father gives him, but he must lose none; Christ must give an account to God the Father of all which he hath given him, and this will be his account; Those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost. Ah poor Soul! why shouldst thou despair because of sin? look on Christ as spreading out both his arms to receive thee to him; look on the Gracious Nature and Disposition that is in Christ; look on the Office of Christ, it's an office of saving, and showing mercy, that Christ hath undertaken; it's an Office to receive sinners; yea to seek, and to save that which was lost; to bring home straying souls to God; to be the great peace-maker between God and man; to reconcile God to man; and man to God, and so to be the Head, and Husband of his people, Certainly the Devil strangely wrongeth many a poor troubled Soul, that he can bring them to have hard thoughts, and suspicious thoughts of Jesus Christ, how can they more contradict the Office of Christ? how can they more contradict the Gospel-description of Christ, than to think him a destroyer of his Creatures; one that watcheth for their haltings, and one that hath more mind to hurt, than help them? Away, away with all prejudicate opinions! resolve O my soul to throw thyself on him for life and for Salvation; why, if thou wilt but come, he hath promised freely to make thee welcome; all the day long he stretcheth out his arms, and would fain gather thee, and all others into his sweet embraces.

10. Consider the easiness of his yoke, and the lightness of his burden. Many a one is willing to take Jesus as their Savior, but they are unwilling to take him on his own sweet terms; O they imagine it an hard task, and an heavy burden, Who may endure it? it was otherwise with Christ, I do delight to do thy will O my God; and 'tis otherwise with Christians, for his Commandments are not grievous, saith John; and therefore David calls on others to try this truth, Oh taste, and see how good the Lord is. It is said of Master Sanders, that a little before his death and martyrdom he told his Wife, that he had no riches to leave her, but that treasure of tasting how sweet Christ is to hungry Consciences; And of that (said he) as I feel some part, and I would feel more, so I bequeath it unto thee, and to the rest of my beloved in Christ. O my soul if thou canst but taste, thou wilt find a world of sweetness in Christ's ways; there is sweetness in the Word, How sweet are thy Words to my taste, yea sweeter than honey to my mouth? There is sweetness in prayer, hast thou not known the time that thou hast touched the hem of Christ's garment, and tasted of the joys of Heaven in prayer? hast thou not seen heaven cleft, and Christ sitting at God's right Hand? surely the Lord is Rich to all them that call upon him. There is sweetness in meditation, some call this very duty, The Saints pastime, which recreates and perfumes the tired Spirits: Now O my soul thou art in the exercise of this duty, now thou art in the meditation of the easiness of Christ's burden, and of the sweetness of his ways, tell me, is there nothing of Heaven in this meditation? is it sweet? or is it bitter to thy Soul? thou mayest read in Scripture of many admirable effects of meditation, as that it confirms our knowledge; I have more understanding than all my teachers, for thy Testimonies are my Meditations: that it inflames our love, Oh how love I thy Law? it is my Meditation all the day; that it casts a sweet influence on our lives, I will Meditate in thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways; What? is it thus with thee? canst thou say with David, My Meditation of him shall be sweet? And in the multitude of my thoughts within me, thy Comforts exceedingly delight my soul? Why then thou hast truly, tasted of God's goodness, thou hast actual discoveries of the sweetness of God's ways; thou hast experienc'd this truth, that his yoke is easy, and his burden is light; that his ways are ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are peace. Oh if men did but know what ravishing sweetness were in the ways of God, they could not but embrace them, and esteem one days society with Jesus Christ (as Caracciolus did) better than all the gold in the world

11. Consider the holiness of Christ's Nature, and the holiness of Christ's Life. 1. For the holiness of his Nature; if thou couldst but clearly see it, what work would it make in thy Breast? Christ's inward beauty would ravish Love out of the Devils, if they had but Grace to see his beauty; yea, he would lead captive all hearts in Hell, if they had but eyes to behold his loveliness. O what a Flower? what a Rose of love and light is the Lord Jesus Christ? My Beloved is white and ruddy, said the Spouse, the chiefest of ten thousands. Summon before Christ, fair Angels, glorified Spirits, the azure Heavens, the lightsome Stars, all the delicious Flowers, Gardens, Meadows, Forrests, Seas, Mountains, Birds, Beasts, yea and all the Sons of Men, as they should have been in the world of Innocency, and let them all stand in their highest excellency before Jesus Christ, and what are they? the Saints in Glory now see the face of Christ; (i.e.) they see all the dignity, beauty, that is in Christ; and they are so taken, with his sight, that they do nothing else but stare, and gaze, and behold his Face for Ages, and yet they are never satisfied with beholding; suppose they could wear out their eyes at the eye holes in beholding Christ, they should still desire to see more. O this loveliness of Christ ravishes the souls of the glorified; how is it, O my soul, that thou art not taken with this meditation? But, 2. Go from the holiness of his Nature, to the holiness of his Life, it may be that will make deep impressions on thy spirit; consider his charity, his self-denial, his contempt of the world, his mercy, his bounty, his meekness, his pity, his humility, his obedience to his Father. A fruitful meditation on these Particulars cannot, cannot but cause some resemblance within, and make thee like Christ. O the wonder that any should disclaim the active obedience of Christ, as to his own Justification! Away, away with these cavils, and consider the obedience of Christ in relation to thyself. God sent forth his Son made of a woman made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law, that we might receive the adoption of Sons. It is a sweet note of Doctor Andrew's, Christ made under the Law, (i.e.) under the whole Law; the one half of the Law (which is the directive part) he was made under that, and satisfied it by the innocence of his Life, without breaking one jot or tittle of the Law, and so he answers that part, as it might be the principal; the other half of the Law (which is the penalty) he was under that also, and satisfied it by suffering a wrongful death, no way deserved or due by him, and so he answered that part as it might be the forfeiture. But if we come now to ask for whom is all this? it is only for us, that we might be redeemed und adopted; redeemed from all evil, and adopted or interested into all good. If this be so, O who would for a world of Gold lose the influence, and the benefit of Christ's active obedience? consider of this, O my soul! till thou feelest some virtue to come out of Christ's life into thyself.

SECT. III. Of desiring after Jesus in that respect.

3. Let us desire after Jesus carrying on the work of our salvation in his Life: It is not enough to know and consider, but we must desire; our meditation of Christ, should draw forth our affections to Christ; and amongst all affections, I place this first of all, a desire after Christ.

But what is it in Christ's Life that is so desirable? I answer, every passage or particular named; yea, everything of Christ is desirable (named or un-named) all that concerns Christ in any kind whatsoever (if to the former particulars, I should add a thousand and a thousand more) it is very precious, and excellent, and necessary, and profitable, and comfortable, and therefore desirable: but to put them in order:

1. The meanest things of Christ are desirable things; the very filings of Gold, the dust or sparkles of precious Stones are of real price and value, yea, of much worth; yea, the very Leaves of the Tree of Life are healing; the very Hem of Christ's garment, but even touched, sends forth its virtue: the meanest and worst things of Christ are incomparably to be desired above all things; the dust of Zion, the very ground that Christ's feet treadeth on, anything that hath the poorest relation to Jesus Christ, it is desireable for him. Hence we read that one poor woman sought no more of him but to wash Christ's feet, and to kiss them; another woman breaths out these desires after Christ, If I may but touch the hem of his garment, I shall be whole. Mary Magdalene sought only to have her Arms filled with his dead body: Joseph of Arimathea was of the same mind: O the bloody winding-sheet, together with the dead and torn Body of Christ in his arms are most precious and sweet. Christ's Clay is Silver, and his Brass Gold: John the Baptist thinks it an honor to unloose the Latchets of his shoes: David, though he was a great Prophet, and appointed to be King over Israel, yet his soul pants thus, O that I might be so near the Lord, as to be a door-keeper in the house of my God. Yea, he puts an happiness on the Sparrow and the Swallow, that may build their Nest besides the Lord's Altar.

2. The more considerable actions of Christ are especially desireable. Oh my soul, wouldst thou but run through his Life, and consider some of his more eminent actions, in relation to his Friends, or in relation to his Enemies, what desires would these kindle in thine heart after Christ? 1. To his Friends, he was sweet and indulgent; where there was any beginnings of Grace, he did encourage it: so was the Prophecy, A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench: Nay, where was but a representation of Grace, he seemed to accept of it: Thus, when the young man came and said, What good thing shall I do to inherit eternal life? he embraced him, and made much of him; then Jesus beholding him, he loved him: And so the Scribe which asked him, which is the first Commandment of all? in the conclusion Christ told him, Thou art not far from the Kingdom of God: He labored to pull him further, in telling him he was not far from Heaven and Glory. And so the people that fainted for bread of Life, that were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd—he was moved with compassion on them, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : he was bowelled in heart, his very bowels were moved within him. 2. To his enemies he was kind and merciful; many a time he discovers himself most of all unto sinners; he was never more familiar with any at first acquaintance, than with the woman of Samaria that was an Adulteress; and Mary, that had been a sinner, how sweetly did he appear to her at the very first view? how ready was he to receive sinners? how ready to pardon and forgive sinners? how gracious to sinners after the pardon and forgiveness of sin? See it in Peter, he never cast him in the teeth with his Apostasy, he never upbraided him with it, he never so much as tells him of it; only he looks upon him: and afterwards, Lovest thou me? O Peter, lovest thou me? why, Peter lovest thou me? Often he was wronged and injured by men, but what then? was he all on a heat? did he call for fire down from heaven to destroy them? Indeed his Disciples, being more flesh than spirit, would fain have had it so; but he sweetly replies, O, you know not what spirits you are of: the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. Sometimes we find him shedding tears for those very persons that shed his precious blood: Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem, &c.—if thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things belonging to thy peace, &c. Why O my soul, if thou wouldst but run through such passages as these, how desireable are they? well might they sing in that day in the Land of Judah,—In the way of thy judgments, O Lord, have we waited for thee, the desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee.

3. The ever blessed and holy person of Christ is desireable above all. My Beloved is white and ruddy, the chiefest of ten thousands;—yea, he is altogether lovely, or desireable; so Vatablus renders it, Christus est totus desideria, Christ is all desir•s. If the actions of Christ be desirable, what must himself be? If the parings of his bread be so sweet, what must the great Loaf Christ himself be? Christ is admirable in action and person, but above all, his person is most admirable; no creature in the world yields the like representation of God, as the person of Jesus Christ; he is the express Image of the person of his Father; as the print of the Seal on the Wax is the express image of the Seal itself, so is Christ the highest representation of God; he makes similitude to him, who otherwise is without all similitude. And hence it is that Christ is called the Standard-bearer of ten thousands: all excellencies are gathered up in Christ, as Beams in the Sun. Come, poor Soul! thy eyes run to and fro in the world to find Comfort and happiness; thou desirest after worldly Honor, worldly Pleasure, worldly Profits; cast thy eyes back and see Heaven and Earth in one; look if thou wilt at what thy vast thoughts can fancy, not only in this world, but in the world to come; or if thou canst imagine more variety; see that, and infinitely more, shining forth from the person of the Lord Jesus Christ: no wonder if the Saints adore him; no wonder if the Angels stand amazed at him, no wonder if all Creatures veil all their glory to him. Oh what are all things in the world to Jesus Christ? Paul compares them together, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, all things with this one thing; And I account all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. And I count all things surely all things is the greatest count that can be cast up; for it includeth all prices, all sums; it takes in, Earth, and Heaven, and all therein, that are but as created things; q. d. Nations, and all Nations; Gold, and all Gold; Jewels, and all Jewels; Angels, and all Angels; all these, and every all besides all these; what are they in comparison of Christ, but as feathers, dung, shadows, nothing? If there be anything worthy a wish, it is eminently, transcendently, originally in the Lord Jesus Christ; there is no honor, no felicity like that which Christ hath; some are sons, Christ is an only Son; some are Kings, but Christ is King of Kings; some are honorable, none above Angels, Christ is above Angels and Arch-angels: To which of the Angels said he at any time, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? Some are wealthy, Christ hath all the sheep on a thousand hills; the very utmost parts of the earth are his; some are beautiful, Christ is the fairest of all the children of men; he is spiritually fair, he is all glorious within; if the beauty of the Angels (which I believe are the beautifullest creatures the world has) should be compared with the beauty of Christ, which consists in the perfection of the divine nature, and in the perfection of his human nature, and in the perfection of the graces of his Spirit, they would be but as lumps of darkness: The brightest Cherub is forced to skreen his face from the dazzling and shining brightness of the glory of Christ. Alas! the Cherubims and Seraphims are but as spangles and twinkling stars in the canopy of Heaven, but Christ is the Sun of righteousness, that at once illuminates and drowns them all.

Come then, cast up thy desires after Christ, breath, O my soul, after the enjoyments of this Christ; fling up to heaven some divine ejaculations, Oh that this Christ were mine! Oh that the actions of Christ, and the person of Christ were mine! Oh that all he said, and all he did, and all he were from top to the were mine! Oh that I had the silver wings of a Dove, that in all my wants I might fly into the bosom of this Christ! Oh that I might be admitted to his person? or if that may not be, Oh that I may but touch the very hem of his Garment. If I must not sit at Table, Oh that I might but gather up the Crumbs! Surely there's Bread enough in my Fathers House; Christ is the Bread of Life; this one Loaf Christ is enough for all the Saints in heaven and earth to feed on; and what must I pine away, and perish with hunger? Oh that I might have one Crum of Christ! Thousands of Instructions dropped from him whiles he was on earth; Oh that some of that food might be my nourishment! Oh that my ways were directed according to his Statutes! many a stream, and wave, and line, and precept flowed from this Fountain, Christ; Oh that I might drink freely of this water of life! He hath proclaimed it in my ears, if any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink; Oh that I might come, and find welcome! why sure I thirst, I am extremely a thirst, I feel in me such a burning drought, that either I must drink or die; either the righteousness of Christ, the holiness of Christ, the holiness of his Nature, and the holiness of his Life must be imputed unto me, or farewell happiness in another World; why come, come Lord Jesus, come quickly; Oh I long to see the beauty of thy face! thy glory is said to be an enamouring glory; such is thy beauty, that it steals away my heart after thee, and cannot be satisfied till with Absalom, I see the Kings face; come Christ! or if thou wilt not come, I charge you, O Daughters of Jerusalem, if ye find my beloved, that ye tell him I am sick of Love.

SECT. IV. Of Hopeing in Jesus in that respect.

4. LET us hope in Jesus carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his Life. By this hope I mean not a fluctuating, wavering, doubtful hope, but an assured hope; an hope well grounded. The main soul question is, whether Christ's life be mine? whether all those passages of his life be laid open, belong unto me? whether the habitual righteousness, and actual holiness of Christ be imputed to my justification? and what are the grounds and foundations on which my hope is built? The Apostle tells us, that God gives good hopes through Grace; if hope be right and good, it will manifest itself by operations of saving Grace: O look into thy soul! what gracious effects of the life of Christ are there? certainly his life is not without some influence on our spirits, if we be his Members, and he be our Head. The Head we say, communicates life and sense, and motion to his members; and so doth Christ communicate a spiritual life and sense, and motion to his members; O the glorious effects flowing out of Christ's life into a Believers soul! I shall lay down these. As,—

1. If Christ's life be mine, then am I freed from the Law of sin: This was the Apostles evidence; For the Law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the Law of sin and death. Christ's Life is called the Spirit of Life, because of its perfection; and this Spirit of Life hath such a power in it, here termed a Law, that it works out in Believers a freedom from the Law or Power in Sin. I cannot think, notwithstanding the influence of Christ's life on me, but that sin still sticketh in me, I am still a sinner in respect of the inherency of sin, but I am freed from the power of sin (i.e.) from the guilt of sin, as to its condemning power; and from the filth of sin as to its ruling reigning power: Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof.—

I grant there is some difference among Divines in their expressions, concerning the sins of God's own people, though they mean one and the self-same thing. Some call them only sins of infirmity; and others grant the name of reigning sins; but with this limitation, that this is not a total reigning. Sin reigneth as a Tyrant over them, not as a King; at sometimes (as in David's case) the will and consent may run along with sin, no actual resistance may be made against sin at all; and yet at the very same time the seed of God remaineth in them, though it seem dead; and in God's good time, that very seed will revive again, and throw out the Tyrant; there is not, cannot be that antecedent and consequent consent to sin in the godly, as in the wicked: O my soul, consider this! if the virtue of Christ's life come in, it will take down that sovereign high reign of sin which the wicked suffer, and will not strive against; the flesh indeed may sometimes lust against the Spirit, but it shall not totally prevail or get the upper hand; Sin shall not have dominion over you. Sin may tyrannize in me for a time, but it shall not King it in me. Look to this! Doth the power and dominion of Christ's Life throw out of thy heart and life that Kingly power and dominion of my sin? here is one ground of hope.

2. If Christ's life be mine, then shall I walk even as he walked; such is the efficacy of Christ's life, that it will work suitableness, and make our life in some sort like his life. The Apostle observes that our communion with Christ works on our very conversations; he that abideth in him, walks even as he walked: and to this purpose are all those holy admonitions; walk in love, as Christ also loved us.—and, I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done unto you.— And, as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation. Then is Christ's life mine, when my actions refer to him as my Copy, when I transcribe the Original of Christ's life (as it were, to the life. Alas, what am I better to observe in the life of Christ his Charity to his Enemies, his Reprehensions of the Scribes and Pharisees, his subordination to his heavenly Father, his ingenuity towards all men, his effusions of love towards all the Saints, if there be no likeness of all this in my own actions? The Life of Jesus is not described to be like a Picture in a chamber of Pleasure, only for beauty and entertainment of the eye, but like the Egyptain Hieroglyphicks, whose very feature is a precept, whose Images converse with men by sense, and signification of excellent discourses; to this purpose, saith Paul, we all with open face, beholding as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed in the same Image from Glory to Glory: Christ is the Image of his Father, and we are the Images of Christ; Christ is God's Masterpeice, and the most excellent device and work, and frame of heaven that ever was, or ever shall be; now Christ being the top-excellency of all, he is most fit to be the the pattern of all excellencies whatsoever; and therefore he is the Image, the Idea, the Pattern, the Platform of all our sanctification. Come then, O my soul, look unto Jesus, and look into thyself; yea, and look and look, till thou art more transformed into his likeness: Is it so that thou art changed into the same image with Christ? took into his disposition as it is set forth in the Gospel? look into his carriage, look into his conversation at home and abroad; and then reflecting on thyself; look there, and tell me, canst thou find in thyself a disposition suitable to his disposition, a carriage suitable to his carriage, a conversation suitable to his conversation? art thou every way like him in thy measure, in Gospel allowance; in some sweet resemblance? why then, here's another ground of hope: O rejoice in it, and bless God for it.

3. If Christ's life be mine, then shall I admire, adore, believe, and obey this Christ. All these were the effects of those several passages in Christ's life respectively. 1. They admire at his Doctrine and Miracles: For his Doctrine; all bear him witness, and wondered at those gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth: and for his Miracles; they wondered, and they glorified the God, the God of Israel: yea sometimes their admiration was so great, that they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.—They were amazed at the mighty Power of God, and they wondered everyone at all things which Jesus did. 2. And as they admired, so they adored: there came a Leaper and worshipped him, saying, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean: and there came a Ruler and worshipped him, saying, My Daughter is even now dead, come lay thy hand on her, and she shall live; and they that were in the Ship came and worshipped, saying, of a truth thou art the Son of God. The very worshipping of Christ confesseth thus much, that he is the Son of God. 3.

And as they adored, so they believed: If thou canst believe (said Christ to the Father of the possessed Child) all things are possible to him that believeth; and straight way he cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief. And when many of his Disciples fell away, then said Jesus to the twelve, will ye also go away? Peter answers for the rest, to whom shall we go?—Why Lord, we believe, and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God: not only worshipping of Christ, but believing in Christ is a right acknowledgment that Christ is God.

4. And as they believed, so they obeyed: ye have obeyed from the heart (said Paul to the Romans) that form of Doctrine which was delivered to you; no sooner Peter and Andrew heard the voice of Christ, follow me, but they left all and followed him: and no sooner James and John heard the same voice of Christ, follow me, but they left all and followed him; and no sooner Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom, heard that voice of Christ, follow me, but he rose and followed him. Why then are ye my Disciples indeed (said Christ to the believing Jews) if ye continue in my word. Come then, put thyself, O my soul, to the test; thou hast seen and heard, the wonderful passages of Christ's Life; the Baptism of Christ, the Fasting of Christ, the Temptations of Christ, the Manifestations of Christ; the Doctrine of Christ, the Miracles of Christ, the Holiness of Christ; and is this the issue of all? Dost thou now begin to admire, and adore, and believe, and to obey this Christ? is thy heart warmed? thy affections kindled? Forbs tells us that the word of God hath three degrees of operation in the hearts of his chosen, first it falleth to men's ears as the sound of many waters, a mighty, great, and confused sound, and which commonly brings neither terror nor joy, but yet a wandering and acknowledgment of a strange force, and more than human power, this is that effect which many felt hearing Christ, when they were astonished at his Doctrine, as teaching with authority; what manner of Doctrine is this? never man spake like this man: the next effect is the voice of thunder, which bringeth not only wonder, but fear also: not only filleth the ears with sound and the heart with astonishment, but moreover shaketh and terrifieth the conscience: the third effect is the sound of harping, while the Word not only ravisheth with admiration, and striketh the Conscience with terror, but also lastly filleth it with sweet peace and joy. In the present case, give me leave to ask, O my soul, art thou struck into a maze at the mighty Miracles, and divine Doctrine of Jesus Christ? dost thou fall down and worship him as the Lord and thy God? dost thou believe in him, and rely on him for Life and Salvation? dost thou obey him, and follow the Lamb which way soever he goes? dost thou act from Principles of Grace in newness of life, and holiness of conversation? dost thou walk answerably to the commands of Jesus Christ; or at least is there in thee an earnest endeavor so to walk, and is it the sorrow of thy soul, when thou observest thy failings? and dost thou rejoice in spirit when thou art led by the Spirit? why then here's another ground hope, that virtue is gone of Christ's life into thy soul.

4. If Christ's life be mine, then I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. Paul speaks out this evidence, I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, &c. he conjoins the death of Christ, and the life of Christ in one and the same soul; q. d. no man knows the benefit of Christ's death, but he that feels the virtue of Christ's life; there's no assurance of Christ's dying for us, but as we feel Christ living in us; if the power of Christ's death mortify my lusts, then the virtue of Christ's life will quicken my soul: but what means he by this, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me? It seems some Paradox; I live, yet not I: but a right interpretation reconciles all; as this,

I live to God, and not unto myself; I live to Christ, and not unto the World; I live according to the Will of God, and not after my own lust and fancy; or (as some would have it) I live under grace, and not under the Law. q. d. Sometimes I lived wholly under the Law, which made me a persecutor of the Church of God, which wrought in me all manner of Concupiscence, and slew me; and then I found myself to be dead in sin: but now I have embraced Christ, and am no more the man I was; now I feel Christ quickening, ruling, guiding, and strengthening me by his Spirit, now I live spiritually and holily, not of myself, but from another: The very whole of Christians is from Christ; Christ is both Fountain-filling, and Life-quicken; I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. Christ's life hath an influence, infusion, transmission into ourselves in reference to spiritual life: Look as the Heavens by an influence into the Earth, do quicken and enliven the Earth, and make all the seeds and roots hidden in the Earth, to revive and put forth themselves; so there is an influence that goes forth from the Sun of Righteousness into the Souls of men, reviving and quickening them, and making them of dead, to become living; and of barren, to become fruitful; To you shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings, and ye shall go forth, and grow up as the Calves of the Stall. O my Soul! question thyself in these few particulars; dost thou live to God, and not to thyself? dost thou live to Christ, and not to the World? dost thou derive thy life from Christ? and hath that life of Christ a special influence into thy soul? dost thou feel Christ living in thy understanding and will, in thy imagination and affections, in thy duties and services? 1. In thy understanding, by prizing the knowledge of Christ, by determining to know nothing in comparison of Christ? 2. In thy will, by making thy will free to choose and embrace Christ; and by making his will to rule is thy will? 3. In thy imagination, by thinking upon him with more frequency and delight; by having more high, and honorable, and sweeter apprehensions of Christ than of all the Creatures? 4. In thy affections, by fearing Christ above all earthly powers, and by loving Christ above all earthly persons? 5. In thy duties and services, by doing all thou dost in his Name, by his assistance, and for his glory? why then here's another ground of thy hope, surely thou hast thy part in Christ's Life.

Away, away with all dejecting doubts, and perplexing fears! while Christ was in Augustine's eye, he said, I dare not despond, I know who hath said it, and I dare build upon it; this Anchor of hope thus cast out, and fastening upon Christ, it would be admirably useful when Billows of Temptation beat upon Souls; this Helmet of Hope thus used, would keep off many blows, whereby the comforts of distrustful spirits are many times sadly battered. O my Soul, look to the grounds of thy hope! if thou findest the power of sin dying in thee, if thou walkest as Christ walked, if thou admirest, adorest, believest, and obeyest thy Christ; if thou livest, and livest not, but in deed, and in truth, it is Christ that lives in thee; why then thou mayest comfortably hope and assure thyself that Christ's habitual righteousness, and actual holiness is imputed to thy justification; thou mayest confidently resolve that every passage of Christ's Life (so far as Legal or Moral) belongs unto thee. What? would ever Christ have come with his power against thy power of sin, if he had not meant to rescue thee? Would Christ ever have set thee a Copy, and have held thy hand and thy heart, to have writ legibly after him, if he had not meant thee for a Scribe instructed unto the Kingdom of Heaven? would Christ in his several actings have set himself before thee as the Object of Admiration, Adoration, Belief and Obedience, if he had not meant to own thee, and to be owned by thee? would Christ ever have come so near to thee, as to have lived in thee, to have been the soul of thy soul, and the life of thy life, the All of thy understanding and will, imaginations and affections, duties and services, if he had not purposed to have saved thee by his life? Surely it is good that I both hope, and quietly wait for the Salvation of God. I cannot hope in vain if these be the grounds of my hope.

SECT. V. Of Believing in Jesus in that respect.

5. LET us believe in Jesus carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his Life. Many Souls stand aloof, not daring to make a particular application of Christ, and his Life to themselves; but herein is the property of Faith, it brings all home, and makes use of whatsoever Christ is or does, for himself. To ponder Christ's actions during his Life, and the influence of his actions to all that are his, what is this to me, unless I believe my own part in all this? Oh I dare not believe (cries many a poor soul) is it credible that Jesus Christ the Son of God, the brightness of his Fathers Glory, the express Image of his Fathers Person, should be incarnate for me, and lead such a life upon Earth for my soul? What! to be baptized, to be tempted, to manifest himself in the form of man, to whip the Buyers and Sellers out of his Temple, to preach up and down the Gospel of the Kingdom, to work miracles among men, to send abroad his Apostles with a commission to preach, to invite sinners, to ease the burden of duties, and in a word, to publish the righteousness of his Nature and Life; and all this, and a thousand times more than all this, for my soul? O what am I, or what is my Fathers House? If God should let me live one year in Heaven, it were infinite mercy; but that the God of Heaven should live so many years on Earth, and that all that while he should empty himself, in watching, fasting, praying, preaching for my sake; Oh the depth! Oh the depth! I cannot believe.

Sweet Soul, be not faithless, but believing; I know it is an hard and difficult thing; but to help on a trembling soul, I shall first direct, and then encourage.

First for direction, let souls be acquainted how to act their Faith on Christ in respect of his Life. The manner of its proceedings I suppose is thus:—

1. Faith must directly go to Christ. Many poor souls humbled for sin, and taken off from their own bottom, they run immediately to the promise of pardon, and close with it, and rest on it, not seeking for, or closing with Christ in the promise; this is a common error among thousands; but we should observe, that the first promise that was given, was not a bare word simply promising pardon, peace, or any other benefit, which God would bestow; but it was a promise of Christ's Person, as overcoming Satan, and purchasing those benefits, The Seed of the Woman shall bruise the Serpents head. So, when the Promise was renewed to Abraham, it was not a bare promise of blessedness and forgiveness, but of that Seed, that is, Christ, Gal. 3.6. in whom that blessedness was conveyed; In thy Seed shall all the Nations of the Earth be blessed. So that Abraham's Faith first closed with Christ in the Promise, and therefore he is said to see Christ's day, and to rejoice in embracing him. Christ in the first place, and more immediately, is everywhere made the thing which Faith embraceth to salvation, and whom it looks unto and respects, as it makes us righteous in the sight of God. God so loved the World, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.— And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the Law of Moses.—and, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.—And, To him give all the Prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him, shall receive remission of sins. And hence it is that Faith is called the Faith of Christ, Gal. 2.16. Phil. 3.9. Because Christ is it whom Faith apprehends immediately; and as for the other promises they depend all on this, Whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins: and he that believeth on the Son of God shall have life everlasting; verily, verily I say unto you, he that believeth on me hath everlasting life. O remember this in the first place, Faith must go unto Christ; and yet I mean not to Christ, as abstractly and nakedly considered; but to Christ as compass'd with all his Promises, Privileges, Benefits.

2. Faith must go to Christ, as God in the flesh. Some make this the difference of Faiths acting betwixt Believers of the New and Old Testament: Under the Old Testament, when Christ was but in the Promise, and not as then come in the flesh, their Faith had a more usual recourse unto God himself; as for Christ (God-man, man-God) they had not so distinct, but only a confused knowledge of him; and therefore we read not so frequently and usually of their recourse unto him, but only unto God. O our God, wilt thou not judge them? we know not what to do, but our eyes are upon thee— and, Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established.—and, The Lord heard this, and was wrath—because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation. But now under the New Testament, because Christ as Mediator, who was promised, is come, our Faith more usually and immediately addresseth itself unto Christ, as God in the flesh, God dwelling in our nature is made more familiar to our Faith, than the person of the Father, who is merely God: God in the flesh is more distinctly set forth in the New Testament, and so he is more distinctly to be apprehended by the Faith of all Believers: Ye believe in God (says Christ to his Disciples, whose faith and opinion of the Messiah was till Christ's Resurrection of the same Elevation with that of the Old-Testament-Believers) Ye believe in God; but he rests not there, believe also in me, make me the object of your trust and salvation, as well as the Father, believe also in me, not only so, but believe in the first place on me. One sweetly observes, that when Faith and Repentance came more narrowly to be distinguished by their more immediate objects, it is laid down thus, Repentance towards God, and Faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ; not but that God and Christ are objects of both; but that Christ is more immediately the object of Faith, and God is more immediately the object of Repentance; so that we believe in God through believing in Christ first; and we turn to Christ by turning to God first. O remember this! Let our Faith in the more direct and immediate exercise of it be pitch upon Christ as God ◇ the flesh.

3. Faith must go to Christ as God in the flesh, made under the Law: and hence it is that the Apostle joins these together, God sent his Son made of a woman, made under the Law: If Christ had been out of the compass of the Law, his being incarnate, and made of a woman, had done us no good. Suppose one in debt, and danger of the Law, to have a Brother of the same flesh and blood, of the same Father and Mother; what will this avail, if that same Brother will not come under the Law (i.e.) become his Surety, and undertake for him? It is our case; we are debtors to God, and there is an hand-writing against us, and contrary to us: here is a Bond of the Law which we have forfeited; now what would Christ avail, if he had not come under the Law, if he had not been our Surety, and undertook for us? Our Faith therefore must go to Christ as made under the Law, not only taking our nature upon him, but our debt also; our nature as men, and our debt as sinful men: He hath made himself to become sin for us who knew no sin, (i.e.) he made him to be handled as a sinner for us under the Law, though he knew no sin on his part, but continued in all things written in the Book of the Law to do them. If Faith be inquisitive, when was Christ made under the Law? I answer, even then when he was circumcised: Thus Paul protests, I testify to every man that he that is circumcised, is a debtor to do the whole Law. Christ at his Circumcision entered into bond with us, and undertook for us; and therefore then, and not till then, he had his Name given him, Jesus a Savior: and from that time he was a debtor to do the whole Law. Not only to suffer, but also to do; for he both satisfied the Curse, and fulfilled the Commandments. O remember this! as Christ, and as Christ in the flesh, so Christ in the flesh made under the Law, is principally to be in the eye of our Faith. If we put all together, our first view of Faith is to look on Christ God in the flesh, made under the Law.

4. Faith going to Christ as God in the flesh, and as made under the Law, it is principally to look to the end and meaning of Christ, as being God in the flesh, and as fulfilling the Law.

Now if we would know the meaning of Christ in all this, the Apostle tells us of a remote, and of a more immediate end.

1. Of a remote end: God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law, that we might receive the adoption of Sons. This was Christ's meaning, or the remote end of Christ. Alas! we were strangers from the Adoption, and we lay under the Law as men whom sentence had passed on: Now from this latter we are redeemed; he was under the Law, that we might be redeemed from under the Law; nor is that all; but as we are redeemed, so are we adopted the Children of God: And this end I rather attribute to the Life of Christ, that we might receive the Adoption (i.e.) from the estate of Prisoners condemned, that we might be translated into the estate of children adopted. O the mercy of God! whoever heard of a condemned man to be afterwards adopted? would not a condemned Prisoner think himself happy to escape with Life? But the zeal of the Lord of Hosts hath performed this; we are in Christ both pardoned and adopted; and by this means the joy and glory of God's heavenly inheritance is estated upon us: O let our Faith look mainly to this design and plot of Christ! he was made under the Law, yea, and under the directive part of the Law by his life; he fulfilled every jot and title of the Law by his active obedience, that we might be entitled to glory; that we might be adopted to the inheritance of the Saints in glory.

2. For the more immediate end of Christ: the Apostle tells us Christ was made under the Law, or fulfilled all Righteousness, that the Law might be fulfilled in us. In Christ's life were we represented, and so this fulfilling of all righteousness is accounted ours; that the Law might be fulfilled in us. O my soul, look to this! Herein lies the pith and the marrow of thy Justification: of thyself thou canst do nothing that good is; but Christ fulfilled the Law in thy stead; and if now thou wilt but act, and exercise thy Faith, thou mayst thereby find and feel the virtue and efficacy of Christ's righteousness and actual obedience, flowing into thy own soul. But here is the question, how should I manage my Faith? or how should I act it to feel Christ's righteousness my righteousness? I answer, 1. Thy way is to discover and discern this righteousness of Christ, this holy and perfect life of the Lord Jesus Christ in the whole, and in all the parts of it, as it is laid down in the written Word; Much hath been said of it in those four years of Christ's Ministry, but especially in the last year; I shall say more anon in our conformity unto Christ, whither also thou mayst have recourse. 2. Thy way is to believe and to receive this discovery as sacred and unquestionable in reference to thy own soul, as intended for thee, for thy use and benefit. 3. Thy way is to apprehend, apply, and to improve this discovery according to that judgment and proposal, to those uses, ends, and benefits to which thou believest they were designed. Yea, but there lies the question, how may that be done? I answer,—

1. Setting before thee that discovery (that perfect life of Christ in the whole, and all the parts of it) thou must first endeavor to be deeply humbled for thy great inconformity thereto in whole and in part.

1. Still keeping thy Spirit intent on the Pattern, thou must quicken, provoke and increase thy sluggish and drowsy soul with renewed, redoubled vigilancy, and industry to come up higher towards it, and (if it were possible) completely to it.

3. Yet having the same discovery, rule and copy before thee, thou must exercise faith thereupon, as that which was performed, and is accepted on thy behalf. And so go to God, and there represent, offer, and tender Christ's holy life and active obedience unto him. And that first to fill up the defects of thy utmost endeavor: Secondly, to put a righteousness, price, value, and worth upon what thou dost and attainest to. Thirdly, to make Christ's righteousness thy own, that thou mayest say with the Psalmist in way of assurance, O God my righteousness. O my soul, if thou wouldest thus live by Faith, or thus act thy Faith on Christ's Life, Christ's Righteousness, Christ's active obedience; what a blessed life wouldest thou live? then mightest thou find and feel Christ's righteousness thy righteousness; I say thy Righteousness in respect of its efficacy, but not in respect of its formality; for so sinners would be their own Mediators. But of some of these Particulars I shall speak more largely in our conformity to Christ's holy Life.

2. For encouragements to bring on souls thus to believe on Christ, consider,—

1. The fullness of this Object; Christ's life is full, it is very comprehensive, it contains holiness, and happiness, sanctification, and justification: if Christ's Garments were healing, how much more so main and essential a part of Christ, even the half of Christ as it were? for so is Christ's Life. It is vehemently to be suspected, that the true reason why so much is said of his Death, and so little in comparison of his Life, it is either because we understand not the fullness of his life, or because we are carnal and selfish, affecting freedom from hell, more than holiness on earth; some benefit by Christ, more than conformity to Christ. O come! see the fullness of Christ's life: in reference to our sanctification, was it not an exact model of perfection? a most curious exemplification of God's whole Word? an express Idea, Image, Representation of the whole mind of God? a full president for all others to walk by, to work by, to live by? and in reference to justification, is not Christ's life the object of Faith and justifying? nay, is not Christ's life the object of justifying faith, as well as Christ's death, resurrection, ascension, session, intercession? The assertors of Christ's active and passive obedience for us, can tell us of two things in the Law intended; one principal, viz. Obedience: and another secondary, viz. malediction upon supposition of disobedience; so that sin being once committed, there must be a double act to justification, the suffering of the Curse, and the fulfilling of Righteousness anew, the one is satisfaction for the injury we have done unto God as our Judge; and the other is a performance of a service which we owe unto God as our Maker. O then how large, and full, and comprehensive is this life of Christ?

2. Consider the excellency, the glory of this Object: Christ's life is glorious, and hence it is that the righteousness of Christ is the most glorious garment that ever the Saints of God did wear. It is Marlorat's saying, that the Church which puts on Christ and his righteousness, is more illustrious than the Air is by the Sun. John thus sets her out in his Vision; And there appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman clothed with the Sun, and the Moon under her feet. I take this to be a lofty Poetical description of Christ's imputed righteousness: imagine a garment were cut out of the Sun, and put upon us, how glorious should we be? O but the righteousness of Christ is much more glorious: No wonder if the Church clothed with the Sun, tread the Moon under her feet (i.e.) if she trample on all sublunary things, which are uncertain and changeable as the Moon, I count all things but dung (saith Paul) that I may win Christ, and be found in him; not having my own righteousness which is of the Law, but that which is through the Faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by Faith. When Paul compares Christ's righteousness with the glory of the world, then is the world but dung. O the glory, O the excellency of the righteousness of Christ!

3. Consider the suitability of this object; Christ's life, and the virtue of it, is most suitable to our condition. Thus I might apply Christ to every condition; if thou art sick, he is a Physician; if thou fearest death, he is the way, the truth, and the life; if thou art hungry, he is the bread of Life; if thou art thirsty, he is the water of Life: But not to insist on these words. It is the daily complaint of the best of Saints, O my sins! I had thought these sins had been wholly subdued, but now I feel they return upon me again; now I feel the springs in the bottom fill up my soul again; Oh I am weary of myself, and weary of my life, Oh what will become of me? In this case now Christ's life is most suitable, his righteousness is a continual righteousness; it is not a Cistern, but Fountain open for thee to wash in; as sin abounds, so grace in this gift of righteousness abounds much more. Christ's life in this respect, is compared to changes of Garments: Thou criest, O what shall become of me? Oh I feel new sins, and old sins committed afresh; why but these changes of garments will hide all thy sins: if thou art but clothed with the robes of Christ's righteousness, there shall never enter into the Lord's heart one hard thought towards thee of casting thee off, or of taking revenge upon any new occasion or fall into sin. Why here is the blessedness of all those that believe. Oh then believe! Say not, would Christ be incarnate for me? would he lead such a life on earth for my soul? Why yes, for thy soul: never speak of thy sins, as if they should be any hindrance of thy Faith. If the wicked that apply this righteousness presumptuously, can say, Let us sin that grace may abound, and so they make no other use of Grace, but to run in debt, and to sin with a license; how much rather mayest thou say on good ground, Oh let me believe! Oh let me own my portion in this righteousness of Christ! that as my sins have abounded, so my love may abound; that as my sins have been exceeding great, so the Lord may be exceeding sweet; that as my sins continue and increase, so my thankfulness to Christ, and glory in God, and triumph over sin, death, and the grave, may also increase. Why thus be encouraged to believe thy part in the Lord Jesus Christ.

SECT. VI. Of Loving Jesus in that respect.

6. LET us love Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us during his Life. Now what is Love but a motion of the Appetite, by which the Soul unites itself to what seems fair unto it? And if so, O what a lovely Object is the Life of Christ? who can read over his Life, who can think over his worthiness, both in his person, relations, actions, and several administrations, and not love him with a singular love? That which set the Daughters of Jerusalem in a posture of seeking after Christ, was that Description of Christ, which the Spouse made of him; My Beloved is white and ruddy, the chiefest of ten thousands, his head is as the most fine Gold, his Locks are bushy and black as a Raven; his eyes are as the eyes of Doves, by the Rivers of water, washed with milk, and finely set, his cheeks are as a bed of Spices, and sweet flowers; his lips like Lilies dropping sweet smelling myrrh, &c. By these are intimated unto us the government of Christ, the unsearchable counsels of Christ, the pure nature of Christ, without any impurity or uncleanness; the gracious promises of Christ, the soul saving instructions of Christ, the holy actions and just administrations of Christ, the tender affections, and amiable smilings of Christ, the gracious, inward and wonderful workings of Christ; so that he is altogether lovely, or he is composed of loves; from top to toe there is nothing in Christ, but 'tis most fair and beautiful, lovely and desirable— Now as this Description enflamed the Daughters of Jerusalem; so to act our loves towards the Lord Jesus Christ, take we a copy of the Record of the Spirit in Scriptures; see what they say of Christ; this was his own advice, Search the Scriptures, for—they are they which testify of me.

O my soul, much hath been said to persuade thee to Faith; and if now thou believest thy part in those several actings of Christ, why let thy Faith take thee by the hand, and lead thee from one step to another; from his Baptism to his Temptations; from his Temptations to his Manifestations; and so on: Is not here fuel enough for Love to feed upon? Canst thou read the history of Love (for such is the history of Christ's Life) and not be all on a flame? Come, read again! there is nothing in Christ but 'tis lovely, winning, and drawing; as,—

1. When he saw thee full of filth, he goes down into the waters of Baptism, that he might prepare a way for the cleansing of thy defiled and polluted soul.
2. When he saw the Devil ready to swallow thee up, or by his baits to draw and drag thy soul down to hell, he himself enters into the List with the Devil, and he overcomes him, that thou mightest overcome, and triumph with Christ in his Glory.
3. When he saw thee in danger of death through thy own unbelief, for (except thou sawest in his hands the print of the nails, and put thy finger into the print of the nails; except thou hadst clear manifestations of Christ even to thine own sense, thou wouldest not believe) he condescends so far to succor thy weakness, as to manifest himself by several witnesses; three in heaven, and three on earth: yea, he multiplies his three on earth to thousands of thousands; so many were the signs witnessing Christ, that the Disciple which testified of them, could say, If they should be written everyone, the world could not contain the Books that should be written.

4. When he saw the buying and selling in the Temple, yea, making Merchandize of the Temple itself, I mean of thy Soul, which is the Temple of the holy Ghost; he steps in to whip out those Buyers and Sellers, those Lusts and Corruptions: O (cries he) will you sell away your souls for Trash? O what is a man profitted though he gain the whole world, and lose his own Soul?

5. When he saw thee like the horse and mule, more brutish than any man, not having the understanding of a man; thou neither learnedst wisdom, nor hadst the knowledge of the most holy; he came with his instructions, adding line unto line, and precept on precept, teaching and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom; and sealing his truths with many Miracles, that thou mayest believe, and in believing thou mightest have life through his Name: and Oh! what is this but to make thee wise unto salvation?

6. When he saw thee a sinner of the Gentiles, a stranger from the common-wealth of Israel, and without God in the world, he sent his Apostles and Messengers abroad, and bad them preach the Gospel to thee; q. d. Go to such a one in the dark corner of the world, an Isle at such a distance from the Nation of the Jews, and set up my Throne amongst that people, open the most precious Cabinet of my Love there; and amongst that People, tell such a Soul, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom he is one. O admirable Love!

7. When he saw thee cast down in thyself, and refusing thy own Mercy, crying and saying, what! is it possible that Jesus Christ should send a Message to such a dead Dog as I am? why the Apostles Commission seems otherwise: Go not into the way of the Gentiles, or into any City of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel. O I am a lost sheep, but not being of the House of Israel; what hope is there that ever I should be found? He then appeared, and even then he spread his arms wide to receive thy soul; he satisfied thee then of another Commission given to his Apostles; Go, teach all Nations: And he cried even then, Come unto me thou that art weary and heavy laden with sin, and I will receive thee into my bosom, and give thee rest there.

8. When he saw thee in suspense, and heard thy complaint, But if I come, shall I find sweet welcome? I have heard that his ways are narrow and straight; Oh it is an hard passage, and an high ascent up to heaven! Many seek to enter in, but shall not be able: Oh! what shall become of my poor Soul? why then he told thee otherwise; that all his ways were ways of pleasantness, and all his paths peace; he would give thee his Spirit that should bear the weight, and make all light; he would sweeten the ways of Christianity to thee, that thou shouldest find by experience, that his yoke was easy, and his burden was light.

9. When he saw the wretchedness of thy Nature, and original pollution, he took upon him thy Nature, and by this means took away thy original sin. O here is the lovely Object! What is it but the absolute holiness and perfect purity of the Nature of Christ? This is the fairest Beauty that ever eye beheld; this is that compendium of all Glories: now if Love be a motion and union of the Appetite to what is lovely, how shouldst thou flame forth in loves upon the Lord Jesus Christ? this is rendered as the reason of those sparklings, Thou art fairer than the children of men.

10. When he saw thee actually unclean, a transgressor of the Law in thought, word, and deed; then he said, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God; and wherefore would he do God's will, but merely on thy behalf?

O my Soul, canst thou read over all these passages of Love, and dost thou not yet cry out, O stay me, comfort me; for I am sick of Love? Can a man stand by an hot and fiery furnace, and never be warmed? Oh for an heart in some measure answerable to these Loves! Surely even good natures hate to be in debt for love; and is therein thee (O my soul) neither grace, nor yet good nature? O God forbid! awake! awake thy ardent love towards the Lord Jesus Christ! why thou art rock, and not flesh, if thou beest not wounded with these heavenly darts; Christ loves thee, is not that enough? fervent affection is apt to draw love, where is little or no beauty; and excellent beauty is apt to draw the heart where there is no answer of affection at all; but when these two meet together, what breast can hold against them? See, O my soul, here is the sum of all the particulars thou hast heard, Christ loves thee, and Christ is lovely; his heart is set upon thee, who is a thousand times fairer than all the children of men; doth not this double consideration, like a mighty loadstone, snatch thy heart unto it, and almost draw it forth of thy very breast? O sweet Savior, thou couldst say even of thy poor Church (though laboring under many imperfections) Thou hast ravished my Heart, my Sister, my Spouse, thou hast ravished mine heart with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck; how fair is thy love, my Sister, my Spouse? how much better is thy love than wine, and the smell of thy ointments than all Spices? Couldst thou, O blessed Savior, be so taken with the incurious and homely features of the Church, and shall not I much more be enamored with thy absolute and divine Beauty? It pleased thee, my Lord, out of thy sweet ravishments of thy heavenly love, to say to thy poor Church, Turn away thine Eyes from me, for they have overcome me; but Oh let me say to thee, Turn thine eyes to me, that they may overcome me; my Lord, I would be thus ravished, I would be overcome; I would be thus out of myself, that I might be all in thee.

Thus is the Language of true love to Christ; but alas, how dully and flatly do I speak it; O my soul, how art thou out of frame? in creature-communion I usually feel the warm, and vigorous, active, and very strong; but now thy heart is enditing of a good matter, thou art speaking of the things which thou hast made concerning the King, thy words do almost freeze between thy lips; how chill and cold art thou in thy converses with Jesus Christ? Oh this puts me in mind of my deserts; surely had Christ's love been but like this faint and feeble love of mine, I had been a damned wretch without all hope: O Christ, I am ashamed, that I love thee so little; I perceive thy loves are great by all those actings in thy life; come blow upon my Garden, persuade me by thy Spirit that I may love thee much; many sins are forgiven me, O that I may love thee much!

SECT. VII. Of Joying in Jesus in that respect.

7. Let us joy in Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our Salvation for us, during his Life. But what is there in Christ's life, or in all the passages of his Life to stir up Joy? I answer, all his life, and all the passages of his life, if rightly applied, are excellent matter for the stirring up of this Affection: indeed the main of the work is in the application of Christ's life; if ever we rejoice spiritually in Christ, we must bring together the object and the faculty; and this Union of the object and the faculty, is usually wrought by contemplation, or by confidence, or by fruition; I shall but a while insist on these, that we may come up at last to rejoice in Christ, yea, if it were possible to rejoice, and again rejoice.

1. Let us contemplate on this life of Christ, let us think of it in our minds; there is a kind of delight in knowing some things speculatively, which we would abhor to know experimentally; and therefore the Devil's first temptation was drawn from the knowledge of evil, as well as good; he knew that the mind of man would receive content in the understanding of that, which in its own nature had no perfection at all; now if there be a delight in the contemplation of evil, how much more in the contemplation of that which is good? And is not the life of Christ, the Graces, the Virtues, the holy Actions, the dear Affections of Jesus Christ to us-ward, good, and very good? Come then, stir up our memories, let us be settled men; let us spend our frequent thoughts upon this blessed Object; the reason we miss of our joys, is, because we are so little in contemplations of our Christ. It is said that he pities us in our sorrows, but he delights in us, when we delight in him. Certainly he would have us to delight in him, and to that purpose he way-lays our thoughts, that wheresoever we look, we shall still think on him: O my soul, cast thine eyes which way thou wilt, and thou shalt hardly look on anything, but Christ Jesus hath taken the name of that very thing upon himself. What, is it day? and dost thou behold the Sun? He is called the Sun of righteousness: Or, is it night? and dost thou behold the Stars? He is called a Star: There shall come a Star out of Jacob—out of Jacob shall he come that shall have dominion. Or, is it Morning? and dost thou behold the morning-star? He is called the bright morning-star. Or, is it Noon? and dost thou behold clear light all the world over in thy Hemisphere? He is called the Light, and that Light, and that Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. Or, to come a little nearer; if thou lookest on the earth, and takest a view of the Creatures about thee, seest thou the silly sheep? He is called a sheep; as a sheep before her shearer is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth: or seest thou a Lamb bleating after the harmless sheep? He is called a Lamb; Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world: Seest thou a Shepherd watching over his flock, by day or night? He is called a Shepherd: I am the good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine: Or seest thou a Fountain, Rivers, Waters? He is called a Fountain: In that day there shall be a Fountain opened to the House of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness: Or seest thou a Tree good for Food, or pleasant to the eye? He is called the Tree of Life: and, as the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons. Seest thou a Rose, a Lily, any fair Flower in a Garden? He is called a Rose, a Lily: I am the Rose of Sharon, and the Lily of the Valleys: or to come a little nearer yet; art thou within doors? I am the door, by me if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and shall find pasture. Art thou adorning thyself, and takest a view of thy Garments? He is called a Garment: Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ. Art thou eating meat, and takest a view on what is on thy Table? He is called Bread: The bread of God, true bread from Heaven, the bread of life, the living bread which came down from heaven. Why thus Christ way-lays our thoughts, that wheresoever we look, we should ever think of Christ—Now these thoughts or contemplations of Christ, are they that bring together the object and the faculty of joy: I cannot think of Christ, or the life of Christ, of Christ preaching, or of Christ preached, but I must rejoice in Christ; as sometimes the Apostle said; Christ is preached; whether in pretence or truth, I matter not, but that he is preached, I therein do rejoice, yea and will rejoice.

2. Let us consider in Christ, let us upon good grounds hope our share and interest in the Life of Christ: O this would strengthen our joy, yea fill us with joy unspeakable and glorious; where true joy is, there is first a thinking of the good in our mind; and secondly, an expecting of it in our heart; hence it is that whatsoever doth encourage our hope, the same doth enlarge our delight; the Apostle joines both these together: Rejoice in hope: Hope and Joy go both together; if I have but assured hope that Christ's life is mine, I cannot but rejoice therein: on the contrary, if my hope fluctuate, if I am but uncertain, if I look on the influence and benefits of Christ's life as only possibly mine, and no further; then is my comfort but unstable and weak: sometimes we find Christ compared to a rich Store-house: In him (saith the Apostle) are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; but alas, what am I richer for all his treasures, if I have no claim thereto, or interest therein? or what can I joy in another's riches, when I myself am wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked? Look to this, O my soul; peruse again and again thy grounds of hope as afore laid down; do not slightly run them over; thou canst not be too sure of Christ: thou readest in the Gospel this and that passage of thy Jesus, canst thou lay thine hand on every Line, and say this passage is mine? this Sermon was preached, and this miracle was wrought for me, that I might believe, and that in believing I might have life through his Name? O then how shouldst thou but rejoice? When Zacchaeus in the Sycamore Tree heard but Christ's voice, Zacchaeus make haste, and come down; for today I must abide in thy house. O what haste made Zacchaeus to receive Christ! he came down hastily, and received him joyfully. This offer of Christ to Zacchaeus is thine as well as his, if thy hope be right; Come down, poor Soul (saith Christ) this day must I abide in thy house. O then what joy should there be in thy heart when Christ comes in, or when thou feelest Christ come in! The friend of the Bridegroom rejoiceth greatly because of the Bridegroom's voice; how much more may the Bride herself rejoice.

3. Let us come up to more and more and more fruition of Christ; all other things work our delight but as they look towards this; now in this fruition of Christ are contained these things: first a propriety unto Christ; for as a sick man doth not feel the joy of a sound man's health, so neither doth a stranger to Christ feel the joy of a Believer in Christ; how should he joy in Christ that can make no claim to him in the least degree? But to that we have spoken. Secondly, a possession of Christ; this exceedingly enlargeth our joy. O how sweet was Christ to the Spouse, when she could say, I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine; he feedeth among the Lilies, q. d. we have took possession of each other; he is mine through faith, and I am his through love; we are both so knit by an inseparable union, that nothing shall be able to separate us two; he feedeth among the Lilies; he refresheth himself and his Saints, by his union and communion with them; many are taken up with the joy and comfort of outward possessions, but Christ is better than all; in one Christ is comprised every scattered comfort here below: Christ mine (saith the soul) and all mine. 3. An accommodation of Christ to the soul; and this is it that completes our joy; It is not bare possession of Christ which bringeth real delight; but an applying of Christ unto that end and purpose for which he was appointed: it is not the having of Christ, but the using of Christ, which makes him beneficial. O the usefulness of Christ to all believing Souls! The Scriptures are full of this; as appears by all his Titles in Scripture; he is our life, our light, our bread, our water, our milk, our wine; his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed: he is our father, our brother, our friend, our husband, our King, our Priest, our Prophet: he is our justification, our sanctification, our wisdom, our redemption; he is our peace, our mediation, our atonement, our reconciliation, our all in all. Alas! I look on myself, and I see I am nothing, I have nothing without Jesus Christ, here's a temptation, I cannot resist it; here's a corruption, I cannot overcome it; here's a persecution, I cannot down with it: well, but Christ is mine, I have interest in Christ, and I have possession of Christ, and I find enough in Christ to supply all my wants; he was set up on purpose to give me grace, and to renew my strength, so that if I make my application to Christ, I can do all things, Phil. 4.13. I can suffer the loss of all things, Phil. 3.8. I can conquer all things, nay, in all things be more than a conqueror through him that loves me, Rom. 8.37. Oh the joy now that this accommodation brings to my soul! I see it is nothing but Christ, and therefore I cannot but rejoice in this Christ, or I must rejoice in nothing at all: Surely we are the Circumcision which rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh.

O my soul! where is thy faculty of joy? come bring it to this blessed object, the Lord Jesus Christ: If thou knowest not how, first contemplate on Christ; think on those several passages in his life; those that lived with him, and stood by to see them, it is said of them, that they all rejoiced for the glorious things that were done by him. Or if thy heart be so dull and heavy, that this will not raise it up, then look to thy grounds of hope and confidence in Christ: so long as thou doubtst of him, or of thy interest in him, how shouldst thou rejoice or be cheerful in thy spirit? The poor man could not speak it without tears, Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief; a believing unbelief, a wavering, staggering, trembling faith cannot be without some wounds in spirit: O be confident, and this will make thee cheerful; or if yet thou feelest not this affection to stir, aspire to fruition, yea to more and more fruition of Christ, and union with Christ; and to that purpose consider thy propriety to Christ, thy possession of Christ, and the accommodation or usefulness of Christ to thy condition, whatsoever it is. What? will not these things move thy spiritual delight? canst thou not hear Christ say; All I am is thine, and all I have done is thine, for thy use, and for thy benefit. And doth not thy heart leap within thee at each word? O my soul, I cannot check thee for thy deadness: it is said, that when Christ was at the descent of the Mount of Olives, that the whole multitude of the Disciples began to rejoice, and praise God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works that they had seen. What? a multitude of disciples rejoicing in Christ's acts? and art not thou one amongst the multitude? If thou art a Disciple, rejoice thou: surely it concerns thee as much as them; and therefore rejoice, lift up thy voice in harmony with the rest, rejoice, and again rejoice.

SECT. VIII. Of calling on Jesus in that respect.

8. Let us call on Jesus, or on God the Father in and through Jesus. Thus we read that looking up to Jesus, or lifting up the eyes to Jesus, goes also for Prayer in God's Book: My prayer will I direct to thee (saith David) and will look up, and mine eyes fail with looking upwards. Faith in prayer will often come out at the eye in lieu of another door; our affections will often break out at the window, when the door is closed. Thus Stephen looked up to Heaven; he sent a Post, a greedy, pitiful and hungry look up to Jesus Christ out at the window, at the nearest passage, to tell him that a poor friend was coming to him: why thus let us look up to Jesus by calling on him; now this calling on him contains Prayer and Praise.

1. We must pray that all these transactions of Jesus during his Life, or during his Ministry upon earth, may be ours; we hope it is so, and we believe it to be so; but for all that, we must pray that it may be so. There is no contradiction betwixt Hope, and Faith, and Prayer, but rather a concatenation: Lord, I believe, yet help my unbelief; or, be it to me according to my Faith, how weak soever; it will bear that sense.

2. We must praise God for all those passages in Christ's life. Thus did the multitude; they praised God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works that they had seen; saying, blessed be the King that comes in the name of the Lord, peace in heaven, and glory in the highest! What (my Soul) hath Christ done all this for thee? was he made under the Law, to redeem thy soul, and adopt thee for his Son, to the inheritance of Heaven? came he down from heaven, and travelled he so many miles on earth, to woo and win thy heart? spent he so many Sermons, and so many Miracles to work thee into Faith? O how shouldest thou bless, and prize, and magnify his Name? how shouldest thou break out into that blessed Hymn, To him that loved us, and hath made us Kings and Priests unto God, and his Father, to him be Glory and Dominion forever and ever, Amen.

SECT. IX. Of conforming to Jesus in that respect.

9. Let us conform to Jesus, as he acted for us in his Life. Looking to Jesus intends this especially; we must look as one looks to his Pattern; as Mariners at Sea, that they may run a right course, keep an eye on that Ship that bears the Light: so in the Race that is set before us, we must have our eye on Jesus, our blessed Pattern. This must be our constant Query, Is this the course that Jesus steered? Or that I may enlarge,—

In this Particular I shall examine these three Queries: 1. Wherein we must conform? 2. Why we must conform? 3. How we must conform to this Life of Jesus?

For the first, wherein we must conform? I answer;

1. Negatively: we must not, cannot conform to Christ in those works proper to his Godhead; as in working Miracles: I deny not but that the works of Miracles were by way of privilege, and temporary dispensation granted to the Apostles, and some others; but this was but for Ministry and Service, not for their Sanctity or Salvation; nor must we conform to Christ in those works of mediation, as in redeeming souls, in satisfying Divine Justice for our sin: No man can redeem his Brother, nor give to God a ransom for him. There is but one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus: Nor must we conform to Christ in those works of his Government, and influence into his Church; as in dispensing of his Spirit, in quickening of his Word, in subduing of his enemies, in collecting of his Members; all these are personal honors, which belong unto Christ, as he is Head of the Church; and to these works, if we should endeavor to conform, we should Crack our Sinews, dissolve our silver cords, and never the nearer.—Nor need we to conform to Christ in some other Particulars; in his voluntary poverty; he became poor for our sakes, 2 Cor. 8.9. In his Ceremonial performances, as in going up to Jerusalem at the Feasts; in his perpetual grave deportment; we never read that Jesus laughed; and but once or twice that he rejoiced in spirit. Alas! the declensions of our Natures cannot come up to this Pattern: nor do I look at these passages as any acts of moral obedience at all.

2. Affirmatively, or positively; we must conform to Christ's life.

1. In respect of his Judgment, Will, Affections, Compassions. Look we at his Spirit, observe what mind was in Jesus Christ, and therein do we endeavor to conform: Let the same mind be in you (saith the Apostle) which was in Christ, Phil. 2.5. And we have the mind of Christ (saith the Apostle) 1 Cor. 2.16.

2. In respect of his Virtues, Graces, habitual Holiness. Learn of me (saith Christ) for I am meek and lowly in heart: Christ was of a meek and gentle Spirit. I beseech you, by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, saith Paul. And Christ was of an humble and lowly Spirit. Being in the form of God, he thought it no robbery to be equal with God; yet he made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a Servant. I might instance in all other Graces; for he had them all in fullness: And of his fullness have all we received, Grace for Grace.

3. In respect of his words, talk, spiritual and heavenly Language. The very Officers of the Priests could say of Christ, Never man spake like this man: and sometimes they all wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth: He never sinned in word; neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again: The Apostle speaking thus of Christ, he tells us, that herein Christ left us an example, that we should follow his steps.

4. In respect of his Carriage, Conversation, Close-walking with God. The Apostle sets forth Christ as an high Priest, who was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners; and in like manner, saith Peter, Ye are a chosen generation, a royal Priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the virtues of him, who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light: that ye should show forth the virtue] (i.e.) that in your lives and conversations you should express those graces and virtues which were so eminent and exemplary in Jesus Christ; that you should not only have them, but that you should hold them forth; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the word signifies properly to preach; so clearly should we express the virtues of Christ, as if our lives were so many Sermons of the life of Christ.

In respect of all his acts, practices, duties of moral obedience; we find in the life of Christ many particular carriages, and acts of obedience to his heavenly Father; whereof some were moral, and some ceremonial: now all these are not for our imitation, but only such moral acts, as concerning which, we have both his pattern and precept. Come, let us mark this one Rule, and we need no more; Whatsoever he commanded, and whatsoever he did, of precise Morality, we are therein bound to follow his steps. I join together his Commands and Deeds, because in those things which he did, but commands not, we need not to conform; but in those things which he both did and commanded, we are bound to follow him; in such a case his Laws and Practice differ, but as a Map and guide, a Law, a Judge, a Rule, and Precedent.

In respect of all these particulars, and especially in respect of Christ's moral obedience, the whole life of Christ was a Discipline, a living, shining, and exemplary precept unto men; and hence it is that we find such names given to him in Scripture, as signifies not only preeminence, but exemplariness; thus he was called a Prince, Dan. 9.25. a Leader, Isa. 55.4. a Governor, Mat. 2.6. a Captain, 2.10. a chief Shepherd, 1 Pet. 5.4. a forerunner or conduct into glory, Heb. 2.20. a light to the Jews, Exod. 13.21. a light to the Gentiles, Luke 2.3. a light to every man that entereth into the world, John 1.9. All which titles, as they declared his dignity, so his exemplariness, that he was the Author and pattern of holiness to his people. And as for all other Saints, though they are imitable, yet with limitation unto him, only so far as they express his life in their conversation: Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ.

For the second; why we must conform? upon what Motives? I answer, 1. Because Christ hath done and suffered very much to that end and purpose? Sometimes I have wondered why Christ would do so much, and suffer so much as the Evangelists in their histories relate. This I believe, that Jesus was perfect God, and perfect man; and that every action of his life, and but one hour of his Passion and death might have been satisfactory, and enough for the expiation and reconcilment of ten thousand worlds; but now I am answered, that all those instances of holiness, and all those kinds of virtues, and all those degrees of passion, and all that effusion of his blood, was partly on this account, that he might become an example to us, that he might shine to all the ages and generations of the world, and so be a guiding star, and a pillar of fire to them in their journey towards heaven: O my soul, how doth this call on thee to conform to Christ? What? that a smaller expense should be enough to thy justification, and yet that the whole Magazine should not procure thy sanctification? that at a lesser sum of obedience God might have pardoned thy sin, and yet at a greater sum thou wilt not so much as imitate his holiness? In a dark night, if an Ignis Fatuus go before thee, thou art so amuzed with that little flame, that thou art apt to follow it, and lose thyself; and wilt thou not follow the glories of the Sun of Righteousness, who by so many instances calls upon thee, and who will guide thee into safety, and secure thee against all imaginable dangers? God forbid! If it had not been for thy imitation, I cannot think that Christ would have lived on earth so many years, to have done so many gracious and meritorious works. O think of this!

2. Because Christ is the best and highest Exemplar of holiness that ever the world ever had: hence we must needs conform to Christ (as the Apostle argues) because he is the first-born among many Brethren; the first in every kind is propounded as a pattern of the rest; now Christ is the first-born. Christ is the head of all the predestinate, as the first-born was wont to be the head in all Families. The old saying is, Regis ad exemplar, &c. A very deformity was sometimes counted an honor, if it were in imitation of the Prince. It is storied of Nero, that having a wry neck, there was such an ambition in men to follow the Court, that it became the fashion and Gallantry of those times, to hold their necks awry; and shall not Christ, the King of Saints, be much more imitated by his Saints? Christ is the head of the body, the beginning, the first-born from the dead, in all things he hath the preeminence; and the rule is general, that, that which is first and best in any kind, is the rule and measure of all the rest. Why such is Christ; O then let him be the guide of our life, and of our manners.

3. Because Christ doth not only give us an example, but he doth cherish, succor, and assist us by its easiness, complacency, and proportion to us. Some sweetly observe, that Christ's piety (which we must imitate) was even, constant, unblameable, complying with civil society, without any affrightment of precedent, or without any prodigious instances of actions, greater than the imitation of men. We are not commanded to imitate a life, whose story tells us of ecstasies in prayer, of abstractions of senses, of extraordinary fastings to the weakening of our spirits, and disabling of all animal operations; no, no; but a life of justice, and temperance, and chastity, and piety, and charity, and devotion; such a life as without which human society cannot be conserved;— And it is very remarkable, that besides the easiness of this imitation, there is a virtue and efficacy in the life of Christ; a merit, and impetration in the several passages of Christ's life, to work out our imitation of him. In the Bohemian history it is reported that Wincelaus their King, one winters night going to his devotion in a remote Church, his servant Podavivus, who waited on his Master, and endeavored to imitate his Masters piety, he began to faint through the violence of the snow, and cold; at last the King commanded him, to follow him, and to set his feet in the same footsteps which his feet should mark, and set down for him; the servant did so, and presently he fancied, or found a cure; thus Christ deals with us; it may be we think our way to Heaven is troublesome, obscure, and full of objection; well, saith Christ, But mark my footsteps; come on, and tread where I have stood, and you shall find the virtue of my example will make all smooth, and easy; you shall find the comforts of my company, you shall feel the virtue and influence of a perpetual guide.

4. Because Christ in his Word hath commanded us to follow his steps: Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye call me Master, and Lord, and ye say well, for so I am; if I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet, for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. —Put on therefore bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. —And as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; because it is written, be ye holy, for I am holy. —Against this some object, how can we be holy as Christ is holy, first, the thing is impossible; and secondly, if we could, there would be no need of Christ. But I answer to the first; the thing if rightly understood, is not impossible; we are commanded to be holy as Christ is holy, not in respect of equality, as if our holiness must be of the same compass with the holiness of Christ; but in respect of quality, our holiness must be of the same stamp, and truth, as the holiness of Christ; as when the Apostle saith, That we must love our neighbor as our self; the meaning is, not that our love to our neighbor should be Mathematically equal to the love of our self, for the Law doth allow of degrees in love, accordingly to the degrees of relation in the thing beloved. Do good unto all men, specially to those of the household of faith; love to a friend may safely be greater than love to a stranger; or love to a wife, or child, may safely be greater than to a friend; yet in all our love to others, it must be of the self same nature, as true, as real, as cordial, as sincere, as solid as that to ourselves; We must love our neighbor as ourselves (i.e.) unfeignedly, and without dissimulation.—Again, I answer, to the second, Christ is needful notwithstanding our utmost holiness in two respects. 1. Because we cannot come to full and perfect holiness, and so his grace is requisite to pardon and cover our failings. 2. Because that which we do attain unto, it is not of, or from ourselves, and so his spirit is requisite to strengthen us unto his service. We must be holy as Christ is holy, yet still we must look at the holiness of Christ, as the sun, and root, and fountain; and that our holiness is but as a beam of that sun, but as a branch of that root, but as a stream of that fountain.

For the third, how we must conform to this life? I answer;

1. Let us frame to ourselves some Idea of Christ, let us set before us the life of Christ in the whole, and all the parts of it, as we find it recorded in God's Book. It would be a large picture if I should draw it to the full, but for a taste I shall give it in few lines. Now then setting aside the consideration of Christ as God, or as Mediator, or as Head of his Church.

1. I look at the mind of Christ, at his judgment, will, affections; such as love, joy, delight, and the rest; and especially at the compassions of Jesus Christ. O the dear affections, and compassions which Christ had towards the sons of men! this was his errand from Heaven, and while he was upon the earth he was ever acting it, I mean his pitifulness, I mean his affections, and compassion in healing broken hearts; so the Psalmist, He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds; it is spoken after the manner of a Surgeon, he had a tender heart towards all broken hearts; he endeavored to put all broken bones into their native place again; nor speak I thus only of him in respect of his office; but as he was man, he had in him such a mind, that he could not but compassionate all in misery; O what bowels! what stirrings, and boylings, and wrestlings of a pained heart, touched with sorrow, was ever, upon occasion, in Jesus Christ? peruse these texts, and Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and he was moved with compassion towards them, and he healed their sick.—And Jesus when he came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion towards them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd.—And there came a leper to him, and kneeling down to him, and saying to him, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean, and Jesus moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will, be thou clean.—Then Jesus called his disciples unto him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude. And for the two blind men that cried out, Have mercy on us O Lord, thou son of David, it is said, that Jesus stood still,—and he had compassion on them, and touched their eyes. And the poor prodigal returning, When he was yet a great way off, his Father saw him, and had compassion, and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him. How sweet is this last Instance! that our sense of sinful weakness, should be sorrow and pain to the bowels and heart of Jesus Christ! you that are Parents of young Children, let me put the case; if some of you standing in the relation of a Father, should see his Child sweat, and wrestle under an over-load, till his back were almost broken, and that you should hear him cry, Oh I am gone, I faint, I sink, I die; would not your bowels be moved to pity? and would not your hands be stretched out to help? or if some of you standing in the relation of a Mother, should see your sucking Child fallen into a pit, and wrestling with the water, and crying for help, would you not stir, nor be moved in heart, nor run to deliver the Child from being drowned? Surely you would, and yet all this pity and compassion of yours is but as a shadow of the compassions and dear affections that were, and that are in the heart of Jesus Christ; O he had a mind devoid of sin, and therefore it could not but be full of pity, mercy, and tender bowels of compassion.

2. I look at the grace in Christ; O he was full of grace, yea, full of all the graces of the Spirit; A bundle of Mirrh, is my well-beloved to me:—My Beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire in the vineyards of Engedi: a bundle of Myrrh, and a cluster of camphire denote all the graces of the Spirit; as many flowers are bound together in a nosegay, so the variety of the graces of the Spirit, concenter'd in the heart of Jesus Christ, ex. gr.

1. In him was meekness, He cometh unto thee meek: he had a sweet command and moderation of his anger; he was meek as Moses, nay, though Moses was very meek, and very meek above all the men that were upon the face of the earth, yet Christ's meekness exceeded Mose's, as the body doth exceed the shadow.

2. In him was humility, he saved not the world by his power, but by his humility; in his incarnation, Christ would be humble; and therefore he was born of a poor Virgin, in a common Inn; in his life, his way on earth was a continual lecture of humility; a little before his death he gave such an example of humility as never was the like, He poured water into a bason, and began to wash the disciples feet. O ye Apostles, why tremble ye not at the wonderful sight of this so great humility? Peter, what dost thou? wilt thou ever yield that this Lord of Majesty should wash thy feet? methinks I hear Peter, saying, What Lord, wilt thou wash my feet? art not thou the Son of the living God? the Creator of the world, the beauty of the heavens; the Paradise of Angels, the Redeemer of men, the brightness of the Fathers glory? and I, what am I, but a worm, a clod of earth, a miserable sinner? and wilt thou notwithstanding all this wash my feet? leave Lord, O leave this base office for thy servants; lay down thy towel, and put on thy apparel again; beware that the heaven, or the Angels of heaven be not ashamed of it, when they shall see that by this ceremony thou set'st them beneath the earth; take heed lest the daughter of King Saul despise thee not, when she shall see thee girded about with this towel, after the manner of a servant, and shall say, that she will not take thee for her beloved, and much less for her God, whom she seeth to attend upon so base an office. Thus may I imagine Peter to bespeak his Master, but he little knew what glory lay hid in this humility of Christ; it was for us, and our example; an humble Christ, to make humble Christians.

3. In him was patience; O when I think of Christ's labors in preaching, weariness in travelling, watchfulness in praying, tears in compassionating, and then I add to all these his submission of Spirit, notwithstanding all the affronts, injuries, and exprobrations of men; how should I but cry out, O the patience of Christ! the Apostle tells us that when he was reviled, he reviled not again, when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously,—I have already given a touch of these graces in Christ, which now I may set before me.—In him was wisdom, and knowledge, and justice, and mercy, and temperance, and fortitude, and every virtue, or every grace that possibly I can think of, A bundle of Myrrh is my Beloved unto me, as a cluster of camphire in the vineyards of Engedi.

3. I look at the conversation of Christ in word and deed; for his words, they were gracious. Not an idle word ever came out of the lips of Christ; himself tells us that of every idle word we must give an account; O then how free was Christ of every idle word? he knew the times and seasons when to speak, and when to be silent; he weighed every word with every Circumstance, time, and place, and manner, and matter; There's a time to keep silence, and a time to speak, said Solomon, when he returned again to his wisdom; and hence we read that sometimes Jesus being accused, he held his peace; and when he was accused of the chief Priests and Elders, he answered nothing; but other whiles he pours out whole Cataracts of holy instructions; he takes occasion of vines, of stones, of water, and sheep, to speak a word in season; he is still discoursing of the matters of the Kingdom of Heaven; and he speaks such words as give grace unto all the hearers round about him; so for his deeds and actions they were full of grace and goodness; the Apostle Peter gives him this character (which I look upon as a little description of Christ's life) who went about doing good; it was his meat and drink to do all the good he could; it was as natural to him to do good, as it is for a fountain to stream out, he was holy and heavenly, unspotted every way; O the sweet conversation of Christ! how humbly carries he it amongst men? how benignly towards his Disciples? how pitiful was he towards the poor? to whom (as we read) he made himself most like, He became poor, that we might be made rich; he despised, or abhorred none; no not the very Leapers, that were eschewed of all; he flattered not, the rich and honorable; he was most free from the cares of the world; his prescriptions were, Care not for the things of the morrow; and in himself he was never anxious of bodily needs; above all, he was most solicitous of saving souls.— Much more I might add, if I should go over the particulars in the Gospel; but by these few expressions of Jesus Christ we may conceive of all the rest.—

2. Let us be humbled for our great inconformity to this copy; what an excellent pattern is here before us? and how far, how infinitely do we come short of this blessed pattern? O alas! if Christ will not own me, unless he see his Image written upon me, what will become of my poor soul? why Christ was meek, and humble, and lowly in spirit; Christ was holy, and heavenly; Christ ever went about doing good; and now when I come to examine my own heart according to this original, I find naturally a meet antipathy, a contrariety, I am as opposite to Christ as Hell and Heaven. 1. For my thoughts, within I am full of pride, and malice; I am full of the spirit of the world; what is there in my heart but a world of passions, rebellions, darkness, and deadness of spirit to good? and, 2. If the fountain be so muddy, can I expect clear streams? what words are these, that come many a time from me? Christ would not speak an idle word, but how many idle, evil, sinful words come daily flowing from my lips? Out of the abundance of the mouth the heart speaketh; and if I may guess at my heart by my words, where was my heart this Sabbath, and the other Sabbath, when my discourse was all on my calling, or on the world, or it may be on my lusts, or on my Delilah's, on my right-hand-sins, or on my right-eye-sins? and, 3. What actions are these so frequently performed by me? if I must read my state by my conversation, Whose image and superscription is this? the last oath I swear, the last blasphemy I belched out, the last act of drunkenness, idolatry, adultery I committed, (or if these sins are not fit to be named) the last piece of wrong I did my neighbor, the last prank of pride I played on this stage of the world, the last expense of time when I did no good in the world, neither to myself nor others, the last omission of good, as well as commission of evil; O my soul, whose Image is this? is it the Image of Christ, or of Satan? If the worst Scholar in the School should write thus untowardly after his copy, would he not be ashamed? if in my heart and life I observe so many blots and stains, so great inconformity, and dissimilitude to the life of Christ, how should I but lie in the dust? O woe is me! what a vast disproportion is betwixt Christ's life and mine? why thus, O my soul, shouldst thou humble thyself; each morning, each prayer, each meditation, each self examination, shouldst thou fetch new, fresh, clear, particular causes, occasions, matters of humiliation: as thus; loe there the evenness, gravity, graciousness, uniformity, holiness, spiritualities, divineness, heavenliness of Jesus Christ; loe there the fragrant zeal, dear love, tender pity, constant industry, unwearied pains, patience, admirable self-denial, contempt of the world in Jesus Christ; loe there those many, yea continual devout, divine breathings of soul after God his Fathers glory, after the spiritual and immortal good of the precious souls of his redeemed ones; Oh all the admirable meekness, mercifulness, clemency, charity, with all other excellent temperance, rare composure, wonderful order of his blessed soul! O the sweet expressions, gracious conversation! O the glorious shine, blessed luster of his divine Soul! Oh the sweet countenance, sacred discourse, ravishing demeanour, winning deportment of Jesus Christ! and now I reflect upon myself, on alas! Oh the total, wide, vast, utter difference, distance, disproportion of mine there from! I should punctually answer, perfectly resemble accurately imitate, exactly conform to this life of Christ; but ah my unevenness, lightness, vanity! Ah my rudeness, grossness, deformity, odiousness, sleightness, contemptibleness, execrableness! Ah my sensuality, brutishness, devilishness! how clearly are these, and all other my enormities discovered, discerned, made evident, and plain by the blessed and holy life of Jesus? so true is that rule, Contraria juxta se posita magis elucescunt.

3. Let us quicken, provoke, and incense our sluggish, drowsy souls to conform to Christ. If we will but strictly observe our hearts, we shall find them very backward to this duty, and therefore let us call upon our souls as David did, Bless the Lord O my soul, and let all that is within me bless his holy Name; let us work upon our souls by reasoning with our own hearts, as if we discoursed with them thus, O my heart, or O my soul, if in the deep counsels of eternity this was God's great design to make his Son like thee, that thou also mightest be like his Son, how then shouldst thou but endeavor to conform? and what says the Apostle? For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate, to be conformed to the Image of his Son: this was one of his great purposes from eternity; this law God set down, before he made the world, that I should conform to his Son: and what, O my soul, wouldst thou break the eternal bands of predestination? O, God forbid! Again, if this was one of the ends of Christ's coming, to destroy the works of the devil, to deface all Satan's works, especially his work in me, his Image in me, and to set his own stamp on my soul; how then should I but endeavor to conform? I read but of two ends of Christ's coming into the world in relation to us, whereof the first was to redeem his people, and the other was to purify his people; He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself, a peculiar people, zealous of good works: the one is the work of his merit▪ which goeth upward, to the satisfaction of his Father; the other is the work of his Spirit and grace, which goeth downwards to the sanctification of his Church▪ in the one he bestoweth his righteousness on us by imputation, on the other he fashioneth his Image in us by renovation; and what, O my soul, wouldest thou destroy the end of Christ's coming in the flesh? or wouldest thou miss of that end for which Christ came in relation to thy good; O, God forbid! Again, consider the example of the Saints before thee; if this was their holy ambition to be like their Jesus, emulate them in this, for this is a blessed emulation; it is observable how the heathens themselves had learnt a rule very near to this; Seneca advised that every man should propound to himself, the example of some wise, and virtuous personage, as Cato, or Socrates, or the like; and really to take his life as the direction of all their actions; but is not the life of Jesus far more precious, and infinitely more worthy of imitation? we read in history of one Cecilia a Virgin, who accustomed herself to the beholding of Christ for imitation, and to that purpose she ever carried in her breast some pieces of the Gospel, which she had gathered out of all the Evangelists, and thereon night and day she was either reading, or meditating; this work she carried on in such a circulation, that at last she grew perfect in it, and so enjoyed Christ and the Gospel, not only in her breast, but also in the secrets of her heart; as appeared by her love of Christ, and confidence in Christ, and familiarity with Christ, as also by her contempt of the world, and all its glory, for Christ his sake; There is some resemblance of this in the Spouse, when she resolved of Christ, He shall lie all night betwixt my breast; q. d. he shall be as near me as near may be, my meditation of him (and by consequence my imitation of him) shall be constant and continual; not only in the day, but He shall lie all night betwixt my breasts. What, O my soul, was this the practice of the Saints? and wilt thou not be of that communion? O God forbid! thus let us quicken and provoke our souls to this conformity; let us excite, rouse, incense, awake, and sharpen up our wretched, sluggish, drouzy, lazy, souls; our faint, feeble, slugging, faltering, drooping languishing affections, desires, endeavors! let us with enlarged industry engage, and encourage our backward and remiss spirits to fall upon this duty of conformity, again and again; let us come up higher towards it, or if possibly we may completely to it, that the same mind, and mouth, and life may be in us that was in Jesus Christ, that we may be found to walk after Christ, that we may tread in the very prints of the feet of Christ, that we may climb up after him, into the same heaven! Kingdom, that we may aspire continually towards him, and grow up to him, even to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

4. Let us regulate ourselves by the life of Christ; whatsoever action we go about, let us do it by this rule, what? Would Christ have done this? or at least, Would Christ have allowed this? It is true, some things are expedient and lawful with us, which were not suitable to the Person of Christ, Marriage is honorable with all men, and the bed undefiled; but it did not befit his Person, who came into the world only to spiritual purposes, to beget sons and daughters; writing of books is commendable with men, because like Abel, being dead, they may still speak, and teach those who never saw them, but it would have been derogatory to the Person and office of Christ, for it is his Prerogative to be in the midst of the seven golden Candlesticks, to be present to all his Members, to teach by power, and not by ministry, to write his Law in the hearts of his people, and to make them his Epistle. Contrition, Compunction, Mortification, Repentance, for sin, are acts and duties necessary to our state and condition; for we are sinners, and sinners of the Gentiles; To whom God also hath granted repentance unto life; but these were in no sort agreeable to Christ, for, he was without sin, and needed not to repentance, nor to any part of it. The several states of men, as of Governors, Kings, Judges, Lawyers, Merchants, &c. are convenient for us, otherwise what ataxye, and confusion would there be in the world? and yet Jesus never put himself into any of these states; My Kingdom (says he) is not of this world. Now as in these things we must only respect the Allowance of Christ, so in other things we must reflect upon the example of Christ; as, 1. In sinful acts eschewed by Christ. 2. In moral duties that were done by Christ.

1. In sinful acts eschewed by Christ, as when I am tempted to sin, then am I to reason thus with myself, would my blessed Savior if he were upon earth doth thus and thus? when I am tempted to looseness and immoderate living, then am I to ask conscience such a question as this, would Christ have done thus? would he have spent such a life upon earth as I do? when I am moved by my own corruption, or by Satan to drunkenness, gluttony, sinful and desperate society, to swearing, cursing, revenge, or the like, then am I to ask, is this the life that Christ led? or if he were to live again, would he live after this manner? when I fall into passion, peevishness, rash words, or if it be but idle words, then am I to consider, O but would Christ speak thus? would this be his language? would such a rotten or unprofitable speech as this drop from his honey lips?

2. In case of moral obedience, concerning which we have both his pattern, and precept, I look upon Christ as my rule; and I question thus, did Christ frequently pray both with his Disciples, and alone by himself? and shall I never in my family, or in my closet think upon God? did Christ open his wounds for me? and shall not I open my mouth to him? did Christ serve God without all self-ends, merely in obedience, and to glorify him? and shall I make God's worship subordinate to my aims and turns? did Christ show mercy to his very enemies? and shall I be cruel to Christ's very Members? O my soul, look in all thy sins, and in all thy duties to thy original, and measure them by the holiness of Christ▪ whether in avoiding sin, or in doing duty, think, What would my blessed Savior do in this case? Or what did he in the li•e case, when he was upon earth? If we had these thoughts every day, if Christ were continually before our eyes, if in all we do or speak we should still muse on this, What would Jesus Christ say if he were here? I believe it would be a blessed means, of living in comfort, and spiritual conformity to the Commands of God, yea, of acting Christ's life (as it were) to the life.

5. Let us look fixedly on Jesus Christ, let us keep our spiritual eyes still on the pattern, until we feel ourselves conforming to it: it is a true saying, that Objects and moving reasons kept much upon the mind by serious thoughts, are the great engine, both appointed by nature and grace, to turn about the soul of man. If I may deliver it in fewer terms, Objects considered much, or frequently, do turn the soul into their own nature. Such as the things are we must think of, and consider of, such will be ourselves; or if we be not so, it is not through any imperfection in the object (especially in such an object as Jesus Christ is) but because it is not well applied, and by consideration held upon the heart, till it may work there; indeed the manner of this working may be secret, and insensible, yet if we follow on, we shall feel it in the issue; the beholding of Christ is a powerful beholding; there is a changing, transforming virtue goes out of Christ, by looking on Christ; can we think of his humility, and not be humble? can we think of his meekness and gentleness of Spirit, and yet we continue in our fierceness, roughness, frowardness of Spirit? can a proud fierce heart apprehend a meek, and sweet, and lowly Jesus? no, no; the heart must be suitable to the thing apprehended, it is impossible otherwise; certainly if the look be right, there must be a suitability betwixt the heart and Christ. Sight works upon the imagination in brute creatures; as Laban's Sheep, when they saw the party-coloured Rods, they had Lambs suitable; now will sight work upon imagination, and imagination work a real change in nature? and is not the eye of the mind (especially the eye of faith) more strong and powerful? if I but write after a copy, I shall in a while learn to write like it, if I seriously meditate on any excellent subject, it will leave a print behind it on my spirit; if I read but the life and death of some eminently gracious and holy man, it molds, and fashions, and transforms, and conforms my mind to his similitude; even so, and much more is it in this case; since the eye of faith works in the matter, which in itself is operative and effectual, and therefore it cannot but work more, than where is only simple imitation, or naked meditation; O then let us set the copy of Christ's life (as before described) in our view, and let us look upon it with both eyes, with the eye of reason, and with the eye of faith.

But how should we keep the eye of our faith on this blessed object, until we feel this conformity in us? I answer.—

1. Let us set apart sometimes on purpose to act our faith in this respect; There is a time for all things under the Sun, saith Solomon. It may be sometimes we are in our civil employments, but then is not the time; yet when they are done, and the day begins to close, if together with our closet prayer we would fall on this duty of looking unto Jesus by lively faith, how blessed a season might this be? I know not but that some Christians may do it occasionally, but for any that sets some time apart for it every day, and that in conscience, as we do for prayer, where is he to be found?
2. Let us remove hindrances; Satan labors to hinder the soul from beholding Christ with the dust of the world, The God of this world blinds the eyes of men; O take heed of fixing our eyes on this worlds vanity! our own corruptions are also great hindrances to this view of Christ; away, away with all carnal passions, base humors, sinful desires; unless the soul be spiritual, it can never behold spiritual things.
3. Let us fix our eyes only on this blessed Object; a moving, rolling eye sees nothing clearly; When the Angels are said to look into these things, the word signifies that they look into them narrowly, as they who bowing or stooping down do look into a thing, so should we look narrowly into the life of Christ; our eye of faith should be set upon in a steady manner, as if all the world could not move us, as if we forgot all the things behind, and had no other business in the world but this.

4. Let us look wishingly and cravingly; there is affection, as well as vision in the eye; as the lame man that lay in Solomon's porch looked wishly on Peter and John, expecting to receive something of them, so let us look on Christ with a craving eye, with an humble expectation to receive a supply of grace from Christ, Why Lord thou art not only anointed with the the oil of gladness above thy fellows, but for thy fellows; I am earthly minded, but thou art heavenly; I am full of lusts, but the Image of God is perfect in thee; thou art the fountain of all grace, an head of influence, as well as of eminence; thou art not only above me, but thou hast all grace for me, and therefore O give me some portion of thy meekness, lowliness, heavenly-mindedness, and of all other the graces of thy Spirit. Surely thou art an heaven of grace, full of bright shining stars, Oh that of that fullness thou wouldst give me to receive even grace for grace; I pray Lord with an humble expectation of receiving from thee; Oh let me feel the dropping of the two-olive trees into the golden candlesticks, yea even into my soul.

5. Be we assured that our prayer (if it be in faith) is even now heard; never any came to Christ with strong expectations to receive grace, or any benefit prayed for, that was turned empty away; besides Christ hath engaged himself by promise to write his Law in our hearts; to make us like himself; As he which hath called us is holy,so should (yea, and so shall) we be holy in all manner of conversation. Oh let us build on his gracious promise; Heaven and earth shall pass away before one jot or tittle of his Word shall fail; only understand we his promise in this sense, that our conformity must be gradual, not all at once, We all with open face, beholding as in a glass,the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same Image from glory to glory (i.e.) from grace to grace; or from glory inchoate in obedience, to glory consumate, in our heavenly inheritance.

6. If notwithstanding all this, we feel not for the present this conformity in us, at least in such a degree; let us act over the same particulars again and again; the gifts of grace are therefore communicated by degrees, that we might be taken off from living upon a received stock of grace; and that we might still be running to the spring, and drink in there; why alas, we have a continual need of Christ's letting out himself, and grace into our hearts, and therefore we must wait at the well-head, Christ; we must look on Christ as appointed on purpose by his Father to be the Beginner and Finisher of our holiness; and we must believe that he will never leave that work imperfect, whereunto he is ordained of the Father. We may be confident (saith the Apostle) of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in us, will perform it, or finish it, until the day of Jesus Christ, Phil. 1.6. Oh then be not weary of this work until he accomplish the desires of thy soul.

I have now done with this subject: only before I finish, one word more. Sometimes I have observed that many precious souls, in their endeavors after grace, holiness, sanctification, have been frequent in the use of such and such means, duties, ordinances; wherein I cannot say, but they have done well; and for their help I therefore composed that piece called Media; but of all the ordinances of Christ, this Looking unto Jesus is made least use of, though it be chief of all: It is Christ (when all is done) that is that great Ordinance appointed by God for grace and holiness; and certainly those souls which trade immediately with Jesus Christ, will gain more in a day, than others in a month, in a year. I deny not other helps, but amongst them all, if I would make choice which to fall upon, that I may become more and more holy, I would set before me this glass, (i.e.) Christ's holy life, the great exemplar of holiness; we were at first created after his Image in holiness, and this Image we lost through our sin, and to this Image we should endeavor to be restored by imitation; And how should this be done, but by looking on Christ as our pattern? by running through the several Ages of Christ, and by observing all his graces, and gracious actings? in this respect I charge thee, O my soul (for to what purpose should I charge others, if I begin not at home, and with thee?) that thou make conscience of this practical Evangelical duty; O be much in the exercise of it! not only in the day intend Christ, but when night comes, and thou liest down on thy bed, let thy pillow be as Christ's bosom, in which John the beloved Disciple was said to lean; there lean thou with John; yea, lie thou between his breast; and Let them lie all night betwixt thy breasts; thus mayest thou lie down in peace and sleep, and the Lord only will make thee to dwell in safety; and when day returns again, have this in mind, yea, in all thy thoughts, words, and deeds, even look unto Jesus as thy holy exemplar; Say to thyself, If Christ my Savior were now upon earth, would these be his thoughts, words, and deeds? would he be thus disposed as I now feel myself? would he speak these words that I am now uttering? would he do this that I am now putting my hand unto? O let me not yield myself to any thought, word, or action, which my dear Jesus would be ashamed to own! yea (if it were possible for thee to be so constant in this blessed duty) going and standing, sitting and lying, eating and drinking, speaking and holding thy peace, by thyself or in company, cast an eye upon Jesus; for by this means thou canst not choose but love him more, and joy in him more, and trust in him more, and be more and more familiar with him, and draw more and more grace and virtue, and sweetness from him; O let this be thy wisdom, to think much of Christ; so as to provoke thee to the imitation of Christ! then shalt thou learn to contemn the world, to do good to all, to injure no man, to suffer wrong patiently, yea, to pray for all those that despitefully use thee, and persecute thee; then shalt thou learn to condescend to the weak, to condole sinners cases, to embrace the penitent, to obey Superiors, to minister to all; then shalt thou learn to avoid all boasting, bragging, scandal, immoderate eating and drinking; in a word, all sin. Then shalt thou learn to bear about in thy body the dying of our Lord Jesus Christ, that the life also of Jesus may be made manifest in thy body: So the Apostle, For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh, 2 Corinth. 4.10, 11. Why this is to follow Christ's steps, he descended from heaven to earth for thy sake; do thou trample on earthly things, Seek after the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness, for thy own sake; though the world be sweet, yet Christ is sweeter; though the world prove bitter, yet Christ sustained the bitterness of it for thee: and now he speaks to thee, as he did to Peter, Andrew, James, and John, Come, follow me; O do not faint in the way, lest thou lose thy place in thy Country, that Kingdom of glory.

Thus far we have looked on Jesus as our Jesus in his life, during the whole time of his Ministry; our next work is to look on Jesus, carrying on the great work of man's salvation, during the time of his suffering and dying on the cross, until his resurrection from the dead.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS In His Death. The Sixth Book. PART III.

CHAP. I.

Lam. 1.12. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? behold, and see.

Heb. 12.3. Consider him who hath endured such contradiction of sinners against him.

SECT. I. Of the day of Christ's Sufferings, divided into parts and hours.

The Son of Righteousness, that arose with healing, we shall now see go down in a ruddy Cloud. And in this Piece, as in the former, we must first lay down the Object, and then direct you to look upon it.

The Object is Jesus, carrying on the work of man's Salvation during the time of his Sufferings; now in all the transactions of this life, we shall observe them, as they were carried on successively in those few hours of his Passion and death.

As this work of man's salvation was great, so we cannot but observe how every piece of it was carried on in its due time, even from eternity to eternity. The very time of Christ's passage depended not on the will of man; for his enemies sought many a time before to slay him▪ as Herod in his Infancy, Matth. 2.16. The Jews in his riper age, when sometimes they took up stones to stone him, John 8.59. and sometimes they would have broke his neck from an hill, Luke 4.29: but his time was not then come. We read of the Paschal Lamb, that it was to be slain on the fourteenth day of the first Moneth called Abib, or Nisan: at the full of the Moon in the evening or between the evenings; some think this Moneth answers to our March, others to our April, I shall not be too curious in the Inquisition; for I think it not worth the while: only this, I cannot but observe, that the same day that the Lamb must be slain, must our Paschal Lamb begin his sufferings; and as then it was full Moon, so it notes unto us the fullness of time which now was come; and as it was in such a Month, as when light prevails against darkness, and everything revives and springs; so Christ by his sufferings was to chase away our darkness and death, and to bring in light and life, and a blessed spring of Grace and Glory; and as it was to be slain in the evening, or between the evening; so must Christ the true Paschal Lamb be sacrificed about the very same hour that the Mystical Lamb was slain: to understand which, we must know, that the Jews distinguished their Artificial day into four parts; from six to nine, from nine to twelve, from twelve to three, from three to eight; this last part was counted the Evening of the Day, and the next three hours the Evening of the Night; now in this last part of the Day used the Paschal Lamb to be slain; and after it was slain, some time was taken up to dress it whole for Supper; so Christ at the fourth part of the day, at their ninth hour, that is, at our three of the Clock in the afternoon, between the Evenings, with a loud voice yielded up the Ghost.

For the whole time of these last and extreme sufferings of Christ, I shall reduce them to somewhat less than one natural day; or if we may take the whole day before us consisting of twenty four hours, and begin with the Evening, according to the beginning of natural days from the Creation (as it is said, the evening and the morning made the first day). In this revolution of time, I shall observe these several passages.— As.

1. About six in the Evening Christ celebrated, and eat the Passover with his Disciples, at which time he instituted the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and this continued till the eighth hour.

2. About Eight in the Evening he washed his Disciples feet, and then leaning on the Table, he pointed out Judas that should betray him; and this continued until the ninth hour.

3. About Nine in the Evening (the second Watch in the night) Judas that Traitor, went from the Disciples; and in the mean time Christ made that spiritual Sermon, and afterwards that spiritual Prayer recited only by John; John 14, 15, 16, 17 chapt. and this, (together with a Psalm they sung) continued at least until the tenth hour. Thus far we proceeded before we had done with the Life of Christ. That which concerns his Passion, follows immediately upon this; and upon that only I shall take notice in my following Discourse.

This Passion of Christ I shall divide between the night and day. 1. For the night, and his sufferings therein, we may observe these periods, or thereabouts. As—

1. From ten to twelve he goes over the Brook Cedron to the Garden of Gethsemani, where he prayed earnestly, and sweat water and blood.

2. From twelve till three he is betrayed, and by the soldiers and other Officers, he is bound, and brought to Jerusalem, and carried into the house of Annas, who was one of the chief Priests.

3. From three till six, they led him from Annas to Caiaphas, when he and all the Priests of Jerusalem sate upon Jesus Christ; and there it was that Peter denied Christ, and at last the whole Sanhedrim of the Jews gave their consent to Christ's Condemnation.

2. The Night thus dispatched, at six in the morning, about sun-rising, our Savior was brought unto Pilate, and Judas Iscariot hanged himself, because he had betrayed innocent Blood.—About seven in the same morning Christ is carried to Herod, that cruel Tyrant, who the year before had put John the Baptist to death.—At eight of the same day our Savior Christ is returned to Pilate, who propounded to the Jews, whether they would have Jesus or Barabbas let loose unto them.—About the ninth, (which the Jews call the third hour of the day) Christ was whipped, and crowned with Thorns. About ten, Pontius Pilate brought forth Jesus out of the Common Hall, saying, Behold the man; and then in the place called Gabbatha, he publicly condemned Christ to be Crucified. About eleven our Savior carried his Cross, and was brought to the place called Golgotha, where he was fastened on the Cross, and lifted up, as Moses lifted up the Serpent in the Wilderness.—About twelve (in that Meridian which the Jews call the sixth hour) that supernatural Eclipse of the Sun happened.—And about three in the afternoon (which the Jews call the ninth hour) the Sun now beginning to receive his Light, Christ cried, It is finished; and commending his Spirit into his Fathers hands, he gave up the Ghost.—I shall add to these; that about four in the Afternoon, our blessed Savior was pierced with a Spear, and there issued out of his side both Blood and Water.—And about five (which the Jews call the eleventh, and the last hour of the day) he was buried by Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus.—So that in this round of our natural day, you see the wonderful transaction of Christ's sufferings. I shall take them in order, and begin with his sufferings in that night before his crucifying. And Jesus said unto his Disciples, all ye shall be offended because of me this night: and he said unto Peter, that this day, even in this night, before the Cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

SECT. II. Of the Brook over which Christ passed.

The first passage of that Night, was Christ's going over the Brook Cedron, to the Garden of Gethsemane. When Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his Disciples over the Brook Cedron, where was a Garden, into which he entered, and his Disciples.

In this passage observe we these Particulars. 1. The River over which they passed. 2. The Garden into which they entered. 3. The Prayer he there made, and the dolours and agonies he there suffered.

1. He and his Disciples went over the Brook Cedron. So it was called (say some) from the same Cedars that grew all along the Banks; or (say others) from the darkness of the Valley, so Kader signifies darkness; and this was done to fulfil a Prophecy; He shall drink of the Brook in the way. By the Brook or Torrent, we may understand mystically the wrath of God, and the rage of men, the very afflictions, which befell Jesus Christ: and by his drinking of the Brook, we may understand Christ enduring afflictions, or (as others) his enduring many afflictions, and not a few. 1. That afflictions are understood by waters, we find it very frequently in Scriptures; The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of Belial made me afraid.—Deep calleth unto deep, at the noise of the water spouts, all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.—And, Save me, O God, for the waters are come in unto my soul; and, if it had not been the Lord who was on our side,—then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul, then the proud waters had gone over our soul.

2. As waters signify afflictions; so Christ drinking of those waters, it signified Christ's suffering of afflictions; or as others, it signifies Christ's suffering of many afflictions. Thus we find together two words with relation thereunto, are ye able to drink of the cup (saith Christ) that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the Baptism that I am baptized with? He that drinketh, hath the water in him, and he that is baptized, dipped, or plunged, hath the water about him; so it notes the variety or universality of afflictions which Christ suffered; it was within him, and it was about him, he was every way afflicted.

Not to speak yet of those sufferings, which yet we are not come to speak unto; we find here in the way, betwixt the City and the Garden, that Christ went over the Brook Cedron; in the night he wades through cold waters on bare feet; and as he wades through them, he drinks of them, he doth not sip, but drink; he shall drink of the Brook in the way. I know some would not have this Prophecy accomplished till afore Christ's apprehension, when it is said that the rude rout brought him again to Jerusalem, over the Brook Cedron; and then he drunk of the Brook; but I find no mention of this Brook in Scripture at such a time; only now in this way, I find these passages. 1. His Conference with his Disciples as they go along. 2. The Disciples reply upon his Conference. 3. His dolorous passage over the Brook, betokening the very wrath of God.

1. In the way he hath a serious conference with his disciples: so the Evangelist; and when they had sung an hymn, they went out towards the mount of Olives, and then saith Jesus unto them, all ye shall be offended because of me this night; for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad. Christ now begins the story of his Passion; the shepherd shall be smitten; and he proves it from God's Decree, and from the Prophecy of the Prophet, Zech. 13.7. Awake, O Sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow.—Smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered abroad. God the Father is here brought in, as drawing and whetting his Sword, and calling upon it, to do execution against Jesus Christ; God the Father had an hand in the sufferings; It pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief.—I will smite the shepherd, saith God; it was not a naked permission, but a positive decree, and actual providence of God that Christ should suffer; the plot was long since drawn, and lay hid in God's bosom, till he was pleased by the actions of men to copy it out, and to give the world a draught of it. This was not a thing of yesterday; no, no; God spent his eternal thoughts about it; the Story was long since written in Zecharie's Book, and in the Volume of God's Book; Christ was ordained to be a Lamb slain from the beginning of the world; him being delivered by the determinate council and fore-knowledge of God, ye have taken (saith Peter) and by wicked hands have crucified and slain: the enemies of Christ, though they broke Commands, yet they fulfilled Decrees. Against thy holy Child Jesus whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and people of Israel were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy council determined before to be done. The Story of Christ's sufferings was long since taken up, and resolved on in the Councils of Heaven; and now in the way the only begotten Son which lay in the bosom of his Father, reveals this story; he tells his Disciples, It is written, it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered.

2. The Disciples hearing this discovery of the shepherd being smitten, and the sheep being scattered, they are amazed; what shall Christ die? and shall we like cowards run away, and leave him alone in the combat? Peter, who seems boldest, he speaks first; Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended. O rash presumption! It appears in these particulars;—1. Peter prefers himself before the rest, as if all the other Disciples had been weak, and he only strong; though all should be offended, yet will not I. 2. Peter contradicts Christ's great discovery of his Father's great design from all eternity, with a few bragging words; q. d. what though Zechary hath said it, and God hath decreed it, yet on my part, I will never do it; Though I should die with thee, I will not deny thee. 3. Peter in his boast never mentions God's help, or God's assistance; whereas in relation to future promises, and future purposes, the Apostles Rule is, ye ought to say, if the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, and that: So Peter should have said, by God's assistance I will not be offended; by the Lord's help, I will not deny thee; if the Lord will, I will do this and that; I will live with thee, and die with thee, rather than I will deny thee; but we find no such word in all the Story; and therefore Christ takes him off his bottoms in the first place; Verily I say unto thee Peter, that this night before the Cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice: Oh no, saith Peter; he will not go off his presumptuous confidence; though I should die with thee, I will not deny thee; likewise also said all his Disciples. But I must not dwell on these passages.

3. His dolorous passage over the Brook succeeds; He went forth with his Disciples over the Brook Cedron: I never read of this Brook Cedron, but some way or other it points at the sufferings of our Savior; I shall instance in some places. 1. When David fled from Absalom out of Jerusalem, it is said that all the Country wept with a loud voice, and all the people passed over; the King also himself passed over the Brook Cedron.—towards the way of the wilderness. In this story we find David passing over this Brook Cedron with bare head and bare feet; and he and all his men weeping as they went up by the Ascent of Mount Olivet: I cannot think but in this, King David was a type of King Jesus: Christ, as another David, with his Soldiers or Disciples, goes out of Jerusalem, bare-head and bare-foot (as this type seems to speak) what weeping was in the way, I cannot tell; but probably sadness was in the hearts both of him and his Disciples; whose conference was of flying, suffering, dying the most grievous death that ever was; all the difference that I find betwixt the type and antitype in this passage, is, in that David fled from the face of Absalom, but Christ goes out of Jerusalem, not to fly from Judas, or the Jews, but rather to commit himself into their hands.

2. When Solomon confined Shimei to his House in Jerusalem, saying, Dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither; for it shall be, that on the day thou goest out, and passest over the Brook Cedron, thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die. Now two of the servants of Shimei running away from him, he follows after them, and passing over this Brook Cedron, it became his death; why, here was a type of Jesus Christ; we were those fugitive servants that run away from God; and to fetch us home, Jesus goes over the brook Cedron; rather than he will lose his servants, he will lose his life, All the difference that I find betwixt Shimei and Christ in this, is, in that Shimei was but a wicked man, and yet he died an honorable death, not for his servants, but for his own transgression; but Christ, being a just man (so Pilate's wife sent her Husband word, Have thou nothing to do with that just man) he died a most ignominious shameful death, even the death of the Cross, and that not for himself, but for us; He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities.

3. When the good Kings, Hezekiah, and Asa, and Josiah purged the City and the Temple of Idolatry, they burnt the cursed things at the Brook Kidron, and cast them therein. And Asa cut down the Idol, and he brought out the Grove from the House of the Lord without Jerusalem unto the Brook Kidron, and burnt it at the Brook Kidron;—and the Priests went into the inner part of the house of the Lord, to cleanse it, and brought all the uncleanness that they found in the Temple of the Lord, into the Court of the house of the Lord; and the Levites took it to carry it out abroad into the Brook Kidron.—and they arose and took away the Altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the Altars for Incense took they away, and cast them into the Brook Kidron, or Cedron. All these note unto us, that the Brook was as it were the sink of the Temple, into which all the purgamenta, and uncleannesses of God's house, and all the accursed things were to be cast: and here again was a type of Christ; upon him was cast all the filths of our sins, that as a River or Fountain he might cleanse us from them; in this respect he is said to be made sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him: he was made sin for us, and a curse for us, that so he might swallow up Sin and Death, and might be destruction of Hell, and all.

I cannot pass over this passage of the Brook without some Use or Application to ourselves.

1. It informs. Methinks this Valley, and this Brook of Cedron is a right representation of a Christians Life; Jesus went forth with his Disciples over the Brook Cedron: What is our life if we are Christ's, but a passage through a vale of tears, and over a Brook of several afflictions? Many are the troubles of the righteous. The very word Cedron, which signifies darkness, denotes this state, an horror of great darkness was said to fall on Abraham, and then said God, know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a Land that is not theirs, and shall serve them, and they shall afflict them four hundred years. As God made the evening and the morning the first day, and second day, and third day, &c. See, O the life of God's Saints is as the evening of troubles, and their happiness hereafter is as the morning of Glory; God's worst is first, with those that are his; the way to Canaan is through the wilderness; the way to Zion is through the valley of Baca. Through much tribulation we must enter into the Kingdom of God. In the world ye shall have tribulation, saith Christ; yea, all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution, saith the Apostle;—Our rest is not here in this world; what is this world, but an Ark of travel, a school of vanities, a fear of deceits, a Labarinth of error, a barren wilderness, a strong field, a tempestous sea, a swelling brook, a vale of tears full of all miseries?

2. It reproves. It is the first passage of Christ when he begins his sufferings, to go over the Brook Cedron, and it is the A, B, C of Christianity (as Bradford said) to learn the Lesson of taking up the Cross and following Christ. Surely this world is no place, and this life it is no time for pleasure; God hath not cast man out of Paradise, that he should find another Paradise on this side heaven. Oh why do we seek the living among the dead? Why do we seek for living comforts, where we must expect to die daily? it is only heaven that is above all winds, and storms and tempests, and seas, and brooks, and waves: Oh why do we look for joys in a vale of tears? It was an heavy charge that the Apostle James laid upon some, that they lived in pleasure upon earth, q. d. Earth is not the place for pleasure; earth is the place of sorrow, of trouble, of mourning, of affliction; Remember that thou in thy life-time receivedst thy good things, and Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art Tormented. All the pleasure that wicked men have, it is upon earth; but the condition of the godly is clean contrary: Oh 'tis sad to out-live our happiness, and when we should live indeed, then to want our comforts and our joys. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward; said Christ of Hypocrites; their Heaven is past; they spend their days in wealth, or in mirth (saith Job) of the wicked, and in a moment go down to the Grave: Alas, their best days are then past, and they must never be merry anymore. Ah fond Fools, of Adam's seed, to lose Heaven for a little earthly contentment! How should this sour your carnal joys, when you remember, all this is only upon earth, it cannot be forever? there must be a change of all these things; here you laugh, and hereafter you must howl: no sooner death comes, but then you will cry, Farewell world; Oh into what a Gulf am I now falling!

3. It instructs. Ah my Brethren! let's remember, we are pilgrims and strangers upon earth, and our way lies over the Brook and Valley of Cedron; we cannot expect to enter with Christ into glory, but we must first drink of the Brook in the way; (i.e.) we must endure many afflictions, variety of afflictions.—You will say, this an hard saying, who can hear it? I remember when Jesus told his Disciples of his sufferings to be accomplished at Jerusalem, Peter takes the boldness to dehort his Master; Be it far from thee, Lord, this shall not be unto thee; but Jesus thereupon calls him Satan, meaning that no greater contradictions can be offered to the designs of God and Christ, than to dissuade us from sufferings. There's too much of Peter's humor abides amongst us: Oh this Doctrine of afflictions will not down with Libertines, Antinomians, and the like; and hence we believe we have our Congregations so thin in comparison of some of theirs; they that can break off the yoke of Obedience, and untie the Bands of Discipline, and preach a cheap Religion, and present heaven in the midst of flowers, and strew palms and carpets in the way, and offer great liberty of living under sin, and reconcile eternity with the present enjoyment, shall have their Schools filled with Disciples; but they that preach the Cross, and sufferings, and afflictions, and strictness of an holy life, they shall have the lot of their blessed Lord, (i.e.) they shall be ill thought of, and deserted, and railed against. Well, but if this be the way that Christ hath led us, whilst others abide at ease in Zion, let us follow him in the valley, and over the Brook that is called Cedron.

Thus far have we observed Christ in the way; together with his passage over Cedron: we come now to the Garden, into which he entered, and his Disciples.

SECT. III. Of the Garden into which Christ entered.

Matthew relates it thus, then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, it signifies in special, a Field, a Village; but more generally a Place, as we translate it; and this place was called Gethsemane (i.e.) a valley of fatness: Certainly it was a most fruitful and pleasant place, seated at the foot of the Mount of Olives: accordingly John relates it thus, Jesus went forth with his Disciples over the Brook Cedron, where was a Garden; many Mysteries are included in this Word; and I believe it is not without reason, that our Savior goes into a Garden. As,—1. Because Gardens are solitary places fit for meditation and prayer; to this end we find Christ sometimes on a Mountain, and sometimes in a Garden. 2. Because Gardens are places fit for repose and rest, when Christ was weary with preaching, working of Miracles, and doing acts of Grace in Jerusalem, then he retires into this Garden. 3. Because a Garden was the place wherein we fell, and therefore Christ made choice of a Garden, to begin there the greatest work of our Redemption: In the first Garden was the beginning of all evils, and in this garden was the beginning of our restitution from all evils; in the first Garden, the first Adam was overthrown by Satan, and in this Garden the second Adam overcame, and Satan himself was by him overcome; in the first Garden sin was contracted, and we were indebted by our sins to God; and in this Garden sin was paid for, by that great and precious price of the blood of God: in the first Garden man surfeited by eating the forbidden fruit; and in this Garden Christ sweat it out wonderfully, even by a bloody sweat: in the first Garden, Death first made its entrance into the world; and in this Garden Life enters to restore us from Death to Life again: in the first Garden Adam's Liberty to sin brought himself and all us into bondage; and in this Garden, Christ being bound and fettered, we are thereby freed and reduced to liberty. I might thus descant in respect of every Circumstance; but this is the sum; in a Garden first begun our sin, and in this Garden first began the Passion, that great Work and Merit of our Redemption. 4. Christ goes especially into this Garden, that his enemies might the more easily find him out; the Evangelist tells us, that this Garden was a place often frequented by Jesus Christ; so that Judas, which betrayed him, knew the place, for

Jesus oftentimes resorted thither with his Disciples; sure then he went not thither to hide himself, but rather to expose himself; and like a noble Champion, to appear first in the field, and to expect his enemies. Thus it appears to all the world, that Christ's death was voluntary. He poured forth his soul unto death (saith the Prophet) he gave himself for our sins (saith the Apostle) nay, himself tells us, therefore doth my Father love me because I laid down my life: no man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself; I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it up again. But I will not stay you at the Door; let us follow Christ into the Garden, and observe his Prayer and his Sufferings there.

SECT. IV. Of the Prayer that Christ there made.

JESUS entering the Garden, he left his Disciples at the entrance of it, calling with him Peter, James and John; they only saw his transfiguration, the earnest of his future Glory, and therefore his pleasure was, that they only should see of how great glory he would disrobe himself, even for our sakes.—In the garden we may observe, first his Prayer, and secondly his Passion.

1. He betakes himself to his great Antidote, which, himself, the great Physician of our souls, prescribed to all the world; he prays to his heavenly Father; he kneels down; and not only so, but falls flat upon the ground; he prays with an intention great as his sorrow, and yet with a submission so ready, as if the Cup had been the most indifferent thing in the world. The Form of his Prayer ran thus, O my Father, if it be possible, let this Cup pass from me, nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt. In this Prayer observe we these Particulars: 1. The person to whom he prays, O my Father. 2. The matter for which he prays; Let this Cup pass from me. 3. The Limitation of this Prayer; If it be possible, and if it be thy will.

1. For the Person to whom he prays; it is his Father: As Christ prayed not in his Godhead, but according to his Manhood, so neither prayed he to himself as God; but to the Father, the first person of the God-head: Hence some observe, that as the Father sometimes saying, This is my beloved Son, he spake not to himself, but to the Son; so the Son usually saying, O my Father, he prays not to himself, but to the Father.

2. For the Matter of his Prayer: Let this Cup pass from me: Some interpret thus; Let this Cup pass by me, Oh that I might not taste it! But others thus; Let this Cup pass from me; though I must taste it, yet Oh that I may not betoo long, or tediously annoyed by it! That which leads unto this last interpretation is that of the Apostle, Christ in the days of his flesh offered up Prayers and Supplications with strong cries and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and he was heard in that which he feared, Heb. 5.7. How was he heard? not in the removal of the Cup; for he drank it up all: but in respect of the tedious annoyance or poisoning of the Cup; for though it made him sweat drops of blood, though it grieved him, and pained him, and made him cry out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Though it cast him into a sleep, and laid him dead in his Grave, and there sealed him for a time; yet presently within the space of forty hours, or thereabouts, he revived, and awakened as a Lion out of sleep, or as a Giant refreshed with wine; and so it passed from him, as he prayed, in a very short time, and by that short and momentary death, he purchased to his people everlasting Life.

3. For the Limitation of his Prayer; If it be possible, if it be thy will: He knows what is his Fathers will, and he prays accordingly, and is willing to submit unto it: if the passing of the Cup be according to the last interpretation, we shall need none of these many distinctions to reconcile the will of God and Christ: If it be possible, signifies the earnestness of the Prayer: and if it be thy will, the submission of Christ unto his Father; the Prayer is short but sweet: How many things needful to a Prayer do we find concentrated in this one instance? Here is Humility of Spirit, Lowliness of Deportment, Importunity of Desire, a Fervent Heart, a Lawful Matter, and a Resignation to the will of God. Some think this the most fervent prayer that ever Christ made on earth; If it be possible, O! if it be possible, let this Cup pass from me: And I think it was the greatest dereliction and submission to the will of God, that ever was found upon the earth, for whether the Cup might pass or not pass, he leaves it to his Father; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt, q. d. Though in this Cup are many Ingredients, it is full red, and hath in it many dregs, and I know I must drink, and suck out the very utmost dreg, yet whether it shall pass from me in that short time, or continue with me a long long time, I leave it to thy will: I see in respect of my humanity, there is in me flesh and blood, O! I am frail and weak; I cannot but fear the wrath of God, and therefore I pray thus earnestly to my God; O, my Father, if it be possible, let this Cup pass from me, nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt.

But what was there in the Cup, that made Christ pray thus earnestly that it might pass from him? I answer,—

1. The great pain that he must endure; the buffetings, whippings, bleedings, crucifying; all the torments from first to last throughout all his body: why all these now came into his mind, and all these were put into the Cup of which he must drink.

2. The great shame that he must undergo, this was more than pain: as a good name is better than precious Ointment, and loving favor better than silver and Gold; so is shame a greater punishment to the mind, than any torture can be to the flesh. Now came into his thoughts his apprehending, binding, judging, scorning, reviling, condemning; and Oh what a bloody blush comes into the face of Christ, whilst in the cup he sees these Ingredients!

3. The neglect of men, notwithstanding both his pain and shame: I look upon this as a greater cut to the heart of Christ than both the former: when he considered, that after all his sufferings and reproaches, few would regard, O this was a bitter Ingredient! naturally men desire, if they cannot be delivered, yet to be pitied; it is a kind of ease, even to find some regard among the Sons of men; it shows that they wish us well, and that they would give us ease if they could; but Oh when it comes to this, that a poor wretch is under many sufferings, and great shame, and that he finds none so much as to regard all this, now verily it is an heavy case; and hence was Christ's Complaint: Have ye no regard, O all ye that pass by the way? Consider, and behold, if ever there were sorrow like unto my sorrow, which was done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the days of his fierce anger. Christ complains not of the sharp pains he endured, but he complains of this, Have ye no regard? He cries not out, Oh deliver me and save me; but Oh consider and regard me; q. d. All that I suffer I am contented with, I regard it not; only this troubles me, that you will not regard: why, it is for you that I endure all this; and do you so look upon it, as if it nothing at all concerned you? Suppose a Prince should pay some mighty price to redeem a slave from death, and the slave should grow so desperate, as after the price paid, to throw himself upon his death, yea, with all the strength and might he hath, to offer a death upon his very Redeemer, would not this trouble? Why, thus it was; Christ is willing to redeem us with his own precious blood, but he saw many to pass by without any regard, yea, ready to trample his precious blood under their feet, and to account the blood of the Covenant as an unholy thing: Oh this was another Spear in the heart of Christ, or a bitter Ingredient in this Cup.

4. The Guilt of sin which he was now to undergo; upon him was laid the iniquity of us all. All the sins of all Believers in the world, from the first Creation, to the last Judgment, were laid on him: Oh what a weight was this! Surely one sin is like a Talent of Lead; Oh then what were so many thousands of millions? The very earth itself groans under the weight of sin until this day. David cried out, that his iniquities were a burden too heavy for him to bear: Nay, God himself complains, Behold, I am pressed under you, as a Cart is pressed that is full of sheaves. Now then, no wonder if Christ bearing all the sins of Jews and Gentiles, bond and free, cry out, My Soul is heavy; for sin was heavy on his soul.—In that I say, all the sins of all Believers were laid on Christ, understand me soberly; my meaning is not that Believers sins were so laid on Christ, as that they ceased to be Believers sins according to their physical and real in-dwelling, but only that they were laid on Christ by Law-imputation, or by legal-obligation to satisfactory punishment. I make a difference betwixt sin, and the guilt of sin; for sin itself is macula, the blot, the defilement, and blackness of sin, which I conceive, is nothing but the absence and privation of that moral rectitude and righteousness which the Law requireth: but the guilt of Sin is somewhat issuing from this blot and blackness, according to which the Person is liable and obnoxious to eternal punishment. Some indeed give a distinction of the guilt of sin; there is reatus culpae, the guilt of sin, as sin, and this is all one with sin, being the very essence, soul, and formal being of sin; they call it a fundamental, or potential guilt; and there is reatus poenae, reatus personae, reatus actualis, the guilt or obligation to punishment, the actual guilt, or actual obligation of the person who hath thus sinned to punishment; and this guilt is a thing far different from sin itself, and is separable from sin: yea, and is removed from sin in our justification. Now this was the sin or guilt, which was laid on Christ, in which sense the Apostle speaks, who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the Tree; how bare our sins on the Tree, but by his sufferings?—And he hath laid on him the iniquity of us all?—how laid on him, but by imputation?—And he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; how made sin for us? surely there was in Christ no fundamental guilt; no, no, but he was made Sin by imputation and Law-account: he was our surety, and so our sins were laid on him in order to punishment, as if now in the Garden, he had said to his Father, Thou hast given me a Body, as I have taken the debts and sins of all believers in the world upon me: Come now, and arrest me as the only pay-Master; lo here I am to do and suffer for their sins, whatsoever thou pleasest, Psal. 40.6, 7, 8. Heb. 10.4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Or, as if he had said to his Father thus, I am the sinner, O Father! I am the surety, all my friends wants, and all their debts, let them be laid on me; my life for their life, my soul for their souls, my glory for their glory, my heaven for their heaven: Now this was no small matter; little do we know or consider, what is the weight and guilt of sin. And this was another ingredient, in Christ's Cup.

5. The Power and malice of Satan; the devil had a full leave and license; not as it was with Job; Do what thou wilt, Satan, but save his life; no, no, he had a commission without any such restriction or limitation; the whole power of darkness was let loose to use all his violence, and to afflict him as far as possibly he could; and this our Savior intimates, when he saith; that the Prince of this world cometh: Now was it that the Word must be accomplished, Thou shalt bruise his heel; the Devil could go no higher than the heel of Christ; but whatever he could do, he was sure to do; he had been nibbling a great while at his heel; no sooner he was born, but he would have killed him; and after he fell fiercely on him in the Wilderness, but now all the Power and all the malice of hell conjoynes. If we look on the Devil in respect of his evil nature, he is compared to a roaring Lion: not only is he a Lion, but a roaring Lion; his disposition to do mischief, is always wound up to the height: and if we look on the Devil in respect of his Power, there is no part of our souls or bodies that he cannot reach; the Apostle describing his Power, he gives him names above the highest comparisons; as Principalities, Powers, Rulers of the darkness of this World, Spiritual wickedness above: Devils are not only called Princes, but Principalities; not only mighty, but Powers; not only Rulers of a part, but of all the darkness of all this World; not only wicked Spirits, but spiritual wickedness; not only about us, but above us: they hang over our heads continually; you know what a disadvantage it is to have your enemy get the hill, the upper ground; and this they have naturally, and always. Oh then what a combat must this be when all the Power, and all the malice of all the Devils in hell, should by the permission of God, arm themselves against the Son of God. Surely this was a bitter Ingredient in Christ's Cup.

6. The wrath of God himself; this, above all, was the most bitter Dreg; it lay in the bottom, and Christ must drink it also: Oh the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger; God afflicts some in mercy, and some in anger, this was in his anger; and yet in his anger God is not like to all; some he afflicts in his more gentle and mild, others in his fierce anger; this was in the very fierceness of his anger It is agreed upon by all Divines, that now Christ saw himself bearing the sins of all Believers, and standing before the judgment-seat of God; to this end are those words, Now is the judgment of this World, and the Prince of this World shall be cast out. Now is the judgment of this World, q. d. Now I see God sitting in judgment upon the World; and as a right Representative of all the World of Believers, here I stand before his Tribunal ready to undergo all the punishments due to them for their sins: why, there is no other way to save their souls, and to satisfy justice, but that the fire of thy indignation should kindle against me; q. d. O I know it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God: Oh I know God is a consuming fire; who can stand before his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him: But for this end came I into the world; O my Father, I will drink this Cup; lo here an open Breast; come, prepare the Armory of thy wrath, and herein shoot all the Arrows of revenge. —And yet, O my Father, let me not be oppressed, subverted, or swallowed, up by thy wrath, let not thy displeasure continue longer than my patience or obedience can endure; there is in me flesh and blood in respect of my humanity, and my flesh trembleth for fear of thee, I am afraid of thy judgments: Oh if it be possible, if it be possible, let this Cup pass from me.

SECT. V. Of the Dolours and Agonies that Christ there suffered

2. CHrist's Passion in the Garden was either before, or at his apprehension; his Passion before is declared, 1. By his Sorrow. 2. By his Sweat

1. For his sorrow; the Evangelists diversely relate it; He began to be sorrowful, and very heavy, saith Matthew: He began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy, saith Mark: And being in an Agony, he prayed more earnestly, saith Luke: Now is my Soul troubled, and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour; but for this cause came I unto this hour, saith John. All avow this sorrow to be great, and so it is confessed by Christ himself: Then saith he unto them, my soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death. Ah Christians! who can speak out this sorrow? The Spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity, but a wounded Spirit who can bear? Christ's soul is sorrowful; or if that be too flat, his soul is sorrowful, exceeding sorrowful; or if that language be too low, his soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death; not only extensively, such as must continue for the space of seventeen or eighteen hours, even until death itself should finish it; but also intensively, such, and so great, as that which is used to be at the very point of death; and such as were able to bring death itself, had not Christ been reserved to a greater and an heavier punishment. Of this sorrow is that especially spoken, consider, and behold, if ever there were sorrow like unto my sorrow: Many a sad and sorrowful soul hath no question been in the world; but the like sorrow to this was never since the Creation: the very terms of the Evangelists speak no less; he was sorrowful and heavy, saith one: amazed and very heavy, saith another: in an Agony, saith a third: in a soul trouble, saith a fourth. Surely the bodily torments of the Cross were inferior to this agony of his soul; the pain of the body, is the body of pain: Oh but the very soul of sorrow, and pain, is the soul's sorrow, and the Souls's pain. It was a sorrow unspeakable, and therefore I must leave it, as not being able to utter it.

2. For his Sweat; Luke only relates it: And his sweat was as it were, great drops of blood falling down to the ground. In the words I observe a Clymax. 1. His sweat was as it were blood. Ethymius, and Theophilact interpret those words as only a similitude, or figurative Hyperbole; an usual kind of speech to call a vehement sweat, a bloody sweat: as he that weeps bitterly, is said to weep tears of blood. Augustine, Jerome, Epiphanius, Athanasius, Irenaeus, and others, from the beginning of the Church, understand it in a literal sense, and believe it was truly, and properly a bloody sweat; nor is the Objection considerable, that it was sicut guttae sanguinis, as it were drops of blood; for if the Holy Ghost had only intended that sicut for a similitude or Hyperbole, he would rather have expressed it, as it were drops of water, than as it were drops of blood. We all know sweat is more like to water than to blood: Besides, a sicut, in Scripture-phrase, doth not always denote a similitude, but sometimes the very thing itself, according to the verity of it: thus we beheld his Glory, the Glory as it were, of the only begotten Son of the Father.—and their words seemed to them as it were idle Tales, and they believed them not. The words in the Original, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 are the same; here is the first step of this Clymax, his sweat was a wonderful sweat, not a sweat of water, but of red gore-blood.

2. Great drops of blood, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . There is sudor diaphoreticus, a thin faint sweat, and sudor grumosus, a thick, concrete, and clotted sweat; in this bloody sweat of Christ, it came not from him in small dews, but in great drops; they were drops, and great drops of Blood, crassie and thick drops; and hence it is concluded as preternatural; for though much may be said for sweating blood in a course of nature; Aristotle affirms it, and Augustine grants that he knew a man that could sweat blood even when he pleased; in faint bodies a subtle thin blood, like sweat, may pass through the pores of the Skin; but that through the same pores, crass, thick, and great drops of blood should issue out, it was not, it could not be without a Miracle: Some call them grumes, others globes of blood; certainly the drops are great, so great, as if they had started through his skin to outrun the streams and rivers of his Cross.

3. Here is yet another clymax, in that these great drops of blood did not only distillare, drop out; but decurrere, run a stream down so fast, as if they had issued out of most deadly wounds; they were great drops of blood falling down to the ground; here's magnitude and multitude; great drops, and those so many, so plenteous, as that they went through his apparel and all, streaming down to the ground: now was it that his garments were died with crimson red: that of the Prophet, though spoken in another sense, yet in some respect may be applied to this: Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel? and thy garments like him that treadeth the Wine-fat? Oh what a sight was here! His Head and Members are all on a bloody sweat, his sweat trickles down, and bedecks his garments, which stood like a new firmament studded with stars, portending an approaching storm: nor stays it there, but it falls down to the ground: Oh happy Garden watered with such treas of blood! how much better are these rivers than Abana and Pharphar, rivers of Damascus; yea, than all the waters of Israel; yea, than all those Rivers that water the Garden of Eden?—

1. This may inform us of the weight and burden of sin, that thus presseth Christ under it till he sweat and bleed: when the first Adam had committed the first sin, this was the penalty, in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread; but now the second Adam takes upon him all the Sins of all Believers in the world; he sweats not only in his face, but in all his Body. O then, how was that face disfigured, when it stood all on drops, and those drops, not of a watery sweat, but of a gore blood? We see in other men, that when they are disquieted with fear or grief, the blood usually runs to the heart; indeed that is the principal member, and therefore, leaving the other parts, it goes thither, as of choice, to comfort that; but our sweet Savior contrariwise (because he would suffer without any manner of comfort) he denies to himself this common relief of nature; all the Powers of our souls, and parts of our bodies were stained with sin, and therefore he sweats blood from every part; we sin, and our eyes will scarce drop a tear for sin; but his eyes, and ears, and head, and hands, and feet, and heart, and all run rivers of tears of blood for us, even for our sins.—Let Jesuits and Friars in meditating of Christ's sufferings, cry out against the Jews; in this bloody sweat of Christ I see another use; alas! here's no Jew, no Judas, no Herod, no Pilate, no Scribe, no Pharisees? here's no tormentors to whip him; no soldiers to crown his Head with thrones, here's neither nails, nor spear to fetch his blood out of his Body; how comes it then to pass? Is there any natural cause? ah, no: the night is cold, which naturally draws blood inwards; in the open air he lies grovelling on the ground, and there he sweats, and bleeds. O my heart, who hath done this deed? As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing, shall surely die. So said David▪ when Nathan replied upon him, thou art the man. O my heart! my sinful heart! O my sinful, deceitful, abominable heart! thou art the Murderer; thy sins sate upon the heart of Christ, as heavy as a Mountain of Lead or Iron; when none was near, but a few dull, heavy, sleepy Disciples; then all the sins of Believers (and amongst them, thy sins) fell upon the soul of Christ, as so many murderers; and squeezed blood, and made him cry out. My soul is heavy, heavy unto death. Go thy ways now, and weep with Peter, and say with David, I have sinned against thee, Lord. O how should these eyes of mine look upon Christ thus sweating, bleeding, streaming out blood, clods of blood, great drops of blood, from all the parts and members of his Body, but I must mourn over him; as one that mourneth for his only son, but I must be in bitterness, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born?

2. This may inform us of the extraordinary love of Christ. It is said of the pelican, that when her young ones are struck with the tail of some poisonous Serpent, she presently strikes her breast with her Beak or Bill, and so lets out her own blood, as a Medicine for them that they may suck and live; even so Christ seeing us struck with the poison of sin, he is impatient of delay, he would not stay till the Jews let him blood with their whips, and thorns, and nails; I have a Baptism to be baptized with (saith Christ) and how am I straightened till it be accomplished? He is big with love, and therefore he opens all his pores of his own accord, he lets blood gush out from every part, and thereof he makes a precious Balsom to cure our wounds. O the Love of Christ! As Elihu could sometimes say, Behold my belly is as wine, which hath no vent, it is ready to burst like new Bottles; so the heart of Christ was full, even full of love, so full that it could not hold, but it burst out through every part and member of his body in a bloody sweat. I will not say but that every drop of Christ's blood was very precious, and of sufficient value to save a world; but certainly, that blood which was not forced by whips, or thorns, or spear, is to be had in singular honor; as the myrrh, that by incision of the Tree, flows out, is very precious; yet that which drops out of its own accord, is accounted as the first and choice; and as the Balsam, which way soever it come, is sweet; yet that which falls of its own accord, is held the most pure and odoriferous: to this alludes that Apocryphal-saying in Ecclesiasticus, I gave a sweet smell like Cinamon, and I yielded a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh: the vulgar translates it thus; Quasi Libanus non incisus vaporavi; as the myrrh-tree that is not cut, I evaporated; as if Christ should have said, without any lanching, cutting, pruning, out of mere love I poured out my blood upon the earth; this is certain; at this time no manner of violence was offered him in body, no man touched him, or came near him; in a cold night (for they were fain to have a fire within doors) lying abroad in the air, and upon cold earth he casts himself into a sweat of blood; surely love is hot; he had a fire in his brea• that melts him into this bloody sweat; O wonderful Love!

3. This may inform us of the Design of Christ in these very sufferings: Christ weeps (saith Bernard) not only in his eyes, but in all his members, that with the tears of his body, he might wash and purify his body, which is the Church: or Christ weeps blood, that he might give us a sign of the enemies ruin; sweat in sickness, is as a Crisis, or promising sign, that Nature with all her force hath strove against the peccant humor, and hath now overcome it; so this bloody sweat is a blessed Crisis, or argument of sin decaying, and that the Lamb hath overthrown the Lion As Christ sometimes said; Now is the Judgment of this World, now shall the Prince of this World be cast out, and I, if I be lifted up from the Earth, will draw all men unto me.

Thus far of Christ's passion before his apprehension. And now we may suppose it about midnight, the very time which Christ called the hour, and power of darkness: what followed from twelve till three at night, we shall discover in the next Section.

SECT. VI. Of Judas's Treason, Christ's Apprehension, binding and leading unto Annas.

BY this time the Traitor Judas was arrived at Gethsemani, and being near the Garden-door, Jesus goes to his Disciples, and calls them from their sleep; by an Irony (as some think) he bids them sleep on now, and take their rest; meaning if they could for danger, that now was near; but withal he adds, Behold the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners; rise, let us be going, behold he is at hand that doth betray me. That it might appear he undertook his sufferings with choice and free election, he not only refused to fly, but he calls his Apostles to rise, that they might meet his Murderers. And now they come with Swords and Staves; or as John adds, with Lanthorns and Torches, and (Judas going before them, and drawing near unto Jesus to kiss him) they took him, and bound him, and led him away to Annas first.

In this Period I shall observe, 1. Judas's Treason. 2. Christ's Apprehension. 3. Christ's binding. 4. Christ's leading to Annas, one of the Chief Priests, as to his first station.

1. Judas's treason: And while he yet spake, behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss him. This Traitor is not a Disciple only, but an Apostle; not one of the seventy, but one of the twelve. Augustine speaks of many offices of Love that Christ had done to Judas in especial manner; he had called him to be an Apostle, made him his Friend, his Familiar, caused him to eat of his Bread, sit at his Table, and to dip his hand in the Dish with him; yea if his Tradition be true, Jesus had delivered Judas often from death, and for his sake healed his Father of a Palsy, and cured his Mother of a Leprosy: and next to Peter, honored him above all other his Apostles. Of this we are sure, that he kissed him, and washed his feet, and made him his treasurer, and his Almoner; and that now Judas should betray Christ; O how doth this add to the sufferings of Christ, and to the Sin of Judas? Behold, a multitude, and Judas in the front: he went before them, tam pedibus quam moribus; in his presence, and in his malice. The Evangelist gives the reason of this, that he might have the better opportunity to kiss him, this was the sign he gave the rout; whomsoever I shall kiss, that is he, lay hold on him; he begins war with a Kiss, and breaks the peace of his Lord by a Symbole of kindness: Jesus takes this ill; What, Judas! betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss? q. d. What, dost thou make the seal of Love the sign of treachery? What! must a Kiss of thy mouth be the Key of treason? O what a friendly reproof is here! By way of use.

It were well for the world (saith Chrysostom) especially for the Children of God, that Judas were alone in this transgression that there were no more perfidious, treacherous Persons in it besides himself. But Oh! how full is the world of such miscreants? there was never yet an Abel, but he had a Cain to murder him; never yet a Moses, but he had a Jannes and Jambres to resist him; never yet a Joseph, but he had unkind Brothers to envy him; never yet a Samson, but he had a Delilah to betray him; never yet a David, but he had an Ahithophel to hurt him; never yet a Paul, but there was an Alexander to do him much evil; nay it is well, if in every assembly we meet not with a Judas: in civil affairs how many are there that live, and make gain by lying, swearing, cheating, coz•ning, selling away Christ and their own souls for a lesser matter than thirty pieces of Silver? and in religious affairs, how many secure and drowsy professors have we amongst us, that salute Christ both by hearing the Word, and receiving the Seals, and yet in their lives and conversations they deny Christ? They honor God with their lips, but their hearts are far away from him.

2. For Christ's apprehension; then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took him. They apprehended him whom the world cannot comprehend; and yet before they took him, he himself begins the inquiry, and leads them into their errand; he tells them that he was Jesus of Nazareth, whom they sought: this was but a Breath, a meek and gentle word; yet had it greater strength in it than the Eastern wind, or the voice of Thunder: for God was in that still voice, and it struck them down to the ground. O the Power of Christ! they come to him with clubs and staves, and swords, and he does no more but let a word fly out of his mouth, and presently they stagger, run backward, and fall to the ground. Oh if we cannot bear a soft answer of the merciful God, how dare we so provoke, as we do, the wrath of the Almighty Judge? and yet he suffers them to rise again, and they still persist in their inquiry after him; he tells them once more, I am he; he offers himself, he is ready, and desirous to be sacrificed; only he sets them their bounds, and therefore he secures his Apostles to be witnesses of his sufferings,: In this work of redemption, no man must have an active share besides himself; he alone was to tread the Wine-Press: If therefore ye seek me, (saith Christ) let these go their way; thus he permits himself to be taken, but not his Disciples.

And now they have his leave, Oh with what fierce and cruel countenances, with what menacing and threatening looks, with what malicious and spiteful minds, do they invade and assault our Savior? they encompass him round; then they lay their wicked and violent hands upon him: in the Original, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 signifies a violent taking. One speaks the manner of his apprehension in these words Some of them lay hold on his Garments, others on the h•ir of his head; some pluck him by the beard, others struck him with their impious fists, and being enraged, that with a word he had thrown them backwards on the ground, they therefore throw him on his back, and basely tread him under their dirty feet. Another Author gives it thus; As a roaring, ramping Lion draws along the Earth his prey, and tears it, and pulls it; so they hailed Christ all along the Earth, spitting, buffeting, pulling him by the hair. Another in like manner thus; they all rush violently upon him, they fling him to the ground, they kick him, tear him, spurn him, pull off the hair, both off his Head and Beard. Of every of these passages we find Scriptures full; Many Bulls have compassed me, strong Bulls of Bashan have beset me round, they gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and roaring Lion.

We are apt to cry out on Judas and the Jews; and we think, Oh if we had been in their stead, we should never have done thus; but lay aside a while those Instruments, and look we at the principal cause; had we not an hand in all these actings? did not we conspire his Death, and Apprehension in reference to it? Oh my sins! my sins! these were the Band, the Captain, and the Officers; these were the multitude, a multitude indeed, if I should tell them, I might tell a thousand, and yet not tell one of a thousand; these were the Soldiers that beset him round, the Bulls that compassed him about, the roaring Lions that gaped upon him with their mouths; O my heart, why shouldest thou rise up against the Jews, when thou findest the Traitor, and the whole rout of Officers in thyself? Oh that thou wouldest turn the edge of thy detestation into its right stream and Channel! Oh that thou wouldst remember thy own ways, and all thy doings wherein thou hast been defiled; and that thou wouldst loath thyself in thy own sight for all the evils that thou hast committed!

3. For Christ's binding, the Evangelist tells us, that the Band, and the Captain, and the Officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound him, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 they bound his hands with cords; a Type of this was Samson, whom Delilah bound with ropes; so they bound him with ropes or cords, foreshewing hereby that he must die, they never using to bind any with ropes or cords, but those whom undoubtedly they purposed to crucify: Some add the Circumstances of this binding, that they bound him with three cords, and that with such violence that they caused blood to start out of his tender hands; certainly they wanted no malice, and now they wanted no power, for the Lord had given himself into their hands. Binding argues baseness: It is storied of Alexander, that when some Arrow that was shot into him, was to be drawn out, his Physicians advised to bind him; for that the least motion (as they said) would do him hurt; but he answered Kings were not fit to be bound, the power of a King was ever free and safe; And David in his Lamentation over Abner, said, Died Abner as a Fool dieth? thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put in fetters, 2 Sam. 2.33, 34. Fools and Slaves were accustomed to be bound, and so were Thieves; they that open their hands to receive others goods, it is fit their hands should be bound, and tied up; but is our Savior numbered amongst any of these? O yes! In that same hour said Jesus to the multitude, are ye come out as against a Thief, with Swords and Staves? he made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a Servant: O wonderful condescension of Christ! O admirable exinanition! he that was eminently just, is reputed a thief; he that was equal with God, is become a Servant; he that was stronger than Samson, and could have broken his cords from off his arms like a thread, he is bound with cords, and as a poor Lamb, he continues bound for the slaughter; and thus began our Liberty and Redemption, from slavery, and sin, and death, and cursings.

But besides these cords, the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, signifies a binding with chains, Mak. 5.3, 4. And some are of opinion, that they shackled both his hands and feet, pedicis & catenis vinctus, Mark 5.4. And others say that they put about his neck a Chain of Iron; and it is not altogether improbable, but they might be as cruel to the Master, as to his Servants: I cannot think they were so enraged against Peter, as they were against Christ; and yet they laid on him two Chains, Acts 12.6. Nor can I think they were so enraged against Paul, as they were against Jesus; and yet the chief Captain took him, and commanded him to be bound with two Chains. And that this might be their dealing with Christ, Judas, by his counsel seems to speak; hold him fast—take him, and lead him away safely, q. d. make him sure, that he escape not out of your hands; he hath deceived you often, and therefore Chain him with an Iron Chain, that will be sure to hold. I cannot pass this without some word to ourselves.

Christ undergoes this restraint that all sorts of persecution might be sanctified to us by his susception. Again, Christ was faster bound with his cords of Love, than with Iron fetters; his love was strong as death; it overcame him who is invincible, and bound him who is omnipotent; the Jews cords were but the Symboles and Figures; but the dear love, the tender bowels of Jesus Christ were the Morals, and things signified: Again, Christ was bound that we might be free: the Cords of Christ were so full of virtue, that they loosed the Chains of our sins, and tied the hands of God's Justice, which were stretched out against us for our sins. Again, he was bound for us, that so he might bind us to himself. I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of Love. A strange thing it was, to see the King bound for the Thieves offense; but such was Christ's Love, that he might draw sinful mankind to the Love of him again. Lastly, one good Lesson we may learn from wicked Judas; take him, and lead him away safely:—hold him fast. Come Christians! here's good counsel from a Judas; like another Caiaphas; he Prophesies he knows not what; take him, and lead him away, and hold him fast. It is of necessity that those which spiritually seek after Christ, should take him by Faith, and hold him fast by Love: I will rise now, (saith the Spouse) I will seek him whom my soul loveth; and anon, I found him whom my soul loveth, I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my Mothers House, into the Chambers of her that conceived me. We must arise out of the bed of sin, we must seek Christ in the use of Ordinances, and there if we find him, we must take him, lay hold on him by the hands of Faith, and not let him go; but lead him safely until we have brought him into our Mothers House, into the Assemblies of his people; or if you will, until we have brought him into our souls, where he may sup with us, and we with him.

4. For his leading to Annas, John records it, that they led him to Annas first, for he was Father-in-law to Caiaphas, who was the high Priest that same year. 1. They led him away; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 it refers to the place whence they led him; the Garden was the terminus a quo; there they apprehended him, and bound him, and thence they led him away; but the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, is something more than merely abduco; sometimes it signifies abigo, to drive away, whether by force, or fraud; sometimes rapio ad suplicium, ad judicandum; to snatch away either to punishment, or to judgment: It is said, they drew him away by the hairs of the head, and that they led him in uncouth ways, and through the Brook Cedron, in which the ruder Soldiers plunged him, and passed upon him all the affronts and rudeness which an insolent and cruel multitude could think of. So that now again was the fulfilling of the Prophecy, He shall drink of the Brook in the way, Psal. 110.7. I dare not deliver these things as certain truths; only this I affirm, that they led him, snatched him, hailed him from the Garden back again to Jerusalem, over the Brook and Valley called Cedron,—2. They led him first to Annas; why thither; is a question: the cognizance of the cause belonged not properly to Annas, but to Caiaphas; all that can be said for Annas, is, that he was chief of the Sanhedrim, and Father-in-law to Caiaphas, and to the High Priest the next year following.

Oh when I think of Jesus thus led away to Annas first; when I think of him partly going, and partly hailed forwards, and forced to hasten his Grave-pace; when I think of him thrown into, or plunged in the Waters of the Brook, and so forced to drink of the Brook Cedron in the way: when I think of him presented by a deal of Soldiers, and rude Catch-poles, to this mercenary Annas; and withal, think that I had an hand as deep as any other in these acts; my heart must either break, or I must proclaim it an heart of flint, and not of flesh. Come Christians, let us lay our hands upon our hearts, and cry, Oh my Pride! and Oh my Covetousness! and Oh my Malice and Revenge! Oh my Unbelief! and Oh my Unthankfulness! and Oh my Uncharitableness to the needy members of Christ Jesus! why these were the rout, these were they that led, and dragged, and drew Jesus (as it were) by the hair of his head; these were they that took hold of the chain, and pulled him forwards, and shown him in triumph to this bloody Annas; nay, these were the Judas, Jews, Annas, and all: Oh that ever I should lodge within me such an heart, that should lodge in it such sins, such betrayars, such murderers of Jesus Christ!

But I must remember myself; Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? if ye will enquire, enquire, return, come. We may now suppose it about the third hour, or the last watch; in the Gospel it is called the fourth watch of the night; elsewhere it is called the morning-watch, which continueth till the morning. And of the Acts done in this interval of time, we are next to treat.

SECT. VII. Of *Christ's Examination, and Condemnation, with their Appendices.

NOW it was that they led him from Annas to Caiaphas; and presently a Council is called of the High Priests, Scribes, and Elders; these were the greatest, gravest, learned'st, wisest men amongst them, and they all conspire to judge him, who is the great Judge both of quick and dead.—In their proceedings, we may observe, 1. The captious examination of the High Priest. 2. The sacrilegious smiting of one of the Servants. 3. The impious accusations of the Witnesses. 4. The Sentence of the Judges. 5. The perfidious denial of perjured Peter. 6. The shameful delusion, and abuses of the base Attendants.

1. For the captious examination of the High Priest: The High Priest then asked Jesus of his Disciples, and of his Doctrine. 1. Of his Disciples; what the Questions were, it is not expressed; but probably they might be such as these; How many Disciples he had? and where they were? and what was become of them? why he should take upon him to be better guarded than others of greater place and calling? whether it did not savor of sedition and disturbance of the State, to lead about such a Crew of Disciples and followers after him? and what was the reason of their flight? whether it were not a token of their guiltiness of some disorder, or of riotous practices? It is not for me to speak how many Queries the High Priest might make to tempt Jesus; but certainly he was sifted to the Bran, examined to the full of all such circumstances as either might trap Christ, or in the least degree advance and help forward his Condemnation; to this question concerning his Disciples, our Savior answered nothing; alas, he knew the frailty of his followers, he might have said, For my Disciples, you see one hath betrayed me, and another will anon forswear me, he stays but for the crowing of the Cock, and then you shall hear him curse and swear, that he never knew me; and for all the rest, a pannick fear hath seized upon their hearts, and they are fled, and have left me alone to tread the Wine-press. Ah no, he will not speak evil of the Teachers of his people; it was grief to him, and added to his sufferings, that all had forsaken him; once before this, many of his Disciples went back, and walked no more with him; which occasioned Jesus to say to the twelve, will ye also go? why no, said Peter then, Lord, whether shall we go? thou hast the words of Eternal Life; and we believe, and are sure, that thou art that Christ the Son of the Living God. Oh

Peter, what a strong Faith was that? We believe, and we are sure; but how is it now that ye have no faith? or why are ye so fearful, O ye of little Faith? I believe this sate upon the heart of Christ, and yet he would not accuse them, who now stood in their places, and was accused for them, and for us all; and therefore to that question of his Disciples, he answered nothing.

2. He asked him of his Doctrine; what his questions were of that, are not set down neither; but probably they might be such as these; Who was his Master, or instructor in that new Doctrine he had lately broached? why he did seek to innovate, and alter their long practiced and accustomed Rites? and what ground had he to bring in his own devices in their steads? as Baptism for Circumcision; the Lord's Supper for the Passover; himself and his Apostles for the high Priests and Levites, when neither he, nor most of them were of that Tribe? why he was so bold and saucy (being but three and thirty years of age) to declame so bitterly and satyrically against the Pharisees, and Sadducees, and Scribes, and Priests, and Elders of the People? Much of this stuff he might bring out in his Interrogatories; that so by his questioning him in many things, he might trap him in something to his confusion and destruction.—And to this question our Savior answers; but Oh how wisely! I spake openly to the World (saith he) I ever taught in the Synagogue, and in the Temple, whither the Jews always resorted; and in secret have I said nothing; why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I said unto them, behold they know what I said: q. d. I appeal to the testimony of the very enemies themselves; thou suspectest me to be a seditious person, and one that plots mischief against the State in secret; I tell thee truth, I speak nothing in secret (i.e.) nothing in the least manner tending to sedition; my Doctrine I brought with me from the bosom of my Father, it is the everlasting Gospel, and not of yesterday; and it contains nothing in it of Sedition, Faction, Rebellion, Treason; ask these mine Enemies, these who have apprehended and bound me, and brought me hither; they know what I said, let them speak if they can, wherein I have transgressed the Law.

2. For the stroke given Christ by that base servant; one of the Officers which stood by, stroke Jesus with the palm of his hand, saying, answerest thou the High Priest so? That holy face which was designed to be the object of Heaven, in the beholding of which, much of the celestial glory doth consist; that face which the Angels stare upon with wonder, like Infants at a bright Sun-beam, was now smitten by a base varlet in the presence of a Judge; and howsoever the Assembly was full, yet not one amongst them all reproved the fact, or spake a word for Christ: nay, in this the injury was heightened, because the blow was said to be given by Malchus an Idumean Slave; it was he, whose ear was cut off by Peter, and cured by Christ, and thus he requites him for his Miracle.—Amongst all the sufferings of Christ, one would think this were but little; and yet when I look into Scriptures, I find it much: Thus Jeremy, He giveth his cheeks to him that smiteth him, he is filled full with reproach. Thus Micah speaking of Christ, They shall smite the Judge of Israel with a Rod upon the Cheek; there was in it a world of shame; the Apostle lays it down as a sign of suffering and reproach, if a man smite you on the face. Nothing more disgraceful (saith Chrysostom) than to be smitten on the Cheek; the diverse reading of the word, speaks it out further; he stroke him with a Rod, or he stroke him with the palm of his hand 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, say some refers to his striking with a rod, or club, or shoe, or pantoffle; or as others, it refers to his striking with the palm of his hand; of the two, the palm of the hand is judged more disgraceful, than either rod, or shoe; and therefore in the Text we translate it, with the palm of the hand he struck at Jesus, (i.e.) with open hand, with his hand stretched out.

The Ancients commenting on this Cuff; Let the Heavens be afraid (saith one) and let the Earth tremble at Christ's patience, and this Servant's impudence. O ye Angels, how were ye silent? how could you contain your hands, when you saw his hand striking at God? —If we consider (saith another) who took the blow, was not he that struck him, worthy to be consumed of fire, or to be swallowed up of earth, or to be given up to Satan, and thrown down into Hell? If a Subject should but lift up his hand against the Son of an earthly Sovereign, would he not be accounted worthy of punishment? how much more in this case, when the hand is lifted up against the King of Kings, and Lord of Lord's? whom, not only men, but the Cherubims and Seraphims, and all the Celestial powers above, adore and worship? Bernard tells us, that his hand that struck Christ, was armed with an Iron Glove: and Vincentius affirms, that by the Blow Christ was felled to the earth: and Ludovicus adds, that blood gushed out of his mouth, and that the impression of the Varlet's fingers remained on Christ's Cheek, with a tumor and wan color. I need say no more of this; only one word in reference to ourselves.

Come, look upon this lively and lovely picture of patience; he was struck on the face, but he was never moved in his heart; notwithstanding the abuse, he shown all mildness and gentleness towards his enemies: O what art thou that canst not brook a word, that canst not bear a distasteful speech, that canst not put up the least and smallest offense, without thy wrath and fury? O proud man! O impudent wretch! how art thou so suddenly moved at the least indignity, when thou seest thy Savior quietly suffer great affronts? come learn of Christ; if ever we mean to have a share and interest in his sufferings, let us conform to him in meekness, and patience, in gentleness, and lowliness of mind, and so we shall find rest unto our souls.

3. For the Accusation of the Witnesses; he is falsely accused and charged with the things that he never knew: In his Accusation I observe these things. 1. That they sought false witnesses; for true witnesses they could have none: Now the chief Priests and Elders, and all the Council sought false witnesses against Jesus to put him to death. They were resolved in a former Council that he should not live, but die; and now palliating their design with a Scheme of a Tribunal, they seek out for witnesses. O wonder! whoever heard that Judges went about to enquire for false witnesses, and suborned them to come in against the Prisoner at the Bar? 2. Though many false witnesses came into testify against him, yet they found none; because their witness did not agree together. O the injustice of men in bringing about the Decrees of God! the Judges seek out for witnesses, the witnesses are to seek for proof, those proofs were to seek for unity and consent, and nothing was ready for their purpose. 3. At last, after many attempts came two false witnesses, and said, this fellow said, I am able to destroy the Temple of God, and to build it in three Days. They accuse him for a figurative speech, a trope which they could not understand; which if he had effected according to the Letter, it had been so far from a fault, that it would have been an Argument of his power; but observe their false report of the words he had spoken; for he said not, I am able to destroy this Temple of God, and to build it in three days; but, destroy ye this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up: the allegation differs from the truth in these particulars. 1. I am able to destroy, say they; ay but destroy ye, saith Christ. 2. I am able to destroy this Temple of God, say they; ay but destroy ye this Temple, saith Christ; simply this Temple, without addition. 3. I am able to destroy this Temple of God, and to build it in three days, say they; ay but destroy ye this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up, said Christ: he spoke not of building an external Temple; but of raising up his own body, which he knew they would destroy. These were the accusations of the false witnesses, to all which Jesus answered nothing; he despised their accusations, as not worthy an answer; and this vexed more.—But, 4. Another accusation is brought in; Caiaphas had a reserve, which he knew should do the business in that Assembly; he adjured him by God, to tell him if he were the Christ: I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ the Son of God: The holy Jesus being adjured by so sacred a Name, would not now refuse an answer; but he confessed himself to be the Christ, the Son of the living God: and this the High Priest was pleased (as the design was laid) to call Blasphemy; and in token thereof, he rends his clothes, prophetically signifying that the Priesthood should be rent from himself.

We are taught in all this quietly to suffer wrong: If my Adversary should write a Book against me, surely I would take it upon my shoulder (saith Job) and bind it as a Crown to me; it is impossible, if we are Christ's servants, to live in this world without false accusations: come, let us take heart, and in some cases, say not a word; since he that was most innocent, was most silent, why should we be too forward in our excuses? I know there is a time to speak, as a time for silence; if it may tend to God's honor, and to the spreading of God's truth, and that right circumstances do concur, it is then time to open our mouths, though we let in death. So did our blessed Savior: O let us learn of him, and follow his steps!

4. For the Doom or Sentence of these Judges; Caiaphas prejudging all the Sanhedrim, in declaring Jesus to have spoken Blasphemy, and the fact to be notorious, he then asked their Votes: What think ye? and they answered, and said, he is guilty of Death. They durst not deny what Caiaphas had said; they knew his Faction was very potent, and his malice great, and his heart was set upon the business, and therefore they all conspire, and say as he would have them, He is guilty of Death. Oh here is Jesus's sentence, which should have been mine, He is guilty of Death. But this Sentence was but like strong dispositions to an enraged Fever; they had no power at that time to inflict death, or such a death as that of the Cross, they only declared him apt, and worthy, and guilty of Death.

In the multitude of Counsellors there is safety, saith Solomon; but we must take this in; if it be of good men, and to good purposes: for otherwise, the Meetings, Assemblies, and Councils of the wicked are dangerous and deadly; the Kings of the earth set themselves, and the Rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against his anointed. Such Councils we had many in our times. I know not whether we may call them Councils, or struma tantum Civitatis, an ulcerous bunch, raised by the disorder and distemper of the City.

5. For Peter's denial and abjuration; while these things were thus acting concerning Christ, a sad accident happened to his Servant Peter; at first a Damosel comes to him, and tells him, Thou wast with Jesus of Galilee; and then another Maid tells the by-standers, this fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth: and after a while, they that stood by, spake themselves, surely thou art one of them, for thy speech bewrayeth thee, q. d. thy very Idiom declares thee to be a Galilean; thou art as Christ is, of the same Country and Sect, and therefore thou art one of his Disciples: Peter thus surprised, without any time to deliberate, he shamefully denies his Lord: and, 1. He doth it with a kind of subterfuge, I know not what thou sayest: he seems to elude the Accusation with this Evasion, I know not thy meaning, I understand not thy words, I skill not what thou sayest. 2. At the next turn, he goes on to a licentious boldness, denying Christ with an Oath, I know not the man; and lastly, he aggravates his sin so far, that he grows to impudence, and so denies his Lord with cursing and swearing, I know not the man: here's a Lie, an Oath, and a Curse; the sin is begun at the voice of a Woman, a silly Damosel; not any of the greatest Ladies, she was only a poor serving-maid that kept the doors; but it grew to ripeness, when the Men-Servants sell upon him; now he swears, and vows, and curses himself if he knew the Man. O Peter, is the man so vile, that thou wilt not own him! Hadst thou not before confessed him to be the Christ, the Son of the living God? and dost thou not know him to be Man, as well as God? say, is not this the Man-God, God-Man that called thee, and thy brother Andrew, at the sea of Galilee, saying, follow me, and I will make you fishers of men? Is not this he whom thou sawest on Mount Tabor, shining more gloriously than the Sun? Is not this he whom thou sawest walking on the water, and to whom thou said'st, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water? How is it then that thou sayest, I know not the man? Surely here's a sad example of human infirmity; i•Peter fell so foully, how much more may lesser stars? And yet withal, here's a blessed example of serious, through repentance; no sooner the Cock crew, and Christ gave a look on Peter, but he goes out, and weeps bitterly. The Cock was the Preacher, and the look of Jesus was the Grace that made the Sermon effectual: O the Mercy of Christ! he looked back on him that had forgot himself; he revives his servant's memory, to think on his Master's words; he sends him out to weep bitterly, that so he might restore him mercifully to his favor again.

Let us learn hence, to think modestly and soberly of ourselves; yea, let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall! If Peter could first dissemble, and then lie, and then forswear, and then blaspheme and curse, O let not us be high-minded, but fear; —And in case we fall indeed, as Peter did, yet let us not despair, as Judas did; but still upon our repentance let us trust in God. When Christ looked on Peter, he wept bitterly: notwithstanding our sins are great, yet one look of Christ is full of virtue, and enough to melt us into tears: O let us not sink in despair, but look up to him, that he may look down on us. Pliny tells us of some Rocks in Phrygia, that when the Sun doth but shine upon them, they send out drops of water, as if they wept tears; Peter signifies a Rock, and whilst Peter persisted in his sin of denying Christ, his heart was hard as the Rock; but when Christ the Sun of Righteousness looked upon him, his heart was softened, and he dropped tears continually. Such is the virtue of Christ's look, it turns the Rock into a standing Water, and the Flint into a Fountain of Waters. —Lastly let us not decry repentance, but rather be in the use, and practice, and exercise of it: Is not here a Gospel precedent? Clement, an ancient Writer, of whom Paul makes mention, Phil. 4.3. expresseth Peter's repentance to have been so great, that in his Checks he made (as it were) furrows, in which, as in certain Channels, his tears run down; the Text tells us he wept bitterly; and Clement adds, that while he lived, as often as he heard a Cock crow, he could not but weep, and bewail his denial. David is another like example; All the Night, said he, I make my Bed to swim, I water my Couch with my tears, Psal. 6.6. David makes mention of his Bed and Couch, because there most especially he had offended God: It was on his Bed that he committed Adultery; and it was in his Couch, that he designed and subscribed with his own hand, that Uriah must die; and hence is it that he waters his Bed and Couch with his tears; the very sight of his Bed and Couch brings his sin into his remembrance; as the very hearing of the crowing of the Cock, ever after awakened Peter to his task of tears: that Repentance is a Gospel-Duty, we have spoke elsewhere. O take heed of decrying it! as we are often sinning, so let us often repent; it concerns us near to be frequent in this duty of bewailing sin, and turning to God.

6. For the abuses and delusions of the base Attendants offered to Christ; the Evangelist tells us, then did they spit in his face, and buffeted him, and others smote him with the palms of their hands, saying, Prophecy unto us, thou Christ, who is he that smote thee? and as Lude adds, many other things blasphemously spake they against him; what those many other things were, it is not discovered; only some ancient writers say, that Christ in that night suffered so many, and such hideous things, that the whole knowledge of them is reserved only for the last day of Judgment. Mallonius writes thus, after Caiaphas and the Priests had sentenced Christ worthy of death, they committed him to their Ministers, warily to be kept till day; and they immediately threw him into the dungeon in Caiaphas's House, there they bound him to a stony pillar, with his hands bound on his back, and then they fell upon him with their palms and fists. Others add, that the Soldiers not yet content, they threw him into a filthy dirty puddle, where he abode for the remainder of that night; of which the Psalmist, Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, and in the deeps; and I sink in the deep mire where there is no standing. Behold the Bed which is Solomon's, or rather, which is Christ's; for a grater than Solomon is here: Behold the flourishing Bed wherein the King of Saints doth lie; surely a place most fordid, full of stench; his other senses had their pain, and his smell felt a loathsome savor, in this noisome puddle.

But we need not borrow light from Candles, or lesser stars; the Scripture itself is plain: Observe we these Particulars.

1. They spit in his face; this was accounted among the Jews a matter of great infamy and reproach: And the Lord said to Moses, if her Father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days? We ourselves account this a great affront, and so did Job; I am their song and their by-word; they abhor me, they fly far from me, and spare not to spit in my face. Oh that the sweet face of Christ, so much honored and adored in Heaven, should be defiled and deformed by their spitting! Oh that no place should be thought so fit for them to void their Excrements and Drivel in, as the blessed face of Jesus Christ! I hid not my face (saith Christ) from shame and spitting: I used no Mask to keep me fair; though I was fairer than the Sons of Men, I preserved not my Beauty from their nasty Flegm, but I opened my face, and I set it as a Butt for them to dart their frothy Spittle at.

2. They buffet him; we heard before that one of the Officers struck Jesus with the palm of his hand; but now they buffet him: some observe this difference betwixt 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; the one is given with the open hand, but the other with the fist shut up; and thus they used him at this time, they struck him with their fists, and so the stroke was greater and more offensive: By this means they made his face to swell, and to become full of Bunches all over. One gives it in thus; By these blows of their fists, his whole head was swollen, his face became black and blew, and his teeth ready to fall out of his Jaws. Very probable it is, that with the violence of their strokes, they made him reel and stagger, they made his Mouth, and Nose, and Face to bleed, and his Eyes to startle in his Head.

3. They covered his face, Mark. 14.65. Several Reasons are rendered for it. As, 1. That they might smite him more boldly, and without shame. 2. That they might not have that object of pity in their view; it is supposed that the very sight of his admirable form, so lamentably abused, would have mollified the hardest heart under heaven, and therefore they veiled and hoodwink'd that alluring, drawing countenance. 3. That they might not see their own filth in his face, however his Beauty was winning, yet they had so bedaubed it with their beastly spitting, that they began to loath to look upon him: It was a nauseous sight (saith one) and enough to make one spew to look upon it. But whether his splendor, or his horror occasioned this veil over his face, this is most certain, that it veiled not their cruelty, but rather revealed it, and made it manifest to all the World.

4. They smote him with the palms of their hands, saying, Prophecy unto us, thou Christ, who is he that smote thee? To pass away that doleful, tedious night, they interchangeably sport at him; first one, and then another gives him a stroke (we usually call it a Box on the ear) and being hoodwink'd, they bid him a-read who it is that smote him. Some reckon these Taunts amongst the bitterest passages of his Passion; nothing is more miserable, even to the greatest misery, than to see itself scorned of Enemies. It was our Savior's case; they used this despite for their desport; with a wanton and merry malice they aggravate their injury with scorn; q. d. Come on, thou sayest thou art Christ the Son of the living God, and therefore it is likely thou art Omniscient, thou knowest all things; tell now, who is it that strikes thee? We have blind-folded thee that thou canst not see us with thy bodily eyes, let thy Divinity aread, guess, tell, prophecy, who is it now that smote thee last? Who gave thee that blow? O Impiety without example! Surely if his patience had been less than infinite, these very injuries would have been greater than his patience. In way of Application.

1. Consider Christians, whether we had not a hand in these abuses; for, 1. They spit in the face of Christ, who defile his Image in their souls, who reject his holy and heavenly motions in their hearts.—2. They buffet him with their fists, who persecute Christ in his Members, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. 3. They cover his face, that do not readily and willingly confess their sins, that extenuate their frailties and imperfections, with counterfeit pretexts.—4. They mock and scoff at Christ, that scorn and contemn his Messengers and Ministers; He that despiseth you, despiseth me, saith Christ. O that we would lay these things to our hearts, and see, and observe wherein we stand guilty of these sins, that we may repent.

2. Consider Christians, and read Christ's Love in all these sufferings; O un-heard of kindness, and truly paternal bowels of pity and compassion! whoever heard before of any that would be content to be spit upon, to wipe their filths who spit uppn him? that would be content to be beat, and buffeted, to save them from buffets, who were the buffeters? that would be content to be blind-folded, that he might neither take notice of, nor see the offenses of them that blind-folded him? that would be content to be made a scorn, to save them from scorn, that shall scorn him? Christians! you that take your name from Christ, how should you admire at the infiniteness and immensity of this love of Christ? was it a small thing that the wisdom of God should become the foolishness of men, and scorn of men, and ignominy of men, and contempt of the World for your sins sake: O think of this!

And now the dismal night is done; what remains, but that we follow Christ, and observe him in his Sufferings the next day! the Psalmist tells us, Sorrow may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning: only Christ can find none of this joy neither morning nor evening; for after a dismal night, he meets with as dark a day: what the passages of the day were, we shall observe in their several hours.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. Of Christ's Indictment, and Judas's fearful end.

ABOUT six in the morning Jesus was brought unto Pilate's house; then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the Judgment-Hall, and it was early.— When the Morning was come, all the chief Priests and Elders of the People took council against Jesus to put him to death; and when they had bound him, and led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the Governor. Then Judas which had betrayed him, hanged himself. O the readiness of our nature to evil! When the Israelites would sacrifice to the Golden-Calf, they rose up early in the Morning; if God leave us to ourselves, we are as ready to practice mischief, as the fire is to burn, without delay. But on this Circumstance I shall not long stay; the transactions of this hour I shall consider in these two passages, Christ's Indictment, and Judas's fearful end.

In Christ's Indictment, we may observe, 1. His Accusation. 2. His Examination.

In his Accusation we may observe, 1. Who are his Accusers. 2. Where he was accused. 3. What was the matter of which they do accuse him.

1. His Accusers were the chief Priests and Elders of the People; the very same that before had judged him guilty of Death, are now his Accusers before the temporal Judge: but why must our Savior be twice Judged? was not the Sanhedrim, or Ecclesiastical Court sufficient to condemn him? I answer,—He is twice judged; 1. That his Innocency might more appear; true Gold often tried in the fire, is not consumed, but rather perfected; so Christ's Integrity, though examined again and again, by divers Judges wholly corrupt; yet thereby it was not hurt, but made rather more illustrious. 2. Because his firster judgment was in the night, and a sentence pronounced then was not reputed valid; it is said of Moses, that he judged the People from the morning unto the evening; for until night no judgment was protracted. 3. Because, said the Jews, it is not lawful for us to put any man to death. These words had need of exposition; we know Moses's Law prescribed death to the Adulterers, Idolaters, Blasphemers, Man-slayers, Sabbath-breakers: but now the Romans (say some) had come and restrained the Jews from the execution of their Laws; others are of another mind; and therefore the meaning of these words, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death, may be understood (say they) in a double sense: 1. That it was not Lawful for them to put any man to such a death as the Death of the Cross: Moses's Law was Ignorant of such a death; and the words following seem to favor this interpretation, that the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which he spake, signifying what death he should die. We read only of four sorts of death that were used among the Jews; as strangling, stoning, burning, and killing with the sword: crucifying was the invention of Romans, and not of Jews.—2. That it was not Lawful for them to put any man to death at such a time: on this day was celebrated the Jews Passover, which was in memory of their deliverance out of Egypt; so that now they had a custom to deliver some from death (the case of Barabbas) but they could not now condemn any one to death; hence it was, that after Herod the Jew had killed James, he proceeded further, to take Peter; also yet during the days of unleavened Bread, he delivers him to be kept in Prison, intending (saith the Text) after Easter to bring him forth to the People. Pilate, a Gentile, was not tied to these Laws, and therefore they led Jesus from Caiaphas unto the Hall of judgment, or unto Pilate's House.

2. The place of the Accusation was at the door of the House; they would not go into the Judgment-Hall lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover. See what a piece of Superstition and gross Hypocrisy is here! they are curious of a Ceremony, but make no strain to shed innocent blood; they are precise about small matters, but for the weightier matters of the Law, as Mercy, Judgment, Fidelity, and the Love of God, they let them pass; they honor the figurative Passover, but the true Passover they seize upon with bloody and sacrilegious hands.

3. The matter of which they accuse him. 1. That he seduced the People. 2. That he forbade to pay Tribute to Caesar. 3. That he said he was a King. How great? but withal, how false were these their accusations? For the first, Christ was so far from stirring up Seditions, that he strove and endeavored to gather the People into one. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy Children together, even as a Hen gathereth her Chickens under her wings, and ye would not? For the second; instead of denying to pay tribute to Caesar, he paid it in his own particular; take twenty-pence out of the fishes mouth (said he to Peter) and give unto them for me and thee; and give unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's (said he to the People) and to God the things that are God's. For the third; instead of making himself a King, he professeth that his Kingdom is not of this World; and when they would have made him a King, instead of flattering them, he flieth from them; and that into the Wilderness; or into a mountain himself alone.—Thus much of the Accusation,

2. For his Examination. Pilate was nothing moved with any of the Accusations, save only the third: and therefore letting all the rest pass, he asked him only, Art thou the King of the Jews? To whom Jesus answered, My Kingdom is not of this World, &c. He saith not, my Kingdom is not in this World; but my Kingdom is not of this World; by which Pilate knew well that Christ was no enemy unto Caesar: Christ's Kingdom is spiritual, his government is in the very hearts and Consciences of men, and what is this to Caesar?— Hence Pilate useth a policy to save Jesus Christ; they tell him that Christ was of Galilee; and therefore he takes occasion to send him to Herod who was Governor of Galilee. But of that anon.

How many Lessons may we learn from hence; 1. Christ was accused, who can be free? The chief Priests and Elders of the Jews accused Christ; no wonder if those that are chief and great amongst us, accuse poor Christians: O there's a perpetual enmity between the seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent; there is an everlasting, irreconcilable, implacable enmity, and antipathy between Grace and Profaneness, light and darkness, Christ and Belial: As it is reported of Tigers, that they rage when they smell the fragrancy of Spices; so it is with the wicked, who rage at the spiritual Graces of them that are sincere for God.

2. Christ's Accusers would not go into the Judgment-Hall lest they should be defiled; the very profane can learn to be superstitious in lesser matters; how many amongst us will make conscience of outward Ceremonies (as of eating meats, observing days) but as for the weightier matters of the Law, Judgment and mercy, they leave them undone?

3. Christ is most falsely accused of Sedition, seduction, and usurpation; it were indeed to be wished, that they who take upon them the name of Christianity, were guiltless of such crimes; but let them look to it, who are such: This, I am sure, was Christ's Rule and Practice; Be subject to every constitution and authority of man, for the Lord's sake. If any dare to resist the Power that is of God, they shall receive to themselves damnation. Nor can we excuse ourselves, because our Governors are not Godly; for all the Governors to whom Christ, and his Apostles submitted themselves, and to whom all those strict precepts of duty and Obedience related in the New Testament, were no better (for ought I know) than Tyrants, Persecutors, Idolaters, and Heathen-Princes.

4. Christ is examined only of his usurpation: Art thou the King of the Jews? the men of this world mind only worldly things: the Apostles so describes them; who mind earthly things. Pilate regards not Christ's Doctrine; but he is afraid lest he should aspire the Kingdom; and concerning this, our Savior puts him out of doubt; My Kingdom is not of this world. As Pilate and Christ, so Worldlings and Christians are of different Principles, they mind earthly things; but our Conversation (saith the Apostle) is in heaven; our conversation (i.e.) the aim and scope of our hearts, in every action, is only for heaven; whatsoever we do, it should some way or other fit us for Heaven; we should still be laying in for heaven against the time that we shall come and live there; we should have our thoughts and hearts set upon heaven: so it is said of holy Mr. Ward, that being in the midst of a Dinner very contemplative; and the People wondering what he was musing about; he presently breaks out, forever, forever, forever; and though they endeavored to still him, yet he still cried out, forever, forever, forever; Oh eternity! to be forever in heaven with God and Christ, how shall this swallow up all other thoughts and aims? and especially all worldly, careful, sinful thoughts, aims, or ends?

2. Pilate having dismissed Jesus, this hour is concluded with a sad disaster of wicked Judas; then Judas which betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, &c. Now his conscience thaws, and grows somewhat tender; but it is like the tenderness of a Boyle, which is nothing else but a new disease; there is a repentance that comes too late; Esau wept bitterly, and repented him, when the Blessing was gone; the five foolish Virgins lift up their voices aloud, when the gates were shut; and in hell men shall repent to all eternity; and such a repentance was this of Judas; about midnight he had received his money in the house of

Annas, and now betimes in the morning he repents his bargain, and throws his money back again; the end of this Tragedy was, that Judas died a miserable death; he perished by the most infamous hands in the world (i. e.) by his own hands: he went and hanged himself. And as Luke, he fell headlong, and burst asunder in the midst, and all his Bowels gushed out. In every passage of his death, we may take notice of God's Justice, and be afraid of sin; it was just that he should hang in the air, who, for his sin, was hated both of heaven and earth; and that he should fall down headlong, who was fallen from such an height of honor; and that the Halter should strangle that throat, through which the Voice of treason had founded; and that his Bowels should be lost, who had lost the bowels of all pity, piety, and compassion; and that his Ghost should have its passage out of his midst (he burst asunder in the midst) and not out of his lips, because with a kiss of his lips he had betrayed his Lord, our blessed Jesus.

Here's a warning-piece to all the world; who would die such a death for the pleasure of a little sin? or who would now suffer for millions of Gold, that which Judas suffered, and yet suffers in hell for thirty pieces of silver? Now the Lord keep our souls from betraying Christ, and from despairing in God's mercy through Christ. Amen, Amen.

I see one sand is run, I must turn the Glass; now was the seventh hour, and what were the passages of that hour, I shall next relate,

SECT. II. Of Christ's Mission to Herod, and the Transactions there.

About seven in the Morning, Jesus was sent to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time. The reason of this was, because Pilate had heard that Christ was a Galilean; and Herod being Tetrarch of Galilee, he concludes that Christ must be under his Jurisdiction: Herod was glad of the honor done to him; for he was desirous to see Christ of a long season, because he had heard many things of him, and he hoped to have seen some Miracle done by him. That which I shall observe in this passage, is

1. Herod's questioning of Jesus Christ. 2. Christ's silence to all his questions. 3. Herod's derision; and Christ's dismissal back again to Pilate.

1. Herod, questioned with him in many words; what those words were, are not expressed; only we have some conjectures from Luke 23.8. q. d. What! art thou he concerning whom my Father was so mocked of the Wise men? and for whose sake my Father slew all the Children that were in Bethlehem? I have heard thou hast changed water into Wine, and hast multiplied Loaves, whereon so many thousands fed; come, do something at my request, which elsewhere thou hast done without request of any; come satisfy my desire, work now but one Miracle before me, that I may be convinced of thy Divinity. I dare not deliver these words as certain truths, because of that silence that is in Scripture; only we read that he hoped to have seen some Miracle done by him. Herod could not abide to hear his Word, and to bear his yoke: but he was well content to see the works and miracles of Jesus Christ.

2. Whatever his questions were, he answered him nothing: many reasons are given in for this; as, 1. Because he inquired only in curiosity, and with no true intent or end; concerning which, saith the wise man, Answer not a fool according to his folly: And, ye ask and receive not (saith James) because ye ask amiss. 2. Because Christ had no need of defense at all: let them go about to Apologize, that are afraid, or guilty of death; as for Christ, he despiseth their Accusations by his very silence. 3. Because Herod had the year before put John the Baptist to death, who was that Voice crying in the Wilderness; now that Voice being gone, Christ, the Word, will be silent; he will not give a Word. 4. Because Herod had been sottishly careless of Jesus Christ; he lived in the place where Jesus more especially had conversed, yet never had seen his Person, or heard his Sermons. It gives us to learn thus much; that if we neglect the opportunities of Grace, and refuse to hear the voice of Christ in the time of Mercy, Christ may refuse to speak one word of comfort to us in our time of need; if we, during our time stop our ears, God will, in his time, stop his mouth, and shut up the springs of Grace, that we shall receive no refreshment, no instruction, no pardon, no salvation. 5. Because Christ was resolved to be Obedient to his Father's Ordinance, he was resolved to submit to the doom of death with patience and silence; for this purpose he came into the world, that he might suffer in our stead, and for our sins; and therefore he would not plead his own cause, nor defend his own innocence in any kind; he knew that we were guilty, though himself was not.

3. This silence they interpret for simplicity; and so, 1. They despised him. And, 2. they dismissed him; And Herod with his men of war set him at naught, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate. They arrayed him with a white, glittering, gorgeous raiment: the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, signifies gorgeous, bright, resplendent, such as Nobles and Kings used to wear: The Latins sometimes render it, splendidam vestem, and sometimes candidam, or albam vestem, we translate it a gorgeous robe; and the Ancients call it a white robe; in imitation whereof the Baptized were wont to put on a white raiment, which they called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉; but whether it were white or no, I shall not controvert: The Original yields thus far, that it was a bright and resplendent garment, such as came newly from the fulling: many mysteries (if it be white) are found out here; some say, this held forth the excellency or dignity of Christ: White color is most agreeable to the highest God; he many times appeared in white, but never in any other color; and the Saints in heaven are said to be clothed in long white Robes: and Peers, Kings, and Coesars were usually clothed in white, saith Jansen: Others say, this held forth the innocence of Christ, and that they were directed herein by Divine providence, declaring plainly against themselves, that Christ should rather have been absolved as an innocent, than condemned as a malefactor.— But to leave these mysteries, the meaning of Herod was not so much to declare his excellency, or innocence, as his folly, or simplicity; certainly he accounted him for no other than a very fool, and idiot, a passing simple man. The Philosophers (says Tertullian) drew him in their Pictures, attired by Herod, like a fool, with long Asses ears, his nails plucked off, and a book in his hand, &c. O marvelous madness! Oh the strange mistakes of men! in his life time they account Jesus a glutton, a drinker of Wine, a Companion of Sinners: a Blasphemer, a Sorcerer, and one that cast out Devils through Belzebub, Prince of Devils: yea, and one that himself was possessed with a Devil. And now towards his death he is bound as a thief, he is struck in the house of Caiaphas as an arrogant and saucy fellow, he is accused before the Sanhedrim of Blasphemy; he is brought before Pilate as a malefactor, a mover of sedition, a Seducer, a Rebel, and as one that aspired to the Kingdom; he is transmitted unto Herod as a juggler to show tricks; and now in the close of all, he is accounted of Herod and his men of War, as a fool, an idiot, a brute, not having the understanding of a man. But soft Herod; is Christ therefore a fool, because he is silent? and art thou wise, because of thy many words, and many questions? Solomon a wiser man than Herod, is of another mind: In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin, but he that refraineth his lips is wise. Again, he that hath knowledge spareth his words, and a man of understanding is of a cool Spirit; even a fool when he holdeth his peace is counted wise: and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding. Ah poor Herod, consult these texts, and then tell me who is the fool? what? thou that speakest many words, and questionest about many things which in time will turn to thy greater condemnation, or Christ Jesus that was deeply silent to the worlds eternal Salvation? Paul was of another Spirit, and of another judgment concerning Christ, in him was knowledge; nor is that all, in whom was wisdom and knowledge; nor is that all, in him were treasures, and all treasures of wisdom and knowledge; In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; and yet that is not all neither, not only is wisdom in him, but he is wisdom itself (for that is his name and title in the book of Proverbs) and yet by Herod and his Courtiers he is reckoned, arrayed, and derided as a mere simple man.

2. They dismissed him; in this posture they sent him away again to Pilate, to all their former derision they added this, that now he was exposed in scorn to the boys of the streets. Herod would not be content that he and his men of war only should set him at naught, but he sends him away through the more public, and eminent streets of Jerusalem, in his white garment, to be scorned by the people; to be hooted at by idle persons; And now was fulfilled the Prophecy of Christ, I was a derision to all my people, and their song all the day.

Of this let us make some use. Was the eternal Word of God, and the uncreated wisdom of the Father reputed a fool? no wonder if we suffer thousands of reproaches; We are made a spectacle unto the World, and to Angels, and to men; we are fools for Christ's sake, saith the Apostle.—We are made as the filth of the world, and are the off-scouring of all things unto this day. Christians must wear the bage and livery of Jesus Christ; we cannot expect to fare better than our Master, why then should we despond? I never knew Christians in better heart, than when they were styled by the Name, of Puritans, Precisians, Hypocrites, Formalists, or the like.

2. Let us not judge of men and their worth by their outside garments; wisdom may be, and often is clad in the Coat of a fool. As beggarly bottles oft times hold Rich Wines; so poor robes contain sometimes many precious Souls; in right judgment we should look only to the mind, and soul, and inside of a man, yea, to the hidden man of the heart: and for ourselves, we should look to the inward, and not to the outward adorning: men, and women especially have rules for this, Your adorning let it not be that outward adorning, of plating the hair, and of wearing of Gold, or of putting on of apparel, but let it be in the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible. Oh what is it for a man to be clothed in Gold, whiles his soul is wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked?

3. Let us admire at the condescension of Christ, who for our sakes came down from Heaven to teach us wisdom; and for us who were fools indeed, was content to be accounted a fool himself; yea, and if need had been, would have been ready to have said with David, I will yet be more vile than thus, and will be base in my own sight. I know this Doctrine is an offense to many; Christ Crucified is unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness. To tell natural men (such as Herod, and his men of war) that this same Jesus whom they mock, and set at naught, is the Son of God, and Savior of the World, they cannot believe; it is plainly evident, that not many Wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath called the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; why this is the fruit of Christ's condescension, called the foolishness of God; wisdom itself was content to be counted a fool, that those who are accounted the foolish things of the world, might be wise to Salvation.

4. Let us search whether Herod and his men do not keep a rendezvous in our hearts; do not we set Christ at naught? do not we mock him, and array him in a gorgeous robe? whatsoever we do to one of the least of his Saints, he tells us that we do it to himself, Matt. 25.40, 45. and have we not dealt thus with his Saints? have we not dealt thus with his Ministers? when Elisha was going up to Bethel, there came little Children out of the City, and mocked him, and said unto him, go up thou bald-head, go up thou bald-head. A reproach of bald-head, round-head, given to a faithful Elisha, or Minister of Christ, proclaims you as bad as those little Children, yea, as bad as Herod, and his men of war; such Herod's were a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, some there were then that mocked the Messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his Prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy. O take heed of this sin, banish Herod out of your hearts, or Christ will never lodge there: ruin without remedy will seize on those souls, that Herod like mock the Messengers of God, what is it but to mock the Messenger, the Angel of the Covenant, even Christ himself? as Herod sent Christ away, so let us send Herod away, and give him a dismissal out of our doors.

The hour strikes again, and summons Christ and us to another station: let us follow him still, as Peter did when he went into the high Priest's Palace, and sate with the servants to see the end.

SECT. III. Of Christ and Barabbas compared; and of the question debated betwixt Pilate and the Jews.

About eight in the morning our Savior Christ is returned to Pilate; who propounded to the Jews, whether they would have Jesus, or Barabbas let lose unto them. Ye have a custom (saith he) that I should release unto you one at the Passover, will ye therefore that I release unto you the King of the Jews? Then cried they all again. saying, not this man, but Barabbas; now Barabbas was a Robber. It is supposed that in this passage Pilate endeavored Christ's liberty, He knew that for envy they had delivered him, and he saw that Herod had sent him back again uncondemned, and therefore now he propounds this medium to rescue him from their malice, Whom will ye that I release unto you, Barabbas or Jesus, which is called Christ? In the prosecution of this passage, I shall observe, 1. Who this Barabbas was. 2. What is the difference betwixt him and Christ. 3. How they vote. 4. Pilate's quaere upon the vote. 5. Their answer to his Quaere. 6. His reply unto their answer. 7. Their reduplication upon his reply.

For the first, what was this Barabbas, but a notable Prisoner? Matth. 27.16. One that had made insurrection, and who had committed murder in the insurrection? Mark 15.7. One that for a certain sedition made in the City, and for murder was cast into prison? Luke 23.19. one that was a robber or an high-way thief? John 18.40. one that was the greatest malefactor of his time? and must he be taken, and Jesus cast? must he be saved, and Christ condemned?

For the second, what the difference is betwixt him and Christ, let us weigh them in the balance, and we may find; 1. Barabbas was a thief, and by violence took away the bread of the needy, but Christ was a feeder and supplyer of their needs. 2. Barabbas was an high-way thief, wounding them that travelled by the way; but Christ was the good Samaritan that healed such, binding up their wounds, and pouring into them Wine and Oil. 3. Barabbas was a murderer, and had slain the living; but Christ was the Savior, restoring life unto the dead. 4. Barabbas was a seditious tumult-raiser, he made a certain sedition in Jerusalem; but Christ was a loyal tribute-payer, and his commands were, give unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's. 5. Barabbas was a bloody revenger, a man of blood, that hunted after blood; but Christ was a meek and quiet spirit, and what with sweating, binding, buffeting, bleeding, was now become almost a bloodless Redeemer: light and darkness have no less fellowship, Christ and Belial no less discord; here's a competition indeed, the author of sedition with the Prince of peace; a murderous mutiniere, with a merciful mediator; a son of Belial with the Son of God.—

3. For their votes, they give them in us; Not this man, but Barabbas, q. d. let us have him crucified who raised the dead, and him released who destroyed the living: let the Savior of the world be condemned to death, and the slayer of men be released from Prison, and have his pardon. A strange vote, to desire the Wolf before the Lamb, the noxious and violent before the righteous and innocent: here was the Prophetick parable of Jotham fulfilled, The trees of the forest have chosen the bramble, and refused the Vine;—

But there is something more observable in this vote; the Jews had a custom not to name what they held accursed; I will not make mention of their names within my lips; and surely this speaks their spite, that they will not vouchsafe to speak the Name of Jesus; the cry is not thus, Not Jesus but Barabbas; but thus, Not this man, not this fellow; but Barabbas; as if they meant first to murder his Name, and then his Person.

4. For Pilate's quaere upon the vote, What shall I do then with Jesus, which is called Christ? Pilate gives him his name to the full, Jesus, who is called Christ; his name is Jesus Christ. There is more pity in a gentle Pilate, than in all the Jews; in some things Pilate did Justly, and very well; as first, he would not condemn him before his accusations were brought in; nor then neither before he was convicted of some capital crime; and because he perceives that it was envy all along that drove on their design, he endeavors to save his life by balancing him with Barabbas; and now he sees that they prefer Barabbas before Jesus, he puts forth the question, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? q. d. I know not what to do with him, it is against my light to condemn him to death, who is of innocent life: I could tell what to do with Barabbas, for he is a thief, a mutiniere, a murderer, a notable malefactor; but there is no such thing proved against Jesus, who is called Christ, What then shall I do with him?

5. For their answer to this quaere, And they all said unto him, let him be crucified. This was the first time that they speak openly their design; it had long lurk'd within them that he must die a cursed death, and now their envy bursts, and breaks out with unanimous consent, and cry, Let him be crucified. O wonder! must no other death stint their malice but the Cross? other deaths they had in practice, as the towel, stoning and beheading; more favorable, and suitable to their Nation; and will they now pollute a Jew with a Roman death? Magna crudelitas, &c. a great cruelty; they sought not only to kill him, but to crucify him, that so he might die a lingering death. The cross was a gradual and slow death, it spun out pain into a long thread, and therefore they make choice of it, as they made choice of Jesus; let him die, rather than Barabbas, and let him die the death of the Cross, rather than any other speedy, quick, dispatching death.

6. For Pilate's reply unto this answer, Why? what evil hath he done? he was loath to satisfy their demands, and therefore he questions again, What must he die for; was it meet that he should condemn one to death, and especially to such a death, and no crime committed? Come on (saith Pilate) what evil hath he done? Augustine upon these words.

Ask (saith he) and let them answer with whom he conversed most, let the possessed who were freed, the sick and languishing who were healed; the leprous that were cleansed, the deaf that hear, the dumb that speak, the dead that were raised, let them answer the question, what evil hath he done?

Sometimes the Jews themselves could say, He hath done all things well, he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak. Surely he hath done all things well; he stilled the winds, and calmed the seas; with the spittle of his mouth he cured the blind; he raised the dead, he prayed all night; he gave grace, and he forgave sins; and by his death he merited for his Saints everlasting life: why then should he die, that hath done all things well? no wonder if Pilate object against these malicious ones, What evil hath he done?

7. For their reduplication on his reply, they cried out the more, saying, let him be crucified. Instead of proving some evil against him, they cried out the more; as Luke, They were instant with loud voices; they made such a clamour, that the earth rang with it, the cry was doubled, and redoubled, Crucify him, Crucify him; twice Crucify him, as if they thought one Cross too little for him. O inconstant favor of men! their Anthems of Hosanna, and Benedictus not long since joyfully spoken, are now turned into jarring hideous notes, Let him be crucified. And now is Pilate threatened into another opinion, they require his judgment; and the voices of them, and of the Chief Priest prevailed; so it follows, and when he saw he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, why then Barabbas is released unto them, and Jesus is delivered to be scourged,

I would not dwell too long on Pilate, the high Priests, and Jews, the application is the life of all.—Now then—

1. Give me leave to look amongst ourselves, is there not some or other amongst us that prefer Barabbas before Jesus? O yes! those that listen to that old mutinous Murderer in his seditious temptations; those that reject the blessed motions of God's own Spirit, in his tenders and offers of Grace; those that embrace the world with its pleasures and profits, and make them their portion; all these choose Barabbas, and reject Jesus Christ, little do we think that every willful act of sin, is a sedition, a mutiny against our souls, another Judas Galileus that stirs up all the passions of our mind against our Jesus. I cannot but think what drawing, and soliciting of our souls is made by virtue and vice in our passage towards the other world: on the one hand stands vice with all her false deceits, and flatteries, her temptations are strong, Come let us enjoy the good things that are present, and let us speedily use the creatures as in youth, let us fill ourselves with costly Wine and Ointments, and let no flower of the spring pass by us, let us crown ourselves with rose-buds before they be withered, let none of us go without his part of jollity let us leave tokens of our joyfulness in every place; for this is our portion, and our lot is this. On the other hand stands Virtue, or Grace with all the promises of future happiness, she points at Jesus, and cries, O come unto Christ and live; Wisdom is better than rubies, her fruit is better than Gold, yea than fine Gold, and her revenue than choice Silver; they that love Christ shall inherit substance, and he will fill them with treasures, even with durable riches. But Oh how many thousands, and ten thousands that neglect this cry, and follow vice? what millions of men are there in the world that prefer Barabbas before Jesus? if we proclaim it in our pulpits that Christ is the chiefest of ten thousands, that he is fairer than all the Children of men, that he is the Standard-bearer, and there is none like to him: that if you will have but Jesus Christ, you need no more; yet do not many of you say in your hearts, as Pilate here, What shall I do with Jesus that is called Christ? or as the devils said elsewhere, What have we to do with thee Jesus thou Son of God? nay, hath not many times the secret grudgings of your reluctant souls accounted the gracious offers of speedy repentance to be but as a coming of Christ to torment you before your time? Why alas, what is this now but to prefer Barabbas before Jesus? you that swear as the Devil bids, and as Christ forbids, you that profane Sabbaths, that revel, drink to excess, or it may be to drunkenness, surely your vote goes along with the Jews, Not this Man, but Barabbas.

2. Give me leave to look on the love and mercy of God in Christ; our Jesus was not only content to take our nature upon him, but to be compared with the greatest malefactor of those times; and by public sentence, yea votes and voices of the People, to be pronounced a greater delinquent, and much more worthy of death than wicked Barabbas. O the love of Christ! we read in Leviticus, that in the days of the cleansing of the Leper, the Priest was to take two Birds (or two Sparrows) alive, and the one of them must be killed, and the other being kept alive, must only be dipt in the blood of the Bird that was slain, and so it must be let loose into the open field. Barabbas say some; but all Believers say we, are that live Sparrow; and Jesus Christ is the Sparrow that was slain; the lot sell upon him to die for us; all our sins were laid upon his soul: so that in this sense Jesus Christ was the greatest sinner in the World, yea, a greater sinner than Barabbas himself, and therefore he must die, and we being dipt in the Blood of Christ must be let loose, and set at liberty! was not this love? he died that we might live; it was the voice of God as well as men, Release Barabbas, every believing Barabbas, and crucify Jesus.

Another hour is gone, let us make stand for a while; and the next time we meet, we shall see further sufferings.

SECT. IV. Of Christ Stripped, Whipped, Cloathed in Purple, and Crowned with Thorns.

About nine (which the Jews call the third hour of the day) was Christ stripped, whipped, clothed with purple, and crowned with thorns; in this hour his sufferings came thick. I must divide them into parts, and speak of them severally by themselves.

1. When Pilate saw how the Jews were set upon his death, he consented, and delivered him first to be stripped. Then the Soldiers of the Governor took Jesus into the common Hall, and gathered unto him the whole band of Soldiers, and they stripped him. They pulled of his clothes, and made hm stand naked before them all; He that adorns the Heaven with Stars, and the Earth with Flowers, and made coats of skins to clothe our first Parents in, is now himself stripped stark naked; I cannot but look on this as a great shame: it appears so by our first Parents Adam and Eve, who no sooner had sinned, and knew themselves naked but they sowed fig-leaves together, and made themselves aprons. If Adam was so ashamed of his nakedness before his own Wife (who was naked too, as well as he) what a shame, and blush was it in the face of Christ, when in the common Hall in view of the whole band, or company of Soldiers, he stands all naked? My confusion is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath covered me, saith David in the Person of Christ. It is reported, in the Ecclesiastical story, that when two Martyrs, and holy Virgins (they call them Agnes, and Barbara) were stripped stark naked for their execution, God pitying their great shame and trouble, to have their nakedness discovered, made for them a veil of light, and so he sent them to a modest, and desired death; but our Savior Christ, who chose all sorts of shame and confusion, that by a fullness of suffering he might expiate his Fathers wrath, and consecrate to us all kinds of sufferings and affronts, he endured the shame of nakedness at the time of his scourging; see here a naked Christ, and therein see the mercy of Christ to us; he found us like the good Samaritan, when we were stripped, and wounded, and left half dead, and that we might be covered, he quietly suffered himself to be divested of his own robes; he took on him the state of sinning Adam, and became naked, that we might first be clothed with righteousness, and then with immortality; oh what a blessed use may we make of the very nakedness of Christ?

2. Pilate gave him to be scourged; this some think he did upon no other account, but that the Jews being satiated and glutted with these tortures, they might rest satisfied, and think themselves sufficiently avenged, and so desist from takeing away his life. That he was scourged is without controversy, for so the Evangelist relates, Then Pilate took Jesus and scourged him: and that Pilate might give him to be scourged on that account is very probable, because that after the scourging, he brings him out to the Jews, proclaiming, I find no fault in him; and before his scourging, he speaks it more expressly, He hath done nothing worthy of death, I will therefore chastise him, and release him. And it adds to this, that howsoever the custom was, that those that were to be crucified must first be whipped, yet if they were adjudged to die, their stripes must be less, and if they were to be set at liberty, they must be beaten with more stripes; And Pilate endeavoring to preserve his life, they scourged him above measure, even almost to death.

In this scourging of Christ I shall insist on these two things; 1. The shame. 2. The pain.

1. For the shame, it was of such infamy that the Romans Exempted all their Citizens from it. Is it lawful for you (said Paul) to scourge a man that is a Roman?—And when the Centurion heard that, he went, and told the chief Captain, saying, take heed what thou dost, for this man is a Roman; the Romans looked upon it as a most infamous punishment, fit only for thieves and slaves, and not for free-born or privileged Romans; and the Jews themselves would not suffer it above so many stripes, lest a brother should seem vile unto them; If a wicked man be worthy to be beaten, that the Judge shall cause him to lie down,—forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed, lest if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee. Whipping is so unworthy a punishment, that only children, bondslaves, and rogues were used to be corrected therewith, especially if they exceeded the number of forty stripes; when Paul was thus used, he tells us, Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Theophilact says they would not exceed that number, lest Paul should have become infamous, and ever after uncapable of public office, and hoping they might have regained him, they would not brand him with that note of infamy. O then if one stripe above forty was so infamous amongst the Jews, what shame, what infamy was this, when so many scores, hundreds, and thousands of stripes (as some reckon them) were laid on Jesus Christ? and yet our Lord doth not disdain to undergo them for our sakes, he bears in his body those wounds and stripes that we had deserved by our sins.

2. For the pain; this kind of punishment was not only infamous, but terrible; no sooner the Soldiers had their commission, but they charged, and discharged upon him such bloody blows, as if he had been the greatest offender, and basest slave in all the World. Nicephorus calls these whippers bloody Hang-men, by the fierceness of whose whipping many had died under their hands.

The manner of their whipping is described thus; After they had stripped him, they bound him to a pillar, whither came six young and strong Executioners, Scourgers, Varlets, Hang-men (saith Jerome) to scourge him, and whip him while they could; whereof two whipped him with rods of thorns; and when they had wearied themselves, other two whipped him with ropes or whip-cords, tied and knotted like a carters whip; and when they were tired, the other two scourged off his very Skin with wires, or little chains of Iron; and thus they continued, till by alternate and successive turns they had added stripe upon stripe, and wound upon wound, latter upon former, and new upon old, that he was all over in a gore blood.

The Scripture tells us, that He was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was laid upon him, and with his stripes we are healed; he was wounded, bruised, chastised, whipped with stripes; if you would know with how many stripes? some reckon them to the number of the Soldiers, Six hundred and sixty, or a thousand stripes? others reckon them according to the number of the bones, compacted in man's body, which say Anatomists are two hundred and sixty, and Christ having received for every bone three stripes according to the triple manner of his whipping, they amounted in all to seven hundred and eighty stripes; others reckon them to five thousand, above the forty which the Jews were commanded not to exceed in.—And the truth is, if the whole band of Soldiers were the whippers of Christ (as some would have it) I cannot see but his stripes might be more than so; when the Son of an Israelitish woman blasphemed God, the Lord said to Moses, Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp, and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation stone him; now Christ had said before all the band, that he was the Son of God, which they called Blasphemy; and therefore why might they not all (according to this Law) lay their hands upon him, and fall upon him if not with stones (which now was turned into whipping) yet with rods, whip-cords, and little chains?

I shall not contend about the number of his stripes; but this is certain, that the soldiers, with violence and unrelenting hands, executed their commission; they tore his tender flesh, till the pillar and pavement were purpled with a shower of blood; and if we may believe Bernard,

They plowed with their whips upon his back, and made long furrows, and after that they turned his back upon the pillar, and whipt his belly and his breast, till there was no part free from his face unto his foot.

A scourging able to kill any man, and would have killed him, but that he was preserved by the Godhead to endure, and to suffer a more shameful death.

We may read here a Lecture of the immense love of God in Christ to us poor Gentiles; he is therefore whipped that he might marry us to himself, and never reject us, or cast us off: we read of a Law in Moses, that if a man took a wife, and hated her, and gave occasions of speech against her, and brought an evil name upon her undeservably; that then the Elders of the City should take that man, and chastise him,—and she should be his wife, he might not put her away all his days. There is a great mystery in this ceremony; for that man (say some) was Christ, who by his incarnation betrothed unto himself the Gentile Church, but he seems to hate her, and to give an occasion of a speech against her, and to bring an evil report upon her, as Into the way of the Gentiles ye shall not go, and into the City of the Samaritans ye shall not enter; and it is not meet to take the Children's bread, and to cast it unto dogs. And now he is accused before the Elders, now he is whipt and chastised, and commanded by his Father to take her to his wife, and not to put her away all his days. I know there is much unlikeness in this mystery, for Christ was not whipt for calling the Church adulterous, that indeed was chaste; but he was whipt to present the Church as a chaste Virgin to his Father, that indeed was adulterous, Oh he loved the Church, and gave himself for it;—that he might present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish; this was the meaning of Christ's whipping, The chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes are we healed. Come then, and let us learn to read this love-letter sent from Heaven in bloody characters, Christ is stripped who clothed the Lilies of the Field; Christ is bound hand and foot, his hands that multiplied the Loaves; and his feet that were weary in seeking the straggling sheep; Christ is scourged all over, because all over we were full of wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores, and there was no way to cure our wounds, but by his wounds, our bruises, but by his bruises, our sores, but by his sores; O read, and read again, Christ is whipped, belly, back, side, from his shoulders to the soles of his feet, the lashes eating into his flesh, and cutting his very veins, so that (as some say with much confidence, though I know not with what truth) the gashes were so wide that you might have seen his ribs, and bones, and very inwards; what, was there ever love like unto this love? had he not been God as well as man, he could never have had in his heart such a love as this; O it was a divine love, it was the love of a Jesus, a love far surpassing either the love of men, or women, or of Angels.

3. They put upon him a Purple Robe, or a Scarlet Robe. John calls it Purple, and Matthew Scarlet; howsoever some difference may be, yet because of their likeness, they are put sometimes one for another, They put upon him a Scarlet robe, it is in the Original a Scarlet Cloa•• it was a loose short garment, at first used only by Kings or Emperors, and the color of it was suitable to Christ's condition, for he was now purple all over, as well within it, as without it; his body and his garment were both of a deep died sanguine color. Some out of Zacharias, where it is said that Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, conclude the old, ragged, thread-bare filthiness of his robe; so that everything shall have its office and several share in his abuse; the color and the manner of the garment flouts his Kingdom; the bareness, his outward estimation with the people; the raggedness, his late scattered retinue; the fulledness, his stained, spotted life, as they pretended, saying, He was a Friend of Publicans and Sinners—but out of this darkness the Lord can bring light, he hath his mysteries wrapped up in the malice of his enemies; for both on his garment, and on his thigh was written a mystery; and in this sense, what other is his garment but the emblem of his humanity? and what is his scarlet garment, but the emblem of his wounded body? that as he spake of the woman, She anointed him aforehand unto his burial; so Pilate in the mystery clothes him aforehand unto his bloody death.

4. They platted a Crown of Thorns, and put it upon his head; a goodly Crown for the King of Kings, we read of many sorts of Crowns, as of the Triumphal, Laurel, Naval, Mural, &c. but never till this did we read of a Crown of Thorns; a Crown it was to delude him, and a Crown of Thorns to torment him; in this we may read both his pain and shame: 1. For his pain, it bored his head saith Osorius with seventy and two wounds; Bernard speaks of many more, mille puncturis, &c. I know not what ground they have to number them; but certainly many wounds they made, and the rather may we say so; because that after they had put it upon his head, they took a Reed and smote him on the head: (i.e.) they smote him on the head to fasten the Crown of Thorns upon him surer, and to imprint it deeper, till as some think it pierced his very Skull. 2. Nor was it only pain, but shame; when Jotham put out his parable to the men of Shechem; The Trees (said he) went out on a time to anoint a King over them, and they said unto the Olive-Tree, reign thou over us, but the Olive-Tree said unto them, should I leave my fatness, wherewith by me they honored God and Man, and go to be promoted over the Trees? And the Trees said unto the Fig-Tree, come thou and reign over us, but the Fig-Tree said unto them, should I forsake my sweetness, and my good fruit, and go to be promoted over the Trees? Then said the Trees unto the Vine, come thou and reign over us, and the Vine said unto them, should I leave my Wine, which cheereth God and Man, and go to be promoted over the Trees? Then said all the Trees unto the Bramble, come thou and reign over us; and the Bramble said unto the Trees, if in truth ye anoint me King over you, then come and put your trust in my shadow, and if not, let fire come out of the Bramble, and devour the Cedars of Lebanon. As Jotham put out this parable in scorn of Abimelech, so the Soldiers in scorn put on Christ's head this Bramble Crown: q. d. Come, thou sayest, thou art King of Jews, and therefore we will make thee a Crown of Bramble, King of Trees; by which means they protest against Christ as a feigned fabulous King, as if he were no fitter to be King of Jews, than the Bramble was to be King of all the Trees in the forest.

How many lessons might we draw from hence? they put upon his head a Crown of Shame, of Death, of Torture; who came to give us a Crown of Victory, of life, of glory. 2. Our sins caused the Earth to bring forth Thorns, and Briars, and our Savior must wear them, both to take away our sins, and in the issue to take away sins curse, Thorns, or Briars, or whatsoever. 3. From the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, we were full of sin, and Christ accordingly must shed his Blood from head to foot; their Whips did not reach his head, their nails could not pierce it without an end of torture; but now they draw blood from it, with Thorns; the whole head is sick, saith the Prophet of us; and the whole head of Christ is bruised with Thorns to cure our sickness. 4. Christ is not crowned with Thorns without a Prophecy, or a Type; here he is a true Lily among Thorns; here he is as Isaac's Ram tied fast by the head in Thorns; he was ever intended to be a sacrifice, and a ransom for our sins, and to that purpose he was caught in a thicket, he was crowned with Thorns. 5. O what a shame is it for any of us to crown our heads with Rose-buds, (as the wanton worldings could say) afore they are withered, to spend our time in vanity, Folly, Sin, when Christ our Lord had such a grove of Thorns, growing on his sacred head? The Disciple is not above his Master, nor the Servant above his Lord, it is enough for the Disciple to be as his Master, and the Servant as his Lord; if our Lord and Master was crowned with Thorns, surely the Members of Christ should not be soft, delicate, and effeminate, wholly sensual, or gi•n up to pleasures. 6. As every bird sitteth upon the Thorns in the Orchard, so let us draw near, and make our nests in these blessed Bushes; let us abandon all the colors of other Captains, as the World, Flesh, and Devil; and let us keep close to the royal Standard of our King; under these Throns we may find shelter against all our enemies; from these Thorns we may undoubtedly gather Grapes, even a vintage of spiritual joy and gladness.

Now the hour sounds again, and calls us to go forth, and to behold King Jesus with the Crown wherewith he was Crowned in the Day of his espousals. And this we shall do the next hour.

SECT. V. Of Christ brought forth, and sentenced.

About ten Christ was brought forth and sentenced. 1. For his bringing forth, I shall therein observe these particulars. As—

1. We find Pilate bringing forth Jesus out of the common Hall, and showing this sad spectacle to all the People; Then came Jesus forth, wearing the Crown of Thorns, and the purple Robe, and Pilate saith unto them, behold the Man: he thought the very sight of Christ would have moved them to compassion; they had lash'd him almost unto death, they had most cruelly divided those azure channels of his guiltless Blood, they had clothed him with Purple, crowned him with Thorns; and now they bring him out by the hair of the head (say some) and expose him to the Public view of the scornful company, Pilate crying unto them, Behold the man, q. d. Behold a poor, silly, miserable, distressed man, behold I say, not your King, to provoke you against him, nor yet the Son of God, which you say he makes himself to be; but behold the man, a mean man, a worm, and no man; behold how he stands disfigured with wounds, behold him weltering and panting, in a crimson river of his own gore blood; and let this sufficient, yea, more than sufficient punishment suffice to satisfy your rage, what would you have more? if it be for malice that you are so violent against him, behold how miserable he is; if for fear, behold how contemptible he is: As for any fault whereby he should deserve his death, I find no fault in him; he is a Lamb without spot, a Dove without gall; O come and behold this man, I can find no fault in him. Some Doctors affirm that while Pilate cried out behold the man, his servants lifted up the purple robe, that so all might see his torn, and bloody, and macerated body; he supposed his words could not so move their hearts, as Christ's wounds, and therefore said he, Behold the man; as if he had said again, Look on him and view him well, is he not well paid for calling himself King of the Jews? now see him stripped, and whipt, and crowned with thorns, and scepter'd with a reed, anointed with spittle, and clothed with purple; what would you more?

2. We find the Jews more enraged against Jesus, When the chief Priests and Officers saw him; they cried out saying, crucify him, crucify him. The more Pilate endeavors to appease them, the more were the people enraged against him; and therefore they cry away with him, away with him; crucify him, crucify him. Now was fulfilled that prophesy of Jeremy, My heritage is unto me as a Lion in the forest, it crieth out against me. The Naturalists report of the Lion, that when he is near to his prey, he gives out a mighty roar, whereby the poor hunted beast is so amazed and terrified, that almost dead with fear he falls flat on the ground, and so becomes the Lions prey indeed: And thus the Jews (who were the heritage of the Lord) were unto Christ as a Lion in the forest, they hunted and pursued him to his death, and being near it, they give out a mighty shout, that the earth rung again, Away with him, away with him, crucify him, crucify him. O ye Jews, children of Israel, seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is not this he concerning whom your fathers cried, O that thou wouldst rent the heavens, that thou wouldst come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence? How is it that you should despise him present, whom they desired absent? How is it that your cry and theirs should be so contrary? The Panther (say they) is of so sweet a savor, that if he be but within the compass of scent, all the beasts of the field run towards him, but when they see his ugly visage they fly from him, and run away; so the Jews afar off feeling the sweet savors of Christ's Oyntments, they cried, Draw me, we will run after thee, come Lord Jesus, come quickly; but now in his passion, looking on his form, they change their note, He hath no form, or comeliness, there is no beauty, that we should desire him, away with him, away with him.

3. We find Pilate and the Jews yet debating the business; Pilate is loath to pronounce the sentence, and the chiefest of the Jews provoke him to it with a threefold argument. As—

1. They had a law, and by their law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God; thus the Doctors of the Law do accuse the Author and Publisher of the Law, but they consider not the rule concerning Laws, He may lawfully abolish, who hath power to establish; nor did they consider that this Law concerned not himself, who is indeed, and in truth the Son of God: the Text tells us, that Pilate hearing this argument, was the more afraid. Pilate (saith Cyril) was an heathen idolater, and so worshipping many God's, he could not tell but that Christ might be one of them, and therefore in condemning Christ, he might justly provoke all the God's to be revenged of him. This was the meaning of Pilate's question, Whence art thou? what is thy Offspring? of what Progenitors art thou sprung? And from thence forth Pilate sought to release him.

2. The Jews come with another Argument, they threaten Pilate, If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend; a forcible reason, as the case then stood; it was no small matter to be accused by so many audacious impudent men of high treason against Caesar, and therefore under this obligation Pilate seems to bend and bow; whom the fear of Christ's Divinity had restrained, him the fear of Caesar's frown provoked to go on to sentence and condemnation. Oh he was more afraid of man, whose breath is in his nostrils, than of God himself, who made the heavens, and framed the world. And yet before he gives sentence, he takes water; and washeth his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person, see ye to it.

3. In reference to this they engage themselves for him, which was their last argument, His blood be upon us, and our children, q. d. act thou as Judge, let him be condemned to die, and if thou fearest anything, we will undergo for thee, let the vengeance of his blood be on us, and on our children forever. Thus far of the first general.

2. For the sentence itself, When Pilate heard that,—he sate down in the judgment seat, in a place that is called the pavement, because erected of stones; but in the Hebrew Gabbatha;—This word signifies an high place, and raised above; it was so on purpose, that the Judges might be seen of men when they pronounced sentence. And here Pilate sitting down, he gave the doom. What was the form, or manner of the sentence is a great question amongst Divines. Chrysostom is of mind, that he pronounced no form at all, but only delivered Jesus unto them to be crucified, Mark. 15.15. John 19.16. Others cannot yield to this, for to what end (say they) should he then sit down upon the judgment seat? and yet amongst themselves they cannot agree on a form; Anselm gives it thus, I adjudge Jesus of Nazareth to that ignominious and shameful Death of the Cross. Vincentius thus, I condemn Jesus, seducing the people, blaspheming God, and saying that he was Christ the King of the Jews, to be fastened to the Cross, and there to hang till he die. Many other forms are brought in by others, but that of Luke is I am sure most authentic. And Pilate gave sentence, that it should be as they required: and then he delivered Jesus to their will. Here's a sentence indeed, a delivery of Jesus not to his own, but to his enemies liberty; to the boundless bonds, and all the possible Tortures of their own wills, and wishes. O unjust sentence! Give me not over to the will of my adversaries, cries David; the will of malice is an endless wheel, it cares not how long it spins out pain, and therefore they cried, Crucify him, Crucify him, let him be crucified. Amen, (says Pilate) do what you please, Crucify him, and Crucify him as often as you will, it shall be as you require, Lo now I deliver him to your own will.

We cannot shake this tree without some fruit; from this sight of Christ, and sentence of Pilate, we may learn some good.—

1. From this sight of Christ, as he was presented by Pilate to the people, we may learn remorse: not any of us who have crucified Christ by our sins, but we are called on at this time, to behold the man; suppose we saw him with our bodily eyes; suppose we had the same view of Christ as the Jews had, where he was thus presented; suppose we saw him in the very midst of us, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe, and the cane or reed held in his right hand; suppose we heard the voice of Pilate speaking to us, as he did to the Jews, Behold the man; suppose we saw the purple robe lifted up, that we might see all under, how his body was torn; and that same voice from Heaven should come to us, saying, This same is he whom ye have buffeted, scourged, crowned, crucified by your sins: were not this enough to prick us in our hearts, and to make us cry, Men and brethren what shall we do? Oh we look at the instruments, and we cry, Fie on Pilate, fie on the Soldiers, fie on the Jews; but we look not on our sins, saying, fie on them. Could we but realize our sins as the principal of these sufferings of Christ, methinks our hearts should break in very pieces: consider, yesterday in the midst of our Markets so many lies were told, and so many oaths were sworn; and this day so soon as the day-light sprang, so many acts of profaning the Lord's day were committed by us; little did we think that all this while we had been stripping Christ naked, whipping Christ with rods, or little chains, clothing Christ with a Purple-Scarlet Robe, plating a Crown of Thorns, and putting it on his head, sceptring him with a reed, and saluting him in scorn, Hail King of the Jews. Men, Brethren, and Fathers, be not deceived, Christ is mocked, scorned, and thus abused by you when you sin; your sins thus dealt with Christ, and in God's acceptance your sins thus deal with Christ even to this very day. Never say, it was long since Christ was crucified, and he is now in Heaven, for by your sins you crucify again the Lord of glory, you put him again to open shame; you strip him, and whip him, and torment him afresh. Oh look on him whom you have pierced! Pilate thought that if the Jews would but see the man, Behold the man, their hearts would have molified, and shall not I think as well of you? it is a blessed means to make sin bitter, and to breed in our hearts remorse for sin, if we will but hearken to this voice of Pilate, Behold the man.

2. From the sentence of Pilate, that Christ should be crucified, as the Jews required, we may learn the deceitfulness of our hearts, in making self the end, and aim of our particular callings. Pilate as Judge should have glorified God in doing justice; but when he hears the Jews cry, If thou let him go, thou art not Caesar's Friend, he then looks to himself, and his own interests. Judges can have their ends in the very place of judicature: nay, is not this the very common sin of Magistrates, Ministers, Tradesmen, of all sorts of callings; come, what is it you aim at in your several places? is it not to be great, and rich, and high, and honorable? say truly, is it in your hearts to say, that by this calling my chief aim is to glorify God, and to serve my generation with all faithfulness; and these two ends I prefer before all worldly advantages whatsoever? O then what a blessed reformation would be amongst us? if it be not thus, what are you but as so many Pilate's, that if you were but threatened into a sentence, you would rather condemn Christ than yourselves of enmity against Caesar; such would be the cry, Let Christ be crucified, and self advanced.

Much more might be said, but the hour strikes again; Pilate is now risen, the Court dissolved, and Jesus is delivered into the hands of the Jews for execution. How that went on, the next hour will speak; only God prepare your hearts to hear devoutly, and to consider seriously, what Jesus the great Savior of the World hath suffered for you.

SECT. VI. Of Christ's crucifying, with its appendices.

ABOUT Eleven, they prepare with all speed for the execution: in the revolution of this hour we may observe these several passages. As 1 Their taking off the robe, and clothing him again with his own raiment. 2. Their leading him away from Gabbatha to Golgotha. 3. His bearing the Cross with Simon's help to bear it after him. 4. His comforting the women who followed weeping after him as he went. 5. Their giving him Vinegar to drink mingled with gall. 6. Their crucifying, or fastening him on the Cross, whereon he died.

1. The Evangelist tells us, They took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him; Origen observes, They took off his robes, but they took not off his Crown of Thorns; what served their interest, they pursued still, but nothing of mitigation or mercy to the afflicted Son of Man. It is supposed this small business could not be done without great pain; after his sore whipping his blood congealed, and by that means stuck to his scarlet mantle; so that in pulling off the robe, and putting on his own raiment, there could not but be a renewing of his wounds.

2. They led him away. Some say they cast a Rope or Chain about his neck, by which they led him out of the City to Mount Calvary, and that all along the way, multitudes attended him, and a Cryer went before him, proclaiming to all hearers the cause of his death; namely, that Jesus Christ was a Seducer, Blasphemer, Negromancer, a Teacher of false Doctrines, saying of himself that he was the Messias, King of Israel, and the Son of God.

3. He bore his Cross. So John relates; before it bears him, he must bear it; and thus they make good their double cry, Crucify him, Crucify him; first Crucify him with it as a burden, and then crucify him with it as a Cross; those shoulders which had been unmercifully battered with whips before, are now again tormented with the weight of his Cross. As a true Isaac bears the wood for the sacrifice of himself; or Uriah-like, he carries with him the very Instrument of his own sad death. O the cruelty of this passage! they had scarce left him so much blood or strength as to carry himself, and must •e now bear his heavy Cross? yes, till he faint and sink, so long he must bear it, and longer too, did they not fear that he should die with less shame and smart than they intended him: which to prevent they constrained one Simon a Cyraenean to bear his Cross after him. How truly do they here again swallow the Cammel, and strain at a Gnat? the Cross was a Roman death, and so one of their abominations, hence they themselves would not touch the tree of infamy, lest they should have been defiled, but to touch the Lord's anointed, to Crucify the Lord of Glory, they make no scruple at all; but why must another bear the Cross, but to consign this duty unto man, that we must enter into a fellowship of Christ's sufferings? If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his Cross, and follow me.—And therefore Christ hath suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps.

4. He comforted the woman, who followed weeping after him as he went along. And there followed him a great company of people and of Women, which also bewailed and lamented him; but Jesus turning to them, said, Daughters of Jerusalem weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your Children. In the midst of his misery he forgets not mercy; in the midst of all their tortures and loudest out-cries of contumely, of blasphemy, of scorn, he can hear his following friends weeping behind him, and neglect all his own sufferings to comfort them, Weep not for me. He hath more compassion on the Woman that follow him weeping, than of his own mangled self, that reels along, fainting and bleeding unto death: he feels more the tears that drop from their eyes, than all the blood that flows from his own veins: we heard before that sometimes he would not vouchsafe a word to Pilate that threatened him, nor to Herod that entreated him, and yet unaskt how graciously doth he turn about his blessed bleeding face to these weeping women, affording them looks, and words too, both of compassion and of consolation, Daughters of Jerusalem weep not for me, but for yourselves.—and yet observe, he did not turn his face to them until he heard them weep; nor may we ever think to see his face in glory, unless we first bathe our eyes in sorrow. It is a wonder to me that any in our age should ever decry tears, remorse, contrition, compunction; how many Saints do we find both in the Old and New Testament, confuting by their practices these gross opinions? the Promise tells us, that They that sow in Tears shall reap in Joy; he that follows Christ, or goeth forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

But what's the meaning of this, Weep not for me? may we not weep for the death of Christ? do we not find in Scripture that all the People wept at the death of Moses? that all the Church wept at the death of Stephen? that the Woman lamented the death of Dorcas? and if all Christ's actions be our instructions (I mean not his miraculous, or meritorious, but his moral ones) did not Christ himself weep for Lazarus, and for Jerusalem? nay, is he not here weeping showers of blood all along the way? and may not we drop a tear for all those purple streams of his? O what's the meaning of this, Weep not for me, but weep for yourselves?

I answer, the words are not absolute, but comparative. Christ doth not simply forbid us to weep for our friends, but rather to turn our worldly grief into godly sorrow for sin as sin. Christ herein pointed the women to the true cause and subject of all their sorrow, which was their sins; and thus we have cause to weep indeed. Oh! our sins were the cause of the sufferings of Christ, and in that respect, Oh that our heads were fountains, and our eyes rivers of tears! Oh that our tears were as our meat and drink! Oh that we could feed with David on the Bread of tears, and that the Lord would give us plenteousness of tears to drink! Oh that the Lord would strike (as he did at Rephidim) these rocky hearts of ours, with the rod of true remorse, that water might gush out! Oh that we could thus mourn over Jesus whom we have pierced, and be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born!

5. No sooner he was come to the place of Execution, but they gave him Vinegar to drink mingled with Gall: in that they gave him drink it was an argument of their humanity; this was a custom amongst Jews and Romans, that to the condemned they ever gave wine to drink: Give strong wine unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy heart. But in that they gave him Vinegar mingled with Gall, it was an argument of their cruelty and envy. Theophylact speaks plainly, that the Vinegar mingled with Gall was poisonous and deadly, and therefore when Christ had tasted it, he would not drink, choosing rather the death of the Cross, to which he was destinated by his Father, than any poisonous death.

Ah brethren, are not we apt to think hardly of the Jews for giving Christ so bitter a potion at his time of death? and yet little do we think that when we sin we do as much. See but how God himself compares the sins of the wicked Jews to very poison; For their wine is of the wine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah, their Grapes are Grapes of Gall, their clusters are bitter, their Wine is the poison of Dragons, and the cruel venom of Asps. In this respect we may think as hardly of ourselves as of the Jews, because so oft as we sin against God we do as much as mingle rank poison, and bring it to Jesus Christ to drink.

6. They crucified him, (i.e.) they fastened him on the Cross; and then lift him up. A great question there is amongst the Learned, whether Christ was fastened on the cross after it was erected, or while it was lying on the ground? I would not rake too much into these niceties, only more probable it is that he was fastened to it while it lay flat on the ground, and then as Moses lifted up the Serpent in the Wilderness, so was the Son of man lifted up. We may express the manner of their acting, and his sufferings now, as a learned Brother hath done before us; Now come the Barbarous inhumane hangmen, and begin to unloose his hands, but how? alas 'tis not to any liberty, but to worse bonds of nails: then stripped they off his gore-glued clothes, and with them questionless not a little of his mangled skin and flesh, as if it were not enough to crucify him as a thief, unless they flea him too as a beast; then stretch they him out as another Isaac on his own burden, the Cross; that so they might take measure of the holes, and though the print of his blood on it gave them his true length, yet how strictly do they take it longer, than the truth? thereby at once both to crucify and rack him? that he was thus stretched and racked upon his cross, David gives more than probable intimation, I may tell all my bones; and again, all my bones are out of joint; which otherwise how could it so well be as by such a violent stretching and distortion? whereby it seems they had made him a living anatomy; nor was it in the less sensible, fleshly parts of his body, that they drive these their larger tenters, whereon his whole weight must hang; but in the hands and feet, the most sinewy, and consequently the most sensible fleshly parts of all other; wherein how rudely and painfully they handle him, appears too by that of David, they digged my hands and my feet, they made wide holes like that of a spade, as if they had been digging in some ditch: the boisterous and unusual greatness of these nails we have from venerable antiquity; Constantine the great is said to have made of them both an Helmet and a Bridle—How should I write on, but that my tears should blot out what I write, when it is no other than he that is thus used who hath blotted out that hand-writing of ordinances that was against me?

But the hour goes on, and this is the great business of the worlds redemption, of which I would speak a little more; by this time we may imagine Christ nailed to the cross, and his cross fixed in the ground, which with its fall into the place of its station gave infinite torture by so violent a concussion of the body of our Lord. That I mean to observe of this crucifying of Christ, I shall reduce to these two heads. viz. the shame and pain.

1. For the shame, it was a cursed death, cursed is everyone that hangeth on a tree. When it was in use, it was chiefly inflicted upon slaves that either falsely accused, or treacherously conspired their Masters death: but on whomsoever it was inflicted, this death in all Ages among the Jews hath been branded with a special kind of ignominy; and so the Apostle signifies when he saith, He abased himself to the death, even to the death of the cross. It was a mighty shame that Saul's sons were hanged on a tree, and the reason was more specially from the Law of God; For he that is hanged is accursed of God: I know Moses's Law speaks nothing in particular of crucifying, yet he doth include the same under the general of hanging on a tree; and some conceive that Moses in speaking that curse, foresaw what manner of death the Redeemer should die.

2. For the pain, it was a painful death; that appears several ways; As— 1. His legs and hands were violently racked, and pulled out to the places fitted for his fastening, and then pierced through with nails. 2. By this means he wanted the use both of his hands and feet, and so he was forced to hang immovable upon the cross, as being unable to turn any way for his case. 3. The longer he lived, the more he endured, for by the weight of his body his wounds were opened and enlarged, his nerves and veins were rent and torn asunder, and his blood gushed out more and more abundantly still. 4. He died by inch-meal (as I may say) and not at once, the cross was a death long in dying, it kept him a great while upon the rack, it was full three hours betwixt Christ's affixion and expiration, and it would have been longer if he had not freely and willingly given up the Ghost; it is reported that Andrew the Apostle was two whole days on the Cross before he died, and so long might Christ have been, if God had not heightened it to greater degrees of torment supernaturally.

I may add to this, as above all this, the pains of his soul whiles he hanged on the cross, for there also Christ had his agonies, and soul conflicts, these were those 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, those pains, or pangs of death, from which Peter tells us Christ was loosed. The word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 properly signifies the pains of a woman in travel; such were the pains of Jesus Christ in death; the Prophet calls it, The travel of his Soul: and the Psalmist calls it the pains of Hell, The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of Hell gate hold upon me. The sorrows, or cords of death compassed his body, and the pains of Hell gate hold upon his soul; And these were they that extorted from him that passionate expostulation, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? he complains of that which was more grievous to him, than ten thousand deaths, My God, my God, why hast thou withdrawn thy wonted presence, and left my soul (as it were) in pains of Hell?

And now reflect we on the shame and pain! O the curse and bitterness that our sins have brought on Jesus Christ! when I but think on these bleeding veins, bruised shoulders, scourged sides, furrowed back, harrowed temples, digged hands and feet, and then consider that my sins were the cause of all; methinks I should need no more arguments for self-abhorring! Christians! would not your hearts rise against him, that should kill your Father, Mother, Brother, Wife, Husband, dearest Relations in all the World? O then how should your hearts and souls rise against sin? surely your sin it was that murdered Christ, that killed him who is instead of all relations, who is a thousand, thousand times dearer to you than Father, Mother, Husband, Child, or whomsoever; one thought of this should methinks be enough to make you say, as Job did, I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes; Oh what's that cross on the back of Christ? My sins; Oh what's that Crown on the head of Christ? My sins; Oh what's that nail in the right hand, and that other in the left hand of Christ? My sins; Oh what's that spear in the side of Christ? My sins; Oh what are those nails and wounds in the feet of Christ? My sins. With a spiritual eye I see no other engine tormenting Christ; no other Pilate, Herod, Annas, Caiaphas condemning Christ; no other Soldiers, Officers, Jews or Gentiles doing execution on Christ, but only sin: Oh my sins, my sins, my sins!

2. Comfort we ourselves in the end and aim of this death of Christ; As Moses lifted up the Serpent in the Wilderness, so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. The end of Christ's crucifying is the material business: and therefore let the end be observed as well as the meritorious cause; without this consideration the contemplation of Christ's death, or the meditation of the story of Christ's sufferings would be altogether unprofitable; now what was the end? surely this? Christ lifted up, that he might draw all men unto him; Christ hanged on a Tree, that he might bear our sins on the Tree; this was the plot, which God by ancient design had aimed at in the crucifying of Christ, and thus our faith must take it up; indeed our comfort hangs on this; the intent, aim, and design of Christ in his sufferings is that welcome news, and the very Spirit of the Gospel: O remember this! Christ is crucified, and why so? that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have life everlasting.

We are now at the height of Christ's sufferings, and the Sun is now in his meridian, or height of ascent, I shall no more count hour by hour; for from the sixth hour till the ninth hour (that is from twelve, till three in the afternoon) there was darkness over all the Land. But of that, and of the consequents after it, in the next Section.

SECT. VII. Of the consequents after Christ's crucifying.

The particulars following I shall quickly dispatch. As thus.—

1. About twelve when the Sun is usually brightest, it began now to darken. This darkness was so great that it spread over all the Land of Jewry; some think, over all the World, so we translate it in Luke, And there was a darkness over all the Earth; and many Gentiles, besides Jews, observed the same as a great miracle. Dionisius the Areopagite (as Soudas relates) could say at first sight of it, Either the World is ending, or the God of Nature is suffering. This very darkness was the occasion of that Altar erected in Athens, and dedicated unto the unknown God. Of this prophesied Amos, And it shall come to pass in that day that I will cause the Sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the Earth in a clear day.

The cause of this darkness is diversely rendered by several Authors; some think that the Sun by Divine power with-drew, and held back its beams. Others say, that the obscurity was caused by some thick clouds which were miraculously produced in the air, and spread themselves over all the earth. Others say, that this darkness was by a wonderful interposition of the Moon, which at that time was at full, but by a miracle interposed itself betwixt the Earth and Sun. Whatsoever was the cause, it continued for the space of three hours as dark as the darkest winters night.

2. About three (which the Jews call the ninth hour) the Sun now beginning to receive his light, Jesus cried with a loud voice, Eli, Eli, Lamasabachthani, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?—And then, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled, he said I thirst.—And when he had received the vinegar, he said it is finished.— And at last crying with a loud voice, he said, Father into thy hands I commend my Spirit, and having said thus, he gave up the ghost. I cannot stay on these seven words of Christ which he uttered on the cross; his words were ever gracious, but never more gracious than at this time; we cannot find in all the Books and Writings of men, in all the Annals and Records of time, either such sufferings, or such sayings, as were these last words and wounds, sayings and sufferings of Jesus Christ.—And having said thus, he gave up the ghost. Or as John relates it, He bowed his head, and gave up the ghost: He bowed, not because he was dead, but first he bowed, and then died; the meaning is, he died willingly without constraint, cheerfully without murmur; what a wonder is this? life itself gives up his life, and death itself dyes by his death; Jesus Christ who is the Author of life, the God of life, lays down his life for us; and death itself lies forever nailed to that bloody cross in the stead of Jesus Christ. And now we may suppose him at the gates of Paradise, calling with his last words to have them opened, that the King of glory might come in.

3. About four in the afternoon he was pierced with a spear, and there issued out of his side both blood and water. And one of the Soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out blood and water. How truly may we say of the Soldiers, that after all his sufferings they have added wounds? they find him dead, and yet they will scarce believe it, until with a spear they have search'd for life at the well-head itself, even at the heart of Christ: And forthwith there came out blood and water; this was the Fountain of both Sacraments, the Fountain of all our happiness, The Fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness. There are three that bear-witness on earth (saith John) the Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood. Out of the side of Christ being now dead; there issues water and blood; signifying that he is both our justification, and sanctification. Physicians tell us, that about the heart there is a film or skin like unto a purse, wherein is contained clear water to cool the heat of the heart, and therefore very probable it is, that, that very skin (or pericardium) was pierced through with the heart, and thence came out those streams of blood and water.—O gates of Heaven! O windows of Paradise! O Palace of refuge! O Tower of strength! O Sanctuary of the Just! O flourishing bed of the Spouse of Solomon! methinks I see water and blood running out of his side more freshly, than those golden streams which ran out of the garden of Eden, and watered the whole world. Here if I could stay I might lengthen my Doctrine during my life; oh it were good to be here; it were a large field, and a blessed subject.

4. About five (which the Jews call the eleventh, and the last hour of the day) Christ was taken down, and buried by Joseph and Nicodemus. But enough, I must not wear out your patience altogether.

Thus far we have propounded the blessed object of Christ's suffering and dying for us: our next work is to direct you (as formerly) in the art or mystery, how you are to look unto him in this respect.

CHAP. III.

SECT. I. Of knowing Jesus as carrying on the great work of our salvation in his death.

1. LET us know Jesus, carrying on the great work of our Salvation during his sufferings and death. This is the high point which Paul was ever studying on, and preaching on, and pondering on; For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified. Christ crucified is the rarest piece of knowledge in the world; the person of Christ is a matter of high speculation, but Christ further considered, as clothed with his garments of blood, is that knowledge which especially Paul pursues; he esteems not, reckons not, determines not to make any profession of any other science or doctrine than the most necessary, and only saving knowledge of Christ crucified. O my soul, how many days, and months, and years, hast thou spent to attain some little measure of knowledge in the Arts, and Tongues, and Sciences? and yet what a poor skill hast thou attained in respect of the many thousands of them that knew nothing at all of Jesus Christ? and what if thou hadst reached out to a greater proficiency? couldst thou have dived into the secrets of Nature, couldst thou have excelled the wisdom of all the children of the East country, and all the wisdom of Egypt, and the wisdom of Solomon, who spake of beasts, of fowls, of fishes, of all trees from the Cedar tree that is in Lebanon, even to the hyssop that springeth out of the wall, yet without the saving knowledge of Christ crucified (Christ suffering, bleeding, and dying) all this had been nothing, see Eccles. 1.18. only that knowledge is worth the having which refers to Christ; and above all that is the rarest piece of Christ's humiliation, which holds him forth suffering for us, and so freeing us from hell sufferings. Come then, and spend thy time for the future more fruitfully in reading, learning, knowing, this one necessary thing. Study Christ crucified in every piece and part; O the precious truths, and precious discoveries that a studying head and heart would hammer out here! much hath been said, but a thousand-thousand times more might yet be said; we have given but a little scantling of that which Christ endured; Volumes might be written till they were piled as high as heaven; and yet all would not serve to make out the full discoveries of Jesus's sufferings. Study therefore, and study more, but be sure thy study and thy knowledge be rather practical than speculative; do not merely beat thy brains to learn the history of Christ's death, but the efficacy, virtue, and merit of it; know what thou knowest in reference to thyself, as if Jesus had been all the while carrying on the business of thy souls salvation; as if thou hadst stood by, and Christ had spoke to thee, as sometimes to the women, Weep not for me, but for thyself; thy sins caused my sufferings, and my sufferings were for the abolition of thy sins.

SECT. II. Of considering Jesus in that respect.

2. LET us consider Jesus, carrying on this great work of our salvation during his sufferings and death. They shall look upon me whom they have pierced, saith the Prophet; (i.e.) they shall consider me: and accordingly is the Apostle, looking unto Jesus, or considering of Jesus the Author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy of our salvation set before him, endured the cross, and despised the shame. Then indeed, and in that act is the duty brought in, it is good in all respects, and under all considerations to look unto Jesus from first to last, but above all, this Text relates firstly to the time of his sufferings; and hence it is that Luke calls Christ's passion 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a theory or sight; And all the people that came together to that sight,—smote their breasts and returned. Not but that every passage of Christ is a theory or sight, worthy our looking on, or considering of; Christ in his Fathers purpose, and Christ in the promise, and Christ in performance, Christ in his birth, and Christ in his life, O how sweet? what blessed objects are these to look upon? but above all consider him (saith the Apostle) that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself.—Consider him who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, and despised the shame; of all other parts, acts, or passages of Christ, the holy Ghost hath only honored Christ's passion (his sufferings and his death) with this name of theory, and sight. Why surely this is the theory ever most commended to our view, and consideration; O then let us look on this, consider of this. As in this manner.—

1. Consider him passing over the Brook Cedron; it signifies the wrath of God, and rage of men; the first step of his passion is sharp and sore; he cannot enter the door, but first he must wade through cold waters on bare feet, nor must he only wade through them, but drink of them; through many tribulations must he go that will purchase souls, and through many tribulations must they go that will follow after him to the Kingdom of Glory.—Consider him entering into the Garden of Gethsemane; in a garden Adam sinned, and in this garden Christ must suffer, that the same place which was the nest where sin was hatched, might now be the child-bed of grace and mercy; into this garden no sooner was he entered, but he began to be agonized; all his powers and passions within him were in conflict. Consider O my soul how suddenly he is struck into a strange fear; never was man so afraid of the torments of hell, as Christ (standing in our room) is of his Fathers wrath; fear is still suitable to apprehension, and never man could so perfectly apprehend the cause of fear as Jesus Christ; nor was he only afraid, but very heavy; My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death. His sorrow was lethal and deadly, it melted his soul gradually as wax is melted with heat; it continued with him till his last gasp, his heart was like wax burning all the time of his passion, and at last it melted in the midst of his bowels. Nor was he only afraid and heavy, but he began to be sore amazed; this signifies an universal cessation of all the faculties of the soul from their several functions, we usually call it a consternation, it is like a Clock stopped for the while from going, by some hand or other laid upon it; or if it was not wholly a cessation, yet was it at least an expavescence, such a motion of the mind as whereby for the present he was disabled to mind anything else, but the dreadful sense of the wrath of God. O what an agony was this? O what a struggling passion of mixed grief was this? what afflicting and conflicting affections under the sight and sense of eminent peril was in this agony? And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly; thrice had he prayed, but now in his agony he prayed more earnestly; O my Father if it be possible, let this cup pass from me, nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt. Though I feel the soul of pain in the pain of my soul, yet there is divinity in me, which tells me there is a wage for sin, and I will pay it all? O my Father since thou hast bent thy bow, lo here an open breast, fix herein all thy shafts of fury, better I suffer for a while than that all believers should be damned forever; thy will is mine, lo I will bear the burden of sin, come and shoot here thy arrows of revenge. And thus as he prayed he sweat, And is sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. Oh what man or Angel can conceive the agony, the fear, the sorrow, the amazement of that heart, that without all outward violence, merely out of the extremity of his own passion, bled through the flesh and skin, not some faint dew, but solid drops of blood? now is he crucified without a cross, fear and sorrow are the nails, our sins the thorns, his Fathers wrath the spear, and all these together cause a bleeding shower to rain throughout all his pores; O my soul, consider of this, and if thou wilt bring this consideration home, say, thy sins were the cause of this bloody sweat; Jesus Christ is that true Adam, that is come out of Paradise for thy sins, and thus labored on earth with his bloody sweat to get the bread that thou must feed on.

2. Consider his apprehension; Judas is now at hand, with a troop following him to apprehend his Master, see how without all shame he set himself in the van, and coming to his Lord and Master, gives him a most Traiterous and deceitful kiss, What Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss? hast thou sold the Lord of life to such cruel merchants as covet greedily his blood and life? O alas! at what price hast thou set the Lord of all the creatures? at thirty pence? what a vile and slender price is this for a Lord of such Glory and Majesty? God was sold for thirty pieces of silver, but man could not be bought without the dearest heart-blood of the Son of God. At that time said Christ, Ye be come as it were against a thief with swords and staves, I sate daily among you teaching in the Temple, and ye never laid hands on me, but this is your hour, and the power of darkness. Now the Prince of darkness exercised his power, now the hellish rout, and malicious rabble of ravenous wolves, assaulted the most innocent Lamb in the world; now they most furiously hailed him this way and that way; O how ungently did they handle him? how uncourteously spake they unto him? how many blows and buffets did they give him? what cries, and shouts, and clamours made they over him: now they lay hold on his holy hands, and bind them hard with rough and knotty cords, so that they gall the skin off his arms, and make the very blood spring out; now they bring him back again over Cedron, and they make him once again to drink of the brook in the way; now they lead him openly through the high streets of Jerusalem and carry him to the house of Annas in great triumph. O my soul consider these several passages, consider them leisurely, and with good attention, consider them till thou feelest some motions or alterations in thy affection; is not this he that is the infinite virtue, the pattern of innocence, the everlasting wisdom; the honor of earth, the glory of heaven, the very fountain of all beauty) whether of men or Angels! how is it then that this virtue or power is tied with bands, that innocence is apprehended, that wisdom is flouted and laughed to scorn, that honor is contemned, that glory is tormented, that he that is fairer than all the children of men, is besmeared with weeping, and troubled with sorrow of heart? surely there is something O my soul in thee, that caused all this: hadst not thou sinned, the Sun of Righteousness had never been eclipsed.

3. Consider the hurrying of Jesus from Annas to Caiaphas; there a Council is called, and Caiaphas the high Priest adjures our Lord to tell him if he was Christ the Son of God: no sooner he affirms it, but he is doomed guilty of blasphemy, and so guilty of death. Now again they assault him like mad dogs, and disgorge upon him all their malice, fury, and revenge; each one to the utmost of his power gives him buffets, and strokes; there they spit upon that Divine face with their devilish mouths, there they hudwink his eyes, and strike him on the cheek, scoffing, and jesting, and saying, Read, who is it that smote thee? O beauty of Angels! was that a face to be spet upon? men usually when they are provoked to spit, turn away their faces towards the foulest corner of the house, and is there not in all that Palace a souler place to spit in than the face of Jesus? O my soul, why dost thou not humble thyself, at this so wonderful example? how is it that there should remain in the world any token of pride after this so great and marvelous an example of humility? surely I am at my wits end, and very much astonished to consider, how this so great patience overcomes not my anger, how this so great abasing asswageth not my pride, how these so violent buffets beat not down my presumption: Is it not marvelous that Jesus Christ by these means should overthrow the Kingdom of pride, and yet that there should remain in me the relics of pride? consider all those night-sufferings of Christ; O cruel night! O unquiet night! now was the season that all creatures should take their rest, that the senses, and members wearied with toils and labors, should be refreshed; but on the contrary Christ's members and senses were then tormented, they struck his body, they afflicted his soul, they bound his hands, they buffeted his cheeks, they spit in his face; O my soul thou sinnest in the dark, in covert, in secret, when no eye is upon thee, when the Sun, that eye of the world is set, or hid; and therefore all the night long is Christ thus tormented by thy sins; not one jot of rest hath Christ, not a wink of sleep must seize on him, whom thou by the alarm of thy sins disquieted, both at evening, at mid-night, and at the Cock-Crow, and at the dawning.

4. Consider the hurryings of Jesus from Caiaphas to Pilate; now he stands before Pilate, where he was accused of sedition, seduction, and usurpation. Not only Jews, but Gentiles have their hands imbrewed in the blood of Christ; Pilate was delegated from Caesar, both of them Gentiles, yet not without a prophesy, Behold we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the Prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished; for he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles: at the Gentile-tribunal being questioned of his Kingdom, and he answers both the Jews and Gentiles that they need not fear his usurpation, My Kingdom is not of this world. He gives Kingdoms that are eternal, but he will take away none that are temporal; Christ came not into the world to be Caesar's, or Pilate's, or Herod's successor, but if they had believed, to have been their Savior. Look through the Chronicles of his life, and we find him so far from a King, that he was the meanest servant of all men; where was he born but at Bethlehem a little City? where did the Shepherds find him but in a poor cottage? who were his Disciples but a deal of Fishermen? who his Companions but Publicans and sinners? is he hungry? where stands his table but on plain ground? what are his dainties but bread and a few Fishes? where is his lodging but at the stern of a Ship? Here's a King without either presence-chamber, or bed-chamber, The Foxes have holes, and the Birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not whereon to lay his head. Come, fear not Pilate the loss of thy diadem; it may be the people would sometimes have made him a King, but see how he flies from it, My Kingdom is not of this World, saith Jesus. Oh that I could but contemn the World as Christ did! O that first and above all I could seek the Kingdom of God and his righteousness! Oh my soul, I feel it, I feel it, unless I can be free from the affection of all creatures, I cannot with freedom of mind aspire unto divine things; unless I be willing with Christ to tread on Crowns and Scepters, to be despised and forsaken of all, and to be esteemed nothing at all, I can have no inward peace, nor be spiritually enlightened, nor be wholly united to the Lord Jesus Christ.

5. Consider the hurryings of Jesus from Pilate to Herod; there is he questioned of many things, but justly is the Lamb of God dumb, and opened not his mouth to him that not long before had taken away his voice; upon this he is mocked, and arrayed in a gorgeous robe; Wisdom is taken for Folly, Virtue for Vice, Truth for Blasphemy, Temperance for Gluttony, the Peace-maker of all the World for a seditious disturber of the World, the reformer of the Law for a breaker of the Law, and the justifier of sinners for a sinner, and the follower of sinners. See how he emptied himself, and made himself of no reputation that he might fill thee with goodness, and make thee spiritually wise unto salvation.

6. Consider the hurrying of Jesus from Herod back again to Pilate; O my Savior how art thou now abused! new accusations are forged; and when Pilate sees that nothing will do, but Christ must die, he delivers him to be stripped, whipped, clothed in Purple, crowned with Thorns, and Sceptred with a Reed. He that with spittle cured the eyes of the blind, is now blinded with their spittle; who can number those stripes wherewith they flea and tare his body, one wound eating into another, that there is no health in his bones by reason of my sins? O Jesus! was that frothy spittle the Ointment, those Thorns thy Crown, that Reed thy Scepter, that Purple-died and embroidered with blood, thy Royal Robes? or because Adam's sin brought forth Thorns, must it therefore be thy penance to wear them? unthankful people thus watered with his blood, that bring forth nothing but Thorns to crown him. But Oh that the Lord of Heaven, the Creator of the World, the Glory of the Angels, the Wisdom of God, should, for my sake, be punished with whips and scourges? O my heart, how can I think on this without tears of blood? O joy of the Angels, and Glory of Saints, who hath thus disfigured thee? who hath thus defiled thee with so many bloody blows? certainly they were not thy sins, but mine; it was love and mercy that compassed thee about, and caused thee to take upon thee this so heavy a burden; love was the cause why thou didst bestow upon me all thy benefits, and mercy moved thee to take upon thee all my miseries.

7. Consider that sad spectacle of Jesus, when he came forth wearing the Crown of Thorns, and the Purple Robe, and Pilate saying unto them, behold the Man. O my soul fix thy eyes on the sad object! suppose thyself in the case of Jesus; what if in so sensible and tender a part as thy head is, men should fasten a number of Thorns, yea and those so sharp that they should pierce into thy scull? why alas, thou canst hardly abide the prick of a pin, much less the piercing in of so many Thorns; O but thy Jesus was crowned with Thorns, and Sceptred with a Reed, and that Reed was taken out of his hands, to beat the Crown of Thorns into his head; and besides, thy Jesus was whipped with cords, and rods, and little chains of iron, that from his shoulders to the soles of his feet there was no part free; and being now in this plight, thou art called on to behold the Man: dost thou see him? is thy imagination strong: canst thou consider him at present, as if thou hadst a view of this very man? methinks it should make thee break out, and say, O brightness of thy Fathers glory, who hath thus cruelly dealt with thee? O unspotted glass of the Majesty of God, who hath thus wholly disfigured thee? O river that flows out of the paradise of delights, who hath thus troubled thee? it is my sins O Lord that have so troubled thee; my sins were the Thorns that pricked thee, the lashes that whipped thee, the purple that clothed thee, it is I Lord that am thy tormentor, and the very cause of these thy pains.

8. Consider Pilate's sentence, that Jesus should be Crucified as the Jews required. Now they had him in their will, and they did to him what seemed them good. Follow him from Gabbatha to Golgotha, see how they lay the heavy Cross upon his tender shoulders, that were so pitifully rent and torn with whips; accompany him all the way to the Execution, and help to carry his Cross to Mount Calvary; And there, as if thou hadst been frozen hitherto, thaw into tears; see him lifted up on that engine of torture, the bloody Cross; he hangs on nails, and as he hangs, his own weight becomes his own affliction; O see how his arms and legs were racked with voilent pulls, his hands and feet bored with nails, his whole body torn with stripes, and gored with blood; And now, O my soul, run with all thy might into his arms held out at their full length to receive thee; Oh weigh the matter! because sin entered by the senses, therefore the head, in which the senses flourish, is crowned with searching thorns; because the hands and feet are more especially the instruments of sin, therefore his hands and feet are nailed to the Cross for satisfaction. O marvelous! what King is he, or of what Country, that wears a Crown of Thorns? what man is he, or where lives he, whose hands and feet are not only bored, but digged into, as if they had been digging with Spades in a ditch? surely here's matter for a serious meditation, be enlarged O my thoughts, and dwell upon it! consider it, and consider it again!

9. Consider the darkness that spread over all the Earth; now was the Sun ashamed to show his brightness; considering that the Father of lights was darkened with such disgrace; the Heavens discoloured their beauty, and are in mourning robes; the Lamp of Heaven is immantled with a miraculous Eclipse; the Sun in the firmament, will sympathize with the Sun of Righteousness; it will not appear in glory, though it be midday, because the Lord of Glory is thus disgraced. And now hear the voice that comes from the Son of God, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Christ in the Garden tasted the bitter cup of God's fierce wrath, but now he drunk the dregs of it; he then sipped off the top, but now he drunk all off, top, and bottom, and all. O but what's the meaning of this; My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Surely, 1. This was not a total, but a partial dereliction, this was not a perpetual, but a temporary forsaking of him; the Godhead was not took away from the manhood, but the union remained still, even now when the Manhood was forsaken. 2. This was not a forsaking on Christ's part, but only on the Father's part; the Father forsook Christ, but Christ went after him; God took away the sense of his love, but the Son of God laid hold upon him, crying, and saying, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? 3. This forsaking was not in respect of his being, but in respect of the feeling of God's favor, love, and mercy; certainly God loved him still, Oh but his sense of comfort was now quite gone, so as it never was before: In his agony there was some inklings of God's mercy, now and then at least there was some star-light, some little flash of lightning to cheer him up, but now all the sense and feeling of God's love was gone, and not so much as any little star-light of the same appeared. Christ now took the place of sinners, and God the Father shut him out (as it were) amongst the sinners; he drew his mercy out of sight, and out of hearing, and therefore he cried out in a kind of wonderment, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? After this he speaks but a few words more, and he gives up the Ghost. He dyes that we might live, he is dissolved in himself, that we might be united to his Father; O my soul, see him now if thou canst for weeping, his eyes are dim, his cheeks are wan, his face is pale, his head is bowing, his heart is panting, himself is dying; come, come, and die with him by a most exact mortification; look pale like him with grief, and sorrow, and trouble for thy sins.

10. Consider the piercing of his side with a spear, whence came out a stream of blood and water; O Fountain of everlasting waters! methinks I see the blood running out of his side more freshly than those golden streams which ran out of the Garden of Eden, and watered the whole World. Consider the taking of his body down by Joseph; the burying of it by Joseph and Nicodemus; O here's excellent matter for our meditation! O my spirit, go with me a little! Christ being dead, it is pity but he should have a funeral; according to the letter let Joseph and Nicodemus bear his corps; let the blessed Virgin go after it sighing and weeping, and at every other place looking up to Heaven; let Mary Magdalene follow after with a box of precious Ointment in her hand, and with her hair hanging, ready (if need were) to wipe his feet again; or that in this meditation I may be more spiritual, let the Usurer come first with Judas's bag, and distribute to the poor as he goes along; let the Drunkard follow after with the sponge that was filled with gall, and vinegar, and check his wanton thirst; let the young Gallant or voluptuous man come like his Master with bare foot, and with the cown of thorns set also upon his head; let the wanton person bear the rods, and whips, and wiers wherewith Christ was scourged, and fright his own flesh; let the ambitious man be clad in the purple robe, the angry Person in the seamless coat; my meaning is, let every sinner according to the nature of his sin, draw something or other from the passion of Christ to the mortifying of his sin, yea let all turn mourners, let all bow their heads, and be ready to give up the Ghost for the Name of Christ, and let not Christ be buried without a Sermon neither, and let the Text be this, The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep, and in the end of the Sermon (whether it be in use or no) let the Preacher take occasion to speak a word or two in the praise of Christ, let him say with the Spouse, that he was the chiefest among ten thousands, that he was altogether lovely; that being God above all God's, he became man beneath all men; that when he spake he began ordinarily with verily, verily, I say unto you: that he was an holy man, that he never sinned in all his life neither in thought, word, or deed; that being endowed with the Power of Miracles, he lovingly employed it in curing the lame, and blind, and deaf, and dumb, in casting out devils, in healing the sick, in restoring the dead to life; that as he lived, so he died, for being unjustly condemned, mocked, stripped, whipped, crucified, he took all patiently, praying for his persecutors, and leaving to them, when he had no temporal thing to give them, a legacy of love, of life, of mercy, of pardon, of Salvation: When the Sermon is done, and the Burial is finished, let every Mourner go home, and begin a new life in imitation of Jesus Christ. O my soul that thou wouldst thus meditate, and thus imitate, that so thy meditation might be fruitful, and thy imitation real; I mean that thy life and death might be conformable to the life and death of Jesus Christ. But of that hereafter.

SECT. III. Of desiring Jesus in that Respect.

3. LET us desire after Jesus, carrying on the work of our salvation in his death; Jesus Christ to a fallen sinner is the chief object of desire, but Jesus Christ as crucified is the chief piece of that object. Humbled souls look after the remedy, and they find chiefly in Christ crucified; and hence are so many cries after bathings in Christ's blood, and hiding in Christ's righteousness, active, and passive. Indeed nothing doth so cool and refresh a parched, dry, and thirsty soul as the blood of Jesus; which made the poor woman cry out so earnestly, I have an husband, and Children, and many other comforts, but I would give them all, and all the good that ever I shall see in this world, or in the world to come, to have my poor thirsty soul refreshed with that precious blood of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But what is there in Christ's blood or death that is so desirable? I answer,—

1. There is in it the person of Christ, he that is God-man, man-God, The brightness of his father's Glory, and the express Image of his Person, it is he that died; every drop of his blood was not only the blood of an innocent man, but of one that was God as well as man, God with his own blood purchased the Church; now surely everything of God is most desirable.

2. There is in it a worth, or price; Christ considered under the notion of a sacrifice is of infinite worth; now this sacrifice (saith the Apostle) he offered up, Heb. 9.28. He offered up, not in Heaven, as the Socinians would have it, in presenting himself before God his Father, but upon earth, viz. in his Passion upon the Cross. No wealth in heaven or earth besides this, could redeem one soul, and therefore the Apostle sets this against all corruptible things, as silver and gold, the things so much set by amongst the men of this world; Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver, and gold,—but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish, and without spot.

3. There is in it a merit and satisfaction; the Scripture indeed doth not expressly use these words, but it hath the sense and meaning of them; As in that text, He hath made us accepted in the beloved; to whom we have redemption through his blood. I know there is a different notion in these words; for merit doth properly respect the good that is to be procured, but satisfaction the evil that is repelled; but in Christ we stand not on these distinctions, because in his merit was satisfaction, and in his satisfaction was merit. A great controversy is of late risen up, Whether Christ's death be a satisfaction to Divine justice? But the very words redeeming and buying, do plainly demonstrate; that a satisfaction was given to God by the death of Jesus; He gave himself for us that he might redeem us, ye are bought with a price; and what price was that? why his own blood. Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood; (i.e.) by thy death and Passion. This was the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that ransom which Christ gave for his Elect; The Son of man came to give his life a ransom for many; or as the Apostle, He gave himself a ransom for all, the word is here 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which signifies an adequate price, or a counterprice; as when one doth, or undergoeth something in the room of another; as when one yields himself a Captive for the redeeming of another out of Captivity, or gives up his own life for the saving of another man's life; so Christ gave himself 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a ransom, or counterprice, submitting himself to the like punishment that his redeemed ones should have undergone.

The Socinians tell us that Christ's sufferings and death were not for satisfaction to God, but in reference to us, that we might believe the truth of his Doctrine confirmed and sealed (as they say) by his death, and that we might yield obedience to God according to the pattern that he hath set before us, and that so believing and obeying, we might obtain the remission of Sins and eternal Life.

But the Scripture goes higher; in that mutual compact and agreement betwixt God and Christ, we find God the Father imposing, and Christ submitting to this satisfaction. 1. The Father imposeth it by charging the sins of his Elect upon Jesus Christ. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all; not the sins themselves, not the evil in them, or fault of them, but the guilt and penalty belonging to them; this God laid upon his Son, and charged it upon him; he charged it as a Creditor chargeth the debt upon the Surety, requiring satisfaction. 2. Christ undertook it. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, or as some translate, It was exacted, and he answered; (i.e.) God the Father required satisfaction for sin, and Jesus Christ was our Surety answered in our behalf; He bear the Sins of many, he bear them as a porter that bears the burden for another which himself is not able to stand under; he bear them by undergoing the punishment which was due for them, he bear them as our Surety, submitting himself unto the penalty which we had deserved; and by that means he made satisfaction to the justice of God. Surely Christ's death was not only for confirmation of his Doctrine, but for satisfaction to God.

4. There is in it not only a true, but a copious, and full satisfaction; Christ's death and blood is superabundant to our sins; The grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant 1. Tim. 1.14. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 it was over-full, redundant, more than enough. Many an humble soul is apt enough to complain, Oh if I had not been so great a sinner, if I had not committed such and such transgressions, there might have been hope; This is to undervalue Christ's redemption, this is to think there is more in sin to damn, than in Christ's sufferings to save; whereas all thy Sins to Christ are but as a little cloud to the glorious Sun; yea, all the Sins of all the men in the world, are but to Christ's merits as a drop to the Ocean. I speak not this to encourage the presumptuous sinner; for alas, he hath no part in this satisfaction; but to comfort the humble sinner, who is loaden with the sense of his Sins; what though they were a burden greater than he can bear? yet they are not a burden greater than Christ can bear; there is in Christ's blood an infinite treasure, able to sanctify thee, and all the World, there is in Christ's death a ransom, a counterprice sufficient to redeem all the sinners, that ever were, or ever shall be; the price is of that nature, that it is not diminished, though it be extended to never so many; as the Sun hath fullness of light to enlighten all the world; and if the blind do not see by it, it is no any scarcity of light in the Sun, but by reason of his own indisposition; so if all men are not acquitted by Christ's death, it's not because that was insufficient, as if it had not virtue enough to reach them as well as others, but because they by their unbelief do reject this remedy. Oh what large room hath saith to expatiate in! sit down, and dive, and dive, yet thou canst not come to the bottom of Christ's blood; but as the Prophet Ezekiel saw still more and greater abominations, so mayest thou in the sufferings of Christ observe more and more fullness. See what a notable opposition the Apostle makes, Rom. 5.15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. between the first and second Adam; proving at large that Christ doth super-abound in the fruits of his grace, above the first Adam in the fruits of his sin; he calls it grace, and the abundance of grace, and this abundance of grace reigneth to life; so that these Texts should be like so much oil poured into the wounds of every broken-hearted sinner. Oh is there anything that can be desired more than this?

5. There is in it remission of sins; so saith Christ, This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins, Remission of sins is attributed to Christ's death as a cause; it is not thy tears, or prayers, or rendings of heart that could pay the least farthing, Without shedding of blood (saith the Apostle) there is no remission. God will have tears and blood also, though not for the same purpose; for all thy tears thou must fly to Christ only as the cause; it is true, thou must mourn, and pray, and humble thyself, but it's Christ's blood only that can wash us clean; Oh remember this! God will not pardon without satisfaction by the blood of Christ. And surely this makes Christ's death so desirable; Oh my sins afflict me, (cries many a one) Oh I am loathsome in mine own eyes, much more in God's, surely God is offended with my dullness, slothfulness, and my thousand imperfections; I am all the day long entangled with this sin, and that sin, and the other sin; but let this contrite spirit look on Christ's death, and therein he may find all sin is pardoned: see here what an Argument is put into thy mouth from these sufferings of Christ, well mayest thou say, O Lord I am unworthy, but it is just and right that Christ obtain what he died for; O pardon my sins for his death's sake, and for his precious blood sake.

6. There is in it reconciliation and peace with God, In Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were afar off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ, for he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us.—When we were enemies, we were reconciled unto God by the death of his Son—that he might reconcile both (viz. Jews and Gentiles) unto God in one body by the Cross.—And having made peace through the blood of his Cross, by him •o reconcile all things to himself. This certainly should admirably support the drooping soul; it may be thou criest, My sins have made a breach betwixt God and my soul; I have warred against heaven, and now God wars against me; and oh what odds? if the Lord be angry, yea, but a little; what will become of my poor soul? is a little stubble able to contend with the consuming fire? how then should I contend with God? but come now, and look on Christ's death as the means and meritorious cause of reconciliation, and thou canst not but say, O this death is desirable! When God the Father looks at a sinner in the bloody glass of Christ, then saith God, Oh now fury and wrath is not in me; I have no more quarrel or controversy with this soul: seeing Christ hath suffered, it is enough, I have as much as my justice can demand, my frowns are now turned into smiles, and my rod of iron into a Scepter of grace. Why this is it that makes Christ's death and blood so desirable to the soul; what shall Jacob so rejoice in seeing Esau's face altered to him? shall he say to Esau, I have seen thy face, as the face of God? how much rather may the humble and believing sinner be filled with gladness, when through Christ's blood shall be thus appeased and reconciled with him?

7. There is in it immunity and safety from all the judgments and dangers threatened against our sins. Surely if there were such force in the blood of the type, that by the effusion of it the Israelites lay safe, and untouched of the revenging Angel, how much more in the blood of Christ? Satan himself is said to be overcome by the blood of the Lamb; and God's revenge due to our sins is said to be removed by the blood of Jesus, therefore it is called The blood of sprinkling, that speaks better things than the blood of Abel; the blood of sprinkling was for safety, and Christ's blood is for safety; it cries not for revenge, as Abel's blood cried, but for mercy and for deliverance from all misery.

8. There is in it a blessed virtue to open Heaven, and to make passage thither for our souls, Having boldness or liberty to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus: it is the blood of Christ that rents the Vail, and makes a way into the Holy of Holies, that is, into the Kingdom of Heaven; without this blood there is no access to God; it is only by the blood of Christ that heaven is open to our prayers, and that Heaven is open to our persons; this blood is the key that unlocks Heaven, and lets in the souls of his Redeemed ones: And I looked (saith John) and behold a door was open in Heaven, and the first voice I heard, was as it were of a trumpet talking with me, which said, come up hither; and no sooner was he in the Spirit, and entered in, but he heard the new song of the four beasts, and four and twenty Elders, saying to Christ, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood.

Come now, and gather in all these several particulars, there is in Christ's blood inclusively the person of Christ, the price of souls, a merit and satisfaction, a copious and full satisfaction, remission of sins, reconciliation with God, immunity from dangers, a passage into glory; I might add all other privileges, benefits, dignities of the soul, for they all flow from the blood of Jesus, and they are all contained either expressly, or virtually in the blood of Jesus; and is not all this worth the looking after? O my soul, where is thy languor, and fainting towards this blessed object? Shall Ahab eagerly desire after Naboth's vineyard, yea, so eagerly desire it, that his desire shall cast him upon his bed? and is not Christ's blood better than Naboth's vineyard? how is it O my soul, that thou art not sick on thy bed in thy desires after Jesus? when David desired strongly after God's Law, he expressed his longings by the breaking and fainting of his soul, My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath to thy judgment at all times;—and my soul fainteth for thy Salvation: Oh where be these breakings and faintings? strength of desire is expressed by the Apostle by groaning, which is the language of sickness; Oh where be these groanings after Christ's death? when I call to mind that Christ's death is my ransom, that Christ's wounds are my salves, that Christ's stripes are my cures, that Christ's blood is my fountain to wash in, and to be clean; how should I but pray in this sense, His blood be upon us, and on our children? Oh I am undone except I have a share in this blood; why it is only this blood that can heal my soul, it is only this Fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that can quench my thirst; and now I have seen the Fountain opened, how should I but thirst, and cry out with the woman of Samaria, O give me this water that I thirst no more? But alas, I say it, I only say it. Oh that I could feel it! Oh my Jesus that thou wouldst breed in me ardent desires, vehement longings, unutterable groans, mighty gaspings; O that I were like the dry and thirsty ground, that gapes, and cleaves, and opens for drops of rain! when my spirit is in right frame I feel some desires after Christ's blood, but how short are these desires, how unworthy of the things desired? come Lord, kindle in me hot burning desires, and then give me the desirable Object.

SECT. IV. Of hoping in Jesus in that respect.

4. LET us hope in Jesus, carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his sufferings and death. By this hope I intend only that which the Apostle calls full assurance of hope. The main question is, Whether I have any part in Christ's sufferings? they are of excellent use, and of great value to believers, but what am I the better for them, if I have no part in them? or if I say I hope well? Oh but what grounds of that hope? it is not every hope that is a well grounded hope; full assurance of hope is an high pitch of hope, and every Christian should strive and endeavor after it; now that we may do it, and that we may discern it, that our hope is not base, but right-born, that the grounds of our hope in Christ's death are not false, but of the right stamp; I shall lay down these signs.—

1. If Christ's death be mine, then is Christ's life mine; and converse, if Christ's death be mine, then is Christ's life mine. Christ's active and passive obedience cannot be severed; Christ is not divided: we must not seek one part of our righteousness in his birth, another in his habitual holiness, another in the integrity of his life, another in his obedience of death. They that endeavor to separate Christ's active and passive obedience, they do exceedingly derogate from Christ, and make him but half a Savior; was not Christ our Surety? Heb. 7.22. and thereupon was he not bound to fulfil all righteousness for us? (i.e.) as to suffer in our stead, so to obey in our stead? oh take heed of opposing or separating Christ's death, and Christ's life; either we have all Christ, or we have no part in Christ; now if these two be concomitants, well may the one be as the sign of the other; search then, and try, O my soul, hast thou any share in Christ's life? canst thou make out Christ's active obedience unto thy own soul? if herein thou art at a stand, peruse those Characters laid down in the life of Christ; the many glorious effects flowing out of Christ's life into a Believer's soul we have discovered before.

2. If Christ's death be mine, then is that great end of his death accomplished in me, viz. By the sacrifice of himself he hath put away sin, even my sin.—and, in him I have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins. As on this account he suffered, to finish the transgression, to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity; so if his death be mine, I may assuredly say, my sins are pardoned, and mine iniquities are done away. Come then, and try by this sign, canst thou assure thyself that thy sins are forgiven thee? hast thou heard the whispers of God's Spirit, Son, or Daughter, be of good comfort, thy sins are remitted? there is no question then, but thou art redeemed by his blood, thou hast part in his sufferings. Indeed this very Character may seem obscure, assurance of pardon is the hidden Manna, the white Stone which no man knoweth, saving he which receives it and feels it; and yet if thou diligently observest the Spirit's actings, even this may be known; remission of sin and repentance for sin are twins of a birth; those two God in Scripture hath joined together: If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive our sins.—And, repent and pray, if the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee.—And, Christ is a Prince and a Savior to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.—And, thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer.—That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his Name. In this way David assured himself; I said I will confess my Transgressions unto the Lord, and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin, Selah. It is no more, than to ask thy Soul, what, are thy repentings kindled together? hast thou seriously and sincerely repented thee of sin as sin? hast thou turned from all sin unto God with constancy and delight? Surely this is peculiar and proper to the Child of God by virtue of Christ's Death.

3. If Christ's death be mine, then am I engrafted into the likeness of Christ's death; then am I made conformable to Christ in his death, that I may know him and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death. The same that was done to Christ in a natural way, is done and performed in the Believer in a spiritual way; (i.e.) as Christ died, so the Believer dies; as Christ died for sin, so the Believer dies to sin; In that he died, he died unto sin,—likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin. Observe here the Analogy, and proportion, and resemblance betwixt Christ and us: both die unto sin, Christ by way of expiation, suffering, and satisfying for the sins of others; we by way of mortification, killing, and slaying, and crucifying our own sins. I look upon this sign as the very touchstone of a Christian, and therefore I shall insist upon it.

Two questions I suppose needful, to resolve the grounds of our Hope concerning our interest in the death of Christ.

- 1. Whether indeed and in truth our sins are mortified?
- 2. Whether we increase or grow in our mortification?

For the first; whether indeed and in truth our sins are mortified? It is a skill worth our learning, because of the many deceits that are within us; sin may seem to be mortified when the occasion is removed; or sin may seem to be mortified, when it is not violent, but quiet; or sin may seem to be mortified, when it is but removed from one sin unto another; or sin may seem to be mortified, when the sap and strength of sin is dead; as the Lamp goes out, when either the Oil is not supplied, or taken away. Now that in this scrutiny we may search to the bottom, and know the truth and certainty of our mortification, it will appear by these Rules.

1. True mortification springs from a root of Faith. Every thing in the world proceeds from some cause or other; and if the cause be good, the effect must needs be good; but if the cause be evil, the effect must needs be evil: A good Tree cannot bring forth evil Fruit, and an evil Tree cannot bring forth good Fruit. In this case therefore let us examine the cause; if we can make out this truth, that we believe in Christ, that we roll ourselves on the Lord Jesus Christ for life and for salvation, and that now we begin to feel in us the decay of sin, we may conclude from the cause or rise, that this decay of sin is true mortification; surely it hath received the deadly wound: it is a blessed effect arising from a good, and right, and genuine cause.

2. True mortification is general; not only one sin, but all sins are mortified in a true Believer. As death is unto the Members of the body, so is mortification unto the members of sin; now death seized upon every member, it leaves not life in any one member of the body; so neither doth mortification leave life in any one member of sin; my meaning is, it takes away the commanding power of sin in every member: Mortify your members which are upon the earth (saith the Apostle) your members, not one member; and then he instanceth, Fornication, Uncleaness, Inordinate Affections, Evil Concupiscence, and Covetousness, which is Idolatry. Christians that have their interest in Christ's death, must not only leave Pride, but Lust; not only Uncleaness, but Covetousness; Sin must not only be slain in the understanding, but in the will and affections: mortification is general.

You will say this is an hard saying; doth any man, any Believer, leave all sin? yes, in respect of ruling power he leaves all sin; all gross sins, and all other sins: only with this difference, all gross sins in practice and actions, and all frailties and infirmities in allowance and affection. It is good to observe the degrees of mortification: the first is to forbear the practice of gross and scandalous sins in word and deed: If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man; and this perfection by the help of Grace, a godly man may reach to in this life. The second is to deny consent and will to all frailties and infirmities: The evil which I would not, that do I, Rom. 7.19. I may do evil, and yet I would not do evil; there is a denial of it in the will. The third is to be free from any settled liking of any evil motion: not only to deny consent and will, but also to deny the very thought or imagination settledly and deliberately to delight in sin. I know, to be void of all evil motions arising from the flesh, or of all sudden passions within, or of all sudden delights in sin, or of all deadness or backwardness to good things by reason of sin, it is an higher pitch than any man can touch in this present world: for whilst we live, the Law of the members will be working, and we shall find cause enough to complain of a body of death; only, if when these motions first arise, we presently endeavor to quench them, to reject them, to detest them, and to cast them away from us, therein is true mortification: and thus far we must look to it, to leave all sin.

3. True mortification is not without its present combats, though at last it conquer; many a time corruption may break out, and lust may be strong and violent; but this violent lust is only for the present, whereas a lust unmortified ever reigneth. It is with sin in a Believer, as it is with a man that hath received his deadly wound from his enemy; he will not presently fly away, but rather he will run more violently upon him that hath wounded him; yet, be he never so violent, in the middle of his action he sinks down, because he hath received his deadly wound; so it is with a Believer's sin, and with a mortified lust; it may rage in the heart, and seem to bear sway for a time; but the power and strength of sin is mortified, it sinks down, and wants ability to prevail; by this sign may we know whether the corruptions and stirrings of our hearts proceed from a mortified, or from an unmortified lust; a lust, though mortified, may rage for a time, but it cannot rule; it may strive, but it cannot totally prevail; it may be in the heart, as a thief in the house, not to reside or dwell, but to lodge for a night, and be gone: And (that which is ever to be observed) after its swinge and breaking out, the heart that lodged it, abhors its self in dust and ashes, cries mightily unto God for mercy and pardon, repairs the breach with stronger resolution, and more invincible watchfulness against future assaults; but a Lust unmortified possesseth itself, and rules and reigns in the heart and soul; it abides there, and will not away: I shall not deny, but there may be a cessation of its actings for a time; but that is not any want of good will, as they say, but only of matter, means, opportunity, enticement, company, provocation, or the like; and after such cessation or forbearance, the heart usually entertains it again with more greediness; it lies and delights in it as much as ever, it hardens itself most obstinately in it, as if it were impossible to leave it, or live without it with any kind of comfort.

4. True mortification is a painful work. The very word imports no less; to kill a man, or to mortify a member, will not be without pain; hence it is called a crucifying of the flesh, and a cutting off the right hand, a plucking out the right eye: they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh; if thy hand offend thee, cut it off; and if thy eye offend thee, pluck it out: in this respect this death unto sin carries with it a likeness to the death of Christ; it is attended with agonies, and soul-conflicts, both before, and after our conversion.

1. Before conversion, before the first wound be given it, why then ordinarily there is some compunction of Spirit, some pricking of heart; what a case do we find the Jews in, when after Peters Sermon, they were pricked at their hearts? and what an agony do we find the Jailor in, when he came trembling in, and falling down at the Apostles feet, and crying out, Sirs, What shall I do to be saved? With such agonies as these, is the beginning of mortification usually attended; I do not say that they are alike in all, whether for degree or continuance; but in ordinary, true and sound conversion is not without some of these soul-conflicts.

2. After conversion, after the first round there are some agonies still; for though a Believer be delivered of sin in respect of the guilt, and reigning power; yet he hath still some remainders of sinful Corruption left within him, which draw many a groan, and many a sign from his trembling heart; we also have the first-fruits of the spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the Redemption of our bodies: such are the groans of mortifying Saints, Saints dying unto sin like the groans of dying men, whose souls being weary of their bodies, do earnestly desire a dissolution: and thus Paul groaned, when he said, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body this death?

Oh what a Touchstone is this? how will it discover true mortification from that which was counterfeit? Some may think they are dead unto sin, when in deed and in truth they are not dead, but asleep unto sin; and it appears by this, because there were no pangs in their death, you know this is a difference betwixt death and sleep; there are pangs in the one, but not in the other: O my soul, examine, what pangs were there in thy death unto sin? what agonies, what soul-conflicts hast thou felt? what compunction of heart, what affliction of Spirit, hast thou endured for sin? what trouble hast thou had to find such a law in thy members rebelling against the law in thy mind, and bringing thee into captivity to the Law of sin? why surely thou art not so mortified, as to be freed wholly from the power of sin; it may be, it doth not rule in thee as a Prince, yet certainly it tyrannizeth over thee, it oftentimes carries thee contrary to the bent of thy regenerate mind, to the omitting of what thou wouldst do, and to the committing of what thou wouldst not do; and is not this an affliction of Spirit? doth not this cause frequent conflicts in thy spirit? if not, thou mayest well suspect that sin is not dead, but asleep; or if it be dead to thee, yet thou art not dead to it, I confess, death-pangs are not all alike in all; some have a more gentle, and others a more painful death; so it is in this Spiritual death unto sin; and that herein there may be no mistake, I shall propound this question: What is the least measure of these pangs, these soul-agonies, and conflicts, that are necessarily required to true mortification? I answer,—

1. There must be a sense of sin, and of God's wrath due unto sin; such a sense we find in Jesus Christ; he was very sensible of the weight and burden of those sins, and of the wrath of God that lay upon him; which made him cry out, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me? thus souls in the act of Mortification, sometimes cry out, O my sins! and Oh God's wrath!

2 There must be sorrow for Sin. Such an affection we find also in Jesus Christ: My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, he was beset and surrounded with sorrows; so every mortified sinner, at one time or other, he feels an inward sorrow and grief; even that Godly sorrow which the Apostle speaks of, a sorrow according to God; (i. e.,) coming from God, well-pleasing to God, and bringing to God back again.

3. There must be a desire of being freed and delivered from sin: such a desire we find also in Jesus Christ; I have a Baptism to be Baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished?

A regenerate soul earnestly desires to be freed, not only from the guilt, but also from the power of sin, O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me? &c,

4. There must be answerable endeavors in effectual strivings against sin; Ye have not resisted unto blood, striving against sin. How did our Savior wrestle in the Garden, offering up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears? so will a regenerate soul wrestle with God about t• death of sin, praying, watching, going out in the strength of God, and engaging in a continual war, a deadly fewd against it, and these are the least of those soul-conflicts, wherewith this mortification, or death unto sin is attended.

Now try we the truth of our Mortification by these signs: Doth it spring from a right root of Faith? is it general and universal in respect of all sins? is it accompanied with combats? doth the flesh lust against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh? and in this combat, doth the spirit at last prevail, and triumph over the flesh? do we find it a painful work both before and after conversion? why, then may I say with the Apostle, now I know Christ, and the fellowship of his sufferings; now by the Grace of Christ I am made conformable to his death. As he died for sin, so I die to sin; and here is the ground of my hope, that Christ's death is mine.

For the second, whether we increase and grow in our mortification? this question is needful as the former, to satisfy our souls interest in the death of Christ. As true Grace is growing Grace, so true mortification is that which grows: Now that we may be resolved in this point also, the growth of our mortification will appear by these following signs.—

1. Growing Mortification hath its chiefest conflicts in spiritual lusts. At first we mortify grosser evils, such as Oaths, Drunkenness, Uncleaness, worldly-mindedness, or the like; but when we grow in this Blessed duty, we then set ourselves against spiritual wickednesses; as Pride, Presumption, Self-carnal confidence in a man's own graces, or the like: this Method the Apostle sets down; let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit: first from all filthiness of the flesh or body, and then from all filthiness of the spirit or soul; as the children of Israel in their entrance into the land of Promise, first they sate upon the frontiers and skirts of the Land, and then they sought it out, and prevailed in the heart of the Country; so Christians in their mortification they first set upon worldly lusts, gross evils, outward sins; and when they have encountered them at the frontiers, they then conflict with such corruptions as lie more inwardly, in the very heart, spiritual wickednesses that are within. Now if this be our case, here is one sign of our growth,

2. Growing mortification is more, even, constant, lasting, durable, when there is in the heart a sudden flowing and reflowing; it comes from those vast Seas of Corruptions that are within us; many souls have their Ague-fits, sometimes hot, and sometimes cold; it may be, now they are in a very good frame, and within an hour or two, a mighty Tide comes in and they are born down by sin and corruption, in this case mortification is very weak: But on the contrary, if we find our standing more firm and sure, if for the main, we walk evenly, and keep closely to the Lord, it carries with it an evidence that our mortification grows.

3. Growing mortification feels Lust more weak, and the Spirit more strong in its ordinary actings. If we would know the truth of growth, let us look to our usual fits of sinning; for then a man's strength or weakness is discerned most: as a man's weakness to good is discerned when he comes to act it, to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not: so a man's weakness to sin is best discerned, when he comes to act it: Mark then the ordinary fits (as we call them) of sinning; sometimes God is pleased to appoint some more frequent assaults, as if he would on purpose suffer the law of the members to war, and to muster up all their forces, that so we might the rather know what is in our hearts; at such a time, if we find that resistance against sin grows stronger, that sin cannot advance and carry on his Army so as formerly, that sin is encount•ed at first, or met withal at the frontiers, and there overthrown, this is a good sign that now our mortification grows; as, suppose it be a Lust of Fancy, it cannot boil up to such gross fancies as it was wont; or suppose it be a Lust of Pride, it boyls not up to such a spirit of Pride as formerly; instead of bringing forth fruit, it now brings forth blossoms; or instead of bringing forth blossoms, it now brings forth nothing but Leaves; why this is a sure sign that this Lust is withering more and more; when the inordinate thirst is not so great in the time of the Fit, when the inward lusts pitch upon lower acts than they had wont, when the waters abate, and fall short, and lessen, and overflow less ground; we may conclude certainly, that mortification grows.

4. Growing mortification hath more ability to abstain from the very occasions and beginnings of lust. Thus Job (whom we look on as a man much mortified) made a Covenant with his eyes, that he would not think upon a Maid, and no question, as he made a covenant, so he kept his Covenant: Oh! when a man cannot endure to come where such a one is that he loves not, when he cannot endure the sight of him, or anything that puts him in mind of him, not so much as to parlie, or speak with him; this is a sign of a strong hatred; and so when a man hates the very garment spotted with the flesh, here's a good sign: I know this height is not easy to attain to, and therefore some in imitation of Job and David, have bound themselves with vows and promises, as much as might be, to abstain from the appearance of evil, to crush the Cockatrice Egg before the Serpent could creep out of it, to avoid sin in its first rise; but alas, how have they broken their vows from time to time? For all this, I dare not speak against vows, provided that, 1. They be of things lawful. 2. That we esteem them not as duties of absolute necessity. And, 3. That we bind not ourselves perpetually, lest our vows should become burdens unto us; but only for some short time, and so renew them as occasion requires; in this way our vows might much help us in our mortification: and if once, through the help of vows or prayer, or looking unto Jesus, or going to the Cross of Jesus Christ, or by any other means we feel ourselves more able to resist sin, to hate sin, in its first rise, first motions, first on-set, we may assuredly hope that now our mortification grows.

O my Soul, try now the growth of thy mortification by these signs; hast thou overcome grosser sins, and is now thy chiefest co•fl•t with spiritual wickednesses? is thy standing and walking with God more close, and even and constant than sometimes it hath been; is thy lusts more weak, and thy Grace more strong in ordinary actings? I say, in ordinary actings; for the estimate of thy growth must not be taken for a turn or two, but by a constant course: hast thou now more ability to quench the flame of sin in the very spark, to dash Babylon's Brats against the stones, even whilst they are little, to abstain from sin in its first motion or beginning? why, then is the promise accomplished, he will subdue our iniquities:

Surely thou art a growing Christian; thou hast fellowship with Christ in his sufferings; thy ground is solid, firm, and stable; thy hope hath a rock-foundation, and thou mayest build upon it, that Christ's death, and blood, and sufferings are thine, even thine; he loved thee, and gave himself for thee.

SECT. V. Of Believing in Jesus in that Respect.

5. LET us believe in Jesus, carrying on the great work of our Salvation for us, during his Sufferings and Death. Everyone looks upon this as an easy duty; only the humble Soul, the scrupulous Conscience cries out, What! Is it possible that Christ should die, suffer, shed his blood for me? His incarnation was wonderful, his life on earth was to astonishment; but that the Son of God should become man, live amongst men, and die such a death, even the death of the Cross, for such a one as I am, I cannot believe it; it is an abyss past fadoming; the more I consider it, the more I am amazed at it: suppose I had an enemy in my power, man or Devil, one that provokes me every day, one that hunts my soul to take it away; should I not say with Saul, if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away? It may be an ingenuous spirit (such as David) would do thus much; but would David, or any breathing soul, not only spare his enemy, but spill himself to save his enemy? would a man become a Devil, to save Devils? would a man endure hell pains to free all the Devils in hell from their eternal pains? and yet what were this in comparison of what Christ hath done or suffered for us? It is not so much for us to suffer for Devils (for we are fellow-creatures) as it is for Christ, God-man, man-God to suffer for us: Oh what an hard thing is it, considering my enmity against Christ, to believe that Christ died for me, that he gave himself to the death, even to the death of the Cross for my soul!

Trembling soul! throw not away thyself in a way of unbelief. It may thou wouldst not die for an enemy, an irreconcilable enemy; but are not the mercies of God above all the mercies of men? O believe! And that I may persuade effectually, I shall say down first some Directions; and secondly, some Encouragements of Faith.

1. For the Directions of Faith in reference to Christ's death, observe these particulars.

2. Faith must directly go to Christ; not first to the promise, and then to Christ; but first to Christ, and then to the promise; the Person ever goes before the Prerogative.

2. Faith must go to Christ as God in the flesh; this was the difference betwixt the New-Testament, and old-Testament-Believers; their Faith directs only to God, but our Faith looks more immediately to Jesus Christ; Believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved.

3. Faith must directly go to Christ, as God in the flesh, made under the Law. He continued in all things written in the book of the Law to do them; and so our Faith must look upon him. But of these before: I shall say nothing more to these particulars.

4. Faith must go to Christ not only as made under the directive part of the Law by his life, but under the penal part of the Law by his death; in both these respects Christ was made under the law. The one half of the Law he satisfied by the holiness of his life; he fulfilled the law in every jot and every tittle; the other half of the Law he satisfied by his enduring the death, even the death of the Cross; he paid both the Principal and the Forfeiture; and though men do not so, yet Christ did so, that the whole Law might be satisfied fully, by his being under both these parts of the Law, pay and penalty: Come then, and look upon Christ as dying; it was the Serpent, as lifted up, and so looked at, that healed the Israelites of their fiery stings. Alas! we are diseased, in a spiritual sense, as they were, and Christ Jesus was lifted up as a remedy to us, as the Serpent was unto them; it remains therefore that as they looked up to the Brazen Serpent, so we look up to Jesus, believe in Jesus, as lifted up for life, and for salvation: As Moses lifted up the Serpent in the Wilderness, so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have eternal life. Indeed some difference there is betwixt the Serpent and Christ.—

As, 1. The Brazen Serpent had not power in if self to cure, as Christ hath. 2. The Serpent cured the Israelites but for a time, to die again; but whomsoever Jesus cures in a Spiritual sense, he cures forever; they shall never die. 3. The serpent also had its time of curing; it did not always retain its virtue, but during the time they were in the Wilderness; only Jesus Christ, our Brazen Serpent, doth ever retain his power and virtue to the end of the world; and hence it is, that in the Ministry, Christ is still held forth as lifted up, that all that will but look on him by faith, may live. 4. The Serpent, sometimes a remedy against poison, was after turned even to poison the Israelites, which made Hezekiah to crush it, and brake it, and stamp it to powder; but Jesus Christ ever remains the sovereign and healing God; he is the same yesterday, today, and forever. He is unchangeable in his goodness, as he is in holy and divine nature; he can never be defaced, nor destroyed, but he abideth the savior of sinners to all eternity; why then let us rather look unto Christ, and believe in Christ as lifted up, (i.e.) as he was crucified, and died on the Cross. In this respect he is made a fit object for a sinner's faith to trust upon, and rest upon, Christ as crucified, as made sin, and a curse for us, it the object of our pardon. O this is it that makes Christ's death so desirable; why therein is virtually and meritoriously pardon of sin, Justification, redemption, reconciliation, and what not? Oh! cries a sinner, where may I set my foot? how should I regain my God? my sin hath undone me, which way should I cast for pardon? why now remember that in seeking pardon, Christ was crucified; Christ as dying, is principally to be eyed and looked at: Who is he that condemneth? it is Christ that died, Rom. 8.34. No Question Christ's active Obedience, during his Life, was most exact, and perfect, and meritorious; yet that was not the expiation of sin: only his passive obedience (Christ only in his sufferings) took away sin, the guilt of sin, and punishment for sin; We have redemption through the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of sins. If any humble soul would have recourse to that Christ, who is now in heaven, let him first in the actings of his Faith, consider him as crucified, as lifted up, as made sin for us, as through whom (under that consideration) he is to receive pardon of sin, Justification, redemption, reconciliation, sanctification, salvation.

5. Faith in going to Christ, as lifted up, it is principally and mainly to look unto the ‹◊› meaning, intent, and design of Christ in his sufferings, as he was lifted up; we are not barely to consider the History of Christ's death, but the aim of Christ in his death: Many read the History, and they are affected with it; there is a principle of humanity in men, which will stir up compassion, and love, and pity towards all in misery: whilst Christ was suffering, the women followed after him weeping; but this weeping, not being spiritual, or raised enough, he said to them, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but for yourselves. The way of Faith drawing virtue out of Christ's death, it is especially to look to the scope and drift of Christ in his sufferings. As God looks principally to the meaning of the Spirit by Prayer, so doth faith look principally to the meaning of Christ in his sufferings: mistake not, my meaning is not that we should be ignorant of the History of Christ's death, or of the manner of Christ's sufferings; you see we have opened it largely, and followed it close from first to last; but we must not stick there; we should above all, look to the mind and heart of Christ in all this: some observe, that both in the Old, and New Testament we find this Method; first, the History, and then the Mystery; first, the Manner, and then the Meaning of Christ's sufferings; as in the Old Testament. We have first, the History, in Psal. 22. written by David; and then the Mystery, in Isa. 52. written by Isaiah. And in the New Testament we have first the manner of his sufferings written at large by all the Evangelists; and then the meaning, written by the Apostles in all their Epistles. Now accordingly are the acts of Faith; we must first look on Jesus as lifted up, and then look at the end and meaning; why was this Jesus thus lifted up? Well, but you may demand, what was the end, the plot, the great design of Christ in this respect?

I answer, some ends were remote, and others were more immediate: but omitting all those ends that are remote, his Glory, our Salvation, &c. I shall only answer in these Particulars.

1. One design of Christ's death was to redeem us from the slavery of Death and Hell: He hath redeemed us from the Curse of the Law, being made a Curse for us; as it is written; Cursed is everyone that hangeth on a Tree: Hence it is, that we say, that by his sufferings Christ hath redeemed us from Hell, and by his doings Christ hath given us a right to heaven: he was made under the Law, that he might redeem them that were under the Law. Alas! we were carnal, sold under sin; whereupon the Law seized on us, locked us up, as it were, in a dungeon; yea, the sentence passed, and we but waited for execution; now to get us rid from this dismal, damnable estate, Christ himself is made under the Law, that he might redeem us. Redeem us! how? not by way of entreaty, to step in, and beg our pardon; that would not serve the turn: sold we were, and bought we must be; a price must be laid down for us, it was a matter of Redemption; but with what must we be redeemed? surely with no easy price: ah no, it cost him dear, and very dear: Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and Gold, but with the precious blood of Christ: his precious blood was the price we stood him in; which he paid when he gave his life a ransom for many: the case stood thus betwixt Christ and us in this point of Redemption; we all like a crew or company of Malefactors, were ready to suffer, and to be executed: now, what said Christ to this? Why, I will come under the Law, said Christ, I will suffer that which they should suffer; I will take upon me their execution, upon condition I may redeem them: now this he did at his death; and this was the end why he died, that by his death we might be redeemed from the slavery of Death and Hell.

2. Another Design of Christ's death, was to free us from sin: not only would he remove the effect, but he would take away the cause also: Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation—for the remission of sin.—Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world.—He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.—Once hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.—And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. This was the plot, which God by an ancient design aimed at in the suffering of Jesus Christ; that he would take away sin: And thus Faith must take it up, and look upon it. When Peter had set forth the heinousness of the Jews sin, in killing Christ, he tells them at last of that design of old; All this was done, said he, by the determinate counsel of God. His meaning was first to humble them, and then to raise them up; q. d. It was not so much they that wrought his death, as the Decree of God, and the agreement of God and Christ: there was an ancient contrivement that Jesus Christ should die for sin, and that all our sins should be laid on the back of Jesus Christ: and therefore he seems to speak comfort to them in this; that howsoever they designed it, yet God and Christ designed a further end in it than they imagined, even to remission of sins: Who was delivered to death for our sins, and rose again for our justification. The death of Christ (as one observes) was the greatest and strangest design that ever God undertook, and therefore sure he had an end proportionable to it; God that willeth not the death of a sinner, would not for any inferior end, will the death of his Son, whom he loved more than all the world besides; it must needs be some great matter for which God should contrive the death of his Son; and indeed it could be no less than to remove that which he most hated, and that was sin. Here then is another end of Christ's death, it was for the remission of sin one main part of our justification.

3. Another design of Christ's death was to mortify our members which are upon the earth. Not only would he remit sin, but he would destroy it, kill it, crucify it; he would not have it reign in our mortal bodies, that we should obey it in the lusts thereof. This Design the Apostle sets out in these words, he bare our sins in his own body upon the Tree, that we being dead unto sin, should live unto righteousness: Christ by his death had not only a design to deliver us from the guilt of sin, but also from the power of sin: God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. Paul was a mortified man, dead to the world, and dead to sin: But how came he so to be? why this he attributes to the Cross of Christ, to the death of Christ; the death of Jesus was the cause of this death in Paul: How much more shall the blood of Christ—purge our Consciences from dead works to serve the living God? There is in the death of Christ first a value, and secondly, a virtue; the former is available to our justification, the latter to our sanctification; now sanctification hath two parts, mortification and vivification: Christ's death, or passive obedience is more properly conducive to the one; his life, or active obedience to the other. Hence Believers are said to be engrafted with Christ in the likeness of his death; there is a kind of likeness betwixt Christ and Christians: Christ died, and the Christian dies; Christ died a natural death, and a Christian dies a spiritual death; Christ died for sin, and the Christian dies for sin; this was another end of the death of Christ; there issues from his death a mortifying virtue, causing the death of sin in a Believer's soul, one main part of our sanctification.

O my soul look to this; herein lies the pith and marrow of the death of Christ; and if now thou wilt but act and exercise thy faith in this respect, how mightest thou draw the virtue and efficacy of his death into thy soul? But here is the question, how should I manage my Faith? or how should I act my faith, to draw down the virtue of Christ's death, and so to feel the virtue of Christ's death in my soul, mortifying, crucifying, and killing sin?

I answer, 1. In prayer, meditation, self-examination, receiving of the Lord's Supper, &c. I must propound to myself and soul the Lord Jesus Christ, as having undertaken and performed that bitter and painful work of suffering even unto death; yea, that of the Cross, as it is held out in the History and Narrative of the Gospel. 2. I must really and steadfastly believe, and firmly assent that those sufferings of Christ so revealed and discovered, were real and true, undoubted, and every way unquestionable as in themselves. 3. I must look upon those grievous, bitter, cruel, painful, and with all opprobrious, execrable, shameful sufferings of Christ, as very strange and wonderful; but especially considering the spiritual part of his sufferings, viz. the sense and apprehension of God's forsaking and afflicting him in the day of his fierce anger, I should even be astonished and amazed thereat: what! that the Son of God should lay his head on the block, under the blow of divine Justice? that he should put himself under the wrath of his heavenly Father? that he should enter into the combat of God's heavy displeasure, and be deprived of the sense and feeling of his love, and mercy, and wonted comfort? how should I but stand agast at these so wonderful sufferings of Jesus Christ? 4. I must weigh and consider what it was that occasioned and caused all this, viz. Sin, yea, my Sin, yea, this and that Sin particularly. This comes nearer home, and from this I must now gather in these several Conclusions: As,—

1. It was the Design of Christ by his sufferings to give satisfaction to the infinite Justice of God for sin. 2. It was intended and meant (at least in a second place) to give out to the world a most notable and eminent instance and demonstration of the horridness, odiousness, and execrableness of sin; since no less than all this, yea, nothing else but this would serve the turn to expiate it, and atone for it. 3. It holds forth again, as sin is horrid in its self, so it cannot but be exceeding grievous and offensive to Christ: Oh it cost him dear, it put him to all this pain and Torture; it made him cry out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? how then should it but offend him above all, above anything in the world? 4. If therefore there be in me any spark of love towards Christ, or any likeness to Christ; or if I would have Christ to bear any affection, love, regard, or respect unto me, it will absolutely behoove me by all means to loath sin, and cast it away from me; to root it up, to quit my hands, and to rid my heart of it. The truth is, I cannot possibly give forth a more pregnant proof of my sincere love, entire affection, respect, conformity, resemblance, sympathy to, and with Christ, than by offering all violence, usually all holy severity against sin for his very sake.

Now when the heart is thus exercised, God by his Spirit will not fail to meet us; our desire and endeavor of our soul to weaken and kill sin in the soul is not without its reward; but especially when sin hath in this way, and by this means, lost the affection of the soul, and is brought in hatred, and disesteem, it decays, and dyes of itself; for it only liveth and flourisheth by the warm affections, good thoughts, and opinion that the soul hath of it. So that matters going thus in the heart, the influence that should nourish and maintain sin, is cut off, and it withers by degrees till it be finally, and fully destroyed.

Thus for directions; now for the encouragements of our faith to believe in Christ's death, consider—

1. The fullness of this object, Christ crucified; there is a transcendent all-sufficiency in the death of Christ: in a safe sense it contains in it universal redemption: it is sufficient for the redemption of every man in the world, yea, and effectual for all that have been, are, or shall be called into the state of grace, whether Jews, or Gentiles, bound or free. I know some hold, that Christ died for all, and every man with a purpose to save; only thus they explicate. 1. That Christ died for all men considered in the common lapse or fall, but not as obstinate, impenitent, or unbelievers; he died not for such, as such. 2. That Christ died for all men in respect of the request or impetration of salvation, but the application thereof is proper to believers. 3. That Christ died not to bring all or any man actually to salvation, but to purchase salvability, and reconciliation so far, as that God might and would (salva justitia) deal with them on terms of a better covenant. 4. That Christ hath purchased salvability for all men, but faith and regeneration he hath merited for none; because God is bound to give that which Christ hath merited of him, although it be not desired, or craved. I cannot assent to these positions: but thus far I grant, that Christ's death in itself is a sufficient price and satisfaction to God for all the world; and that also it is effectual in many particulars to all men respectively in all the world; every man in one way or other hath the fruit of Christ's death conferred upon him; but this fruit is not of one kind; for, 1. Some fruit is common to every man, as the earthly blessings which Infidels enjoy, may be termed the fruits of Christ's death. 2. Other fruit is common to all the members of the visible Church, as, to be called by the Word, to enjoy the Ordinances, to live under the Covenant, to partake of some graces that come from Christ. 2. Other fruit is indeed peculiar to the Saints of God, as, faith unfeigned, regeneration, pardon of sin, adoption, &c. And yet this fruit is universal to all the Saints, whether Jews or Gentiles: in which sense speaks the Apostle, He spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all.—And he gave himself a ransom for all,— and God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all,—And by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life;— He tasted of death for all men, or distributively for every man. All which texts are rightly interpreted by Caiaphas, He prophesied that Jesus should die for that Nation; and not for that Nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God, that were scattered abroad. And thus John brings in the four beasts, and four and twenty Elders, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and thus Paul rightly argues, Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not of the Gentiles also? yes, of the Gentiles also. O the fullness of Christ's death!— many are apt to complain, Would Christ die for me? why alas, I am an alien, I am not of the common-wealth of Israel, I am a dog, I am a sinner, a grievous sinner, a sinner of the Gentiles: And what then? Ye who sometimes were afar off, are now made nigh by the blood of Christ, for he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross. Oh what encouragement is this for thee to believe thy part in the death of Christ?

2. Consider the worth, the excellency of this glorious object, Christ crucified. There is an infinite of worth in the death of Christ; and this ariseth, first from the dignity of his person, he was God-man; the death of Angels and men if put together, could not have amounted to the excellency of Christ's death; stand amazed at thy happiness; O believer, thou hast gained by thy loss, thou hast lost the righteousness of a creature, but the righteousness of an infinite person is now made thine; hence it is many times called the Righteousness of God: both because Christ is God: and because it is such a righteousness as God is satisfied with; he looks for no better, yea, there can be no better. 2. This worth is not only in respect of the dignity of the person, but also in respect of the price offered; O it was the blood of Christ, one drop whereof is of more worth than thousands of gold and silver. It was this blood that purchased the whole Church of God, which a thousand worlds of wealth could never have done. 3. This worth is not only in respect of the person and price neither, but also in respect of the manner of the oblation; Christ must die on the Cross as it was determined; the price in itself, is not enough, unless it be ordered and proportioned according to the will of him, who is to be satisfied; if a man should give for a captive prisoner an infinite sum of money, sufficient in itself to redeem a thousand, yet if not according to such a way as the conqueror prescribeth, if not according to the condition, it could not be called a satisfaction; now this was the condition that Christ must die, and die that death of the Cross, and accordingly he undertook, and performed, which set a luster, and glory, and excellency, and worth upon his death. O the worth, O the excellency of this death of Christ!—many are apt to complain, O the filth of my sins! Oh the injuries and unkindness that have been in mine iniquities! it is not my misery, my destruction that so much troubles me, as that God is displeased. Sweet soul! turn thine eyes hither; surely this death of Christ is more satisfactory to God, than all thy sins possibly can be displeasing to God; there was more sweet savor in Christ's sacrifice, than there could be offense in all thy sins; the excellency of Christ's death in making righteous, doth superabound the filthiness of sin in making a sinner. Come on then, and close with Christ upon this encouragement; there is a dignity, an excellency, in this object of faith, Christ crucified.

3. Consider the suitability of this blessed object, The death of Christ. There is in it a suitability to our sinful condition, whatsoever the sin is; it is the cry of some, They dare not believe, they dare not touch Christ crucified, they dare not approach to that precious blood, because of this sin, and that sin, and the other sin. Whereas in the death and blood of Christ (if they could but take a full view of it) they might find something suitable to their estate: As for instance, suppose thy sin the greatest sin imaginable, except that against the holy Ghost; art thou a murderer? hast thou had thy hands imbrued in the blood of Saints? why see now how Christ for thy sake was esteemed of the Jews, a murderer, and worse than a murderer; Barabbas is preferred before Jesus, Barabbas is released, and Jesus is murdered; yea, his blood is shed, to wash away thy blood-shed: art thou a Sorcerer, a Negromancer? is thy sin the sin of Manasseh, of whom it is said, that that he used enchantments, and witchcraft; and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards; why, see now how Jesus Christ for thy sake was esteemed of the Jews as an impostor, an inchanter; for so some say, that he got the Name of God, and sowed it in his thigh, and by virtue thereof he wrought all his miracles, and they commonly reported of him that he had a devil, and that he cast out devils through Belzebub Prince of devils. Art thou a blasphemer? hast thou joined with those in these sad times, who have opened their mouths against the God of Heaven, enough to make a Christian rend his heart, and weep in blood? why see now how Jesus for thy sake was judged of Caiaphas, and all the Sanhedrim, for a blasphemer of God, and that in the highest kind of blasphemy, as making himself equal with God; yea, see how the high Priest rends his clothes, saying, he hath spoken blasphemy; Surely all this he endured, that very blasphemers may find mercy, if they will but come in, and believe in Jesus. I might instance in other sins; art thou a Traitor, a glutton, a drunkard, a wine-bibber, a thief, a seducer, a companion of sinners? why, see now how Jesus Christ was for thy sake, thus called, reputed, accounted; whatever the sin is, there's something in Christ that answers that very sinfulness; thou art a sinner, and he is made sin, to satisfy the wrath of God even for thy sin; thou art such, and such a sinner, and he is accounted such and such a sinner for thy sake, that thou mightest find in him something suitable to thy condition, and so the rather be encouraged to believe, that in him, and through him all thy sins shall be done away. Away, away unbelief, distrust, despair! you see now the brazen serpent lifted up, you see what a blessed object is before you; O believe! O look up unto Jesus! O believe in him thus carrying on the work of thy salvation in his death.

SECT. VI. Of loving Jesus in that respect.

6. LET us love Jesus as carrying on the great work of our Salvation for us during his sufferings and death. What! did he suffer and die? Greater love than this hath no man, that a man should give his life for his friends;—but God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Why here's an argument of love indeed, how should we but love him, who hath thus loved us? in prosecution of this I have no more to do, but first to show Christ's love to us, and then to exercise our love to him again.

1. For his love to us; had not God said it, and the Scriptures recorded it, who would have believed our reports? yet Christ hath done it, and it is worth our while to weigh it, and consider it in an holy meditation.—Indeed with what less than ravishment of Spirit can I behold the Lord Jesus who from everlasting was clothed with Glory and Majesty, now wrapped in rags, cradled in a manger, exposed to hunger, thirst, weariness, danger, contempt, poverty, revilings, scourgings, persecution? but to let them pass: into what ecstasies may I be cast to see the Judge of all the world accused, judged, condemned? to see the Lord of life dying upon the tree of shame and curse? to see the eternal Son of God struggling with his Fathers wrath? to see him who had said, I and my Father are one, sweating drops of blood in his agony, and crying out on his cross, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Oh whither hath his love to mankind carried him? had he only sent his creatures to serve us, had he only sent his Prophets to advise us in the way to Heaven, had he only sent his Angels from his chamber of presence to attend upon us, and to minister to us, it had been a great deal of mercy; or if it must be so, had Christ come down from Heaven himself, but only to visit us, or had he come only and wept over us, saying, Oh that you had known, even you in this your day the things belonging to your peace! Oh that you had more considered of my goodness! Oh that you had never sinned! this would have been such a mercy as that all the world would have wondered at it: but that Christ himself should come, and lay down his blood, and life, and all for his people; and yet I am not at the lowest, that he should not only part with life, but part with the sense, and sweetness of God's love, which is a thousand times better than life, Thy loving kindness is better than life; that he should be content to be accursed, that we might be blessed; that he should be content to be forsaken, that we might not be forsaken; that he should be content to be condemned that we might be acquitted; O what raptures of Spirit can be sufficient for the admiration of this so infinite mercy? be thou swallowed up O my soul in this depth of Divine love; and hate to spend thy thoughts anymore upon the base objects of this wretched world, when thou hast such a Savior to take them up.—Come look on thy Jesus, who died temporally, that thou mightest live eternally: who out of his singular tenderness would not suffer thee to burn in hell, for ten, twenty, thirty, forty, an hundred years, and then recover thee, by which notwithstanding he might better and deeper have imprinted in thee the blessed memory of a dear Redeemer; no, no, this was the Article betwixt him and his Father, That thou shouldst never come there; see but, observe but Christ's love in that mutual agreement betwixt God and Christ, Oh I am pressed (saith God) with the sins of the world as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves, come my Son, either thou must suffer, or I must damn the world: Accordingly I may imagine the Attributes of God to speak to God, Mercy cries, I am abused, and Patience cries, I am despised; and goodness cries, I am wronged; and Holyness cries, I am contradicted; and all these come to the Father for Justice, crying to him, that all the world were opposers of his Grace and Spirit, and if any be saved Christ must be punished. In this case we must imagine Christ stepped in, nay rather than so, (saith Christ) I will bear all, and undertake the satisfying of all. And now look upon him! he hangs on the cross all naked, all torn, all bloody; betwixt Heaven and Earth, as if he were cast out of Heaven, and also rejected by Earth; he hath a Crown indeed, but such a one as few men will touch, none will take from him; and if any rash man will have it, he must tear hair, skin, and all, or it will not come; his hair is all clodded with blood, his face all clouded with black and blew, he is all over so pitifully rent, outwards, inwards, body and soul.—I will think the rest; alas, when I have spoken all I can, I shall speak under it, had I the tongues of men and Angels, I could not express it; Oh love more deep than hell! Oh love more high than heaven! the brightest Seraphims that burn in love, are but as sparkles to that mighty flame of love in the heart of Jesus.

2. If this be Christ's love to us, what is that love we owe to Christ? Oh now for an heart that might be some ways answerable to these mercies! Oh for a soul sick of love, yea sick unto death! how should I be otherwise, or any less affected, this only sickness is our health, this death our life, and not to be thus sick is to be dead in sins and trespasses; why, surely I have heard enough, for which to love Christ forever. The depths of God's grace are bottomless, they pass our understandings, yet they recreate our hearts; they give matter of admiration, yet they are not devoid of consolation: O God raise up our souls to thee, and if our Spirits be too weak to know thee, make our affections ardent and sincere to love thee.

Surely the death of Christ requires this, and calls for this: many other motives we may draw from Christ, and many other motives are laid down in the Gospel, and indeed the whole Gospel is no other thing than a motive to draw man to God by the force of God's love to man; in this sense the holy Scriptures may be called the book of true love, seeing therein God both unfolds his love to us, and also binds our love to him; but of all the motives we may draw from Christ, and of all the arguments we may find in the Gospel of Christ, there is none to this, the death of Christ, the blood of Jesus: is not this such a love-letter, as never, never was the like? read the words, For his great love wherewith he loved us, Ephes. 2.4. or if you cannot read, observe the Hieroglyphicks, every stripe is a letter, every nail is a capital letter, every bruise is a black letter, his bleeding wounds are as so many rubricks to show upon record: Oh consider it, is not this a great love? are not all mercies wrapped up in the blood of Christ? it may be thou hast riches, honors, friends, means, Oh but thank the blood of Christ for all thou hast; it may be thou hast grace, and that is better than corn, or wine, or oil? Oh but for this thank the blood of Jesus, surely it was the blood of Christ that did this for thee; thou wast a rebellious soul, thou hast an hard and filthy heart, but Christ's blood was the fountain opened, and it took away all sin, and all uncleanness; Christ in all, and Christ above all, and wilt thou not love him? Oh that all our words were words of love, and all our labor, labor of love, and all our thoughts, thoughts of love; that we might speak of love, and muse of love, and love this Christ, who hath first loved us, with all our heart, and soul, and might! what? wilt thou not love Jesus Christ? let me ask thee then, whom wilt thou love? or rather whom canst thou love, if thou lovest not him? if thou sayest, I love my Friends, Parents, Wife, Children; Oh but love Christ more than these; a friend would be an enemy, but that the blood of Christ doth frame his heart; a Wife would be a trouble, but that the blood of Christ doth frame her heart; all mercies are conveyed to us through this channel; Oh who would not love the Fountain?—consider of it again and again, our Jesus thought nothing too good for us, he parts with his life and blood, he parts with the sense and feeling of the love of God, and all this for us, and for our sakes; Ah my soul, how shouldst thou but love him in all things, and by all means?

It is reported of Ignatius, that he so continually meditated on the great things Christ suffered for him, that he was brought entirely to love him: and when he was demanded, why he would not forsake Christ, rather than suffer himself to be torn and devoured of wild beasts? he answered, that he could not forget him because of his sufferings; Oh his sufferings (said he) are not transient words, or removable objects, but they are indelible characters, so engraven in my heart, that all the torments of earth can never raze them out. And being commanded by that bloody Tyrant Trajane to be ripped and unbowelled, they found Jesus Christ written upon his heart in Characters of Gold. Here was an heart worth Gold; Oh that it might be thus with us! If my hands were all of love, that I could work nothing but love; if my eyes were all of love, that I could see nothing but love; if my mind were all of love, that I could think of nothing but love; all were too little to love that Christ, who hath thus immeasurably loved me; if I had a thousand hearts to bestow on Christ, and they most enlarged and scrued up to the highest pitch of affection, all these were infinitely short of what I owe to my dread Lord, and dearest Savior. Come let's join hands, He loved us, and therefore let us love him: if we dispute the former, I argue from the Jews, when he shed but a few tears out of his eyes at Lazarus's grave, then said the Jews, behold how he loved him, John 11.36. how much more truly may it be said of us for whom he shed both water and blood, and that from his heart, Behold how he loved us; why then, if our hearts be not Iron, yea if they be Iron, how should they choose but feel the magnetical force of this Loadstone of love; for to a Loadstone doth Christ resemble himself, when he saith of himself; And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.

SECT. VII. Of joying in Jesus in that Respect.

7. LET us joy in Jesus, as carrying on the great work of Salvation, in his sufferings and death: what? hath Christ suffered for us? hath he drunk off all the cup of God's wrath, and left none for us? how should we be but cheered? Precious souls! why are you afraid; there is no death, no hell, no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus. There is no divine justice for them to undergo, that have their share in this death of Christ; Oh the Grace and Mercy that is purchased by this means of Christ! Oh the waters of comfort that flow from the sufferings, and obedience of Christ! Christ was amazed, that we might be cheered: Christ was imprisoned, that we might be delivered; Christ was accused, that we might be acquitted; Christ was condemned, that we might be redeemed; Christ suffered his Fathers wrath, and came under it, that the victory might be ours, and that in the end we might see him face to face in glory: is not here matter of Joy? It may be the Law, and sin, and justice, and conscience, and death, and hell, may appear as enemies, and disturb thy comforts; but is there not enough in the blood of Christ to chase them away? Give me Leave but to frame the objections of some doubting souls; and see whether Christ's death will not sufficiently answer, and solve them all.

1. One cries thus, Oh I know not what will become of me, my sins are ever before me; against thee, thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight. I have sinned against a most dear, and gracious, and merciful God and Father in our Lord Jesus; O the aggravations of my sins! are they not sins above measure sinful.

It may be so, but the blood of Christ is a fountain opened for sins and for uncleanness; in him we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins.— He by himself purged our sins.— And now once in the end of the world hath he appeared, put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.—And Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to bear away the sins of many. As the Scape-coat under the Law had upon his head all the iniquities of the Children of Israel, and so was sent away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness; so the Lord Jesus (of whom that Goat was a type) had all the iniquities of his Elect laid upon him by God his Father, and bearing them, he took them away, Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world; he bore them, and bore them away; he went away with them into the wilderness, or into the land of forgetfulness. See what comfort is here.

2. Another cries thus, Oh I know not what will become of me, the Law is mine enemy, I have transgressed the Law, and it speaks terribly, cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the Law to do them: Oh I have offended the Law, and I am under the curse.

Say not so, for by the death of Christ, though the Law be broken, yet the curse is removed; the Apostle is clear, Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the Law, being made a curse for us; he was made a curse for us, (i.e.) the fruits and effects of God's curse, the punishment due to sinners, the penal curse which justice required, was laid upon Christ, and by this means we are freed from the curse of the Law. It is true, that without Christ thou art under this Law, Do, or Die, end if thou offendest in the least kind thou shalt perish forever, the curse of the Law is upon thee to the uttermost; but on the other side, if thy claim be right to the blood of Christ, thou art freed from penalty; not but that we may be corrected and chastised, but what is that to the eternal curse which the Law pronounceth against every sin? we are freed from the curse, or damnatory sentence of the Law, There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus; the Law is satisfied, and the bond is cancelled by our Surety Christ. O what comfort is this?

3. Another cries thus? Oh I know not what will become of me, I have offended justice; and what shall appeal from the seat of justice, to the throne of grace? my sins are gone before, and they are knocking at heaven gates, and crying, justice Lord on this sinner; I know not what will be the issue, but either free Grace must save me, or I am gone.

Say not so, for by this death of Christ, free grace, and justice are both thy friends. How e're some do, yet certainly thou needs not to appeal from the court of justice to the Mercy-seat; in this mystery of Godliness there may be as much comfort in standing before the Bar of justice, as at the Mercy-seat, (i.e.) by standing therein, and through the Lord Jesus Christ, yea, this is the Gospel-way, to go to God the Father, and to tender up to him the active and passive righteousness of Christ his Son for an atonement, and satisfaction for our sins, in this way is the comfort of justification brought; if we go to God in any other way than this, it is but in a natural way, and not in a true Evangelical way. A man by nature may know thus much, that when he hath sinned, he must seek unto God for mercy, but to seek unto God for pardon with a price in our hands, to tender up the merits of Jesus Christ for a satisfaction to Divine justice, here is the mystery of Faith; and yet I speak not against relying on God's mercy for pardon, but what need we to appeal from justice to mercy, when by faith we may tender the death of Christ, and so find acceptance with the justice of God itself? come soul, and let me tell thee for thy comfort, if thou hast any share in the death of Christ, thou hast two tenures to hold thy pardon and salvation by, Mercy, and justice; free grace, and righteousness; mercy in respect of thee, and justice in respect of Christ; not only is free grace ready to acquit thee, but a full price is laid down to discharge thee of all thy sins: so that now when the Prince of this World comes against thee, thou mayest say in some sense as Christ did. He can find nothing in me, for how can he accuse me, seeing Christ is my Surety? seeing the bond hath been sued, and Christ Jesus would not leave one farthing unpaid? as Paul said to Philemon concerning Onesimus, if he have wronged thee, or owe thee anything, put it on my account; so doth Christ say to God, if these have wronged thy Majesty, or owe thee anything, put it on me. Paul indeed added, I Paul have written it with mine own hand, but Christ speaks thus, I Jesus have ratified and confirmed it with my own blood.

4. Another cries thus, Oh I know not what will become of me, the first threat that ever was (in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die) now sits on my spirit; methinks I see the grizly form of death standing before me; Oh this is he that is the King of fears, the chief of terrors, the inlet to all those Plagues in another world; and die I must, there is no remedy; Oh I startle, and am afraid of it.

And why so? it is Christ that died, and by his death he hath took away the sting of death, that now the drone may hiss, but cannot hurt: come, meditate much upon the death of Christ, and thou shalt find matter enough in his death, for the subduing of thy slavish fears of death, both in the merit of it, in the effect of it, and in the end of it. 1. In the merit of it; Christ's death is meritorious, and in that respect the writ of mortallity is but to the Saints a writ of ease, a passage into Glory. 2. In the effect of it, Christ's death is the conquest of death;

Christ went down into the grave to make a back-door, that the grave which was before a prison, might now be a thorough-fare; so that all his Saints may with ease pass through, and sing, O death where is thy sting? Oh hell where is thy victory? 3. In the end of it, Christ's death amongst other ends aims at the ruin of him that had the Power of death; that is, the Devil; and to deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time in bondage. Christ pursued this end in dying, to deliver thee from the fear of death; and if now thou fearest, thy fearing is a kind of making Christ's death of none effect. O come, and with joy draw water out of this well of Salvation!

5. Another cries thus, Oh I know not what will become of me; the very thoughts of hell seem to astonish my heart; methinks I see a little peep-hole down into hell and the devil roaring there, being reserved in chains under darkness, until the judgment of the great day; and methinks I see the damned flaming, and Judas, and all the wicked in the world, and they of Sodom, and Gomorrah there lying, and roaring, and gnashing their teeth: now, I have sinned, and why should not I be damned? Oh why should not the wrath of God be executed on me, yea even upon me?

I answer, the death of Christ acquits thee of all. Blessed is he that hath a part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power. Christ's death hath took away the pains of the second death, yea, pains and power too, for it shall never oppress such as belong to Christ. If Hell and Devils could speak a word of truth, they would say, Comfort yourselves ye believing souls, we have no power over you, for the Lord Jesus hath conquered us, and we have quite lost the cause. Paul was very confident of this, and therefore he throws down the Gauntlet, and challengeth a dispute with all comers, Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's Elect? it is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth? it is Christ that died: let sin, and the law, and justice, and death, and hell, yea, and all the Devils in Hell unite their forces, this one argument of Christ's death (it is Christ that died) will be enough to confute and confound them all.

Come then, and comfort yourselves all believers in this death of Christ; what? do you believe? and are you confident that you do believe? why then do you sit drooping? What manner of communications are these that you have, as ye walk, and are sad? Away, away dumpishness, despair, disquietness of spirit? Christ is dead, that you might live, and be blessed, in this respect everything speaks comfort, if you could but see it; God and men, heaven and earth, Angels and devils; the very justice of God itself, is now your friend, and bids you go away comforted, for it is satisfied to the full; Heaven itself waits on you, and keeps the doors open that your souls may enter; We have boldness (saith the Apostle) to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh. Christ's death hath set open all the golden gates and doors of glory; and therefore go away cheerily, and get you to heaven, and when you come there, be discouraged, or discomfited if you can. O my soul, I see thou art pouring on sin, on thy crimson sins, and scarlet sins, but I would have thee dwell on that crimson scarlet blood of Christ; Oh it is the blood of sprinkling, it speaks better things than the blood of Abel, it cries for mercy, and pardon, and refreshing, and salvation; thy sins cry, Lord do me justice against such a soul; but the blood of Christ hath another cry, I am abased, and humbled, and I have answered all. Methinks this should make thy heart leap for joy; Oh the honey, the sweet that we may suck out of this blood of Christ! come lay to thy mouth, and drink an hearty draught, it is this spiritual wine that makes merry the heart of man; and it is the voice of Christ to all his guests, Eat O friends, drink, yea drink abundantly, O beloved.

SECT. VIII. Of calling on Jesus in that respect.

8. LET us call on Jesus, or on God the Father in and through Jesus.

1. We must pray that all these Transactions of Christ in his sufferings and death may be ours; if we direct our prayers immediately to Jesus Christ, let us tell him what anguish and pains he hath suffered for our sakes; and let us complain against ourselves, Oh what shall we do, who by our sins have so tormented our dearest Lord? what contrition can be great enough, what tears sufficiently expressive, what hatred and detestation equal, and commensurate to those sad and heavy sufferings of our Jesus? And then let us pray, that he would pity us, and forgive us those sins wherewith we crucified him, that he would bestow on us the virtue of his sufferings and death, that his wounds might heal us, his death might quicken us, and his blood might cleanse us from all our spiritual filth of sin; and lastly, that he would assure us that his death is ours; that he would persuade us, That neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature should be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

2. We must praise the Lord for all these sufferings of Christ. Hath he indeed suffered all these punishments for us? Oh then what shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits upon us? what shall we do for him, who hath done and suffered all these things? but especially, if we believe our part in the death of Christ; in all the virtues, benefits, victories, purchases, and privileges of his precious death, oh then what manifold cause of thankfulness and praise is here? be enlarged O my soul, sound forth the praises of thy Christ, tell all the world of that warmest love of Christ, which flowed with his blood out of all his wounds into thy spirit; tune thy heart-strings aright, and keep consort with all the Angels of Heaven, and all his Saints on earth; sing that Psalm of John the Divine, Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us Kings and Priests unto God, and his Father, to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen.

SECT. IX. Of conforming to Jesus in that respect.

9. LET us conform to Jesus in respect of his sufferings and death, looking unto Jesus is effective of this; objects have an attractive power, that do assimilate, or make like unto them. I have read of a woman, that by fixing the strength of her imagination upon a Blackamore on the wall, she brought forth a black and swarthy child. And no question but there is a kind of spiritual-imaginative of power in faith to be like to Christ by looking on Christ; come then, and let us look on Christ, and conform to Christ in this respect.

In this particular I shall examine these Queries: 1. Wherein we must conform? 2. What is the cause of this conformity? 3. What are the means of this conformity as on our parts?

For the first, wherein we must conform? I answer; we must conform to Christ in his graces, sufferings, death.

1. In the graces that most eminently shined in his bitter passion; his life indeed was a gracious life, he was full of grace, And of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace, but his graces shined most clearly and brightly at his death; as a Lily amongst the Thorns seems most beautiful, so his graces in his sufferings show most excellent; I shall instance in some of them: As—

1. His humility was profound; what? that the most high God, that the only begotten, and eternal Son of God, should vouchsafe so far as to be contemned, and less esteemed than Barabbas a murderer? that Christ should be crucified upon a cross betwixt two thieves, as if he had been the ring-leader of all malefactors? O what humility was this?

2. His patience was wonderful; in respect of this, the Apostle Peter sets Christ as a blessed example before our eyes; If when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God, for even hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow his steps.— Who when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously. O the patience of Christ!

3. His love was fervent; Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. This love is an exemplar of all love; it is the fire that should kindle all our sparks; Be ye followers of God (saith the Apostle) as dear children: and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor. Some observe, that in the Temple there were two Altars, the brazen, and the golden; the brazen Altar was for bloody Sacrifices, the golden Altar was for the offering of Incense; now the former was a type of Christ's bloody offering upon the cross, the latter of Christ's sweet intercession for us in his glory; in regard of both, the Apostle tells that Christ gave himself both for an offering and sacrifice of a sweet smelling savor unto God. O what love was this!

4. His mercy was abundant; he took upon him all the miseries and debts of the world, and he made satisfaction for them all; he acted our redemption immediately in his own person, he would not intrust it to Angels, but he would come himself and suffer; nor would he give a low and base price for our souls, he saw the misery was great, and his mercy should be more great; he would buy us with so great a ransom, as that he might over-buy us, and none might out-bid him in the market of our souls; O we under-bid, and under-value the mercy of God, who over-valued us; we will not sell all to buy him, but he sold all he had, and himself too to buy us; indeed if he had not done it, we had been damned; and to save our souls, he cared not what he did or suffered. O the mercy of Christ!

5. His meekness was passing great; in all the process of his passion, he shown not the least passion of wrath or anger; he suffered himself gently and quietly to be carried like a sheep to the Butchery, and as a Lamb before shearers is dumb, so opened he not his mouth: a Lamb is a most meek and innocent creature, and therefore is Christ called the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world.— And, he was a brought as a Lamb to the slaughter; why, a Lamb goes as quietly to the shambles, as if it were going to the fold, or to the pasture-field where its Dam seedeth; and so went Christ to his Cross. O the meekness of Christ!

6. His contempt of the world was to admiration; he tells them, his Kingdom was not of this world. When a Crown was offered him, and forced upon him, he refused it; but above all, behold the Bed where the Bridegroom lieth and sleepeth at noon-day; here's but an hard flock, and narrow room; O blessed head of a dear Redeemer! how is it that thou hast not a pillow where to rest thyself? He hangs on the Cross all naked; few Kings do so: he hath no Crown for his head, but one of thorns; he hath no delicates, but Gall and Vinegar; he is leaving the world, and he hath no other Legacies to give his friends, but spiritual things; Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you. He had so contemned the world, that he had not a Legacy in all the world to give: Not as the world giveth, give I unto you.

7. His obedience was constant: He became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross—He sought not his own will, but the will of him that sent him. There was a command that the Father laid on Christ from all eternity: O my Son, my only begotten Son, thou must go down, and leave Heaven, and empty thyself, and die the death, even the death of the Cross, and go and bring up the fallen sons of Adam out of Hell. Mankind, like a precious Ring Glory, fell off the Finger of Almighty God, and was broken all in pieces; and thereupon was the command of God, that his Son must stoop down, though it pain his back; he must lift up again the broken Jewel, he must restore it, and mend it, and set it as a Seal on the heart of God; all which the Lord Jesus did in time; he was obedient till death, and obedient to death, even to the death of the Cross. Son, thou must die, said God; why Father, I will do it, said Christ: and accordingly he freely made his Soul an Offering for sin.

Now in all these Graces we must conform to Christ. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly.—And, walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us: It is as if Christ had said, mark the steps where I have trode, and follow me in humility, in patience, in love, in mercy, in meekness, in contempt of the world, in obedience unto death; in these, and the like Graces you must conform unto Christ.

2. We must conform to Christ in his sufferings, if he call us to them, this was the Apostle's Prayer, that I may know him, and the power of his Resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings; it was his desire that he might experimentally know what exceeding joy and comfort it was to suffer for Christ, and with Christ. Concerning this, the other Apostle speaks also, Christ suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps. But the Text that seems so pertinent, and yet so difficult, is that of Paul, I now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake, which is the Church: One would wonder how Paul should fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ; were Christ's sufferings imperfect? and much Paul add to them? no surely? for by one offering Christ hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. I shall not insist on many Commentaries; I suppose this is the genuine sense and meaning of the Spirit. Now rejoice I in my sufferings for you, whereby I fulfil the measure of those tribulations which remain yet to be endured of Christ in his mystical body, which I do for the bodies sake, not to satisfy for it, but to confirm it, or strengthen it by my example in the Gospel of Christ. The sufferings of Christ are either personal or general; his personal sufferings were those he endured in his own body, as Mediator; which once forever he finished: his general sufferings are those which he endures in his mystical body, which is, the Church; as he is a Member with the rest; and these are the sufferings Paul speaks of, and which Paul fills up.

But wherein is the conformity betwixt our sufferings, and the sufferings of Christ? I answer, 1. Negatively, 2. Positively.

1. Negatively, our sufferings have no conformity with Christ in these two things: 1. Not in the Office of Christ's sufferings; for his were meritorious and satisfactory, ours only ministerial, and for edification. 2. Not in the weight and measure of Christ's sufferings; for his were bitter, heavy, and woeful, such as would have pressed any other Creature as low as Hell, and have swallowed him up forever; but ours are but in comparison light and tolerable: There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; for God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able.

2. Positively, our sufferings must have conformity with Christ. 1. In the cause of them; Christ's sufferings were instrumentally from Satan and wicked men; we must look to suffer by the enemies of Christ, if we have any share in Christ; the enemy continues still; I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed. This was primarily meant betwixt the Devil and Christ; but if we conform to Christ, we must expect the very same conditions. 2. In the manner of undergoing them; we must suffer with a proportion of that humility, and patience, and love, and meekness and obedience which Christ shown in his very sufferings. 3. In respect of the issue of them; we must look upon Christ's issue, and expect it to be ours: Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and so enter into Glory?—And, if so be that we suffer with Christ, we shall be glorified together with Christ.—If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him.

By reason of this conformity, we have that communion and association with Christ in all these particulars; as, 1. We have Christ's strength to bear sufferings 2. His Victories to overcome sufferings. 3. His Intercession to preserve us from falling away in sufferings. 4. His Compassion to moderate and proportion our sufferings to the measure of strength which he hath given us. 5. His Spirit to draw in the same yoke with us, and to hold us under all sufferings, that we sink not. 6. His Graces to be more glorious by our sufferings, as a Torch, when it is shaken, shines the brighter. 7. His Crown to reward our sufferings when we shall have tasted our measure of them. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of Glory.

O my Soul! study this conformity, and be content with thy portion; yea, comfort thyself in this condition of sufferings; must we not drink of our Savior's Cup? what, not of our Master's own Cup? We read of Godfrey of Bullein, that he would not be crowned in Jerusalem with a Crown of Gold, where Christ was crowned with a Crown of Thorns, because he would not have such a great disproportion betwixt him and Christ: and we read of Origin, that when Alexander Severus the Emperor sent for him to Rome, and that he might take his choice, whether he would ride thither on a Mule, or in a Chariot, that he refused them both, saying, he was less than his Master Christ, of whom he never read that he rode but once. O the sufferings Christ endured! he was called a Wine-bibber, a Samaritan, a Devil; he was pursued, entrapped, snared, slain: And surely they that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution. Never wonder that thou art hated of men, or persecuted of men; why, I tell thee, if Christ himself were now amongst us in the form and fashion of a servant, in that very condition that sometimes he was, and should convince men of their wickedness as searchingly as sometimes he did, I verily think he would be the most hated man in all the world. It's plain enough what carnal men would do, by these very doings of the carnal Jews.

3. We must conform to Christ in his death, carrying in us a resemblance and representation of his death. But what death is this? I answer in a word, a death unto sin; so the Apostle; in that he died, unto sin;—likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin. There is a likeness betwixt Christ's death, and our death, in this respect, we are planted together in the likeness of his death. True Mortification carries a similitude, a likeness, a resemblance of the death of Christ. As for instance.

1. Christ's death was a voluntary death. I lay down my life that I may take it again; no man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself; I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again; not all men on earth, nor all Devils in Hell could have enforced Christ's death, if he had not pleased; his death was a voluntary death, a spontaneous act; so is our mortification: Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power; many may leave their sins against their wills; but this is not true mortification; it bears not in it the likeness of Christ's death; for he died willingly: it may be thou hast a clamorous Conscience, which continually dogs thee, and therefore thou leavest thy sin; thus Judas came in with his thirty pieces of silver, and cast them down in the Temple at the High Priest's feet; but no thanks to Judas, for they were too hot for him to hold; or it may be there is some penalty of the Law, or some temporal judgment that hangs over thy head, like Democles' sword, and therefore thou leavest thy sin; thus Ahab for a time acts the part of a penitent, but no thanks to Ahab; for the Prophet had rung him such a peal for his sin, as made both his ears tingle; In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine; or it may be there is in thee a fear of Hell, in thy apprehension death is come, and is ready to carry thee before the dreadful Tribunal of a terrible God, and therefore thou leavest thy sin; thus Sea-men in a stress, part with their goods, not because they are out of love with them, but because they love their lives better; they see plainly that either they must part with them, or perish with them. Now in these cases, thy leaving off sin, bears no similitude with the death of Christ; for his death was voluntary, and true mortification is a voluntary action.

But may there not be some reluctancy in this work betwixt the flesh and the Spirit? and if so, is it then voluntary? I answer,—

Yes, such a reluctancy we find in the human nature of Christ concerning the Cup, that it might pass from him, and yet his death was a true voluntary death. An action is said to be voluntary, or involuntary according to the superior faculties of the Soul, and not according to the inferior; if the reasonable part be consenting, the action may be called voluntary, though there be some reluctancy in the sensitive appetite. Thus in the Christian, in whom there is nature and grace, flesh and spirit, an unregenerate, and a regenerate part, if the superior and better part be willing (I mean advisedly and deliberately willing, with full consent of the inward man) though perhaps there may be some reluctancy in the flesh, in the unregenerate part, yet this is said to be a true voluntary act. So then with the mind, I myself serve the Law of God, but with my flesh the Law of sin.—I delight in the Law of God after the inward man; but I see another Law in my members, warring against the Law of my mind. Paul was dead to sin according to the inward man, the regenerate part, though he found a reluctancy in his outwards members; and therefore his death to sin carried with it the resemblance of the death of Christ, it was a voluntary death.

2. Christ's death was a violent death; he died not naturally, but violently; he was put to death in the flesh, he was brought as a Lamb to the slaughter. So is our mortification, it is voluntary in respect of us, but violent in respect of sin; and herein is the life (as I may say) of this death: Oh when a man lays violent hands on his sins; when he cuts them off, being yet in their flower, and strength, and power, and vigor; when he pulls up those weeds before they whither in themselves, this is true mortification: many have left their sins, who never mortified them; so the aged Adulterer hath left his Lust, because his body is dead: and hence it is that late repentance in an aged sinner is seldom found true: alas, he dies not to sin, but his sin dies to him: I will not say but God may call at the eleventh hour, though it be very seldom; but in that case you had need to be jealous over yourselves with a godly jealousy: what, do you find some sins within you to be dead, that were sometimes alive? O be inquisitive, impanel a Jury, call a Coroners Inquest upon your own souls, enquire how they came by their deaths; whether they died a violent or natural death? search what wounds they have received, and whether they were deadly wounds, yea, or no? enquire what weapon it was that slew them, whether the Sword of the Spirit, that two-edged Sword, the Word of God? what purposes, what resolutions have been taken up, and levelled against them? what prayers and tears have been spent upon them? If you find not these signs, you may give in your Verdict, that they died not a violent, but a natural death. And here's a good Caveat for others; Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them. Oh take heed of reprieving your Lusts! let them not live till tomorrow; now bring them forth in the sight and presence of God; arraign, condemn, crucify, mortify them whiles they might yet live. Surely this is true mortification, when the body of sin dieth, as Christ died, a violent death.

3. Christ's Death was a lingering death; he hung divers hours upon the Cross, From the first hour to the ninth hour, saith Matthew; (i.e.) from our twelve to three, before he gave up the Ghost. So is our mortification a lingering death; sin is not put to death all at once, but languisheth by little and little; this is looked upon as one main difference betwixt justification and sanctification; the former is a perfect work, admitting of no degrees, but so is not the latter; though a Believer is freed perfectly from the guilt of sin, yet not so from the power of it; sin dwelleth in us, though it hath not altogether a dominion over us; It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me; like a rebellious Tenant, it keeps possession in despite of the owner, till the house be pulled down over his head. True indeed, the body of sin in a regenerate soul hath received its death-wound, and in that respect it may be said to be dead, but it is not quite dead; still it stirreth and moveth, dying but by degrees: What the Apostle saith of the renewing of the new man we may say of the destroying of the old man the inward man is renewed day by day, and the old man is destroyed day by day; or as Paul said of himself, in respect of his afflictions, we may say of a Christian in respect of his sins, I die daily; there is not the most sanctified soul upon earth but has some remainders of corruption left in it, which God in his wise providence permits for the trying, exercising, and humbling of our souls, and for the making his own rich Graces, in renewing and multiplying pardons, so much the more glorious.

And here is a ground of consolation to a drooping and dejected soul; such an one cries out, alas I feel the stirring and vigorous actings of sin, and I am afraid my sin is not mortified; as Rebekah said, when she felt the Children struggling within her; if it be so, why am I thus? so, if sin be mortified, saith the soul, why am I thus?—trembling soul let not this discourage; Jesus Christ was not dead so soon as he was fastened to the Cross: But hast thou taken the same course with the body of sin, that the Jews did with the body of sin? hast thou arraigned it, accused it, condemned it, and fastened it to the Cross? hast thou arraigned it at the Bar of God's judgment, accused it by way of humble and hearty confession, condemned it in passing the sentence of eternal condemnation upon thyself for it, and fastened it to the Cross, in beginning the execution of it, in setting upon the mortification of it with a serious and unfeigned resolution to use all means for its mortifying and killing? why then be not disheartened; it may be thou feelest it stirring, and struggling within thee, and so will a crucified man do, and yet in the eye of the Law, and in the account of all men that see him, he is a dead man; surely so is the body of sin, when it is thus crucified; though it still move and stir, yet upon a Gospel-account, and in God's estimation, it is no better than dead, and it shall certainly die, it shall decay and languish, and die more and more; is not the promise express? He that hath begun the good work, he will perfect it to the day of Jesus Christ. Of this Paul was confident in behalf of his Philippians; and of this let all true Believers rest confident in respect of themselves. Thus far we see wherein we must conform to Christ, viz. in his Graces, in his Sufferings, and in his Death.

For the Query, what is the cause of this conformity? I answer, The death of Christ is the cause of this conformity: And that a fourfold cause.—

1. It is a meritorious cause; Christ's death was of so great a price, that it deserved at God's hands our conformity to Christ. Christ loved the Church, and gave himself for it, that by his death he might sanctify it, and cleanse it:—and present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.

2. It is an exemplary cause: He suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps; he died for us, leaving us an example that we should die to sin, as he died for sin, we may observe in many particulars (besides those I have named) a proportion, analogy, and likeness betwixt Christ's death and ours; Christ died as a servant, to note that sin should not rule, or reign over us; Christ died as a curse, to note that we should look upon sin as a cursed thing; Christ was fast nailed on the Cross, to note that we should put sin out of case, yea, crucify the whole body of sin: Christ died not presently, yet there he hung till he died, to note that we should never give over subduing sin, while it hath any life or working in us.

3. It is an efficient cause, it works this conformity by a secret virtue issuing from it. Thus Christians are said to be engrafted with Christ in the likeness of his death. The word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, is of a passive signification, importing not only a being like, but a being made like, and that by a power and virtue out of ourselves, so the Apostle elsewhere interprets, That I may know him—and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death. Not conforming myself, but being made conformable, by a power out of myself.

But how then is the power of mortification attributed to men? as, Mortify ye your members which are upon the earth.—And, They which are Christ's have crucified the flesh.

I answer, there is a twofold mortification, the one habitual, the other practical; the former consists in a change of the heart, turning the bent and inclination of the heart from all manner of sin; now this is the only and immediate work of the Spirit of Grace, breathing and working where it will; the latter consists in the exercise of putting forth of that inward grace, in the acting of that principle, in resisting temptations, in suppressing inordinate Lusts, in watching against sinful and inordinate acts; now this is the work of a regenerate person, himself co-operating with the Spirit of God, as a rational instrument with the principal Agent, and therefore the Apostle joins both together; If ye through the Spirit do mortify the Deeds of the Body, ye shall live.

4. It is an impelling, or a moving cause, as all objects are; for objects have an attractive power. Achan saw the wedge of Gold, and then coveted it: David saw Bathsheba, and then desired her. As the brazen Serpent did heal those who were bitten by the fiery Serpent, tanquam objectum fidei, merely by being looked upon, so Christ crucified doth heal sin, beget grace, encourage to sufferings by being looked upon with the eyes of Faith. Wherefore seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us; looking unto Jesus the Author and finisher of our Faith. The Apostle was to encourage the Hebrews to hold on the well-begun profession of Faith in Christ; and to that purpose he sets before them two fights to keep them from fainting, 1. A cloud of witnesses, the Saints in heaven; on which cloud when he had staid their eyes a while, and made them fit for a clearer Object, he scatters the cloud, and presents the Sun of Righteousness, Christ himself, and he wills them 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to turn their eyes from it, to him, looking unto Jesus, q. d. this sight is enough to make you run the race, and not to faint; why, Jesus is gone before you, and will you not follow him? O look unto Jesus, and the very sight of him will draw you after him: Christ crucified hath an attractive power; And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men to me.—Thus of the causes of our conformity; we see how it is wrought.

3. For the last Query; what are the means of this conformity as on our part? I answer.

1. Go to the Cross of Jesus Christ. It is not all our purposes, resolutions, promises, vows, covenants endeavors, without this, that will effect our conformity to Christ in his sufferings and death; no, no, this conformity is a fruit and effect of the death of Christ; and therefore whosoever would have this work wrought in him, let him first have recourse to Christ's Cross: O go we more immediately to the Cross of Jesus.

2. Look up to him that hangs upon it, contemplate the death of Jesus Christ, consider seriously and sadly his bitter shameful, painful sufferings: Much hath been said, only here draw it into some Epitome: As, 1. Consider who he was. 2. What he suffered. 3. Why he suffered. 4. For whom he suffered. 5. For what end he suffered. 6. With what mind he suffered: Everyone of these will make some discoveries either of his Graces, or of his gracious actings in our behalf; and who can tell how far this very Look may work on us to change us, and transform us into the very image of Jesus Christ?

3. Let us humbly bewail our defect, exorbitancy, irregularity, and inconformity either to the graces, sufferings, or death of Christ. As thus; Lo here the profound humility, wonderful patience, fervent love, abundant mercy, admirable meekness, constant obedience of Jesus Christ! Lo here the tortures, torments, agonies, conflicts, extreme sufferings of Christ for the spiritual, immortal good of the precious souls of his redeemed ones: Lo here the death of Christ, see how he bowed the head, and gave up the Ghost! why these are the particulars to which I should conform: But Oh alas! what a wide, vast, utter distance, disproportion is there betwixt me and them? Christ in his sufferings shined with graces, his graces appeared in his sufferings, like so many stars in a bright winter's night; but how dim are the faint weak Graces in my Soul? Christ in his sufferings endured much for me, I know not how much; by thine unknown sorrows and sufferings felt by thee' but not distinctly known to us (said the ancient Fathers of the Greek Church, in their Liturgy) have mercy upon us, and save us; his sorrows and sufferings were so great, that some think it dangerous to define them; but how poor, how little are my sufferings for Jesus Christ? I have not yet resisted unto blood, and if I had, what were this in comparison of his extreme sufferings? Christ in his sufferings died; his passive obedience was unto death, even to the death of the Cross: he hung on the Cross till he bowed his head, and gave up the Ghost; he died unto sin once: But alas! how do I live in that for which he died? To this day my sin hath not given up the Ghost; to this day the death of Christ is not the death of my sin: O my sin is not yet crucified; the heart-blood of my sin is not yet let out: Oh woe is me, how unanswerable am I to Christ in all these respects?

4. Let us quicken, provoke, and rouse up our Souls to this conformity; let us set before them exciting Arguments, ex. gr. The greatest glory that a Christian can attain to in this world, is to have a resemblance, and likeness to Jesus Christ. Again, the more like we are to Christ, the more we are in the love of God, and the better he is pleased with us: It was his voice concerning his Son, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; and for his sake, if we are but like him, he is also well pleased with us. Again, a likeness or resemblance of Christ is that which keeps Christ alive in the world: As we say of a child that is like his Father, This man cannot die so long as his Son is alive: So we may say of Christians who resemble Christ, that so long as they are in the world, Christ cannot die; he lives in them, and he is no otherwise alive in this nether world, than in the hearts of Gracious Christians, that carry the picture and resemblance of him. Again, a likeness to Christ in his death, will cause a likeness to Christ in his Glory, If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his Resurrection: As it is betwixt the Graft and the Stock, the Graft seeming dead with the Stock in the winter, it revives with it in the Spring; after the Winter's death, it partakes of the Spring's resurrection; so it is betwixt Christ and us; if with Christ we die to sin, we shall with Christ be raised to Glory; being conformed to him in his death, we shall be also in his resurrection. Thus let us quicken and provoke our souls to this conformity.

5. Let us pray to God that he will make us conformable to Jesus Christ. Is it Grace we want? let us beg of him, that of that fullness that is in Christ, we may in our measure receive grace for grace. Is it patience, or joy in sufferings that we want? let us beg of him, that as he hath promised, he will send us the comforter, that so we may follow Christ cheerfully from his cross to his crown, from earth to heaven. Is it mortification our souls pant after? this indeed makes us most like to Christ in his sufferings and death; why then pray we for this mortification.—

But, how should we pray? I answer, 1. Let us plainly acknowledge, and heartily bemoan ourselves in God's bosom for our sins, our abominable sins. 2. Let us confess our weakness, feebleness, and inability in ourselves to subdue our sins: we have no might (may we say) against this great company that come against us, neither know we what to do, but our eyes are upon thee. 3. Let us put up our request, begging help from heaven, let us cry to God that virtue may come out of Christ's death to mortify our Lusts, to heal our Natures, to stanch our bloody issues; and that the Spirit may come into helps us in these works: for by the Spirit do we mortify the deeds of the body.

4. Let us press God with the merits of Christ, and with his promises through Christ; for he hath said, Sin shall not have dominion over us; for we are not under the Law, but under Grace: and Paul experienced it, The Law of the Spirit of Life in Christ hath freed me from the Law of sin and death. 5. Let us praise God, and thank God for the help already received, if we find that we have gotten some power against sin, that we have gotten more ability to oppose the lusts of the flesh, that we are seldom overtaken with any breaking forth of it, that we have been able to withstand some notable temptations to it, that the force of it in us is in any measure abated, that indeed and in truth virtue is gone out of the death of Christ: Oh then return we praises to God, let us triumph in God, let us lead our captivity captive, and sing new songs of praises unto God, and even ride in triumph over our corruptions, boasting ourselves in God, and setting up our Banners in the name of the most High, and offering up humble and hearty thanks to our Father for the death of Christ, and for the merit, virtue, and efficacy of it derived unto us, and bestowed upon us.

6. Let us frequently return to our looking up unto Jesus Christ, to our believing in Christ as he was lifted up. How we are to manage our Faith, to draw down the virtue of Christ's death into our souls, I have discovered before; and let us now be in the practice of those rules; certainly there is a conveyance of an healing, strengthening, quickening virtue flowing into the Soul in the time of its viewing, eying, contemplating, reflecting upon Christ crucified, Christ lifted up; and this comes from the secret presence of God, blessing this our looking upon Christ, as the Ordinance by which he hath appointed to make an effectual impression upon the heart. It is not for us curiously to enquire, how this should be: Principles (we say) are not to be proved;

save only God hath said it, and experience hath found it out, that when Faith is occasioned to act on any suitable sacred object, God by his Spirit doth not fail to answer, in such a case he fills the Soul with comfort, blessing, virtue; he returns upon the Soul (by, from, and through the actings of Faith) whatsoever by it is looked for. Indeed none knoweth this, but he that feels it; and none feels this that knoweth how to express it; as there is somewhat in the fire (heat, warmth and light) which no Painter can express; and as there is somewhat in the face (heat, warmth and life) which no Limner can set forth; so there is somewhat flowing into the soul, while it is acting faith on the Death of Christ, which, for the rise, or way, or manner of its working, is beyond what tongue can speak, or pen can write, or pencil can delineate. Come then, if we would have grace, endure afflictions, die to sin, grow in our mortification: let us again and again return to our duty of looking unto Jesus, or believing in Jesus, as he was lifted up.

And yet when all is done, let us not think that sin will die or cease in us altogether; for that is an higher perfection than this life will bear; only in the use of the means, and through God's blessing, we may expect thus far, that sin shall not reign, it shall not wear a Crown, it shall not sit in the Throne, it shall hold no Parliaments, it shall give no laws within us; we shall not serve it, but we shall die to the dominion of it, by virtue of this Death of Jesus Christ. And this, He grant who died for us; Amen, Amen.

Thus far we have looked on Jesus as our Jesus; in his sufferings and death. Our next work is to look on Jesus carrying on the great work of our Salvation during the time of his Resurrection, and abode upon earth, until his Ascension, or taking up to Heaven.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS In his Resurrection. The Seventh Book. PART VII.

CHAP. I.

Matth. 28.6. He is risen.—Come see the place where the Lord lay.

2 Tim. 2.8. Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David, was raised from the dead.

SECT. 1. Of the Time of Christ's Resurrection.

THE Sun that went down in a ruddy cloud, is risen again with glorious beams of light. In this piece, as in the former, we shall first lay down the Object, and then give directions how to look upon it.

The Object is Jesus, carrying on the work of man's salvation in his Resurrection, and during the time of his abode on earth after his Resurrection. Now in all the transactions of this time, I shall only take notice of these two things. 1. Of this Resurrection. 2. Of his Apparitions; for first, he rose; and secondly, he shows himself that he was risen: in the first is the Position, in the second is the Proof.

1. For the Position; the Scripture tells us that he rose again the third day. In this point I shall observe these particulars. 1. When he arose. 2. Why he arose. 3. How he arose.

1. When he arose; it was the third day after his crucifying. As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whales belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. This was the time he had appointed: and this was the time appropriated to Christ, and marked out for him in the Calendar of the Prophets; of all those whom God raised from death to life; there is not one that was raised on the third day, but Jesus Christ; some rose afore, and some rose after; the Son of the Shunamite, the son of the widow of Sarephtah, the daughter of Jairus, he of Naim, and some others rose afore; Lazarus, and the Saints that rose again from the dust when Christ rose, staid longer in the grave, but Christ takes the day, which discovers him to be the Messiah: Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day. Had he rose sooner a doubt might have been of his dying; and had he lain longer, a doubt might have been of his rising; he would rise no sooner, because in some diseases, as in the Apoplexy, or such like examples are given of such, as seeming to be dead, have indeed revived; and he would lie no longer in his grave, because in all dead carcasses (and especially in a wounded body) putrefaction and corruption begins the third day: this may be gathered by the Story of Lazarus in the Gospel, where Jesus commanding the stone to be rolled from his grave, Martha his Sister answered, Lord, by this time he stinketh, for he hath been dead four days. Now the body of Christ (as it was prophesied) must not corrupt; for thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy holy one to see corruption. Mark this Text: All men shall rise again, but their bodies must first see corruption; only the Messiah was to rise again before he saw corruption; and therefore he would not delay his resurrection after the third day. Some think this, and that of Hosea, after two days he will revive us, and in the third day he will raise us up, to be the main Texts to which Christ refers, when he said, Thus it is written. And to which the Apostle refers, when he said, that Christ rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.

I dare not be too curious, in giving reasons for this set time; and the rather, because Christ is a free worker of his own affairs; he doth what he pleaseth, and when he pleaseth; times and actions are in his own power, and he needs not to give us any account of them; and yet so far as Scripture discovers; we may go along; and amongst many others, I shall lay down these following Reasons.—

1. Because the Types had so prefigured; we see it in Isaac, Jonah, and Hezekiah, a Patriarch, a Prophet, and a King. 1. For Isaac; from the time that God commanded Isaac to be offered for a burnt offering, Isaac was a dead man; but the third day he was released from death; this the Text tells us expressly, that it was the third day when Abraham came to Mount Moriah, and had his Son, as it were, restored to him again, Gen. 22.4. And Paul discovers that this was in a figure, Heb. 11.19. 2. For Jonah; from the time that Jonah was cast into the sea, and swallowed up of the Fish, Jonah was, in account as a dead man; but the third day the Lord spake unto the Fish, and it vomited up Jonah upon the dry land, Jonah 2.10. And that this was a figure of Christ, Christ himself discovers; for as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whales belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. 3. For Hezekiah; from the time that Isaiah said unto him, set thine house in order, for thou shalt die, and not live; Hezekiah was, in account, as a dead man; his bed was to him as a grave; but on the third day he was miraculously raised up again; and as the Prophet said, on the third day thou shalt go up to the house of the Lord. Surely this was a figure of Christ. And these Types prefiguring Christ, are as one Reason.

2. Because the Prophets and himself had so foretold: for the Prophets we have cited, Psal. 16.10. Hosea 6.2. And for himself, he told them very expressly, that he must suffer many things of the Elders, and chief Priests, and Scribes, and be raised again the third day; yea, said he, the Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men, and they shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised again; and after this, he tells them again, that the Son of man should be betrayed,—and crucified, and the third day he should rise again: so often had he prophesied thus, that the chief Priests and Pharisees came to Pilate after his death, saying, Sir, we remember that this deceiver said, while he was yet alive, after three days I will rise again; command therefore that the Sepulcher be made sure until the third day. And no question his Disciples remembered these sayings; for so the two Disciples travelling towards Emmaus, after they had said many things concerning him, and that they trusted it had been he, which should have redeemed Israel, they added this as a most special observation above all the rest, that today is the third day since these things were done. Why, all these signify that his rising on the third day was the accomplishment of Prophecies, and a certain evidence that he was the Messiah indeed.

3. Because that time was most suable for comforting his friends, for confounding his enemies, for clearing the truth both of his Humanity and Divinity; he would stay no longer, lest his Disciples might have been swallowed up with grief; and he would come no sooner, lest his enemies should have urged that he had not died; the watchmen kept the Sepulcher till this very time; but then the Angels appearing, and the earth trembling, they became as dead men; and as soon as they could, they run away, and with their tidings confounded all Christ's enemies. And withal, as Christ consisted both of a divine and human nature, so in respect of his humanity, he must die; and to show his death, it was requisite that he should rise no sooner than the third day; and in respect of his divinity, it was impossible that he should be held of death any longer than three days; for as he must not see corruption, so God raised him up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it.

SECT. II. Of the Reasons of Christ's Resurrection.

2. WHY he rose, we have these Reasons.—

1. That he might powerfully convince, or confound his adversaries; they that crucified him were mightily afraid of his Resurrection; they could tell Pilate, Sir, we remember this deceiver said while he was yet alive, after three days I will rise again; and therefore they desire him of all loves to command the Sepulcher to be made sure until the third day; if ever he rise again whom they have killed, then they knew they were all shamed; then the last error (as they said) would be worse than the first: All the world would look on them as a cursed generation, to kill the Messiah, to crucify such a one as after his death and burial should rise again; now then, that he might either convince them, or confound them, notwithstanding their care, their watch, their Seal, their making all sure as possibly they could; at the very same time he told them before, he broke open the gates of death, and made the gates of Brass to fly asunder.

2. That he might confirm the faith of all his followers. If Christ be not risen, your Faith is vain, saith the Apostle. Christ's resurrection both confirms our faith, as to his person and to his office: for his person; this speaks him to be the eternal Son of God, by the resurrection from the dead: and for his office; this speaks him to be the promised Messiah, the great Prophet, the chief high Priest, the King and Savior of his Church. When the Jews saw Christ purging the Temple, and Messiah-like reforming what he saw amiss in the House of God, What sign (say they) showest thou unto us, seeing thou dost these things? And he said unto them, destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up.—When therefore he was risen from the dead, his Disciples remembered that he had said this unto them, and they believed the Scripture, and the Word which Jesus had said: As the resurrection of Christ argues his Mediatorship, so it confirms their faith? as it is said, They believed the Scriptures, and they believed Jesus Christ. And thus John writing of his resurrection, tells us, These things are written that ye might believe, and that believing, &c.

3. That it might clearly appear, that he had fully satisfied the justice of God for sin: So it was, that God laid the forfeiture of the bond on Christ; he arrested him, brought him to the Goal, the Grave, and there he was till the Debt was paid to the utmost farthing; and then, that it might clearly appear that the bond was cancelled, the Prisoner discharged, God's justice satisfied, he rose again from the dead. Some make a question when his Bond was cancelled? and they say, as the debt was paid, so the Bond was cancelled ere he stirred off the Cross (only by the Cross, I suppose they mean the utmost degree of Christ's humiliation, viz. his being held in captivity and bondage under death) and so the hand-writing of the Law that was against us, was there delivered him; and there he blotted it out, cancelled it, took it out of the way, nailing it to his Cross. Others think, that as to the full discharge of a debt, and freeing the debtor, two things are requisite; first, the payment of the debt: secondly, the tearing, or cancelling of the bond; so the payment was wrought by Christ's death, and the cancelling of the Bond was at his resurrection; I shall not disprove either of these: I am sure, this is without all controversy, that Christ rose, that it might fully appear that now the Bond was cancelled, and God's Justice satisfied.

4. That he might overcome and conquer sin, death, and devil; and hence the Apostle cries victory upon the occasion of Christ's resurrection, O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? now was the day that he broke the prison, and carried the keys of death and hell at his own girdle; now was the day that he spoiled Principalities, and Powers, that he trod on the Serpents head; and all-to-bruised it, that he came upon him, took from him his armor wherein he trusted, and divided his spoils; now was the day that the Jew lost his rage, and death his sting, and the grave his corruption, and Hell his purchase; now was the day of his victory over all his enemies; now was the day that the Phoenix sprung up out of its own ashes, that Jonas came safe out of the belly of the whale, that the Tabernacle of David that was fallen, was raised again, that the Son of righteousness covered with a cloud appeared, and shone with greater luster than before; that Sampson took the gates of the City, and carried them away; He arose even upon that account.

5. That he might become the first-fruits of them that slept. Christ is called the first-fruits in a double respect, 1. In respect of the day whereon he rose; Paul was an excellent critic, the very feast carried him to the word; as the day of his passion was the day of the passover, and the Apostle thence could say, Christ is our passover; 1 Cor. 15.7. So the day of Christ's rising was the day of the first-fruits, and the Apostle thence could say, Christ is our first-fruits. Concerning this feast of the first fruits we read Lev. 22.10, 11. It was their first harvest of their basest grain Barley, but the full harvest of their best grain of Wheat, was not till pentecost. Now upon this day, the morrow after the Sabbath, the beginning of their first harvest, when the sheaf of their first-fruits was brought unto the Priest, and waved before the Lord, Christ arose from the dead, and in this respect Paul calls him the first fruits of them that sleep, of all the Saints. He arose first as on this day, for the full Harvest is not till doomes-day, the general Resurrection day. 2. he is called the first-fruits in respect of them whom he thereby sanctified: for as an handful of the first-fruits sanctified the whole Field of corn that was growing; so Jesus Christ the first-fruits of the dead, sanctifies all those who are lying in the grave to rise again by his Power, even when they are in the dust of death. If Christ be not risen, (saith the Apostle) ye are yet in your sins.—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that sleep.

6. That being formerly abased as a servant, and crucified as a sinner, he might thus be declared to be the Son of God; and exalted to be a Prince and Savior of men; and so his name might be glorified of all the World. He was made of the Seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power according to the Spirit of Holiness by the resurrection from the dead. It was of necessary consequence, that he that was so humbled, must be thus exalted; therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong, because he hath poured out his soul unto death, agreeable to which is that of Christ, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day. When Peter was Preaching Christ to the high Priest and council that condemned him to death, he told them that the God of our Fathers hath raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree, him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior; and suitable to this is that of Paul, he humbled himself, and became obedient to the death, even to the death of the Cross, wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name. It was for his own glory, and his Fathers glory that he should rise again from the dead, God raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; and he was therefore exalted, that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Of all the reasons of Christ's resurrection, we must look upon this as the main; for as he hath made all things for himself, so he hath done all things for his own glory; Christ was raised up from the dead, (saith the Apostle) by the glory of the Father: By the glory, or to the glory, or for the glory of himself, and of his Father:

SECT. III. Of the manner of Christ's Resurrection.

3. How he rose; for the manner of his resurrection we may consider in it these particulars.—

1. That Christ rose again as a common Person, he stood in our stead, and therefore when he rose from death, we and all the Church of Christ rose together with him, and in him. We have formerly observed that Christ took upon him the Person of no man, he took only the nature of man into the union of the second Person, that so he might die and rise again, not as a Particular but a common Person; that he might be as a representative in our room and stead; that he might be as a Spiritual head, and as the second Adam, who could infuse life into all his members. In this respect the Apostle makes comparison betwixt Adam, and Christ; now Adam, we know, was reckoned before his fall as, a common public Person, not standing singly or alone for himself, but as representing all mankind to come of him; so Jesus Christ is reckoned to us, both before his death, and in his death and after his death, as a common public Person; not living, dying, or rising again, singly, or alone for himself, but as representing all the believers in the world; and hence it is that Adam is called the first man, and Jesus Christ is called the second man; as if there never had been, nor ever should be anymore men in the world, save only these two; and why? but because these two between them had all the rest of the Sons of men hanging at their girdles: Adam had all the Sons of men born into this world called earthly men, included in him; and Christ had all his elect, whose names are written in heaven, and therefore called Heavenly men, included in him; so that now whatsoever Christ did, it is reckoned by God as if done by us and for us. When Christ arose, he arose as our head, and as a common Person, and in God's account we arose with him, and in him. As among all the sheaves in the Field, there was someone sheaf, that in the name and room of all the rest was lift up, and waved before the Lord; so when all were dead, Christ as the first-fruits rose again from the dead, and by this act of his resurrection all the Elect from the beginning of the World to the end, are risen with him and in him. He is the first fruits of them that sleep, though the Saints are a sleep, yet are they virtually risen already with Christ, because he is their first-fruits. Let this ever be remembered, that Christ rose again as the first-fruits, as the second man, as an head, as a common Person.

2. That Christ rose again by his own Power, this he meant when he said, destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up. He saith not, destroy, you, and some other shall raise it up; no, no; but I, even I myself will do it; yea, and I will do it, by my own Power and virtue; here is a plain argument of the Divine nature of Christ, for none ever did, ever could do that but God himself; some were raised before Christ was incarnate, but not any by himself, or by his own proper Power; only a Power was imparted to some Prophet by God for that time and turn, and so they were raised: but Christ rose again not by a Power imparted to some, but by his own Power. The Widows son of Sarephtah was raised by Elias; and the Shunamites son was raised by Elisha; both these were raised by others, and those others that raised them, did it not by their own power, but by a power given them from above; and therefore though in their life-time they raised others, yet being dead they could not raise themselves; but Jesus Christ did not only in his life-time raise others, but also being dead, and laid in his grave, and pressed with stones, and watched by Soldiers, and sought to be detained by all the Power of darkness, yet he as a conqueror, by his own Power raised himself; he caused all things by the strength of his own arm to give way unto himself, I have Power to lay down my life, and I have Power to take it up again; an equal Power to take it up, as to lay it down.

But against this it may be objected, The God of our Fathers raised up Jesus,—whom God hath raised up; having loosed the pains of death. In many places the resurrection of Christ is ascribed to his Father, how then is he said to raise up himself by his own Power?

I answer, it is true, that the Father raised him, and yet this contradicts not but that he raised up himself; Whatsoever the Father doth, I do, saith Christ. Christ's resurrection is the indivisible work of the blessed Trinity; it is a work common to all the three persons; there is but one power of the Father, and of the Son; so that of both it is truly verified, the Father raised him, and the Son raised himself.

3. That Christ rose again with an Earthquake; and behold there was a great Earthquake, for the Angel of the Lord descended from heaven. The earth shook at his death, and now it trembles at his Resurrection; plainly speaking that it could neither endure his suffering, nor hinder his rising. As a Lion with a Roar is said to make the Bed wherein he lies to tremble; so this Lion of the tribe of Judah was able with his voice, or sight, to make his (Bed, the earth, wherein he lay) to tremble: no sooner he shakes himself, but he shakes the earth; at his first motion the earth moves; and now was fulfilled that prophesy, Tremble thou earth at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob. It is not for us, curiously to enquire into the cause of this earthquake; certainly the cause was above Nature's reach; it was not any hollow wind got into the bowels of the earth; but either it was Christ's rising, or the Angels descending; the earth either danced for joy that Christ was risen, or it trembled for fear that men would not believe his resurrection. The Evangelist seems to lay it on the Angel; for the Angel of the Lord descended from heaven: sure the power of Angels is very great; they can move all corporeal things almost in an instant, they can stir up tempests, they can shake the earth, move the waters, only all their power is subjected to God's will. Bless the Lord all ye Angels that excel in strength, that do his Will: it was the Will of God that now an Angel should take hold on the pillars of the earth, and make it shake; no wonder if for fear of him the keepers shake, and become as dead men; and if one Angel be able to shake the earth, and to shake the Keepers, those armed Soldiers that were set to watch the Tomb; what then will Christ himself do, when he shall come to judgment the second time, with many thousand thousands of Angels? Oh now terrible and fearful will his coming be? As at Christ's Resurrection, so at the last Resurrection, there will be earthquakes in divers places: Christ hath shown, and he will show himself to be the absolute Lord of heaven and earth; see how the earth, trembling under his feet, doth (as it were) pay him homage; and behold there was a great Earthquake.

4. That Christ rose again Angels ministering to him. An Angel came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sate upon it. Christ's Power was not included in the grave, or on the earth, but extended to Heaven, and to the Hosts therein; however the chief Priests and Pharisees conspired together to close him in the earth; they sealed the stone, and set a watch, they made all as sure as possibly they could; yet, the Angels of heaven are ready to wait on him as their Sovereign Lord. An Angel descended to roll away the Stone; not that Christ was unable to do it himself: he shook the earth, and could he not lift up a stone? O yes! but thus he would manifest his Power, by declaring his Power over the mighty Angels; he needed but to say unto his Angel▪ do this, and he doth it. I find some difference amongst Authors, why an Angel should roll away the Stone: some think it was only for the women's sake, that they might go into the Sepulcher, and take a view of the empty Tomb, and so be satisfied that Christ was not here, but risen; as they said, Come, see the place where the Lord lay: Others think it was to do their office of duty and service to Christ Jesus, to make way for his body to pass out of the grave without any penetration of other Bodies: for my part, I adhere to these; though we need not to exclude the former; for the stone might be removed, both that Christ might come forth, and that the women might be convinced that he was risen again. But as for the opinion of them, who think the stone was not removed till after the resurrection; & that the body of Christ went through the grave-stone when he rose again, it is without all warrant; the very order of nature will not permit that one body should pass through another, without corruption or alteration of either: We say two bodies cannot be together, and at once, in one proper place; no more than one body can be together, and at once, in an hundred, or a thousand places; now that Angelical argument is full for this; he is not here, for he is risen; he is not in the grave, for he is risen out of the grave; he could not be in the grave, and out of the grave at one and the same time. But I mean not to dwell on controversial Points.

5. That Christ rose again accompanied with others; and the graves were opened, and many bodies of Saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy City, and appeared unto many. It may be the graves were opened when Christ was laid down in his grave; yet the spirits came not into the dead bodies till Christ's Resurrection; the Text is plain, that they came not out of their graves till Christ was raised; Christ is the beginning (saith the Apostle) the first-born from the dead: how the first-born? I answer, both in time and efficacy. 1. In time; he rose to eternal life the first of all men. This was the sum of Paul's preaching, that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead. It is true indeed, that Lazarus andundry others rose before Christ, but they rose to live a mortal life, and to die again. Christ was the first of all that rose to eternal life; never any in the world rose, before Christ, in this manner. 2. In respect of efficacy, Christ rose first, that by his power all the rest might rise; there is in Christ's resurrection a reviving and a quickening virtue; and herein is a main difference betwixt the Resurrection of Christ, and the Resurrection of any other man; the Resurrection of Abraham avails nothing to the resurrection of Isaac, or of Jacob; but the resurrection of Christ avails to the resurrection of all that have believed, or that shall believe in him: is not Christ called a quickening Spirit? how then should he but quicken all his members? when a man is cast into the Sea, and all his body is under water, there is nothing to be looked for but present death; but if he carry his head above the water, there is good hope then of a recovery: now Christ is the head unto his Church, and therefore he being raised, all his members must follow in their time; no sooner did Christ arise, but many of the bodies of the Saints arose; not all that were dead, but only some; to show the resurrection of all to come, the time for the whole Churches rising being not yet, till the great resurrection day. It is a question what became of those bodies which now arose: Some think they died again; but it is more probable, that seeing they rose to manifest the quickening virtue of Christ's resurrection, that they were also glorified with Christ; and as they rose with Christ arising, so they ascended up into heaven with Christ ascending.

6. That Christ rose again with a true, perfect, incorruptible, powerful, spiritual, agile, and glorious body.

1. He had a true body, consisting of flesh and blood, and bone; so he told his Disciples, when they supposed him a Spirit; Handle me, and see (said he) for a Spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have. I know, this body, after his resurrection, was comparatively a spiritual body; yet for all that, he never laid aside the essential properties of a true body, as length, and breadth, and visibility, and locality, and the like; he still keepeth these, because they serve to the being of a true body.

2. He had a perfect body; however he was cut, and bored, and mangled before his death, yet after his resurrection, all was perfect. Eusebius tells of one of the Children of the Maccabees, that were put to death for the profession of the Truth; and when they cut off his members, says he, I have received these from heaven, and now I do give them unto the God of heaven, and I hope I shall have them again. Not a member of Christ was wanting, not a bone out of joint, but all was perfect.

3. He had an incorruptible, immortal body. To this end (saith the Apostle) Christ both died, and rose and revived; and why revived? but to show that he rose, never to die again. The Apostle is yet more express; Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. Consonant hereunto is that of Christ, I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen. And herein the body of Lazarus and the rest, whom Christ raised, differed from his; for after they were raised, they died again; but Christ died no more.

4. He had a powerful body. Luther could say of the glorified Saints, that they had a power so great as to toss the greatest mountains in the world like a Ball: And Anselm hath an expression, not much unlike, that they have such a power, as they are able to shake the whole earth at their pleasure. How much more could Christ cause that great Earth-quake at the rising of his Body? O it was powerful!

5. He had a spiritual body; it needed not to meat, drink or refreshings, as it did before; it is true, that the Disciples gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb, and he took it, and did eat before them; but this he did only to confirm their faith, that he appeared solidly, and not imaginarily; he Ate out of power, and not out of necessity, even as the Sun sucks up the water out of power, but the earth out of want: he Ate not, as standing in need of food, but to show the truth of his being risen again; as the Saints in heaven neither eat, nor drink, nor sleep, nor have Magistrates, nor Ministers, but the Spirit of God is all in all to them; so it was with Christ after his Resurrection: he was full of the Spirit; he was enlivened immediately by the Spirit of God; which flowed into him, and that supplied the absence of all other things.

6. He had an agile body; it was in his pleasure to move as well upwards as downwards, as it may appear by the ascension of his Body into heaven; which was not caused by constrain•, or by any violent motion, but a property agreeing to all bodies glorified. Augustine hath an expression concerning the glorified Saints, that they shall move to any place they will, and as soon as they will; they shall move up and down like a thought, how much more may it be said of the Body of Christ?

7. He had a glorious body; this appeared in his Transfiguration, when his face did shine as the Sun, and his raiment was white as light; but especially after his Resurrection and Ascension, when his head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow, and his eyes were as a flame of fire, and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; the glorified bodies of Saints which are fashioned like unto his glorious body, are said to shine like stars, Dan. 12.3 or like the Sun itself, Matth. 13.43. O then how glorious is the Sun of righteousness, from whence all those Suns and Stars do borrow their Light? It is true, that from his Resurrection, until his Ascension, his body appeared not thus glorious unto them that saw it: But where his Glory was delayed, and he was not possessed of it during his forty days abode upon the earth; or whether he so far condescended for his Disciples sake, as to keep in his Glory, that it might not dazzle them, and therefore appeared sometimes in the form of a Gardener, John 20.15. and sometimes in the form of a stranger, Luke 24 18. and sometimes in another form, Mark 16.12. and sometimes in his own form, in the same form wherein he lived before he was crucified, John 20.20, 27. is hard to determine. I am apt to think, that in some sort he might draw in the beams of his Glory, and yet that he was not entered into that sulness of glory, as after his Ascension; and so some expound those words of Christ to Mary, Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father; q. d. fix not thy thoughts so much upon my present condition, for I am not yet attained to the highest pitch of my exaltation, nor shall I until I ascend unto my Father.

From this Resurrection of Christ, how are we informed, that Christ is the Son of God? Thus Paul speaks, he was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead. And how are we informed that Christ is Lord over all things that are? For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living. And how are we informed that Christ rose again for us, as one that stood instead and room of all the Elect? but now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that sleep. And how are we informed that by his resurrection we are justified? who was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification: and that by his resurrection we are regenerate; for he hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. And that by his resurrection we are sanctified? for as he was raised up from the dead by the glory of his Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life; and that by his resurrection at the last day we shall be raised? for if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead shall also quicken our mortal bodies; and that by his resurrection finally we shall be saved? for after we are raised, we shall never die anymore, but be equal unto the Angels, and be the children of God, as being the children of the resurrection of Christ.

Thus far the position, Christ rose again the third day. Now for the proof.

SECT. IV. Of the Arguments of Christ's Resurrection.

Christ after his passion shown himself alive by many infallible proofs. And so he had need to persuade men into the faith of so strange a truth; if we consult with antiquity, or novelty, with primitive times, or later times, never was matter carried on with more scruple, and slowness of belief, with more doubts and difficulties than was this truth of Christ's resurrection. Mary Magdalene saw it first, and reported it. But they believed her not, Mark 16.10.

the two Disciples that went to Emmaus, they saw it also, and reported it, but they believed them not, Luke 24.37. divers women together saw him, and came and told the Disciples, but their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not, Luke 24.11. They all saw him, and even seeing him, Yet they believed not for joy, but wondered, Luke 24.41. When the wonder was over, and the rest told it but to one that happened to be absent, you know how peremptory he was, Not he, except he saw in his hands the print of the nails, and put his fingers into the print of the nails, and thrust his hands into his side, he would not believe, John 20.25.—In after-times the whole world stopped their ears at this report of the resurrection of Christ, it was with the Grecians at Athens a very scorn; When they heard of the Resurrection of the dead, some mocked, Acts 17.32. It was with Festus, the great Roman, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a sickness of the brain, a plain frenzy; Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art besides thyself, much learning doth make thee mad, Acts 28.24.—But come we to our own times, the resurrection of Christ is to this day as much opposed by Jews, and Atheists, as any one Article of our Creed. And surely we had need to look to it, for if Christ be not risen (as the Apostle argues) then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain, 1 Cor. 15.14. If Christ be not risen, ye are yet in your sins; and they which are fallen asleep in Christ, are perished, 1 Cor. 15.17, 18. Of all the precious truths in the Book of God, we had need to preserve this truth, and to be well skilled in the defending of this truth of the resurrection of Christ. Some talk of a toleration of all Religions, and some desire that the Jews may have free commerce amongst us; it will then be time, as I think, to be well armed at this point. Let the ordinary Professors of our times, who are of weak judgments, and fiery Spirits, look to this point, least as now, when they cannot answer a Separatist, they turn Separatists, and when they cannot answer an Antinomian, they turn Antinomians, and when they cannot answer a Seeker, Quaker, Blasphemer, they turn to them, so when they cannot answer the subtle Arguments of a Jew, they should as easily turn Jews, and deny Christ, and the resurrection of Christ.

I mean not to enter into controversies; only I shall declare from what heads, Arguments of this nature may be drawn. As—

1. More generally from Gentiles grants; Jews concessions, typical instructions, prophetic predictions.

2. More specially from these clear demonstrations, that circumstantially and substantially do prove this Christ to have risen again.

1. the Arguments in general are—

1. From Gentiles grants: Pilate that condemned Christ, testified in a letter to Tiberius Caesar, that Christ was risen again; and therefore Tiberius desired the Senate to admit Christ into the number of their gods, which when they refused, Tiberius was incensed, and gave free leave to all Christians to profess Christianity. And to the Gentiles, Sybylla left written these very words, He shall end the necessity of death by three days sleep, and then returning from death to life again, he shall be the first that shall show the beginning of resurrection to his chosen, for that by conquering death, he shall bring us life.

2. For the Jews concessions; Josephus, the most learned amongst the latter Jews acknowledgeth, that after Pilate had crucified him, he appeared unto his followers the third day, accordingly as the Prophets had foretold. The Scribes and Pharisees being astonished with the sudden news of his rising again, confirmed by the Soldiers whom they set to watch, found no other way to resist the same, but only by saying (as all the Jews do unto this day) that his Disciples came by night, and stole away his body, while the Soldiers slept: O strange! if they were asleep, how know they that his Disciples stole away his body? and if they were not asleep, how could a few weak fishers take away his body from a band of armed Soldiers?

3. From typical instructions; such was Adam's sleep, Isaac's laying upon the Altar, Joseph's imprisonment, Sampson's breaking of the gates of Gaza, David's escaping out of Saul's hands, Jeremy's deliverance out of the pit, the raising of the Shunamites child, of the widow of Sarephtah's son, of the Temple of Solomon, of Jonah from the deep; a thousand of these types might be produced, which relate to this antitype, Christ's resurrection.

4. From prophetic predictions, Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption, Psal. 16.10. After two days he will revive us, in the third day he will raise us up, Hosea 6.2. he will raise us up (i.e.) his Son united to us, or our flesh assumed by his Son, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, Psal. 2.7. Acts 13.33. I laid me down and slept, I waked, for the Lord sustained me, Psal. 3 5. Above all, how plain was the prophesy of Christ himself, that he must go to Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the Elders, and chief Priests, and Scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day, Matth. 16.21?

2. The special Arguments are exceeding many, as 1. The Angels Assertion, He is not here for he is risen, as he said, come see the place where the Lord lay, Matth. 28.6. 2. The great Earthquake, And behold there was a great earthquake, for the Angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, Matth. 28.2.

3. The Apparitions of raised bodies, and the graves were opened, and many bodies of Saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy City, and appeared unto many, Matth. 27.52, 53.

4. The sudden courage of the Apostles; whereas a little before they durst not peep out of doors, they presently after compassed the whole world, and confidently taught, that there was no other name given under heaven, whereby men may be saved, but the Name of Jesus, Act. 4.12.

5. The Martyrs sufferings even for this truth. 6. The Adversaries confessions even to this truth. 7. The Jews punishments even to this day, for not believing this saving truth. There is one Rabbi Samuel, who six hundred years since writ a Tract in form of an Epistle to Rabbi Isaac, Master of the Synagogue of the Jews; wherein he doth excellently discuss the cause of their long captivity, and extreme misery: And after that he had proved it was inflicted for some grievous sin; he showeth that sin to be the same which Amos speaks of, For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof, because they sold the righteous for silver, Amos 2.6. the selling of Joseph he makes the first sin; the worshipping of the Calf in Horeb the second sin; the abusing and killing of God's Prophets the third sin; and the selling of Jesus Christ the fourth sin. For the first, They served four hundred years in Egypt; for the second, They wandered forty years in the wilderness; for the third, They were captives seventy years in Babylon; and for the fourth, They are held in pitiful captivity even till this day. 8. The last Argument on which only I shall insist, it is the several Apparitions that Christ made to others after his Resurrection, some reckon them ten times, others eleven times, and others twelve times, according to the number of his twelve Apostles.

1. He appeared unto Mary Magdalene apart. As a woman was the first instrument of death, so was a woman the first Messenger of Life; she brought the first tidings of the Resurrection of Christ, which is the surest Argument of man's Salvation.

2. He appeared to all the Mary's together, as they returned homewards from the Sepulcher, never any truly sought for Christ, but with these women they were sure to find Christ.

3 He appeared to Simon Peter alone; he was the first among men to whom he appeared, he first went into the Sepulcher, and he first saw him that was raised thence: he was called first, and he confessed Christ to be the Son of God, and therefore Christ appears first to him; the Angel bade the women to tell his Disciples and Peter (that is to say, and Peter especially) that he was risen, and gone before them into Galilee. Of this speaks Paul, He was first seen of Cephas, and then of the Twelve.

4. He appeared to the two Disciples journeying towards Emmaus; the name of the one was Cleophas, and probable it is, the other was Luke, who out of his modesty concealed his own name, saith Theophilact.

5. He appeared unto the ten Apostles, when the doors were shut. Some controversy there is in this, because the Evangelist saith expressly, that the eleven Disciples were gathered together—and as they spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them. Now Judas was hanged, and Matthias was not elected, and Thomas Didimus was not with them when Jesus came: how then could he appear to eleven Apostles, considering at at this time there were but eleven in all?—Some say it is a certain number put for an uncertain. Others say, that the eleven might be together when the two Disciples came, and when Jesus came, Thomas might be absent, and gone from amongst them. And if the Text be viewed well, there is no contradiction in this saying, But I must not dwell on controversial points.

6. He appeared to all the Disciples, and Thomas was with them; and then he shown them his wounds, to strengthen the weak faith of his wavering servants. Thomas would not have believed unless he had seen, and therefore Christ shows him the wounds of his body, that he might cure the wounds of Thomas's unbelieving soul.

7. He appeared to Peter, and John, and James, and Nathaniel, and Didimus, and two other Disciples, when they were a fishing at the sea of Tiberias; there he proved the verity of his Deity by that miracle of the fishes, and the verity of his humanity by eating meat with them. And this was the third time that he shown himself publicly and solemnly unto all, or to the most part of his Disciples.

8. He appeared unto more than five hundred brethren at once; of this we read not in the Evangelists, but the Apostle Paul records it, after that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep.

9. He appeared unto James the Brother of the Lord: (i.e.) the Cozen-german of Christ according to the Flesh; he was called James the just in regard of his upright and innocent life. Jerome in his Book De viris illustribus tells us, that afore Christ's death this James made a vow, that he would eat no bread till Christ were risen again from the dead; and now Christ appearing to him, he commanded Bread and Meat to be set on the table; saying to James, O my brother, now rise and eat, for now I am risen again from the dead. Of this Apparition Paul makes mention: After that he was seen of James.

10. He appeared to the eleven Disciples, on Mount Tabor in Galilee. And this Matthew intimates, when Jesus bade the woman tell his Brethren that he was risen, and that they should go into Galilee, and there they should see him; and accordingly in that Mountain where Jesus had appointed them, they saw him, and worshipped him.

11. He appeared to all his Apostles and Disciples upon Mount Olivet by Jerusalem, when in the presence of them all he ascended up into Heaven. This mountain is expressed by Luke, when after Christ's ascension it is said, that the Disciples returned back to Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet.

12. He appeared unto Paul travelling unto Damascus. This indeed was after his forty days abode upon the earth. And yet this Paul mentions amongst the rest of his apparitions, and last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time.

My meaning is not to speak of all these Apparitions in order; for of some of them we are neither assured of the order, nor of the time. But of the most considerable, and most edifying we shall treat.

SECT. V. Of Christ's Apparition to Mary Magdalene.

ON the first day were many Apparitions; But I shall speak only to one, or two, as related by the Evangelist John.

1. Christ appeared unto Mary Magdalene apart; The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the Sepulcher, and seeth the stone taken away from the Sepulcher; she came whiles it was yet dark; she departed from home before day, and by that time she came to the Sepulcher the Sun was about to rise; thither come, she finds the stone rolled away, and the body of Jesus gone; upon this she runs to Peter, and John, and tells them, they have taken away the Lord out of the Sepulcher, and we know not where they have laid him. Then Peter and John ran as fast as they could to see, they looked into the Sepulcher, and not finding the body there, they presently returned. By this time Mary Magdalene was come back, and howsoever the Disciples would not stay, yet she was resolved to abide by it, and to see the issue.

We find this apparition for our further assurance, compassed, and set about with each needful circumstance; here's the time when, the place where, the persons to whom the manner how •e appeared, together with the consequents after his apparition.

1. For the time when he appeared; Now upon the first day of the week very early in the morning It was the first day of the week, the next day to their Sabbath; I shall speak more particularly to this in the next apparition; and it was very early in the morning; the apparition was early, but Mary's seeking Christ was so early that it was yet dark; she's going to the grave, when by course of nature she should have been in her bed; she sought him early whom she loved entirely: giving us to learn that we should seek Christ betimes, even in the days of our youth; that in these first days of the week, we should rise up early to enquire after Christ; they that will not seek Christ until they have given over seeking other things, may justly fear to miss Christ. First seek the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and then (saith Christ) all other things shall be added unto you.

2. For the place where he appeared, it was in the garden, where Christ was buried; in a garden Adam first sinned, in a garden Christ first appeared; in a garden death first was threatened and deserved, and in a garden life is restored, and conferred upon us; Christ makes choice of a garden both for his grave, and resurrection, and first apparition, to tell us where we might seek him, if we have lost him, My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies, that is, Jesus Christ is to be sought and found in the particular assemblies of his people; they are the garden of his pleasure, wherein are varieties of all the beds of renewed souls, there he walks, and there he feeds, and there he solaceth himself with those fruits of righteousness, and new obedience, which they are able to bring forth to him. O there let us seek him, and we shall find him.

3. For the Person to whom he appeared; it was Mary Magdalene; she that sometimes lived a sinful life, that was no better than a common Curtizan, now is first up to seek her Savior. Let never any despair of mercy, that but hears of the conversion of Mary Magdalene. Dionisius tells us, that she that was loose and dissolute in her youth, betook herself in old age to a most solitary life; that she sequestered herself from all worldly pleasures in the mountains of B•lma; full thirty years; in all which time she gave herself to meditation, fasting and prayer. The texts tells us, That much was forgiven her, and she loved much. Her love to Christ appears at this time. But Mary stood without at the Sepulcher weeping, and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the Sepulcher: this Scripture we may call a song of loves, or if you will a song of degrees; every word is a step, or degree of love more than other: As—

1. Mary stood at the Sepulcher; she stood by the grave of Christ; it signifies her great love to Jesus Christ; many would stand by him while he was alive, but to stand by him dead none would do it; those we love most we will wait on them living, or if they die, we will bring them to the grave, and lay them in the grave, but there we leave them: —only Mary chooseth Christ's Tomb for her best home, and his dead corps for her chief comfort, she praiseth the dead more than the living, and having lost that light of the Sun of righteousness, she desired to dwell in darkness, in the shadow of death.

2. But] Mary stood. q. d. others did not, but she did: Peter and John were there even now, and when they could not find Jesus, away they went, but Mary went not, she stood still: their going away commends her staying behind; how many circumstances may we observe in Mary, setting out her love to Christ above them all? to the grave she came before them; from the grave she went to tell them; to the grave she returns with them; and at the grave she stays behind them. Certainly there was in Mary a stronger affection than either in Peter, or John, and this affection fixed her there, that she could, not stir; go who would, she would not go, but stay still. But Mary stood without.

3. But Mary stood without at the Sepulcher weeping: This was love indeed; see how every word is a degree of love. But Mary stood there weeping, when Christ stood at Lazarus's grave-side weeping, the Jews said then, Behold how he loved him, and may not we say the very same of Mary, Behold how she loved him, her very love runs down her cheeks, she cannot think of Jesus as lost, but she weeps; she weeps for having lost him whom she loved; at first she mourned for the departing of his soul out of his body, and now she laments the taking his body out of the grave; at first she mourned because she could not keep him alive, yet that sorrow had some solace, in that she hoped to have enjoyed him dead; but when she considers that his life was lost, and not so much as his body could be found, Oh she weeps, and weeps. The last office she could do, was to anoint his body, and to bewail his death; and to that purpose she comes now unto his grave; as sometimes she had washed his feet with her tears, now she would shed them afresh upon his feet, and head, and hands, and heart, and all; but when she saw the grave open; and the body gone, and nothing of Christ now left her to mourn over, she weeps the more, she weeps most bitterly; But Mary stood there weeping.

4. And as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the Sepulcher. She did so weep as she did seek withal; her weeping hindered not her seeking, she sought and sought; to what purpose? that Christ is not in the tomb her own eyes have seen; the Disciples hands have felt, the empty winding sheet doth plainly avouch; Peter and John had looked in before, nay, They went into the Sepulcher, and saw the linen clothes lying, and the napkin that was about his head wrapped by itself; and yet for all this she will be stooping down, and looking in; she would rather condemn her own eyes of error, and both their eyes and hands of deceit; she would rather suspect all testimonies for untrue, than not to look after him whom she had lost, even there where by no diligence he could be found. It is not enough for love to look in once. You know this is the manner of our seeking, when we seek something seriously; where we have sought already, there we will seek again; we are apt to think we sought not well, but if we seek again we might find it were we sought: And thus Mary sought, and when she could think of no other place so likely to find Christ in as this, she sought again in this, she will not believe her own senses, she would rather think that she looked not well before, than she will leave off looking. When things that are dearly affected are gone and lost, loves nature is never to be weary of searching, even the oftenest searched corners; they must still be an haunt for hope. O love thinks it hath never looked enough! in the first verse she looked, And saw the stone taken away from the Sepulcher; and now again she stooped down, and looked into the Sepulcher.

4. For the manner how he appeared; it was first by his Angels, and secondly by himself.

1. There was an apparition of Angels, she seeth two Angels in white, sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet where the body of Jesus had lain. I will not stay here, only for the opening of the words I shall answer these questions; As 1. What means the apparition of Angels? I answer, it is not only a preparation to Christ's apparition. Mary's loss must be restored by degrees; though she saw not Christ at first; yet she saw his Angels; it often pleaseth Christ in the desertions of his people, to come to them by degrees, and not at once, he comes first by his Angels; so it was at his birth, and so it is at his resurrection.—But, 2. What do Angels in a Sepulcher? it is a place fitter for worms than Angels: we never read of Angels being in a grave before this time; they are blessed creatures, and is the grave a fit place for them? O yes! since Christ lay in the grave, that very place is a blessed place; Blessed are the dead, which die in the Lord from henceforth. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints. But, 3. Why are the Angels in white? Solomon answers, that white is the color of joy. Let thy garments be always white, and let thy head lack no ointment. When Christ was transfigured, his Rayment was all white, no Fuller in the earth could come near it; and the Saints in Heaven are said to walk in white Robes. And here the Angels are in white, to signify the joy they had in Christ's resurrection from the dead. —But, 4. Why are they one at the head, and the other at the feet where the body of Jesus had lain? Some answer, that as Mary Magdalene had anointed his head and feet, so at those two places the two Angels sit; as it were to acknowledge so much for her sake. Others think it speaks comfort to everyone of us; if we are but in Christ, we shall go to our graves in white, and lie between two Angels, who are said to guard our Bodies even dead, and to present them alive again at the day of the resurrection.

But in this apparition we see further, a question, and answer; 1. The Angels question Mary, Woman why weepest thou? May I paraphrase upon these words? it is as if they had said, O Mary! what cause is there for these tears? where Angels rejoice, it agrees not that a woman should weep; thou couldst before with a manly courage arm thy feet to run among swords when thou camest to the grave, and art thou now so much a woman that thou canst not command thine eyes to forbear tears? O woman, why weepest thou? If thy Christ were here in his grave, under this Tomb-stone, we might think thy sorrow for the dead enforced thy tears, but now that thou findest it a place of the living, why dost thou stand here weeping dead? for if thy tears be tears of love, as thy love is acknowledged, so let these tears be suppressed; if thy tears be tears of anger, they should not here have been shed, where all anger was buried; if thy tears be tears of sorrow and duties to the dead, they are bestowed in vain where the dead is now revived; and therefore, O woman, why weepest thou? would our eyes be dry, if such eye-streams were behooveful for us? did not Angels always in their visible resemblances represent their Lord's invisible pleasure; shadowing their shapes in the drifts of his intentions? As for instance, when God was incensed they brandished swords; when he was appeased, they sheathed them in scabbards; when he would defend, they resembled Soldiers; when he would terrify, they took terrible forms; and when he would comfort, they carried mirth in their eyes, sweetness in their countenance, mildness in their words, savor, and grace, and comeliness in their presence: why then dost thou weep, seeing us to rejoice? dost thou imagine us to degenerate from our nature, or to forget any duty, whose state is neither subject to change, nor capable of the least offense? art thou more fervent in thy love, or more privy to the counsel of our eternal God, than we that are daily attendants at his Throne of glory? O woman, why weepest thou? Thus for Paraphrase.

2. For her answer; She saith unto them, because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him: Here was the cause of Mary's tears; 1. They have taken away my Lord. 2. I know not where they have laid him, q. d. He is gone without all hope of recovery: for they, but I know not who, have taken him away, but I know not whither; and they have laid him, but I know not where; there to do him, but I know not what. O what a lamentable case is this! she knows not whither to go to find any comfort; her Lord is gone, his life is gone, his soul is gone, his body is gone, yea gone, and carried she knows not whither; and do they ask her, Woman, why weepest thou? why, here's the cause, They have taken away my Lord, (i.e.) the dead body of my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. Where a little of Christ is left, and that is lost, it is a lamentable loss. Mary had sometimes a possession of whole Christ, she had his presence, she heard his words; she saw his divinity in his miracles, and in casting seven devils out of her own Body; but now she had lost all Christ, his presence lost, his preaching lost, his divinity lost, his humanity lost, his soul lost, and last of all his body lost. O what lamentable loss was this! Mary would now haven been glad of a little of Christ; O ye Angels, fill but her arms with the dead body of her Jesus, and she will weep no more; one beam of that Sun of righteousness would scatter all the clouds of Mary's grief.

But doth Christ ever leave his totally?

I answer, not indeed, but only in apprehension. In desertions a Christian may to his own apprehension find nothing of Christ; and this was the Case of Mary Magdalene: or if Christ desert a soul indeed, and truth (for desertions are sometimes in appearance, and sometimes real) yet never doth he forsake his own both really and totally: The Lord will not wholly forsake his people, for his great Name sake; the acts of his love may be withdrawn, but his love is still the same, it is an everlasting love; those acts which are for well-being may be withdrawn, but his acts of love that are for being, shall never be removed. No such good things will God withhold from them that walk uprightly. Or Christ may go away for a season, but not forever; For a moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee; in a little wrath have I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer; It was Christ's promise to his Disciples, I will not leave you comfortless, or as Orphans, but I will come again. Though his compassions may be restrained, yet they cannot be extinguished; as the Sun sets to rise again, and as the tender Mother lays down her Child to take it up again, so deals Christ with his, only for the present it is a sad thing; O it is a lamentable thing to lose all Christ; though but in our own apprehensions. To hear Mary's pitiful complaints, They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid my Lord, it would make a flint to weep; methinks I hear her cries, O my Lord, What's become of Thee? Time was that my Soul was an enclosed Garden, and the chiefest of Ten Thousands did walk in the shadow of the Trees; but now the Fence is down, my Love is gone, and Sharon is become a desert: Time was that I sate at the Feet of my Lord, and I received daily Oracles from his Mouth, but now he hides himself, and will not come at me; I pray, and he hears not, I hearken after him, but he speaks not, I call, but he answers not. O my Lord, if I had never known thee, I could have lived without thee, but this is my misery, not so much that I am without thee, as that I have lost thee, many are well without thee, because they never enjoyed thee; the children of beggars count it not their misery that they are not Princes, but oh the grief when the children of Princes shall be turned to beggars! O my Lord, once I had thee, but now I have lost thee; yea, I have lost thee every jot, and piece, and parcel of thee; O ye Apostles, Where is the dead body of my Lord? O Sir Angel, tell me if you saw his torn, his macerated, crucified body? O grave! O death! show me, is there anything of Christ's body (though but a few dead ashes) in your keeping? no, no, all is gone; I can hear nothing of what I would hear; death is silent, the grave is empty, the Angels say nothing to the purpose, the Apostles are fled, and they, (I know not who) have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

2. After this, Christ himself appears; but first as unknown, and then as known; 1. As unknown, She turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus: Jesus saith unto her, Woman, Why weapest thou? whom seekest thou? she supposing him to be the Gardener, &c. In this Apparition of Christ unknown, I shall only take notice of Christ's question, an•Mary's inquisition; his question is in these words, Woman, Why weapest thou? whom seekest thou? 1. Why weapest thou? This very question the Angels asked her before, and now Christ asks it again; sure there is something in it, and the rather we may think so, because it is the first opening of his Mouth, the first words that ever came from him, after his rising again. Some say that Mary Magdalene represents the state of all mankind before this day, viz. One weeping over the grave of another, as if there were no hope: and now at his resurrection Christ comes in with weep not; Woman, Why weapest thou? q. d. there is no cause of weeping now, Lo I am risen from the dead, and am become the first-fruits of them that sleep.

And yet we may wonder at the question, Why should Christ demand of Mary, why she wept? but a while since, she saw him hanging on a tree, with his head full of thorns, his eyes full of tears, his ears full of blasphemies, his mouth full of gall, his whole person mangled and disfigured, and doth he ask her, Woman, Why weapest thou? scarce three days since, she beheld his arms, and legs racked with violent pulls, his hands and feet bored with nails, his side and bowels pierced with a spear, his whole body torn with stripes, and gored in blood: and doth he ask her, Woman, Why weapest thou? she saw him on the cross yielding up his soul; and now she was about to anoint his body, which was the only hope she had alive; but his body is removed, and that hope is dead, and she is left hopeless of all visible help, and yet doth he ask her, Woman, Why weapest thou? O yes! though it may be strange, yet it is not a question without cause, she weeps for him dead, who was risen again from the dead; she was sorry he was not in his grave; and for this very cause she should have been rather glad; she mourns for not knowing where he lay, when as indeed, and in truth, he lay not anywhere; he is alive, and present, and now talks with her, and resolves to comfort her; and therefore, Woman, Why weapest thou?

2. Whom seekest thou? she seeks Christ, and Christ asks her, Woman, Whom seekest thou? We may wonder at this also; if she seek Christ, Why doth she not know him? or if she know Christ, Why doth she seek him still? O Mary! Is it possible thou hast forgotten Jesus? there is no part in thee but is busy about him, thy eye weeps, thy heart throbs, thy tongue complains, thy body faints, thy soul languisheth, and notwithstanding all this, Hast thou now forgotten him? What, are thy sharp eyes so weak sighted, that they are dazzled with the Sun, and blinded with the Light? O yes! a shower of tears comes betwixt her and him, and she cannot see him, or it may be, Her eyes were holden that she should not know him; or it may be he appeared 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in some other shape, such as resemble the Gardener; whom she took him for; howsoever it was, She saw Jesus standing, but knew not that it was Jesus, and therefore saith Jesus to her, Woman, Why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? There is a double presence of Christ, felt, and not felt; the presence felt, is when Christ is graciously pleased to let us know so much, and this is an heaven upon earth. The presence not felt, is that secret presence, when Christ seems to draw us one way, and to drive another way. So he dealt with the Woman of Canaan, he seemed to drive her away, but at the same time he wrought in her by his Spirit an increase of faith, and by that means drew her to himself. Thus may a soul suppose Christ lost, and seek and weep, and weep and seek, and yet Christ is present.

2. For Mary's enquiry, She supposing him to be the Gardener, said unto him, Sir, If thou hast born him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away.

In the words we may observe, first her mistake; 2. Her speech upon her mistake.

1. Her mistake, She supposing him to be the Gardener; O Mary! hath Christ lived so long, and labored so much, and shed so many showers of blood, to come to no higher preferment than a Gardener? this was a very strange mistake; and yet in some sense, and a good sense too, Christ might be said to be a Gardener; As 1. It is he that gardens all our souls, that plants in them the seeds of righteousness; that waters them with the dew of grace, and makes them fruitful to eternal life. 2. It is he that raised to life his own dead body, and will turn all our graves into a garden-Plot, Thy dead men shall live together, with my dead body shall they arise, awake and sing ye that dwell in dust, for the dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. Besides, there is a mystery in her mistake; As Adam in the state of grace and innocence was placed in a garden; and the first office allotted to him, was to be a Gardener; so Jesus Christ appeared first in a garden, and presents himself in a Gardiners likeness. And as that first Gardener was the Parent of sin, the ruin of mankind, and the Author of death; so is this Gardener the ransom for our sins, the raiser of our ruins, and the restorer of our life. In some sense then, and in a Mystery Christ was a Gardener: but Mary's mistake was in supposing him the Gardener of that only place; and not the Gardener of our souls. Souls in desertion are full of mistakes, though in their mistakes are sometimes many mysteries.

2. Her speech upon her mistake; If thou hast born him hence, &c. we may observe,—

1. That her words to Christ are not much unlike the answer she gave the Angels; only she seems to speak more harsh to Christ, than she did to the Angels; to them she complains of others; They have taken away my Lord; but to Christ she speaks as if she would charge him with the fact, as if he looked like one that had been a breaker up of graves, a carrier away of Corpses out of their place of rest; Sir, if thou hast born him hence. But pardon love, as it fears where it needs not, so it suspects very often where it hath no cause; When love is at a loss; he, or any that comes but in our way, hath done it, hath taken him away.

2. That something she spoke now to Christ which she had not mentioned to the Angels. She said not unto them, tell me where he is, but reserved that question for himself to answer, Come, tell me where thou hast laid him, q. d. thou art privy to the place, and with the action of removing Christ my Lord; Oh how she errs, and yet how she hits the truth! Jesus must tell her what he had done with himself, sure it was fittest for his own speech to utter, what was only possible for his own power to do.

3. That the conclusion of her speech was a mere vant or flourish, And I will take him away. Alas poor woman, she was not able to lift him up, there are more than one or two allowed to the carrying of a corps; and as for his it had more than an hundred pound weight of myrrh and other odors upon it; sure she had forgotten that women are weak, and that she herself was but a woman; how was it possible that she should take him away? she could not do it; well, but she would do it though; there is no essay too hard for love; she exempts no place, she esteems no person, she speaks without fear, she promises without condition, she makes no exception, as if nothing were impossible that love suggesteth; the darkness could not fright her from setting out before day, the watch could not fear her from coming to the Tomb where Christ was laid; she resolved to break open the seals, and to remove the stone, far above her strength; and now her love being more incensed with the fresh wound of her loss, she speaks resolutely, I will take him away, never considering whether she could or no, love is not ruled with reason, but with love; it neither regards what can be, nor what should be; but only what itself desireth to do.

4. That through all this speech she omits the principal verb, she enquires for Jesus, but she never names him whom she enquires after. She could say to the Angels, they have taken away my Lord; but now she talks of one under the term of him if thou hast born him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away: him, him, him; but she never names him, or tells who he is; this is solaecismus amoris, an irregular speech, but loves one dialect; q.d. who knows not him? why, all the world is bound to take notice of him; he is worthy to be the owner of all thoughts; & no thought in my conceit, can be well bestowed upon any other than him. And therefore Sir Gardener, whosoever thou art, if thou hast born him hence, thou knowest who I mean, thou canst not be ignorant of whom I love; there is not such another among the sons of men; as the psalmist, he is the fairest among the Children of men; or as the Spouse, he is the chiefest of ten thousands; and therefore tell me some news of him; of none but him: of him, and only of him: O tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away. A soul sick of love, thinks all the world knows her beloved, and is therefore bound to tell her where he is; the daughters of Jerusalem were very ignorant of Christ, Can. 5.9. and yet I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem (said the Spouse) if ye find my beloved, that ye tell him I am sick of love.

2. Christ appears as unknown: Jesus saith unto her, Mary; she turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni, which is to say, Master. Sorrow may endure for a night, but joy comes in the morning; she that hitherto had sought without finding, and wept without comfort, and called without answer, even to her Christ now appears; and at his apparition these passages are betwixt them, first he speaks unto her, Mary; and then she replies unto, him, Rabboni, which is to say Master.

1. He speaks unto her, Mary! it was but a word, but O what life? what Spirit? what quickening and reviving was in the word? the voice of Christ is powerful; if the Spirit of Christ come alone with the Word, it will rouse hearts, raise spirits, work wonders. Ah poor Mary, what a case was she in before Christ speak unto her? she ran up and down the Garden, with O my Lord, where have they laid my Lord? but no sooner Christ comes, and speaks to her by his Spirit, and with power, but her mind is enlightened, her heart is quickened, and her soul is revived. Observe here the difference betwixt the Word of the Lord, and the Lord speaking that word with power and Spirit; we find sometimes the hearts of Saints are quickened, fed, cherished, healed, comforted in the use of the means; and sometimes again they are dead, senseless, heavy, and hardened; nay, which is more, the very same truth which they hear at one time, it may be affects them, and at another time it doth not; the reason is, they hear but the Word of the Lord at one time, and they hear the Lord himself speaking that word at another time; Mary heard the Word of the Lord by an Angel, woman, why weepest thou? but her tears dropped still; she heard again the word of the Lord by Christ himself, woman, why weepest thou? and yet she weeps, and will not be comforted; but now Christ speaks, and he speaks with power, Mary! and at this word her tears are dried up, no more tears now, unless they be tears for joy; and yet again, observe the way how you may know and discern the effectual voice of Jesus Christ; if it be effectual, it usually singles a man out; yea, though it be generally spoken by a Minister, yet the voice of Christ will speak particularly to the very heart of a man, with a marvelous kind of Majesty and Glory, stamped upon it, and shining in it, take an humble, broken, drooping Spirit, he hears of the free offer of grace and mercy in Jesus Christ, but he refuseth the offers; he hears of the precious promises of God in Christ, but he casts by all promises, as things that are generally spoken and applied by man; but when the Lord comes in, he speaks particularly to his very heart, he meets with all his objections, that he thinks, this is the Lord, and this is to me. Thus Mary before heard the voice of an Angel, and the voice of Christ, woman, why weepest thou? it was a general voice, no better title was then afforded, but woman; thou weepest like a woman; O woman, and too much a woman, why weepest thou? but now Christ comes nearer, and he singles her out by her very name, Mary! Oh this voice came home, he shown now that he was no stranger to her, he knew her by name: as sometimes God spake to Moses, thou hast found Grace in my sight, I know thee by name; so Christ speaks to Mary, thou hast found grace in my sight, I know thee by name. Why how should this voice be ineffectual? Oh now it works! now she knows Christ; which before she did not; and indeed this is the right way to know Christ, to be first known of Christ. But now (saith the Apostle) after that ye have known God (and then he corrects himself rather are known of God; for till he know us, we shall never know him aright. Now her dead spirits are raised, which before were benumbed; and no marvel that with a word he revive her spirits, who with a word made the World, and even in this very word shown an omnipotent power. The Gardener had one his part (saith one) to making her all given on a sudden. But even now her body seemed the hearse of her dead heart, and her heart the coffin of her dead soul; and see how quickly all is turned out and in: a new world now; Christ's resurrection is Mary Magdalens resurrection too; on a sudden she revives, raised (as it were) from a dead and drooping, to a lively and cheerful state.

•She laid u•to him, Rabboni, which is to say, Master. As she was ravished with his voice, so impatient of delay she takes his talk out of his mouth, and to his first and only word, she answered but one other, Rabboni, which is to say, Master. A wonder that in this verse but two words should pass betwixt them two; but some give this reason, that a sudden joy rousing all her passions, she could neither proceed in her own, nor give him leave to go forward in his speech. Love would have spoken, but fear enfor•ed sil•ce; hope framed words, but doubt melts them in the passage; her inward concei•s served them to come out, but then her voice trembled, her tongue faltered, her breath •iled; why such is the estate of them that are sick with a surfeit of sudden joy• her joy was so sudden, that not a word more could be spoken, but Rabboni, which is to say, Master. Sudden joys are not without some doubts or tremblings; when Jacob heard that his son Joseph was alive, his heart fainted, he was even astonished at so good a news; when God restored the Jews out of captivity, they could think of it no otherwise then as a dream; when Peter was by an Angel delivered out of prison, he took it only for a vision or apparition, and not for truth; when Christ manifested his resurrection to his Disciples, it is said, that for very joy, they believed not; their fears (as it were) kept back, and questioned the truth of their joys. As in the Sea when a storm is over, there remains still an inward working and volution; even so in the mind of man, when its fears are blown over and there is a calm upon it, there is still a motus trepidationis, a motion of trembling, or a kind of solicitous jealousy o what it enjoys. And this might be Mary Magdalens case; though she suddenly answered Christ, upon the first notice of his voice, yet because the novelty was so strange, his Person so changed, his presence so unexpected, and so many miracles were laid at once before her amazed eyes, she found (as it were) a sedition in her thoughts; her hope presumed best but her fear suspected it to be too good to be true; and while these enterchange objections and answers, she views him better; but for the present cannot speak a word more save this Rabboni, which is to say, Master.

5. For the consequents after this apparition, Jesus saith unto her, touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and to your Father; and to my God and your God.

In these words we may observe, a prohibition and a command; the prohibition, touch me not; the command, but go to my brethren, and say unto them, &c.

1. Touch me not. It seems Mary was now fallen at his sacred feet, she was now ready to kiss with her lips his sometimes grievous, but now most glorious wounds. Such is the nature of love, that it covets not only to be united, but if it were possible, to be transformed out of itself, into the thing it loveth. Mary is not satisfied to see her Lord, nor is she satisfied to hear her Lord, but she must touch him, embrace his feet, and kiss them with a thousand kisses; Oh how she hangs, and clings about his feet! or at least, how she offers to make towards him, and to fall upon him!—but on a sudden he checks her forwardness, touch me not.

What a mystery is this! Mary a sinner touched him, and she being now a Saint, may she not do so much? she was once admitted to anoint •is head, and is she now unworthy to touch his feet? what meant Christ to debar her of so desired a duty? she had the fi•st sight of Christ and heard the first words of Christ after his resurrection, and must she not have the privilege of his first embracing? there is something of wonder in these words; and it puts many to a stand; and many an interpretation is given to take off the wonder; I shall tell you of some of them, though for my part I shall cleave only to the last.

1. Some think that Mary not only essayed to kiss his feet, but to desire the fulfilling of the promise of the Spirit of Christ; this promise Christ made to his Disciples at his last supper, I will send you the Comforter; and she expected it to be now performed after his resurrection: to which Christ answered, that he would not then give the Spirit unto her, for that as yet he was not ascended into heaven; whence the Spirit should come, q. d. forbear Mary; if this be the meaning of thy complement, hands off, O touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father.

2. Others think that Mary was forbidden to touch, because of her unbelief: she had not the least thought till just now that Christ was risen, or that he should ascend; and therefore she deserved not the least favor at his hands. q. d. Touch me not, for in thy faith I am not risen, nor shall I ascend unto my Father; thou complainest of men, they have taken away my Lord, thou seekest for the living among the dead, and therefore thou art unworthy of a touch, or any approach: O touch me not.

3. Others think that Christ forbade Mary's touch, because she looked upon it as the most manifest confirmation of her faith touching Christ's resurrection. There was a more sure and certain evidence of this thing than touching or feeling, and the discovery of that was to be after his ascension when the holy Ghost should be given, q. d. touch me not, for I would not have my resurrection chiefly approved by the judgment of sense, rather expect a while, till I ascend to my Father in heaven, for then I will send the holy ghost, and he shall declare the truth and certainty of my resurrection far surer and better.

4. Others think that this touch was forbidden, that Christ might show his approbation of chastity, and sanctity, and inward purity; Mary was now alone with Christ, and that he might give an example of most pure chastity, he forbids her touch, which afterwards in presence of others he admits her, and other women too; for so it is said, that they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him. And to this exposition the reason affixed doth well agree, for I am not yet ascended to my Father, q. d. for an example of holy chastity, touch me not now, but hereafter in heaven I will give thee leave; when men and women shall be as the holy Angels, and shall neither marry, nor be given in marriage, then mayest thou touch; there will be no need of the like example then as now; then I will not forbid thee; but till then, especially if thou art alone, Oh touch me not!

5. Others think that Mary too much doated upon that present condition of Jesus Christ; she looked upon it as the highest pitch of Christ's exaltation; she desired no more happiness than to enjoy him in that same condition wherein now she saw him, and thereupon said Christ, touch me not, for I am not yet ascended; q. d. O Mary fix not thy thoughts so much upon my present condition, in as much as this is not the highest pitch of my exaltation; I am not as yet attained to that, nor shall I attain to it until I ascend; the degrees of my exaltation are first my resurrection. 2. My ascension. 3. My session at God's right hand; but that is not yet.

6. Others think that Mary carried it with too much familiarity towards Christ; she looked upon Christ as she did formerly, she had not that reverence or respect of Christ as she ought to have had; she differenced not the mortal state of Christ from his new glorified state after this resurrection, whereas with him the case was quite altered; he is risen in a far otherwise condition than he was, for now his corruptible hath put on incorruption, and his mortal hath put on immortality, he died in weakness and dishonor, but he is risen again in power and glory; and as in another state, so to another end, he was not now to stay upon earth, or to converse here any longer, but to ascend up into heaven, q. d. though I be not yet ascended to my Father, yet I shall shortly ascend; and therefore measure not thy demeanor towards me by the place where I am, but by that which was due to me; and when thou wilt rather with reverence fall down a far off, than with such familiarity seem to touch me; Thus touch me not.

7. Others think this prohibition was only for that time, and that because he had greater business for her in hand, Christ was not willing now to spend time in complements, but to dispatch her away upon that errand, Go to my brethren, &c. And the reason following suits with this comment, for I am not yet ascended to my Father, q. d. thou needest not so hastily to touch me now, for I am not yet ascended; though I be going, yet I am not gone, another time will be allowed, and thou mayst do it at better leisure, only forbear now; and the first thing thou dost, go to my brethren; it will do them more good to hear of my rising, than it will do thee good to stand here touching, and holding, and embracing; and therefore in this respect, now touch me not.

8. Others think, that Christ in these words meant to wean her from all sensual touching, and to teach her a new and Spiritual touch by the hand of faith; and to this sense the reason agrees well, for I am not yet ascended, or, I shall quickly ascend unto my Father; till Christ were ascended she might be touching with a sensual touch, but that would neither continue nor do her any good; but if she would learn the Spiritual touch, no ascending could hinder that; one that is in heaven might be touched so: and hence it is, that if now we will but send up our faith, we may touch Christ to this day, and there will virtue come out of him. It was Christ's care to wean Mary from the comfort of his external presence, and to teach her how to embrace him by a true and lively faith: he was not long to be seen in his visible shape, being shortly to ascend unto his Father; and therefore the main business was to learn that touch, that would both continue and do her good to her souls health. And I believe for this very cause, Christ would not stay long with any of his Disciples at any time; he only appeared to manifest himself, and to prove his resurrection, and then to wean them from all sensual and carnal touching; he would quickly have been gone. Observe, that a Spiritual touch of Christ by faith, is that which Christ prefers before all touches: it is the Apostles saying, henceforth know we no man after the flesh, yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more The words have a double interpretation; As, 1. Henceforth know we him no more; if we had any earthly carnal thoughts of Christ like unto the rest of the Jews, that he, as the King of Israel, should begin an earthly Temporal Kingdom, and that we should enjoy all manner of earthly carnal privileges; as honor, riches, power, yet now we know him no more, we have put off all such carnal imaginations of his Kingdom. Or, 2. Henceforth know we him no more; we stand no longer affected towards Christ after any merely human, civil, or natural manner of affections, such as those bear to him, who conversed with him before his resurrection, but altogether in a divine and Spiritual manner, agreeable to the state of glory, whereunto he is exalted. Some vilified the Ministry of Paul, below that of the rest of the Apostles, because he had not been conversant with Christ in the flesh; to which Paul answers, away with this fleshly knowledge, henceforth know we no man after the flesh; our way to deal with Christ is in a Spiritual manner, yea the blessing is upon this manner, and not on that; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. It is said of Mary his mother, that she had a double conception of Jesus Christ, one in the womb of her body, another in the womb of her soul; the first indeed was more miraculous, the second more beneficial; that was a privilege singular to herself, but this was her happiness common to all the chosen; it is the work of the inward man that God accepts; a Spiritual touch of Christ by faith is that which Christ prefers before all touches.

2. But go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God, and your God, this was the command of Christ; instead of touching him, she must go with a message to his Apostles, and this was more beneficial both to her and them. The first preacher of this resurrection (besides the Angels) was Mary Magdalene; she that before had seven devils cast out of her, had now the holy Spirit within her; she that was but a woman, is now by Christ made an Apostle; Apostolorum Apostola, the Apostles, for to them she was sent, and the message she was to deliver, it was Christ's rising and ascending; and what were they but the Gospel, yea the very Gospel of the Gospel? this was the first Sermon that ever was made by any mortals of Christ's resurrection; and this her fact had some reference unto Eve's fault; a woman was the first messenger of this our joy, because a woman was the first Minister of that our sorrow.

But what means he to speak of the ascension, when as yet we are but upon the resurrection? I suppose this was to prevent their mistake, who might have thought, if Christ be risen, why then we shall have his company again as heretofore; no saith Christ, I am not risen to make any abode with you, or to converse with you on earth as formerly; my rising is in reference to my ascending, look how the stars no sooner rise, but they are immediately in their ascendent: so Christ no sooner risen, but he is presently upon his ascending up.

But whither will he ascend? to his Father, and our Father; to his God, and our God. Every word is a step, or round of Jacob's ladder; by which we may ascend up into heaven: As, 1. Father is a name of much good will: there is in it bowels of compassion. Oh what tenderness is in a Father? and yet many a Father wants good means to express his good will unto his Child; now therefore God is added, that he may not be thought to be defective in that way; Oh Blessed message! this is the voice of a Father to his Son: all that I have is thine. Now if this Father be also God, and if all that is God's to be also ours, what can we desire more than all that God hath; or all that ever God was worth? Oh but here's the question, whether his Father and God be also ours? that he is Christ's Father, and Christ's God, is without all question; but that his Father should be our Father, and that his God should be our God, this were a Gospel indeed; O then what a Gospel is this, Go to my brethren, and say unto them, that our relations and interests are all but one; the same Father that is mine is theirs, and the same God that is mine is theirs; his relations are made ours, and our relations are made his interchangeably. No wonder if Luther tells us that the best divinity lay in pronouns; for as there is no comfort in heaven without God, and no comfort in God without a Father, so neither is there comfort in Father, Heaven, or God, without ours, to give us a property in them all. O the blessed news that Christ tells Mary, and that Mary tells us, I ascend to my Father, and your Father, to my God, and your God. Oh what dull hearts have we that are not more affected with this blessed news? no sooner was Christ risen from the dead, but he takes care in all haste to appear to Mary; and no sooner he appears to her, but he sends her away in all haste to others; go to my brethren, and tell it them: he would both have Mary and the rest of his Apostles to hear of his loving kindness betimes in the morning; why alas! they had for some days been amazed with sorrow and fear, but now he provides for their joy; and no sooner they heard the news, but the joy according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide they spoil Christ's resurrection was a cause of unspeakable joy to them, how is it that we hear the same glad tidings, and yet we are no more affected with them? come Christians, since the occasion extends to us, and is of equal concernment to us, let us tune our hearts to this key; that as upon Christ's absence, we may Weep with them that weep; so upon his return, we may spring out in joy, and rejoice with them that rejoice. So much of the first Apparition.

SECT. VI. Of Christ's Apparition to his ten Disciples.

ON this day some reckon five apparitions; but of them five, as we have seen the first, so I shall now only take notice of the last. Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut, where the Disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus, and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you; and when he had so said, he shown unto them his hands and his feet. In these words we have the apparition of Christ, with all its circumstances.

As, 1. When he appeared. 2. Where he appeared. 3. To whom he appeared. 4. How he appeared. So necessary was it to confirm this point, that not a needful circumstance must be wanting. And first is laid down the time; then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week.

How exact is the Evangelist in this circumstance of time? it was the same day, the same day at evening; and yet lest the day might be mistaken, it was the same day at evening, being the first day of the week. 1. It was the same day (i.e.) the very day of rising; he could not endure to keep them in long suspense; the Sun must not down, before the Sun of Righteousness would appear. The same day that he appeared to Peter, to the two Disciples going to Emmaus, to the woman coming to the sepulcher, and to Mary Magdalene, as we have heard; the very same day he appears to the ten. Oh what a blessed day was this? it was the day of his resurrection, and the day of these several apparitions.

2. It was the same day at evening. Both at morn, noon, and evening Christ shown himself alive by many infallible proofs. Early in the morning he appeared to Mary, and presently after to the three Mary's, who touched his feet, and worshiped him. About noon he appeared to Simon

Peter; in the afternoon he travelled with two of his Disciples almost eight miles, to the Castle of Emmaus; and in the evening of the same day he returned invisible from Emmans to Jerusalem. At all times of the day Christ is prepared, and preparing grace for his people.

3. It was the same day at evening, being the first day of the week. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , that is, in one of the Sabbaths; but the Greek words are an Hebraism, and the Hebrews use often by one to signify the first, as in Gen. 1.5. the evening and the morning were one day (i.e.) the first day. And whereas the Greeks found one of the Sabbaths, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , must be understood either properly, for Sabbaths; or else figuratively signifying the whole week; and this acception was usually with the Jews; so the Evangelist brings in the Pharisee speaking, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , I fast twice in the Sabbath (i.e.) in the week; for it is impossible to fast twice in one day; and hence the translatour renders it thus, primo die h•bdomadis, on the first day of the week. In which is a discovery of his mercy; Christ took no long day to show himself to his Apostles, nay he took no day at all, but the very first day. When Joseph shown himself unto his brethren, he would not do it at first, and yet he dealt kindly, and very kindly with them; O but Christ's kindness is far above Joseph's; for on the first day of the week, the very same day that he arose from the dead he appears unto them. Thus for the time.

2. For the place, it is laid down in this passage, where the Disciples were assembled. Now if we would know where that was, the Evangelist Luke speaks expressly, it was in Jerusalem; but in what house of Jerusalem it is unknown; only some conjecture that it was in the house of some Disciple, wherein was an upper room. This upper room, according to the manner of their buildings at that time, was the most large and capacious of any other, and the most retired and free from disturbance, and next to heaven, as having no room above it. Mede tells us expressly, this was the same room wherein Christ celebrated the passover, and instituted the Lord's supper, and whereon the day of his resurrection he came, and stood in the midst of his Disciples, the doors being shut; and where eight days after, the Disciples being within, he appeared again to satisfy the incredulity of Thomas; and where the Apostles met after Christ was ascended. Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the Mount called Olivet, —and when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and the rest. If this be true, it should seem that this 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 this upper room first consecrated by Christ at his institution, and celebration of the Lord's supper, was thenceforth devoted to be a place of prayer, and holy assemblies; and for certain the place of this 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 was afterwards enclosed with a goodly Church, known by the name of the Church of Zion; to which Jerome made bold to apply that of the Psalm, The Lord loveth the gates of Zion, more than all the dwellings of Jacob.

Now of this upper room the doors are said to be shut, and the reason, by way of adjunct, is for fear of the Jews; they were shut up as men environed and beleaguered with enemies; and here a question is raised, whether Christ could enter, the doors being shut? the text is plain, that he came in suddenly, and because of his sudden presence (the doors being shut) they were terrified, and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. The ancients speaking of it, tell us, that he entered while the doors were shut, and yet he was no phantasme, but he had a true body consisting of flesh and bones. Now, how such a body consisting of crass parts should enter into the room, and no place at all open, is a great question; but 'tis generally answered, that it was by miracle. As by miracle he walked on the sea, Mat. 10.25. and as by miracle he vanished out of their sight, Luke. 24.31. so by miracle he came in, the doors being shut. I know it is against the nature of a body, that one should pass through another, both bodies remaining entire; and it is an axiom in Philosophy, that penetration of bodies is merely impossible; yet for my part, I shall not dispute the power of the Almighty; this answer is enough for me to all the objections either of Papist or Lutherans, that the creature might yield to the Creator, and the Creator needed not to pass through the Creature; Christ came in when the doors were shut, either causing the doors to give place, the Disciples not knowing how; or else altering the very substance of the doors, that his body might pass through them without destruction, I know not but he that thickened the waters to carry his body, might also attenuate the doors to make way for his Body.

3. For the persons to whom he appeared, they were his Disciples; they that were shut up in a conclave, not daring to step out of doors for fear of the Jews, to them now Christ appeared. It is Christ's usual course to appear to them who are full of fears, and griefs, and most in dangers; when thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, and through the Rivers they shall not overflow thee; yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil (saith David) for thou art with me. He was with Joseph in prison, with Jonas in the deep, with Daniel in the Lions den, with the three Children in the fiery furnace: Lo I see four men (said Nebuchadnezzar) walking in the midst of the fire, and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God. And thus he was with Paul when he stood before Nero, though all men forsake me, yet Christ the Lord stood by me, & strengthened me. And do not his apparitions this day speak thus much? when Mary was full of grief, then Christ appeared to her; when the two disciples travelling towards Emmaus, talked together of all those things which had happened, and were sad, then Christ appeared to them. And when all the Apostles were afraid of the Jews, and therefore shut the doors that none might enter, then Christ appeared to them, they were his Disciples, his sad, distracted, timorous Disciples, to whom Christ appeared.

4. For the manner how he appeared; it appears in these passages: 1. He stood in the midst. 2. He said peace be unto you. 3. He shown unto them his hands and his side.

1. He stood in the midst. Herein he represents himself as a common good; things placed in the midst are common; and he stands in the midst as a common Savior: and hence it is that our faith is called a common faith, to Tytus my son after the common faith: and our salvation is called a common salvation I gave all diligence to write unto you of the Common salvation. And in that way as salvation is common, Christ Jesus is called a common Savior; behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people; for unto you, (unto all you) is born in the City of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. This posture of Christ (standing in the midst) declares that he despiseth none, but that he takes care of them all. Some observe, that all the while Christ was on earth, he most-what stood in this posture; at his birth he was found in a stable in the midst of beasts; in his Childhood he was found in the Temple in the midst of the Doctors; in his manhood, John the Baptist told them, there standeth one in the midst of you, whom ye know not; and he said of himself, I am in the midst of you as one that seveth; at his death that very place fell to his turn: for they crucified him in the midst betwixt two theeve•, one on the right hand, and the other on the left. And now at his rising there we find him again, the Disciples in the midst of the Jews, and he in the midst of his Disciples. After this in Patmos, John saw him in heaven in the midst of the throne; and in earth he saw him in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; and in the last day he shall be in the midst too, of the sheep on his right hand, and of the goats on his left.

But I find there is yet more in it, that he stood in the midst: for the midst is Christ's place by nature, he is the second Person in the Trinity; and the midst is Christ's place by office, he dealeth betwixt God and man; and the midst is Christ's place in respect of his Person, he is God-man, one that hath interest in both parties; it was the middle Person who was to be the middle one, that undertook this mediation betwixt God and us. We read in the Roman history, that the Romans and Sabines joining battle together, the women being daughters to the one side, and wives to the other, interposed themselves and took up the quarrel; and by their mediation, who had a peculiar interest in either side, they who before stood upon highest terms of hostility, did now join themselves together into one body and state. God and we were enemies, but Christ stood in the midst to reconcile us unto God, and to slay this enmity; and to this purpose Christ is called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a Mediator, a term peculiar to the Scriptures, not to be found amongst profane Authors. O what comfort is here to see Jesus Christ stand in the midst; now may the Disciples behold him as their blessed peace maker, their Mediator, as one that hath slain the enmity; not only that enmity betwixt men and men, Jews and Gentiles, but also betwixt God and men. This he did by his death, and now he declares it at his resurrection; for so the Apostle there goes on, having slain the enmity, by his Cross, he came and preached peace; and so the evangelist here goes on, after his resurrection, Jesus came and stood in the midst, and said unto them, peace be unto you. You see how he stood.—

2. What he said, this is the next passage, he said peace be unto you, a seasonable salutation; for now were the Disciples in fear and trouble; they had no peace with God, or man, or with their own consciences; and therefore a more welcome news could not have come; I suppose this refers to all these. As,—

1. It speaks their peace with God: sin was it that brought a difference betwixt God & man, now this difference Jesus Christ had taken away by his death, Behold the Lamb of God which takes away the sins of the World; he had taken it away in its condemning power, or as •o it's separating power betwixt God and them; this was the great design of Christ's coming to make peace betwixt God and man; his Father imposed this office upon him, and Jesus Christ undertook it, and discharged it, and he proclaims it, in the first place to his Disciples, Peace be unto you.

2. It spakes their Peace with man: I know no reason why we should exclude civil peace out of Christ's wish; many, & many a promise and precept we have in the Word scattered here and there to this purpose, And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid.—and thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field, and thou shalt know that thy

Tabernacle shall be in peace, and seek the peace of the City—and pray unto the Lord for it, for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace. And follow peace, and holiness, without which no man shall see God. Orbem pecatum was ever a clause in the prayers of the primitive Church, that the world might be quiet; I am sure it is Christ's command, if it be possible as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

3. It speaks there peace among themselves, peace one with another; such is, or should be the condition of the Church, Jerusalem is built as a City that is compact together, or unity within itself, the Apostle dwells in this unity, there is one body, and one Spirit, and one hope, and one Lord, and one faith, and one baptism, and one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. The Church is a Court, whose very pillars are peace; the building of Christianity knows no other material to work upon; if we look upon the Church itself, there is one body; if upon the very soul of it, there is one Spirit; if upon the endowment of it, there is one hope; if upon the head of it, there is one Lord: if upon the life of it, there is one faith: if upon the door of it, there is one Baptism; if upon the Father so it, there is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. It was sometimes Christ's commands unto his Apostles, have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another; and as a blessed effect of this salutation, (for I look upon them as words full of virtue) the Apostles and Churches of Christ in primitive times kept a most sweet harmony, the multitude of them that believed, were of one heart, and of one soul.

4. It speaks peace within, peace of conscience; the Apostles had exceedingly fallen from Christ; one betrayed him, and another denied him, but all run away, and left him alone in the midst of all his enemies; and yet to them he speaks this salutation, peace be unto you; I know not a better ground for comfort of poor humbled sinners than this is, it may be you have dealt very unkindly with Jesus Christ, you have forsook him, denied him, forsworn him; O but consider, all this hindered not Christ's apparition to his Apostles; he comes unexpected, and quiets their spirits; he stays not till they had sued to him for mercy, or pardon, but of his mere love, and free grace, he speaks kindly to them all, he stills the waves, and becalmes their troubled Spirits, working in them according to his words, peace be unto you.

O the sweet of peace! it is all wishes in one; this little word is a breviary of all that is good; what can they more, than to have peace with God, and peace with men, and peace within? sure there is much in it, because Christ is so much upon it; at his birth the Angels sung, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace; at his baptism the form of a dove lighted upon him, and what meant this but peace? in his life the sort of integrity was his court, and what was here but peace? near his death he gives peace as a legacy to his Church, peace I leave with you, my peace I give you; at his resurrection his first salutation to his Apostles is a wish of peace, peace be unto you: what can I say more to make us in love with peace; why all Christ did, and all Christ suffered was for peace; he prayed for it; neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me,—that they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us. And he wept for it, if thou hadst known even thou at least in this thy day, the things which do belong unto thy peace. And he died to <...> but ye who sometimes were afar off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ, for he is our peace. Of this we need no other proof or sign, but that of the Prophet Jonah, when the sea wrought and was tempestuous, what shall we do unto thee (said the Mariners) that the sea may be calm unto us? and he said, take me up and cast me into the sea, so shall the sea be calm; when that great enmity was betwixt God and us, what shall I do (said God) that my justice may be satisfied, and my wrath appeased, and that there may be a calm? why, take me (said Christ) and cast me forth into the sea, let all thy waves and thy billows go over me, make me a peace offering and kill me, that when I am dead there may be a calm, and when I am risen I may proclaim it, saying, peace be unto you. You hear what he said.

3. What he shown; this is the next passage, he shown unto them his hands, and his side. I look upon this as a true and real manifestation of his resurrection: And we find that without this, Thomas professed he would never have believed, except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. But a question or two is here raised, as whether these wounds and prints of the nails & spear, can possibly agree with a glorified body? and why Christ retained those wounds and prints? for the first, whether those prints could agree with a glorified body? some affirm it with much boldness; and they say that Christ not only retained those prints whilst he abode upon earth, but now that he is ascended into heaven he still retains them; for my part I dare not go so far, because Scripture is silent; but the day is a coming when we shall see Christ face to face, and then we shall know the truth of this: only I conceive that Christ's body yet remaining on earth was not entered into that fullness of glory, as it is now in heaven; and therefore he might then retain some scars, or blemishes, to manifest the truth of his resurrection unto his Disciples, which are not agreeable to his state in heaven. But this I deliver, not as matter of Faith; reasons are produced both ways by the ancient writers, and I refer you to them.

For the second, why Christ retained these wounds and prints? many reasons are rendered, though I shall not close with all.

1. Some think those scars or prints were as the trophies of his victory; nothing is more delightful to a lover, than to bear about the wounds undergone for his beloved; and nothing is more honorable for a Soldier than to show his wounds undergone for his country's good; what are they but as so many arguments of his valor, and trophies of his victory; this was Bede's sense, Christ reserved his scars, not from any impotency of curing them, but to set out the glory and triumph of his victory over death and hell.

2. Others think those scars or prints were for the setting out of Christ's splendor and beauty, as in cut or pink garments the inward silks do appear more splendid, so in Christ's wounds there appears inwardly far more beauty. Aquinas affirms, that in the very place of the wounds, there is a certain special comeliness in Christ. And Augustine thinks, that the very martyrs may retain some scars of their wounds in glory, because there is no deformity, but dignity in them; and besides, a certain beauty may shine in their bodies answerable to their virtues wherein they excelled.

3. Others think that Christ retains those scars that he might by them intercede for us: upon these very words, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: they comment thus; that God is appeased by Christ, representing to him the prints and skars of his human nature. Christ's wounds are as so many open mouths, which cry at the tribunal of his Father for mercy, as Abel's blood cried for revenge.

4 Others think that Christ retains those skars, that thereby in the day of judgment he might confound the Jews, and all the wicked in the world. It is Augustine's judgment, that as Christ shown Thomas his hands and side, because otherwise he would not believe; so at the last day will he show those wounds to all his enemies, saying, Come, behold the man whom ye have crucified; come, see the prints of the nails, and the print of the spear; these be the hands and feet that you nailed and clenched to a piece of wood: this is the side you pierced; by you, and for you was it opened, but you would not enter in that ye might be saved. And for this opinion they allege this text, Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him, even so Amen.

5. All think that Christ retained his skarrs, that he might convince the unbelieving Disciples of his resurrection; hereby they are assured that Christ is raised, and that the same body of Christ is raised that before was crucified; and to this we cannot but subscribe, the skars of his wounds were for the healing of their doubts. Luke brings in Christ, he bespeaking his Disciples thus; Behold my hands and my feet, that 'tis I myself, handle me and see: q. d. Come, let your Fingers enter into these prints of the Nails, and let your hands he thrust into the depths of this wound; come, and open these holes in my hands, open this wound in my side; I will not deny that to my Disciples for their faith, which I denied not to mine enemies in their rage; open, and feel till you come to the very bone, that so both bones and wounds may witness, that I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive forever more. Amen.

What testimonies are here to convince the world of Christ's resurrection; surely this argues the goodness of God, that strives thus wonderfully with the weak saith of those that are his. At first he appeared to one, even to Mary Magdalene; and after he appeared to two, saith Matthew, to Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary; or to three, saith Mark, to Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James, and Salome; but of this apparition he is seen of ten at least; and to confirm their faith, not a considerable circumstance must be wanting; here is time, and place, and persons to whom he appears, and the manner how he appears, he stands in the midst to be seen of all, he speaks to them, breaths on them, eats with them, and shows them his hands, and his side; O the wonderful condescensions of Christ! what helps doth he continually afford to beget in us faith? if we are ignorant he instructs us, if we err, he reduceth us, if we sin he corrects us, if we stand he holds us up, if we fall down he lifts us up again, if we go he leads us, if we come to him he is ready to receive us; there's not a passage of Christ betwixt him and his, but 'tis an argument of love, and a means either of begetting, or of increasing Faith; O then believe in Christ, yea believe thy part in the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ; considering that these apparitions were not only for the Apostles sakes, but if Christ be thine, they were for thy sake, that thou mightest believe, and be saved. But I shall have occasion to speak more of this in the Chapter following. So much of the second apparition as it is recorded by the Evangelist John.

SECT. VII. Of Christ's Apparition to all his Apostles.

Immediately after this apparition to his ten Apostles, the next is to all his Apostles, not one being absent; and after eight days, again his Disciples were within, and Thomas with them, then came Jesus, the doors being shut and stood in the midst, and said peace be unto you; then saith he to Thomas, reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing; and Thomas answered, and said unto him, my Lord, and my God; Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

In the whole story we have Christ's apparition, and fruits of it.

1. For the Apparition (as in the former) we have, 1. The time. 2. The place. 3. The Persons to whom he appeared. And, 4. The manner how he appeared.

1. For the time, and after eight days; it was on the same day seven night after the former apparitions, which was the first day of the week, and now because of his resurrection, and apparitions, called the Lord's day; I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, (this in my apprehension) makes much for the honor of the Lord's day: the first assembly of the Apostles, after Christ's death, was on the first day of the week; and the second Church assembly that we read of, was again on the first day of the week, and after eight days; a sign that the Lord's-day Sabbath was on the first day instituted, and that the more solemn assemblies of God's people, were henceforth to be on the Lord's days. It is an usual observation, that things and persons which are named the Lord's, are sacred and venerable, in an high degree; as the grace of our Lord, Rom. 16.24. the spirit of the Lord, 2. Cor. 3.17. the beloved of the Lord, Rom 16.8. the glory of the Lord, 2. Cor. 3.18. the word of the Lord, 1 Tim. 6.3. the cup of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11.27. Augustine tells us that the Lord's resurrection promised us an eternal day, & that it consecrated unto us the Lord's day. Surely then this day must needs be venerable, & a solemn day among us Christians. Now it was that as the rising of the Sun dispelleth darkness, so Christ the Son of righteousness shined forth unto the world by the light of his resurrection; and hence we read of the Apostles observation of this very day above all others; The first day of the week, the Disciples being come together to break bread, Paul preached unto them: — and concerning the collection for the Saints, as I have given order to the Churches of Galatia, even so do ye: upon the first day of the week, let everyone of you lay by him in store, as God had prospered him. Charitable contributions, and Church-assemblies were in use, and practice on the first day of the week, (i.e.) on the Lord's day. An argument sufficient to me against all the opposers of this sacred truth, that the first day of the week is our Christian Sabbath; why then Christ arose, and at sundry times appeared before his ascension, and after his ascension: Christ sent down the holy Ghost on that very day; and after the sending of the holy Ghost, the Apostles then preached, the Churches then assembled, Charities were then gathered, the Lord's Supper was then celebrated; Christ's first apparition was on that day, and after that day finished, not any other apparition before this time: And after Eight days.

2. For the place, it is said to be within; probably it was the same house wherein the former apparition was; the house wherein Christ celebrated the Passover, and instituted the Lord's Supper; wherein was the large upper room made ready for Christ; In this upper room immediately after Christ's ascension, was that famous assembly of all the Apostles; as we have heard. And in this upper room was that other famous assembly of all the twelve, when the holy Ghost came down upon them in cloven tongues of fire, at the feast of Pentecost; and if we may believe tradition; in this upper room the seven Deacons (whereof Stephen was one) were elected and ordained. And in this upper room the Apostles, and Elders of the Church at Jerusalem held that council, the pattern of all councils, for the decision of that question, whether the Gentiles that believed were to be circumcised? in this upper room the Apostles and Disciples frequently assembled for prayer and supplications; Yea they continued there with one accord in prayer and supplication: And hence Cyril who was Bishop of the place, calls it 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the upper Church of the Apostles. But of this upper room, and of the doors of it being shut, we have spoken before.

3. For the persons, they were his ten Disciples, to whom he had appeared formerly, only now Thomas was with them, and so the number is complete, which before was not; his Disciples were within, and Thomas with them: and, Why Thomas with them? was not Thomas one of them? was not Thomas a Disciple of Christ, as well as the rest? I grant; but Thomas is added, because Thomas was not present at the last apparition, and this apparition was more especially for Thomas's sake; O the admirable love of Christ towards poor sinners! observe, in Christ are bowels of mercy to his straying sheep; the Disciples in danger had fled away from Christ, but he will not fly away from them; no, no, he seeks them, he stands in the midst of them, and he comes again with an Olive branch of peace, saying, peace be unto you. Of all these we have touched before; but here is something new; a new mercy breaking out on faithless Thomas? Christ proves it by lively examples, and strong arguments, that He will not quench the smoking flax, nor break the bruised reed; that he came to seek, and to save that which was lost: that he was sent to bind up the broken hearted, and to heal the sick, to reduce the abject, and to bring to the fold the straying sheep; for the sake of one Thomas, Christ appears again, that to him as well as the rest he might communicate his goodness, bequeath his peace, and confirm him in this necessary point of faith, that he was risen again. O the goodness of Christ! like as a Father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him; he that left the ninety and nine in the wilderness, to go after that sheep that was lost, declares his desire to save sinners; Of all that thou hast given me, I have not lost one, not one of his sheep; he may suffer them a while to stray, as this one Disciple, who continued incredulous for one whole week, but a Lord's day comes, and then Christ appears in the midst of the candlesticks: The Lord is not slack concerning his promise (as some men count slackness) but he is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. Humbled sinners that despair in themselves may here find encouragement; it is their usual cry, O my sins, these sins are heinous, these sins will damn me. Oh but consider, hath not the Lord pardoned as great sins? if thou art wicked, consider the Publican; if thou art unclean, remember Magdalene; if thou art a thief, a man-slayer, muse on that thief that was crucified with Jesus Christ; if thou art a blasphemer, call to mind the Apostle Paul, who was first a Wolf, and then a Shepherd; first lead, and then gold; first a Saul, and then a Paul; if thou art faithless, d•ffident, an unbeliever, one that hast turned thy back on Christ, fled away from thy colors, look on Thomas, he fled away from Christ, as soon as any, and he is longest from Christ, after his Resurrection of all the rest; and though his fellow Disciples say, They have seen the Lord, and that he was risen indeed; yet this will not sink into his head, he will not acknowledge it, but is most peremptory; Except he see in his hands the print of the nails, and put his fingers into the print of the nails, and thrust his hand into his side, he will not believe; Why should any sinner despair of Mercy? thou sayst, I am wicked; and God saith to thee, As I live saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way, and live: thou sayst, I am an unbeliever, I am shut up in the prison of unbelief, under bolts, and fetters, that I cannot stir one inch towards Heaven; Why? so was Didymus, and yet he obtained mercy; and the Apostle tells us, that God hath concluded all, or shut up altogether in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. He despiseth none, rejects none, abhors none, unless they continue to despise, reject, and abhor the Lord: Oh what a sweet point is here to gain sinners, to move, to melt, to thaw hard hearts? the incredulity of this Disciple turns to our profit; and tends more to the confirmation of our faith, if we are but weak, than the very faith of all the other Disciples of Jesus Christ, had not Thomas disbelieved, we had not received so great encouragements, to have believed in Christ, as now we have.

Excuse me, that I speak thus much to encourage sinners to come in to Christ, I would be sometimes a Boanerges, and sometimes a Barnabas; a son of thunder to rouse hard hearts, and a son of consolation to cheer up drooping spirits. All Ministers may learn of the great Shepherd, and Bishop of our souls, to have a respect in their ministry to one sinner, to one incredulous Thomas; we cannot be ignorant of these Scriptures, Him that is weak in the faith receive you.— And to the weak I became as weak, that I might gain the weak.— And we exhort you brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble minded, support the weak, be patient towards all men.— And of some have compassion, making a difference; and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire.— And brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness.— And the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient in meekness, instructing those that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance. Dear souls! How do we long for your conversion and salvation? how are you in our hearts, in our Prayers, in our Sermons? My little children, How do we travel in birth again, until Christ be formed in you? how gladly would we spend, and be spent for you, though the more abundantly we love you, the less we are loved of you? If I knew but one Thomas in the great assembly of God's people, I should think it as a crown, and the glory of my ministry to persuade this man into faith. Christ in this apparition, eyes one especially above all the rest; When his Disciples were within, and Thomas with them, then came Jesus.

4. The manner how he appeared, 1. He came, the doors being shut. 2. He stood in the midst. 3. He said, peace be unto you. All these we have dispatched in the former apparition; I shall therefore proceed to that which is peculiar to this, Then said he to Thomas, reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing. In this apparition he argues his Resurrection. 1. From words. 2. From deeds.

1. From words. Thomas had said, Except I see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. 1. Now Christ repeats the very self-same words, and therein gives in one argument of his resurrection; for if Christ could know what Thomas had said, how is he but alive, and risen from the dead? the dead have not sense, much less the use of reason, but least of all the knowledge of another's mind; but Christ hath sense and reason, science and omniscience; observe, Though Christ be absent as in his bodily presence, yet he understandeth all our thoughts, and if need were, he could repeat all our sayings, word by word; How then may this convince all unbelievers in the world, that Christ is risen, that he that was dead, now liveth, and that he is alive forever more?

2. He appears arguing his Resurrection from deeds, wherein is an act and object. 1. The act is, Thomas seeing and feeling, and q. d. Thomas, thou wilt not believe except thou seest, and feelest, now this is against the nature of saith; it consisteth not in seeing or feeling, but on the contrary, Faith is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen. Indeed in things natural a man must have experience; and then believe: but in divine things a man must first believe, and then have experience, and yet to help thy unbelief (saith Christ) I am willing thus far to condescend, and yield unto thy weakness, come, feel the print of the nails, and of the spear, Come reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing. Christ compassionates his children, though full of weakness and wants; He pities them that fear him, for he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are but dust. 2. The object is Christ seen or felt; his prints, and skars, are the very witnesses of our redemption, and of his resurrection; they declare that Satan is overthrown, that death and hell are swallowed up in victory, that He hath spoiled principallities and powers; and to this purpose are these texts, Who is this that cometh from Edom, with died garments from Bozrah? By Edom, is meant death, by Bozrah (the chief City of Edom) is meant the state of the dead or hell; from both which Christ returned at his glorious resurrection, For, thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy holy one to see corruption, Psal. 16.10. Now saith the Prophet, or some Angel, Who is this that cometh from Edom, with died garments from Bozrah, who is this that cometh so triumphantly, with the keys of Edom, and Bozrah, of death and hell at his girdle? to which the answer is given, I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save; as much as to say, it is I Jesus Christ, I that am righteous in speaking, and mighty in saying; whose Word is truth, and whose Work is salvation, it is I, even I; this answer given, another question is propounded, Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat? q. d. here's nothing but skars, and wounds, and blood; if thou art so mighty to save, How comes thy apparel to be so red, and sprinkled, or stained with blood? to which Christ answers, I have trodden the wine-press alone, — and I will tread them in mine anger. I was troad, and pressed, till the very blood streamed out of my hands, and feet, and side, so pressed, that they pressed the very soul out of my body. See here, Behold my hands, and my feet, and my side; that it is I myself, I have tread the wine-press alone. But as I was troad, so I will tread; up he gets, and he treads on them that troad on him, his enemies of Edom and Bozrah, are now like so many clusters under his feet, and he tramples upon them, as upon Grapes in a fat, till he makes the blood spring out of them, and all to sprinkle his garments, as if he had come out of the wine press indeed. See here a double sight, his own blood, and his enemies blood; here's the blood of the Lamb that was slain, and the blood of the Dragon that was troaden upon; here's a show both of his passion, and his resurrection; of his suffering and triumphing, — another text of this nature; And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thy hands? then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I know in the stead of Christ some have employed these words to the false Prophets, as if they had passed through the Churches discipline, and so had received their wounds. But others refer them to Jesus Christ, of whom without controversy the next verse speaks; and of whom the first verse of this chapter speaks, and to whom after a long Parenthesis the Prophet seems to return; And one shall say unto him (who was the fountain opened) what are these wounds in thy hands? or as the Septuagint, in the midst of thy hands? a wonder it is to see those prints, and skars in the hands of Christ; and therefore is the question, What are these wounds? to which Christ answers, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends (i.e.) in the house of my beloved, the children of Israel, my brethren according to the flesh, the people of the Jews; why these are the wounds they gave me, and which now I show as the signs of my victory, and as the marks of my resurrection.

Thus far of the first head, the apparition of Christ.

2. For the fruits of this apparition, they contain Thomas's confession, and Christ's commendation of him in some respects.

1. Thomas's confession, And Thomas answered, and said unto him, my Lord, & my God, a few words, but of great weight; 1. He acknowledgeth Christ a Lord; into whose hands are put the very keys of heaven; all power is given unto me in heave• & in earth. 2. He acknowlegeth Christ God; whom he saw with his eyes, and felt with his hands, he looks on, not as a mere man, but as God, and as the second person in the God-head. 3. He acknowledgeth Christ to be his Lord, and his God; this appropriating of Christ, is the right character of a faith, by which he brings home all the benefits of Christ unto his own soul, I shall a while insist on all these.

1. He acknowledgeth Christ a Lord, How is he a Lord? I answer, 1. By essence, as God is Lord, so Christ is Lord, the Father is Lord, the Son is Lord, and the Holy Ghost is Lord; and yet they are not three Lord's, but one Lord.

2. By creation, Christ is before all things (saith the Apostle) and by him all things consist. This very thing is an argument of his Lordship. To us there is but one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him.

3. By redemption, unction, office, and Mediatorship, unto which he was designed by his Father; and therefore the Apostle saith, that God hath made him Lord and Christ; he is a Lord by his office, and by the accomplishment of his office, in dying, rising, and reviving, he became Lord both of quick and dead, For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of dead and living. And thus he is a Lord in two respects. 1. A Lord in Authority, to command whom, and what he will; he only is Lord over our persons, over our faith, over our consciences; to him only we must say, Lord what wilt thou have me to do? Lord save us, or we perish. 2. A Lord be is in power, he hath power to forgive, and power to cleanse; he hath power to justify, and power to sanctify; he hath power to quicken, and power to save to the uttermost, all that come unto God by him; he hath power to hold fast his sheep, and power to cast out the accuser of the brethren; he hath power to put down all his enemies, and power to subdue all things unto himself; in every of these respects Christ is a Lord. True, say blasphemers, he is Lord by office, but he is not Lord by essence, as God is Lord, No? peruse some texts in the Old Testament where the title of Lord is essentially spoken of, and we shall find the very same texts, and titles applied to Christ in the New Testament. As for instance, in Isa. 6.5. Woe is me (saith Isaiah) for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts; now this John refers to Christ; these things saith Isaiah, when he saw his Glory, and speak of him. In Psal. 68.17, 18. the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place, thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive, thou hast received gifts for men; now this the Apostle applies to Christ, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. In Psal. 110.1. the Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. Now this Jesus Christ applies to himself, saying, that David in spirit called him Lord, saying, the Lord said unto my Lord. In Isa. 40.3. the voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord; now this the Evangelist applies to Christ. This is he that was spoken of by the Prophet Isaiah, saying, the voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord. No wonder if Thomas call Christ Lord, why, both the Old and New-Testament agree in this, that Christ is Lord; Lord by creation, and Lord by redemption; Lord by office, and Lord by essence.

2. He acknowledgeth Christ to be God, as well as Lord; my Lord, and my God. But how is he God? I answer, not only by participation, similitude, or in some respects, as Angels, and men are called gods; but simply, absolutely, essentially, and without any restriction. Sometimes we read in Scripture, that Men or Angels, good and bad, are called God's; And the Lord said to Moses, see, I have made thee a God to Pharaoh. — And thou shalt be instead of God to Aaron. Thus Nebuchadnezzar is called the mighty one, or the God of the Heathens; and Satan is called the god of this world. Thus Magistrates are called gods; thou shalt not revile the gods. I have said ye are gods; Angels are called gods, before the gods will I sing praises unto thee; but in all these there is some restriction, or improper speech; Moses is called Pharaoh's God, and Aaron's God, not absolutely, but with restriction to Pharaoh and Aaron; Nebuchadnezzar is called the god of the heathen, and Satan the god of this world; not absolutely, but with restriction to the heathen, and this world; Magistrates are called gods, and good Angels are called gods, not absolutely, but in respect of some offices or excellency, which they partake of from God. Only Jesus Christ is called God without any restriction, and not only in respect of some office, or similitude, but absolutely, essentially, properly; as being from all eternity God of God; as being God of the substance of the Father before all worlds. What, is Christ only God, as an Angel is God? I challenge here all blasphemers in the world. Unto which of the Angels said he at any time, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? Or unto which of the Angels said he at any time, Thy Throne O God is forever and ever? or to which of the Angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, my own Son, my only begotten Son? unto which of the Angels said he at any time, this is the true God; the great God; who is over all, God blessed forever, Amen? unto which of the Angels are those divine Attributes given, as of eternity, immutability, omnipotency, omniscience, omnipresence? and yet are all these given to Christ; for eternity, I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was; for immutability, thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail. For omnipotency, all things are delivered unto me of my Father; For omniscience, he needed not that any should testify of man, for he knew what was in man. For omnipresence, lo I am with you always unto the end of the world.

Men, Brethren, and Fathers: I am forced to make this defense of the divinity of Christ, because of the blasphemy of those Arians, Photinians, Eunomians, now again raked out of hell. O who would think that such a generation of men should be amongst us in this Island, where the Gospel hath shined so brightly for so many years? we maintain Christ is God, and Christ is Lord; we say with Thomas, my Lord, and my God. Ah say blasphemers, Christ is God, and Christ is Lord, as Magistrates and Angels are called God's and Lord's: I hope I have said enough to difference betwixt Christ and them; howsoever I conclude with the Apostle, Though there be that are called God's, whether in heaven or in earth (as there be God's many, and Lord's many) yet to us there is but one God, the Father of whom are all things, and we in him, and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him,

3. He acknowledgeth Christ to be his Lord, and his God; And Thomas answered, and said unto him, my Lord, and my God. Now his saith broke out; from the things seen and felt; he is raised up to believe things neither seen nor felt; he sees the prints and skars in the manhood of Christ, and now he believes that Christ is God, yea that Christ is his God; my Lord, and my God. Observe here, that faith gives the soul a propriety in God and Christ. As God loves some with a special and peculiar love, so faith answers God and Christ's particular love, by a particular application, my Lord, and my God, and my Christ. Faith is an apropiating, an applying, an uniting grace; in the actings of faith on God, or on Christ as God, we may observe these steps,—

1. It sees God in his Glory and Majesty, in his Greatness and Goodness, and all other his attributes; it sees God as the infinite fountain of all good, and it considers what an infinite dreadful thing it were to be separated from this God; it sees God, and the sight makes a deep impression on that very soul; the love of that God is more to the soul than all the world; and the least displeasure of that God is more trouble to that soul, than all the miseries that all creatures under heaven are able to bring upon it.

2. It discovers the reality of this Glory and Majesty, of this greatness and goodness of God. Before any faith is planted in a soul, the very use of reason may come to understand much of God and Christ, but in comparison it looks upon God and Christ as notions, conceits, and imaginary things; only faith convinces the soul thoroughly of the certainty and truth of such things; where true faith is, the things we believe are more certain to us than things we see, or feel, or handle; faith is so sure in its apprehensions of God and Christ, that it will venture soul and body, the loss of all upon that account; it will bear any hardship, yea it will venture the infinite loss of eternity upon them.

3. It enables the soul to cast itself upon God in Christ for all the good and happiness it ever expects. Alas, saith the soul, I have formerly rested on worldly things, I looked upon them as the only, real, sure excellences that I had to enjoy; but now I find they are vain things, deceitful things, no better than reeds of Egypt, vanity of vanities; and nothing is real, sure, excellent on this side God and Christ, and therefore I will rely upon him, and none but him;

it is only God is an all-sufficient good, it is only Christ that is the rock that will never fail, on him will I rely myself, unto him will I make an absolute resignation of all, I will trust him with all I have, and all I am; I will commit all unto him forever, and ever.

4. As faith relies all upon God in Christ, so it appropriates all God, and all Christ unto itself, I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine; there is a mutual propriety betwixt Christ and the Church, and betwixt Christ and the soul; Christ hath a propriety in me, and I have a peculiar propriety in Christ, Christ is mine, so as I have none in the world so mine, whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee, Christ is mine, and mine in a peculiar manner, there is a propriety with peculiarity, my Lord, and my God. O the excellency of Faith! this step goes beyond all the rest; it is a blessed thing to have a true sight of God, there is much Power in it; but to see God in his glory, Majesty, greatness, goodness, as my God; to see all the attributes of God as those things that my soul hath an interest in; to see Christ coming from the Father for me, to be my redeemer; to see Christ in whom all fullness dwells, (in whom the treasures of all God's riches are, not only Christ dying as man, but rising as God for me, and my salvation; to see Christ, and then to lay hold on Christ, and to say, my Lord, and my God. O this is the work of precious saith; and to this now is Thomas arrived in this confession of his, my Lord and my God.

2. Hereupon follows Christ's commendation and correction; Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed; In the first place Christ commends Thomas's saith, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed, q. d. thou seest me a man; but considering how I am risen from the dead, thou believest in me as God; I commend thy faith, but 'tis a weak faith in respect of its rise; now therefore to correct it, I pronounce those blessed to all generations, that when I am gone, as in regard of my bodily presence, yet they will believe in me; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. I am afraid of tediousness, and therefore I shall not enlarge anymore on this apparition.

SECT. VIII. Of Christ's apparition to some of his Apostles at the Sea of Tiberias.

There is but one apparition more recorded by John; after these things Jesus shown himself again to the Disciples at the sea of Tiberias, and on this wise shown he himself. In these apparitions the Evangelist useth one and the same method; As in the former, so here again is set down the time when, the place where, the persons to whom, the manner how he appeared; not one of these circumstances must be wanting to show the evidence, and certainty of his resurrection.

1. The time, after these things; after the three former apparitions he comes to a fourth, and he concludes with this, as therein making some mention of himself, with which he concludes the whole book: This is the Disciple which testifieth these things, and wrote these things, and we know his testimony is true.

2. The place, at the sea of Tiberias; or at the lake Genesareth; where he had called them to the Apostleship, there now he appears to these Apostles; they were at first fishers, and now they are at their Calling upon the sea, Christ standing on the shore.

3. The Persons to whom he appears, they were Disciples, their names are in the next verse. All Christ's apparitions were to the Disciples of Christ; we read not that ever he shown himself after his resurrection to any but to his followers; he shown himself openly, not to all the people, but unto witnesses, chosen before of God, even to us who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead, Act. 10.41. strangers to Christ must be no witnesses of Christ's resurrection, and this was his meaning; yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more, but ye see me, Joh. 14.19.

4. For the manner of his apparition, on this wise shown he himself.

1. He shown himself, so it is in this verse twice repeated, after these things Jesus shown himself, and in this wise he shown himself. Christ now was not seen, or known to the bodily eye (for his body was immortal) unless by dispensation he condescended thereto. I deny not, but that glorified bodies are ever actually seen of bodies that are glorified; but of mortal men who are yet in this veil of tears those glorious creatures cannot be seen actually, except there be some peculiar and divine dispensation. As the air is too subtle to be seen, or as the Sun is too glorious for a weak eye to behold; so are glorified bodies too subtle, too solendid for a mortal eye to pierce: our Savior tells us, that the bodies of the Saints do shine forth as the Sun in the Kingdom of their Father; and that they are as the Angels. And the Apostle tells us, that their bodies are spiritual bodies; there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body? now without dispensation we cannot see spiritual things. And hence it is, that when Christ shown himself to the two disciples at Emmaus, it is said that their eyes were opened, & they knew him, & he vanished out of their sight. Mark, first their eyes were opened, why, no question but their eyes were open before; they did not walk with him, and talk with him, and sit with him, and eat with him, but their eyes were then opened; ay but now their eyes were opened in another manner, as it is said of Elisha's servant, that at the prayers of Elisha, The Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw, and behold the mountain was full of horses, and chariots of fire, round about Elisha; in like manner their eyes were so opened, that they knew Jesus. And then, 2. He vanished out of their sight; in a strange unusual manner they lost his sight, and they could not tell what was become of him; in a moment he was invisible to them whose eyes he had opened: it plainly shows that glorified bodies, as corpulent, and commensurable, may be seen of mortals; but as they are subtle, and spiritual, they cannot be seen actually without dispensation. Christ appeared (saith Damascene) not by necessity, but by his own free will; not by the law of nature, but by way of dispensation. It was his mere condescension, permission, that he would show himself at any time unto his Disciples.

2. He shown himself on this wise; There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas, called Dydimus, &c. In the whole narration we may observe. 1. The occasion; and 2. The Apparition; in the occasion we have a council among the Apostles what to do; and 'tis concluded they would go a fishing; they did so, though to no purpose; for they fished all night, but caught nothing. In the Apparition. 1. Christ is unknown, He stood on the shore, but the Disciples knew not that it was Jesus; in this condition we have Jesus speaking, and then working a Miracle; he bids them cast the net on the right side of the ship, and then draw; but they were not able to draw for the multitude of the fishes. 2. Hereupon Christ is known, Therefore that Disciple whom Jesus loved, saith unto

Peter, it is the Lord: the alarm given, now all the Disciples bestir themselves. 1. Peter, he casts himself into the sea. 2. The other Disciples they come in a little ship to the land; and there they dine, and commune with Jesus; which is the end of the history, and so ends this Book of our Evangelist John.

Thus far we have propounded the object; our next work is how to direct you to look unto Jesus in this respect.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. Of knowing Jesus as carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his Resurrection.

THAT in all respects we may look on Jesus.

1. Let us know Jesus carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his resurrection; and during the time of his abode upon earth after his Resurrection. This is worth the knowing; on it depends our justification, sanctification, salvation; For if Christ be not risen, we are yet in our sins, and our faith is in vain, and our hope is in vain; little hope have we either of Heaven, or of Resurrection, if Christ be not risen; of all men we are most miserable that believe in Christ, if he whom we believe in be not risen again. O my soul study this point; many take it up in gross, they can run over this Article of their Creed, The third day he rose again from the dead; but for a particular understanding of it, in respect of the time, or the end, or the manner, or the certainty, how many are to seek? I shall appeal to thyself, are not many discoveries already made which before thou never tookest notice of? and if thou wouldst but study this point, how much more might yet appear? especially, how much more might yet appear as to thine own good? it is not enough to know Christ's resurrection, unless thou know it for thyself. Be sure thou hast this in mind, That Christ rose again, but what's that to me? saving knowledge is ever joined with a particular application; if Christ be my Head, then he could not rise, but I rose with him, and in him: and thus O my soul, look on Christ; and thus search into every particular of Christ's resurrection; come, study when he rose; study the Arguments that make out Christ's resurrection sure and certain; study all the Apparitions of Jesus Christ; O what delightful studies are these? hadst thou been with them to whom Christ appeared, would not thy heart have leaped with joy? come, study it close, for the benefit of these Apparitions extend to thee; the fruit of Christ's resurrection is thine, even thine, as well as theirs; Know this for thyself.

SECT. II. Of considering Jesus in that respect.

2. LET us consider Jesus, carrying on this work of our salvation for us in his resurrection. It is not enough to know a saving necessary truth, but it is required further that we digest truths, and that we draw forth their strength for the nourishment and refreshing of our poor souls. As a man may in half an hour chew and take into his stomach that meat, which he must have seven or eight hours at least to digest; so a man may take into his understanding more truths in an hour, than he is able well to digest in many; what good those men are like to get by Sermon's or Providences, who are unaccustomed to this work of meditation, I cannot imagine; it is observed by some, that this is the reason why so much preaching is lost amongst us; why Professors that run from Sermon to Sermon, and are never weary of hearing or reading, have notwithstanding such languish starved souls, because they will not meditate. And therefore God commanded, Joshua, not only to read the Law, but to consider of it, and dwell upon it; This Book of the Law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night; why, this is the duty that I am now pressing to; if thou knowest these things, consider, •uminate, meditate, ponder on them again, and again. And because this work requires enlargedness of heart and spirit, therefore take it into parts, and consider of each of them apart by itself. As—

1. Consider of the time when Christ rose again. As Christ had his three days, and no more, so must thou have the same three days like unto his; the first day was called the day of preparation; the second was the Sabbath-day; and the third was the resurrection day; so thy first day is a day of preparation, a day of passion, wherein thou must strive and struggle against sin, and Satan, wherein thou must suffer all their bitter darts till thou diest, and give up the Ghost. And thy second day is a day of rest, wherein thy body must lie in the grave, and thy flesh rest in hope; wherein thou shalt enter into peace, and rest in thy bed, until the trumpet sound, and bid thee arise, and come to judgment: And thy third day is a day of resurrection unto glory. It is the first day of the week, or the first beginning of a never ending world. Thus consider the time of Christ's resurrection, and thence mayst thou draw down some use for thy souls nourishment.

2. Consider of the reasons why Christ arose; was it not to confound the Jews? they could not endure to hear of Christ's resurrection, and therefore when Peter and the other Apostles preached that point, They were cut to the heart, and took council to slay them. It is the case of them to say, We will not have that man to reign over us; they that by their sins crucify Christ every day, cannot without horror think of his exaltation, it cuts them to the heart that Christ is risen to be their Judge. Again, was it not to confirm the faith of Christ's followers? till he was risen, their faith was but a weak faith; weak in knowledge, weak in assent, weak in confidence, weak in assurance; much ado had Christ with them, many a time had he chid them, Why are ye fearful O ye of little faith? but after he had shown uimself alive by many infallible proofs, they could then cry it out, My Lord, and my God. Again, was it not to evidence that he had fully satisfied all our debts? the Apostle tells us, that Christ was our Surety; at his death he was arrested, and cast into Prison, whence he could not come till all was paid: and therefore to hear that Christ is risen, and that he hath broken the bolts and fetters of the grave, it is a clear evidence that God is satisfied, and that Christ is discharged by God himself. Oh what breasts of consolation are here? Again, was it not to conquer sin, death, and devil? now he took from death his sting, and from hell his standard; now he seized upon the hand-writing that was against us, and nailed to his cross, now he spoiled Principalities and Powers, and carried the keys of death and hell, at his own girdle; now he came out of the grave as a mighty Conqueror, saying as Deborah did in her song, O my soul, thou hast trodden down strength, thou hast marched valiantly. Again, was it not to become the first-fruits of them that sleep? Christ was the first that rose again from the grave to die no more; and by virtue of his resurrection (as being the first-fruits) all the Elect must rise again; As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive; but every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, and afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Some may wonder, can the resurrection of one, a thousand six hundred years ago, be the cause of our rising? yes, as well as the death of one, five thousand six hundred years ago, is the cause of our dying; Adam, and Christ were two heads, two roots, two first-fruits, either of them in reference to his company whom they stand for. And now O my soul, thou mayst say with Job, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I shall see him at the last day, not with other, but with these same eyes. If Christ live, then must I live also; if he be risen, then though after my skin worms shall destroy this body, yet in my flesh I shall see God. Again, was it not that he might be declared to be the Son of God? was it not that he might be exalted, and glorified? this is the main reason of all the rest; see thou to this! O give him the glory, and praise of his resurrection; so muse, and meditate, and consider on this transaction, as to ascribe to his Name all honor, and glory; what, is he risen from the dead? Hath God highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name? O then let every tongue confess, that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

3. Consider of the manner of Christ's resurrection; he rose as a common person; in which respect his resurrection concerns us no less than himself. We must not think that when Christ was raised, it was no more than when Lazarus was raised; his resurrection was the resurrection of us all; it was in the name of us all, and had in it a seed-like virtue to work the resurrection of us all. O the privilege of this communion with Christ's resurrection! if I believe this truly, I cannot but believe the resurrection of my body, and the life everlasting; why, Jesus Christ hath led the dance, and though of myself I have no right to Heaven or Glory, yet in Christ my Head I have as good right to it as any heir apparent to his lands.—2. He rose by his own power; and so did none but Jesus Christ; from the beginning of the world it was never heard that any dead man raised himself; Indeed one Instance we have that a dead man's Corps should raise up another dead man, They cast the man into the Sepulcher of Elisha, and when the man was let down and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived and stood up on his feet; dead Elisha raised up a dead man from the grave, but dead Elisha could not raise up himself from the grave; only Christ arose himself, and at the same time he raised many others; and here was the argument of his God-head, I have power to lay down my life, and I have power to take it up again; how should we but trust him with our life, who is the resurrection and the life? He that believeth in him though he were dead, yet shall he live. O my soul, he was able to raise himself, much more is he able to raise thee up; only believe, and live forever.—3. He rose with an earthquake; O the power of Christ in every passage! what ailed thee O earth to skip like a Ram? was not the new Tomb hewn out of a Rock? and was not a great stone rolled to the door of the Sepulcher? the ground wherein he lay was firm and solid, and shall the rock be removed out of his place? O yes; the Lord reigneth, and therefore the earth is moved; Oh what a rocky heart is this of mine? how much harder is it than that rock; that moves not, melts not at the presence of God, at the presence of the God of Jacob? the Sun (they say) danced that morning at Christ's resurrection; the earth (I am sure) then trembled; and yet my heart is no way affected with this news; I feel it neither dance for joy, nor tremble for fear; O my soul be serious in this meditation, consider, what a posture wouldst thou have been in, if thou hadst been with those Soldiers that watched Christ; so realize this Earthquake, as if thou now felt it trembling under thee.

4. An Angel ministered to him at his resurrection; An Angel came, and rolled back the stone from the door, and sate upon it. Angels were the first Ministers of the Gospel, the first Preachers of Christ's resurrection; they preached more of Christ than all the Prophets did; they first told the woman that Christ was risen; and they did the first service to Christ at his resurrection, in rolling the stone from the doors mouth; O my soul, that thou wert but like these blessed Angels! how is it that they are so forward in God's Service, and thou art so backward? One day thou expectest to be equal with the Angels, and art thou now so far behind them? What! to be equal in Reward, and behind them in Service? Here's a Meditation able to check thy Sloath, and to spur thee on to thy Duty. — 5. Many of the Bodies of the Saints arose out of their Graves at His Resurrection; as the Angels ministered, so the Saints waited on Him. In this Meditation, trouble not thyself whether David, Moses, Job, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were some of those Saints, as some conjecture upon some Grounds: It is a better Consideration to look upon them as the Fruit of Christ's Resurrection, and as an Earnest of thy Own: The Virtue of Christ's Resurrection appears immediately, and it will more appear at the general Resurrection Day. As sure as these Saints arose with Him, and went into the Holy City, and appeared unto many; so sure shall thy Body rise again at the Last Day; and (if thou art but a Saint) it shall go with Him into the Heavenly Jerusalem, and appear before God, and His Son Jesus Christ in Glory. — 6. Christ rose again with a true and perfect Body, with an Incorruptible and Powerful Body, with a Spiritual and an Agile Body, with a Glorious Body, brighter than the Sun in his utmost Glory. On these things may the Soul expatiate: O it is a worthy, blessed, soul-ravishing Subject to think upon; and the rather, if we consider that Conformity which we believe: We look for a Savior (saith the Apostle) the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile Bodies, that they may be fashioned unto His Glorious Body. O my Soul, that this Clay of thine should be a Partaker of such Glory! That this Body of Dust and Earth should shine in Heaven like those Glorious Spangles of the Firmament; that this Body that shall rot in Dust, and fall more vile than a Carrion, should rise, and shine like the Glorious Body of our Savior on Mount Tabor: Surely thou owest much to Christ's Resurrection. O consider of it, till thou feellest the Influence, and comest to the Assurance of this Blessed Change.

4. Consider of the several Apparitions of Jesus Christ, especially of those written by the Evangelist John. As,—

1. Muse on His Apparition to Mary Magdalene: Oh the Grief before He appeared! And, Oh the Joyes when He appeared!— 1. Before, she apprehended nothing, but that some or other had took away her Lord; these were all the words she uttered before he appeared; They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him; so she told Peter and John: And when Two Angels appeared in White, asking her; Woman, Why weepest thou? she gives the same Answer to them; They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him. A Soul in desertion knows not what to do, but to weep and cry; Oh my Lord is gone! I have lost my Lord, my God, my Jesus, my King! In this Meditation, consider, O my Soul, as if thou hadst been in Mary's Case: Was it not a sad Case, when the Angels of Heaven knew not how to comfort her?

Suppose any Son of Consolation had stood by, and had such a one persuaded; O Mary, suppress thy Sadness, refresh thy Heart with this Blessed Vision; thou didst seek but One, and thou hast found Two; a dead Body was thy Errand, and thou hast light on Two alive: Thy Weeping was for a Man, and thy Tears have obtained Angels: Observe them narrowly; the Angels invite thee to a Parley, it may be they had some happy News to tell thee of thy Lord: Remember what they are, and where they sit, and whence they come, and to whom they speak; they are Angels of Peace; neither sent without Cause, nor seen but of Favor; they sit on the Tomb, to show they are no Strangers to thy Loss: They come from Heaven, from whence all happy News descendeth; they speak to thyself, as if they had some special Embassy to deliver unto thee. No, no; these Cordials are in vain; neither Man nor Angel can do her good, or comfort her drooping Soul: Either Christ Himself must come in Presence, or she cries; Miserable Comforters are ye all! Alas! small is the Light that a Star can yield, when the Sun is down: A sorry Exchange it is, to go & gather Crumbs, after the Loss of the Bread of Life. Oh, What can these Angels do? They cannot persuade me that my Master is not lost; for my own Eyes will disprove them: They can less tell me where He may be found; for they themselves would wait upon Him, if they knew but where: I am apt to think, they know not where He is; and therefore they are come to the Place where He last was, making the Tomb their Heaven, and the Remembrance of His Presence the Fuel of their Joy: Alas! What do Angels here? I neither came to see them, nor desire to hear them: I came not to see Angels, but the Creator of Angels, to whom I owe more than both to Men and Angels.

2. After He appeared, she was filled with Joy; for so it was, that when nothing else would satisfy, or comfort this poor Creature, Jesus Himself appears: At first He is unknown, she takes him for the Gardener of the place, but within a while he utters a voice that opens both her ears, and eyes; And Jesus saith unto her, Mary. It was the sweetest sound that ever she heard; many a time had she been called by that name, but never heard she a voice so effectual, powerful, inward, feeling as at this time; hereby the cloud is scattered, and the Sun of Righteousness appears; this one word Mary, lightens her eyes, dryes up her tears, cheers her heart, revives her spirits that were as good as dead. One word of Christ wrought so strange an alteration in her, as if she had been wholly made new, when she was only named. And hence it is that being ravished with his voice, and impatient of delays, she takes his talk out of his mouth, and to his first and only word Mary, she answers, Rabboni] which is to say, Master, q. d. Master, is it thou? with many a salt tear have I sought thee, and art thou unexpectedly so near at hand! thy absence was hell, and thy presence is no less than heaven to me: Oh how is my heart ravished at thy sound? if the babe leaped in the womb of Elizabeth when she but heard the salutation of Mary, how should my heart but leap at thy salutation? I feel I am exceedingly transported beyond myself. Instead of my heavy heart and troubled spirit, I feel now a sweet and delightful Tranquility of mind; thou art my solace, and souls delight; whom have I in heaven but thee? and whom desire I upon earth in comparison of thee? and yet I am not satisfied; not only fruition of thee, but union with thee is that which my soul longs after; not only thy presence, but thy embraces, or my embraces of thee can give content; come then, and give me leave, my Lord, my God, to run to the haunt of my chief delights, to fall at thy sacred feet, and to bathe them with my tears of joy; O my Jesus I must needs deal with thee, as the Spouse dealt with thee: Now I have found thee whom my soul loves dearly, I will hold thee, and I will not let thee go.

I know not in all the Book of God a soul more depressed with sorrow, and lifted up with joy: O meditate on this! if Christ be absent, all is night; but if Christ appear, he turns all again into a lightsome day; there is no sorrow like that which apprehends Christ's loss, and therefore in hell it is looked upon as the greatest pain; of the two (say Divines) it is a greater torment to lose God, and to lose Jesus Christ, than to endure all those flaming whips, unquenchable fires, intolerable cold, abominable stench; and on the other side, there is no joy in heaven like to that which apprehends Christ's presence: In thy presence there is fullness of joy, and at thy right hand there are pleasures evermore. I had rather be in hell with Christ (said one) than in heaven without Christ. This is the very top of heavens joy, the quintessence of glory, the highest happiness of the Saints; O my soul, seek with Mary, yea seek and weep, and weep and seek, and never rest satisfied till Christ appear. If thou art but in the use of means, he will appear sooner or later; or what if thou never sawest a good day on earth, one sight of Christ in heaven will make amends. Surely if thou knewest the joy of Christ's presence, thou wouldst run through death and hell to come to Christ: it was Paul's saying, I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ which is far better; he cared not for death so he might go to Christ, for that was better than very life itself.

2. Muse on his Apparition to the Ten Disciples, When the doors were shut for fear of the Jews, then came Jesus, and stood in the midst, saying to them, Peace be unto you. Before his Apparitions, sorrow and fear had possessed all their spirits: sometime they walked abroad, and were sad; and sometimes they kept within, and shut the doors upon them, as being exceedingly afraid: In this condition Jesus Christ (that knows best the times and seasons of grace and comfort) comes and stands in the midst of their Assembly; he comes in, they know not how; and no sooner he is in, but he salutes them in this manner, Peace be unto you.

This was the prime of all his wishes; no sooner is he risen, but he wisheth peace to all his Apostles; no sooner meets he with them, but the very opening of his lips was with these words; they are the first words, at the first meeting, on the very first day.—A sure sign that peace was in the heart of Jesus Christ; howsoever it is with us, peace, or war; there is a Commonweal where Christ is King; and there is peace, and nothing but peace; come, sift, try, and examine; art thou, O my soul, a member of this body? a subject of this Common-weal? hath the influence of Christ's peace (wrought and declared at his resurrection) any force on thee? hast thou peace with God? and peace within? and peace without? dost thou feel that ointment poured upon Aaron's head, and running down to the skirts of his garments? dost thou feel the dew of Hermon, and the dew that descends upon Mount Zion, dropping (as it were) upon thy heart? doth the spirit assure thee, that Christ the Prince of peace hath made peace and reconciliation betwixt God and thee, betwixt the King and thee, a rebel to his Crown and dignity; O how beautiful upon the mountains would the feet of him be, that should publish peace, that should bring these good tidings, that thou art a Citizen of that Jerusalem, where God is King, and Christ the Prince of peace? where all the buildings are compact together, as a City that is at unity within itself?

3. Muse on his Apparition to all the Apostles, when they were all convened, and Thomas with them. This Apparition was occasioned by Thomas's incredulity; except (said he) I see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. Now therefore saith Jesus to Thomas, Come, reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing. Methinks I see Thomas's finger on Christ's bored hand, and Thomas's hand in Christ's pierced side. Here's a strong Argument to convince my soul that Christ is risen from the dead; why, see; this is the same Christ that was crucified; the same Christ that had his hands bored with nails, and that had his heart pierced with a spear; though the wounds are healed as to sense of pain, yet the skars, and holes, and clefts remain as big as ever: the hole in his hand is yet so large, that Thomas may put his finger not only on it, but into it; and the cleft in his side is yet so large, that Thomas may thrust his whole hand into his side, and with his fingers touch that heart that issued out streams of blood for my salvation. In this meditation be not too curious, whether the print of the nails were but continued till Christ had confirmed his Disciples faith; or whether he retains them still for some further use? it is a better consideration to look upon them so as to confirm thy own faith; is there not too much of Thomas's incredulity in thy breast? dost not thou sometimes feel some doubtings of Christ's rising? or at least dost thou not question whether Christ's resurrection belongs unto thee? is not Satan busy with a temptation? is not thy conscience troubled for thy sins; and especially for thy sin of unbelief? if so, (and I know not but it may be so with thee, and the best of Saints) Come then, and reach hither thy finger, and behold Christ's hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into his side; my meaning is, come with the hand of faith, and lay hold on Christ, yea hide thyself in the holes of the rock; Be like the Dove that maketh her nest in the side of the holes mouth; the Dove that would be safe from the devouring Birds, or from the Fowlers snare, she flies to the hole in a rock; and thus Christ invites his Spouse, O my Dove that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs? let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice. In the clefts of the rock I am safe, (said Bernard) there I stand firmly, there I am secure from Satan's prey. It is storied of a Martyr, that writing to his Wife where she might find him, when he was fled from home; O my Dear (said he) if thou desirest to see me, seek me in the side of Christ, in the cleft of the rock, in the hollow of his wounds; for there have I made my nest, there will I dwell, there shalt thou find me, and nowhere else but there. O my soul, that thou wouldst make this use of the wounds of Christ! are they not as the Cities of refuge, whither thou mayst fly and live? Nothing is more efficacious to cure the wounds of conscience, than a frequent and serious meditation of the wounds of Christ. Come, be not faithless, but believing; these Monuments of Christ's resurrection are for the confirmation of thy faith; if well viewed and handled, they will quiet thy conscience, quench the fiery darts of Satan, increase thy faith, till thou comest to assurance, and sayest with Thomas, My Lord, and my God. I may be troubled, but I shall not be overwhelmed; because I will remember the print of the nails, and of the spear, in the hands and side of Jesus Christ.

4. Muse on his Apparition to the seven Disciples at the Sea of Tiberias. First, Christ appears, and works a Miracle; he discovers himself to be Lord of Sea as well as Land; at his word multitudes of Fishes come to the Net, and are caught by his Apostles; nor is this Miracle without a Mystery; The Kingdom of Heaven, is like a drawn net, cast into the sea, which when it is full, men draw to land; what is this divine trade of ours but a spiritual fishing? the world is a sea, souls like fishes swim at liberty in this deep, and the nets of wholesome doctrine are they that draw up some to the shore of grace, and glory. 2. Upon this Miracle, The Disciple whom Jesus loved, said unto Peter, it is the Lord. John is more quick-eyed than all the rest, he considers the Miracle, and him that wrought it; and presently he concludes, It is the Lord; O my soul meditate on the mystery of this discovery; if ever soul be converted and brought home to Christ, it is the Lord; but oh whither is Christ gone, that we have lost so long his converting presence? Oh for one Apparition of Jesus Christ! till then we may preach our hearts out and never the nearer; do what we can souls will to hell, except the Lord break their career; Ministers can do no more but tell, thus and thus men may be saved; and thus and thus men will be damned: He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but when they have said all they can, it is only God must give the blessing: Oh what is preaching without Christ's presence? One hearing what mighty feats Scanderbag's Sword had done, he sent for it, and when he saw it, Is this the Sword (said he) that hath done such great exploits, what's this sword more than any other sword? O (says Scanderbag) I sent thee my Sword, but not my arm that did handle it: so Ministers may use the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, but if the Spirits arm be not with it, they may brandish it every Sabbath to little purpose; when all is done, if ever any good be done, it is the Lord. No sooner John observes the Miracle, that a multitude of fishes were caught and taken, but he tells Peter of a blessed discovery, it is the Lord—3. Upon this discovery, Peters throws himself into the Sea; O the fervent love he carries towards Christ! if he but hear of his Lord, he will run through fire and water to come unto him; so true is that of the Spouse, Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it; if a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be contemned. If I love Christ, I cannot but long for communion and fellowship with Christ; Wheresoever thou art O blessed Savior, give me no more happiness than to be with thee; if on the earth I would travel day and night to come unto thee, if on the Sea with Peter I would swim unto thee, if riding in triumph, I would sing Hosanna to thee, but if in glory, how happy should I be to look upon thee? Christ's Apparitions are ravishing sights; if he but stand on the shore, Peter throws himself over-board to come to Christ; why now he stands on the pinacles of heaven, wasting and beckoning with his hand, and calling on me in his Word, Rise up my love, my fair one, and come away; O my soul make haste; in every duty look out for another Apparition of Jesus Christ: when thou comest to hear, say, Have over Lord by this Sermon: and when thou comest to pray, say, Have over Lord by this Prayer to a Savior; neither fire nor water; floods, nor storms; death, nor life; principalities nor powers; height nor depth; nor any other creature should hinder thy passage to Christ, or separate thy soul from Christ. Consider what I say, (saith Paul) and the Lord give thee understanding in all things; remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead according to my Gospel: that Christ was raised is a Gospel-truth; ay, but do thou remember it; do thou consider it, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things.

SECT. III. Of desiring Jesus in that respect.

3. LET us desire after Jesus carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his resurrection. What desire is, we have opened before; some call it the wing of the soul, whereby it moveth, and is carried to the thing it expecteth, to feed itself upon it, and to be satisfied with it.

But what is there in Christ's resurrection, that should move our souls to desire after it?

I answer. 1. Something in itself. 2. Something as in reference unto us.

1. There is something in itself; had we but a view of the glory, dignity, excellency of Christ, as raised from the dead, it would put us on this heavenly motion; we should fly as the Eagle that hasteth to eat. The object of desire is good, but the more excellent and glorious any good is, the more earnest and eager should our desires be; now Christ as raised from the dead is an excellent object; the resurrection of Christ is the glorifying of Christ; yea, his glorifying took its beginning at his blessed resurrection; now it was that God highly exalted him, and gave him a name above every name,&c. and in this respect how desirable is he?

2. There is something in reference unto us; As, 1. He r<sup>ise</sup> again for our justification; I must needs grant, that Christ's death, and not his resurrection is the meritorious cause of our justification; but on the other side Christ's resurrection, and not his death is for the applying of our justification, as the stamp adds no virtue, nor matter of real value to a piece of gold; but only it makes that value which before it had actually applicable and current unto us: so the resurrection of Christ was no part of the price or satisfaction which Christ made to God, yet is it that which applies all his merits, and makes them of force unto his Members. Some I know would go further, Lucius a learned Writer saith, that Justification is therefore attributed to Christ's resurrection, because it was the complete, and ultimate act of Christ's active obedience: and from hence inferreth, that remission of sin is attributed to his passive obedience; and justification, or imputation of righteousness, to his active obedience: Goodwin no way inferior to him, saith, that justification is put upon Christ's resurrection with a rather, who is he that condemneth? it is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again; not but that the matter of our justification is only the obedience and death of Christ; but the form of our justification, or the act of pronouncing us righteous, by that his obedience and death depends upon Christ's resurrection; for then it was that Christ himself was justified, and then he was justified as a common person, representing us therein, so that we were then justified with him, and in him; and we are said to be risen with him, and to sit with him in heavenly places. Burgess, one admirably judicious, saith, that justification is given to Christ's resurrection, as a privilege flowing from its efficient cause; Indeed Christ's death is the meritorious cause of our justification, but Christ's resurrection is in some sense (saith he) the efficient cause; because by his rising again, the Spirit of God doth make us capable of justification, and th<sup>n</sup> bestoweth it on us. I know there is some difference amongst these Worthies, but they all agree in this, that the resurrection of Christ was for our justification, and that by the resurrection of Christ all the merits of his death were made applicable unto us. As there was a price and ransom to be paid by Christ for the redemption of man, so it was necessary that the fruit, effect, and benefit of Christ's redemption should be applied, and conferred; now this work of application and actual collation of the fruit of Christ's death, began to be in fieri upon the resurrection day; but it was not then finished, and perfected; for to the consummation thereof, the Ascension of Christ, the Mission of the holy Ghost, Apostolical preaching of the Gospel to Jews and Gentiles, the Donation of Heavenly grace, and Christ's Intercession at the right hand of God were very necessary. O the benefit of Christ's resurrection as to our justification! If Christ be not risen again, ye are yet in your sins, and your faith is in vain. Remission of sin (which is a part of our justification) though purchased by Christ's death, yet could not be applied to us, or possibly be made ours without Christ's resurrection; and in this respect oh how desirable is it!

2. He rose again for our sanctification. So the Apostle, He hath quickened us together with Christ, and hath raised up together with Christ. Our first resurrection is from Christ's resurrection; if you would know how you that were blind in heart, uncircumcised in spirit, utterly unacquainted with the life of God, are now light in the Lord, affecting heavenly things, walking in righteousness; it comes from this blessed resurrection of Jesus Christ; we are quickened with Christ; it is Christ's resurrection that raised our souls, being stark dead, with such a resurrection as that they shall never die more. Whence the Apostle, Reckon yourselves to be dead unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. We are dead to sin, and alive unto God by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ; we may reckon thus for ourselves, that if we be in Christ, there comes a virtue from Christ, an effectual working of Christ by his Spirit into our hearts, and it is such a work as will conform us to Christ dead, and to Christ risen; why reckon thus, saith the Apostle; go not by guess, and say, I hope it will be better with me than it hath been; no, no, but reckon, conclude, make account, I must live to God, I must live the life of grace, for Christ is risen. To the same purpose he speaks before, Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Christ rose again to a new life, and herein his resurrection differed from the resurrection of those others raised by him, as of Lazarus, Jairus Daughter, the Widow of Naims Son; for they were but raised to the same life, which formerly they lived; but Jesus Christ was raised up to a new life; and according to this exemplar we should now walk in newness of life: this is the end of Christ's resurrection, that we should be new creatures, of new lives, new principles, new conversations; he rose again for our sanctification.

3. He rose again for our resurrection to eternal life; Christ is the pattern, and pledge, and cause of the resurrection of our bodies; for since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead: for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. There is a virtue flowing from Christ to his Saints by which they shall be raised up at the latter day; as there is a virtue flowing from the head to the members, or from the root to the branches, so those that are Christ's shall be raised up by Christ. Not but that all the wicked in the world shall be raised again by the power of Christ as he is a judge, for all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and they shall come forth; yet with this difference, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation. In this respect the Saints shall have a peculiar resurrection; and therefore they are called the Children of the resurrection, because they shall obtain a better resurrection, as the Apostle calls it. And is not Christ's resurrection desirable in this very respect; if we should think, these bodies of ours being dust, must never return from their dusts, it might discourage; but here is our hope, Christ is risen, and therefore we must rise; it is the Apostles own argument against those that held, there was no resurrection of the dead; why, saith the Apostle, if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen—If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that sleep: he argues plainly that Christ's resurrection is the principal efficient cause of the resurrection of the just; I am the resurrection, and the life, saith Christ, (i.e.) I am the Author, and worker of the resurrection to life. As the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will; and hence it is that Christ is called a quickening Spirit; Christ is the head and stock of all the Elect, Christ is the Author, procurer, conveyor of life to all his offspring, by the communication of his Spirit; Christ is a quickening Spirit, quickening dead souls, and quickening dead bodies, the Author both of the first and second resurrection. And is not this desirable?—

He rose again for the assurance of our justification, sanctification and salvation. This is the reason why the Apostle useth these words to prove the resurrection of Christ, I will give you the sure mercies of David; none of God's mercies had been sure to us if Christ had not risen again from the dead. But now all is made sure; his work of redemption being fully finished, the mercy which thereupon depended was now made certain, (and as the Apostle speaks) sure unto all the seed.

Methinks a thought of this object in respect of itself, and in respect of us, should put our souls into a longing frame; is it not a desirable thing to see the King in his beauty? were not the Daughters of Zion glad to go forth, and to behold King Solomon with the Crown wherewith his Mother Crowned him in the day of his espousalls? If Christ incarnate, and in human frailty was the desire of Nations, how much more is Christ exalted, and in his glory? if it was Augustine's great wish to have seen Christ in the flesh, how should we but wish to see Christ as risen again from the dead? he is altogether lovely; or, he is altogether desirable; desirable in the womb, desirable in the cratch, desirable on the Cross, even when despised, and numbered with thieves; desirable in his resurrection; yea all desirable, yea above all desirable, as risen, exalted, glorified; in this consideration we cannot fathom the thousand, thousand part of the worth, and incomparable excellency of Jesus Christ. Or if Christ's resurrection in itself will not stir up our lazy desires; as it not desirable as in reference unto us? what, that he should rise again for our justification? that by virtue of his resurrection thy soul should appear righteous before the judgment seat of God? O what a ravishing word is that, what a triumphing challenge? who shall lay anything to the charge of God's Elect? it is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth? it is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again. O the stings that many have, saying, what shall I do when I die, and go down to the dust? may not the Lord have something against me at the day of reckoning? why no poor soul, if thou art in Christ, it is he that died, yea rather that is risen again for thy justification; by his resurrection he hath cleared all reckonings, so that now who shall condemn? not sin, Christ hath took it away; not the law, Christ hath fulfilled it for us; not Satan, for if the Judge acquit us, what can the Jailor do? O my soul, that thy portion may be with theirs who hath right and title to this blessed resurrection of Jesus Christ. But thou sayest again, what is it to me; if I be justified in Christ, and yet my heart remain unholy, and unsubdued to Christ? it is true, thou findest a woeful sinful nature within thee, cross and contrary to holiness, and leading thee daily into captivity; yet remember it is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again; and by virtue of his resurrection he hath given thee a new nature; another nature, which makes thee wrestle against sin, and shall in time prevail over all sin. But thou sayst again, what if I be justified, and sanctified, if after death I shall not be raised to life? why fear not O my soul, for if Christ be risen thou shalt rise, and rise to eternal life; I am the resurrection and the life, not only the resurrection, but life is in him originally, as water is in the fountain, and from him it is derived to us; because I live ye shall live also. But thou sayst again, O that I were assured of this! many doubts and jealousies are upon me from day today. Sometimes indeed I have a comfortable hope of my justification, sanctification, salvation; and sometimes again I am forced to cry, Lord why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me? O consider of the ends of Christ's resurrection; was it not to give thee the sure mercies of David? was it not to apply the merits of Christ's active, and passive obedience, and to bring them home to thy soul? was it not to confirm, and to ratify thy faith, else were it in vain? O the Person of Christ! and O the privileges of Christ as being raised from the dead! O my soul, that thou wert on the wing in thy desires after Christ! O that thy motions were as swift as the Eagles that hasted to eat! O that feelingly thou knewest him, and the power of his resurrection! that thou wert resolved to give no sleep to thine eyes, nor slumber to thine eye-lids, until thou couldst say, Christ's resurrection is mine! why Lord, that I should long after vanities, trifles, toys, pleasures, profits, earthly contentments; that I should long like some women with Child for a deal of baggage coles, or ashes, very loathsome food; and yet that I should feel no pantings, breathings, hungerings, thirstings after Christ's resurrection to feed upon it, and to be satisfied with it! come, here's a blessed object; here's delights; O stir up thy appetite, suck and be satisfied, drink ye, drink abundantly, O my beloved!

SECT. IV. Of hoping in Jesus in that respect.

LET us hope in Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his resurrection. Only remember, I mean not a fluctuating, wavering, unsettled, unestablished hope; no, no, let us hope firmly, surely, fixedly; let us come up to that plerophory, or full assurance of hope; that we may conclude comfortably, and confidently, Christ's resurrection is ours; and yet that our conclusion may not be rash, but upon right grounds, we may examine the firmness, solidness, substantialness of our hope in Christ's resurrection by these following signs.

1. If Christ's resurrection be mine, then is Christ's death mine; the fruits or effects of Christ's death and resurrection cannot be severed; if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be in the likeness of his resurrection. Mortification, and vivification, are twins of one and the same spirit; depart from evil and do good.— Cease to do evil, learn to do well. Many may think they have their part in the first resurrection, but can they prove their death unto sin? as there cannot be a resurrection before a man die, so there cannot be a resurrection to a new life, but there must be a separation of the soul from the body of sin; what, shall a man cleave to sin, be wedded to sin; yea shall a man like it, love it, live in it, and yet say or imagine that Christ's resurrection is his? O be not deceived, God is not mocked! come, search, try, examine, hast thou any share in Christ's passion? knowest thou the fellowship of his sufferings? art thou made conformable to his death, that as he died for sin; so thou diest to sin? if herein thou art at a stand, peruse those Characters laid down in his sufferings and death, the truth and growth of our mortification, or of our death unto sin is discovered before.

2. If Christ's resurrection be mine, then is Christ's Spirit mine, yea then am I quickened by the Spirit of Christ. If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his:—but if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, then he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies (and I may add your mortal souls) by his spirit that dwelleth in you. Christ's Spirit (if Christ's resurrection be ours) will have the same operation and effect in our souls that it had in his body; as it raised up the one, so it will raise up the other; as it quickened the one, so it will quicken the other. But the question here will run on, how shall we know whether we have received this quickening Spirit? many pretend to the Spirit never more than at this day, but how may we be assured that the Spirit is ours? I answer.—

1. The Spirit is a Spirit of illumination; here is the beginning of his work, he begins in light; as in the first creation, the first-born of God's works, was light, God said, let there be light, and there was light; so in this new creation, the first work is light, God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined into our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Hence the state of nature is called darkness, and the state of grace is called light; Ye were sometimes darkness, but now ye have light in the Lord. And he hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light. There is a light in the mind, and a light in the heart, of those who have the Spirit of Christ; there is a speculative and an affective knowledge, not only to know the truth, but to love it, believe it, embrace it. O my soul, wouldst thou know whether Christ's Spirit be thine? consider, and see then whether any of this new light of Jesus Christ hath shined into thy heart; take heed, deceive not thyself, thou mayest have a great deal of wit, and knowledge, and understanding, and yet go to hell; this light is a light shining into thy heart, this light is a Christ-discovering light; this light is a sin-discoverings light; this light will cause thee to find out thy hypocrisy, deadness, dullness in spiritual duties; if thou hast not this light thou art near to eternal burnings; darkness is one of the properties of hell, and without this light, inward darkness will to utter darkness, where is nothing but weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth.

2. This quickening spirit, is a spirit of faith; as it reveals Christ, so it inclines men's hearts to close with Christ upon those Gospel-terms, as he is offered. I know there are degrees and measures of faith, but the least measure of faith is a desiring, panting, breathing after the Lord Jesus; and no sooner hath the soul received that new light from the spirit of Christ, but it is presently, at the same instant, exceedingly affected with Jesus Christ; O it desires Christ above all desires. I know not a more undeceiving sign than this; read over the whole Bible, and where ever there was any soul-saving discoveries, there ever followed inward desires, soul-longings after Jesus Christ; when Paul preached of the resurrection of Christ, some there were that mocked, jeered, and slighted that doctrine, but others (whose heart the Lord stirred) they were exceedingly taken with it saying we will hear thee again of this matter; yea, & this very Sermon so wrought on some that they believed, among whom was Dyonysius the Areopagite, & a woman named Damaris, and others with them; and when he preaced another Sermon on the same subject at Antioch, the Jews were much offended, but the Gentiles were so exceedingly taken with it that they besought Paul, that these words (the very same resurrection Sermon) might be preached to them the next Sabbath day. Their very hearts did so long after Christ whom Paul had preached, that when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious Procelites followed Paul and Barnabas; and the next Sabbath day came almost the whole City together to hear the same Sermon. O my soul, dost thou hear these Sermons of Christ's resurrection; dost thou hear sweet-Gospel-preaching? dost thou hear the free tenders and offers of Christ; with all his glory and excellency to poor sinners, to vile, lost, undone souls, and art thou no whit taken with them? canst thou sleep away such Sermons as these? hast thou no heart-risings, no stirrings, workings, longings, desires in thy soul? O take heed! this is a dangerous case: but on the contrary, if thou sayest in thy heart, Oh that I could hear this Sermon again! O the sweet virtues of Christ's resurrection! I had not thought such honey could have dropped out of this rock; O the blessed beginnings and springings of grace which I felt in my soul on such a meditation! Oh the desire, the delight! O the longings! O the comforts of Christ's resurrection! O the drawings of the Spirit, inclining my heart to receive Jesus Christ, to close with him, and to rest on him, and to give up myself to him! why this Spirit of faith doth argue thy title and interest to the quickening spirit of Christ.

3. Thy quickening Spirit, is a Spirit of sanctification; such was the Spirit, whereby Christ was raised, he was declared mightily to be the Son of God, according to the Spirit of sanctification, by the resurrection from the dead. That same Spirit which raised up Jesus Christ, was that same divine Spirit which sanctified his human nature wherein it dwelt; and such is that quickening Spirit to all in whom it dwelleth; it is a Spirit of holiness, and it works holiness, changing the heart, and turning the bent of it from sin to holiness. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away, behold all things are become new. q. d. When once the believer is by an act of faith passed over unto Christ, there goes immediately from the Spirit of Christ into his soul an effectual power, which alters and changes the frame of the whole man; now he is not the same that he was; he is changed in his company, in his discourse, in his practice; he is changed in his nature, judgment, will, affections; he is sanctified throughout in soul, body, and Spirit; O my soul, try thyself by this sign, dost thou find such an inward change wrought in the soul? dost thou find the law of God, a law of holiness written on thy heart? dost thou find a law within thee contrary to the law of sin, commanding with authority that which is holy and good? so that thou canst say with the Apostle, I delight in the law of God after the inward man? and with my mind I myself serve the law of God? if so, surely this is no other, but the law of the spirit of life in Jesus Christ; or the law of this quickening Spirit, communicated from Christ, unto thy soul.

3. If Christ's resurrection be mine, then am I planted together in the likeness of Christ's resurrection; then do I resemble, and am made conformable to Christ in his resurrection; now if we would know wherein that resemblance is, the Apostle tells us, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Our mortification is a resemblance of Christ's death, and our vivification is a resemblance of Christ's resurrection. In this ground of our hope concerning our interest in the resurrection of Christ, I shall propound these questions. —

1. Whether indeed and in truth our souls are vivified?
2. Whether we increase and grow in our vivification?

For the first, the truth and certainty of our vivification will appear by these rules.—

1. True vivification is general, both in respect of us, and in respect of Grace.

1. In respect of us, it is diffused throughout the whole man; the very God of peace sanctify you wholly (saith the Apostle) and I pray God that your whole spirit, soul, and body may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. And. 2. In respect of Grace, it is in every Grace; I know it is a question, whether all Graces are so connected and chained together, that possible they cannot be severed? but I suppose it is truly answered, that in respect of habit they cannot be severed, though in respect of the act or exercise they may be severed; some Graces are more radical than others, as faith and love, and therefore they first appear; but as a man lives first the life of a plant, then of sense, then of reason, though all were radically there at first; so it is in graces; experience tells us that some Christians are eminent in some graces; and some in other graces; some have more love, and some more knowledge, and some more patience, and some more self-denial; but all that are true Christians have each of these graces in some measure or other; or at least they have them in habit, though not in the act; if vivification be true, there is a whole work of grace both in heart and life; as the light in the air runs through the whole hemisphere, so the whole work of grace runs through, and is diffused through the whole man, soul, body, and spirit. O my soul, this may put thee to thy study, because of the several constitutions or tempers of graces; thou mayest find this or that grace, this or that image of Christ clearly stamped on thy heart; but thou canst not find such and such graces; in this case, fear not, for if in truth and sincerity thou hast but one grace, thou hast the whole chain of graces. But to speak to some graces in particular.

2. True vivification is a new life acting upon a new principle of Faith. The life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the Faith of the Son of God. They are the words of a man pursued by the law unto Christ; Paul seeing he was dead by the law, he speaks for a better husband; the law finds him dead, and leaves him dead, Nevertheless I live (saith Paul) what means he? a natural life? why so? he lived before now; no, no, it is a better life than a natural life; such a life is no contentment to a soul pursued by the law; very heathens and infidels have such a life, and in that respect are as happy as the best of Saints; Paul's life is a spiritual life, and the Spring of his life is the Son of God; Jesus Christ is essentially, radically, fundamentally life itself, and by his incarnation, passion, resurrection, he is life for his Saints; they live by him, and in him, and for him, and through him; he is the heart and liver of their Spiritual life. But as from the heart and liver there must be arteries, and veins for maintenance of life and conveyance of blood throughout all the body; so from Christ there must be some conveyance to bring this to life unto us, and this is by faith; I live by the faith of the Son of God. O my soul, dost thou live this life of faith on the Son of God? canst thou make use of Christ in every state, and in every condition? As for instance; in thy particular calling, dost thou look to Christ for wisdom, success, blessing, ability? dost thou say, if I have ill success, I will yet go to Christ; it is he that set me here, and it is he will enable me? in case of provision, dost thou run to Christ, and dost thou hang upon him for all things needful? dost thou say; If I want means, God will create means; he commands all means, and he can suddenly do whatsoever he will? In case of protection, dost thou look unto Jesus to be thy shield and protector? dost thou mind the word of God to Abraham, Fear not Abraham, for I am God all-sufficient, thy buckler and thy exceeding great reward? In case of thy Children, goest thou to Christ, saying, Are not my Children thy Children, and wilt thou not provide for thy own? it is true, thou must do what thou canst, but for the rest, despair not; cast thy burden upon him, who hath commanded thee in nothing to be careful, but in all things to make thy suits known with prayer and supplication; when my Father and Mother forsake me, God will take me up, saith David. He is a Father to the Fatherless, he provided for them in the womb, he provided breasts for them ere they saw the Sun, and therefore how should he but have care, and compassion over thy Children? in case of prosperity, dost thou see Christ's love in that state? dost thou set him in the first place, receiving all, and joining in all as coming from him? is this it that makes thy prosperity sweet, because, thou knowest and believest that thy sins are pardoned? otherwise what is thy silver, and gold, so long as thy pardon is not sealed in the blood of Jesus Christ? if a prisoner condemned to die should abound in all outward plenty, what comfort could he have, so long as his pardon were not sealed? it is the life of faith that sweetens prosperity; who are better Christians than they! who know they enjoy these things with God's favor and blessing; faith sees God's love in all, and so is abundantly thankful; faith makes a man to eat, and drink, and sleep, and to do all in Christ; as it cost Christ dear to purchase our liberty to the creatures, so faith ever sets Christ in the first place; it receives all as coming from him, it returns all as to the glory of him: in case of disgrace, dost thou commit thy credit to Jesus Christ? dost thou look up to Jesus, and desirest no more good name, repute, or honor than Christ will afford thee? or in case of death, dost thou like Stephen resign up thy soul to Christ? dost thou see death conquered in the resurrection of Christ? dost thou look beyond death? dost thou over-eye all things betwixt thee and glory? O the sweet of this life of faith on the Son of God! if thou knowest what this means, then mayst thou assure thyself of thy vivification.

3. True vivification is a new life acting upon a new principle of hope of glory. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you. By Christ's resurrection we have a lively hope for our resurrection unto glory; is not Christ our head? and if he be risen to glory, shall not his members follow after him? certainly there is but one life, one Spirit, one glory of Christ and his members; The glory which thou gavest me, I have given unto them said Christ. The soul that is vivified hath a lively hope of glory on several grounds. As, 1. Because of the promises of glory set down in the word; now on these promises hope fastens her anchor; if Christ hath promised, how should I but maintain lively hope? 2. Because of the first-fruits of the Spirit; there are sometimes fore tastes of the glory, drops of heaven poured into a soul; whence it comfortably concludes, if I have the earnest and first-fruits, surely in his time Jesus Christ will give the harvest. 3. Because of Christ's resurrection unto glory; now he rose as a common Person, and he went up into heaven as a common Person; whence hope is lively, saying, why should I doubt, or despair, seeing, I am quicken'd together with Christ, and raised up together with Christ, and am made to sit together with Christ, in heavenly places? Try, O my soul, by this sign: Art thou lively in the hope of glory? doth thy heart leap and rejoice within at a thought of thy inheritance in heaven? in a lively fountain the waters thereof will leap and sparkle; so if thy hope be lively, thou wilt have living joys, living speeches, living delights; amidst all thy afflictions thou wilt say, these will not endure forever; I myself shall away ere long, Glory will come at last. O the sweet of this life of hope! if thou feelest these stirrings it is an argument of thy vivification.

4. True vivification acts all its duties upon a new principle of love to Christ; men not enlivened by Jesus Christ may do much, and go far in outward service, yea they may come to sufferings, and yet without love to Christ all is lost, all comes to nothing. Though I speak with tongues of men and Angels—though I have the gift of Prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, —though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor; and though I give my body to be burnt, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing. All the rest may be from the flesh, and for the flesh, and fleshly ends; but a true Gospel-love is from Christ, and tends to the Glory of Christ: For Love is of God, and everyone that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. But how may we know that all our actings are out of love to Jesus Christ? I answer.—

1. If we act by the rule of Christ. If ye love me keep my commandments.— He that hath my Commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me.— If any man love me, he will keep my commandments. He that loves Christ, he will look upon every act, every service, every performance, whether it be according to the rule of Christ, and then on he goes with it.

2. If we act to the honor of Christ. We may pray, and hear, and preach, and act self more than the honor of Jesus Christ; whiles Christ shown miracles, and fed his followers to the full, they cried up Jesus, and none like Jesus; but when Christ was plain with them, ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled; when he pressed sincerity upon them, and preparation for sufferings, from that time many of his Disciples went back, and walked no more with him. Its no news for men to fall off when their ends fail; only they that love Christ look not at these outward things in respect of the honor of Jesus Christ; and hence it is that in all their actings they will carry on the design of the Father in advancing the honor of the Son, whatever it cost them. O my soul apply this to thyself; if thou livest the life of love, if in all thy actings, duties, services, thou art carried on with a principle of love to Jesus Christ, it is a sure sign of thy vivification.

For the second question, whether we increase and grow in our vivification? we may discover it thus.—

1. We grow, when we are led on to the exercise of new Graces; this the Apostle calls adding of one Grace unto another: add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience Godliness, and to Godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity. At first a Christian doth not exercise all Graces, though habitually all Graces may be planted in him, yet the exercise of them is not all at once, but by degrees. Thus the Church tells Christ, at our Gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved; she had all manner of fruits which she had reserved for Christ; new and old: she had young converts, and more settled professors; or she had new and old Graces, as others; she added Grace to Grace, she was led on from the exercise of one Grace, unto another new Grace: As wicked men are led on from one sin to another, and so grow worse and worse; so godly men are led from one Grace to another; and so they increase, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope.

2. We grow, when we find new degrees of the same Grace added; as when love grows more fervent, when knowledge abounds, and hath a larger apprehension of spiritual things; when faith goes on from man's casting himself on Christ, to find sweetness in Christ; and so to plerophory, or full assurance of faith: when Godly sorrow proceeds from mourning for sin, as contrary to God's holiness; to mourn for it, is as contrary to him who loves us; which usually follows after assurance; when obedience enlargeth its bounds, and we abound more and more in the work of the Lord. I know thy works (said Christ to the Church of Thyatira) I know thy works, and the last to be more than the first.

3. We grow when the fruits and duties we perform grow more ripe, more spiritual, and more to the honor of Christ: it may be we pray not more, nor longer than sometimes we used; it may be our prayers have not more wit, or memory, than sometimes they had; yet they are more savory, more spiritual, and more to Christ's honor than sometimes they were: Now we must know that one short prayer put up in faith, with a broken heart, and aiming at the honor of Christ, argues more of growth in grace, than prayers of a day long, and never so eloquent, without the like qualifications. In every duty we should look at their ends, and aims; for if we debase ourselves in the sense of our own vileness, and emptiness, and inability; and if we aim at God's honor, and power, and praise, and glory, it is a good sign of growth; we call this spiritual part of duty, when it is from God, and through God, and to God.

4. We grow when we are more rooted in Christ; so the Apostle describes it, a growing up unto him in all things. This is Scripture phrase; growth of grace is usually expressed by growing into Christ, but now in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. As if to grow in grace without him, were nothing, as indeed it is not. Philosophers, moral men, and others, may grow in virtues, but not in Christ. Come then, search, and try whether we are more rooted in Christ: when a young plant is new set, the roots are a small depth in the earth, one may pull them up with his hand; but as the tree shooteth up in height, so it strikes the root deep and deeper downward, that no force can move it; so it is with us, we have not for degree so firm and near a conjunction with Christ, at our first union; but the more we live with him, like good trees spreading in the sight of all men, and bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, the more we come to root downwards by a more firm faith, and firm confidence. Our union is answerable to that which uniteth us; now at the first, faith is but weak, like a smoking wick, or a poor bruised reed; but whiles faith is drawing the Spirit away from Christ, the more it exerciseth, the more it is strengthened; even as in babes, their powers every day, at first are feeble; but the more they feed and exercise, by so much the more they put forth their strength in all their operations: time was, that Peters faith was so weak, that at the voice of a Damosel, Peter was shaken; but by walking, while in Christ he was so rooted, that neither threatenings, whippings, imprisonment, conventings before great powers, nor any other thing could shake him: you may object, if we are not at first rooted in Christ, a weak faith may be quite overthrown; we may then fall away; true, if we be not rooted in any manner; but this we are at our first setting into Christ by faith; only this I speak of is of an higher degree of rooting, which doth not only shut out falling away, but very shaking and tottering, in a good measure: surely this is not the state of every believer; no, no, it is only the condition of such, who have long walked in Christ, and are grown in grace, holiness, vivification.

O my soul, try now the growth of vivification by these few signs; art thou led on to the exercises of new graces, adding grace to grace? dost thou find new degrees of the self same grace? is thy love more hot, thy faith more firm? all thy boughs more laden and filled with the fruits of righteousness? are all thy duties more spiritual? are thy ends more raised to aim at God, to sanctify him, and to debase thyself? art thou more rooted in Christ? in all thy duties, graces and gracious actings; hast thou learnt habitual to say, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me? dost thou interest Christ more and more in all thou dost? dost thou know and affect Christ more and more? Oh when would an ambitious courtier be weary of being graced by his Prince? when would a worlding be weary of having the world come in upon him? why shouldst thou O my soul be weary of insinuating thyself by faith and affection into Christ; come, search, try; it may be little winds have formerly shaken thee, but so it is, that insensibly, and thou knowest not how, thy root is struck lower and lower into Christ; and now thou art not so soon shaken with every wind; surely thy hope is well grounded; thou hast a part in Christ's resurrection; it is thine, even thine.

SECT. V. Of believing in Jesus in that respect.

5. LET us believe in Jesus as carrying on the great work of our Salvation for us in his resurrection. This is one main article of our faith, the third day he rose again from the dead, and this now I propound as the object of our faith; O let us believe it, let us believe our part and interest in it. And to that purpose let us look on Jesus as a common Person; whatever consideration he passed under, it was in our stead, and in that respect we are to reckon ourselves as sharers with him. Scrupulous souls may object, is it possible that Christ should rise, and that I should rise with him, and in him? is it possible that Christ should die as a common Person for my sins? and that Christ should rise, and by his resurrection should be justified as a common person in my room? O the Mystery of this redemption! without Controversy great is the Mystery of Godliness, which is God manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit: it is a mystery beyond my fathoming, that Christ, who is God in the flesh, should be justified in the Spirit for my justification; that Christ should die in my stead as a condemned man, and when he had finished his work, that he should rise again in my stead as a righteous Person. These passages are past fathoming, and beyond believing; O what shall I do? I find it hard, very hard to believe this point.

Scrupulous souls! throw not away your confidence; ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his Glory? was not satisfaction and justification, payment of debt, and discharge of bonds required of him, and of necessity for us? O believe, and that I may persuade to purpose, I shall lay down, 1. Some directions; and, 2. Some encouragements of faith.

1. For directions of faith in reference to Christ's resurrection, observe these particulars.—

1. Faith must directly go to Christ.

2. Faith must go to Christ, as God in the flesh.

3. Faith must go to Christ, as God in the flesh made under the Law.

4. Faith must go to Christ, not only as made under the directive part of the Law by his life, but under the penal part by his death; of all these before.

5. Faith must go to Christ as God in the flesh, made under the directive and penal part of the Law, and as quickened by the Spirit. He was put to death in the flesh (saith Peter) and quickened by the Spirit. And accordingly must be the method, and order of our faith; after we have looked on Christ as dead in the flesh, we must go on to see him as quickened by the Spirit; if Christ was not raised, or quickened (saith the Apostle) your faith were in vain; q. d. to believe in Christ as only in respect of his birth, life, death, and to go no further, were but a vain faith; and therefore shore up your faith to this pitch, that Christ who died, is risen from the dead; to this purpose all the Sermons of the Apostles represented Christ, not only as crucified, but as raised; In that first Sermon after the mission of the holy Ghost, ye have crucified Christ (said Peter to the Jews) and then it follows, whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains, or chains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. In that next Sermon Peter tells them again, ye have killed the Prince of life; and then it follows, whom God hath raised from the dead, whereof we are witnesses. In the next Sermon after this, be it known unto you all (said Peter) and to all the people of Israel, that by the Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, and whom God raised from the dead,— is this man whole. And in the next Sermon after this, the God of our Fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. And as thus he preached to the Jews, so in his first Sermon to the Gentiles, he tells them, we are witnesses of all things which Jesus did, both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem, whom they slew, and hanged on a tree; him God raised up the third day, and shown him openly. And as thus Peter preached, so in that first Sermon of Paul at Antioch, he tells them of the Jews crucifying Jesus, and then it follows, but God raised him from the dead.—And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure Mercies of David, and thou shalt not suffer thine holy one to see corruption. And after this, Paul, as his manner was, went into the Synagogue at Thesalonica, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging that Christ must needs suffer and rise from the dead. This was the way of the Apostles preaching; they told them an history (I speak it with reverence) of one Jesus Christ, that was the word of God, and that was become man, and how he was crucified at Jerusalem, and how he was raised from the dead; and all this in a plain, simple, spiritual way and manner; and while they were telling those blessed truths, the Spirit fell upon the people, and they believed, and had faith wrought in them. Faith is not wrought so much in the way of ratiocination, as by the Spirit of God, coming upon the souls of people by the Relation or representation of Jesus Christ to the soul. And this our Lord himself hints, as Moses lifted up the Serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life. When the people were stung, God so ordered, that the very beholding of the brazen Serpent should bring help (though we know not how) to those that were wounded and stung by those fiery Serpents; so God hath ordained in his blessed wisdom that the discovery of Jesus Christ, as crucified and raised, as humbled and exalted, should be a means of faith; come then, set we before us, Christ raised; not only Christ crucified, but Christ raised, is the object of faith; and in that respect we must look up to Jesus.

6. Faith in going to Christ is raised from the dead, or as quickened by the Spirit, it is principally, and mainly to look to the end, purpose, intent, and design of Christ in his resurrection; very devils may believe the history of Christ's resurrection, they believe and tremble; but the Saints and people of God are to look at the meaning of Christ, why he rose from the dead; now the ends are either supreme, or subordinate. 1. The supreme end was God's Glory, and that was the meaning of Christ's prayer, Father, the hour is come, glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee; with which agrees the Apostle, he rose again from the dead to the glory of the Father. 2. The subordinate ends were many; As, 1. That he might tread on the Serpents head. 2. That he might destroy the works of the Devil. 3. That he might be the first fruits of them that sleep. 4. That he might assure our faith that he is the word, and that he is able to keep that which we have committed to him against that day. 5. That he might be justified in the Spirit; as he was begotten in the womb by the Spirit; led up and down in the Spirit, offered up by the eternal Spirit, so he was raised from the dead by the Spirit, and justified in the Spirit at his resurrection. Christ was under the greatest attainder that ever man was, he stood publicly charged with the guilt of a world of sins, and if he had not been justified by the Spirit, he had still lain under the blame of all, and had been liable to the execution of all; and therefore he was raised up from the power of death, that he might be declared as a righteous person. 6. That he might justify us in his justificaon; when he was justified, all the elect were virtually and really justified in him; that act of God which past on him, was drawn up in the name of all his Saints: as whatever benefit or privilege God meant for us, he first of all bestowed it on Christ; thus God meaning to sanctify us, he sanctified Christ first, and God meaning to justify us, he justifies Christ first; so whatever benefit or privilege he bestowed on Christ, he bestowed it not on him for himself, but as he was a common Person, and one re-resenting us. Thus Christ was sanctified instead of us, for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through thy truth: and thus Christ was justified instead of us, for as by the offense of one, judgment came upon all for condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came on all men unto justification.

7. That he might regenerate us, and beget us anew by his resurrection; blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again—by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. And this he doth, two ways. 1. As our pattern, platform, Idea, or exemplar; like as Christ was raised from the dead,—even so we also should walk in newness of life: and likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. 2. As the efficient thereof, for when we were dead in sin, he hath quickened us together with Christ; and ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. O the power of Christ's resurrection in this respect! if we saw a man raised from the dead, how should we admire at such a wondrous power? but the raising of one dead soul is a greater work than to raise a Church-yard of dead bodies.

8. That he might sanctify us, which immediately follows after the other, — but yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God. In our regeneration we are risen with Christ, and it is the Apostles argument, if ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, — set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth. We usually reckon two parts of Sanctification, viz. Mortification, and Vivification; now as the Death of Christ hath the special influence upon our Mortification, so the Resurrection of Christ hath the special influence on our Vivification; he hath quickened us together with Christ, and hath raised us up together with Christ.

O my Soul, Look to this main design of Christ in his rising again; and if thou hast any faith, O set thy Faith on work to draw this down into thy Soul. But here is a question, how should I manage my Faith? or how should I act my Faith to draw down the virtue of Christ's resurrection for my Vivification; I answer.

1. Go to the Well-head, look into the resurrection of Jesus Christ. This one act contains in it these particulars; As, 1. That I must go out of myself to something else; this is that check that lies upon that work of Grace, to keep out pride, that Faith sees the whole good of the soul in a Principle extraneous, even the springs of Jesus Christ. Alas! if this Vivification were in me, or in my power, what swellings and excrescencies of pride should I quickly nourish? God therefore hath placed it in another, that I may be kept low; and that I may go out of myself to seek it where it is. 2. That I must attribute wholly, freely, joyfully, all that I am, to Jesus Christ, and to the effectual working of his Grace. I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. And by the Grace of God I am what I am; and, I labored more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. The life of grace springs only from the life and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and therefore as I must deny myself, so I must attribute all to him from whom it comes. 3. I must lie at his feet with an humble expectation of, and dependency upon him, and him alone for the supplies of grace; this was the Apostles practice: O that I may be found in him! O that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection! O that by any means I might obtain unto the resurrection of the dead! he lay at Christ's feet with an humble expectation to feel the Power of Christ's resurrection, in raising him first from the death of sin to the life of grace, & after from death of nature to the life of glory.

2. Lay to these springs thy mouth of Faith; it is not enough to have all the treasures of grace, all the actings of Christ for thee, laid before thee, but thou must act thy faith upon that object; O then go to Christ's resurrection and believe, make a particular application of those glorious effects of Christ's resurrection upon thy soul. Say, Lord thou dyedst that I might die to sin, and thou wast raised from the death that I might be raised to newness of life. Come Lord, and quicken my dying sparks, give me to lay hold on Christ's resurrection, give me to adhere to it, and to rest upon it, and to close with it; I see without faith I am nere a whit the better for Christ's resurrection; and thy commands are upon me; open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it: why Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief. This faith is necessary to our vivification as well as Christ. Christ is the fountain of life, but faith is the means of life; the power and original of life is entirely reserved to Jesus Christ, but faith is the radical band on our part, whereby we are tied unto Christ, and live in Christ; and thus saith Christ himself, I am the resurrection and the life. Is that all? no, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet he shall live. And I am the bread of life. Is that all? no; he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

3. Suck and be satisfied, milk out and be delighted. Christ's resurrection is a breast of consolation; there is in it abundance of life and glory, and therefore we should not believe a little, but much; the word suck, is as much as to exact on Christ; draw hard from Christ; the more we exercise faith, the more we have of Jesus Christ and of Vivification; there is a depth in Christ's resurrection that can never be fadomed; when the soul hath as much as its narrow hand can grasp, whole Christ is too big to be enclosed in mortal arms; only the longer our arm of faith is, the more we shall grasp of him; and therefore suck, and pull, and draw hard. And to this purpose—

1. Pray for an increase of faith, complain to Christ of the shortness of thy arm, tell him thou canst not believe as thou wouldst, thou canst not get in so much of Christ into thy soul as thou desirest, thy Vivification is very poor and small; Oh when Christ hears a soul complain of drawfishness in faith and grace, then is he ready to let out of his fullness even grace for grace.

2. Act thy faith vigorously on Christ's resurrection for a further degree of quickening, activity, and lively ability of grace. Christ is an ever-flowing fountain, and he would have believers to partake abundantly of what is in him; he cannot abide that any should content themselves with a present stock of grace; Christ is not as a stream that fails, or as a channel that runs dry; Christ is not as water in a ditch, which hath no living spring to feed it; no, no; Christ is the fountain of life, he is the chief ordinance of life that ever God set up. I know there are other means of Christ's appointment, but if thou wilt live at the spring, and dri• in there, yea drink abundantly according to the overflowings of this fountain, O the life, and growth of life that would come in! Oh the virtue of Christ's resurrection that (Christ's Spirit meeting and assisting) would flow into thy soul for thy vivification.

Thus for directions; now for the encouragements of our faith to believe in Christ's resurrection.

1. Consider the excellency of this object. A sight of Christ in his beauty and glory would ravish souls, and draw them to run after him: the wise Merchant would not buy the pearl, till he knew it to be of excellent price; great things are eagerly sought for; Christ raised, Christ glorified, is an excellent object; O who would not sell all to buy this pearl? who would not believe?

2. Consider of the power, virtue, and influence of this object into all that golden chain of privileges; if Christ be not raised, you are yet in your sins; then they also which are fallen a sleep in Christ are perished. From the resurrection of Christ flows all those privileges, even from justification to salvation. The first is clear, and therefore all the rest.

3. Consider that Christ's resurrection and the effects of it are nothing unto us, if we do not believe; it is faith that brings down the particular sweetness and comforts of Christ's resurrection unto our souls: it is faith that puts us in the actual possession of Christ's resurrection; whatsoever Christ is to us before faith, yet really we have no benefit by it until we believe; it is faith that takes hold of all that Christ hath done for us; and gives us the actual enjoyment of it, oh let not the work stick in us! what, is Christ risen from the dead? and shall we not eye this Christ, and take him home to ourselves by faith? the Apostle tells us that he that believed not, hath made God a liar, because he believeth not the record that God hath given of his Son: Unbelief belies God in all that he hath done for us. O take heed of this, without faith what are we better for Christ's resurrection.

4. Consider of the tenders, offers, apparitions that Christ raised makes of himself to our souls? when first he arose (to confirm the faith of his Disciples he offers himself, and appears to Mary Magdalene, to the other women, to Peter, Thomas, and all the rest; and all those apparitions were on this account that they might believe, these things are written that ye might believe. In like manner Christ at this day offers himself in the Gospel of grace; and by his Spirit he appears to souls. Methinks we should not hear a Sermon of Christ's resurrection, but we should imagine as if we saw him, whose head and hairs are white like wool, as white as snow, whose eyes are as a flame of fire; whose feet are like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; whose voice is as the sound of many waters: or if we are dazzled with his glory, methinks at least we should hear his voice, as if he said, fear not, I am the first and the last, I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive for evermore. Amen. q. d. Come, cast your souls on me; it is I that have conquered sin, death, and hell for you; it is I that have broke the serpents head, that have took away the sting of death, that have cancelled the bond of the hand-writing against you, that have in my hands a general acquittance and pardon of your sins; come, take it, take me, and take all with me; see your names written in the acquittance, that I tender; take out the copy of it in your own hearts; only believe in him who is risen again for your justification.—O my soul what sayst thou to this still sweet voice of Christ? shall he who is the Savior of men, and glory of Angels desire thee to believe, and wilt thou not say Amen to it? Oh how should I blame thee for thy unbelief? what aspersions doth it cast on Christ? he hath done all things well, he hath satisfied wrath, fulfilled the Law; and God hath acquitted him, pronounced him just; faith is contented, he can desire no more; but thou sayst by unbelief that Christ hath done nothing at all, unbelief professeth Christ is not dead, or at least not risen from the dead; unbelief professeth that justice is not satisfied, that no justification is procured, that the wrath of God is now as open to destroy us as ever it was. Oh that Christ should be crucified again in our hearts by our unbelief; come, take Christ upon his tenders and offers, embrace him with both arms.

SECT. VI. Of Loving in Jesus in that Respect.

6. LET us love Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his resurrection; surely if we hope in Christ, and believe in Christ, we cannot but love Christ; if Christ's resurrection be our justification, and so the ground both of our hope and faith, how should we but love him, who hath done such great things for us? she that had much forgiven her, loved much; and if by virtue of Christ's resurrection we are Justified from all our sins, how should we but love him much? but that I may let down some cords of Love, whereby to draw our loves to Christ in this respect, let us consider thus.—

*Love is a motion of the appetite, by which the mind unites itself to that which seems good to it. You may object that Christ is absent, how then should our souls be united to him? but if we consider that objects, though absent, may be united to the powers by their species and images, as well as by their true beings, we may then be said truly to love Christ as raised, though he be absent from us; come then, stir up thy appetite, bring into thy imagination the Idea of Christ as in his resurrection; present him to thy affection of Love, in that very form wherein he appeared to his Disciples; as gazing upon the dusty beauty of flesh, kindleth the fire of carnal love, so this gazing on Christ, and on the passages of Christ in his resurrection will kindle this spiritual love in thy soul: Draw near then, and behold him; Is he not white and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousands? is not his head as the most fine gold? are not his locks bushy, and black as a raven? are not his eyes as the eyes of doves by the rivers of water, washed with milk, and fitly set? are not his cheeks as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers? thus I might go on from top to toe? but that thou mayst not only see his glory and beauty wherein he arose, but that thou mayest hear his voice; doth he not call on thee, as sometimes he did on Mary, on Thomas, on Peter, or on the twelve? As the Angel said to the woman, remember how he spake, when he was yet in Galilee: so say I to thee, remember how he spake while he was yet on earth; surely his lips like Lillies dropped sweet smelling myrrh. As thus. —*

1. In his apparition to Mary, Jesus saith unto her, woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? were not these kind words? and hast not thou had the like apparition? hast not thou heard the like sweet words from Jesus Christ? how often hath thy heart sobbed and fighed out complaints, O where is he whom my soul loveth? I charge you O daughters of Jerusalem, if ye find my beloved, that ye tell him I am sick of love? And then was not Christ seen in the mount? was not thy extremity his opportunity to do thee good? did not he bespeak thy comforts with these words, Sweet soul, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? what wouldst thou have that I can give thee? And what dost thou want that I can give thee? If anything in heaven or earth will make thee happy, it is all thy own; wouldst thou have pardon? thou shalt have it, I freely forgive thee all the debt; wouldst thou have myself? Why, behold I am thine, thy friend, thy Lord, thy husband, thy head, thy God. Were not these thy Lord's reviving words? were not these melting, healing, ravishing, quickening, passages of Christ his love?

2. In his Apparition to the ten, Jesus stood in the midst, and saith unto them, peace be unto you. Lo here more words of love: in the midst of their trouble Christ stands in the midst, speaking peace to their souls; and hath not Christ done the like to thee? hast thou not many and many a time been lapt into troubles, that thou knewest not which way to turn thee? hast thou not felt the contradictions of men, railings of Rabshecka's? and hast thou not sometimes shut the doors upon thee for fear of such Jews? and then, even then, hath not Christ come to thy spirit with an olive branch of peace? saying to thy restless soul, peace, and be still? hath he not wrought wonders in the sea of thy restless thoughts? hath he not made a calm; and more then so, hath he not filled thee with joy and peace in believing? hath he not sent thee away from thy prayers and complaints with a piece of heaven in thy soul? so that thou wast forced to conclude.

In his Apparition to the Eleven, Jesus saith to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing. O sweet condescending words! how far? how low would Jesus stoop to take up souls? and O my soul, are not these the very dealings of Christ towards thee? he that called Thomas to come near, hark how he calls on thee, Come near poor trembling, wavering, wandering soul; come, view the Lord thy Savior, and be not faithless, but believing; peace be unto thee fear not, it is I. He that called on them who passed by to behold his sorrow in the day of his humiliation, doth now call on thee to behold his glory in the day of his exaltation; look well upon him, dost thou not know him? why his hands were pierced, his head was pierced, his side was pierced, his heart was pierced, with the stings of thy sins, and these marks he retains even after his resurrection, that by these marks thou mightest always know him; is not the passage to his heart yet standing open? if thou knowest him not by the face, the voice, the hands; if thou knowest him not by the tears, and bloody sweat, yet look nearer, thou mayst know him by the heart; that broken healed heart is his, that dead revived heart is his, that soul-pitying melting heart is his; doubtless it can be none but his, love and compassion are its certain signatures. And is not here yet fuel enough for love to feed upon? doth not this heart of Christ even snatch thy heart, and almost draw it forth of thy breast? canst thou read the history of love any further at once? doth not thy throbbing heart here stop to ease itself? if not go on, for the field of love is large.

4. In this Apparition to the seven, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?—And he said to him the second time, Simon, Son of Jonas lovest thou me?—he said to him the third time, Simon Son of Jonas lovest thou me? Oh the loves of Christ in drawing out man's love unto himself! how often O my soul hath Christ come to thy door, and knocked there for entrance? how often hath he sued for Love, and begged love, and asked thee again and again, Ah soul, dost thou love me, more than these? come, tell me, dost thou love me, love me, love me? come, wilt thou take me for thy Lord? wilt thou delight in me as thy Treasure, thy happiness, thy all? O fie! shall Christ raised, a glorious Christ, thus woo, and sue, and call, and wilt thou not answer as Peter did, Yea Lord, thou knowest that I love thee.—Yea Lord thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee? Nay, art thou not grieved that Christ should ask the third time for thy love? art thou not ashamed out of thy stupidity, and forced to say, O my blessed Lord, I have been too proud, too peevish, but thy free grace, and undeserved love, hath beaten me out of all my pride, so that now I fall down at thy footstool, and lay myself flat before thee; at first I wondered to hear Preachers talk so much of Christ, and I was bold to ask thy friends, what was their beloved more than another beloved? but now I wonder that I could be so long without thee, truly Lord, I am thine, only thine, ever thine, all that I am is at thy command, and all I have is at thy disposing, be pleased to command both it, and me?

I might thus go on to consider other passages in other Apparitions, but are not these enow to draw thy love? Oh what love was this! Oh what humility was this? that Christ after his resurrection should converse with men during the space of forty days; worthy he was after so many sorrows, sufferings, reproaches, after so cruel ignominious, and bitter a death, immediately to have rid his triumph to glory; And for the confirmation of his Disciples faith, he might have commanded the Angels to have preached his resurrection; oh, no, he himself would stay in person, he himself would make it out by many infallible proofs that he was risen again; he himself would by his own example learn us a lesson of love, of meekness, of patience, in waiting after sufferings for the reward.

Methinks a few of these passages should set all our hearts on a flame of love; we love earth, and earthly things; we dig into the veins of the earth for thick clay; but if Christ be risen set your affections on things above; and not on things on the earth. Oh if the love of Christ were but in us, as the love of the world is in base worldlings, it would make us wholly to despise this world, it would make us to forget it, as worldly love makes a man to forget his God; Nay it would be so strong and ardent, and rooted in our souls, that we should not be able voluntary and freely to think on anything else but Jesus Christ; we should not then fear contempt, or care for disgrace, or the reproaches of men; we should not then fear death, or the grave, or hell, or devils; but we should sing in triumph, O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?—now thanks be to God which giveth us victory through Jesus Christ our Lord.

SECT. VII. Of joying in Jesus in that respect.

7. LET us joy in Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his resurrection. This is the great Gospel-duty, we should rejoice in the Lord, and again rejoice; yea, rejoice evermore. A Christian estate should be a joyful and comfortable estate, none have such cause of joy as the Children of Zion, sing O daughter of Zion, shout O Jerusalem, be glad and rejoice with all thy heart O daughter of Jerusalem. And why so? a thousand reasons might be rendered; but here is one; a prime one, Christ is risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that sleep. A commemoration of Christ's resurrection hath ever been a means of rejoicing in God.

Some may object, what is Christ's resurrection to me? indeed if thou hast no part in Christ, the resurrection of Christ is nothing at all to thee; but if Christ be thine, then art thou risen with him, and in him; then all he did was in thy name, and for thy sake.

Others may object, supposing Christ's resurrection mine, what am I better? how? do not all the privileges of Christ flow from the power and virtue of his resurrection, as well as death? tell me what is thy state? what possibly can be the condition of thy soul, wherein thou mayst not draw sweet from Christ's resurrection? As—

1. Is thy conscience in trouble for sin? the Apostle tells thee, the answer of a good conscience towards God, is by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.
2. Art thou afraid of condemnation? the Apostle tells thee he was delivered for our offenses, and he was raised again for our justification.
3. Dost thou question thy regeneration? the Apostle tells thee he hath begotten us again by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.
4. Art thou distressed, persecuted, troubled on every side? the Apostle tells thee wherein now consists thy confidence, comfort, courage; to wit, in the life of Christ, in the resurrection of Christ. We always bear about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life of Jesus might also be made manifest in our body; for we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh. And thus Beza interprets those following words, knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise us up also by Jesus?(i.e.) unto a civil resurrection from our troubles; Paul was imprisoned, and in part martyred, but by the virtue of Christ's resurrection he foresaw his enlargement. And this interpretation Beza grounds on the word following, and foregoing, wherein Paul compares his persecutions to a death, and his preservation from them to a life; as he had done before also, chap. 1. v. 9, 10.

5. Art thou afraid of falling off, or of falling away? why, remember, that the immutable force and perpetuity of the new covenant is secured by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David; this the Apostle applies to the resurrection of Christ; as the bottoming of that sure covenant, and as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David.

6. Art thou afraid of death, hell and the power of the grave? why, now remember that Christ is risen from the dead, and by his resurrection death is swallowed up in victory; so that now thou mayst sing, O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? now thanks be to God which hath given us victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. It is the voice of Christ, thy dead men shall live together, with my dead body shall they arise; awake and sing ye that dwell in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead: David was so lifted up with this resurrection, that he cries it out, therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth, my flesh also shall rest in hope; for thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy holy one to see corruption. But especially Job was so exceedingly transported with this, that he breaks out into these ecstasies, O that my words were now written, O that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead, in the rock forever! for I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms shall destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me. No man ever since Christ did speak more clearly of Christ's resurrection and his own, than Job did here before Christ. Observe in it, O my soul, Job's wish, and the matter wished: his wish was, that certain words which had been cordial to him, might remain to memory; and this wish hath three wishes in one. 1. That they might be written. 2. That they might be registered in a book, enrolled upon record, as public instruments, judicial proceedings, or whatsoever is most authentical. 3. That they might be engraven in stone, and in the hardest stone, the rock; records might last long, yet time might injure them, and these words he would have last forever; O that they were graven in the rock forever! Moses and Job are said to have lived at one time; now Moses writ the Law in stone, and considering that these words were Gospel, there was no reason the Law should be in tables of stone, and the Gospel in sheets of paper; no, no; it were fit that this should be as firm and durable as that; Oh that my words were written, Oh that they were printed in a book, &c.

2. The matter wished, or the words he would have written, are these, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I shall live again. Here's first his Redeemer and his rising. 2. His own rising and his seeing God. O this was the matter of his joy, his Redeemer must rise again; and he must rise too, and see his Redeemer; it was a point that exceedingly ravished and revived Job, and therefore he iterates the same thing over and over, I shall see God, and I shall see him for myself, and I shall see him with my eyes, and not with others. As Christ said of Abraham, Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad. So it appears of his Servant Job, he saw Christ's day; both his first day, and his latter day, and he rejoiced and was glad.

Away, away all scrupulous doubtful, dumpish thoughts! consider what joys were of old, at the foresight of Christ's resurrection; but especially what joy was all the World over when he rose again from the dead; then came the Angels from heaven, and appeared in white; then the Sun danced for joy, (so it is storied) or shone sooner, and brighter than ever it did before, then I am sure the Disciples were exceeding glad, when they saw the Lord; yea so glad that they believed not for joy; it is worthy our observing, to see how all the primitive Saints were affected with this news; and because of it, with the very day on which Christ arose, some call it, The first day of joy and gladness; and because of the joy occasioned on this day, the Apostles (say they) devoted the first day of the week to the honor and service of Jesus Christ. Augustine applies the words of the Psalm unto this day, This is the day which the Lord hath made, let us be glad, and rejoice in it, Psal. 118.24. Ignatus who lived in the Apostles age, and was John's Disciple, calls it the Queen, the Princess, the Lady Paramount among the other weekly days. Chrysostom calls it a Royal day, and Gregory Nazianzen orat. 42. saith, it is higher than the highest, and, with admiration, wonderful above other days. Certainly the Lord's day was in high esteem with the ancient Church, and the principle motive was because of Christ's resurrection from the dead. O that on these days we could rejoice in the Lord, and again rejoice; it is observed, that, Many Christians look upon broken-heartedness, and much grieving and weeping for sin, as if it were the great thing that God delighteth in, and requireth of them; and therefore they bend all their endeavors that way, they are still striving with their hearts to break them more, and they think no Sermon, no Prayer, no Meditation, speed so well with them as that which can help them to grieve or weep; but O Christians understand, and consider, (saith my Author) that all your sorrows are but preparatives for your joys, and that it is an higher and sweeter work that God calls you to, and would have you spend your time and strength in. Delight thyself in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart. —Never take your hearts to be right, till they be delighting themselves in their God: when you kneel down in Prayer, labor so to conceive of God, and bespeak him, that he may be your delight? do so in hearing, and reading, and meditating, and in your feasting on the flesh and blood of Jesus Christ at his Supper. Especially improve the happy opportunity of the Lord's day, wherein you may wholly devote yourselves unto this work. O spend more of this day in spiritual rejoicing, especially in commemoration of Christ's resurrection (yea and of the whole work of redemption) or else you will not answer the institution of the Lord.

SECT. VIII. Of Calling on Jesus in that Respect.

8. Let us Call on Jesus; that is to say —

1. Let us pray that Christ's resurrection may be ours, and that we may be more and more assured of it. Let us say with the Apostle, O that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection; O that I may find the working of that power in my soul, which was shown in the resurrection of Christ from the dead; O that the Spirit of holiness, which quickened Christ from the dead; would by the same glorious power beget holiness, and faith, and love, and all other graces in my poor soul, O that Christ would by his resurrection apply his active, and passive obedience to me; O that he would be to me the Lord of the living, and the Prince of life, that he would overcome in me the death of sin, and that he would regenerate, quicken, renew, and fashion me by the power of godliness to become like himself. O that all the virtue, power, privileges, and influences of Christ's resurrection might be conferred on me, and that I might feel them working in me every day more and more.

2. Let us praise God for Christ's resurrection, and for all the privileges flowing from Christ's resurrection into our souls, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us again by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Christ is risen, by his resurrection he hath justified, sanctified, quickened, saved our souls; and therefore, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; surely God requires a thousand thousand Hallelujah's, and that we should bless him upon a thousand-stringed instrument: here is fuel enough, the Lord kindle a great fire in everyone of our hearts, to burn out all our lusts, and to enflame all our hearts with a love to Jesus Christ. Can we ever too much praise him for all his actings in our behalf? are not all God's creatures called upon to rejoice with us, and to bless God for his redeeming of us? Sing O ye heavens, for the Lord hath done it, shout ye lower part of the earth, break forth into singing ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein, for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel. This is the duty we shall do in heaven, and I believe we are never more in heaven (whiles on earth) then when we are in this exercise of praising God, and blessing God for Jesus Christ. Come, let us praise God for Christ, and especially on this day, called therefore the Lord's day, because of the resurrection of Jesus Christ: it is the design of God, to glorify Christ redeeming us, as much, or more than he glorified himself creating us; and therefore he purposely unhinged the Sabbath from the last day to the first day of the week, that it might be spent as a weekly day of praise and thanksgiving for the more glorious work of our redemption; that love might not only be equally admired with power, but even go before it. It is the advice of a godly Divine, that we should improve the happy opportunity of the Lord's day wholly to devote ourselves to his work. And he adviseth Ministers and others, that They spend more of those days in praise and thanksgiving, and be briefer in their confessions and lamentations; — that they would make it the main business of their solemn assemblies on those days to sound forth the high praises of their Redeemer, and to begin here the praises of God and the Lamb: which they must perfect in heaven forever.—That they would spend a greater part of those days in Psalms, and solemn Praises to their Redeemer: — & that some Hymns and Psalms might be invented as fit for the state of the Gospel-Church, and worship to laud the Redeemer, come in the flesh, as expressly as the work of grace is now expressed. O that these directions were but in practice? O that our Churches, and Families would make our streets to resound with the Echo's of our praises! O that this were the burden of each duty on these days. Now blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

SECT. IX. Of conforming to Jesus in that respect.

9. Let us conform to Jesus in respect of his resurrection.—

In this particular I shall examine these Queries. 1. Wherein we must conform? 2. How this conformity is wrought? 3. What are the means of this conformity as on our parts?

For the first wherein we must conform? I answer in a word, in our vivification. There is a resemblance of our vivification to Christ's resurrection; and if we would know wherein the Analogy, or resemblance of our vivification to Christ's resurrection doth more especially consist; the Apostle's answer is very express, Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father; even so we also should walk in newness of life. Christ's resurrection was to newness of life; it was a new life, a life different from that which he lived before, and so is our vivification a new life; it is a life of a new principle; of new actings, of a new state, of a new relation, of a new income, and of a new kind, or manner.

1. It is a life of a new principle, before vivification our principle was the flesh, or word, or devil; In time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the Prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience; but now we have a new principle, a Spirit of holiness, or sanctification, the Spirit of God; even the same spirit which dwelt in the human nature of Christ, and raised him; If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you; it is an in-dwelling Spirit; even as the soul dwells in the body, so doth the holy Ghost dwell in the soul of a regenerate person, animating, and actuating, and enlivening it. This is the new principle that God puts in us after vivification.

2. It is a life of new actings. According to our principle, so be our actings; They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are of the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. If some men hear of a good bargain they mind it, they find their souls going on with much activity, there is something in them proportionable to that which is propounded; but if they hear of Divine love, and of the riches of Grace, they find their souls flat, immovable, and dead, they mind no such things; now on the other side, they that are vivified, according to their principle, they put forth their power more or less; if they hear of the glorious things of the Gospel, they find inward workings (unless it be under a temptation) they find their souls drawn out to close with the goodness of the thing propounded: They mind the things of the Spirit, (i.e.) they muse, and meditate, and think on these things; they affect them, and love them, and like them, they care for them, and seek after them with might and main; they live in the Spirit, they walk in the Spirit, they are led by the Spirit, they serve in newness of the Spirit. How might we try our vivification even by these actings of our principle within? what? do we mind the things of the Spirit? do we find things heavenly and spiritually to be sweet, and savoury, and best pleasing to us? is the Sabbath our delight; do we long for it before it come? do we rejoice in it when it is come? do we consecrate it as glorious to the Lord? do we come to the exercises of Religion, whether public or private, with much delight, and with cheerfulness, as to a feast? what is this but the life of God? but if these things be harsh and unpleasant, if the Sabbath be a burden, if holy exercises be irksome and tedious, if in attending on the Word we are heavy and drouzy, and we find no relish, no sweet, no savor in the ointments of Christ's, no goings out of the soul with an activity to the things propounded, O then deceive not ourselves, we have no good evidence of our vivification.

3. It is a life of a new state; before vivification we are in an unjustified estate; sins are unpardoned, we are unreconciled; And such were some of you (said the Apostle to his Corinthians) but now ye are washed, now ye are sanctified, now ye are justified in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by the Spirit of our God. This justification denotes a state, and is universal and unalterable. I know Arminians deny such a state, for as by their Doctrine no man can be absolutely Elected till he die, so neither absolutely justified; for (say they) he may fall into such sins, as that though formerly justified, yet now he may be condemned; yea, today he may be justified; and tomorrow thrown out of that estate. But against this we hold, that those that are once justified, are never again cast out of God's favor. As Christ once died, but rose again never to die more, death hath no more power over him; so a justified man once allied to God through Jesus Christ doth from that time forward as necessarily live, as Christ himself by whom he doth live; there is an immortal and indissoluble union betwixt Christ the Head, and every Believer; our justification depends not on our own strength, but it is built on Christ himself, who is the same yesterday, and today, and forever; and hence it is that a justified man can no more cease to live in this state of justification, than Christ can cease to live in Heaven.

4. It is a life of new relations; this immediately follows our state: if once we are justified; then we are related to God, and Christ, and to the Covenant of Grace. 1. To God. Before we were vivified, God and we stood at a distance, God was our enemy, and we were his enemies; At that time (saith the Apostle) ye were without God in the world, but now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were afar off, are made near by the blood of Christ. God that was a stranger, stands now in near relation, he is a Friend, a Father, a God All-sufficient to us. 2. We are related to Christ; before vivification we were a Christless people, At that time ye were without Christ; but now we are united to Christ, and (which is more) now we make use of Christ with the Father: O the comfort of this relation! A troubled spirit looks on his sins, and they thrust him away from God, What communion hath light with darkness? but then comes the Lord Jesus, and takes him by the hand, and leads him to the Father, and says, Come soul, come along with me, and I will carry thee to the Father, wilt thou make use of me? It is the Apostles saying, that through him we have an access by one spirit unto the Father; we have a leading by the hand; Christ hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. By nature we are severed from God, and if he manifested himself, he is dreadful to us, Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you that he will not hear; but in Christ we approach boldly before him, because Christ hath took away our sins which are the mountains of separation; in Christ we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him. Here is the difference betwixt a man related to Christ, and a mere stranger; the stranger knows not how to go to God; God stands as a Judge, he is as a Malefactor, the Law an Accuser, Sin his Indictment; and what is the issue? Every mouth is stopped, and all the world is guilty before God. But he that is related to Christ, Christ takes him by the hand, and so he goes with boldness and confidence, and pleads his righteousness before the Father; Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's Elect, it is God that justifieth, who is he that condemneth? it is Christ that dieth, yea rather that is risen again? In the very matter and cause of justification, wherein no man can stand, or dare to appear, or show his face; a Christian coming with Christ his Advocate, he dares to appear, and to plead his case, and to stand upon interrogatories with God himself, yea, and to ask God himself (humbly and with reverence) what he hath to lay to his charge? what more he will, or can in justice require for satisfaction, than his Surety hath done for him?—3. We are related to the Covenant of Grace; before vivification we had no such relation; At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise; But now the Covenant is ours, that fountain or bundle of promises is ours, God is our God, and we are his people. O the blessedness of this privilege! Happy is the people that be in such a case, yea happy is the people whose God is the Lord. The Covenant is reckoned all happiness; it contains in its bowels all benefits in Heaven, or under Heaven; as a man may say of anything he hath in possession, This is mine; so may they who are in covenant with God, say, He is mine, I have God himself in my possession. How might we try our vivification even by this communion we have with God, and Christ, and the Covenant of Grace? Christians! look into your own hearts, have you not felt in your approaches to God some raisings or workings of the Spirit of the Lord, concluding the pardon of your sins? hath not Christ taken you by the hand, and led you to the Father? it may be your own guilt made you afraid, but the discovery of Jesus your righteousness made you bold to go to God; you felt boldness coming in on this ground, because all your approaches or drawings near to God were bottomed on Jesus; hath not God married you to himself? hath he not conveyed himself (through his holy Spirit) into your own hearts by way of covenant? Hath he not sometimes whispered to your souls, Thou art mine? and have not your souls echoed back again unto the Lord, Thou art mine? much of the truth of all this would appear, if Christians would but daily observe the movings of their own hearts; for as he that hath the Spirit of Satan, shall ever find him putting on and provoking to evil, so he that hath the Spirit of God shall most-what (or at least frequently) find and feel it active, and stirring in the heart, to the reforming of the whole man; the holy Spirit is not idle, but he rules, and governs, and maintains his Monarchy in us, and over us, in spite of the power of Satan's, and privy conspiracy of a man's own flesh.

5. It is a life of a new in-come; I mean of a saving in-come, as of Grace, Power, Light, &c. Before vivification there was no such in-come; A man before his conversion might hear, and pray, and do all duties; but alas! he feels no sweet, no power, no virtue, no communion with Christ. If I might appeal unto such, I beseech you tell me, you have been often at prayer, what have you gotten there? what in-come hath appeared? if you answer truly, you cannot but say I went to prayer, and I was satisfied that I had prayed; I never observed whether I had got any power, or strength, anything of mortification, or vivification; I never found any lively work of God on my soul, either in prayer or after prayer; or you have been often at this Ordinance of hearing the Word, what have you gotten there? what in-come hath appeared? Why truly nothing at all; it may be a little more knowledge, but nothing that I can say was a saving work of God; someone that sate with me in the same seat found much stirrings of God? Oh what meltings, chearings, warmings of the spirit had such a one? and such a one? the Word was to them as honey, and as the honey comb, but to me it was as dry bread; I found no sweet, I got no good at all. Or you have been often tossing the Bible, and you have observed this or that promise; but O what in-come hath appeared? Surely nothing at all; I wonder at Saints that tell of so much sweetness, and comfort, and ravishing of heart, that with joy they should draw water out of these Wells of salvation, Whereas I find therein no joy, no refreshing at all: Ah poor soul, thou art in a sad case, thou art not yet vivified, thou hast not the life of God in thee. After vivification thou wilt in the use of Ordinances (at least sometimes, if not frequently) feel the saving in-comes of God. In prayer thou wilt feel the spirit breathing in, and carrying up thy soul above itself, plainly declaring there is another power than thy own, which makes thee not only to exceed others, but thyself also; in hearing of the Word thou wilt see the Windows of heaven set wide open, and all manner of spiritual comforts showered down upon thee; thou wilt hear the rich treasury of everlasting glory and immortality unlocked and opened, so that thou mayst tumble thyself amidst the mountains of heavenly pearls, and golden pleasures, joys that no heart can comprehend but that which is weaned from all worldly pleasures, As it is written, how beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things? In meditation of the promises, or of Divine love, thou wilt find meltings, quickenings, encouragings, filling thy heart with gladness, and glorying, and thy mouth with praises and songs of rejoicings: O What fountains of life are the promises to a living man, to a soul that is vivified? what food? what strength? what life is a thought of Christ, of Heaven, and of God's love to a spiritual man? whereas all these glorious things of the Gospel are to the natural man but as a withered flower, a sealed book, a dry and empty cistern; he hath no use of them.

6. It is a life of another kind, or manner. Before vivification our life was but death, because we ourselves were but dead in sin even whilst alive. She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth; and you were dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh. But after vivification we live, how live? a spiritual life, I live by the faith of the Son of God; an heavenly life, for our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; an immortal life, Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over him;—likewise reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. You know the meaning of Christ; Whosoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die; he shall never die a spiritual death, never come under the dominion of sin, never totally fall away from grace; that incorruptible seed by which he is regenerate shall abide in him forever. If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin, but the spirit is life because of righteousness; the body indeed is subject to corporal death, through the remainders of sin, but the Spirit it life, even that little spark of grace, through the most perfect righteousness of Christ imputed, is life here, and shall be life hereafter, even forever. And herein is our vivification answerable to Christ's resurrection; like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, raised up to a new life, even so we also should walk in the newness of life.

For the second question, how is this conformity or vivification wrought? I shall answer only to the state, and so our vivification is usually wrought in us in this manner. As first, in the understanding. Secondly, in the will.

First, the understanding lets in the verity and truth of what the Gospel hath recorded. In him was life, and the life was the light of men.— I am the bread of life, he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.— I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. I am the way, the truth, and the life.—And this is the record that God hath given to us, eternal life, and this life is in his Son; he that hath the Son, hath life, and he that hath not the Son, hath not life.

2. This light let in, the understanding thence inferreth as to a man's own self, that by the assistance of the Spirit of holiness, who raised up Jesus from the dead, it's possible for him to attain this life; others have attained it, and why not he? You hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins; here's a president for a sin-sick soul; In time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the Prince of the power of the air, the Spirit that now worketh in the Children of disobedience; this was the state of the Ephesians. But were they all? no, no; ye, and we, also, among whom also we had all our conversation in times past.—But God who is rich in mercy for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ,—that in ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us through Christ Jesus. Christ's dealings with some are as flags and patterns of mercy hung forth to tell, and to bring others in: whence the understanding infers, it's possible for a dead soul, yea for my dead soul to live; others have lived, and why may not I? I discover in those Scriptures, even in these presidents a door of hope to myself; why Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean;—yea, if I may but touch thy garment, I shall be whole; if thou wouldst but say, O ye dry bones hear the word of the Lord, then breath would enter into me, and I should live; surely if Christ be risen again from the dead, there's no impossibility but I may rise; if others have been raised by the virtue of Christ's resurrection, why may not I? However, this may seem to be little or nothing, yet considering the soul in a mourning, dark, disconsolate frame, under deep apprehensions of sin, guilt, and wrath; full of confusions, distractions, despondences, staggering and sinking terrors; it will find it something, yea it will look on it as a glorious work to discover, but the morning Star, through so much darkness anything of life, in such a valley and shadow of death.

3. The understanding hath yet some brighter believing beams; it confidently closeth with this truth, that it is the will of the Lord that he should come, and live, and believe, and lay hold on Christ; it apprehends the particular designs of mercy to him, and doth really principle the soul with this, that God doth particularly call, invite, and bid him come to Christ the Fountain of life, for life. Now the understanding takes in general Gospel-calls in particular to himself. It is my poor languishing soul which the Lord speaks to, when he says, come to me all ye that are weary, and I will give you rest.—

Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. Surely this is a great work when set home by the Lord, that the soul acts in its addresses to Christ in the strength of a particular call from God.

2. And now the answer to this call, is wrought up in the renewed will; as thus.—

1. The will summons all its confidences, and calls them off from every other bottom, to bestow them wholly upon Christ; and this consists in our voluntary renouncing of all other helps, excepting Jesus Christ alone; now the soul says to Idols, Get ye hence, Ashur shall not save us, we will not ride upon horses, neither will we say anymore to the works of our hands, ye are our God's. Ashur shall not save us. Not only cannot, but shall not save us; now as the soul is dissatisfied in Judgment, as to the resting on anything but Christ alone, so the heart and will is disaffected to all other helps but Christ alone; now it renounceth its own righteousness, and worthiness; not only because of their inability to save, but mainly because their glory is swallowed up in that unmatched excellency, which appears in the way of life and salvation by Jesus Christ. It calls home dependence from every other object.

2. Hereupon there is a willing and cheerful receiving of Christ, and resignation of ourselves to his actual dispose, to quicken us, and save us in his own way. A great part of the answer of Faith to the call of Christ lies in this; for as Faith sees life and salvation in the hands of Christ, so it considers it to be given forth in the methods of Christ; and so believing lies not only in assent, but consent of heart, that Christ shall save us in his own way; this is called A receiving of Christ; As many as received him, to them he gave power to become the Sons of God. Many a soul would be saved by Christ, that sticks and boggles at his methods; they will not pass to happiness by holiness; nor set him up as a King and Lord, whom they could consent to set up as a Savior: Oh but now Christ that stood at the door, and knocked, is received in; consent hath made up the match, and the door is opened that never shall be shut again.

3. Upon this follows the souls resting and relying; the souls confidence and dependence upon Jesus Christ for life and for salvation; this closeth up the whole business of believing unto righteousness; those various expressions used in Scripture of committing our way and selves to God; of casting our care upon God, of rolling ourselves on him, of trusting in him, of hoping in his mercy, &c. wrapped up faith in this affianced dependence, not without some mixture of confidence, and resolved resting upon Jesus Christ: a clear beholding of God in Christ, and of Christ in the promises, doth present such variety and fullness of Arguments to bear up hope and affianced, that the heart is resolved: and so resolved that we commit ourselves, and give our souls in charge to Christ, I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.

4. The upshot of all, is this, that the same close which the soul makes in believing with Jesus Christ as to justification, and righteousness, is not fruitless to this effect of conveying life and virtue from Jesus Christ as to grace and holiness; for that union which then and thereby comes to be enjoined with Christ, is such an union as is fruitful in begetting a quickening power and principle in the heart; and this is that which we ordinarily intend by saying, saving faith to be operative; that faith which brings forth nothing of holiness, what is it but a dead faith? As the body without the Spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also. Justification and sanctification are twins of a birth; and hence it is, that vivification (which is one part of sanctification) is wrought in the soul after the self-same manner: As first, the understanding is illightened. 2. The will is changed. 3. All the Affections are renewed. 4. The internals being quickened, there ensueth the renewing of the body with the outward actions, life, and conversation. And now is fulfilled that saying of Christ in a spiritual sense, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. Now is the soul vivified, now it begins to live the life of God, now it feels the power of Christ's resurrection, and is made conformable to it: And immediately upon this, joy is made in heaven by the Angels, God himself applauding it, For this my Son was dead, and is alive; he was lost, and is found.

Thus is the state of vivification wrought. I know it is not in all men after one manner for every circumstance; the methods of God are exceeding various; and we cannot limit the holy one of Israel: I have sometimes concerning this, desired the communication of other thoughts, whom I looked upon as such, who had more than ordinary communication with Christ's Spirit; and from one of such I received this answer, I must profess to you, I have in all my speculations in divinity found dissatisfaction in the writings of men in nothing more, than is the work of clear and distinct conceptions concerning regeneration; which yet is of such a Cardinal importance, is, that the great doors of heaven move upon the hinges of it; the Lord enlighten us more, for we see but in part, and prophesy but in part.

For the third question, what are the means of this conformity, or vivification which we must use on our parts? I shall answer herein both to the state, and growth of our vivification. As—

1. Wait and Attend upon God in the ministry of the word, this is a means whereby Christ ordinarily effecteth this vivification. By this means it was that those dead bones were quickened in Ezekel's prophesy, viz. by the Prophets prophesying upon them. And he said unto me, son of man,—prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones hear the Word of the Lord; And by this means it is that dead souls are quickened; the Ministry of the Word is the Trumpet of Jesus Christ, when that sounds, who knows but he may quicken the dead? hearken therefore to this Word of God.

2. Act saith upon the Lord Jesus as to justification. As is the clearness and fixedness of our souls in bottoming ourselves on Christ for righteousness, so will be our quickness, and successful progress in the work of holiness; because Mary's sins which were many were forgiven her, therefore she loved much; but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little. Many a soul loseth much of vivification, for want of clearness in its justification, or for want of settledness, and stronger measure of acting faith. Oh what life would be raised as to holiness? what working, binding, filling the laws of love, retribution, thankfulness would there be, when we see ourselves clearly reconciled with God, and wrapped up in the foldings of everlasting love?

3. Trace every Ordinance, and every duty for the appearances of the Son of God. Be much in Prayer, hearing, reading, fellowship with the Saints, living in the fullness of Sacraments; be much in secret conversings with God, in meditation, exp•s•ulation, enquiries searchings; and (which is a precious work) be much in diligent watching of, and hearkening and listening to the movings, workings, hints, int•mations of the Spirit of God; be much in observing the methods, and interpreting the meanings and language of God in all his secret dispensations with the soul. Certainly there will be abund•nce of the life of God conveyed to him that walks in these paths. Blessed are they that dwell in thy house, might David well say; and one Reason is pertinent to this case, because, In our fathers house is bread enough, and to spare: while the Prodigal that goes out from it shall feed upon husks, and with Ephraim swallow up the East-wind. Oh for a Spirit of Prayer, Meditation, &c. Oh for a Spirit even swallowed up in communion with God! Thou meetest him that worketh righteousness, and those that remember thee in thy ways.

4. Look much at Christ raised, Christ Glorified; Christ's Resurrection was the beginning of his glory, and therein is comprehended both the glory that draws desires towards Christ, and the grace and power that establisheth faith in its dependency; They looked unto him, and were lightened—unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens; behold as the eyes of the servants look unto the hand of their Masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her Mistress, so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God. It is said of Moses, that he endured affliction, as seeing him who is invisible: Oh could we keep our hearts in a more constant view, and believing meditation of the glory of Christ, our faces would certainly bring some beams of Divinity with them from the Mount; We all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same Image from glory to glory. The very beholding of Christ hath a mighty conforming and assimilating virtue to leave the impressions of glory upon our Spirits.

5. See our own Personal vivification linked inseparably unto, and bottomed unremoveably upon the resurrection of Christ; when we can by faith get a sight of this, it is not to speak how courageously and successfully the soul will grapple in the controversies of the Lord against the Devil, and our own deceitful hearts; with what strength could Joshua, Gideon, &c. go on, when backed with a promise, and their Spirits settled in the persuasion of it? and what use will the promises be in this kind? and (more than all) the life and resurrection of Jesus Christ, when we can clearly and steadfastly rest upon this, that there is an inseparable connection betwixt the resurrection of Christ and our personal holiness, and perseverance to the end? Oh that I could act my faith more frequently on Christ's resurrection, so that at last I could see it by the light of God to be a destined principle of my vivification in particular! what a blessed means would this be?

6. Walk as we have Christ Jesus for an example. This example of Christ, though it be not ours, as it is the Socinians totum Christi, yet certainly it yields much to our vivification; who can deny but that acting with the pattern ever in ones eye is very advantageous? come then, and if we would live the life of God, let us live as Christ lived after his resurrection. But how is that; I answer.—

1. See that we return to the grave no more; take heed of ever returning to our former state; you may say, what needs this Caveat? hath not Christ said, He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die? or never fall away? I answer it is true, they shall never totally and finally fall away, yet they may fall foully and fearfully; they may lose that strength and vigor, that sense and feeling which sometimes they had; they may draw so nigh to the grave, as that both by themselves and others they may be accounted amongst them that go down to the pit, free among the dead, as Heman saith of himself. The Apostle saith something that might even startle Christians; he tells of some who have been once enlightened (by the Word) and have tasted of the heavenly gift (some flashes of inward joy and peace) and were made partakers of the holy Ghost (the common gifts and graces of the Spirit) and have tasted the good Word of God (have found some relish in the sweet and saving Promises of the Gospel) and the powers of the world to come (have had some ravishing apprehensions of the joys and glory in Heaven) and yet fall away (by a total Apostasy.) Christians! how far goes this? I know it is said only of such who have a name to live, and no more; but surely it gives a warning to us all that we come not nigh the verge, the brink of the grave; again, let us not give way to any one sin, so as to live in it.

2. Let us evidence our resurrection; Christ being raised, he shown himself alive by many infallible proofs; so let us evidence our vivification by many infallible proofs; (i.e.) Let us yield up ourselves unto God; as those that are alive from the dead; let us walk as men of another world. If ye be risen with Christ seek the things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God; let us serve God in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life; surely this is the end for which we are delivered out of the hands of our enemies, sin, death, and hell. Ye were sometimes darkness (during your abode in the grave of sin) but now (being risen) ye are light in the Lord, walk therefore as children of light. Walk] (i.e.) bestir yourselves in the works of God; Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. When God doth let the Sun of Righteousness arise, it is fit we should be about the business of our souls. We see that the night is dedicated to rest, and therefore God that doth order all things sweetly, he draws a curtain of darkness about us, as which is friendly to rest; like a Nurse, that when she will have her little one sleep, she casts a clothe over the face, and hides the light every way; but when this natural Sun ariseth, then men go out to their work: so must we, though in the darkness of the night we shorted in sin, yet now we must bestir ourselves, seeing the Sun of the spiritual world is risen over us.

And yet when all is done, let us not think that our vivification in this life will be wholly perfect: as it is with our mortification, in the best, it is but an imperfect work; so it is with our vivification; it is only gradual, and never perfected till grace be swallowed up of glory. Only let us ever be in the use of the means, and let us endeavor a further renovation of the new man, adding one grace to another, To faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, to temperance patience, to patience godliness, &c. till we perfect holiness in the fear of God, till we shine with those Saints in glory at perfect day.

Thus far we have Looked on Jesus as our Jesus in his resurrection, and during the time of his abode on earth. Our next work is to Look on Jesus carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his ascension into Heaven; and in his session at God's right hand; and in his mission of the holy Spirit.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS In his Ascension, Session, and Mission of his Spirit. The Eight Book. PART VIII.

CHAP. I.

Heb. 12.2. Looking unto Jesus—who is set down at the right hand of the Throne of God.

SECT. I. Of Christ's Ascension, and of the manner how.

THUS far we have traced Jesus in his actings for us, until the day in which he was taken up. That which immediately follows, is his Ascension, Session at God's right hand, and Mission of his holy Spirit; in prosecution of which, as in the former, I shall first lay down the object, and secondly direct you how to look upon it.

The object is threefold. 1. He ascended into Heaven. 2. He sate down at God's right hand. 3. He sent down the holy Ghost.

1. For the Ascension of Christ, this was a glorious design, and contains in it a great part of the salvation of our souls. In prosecution of this, I shall show first that he ascended. 2. How he ascended. 3. Whither he ascended. 4. Why he ascended.

1. That he ascended. 1. The types prefigure it, Then said the Lord to me, this gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened;—it is for the Prince, the Prince he shall sit in it to eat bread before the Lord, he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same. As the gate of the Holy of Holies was shut against every man but the High Priest; so was that gate of Heaven shut against all, so that none could enter in by their own virtue and efficacy but only our Prince and great high Priest, the Lord Jesus Christ, indeed he hath opened it for us, and entered into it in our place and stead, Whither the fore-runner is for us entered, even Jesus made an high Priest forever after the order of Melchizedek. 2. The Prophets foresaw it, I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him, and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a Kingdom. 3. The Evangelists relate it, He was received up into heaven.— He was carried up into heaven. 4. The eleven witness it, For while they beheld he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. 5. The holy Angels speak it, For while they looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. 6. The blessed Apostles in their several Epistles, ratify and confirm it, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men,—he that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens.— Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, Angels and Authorities, and Powers being made subject unto him.

2. How he ascended. The manner of his Ascension is discovered in these particulars. —1. He ascended, blessing his Apostles, While he blessed them he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven. It is some comfort to Christ's Ministers that though the world hate them, Christ doth bless them; yea he parted with them in a way of blessing; as Jacob leaving the world, blessed his Sons; so Christ leaving the world, blessed his Apostles, and all the faithful Ministers of Christ, unto the end of the world. Some add, that in these Apostles, not only Ministers, but all the elect to the end of the world are blessed: The Apostles were then considered as common persons receiving this blessing for all us, and so those words uttered at the same time are usually interpreted, Lo, I am with you always even to the end of the world. This was the last thing that Christ did on earth, to show that by his death he had redeemed us from the curse of the Law, and that now going to heaven he is able to bless us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places.

2. He ascended visibly in the view of the Apostles; while they beheld he was taken up; he was not suddenly snatched from them, as Elija was, nor secretly and privily taken away, as Enoch was; but in the presence of them all, both his Apostles and Disciples, he ascended up into Heaven; but why not in the view of all the Jews, that so they might know that he was risen again and gone to Heaven? surely this was the meaning; God would rather that the main points of faith should be learned by hearing, than by seeing; however Christ's own Disciples were taught the same by sight, that they might better teach others which should not see; yet the ordinary means to come by faith is hearing; how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard?—so then, faith cometh by hearing; and hearing by the word of God. And as for the Jews (saith the Apostle) have they not heard? yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world.

3. He ascended principally by the mighty power of his God-head; thus never any ascended up into heaven but Jesus Christ; for though Enoch and Elijah were assumed into heaven, yet not by their own power, nor by themselves, it was God's power by which they ascended, and it was by the help and Ministry of Angels: there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire; and Elijah went up by a Whirl-wine into Heaven.

4. He ascended in a cloud, While they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. Hereby he shows that he is Lord of all the creatures; he had already trampled upon the earth, walked upon the sea, vanquished hell or the grave, and now the clouds received him, and the heavens are opened to make way for this King of Glory to enter in. When Christ shall come again, it is said that he shall come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.—Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting at the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. Which verifies that saying of the Angel, This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. He went up in clouds, and he shall come again in clouds.

5. He ascended in the found of a trumpet; not on earth, sounding Hosanna, but in Heaven, crying Hallelujah. So the Psalmist, God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet. Certainly great joy was in heaven at Christ's ascending thither: the very Angels struck up their Harps, and welcomed him thither with Hymns and Praises.

6. He ascended in triumph, as a Roman Victor ascended to the Capitol, or as David ascended after his conquest up to Zion. Now we read of two triumphal Acts in Christ's Ascension, whereof the first was his leading of his captives, and the second was the dispersing of his gifts: the Apostle and the Psalmist join both together, When he ascended up on high he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. 1. He led them captive who had captivated us. Death was led captive without a sting, Hell was led captive as one that had lost her victory, the Law was led captive, being rent and fastened to his Cross (as it were) Ensign wise; the Serpents head being bruised, was led before him in triumph, as was Golias's head by David returning from the victory; and this was the first Act of his triumph. 2. He gave gifts unto men: this was as the running of Conduits with wine, or as the casting abroad of new Coyn, or as the shutting up of Christ's triumph in his ascension up to heaven: what these gifts were we shall speak in the Mission of the holy Ghost; only thus much for the present.

SECT. II. Of the place whither he ascended.

3. Whither he ascended, the Gospel tells us into heaven; only Paul saith, that he ascended far above all heavens. But the meaning is, he went above all these visible Heavens into those heavenly Mansions, where the Angels, and the Spirits of the just have their abode. Or if the highest heavens be included, I see no absurdity in it; the highest Heaven, we usually call The Kingdom of Heaven; which is either Heaven material, or heaven spiritual; and first for the material Heaven, in some sense he may be said to ascend above that, both in respect of his Body, because the Body of Christ is more glorious than any material Heaven. And in respect of his soul, because the Soul of Christ is more blessed than all things else whatsoever. And 2, For the spiritual Heaven (i.e.) all Angelical or Heavenly perfections, he is said to ascend above them all, both in respect of his humiliation, because he hath vilified himself below all things, and therefore he is worthily exalted above all things; and in respect of his perfection, because the human nature of Christ is more excellent than any creature, it being joined to the Godhead by an hypostatical union. Some there are that understand this place of Christ's ascending far above all Heavens, not so much by a local motion, as by a Spiritual mutation and exaltation of his person; as earth heightened unto a flame changeth not its place only, but form and figure; so the person of our Savior was raised to a greatness and glory vastly differing from, and surmounting any image of things visible or invisible in this Creation; so it is fitly expressed, He was made higher than the Heavens, he was heightened to a splendor, enlarged to a capacity and compass above the brightest, and beyond the widest Heavens: he transcended all in the spirituality of his Ascension: but I shall not much insist on that.

SECT III. Of the Reasons why he Ascended.

4. Why he ascended, the Reasons are: 1. On Christ's part, that through his Passion he might pass to glory. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and so to enter into his glory? I shall not insist on that controversy, whether Christ merited for himself, this is without controversy, that by his Passion (I will not say he properly merited, but) he obtained glory, because he humbled himself so low, God exalted him above the Grave in his Resurrection, above the Earth in his Ascension, and above the Heavens in placing him at his right hand. And he ascended, that all those Prophecies which were foretold of Christ might be accomplished. Thou hast ascended on high. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the East. The types of this were Enoch's translation, Elijah's ascension, Sampson's transportation of the gates of Gezza into an high mountain, the high Priests going into the Holy of Holies, Seeing that we have a great high Priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God. Why all these prophecies, types, figures, must needs be accomplished, and therefore on his part it was necessary that Christ must ascend, and go into Heaven.

2. The Reasons on our part are.—

1. That in our stead he might triumph over sin, death, and hell. In his Resurrection he conquered, but in his Ascension he triumphed; now it was that he led sin, death, and devil in triumph at his Chariot wheels. And this is the meaning of the Psalmist, and of the Apostle, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive: He vanquished and triumphed over all our enemies; he overcame the world, he bound the devil, he spoiled hell, he weakened sin, he destroyed death, and now he makes a public triumphal show of them in his own Person; he led the captives bound to his chariot-wheels, as the manner of the Roman triumphs was, when the conqueror went up to the Capitol. It is to the same purpose that the Apostle speaks else-where, Having spoiled Principalities and Powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in himself; it is a manifest allusion to the manner of triumphs after victories amongst the Romans; first, they spoiled the enemy upon the place, ere they stirred off the field; and this was done by Christ on the Cross; and then they made a public triumphal show, they rid through the streets in the greatest state, and had all their spoils carried before them, and the Kings and Nobles whom they had taken, they tied to their chariots, and led them as captives; and this did Christ at his Ascension; Then he openly triumphed 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in himself, (i.e.) in his own Power and strength; other Conquerors do not thus; they conquer not in themselves, and by themselves, but Jesus Christ conquer•d 〈◇〉 himself, and therefore he triumphed in himself. And yet though he triumphed in himself, and by himself, it was not for himself only, but for us; which made the Apostle to triumph in his triumph, O death where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory? the sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the Law; but thanks be to God which giveth us victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. If I may speak out, what I think was this victory of Christ, I believe it was that honor given to him after his Resurrection by the conversion of enemies, by the amazements of the world, by the admiration of Angels, and especially by his sitting down at the right hand of Majesty on high; for therein is contained both his exaltation, and his triumph over all his enemies to the utmost.

2. That he might lead us the way, and open to us the doors of glory. It is a question whether ever those doors of Heaven were opened to any before Christ's Ascension? Christ tells us, In my Fathers house are many mansions, if it were not so, I would have told you, but I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, ye may be also. Some infer hence, as if there should be many outer courts, and many different places or states in glory; and yet there is one place whither the Saints should arrive at last, which was not then ready for them, and was not to be entered into, until the entrance of our Lord had made the preparation. Again, the Apostle tells us, that the Fathers received not the promises, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. Whence some infer that their conditions after death was a state of imperfection; and that they were placed in an outer court on this side Heaven, called Paradise, or Abraham's bosom; and thither also Christ went when he died, and was attended with the blessed Thief. For my part I shall not join with such who think all souls of Saints shall go to paradise, where they must remain till the day of judgment, and then, and not till then must enter into that heaven, called the third heaven, or the Kingdom of Heaven. Indeed some of the ancients make heaven, and the immediate receptacles of souls to be distinct places, both blessed, but hugely differing in degrees: And a modern writer is very confident, That no soul could enter into glory before our Lord entered; by whom we hope to have access; and to that purpose he cites those texts, John 14.2, 3. Heb. 11.40. But I see no ground, why the souls of Saints should be excluded heaven, either before or after Christ. As for that text of John 14.2. Christ saith, In my Fathers house are many mansions, not many outer courts, nor many different states; and as for the Fathers mentioned, Heb. 11.40. Surely they without us shall not be made perfect, and we without them shall not be made perfect in some sense until the day of judgment. But our Perfection is not in respect of a more glorious place, but in respect of that perfection whereof all the faithful shall be made partakers as well in body as in soul, at the resurrection of the just. Thus far I grant, that no soul ever entered into Heaven but by the virtue and power of Christ's Ascension, and that no soul and body jointly ever ascended (except Christ's types) before Christ himself opened those doors and lead the way; and in this respect he is called, The forerunner of his People.

3. That he might assure us that now he had run through all those Offices which he was to perform here on earth for our redemption. He that hath entered into his rest, hath also ceased from his own works, as God did from his. He was first to execute his Office, and then to enter into his rest; Though he were a Son, and so the inheritance were his own, yet he was to learn Obedience, by the things which he suffered, before he was made perfect, and so to become the Author of eternal Salvation unto all them that obey him. This was the argument which Christ used when he prayed to be glorified again with his Father, I have glorified thee on the earth, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do: And now O Father glorify thou me with thy own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. This was the order of the dispensation of Christ's Offices; his first work was a work of ministry, and Service in the Office of obedience and suffering for his Church; and this next work was the work of power and majesty in the protection and exaltation of his Church. and there was a necessity in this order. 1. In respect of God's Decree who had so fore-appointed it, Acts 2.23, 24.

2. In respect of God's justice, which must first be satisfied by obedience before any entrance into glory, Luke 24.26. 3. In respect of Christ's infinite Person, which being equal with God could not possibly be exalted without some preceding decent and humiliation: That he ascended (saith the Apostle) what is it but that he descended first into the lower parts of the earth?

4. In respect of our evidence and assurance; this is the sign that Christ hath finished the work of our redemption upon the earth; first, he was to act as our Surety, and then he was to ascend as our Head, our Advocate, as the first-fruits, the Captain, the Prince of life, the Author of salvation, the forerunner of his people.

4. That he might thoroughly convince the world of believers of their perfect righteousness, The Spirit when he comes (saith Christ) shall convince the world of sin, and righteousness, and of judgment—of sin, because they believe not on me;—of of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more. If Christ had not fulfilled all righteousness, there had been no going to heaven for him, nor remaining there; certainly God would have sent him down again to have done the rest, and the disciples should have seen him with shame sent back again; but his ascension to heaven proclaims openly. 1. That he hath completely finished the work he had to do for us here, that no more was to be done in this world for us, that the satisfactory work to justice was in itself finished. 2. That God was well pleased with Jesus Christ, and with what he had done and suffered for us; yea, God was so infinitely taken with him, and his oblation after his sufferings, as that he thinks it not fit to let him stay above forty days longer in this world; he cannot be without him in heaven, but he takes him up into glory, and gives him a name above every name. 3. That we have our share in heaven with him; he went not up as a single person, but virtually, or mystically he carried up all the Elect with him into glory: or otherwise how should the Spirit convince the world by his ascension of their righteousness? or otherwise how should the Son of God convince his Father by his Ascension of his righteousness? I look upon Jesus Christ going into Heaven, as a confident Debtor after payment going into a Court, and saying, Who hath anything to lay to his charge? all is paid, let the law take his course; when Christ entered into heaven, he seemed thus to challenge Justice, Make room here for me and mine, who should hinder? hath the law anything to say to these poor souls for whom I died? if any in heaven can make objection, here I am to answer in their behalf. Methinks I imagine a silence in heaven (as John speaks) at this speech; only Mercy smiles, and Justice gives in the Acquittance, and God sets Christ down at his right hand. 4. That he hath a new design to be acted in heaven for us: he is taken up into glory that he may act gloriously the second part of our righteousness, I mean that he might apply it, and send down his Spirit to convince us of it. He acted one part in the flesh, in the habit of a beggar, clothed with rags; but now he is gone to act the person of a Prince in robes of glory, and all this to manage our salvation in the richest way that may be. Three great things Christ acts for us now in glory. First, he is in place of an advocate for us, He liveth to intercede for us. He is always begging of favor and love for us, he lies there to stop whatever plea may be brought in against us by the devil, or Law; yea, he is there to get our fresh pardons for new sins. Secondly, he is the great provider and caterer for us; he is laying in a great stock and store of glory for us against we come there; In my Fathers house are many mansions.— I go to prepare a place for you. Jesus Christ went before to take up God's heart for us, and now he is drawing out the riches of love from God his Father, and laying them in bank for us, which made the Apostle say, My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus. Thirdly, he sends down his Spirit to convince us that Christ's righteousness is ours: indeed the means of procuring this was the life and death of Christ, but the means of applying this righteousness are those following acts of Christ's Resurrection, Ascension, Session, Intercession, &c. By his death he obtained righteousness for us, but by his Ascension he applies righteousness to us; now it is that in especial manner he convinceth us of righteousness, Because he is gone to his Father, and we shall see him no more.

5. That he might receive his Kingdom over us in the place appointed for it; look as Kings are crowned in the chief Cities of their Kingdoms, and keep their residence in their palaces near unto them, so it was decent that our Savior should be Crowned in Heaven, and there sit down at God's right hand; which immediately follows after his Ascension, to which we now come.

SECT. IV. Of God's right hand, and of Christ's Session there.

2. For the Session of Christ at God's right hand, which is a consequent following after his ascension into Heaven, I shall examine. 1. What is God's right hand? 2. What is it to sit there?

3. According to what nature doth Christ sit there? 4. Why is it that he sits at the right hand of God his Father in Glory?

1. What is this right hand of God? I answer, 1. Negatively, it is not any Corporal right hand of God; if we speak properly, God hath neither right hand, nor left hand; for God is not a body, but a spirit or spiritual substance. 2. Positively, the right hand of God is the Majesty, Dignity, Dominion, Power, and •••y of God. The right hand of the Lord is exalted, the right hand of the Lord doth valianity.— Thy right hand, O Lord, is become glorious in Power; thy right hand, O Lord, hath dashed in pieces the enemy. Thou hast a mighty arm, Strong is thy hand and high i• thy right hand.—Mine hand hath laid the foundations of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the Heavens. I know some of our Divines make this right hand of God something inferior to God's own power, but others speak of it as every way equal, and I know no absurdity to follow on it.

2. What is it to sit at the right hand of God? I answer, it is not any corporal Session at God's right hand, as some picture him with a crown of gold on his head sitting on a Throne, as if he had no other gesture in Heaven but sitting still; which Stephen contradicts, saying, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on th• right hand of God. The words sitting or standing are both metaphorical, and borrowed from the custom of Kings, who place those they honor, an• to whom they commit the Power of government, at their right hand; more particularly, this sitting at God's right hand implies two things. 1. his glorious exaltation. 2. The actual administration of his Kingdom.

1. Christ is exalted, Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow; this Session is the supreme dignity and glory given by the Father unto Christ after his Ascension; this Session is the peerless exaltation of the Mediator in his Kingdom of glory. But how was Christ exalted? I answer, 1. In regard of his divine nature; not really, or in itself. Impossible it was that the divine nature should receive any intrinsical improvement, or glory, because all fullness of glory essentially belonged unto it; but declaratory, or by way of manifestation; so it was that his D•vinity, during the time of his humiliation, lay hidden and overshadowed, as the light of a candle is hidden in a dark and close lanthorn; but now in his Session that Divinity and Glory which he had always with his Father was shown forth and declared, He was declared to be the Son of God with Power, both at his resurrection and at his Session. 2 I• regard of his human nature; and ye• that must be understood soberly, for I cannot think that Christ's human nature was at all exalted in regard of the grace of Pers•nal union, or in regard of the habitual perfections of his human soul, because he possessed all these from the beginning; but in regard of those interceptions of the beams of the Godhead, and Divine glory; and in respect of the restraints of that sense and sweetness, and feeling operations of the beatifical Vision, during his humiliation; in these respects Christ was exalted in his human nature, and had all the glory from the Diety communicated to it which possibly in any way it was capable of. There was a time, when the Office which Christ undertook for us made him a man of sorrows, but when he had finished that dispensation, then he was filled with unmatchable glory which before his Session he enjoyed not; there was a time when the natural consequence and flowings of Christ's glory from that personal union was stayed and hindered, by special dispensation, for the working of our salvation; but when that miraculous stay was once removed, and the work of our redemption fully finished, then he was exalted beyond the capacity, or comprehension of all the Angels of heaven, To which of the Angels said he at any time, sit at my right hand? in this respect it is said that God highly exalted him; exalted he was in his Resurrection, Ascension, but never so high as at his Session; in his Resurrection he was exalted with Jonah from the lower parts to the upper parts of the earth; in his Ascension he was exalted with Elijah above the Clouds, above the Stars, above the Heavens; but in his Session he was exalted to the highest place in Heaven, even to the right hand of God, Far above all Heavens, that he might fill all things.

2. Christ reigns, or actually administers his glorious Kingdom; and this is the principal part of Christ's sitting at God's right hand. So the Psalmist, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool; the Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion, rule thou in the midst of thy enemies. The Apostle is yet more large, God set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principallity, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. Some describe this Session at God's right hand to be all one with his reigning in equal power and glory with the Father, but the Son hath always so reigned, and the holy Ghost hath always so reigned, who yet is not said in Scripture to sit at the right hand of the Father, I believe therefore there is something in this Session or Reign of Christ which doth difference it from that reigning Power and Glory of the Father, and of the Son as only God, and of the holy Ghost; and if we would know what that is; I would call it an actual administration of his Kingdom, or an immediate executing of his Power and Glory over every creature as Mediator. There is a natural, and a dispensatory Kingdom of Jesus Christ; for the first, the Father reigns immediately by the Son, but by the holy Ghost the Father doth not reign immediately, but through the Son; the same order is to be kept in their power, which is in the Persons; the Father reigns not by himself, but of himself, because he is of none; the Son reigneth by himself, not of himself, because he is begotten of the Father; the holy Ghost reigneth by himself, but from the Father and the Son, from whom he doth proceed. And as in the natural, so in the dispensatory Kingdom, the Father reigns immediately by the Son as Mediator; and hence it is that the Son as Mediator is only said to sit at God's right hand, because the right of actual administration, or immediate execution of the Sovereign power is appropriate and peculiar to the Son, as Mediator betwixt God and man. And this made Christ to say, The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, as Mediator. You may object, Christ was Mediator immediately after his incarnation, but he did not actually administer his Kingdom then. I Answer, it is true; Christ for a time did by a voluntary dispensation empty himself, and laid aside the right of actual administration of his Kingdom; but immediately after his Ascension, the Father by voluntary dispensation resigned it to the Son again; Come now, saith the Father, and take thou power over every creature, till the time that all things shall be subdued under thee. This right the one relinquished in the time of that humiliation of himself, and this right the other conferred at the time of the exaltation of his Son.

SECT. V. Of the two Natures wherein Christ sits at God's right hand.

3. According to what Nature is Christ said to sit at the right hand of God? I answer; according to both Natures; first he sits at God's right hand as God; hereby his Divinity was declared, and his Kingdom is such, that none that is a pure creature can possibly execute; The Lord said to my Lord, saith David, sit thou on my right hand. The Lord said to my Lord] (i.e.) God said to Christ: now Christ was not David's Lord merely as man, but as God. And 2. He sits at God's right hand as man too; hereby his Humanity was exalted, and a Power is give to Christ as man, He hath given hiw power to execute judgment, in as much as he is the Son of man. In the administration of his Kingdom the man-hood of Christ doth concur, as an Instrument working with his God-head. Hence this Session at God's right hand is truly and properly attributed to Christ, as 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; and not only to the one nature of Christ, whether Divine or Humane, Or it is attributed to Christ as Mediator; in which respect he is called an high Priest, We have such an high Priest, who is set on the right hand of the Throne of the Majesty in the heavens.—And in which respect he is called a Prince, Him hath God exalted with his right hand, to be a Prince, and a Savior. Now Christ is not a Priest and a Prince merely according to one Nature, whether Divine or Humane. I deny not but Christ had a natural Kingdom with his Father as God, before the foundation of the world; but this Kingdom as God-man Christ had not before his Asension into heaven. So then Christ sitteth at the right hand of God by a mediatory action, which he executeth according to both natures, the word working what pertaineth to the word, and the flesh what appertaineth to the flesh; Christ is Mediator as God and man, and glory hath redounded unto him as God and man, and living in this glory he ruleth and governeth his Church as God and man, he ascended indeed into heaven in his humanity only, but he sitteth at the right hand of God as Mediator in respect of both natures. The Lutherans attribute this Session at God's right hand only to the human nature of Christ; they say this Session is nothing else but the elevating of his human nature to the full and free use of some of the divine properties, as of omnipotency, omniscience, omnipresence; the ground of this error is, that they suppose upon the union of the two Natures in Christ, a real communication of the divine properties to follow; so that the human nature is made truly omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent, not by any confusion of properties, nor yet by any bare communion and concourse of it to the same effect, each nature working that which belongeth to it with commuion of the other, (for this we grant) but by a real donation, by which the divine properties so become the properties of the human nature, that the human nature may work with them, no less than the Divine nature itself, for the perfecting of itself. Against this opinion we have these Reasons; 1. The union cannot cause the human nature to partake more in the properties of the Divine, than it causeth the Divine to partake in the properties of the human. 2. If a true and real communication did follow of the Divine Attributes, it must needs be of all the Attributes, as of eternity, and infiniteness seeing these are the Divine Essence, which can no way be divided. 3. Infinite perfections cannot perfect finate natures, no more than reasonable perfections can make perfect unreasonable creatures. 4. To what end should created gifts serve, which Christ hath received above measure, if now more noble properties should enter and be conferred on Jesus Christ? other reasons are given in, but I willingly decline all controversial points.

SECT. VI. Of the Reasons why Christ doth sit on God's right hand.

4. WHY doth Christ sit at the right hand of God his Father in glory? I answer.

1. On Christ's part, that He might receive power and dominion over all the creatures: All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; he speaks of it as done, because it was immediately to be performed; Christ at his Session received a power imperial over every Creature; that he hath Power over the Angels is plain, both by the reverence they do him, and by their obedience towards him, at the name of Jesus every knee must bow; good Angels, and evil Angels must yield signs of subjection to Jesus Christ; if the Saints shall judge the Angels, how much more shall Christ? Oh what Power hath Christ himself this way? and as for the excellencies on earth, they all receive their power from Christ, and are at his dispose; it is Jesus Christ that is Crowned with Glory and Honor, and all things are put under his feet. And hence it is that when the Apostle speaks of Christ's session at the right hand of God, he tells us, he is far above all Principalities and Powers on earth, and Might and Dominions in Heaven: yea, that Angels and Authorities, and Powers are made subject unto him.

2. On our part many reasons may be given. As—

1. That he might be the Head of his Church, I mean, not head in a large sense, for one who is in any kind before another; for so Christ is the head of Angels, and God is the head of Christ; and to this we have spoken before. But in a strict sense, for one that is in a near and communicative sort conjoined with another, as the Head is conjoined with the Body and Members; and so is Christ the head of his Church. Look as the King hath a more intimate and amiable Superiority over the Queen then over any other of his Subjects; so is it here in Christ our King, he is more amiably tempered, and more nearly affected to his Spouse and Queen, the Church of God, then to any other whomsoever. And to this purpose he sits at God's right hand, that having now fullness of Grace and Glory in himself, he might be ready to communicate the same to his Church who are as the members of his body, that he might give them Grace here, and Glory hereafter; when he shall deliver up his Kingdom to his Father, and be all in all.

2. That he might be the object of divine adoration, then especially it was said and accomplished, Let all the Angels of God Worship him: and let all men Honor the Son as they Honor the Father. After Christ's Session, Stephen looken up into Heaven, and saw the Glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and then he worshipped; and called upon God saying, Lord Jesus receive my Spirit. It is true, that the ground of this divine adoration is the Union of the two natures of Christ, and therefore the Magi worshipped him at his Birth, and as soon as ever he came into the World the Angels of God worshipped him; but because by his Session at God's right hand, the Divine Nature was manifested, and the Humane Nature was exalted to that dignity and glory which it never had before, therefore now especially, and from this time was the honor and dignity of Worship communicated to him as God and man. And hence Divines usually make this one ingredient of Christ's sitting at the right hand of God, viz. That Christ, God, and Man, is the object of Divine adoration. O it is a great thing, and admirable, and full of wonder, that the man Christ should sit above at God's right hand, and be adored of Angels and Archangels. Before this was the grace of Union conferred on Jesus, and so he was adored before he suffered; but after he had humbled himself, and was made obedient unto death, even to the death of the Cross, then (yea and therefore) God highly exalted him and gave him a Name, which is above every Name, that at the Name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in Heaven, and things in Earth, and things under the Earth, and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus is Lord to the glory of God the Father. He was Lord before, in that he is the Son of God, but now he is Lord again by virtue of his humiliation and Session at God's right hand. Trouble not yourselves with their objection who say, That if adoration be due to Christ as God and man, that then the human nature is to be adored: the Person adored is man, but the humanity itself is not the proper object of that Worship. There is a difference betwixt the concrete and the abstract; though the man Christ be God, yet his manhood is not God, and by consequence not to be worshipped with that worship which is properly and essentially Divine. Certainly, if adoration agree to the humanity of Christ, then may his humanity help and save us; but the humanity of Christ cannot help and Save us, because omnis actio est suppositi, whereas the human nature of Christ is not suppositum, a subsistence or personal being at all.

3. That he might intercede for his Saints. Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the Sum; we have such an high Priest, who is set on the right hand of the Throne of the Majesty in the Heavens, and a Minister of the sanctuary, and of the true Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not men: he is set on the right hand of God as an high Priest, or Minister to intercede for us. For as Christ is not entered into the holy Place made with hands which are the Figures of the true, but into Heaven itself now to appear in the presence of God for us. This appearing is an expression borrowed from the custom of human Courts; for as in them, when the Plaintiff or Defendant is called, their Attorney appeareth in their names, so when we are summoned by the justice of God to answer the complaints which it preferreth against us, we have an Advocate with the Father Jesus Christ the righteous, and he standeth up, and appeareth for us: or it may be this appearing hath a respect to the manner of high Priests in the time of the Law; for as they used to go into the most holy place with the names of the Children of Israel written in precious stones, for a remembrance of them, that they might remember them to God in their Prayers; so Jesus Christ being gone up to Heaven, he there presents to his Father, the Names of all his chosen, and he remembers them to his Father in his Intercessions. Certainly, Christ is not gone to Heaven, and advanced to the right hand of God, only to live in eternal joy himself, but also to procure happiness for his Saints: it is to excellent purpose, and to the great good of his Church that he sits at the right hand of his Father, for thereby he governs and protects his people, and he continually executes the Office of his Priesthood, presenting himself, and the sacrifice of himself, and the infinite merit of that sacrifice before the eyes of his Father in their behalf.

4. That true Believers may assuredly hope by virtue of Christ's Session to sit themselves in the Kingdom of Glory. It is true that Christ, and only Christ hath his seat at the right hand of God; to which of the Saints, or of the Angels did he ever say, sit thou at my right hand? It is a prerogative above all Creatures; and yet there is something near it given to the Saints, for him that overcometh, I will grant to sit with me in my Throne, even as I also am set down with my Father in his Throne. There is a proportion, though with an inequality; we must sit on Christ's Throne, as he sits on his Father's Throne; Christ only sits at the right hand of God, but the Saints are to sit at the right hand of Christ, and so the Psalmist speaks, upon thy right hand did stand the Queen in Gold of Ophir. It is enough to greaten the Spirits of Saints; how should they tread on earth, and contemn the World, when they consider that one day they shall judge the World? do you not know, that the Saints shall judge the World? nay, when they consider that one day they shall reign with Christ? if ye suffer with him, ye shall reign with him. Christ sitting in Heaven is a very Figure of us; Christ's person is the great model and first draught of all that shall be done to his Body the Saints; therefore he is said to be the Captain of our Salvation that leads us on, he is said to be our fore-runner into Glory; he breaks the clouds first, he appears first before God, he sits down first, and is glorified first, and then we follow; Christ wears the Crown in Heaven as our King, and he is united and married to God as our proxy.

And yet there is another ground of hope; not only shall we sit with Christ in Glory, but even now do we sit with him in Glory: Christ is not only gone to heaven to prepare a place for us, but he sits in Heaven in our room, and God looks on him as the great picture of all that body whereof he is Head, and he delights himself in seeing them all Glorified as in his Son. To this purpose the Saints are said to sit down with Christ at very present, he hath made us to sit together with him in Heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Christ in our nature is now exalted: this is that admirable thing which carried up Chrysostom into an ecstasy, that the same nature of which God said dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return, should now sit in Heaven at God's right hand: but not only the human nature, but Christ in person sits there, as a common person in our stead; he is in his Throne, and we sit with him in supercelestial places. O what structures and pillars of hope are raised up here?

5. That he might defend the Church against her enemies; and at last destroy all the enemies of the Church. Such is the power of Christ's Session, that by it he holds up his Saints in the midst of their enemies, so that the gates of hell shall not prevail against them; true indeed, that many times they are used as Lambs amongst Wolves, but so Christ orders that the blood of Martyrs should be the Seed of the Church; hereby his Church like a tree settles the faster, and like a Torch shines the brighter for the shaking. And as for the enemies of his Church, there is a day of reckoning for them, he that sitteth in the Heavens shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision. The day is a coming that he will speak unto them in his wrath, and vex him in his sore displeasure. In the mean while Christ is galling and tormenting them by the Scepter of his Word, and at last he will put them all under his feet. The Lord said to my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make my enemies thy footstool.—For he must reign till he hath put all his enemies under his feet: that the enemies of Christ must be made his footstool notes the extreme shame and confusion which they shall everlastingly suffer: in victories amongst men the party conquered goes many times off upon some honorable terms, or at worst if they are led captive they go like men; but to be made a stool for the conqueror to insult over, this is extremity of shame; and as shame, so it notes burden which the wicked must bear; the footstool bears the weight of the body, so must the enemies of Christ bear the weight of his heavy and everlasting wrath; such a weight shall they bear that they would gladly exchange it for the weight of rocks and mountains, rather would they live under the weight of the heaviest creature in the world, then under the fury of him that sitteth upon the Throne. And withal it notes an equal and just recompense to the wicked; the Lord useth often to fit punishments to the quality and measure of their sins committed; he that on earth denied a crumb of bread, was in hell denied a drop of water; and thus will Christ deal with his enemies at the last day; here they trample upon Christ in his Word, in his ways, in his members; they make the Saints bow down for them to go over, yea they have laid their bodies as the ground, and as the street to them that went over; they tread underfoot the Son of God, the blood of the Covenant; they tread down the sanctuary; and put Christ to shame: and therefore their own measure shall be returned into their own bosom, they shall be constrained to confess with Adoni-hezek, as I have done, so God hath requited me; yea, this shall they suffer from the meanest of Christ's members whom they here insult over; the Saints shall be as Witnesses, and as it were co-assessors with Christ, to judge the wicked both men and Angels, and tread them under their feet; they shall take them captives whose captives they were, and shall rule over their oppressors; all they that despised them shall bow themselves at the soles of their feet.

6. That he might send down the holy Ghost; to this purpose Christ told his Disciples whiles he was yet on earth, that he must ascend into heaven, and Reign there: it is expedient for you, that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him to you. Christ is now in heaven, and sits at God's right hand, that he may send us his Spirit, by whose forcible working we seek after heaven, and heavenly things, where now Christ sits. But on this I shall insist larger, it being our next subject.

SECT. VII. Of the time when the holy Ghost was sent.

3. For the mission of his Spirit: no sooner was Christ set down at God's right hand, but he sends down the holy Ghost. It was an use amongst the Ancients in days of great joy and solemnity to give gifts, and to send presents unto men; thus after the wall of Jerusalem was built, it is said, that the people did eat, and drink, and send portions: and at the feast of Purim they made them days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and Gifts to the poor. Thus Christ in the day of his Majesty and Inauguration, in that great and solemn Triumph, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and did withal give gifts unto men.

Concerning this mission of the Spirit, or these gifts of Christ to his Church, I shall discover the accomplishment, as it appears in these Texts; And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place; and suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting; and there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sate upon each of them; and they were all filled with the holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. Out of these words I shall observe these particulars: the time when; the persons to whom; the manner how; the measure what; and the reasons why the holy Ghost was sent.

1. For the time when the holy Ghost was sent, it is said when the day of Pentecost was fully come; this was a Feast of the Jews called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 from fifty days; because it was ever kept on the Fiftyeth day after the second of the Passover. We find in Scripture sundry memorable things reckoned by the number of fifty. As fifty days from Israel's coming out of Egypt unto the giving of the Law. And the fiftyeth year was that great feast of the Jubilee, which was the time of forgiving of debts, and of restoring men to their first estates; And fifty days were in truth the appointed time of the Jews Harvest; their harvest being bounded as it were with two remarkable days, the one being the beginning, the other the end thereof; the beginning was 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 the second of the Passover; the end was 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 the fiftyeth day after, called the Pentecost; upon the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 they offered a sheaf of the first-fruits of their harvest: upon the Pentecost they offered two wave-loaves, the sheaf being offered, all the after-fruits throughout the Land were Sanctified; and the two loaves being offered it was a sign of the harvest finished and ended; and now we find, that as there were fifty days betwixt 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and the Pentecost, so there were fifty days betwixt Christ's Resurrection and the coming down of the holy Ghost. What was the meaning of this, but to hold harmony, and to keep correspondency with those memorable things? as on the day of Pentecost (fifty days after the feast of the Passover) the Israelites came to mount Sinai, there received they the Law; a memorable day with them, and therefore called the feast of the Law; so the very same day is accomplished that prophesy, Out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem; now was the promulgation of the Gospel called by James the Royal Law, as given by Christ our King, and written in the hearts of his servants by this holy Ghost; it seems to shadow out the great difference betwixt the Law and the Gospel; the Law was given with terror, in lightning and thunder; it discovers sin, declares God's Wrath, frights the Conscience; but the Gospel is given without terror, there was no lightning and thunder now: no, no; the holy Ghost slides down from heaven with grace, and gifts; and with great joy sits on the heads, and in the hearts of his Saints.

2. On the Jubilee, or fiftyeth year, was a great feast; whence some observe that the Latins made their word Jubilo, to take up a Merry Song; though the word be derived from the Hebrew Jobel, which signifies a Rams horn; for then they blew with Rams horns, as when they gathered the people to the Congregation they blew their Silver Trumpets. There were many uses of this feast; 1. For the general release of Servants. 2. For the restoring of Lands unto their first owners who had sold them. 3. For the keeping of a right chronology, and reckoning of times; for as the Greeks did reckon by their Olimpiads, and the Latin, by their Lustra, so did the Hebrews by their Jubilees; this falls fit with the proclaiming of the Gospel, which is an act or tender of God's most gracious general free pardon of all sins, and of all the sinners in the World; now was the sound of the Gospel made known unto all, out of every Nation under heaven; now was that spiritual Jubilee which Christians enjoy under Christ; now was the remission published which exceeded the remission of the Jubilee, as for as the Jubilee exceeded the remission of the Seventh year (i.e.) not only seven times, but seventy times seven times.

3. On the day of Pentecost they offered the two wave-loaves called the bread of the first fruits unto the Lord. In like sort this very day (the Lord of the harvest so disposing it) the Apostles by the assistance and effectual working of the Spirit offered the first-fruits of their harvest unto the Lord; for the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. We see the circumstance of time hath its due weight, and is very considerable; when the day of Pentecost was fully come, then came the holy Ghost.

SECT. VIII. Of the persons to whom the holy Ghost was sent.

2. For the persons to whom the holy Ghost was sent; it is said, to all that were with one accord in one place; who they were it is not here expressed; yet from the former chapter we may conjecture, they were the twelve Apostles, together with Joseph called Barsabas, and the Women, and Mary the Mother of Jesus, and his brethren; these all continued with one accord in one place, for so was Christ's command, that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me. This promise we read of in the Evangelists, when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father, he will testify of me.—And behold I send the promise of the Father upon you, but tarry ye in the City of Jerusalem until you be endued with power from on high. It was the great promise of the Old Testament, that Christ should partake of our human Nature, and it was the great promise of the New Testament, that we should partake of his divine Nature; he was clothed with our flesh according to the former, and we are invested with his Spirit according to the latter promise. For this promise the Apostles and others had long waited, and for the accomplishment they were now fitted and disposed. 1. They had waited for it from the Ascension day, till the feast of Pentecost; he told them at the very instant of his Ascension that he would send the holy Ghost, and therefore bid them stay together till that hour; upon which command they waited, and continued waiting until the day of Pentecost was fully come. He that believeth shall not make hast, saith Isaiah; surely waiting is a Christian duty, for the Vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and shall not lie, though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry. Well may we wait, and wait for him, if we consider how God and Christ have waited for us and our conversion; and especially, if we consider that the Comforter will come; and when he comes, that he will abide with us forever. But 2. As they waited for the Spirit, so they were rightly disposed to receive the Spirit, for they were all with one accord in one place. Mark here the qualifications of these persons; they were all with one accord, &c. To those that accord in the Spirit given; where is nothing but discord, jars, divisions, fractions, there is no Spirit of God; for the Spirit is the Author of concord, peace, unity, and amity; he is the very essential unity, love, and love-knot of the two persons, the Father, and the Son: even of God with God: and he was sent to be the union, love, and love-knot of the two natures united in Christ, even of God with man; and can we imagine that essential unity will enter but where there is unity? can the Spirit of unity come or remain but where there is unity of Spirit? verily there is not, there cannot be a more proper and peculiar, a more true and certain disposition to make us meet for the Spirit, than that quality in us that is likest to his nature and essence; and that is unity, love, concord: do we marvel that the spirit doth scarcely pant in us? Alas we are not all of one accord; the very first point is wanting to make us meet for the coming of the holy Ghost upon us. We see the persons to whom the holy Ghost was sent: they were they that were together with one accord in one place.

SECT. IX. Of the manner how the holy Ghost was sent.

3. For the manner how he was sent, or how he came to these Apostles; we may observe these particulars.—

1: He came suddenly; which either shows the Majesty of the Miracle that is gloriously done, which is suddenly done; or the truth of the miracle, there could be no imposture or fraud in it, when the motion of it was so sudden; or the purpose of the miracle, which was to awake and affect them to whom it came; usually sudden things startle us, and make us look up. We may learn to receive those holy motions of the spirit, which sometimes come suddenly, and we know not how; I am persuaded the man breathes not amongst us Christians, that sometimes feels not the stirrings, movings, breathings of the spirit of God; Oh that men would take heed of despising present motions! Oh that men would take the wind while it blows, and the water while the Angel moves it; as not knowing when it will, or whether ever it will blow again!

2. He came from heaven; the place seems here to commend the gift; as from earth earthly things arise, so from heaven heavenly, spiritual, eternal things. And this is one sign to distinguish the spirits: Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God. If our motions come from heaven, if we fetch our grounds thence, from heaven, from Religion, from the sanctuary, it is the spirit of God; or if it carry us heavenward, if it make us heavenly minded, if it wean us from the world, and if it elevate and set our affections on heavenly things, if it form and frame our conversations towards heaven, we may then conclude the motions are not from below, but from above. O that Christians would be much in observation of, and in listening to the movings, workings, hints, and intimations of that Spirit that comes from heaven. Certainly that Spirit is of God that comes down from heaven, and that lifts up our Souls towards heaven.

3. He comes down from heaven like a wind; The comparison is most apt; of all bodily things the wind is least bodily; it is invisible, and comes nearest to the nature of a Spirit: it is quick and active as the Spirit is. But more especially the holy Ghost is compared to a wind in respect of its irresistible workings; as nothing can resist the wind, it goes and blows which way soever it will; so nothing can resist the Spirit of God, wheresoever it hath a purpose to work efficaciously; I will not say, but the heart of a man may resist and reject the work of the Spirit in some measure, and in some degrees; Stephen told the Jews, they had always resisted the holy Ghost; and the Apostle tells of strong holds, and of every high thing that exalteth itself against God; so there is a natural contrariety, a constant enmity, and active resisting of God's Spirit by our spirits; we must therefore distinguish between a prevalent and a gradual resisting; the spirit in conversion so works, that he takes away the prevalent, but not the gradual resisting; A man before he be converted is froward, and full of cavils and prejudices, he is unwilling to be saved, he cannot abide the truth, he doth what he can to stifle all good motions: yet if he belong to the election of grace, God will at last over-master his heart, and make him; of unwilling, willing; he will omnipotently bow and change the will, and work on his soul by his mighty power efficaciously, insuperably, and irresistibly. Again, the holy Ghost is compared to wind, in respect of its free actings; the wind bloweth where it listeth (saith Christ) and so the Spirit bloweth where it listeth; who can give any reason why the Spirit breathes so sweetly on Jacob, and not on Esau? on Peter, and not on Judas? is it not the free grace and good pleasure of God? springs it not from the mere freedom and pure arbitrariness of his own only workings? to you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of heaven (saith Christ) but to them it is not given. And I thank thee O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. These, and the like Texts, are as so many hammers to beat in pieces all those Doctrines of free-will, and of the power of man to supernatural things; grace makes no gain of man's work; free-will may indeed move and run, but if it be to good, it must be moved, and driven, and breathed upon God's free grace. The Spirit blows where it listeth.

4. He came like a rushy mighty wind; as the wind is sometimes of that strength that it rends and rives in sunder Mountains and Rocks, it pulls up trees, it blows down buildings; so are the operations of the holy Spirit; it takes down all before it, it brings into captivity many an exalting thought; it made a Conquest of the World, beginning at Jerusalem, and spreading itself over all the earth; it is mighty in operation, able to shake the stoutest and the proudest man, and to break in pieces the very stoniest heart; indeed our words without this spirit are but weak wind, we may spend ourselves, and never waken Souls; but if the Spirit blow, he will amaze the consciences of the stoutest peers, and drive away our sins, as the wind drove away the Grasshoppers and Locusts that over-spread the land of Egypt. Some Analogy there is betwixt this vehement wind, and the spirits workings; the spirit first comes as a spirit of bondage, and then as a spirit of Adoption; the spirit of bondage is as a vehement wind that terrifies, to show that we are not fit to receive the grace of God, unless the door be first opened by fear and humiliation; others say that the vehement rushing of this wind shown how irresistibly the Apostles should proceed in preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ; they had a Commission to go into all the World, and to teach all Nations, and they had a promise that though many might oppose, yet the gates of hell should not prevail against the Church; the spirit should go along with them, and he in them, and they in him, should prevail mightily like a rushing mighty wind.

5. He filled all the house where they were sitting; there were none there that were to filled with the holy Ghost; this room contained a congregation of none but Saints. All the men and women (an hundred and twenty, as some think) in this room were visited from on high; for the holy Ghost came upon them, and dwelt in them; well might David say, Blessed are they that dwell in thy house, I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the Tents of wickedness. They that abode in this house were under a promise that the Spirit should come, and now was the promise accomplished; for it filled all the house where they were sitting. I say where they were sitting, to signify, that all the other houses in Jerusalem felt none of this mighty rushing wind: there was no assembly of Saints in any part of the City, but only in this house; or if any other assembly might be, this Spirit blew upon none of them where these men were not; that, and only that house is filled, where they were sitting. And this point of blowing upon one certain place is a property very suitable to the Spirit of God; the wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, nor whether it goeth; so is everyone that is born of the Spirit. The Spirit blows where it will, and upon whom it will, and they shall plainly feel it, and others about them not one jot: have we not sometimes the experiences of this in our very congregations? one sound is heard, one breath doth blow, and it may be one or two, and no more hears the sound, or feels the breath inwardly, savingly; it may be one here, and another there shall feel the Spirit, shall be affected and touched with it sensibly; but twenty on this side them, and forty on that side them sit all becalmed, and go their way no more moved, than when they came into God's presence. Oh that this Spirit of the Lord would come daily and constantly into our congregations! Oh that it would blow through them, and through them! O that it would fill every soul in the assembly with the breath of heaven! come holy Spirit? awake O North-Wind, and come thou South-Wind, and blow upon our Gardens, that the spices thereof may flow out.

6. He came down in the form of Tongues. As one saith well, This Wind brought Tongues, even a whole shower of Tongues. The Apostles were not only inspired for their now benefit, but they had gifts bestowed on them to impart the benefit to more their themselves. But why did the holy Ghost appear like Tongues? I answer, 1. The Tongue is a symbol of the holy Ghosts proceeding from the Word of the Father; as the Tongue hath the nearest affinity with the word, and is moved by the word of the heart, to express the same by the sound of the voice; so the holy Ghost hath the nearest affinity that may be with the Word of God, and is the expresser of his voice, and the speaker of his will. 2. The Tongue is the sole instrument of Knowledge which conveys the same from man to man; though the Soul be the Fountain from whence all wisdom springs, yet the Tongue is the Channel and the conduit-pipe whereby this Wisdom and Knowledge is communicated and Transferred from man to man: in like manner the holy Ghost is the sole Author and Teacher of all Truth; though Christ be the Wisdom of God, yet the holy Ghost is the Teacher of this Wisdom to men; And hence it is that the holy Ghost appeared in the form of Tongues.

And yet not merely in the form of Tongues, but thus qualified. 1. They were Cloven Tongues; to signify that the Apostles should speak in divers Languages; if there must be a calling of the Gentiles, they must needs have the Tongues of the Gentiles wherewith to call them; if they were debtors not only to the Jews, but to the Grecians; nor only to the Grecians, but to the Barbarians also, then must they have the tongues not only of the Jews, but of the Grecians and Barbarians to pay this debt, and to discharge this duty of go, and teach all Nations. Surely this gift was bestowed for the propagating of the Gospel far and wide; The tongues were cloven that the Apostles might speak all Languages, and that all Nations of the World whithersoever they came, might hear them, and understand them speaking in their own Tongues. 2. They were fiery Tongues; to signify that there should be an efficacy, or fervor in their speaking; the World was so over-whelmed with ignorance and error, that the Apostles lips had need to be touched with a coal from the Altar; Tongues of flesh would not serve the turn, nor words of air, but there must be fire put into the Tongue, and Spirit of life into the words they speak; with such a tongue Christ speak himself, when they said of him, did not our hearts burn within us, while he spake unto us by the way? and with such a tongue Peter spake at this time, something like fire fell from him on their hearts, when they were pricked in their hearts, and said, men and brethren what shall we do? Oh that we of the Ministry had these fiery Tongues! O that the Spirit would put his live-coal into our speeches! Oh that our Sermons were warming Sermons! may we not fear that the Spirit is gone while the people are dead, and we are no more lively in our Ministry? it is said of Luther, that when he heard one preach very faintly, cold, cold, says he, this is cold preaching, here's no heat at all to be gotten; Oh when the Spirit comes, it comes with a tongue of fire; instead of words, sparks of fire will fall from us on the hearts of hearers.

3. These cloven tongues sate upon each of them; to signify their constancy and continuance; they did not light, and touch, and away, after the manner of butterflies; but they sate, they abode still, they continued steady, without any stirring or starting. This was the privy sign by which John the Baptist knew Jesus to be Christ; upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he which baptiseth with the holy Ghost. It was not only the Spirits descending, but the Spirit's remaining on him, that was the Sign. The Spirit of God is a constant Spirit; it abides on the Soul to whom it is given; and therefore the Psalmist describes these great Transactions of Christ to this very end, that the Spirit might dwell with us; thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led Captivity Captive, thou hast received gifts for men, yea for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them. Not only that he might stay and lodge for a night as a way-fairing man, that comes to his Inn, and then is gone in the morning; no, no; but that he might take up his residence, and dwell in them. I know it is a question, whether the holy Ghost may be lost? but certainly of the Elect he is never totally, or wholly lost; only I dare not say, but as touching many gifts, he may be lost even of the Elect themselves: David after his sins, was forced to cry, cast me not away from thy presence O Lord, and take not thy holy Spirit from me; restore unto me the joy of thy Salvation, and uphold me with thy free Spirit; we find here that in respect of some gifts even of regeneration, the Spirit is sometimes lost, but that the godly should retain no remnants of the Spirit in their worst declinings, I cannot imagine: John teacheth expressly, whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, (a sin unto death) for his seed remaineth in him, neither can he sin, because he is born of God. David in his fall lost the joy of his heart, the purity of his conscience, and many other gifts which he desired to have restored to him; but the holy Ghost he had not utterly lost; for if so, how could he have prayed, cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me? I have done with the manner of the Spirits mission.

SECT. X. Of the measure of the Holy Ghost now given.

4. FOR the measure, what or how much of the Spirit was now given? this question is necessary, because we bring in the Spirits mission after Christ's ascension, as if the holy Ghost had not been given before this time. That this was the time of the coming of the holy Ghost, is very plain; but that the holy Ghost was not given before this time, we cannot say; certainly the Prophets speak by him, and the Apostles had him, not only when they were first called, but more fully when he breathed on them, and said unto them, receive yea the holy Ghost. So that if ye study the reconciliation of these things, I know not any way better than to put it on the measure, or degrees of the Spirits mission.—I know some go about to reconcile it thus, that the holy Ghost was given before secretly with grace, but now he was given in a visible shape with power. Others thus, that the holy Ghost was before given in respect of Grace and Ministerial gifts, but now he was given in respect of virtue, or Ghostly ability to work Wonders, and to speak with divers Languages. But we find that the Prophets and Apostles before this had not only Grace, and Ministerial gifts, but a miraculous virtue, even the Spirit of powerful and extraordinary operation: only here was the difference, that before this, the Spirit was but sprinkled (as it were) upon them, but now it was poured upon them; before this they were gently breathed on, and refreshed with a small gale, but now they were all blown upon with a mighty wind; without controversy a difference there is in the Spirits mission; And that some lay down chiefly in these three things.—

As—

1. In the manner of the Spirits mission: to the old Church the Spirit came usually in dreams, or visions, or in a low still voice, or in some latent ways; but now he came in power, in evidence and demonstration; and therefore it is called, the spirit of revelation and knowledge; At the apparition of God to Elijah, it is said, that the Lord passed by; and a great, and strong wind rent the mountains, and break in pieces the rocks before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earth-quake, but the Lord was not in the earth-quake; and after the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice, and then Elijah wrapped his face in his mantle, as knowing the Lord's presence was therein: the Spirit came not of old, save in a vision, or dream, or in a still small voice; but now the Spirit came in a rushing mighty wind, in fiery tongues, in earth-quakes, in so much, that the place was shaken where they were assembled, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost: the Spirit now made choice to come in such apparitions, as should have in them a self-discovering property, which would not be hidden; and here is one difference.

2. Another difference is in respect of the Subjects unto whom he was sent; before now he came only upon the enclosed garden of the Jews, but after the assension of Christ, The Spirit was poured upon all flesh; now every believer is of the Israel of God, every Christian is a Temple of the holy Ghost; now we receive the Spirit too, or else it is wrong with us; for If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his; At Peters Sermon to Cornelius, it is said, that the holy Ghost fell on all them which hear the Word; and they of the Circumcision which believed were astonished, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. It was some wonder at first, even to the Apostles themselves, but in this Sermon Peter acknowledges, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of Persons, but in every Nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. Mark, In every Nation, upon all flesh, I will pour out my spirit: Here's another difference.

3. One difference more is in the measure of his mission. At first he was sent only in drops and dew, but now he was poured out in showers and abundance; The holy Ghost (saith Paul) was shed on us abundantly through Jesus our Savior. As there are degrees in the wind, aura, ventus, procella; a breath, a blast, a stiff gale; so we cannot deny degrees in the Spirit, the Apostles at Christ's resurrection received the Spirit, but now they were filled with the Spirit; then it was but a breath, but now it was a mighty wind. And indeed never was the like measure of the Spirit given to men as at this time; the Fathers before this, and we and our Fathers since this, have but (as it were) a hint of the Spirit to their Epha; such a pentecost as this, never was but this, never the like before or since; it was Christ's Coronation-day, the day of placing him in his throne, when he gave these gifts unto men, and therefore that day was all magnificence shown above all other days; Thus for the measure of the Spirit now given to the Church of Christ.

SECT II. Of the Reasons why the Holy Ghost was sent.

5. FOR the Reasons why the Holy Ghost was sent; they are several: As— 1. That all the prophecies concerning this mission might be accomplished. Isaiah speaks of a time when the spirit should be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness should be a fruitful field. And Zacharias Prophecies, that in that day I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and supplication. And Joel prophecies yet more expressly, It shall come to pass, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy: your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the hand-maids in those days I will pour out my spirit, and they shall Prophesy. This very Prophecy was cited by Peter in his first Sermon after the Spirits mission, Act. 2.17, 18. In which we read of two pourings of the Spirit, one upon their sons, and the other upon his servants; the former concerned only the Jew, they should have Prophecies, Visions, and Dreams, the old way of the Jews; but the latter concerns us, we are not of their sons, but of his servants, to whom visions and dreams are left quite out; and therefore if any now pretend to those visions and dreams, we say with Jeremy, The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream, but he that hath my Word, let him speak my Word Faithfully, what is the Chaff to the wheat? But of all the prophecies concerning the mission of the Holy Ghost, our Savior gives the clearest and the most particular; two great Prophecies we find in the Bible, the one is of the Old Testament, and the other of the New; that of the Old Testament was for the coming of Christ, and this of the New Testament was for the coming of the Holy Ghost: and hence we say, that the coming of Christ was the fulfilling of the Law, and the coming of the Holy Ghost is the fulfilling of the Gospel. In this respect let us search and see those Prophecies of Christ the great Prophet in the New Testament. I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth.—But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, he shall testify of me—And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you, but tarry ye in the City of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with Power from on high. It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you: but if I depart, I will send him unto you. Why it was of necessity that all these Prophecies, and promises must be accomplished, and therefore was the Holy Ghost sent amongst us.

2. That the holy Apostles might be furnished with gifts and graces suitable to their estates, conditions, stations, places. To this purpose, no sooner was the Spirit sent, but they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. They were filled with the Holy Ghost; not that they were before empty, but now they were more full of the spirit than ever they were before; and they speak with other tongues; other than ever they had Learned; probably they understood no Tongue but the Syriac till this time, but now on a sudden they could speak Greek, Latin, Arabic Persian, Parthian, and what not? the Wisdom and Mercy of God is very observable herein, that the same means of diverse Tongues which was the destroying of Babel, should be the very same means here conferred on the Apostles to work the building of Zion; that the curse should be removed, and a blessing come in place; that confusion of Tongues should be united to God's Glory; that this should be the issue of Tongues, that neither Speech nor Language should be upon all the Earth, but his praise, and glory, and the Gospel should be heard amongst them. And here is something more observable, in that they spake with other Tongues, As the spirit gave them utterance; the word utterance is in the Original 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; you have heard of Apothegmes, (i.e.) wise, and weighty sententious speeches; now such as these the spirit gave them to utter; magnalia Dei, (as in the eleventh verse) the wonderful works of God; they spake of those singular benefits God offered to the world by the death of his Son; they spake of the work of our Redemption, of the merits of Christ, of the glory and riches of his Grace, of the praises due to his Name for all his Mercies; others add that they spake of those admirable works of the Trinity, as of our Creation, Redemption, and Sanctification; and of whatsoever generally concerned the Salvation of mankind: their speeches were not crudities of their own Brain trivial, base, or vulgar stuff; but magnalia, great and high Points, Apothegmes or Oracles, as the spirit gave them utterance. But these reasons are remote to us.

3. That he might fill the hearts of all the Saints, and make them Temples and receptacles for the Holy Ghost, know you not that your body is the Temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God: and ye are not your own? It is said here, that after the mighty rushing Wind and cloven fiery Tongues, they were all filled with the Holy Ghost: and began to spake with other Tongues. First, they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and then they spake with other Tongues; the Holy Ghost begins inward, and works outward; it first alters the mind, before it change the speech; it first works on the Spirit, before on the phrase or utterance; this was the first work of the Spirit, it filled them. And thus for the daily ministration, such must be appointed as were full of the Holy Ghost; and Stephen is said to be full of the Holy Ghost; and Barnabas is called a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is usually said to fill the Saints; only whether it be the person of the Holy Ghost, or the impressions of the Holy Ghost, is a very great question; for my part I am apt to incline to their mind, who say, not only the impressions of the spirit, the qualities of holiness, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, or as some think, habitual grace in a special manner; but that the Holy Ghost himself doth fill, and dwell, and reign in the hearts of all regenerate men. And this seems clear to me: 1. By Scriptures. 2. By Arguments.

1. The Scriptures are such as these, He that believeth on me, as the Scripture saith, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water; but this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified; for those words, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water; by living water, is meant grace; by rivers of living water, is meant the manifold graces of the Spirit; by the flowing of these rivers, is meant the abounding and communicating of those graces from one to another; and by the belly out of which those rivers should flow, is meant the heart endued or filled with the Holy Ghost. Now the spring and rivers, the fountain and streams are diverse things, and to be distinguished: the one is the cause, and the other the effect; the one is the tree, and the other the fruit; it is the holy Ghost filling the hearts of believers, that is the spring and fountain whence all those rivers of living waters flow: And therefore saith the Evangelist expressly, This spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe should receive; of what Spirit? even, of the Holy Ghost, which in full measure was not yet given, because that Christ was not yet glorified; it is the same spirit which believers receive, whence all these rivers of living waters flow; but those rivers flow not from habitual grace, nor from any of the graces of the Holy Ghost, but from the Holy Ghost himself.

Again, When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth,—and he will show you things to come. Now the habits of grace cannot guide or teach, or show a man things to come; the habits of grace cannot speak, and hear; as it is there written, He shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak. This can be no other than the spirit in his own Person, this is the Comforter, that hears, and speaks, and guides into all truth, and shows us things to come.

Again, The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us. Besides, the grace of the Spirit, which is the love of God; the Holy Ghost, or the Spirit itself, is said to be given unto us.

And, Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit. If so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Here's a plain distinction betwixt the new man, our being in the Spirit, and the Spirit dwelling in us; Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, (i.e.) the same holy Spirit which dwelleth in our head and Savior Jesus Christ, he is none of his.—But if the spirit of him that raised Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. This Spirit cannot be meant of habitual grace, for habitual grace did not raise up Jesus from the dead; no, no, it was the same Spirit that dwelt in Christ, and that dwells in us.

Again, Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?—And know ye not that your body is the Temple of the holy Ghost which is in you? now gifts and graces are not properly said to dwell in Temples; this, belongs rather to persons than qualities; and therefore it is meant of the holy Ghost himself; Ye are the Temples of the living God: surely graces are not the living God? But ye are the Temples of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

2. The arguments to confirm this, are such as these;

1. Actions are ascribed to the Holy Ghost, as given unto us, or dwelling in us, When the spirit is come, he will reprove the World of sin.—And when the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth.—And yea have received the spirit of adoption, whereby ye cry, Abba Father:—And this spirit beareth witness with our spirits, that we are the Children of God. These actions are usually given to the Holy Ghost, I mean to that Holy Ghost which we receive, and dwelleth in us; it reproves, it guides, it helps, it satisfies, it witnesseth; now, actiones sunt suppositorum; actions are of persons, and not of qualities; habitual grace cannot reprove, or guide, or teach, or help our infirmities: these are the actions of the Spirit himself, in his own person.

2. The spirit itself is the bond of our mystical union with Jesus Christ, and therefore it is the Spirit itself that dwelleth in us. Look as it is in our body, there is head and members, yet all are but one natural body, because they are animated and quickened by one and the self-same soul; so it is in the mystical body, Christ is our head, and we are his members, and yet both of us are but one mystical body, by reason of the self-same Spirit dwelling in both. And hence it is said, that Christ dwelleth in us by his spirit; Know ye not that Christ Jesus is in you except ye be reprobates? —he that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me and I in him. — And I live (saith Paul) yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. How in me? not corporally, for in that sense, The Heavens must receive him until the time of the restitution of all things; but spiritually according to the testimony of the Apostle, because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts. This is the mystery that should be known among the Gentiles, the glorious mystery, yea the rich and glorious mystery; the Apostle gives it all these Epithetes, the riches of the glory of this mystery, which is, Christ in you the hope of glory.

3. As Satan keeps his residence in wicked men, working them unto all manner of sin, and holding them captive to do his will; so the spirit of God coming and thrusting him out of possession, dwelleth in us, leading us into all truth, replenishing us with all graces, and inclining us to all holy Obedience. There is little question but whilst men remain in the state of infidelity, the strong man Satan keeps possession, and dwelleth in them, though not after a gross, and sensible manner, as in Demoniacks; yet invisibly and spiritually, ruling and reigning in them, and making them his slav• to do his will; and therefore by the same reason, when a stronger than he cometh, even the good spirit of God, he casts him out, and takes possession, and dwells, and reigns, and rules in our souls and bodies.

If the spirit itself dwell not in us, then how would there be three that bear witness? the Apostle tells us, There are three that bear witness in earth (or in our hearts the Spirit, the water, and blood; now by water is meant sanctification, it is our sanctification that bears witness with us that we are the Children of God; and this sanctification consists either in the habit of grace, or in the actings of grace; if therefore the spirit of Christ in a believer were nothing else but grace, then it were all one with the testimony of water; but there are three that bear witness, there's the testimony of the spirit, of blood, and of water; not only justification, and sanctification, which are but two witnesses, but the spirit is superadded, and that also bears witness in our Consciences, that we are the Children of God, and that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. Christians! think me not tedious in these proofs; these are not speculative notional points, that tend not to edification, but are exceeding profitable. Only concerning the manner of the indwelling of this spirit in us, it is most difficult to conceive. Certainly it dwells not in us as in Christ, viz. bodily, Col. 2.9. immeasurably, Joh. 3.34. Originally, 2 Cor. 3.17. the spirit is in Christ, as light in the sun; but the spirit is in us as light in the air; neither dare I affirm, that the spirit is in us more essentially than in any other men or creatures, for the essence thereof is indivisible and omnipresent: But this I say, that the spirit is in the faithful above all others. 1. In respect of Covenant, the Saints have the spirit by God's free Grace and Covenant; I will put my spirit within you, saith God in the Covenant, which is not only to be understood of the gifts and graces of the spirit, but also of the spirit itself. 2. In respect of intimate familiarity, and near acquaintance, the spirit is in the faithful like an inmate or coinhabitant, comforting, directing, ruling, strengthening, and cherishing them; in which respect they are said to be his houses, and Temples, in which he dwelleth; whereas contrariwise worldlings and infidels to all these purposes are mere strangers unto him, the world cannot receive him (saith Christ) because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. 3. In respect of virtue and efficacy; the spirit works efficaciously in his Saints; he chooseth them for his own people, he possesseth them as of his own right, he rules in their hearts as in the chief seat of his Kingdom, he purgeth and purifieth them from their sins, he replenisheth and filleth them with his saving graces, he guides and directs them in the way of holiness, and never leaves them till he brings them to his Kingdom. 4. In respect of union; it was an old error of the heathens, that the soul remaineth in the body after Death; which opinion of theirs, though false, because it contradicts the Word, yet the thing itself is possible, and doth not contradict reason; for the soul may have its local being in the body, and yet not give life to the body; for it is not the souls being in the body, but its being united to the body which makes the body live; so it is not the Spirits being locally with the soul, but being mystically united to the soul that gives it spiritual life. Now in all these respects, the spirit is in the faithful above all others.

I know the objections, As 1. If the Spirit be united to a believers soul, and so made one with him, then may a believer say, I am the spirit; or I am equal with God in respect of the spirit in me, though not as Peter, Thomas, &c.

But I answer, this follows not; for though the spirit be really united to a believers spirit, so that he may say with the Apostle, He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit, or hath one spirit; yet first, this union is a voluntary act, and not a natural act; and in that respect the Spirit may unite himself to the soul so far as he pleaseth, and no further: And certainly thus far he is not pleased to unite himself to a believer, as that a believer should say properly, I am the Spirit; or I am equal with God in respect of the spirit; for then a believer might be worshipped with Divine worship. 2. This union is by way of application, and not by way of mixture; if an heap of Wheat and a stone should be joined together, there is an union, they make both one heap; but the Wheat cannot say, I am a stone; nor can the stone say, I am wheat; because this union is only by way of Application: but if Wine and Water should be joined together, then every part may say, I am Water, and I am Wine; because this union is not only by application, but by way of mixture. Certainly there is a great union betwixt the Spirit and a believers soul, yet cannot the believer say properly, I am the Spirit, or I am equal with God, because their union is only by way of application, and not by way of mixture.

2. Object. No more was the union of Christ as God, with our nature as man, any union by way of mixture; ye could he say, I am God, and I am man. But I answer, Christ's union was not only spiritual or mystical, but hypostatical or personal; and in that respect, though there was no mixture, yet there was such an union as cannot be paralleled in all the world. Our souls union with the spirit of Christ goes very far, and indeed so far as we cannot express it, though we had the tongues, and heads, and hearts of men and Angels; yet comes it short of that union betwixt the second person in the Trinity, and the soul and body of Christ; his union was personal, but so is not ours: a believer is a person before he is united to the spirit of Christ; but now Christ's soul and body were not a person before united to the person of the Godhead. Go we therefore as far as we can, and I shall easily yield that our union with the spirit is a true, real, essential, substantial, spiritual, invisible, mystical, intimate union, yet is it not a personal, or hypostatical union; the spirit doth not assume the soul or body of a believer, as the second person assumed the soul and body of Christ. Away, away with these cavils and blasphemies, wherewith too many unstable souls are now infected! I have done with this Reason.

4. That the holy Ghost might according to his Office, endow men with gifts: no sooner he bestows his person, but immediately he fills us with his train.

Now the gifts of the Spirit are of these two sorts, some are common to good and bad, others are proper to the Elect only. Those gifts which are common, are again twofold; for some of them are given but to certain men, and at certain times; as the gift of Miracles, of Tongues, of Prophecies, and these were necessary for the Apostles and the Primitive Church, when the Gospel was first to be dispersed; others are given to all the members of the Church, and at all times, as the gifts of Interpretation, Sciences, Arts, Prudence, Learning, Knowledge, Eloquence, and such like; the former gifts we have not, but these latter are now given to every member of the Church, according to the measure of Christ's gift, as the calling and vocation of every member needeth. As for those gifts and saving graces which are proper to the godly, I shall speak of them anon. Now here is another reason of the spirits mission, that he might give gifts unto men; if you ask, what are those gifts? the Apostle tells you in one place, He gave some Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Evangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers. Three of these gifts are now gone, and their date is out; but in the same place we find Pastors and Teachers, and them we have still. Oh how may this teach us to think of such (even of Pastors and Teachers) as of the special gifts and favors of Jesus Christ; if one special friend should but send us from a far Country one of his chief servants, would we not welcome him? Christ now is in Heaven, and he sends us Ministers, as the stewards of his house; sure if we have any love to Christ, The vry feet of them would be precious, and beautiful, who bring us glad tidings of peace. Again, the Apostle tells us in another place, that there are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit; and diversities of calling, but the same Lord, or Christ; and diversities of works, but the same God and Father worketh all in all. Christ's errand being done, and he gone up on high, the Spirit came down; and in Christ's stead established order in the Church; which order or establishment is here set down, by gifts, callings, and works. Here is first, a Gift; Secondly, a Calling; Thirdly, a Work. Gifts are ascribed to the Spirit, Callings to Christ, and Works to God, even to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; where the Spirit ends, Christ begins; and where Christ ends, God begins; if no gift, we must stay there, and never meddle with the calling; and if no calling, we must stay there, and never meddle with the Work; first, the Spirit comes, and bestows the Gift, and then Christ comes, and bestows the Calling, and then God the Father comes, and sets us to the Work; the gift is for the calling, and the gift and calling are both for the Work. And if this be the order established by the Spirit in his Church, Oh what shall we say of them that either have no gifts, yet step into the calling, as if there were no need of the Holy Ghost; or that have no calling, and yet will fall upon the work, utterly against the mind and rule of Jesus Christ? Oh what the poor Church of Christ suffers at this time in these respects! certainly these men have no commission from the holy spirit; he was never sent to them that break this order; first gifts, and then Calling, and then the Work.

But why doth the Spirit endow men with gifts? surely saith the Apostle, to this end, to profit withal. Gifts are given for the good of others, gifts are for edifying: we should not contemn them, gifts are a blessing of God, and therefore we are to endeavor after them. Let thy profiting appear to all, and covet earnestly the best gifts: And yet (says Paul) I show unto you a more excellent way: and that was true grace of which he discourseth in the next Chapter; and this brings in another reason of the Spirits mission.

5. That the Holy Ghost might according to his Office endow men with graces. In doing this, he first gives the inward principle and habit of grace, and then the fruit, or actings of grace.

1. He gives a Power, an Habit, a spiritual Ability, a Seed, a Spring, a principle of Grace; whatsoever we call it, I cannot conceive it to be a new faculty, added to those which are in men by nature: A man when he is regenerate, hath no more faculties in his soul, than he had before he was regenerate; only in the work of regeneration, those abilities which the man had, are Improved to work spiritually, as before naturally; as our Bodies in the resurrection from the dead shall have no more, nor other parts than they have at present; only those which are now natural, shall then by the Power of God be made Spiritual. Now this Principle is infused, or poured in by the Spirit of God; and hence he is called The spirit of sanctification.

2. He gives the fruit or actings of Grace, But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering; gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; Some call these the diversifications of the actings of that spiritual principle within us; certainly the spirit doth not only at first infuse the principles of grace, but he doth also enable us to act, and improve those blessed principles; he doth not only give us power to Holy actions, but he works also the Holy actions themselves. God works in us not only to will but to do. God hath a twofold grace, initial and converting; exciting and quickening: in respect of this last, David prays, Quicken me after thy loving kindness, O Lord, and so shall I keep thy testimonies. This is the actuating grace that we need every hour, and every moment, and must pray for more earnestly than we would pray for our daily bread. Two privileges more especially flow from this; As—

1. Hereby the soul will be kept from negligence, and dullness; from gross and soul sins; the Apostle calls it, grace to help in time of need. Oh this is admirable, when grace comes in the very nick of need; it may be sometime or other thou wert even falling into such and such a sin, it may be thou wert sometime or other drowning in such and such a wickedness, and this exciting, quickening grace came in, and kept up thy head above the waters.

2. Hereby the soul will be kept in a frame for every duty: if the spirit come but with exciting, quickening grace, then it is ready to say, My heart is prepared, O Lord, my heart is prepared, I can now do and suffer thy Will; sometimes the principle of grace lies still within us, and begins to rust; but then comes the Holy Ghost, and breaths upon our souls, and so it excites, and quickens, and commands faith, patience, zeal, and other graces to be in exercise; and this is as it were the file to take off the rust; its the whetting of the edge, its the stirring up of the coals into a mighty flame.

Christians! have you not clear experimental demonstrations of this truth? sometimes you are on the wing of duty, and sometimes you are dull, and dead; sometimes the least temptation, the least snare is ready to make you fall; and sometimes again, though strong winds and tempests blow upon you, yet you are able to stand, like Mount Zion, that cannot be removed: Oh what's the reason of the difference? surely according to the incomes of the Spirit of God;

this difference comes not from ourselves, but from the Spirit: as this exciting quickening grace is ready, or a far off, so is our condition: you know what changes David usually found in his own heart, sometimes he was able to trust in God, and at other times he was so cast down as if he had no strength within him, and whence all this, but from the ebbings and flowings of exciting quickening grace? well may we cry, come holy Spirit: Oh what a comfortable condition would it be, if our Spirits never lay still, but we were always hungering, thirsting, or moving after God and goodness.

6. That the holy Ghost might according to his Office comfort his Saints amidst all their afflictions: this was that which Christ had so often told his Apostles, I will not leave you comfortless, I will come unto you.—And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever—But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my Name he shall teach you all things.—But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.—If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart I will send him unto you.

But how is it that the spirit comforts Saints? I answer in these particulars.

. 1. The Spirit discovers sin, and bends the heart to mourn for sin; and such a sorrow as this, is the seed and matter of true comfort: as Josephs heart was full of joy when his eyes poured out tears on Benjamin's neck, so there is a certain seed and matter of joy in spiritual mourning; I know they are contrary, but yet they may be subordinate to each other, as a dark and muddy color may be a fit ground to lay gold upon. Certainly there is a sweet complacency in an humble and spiritual heart, to be vile in its own eyes. But especially the fruit of it is joy, and great joy. A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come; but as soon as she is delivered of her Child, she remembereth no more the anguish for joy that a man is born into the World; and ye now therefore have sorrow, but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you.

2. The Spirit doth not only discover, but heal the corruptions of the soul, and there is no comfort, to the comfort of a saved and cured man; the lame man that was restored by Peter, expressed the abundant exaltation of his heart, by leaping and praising God, Act. 3.8. and for this cause the Spirit is called the Oil of gladness, because by that healing virtue that is in him he makes glad the hearts of men.

3. The Spirit doth not only heal, but renew and revive again; when an eye is smitten with a sword, there is a double mischief, a wound made, and a faculty perished; and here, though a Chirurgeon can heal the wound, yet he can never restore the faculty, because total privations admit no regress, or recovery. But the spirit doth not only heal, and repair, but renew and re-edify the spirits of men; as he healeth that which was torn, and bindeth up that which was broken, so he reviveth and raiseth up that which was dead before, Hos. 6.1.2. And this the Apostle calls, the renovation of the Spirit, Tit. 3.5. Now this renovation must needs be matter of great joy, for so the Lord comforts his afflicted people; O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted; behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with Sapphires, and I will make thy windows of Agates; and thy gates of Carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. The meaning is, that all must be new, and new built up as for a goodly, costly, and stately structure.

4. The spirit doth not only renew, and set the frame of the heart aright, and then leave it to itself, but being thus restored he abideth with it to preserve and support it, and to make it victorious against all tempests and batteries; and this further multiplieth the joy and comfort of the heart; victory is ever the ground of joy, They joy before thee,—as men rejoice when they divide the spoil. And the spirit of God is a victorious spirit. A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory.

5. The spirit doth not only preserve the heart which he hath renewed, but he makes it fruitful and abundant in the work of the Lord. And fruitfulness is a ground of comfort, Sing O barren, thou that didst not bear, break forth into singing, and cry aloud thou that didst not travail with Child; for more are the Children of the desolate than the Children of the married Wife, saith the Lord.

6. The Spirit doth not only make the heart fruitful, but gives it the hansom and earnest of its inheritance, and thereby it begets a lively hope, an earnest expectation, a confident attendance upon the promises, and an unspeakable peace and comfort thereupon. Oh when I feel a drop of heavens Joy shed abroad into my soul by the Holy Ghost, and that I look upon this as a taste of glory, and a forerunner of happiness, how should I but rejoice with joy unspeakable? in all these respects the Spirit is our Comforter; and this is another reason why the Holy Ghost is sent, I will not leave you comfortless, saith Christ, no, no; for I will come unto you by my spirit.

7. That the Holy Ghost might according his Office, seal us unto the day of redemption. By sealing, is meant some work of the Spirit, by which he assures a believer that he is God's: it is all one with the spirits witnessing; only under that notion, I shall speak of it another time.

But all the question is, what is that work of the spirit by which he assures; I answer, this work is many-fold. As—

1. There is a reflex work of faith, and this is the work of the Spirit too, assuring our souls of our good estate to Godward, and Christ-ward, He that believeth hath the witness in himself; he carries in his heart the Counterpane of all the promises, this is the first seal, or (if you will) the first degree of the Spirits sealing; the first discovery of our election is manifested to us in our believing, as many (saith the Text) as were ordained to eternal life believed.

2. There is a work of sanctifying grace upon the heart, and this is a seal of the Spirit also; for whom the Spirit sanctifieth, he saveth. The Lord knoweth who are his, saith the Apostle, ay, but how should we know it? why, by this seal; as it follows, Let everyone that Nameth the Name of the Lord depart from iniquity; none are children of God by adoption, but those that are Children also by regeneration; none are heirs of Heaven, but they are new born to it; Blessed be God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who hath begotten us anew—to an inheritance immortal.

This seal of sanctification leaves upon the soul the likeness of Jesus Christ, even grace for grace.

3. There is a work of assisting, exciting, quickening grace, or of God's gracious concurrence with that habitual grace which he hath wrought in his people: now this is various according to the good pleasure of his will; the Spirit is more mig•lie present to some than to others, yea more to the same man at sometimes, and in some conditions; sometimes the same Christian is as a burning and shining light, sometimes as a smoking flax; The spirit blows how it listeth; sometimes he fills the soul with fuller gales, sometimes again she is becalmed; a man hath more of the Spirit at one time than another: now when the Spirit comes in thus by exciting, quickening, stirring, and enabling us to act; so that we can say, as sometime the Prophet said, It was in my heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and could not stay; why then the spirit seals, and gives assurance to our souls that we are his.

4. There is a work of shining upon, or enlightening those graces which the Spirit plants in us, and helps us to exercise; this seals to the purpose; and of this it is that the Apostle speaks. We have received not the spirit of the World, but the Spirit which is of God, that we may know the things that are freely given us of God. The things given to us may be freely received by us, and yet the receipt of them not known to us; therefore the spirit for our further consolation doth (as it were) put his hand and seal to our receipts; he shines upon our graces, or he enlightens our graces, whereby we may know we believe, and know that we live. Indeed this is rare with God's own People, sometimes (notwithstanding this seal) we may be in such a state as Paul and his company were in the ship, When they saw neither Sun nor Star for many days together; so it may be that for a time we may see neither Sun nor Star, neither light in God's countenance; nor light in our souls; no grace issuing from God, no grace carrying the soul to God; yet in this dark condition, if we do as Paul and his company did (i.e.) if we cast anchor even in the dark night of temptation, and pray still for day, God will appear, and all shall clear up; we shall at last see light without, and see light within, surely the day-star will arise in our hearts.

5. There is a work of joy and comfort; and this is a super-added seal of the Spirit; the works of the spirit you may see are of a double kind; either in us by imprinting sanctifying grace, or upon us by shining on our souls, and by sweet feeling of joy; habitual grace, or sanctifying grace is more constant, and always like itself; but this work of comfort and joy is of the nature of such privileges as God vouchsafeth at one time and not at another; and hence it is that a Christian may have grace and a Christian may know himself to be in the state of grace, and yet in regard of comfort God may be gone. Thus it was with Job, he knew his redeemer lived, and he resolved to trust in him though he killed him; he knew he was no hypocrite, he knew his graces were true; notwithstanding all the objections and imputations of his friends, they could not dispute him out of his sincerity, My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go; yet for the present he saw no light from heaven, but he was in a sore and afflicted condition, till it pleased the Lord to reveal himself in special favor unto him. Now this work of joy usually comes not till after faith; and many experiences of God's love, and much waiting upon God. These are the several works of the spirits sealing.

But why is it that we can neither actually believe, nor can know that we believe, nor can enjoy peace and joy in believing, without a fresh and new act of the Spirit?

I answer, because the whole carriage of a soul to heaven is above nature, where the Spirit makes a stand, we stand, and can go no farther; without the help of the Spirit we can neither make promises, nor conclude for ourselves; it is the spirit that sanctifies, and witnesses, and seals our souls unto the day of redemption. Many other Reasons may be rendered, but I shall speak of them in the end of the spirits mission.

Thus far we have propounded the object, viz. the Ascension of Christ, the session of Christ at God's right hand, and Christ's mission of the holy Ghost; our next work is to direct you how to look unto Jesus in these respects.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. Of knowing Jesus as carrying on the great work of our salvation in his Ascension, Session, and Mission of the Spirit.

1. LET us know Jesus carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his Ascension into Heaven, in his Session at God's right hand, and in his mission of the Holy Ghost; these are points of great use, if these transactions had not been, where had we been? these are points of highest speculation, if these transactions had not been, where had Christ been? after his humiliation, herein lay the exaltation of his glorious Person, he was exalted above the Earth, above the Clouds, above the Stars, above the Heavens, above the Heavens of Heavens; O the glorious Majesty of our King Jesus, as sitting down at God's right hand! our salvation is the greatest mystery that ever was, it being made up of the various workings of the glory of God; for us men, and for our salvation Christ was incarnate, and came down from Heaven, and for us men and for our salvation Christ was exalted and went up into Heaven. Here is an object of admiration indeed, the very Angels at the sight of it stood admiring and adoring; it took up their heart, astonished their understanding; surely it was the blessedst sight that ever the Angels did, or could behold; come then, and O my soul do thou take a view of that which they admire, the design is not so principally concerning Angels, as thyself; they are in it only as afar off, and in general; but it concerns thee in special and particular; and therefore study close this Argument, and know it for thyself. Study first the Ascension of Christ, how, and whether, and why he ascended. 2. Study the Session of Christ at God's right hand; O the mines, the riches of that spiritual heavenly knowledge! 3. Study the mission of the Holy Ghost; not a circumstance in it, but deserves thy Study; worlds of wealth (ten thousand times better than Gold or Silver, or Precious Stones, may be found in the diggings of these mines; have not many Students beat out their brains on lesser subjects? what endeavors have there been to dive into the secrets of Nature? what volumes have been written of Physicks, Metaphysics, Mathematics? and is not this subject Christ? is not every of these subjects, Christ's Ascension, Christ's Mission of the holy spirit of more worth, and value, and benefit than all those? come study that piece of the Bible wherein these are written, there is not a line or expression of Christ in the Scripture, but 'tis matter enough for a whole Age to comment on; thou needest not to leave old principles for new discoveries, for in these very particulars thou mightest find successive sweetness unto all eternity.

SET. II. Of considering Jesus in that respect.

2. LET us consider Jesus, carrying on this work of our salvation for us in these particulars. We must not only study to know these things, but we must meditate on them till they come down from our heads to our hearts. Meditation is the poize that sets all the wheels within a going; it were to small purpose to bid us, desire, hope, believe, love, joy, &c. if first we did not meditate: in meditation it is that the understanding works, that the will is inclined to follow, that devotion is refreshed, that saith is increased, hope established, love kindled; and therefore begin here O my soul; it is a due consideration that gives both life, and light, and motion to thy actings in all proceedings.

And to take them in order.—

1. Consider of Christ's Ascension into Heaven. Methinks souls should put themselves into the condition of the Disciples, When they looked steadfastly towards heaven as Christ went up; What, shall he ascend, and shall not we in our contemplations follow after him? gaze, O my soul, on this wonderful object, thou needest not fear any check from God or Angel, so that thy contemplation be spiritual and divine. No sooner had Christ finished his work of redemption here on earth, but on the Mount called Olivet he assembles with his Disciples, where having given them commands, he begins to mount; and being a little lifted up into the Air, presently a Cloud receives him into her lap, Herein is a clear demonstration of his Godhead; Clouds are usually in Scriptures put for the House, or Temple, or Receptacle of God himself. How often is it said that The glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud? And that He came to Moses in a thick cloud? and that he called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud? and that the Lord descended in the cloud? Is not the Cloud God's own Chariot; Behold the Lord rideth on a swift cloud; —and O Lord my God thou art very great, saith David; great indeed, and he proves it thus, Who maketh the clouds his Chariot. Jesus Christ in his ascension to heaven enters by the way into a cloud; this was his chariot, led by thousands and ten thousands of his Angels. The Chariots of God are Twenty thousand, even thousands of Angels, the Lord is among them in Sinai in the holy place, thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive, thou hast received gifts for men. Some are of opinion, that not only thousands of Angels led this chariot, but that many of the Saints which slept, and rose with Christ at his resurrection, now ascended with him, and compassed about this glorious cloud; whence they give this for the meaning of the text, that when he went up through the air, and ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, that is, he led a certain number of captives, namely the Saints that were long held in captivity of death, whose bodies arose at Christ's resurrection, and now they accompanied Christ at his triumphant march into heaven. However he was attended, be not too curious (O my soul in this) the bright cloud that covered his body discovered his Divinity; and therefore here is thy duty, to look steadfastly towards heaven, and to worship him in his ascension up into heaven; O admire and adore!—

But stay not thy contemplation in the cloud, he ascends yet higher, through the Air, and through the Clouds, and through that sphere, or element of fire, and through those Orbs of the Moon, Mercury, Mars; of the Sun, Jupiter, Uenus Saturn; and through that azure Heaven of fixed Stars, and through that first moveable, and through those condence and solid waters of the Christaline Heaven; nor stood he still till he came to those doors and gates of the Empyrean Heaven, called The heaven of heavens; in all this triumphant glorious march some tell us of an heavenly harmony made by those Choristers of Heaven, the blessed Angels; Some going before, and some going after, they chant his praises, and sing Hallelujahs: and that is the meaning of the Psalmist, God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a Trumpet. In this meditation pass not over thy duty, which immediately follows, Sing praises unto God; sing praises; sing praises unto our King, sing praises.—Sing unto God, sing praises to his Name, extol him that rideth upon the heavens, by the Name ah, and rejoice before him. Thou hast great cause, O my soul, to praise him, and to rejoice before him, especially if thou considerest that Christ ascended not for himself, but also for thee; it is God in our nature that is gone up to heaven, whatever God acted on the person of Christ, that he did as in thy behalf, and he means to act the very same on thee; Christ as a public person ascended up to heaven; thy interest is in this very ascension of Jesus Christ; and therefore dost thou consider thy Head as soaring up? O let every Member praise his Name, let thy Tongue (called thy glory) glory in this, and trumpet out his praises, that in respect of thy duty it may be verified, Christ is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a Trumpet.

And yet stay not by the way, but consider further; Christ being now arrived at Heavens doors, those heavenly spirits that accompanied him began to say, Lift up your heads O ye gates, even lift up yourselves, yea everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in! to whom some of the Angels that were within, not ignorant of his person, but admiring his majesty and Glory, said again, Who is the King of Glory? and then they answered, The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle; and thereupon those Twelve gates of the Holy City, of new Jerusalem, opened of their own accord, and Jesus Christ with all his ministering Spirits entered in. O my soul, how should this heighten thy joy, and enlarge thy comforts, in that Christ is now received up into glory? every sight of Christ is glorious, and in every sight thou shouldst wait on the Lord Jesus Christ for some glorious manifestations of himself. Come, live up to the rate of this great mystery; view Christ as entering into glory, and thou wilt find the same sparkles of glory on thy heart: O this sight is a transforming sight, We all with open face beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same Image from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord.

2. Consider of Christ's Session at God's right hand; no sooner was Christ entered into Heaven, but he is brought before his heavenly Father; and herein was the vision accomplished, I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days and they brought him near before him, and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a Kingdom. This is that we call his Session at God's right hand; a dominion was given him above all creatures, yea a dominion above the Hierarchy of all the Angels: O the glory of Christ at his first entrance into glory! immediately all the Angels fell down and worshipped him; immediately his Father welcomed him with the highest grace that ever yet was shown. Come (said he) sit thou at my right hand until I make thy enemies thy footstool. One sweetly observes, that usually in the several parts of the performance of Christ's office, either God is brought in as speaking to Christ, or Christ is brought in as speaking to his Father; thus when he chose him first to be our Mediator, God speaks to Christ, Thou art a Priest forever after the order of Melchizedek; and when Christ came to take upon him our nature, he spake to his Father, Lo I come to do thy will, a body hast thou prepared for me. Again when Christ hung on the Cross, he spakes to his Father, My God my God why hast thou forsaken me? but when Christ rose again from the dead, God spake to him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; and when Christ ascended into heaven, God spake to him, Son, sit thou down at my right hand. This was the highest point of Christ, elevated; now was the prophesy accomplished, He shall be exalted, and extolled, and be very high. The Chaldee Paraphrast reads it thus, He shall be exalted above Abraham, he shall be extolled more than Moses, he shall be very high above the highest Cherubin, and Saraphin; O my soul meditate on this Session of Christ at God's right hand, and thence draw down some virtue and sweetness into thyself: what? was Christ exalted? had he a name given him above every name? walk then as becomes those that have so glorious a Head: O defile not that nature which in thy Christ was so highly honored! it was the Apostles arguing, Shall I take the Members of Christ and make them the Members of an Harlot? so argue thou, shall I take the Nature of Christ, that Nature which he in his Person hath so highly glorified, and make it in my Person the Nature of a Devil? O my soul walk worthy of such a Lord, unto all well-pleasing; since now he is in his Throne at God's right hand, O kiss the Son! honor the Son with divine worship, reverence, and submission; submit cheerfully and willingly to the Scepter of his Word, bow to his Name, as it is written, At the Name, the Person, the Power, the Scepter of Jesus Christ, every knee should bow.

3. Consider of the Mission of the holy Ghost: no sooner is Christ inaugurated in his Throne, but he scatters his coin, and gives gifts; When he ascended on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. He gave gifts, or the gift of gifts, the gift of the holy Ghost; If thou knewest the gift of God, said Christ to the Samaritan woman; that gift was the water of Life, and that water of life was the spirit, as John, who knew best his mind, gave the interpretation, This speak he of the spirit. O my soul consider of this princely gift of Christ! such a gift was never before, but when God gave his Son; God so loved the World, that he gave his Son; and Christ so loved the world, that he gave his spirit; but O my soul consider especially to whom this Spirit was given; the application of the gift is the very soul of thy meditation; Unto us a Son is given, said the Prophet; and Unto us the holy Ghost is given, saith the Apostle: And yet above all, consider the reasons of this gift in reference to thyself; was it not to make thee a Temple and Receptacle of the holy Ghost; stand a while on this! admire O my soul, at the condescending, glorious, and unspeakable love of Christ in this! it was infinite love to come down into our nature when he was incarnate; but this is more, to come down into thy heart by his holy Spirit; he came near to us then, but as if that were not near enough, he comes nearer now; for now he unites himself unto thy person, now he comes and dwells in thy soul by his holy spirit: O my soul, thou hast many in-comes of the world, though many are above thee, yet many are below thee; but Oh what little contentment hast thou in these outward things? Come! here's that which will infinitely content thy vast desires; Christ is in thee, really in thee, by his Spirit; will not this content the utmost capacity of an heart? surely he is too covetous whom God himself cannot suffice; if thou hast Christ, thou hast all things; and if thou hast the spirit of Christ, thou hast Christ himself, not notionally, not by the habit of grace only, but really, essentially, substantially by his Spirit; it is the very spirit of Christ, the spirit itself, the holy Ghost itself in his own person that is united to thee, and dwells in thee; nor only comes he in person, but he brings along with him all his Train; hath he not endowed thee with some gifts? hath he not divided a portion and measure to thee in thy place and calling? take notice, observe it, and be thankful, if thou hast a gift of prayer, of prophesy, of wisdom, of knowledge, it comes and flows from this holy Spirit; Unto everyone of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Or according to the measure of the spirit; who is the gift of Christ. And all these worketh that one and the selfsame spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. But besides a gift, hath he not endowed thee with his grace? hath he not planted in thy soul the habit, the power, the seed, the spring, the principle of grace? hast thou not felt sometimes the excitings, quickenings, stirrings of the spirit of God, commanding thy faith, love, zeal, and other graces to be in exercise? hath he not many a time at some dead lift, at some mighty straight, at some prevailing temptation, when thou wast even ready to yield to Satan, come in as betwixt the bridge and water, and given thee grace to help in time of need? O the sweet in-comes of the Spirit of God! as he is an holy Spirit, so he makes holy hearts; and if there be any holiness in thy heart, what is it but an emanation, influence, effect of the Spirit of God? if ever thou hadst any flowings of exciting, quickening grace, say, This is above nature, above flesh and blood, it comes from the holy and blessed Spirit of God. Some other effects thou mayst consider of, as of the comforts of the spirit; what? hast thou not sometimes felt the joys unspeakable and full of glory? hast thou not sometimes known a mornings joy after a nights sorrow? an healing of thy broken heart? a reviving of thy dead Spirit? a drop of heavens joy given thee as the hanel or earnest of thine inheritance? why all these are but the workings of the promised comforter: And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter that he may abide with you forever. Another effect is the seal of the spirit; and what? hast thou not sometimes had the seal of the Spirit stamped on thee? I will not say this is absolutely necessary, but hast thou not sometimes been assured of thy salvation, by a reflect act of faith, or by a work of grace habitual or actual? or by an irradiation of the spirit on thy graces? sometimes the spirit is pleased to shine with its bright, and glorious, and heavenly beams into our souls, and then we are assured: hence the Apostle prays for the Ephesians. That they might have the spirit of revelation? And to what end? That they might know what is the hope of his calling; (i.e.) that they might know upon what certain grounds and foundation their hopes were built; and hence the Psalmist prays for himself, Cause thy face to shine upon thy Servant: and again, God be merciful unto us and bless us and cause his face to shine upon us. Selah. If the spirit shine upon our graces, then it seals: O consider of this shining-sealing work, and leave not till the Spirit dart in a spiritual light, and give thee a revelation, knowledge, and persuasion of thy effectual calling. Many other reasons are of the spirits mission, but amongst them all, consider O my soul, and ponder on these few; think over Christ's Ascension, Session, and Mission of the Spirit; but in every thought be serious, fruitful, and particular; say, Christ is gone up into heaven for me, and he is sate down at God's right hand for me;

and he hath sent down his spirit into my heart. O what workings would there be within, if thou wert but lively and active in the meditations of these several passages!

SECT. III. Of desiring after Jesus in that Respect.

3. Let desire after Jesus carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in these particulars: who seeing Christ to ascend into Heaven, would not be glad to ascend up with with him? who seeing Christ to sit down at the right hand of his Father, would not be glad to sit down with him? who seeing Christ to scatter his gifts and spirit amongst his Saints, would not cry, Come holy spirit; O Christ give me thy spirit, thou that givest gifts unto me, come and bestow those gifts on me! even upon me? The believing soul cannot hear of Christ in any true discovery of his grace and glory, but it must needs send out many breathings after him, Oh that Christ were mine! Oh that I had any interest in this transaction! it is true, these transactions are past, but the virtue of them continues still, and accordingly the virtue, power, and influence of these transactions must be the object of our desires; now what is the virtue of Christ's Ascension, but that we might ascend? and what the virtue of Christ's Session, but that we might sit down with him in his Throne? and what the virtue of the mission of his Spirit, but that we might partake of the holy Ghost? Oh let these be the objects of our desires; come let us pant and breath after these things. As—

1. Let us see Christ ascending, and so desire to ascend with him, when Christ ascended it was not merely for himself, but also in our stead; he ascended as a common person; as the high Priest ascending into the Holy of Holies, he carried all the names of the Twelve Tribes on his breast; so Jesus Christ ascending into heaven, he carried the names of all Believers in the world on his Breast, thereby showing that they were likewise to come after him; in this case how should we long after him, and cry after him, as Elisha after Elijah when he saw him ascending. My Father, my father, the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof? How should we cry after him, O my Lord and my God, see that my name be written in thy Breast, O that virtually I may ascend with thee, and that really and bodily I may at last ascend after thee! There are many can say in their heart, I will ascend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the most High: but the prophet tells us, Such shall be brought down to hell, and to the sides of the Pit. O the desires, and eager pursuits of men after ambition; what topping and advancing is there, of one over another? in the mean time the Psalmist's Question is quite forgotten, Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? he that hath clean hands, and a pure heart, who hath not lift up his soul unto vanity. Down, O my soul, with thy top and top gallant; strike sail to God and Christ; know that God resists the proud; How art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning? even he that would exalt his Throne above the stars of God, is brought down to hell: Come, come! a desire after Christ and his Ascension is the way to Heaven; if thou wilt ascend after Christ, set thy desires upon Christ; if thou wilt arrive at true glory, breath after Christ ascending up into his glory; let others ascend up into their heaven upon earth, but O my soul desire thy interest in Christ's Ascension into the Heaven of Heavens. O when will it once be that by the virtue of Christ's Ascension I shall ascend! is Christ gone up, and am I yet behind? is my Head, my Husband, my Lord in Heaven, and am I a poor member of his body grovelling here on earth? what, is Christ gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet? are all the Angels sounding his praise, and bidding him welcome into glory? and am I sinning here on earth, and by my sins crucifying again and again the Lord of glory? O that I might ascend with Christ! O that I were now on the wing towards heaven! Oh what is it that hinders my ascension but this clog of clay? so long as this body remains a natural body I cannot ascend; oh therefore that the change were come! Oh that this natural body were spiritual that this corruptible had put on incorruption, and this mortal had put on immortality! then could I move upwards as well as downwards; such is the supernatural property of a glorified body, that it ascends or descends with equal ease; or if this be not possible for my present condition, if this body if mine must first descend before it ascend, if it must down into the grave, before it go up into glory: why yet, Oh that my better part were on the wing! Oh that my soul were mounting upwards! Oh wretched man that I am, who shall deliver my soul from this body of death? or if the union be so strong for a while, that neither soul nor body can really or substantially ascend, yet O that I were still ascending in a spiritual way! O that my affections were still on things above, and not on things beneath! yea, I could wish a nearer union even by a dissolution; why, Christ is ascended, and I would fain be where Christ is, though it cost me dear; I desire to be dissolved, I desire to depart, and to be with Christ, which is for better.

2. Let us see Christ sitting down at the right hand of God, and so desire to sit with him: when Christ sate down, it was not in his own pure Personal right simply, as it is his inheritance, but with relation to his Saints and Members; He hath quickened us together wth Christ, and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. I confess Christ's sitting at God's right hand (as taken for the sublimity of his power) is not communicable unto us, for that is Christ's own prerogative; to which of the Angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand? Yet his sitting in heaven as it is indefinitely expressed, is in some sort communicable unto us, for he sate down as a common person, thereby showing that we were to sit down with him in our proportion, Him that overcomes, I will grant to sit with me in my Throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his Throne. Christ sits in his Fathers Throne, and we sit in Christ's Throne; Christ sits at the right hand of God, and w• sit at the right hand of Christ: Oh how desirable is this? The Mother of Zebedees Children understood this mystery very darkly, yet worshipping Jesus, she desired a certain thing of him; what thing? why, grant (saith she) that these my two Sons may sit the one at thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand in thy Kingdom: Christ blamed them, because they know not what thy asked, and yet he tells them, that to sit on his right hand, and on his left is given to them for whom it is prepared of his Father. O my soul desire after this, for this is worthy of thy desire: this is a great thing, an high exaltation, another manner of honor than any that this world affords; Courtiers desire no more but to sit at the Princes right hand; but O the virtue of Christ's Session, that thereby thou shouldst sit at the right hand of God! this is the very height and excellency of heavens glory; only take heed of apprehending it after a carnal and natural way; this very exaltation consists in the Image of God, and communion with God; it is the spiritual part, and power, and glory of heaven: if anything be desirable above another, surely this above all; what? that Christ should be exalted above all Principalities, and Powers, and mights, and dominions, and everything that is named in this world, and in the other? what? that Christ should sit down in his Fathers Throne, in the highest part of Heaven, far above all heavens? and that I a poor worm, dust and ashes should sit with him in Heaven, should be one with him in glory, should be as near him in honor and happiness, as such a poor creature is possibly capable of? Oh how should I but hunger and thirst after this? if I might have a wish, I would not wish low things: why, this is the very top, and height and quintessence of Heaven, Christ in his Fathers Throne, and I in Christ's Throne; in desiring this I desire all, and therefore whatever thou givest or denyest, Lord give me this, and I have enough forever.

3. Let us see Christ's mission of his holy spirit, and so desire a share in that gift: we cannot expect to sit with Christ, but we must first have the spirit of Christ; and therefore as we would have that, let us desire after this. The greatest gift we can expect in this world is the spirit of Christ. Consider O my soul, all things here below are either temporal or spiritual things; and of things spiritual this is the sum, the in-dwelling of the Spirit. O Lord give me thyself, and that contains all gifts; O give me the spirit, and thou canst not but with him give me all things; there be many that say (saith the Psalmist) Who will show us any good? earthly things are desired of many; but is anything on earth to be compared with this gift from heaven? if it were only the beauty of holiness, it were certainly a most desirable thing; if we rightly understand it, holiness (though but one effect of the spirit) is a most rare thing; holiness fills the soul with joy, peace, quietness, assurance; holiness entertains the soul with feasts of fat things and of refined wines; holiness carries the soul into the banqueting-house of apples and flagons; holiness gives the soul a dear communion with God and Christ; holiness brings the soul into a sight of Christ, an access to him, a boldness in his presence; holiness admits the soul into the most intimate conferences with Jesus Christ in his bed-chamber, in his galleries of love, and that which is an argument of more beauty than all the creatures in the world have besides; holiness attracts the eye, and heart, and longings, and ravishments, the tender compassions, and everlasting delights of the Lord Jesus; and if holiness be thus lovely, Oh what is the holy spirit itself? what is the Rise, the Spring, the Fountain of holiness? what? O my soul, that not only grace, but the spirit of Christ should dwell in thy spirit? that thou shouldst be God's building, and that not as the rest of the world is, for his creatures to inhabit; but as a Temple for himself to dwell in, as a Gallery for himself to walk in? Oh what longings! Oh what pantings and gaspings! Oh what faintings and swoonings should there be in thy spirit after this Spirit! Come holy spirit, O come and dwell in my soul! I know thou wilt make the place of thy feet glorious; if I have but thy presence, I shall be all glorious within: O come, come holy Spirit!

SECT. IV. Of hoping on Jesus in that respect.

4. Let us hope in Jesus, carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in these particulars; thus was the Apostles Prayer, Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and Peace in believing; that ye may abound in hope through the power of the holy Ghost; could we abound in hope that Christ's Ascension, Session, and Mission of his Spirit did belong to us, we should never be ashamed; Hope maketh not ashamed. O then let us look to our hope, and be sure that it be of the right stamp! which in reference to every of these passages we may examine thus. As —

1. If Christ's Ascension be mine, then am I ascended with Christ: I mean not in respect of any bodily Ascension, for that must not be until the last day; nor in respect of any essential, substantial soul-ascension, for that must not be before the separation of soul and body at our deaths-day: but in respect of our spiritual ascension, for so we may ascend into heaven by faith and love; though for the present we are on earth; if ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God; set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth. If Christ our Head be ascended, then we that are his Members must needs follow after him in our affections: Christ tells us, Where our treasure is, there will our hearts be also. If Christ our Treasure be ascended into heaven, our loves, our affections, our hearts will follow after him: and if our hearts be in heaven, no question but we ourselves both souls and bodies shall at last ascend; when Christ ascended, we ascended virtually with him, now we ascend spiritually, and at last we shall ascend bodily; for he that ascended shall descend, and then we shall meet him in the air, and so shall we be ever with the Lord. In the mean time to maintain our hope, let us ascend daily by faith and love; and this is our character, that Christ's Ascension is truly ours.

2. If Christ's Session be mine, then am I set down with Christ in heavenly places; I mean not bodily, but by faith, which faith makes it as sure to my soul as if I had a foot already in heaven; Faith is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen. By faith I now sit in heavenly places, in that I verily believe I shall do it one day; my hope is now certain, in that I am as sure of that I look for, as I am of that I have already received; it is the common objection, We see it not. As the Apostle said of Christ, We see not yet all things put under him; but he presently answers, We see Jesus who was made a little lower than the Angels, crowned with glory and honor, and so we may be sure the thing is as good as done; for if he be above, all must come under; in like manner we see not ourselves in present possession, but we see Christ crowned, and ourselves sitting with him virtually; and therefore at last we shall see ourselves actually crowned, and sitting together with Christ in heavenly places. In the mean time faith takes possession of the Kingdom of Heaven; saith makes the soul even now to converse with God, and Christ, and Saints and Angels; Faith lays hold upon eternal life, it puts the soul as it were into heaven, and sets it down at the right hand of Christ; and this is our character, that Christ's Session is truly ours.

3. if Christ's spirit be mine, and sent to me, then have I both the person, and train of the spirit of Christ; it is the having the spirit, and the working of the spirit in me, that is my evidence of the Spirit's mission; I look upon this as the greatest Question, and the weightiest, and most important case of conscience that can be propounded or known of us; viz. Whether the spirit of Christ doth reside in us? or whether we have a well-grounded hope to say of ourselves that we have the in-dwelling of the spirit of God? Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God (saith the Apostle) and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? And again, Know ye not that your bodies are the Temples of the holy Ghost? In this Question he seems to put it out of Question, that true Christians should know, and in right temper do know that the spirit of God dwells in them; if we know not this, we cannot know that we have any part in Christ; because the holy spirit is the principal bond of our union betwixt Christ and us; if we know not this, we cannot know that we are justified, for we have nothing to do with Christ's Righteousness, by which we are justified, until by our spiritual union Christ is made ours; if we know not this, we cannot know we are the adopted Children of God, for it is the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry in our hearts, Abba Father: if we know not this, we cannot know that we are sanctified, for it is the spirit which is the beginner and perfecter of our sanctification; if we know not this, we cannot know that our prayers are heard, for it is the spirit that helps our infirmities, and that makes intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered; if we know not this, we cannot know whether we are in error or truth; or whether our religion which we profess be true or false, for it is the spirit who enlightens us, and teacheth us, and leadeth us into all truth; if we know not this, we cannot know our own comforts, for he is the only true Comforter, from whom all sound comfort springs. Come then and put we ourselves to the trial; Let us search whether we have the spirit of Christ, which we may resolve (if we will not deal deceitfully with our own hearts) by these following signs.—

1. The Spirit of Christ is the spirit of illumination; if he dwell in us he will enlighten our eyes, reveal to us those saving truths of God as they are in Jesus; But the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things.—But ye have an unction from the holy One, and ye know all things. —But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you and ye need not that any man teach you, but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things; and hence it is that this holy spirit is called the Spirit of wisdom, and revelation in the knowledge of God.

2. The Spirit of Christ is the spirit of adoption; it brings our souls into that blessed estate that we are the Children of God: Ye have not received the Spirit of bondage again to fear; but we have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba Father. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father.

3. The spirit of Christ is a spirit of prayer. I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace, and of supplication,—Likewise the spirit also helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what we should pray for as we ought, but the spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. It is not said that the spirit teacheth us words, and fluent phrases, but it teacheth us to pray in the heart and spirit with sighs and groans.

4. The spirit of Christ is a spirit of sanctification; the Apostle having told the Corinthians that they had been notorious sinners, saith further, that they were washed and sanctified by the spirit of God. Hence the holy spirit is called The spirit of holiness; because he makes us holy who were in ourselves corrupt and sinful. If we have this spirit, it inclines our hearts to the things above, it mortifies our lusts, it brings us nearer unto God: the spirit therefore that is impure and encourageth men in sin, and cries up carnal Liberty, is certainly none of the spirit of Christ; and by this one sign many carnal pretenders of our times may be justly convicted.

5. The Spirit of Christ is a spirit of love. God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him; as the spirit is love, so it begets love in the hearts of his people; The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. All these graces are the fruits of the spirit, but the first grace in the link is love: by his spirit we are taught to love God, not only for his benefits, but in respect of his nature; for his goodness, mercy, justice, holiness, and all other his saving attributes; by his spirit we are taught to love anything that hath but the stamp and image of God upon it: but as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you, for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another; the most of the Heretical spirits of these times do hereby show that they have not the Spirit, their very religion lieth in railing at ministers, and reproaching those that are not in their way; this is far from the Spirit of love that is in God's Children; certainly where there is malice, hatred, strife, bitter-envyings, railings, revilings, for such kind of persons to lay claim to the Spirit of unity, it is a piece of impudent vanity, and a false suggestion from their own corrupt erring spirit, or from the spirit of error himself, who is an hater, reviler, and the accuser of the brethren.

6. The Spirit of Christ is a leading Spirit; As many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the Sons of God. But what is this leading of the Spirit? I Answer—

1. It is a drawing of the soul Christ-ward; Draw me (saith the Spouse) and we will run after thee. There must be a drawing of the soul in every duty to Jesus Christ; I say to Jesus Christ; for a man may be furnished with eminent gifts, and with suitable assistance in the laying out of those gifts from the Spirit, and yet he may be without the leadings of the spirit; gifts exercised cannot suppress corruptions in a man's own heart, and hence they that used their gifts, are called workers of iniquity; gifts do not carry out the heart towards Christ, but graces do; I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me, for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me, saith the Lord.

2. It is a giving liberty to the soul to walk in the ways of Christ. Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty; I mean not a liberty to sin, but to duty, nor yet every liberty to duty; for a man may exercise himself in the external part of all duties, and yet be without the leadings of the spirit; but I mean such a liberty, as when a soul accounts it an high favor from the Lord, if he will but use him in any services for himself, when it finds more delectation in these, than in any other ways; I have chosen the way of truth (saith David) and therein is my delight. And I delight in the law of God, after the inner man (saith Paul) for the law of the spirit of life in Jesus Christ, hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

3. It is a corroborating, or strengthening of the soul against all those impediments, that would hinder it in the ways of Christ; Israel is said to be led by the spirit of the Lord; and how did he lead them, but by dividing the waters before them, and by keeping them that they should not stumble? many times God's holy ones are beset with temptations, they find their hearts full of deadness, hardness, unbelief, and all manner of distempers; now if at such a time the mountains have been made planes, if at such a time corruptions have been born down, and their hearts have been let out towards Christ, certainly these are the leadings of the spirit: If ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live; for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, are the Sons of God: the particular [for] argues mortification to appertain unto the leadings of the spirit. There is in the Saints a constant opposition between the works of the flesh, and the works of the spirit; now when the works of the flesh are kept underneath and prevailed against, then a soul enjoyeth the leadings of the spirit; I know such oppositions are not in any but Saints; carnal men would wonder that any should complain for want of strength unto duties, why, they can easily come up to them, and be in the exercise of them; but alas! this arises either from Satan's not molesting them in the performance of duty, because they look not beyond the external part of it; or from their own insensibleness of the working of corruption, when yet it doth act: only a gracious heart findeth that if it be not strengthened by a Power beyond its own, it cannot act any grace, or perform any duty as acceptable to God; and hence the Apostle prays, That they might be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man.

4. It is an enabling of the soul to act in Gospel-duties for Gospel-ends; when the spirit leads, the soul never aims at a self-advancement; it never looks at its own name and glory, as they did, in Mat. 6.1, 5. but it eyes in all its actings the mortification of corruption, and the attainment of communion with God and Christ, and the increase of all Grace, Faith, Love, Patience, Meekness, self-denial, &c. or if it seek for outward mercies, it seeks them in a subordination to these, and in a way of subserviency to the interest and designs of Christ: in all things whether outward or inward, it seeks the glory of God, as the ultimate end. And in these particulars consists the leadings of the spirit of Christ.

7. The spirit of Christ is a witnessing spirit. The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God: and everyone that believeth hath the witness within himself. But of this two questions. 1. What is this witnessing work of the spirit? 2. How doth the spirit thus witness? for the first, I answer.

1. In general; witnessing is a giving in some evidence upon our knowledge how the matter in question standeth, that thereby others may be ascertained of the truth of the thing: At the mouth of two or three witnesses shall the matter be established; these words Christ cited, and said, It is written in your Law, that the testimony of two men is true; not but that it was certain in itself before, but that now by the testimony of two it is rendered certain unto those that question the same; this is witnessing.

2. In special; The witnessing of the spirit is an Office of the spirit, whereby it works the soul into a knowledge, persuasion, or conclusion of its acceptation into favor with God in Christ. Now the spirit witnesseth either objectively, or efficiently.

1. Objectively; When it only affords such special operations as have an aptitude to ascertain the soul, but do not ascertain, thus many a time the Spirit comes and brings in such, and such ascertainment or affirmations of our adoption, as if they were but duly observed, might manifest the same, but we overlook these evidences, we will not hear what the spirit speaks to us; We speak that we know (saith Christ) and testify that we have seen; but ye receive not our witness: so may the spirit complain, I have testified to you that which I know, I have said that ye were children of God, but ye have not received my witness; doubtless it is a sinful neglect not to yield attention unto the voice of the spirit; and yet the spirit in this way may be resisted.

2. Efficiently; and if the spirit witness thus, it cannot be resisted; in this way the spirit causeth the soul to conclude of its adoption by its speakings to it: this is not only the assertions or affirmations of our adoption, but the assurances of our souls that we are adopted. I am persuaded, saith the Apostle, and I know that my Redeemer liveth saith Job. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us. But—

2. How doth the Spirit thus witness? I answer, 1. Immediately. 2. Mediate.

1. Concerning the immediate testimony of the Spirit there is some controversy: Antinomians would have no other testimony but this; all other evidences (say they) are deceiving evidences; or if not deceiving, yet to make use of them it were but to light a candle to the Sun; for what are the graces of the Spirit in comparison of the Spirit's own testimony? and it may be the running into this extreme hath caused others absolutely to deny any such testimony; or at least to say for these enthusiasms or inspirations, let them boast of them that have them, we know no such thing. Methinks a middle betwixt both these (as it is proved by others) is most consonant to truth; for neither can I reject the graces of sanctification from being grounds of our assurance; neither dare I deny but there is something of the work of the Spirit's testimony which is an immediate work. Let us hear what others say of it—

Certainly there is a work, wherein the spirit acts as in illumination; and infusion of good motions into us, wherein by a secret influence upon the heart he quiets and calms the troubled soul concerning its condition by his own immediate power, without any grounds from Scripture without, or graces within.

There is a threefold work of the spirit; first, to convey and plant grace in the soul 2. To act and help us to exercise the graces which are planted there. 3. To shine upon and enlighten those graces: this last work the spirit fulfills two ways; first by arguments and inferences, which is a mediate work. 2. By presence and influence which is an immediate work; this the Apostle calls, witness-bearing; There are three that bear witness in Earth, The spirit, and water, and blood; the spirit brings in the witness of Water and Blood, which is his mediate work; but besides and above these he gives a distinct witness of his own, which is his immediate work, is in a way of peculiarity and transcendency called the witness of the Spirit.— As it is with the motions of the spirit, many a time the spirit excites a man to such or such duties, by laying his hand immediately upon the heart, and thereby inclining it to obey those motions; so in this case when a poor soul sits in darkness, and sees no light, sometimes upon a sudden it is (as it were) taken up into the third Heaven; and this is in such away that though the spirit of a man really believe it, and is immediately calmed by it, yet it cannot tell how it came to pass.

There is a Testimony of the spirit, which sometimes the spirit may suggest and testify to the sanctified Conscience, with a secret, still, heart-ravishing voice, thus, or in the like manner, Thou art the child of God; thou art in the number of those that shall be saved; thou shalt inherit everlasting life: and that as certainly and comfortably, as if that Angel from Heaven should say to thee, as he did to Daniel, greatly beloved.— Mighty and remarkable was the work of the spirit this way upon the heart of that noble Martyr, Robert Glover, upon the first sight and representation of the stake, when he cried, he is come, he is come. Such an immediate springing of the spirit was in the heart of Master Pecocke, who after many days of extremist horror, professed, The joy which he felt was incredible. Such an immediate work was upon the heart of Mistress Brettergh who after the return of her beloved, suddenly cried out, How wonderful! How wonderful! how wonderful are thy mercies O Lord! O the joys, the joys, the joys that now I feel in my soul! we feel and acknowledge by daily experience, that Satan doth immediately inject, and shall not the blessed spirit after his holy and heavenly manner immediately also suggest sometimes?

As there is in the eye, lumen innatum, a certain in-bred light, to make the eye see lights and colors without; and as there is in the ear, aer internus, a certain in-bred found and air, to make it discern the sounds that are without; so is there in a gracious heart, a new nature, an habitual instinct of Heaven to discern the consolations of God's Spirit, immediately testifying that we are the Sons of God; there are some secret and inexpressible lineaments of the Fathers countenance in this child, that the renewed soul at first blush knows and owns it. But for fear of mistakes, in this case observe we these Rules.

1. That although the spirit may immediately testify without any express or formal application of a word, yet he never testifies but according to the Word. If a man that never felt sin a burden, that throws away all duties of Religion, that never Prayes, Reads, Hears, or Meditates, shall say that he is filled with joy, Peace, and, the assurance of God's Word, it is certain the holy Spirit is not the Author of this, because the promise of peace belongs to none of this stamp; see Math. 11.28. Isa. 57.15. Mal. 5.3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

2. That ordinarily the spirit brings in his testimony either in duty, or after duty. I have seen his ways, and I will heal him; I will lead him also, and restore comforts to him and to his mourners; I create the fruit of the lips, peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord, and I will heal him. I know there may be a case of grievous temptations, and at such a time the spirit of God may come in by a sudden irradiation, and cheer the soul wonderfully, though it knows not how; yet usually the spirit brings in his testimony either in duty, or not long after duty.

3. That such testimonies of the Spirit beget only an actual assurance during the present exigency, or in order to some present design that God is working thereby; these are extraordinary dainties, that God will not have us feed constantly upon; a gleam of light in a dark winters night, when a man cannot coast the Country, and discern his way by those marks which direct him at other times; or as a lightning from a thunder-cloud, that comes just in the moment when a man is stepping into a pit that would swallow him up; now a Traveler will not depend always upon such guides, but rather he will choose to travel by day; and learn out such way marks as may be standing assurances to him that he is in the way. And therefore—

2. The spirit witnesseth mediately; and that either without, or with argumentation. But both from the Word.

1. Without argumentation, and that is when the spirit applies some suitable word to the soul, and without more ado enables the soul to close with that suitable word. As for instance, thou art burdened for sin, and thou hast prayed earnestly for pardon of sin, and even then a secret whisper of the Spirit casts that word into thy heart, I will heal thy backslidings, and love thee freely, or such a voice as that, come un-unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Now this is a direct testimony; only I dare not leave it without a caution.—Some can relate extraordinary passages of providence attending the coming in of such and such a word: as that they did not know there was any such Scripture, nor did thy know where it was and yet in opening the Book, it was the very first place their eye was cast upon; or they wanted a Book, and in the use of some other means unexpectedly a word was spoken, or remembered, so pat to the case, as if it had been a very message from Heaven: certainly the Spirits hinting in of words thus, is very observable; yet a bare giving in of a word is no warrant that it comes from the spir•• unless the soul come up to some end which the word itself poynteth at; there must not only be a word, but a closing with the word, and improving of the word, for the ends it aimeth at, as quickening, comforting, supporting, acting of some graces, or such like; and by this we may know that the testimony is true, and proceeds from the Spirit of God.

2. With argumentation, and that is when the Spirit brings in the testimony of blood and water; I may call it a testimony of Faith, and other graces of the Spirit written in our hearts, and brought out by the spirit in a way of argument, as thus—He that believeth, hath everlasting life; but I believe, Ergo. The first proposition is the Gospel, and in this way it is the first work of the spirit to open our eyes, for the understanding thereof. The second proposition is thy case, or my case; and here the Spirit enlightens the soul to see itself under that condition, but I believe. Indeed many times this is not so easily done, and therefore the spirit doth elicit and draw forth the soul to an assent by a further evidence of argument, True (says the soul) he that believes hath everlasting life, but I am none of those believers, and therefore what doth this promise concern such an unbelieving wretch as I am? In this case now the Spirits work is longer, or shorter, even as he pleaseth; if it will be no better, the Spirit is fain to produce some other proofs of Scripture, as evidence faith in the subject in whom it is; such as purifying the heart, love to God, his ways, his people, &c. and possibly it goes further yet, and proves those graces to be in the soul by further marks.—I know some object, if the spirit say, thou art a believer, because thou hast love, the soul may doubt still whether it have love or no; and if the spirit say, thou hast love because thou delightest in God's Commandments; the question may be still, whether that delight be sincere, or counterfeit; pure, or mixed; and therefore say they, There can be no judgment of a man's justification by his sanctification; or of his sanctification by the operation of particular graces.

I Answer, it is true, that whiles I endeavor to discover these graces merely by reason, they may be still subject to question, and so they can make no firm assurance; but in the soul that is graciously assured this way, the Spirit of God rests the heart upon an ultimum quod sic: he convinceth the soul by that which is most visible in him, and so stops the mouth of cavilling reason from perplexing the question anymore. Indeed it is a fine skill to know whether a true assurance be merely rational, or from the witness of the Spirit of God? whether it be wrought out of a man's own brain, or wrought into his heart by the Holy Ghost? now in some cases we may discern it, as thus; the assurance that the Spirit gives, doth sometime surprise a man unexpectedly, at unawares; as it may be in a Sermon, that he came accidentally unto; or in a Scripture, that I cast a transient-glancing eye upon; but thus doth not reason. Again,

The assurance that the spirit gives, maintains a soul in a way of reliance and dependence, when it sees no reason why he should do so; or it may be when he sees a reason why it should not be so; as it is said of Abraham in another case, that he believed in hope against hope; faith told him there was hope that he should be the Father of many Nations, when reason told him there was none. Again, The assurance that the spirit gives, is attended with an high esteem of Prayer, Duties, Ordinances, and in the issue (which is the most principal sure mark) it purifies the soul that hath it, He that hath this hope purifieth himself, even as he is pure; he is ever washing himself from sin, and watching against sin, and taking all possible care to keep himself pure and unspotted in this present evil world, it keeps the soul humble, and lowly, it being impossible that such a testimony of the spirit, and so intimate a converse with God, and the light of his countenance should not reflect low thoughts upon a man's self concerning himself; such a man cannot but say, Lord, what am I that thou hast brought me hitherto? what? for such a peevish, unbelieving, impatient soul as mine is, to be carried in thy arms, and cheered with thy smiles, and to enjoy the comforts of thy spirit? Oh what a wonderful, merciful gracious God have I?

Yet in all this I exclude not the Spirit in drawing a rational evidence from Scriptures; certainly the spirit helps in a general way, by making use of our reason, only it elevates and improves our reason to a further assurance by a supernatural assistance; as in Prayer, and in Preaching of the Word, there may be a common assistance of the Spirit of God; but there is another kind of praying and preaching by the Spirit, which the Scripture often speaks of, and calls the spirit of supplication, and the demonstration of the spirit; and that is not performed by a common or general, but by a special and particular assistance of the Spirit of God; so there is a twofold influence of the Spirit in putting forth acts of assurance in the heart, even of a Godly and Sound Christian; the very same man may act assurance sometimes rationally, and sometimes spiritually; in the former the spirit acts too, but in a common way, only in the latter, is the supernatural, special assistance, which peculiarly is said to be the witness of the Spirit. I speak not against rational evidences, only it concerns us to apply ourselves to the Spirit to superadd his testimony: O let us not so content ourselves with rational evidences, but that we labor to elevate the evidence of reason into a testimony of the Holy Spirit of God. To wind up all I have said—

O my soul, try now the hope of the spirits indwelling by these several signs; art thou enlightened savingly in the knowledge of God, and of Christ? art thou a Child of God, one of his adopted sons for whom he hath reserved the inheritance? hast thou a spirit of Grace and Supplication? a spirit of Sanctification? a spirit of Love? art thou led by the spirit? dost thou feel the drawings of thy soul in every duty to Jesus Christ? dost thou feel a liberty, or a delight in thy soul to walk in the way of his Commandments? dost thou feel any strength to come in against thy corruptions; dost thou feel the spirits help to act in Gospel-duties for Gospel ends? hast thou ever had the immediate testimony of the spirit? or if not so; hast thou ever had the immediate testimony of the spirit without any argumentation? hast thou unexpectedly dipt and lighted on some places of scripture that hath satisfied thy soul as with marrow and fatness? or if not so neither, hast thou the immediate testimony of the Spirit with argumentation? canst thou argue thus, He that believeth shall be saved but I believe, therefore I shall be saved. Or if any doubt be made of the assumption; canst thou prove it by such other graces as accompany faith, and are the fruits of faith? canst thou say by the help of the spirit, and shinings of the spirit, that these, and these graces are in me, and have been acted by me; yea, I do love God and Christ, I do repent of my sins, &c. surely then thy hope is well grounded, thou hast the indwelling of the spirit; it is thine, even thine.

SECT. V. Of believing in Jesus in this respect.

5. LET us believe on Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in these particulars, many scruples are in many hearts, What? is it possible that I should have any share in Christ's ascension, Christ's session, Christ's mission of his spirit? was it ever in God's heart that I should partake with Christ in all these glories? if it must be so that he will let out his loves to so unworthy a wretch, was it not sufficient for him to have come down from Heaven, and to have acted my redemption here below? Is it not an high Favor that a King should leave his Court, to give a poor prisoner in the Jail a visit? but will he take him with him to his own home, and bring him into his own presence-chamber, and set him at his right hand in his throne? And so that Christ should not only leave his Fathers throne, and give me a visit, lying in the dark dungeon of unbelief; but that he should take off the bolts, and set open the prison doors, and take me up with him into Heaven, and there set me down at his right hand, and in the mean time give me the earnest and pledge of my inheritance, by filling my soul with his own spirit; O what an admirable incredible thing is this? it was the last vision of John which was so full of wonders. And I John saw the holy City, the new Jerusalem coming down from God out of Heaven.— And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying; Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them. Surely it was a miraculous mercy that heaven should come down upon earth, and that God should come down to men: but Oh what is this, that Earth should go up to Heaven, that men should ascend up to God? yea, that my soul with Christ, and by Christ, should ascend to God, and sit down with God in heavenly places? yea, that my soul should have for its inmate the very same spirit that Christ himself hath? Oh I cannot, I will not, I dare not believe.

Scrupulous souls, be not faithless but believing; there is none of these particulars for which we have not a warrant out of the Word of God; and therefore believe: But that I may persuade to purpose, I shall lay down, 1. Some directions, and 2. Some encouragements of faith.

1. For directions of Faith, observe these particulars. As—

1. Faith must directly go to Christ.
2. Faith must go to Christ as God in the Flesh.
3. Faith must go to Christ as God in the Flesh made under the Law.
4. Faith must go to Christ not only as made under the directive part of the Law by his life, but under the penal part of the Law by his death.
5. Faith must go to Christ not only as put to death in the Flesh, but as quickened by the spirit; of all these before.

6. Faith must not only go to Christ as quickened by the spirit, but as going up into glory, as sitting down at God's right hand, and as sending the holy Ghost; Faith should eye Christ as far as he goes; if he be ascended, so should faith; if he go into glory, and sit down there, and act there for his people, so should faith; and so should we in a way of believing follow after him, and take a view of all his transactions where he is; we have heard before how faith should go to Christ as dying, and as rising again; but yet faith is low, while it doth not go within the veil, and see him in glory; it is not enough to have only a faith of Justification, but of Glorification. O come let us see Christ in Heaven, and we can have no less than a glorious saith! how many are there that never yet came to act saith in Christ as a glorified Christ? we are yet still in the lower form; many of us take in no more of Christ than what was done on the cross, or what some natural, and common resemblances of him can hold forth; we seldom follow Christ into Heaven, to see what he is doing these for us. O my soul! and O my faith! mount up, and be on the wing: Christ is gone up to heaven, Christ is set down at God's right hand; Christ hath sent down his holy spirit: to this purpose it was expedient that he should go away, and now he is gone away, to do something that remains to be done for thee in his Kingdom; he had still some glorious piece to frame for thy salvation, and therefore he left this world and went to his Father, that he might act it in glory; and now he is invested with all the riches of Heaven, he hath all the keys of Heaven and Hell, he hath all power to command, he hath received all the promise to himself, and all that he hath to do, it is to let out of himself again unto his Saints; he hath not only got his Fathers heart for them, but he hath got all his riches to bestow upon them; when he came to Heaven, the Father bid him sit down at his right hand, and take what he would, and bestow what he would upon his Saints; and thereupon he gave gifts unto men, yea, he gave the gift of gifts, even the Holy Ghost himself. What? art not thou a partaker of this gift? O then Look up unto Jesus in reference to all these actings, set him before thee: Christ in all these particulars is a right object for thy faith to act upon.

7. Faith in going to Christ, his ascension, session and mission of the holy spirit, it is principally to look to the purpose, intent, and design of Christ in each of these particulars: Christ did nothing but he had an end, a meaning in it for our good; and here is the life of Faith, to eye the meaning of Christ in all his doings. Now the ends of Christ's ascension, session, and mission of his spirit were several; I shall instance only in these few. As—

1. Christ ascended that we might ascend: look whatever God acted on Christ's person, that he did as in our behalf, and he means to act the same on us: was Christ crucified? so are we; is Christ risen again, so are we risen together with him: is Christ gone up into glory? so are we; Heaven is now opened and possessed by Jesus Christ for us, and at last we shall ascend even as he ascended; Christ cannot be content with that glory he hath himself, until we be with him; Father I will, that those also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold, or enjoy my glory which thou hast given me. Christ as our head is in glory, and so we are there already with him; and Christ as our advocate is in glory, and there he is pleading and praying for us, that we may actually be received and brought up to him: Father I will that these whom thou hast given me may be with me. Christ's crown of glory is as it were a burden on his own head, until it be set on the heads of all his •aints; O the blessed end of Christ's

Ascension! how should faith pry into this? Believers! you see your object, you know his person, never be quiet until ye come into his condition: as we must go through all ordinances and creatures till we come to Christ, so through all conditions of Christ until we come to glory

2 Christ sate down that we might sit with him in heavenly places, what is the end of Christ's Session, but •hat we m•gh• invest all his •aints with the same privilege? In this height of glory, Christ is the pattern, and plat-form, and Idea of what we shall be; surely this is the very top of Heaven; Chri•t is exalted above the Heavens, that we might in our measure and proportion be exalted with Christ; it was Christ's Prayer; that his Father, and he, and we, might all be one, As thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us Oh how should faith stand, and gaze on Jesus Christ in this respect? •h•t? is he on God's right hand? and is he there preparing a room, a seat, a mansion for my soul? What shall I sit at the right hand of Christ? shall I sit as an assessor on his udgment-seat to Judge the world wi•h Jesus Christ? when the Son of man shall sit o• the Throne of his Glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Israel. O what is this? had not Christ said it, how could I have believed it? admire O my soul at this aim of Christ the meaning of his exalting himself, it was to exalt thee; and the meaning of his exalting thee on this manner, it is to m•nifest to all the World, what the Son of God is able to do, in raising so poor a creature to so rich a glory. O the end of Christ's sitting at God's right hand! hereby th• Saints are Christ's ass ssors; Lord's of the higher house, the Kings Peers to judge the World with him, Christ divides (as it were) the throne with them. I appoint unto you a Kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me, that you may eat and drink at my table in my Kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve Tribes of Israel.

3. Christ sent down the Holy Ghost, that he might dwell in our souls endow us with gifts, and graces; that he might comfort us, seal us unto the day of redemption; fit us for glor• amongst the many ends for which Christ sent down his holy spirit, I shall insist only on these two.—

1. That he might help us to cry Abba Father: and make us to come boldly to the Throne of grace, as Chil•ren to a Father. It is the spirit that take•s us by the hand and leads us to the Father, when others stand at a distance, and cannot come near: As a Princes Son is admitted at all times though others are kept our by O•ficers and Guards; so though there be never so much darkness, and fire, and terror about God; yet the adopted child, who hath received the spirit of adoption, can say; make way there, and let me come to my Father; guards are appointed to keep out strangers, but not Sons. And no wonder, for the spirit makes intercession for us, with groanings which cannot be uttered; the spirit teacheth us what to pray, and how to pray as •e ought; the spirit puts a courage and boldness into the hearts of his S•ints, even to admiration; this appears in that sometimes they have beset God with his promises, that he could no way get off Quicken me according to thy word,—And strengthen me ac•ording to thy word.— And be merciful unto me according to thy word.— And uphold me according to thy word — And give me understanding according to thy word: And sometimes they have beset God with their challenges of his Justice. Faithfulness, and Righteousness: so David, Deliver me in thy righteousness. — And judge me according to thy righteo•sness.— An quicken me according to thy righteousness.—And in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness. Why, this is the •pirits work, he helps our infirmities, he imboldens our spirits in their approaches to God: surely it is one end of the spirits mission; Be•ause ye are sons.God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba Father. I will not deny but that bastards, strangers without the Covenant, having no right to God as their Father, may yet petition God, as a subdued people do their Conqueror, or as Ravens cry to God for food, or as some howl upon their beds for Corn and Wine; but they cannot pray; in right Prayer there is not only required gracious ingredients in the action, but also a new state of adoption and filliation: many speaks words to God, who do not pray; many tell over their sins, who confess not their sins to God; many speak good of God, who do not praise God; thousands claim Fatherhood in God, where there is no Sonship, nor ground in the thing itself. A new nature is only that best bottom of Prayer, that takes it off from being a taking of God's Name in vain. Now this is the fruit of the spirit, and one of those ends of the spirits mission.

2. That he might guide us into all Truth; I mean into all necessary, Fundamental saving Truths: in this respect we have need of the spirit in these days. He it is that Dictates to us which is the true Religion; he it is that transcribes upon our hearts, that which was before only written in our books; he it is that not only reveals truth from without, but imprints it also on the soul, as a man doth a seal by impressing it on the wax; to this purpose saith the Apostle, He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the witness in himself; how in himself? I answer, 1. In that the Spirit gives him a habit of faith. 2. In that the Spirit causeth him to bring it forth into act. 3. In that the Spirit stamps on the soul all those other impressions of desire, hope, love, joy, or whatever else we call the new nature; so that now there is a new nature within him, he hath new thoughts, new designs, new desires, new hopes, new loves, new delights, he drives a new trade (as it were) in this world for another world: he is become in Christ a new Creature,Old things are passed away, and all things are become new. And from hence we may soundly argue the truth of our religion. Mark this, as the Written word is the testimony without us, so are these impressions of the spirit the testimony within us, by which we may know every necessary truth as it is in Jesus; this is the meaning of the Apostle, He that believeth hath the witness in himself: unbelievers have indeed a testimony without them, but believers have a double testimony, one without, and one within; and this witness within us will go with us which way soever we go: it will accompany us through all straits and difficulties. The external testimony may be taken from us; men may take from us our Bibles, our Teachers, our Friends; or they may imprison us where we cannot enjoy them; but they cannot take from us the Spirit of Christ: this witness within, is a permanent, settled, habituate, standing witness; O what an excellent help is here, that a poor Christian beyond all the furniture of the most Learned Men, that want this testimony of the spirit of Christ! surely this advantage will exceedingly furnish us against all temptations to any error, that is plainly contrary to the essentials of religion. One of our late Divines puts a case—

If the Devil or any seducer would draw us to doubt, whither there be indeed a Christ? or whither he did rise again, ascend, sate down at God's right hand, and thence sent down the holy Ghost? what an excellent advantage is it against this temptation, when we can repair to our own hearts, and there find a Christ, or a Spirit of Christ within us? O (saith the sanctified soul) have I felt Christ relieving me in my lost condition, delivering me from my captivity, reconciling me to God, and bringing me with boldness into his glorious presence? and now after all this I shall doubt whether there be a Christ in Heaven, or a spirit of Christ in my heart on Earth? have I felt him new creating me, opening my dark eyes, and bringing me from darkness into his marvelous light, and from the Power of Satan unto God, binding the strong man, and casting him out, and yet shall I question whether there be a Christ, or a Spirit of Christ? hath he made me love the things which I hated, and hate that which I loved? hath he given me such a taste of the powers of the world to come, and possessed me with the hopes of glory with himself, and given me a measure, and portion in God, and set my heart where my treasure is, and caused me in some measure to have my conversation in Heaven above, and yet shall I doubt whether there be a Christ above, or a Spirit within? O what an impudent lying spirit is this, that would tempt me against so much experience? And thus may a believer argue from the testimony that is within.

*I know some seeming Saints have fallen off into as great blaphemies as these I have named; witness the Quakers, and Ranters, &c. but I may say of such, as John did, They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us. It is no wonder if Satan prevail against those that gave Christ no deeper room but in their fantasy, and that did never heartily close with him in love. But for those that have the Spirit of Christ within them, it is not so with them; if they cannot answer the cavil of Satan, or of any of his instruments, yet they can hold fast the grounds of faith; Christ hath a deep room and interest in their spirits; he is held faster by the hand than by the head alone; love will hold Christ, when reason alone would let him go; his ear is nailed (as it were) unto his door; and because he loveth him, he will not leave him: Who shall separate him from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword, (as it is written, for thy sake are we killed all the day long) nay in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that hath loved us. A modern Writer brings in a sincere heart, paraphrasing (as it were) on this Text in this manner; *Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? O thou malicious Devil, that dost hunt me with thy fiery darts! O you dull heretics. infidels, blasphemers, that fill up my ears with your foolish sophisms, and trouble me with your disputes against my Lord & Redeemer! go to him that knows him only by the hearing of the ear, if you mean to prevail; but I have known him by the sweet experiences of my soul; go to him that makes a Religion of his Opinions, and whose belief was never any deeper than his fancy, and whose piety never reached higher than to abstinency, and tasks of formal duty; these you may possibly draw away from Christ. But do you think to do so by me? why, tell me how? with what weapons or arguments can you think to prevail? what? shall tribulation be the means? no, no; I have that promise in the hand of my faith, and that glory in the eye of my hope, that will bring me through all tribulations under Heaven: or shall distress do it? why, I will rather stick so much closer to him that will relieve me in distress and bring me to his rest. Or will you affright me by persecution? I am assured that this is the nearest way to Heaven, and I am blessed of Christ, when I am persecuted for righteousness sake. Or shall nakedness be the weapon? I had rather pass naked out of this World to Heaven, than to be clothed in purple, and to be stripped of it at death, and to be cast into hell; Adam's innocent nakedness, and Lazarus's rags were better than that Epicure's gay apparel.— Or shall famine be the means? why, man liveth not by bread alone; I had rather my body were famished than my soul; I have meat to eat that ye know not of, even the bread of life, which who so eats shall live forever. Or will you affright me from Christ by the sword of violence? I know that the Lord whom I believe in, and serve, is able to deliver me out of your hands; but if he will not, be it known to you I will not forsake him; your sword will be only the key to open the prison doors, and let out my soul that hath long desired to be with Jesus Christ. If you tell me of peril, I know no danger so great as of losing Christ, and salvation; and of bearing his wrath that can kill both body and soul: do I not read in certain Histories of that noble Army of Martyrs, who loved the Lord Jesus to the death, and gloried in tribulation, and would not by the flames of fires, or jaws of Lions, be separated from Jesus Christ? did not they pass through the red sea, as on dry ground, to the promised land? yea, though they were killed all the day long, and accounted as Sheep to the slaughter? did they not stick and cleave fast to the Lord, and to the Captain of their salvation? nay; were they not in all this conquerors, and more than conquerors, triumphing in flames, to the confusion of Satan, and all their enemies; as Christ triumphed on the Cross, destroying by death the Prince of death? Oh what a blessed advantage is it against all temptations, to have the impress of the Gospel of Christ on our heart, and the witness in ourselves?

But I hear some object; If the witness in ourselves be so full and convincing, then what need have we anymore to make use of Scriptures, or Ministers? why should we leave an higher Teacher to go to a lower?

But I answer, 1. There is more than one thing wanting to enwise us to salvation; as first, an outward Word; and secondly, an outward Teacher; and thirdly, an inward Light: And accordingly God supplies this threefold want; the first, by giving us the Scripture; the second, by giving us a Ministry, and other occasional Teachers; the third, by giving us the illumination of the Spirit, to help us to see by the former means, and to make the Word and Ministry to us effectual. Now it were a mad thing for a man to say, I have eyes to read in a book, and therefore I have no need of the light of Candle, or of Sun; or I have eyes, and Sun, and therefore I have no need of the light in the Air, which cometh from the Sun; or I have the light both of the Eye, and Sun, and Air, and therefore I can read by it without a Book; or I have a Book, and therefore I can read it without a Teacher: certainly if a man would read, he must have all these, or more than one of these; so God hath appointed us three necessary means for our illumination and direction; the Word, the Ministry, and the Spirit; What God hath joined, let no man separate; if any will foolishly go, and set one of these against another, when God hath set them all together, and made them all necessary, assigning to each a several part in the work of our illumination, they may abuse God and themselves, and go without the light, while they despise the necessary causes of it. God's evidences must not be separated, much less must one be pleaded to the neglect of all the rest; as the work within us is not the first testimony, but a secondary confirming testimony, so doth it not make the first unnecessary or void: besides that, by the external testimony we must convince other men, which by the witness within us we cannot do. But this only by the way.

2. For the encouragement of our Faith to believe in Christ as in reference to his Ascension, Session and Mission of his Spirit.

1. Consider of the excellency of this Object; what is it but Christ? Christ in his Ascendant, Culminant, Regnant Power? Christ in his Marching, Conquering, Triumphant Postures? in his Free, and Large, and Magnificent Gifts? When he Ascended on high, he led Captivity Captive, and gave Gifts unto Men. O the Glory, O the Excellency of Christ in these Respects! Verily they are enough to tire out Men and Angels with the only Act of wondering and surveying of their vastness. Here is Gospel-Work for all Eternity, to dig into this Gold-Mine, to roll and turn this Soul-delighting precious Stone, to behold, enquire, and search into these depths and heights of Christ exalted: and I believe this is the satiety, the top, and prime of Heavens Glory, to see and wonder at the virtues of him that sits on the Throne, at the right hand of God; to be filled, but never Satiated with the Glory of Christ. What? Christ ascended? Christ set down in Glory? and Christ sending down his Holy Spirit? here's a Compendium of all Glories: here is one for an heart to be taken with, made up of nothing but of several Mysteries of Glory.

2. Consider the Power, Virtue, and Influence of this Object into our souls Salvation; oh what a stately Tower have we here erected to see Heaven on? Faith may stand (as it were) on this Mount, and see itself in glory; Oh the flowings, the rich emanations of Grace and Glory that come from hence! come, let us draw, the Well is deep; all the drops and dewings that fall on Men or Angels are but as chips in comparison of that huge and boundless body of the fullness of Grace that is in Christ; one Lily is nothing to a boundless and broad Field of Lilies; Christ is in these respects the Mountain of Roses; oh how High, how Capacious, how Full, how Beautiful, how Green? could we but smell him who feeds among the Lilies, till the Day break, and the shadows fly away; could we but dive into the Golden Veins of these unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ, we should say, It is good to be here. Oh it's good to gather up the fragments that fall from Christ; his Crown shines with Diamonds and Pearls; oh why do we toil ourselves in gathering sticks, when tomorrow we shall be out of this World, and go to Christ? come, where is our mouth of Faith? let us lay to it here, let us suck and be satisfied with these Breasts of consolation; let us milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of his Glory.

3. Consider of the suitability of these Objects to our several conditions; you may remember the first cry, Was it not love enough for Christ to come down, and to visit us here; but that he must go up and take us with him? no, no, his love was so great and vast, that for our sakes he moves up and down; this ravished the Spouse, Behold he comes leaping upon the Mountains, and skipping upon the Hills, Cant. 2.8. Gregory that measured his leaps, thus gives them; he first leaps from his Fathers Mansion to his Mothers Womb; from her Womb to the Cratch; from his Cratch to his Cross; and from his Cross to his Grave; from his Grave up again to Heaven; great leaps indeed, that shown both his readiness to love, and willingness to save: infinite love can never be out-tired with greatest actions. But another cries, how should I believe that Christ is exalted, and that by virtue thereof I shall be exalted, when I see myself in a forlorn condition, forsaken of God, and abject amongst Men; Alas! Man at his best is altogether Vanity, yea, Men of low degree are Vanity, and Men of high degree are a Lye; to be laid in the Ballance I am *altogether lighter than Vanity; how then should I believe any such condition; is a Worm a fit or a capable Subject to wear a Crown? Yes, the Lord is great, and he can do great things; He raiseth up the Poor out of the Dust, and lifteth up the Beggar from the Dunghil, to set them among Princes, and to make them inherit the Throne of Glory; for the Pillars of the Earth are the Lord's, and he hath set the World upon them, he will keep the Feet of his Saints.—Why there is my sadness, cries another; He will keep the Feet of his Saints; if I were but a Saint, I could believe this Power; but alas! I am unholy, an unsanctified piece of Clay; I am a sinner, a sinner of the Gentiles, chief of sinners, I deserve to be thrown down to Hell, rather than to be invested with Glory, and to sit in Heaven; True, but yet the Holy Ghost is given to make thee holy; of thyself thou art vile, and most vile; but hath not the Holy Ghost entered in, and took possession of thy Spirit? hath he not washed thee with water? yea, thoroughly washed away thy blood? hath he not anointed thee with oil, and covered thee with silk, and decked thee with gold and silver, and made thee comely through his comeliness which he put upon thee? Why, this is the office of the holy Ghost, and if thou hast but the in-dwelling of the Spirit, this is thy state: I know there is a part of thee unregenerate, and it will be so while thou art on earth, but withal there is in thee a new nature, another nature; there is something else within thee which makes thee wrestle against sin, and shall in time prevail over all sin, and this is the Spirit of Christ, sanctifying of thee; Being sanctified (saith the Apostle) by the holy Ghost.—Other complaints might be thus brought in, but if we understand the meaning, the design of Christ in his Ascension, Session, and mission of his Spirit, how might a true faith answer all? oh believe! believe thy part in Christ's Ascension, Christ's Session, Christ's Mission of his holy Spirit, and thou mayest go singing to thy grave! a lively saith in such particulars would set a soul in heaven, even whilst yet on earth.*

SECT. VI. Of loving Jesus in that respect.

6. LET us love Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in these particulars; much hath been said already of Christ's Conception, Birth, Life, Death, Resurrection; such Arguments of love as are enough to swallow up souls in love to Christ again: O the treasures of love and wisdom that have been opened in former passages! but as if all those were not enough for God, see here new Gold mines, new found out Jewels, never known to be in the world before, opened and unfolded in Jesus Christ. Here are the incomes of the beams of light most inaccessible; here are the veins of the unsearchable Glories of Jesus Christ; as if we saw every moment a new heaven, a new treasure of love; the Bosom of Christ is yet more opened; the new breathings and spirations of love are yet more manifested. See! Christ for us, and for our salvation is gone up to Heaven, is set down at God's right hand, and hath sent down the holy Ghost into our hearts; in the pouring out of these Springs of Heavens love, how should our souls but open the mouth-wide, and take in the streams of Christ's Nectar, Honey, and Milk, I mean his sweet, and precious, and dear love-breathings? We have heard of Christ's invitations, Come to me all ye that are weary and heavy laden: but suppose Christ had never outed his love in such a love-expressing Come to me; yet Christ himself in these glorious particulars is such a drawing object; (the very beauty of Christ, the very smell of the Garments of Christ, very capacious and wide Heaven of Christ's exaltation are intrinsically, and of themselves such drawing, ravishing, winning objects) that upon the apprehension of them we cannot choose but love Christ: as Gold that is dumb and cannot speak, yet the beauty and gain of it crieth aloud, Come hither poor creature, and be thou made rich; so if Christ should never open his lips, if he should never gently move, Open to me my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled, for my head is full of dew, and my locks with the drops of the night; yet the Glory, the Power, the Sovereignty of Christ; the exaltation of his Person, and the magnificence of his Gifts, should even change our souls into a Globe or mass of Divine Love and Glory, As it were by the Spirit of the Lord.

Two things I shall instance in, which may be as the Load-stones of our love to Christ; the first is his glory, and the second his bounty.

1. For his Glory, no sooner was he ascended, and set down at God's right hand, but John the Divine had a sight of him, and oh what a glorious sight! He was clothed with a garment down to the feet, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle; his head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow, and his eyes were as a flame of fire, and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace, and his voice as the sound of many waters; and he had in his right hand seven stars, and out of his mouth went a sharp two edged sword, and his countenance was at the Sun that shineth in his strength; when John saw him thus, he swoons at his feet, but Christ for all his Glory holds his head in his swoon, saying, fear not, I am the first, and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen, and hath the Keys of hell and of death. A glorious Christ is good for swooning, dying sinners, would sinners but draw near, and come and see this King in the chariot of love, and come and see his beauty, the uncreated white and red in his sweet countenance, he would certainly draw their souls unto him. Nay, say that all the damned in hell were brought up with their burning fiery chains to the utmost door of Heaven: could we strike up a window, and let them look in, and behold the Throne, and the Lamb, and the Troops of glorified spirits clothed in white, with Crowns of gold on their heads, and Palms in their hands, singing the eternal praises of their glorious King; oh how would they be sweetened in their pain, and convinced of their foolish choice, and ravished with the fullness of those joys and pleasures that are in Christ's face for evermore? surely much more may this glory of Christ warm thy heart; O my soul! what an happiness were it to see the King on his Throne; to see the Lamb, the fair Tree of Life, the branches which cannot for the narrowness of the place have room to grow in, For the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain him? What an happiness were it to see love itself, and to be warmed with the heat of immediate love that comes out of the precious heart and bowels of this princely and royal Standard-bearer? as yet thou canst not, must not see these sights, there's no seeing the King thus in his beauty till thou comest to glory; for then, and then only must thou see him face to face, and yet the Idea and Image of this glory is seen and may be seen of every true believing soul; enough may be seen by an eye of faith, to kindle in thine heart a flame of love to the Lord Jesus Christ: Oh who can think of the glory that is in this dainty delightful One, and not be swallowed up in love? Who can think of Christ's sitting at God's right hand, and sparkling in this glory round about, and casting out beams of glory through East, and West, and North, and South, through Heaven, and Earth, and Hell, and not love him with the whole heart, soul and might? I remember one dying, and hearing some discourse of Jesus Christ: Oh (said she) speak more of this, let me hear more of this; be not weary of telling his praise, I long to see him, how should I but long to hear of him? Surely I cannot say too much of Jesus Christ; in this blessed subject no man can possibly hyperbolize; had I the tongues of Men and Angels, I could never fully set forth Christ; it involves an eternal contradiction that the creature can see to the bottom of the Creator. Suppose all the sands on the Sea-shore, all the Flowers, Herbs, Leaves, twigs of Trees in Woods and Forrests, all the Stars of Heaven, were all rational creatures, and had they that wisdom, and tongues of Angels to speak of the loveliness, beauty, glory and excellency of Christ, as gone to Heaven, and sitting at the right hand of his Father, they would in all their expressions stay millions of miles on this side Jesus Christ. O the loveliness, beauty, and glory of his Countenance! can I speak, or you hear of such a Christ? and are we not all in a burning love, in a seraphical love, or at least in a conjugal love? O my heart! how is it thou art not love sick? how is it thou dost not charge the daughters of Jerusalem as the spouse did, I charge you O daughters of Jerusalem, if ye find my beloved that ye tell him, I am sick of love?

2. For his bounty, no sooner was he ascended, and set down at God's right hand, but he gives gifts unto men; and he sends down the holy Ghost. This was the Gift of gifts; I shall only weigh two Circumstances in this Gift, either whereof both dignifies, and casts a sparkle of bounty from the Giver, into the heart of the Receiver to move him to love. As—

One Circumstance is the greatness of the Giver; certainly the preeminence or dignity of any principle ennobleth and enhanceth the effect; a gift coming from a great Person carries ever a scent with it of a certain greatness, and relisheth either of excellency, or superiority, or nobility, or all. It is storied of Charles the fifth, that in his wars being ever pressed with want of money, and so unable to remunerate the services of divers Dutch Captains, and Nobles, whom he had entertained; he used after any great exploit performed by them, to call together his Nobles and Camp into such a field, and there in the presence of them all to take a Gold chain from about his own neck, and to put it about the neck of such a Captain, or such a Colonel, and so to embrace him and to give him thanks for his gallant service: why, this they esteemed a greater favor (being Circumstanced by such a Person, in such a way) than if in very deed he had given them a sufficient pay, or remuneration. O they valued that Chain more than many bushels of the like Gold; the very Person of the Emperor hanged at the Chain such a precious Jewel, as in warlike conceits a million of Gold could not countervail. O my soul, if an Emperor thus gained the affections of men, how shouldst thou but love Christ the great Emperor of Heaven and Earth: it was he that gave thee his Spirit, it was he that took off the Spirit which is upon him, (so is the expression of God to Moses) and put it upon thee; and doth not the Person of Christ, the Dignity of Christ, inhance the value of the gift? as all gifts are signs of love, so the love of a great Personage, and the gifts issuing from such a love, ought more to be accounted than any gifts of any meaner person whatsoever.

2. Another Circumstance is, the greatness of the Gift; this argueth greatness of good will; and consequently deserveth a correspondence of a semblable affection. Now what greater gift had Christ in store, than to give his own spirit? the spirit proceedeth from him, and is the same essence with himself; the spirit is the third Person of the true and only God-head, proceeding from the Father and the Son, and coeternal, coequal, and consubstantial with the Father and the Son; this appears by those divine Attributes and Properties which are attributed, and communicated to the holy spirit: As, 1. Eternity. God never was without his spirit; In the beginning God created heaven and earth,—and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. 2. Omnipotency, because he, together with the Father and the Son, createth and preserveth all things, By his Spirit he hath garnished the heavens; the Spirit of God hath made me; and all these things worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. 3. Omniscency, or the knowledge of all things, For the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God. 4. Immutability, or unchangeableness, Men, and brethren, this Scripture must needs have been fulfilled which the holy Ghost spake. 5. Infinite mercy, or love; God is love,—and the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, which is given unto us. 6. Holy indignation even against hi••en sins, They rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit; why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie to the holy Ghost?—thou hast not lied unto men; but unto God; (a plain Text for the Divinity of the holy Ghost)—How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Grieve not the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. I might add Miracles, and the institution of Sacraments, and Prophecies, and Gifts, and Graces as the effects of his Divinity: I cast out devils (saith Christ) by the Spirit of God, and baptize in the Name of the Father, and of the Son; and of the holy Ghost. And the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith. And we are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. See now how the holy spirit is God, coeternal, coequal, and consubstantial with God the Father, and God the Son; is not this a great gift? yea, as great a gift as possibly can be given? what can he more than to give himself, and to give his spirit? O the bonds of love that are upon man towards Christ in this respect.

Come my soul and take a view of the Glory and Bounty of Jesus Christ! if thy heart be not all brass, and iron, and stone; if there be any fleshiness, softness, or pliability in it; why, then how shouldst thou choose but love? if either beauty or bounty; if either Majesty or magnificence can draw thy affection, Christ will have it; for in him is all; O let him be thy all! surely if thou hast anything besides himself, he is the Donor of all, he is the beauty of all, the sum of all, the perfection of all, yea, he is the Author, Preserver, and Finisher of all.

SECT. VII. Of Joying in Jesus in that respect.

7. Let us joy in Jesus as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in these particulars; there is not a particular under consideration, but 'tis the object of a Christians joy. As,—

1. How should it heighten my joys, and enlarge my comforts, when I do but consider that Christ is ascended into glory? by this it is clear and evident, that Christ is accepted of the Father for me, or otherwise he should never have been received into Heaven; if any frown had been in the face of God, surely Christ coming so near God, he should have had it; if any exception had been against his satisfaction, any flaw in our pardons, surely Christ should have heard of it; yea, without question he must have been turned out of Heaven, until he had made a full payment of our debts. I need not doubt of my acceptance at the Throne of Grace, when Jesus Christ is accepted for me, and that I stand in such a relation to Jesus Christ. Oh what joy is in this!

2. How should it heighten my joys, and enlarge my comforts, when I do but consider that Christ is set down at God's right hand. Why, now he hath the keys of Heaven delivered into his hands; All power is given unto him in heaven and in earth, and now he can do what he will; God the Father hath given away (as it were) all his Prerogatives unto Jesus Christ; All judgment is committed to the Son, for the Father judgeth no man. Now he is in a Capacity of acting out all his love, and the Father's desire to me in the most glorious way; he is highly advanced, and thereby he hath the advantage to advance me, and to glorify me; God hath given into his hands all the treasures and riches of Heaven; in bidding him, sit down at his right hand, he told him that he would have no more to do with the world, but that Christ should have all, and that Christ should bestow all he had amongst his Saints; and that this should be the reward of his death; and when once his Saints were come about him, and sate with him in his glory, why then Christ should resign up again his place, And deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father. Oh what joy may enter into this poor dark dungeon, disconsolate soul of mine, whiles I but think over these glorious passages of my Christ in glory?

3. How should it heighten my joys, and fill me with joy unspeakable, and full of glory, when I do consider that Christ, hath sent down his holy Spirit into my heart? when sorrow had filled the Apostles hearts, because he had told them, I must go away; he comforts them with this, If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send him unto you. The spirit is the Comforter, and where he comes, he fills souls with comforts; O what comfort is this, to know that the spirit of Christ is my Inmate? that my soul is the Temple, the Receptacle, the House and dwelling of the spirit of God? that Christ is in me of a truth, and that not only by the infusion of his grace, but by the in-dwelling of his spirit? surely it is some comfort to a sickly man that he hath a Physician always in the house with him; and to a woman that is near her travail, that the Midwife is in the house with her; but what comfort is it to a poor soul that the spirit of Christ is always in him? I will send you another Comforter (said Christ) that he may abide with you forever. Christ in his bodily presence went away, but Christ in his spirit continues still; Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world; he is with us, and which is more, he is in us for our comfort. Christ in you the hope of glory. Not Christ in Sermons which we hear, nor Christ in Chapters which we read, nor Christ in Sacraments which we receive; nor Christ in our heads by high notions, nor Christ in our mouths by frequent glorious expressions; but Christ in our hearts by his spirit, is unto us the hope of Glory. The grounds of our comforts in this respect, is,—

1. Christ's Presence; it is said of Paul, that after a sad shipwreck, the sight of some Christian brethren so cheered him, that upon the sight of them he thank'd God, and took courage; it is said of Caesar, that he cheered the drooping Mariners in a storm, by minding them of his presence, You carry Caesar; how much more should the in-being of Christ solace Saints? Lo I am with you. O my soul, was it not a cordial to the Disciples in a storm, that Christ was with them, whom the winds and waves obeyed? cheer up now, for if the Spirit be in thee, Christ is with thee.

2. Christ's Complacency; if his Spirit dwell in us, how should he but be well pleased with us? a man cannot properly be said to dwell in a prison, in which he taketh no delight; the Spirits in-dwelling imports a delight of Christ in such a soul, Here will I dwell, for I have desired it, or delighted in it, saith God of Zion, though many times drooping Christians, viewing their own beggarliness and vile ness, judge themselves worthy to be detested and deserted, and would relinquish themselves if they possibly could, yet Christ looketh to the poor and contrite soul as a meet habitation for himself to dwell in, I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite, and humble Spirit.

3. Christ's Communications; union is the ground of our communion with Christ; and the nearer our union, the greater is our communion; if Christ were only in a believer by the habit of grace, the union would not be so great, but if Christ be in us by his spirit, the union is nearer, and therefore the communion will be greater. O my soul remember this in all thy straits; there can be no creature-want, or danger whatsoever wherein the improvement of this in-dwelling of the Spirit may not refresh thee: art thou sick? the Physician both of soul and body is within thee; art thou sad? the Comforter himself that supplies the stead and room of Christ, inhabits in thee; art thou in exile, in banishment, imprisonment at greatest distance from thy dearest Friends? see Paul's refreshment when they were ready to pull him in pieces, and threw him into the Castle, even the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, be of good cheer Paul. Christ will stand by thee, nay, Christ by his Spirit dwelleth in thee, and will speak to thee comfortable words in thy greatest pressures.

4. Christ's Witnessings, if his Spirit dwell in us, we may then be assured of future glory, Christ in you the Hope of Glory. 'Tis a sweet note of a Divine upon it, The existency of Christ's Spirit in Believers, giveth existence to their hopes of Glory. The Spirit in us is God's earnest of Glory; the Spirit in us doth prepare us for participation in that Glory. I look upon this in-dwelling of the Spirit as that which no Hypocrite in the World can lay any claim unto; as for gifts, or graces, an Hypocrite may attain them, or something like them; it is said of Simon Magus, that he believed; it is said of Judas, that he repented; and of Esau, that he sought his birth-right with tears; it is said of some, that they partook of the Heavenly Gift, and of the Powers of the World to come, and yet fell away; and it is said of such others, that they trampled upon the Blood of Christ wherewith they were sanctified. Thus we find in Scripture-phrase, that in an Hypocrite or wicked Man, there may be a kind of Faith and repentance; a taste of Heaven, and of Sanctification; but where do we find in all the Bible, that Christ, or the Spirit of Christ, is said to dwell in an Hypocrite, or wicked Man? this only is the great privilege of a true believer, Christ in him the Hope of Glory.— O the comfort of this in-dwelling of Christ! If Zacchaeus hearing that Christ would abide in his House, received him joyfully; how much greater cause of joy have they who have already lodged him in their hearts? These things have I spoken to you, said Christ, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

And now, O my soul, spread thyself on this great good, Christ's Ascension, Christ's Session, and Christ's Mission of his Holy Spirit. What is joy but an effusion of the appetite, whereby the Soul spreads itself on what is good, to possess it more perfectly? the object is sweet, and large, and therefore the soul had need to spread itself, that it may be more united to the Object, and touch the good in more of its parts, yea, if it were possible in every part. There is not any particular here before thee, but 'tis fuel for joy. O what joy was in Heaven, when Christ Ascended, and when Christ sate down at God's right hand, and when Christ sent down the Holy Spirit? how stood the Angels wondering and admiring at these several passages? how did they stoop, and look with the bowing of the Head, and bending of the Neck, as the Word implies? and is not thy interest in these transactions more than Angels? O rejoice, and again rejoice! suppose thyself in Heaven, and that thou hadst a vision of Christ ascended; say, is he not a pleasant Object? In his face there is fullness of joy. Suppose thyself to have been in Heaven when he first entered into it, and when he first sate down at God's right hand, and sent down the Comforter to his Saints, was not Heaven full of joy? methinks the very thought of Christ's bright Face, and Christ's white Throne, and Christ's Harpers, and Heavenly Troops surrounding the Throne, and Christ's welcome to his Father, both for himself and all his Saints; and Christ's carrying thy name upon his Breast before his Father, should fill thy soul as full of joy, as possibly it can hold. O the first-fruits of Immanuel's land, that lies beyond time and death! O the joys that were in Heaven at Christ's first entrance into Heaven! O my soul, why dost thou not check thyself, and lay aside thy sad complaints, and forget this Earth, and Earthly troubles? why dost thou not look up to Jesus Christ, and rejoice in him who hath done all this for thy Salvation? either the Spirit of God is not thy Comforter, or thou canst not but receive comfort in these passages.

SECT. VIII. Of calling on Jesus in that Respect.

8. Let us call on Jesus; I mean—

1. Let us pray that we may have our part in these transactions; or let us pray for more and more assurance thereof unto our souls; for though we do believe, yet we may not be without our doubts; and in case of doubts, what better means than Prayer? I believe, Lord help my unbelief; Lord strengthen my Faith till I come to that plerophory, or full assurance of faith, that I may know my interest in the Ascension of Christ, and Session of Christ, and in the Mission of Christ's holy Spirit, and if once we are but assured, then—

2. Praise God for these great transactions of his Son: are they not mercies like mountains lying one upon another, and reaching up to the very Heavens? did not love break out at first in a direct line? and as it went along, hath it not wound up itself, in such a variety of unthought of discoveries, as that it amazeth Men and Angels? what? that Jesus Christ should not only act for us here on earth, but also ascend for us into Heaven, and sit down there at God's right hand above the Heavens? what? that all this should be for us and our salvation, and to that purpose that he should send down his Spirit into our hearts, to fit us, and prepare us for his glory? Now bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy Name, bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. —I will extol thee my God, O King, and I will bless thy Name forever and ever, every day will I bless thee, and I will praise thy Name forever and ever.—One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts, I will speak of the glorious honor of thy Majesty, and of thy wondrous works.—I will utter the memory of thy great goodness, and will sing of thy righteousness.—Thy Saints shall bless thee; they shall speak of the glory of thy Kingdom, and talk of thy power, and make known unto the sons of men thy mighty acts, and the glorious Majesty of thy Kingdom —Thy glory is above the earth and heaven,thou also exaltest the horn of thy people, the praise of all thy Saints, and people near unto thyself. O that my soul were but in David's temper, thus to breath out the praises of Jesus, and to bless his Name.

SECT. IX. Of conforming unto Jesus in that respect.

9. LET us conform to Jesus in the aforesaid respects. A serious beholding of Jesus in his Ascension, Session, and Mission of his Spirit, is enough to change us into the same Image from glory to glory. It was the sweet saying of an experienced Saint, View a glorified Christ, see him as in that relation and condition, and you will soon have the sparkles of the same glory on your hearts. Christ is now exalted, he is now in glory at the right hand of God, O let all our actings be glorious, let all our walkings, joys, breathings be as in glory, If ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God; set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth. I shall not in this transaction lay out many particular conformities to Christ's actings, but gather all into one, contained in this Text, which is heavenly conversation; seek things above, set your affections above; Christ is gone up, and Christ is set down at God's right hand; and herein if you will conform, let your hearts be in Heaven, let your affections be in Heaven, let your conversations be in Heaven: it is the Apostles own practice wherein stood his conformity to Jesus Christ for our conversation is in heaven. I do not know any one thing wherein we can be more like to Christ exalted, whiles we are upon earth, than to have our hearts, our affections, our conversations with Christ where he is: now then if we be virtually risen with Christ, and ascended with Christ, and set down with Christ in heavenly places, let us spiritually ascend, and sit down with him in these respects; certainly there is a proportion in our heavenly conversation; oh let our conversations be in Heaven?

In prosecution of this I shall examine these Queries.—

1. What do we mean by our conversation in heaven?

2. Why must our conversation be in heaven?

3. By what means must we come up to this conversation in heaven;

1. By our conversation in heaven I mean our aim at heaven; as heaven is our home, so our eye is there; whatever we do, our end, our scope is to fit us for heaven, and to lay in for heaven, We look not (saith the Apostles) at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen,for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. We look not] that is, we aim not at things which are seen; invisible things are the only scope and aim of a gracious soul.

2. By our conversation in heaven, I mean our communion with Christ in heaven. Truly our fellowship is with the Father,and with his Son Jesus Christ. As it is amongst friends that converse together, they act mutually for the comfort one of another, there is a mutual embracing and opening of their hearts to one another at every turn; so in our conversings with Christ there is a communion, or a mutual acting of the soul upon Christ, and of Christ upon the soul; we let out our hearts to Christ, and he lets out his heart to us; especially when we are with Christ in his Ordinances; it's not enough to call upon God, and to use some broken-hearted expressions, but oh, what communion have I with Jesus Christ? I cannot be satisfied except I taste and see how good the Lord is; I cannot be quiet, except I hear something from Heaven this morning. Why, this is an heavenly conversation.

3. By our conversation in Heaven, I mean our living according to the Laws of Heaven; in all our ways we must still enquire, What rule is there from Heaven to guide me in these ways? such and such a thing I have a mind to, but will the Law of Heaven justify me in this? have I any word from Jesus Christ to guide me in this? sometimes indeed my lust, my own ends, and the common course of the world was my rule; but now I dare not act but according to the Will and Scepter of Jesus Christ, now I am guided by the Laws of Heaven. Why, this is an Heavenly conversation.

4. By our conversation in Heaven; I mean our thoughts, and meditations of Heaven and heavenly things; When I awake (saith David) I am always with thee; the hearts of believers are frequently upon their heavenly treasures; as it is storied of Queen Mary, that a little before her death, she told them, if they ripped her open they would find Call is in her heart; so it may be said of them whose conversation is in Heaven, if you rip them up, you shall find Heaven in their hearts; not a day passes over their heads without some converse with Heaven, without some thoughts or meditations of heaven, and heavenly things.

5. By our conversation in heaven, I mean our affections on heaven, or on Christ in heaven; Set your affections on things above, (i.e.) set your desires, loves, hopes, joys, breathings on heavenly things; our affections are precious things, and are only to be set on precious objects; oh what a shame is it to set our affection on the things of this life! have we a Kingdom, a God, a Christ, a Crown in Heaven to set our affections upon? and shall we set them upon dross, and dung, and such base things? are not all our pleasures and vanities base in comparison of Christ? O be not we so base to set our affections on earthly things, but rather on God and Christ; and this is our heavenly conversation.

6. By our conversation in Heaven, I mean our tradings, our negotiations for Heaven, even whilst we are upon Earth: the word in the Original points at this, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, our trading is in Heaven; though our bodies be not there, yet our tradings are there; we carry and behave ourselves in this life as free Denizons of the City of Heaven; our City whereof we are Citizens, and whereunto we have right, is in Heaven above; in this respect we trade not for strifles, as other men do, but we trade for great things, for high things; we merchandize for goodly pearls, even for God, and for Christ, who sitteth at the right hand of God. We see now what is meant by our conversation in Heaven.

2. Why is the conversation of the Saints in Heaven?

1. Because they know full well, that the Original of their souls came from God and Heaven; the body indeed was of the dust of the ground, but the soul was the breath of God; so it is said of the first man, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. The soul had a more heavenly and divine Original than any of the other creatures that are here in this nether World; and when God works grace in the soul, and so it begins to know itself, and to return to itself, it then looks on all things here below as vile, and as contemptible things; it then looks upward, and begins to converse with things suitable to its Original. As it is with a child that hath a noble birth; if transported into another Country, and there used like a slave, there set to take channels, or (as the Prodigal) to feed swine; while he is there, and knows not his Original, he minds nothing but to get victuals, and to do his work that he is set about; but if once he come to know from whence he was, that he is indeed born heir to such a Prince, in such a Country; O then his thoughts, and mind, and longings will be altered; O that I were in my own Country! O that I were with my Father in his Court! Even so it is with the souls of the Sons of men, they are the birth (as I may so speak) of the great King of Heaven and Earth; and though by the fall of man they came to be as slaves to Satan, yet when God is pleased to convert the soul; then he discovers thus, Oh man, thou art born from on high, thy soul is (as it were) a sparkle of God himself, thou art come from God, and thou art capable of communion with God, even with God the Father, and God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. O consider of thy Country whence thou camest at first, certainly thou never hadst such a divine and excellent being given thee to delight only in the flesh, to be serviceable only to thy body; O look up unto Jesus! why, this it is that turns the heart and sets the conversation on heavenly things.

2. Because their best and choice things are already in Heaven, As their Father is in Heaven, and their Savior is in Heaven, thither he ascended, and there now he sits at the right hand of God; their Husband is in Heaven, their Elder Brother is in Heaven, their King is in Heaven; their Treasure is in Heaven, their Inheritance is in Heaven, their Hope is in Heaven, their Mansion is in Heaven, their chief Friends are in Heaven, their Substance is in Heaven, their reward is in Heaven, their Wages are in Heaven: and all these things being in Heaven, no marvel their conversations be in Heaven.

3. Because they are going towards Heaven even whiles yet they are on Earth. If the Nobleman (as we formerly supposed) do once know his condition, and begins his travel homeward towards his Fathers Court, will he not every morning that he rises, converse with them that come from his father to conduct him home? doth it not do him good to hear any man speak of his fathers Country? is it not in his thoughts, in his talk, in his eye, in his aim, at every step? O my soul, if thou art indeed travelling towards Heaven, how shouldst thou but have it in thy motions, affections, conversations? how shouldst thou but daily commune with thy own heart? Heaven is the place that I shall come to, ere long I shall be there; I know that in this world I am but for a while, but in Heaven I shall be forever and ever; we shall be caught up into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we be ever with the Lord. Our very travel towards Heaven implies an heavenly conversation, They go from strength to strength, till everyone of them in Zion appears before God.

4. Because much of Heaven is already in the Saints: The Kingdom of Heaven is within you, saith Christ; And knowing in yourselves that ye have a better and an enduring substance. Surely if the Saints have much of Heaven within them, it must needs be that their conversation is in Heaven; but they know this in themselves; they know it by what God hath revealed in their own hearts; eternal life is already begun in the souls of God's people; Heaven is in them, and therefore no marvel if their conversation be in Heaven. My meaning is not as if the Saints had no other Heaven but that within them; I know there is an Heaven above; but some pieces, or earnest, or seeds, or beginnings of that Heaven above is within them. Is there not a renewed nature, an Image of God, a spark of life, a drop of glory in God's people? Surely yes; And if so, all these will work heavenward; principles of grace will have some actings of grace till we come to glory.

3. By what means should we attain, or come up to have our conversation in Heaven?

1. Let us watch opportunities for heavenly exercises. God now by his Ministers calls, Come ye to the waters, come ye, buy and eat; come, buy wine, and milk without money; come to me, and your souls shall live. Why now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation: whiles Ministers call, and we live under the droppings of the Word, these are opportunities for Heaven; O then he that never prayed, let him now pray; and he that never heard, let him now hear; the Lord is now come near to us; Christ Jesus is calling, and mercy is entreating, and love is beseeching, and wisdom is even hoarse with crying after us; O lay hold on these opportunities for heavenly exercises, and then we shall come up to heavenly conversations.

2. Take heed of resting in the formality of duties; many souls that have enlightnings of conscience, dare not but take opportunities for heavenly duties; but then comes in the temptations of the Devil, and corruptions of their own hearts, and they say, now duty is done, or our task is over, and what needs more? Alas, alas! It is not what have we done? but where have we been? what, have our souls been in Heaven, with God, and with Christ? have we had any communion with the Father, and with the Son in our duties? O take heed of formality! it will exceedingly hinder our conversation in Heaven; O keep our eye still upon our heart! ask in duty, what affections have been acted? how much are we got nearer Heaven thereby? and by this means we shall come to an heavenly conversation.

3. Let us look up unto Jesus as hanging on the Cross, and as sitting on the Throne: this is the Apostles rule, Looking unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the Cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the Throne of God. These two are the objects of a Christians look who studies an heavenly conversation, viz. Christ's Cross, and Christ's Session; by the Cross he is Author, and by the Throne he is the Finisher of our faith; in the first is set down his love to us, in the second is set down our hope of him; with high wisdom hath the Holy Ghost exhorted us with these two motives to run, and not to faint: first, here is love, love in the Cross, Who loved us, and gave himself for us, a sacrifice on the Cross: secondly, Here is hope, hope in the Throne, To him that overcometh, will I give to sit with me in my Throne. After Christ's death he rose again, ascended, and is now set down at the right hand of the Throne of God; and the same is our blessed hope, Christ's Throne is not only his place, but ours also; the love of his Cross is to us a pledge of the hope of his Throne, or of whatsoever else he is worth. Come then, and settle your thoughts and looks on this blessed object; a sight of Christ's Cross, but especially of Christ's Throne, is a blessed means to wean us from the World, and to elevate and raise up our affections to things above, yea to form and frame our conversation towards Heaven.

4. Let us wait for the appearing of Jesus Christ, Our conversation is in Heaven (saith the Apostle) from whence also we look for the Savior the Lord Jesus Christ. Where a man's conversation is, there his expectations may be; and where his expectations are, there a man's conversation is, and will be; if we expect ere long, that the Lord Jesus will appear in glory, and that we shall see him not with other, but with these same eyes, the very waiting for these things will help our conversation to be heavenward. Certainly the day is a coming, when Jesus Christ shall come with his Angels in his glory, and then shall the bodies of the Saints shine gloriously before the Face of God, and Jesus Christ: O the wonder of this day! the glory of Christ shall then darken the glory of the Sun and Moon, and Stars; but my body shall not be darkened, but rather it shall shine like the glorious body of Christ Jesus; if a candle should be raised to have so much luster and beauty, as if you should put it into the midst of the Sun, yet it would shine, you would think it a strange kind of light; surely it shall be so with the bodies of Saints, for though they are put into the midst of the glory of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, yet their bodies shall shine in beauty and luster there; now did we believe this, and wait for it every day, How would it change us? how would it work us to an heavenly conversation? I have a diseased and lumpish body; and my body hinders me in every duty of God's worship, but within a while Christ will come in his glory, and then he will make my body like unto his glorious body, so that I shall be able to look upon the face of God, and to be exercised in holy duties to all eternity without weariness, without intermission: I have many things here that trouble my mind and spirit, and that hinder me in my converse with Heaven, and heavenly things; but within a while, Christ will appear with his mighty Angels, to be admitted of his Saints, and then shall I sit as an assessor on the Throne, with Jesus Christ to judge the world, and then shall I live forever with him, to be where he is, and enjoy all he has, yea all that he hath purchased for me by his blood; oh let me wait for this! let me look for it every day! God hath but a little work for me here on Earth, and when that is done, this shall be my condition. Christians! if but every day we would work these things on our souls, it would be a mighty help to make our conversations heavenly conversations.

5. Let us observe the drawings, and movings, and mindings of the Spirit, and follow his dictates; to this purpose Christ ascended, and sate down at God's right hand, and sent down the holy Spirit, that the Holy Ghost being come down, he might do his office in bringing on our souls towards salvation; and if ever our souls get above this earth, and get acquainted with this living in Heaven, it is the Spirit of God that must be at the chariot of Elijah, yea the very living principle, by which we must move and ascend; O then take heed of quenching its motions, or resisting its workings, take we heed of grieving our guide, or of knocking off the chariot-wheels of this holy Spirit. We little think how much the life of graces, and the happiness of our souls doth depend upon our ready and cordial obedience to the Spirit of God; when he forbids us our own known transgressions, and we will go on, when he tells us which is the way, and which is not, and we will not regard, no wonder if we are strangers to an heavenly conversation; if we will not follow the Spirit, while it would draw us to Christ, how should it lead us to Heaven, or bring our hearts into the presence of God? O learn we this lesson, and let not only the motions of our bodies; but also the very thoughts of our hearts be at the Spirits beck! do we not sometimes feel a strong impulsion to retire from the world, and to draw near to God? O let us not despise, or disobey, but take we the offer, and hoise up our sail, while we may have this blessed gale; if we cherish these motions, and hearken to the Spirit, O what a supernatural help should we find to this heavenly mindedness, or heavenly conversation?

Thus far we have looked on Jesus, as our Jesus in his Ascension, Session, and Mission of his holy Spirit, our next work is to look on Jesus carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his Intercession, which he makes, and will make to his Father on our behalf, till his second coming to judgment.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS In his Intercession. Book IX. Part VI.

CHAP. I.

Heb. 3.1. Rom. 8.34. Consider the Apostle, and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus— who also maketh intercession for us.

SECT. I. What the Intercession of Christ is.

WE have spoken of Christ's entrance into Heaven, and of his immediate actings after his entrance there; that transaction which yet remains, and will remain until his coming again, it is his Intercession for the Saints. In these actings of Christ in Heaven (if we will follow him) we must go from glory to glory; no sooner come we out of one room of glory, but presently we step into another as glorious as that before: one would think, enough had been said already of the glory of Christ, and of our glory in Christ; who would not willingly sit down under the shadow of this happiness, and go no further? but yet this is not all; so thick and fast doth the glory of Christ break in upon us, that no sooner out of one, but presently we are led into the bosom of another. Oh what a blessed thing is it to be viewing Christ, and to be looking up to Jesus Christ! Saints might do nothing else (if they pleased) but ravish their hearts with the diversity of heavenly light and comfort, which breaks forth from the bosom of Jesus Christ. Here is now another mystery as great, and amazing, as the former, which springs out before our eyes in this transaction of Christ's Intercession.

And in prosecution of this, as in the former, I shall first lay down the object, and secondly direct you how to look upon it. The object is Jesus carrying on the great work of our salvation in his Intercession: in ordering of which, I shall examine these particulars; —

- 1. What is this intercession of Christ?
- 2. According to what nature doth Christ intercede?
- 3. To whom is Christ's intercession directed?
- 4. For whom is the intercession made?
- 5. What agreement betwixt Christ's intercessions, and the intercessions of the High-Priests of old?

- 6. What is the difference betwixt Christ's intercession, and the intercessions of those High-Priests?
- 7. What are the properties of this intercession of Jesus Christ?
- 8. Wherein more especially doth the intercessions of Christ consist?
- 9. How powerful, and prevailing are Christ's intercessions with God his Father.
- 10. What are the reasons of this great transaction of Christ's intercession for his people?

1. What is the intercession of Christ? some define it thus, Christ's intercession is that part of his Priestly office, whereby Christ is Advocate, and intreater of God the Father for the faithful. I shall give it thus, Christ's intercession is his gracious will, fervently and immovably desiring, that for the perpetual vertue of his sacrifice, all his members might both for their persons and duties be accepted of the Father. 1. I call the intercession of Christ his own gracious will; for we must not imagine that Christ, in his intercession, prostrates himself upon his knees before his Father's Throne, uttering some submissive form of words or prayers; that is not becoming the Majesty of him that sits at God's right hand; when he was but yet on Earth, the substance of his requests for his Saints run thus, Father I will, that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am; and how much more now he is in Heaven, is this the form of his intercessions, Father I will this, and I will that. 2. The ground of foundation of Christ's intercession, is the sacrifice, or death of Christ; and hence we make two parts of Christ's Priest-hood, or oblation; the one expiatory, when Christ suffered upon the Cross; the other presentatory, when he doth appear in Heaven before God for us; the one was finished on Earth, when Christ suffered without the gate; the other is performed in Heaven, now Christ is within the City; the one was a sacrifice indeed, the other is not so much a sacrifice as the commemoration of a sacrifice; the first was an act of humiliation, and this latter is an act of glory; the first was performed once for all, this latter is done continually; the first was for the obtaining of redemption, and this latter is for the application of redemption; so that the ground of this is that; Christ fervently and immoveably desires his Father for the sake and virtue of his sacrifice. 3. The subject-matter interceded for, is, that all the Saints and their service, might find acceptance with God; first Christ's intercession is for our persons, and then Christ's intercession is for our works, for as our persons are but in part regenerate, and in part unregenerate; or in part flesh, and in part spirit; so be our duties, part good, and part evil; in part spiritual, and in part sinful; now by Christ's intercession is Christ's satisfaction applied to our persons, and by consequence the defect of our duties is covered and removed; and both we and our works are approved and accepted of God the Father. And thus much for the nature of Christ's intercession, what it is.

SECT. II. According to what nature Christ doth intercede.

2. According to what nature doth Christ intercede? I answer, according to both natures: 1. According to his humanity, partly by appearing before his Father in Heaven, and partly by desiring the salvation of the Elect: Christ is entered into Heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us. And I say not unto you that I will pray or desire the Father for you, for the Father himself loveth you. 2. According to his Deity, partly by applying the merit of his death, and partly by willing the salvation of his Saints; and as the effect thereof, by making requests in the hearts of the Saints with sighs unspeakable. Elect, through sanctification of the Spirit and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: this sprinkling is the applying of the blood of Jesus, and that is an act of intercession: Again, Father I will that they whom thou hast given me be with me where I am; he desires as man, but he wills as God; and as the effect of this he gives the Spirit, The Spirit itself makes intercession for us, with groanings which cannot be uttered. But what are the intercessions of the Spirit to the intercessions of Christ? I answer, much every way; the Spirits intercessions are as the effect, and Christ's intercessions are as the cause; the Spirits intercessions are as the Echo, and Christ's intercessions are as the first voice; the spirit intercedes for men in and by themselves, but Christ intercedes in his own person; there is a dependence of the Spirits intercessions in us upon Christ's intercessions in himself. First, Christ by his intercession applies his satisfaction made, and lays the salve to the very sore; and then he sends down his holy spirit into our hearts to help our infirmities; and to teach us what to pray, and how to pray as we ought. Now this he doth as God, for who shall give a commission to the spirit of God, but God himself? it is as if Christ should say, see holy Spirit, how I take upon me the cause of my Saints, I am perpetually representing my sacrifice to God my Father, I am ever pleading for them, and answering all the accusations that sin or Satan can lay against them; and now go thy way to such and such, and take up thy dwelling in their hearts, and assist them by thy energy, to plead their own case; I am their Advocate or Intercessor by office, and therefore be thou their Advocate or Intercessor by operation, instruction, inspiration, and assistance.

SECT. III. To whom Christ's intercession is directed.

3. TO whom is Christ's intercession directed? I answer, immediately to God the Father; If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. In the work of intercession are three persons, a party offended, a party offending, and the Intercessor distinct from them both; the party offended is God the Father, the party offending is sinful man, and the Intercessor distinct from them both, is Jesus Christ, the middle person (as it were) betwixt God the Father, and us men; the Father is God, and not man; and we that believe in Christ are men, and not God; and Christ himself is both man and God, and therefore, he intercedes and mediates betwixt God and man: If any object, that not only the Father is offended, but also the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and therefore there must be a Mediator to them also; the solution is easy; Christ's intercession is immediately directed to the Father; but because the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, have all one indivisible essence, and by consequence one will; it therefore follows, that the Father being appeased by Christ's intercession, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are also appeased with him, and in him I deny not but Christ's intercession is made to the whole Trinity, but yet immediately, and directly to the first person, and in him to the rest.—But if so, then in some sense (say our adversaries) Christ makes intercession to himself, which cannot be; because in every intercession there must of necessity be three parties: this point hath sore puzzled the Church of Rome, that for the solving of it, they knew no other way but to avouch Christ to be our intercessor only as man, and not as God, which is most untrue; for as both natures did concur in the work of satisfaction, so likewise they do both concur in the work of intercession: and 'tis an ancient and approved rule, that names of office, which are given to Christ, such as Mediator, Intercessor, &c. agree unto him according to both natures; and can the act of Christ's intercession be the act of Christ's manhood alone? what? to hear, and offer up prayers? to receive and present the prayers and praises, and other spiritual sacrifices of all believers in the World? to negotiate for them all at one and the same time, according to the variety and multiplicity of their several occasions? surely this is, and must be the work of an infinite, and not of a finite agent; this cannot be effected without the concurrence of the divine nature with the human; but what needs any further answer to this objection? suppose Christ intercede to himself as God; that is not immediately, and directly to the same person God the Son, though to the same God essentially; indeed Christ 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 God-man, in respect of his natures agreeth with both; being not only God, not only man; but God-man, man-God, blessed forever; but in respect of his person, being the second person in the Trinity he is distinct from both. 1. From the personality of man, for he hath only the personality of God and not of man. 2. From the first person of the God-head, who is God the Father, for there are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one, (i.e.) three persons, and but one God.

SECT. IV. For whom this Intercession is made.

4. FOR whom is this Intercession made? I answer, 1. Negatively, not for the World, I pray not for the World, saith Christ; whiles Christ was on Earth he would not so much as spend his breath, or open his lips for the World; he knew God would not hear him for them; in like manner Christ prays now in Heaven. Not for the World, he never had a thought to redeem them, or to save their souls, and therefore they have no share in his intercessions; I know the objection, that Christ upon the the Cross, prayed for the bloody Jews, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do; but that might be of private duty as man, who in that respect submitted himself to the Law of God, which requires that we forgive our enemies, and pray for them that persecute us, and not of his proper office as Mediator; or if it be referred to the proper mediatory intercession of Jesus Christ (which I rather think) it will not prove that he prayed for them all universally, but only indefinitely, (i.e.) only for them that were present at his crucifying, and that in simplicity of heart, and not of affected ignorance, crucified Christ; and accordingly this prayer was heard, which so many of the Jews were converted at Peter's Sermon, Act. 2.41. what needs more? his own words are express, that Christ's intercessions are not for the World, or reprobates. So much negatively.

2. Positively, Christ's intercession is general, and particular; for all, and every faithful man; I pray for them, I pray not for the world; but for them which thou hast given me, for they are thine. And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. As the High Priest went into the Sanctuary with the names of the twelve tribes upon his breast, so Christ entered into the holiest of all, with the names of all believers upon his heart, and still he carries them upon his breast, and presents his will and desire unto his Father for them; nor doth he only intercede in general, but Simon, Simon; mark that; what ever thy name is, John, Peter, Thomas, Mary, Martha, if thou art a believer, Christ prays for thee; it is our common practice to desire the prayers one of another, but O who would not have a share in the prayers of Jesus Christ? why, certainly if thou believest in Christ, Christ prays for thee; I have prayed, and I will pray for thee, saith Christ, that thy faith fail not.

SECT. V. What agreement there is betwixt Christ's intercessions, and the intercessions of the High-Priests of Old.

5. What agreement is there betwixt the intercessions of Christ, and the intercessions of the High Priests of Old? Among the Jews in the times of the Old Testament, they had an High Priest, who was in all things to stand betwixt God and them. Now as the Jews had their High Priest to intercede for them, so the Lord Jesus was to be the High Priest of our Christian profession, and to intercede for us; it will therefore give some light to this doctrine of intercession, if we will but compare these two; and first consider, what agreement betwixt Christ and the High-Priests of Old; betwixt Christ's intercession, and the High-Priests intercessions?

1. Christ and the High-Priests of Old agreed in name; not only they, but Christ himself is called an High Priest; We have such an High Priest, who is set down at the right hand of the Majesty on high.—Consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Jesus Christ.—Thou art a Priest forever after the order of Melchizedek. The Old Priest-hood of Aaron was translated into the Priest-hood of Jesus Christ; so that he was a Priest as well as they.

2. They agreed in office; that consisted of two parts, oblation and presentation; First, They offered a sacrifice: And secondly, They presented it in the holy of holies, with prayer and intercession unto God; the one was done without, the other within the holy of hollies; and in answer thereunto there are two distinct parts of Christ's Priesthood: 1. The offering of himself a sacrifice upon the Cross: 2. The carrying of himself and of his blood into the holy of holies, or in the heaven of heavens; where he appears and prays in the force of that blood; and this was so necessary a part of his Priest-hood, that without this he had not been a complete Priest, for if he were on earth, he should not be a Priest; that in, if he should have made his abode upon the earth, he should not have been a complete or perfect Priest, seeing this part of it (which we call the presentation, or intercession) lay still upon him to be acted in heaven. And indeed this part of his Priest-hood is of the two the more eminent; yea, the top and height of his priest-hood; and therefore it is held forth to us in the Types of both those two orders of Priest-hood that were before him, and Figures of him, both that of Aaron and Melchizedek. 1. This was Typified in that Levitical Priest-hood of Aaron and his fellows; the highest service of that Office was the going into the holy of hollies, and making an atonement there; yea, this was the height of the high Priest's honor, that he did this alone, and it constituted the difference betwixt him as he was high Priest, and other Priests; for they killed and offered the Sacrifices without as well as he, but only the high Priest was to approach the holy of hollies with blood, and that but once a year. 2. This was Typified by Melchizedek's Priest-hood, which the Apostle argues to have been much more excellent then that of Aaron's, in as much as Levi, Aaron's Father, paid Tythes to this Melchizedek in Abraham's loins; now Melchizedek was his Type, not so much in respect of his Oblation, or offering Sacrifice, as in respect of his continual presentation and intercession in heaven; and therefore the same clause, forever, still comes in when Melchizedek is named, thou art a Priest forever after the order of Melchizedek. Here then is the agreement betwixt Christ and the high-Priests of old; in respect of name, both were Priests; and in respect of Office, both had their oblations, and presentations, or intercessions with God in Glory.

3. In the point of Intercession they agreed in these particulars.—

1. The high-Priest of old, usually once a year, went into the most Holy place within the veil; and so is Christ our great high-Priest passed into the Heavens within the Vail, even into the holy of holies. Christ by his own blood entered in once into the holy place—Not into the holy places made with hands, which are the Figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.

2. The high-Priests of old had a plate of pure Gold upon their Fore-heads, which was to bear the iniquity of the holy things, that they might be accepted before the Lord; and so doth Christ bear the iniquity of our holy things. Spiritual Christians! here is your comfort, you are not able to perform any duty to God, but there is a great deal of sin in the same; you cannot hear, nor pray, nor confer, nor meditate without much sin; but Christ bears all these sins, even the iniquity of your holy things, and he presents your persons, and prayers without the least spot to his Father; he is the Angel of the Covenant that stands at the Altar, having a golden Censer. with much incense; to offer it with the prayers of his Saints, and so they are acceptable before the Lord.

3. The Jewish high-Priests, bore the names of the Children of Israel on a breast-plate of judgment upon their hearts for a memorial before the Lord continually; and so doth Christ our great high-Priest bear the names of his people upon his heart before the Lord continually. But how is Christ said to bear the names of the Saints upon his heart? I answer—

1. Continually, in presenting of them to his Father as they are in him: how is that? why, he represents them without spot, as righteous in his own righteousness; Christ loved the Church, that he might present it to his Father, and in him to himself, a glorious Church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy, and without blemish.

2. In this continual remembering of them: the righteous shall be had in continual remembrance; this is the souls comfort in a time of desertion, or in an evil day; if any cry out as sometimes David did, how long wilt thou forget me Lord? forever? how long wilt thou hide thy face from me? Let such a one remember that Christ's redeemed ones are upon his heart, and he cannot forget them, But Zion said, the Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me; Oh no! can a woman forget her suckling child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet I will not forget thee, behold I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands, thy walls are continually before me; the Sons of Zion are upon Christ's heart, and hands and they are ever in his sight.

3. In his perpetual loving of them; they are near and dear unto him, he hath set them as a Seal upon his heart; so was the prayer of the Spouse, set me as a Seal upon thine heart, as a Seal upon thine arm; and then it follows, for love is as strong as death. Christ hath an entire love to his Saints; he died for them, and now he intercedes for them; he keeps them close to his heart, and there is none shall pluck them out of his hands, for whom he loves, he loves unto the end. Thus far of the agreement betwixt Christ's intercessions, and the intercessions of the high Priests of old.

SECT. VI. What the difference is betwixt Christ's intercessions, and the intercessions of the high Priests of old.

6. What is the difference betwixt Christ's Intercessions, and the intercessions of the high Priests of old? There is no question, but howsoever they might agree in some respects, yet Christ officiates in a more transcendent and eminent way then ever any high Priest did before him; now the difference betwixt Christ and them, and betwixt Christ's Intercessions and their Intercessions, may appear in these particulars.—

1. They were called high Priests, but Christ is called the great high Priest; such a Title was never given to any but Christ; whence the Apostle argues for the steadfastness of our profession: seeing then that we have a great high Priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

2. The high-Priests then were Aaron and his Sons, but Christ our great high-Priest is the Son of God; for so he is styled in the same verse, the great high-Priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God.

3. The high-Priests then were but for a time, but Christ is a Priest forever after the order of Melchizedek. Melchizedek (saith the Apostle) was without Father, without Mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life. That is, as far as it is known; and so is Christ without a Father on earth, and without a Mother in Heaven; without beginning, and without end; he abides a Priest perpetually, even to the end of the World; yea, and the virtue of his Priesthood, is infinitely beyond all time, even forever and ever.

4. The high-Priests then entered only into that place that was Typically holy, but Christ is entered into that place that is properly holy; he is entered into the Heavens, or (if you will) as into the holy of holies, so into the heaven of heavens.

5. The high Priests then did not always intercede for the people; only once a year the high Priest entered into the holy of holies; and after he had sprinkled the mercy-seat with blood, and caused a cloud to rise upon the mercy-seat with his Prayers and Incense, then he went out of the holy of holies, and laid aside his Garments again; but our great high Priest is ascended into the holy of holies, never to put off his princely-priestly garments: nor does he only once a year sprinkle the mercy-seat with his sacrifice, but every day; he lives forever to intercede; Oh what comfort is this to a poor dejected Soul! if he once undertakes thy cause, and get thee into his prayers, he will never leave thee out night nor day; he intercedeth ever, till he shall accomplish and finish thy Salvation; the smoke of his incense ascends forever without intermission.

6. The high-Priests then interceded not for sins of greater instances; if a man sinned ignorantly, there was indeed a Sacrifice, and Intercession for him; but if a man sinned presumptuously, he was to be cut off from among his people; no Sacrifice, no Intercession by the high Priest then; but we have such an high Priest as makes Intercession for all sins; every sin though it boil up to blasphemy (so it be not against the holy Ghost) shall by the virtue of Christ's intercession be forgiven. In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the Inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin, and for uncleanness, (i.e.) for sins of all sorts. Verily I say unto you, all sins shall be forgiven unto the Sons of Men, (i.e.) Scarlet sins, or crimson sins; sins of the deepest die shall by Christ's Intercession be done away; the voice of his blood speaks better things than the Blood of Abel; it intercedes for the abolition of bloody sins.

7. The high Priests then interceded not without all these materials, viz. A Temple, an Altar, a Sacrifice of a young Bullock for a sin-offering, and a Ram for a burnt offering; a Censer full of burning coals of fire taken off the Altar, a putting the incense upon the fire, that the cloud of the incense might cover the mercy-seat, a sprinkling the mercy-seat with the blood of the Bullock, and of the Goat with their finger, seven times; such materials they had, and such actions they did, which were all distinct as from themselves; but Jesus Christ in his Intercessions now needs none of these materials; but rather he himself and his own merits are instead of all. As, 1. He is the Temple, either in regard of the Deity, the gold of the Temple being sanctified by the Temple, or in regard of his human body, destroy this Temple, (saith Christ) and I will build it again in three days; it was destroyed, and God found it an acceptable Sacrifice, and smelt in it a sweet savor as in a Temple. 2. He is the Altar according to his Deity, for as the Altar sanctifies the gift, so doth the God-head sanctify the man-hood; The Altar must needs be of a greater dignity than the oblation, and therefore this Altar betokens the Divinity of Jesus Christ. 3. He is the Sacrifice most properly according to the Man-hood, for although by communication of properties the blood of the Sacrifice is called the blood of God, yet properly the human Soul and flesh of Christ was the Holocaust, or whole burnt-offering roasted in the fire of his Fathers wrath. 4. His merits are the cloud of Incense, for so the Angel; Christ is said to have a golden Censer, and much Incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all Saints upon the golden Altar which was before the Throne; and the smoke of the Incense which came with the Prayers of the Saints ascended up before God out of the Angels hand: the merits of Christ are so mingled with the prayers of his Saints, that they perfume their Prayers, and so they find acceptance with God his Father. We see now the difference betwixt Christ's Intercessions, and the Intercessions of the high Priests of Old.

SECT. VII. What the Properties of this Intercession of Christ are.

7. WHAT are the properties of this Intercession of Jesus Christ? I answer.— 1. It is heavenly and glorious; and that appears in these particulars.

1. Christ doth not fall upon his knees before his Father, as in the days of his humiliation; for that is not agreeable to that glory he hath received; he only presents his pleasure to his Father, that he may thereto put his Seal and Consent. 2. Christ doth not pray out of private charity as the Saints pray one for another in this life, but out of public Office of mediation, there is one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus. 3. Christ prays not out of humility, which is the proposing of requests for things unmerited, but out of authority, which is the desiring of a thing, so as withal he hath a right of bestowing it, as well as desiring it. 4. Christ prays not merely as an advocate, but as a propitiation too; Christ's Spirit is an advocate, but only Christ is advocate and propitiation; Christ's Spirit is our advocate on earth, but only Christ in his Person applieth his merits in heaven, and furthers the cause of our salvation with his Father in heaven. In every of these respects we may see Christ's intercessions is heavenly and glorious.

2. It is ever effectual and prevailing: as he hath a power to intercede for us, so he hath a power to confer that upon us for which he intercedes. I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter. If I go not away the comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart I will send him unto you. If Christ prayed on earth, he was ever heard, but if Christ prayed in heaven, we may be sure the Father ever heareth and answereth there; when Christ as man prayed for himself, he was heard in that which he feareth, but now Christ as Mediator praying for us, he is ever heard in the very particular which he desireth. We sinful men many a time ask and receive not, because we ask amiss, that we may consume it upon our Lusts; but Jesus Christ never asks amiss; nor to wrong ends; and therefore God the Father who called him to this Office of being (as it were) the great Master of Requests in behalf of his Church, he promiseth to hear him in all his requests. Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me, and I know thou hearest me always, saith Christ.

3. It is of all other the transactions of Christ, till the very end of the World, the most perfective and consummate: indeed so perfective, that without it all the other parts of Christ's Mediatorship would have been to little purpose. As the Sacrifices under the Law had not been of such force and efficacy, had not the high Priest entered into the holy place to appear there, and to present the blood there unto the Lord; so all that ever Christ did or suffered upon earth, it had been ineffectual unto us, had he not entered into heaven, to appear there in the presence of God for us. Surely this Intercession is that which puts life into the death of Christ; this Intercession is that which strikes the last stroke during this World, in the carrying on of our souls Salvation, and makes all sure. It is a witty observation that one makes of these several steps of Christ's actings for us; as first, there was an all-sufficiency in his death, who shall condemn? it is Christ that died. 2. A rather in his Resurrection; yea rather, that is risen again. 3. A much rather in his life and session at God's right hand, for if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of Christ, much rather being reconciled we shall be saved by his life. 4. The Apostle riseth yet higher to a saving to the utmost, and puts that upon his intercession; wherefore he is able to save us to the utmost, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for us. If in the former were anything wanting, this intercession of Christ supplies all; it is the Coronis, which makes all effectual; it saves to the uttermost, for itself is the uttermost and highest step; on earth Christ begins the execution of his office, in heaven he ends it; in his life and death Christ was the meritorious cause, but by his intercession Christ is the applying cause of our souls salvation. In this very Intercession of Christ is the consummation and perfection of the Priest-hood of Christ. O then how requisite and necessary must this needs be?

4. It is gracious, and full of bowels; Christ his intercession, and indeed Christ's Priestly office is erected, and set up on purpose, for the relief of poor distressed sinners. There is no mixture of terror in this blessed office of Jesus Christ, and this doth distinguish it from his other offices. Christ by his Kingly office rules over the Churches, and over the World; but all obtain not mercy whom he thus rules over; Christ by his prophetic office comes to his own, but many of his own received him not; but now wherever the Priestly office of Jesus Christ is let forth upon a Soul, that soul shall certainly be saved forever. O this Priestly office of Christ is an office of mere love and tender compassion: Christ (saith the Apostle) is such an high-Priest as cannot be but touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Oh he is a merciful, and a faithful high Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the People. He is merciful and exceeding compassionate; in all our afflictions he is afflicted; —and in his love, and in his pity he Redeemed us; and in his love and pity he intercedes for us.

SECT VIII. Wherein the Intercession of Christ consists.

8. WHerein more especially doth the Intercessions of Jesus Christ consist? some suppose that Christ's very being in heaven, and putting God in mind of his active and passive obedience by his very presence, is all that intercession that the Scripture speaks of. But I rather answer is these particulars. As—

1. Christ's intercession consists in the presenting of his Person for us: he himself went up to heaven, and presented himself; the Apostle calls this, an appearing for us: Christ is not entered into the holy place made with hands, but into heav'n, now to appear in the presence of God for us. I believe there is an Emphasis in the Word appearing for us. But how appears he for us? I answer. 1. In a public manner; whatsoever he did in this kind, he did it openly and publicly; he appears for us in the presence of God the Father; he appears for us in the presence of his Saints and Angels; heavens eyes are all upon him in his appearing for us. 2. He appears for us as a Mediator, he stands in the middle betwixt God and us; hence it is, that he is God-man, that he might be a Mediator betwixt God and man. 3. He appears for us as a Sponsor, and a pledge; surely it is a comfort for a man to have a friend at Court, at the Princes elbow, that may own him, and appear for him; but if this friend be both a Mediator and Surety, a Mediator to request for him, and a Surety to engage for him. Oh what comfort is this! thus Christ appeared in every respect; he is a Mediator to request for us; and he is a Surety to engage for us: as Paul, was for Onesimus a mediator, I beseech thee for my Son Onesimus; and a Sponsor, if he hath wronged thee; or, owe thee ought, put that on my account, I will repay it. So is Jesus Christ for his Saints; he is the Mediator of a better Covenant, Heb. 8.6. and he is a Surety of a better Testament, Heb. 7.22. 4. He appears as a Solicitor, to present and promote the desires and requests of his Saints, in such a way as that they may find acceptance with his Father. He is not idle now he is in Heaven; but as on earth he ever went about doing good: so now in glory he is ever about his work of doing good; he spends all his time in Heaven in promoteing the good of his people; as from the beginning it was his care, so to the Worlds end it will be his care to solicit his Father in the behalf of his poor Saints; he tells God, thus and thus it is with his poor Members, they are in want, in trouble, in distress, in affliction, in reproach; and then he presents their sighs, sobs, prayers, tears, and groans; and that in such a way as that they may become acceptable to his Father.—5. He appears as an Advocate: if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. An Advocate is more than a Solicitor; an Advocate is one that is of Counsel with another, and that pleadeth his Case in open Court; and such an advocate is Jesus Christ unto his people. 1. He is of Council with them; that is one of the Titles given him by the Prophet Isaiah, Wonderful, Counsellour; He counsils them by his Word and Spirit. 2. He pleads for them, and this he doth in the high Court of Heaven, at the Bar of God's own Justice; there he pleads their case, and answereth all the accusations that are brought in by Satan or their own Consciences: but of this anon.—6. He appears as a public agent, or Ledger-Ambassador; what that is, some tell us in these particulars; 1. His work is to continue peace; and surely this is Christ's work, he is our peace (saith the Apostle); that is, the author of our peace; he purchased our peace, and he maintains our peace with God; to this purpose he sits at God's right hand to intercede for us, and to maintain the peace and union betwixt God and us; therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. 2. His work is to maintain intercourse and correspondency; and surely this is Christ's work also; By him we have an access unto the Father,—In him we have boldness and access with confidence, by the Faith of him; the word access] doth not only signify coming to God in prayer, but all that resort and communion which we have with God, as united by faith to Jesus Christ; according to that, Christ had once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. This benefit have all believers in and by Christ; they come to God by him, they have free commerce and intercourse in heaven—3. His work is to reconcile and take up emergent differences, and this is Christ's work also; he maketh intercession for the Transgressors; he takes up the differences that our transgressions make betwixt God and us. 4. This work is to procure the welfare of the People or State where he negotiates; and this is no less Christ's Work, for he seeks the welfare of his people, he sits at God's right hand to intercede for them, and commending their estate and condition to his Father, he makes it his request to his Father that his members may have a continual supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ; that they may be strengthened in temptations, confirmed in tribulations, delivered from every evil work, enabled to every good duty, and finally preserved unto his Heavenly Kingdom.

2. Christ's Intercessions consists in the presenting of his Wounds, Death, and Blood, as a public satisfaction for the debt of sin; and as a public price for the purchase of our glory.

There is a question amongst the Schools, whether Christ hath not taken his wounds, or the signs, skars, and prints of his wounds into heaven with him? and whether Christ is representing those wounds, skars, and prints unto his Father, doth not hereby intercede for us? some I am sure are for the affirmative. Aquinas distinguisheth of Christ's Intercession as being three-fold, the first before his passion by devout prayer, and the second at his Passion by effusion of his blood, and the third after his Ascension, by the representation of his Wounds and Scars. Howsoever this hold, (for I dare not be too confident without Scripture-ground) yet this I dare say, that Christ doth not only present himself, but the Sacrifice of himself, and the infinite Merit of his Sacrifice. When he went to heaven, he carried with him absolutely the Power, Merit, the virtue of his Wounds, and Death, and Blood into the presence of God the Father for us; and with his blood he sprinkled the Mercy-seat (as it were) seven times. We read in the Law, that When the high Priest went within the veil; he took the blood of the Bullock, and sprinkled it with his finger upon the mercy-seat East-ward: and before the mercy-seat he sprinkled the blood with his finger seven times: not only was the Priest to kill the Bullock without the holy of holies, but he was to enter with the blood into the holy of holies, and to sprinkle the mercy-seat therein with it; surely these were patterns of things to be done in the Heavens: Christ that was slain and Crucified without the gate, carried his own blood into the holy of holies, or into the heaven of heavens, for by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us; and thither come, he sprinkles it (as it were) upon the mercy-seat, (i.e.) he applies it, and obtains mercy by it; by the blood of Christ God's mercy and justice are reconciled in themselves, and reconciled unto us; Christ sprinkles his blood on the mercy-seat seven times; seven is a note of perfection; where Christ's blood is sprinkled on a soul, that soul is sure to be washed from all filth, and at last to be perfected and saved to the very utmost: Christ's blood was shed upon the earth, but Christ's blood is sprinkled now he is in heaven; what? is any soul sprinkled with the blood of Christ; surely this sprinkling comes from heaven, so the Apostle, But ye are come to mount Zion, and unto the City of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem,—and to Jesus the Mediator of the new Covenant, and then it follows, to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. It is upon mount Zion where this sprinkling is: there is Jesus at God's right hand, there he stands (as it were) upon the mount, and there he sprinkles his blood round about him; heaven is all besprinkled, as the mercy-seat in the holy of holies was; the earth is all besprinkled, as the Altar out of the holy of holies was; heaven and earth are all besprinkled with the blood of Jesus, so that the Saints and people of God are nowhere, but their doors, and their posts, and houses (I mean their bodies and souls) are all besprinkled with the blood of the Lamb slain from the beginning of the World. Why, this is that blood of sprinkling that speaks better things than that of Abel. Mark, that Christ's blood hath a tongue; it speaks, it cries, it prays, it intercedes; there's some agreement, and some difference betwixt Christ's blood and Abel's blood.

1. The agreement is in these things; Abel's blood was abundantly shed, for so it is said, the voice of bloods; and Christ's blood was let out, with thorns and scourges, nails and spear, it was abundantly shed: Again, Abel's blood cried out, yea it made a loud cry, so that it was heard from earth to heaven, the voice of thy Brothers blood crieth unto me from the ground; and Christ's blood crieth out, it makes a loud cry, it fills heaven and earth with the noise, yea the Lord's ears are so filled with it, that it drowns all other souls, and rings continually in his ears.

2. The difference is in these things; Abel's blood cried for vengeance against Cain, but Christ's blood speaks for mercy on all believers; Abel's blood was shed because he sacrificed, and he and his sacrifice accepted: but Christ's blood was shed that he might be sacrificed, and that we through his sacrifice might be accepted: Abel's blood cried thus, see Lord, and revenge; but Christ's blood cried thus, Father forgive them for they know not what they do; and at this very instant Christ's blood cries for remission; and here's our comfort; if God heard the servant, he will much rather hear the Son, if he heard the servant for spilling, he will much more hear the Son for saving; yet that I may speak properly, and not in figures, I will not say that the very blood which Christ shed on the Cross is now in heaven, nor that it speaks in heaven; these cryings are merely Mataphorical; yet this I maintain as real and proper, that the power, merit, and virtue of Christ's blood is presented by our Savior to his Father both as a public satisfaction for our sin, and as a public price for the purchase of our glory.

3. Christ's Intercession consists in the presenting of his will, his request, his interpellation for us; grounded upon the vigor and virtue of his glorious merits. Father I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me. This was a piece of Christ's prayer while yet he was on earth; and some say it is a summary of Christ's Intercession which now he makes for us in his glory; he prayed on earth as he meant to pray for us when he came to heaven; he hints at this in the beginning of his Prayer, for he speaks as if all his work had been done on earth, and as if then he were even beginning his work in heaven; I have glorified thee on earth, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do; and now O Father glorify thou me with thy own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the World was.

I know it is a question, whether Christ now in heaven do indeed, and truth, and in right propriety of speech pray for us? some able Divines are for the Negative, others for the Affirmative. For my part (leaving a liberty to those otherwise minded according to their light) I am of opinion, that Christ doth not only intercede by an interpretative Prayer, as in the presenting of himself, and his merits to his Father; but also by an express prayer, or by an express and open representation of his will: and to this opinion methinks these Texts agree. I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, and at that day ye shall ask in my Name, and I say unto you, that I will pray the Father for you; when he saith, I say not, that I will pray for you, it is the highest intimation that he would pray for them; as it is our phrase, I do not say that I will do this, or that for you, no not I; when indeed we will most surely do it, and do it to purpose. Austin confirms this, orat pro nobis, orat in nobis, & oratur a nobis, &c. He prays for us, he prays in us, and he is prayed to by us: he prays for us as he is our Priest, and he prays in us as he is our Head, and he is prayed to by us as he is our God. Ambrose tells us, That Christ so now prays for us as sometimes he prayed for Peter, that his faith should not fail. Methinks I imagine as if I heard Christ praying in heaven in this Language, O my Father, I pray not for the World, I will not open my lips for any one Son of perdition; but I employ all my blood, and all my prayers, and all my interests with thee for my dear, beloved, precious Saints; it is true, thou hast given me a personal glory which I had with thee before the World was, and yet there is another glory I beg for, and that is the glory of my Saints. O that they may be saved! why I am glorified in them, they are my joy, and therefore I must have them with me where I am; thou hast set my heart upon them, and thou thyself hast loved them as thou hast loved me; and thou hast ordained them to be one in us even as we are one, and therefore I cannot live long asunder from them; I have thy company, but I must have theirs too; I will that they be with me where I am; If I have any glory, they must have part of it; this is my prayer, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me. Why, thus Christ prayed while he was on Earth, and if this same prayer be the summary of Christ's intercession or interpellation now he is in heaven, we may imagine him praying thus; it were too nice to question, whether Christ's prayer in heaven be vocal or mental? certainly Christ presents his gracious will to his Father in heaven some way or other, and I make no question but he fervently and immoveably desires that for the perpetual virtue of his sacrifice all his members may be accepted of God, and crowned with glory; nor only is there a cry of his blood in heaven, but Christ by his prayer seconds that cry of his blood; an argument is handed to us by Master Goodwin thus: As it was with Abel, so it is with Christ; Abel's blood went up to heaven, and Abel's soul went up to heaven, and by this means the cry of Abel's dead blood, was seconded by the cry of Abel's living soul; his cause cried, and his soul cried; as it is said of the Martyrs, that the souls of them that were slain for the Testimony which they held, cried with a loud voice, saying, how long Lord, Holy and True, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood that dwell on the earth? even so it is with Christ, his blood went up to heaven, and his soul went up to heaven, yea his body, soul, and all his whole person went up to Heaven; and by this means his cause cries, and he himself seconds the cry of his cause: Jesus Christ in his own person ever liveth to make Intercession for us; he ever liveth as the great Master of requests to present his desires, that those for whom he died may be saved.

4. Christ's Intercession consists in the presenting of our persons in his own person to his Father, so that now God cannot look upon the Son, but he must behold the Saints in his Son; are they not members of his body, in near relation to himself? and are not all his Intercessions in behalf of them, and only of them? but how are all the Elect carried up into heaven with Jesus Christ, and there set down before his Father in Jesus Christ? I answer, not actually, but mystically; when Christ intercedes, he takes our persons, and carries them in unto God the Father in a most unperceivable way to us; for the way or manner I leave it to others, for my part, I dare not be too inquisitive in a secret not revealed by God; only this we say, that Christ presents our persons to his Father in his own person; and this was plainly shadowed out by that act or office of the high Priest, who went into the holy of holies, with the names of all the Tribes of Israel upon his shoulders, and upon his breast; and this the Apostle speaks out yet more plainly, by him we have an access unto the Father, and in him we have boldness and access with confidence: I shall a little enlarge on both these Texts, recorded for our instruction in the Law, and Gospel, in the Old and in the New Testament. First, we find in the Law, that Aaron was to put two stones upon the shoulders of the Ephod, for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel, and so Aaron was to bear the names before the Lord upon his two shoulders for a memorial. And again; Aaron, was to bear the names of the children of Israel in the breast-plate of judgment upon his heart; when he went into the holy place for a memorial before the Lord continually. Here we find the names of the twelve Tribes of Israel engraven in stones, which the high-Priest usually took with him into the holy place, when he appeared before the Lord; first, upon his humeral, and then upon his pectoral; in both showing that he entered into that place, not only or principally in his own behalf, but in behalf of the Tribes whom he presented before the Lord, that they might be in continual remembrance with the Lord; a lively Type of Christ's Intercession, who being entered into the Heavens he there appears in the behalf of his Elect, and he presents their persons to his Father, bearing them (as it were) upon his shoulders, and upon his heart; why thus Christ takes our persons into heaven, and represents them in his own person to his Father. Secondly we find in the Gospel a gracious promise, that by Christ we have access unto the Father, and in Christ we have access with confidence. Where the word access, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 signifies properly a manuduction or leading by the hand to God; an introduction, or bringing into God; alluding to the custom in Princes Courts, where none may come into the presence-Chamber, unless they be led, or brought in by some Favorite or Courtier there; thus none may have access into the presence of God unless they are brought in by this Favorite of heaven, the Lord Jesus Christ; whose very office it is to bring men unto God; he takes us by the hand and leads us to the Father. q. d. Come Souls, come along with me, and I will carry you to the Father. Look how a child that hath run away from his Father, is taken by the hand of a friend, or of his elder brother, and so brought again into the presence of his Father; even so all we, having run away from God, are by the good hand of Christ taken up, and led again into the presence of the Father; he is that Ladder that Jacob saw, upon whom we ascend into the bosom of God, and into heaven; he is that high-Priest, that takes our persons, and bears them on his shoulders and on his heart, sustaining our persons, and presenting our conditions unto his Father, and our Father, unto his God, and our God.

5. Christ's Intercession consists in the presenting of our duties unto God. Not only doth he take our persons and leads and carry them into the presence of God, but together with our persons he presents all our services in his own person. Now in this act he doth these two things.

1. He observes what evil, or what falling is in our duties, and he draws that out, and takes it away, before he presents them unto God; or as a child that would present his Father with a posie, he goes into the garden, and gathers flowers and weeds together; but coming to his Mother, she picks out the weeds, and binds up the flowers by themselves, and so it is presented to the Father: thus we go to duty, and we gather weeds and flowers together but Christ comes and picks out the weeds, and so presents nothing but flowers to God the Father; and this is plainly set forth by that ceremony of the high-Priest, in taking away the iniquity of their holy things; And thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it like the engravings of a Signet, holiness to the Lord; and thou shalt put it on a blew lace, that it may be upon the Mitre, upon the fore-front of the Mitre it shall be. And it shall be on Aaron's fore-head, that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the Children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts, and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the Lord: This was the manner of the Ceremony, and this was the end of the Ceremony, that Aaron might bear and take away the iniquity of their holy things: what was this but a Type of Jesus Christ? who with his most absolute righteousness covereth all the defects of our good works, which are still spotted with some defect? Alas! all our righteousness are as filthy rags, but Christ draws out the evil of duty, and failings in duty, before he will present them unto God.

2. He observes what good there is in any of our duties or performances and with that he mingles his own prayers and Intercessions, and presents all as one work interwoven or mingled together unto God the Father. And another Angel stood at the Altar having a golden Conser, and there was given unto him much Incense that he should offer it with the prayers of all Saints upon the golden Altar, which was before the Throne; and the smoke of the Incense which came with the prayers of the Saints ascended up before God out of the Angels hand. I know there is a controversy, who this Angel should be, that with the Incense mingles the prayers of all Saints? some conjecture him to be a created Angel, in that the incense or ordours are said to be given to him, and not to be his own, or to have them of himself: others say he could be no other but the Angel of the Covenant, for no Angel doth intercede or present our prayers but Jesus Christ; as for that which is spoken concerning the seven Angels presenting the Saints prayers, I am Raphael, one of the seven holy Angels, which present the prayers of the Saints. We say it is no canonical Scripture, nor is it authorized by any canonical Scripture; besides, I cannot think that the Priests were types of Angels, but only of Christ: Again, howsoever the Greek Copies so read that Text, yet the ancient Hebrew Copy set forth by Paulus Fagius, and Jerome, who translated it out of the Chaldee (as Master Mede on Zachar. 4.10. avoucheth) reads it thus, I am Raphael, one of the seven Angels, which stand, and minister before the glory of the holy One. And certainly in this Text of Revel. 8.3, 4. There is a figurative description of an heavenly service, correspondent to that which was performed in the Temple; namely, that the people being without at prayer, the Priest offered incense within upon the Altar, Luke 1.9, 10. To signify that Believers prayers have always need to be helped, and sanctified by Christ's intercession; and what though the incense was given him? we know that Christ himself was given of God; God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son; and yet this hinders not, but that Jesus Christ gave himself, and that he gave himself for an incense too; for so the Apostle, He hath given himself for us an offering, and a sacrifice unto God; for an incense, or for a sweet smelling savor; in this respect the incense might be given him, and yet the incense was his own; they were only Christ's merits, righteousness, satisfaction; they are the sweet odour, by virtue whereof, God accepts of his Saints persons and prayers; and it is only Christ that presents before God that which he is and hath, he alone being both offering and Priest; we can think of no other Priest in Gospel-times, but only Jesus, The fore-runner, even Jesus Christ made an high-priest forever, after the order of Melchizedek. It is Jesus, and only Jesus that presents our prayers, and sanctifies our prayers, and mingles our prayers with his merits, and so makes them penetrate sweetly before his God.

6. Christ's intercession consists in the presenting of our plea or answer in Heaven to all those accusations that are brought in against ourselves. And this I take it to be the meaning of the challenge, Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? it is God that justifies, Who is he that condemneth it? it is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Christ intercedes; and who shall condemn? Christ takes off all accusations; and who shall charge? if the Law, or Sin, or Satan, shall dare to accuse, our Jesus is ready at God's right hand to answer all. There is a vision in Zachariah representing this, And the Angel shown me Joshua the high-priest, standing before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him. It was the custom of the accuser to stand at the right hand of the accused; Set thou a wicked man over him, and let Satan stand at his right hand; now here's Satan standing at Joshua's right hand to accuse him; but whereof doth he accuse him? that appears in the words following, Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, an ordinary sign of sin; as a white garment is a sign of Christ's righteousness, so is a filthy garment in Scripture, a sign of vileness; alas! Joshua was defiled with the pollution which he had gotten by the contagion of Babylon, and now at his return, Satan lays it to his charge; but Jesus Christ, our great High Priest, steps in, and takes off the accusation; And the Lord said unto Satan, the Lord rebuke thee O Satan, even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee; twice he repeats it, to show the fullness of Christ's intercession, q. d. the Lord my God, my everlasting Father, rebuke, and confound thee Satan, in this thy malicious opposition against my Joshua; and then he goes on in his apology for Joshua; Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? q. d. is not this one, whom of my grace I have reserved amongst my people, whom I caused to pass through the fire of mine indignation? and shall not my decree of grace stand firm and inviolable towards such? or thus, Is not this a brand plucked newly out of the fire of affliction? was he not in the captivity of Babylon? and is it likely he should be there, but he would be defiled with the touch of pitch? take a brand, and pull it out of the fire, and there will be some dust, and ashes, and filth about it; Why Lord (says Christ) this Joshua is but newly pulled out of the burning; and therefore he must needs have ashes, and dust, and filth about him: But come (saith Christ to his holy Angels) take away the filthy garment from him; and come (says Christ to his servant Joshua) Behold I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment. And thus Christ took off the accusation that was brought against Joshua, by Satan, for his filthy garments. In like manner doth our blessed Intercessor at this instant, if a poor Saint falls into any sin, and defiles his garments, Satan comes in, and takes the right hand of him, and accuses him before the Lord; but Christ our great High Priest being at the right hand of his Father, he takes up the cause, puts in a plea, and answers all the accusations of the enemy; True Lord, this poor soul hath filthy garments, but is he not a fire-brand newly plucked out of the fire? was he not in his natural and sinful condition the other day? is he not yet partly regenerate, and partly unregenerate? needs therefore must there be some ashes, and dust, and filth upon him. O my Father, my will is, That thou consider him in that respect, thou knowest his frame, and thou rememberest that he is but dust, though he have filthy garments now upon him, yet I will give him change of raiments; I will clothe him with the robe of my righteousness, and then thou shalt see no iniquity in Jacob, no transgression in Israel. Why? thus the Lord Christ steps in, and answers to all the accusations that are brought in against us by the Law, or Sin, or Satan, to God his Father; and in this respect he is truly called our Advocate, If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. We have an Advocate that pleads for us, that answers for us: that in a way of equity (grounding all upon his own merits) calls for the pardon of our sins, and for the salvation of our souls.

SECT IX. How powerful and prevailing Christ's Intercessions are with God his Father.

9. HOW powerful and prevailing are Christ's Intercessions with God his Father? I answer, very much, and this will appear if we consider,—

1. That Christ is our great High Priest to God; We have such an high-Priest, who is set down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. Now 'twas the way of God to lend his ear in special manner to the High-Priests; and therefore the people usually run to them, when they would enquire of God; Before time in Israel, when a man went to enquire of God, thus he spake, Come, and let us go to the Seer, for he that is now called a Prophet (or High Priest) was before time called a Seer.—People were wont to repair to the Priests, and the Priests were wont to go to God; and good reason, for the Priests were to mediate for the people, and the people had experience that God would hearken to the cry of their Priest; Samuel called unto the Lord, and the Lord sent thunder, and rain that day. And all the people said to Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the Lord thy God.—

And Samuel said unto the people,— God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you. Now such an High Priest as this (though with far more eminency) is Christ to God; he intercedes for his people, (God forbid that he should ever cease to pray for his people:) and he hath God's ear in especial manner; if ever God lend his ear to any one, it must needs be to this High Priest, because of his office to intercede betwixt God and his people. Christ stands in the middle, or indeed next to God, as he is in these Gospel-times our great High Priest; and therefore he must needs prevail with God in every petition he puts up for us.

2. That Christ was called to this office by God. Christ glorified not himself to be made an High Priest; no, no; but he was called of God as Aaron was; it was God the Father that designed him to it, and that furnished him for it, and that invested him in it; The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, thou art a Priest forever, after the order of Melchizedek. Now to what purpose should God call him to this office, but especially to intercede for them, to whom God was willing to communicate salvation? it was God's mind as well as Christ's mind to save his Elect; and this was the way where on they agreed; that an High Priest should be appointed, and an office of intercession should be erected, and by that means the salvation purchased should be applied; many times we are apt to conceive legal or law-thoughts of God the Father, as that he is just and severe; and that Christ his Son is more meek, and merciful: but this cannot be, for there are not two infinite wills, not two infinite mercies, one in the Father, another in the Son, but one will, and one mercy in both. And to that purpose observe but the readiness of God the Father to receive Christ honourably into heaven, that he might do the work of the High Priest there; no sooner had Christ entered through the gates into the City, but presently, sit thou down (saith God) at my right hand; but to what end? surely not only to rule as King (of which we have spoken before) but also to intercede as our great High Priest; hence we find in Scripture, that Christ's session and intercession; his Kingly and Priestly office are joined together; He is set on the right hand of the Throne of the Majesty in the Heavens: he! who? why, Christ our High Priest; we have such an High Priest who is set down. It is as if Christ at his entrance into heaven had said, My Father, I am come hither as the great High Priest; having on his breast-plate the names of all the Elect, and I come to intercede for poor sinners; what, shall I have welcome on these same terms? to whom the Father replied, Welcome my son, my only Son on these very terms; come, sit thee down, and interede for whom thou pleasest; I have called thee on purpose to this very office, and thou shalt prevail. Surely the Father is engaged to purpose to hear the Son, in that he is an High Priest to God, and called to his office by God.

3. That Christ is God's Son; and that is more than God's High Priest; he is his natural Son, his beloved Son, his Son that never gave him the least offense; sure then when he comes and intercedes for a man, he is most like to speed; if a gracious child do but cry, my Father, my Father, he may prevail very much, especially with a Father who is tender-hearted; Jesus Christ is the gracious, precious Son of God the father; and God the Father is a dear and kind-hearted Father, how then should the intercessions of Christ but be most powerful with God? hence some gather the prevalency of Christ's intercession, because in many places of Scripture where this part of Christ's Priest-hood or intercession is laid down, this Sonship is also expressed or set forth; as we have a great High Priest entered into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God.—And thou art an High Priest forever after the order of Melchizedek. But immediately before,

Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. O needs must the intercession of such a Son be very prevalent: I say of such a Son, for was ever any Son like this Son of God? was ever any Son so like his Father, or so equal with his Father? we know he is a begotten Son, and yet never begun to be a Son; he is the Son of the Father, and yet never begun to have a Father: he is a branch of the King of ages, and yet in all the ages past was never younger; surely all the relations of Son and Father in the World, are but a shadow of this relation betwixt God and Christ; it is so near, that though they are two (as in all relations there must needs be relatum and correlatum) yet Christ speaks of them, as if they were but one; I and my Father are one; if then the Father should deny him anything, he should deny himself; or cease to be one with his Son which can never be. Christ is God's Son, his natural Son, his beloved Son, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, saith God? O then how prevalent must Christ's intercession be with God?

4. That Christ is God himself, not only God's Son, but God himself? how powerful in this respect must his intercessions be unto the Father? it is true, that Christ is another subsistence and person from the Father, but Christ is one and the same God with the Father; Christ is the very essential, substantial, and noble representation of God himself; Christ is the very self of God, both God sending, and God sent; Christ is the fellow of God, Awake O sword against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow; nay, Christ is God, and not another God, but one God; God of God, light of light, very God of very God; begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father, by whom all things were made. Can we imagine now that God himself should be denied any boon of God himself? if God sometimes spoke to his servants, Ask of me, command ye me concerning all the work of mine hands: will not God much more say to God, Ask of me, and I shall give thee the Heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession? we have brought it now so near, that if God be God, and God be Omnipotent, that he can do, and can have whatsoever he pleases: then Christ being one God with his Father, he must needs prevail; it is but ask and have, let him ask what he will.

5. That Christ is God's darling upon this very account, because he intercedes for his People. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. I lay it down by suffering, and I take it again by rising, ascending up into heaven, and interceding there; and therefore doth my Father love me. O the love of God to Christ, and of God in Christ to all his Saints! God so loved the world, that he gave his Son; and Christ so loved the world, that he gave himself; and now again because Christ gave himself, and his gift is as a sweet smelling savor unto God, therefore God loves Christ; O what a round of love is here! God loves Christ, and Christ loves us, and the Father loves Christ again for loving of us: there is not an act of Christ in his work of our redemption, but the Father looks on it with love and liking: at his baptism, lo a voice came from Heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; at his death, He seeth of the travel of his soul, and he is satisfied; at his ascension he heareth of the intercessions of his soul, and he is delighted; Christ's intercessions are God's music: and therefore as sometimes Christ spoke to his Spouse, so God speaks to Christ, Let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely. Now Christ's intercessions must needs prevail, when God love's Christ for his intercessions sake:

if before the world was made, the Son was his Fathers darling, (for it is said) When he appointed the foundations of the earth, then I was by him, and as one brought up with him, and I was daily his delight. In the Original [delights], intimating that the eternal Son was variety of delights to his Father. O then what delights, what variety, what infinite of delights hath God in Christ now interceding for us? what a dear darling is Christ to God, when not only he stands by him, but he represents to him all the Elect from the beginning to the end of the World; q. d. See Father, look on my breast, read hear all the names of those thou hast given me, as Adam, and Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob; of the Twelve Tribes, and of the Twelve Apostles, of all the Martyrs, Professors, and Confessors of the Law and Gospel; I pray for them, I Pray not for the World, but only for them, for they are mine; methinks I hear God answer, What my Son! and what the Son of my womb! and what the Son of my vows! hast thou begotten me thus many Sons? and are all these mine? why then ask what thou wilt, and have what thou pleasest; I am as strongly inclined and disposed to give thee grant, as thou wouldst have it; it is my joy, my delight, my pleasure to save these souls, and surely the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in thy hands.

6. That Christ is God's Commander (I speak it with reverence) as well as petitioner; it is a phrase given to the servants of God, command ye me; and may we not give it to the Son of God? Christians! God is as ready to do us service, as if we had him at command; This is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will he heareth us: and in this sense we may boldly say, that God the Father is as ready to hear Jesus Christ, as if he had him at command; not that in deed and reality he commands God, but that in deed and truth he commands all below God, and he commands all in the stead of God. And to this purpose is that voice of God, I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion; and why my King? I dare not say he is God's King, as if God were Christ's inferior, or Christ's subject: God forbid! why then my King? I answer, he is God's King, because appointed by God; or he is God's King, because he rules in the stead of God; The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all Judgment unto the Son. God hath given away all his prerogatives unto Jesus Christ, so that now the King of Saints can do what he will with God, and with all the world; only it follows, Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance: as if the Father should have said, I cannot deny thee, and yet O my Son, I would have thee ask; do what thou wilt in Heaven, Earth, and Hell; I have not the heart, indeed I have not the power to deny thee anything, only acknowledge this power to be originally in myself, that all that honor the Son, may honor the Father; and all that honor the Father, may honor the Son. These are the terms betwixt, God the Father, and God the Son; Oh then how powerful and prevailing are Christ's intercessions with his Father? if he ask who hath power to command, there is little question of prevailing in his suit. We have heard in our days of a suit managed with a petition in one hand, and a sword in the other; and what the effect is, all now can tell. As a King who sues for peace, backed with a potent Army; able to win what he intreats for, must needs treat more effectually; so Christ sueing to his Father for his Saints, with a power sufficient to obtain what he sues for, he must needs effect what his desires may be; it is well observed, that Christ is first said to sit at God's right hand, and then to intercede; he treats the salvation of sinners as a mighty Prince treats the giving up of some Town, which lies seated under a Castle of his that commands the Town; or he treats the salvation of sinners, as a Commander treats the surrendering of a person already in his hands: it is beyond God's power (I speak it, with submission) to deny his Son in anything he asks: if the Lord sometimes cried out to Moses like a man whose hands are held, Let me alone; how much more doth Christ's intercession bind God's hands, and command all in Heaven, Earth, and Hell? hence we say, that God the Father hath divested himself of all his power, and given the keys into Christ's own hands; I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and death; there is no man goes to Hell, but he is locked in by Jesus Christ; and there is no man goes to Heaven, but he is locked in there by Jesus Christ; he hath the keys of all men's eternities hanging at his own girdle; if he but say, Father I will that this man, and that woman, shall inherit Heaven; the Father cannot but reply, my Son I have no power to deny thy suit; Thou hast the keys of Heaven in thine own hands, be it even as thou wilt.

7. I shall only add this on the Fathers part, that God is Christ's Commander to this office, as well as Christ is God's Commander in this office. O why should we have hard thoughts of God the Father, more than of God the Son? is he not as willing of our salvation as Jesus Christ? surely 'twas the Oath of God, I mean of God the Father: As I live saith the Lord, I would not have the death of a sinner, but that the wicked turn from his sin and live. Was not this the first salute of God to Christ when he first entered into heaven; Sit thou here on this throne, and ask what thou wilt of thy Father? nay, did not the Father prevent the Son in laying his commands upon him to ask, before the Son opened his mouth to speak a word, by way of any requests to God, his Father? Thou art my Son, this day (even this day of thy resurrection, ascension, session) have I begotten thee; ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possessions? q. d. Come Son, thou art my Son, this day I have begotten thee, and though I have begotten thee from all eternity, yet this day, and every day I am begetting thee still: I said to thee at thy resurrection, this day have I begotten thee, and I said to thee at thy ascension, this day have I begotten thee; and now ask, and be not shy, or modestly backward in petitioning; I command thee to this Office, I make thee here the great Master of requests in Heaven; others may pray out of charity, but none but thyself in a way of Justice, Authority, and Office; and therefore ask boldly and largely, open thy mouth wide and I will fill it. O what a demonstration of love is this, not only to Christ, but to us in Christ, that when man had offended his God, broke covenant with God, and turned enemy to God, that then God the Father should seek peace with man, offer conditions of peace to man, and for that purpose should appoint a Mediator, an Intercessor, and call his Son to that office: and now he is in Heaven, that he should bid him do his office, and ask freely; so that if the Elect be not saved, it should be laid on the score of Christ, for the Father is most willing: Surely here's more than intimation of the Father's inclination to accept of Christ's intercessions on our behalf: we may read here that the Father's heart is as much towards us, as Christ's own heart; Oh he is full of bowels, he is gentle, and easy to be entreated; Christ needs not much a do to get his grant; Christ adds not by his intercession one drop of love to the heart of God; only he draws it out, which otherwise would have been stopped; nor doth he broach it before his Father command him to it. Oh then how Powerful and prevailing must Christ's intercessions be?

SECT. X. Of the reasons of Christ's Intercession.

10. WHAT are the reasons of this great transaction of Christ's intercession for his people? I answer—

1. It is the Father's will that it should be so; he called Jesus Christ, to this office, the command of God is upon Jesus Christ; Ask what thou wilt for thy redeemed ones, I willingly engage myself to grant, only it is my pleasure thou shouldst ask: as sometimes he said to the house of Israel, I the Lord have spoken, and I will do it; notwithstanding I will yet for this be inquired of, by the house of Israel, to do it for them: so saith God to Christ, I the Lord have spoken, and I will do it, only my Son, I will be inquired of by thee. I look upon this as the main reason of Christ's intercession, Even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight; it's God's will that Christ should intercede.

2. It is the Father's love to engage his Son for his own people. O the comfort of a sound Christian in this respect! what, art thou in temptation, or desertion? surely Christ is engaged by God to petition for thee; thou hast put up many petitions to Christ, and he hath put them all up unto God; he could do no otherwise, for he is in place an Advocate, to mention and plead such cases as are moved to him. Methinks I imagine God thus bespeaking his Son; See thou do this poor soul good my Son; here is for him according to all his needs, only ask according to what thou knowest will make him happy; must he have my Spirit? my comforting Spirit? will no less, no cheaper thing serve his turn? then here it is. Oh how is Christ engaged now to petition for them, whom God loves, and for whom he gave himself? surely if Christ should leave to intercede for such, he would displease his Father, which we know he would not do, he would undergo Hell first.

3. It is Christ's own inclination to do his Office: the power that Christ hath for the good of Sinners is necessarily acted: as the Sun shines upon all the World, and it cannot do otherwise; so Christ the Son of righteousness, shines or intercedes for all his Saints, and he can do no less: what is the will of the Father, is the will of Christ, (I mean the will of Christ naturally, not artificially in a way of self-denial, as God's will it is said to be our will) so that what the Father would have Christ own, he cannot but own; for the same Spirit is in Christ which is in the Father, and in the self-same measure: As God is captivated with love towards all captives, so am I, saith Christ; as God would have all be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth, so would I too saith Christ. The very same bottomless sea of love, that fluctuates in my Father's breast, it is in my breast, For I and the Father are one.

4. It is Christ's honor to intercede: hereby is the Crown set on Christ's head, much honor and glory redounds to Jesus in this very respect. I believe all the work that's done in Heaven, it is Christ interceding, and the Saints and Angels praising; Christ intercedes forever, and the four beasts, and four and twenty-Elders sing forever, Rev. 4.8, 9, 10, 11. an argument of Christ's honor, by Christ's intercession, is given in thus by Master Goodwin; if it were not for Christ's intercession, how would the Office of Christ's Priesthood be out of work? And this reason is more than intimated, Heb. 7.24, 25. This man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable Priesthood; and the work of his Priesthood is interpreted, ver. 25. To make intercession forever. The meaning of this is, that God would not have him continue to be a Priest in title only, or in respect only of a service past, and so to have only the honor of Priesthood perpetuated to him, out of the remembrance of what he once had done: But God would have him to enjoy, as the renown of the old, to a perpetual spring of honor by this new work of intercession, and so to preserve the verdure of his glory ever fresh and green; and the sum of the Apostles reasoning is this, that seeing himself was to be forever, so his work of Priesthood should be forever, that so his honor might be preserved and continued forever also.

5. It is Christ's love to his Saints; his heart is so enamored with his Saints, that therefore he intercedes for them forever; Love is as strong as death; it is never weary of doing good for the party beloved; now Christ's Saints are Christ's love; My sister, my love, my dove; the Saints in Christ's books are so many jewels, And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; the Saints are Christ's only choice, the very flower of the Earth; You have I chosen out of the world; and ye are my people, my chosen; All the World is Christ's refuge, and Kings are but mortar to him, only the Saints are Christ's chosen, they are they whom the Lord in his eternal councils hath set a part for himself; But know (saith the Psalmist) that the Lord hath set apart him that is Godly. The Saints are Christ's image (i.e.) the resemblance of Christ in all that which is his chief excellency, I mean in his righteousness and holiness; as if I would take the picture of a man, I would not draw it to resemble his back-parts, but as near as I could, I would draw it to life, the very face and countenance; so are the Saints the very picture, the image, the draught of God in his top excellency. The Saints are in covenant with Jesus Christ, and therefore in nearer relation than any others; hence it is that they are called the portion of God, the treasure of God, the peculiar people of God; those that God and Christ satisfy themselves in, those that God and Christ have set their hearts on; the children of God the Father, the very Spouse and bride of God the Son; in some respect nearer than the Angels themselves, for the Angels are not so married to Christ in a mystical union, as God's people are; now is it any wonder that those who are so very dear to Christ, should be in the prayers of Christ? if they were so much in his heart, that sometimes he shed his blood for them, will he not now intercede for? O yes! to this end he carries them on his breast or heart, as near as near may be, that they may be in a continual remembrance before the Lord forever; his very love compels him to this office, to intercede for them.

6. It is Christ's delight to intercede for his Saints? before the world was, His delights were with the sons of men; and when the fullness of time came, then said he, Lo I come, in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy Will O my God; and what was that, but to be with the sons of men? he knew that was his Father's pleasure, and in respect of himself, he had a delight to live with them, and to die for them: and no sooner he entered into Heaven, but there he delights to officiate still in behalf of the sons of men; he carries their names on his heart there, and though some of their persons be on earth, and he in his bodily presence is in Heaven, yet distance of place cannot deaden his delights in the remembrance of them; he is ever minding his Father of his people in the nether world; he tells him that they are his, all in all, upon the earth, all his joy, and all his delight, and all his portion; as men use to give portions to their children, so God having but one Son by eternal generation, he hath given the Elect unto him as his portion; and hence he makes it his great business in Heaven, to provide mansions for his portion, to take up God's heart for his portion, to beg favor and love for his portion. Here 'tis the joy of Christ in Heaven, in going to his Father, and telling him, Why Father? I have a small portion yet on earth, and because they are on earth, they are still sinning against thy Majesty, but I have suffered and satisfied for their sins, and hither am I come, to mind Thee of it, and continually to get out fresh pardons for new sins; come, look on my old satisfaction; didst Thou not promise? is it not in the Articles of agreement betwixt Thee and me, that I should see of the travel of my soul, and should be satisfied? didst Thou not say, that because I poured out my soul, therefore Thou wouldst divide me a portion with the great, and the spoil with the strong? O my Father, now I make intercession for the transgressors; give me out pardons for an hundred thousand millions of sins; Thou hast said and sworn, that Thou hast no pleasure in the death of sinners; and it is my pleasure, my joy, my infinite delight, to save sinners; these are my seed, my portion, my redeemed ones, and therefore let them be saved. Thus Christ intercedes, and his delight in his Saints, as knowing it to be his Father's mind, draws him on to this intercession; indeed this reason hangs upon that primary, and first reason; it is God's will that Christ should intercede; as it is Christ's delight to do the will of his Father in Heaven, I delight to do thy Will O my God.

7. It is Christ's compassion that causeth intercession. Christ is such an high Priest, (saith the Apostle) as cannot but be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. He was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. When he was on earth, he felt our infirmities, frailties, miseries, and as a man that hath felt the Stone, or Gout, or Fever; or especially that hath felt soul-troubles, cannot but compassionate those that are in the like condition; so Christ having had the experience of our outward, and inward sufferings, he cannot but compassionate us; and hence it is (his very compassion's moving) that he intercedes to his Father in our behalf. It is observed, that the very office or work of the High Priest, was to sympathize with the people of God; only in the case of the death of his kindred; he was not as others, to sympathize or mourn; but Jesus Christ goes beyond all the High-Priests that ever were before him; he doth fully sympathize with us, not in some, but in all conditions; In all our afflictions he is afflicted. I believe Christ hath carried a man's heart up with him to Heaven; and though there be no passions in him as he is God; yet the flower, the blossom, the excellency of all these passions, (which we call compassions) are infinitely in him as he is God; he striketh, and trieth, and yet he pitieth; when Ephraim bemoaneth himself, God replies, Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still, therefore my bowels are troubled for him. Surely there's a violence of heavenly passion in Christ's heart as God-man, which makes him to break out into prayer to God, and into compassions towards Men: O that tempted souls would consider this! it may be Christ is giving you a cup of tears and blood to drink, but who knows what bowels, what turnings of heart, what motions of compassion are in Jesus Christ all the while? those who feel the fruit of Christ's intercession know this, and cannot but subscribe to this truth. O ye of little faith, why do ye doubt of Christ's bowels? is he not our compassionate High Priest? hath not the tenderest, meekest, mildest heart of a man that God possibly can form, met with the eternal and infinite mercy of God himself in Jesus Christ? you have heard that Christ in both natures is our High Priest, Mediator, Intercessor, and if either God or Man know how to compassionate, Christ must do it. O the bowels of Christ! He is touched (saith the Apostle) with the feeling of our infirmities; it is an allusion to the rolled and moved bowels of God, in Jer. 31.20. Christ in Heaven is burning and flaming in a passion of compassion towards his weak ones; and therefore he pleads, intercedes, and prays to God for them.

Thus far we have propounded the object which is Christ's intercession; our next work is to direct you how to look upon Jesus in this respect.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. Of knowing Jesus as carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his Intercession.

LET us know Jesus carrying on this great work of our salvation in his Intercession. Is it not a rare piece of knowledge to know what Christ is now doing in Heaven for us on Earth? If I had a weighty suite at Court, on which lay my estate and life, if I knew that I had a friend there that could prevail, and that he were just now moving in my behalf, were not this worth the knowledge? I dare say in the behalf of all believers in the World, Christ is now interceding for us at the right hand of God; ever since his ascension into Heaven he hath been doing this work; it is a work already of above sixteen hundred years; and Summer and Winter, Night and day, without any tiredness of Spirit; Christ hath been still praying, still interceding; Christ's love hath no vacation, no cessation at all: yea, even now whiles you read this, Christ is acting as an Advocate for you, Christ hath your names engraven, as a seal on his heart; and standing right opposite to the eye of his Father, the first opening of the eye-lids of God is terminated upon the breast of Jesus Christ; Is not this worth the knowledge? O my soul, leave off thy vain studies of natural things! if they do not conduce some way or other to the right understanding of this, they are not worth the while; What is it for an Aristotle to be praised where he is not, and to be damned where he is? O the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ! such a knowledge (if true) is no less than saving. Come, study his intercession in all the former particulars; I have run them over, for the work is swoln under my hands, and I would now abbreviate; only remember this, that in Christ's intercession are many secrets which we must never know on this side Heaven; oh take heed of entering into this labarinth without the clew of the Word; above all desire the guidance of the Spirit to enlighten thy darkness, and what ever thou knowest, know it still for thyself.

SECT. II. Of considering Jesus in that respect.

2. LET us consider Jesus carrying on this work of our salvation in his intercession, many of God's people have found the benefit, and for my part I cannot but approve of it as an excellent, quickening, and enlivening duty to be much in a way of meditation, or consideration; especially when we meet with such a blessed subject as this is; My meditation of him shall be sweet, (saith David) I will be glad in the Lord; it is enough to make a meditation sweet and refreshing, when it is conversant about such a subject as Christ's intercession; Is it not as incense, a sweet odour, and perfume with God himself? and shall not each thought of it be sweet to us? come, let us be serious in this duty; and that we may do it thoroughly; let us consider it in these several particulars. As—

1. Consider of the nature of Christ's intercession: what is it but the gracious Will of Christ fervently desiring that for the virtue of his death, and sacrifice, thy person and performances might be accepted of God? As Christ on earth gave himself to the death, even to the death of the Cross for the abolition sin, so now in Heaven he prays the Father, by his agony and bloody sweat, by his his cross and passion, by his death and sacrifice, that thy sins may be pardoned, thy service accepted, and thy soul saved. This is the Will of Christ, even thy justification, sanctification, and salvation; accordingly he presents his Will, Father I will that all those privileges flowing from my death may be conferred on such a person by name; such a soul is now meditating and considering of my intercession, and my will is that his very meditation may find acceptance with God. O what workings would be in thy heart and spirit, if thou didst but consider that Christ even now were speaking his Will, that thy person and duty might both find acceptance, and be well-pleasing with God.

2. Consider of the person that intercedes for thee; it is Christ in both Natures; it is thy Mediator; the middle one betwixt God and man; in this respect thou mayst consider him as one indifferent, and equally inclining to either party, like a pair of scales that hang even, neither side lift up, or depressed more than the other; A Mediator is not of one, saith the Apostle, Christ indifferently partook of both Natures, God-head, and Manhood, that so he might be fit to stand in the gap between his Father and us; he is a Priest according to both Natures; he is a Days-man wholly for God, and a Days-man wholly for us, and on our side.

3. Consider of the person to whom Christ intercedes; is it not to his Father? Thou art sure to speed well, O my soul, for God is the Father of thy Intercessor. If I had a suit to some Majesty, and the Prince would but mediate, I might hope to speed; Christ is God's's Prince (as I may call him) and in respect of us, The first-begotten of many brethren; And herein is thy rejoicing, that the party offended is Christ's own Father, and, in Christ, thy Father; fathers cannot be cruel to their own dear children; What man amongst you, whom if his son ask bread, he will give him a stone; or if he ask a fish, will he give him a Serpent? If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him? and especially if Christ himself ask?

4. Consider of the persons for whom Christ intercedes, it is for all the Elect, and in particular for thee O the sweet of this one meditation! if I knew that my name were written in Heaven, should I not (as Christ bids me) rejoice in this? oh but what is it to have my name written in the chief part of Heaven? what is it to have my name written in the breast-plate of Jesus Christ? come, read O my soul, is it not thus written, Isaac, or Jacob, I have prayed, and I am praying for thee that thy faith fail not? sure I am that I would not part with my hope in the privilege for all the wide world; the very consideration of this makes me to esteem of all the world as dross, and dogs-meat. And oh that ever the world, or flesh, or devil should steal this meditation out of my heart! Oh that ever I should forget that Christ's is gone to Heaven, that he is entered into the Holy of Holies, and that he carries my name into the presence of God the Father! I speak the same to thee that readest, if thou art a Believer, there is no doubt of it, but Christ is speaking a good word to his Father in thy behalf; he can no more forget thee in his intercessions, than a Mother with full breasts can forget her sucking Child, that she should not have compassion on the Son of her womb: Now if ever, look up to Jesus, yea look, and never leave looking, till thou spiest thy own name writ on his heart; it is enough to fix thy soul, and to make it dwell on Jesus Christ thus carrying thee on his shoulders, and bearing thee on his breast plate for a memorial unto his Father in Heaven.

5. Consider of the agreement and difference betwixt Christ's intercessions, and the intercessions of the high Priests of old; they did both intercede, but Christ's intercessions are ever in a mere transcendent, eminent way: Christ is more faithful in his office and place than ever high Priest was; Christ is more compassionate and pitiful than ever high Priest was; and hence it is that he hath the Title of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, one of many commiserations; all is mercy, and love, and sweetness, and more than motherly affection that comes from Christ. O my soul, why shouldst thou say with Israel, My way is hidden from the Lord, and my judgment is passed over by my God? as if Jesus Christ had left thee out of the count of his people, and out of the roll of those whom he is to look after. No, no; he is a faithful and merciful High Priest; far above all the high Priests of the Old Testament; and if they were so careful not to leave out of their breast-plate one name of all the Twelve Tribes; how much more careful is Christ not to leave out thy name in his intercession? from this very Argument of Christ's compassion and Christ's faithfulness, the Apostle calls on us to consider the Apostle and high Priest of our profession Christ Jesus, who was faithful to him that appointed him, above Aaron, or Moses, or any of the high Priests; why, consider him O my soul; this Gospel-high Priest is well worthy indeed of thy consideration.

6. Consider of the properties of Christ's intercession; is it not heavenly and glorious, effectual and prevailing, and of all other the transactions of our salvation, whilst this world lasts, the most perfective and consummate? O give me the intercessions of Christ above all the intercessions of Men or Angels. I know the Saints on earth pray mutually one for another, but they pray not in their own names, or for their own merits, but in the Name and for the merits of Jesus Christ; and as for the Saints and Angels in Heaven, Cyprian and Jerome seem to grant, that they pray for the state of the Church Militant; but if so, they do it only of charity, as Brethren, not of office as Mediators; they do it only for the Church in general, and not for any particular man or member of the Militant Church; such an intercession as this, so heavenly, so effectual, so perfective of our salvation, so authoritative and public, found upon the satisfactory merits of the person interceding, is proper only to Christ. I would be glad of the prayers of all the Churches of Christ; O that there were not a Saint on the earth, but that I were by name in his morning, and evening prayer (whosoever thou art that readest, I beseech thee pray for me); but above all, let me have a property in those prayers and intercessions that are proper only to Christ; I am sure then I should never miscarry; Christ's prayers are heavenly, glorious, and very effectual.

robe of righteousness is covering us, and the iniquity of our holy things: O my soul, look up, consider Jesus thy Savior in these respects! I am persuaded, if thou didst but know, if thou couldst but see, what a deal of work Christ hath in hand; and how he carries it on for thy salvation, it would melt thy heart into very tears of joy. Whilst Christ was on earth, and his Mother had lost him, he could then say, Wist ye not that I must go about my Fathers business? now Christ is in Heaven, he is about the same business still; all his employment in Heaven is to intercede for us, that we may be saved: very true, there is much in this intercession of Jesus Christ; it is a Tree of many branches, and every branch fruitful; so that if thou wouldst enlarge thy Meditation in this wide Ocean of delights, there is room enough; but herein I must leave thee in the duty, for I can but point at the several particulars whereon thou mayst enlarge: O think on it, that Christ, and Christ's blood, and Christ's prayers should be all at work! that Christ should play the Advocate, and plead thy cause, and perfume thy duties with his Incense; and take thy person in an unperceivable way to God his Father, and cry there, O my Father be merciful to this sinner, pardon his sin, and save his soul for the sake of Jesus: O blessed mediation! O blessed is the man, that on this blessed object knows how to meditate both day and night.

8. Consider of the power and prevalency of Christ's intercessions with his Father. Is he not to this purpose a Priest to God, and called thereto by God? is he not the Son of God, yea, God himself? is he not God's Darling? God's Commander, as well as Petitioner? nay, is not the hand of God himself in this design? is not the Fathers heart as much towards us and our salvation, as Christ's own heart? as sure then as Christ is gone into Heaven with thy name engraven on his heart, so sure shalt thou follow him, and be with him where he is. Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's Elect? who is he that condemneth? where Christ becomes Patron to defend against the sentence of damnation, it is in vain for Sin, or Law, or Satan, to attempt anything; for as an innocent person is safe so long as he hath his learned Advocate to answer all Objections; so it is with Believers, who have Christ himself both Judge and Advocate; a sure Advocate; he ever prevails in whatsoever he undertakes; he was never yet cast in any suit; he hath for these Sixteen Hundred years carried away all the causes of hundreds, thousands, and millions of souls; why, he is so dear and near to his Father, that he can work him to anything he will: And O my soul, if thou hast any relation to Jesus Christ, is not here comfort; I dare in the Name of Christ be thy warrant, and give it under my hand, that if Christ pray for thee, Christ will be sure to save thee; he never yet failed, he never will fail in any of his suits to God: Oh consider of this!

9. Consider of the reasons of Christ's intercession; many are given, but this may be sufficient, It is God's own Ordinance; the very wisdom of God found out this way to save our souls, viz. that an High Priest should be appointed, who should die for sinners, and afterward present his death to his Father by way of intercession in their behalf. Some may look upon this as needless, what could not God have pardoned our sins, and saved our souls without a Priest? I shall not dispute God's power, but if any will, let such a one tell me what way could his own wisdom have found out to heaven between the wrath of God, and the sin of man? I believe it would have posed all the wisdom of the world (of Men and Angels) to have reconciled God's mercy in the salvation of man, and his justice in the condemnation of sin; to have poured out hell upon the sin, and yet to have bestowed heaven upon the sinner; now then, if God himself did study to find out this way, and that he hath said, This is my pleasure, that Christ my Son shall be a Priest, and that he shall offer himself, and Present himself and his offering, and his prayer to me for his People: O my soul rest on this as the very ordination of God; admire at the contrivance of God; say, O the depth! question no further, only Meditate, and ponder, and consider of it till thou feelest Christ's intercession darting its influence and efficacy on thy sin-sick soul.

SECT. III. Of desiring after Jesus in that respect.

3. LET us desire after Jesus carrying on this work of our salvation in his intercession. I cannot but wonder what a dullness seizeth on my heart, and on all the hearts of the Sons of men, that we have no more longings after Christ, whose heart is ever panting and longing after us. Surely we do not set ourselves to find out experimentally the sweetness that is in Christ; if there were not another object to think upon, but only this one of Christ's intercession, is not here enough to put us all into a teeming longing frame? O my soul, rouse up, and set this blessed object before thy face? take a full view of it until thy affections begin to warm, and thou beginnest to cry, Oh for my part in Christ's intercession! Oh I would not be left out of Christ's heavenly prayers for ten thousand worlds! come and be serious! the object is admirably sweet and precious; long for it, pant after it! God understands the Rhetoric of thy breathing, as well as of thy cry. But what is there in Christ's intercession that is so desirable? I answer—

1. In Christ's intercession lies the present transaction of our souls salvation. Such passages as hitherto we have spoken of are done and past; the transactions of eternity, were at an end when time began; the transactions of Christ promised, had their period when Christ was incarnate; the transactions of Christ's Birth, and life and death, and resurrection, and ascension, are now above a thousand and six hundred years old; I know the virtue and influence of all these transactions continue, and will continue forever and ever, but the several actings had their periods; and only Christ's session, and mission of his spirit, and his blessed intercession both were, and now are the very present employment of Jesus Christ. If it were possible that we could see into Heaven, if with Stephen we could look up steadfastly, and see the Heavens opened; if our eyes by an extraordinary power were carried through that azure sky, and through all till we come to the Holy of Holies, and to Jesus Christ in his glory; what should we see but Christ interceding, Christ busy with his Father in his poor Saints behalf? now he prays, now he presents his person, merits, intercession, interpellation, q. d. Father, here are a company of Rebels justly fallen under thy displeasure, they deserve to be set at an eternal distance from thee, but I must needs have them pardoned, and received into thy bosom; come, make thine own terms, let justice require never so great satisfaction, I have paid a price sufficient for all, and effectual for them; give them what laws thou pleasest, I will undertake they shall observe them; and to this purpose away, away holy spirit, go to such and such souls; enable them to their duties, yea, enable them in duty, and sanctify them throughout in souls; bodies and spirits. Why, this is the present transaction of Jesus Christ, and therefore most desirable; methinks I long to know what Christ is now a doing in Heaven for my soul; and is it not thus, is not all his time spent either in reading pardons for his redeemed ones; or in presenting petitions from them, and pleading for them. Surely he is still interceding every day, it is his present work for our souls, O desirable work!

2. In this present transaction lies the application of all Christ's former actings, whether of his habitual righteousness, or of his active and passive obedience. All those passages of Christ's incarnation, conception, circumcision, birth, life, and death, which more especially we look upon, as the meritorious causes of our salvation, had been nothing to us, if they had not been applied by Christ: they were the means of impetration, but Christ's intercession is the means of application: Christ purchased salvation by those precedaneous acts, but he possesseth us of our salvation by this perfective and consummate act of his intercession. The order of this is laid down by the Apostle, in that first, He learned obedience by the things which he suffered, and then being made perfect, he became the Author (or applying cause) of eternal salvation to all them that obey him; being to this purpose, called of God an High Priest after the order of Melchizedek. Now is not this the desirable act above all other acts? Alas! what am I better for a Mine of Gold in such, or such, or such a field, in which I have no propriety at all? I am thoroughly convinced that Christ's merits are most precious merits, but oh that they were mine! Oh that Christ's intercessions would bring the salve, and lay it to my sore! Oh that I could hear that voice from Heaven, My son, I was incarnate for thee, and conceived for thee, and born for thee, and circumcised for thee, and I did the Law, and suffered the penalty for thee; and now I am interceding that thy very soul may have the benefit of all my doings, and of all my sufferings. Why, if Christ's intercessions be the applying cause, if it bring home to my soul all the former transactions of Christ, saying, All these are thine, even thine, oh how desirable must this intercession be?

3. In this application lies that communion and fellowship which we have with the Father and the Son: I pray for these, that as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us. Understand this soberly, we cannot think that there should be that oneness in equality betwixt God and us, as betwixt God and Christ; no, no, but there is oneness in similitude and reality, even in this life; by virtue of Christ's intercession we have oneness with God and Christ, not only in comforts, but also in graces; I pray you mark this: when I speak of communion with God in this life, I mean especially the communication of grace between God and the soul; on God's part there's a special influence of grace and favor to man; and on man's part, there is a special return of grace and honor to God. Some trembling souls are apt to think, that all communion with God and Christ consists only in the comforts of the holy spirit, whereas Christians may as really and advantagiously have communion with God in secret conveyances of grace, inward supports, in a concealed acceptance of service, in the hidden drawings of the soul Godward, as in the more open, and comfortable manifestations of God unto the soul; communion with God is a familiar friendship (I speak it in an holy humble sense) now do we not as usually go to a friend for council and advice, as for comfort and cheering? in a friends bosom we intrust our sorrows as well as our joys. Suppose a soul even spiritually overwhelmed, and ready to break, be taking itself unto God, and venting itself before the Lord; now if afterwards the soul hath no more case, than by the bare lanching of the sore, if God pours in no balm at all, but only gives support; shall we say that this soul in this case hath no communion with God? O yes! in God's secret visits of the soul, and in the souls restless groping after God, though nothing but darkness be apprehended, yet that soul lives in the light of God's countenance; the Sun shines, though a cloud interposeth; God smiles though the soul do not perceive it; or certainly thou hast his strengthening-supporting presence, if not his shining; now this is the fruit of Christ's blessed intercession; and this is the subject-matter of Christ's intercessions, O my Father, that these may be one in us; I in them, and thou in me; I in them by the influence and power of my Spirit, and thou in me by the fullness and power of the Godhead. And is not this a most desirable thing?

4. In this communion lies the vision and fruition of Jesus Christ in glory, grace brings to glory; If communion here, we shall have communion hereafter; and this also is a part of Christ's prayer and intercession, Father I will that they also whom thou hast given me may be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me. Jesus cannot be in Heaven long without his Saints; indeed it is impossible that Christ should be in Heaven, and that pieces and bits of Christ-mystical should be in Hell, or yet long on Earth. Christ will draw in his Legs and Members on earth up nearer to the Head; certainly Christ and you that are believers must be under one roof ere long. Is not he gone before to prepare a place, yea, many mansions for you; we think them happy on earth that have their many stately Halls and Palaces; their summer, and their winter-houses. O Christians! how happy will you be when you come to be Lord's and Heirs of many stately Mansions in the streets of Heaven? but what speak I of Mansions now I am naming Christ? Mansions are nothing, many Mansions are but little, yea, many Mansions in Christ's Fathers house, are but created chips of happiness, in comparison of that communion which by virtue of Christ's intercession we shall have with Christ. It is the saying of an eminently learned holy Divine, I should refuse heaven (saith he) if Christ were not there; take Christ away from Heaven, and it's but a poor, dark, heartless dwelling; Heaven without Christ would look as the direful land of death. And therefore after Christ had spoke of many Mansions, and of a place that he would prepare for his Saints, he adds further to increase their joy, I will come again (saith he) and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also. Mansions are but as places of briars and thorns without Jesus Christ, and therefore I would have Heaven for Christ, and not have Christ for Heaven; O this communion with Christ is above all desirable, and this is the subject-matter of Christ's prayer, Father I would have the Saints to be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory. Why, this is the communion which the Saints shall have with Christ, never will their eyes be off-him, never will their thoughts wander after any other objects; O the intimacy that will be then betwixt Christ and Christians! Oh what communication of glory will there be to each other! These shall walk with me (saith Christ) for they are worthy.

O my soul, if this be the business of Christ's intercession, if all these particulars are contained in the bowels of this one transaction, how is it that thou art not in a fainting swoon? how is it that thou art not gasping, groaning, sick unto death with the vehement thirst after thy part and portion in Christ's intercession? if there be such a thing as the passion of desire in this heart of mine, O that now it would break out! Oh that it would vent itself with mighty longings, and infinite aspirings after this blessed Object! why Lord I desire, but help thou my faint desires; blow on my dying spark, it is but little; and if I know anything of my heart, I would have it more; Oh that my spark would flame! why Lord I desire that I might desire; Oh breath it into me, and I will desire after thee.

SECT. IV. Of hoping in Jesus in this respect.

4. Let us hope in Jesus, carrying on this work of our salvation in his intercession. It is good that a man should hope. Indeed if it were not for hope, the heart would not hold; only look that our hope be true hope: very hypocrites have a kind of hope, but if God's Word be true, The hope of unjust men shall perish.—What is the hope of the hypocrite? — Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him? No, no, The hypocrites hope shall perish? his hope shall be cut off, and his trust shall be as a Spiders web. O my soul hope in Jesus, but rest not till thou canst give a reason of thy hope, till thou canst prove that they are the hopes which Grace, and not only Nature hath wrought; that they are grounded upon Scripture-promises, and sound evidences; that they purify the heart; that the more thou hopest, the less thou sinnest; that they depend on sure and infallible causes, as on the truth, power, and mercy of God; on the merits, mediation, and intercession of Jesus Christ; what? is this last amongst the rest (I mean the intercession of Christ) the spring of thy hope? canst thou follow the stream, till it brings thee to this Fountain, or Well-head of hope, that now thou canst say; O this intercession is mine? come, search, and try, it is worth the pains; and to put thee out of question, and in a more facile way of discerning, I shall lay down these signs. As—

1. If Christ's intercession be mine, then is the Spirit's intercession mine; or if thou wouldst rather argue from the effect to the cause, then thus; if the Spirit's intercession be mine, then is Christ's intercession mine. In this case we need not to ascend up into Heaven to learn the truth, rather let us descend into our own hearts, and look whether Christ have given us of his spirit, which makes us cry unto God with sighs and groans which cannot be expressed; he that will know whether the Sun shine in the Firmament, he must not climb into the clouds to look, rather he must search for the beams thereof upon the earth; which when he sees, he may conclude, that the Sun shines in the Firmament: O come and let us ransack our own consciences; let us search whether we feel the Spirit of Christ crying in us, Abba Father: certainly these two are as the cause and the effect; Christ's intercession in Heaven, and his Spirit's intercession on earth are as twins of a birth; or rather such is the concatenation of these two, that Christ's intercession in Heaven breeds another intercession in the hearts of his Saints. It is the same Spirit dwelling in Christ, and in all his Members, that moves and stirs them up to cry, Abba Father. Here then is my Argument, if Christ hath put his spirit into thy heart, and if the Spirit hath set thine heart on work to make incessant intercessions for thyself, then is Christ's intercession thine. There is a kind of a round in the carrying on of this great work of intercession; as, 1. Christ intercedes for his people, O that my Spirit might go down! 2. God harkens to the intercession of Christ, Away holy spirit, get thee down into the hearts of such and such. 3. The spirit waits on the pleasure of them both, and no sooner down, but he sends up his intercession back again: Christ cries to God, and God sends the spirit, and the spirit goes and echoes in the hearts of Saints to the cries of Christ. Much of this is contained in that one Text, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our heart, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 crying, (as if he merely acted our tongues) Abba Father, here is God the Father, God the Son, and God the holy Ghost, and all are acting their parts on the elect people of God: the Son intercedes, O that my spirit may be given to these; the Father willingly grants, Away holy spirit, and as my Son asketh, enter, and take possession of those sinful hearts; the holy spirit obeys, and no sooner in the hearts of his Saints, but he cries in them Abba Father; God hears Christ, and the spirit hears God, and the Elect hear the spirit; and now because the Spirit speaks in the Elect, God hears the Elect; much like unto this is that of the prophet, And it shall come to pass in that day, I will hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth, and the earth shall hear the corn, and wine, and oil, and they shall hear Jezreel. O my soul to the test! hath God sent forth the spirit of his Son into thy heart? hast thou the in-dwelling of the Spirit; and now by the help of the spirit canst thou pray with earnestness, confidence, and an holy importunity? canst thou cry Abba Father? Canst thou cry] with earnestness? Father] with confidence? and Abba Father] or Father, Father] with an holy importunity? why, these are the very signs of the spirits intercession. O my soul that thou wouldst deal faithfully with thy own self; canst thou by the help of the spirit go to the Father in the name of Christ? as Christ is gone before into the holy of holies to intercede; so canst thou with boldness follow after, and enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus? Canst thou say God hath given me his spirit, and his spirit hath shown me Christ as my Mediator at the right hand of God; and now under the wing of such a Mediator, I can by the Spirits, assistance go with boldness ( 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 with assuming a liberty) to speak anything I will in the ears of God? Surely this is the fruit, the effect of Christ's intercession, and therefore thou mayest comfortably conclude, Christ's intercession is mine.

2. If at any time in the midst of duties I am savingly affected, then is Christ's intercession mine. Sometimes it pleaseth God to appear in ordinances, and the soul is comforted, quickened, enlarged, affected; why, now I look on this as the efficacy of Christ's Blood, and as the power of Christ's intercession; at that very instant that I feel any good in any ordinance of Christ, why, then, even then is Christ prevailing with God his Father for what I feel; then, even then may I boldly say, Now is the Lord Jesus, who is at God's right hand in heaven, remembering me a poor worm on earth: Oh now I feel the fruit of his intercession; Oh what is this spirit, power, grace, comfort, sweetness I drink of, but a taste of the honey-comb with the end of my rod, dropping from the intercessions of Jesus Christ? and if this presence of Christ's Spirit be so sweet, what is himself, then? I know we had need to be wary in laying down this sign, it is clearly proved by an eminent Divine, that sweet motions of heart in holy things are not infallible Evidences of grace: the third kind of hearers are said to receive the Word with joy; they found some sweet and power in the Ordinances of Christ; and Herod heard John gladly; and many for a season rejoiced in John's light and Ministry: Certainly affections in holy administrations with delight and joy, may be in those, who yet have no true grace; so it may be that the novelty and strangeness of a doctrine may much affect and delight; or the nature of the doctrine as it is comfortable, without any respect to spiritual operation, may exceedingly affect; or the Ministers abilities, because of his parts, eloquence, elocution, affectionate utterance may much delight, and stir up the hearers affections; fine head-notions may produce some affectionate heart-motions; but what symptom of grace in all this? The sign therefore I lay down of my propriety in Christ's intercessions is not every sweet motion, or every excited affection, but that which is holy, spiritual, heavenly, saving; I may discern much of this, if I will but look into the grounds and effects of my excited, or stirred up affections; if the ground thereof be fetched from Heaven, and in their effect they tend towards Heaven; if they wean my heart from the world; if they elevate and raise up my affections to things above; if they form, and frame my conversation heaven-wards, then may I be assured these motions and affections are of the right stamp; for all such motions are but sparks of that heavenly fire, the flame whereof is mindful of its own original; they are the fruits of Christ, and they go back to Christ; they work towards their center, they tend towards the place from whence they came; and in this respect O that I could never hear a Sermon, without a savory affection of what I hear! O that I could never go to prayer without some warmth, and heat, and life, and fervency! Oh that in every duty I were savingly affected, that I felt the savor of Christ's ointments, whose name, and whose intercession is as an ointment poured forth! in times of the Old Testament, if they offered up a sacrifice, and a material fire came down from Heaven, and burnt up the sacrifice to ashes, it was a certain testimony that the sacrifice was accepted: Now in the time of the Gospel we must not expect material fire to come down upon our duties, but hath the Lord at any time caus'd an inward and spiritual fire to fall down upon thy heart warming thy spirit in duty? and carrying it up heavenward? Surely it so, thou mayest safely conclude, these are the very effects of Christ's intercession; his intercession is mine.

3. If in my heart I feel a holy frame, disposition, inclination; to pray, and cry and intercede for others, especially for the miseries and distresses of the Church of God, then is Christ's intercession mine. We should (as near as we may) in everything conform to Christ; and this conformity is an evidence or sign to us of our interest in Christ: O my soul go down into the inmost closet of thy heart, look what disposition there is in it towards the members of Christ; and thou mayest conclude, there is in Christ's heart the very same disposition towards thee. Ah! do I think there is love in my bosom towards the Saints, and that there is no love in Christ's bosom towards me? what? can I think that my narrow, straitened, sinful bowels are larger than those wide, compassionate, tender bowels of Jesus Christ? as a drop of water is in comparison of the Ocean, and as a gravel-stone is in comparison of the sand, so is my heart to Christ's, and my love to Christ's, and my bowels to Christ's. Come then, and try by this sign; Hereby we know that we are translated from death to life if we love the brethren; he that loveth not his brother, abideth in death.—Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren; is not this plain, if I love the brethren, Christ loveth me; if I feel in my heart an holy disposition to go to God, and to pray, and cry, and intercede for a Saint in misery, surely the Lord Jesus hath as much bowels towards me, to go and intercede for me, and to present my prayers unto God the Father; his intercession is mine.

4. If I am called, justified, sanctified, then is Christ's intercession mine: are not these the subject matter of Christ's intercession? I pray (saith Christ) that thou shouldst keep them from the evil.—I pray that thou wouldst sanctify them through the truth! neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word or preaching; Father I will that those whom thou hast given me, be with me in glory. He first prays that we may be called and justified, and then he prays that we may be sanctified and saved: he holds at both ends of this golden chain of our salvation; the one end is hanged at his breast, where the names of all his Saints are written; and the other end is at his heart that he may be the Author and finisher, the first and last, the beginning and ending of our souls salvation: alas! there is nothing in us, in our reach here below; the first stirrings of grace is up in Heaven at the right hand of the Father; and the far end of any gracious thought is as far above us, as the heart of Christ is above the earth: Come then, since all hangs on this great pin of Christ's intercession; let us search and try, are we called? do we believe on the Son? are we sanctified in some measure? are we kept from the evil, that sin may not have dominion over us? hath Christ put up these prayers in our behalf, that now we feel (as it were) and experience the truth of Christ's prevailings with his Father in our hearts and lives? O sure signs that Christ's intercession is ours; away, away, all diffidence, doubting, wavering fluctuating hopes; a soul thus grounded may with Paul cast the ganlet, and bid defiance to all the world, Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's Elect, who is he that condemneth? it is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, and who also maketh intercession for us.

SECT. V. Of believing in Jesus in that respect.

5. LET us believe in Jesus, as carrying on this great work of our salvation in his intercession; wounded spirits are full of scruples, and thus they cry, *My sins will never be forgiven; have not I sinned against God, and Christ, and the Spirit of Christ? had I not my hands imbrued in the blood of his Son? and have not I trodden underfoot the blood of God? and will that blood that I have shed, and trod on, intercede for my pardon? Had I but gone so far as the Jews did, who indeed killed and crucified Christ, I might have had some hopes, because they knew not what they did, and therefore Christ prayed, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do. But alas! I sinned, and I knew well enough what, and wherein I have sinned: had they known (saith the Apostle) they would not have crucified the Lord of glory; but alas I knew it, and I was fully convinced that the commission of every sin is a crucifying of Christ, and yet against knowledge, and judgment, and light, and checks of my own conscience, I have crucified the Lord of glory, and is not the Apostle express? it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift,—if they fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves, the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame, Oh I fear my name is not in the roll of those for whom Christ intercedes, I have crucified him afresh, and will he intercede for such a dead dog as I am? I cannot believe. Silence, unbelief! be not tyrannical to thyself, for Christ will not, sin shall do thee no hurt, nor Satan, no nor God himself, for Jesus-Christ can work him to anything; if he but open his wounds in heaven, he will so work his Father, that thy wounds on earth shall close up presently. O but I have sinned against light; and what then? I hope thou hast not sinned willfully, maliciously, despitefully against the light: the Apostle tells us, that if we sin willfully, after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation. These two Texts in Heb. 6.4. and 10.26. are parallel, and give light to each other; and therefore unless thy sin be the unpardonable sin, unless willfully, maliciously, and despitefully, thou hast crucified Christ, as some of the Jews did, never pass a doom of final condemnation on thy soul: what is there no difference betwixt a sin done willfully, or purposely, of malice with delight; and against the feeling of thy own conscience;* and a sin done of mere ignorance, inconsideracy, infirmity, or through a strong temptation, though against light itself? I know there is a light given in by God's Word, and some beam of the Holy Ghost, which yet never penetrated so far as to transform and regenerate the soul wholly to God's Image; and in such a case a man may fall away even into an universal fall, a general Apostasy; but dost thou not hope better things of thyself than so? I suppose thou dost; O then believe! O believe thy part in Christ's intercession! and for the directions of thy faith, that thou mayst know how, or in what manner to believe, observe these particulars in their order. As—

1. Faith must directly go to Christ.
2. Faith must go to Christ as God in the flesh.
3. Faith must go to Christ as God in the flesh made under the Law.
4. Faith must go to Christ made under the directive part of the Law by his life, and under the penal part of the Law by his death.
5. Faith must go to Christ as put to death in the flesh, and as quickened by the Spirit.
6. Faith must go to Christ as quickened by the Spirit, and as going up into glory, as sitting down at God's right hand, and as sending the Holy Ghost; of all these before.
7. Faith must go to Christ as interceding for his Saints; this act of Christ is for the application of all the former acts on Christ's part; and our faith closing with it, is for the application of this, and all other the actings of Christ on our part. Now is our faith led up very high; if we can but reach this, we may say, our faith stands very lofty, when it may at once see earth and heaven; when it may see all that Christ hath acted for it here, and all that Christ doth act, and will act in heaven for it hereafter. It is not an ordinary, single, particular act of faith that will come up to this glorious mystery, no, no; it is a comprehensive, perfective act; it is such an act as puts the soul into a condition of glorious triumph, Who shall condemn? it is Christ that will save me to the uttermost, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for me. That same word [to the uttermost] is a good word, and well put in; it is a reaching word, and extends itself so far, that thou canst not look beyond it: let thy soul be set on the highest mountain that ever any creature was yet set on, and there let thy soul take in, and view the most spacious prospect both of sin, and misery, and difficulties of being saved, that ever yet any poor humbled soul did east within itself, yea, join to these all the objections, and hindrances of thy salvation, that the heart of man can suppose or invent against itself; lift up thy eyes, and look to the utmost thou canst see, and Christ by his intercession is able to save thee beyond the horizon, and furthest compass of thy thoughts, even to the utmost, and worst case the heart of man can possibly suppose; it is not thy having lain long in sin, or long under terrors and despairs; it is not thy having sinned often under many enlightnings, that can hinder thee from being saved by Christ; Do but remember this same word [to the uttermost] and then put in what exception thou wilt, or canst. O the holy triumphs of that soul that can but act its saith on Christ's intercession! why, this is the most perfect and consummate act of Christ's Priestly office; this argues thy Christ to be a perfect Mediator, and being a perfect Mediator, no condition can be desperate; And being made perfect, (saith the Apostle) he became the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; now therefore lead up thy faith to this blessed object, and thou hast under consideration the whole of Christ, and the total of Christ's actings in this world from first to last; in respect of mediation this is the Coronis, the up-shot, the period, the consummation, the perfection of all.

8. Faith in going to Christ as interceding for us, it is principally and mainly to look to the purpose, end, intent, and design of Christ's intercession: now the ends of Christ as in the reference unto us, are these.—

1. That we might have communion and fellowship with the Father, and the Son. I pray for these, that as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, they also may be one in us.

2. That we might have the gift of the Holy Ghost; I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of Truth.

3. That we might have protection against all evil, I pray (saith Christ) that thou wouldst keep them from the evil. Some may object, are not the faithful Subject to evils, corruptions, and temptations still? how then is that part of the intercession of Christ made good unto us? I answer, the intercession of Christ is presently available, only it is conveyed in a manner suitable and convenient to our present condition, so as there may be left room for another life; and therefore we must not conceive all presently done; it is with us as with Malefactors doomed to death, suppose the Supreme power should grant a pardon to be drawn; though the grant be of the whole thing at once, yet it cannot be written but word after word, and line after line; so the grant of our protection against all evil is made unto Christ at first, but in the execution thereof, there is line upon line, and precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little; we know Christ prayed for Peter, I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; yet Peter's faith did shake and totter; the prayer was not, that there might be no failing at all, but that it might not utterly and totally fail; and in that respect Peter was protected.

4. That we might have free access to the Throne of Grace; So the Apostle, Seeing then we have a great high-Priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession, and come boldly to the Throne of grace. And again, Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, and having an high Priest over the House of God, let us draw near with a true heart in a full assurance of faith.

5. That we might have the inward interpellation of the Spirit, which is, as it were, the Echo of Christ's intercession in our heart: The Spirit maketh intercession for us, with groanings which cannot be uttered. It is the same Spirit groans in us, which more distinctly and fully in Christ, prayeth for us. These things I speak in the world (saith our Savior) that they might have my joy filled in themselves. q. d. I have made this prayer in the world, and left a record and pattern of it in the Church, that they feeling the same heavenly desires kindled in their own hearts, may be comforted in the workings of that Spirit of prayer in them, which testifieth to their souls the quality of that intercession which I make for them in the Heaven of Heavens; certainly there is a dependence of our prayer on Christ's prayer: as it is with the Sun, though the body of it abide in the Heavens, yet the beams of it descend to us here on earth; so the intercession of Christ, though as tied to his person, it is made in Heaven; yet the groans, and desires of the touched heart, as the beams thereof, are here on earth.

6. That we might have the sanctification of our services; of this the Levitical Priests were a type, For they bear the iniquity of the holy things of the children of Israel, that they might be accepted; and he is the Angel of the Covenant, who hath a golden Censer to offer up the prayers of the Saints. Some observe a three-fold evil in man, of every of which we are delivered by Christ: First, an evil of state or condition under the guilt of sin: Secondly, an evil of nature under the corruption of sin: Thirdly, an evil in all our services by the adherency of sin; for that which toucheth an unclean thing, is made unclean thereby. Now Christ by his righteousness and merits justifieth our persons from the guilt of sin; and Christ by his Grace and Spirit doth in measure purify our faculties from the corruption of sin; and Christ by his incense and intercession doth cleanse our services from the adherency of sin; so that in them the Lord smells a sweet favor; and both we and our services find acceptance with God.

7. That we might have the pardon of all sin. It is by virtue of Christ's intercession that a Believer sinning of infirmity hath a pardon of course, for Christ is his Advocate to plead his case; or if he sin of presumption, and the Lord give repentance, he hath a pardon at the hands of God the Father by virtue of this intercession in a way of justice. And to this end rather is Christ called an Advocate than a Petitioner; If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father. The work of an Advocate differs from the work of a Petitioner; an Advocate doth not merely petition, but he tells the Judge what is Law, and what ought to be done, and so doth Christ. O my Father (saith Christ) this soul hath indeed sinned, but I have satisfied for his sins, I have paid for them to the full; now therefore in a way of equity, and justice, I do here call for this man's pardon. If this were not so, our estate would be most miserable, considering that for every sin committed by us after repentance, we deserve to be cast out of the love and favor of God our Father forever and ever.

8. That we might have continuance in the state of grace, I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. Some that dissent from us in the point of perseverance, object, that in our Savior's Prayer for Peter there was somewhat singular; but we say, that in this Prayer there is nothing singular, which is not common to all the faithful, and unto such as are given unto Christ of the Father; they allege that this privilege was granted to Peter as an Apostle; but we say, that if it was granted to Peter, as an Apostle, then it was common to Peter and Judas, in that both were Apostles. They allege further, that Christ prays not for the absolute perseverance of Believers, but after a sort, and upon condition. But we say the Prayer of Christ is certain, and not suspended: in this Prayer his desire is not for Peter that would persevere, but his desire is for Peter that he should persevere; the object of the thing for which Christ prays, is distinct from the thing itself prayed for.

9. That we might have the salvation of our souls in the day of Jesus; Father I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they might behold my glory. Why, this is the main end in respect of us, our glory; and indeed herein is the main piece of our glory, to behold this glory! Oh to see the Lord Jesus Christ glorified, as he shall be glorified, must be a glorious thing; What is it to see his glory, but to behold the luster of his Divinity through his humanity? In this respect our very eyes shall come to see God, as much as is possible for any creature to see him: we may be sure God shall appear through the humanity of Christ, as much as is possible for the Divinity to appear in a creature; and therefore Men and Angels will be continually viewing of Christ. I know there is another glory of Christ which the Father will put upon him; Because he humbled himself, therefore God will exalt him, and give him a name above every name; and we shall see him in this glory. O the ravishing sight of Saints! Christ is so lovely, that the Saints cannot leave, but they must, and will follow the Lamb wheresoever he goes: there shall be no moment to all eternity, wherein Christ shall be out of sight to so many thousand thousands of Saints; now this is the glory of the Saints above; as a Queen that sees the Prince in his glory, she delights in it, because it is her glory; so the Church, when she shall see Christ her Husband in his glory she shall rejoice in it, because she looks upon it as her own: Is not this a blessed end of Christ's intercession? why, hither tend all the rest; all the other ends end in this; and for this above all Christ intercedes to his Father, Father, I would have my Saints with me, O that all the daughters of Zion may behold King Solomon with the Crown wherewith thou hast crowned him in the day of his Espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart.

Only one Question, and I have done; how should I set my faith on work to act on Christ's intercession for these ends? I answer,—

1. Faith must persuade itself that here is a virtue in Christ's intercession. Certainly every passage, and acting of Christ hath its efficacy, and therefore there is virtue in this; it is full of juice, it hath a strong influence in it.

2. Faith must consider that it is the design of God, and the intendment of Christ, that this intercession should be for the good of those that are given to Christ. O there's enough in Christ, enough in Christ's intercession to convey communion, the Spirit, protection, free access to the Throne of Grace, a Spirit of prayer, pardon of sins, continuance in grace, salvation of souls to the Saints, and people of God, through all the world; and this is the design of God, that Christ's intercession should be as the fountain whence all these streams must run, and be conveyed unto us.

3. Faith must act dependantly upon the intercession of Christ for these very ends, this is the very nature of Faith, it relies upon God in Christ, and upon all the actings of Christ, and upon all the promises of Christ: so then, Is there a desirable end in Christ's intercession which we aim at? O let us act our Faith dependantly; let us rely, stay, or lean upon Christ to that same end; let us roll ourselves, or cast ourselves upon the very intercession of Jesus Christ: Saying, O my Christ, there is enough in thee, and in this glorious intercession of thine, and therefore there will I stick, and abide forever.

4. Faith must ever and anon be trying, improving, wrestling with God, that virtue may go out of Christ's intercession into our hearts. I have heard Lord, that there is an Office erected in heaven, that Christ, as Priest, should be ever praying, and interceding for his people: O that I may feel the efficacy of Christ's intercession! am I now in prayer? O that I could feel in this prayer, the warmth, and heat, and spiritual fire, which usually falls down from Christ's intercession into the hearts of his!

Lord warm my spirit in this duty; give me the kisses of thy mouth; O that I may now have communion with thee, thy Spirit upon me, thy protection over me! O that my pardon may be sealed, my grace confirmed, my soul saved in the day of Jesus! In this method, O my soul, follow on; and who knows but God may appear e're thou art aware? howsoever be thou in the use of the means, and leave the issue with God.

SECT. VI. Of loving Jesus in that Respect.

6. LET us love Jesus, as carrying on this great work of our salvation in his intercession. Now two things more especially will excite our love. 1. Christ's love to us. 2. Our propriety in Christ. For the first, many acts of Christ's love have appeared before, and everyone is sufficient to draw our loves to him again. As—

1. He had an eternal love to man; he feasted himself on the thoughts of love, delight, and free grace to man from all eternity; since God was God (O boundless duration) the Lord Jesus in a manner was loving and longing for the dawning of the day of the Creation; he was (as it were) with child of infinite love to man before he made the world. Some observe, that the first words which ever Christ wrote, were, Love to Believers; and these were written with glory, for it was before gold was, and they were written upon his bosom, for then other books were not.

2. In the beginning of time he loved man above all creatures, for after he had made them all, he then speaks as he never did before, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness, and let him have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth; and though man at that very instant unmade himself by sins, Christ's love yet was not broken off, but held forth in a promise till the day of performance, The seed of the woman shall bruise the Serpents head, and in thy seed shall all the Nations of the earth be blessed.

3. In the fullness of time his love was manifested; the seed then blossomed, and the birth came out in an high expression of love; the man-child, the love of Christ was born, and saw the light. After that (saith the Apostle) the kindness and love of God our Savior towards man appeared. I shall not need sure to instance in succeeding passages; so far as we have gone, we have clearly seen Christ's life was a perfect mirror of his love, as there is no beam in the Sun, in which there is no light, so there was no act in the life of Christ, but to a spiritual eye it shines with the light of love. But above all, O the love of Christ in his death! ask a Malefactor, if the Princes Son should go to his Father, and say, Father, I confess this wretch hath deserved to die, but I see a willingness in thee that he should live; only I perceive it sticks with thy justice; why, for that, Father, here I am; and to satisfy thy justice I will die myself, only let this poor wretch live to the glory of thine, and my free grace. Ask (I say) the Malefactor what kind of love were this? Surely Christ died for our sins, and Christ rose again for our justification, and he ascended, and sate down at God's right hand, and sent down his holy Spirit, and all for us; there was not one passage in all these transactions, but held forth the breakings and breathings out of a strong fire of love.

4. At this time there is a coal of burning love in the breast of Christ: this fire was indeed from everlasting, but the flames are as hot this day as ever; now it is that Christ loves, and lives;

And wherefore lives? but only to love us, and to intercede for us. Christ makes our salvation his constant calling; he is ever at his work. Yesterday, and today, and forever: there is not one hour in the day, nor one day in a year, nor one year in an age, wherein Christ is not busy with his Father in this heavenly employment of interceding for us. He loved us before he died for us, his love being the cause why he died for us; and he loves us still, in that now he intercedes for us: it is as much as to say, Christ hath loved us, and he repents not of his love: love made him die for us, and if it were to do again, he would die over again; yea, if our sins had so required, that for every elect person Christ must have died a several death, Love, love would have put him willingly upon all these deaths; O the loves of Christ towards our poor souls! If I might but stay, and take some turns in this large Field of love: How many thousands of particulars might I draw out of Scripture, expressing Christ's love to us in this respect? though he be in Heaven, yet by virtue of his intercession, he bears us in his hands: yea, he leads us by the hand, and arms too. I taught Ephraim to go, taking them by their arms, but they knew not that I healed them; he dandles us on his knees, he bears us on his wings; As an Eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, and beareth them on her wings, so the Lord alone doth lead us; he carries us on his shoulders, as the man found his sheep, and laid it on his shoulders rejoicing. Nay, I must yet come nearer, for Christ by his intercession sets us nearer yet; His left hand is under us, and his right hand doth embrace us; he wears us in Heaven, as a bracelet about his arms, which made the Spouse cry out, O set me as a seal upon thine arm; he stamps and prints us on the palms of his hands, Behold I have graven thee on the palms of my hands; as if our names were written in letters of blood upon Christ's flesh; he sets us as a seal upon his heart, that is the expression of the Spouse too, O set me as a seal upon thine heart; Nay, so precious are the Saints to Jesus Christ, that they lodge in Heaven in his bowels, and in his heart; for they dwell in Christ, Hereby we know that we dwell in him; and they dwell in God, and dwell in love, For God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God. I know not what more to say; you know the manner of the high Priests, was to carry the names of the children of Israel into the Holy of Holies on their shoulders, and on their breasts: but was it ever heard, that any high Priest, besides the great high Priest of our profession, should carry the names of thousands, and millions on his shoulders, and on his arms, and on his hands, and on his wings, and on his bosom, and on his heart, nay in his heart, and in his bowels, as a memorial before the Lord? O unmatchable love!

Methinks this love of Christ should now change my soul into a Globe or Mass of Divine love towards Christ, as it were by the Spirit of the Lord. Methinks a sight of Christ in his presenting himself, and his sacrifice to his Father for me, should so enamour my soul as that I should delight in no other sight but this; then is a Christian sweetly exercised, when as the golden Ball of Divine Love is tossed to and again betwixt Christ's bosom and his; and in this respect it is a wonder that before this I am not sickned, and overcome with love, and ready to cry out with the Spouse, O stay me with flagons, and comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love. O I am wounded with the arrows of love, so as neither grave, nor death, nor hell; neither Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come can ever lick these wounds, or enbalm, or bind them up. O my Christ, my Lord, my Jesus, What should I do but yield over myself as a Spouse under the power of her husband? what should I do but lose myself in such a deep Ocean of loves, stronger than wine, hotter than coals of Juniper, which hath a most vehement flame?

2. Another motive of our love to Christ, it is our propriety in Christ. Ye are not your own, said the Apostle of us; and he is not his own, may we say of Christ: If any ask how may this be? I answer, That the soul in loving Christ is not her own, and in regard of loving, Christ is not his own; everyone makes over itself to another; and propriety or interest to itself on both sides ceaseth: My Beloved is mine, and I am his, saith the Spouse; not as if Christ should leave off to be his own, or to be a free God, when he becometh ours; no, no; but he so demeans himself in respect of his loves, as if he were not his own; he putteth on such relations, and assumes such offices of engagement, as if he were all for us, and nothing for himself; thus he is called a Savior, a Redeemer, a King, a Priest, a Prophet, a Friend, a Guide, an Head, an Husband, a Leader, Ransomer, Intercessor; and what not of this nature?

O my soul come hither, and put thy little candle to this mighty flame; if thou hadst ten hearts, or as many hearts in one, as there are elected Men and Angels in Heaven and Earth, all these would be too little for Jesus Christ: only go as far as thou canst, and love him with that heart thou hast, yea love him with all thy heart, and all thy soul, and all thy might; and as Christ in loving thee, is not his own, so let thy soul in loving Christ be not her own; Come, love thy Christ, and not thyself; possess thy Christ, and not thyself; enjoy thy Christ, and not thyself; live in thy Christ, not in thyself; solace thyself in Jesus Christ, not in thyself; say with the Apostle, I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.

Certainly, if ever thou comest to love Christ truly, thou canst not but deny thyself, and all created lovers. This love will screw up thy soul, so high above the world, and above thy flesh, and above thyself, and above all other lovers, that nothing on this side Christ, whether in heaven or on earth, will come in competition with him. Suppose a man in the top of a Castle higher than the third Region of the Air, or near the Sphere of the Moon, should look down to the fairest and sweetest Meadows, or to a Garden rich with Roses and Flowers, of all sweet colors and delicious smells; certainly he should not see or feel any sweetness, pleasantness, color, smell, because he is so far above them; so the soul filled with the love of Christ is so high above all created lovers, that their loveliness cannot reach or ascend to the high and large capacity of a spiritual soul. O for a soul filled up with all the fullness of God! O for a soul stretched out to its widest capacity, and circumference for the entertainment of God! O my soul, that thou wert but able to comprehend with all the Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge! Surely if Christ be mine, if his death be mine, his resurrection mine, his ascension mine, his session mine, his intercession mine, How should I but love him with a singular love? farewell world, and worldly glory; if Christ come in room, it is time for you to vanish; I shall little care for a Candle when the Sun shines fair and bright upon my head: What? is my name written on the heart of Christ? doth he wear me as a Favor and Love-token about his arms and neck? is he at every turn presenting me and my duties to his heavenly Father? O thou hast ravished my heart, my King, my Jesus, thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, and with one chain of thy neck.

Suppose, O my soul, thou hadst been with Christ when he washed his Disciples feet, and that he should have come, and have washed thy feet; Would not thy heart have glowed with love to Jesus Christ? why, Christ is now in glory, and now he takes thy filthy soul, and dirty duties, and washes (as it were) the feet of all, that he may present them to his Father; thou canst not shed a tear, but he washes it over again in his precious blood, and perfumes it with his glorious intercessions. Oh what cause hast thou to love Jesus Christ? Oh you that never loved Christ, come, love him now; and you that have loved Christ a little, O love him more: Above all, let me, O my soul, charge upon thee this duty of love; O go away warmed with the love of Christ, and with a love to Christ.

SECT. VII. Of joying in Jesus in that respect.

7. LET us joy in Jesus, as carrying on this work of our salvation in his intercession. Surely this is glad tidings of great joy: when wicked Haman procured letters from King Ahasuerus for the destruction of all Jews, then Esther, the Queen, makes request to the King, that her people might be saved, and Haman's letters revoked; And the King said to her, What wilt thou Queen Esther? and what is thy request, and it shall be given thee? O the joy of Jews at this happy tidings! Then the City of Shushan rejoiced, and was glad; then the Jews had light, and gladness, and joy, and honor; in every province, and in every City, whithersoever the Kings Commandment, and his Decree came, the Jews had joy, and gladness, a feast, and a good day. Is not this our very case? was there not a Law against us, an hand-writing of Ordinances, a sentence of a double death, of body and soul? had not Satan, as wicked Haman, accused us, and sought by all means our condemnation? but yet behold, not only an earthly Esther, but Jesus the Son of God was willing for our sakes to come down from Heaven; and he it was that took away the hand-writing of Ordinances, and cancelled it upon the Cross, that ascended into Heaven, and there makes requests for us, and he it is in whom his Father is well pleased; never comes he to his Father, but he obtains the grace of the golden Scepter; no sooner he cries, I will that these poor souls may be eternally saved; but his Father answers, Amen; Be it so: be it, O my Son, even as thou pleasest. O that we could joy at this! O that we could imitate the Jews! O that light, and gladness, and joy, and honor, would possess our souls! if at Christ's birth was such, and so much joy, because a Savior was proclaimed: Is not our joy to be heightened, when salvation is effected? if the first act of Christ's mediation was so joyous, shall not the last act of his mediation be much more joyous?—But I hear many objections, which keep back joy, they are as bars and hindrances at the doors of many heavy hearts, that joy cannot enter in; I shall instance in some.

O I am much opposed here in this world (says one) men are as wolves, and devils; Dogs have compassed me, the assembly of the wicked have enclosed me; they have no bowels; they persecute, reproach, revile, so that I am killed all the day long — And what then? what matters oppositions of men, so long as Christ doth intercede for thee in Heaven? O remember Christ's bowels; it may be he suffers men to be merciless on earth, that thou mayst look up, and behold how merciful he is who sits above; and tell me, hast thou no experience of this truth? doth not relief strangely come in now and than? why, write upon the forehead of such favors, I have a merciful, and compassionate Mediator in heaven.

O I am much tempted (says another) that I cannot pray; had I now the key of prayer, I could then unlock the cabinet where all God's treasures lie, and take out what I pleased; but alas, my prayers are dull, and weak, and dry, and without spirit and life, I cannot pray.—If so, be humbled for it; and yet know this, that when thou canst not pray, Christ then prays for thee, and he prays that thou mayst pray: And tell me, hast thou no experience of this truth? hath not sometimes thy spirit been enlarged in prayer? hast thou not sometimes felt thy heart warmed, or savingly affected? hast thou not sometimes in prayer been lifted up above thyself, and above the world? conclude then, My Intercessor above hath sent me this gift and Spirit; it is not I, but Christ's Intercession that by an admirable and secret operation hath given me the Spirit to help my infirmity; these are the intercessions of the Spirit of Christ, and they are the very Echo of the intercessions of Christ in his own person.

O but I labor under such, and such corruptions (says another) and the Devil is busy, exceeding busy, and he exceedingly prevails; how am I overcome with these corruptions, and with these and these sins? It may be so, and yet do not altogether despond; for Jesus Christ is at God's right hand, and there he sits till all his enemies be made his footstool; and what? are not thy sins his enemies? O be of good comfort, for Christ will prevail; it is one piece of his prayer that he puts up for thee, To keep thee from evil; and surely he will either keep thee from it, or keep thee in it, that in the issue thou shalt have the victory. Those that thou gavest me I have kept (saith Christ) and none of them is lost; if he undertake for thee, thou art safe and sure; His Covenant is everlasting, even the sure mercies of David: and therefore if yet thou dost not, certainly thou shalt feel the virtue of Christ's intercession; sin must be subdued, hell-gates shall not prevail against thee, he will not quench thy sparks until he bring forth judgment unto victory.

Oh but I am in a suffering condition (says another) and there is none that regards, or takes pity on me; all my friends have dealt treacherously with me, among all my Lovers there is none to comfort me: they have heard, that I sigh, and there is none to refresh me; I stand for Christ, but there is none stands by me; I own him, but there is none owns me. Bleeding Christian, bear up! is not Christ's intercession a sufficient answer to this case? alas thou wouldst be pitied for all thy weaknesses; why, know that compassion is natural to Jesus Christ: he is a merciful high Priest, and can be no other to thee; God ordained him to officiate in such a Tabernacle as wherein thou dwellest, he was in all things like unto thee, sin only excepted; it may be thou art in want, and so was Christ, he had no house; thou art persecuted, and so was Christ; sin loads thee, and so it did Christ. A Christians condition needs compassion, and Christ knows how much, and it is his work continually to lay it open above; O my Father, thus, and thus it is with the Militant Church, not a Member in it, but he is under sin and affliction; see here the tears, hearken to the sighs, and groans, and chatterings, and mournings of my Doves below; I present here their persons and performances; and oh that they may find acceptance through my merit! Some speak of Heavens Music, some tell us of Saints and Angels singing and warbling in lively notes the praises of Christ in Heaven; and if any such thing be, certainly, it is ear-tickling, heart-ravishing music; O the melody, O the joy of Saints to hear such heavenly airs with heavenly ears! but be it as it will be, of this I am confident, that Heaven itself yields no such music as is the intercession of Jesus Christ; this (if anything in Heaven do it) makes melody in the ears of God, and of all celestial Spirits, Saints or Angels: And (O my soul) suppose thyself within the compass, if now thou couldst but hear what thy Jesus is saying in thy behalf: Is not this a brand newly plucked out of the fire? was not this poor soul but the other day in a state of nature, defiled with sin, within a step of hell? and did not I send my Spirit to recall him? was not this precious blood shed for the redemption of him? and what though sin stick and cleave to him to this day, yet have I not given thee charge to take away his filthy garments from him, and to clothe him with changes of raiment, even with the shining robes of mine own righteousness? O my Father, let this soul live in thy sight! O cast him not away for whom I have suffered, and done all this, I cannot rest satisfied without his society, I am not right till he is with me in glory; he is my darling, my purchase, my portion, my delight, and therefore let him be saved. Is not this enough to cause thy very heart to leap in thy bosom? Bonaventure fondly reports, that Francis hearing an Angel a little while playing on an Harp, he was so moved with extraordinary delight, that he thought himself in another world. O but suppose thou shouldst hear the voice of Jesus thy Intercessor thus pleading for thee, wouldst thou not be cast into an ecstasy? would not this fill thee with joys unspeakable, and full of glory?—Come, realize this meditation? certainly if thou art Christ's, he is thus, or in some other manner interceding for thee; as sure as Christ is in Heaven, he is pleading with his Father in Heaven on thy behalf: O the joys, the joys, the joys that I should now feel!—Tell me, is it not a comfort, for a poor beggar to be relieved at a rich man's door? we are all beggars in regard of Heaven, and Jesus Christ doth not only come forth and serve us; but he takes us poor beggars by the hand, and leads us in to his heavenly Father: Oh what comfort is here!

SECT. VIII. Of praying to, and praising of Jesus in that respect.

8. Let us pray, and praise our Jesus in this respect.

1. Let us pray or sue our interest in this intercession: it is a question amongst the Schools, whether we may conveniently pray to Jesus, to pray to his Father in our behalf? And thus far is granted, that we may pray to Christ to make us partakers of his intercessions, and to mingle our prayers with his prayers, that they may find acceptance with God his Father. But that we may use such a form, as ora pro nobis, O Christ pray for us, it is looked upon as inconvenient in this respect. 1. Because cause we have no such custom, neither the Churches of God. 2. Because it favors too much of the error of Arius, Nestorius, and indeed of the Romanists themselves. 3. Because our prayers are most-what directed to Christ in his person or divine subsistence, whose part is rather to give, than to ask; or if they are directed to Christ as Mediator, and not simply as the only begotten Son of God, then I see no incongruity (though in the former respect some inconvenience) but that we may pray to Christ to intercede for us; for so he is God and man; and he is considered according to both Natures; only the difference of both Natures is still to be kept and maintained; intercession is the office of the whole person of Christ, and of the two natures of Christ. But he performs this office one way according to his Divine nature, and another way according to his human nature. I list not to quarrel about niceties; it is thus agreed on all hands, and that is enough to our purpose, that we may call on Jesus, or on God the Father in and through Jesus, that Christ's intercessions may be ours, and that he would make it out to us in a way of assurance every day more and more.

2. Let us praise; let us bless God, and bless Christ for every transaction in Heaven for us. It is a wonder to observe what songs of praise were chanted to Christ in Heaven for that one transaction of opening the Book, and loosing the seven Seals thereof: first, The four beasts, and then the four and twenty Elders fell down before the Lamb, having everyone of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the Saints, and they sung a new song; saying, thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood.—And then the Angels round about the Throne, whose number was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands, came on, saying, worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing.— And then every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, came on, saying, blessing, and honor, and glory, and power be unto him that sitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever; and the four beasts, and four and twenty Elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth forever and ever. I cannot tell what other transactions may be in Heaven, we have but hints of them here, nor shall we fully or particularly know them till we come to Heaven; but for this one transaction of Christ's intercession, we cannot imagine less praise to be given to Christ than for any other; O then let us do this duty on earth, as it is done in Heaven! what, is Christ praying for us? O let us be on the exercise of praising him; is Christ interceding for us? let us give him the glory of his intercession; Heaven is full of his praises, O why should not earth ring with the sound thereof? Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, praise his holy Name.

SECT. IX. Of conforming to Jesus in that respect.

9. Let us conform to Jesus in respect of his intercession. I cannot think but in every action of Christ there is something imitable of us. And as to the present work, I shall instance only in these few particulars. As—

1. Christ appears in Heaven for us; let us appear on earth for him. Is there not equity, as well as conformity in this duty? O my soul, consider what thy Christ is doing, consider wherein the intercession of Jesus Christ consists! is not this the first part of it? why, he appears in Heaven before Saints and Angels, and before God his Father in thy behalf; and art thou afraid to appear before worms, mortals, dust and ashes in his cause, or for his truth? shall Jesus Christ own thee in Heaven? and wilt thou not own Jesus Christ here in this world? shall Jesus Christ, as thy great high Priest, take thy very name, carry it upon his breast into the presence of God? and wilt not thou take the Name of Christ, and hold it forth in profession and practice to all men? Oh what a mighty engagement is here to stand to Christ, and to appear for Christ, and to own his cause in these backsliding-times; in that Christ, who sits at the right hand of God, is willing and ready to appear in person for us, both as a Mediator, and Sponsor, and Solicitor, and Advocate, and Leiger Ambassador?

2. Christ spends all his time for us and our salvation, let us spend all our time for him, and in his service; the Apostle tells us, that He ever lives to make intercession for us; it is not for a day, or a month, or a year, but he lives forever upon this account; forever (i.e.) during all the time from his Ascension until the end of the world; he is still interceding; he spends of all that time for us, and shall we think it too much time to spend a few days that we have here to live upon the earth for him? one thinks this the greatest Argument in the world to make us to walk closely with God in Christ; He spends of his eternity for us, and shall not we spend of our whole time for him? surely people do not think what Christ is doing in Heaven for them; if you who are Saints would but seriously consider, that Christ this Sabbath, this day of rest, is at his work, that without any weariness or intermission from morning till evening, and from evening till morning he is ever, ever interceding; how would this engage you in his service? Ah Christians! if you should continue praying, praising, reading, hearing all this day without any intermission or breaking off. Oh what weariness! O how would you say, When will the day be done, when will the Sabbath be at an end? Well, but Christ is not weary of serving you; this Sabbath, and the last Sabbath, and the other Sabbath, and every Sabbath, when you had done your duties, he took your persons, and duties, and presented all unto his Father; he prayed over your prayers, and continued praying, and saying, Lord accept of a short, poor, lean, imperfect service done on earth for my sake, and for those merits sake, which I am continually presenting to thee here in heaven. Oh why do we not come up to this conformity? Oh why are we so uncomformable to the actings of Christ? he is preparing Mansions for us in Heaven, and are we digging in this world? he is making mention of our names to God, and are we sinning against him and God? his blood cries, O that these souls may be saved; and shall our sins cry, It is just that these souls should be damned? O mind the exemplar! Christ spends all his time for you, do you spend all your time for him: we cannot but judge this to be most equal, that they who live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him whoever lives to make intercession for them.

3. He prays for us, and for all believers, to his Father; let us pray for ourselves, and for all our brethren, and for all sorts of men, though they be our enemies, for we were no better to •esus Christ: Learn of me (saith Christ) and so far as he is imitable let us follow him; doth Christ pray? let us pray; doth he pray for us and others? let us pray for ourselves, and then let us pray one for another, I exhort therefore (saith the Apostle) that first of all supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men. And come, lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left, said the King to Isaiah; and Wrestle together in prayer for me, said Paul; and Give the Lord no rest till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth, said the Prophet: Christ intercedes, and there is no question but we should intercede for the living Saints. Brethren pray for us, said the Apostle; whosoever thou art that readest, I beseech thee remember me in thy prayers, it may be thou art nearer God, and more in favor with God than such a poor sinner as I am; as Mordecai set Ester on work to intercede for him with the King, and for his people; so 'tis our duty to crave the prayers of such who are upon better terms (possibly) with the Lord, than we ourselves are at the present; Only I could wish thy prayers at such a time, when thy heart is got nearest to God, by special stirrings of faith and love; I suppose thou canst not have a spirit, and power of prayer, but sometimes or other thou art (as it were) in the lap of Christ, upon the Spouses knee, in the Beloveds bosom; O then make a request for an unworthy one; O then, if ever, intercede for me, because then I read Christ's own intercession in thy intercession; what is thy prayer

then but as the echo of Christ's prayer, the Amen to Christ's intercessions; which he makes in heaven? Christians! 'tis our duty to put one another upon praying one for another, Christ intercedes for us, and so should we intercede for his, called, or uncalled, if so they belong to the election of grace.

4. Christ takes our prayers, and mingles them with his own prayers, intercessions, incense, and so presents all as one work mingled together unto God the Father; O let this be our care to put up all our prayers to God in the Name of Christ, and to stay ourselves upon the intercessions of Christ; when all is done, let us beg the acceptance of our prayers, not for our sakes, nor for our prayers sake; but for his sake, who perfumes our prayers, by interweaving them with his prayers. Many a poor soul is many time afraid to pray to God for want of the due consideration of this conformity; such a one goes to prayer, and he looks upon it as it lies upon his own heart, or as it comes from himself, and then he cries, Oh what a poor, weak, sinful, imperfect, impenitent prayer is this? well, but if this weak prayer of thine be once mingled with the glorious and heavenly prayer of Jesus Christ, the weakness will soon vanish, and thy prayer will find acceptance with God the Father; it is with your prayers and duties as it is with your fire; your kitchen-fire is troubled with abundance of smoke, but if ever it could ascend into the element of fire above, it would smoke no more; so your prayer while it lies upon your own hearth, there's a great deal of smoke in it, but if ever it get up into the hands of Jesus Christ, there it is in its own element, and so it is freed from all its smoke, and so the weakness of it is done away. O conform to Christ in this point; he will not present thy prayers to God, but he will first mingle it with his own prayers; no more shouldst thou present a prayer to God but in Christ's Name, considering that all thy prayers find acceptance in, for, and through the intercession of Jesus Christ. If it were not for this, I profess I knew not how to answer the cavils of our dissolute adversaries, who throw down prayers, as of no use at all; for us they object—

Thou canst not pray (say they) by thy own confession without some defect, imperfection, sin: and if so, there is need of a new prayer, to beg pardon for the defects of that prayer; and then another prayer to heal the flaws of that prayer; and then another to do as much for that; and so in infinitum; by this means there would be an infinite progression without any stop at any prayer to all.

I answer, This Objection were valid if there were no intercession of Christ to stay ourselves, and our prayers on: but as we grant requests many times for some friends sake, rather than for the parties sake; so God doth always grant requests for Christ's sake, never for our own sakes: Thou objectest there are many defects in our prayers as made by us: but I answer, there is no defects in the merits and intercession of Jesus Christ, for whose sake alone they are granted of God; and therefore our prayers being made in Christ's Name, they may stay their heads in Christ's bosom; in this respect we need not still to run ourselves in a Circle, this being the last resolution, Christ's merits, and Christ's intercession. Christ offers up our persons and wooden prayers in his golden Censer to his Father; Christ's intercession therefore is that which doth the deed. Now to say our prayers are of no use, it is all one as to say his intercession is of no use; not that we are so good, that he cannot take exception against us, and our prayers; but because Christ is so good, and his intercession for us is so good, that he neither can, nor will take exception against him, or his intercession for us; and in this case Christ and Christians make one person (as it were) in law; his intercession for us; and our intercessions for ourselves, are but one intercession: and indeed he so mingles them that they seem but one, for the smoke of the incense, and the prayers of the Saints ascend up together before God out of the Angels hand, Rev. 8.4.

5. Christ pleads the cause of his people, and answers all the accusations of Satan against them; Oh let us plead for them for whom Christ pleads, and answer the accusations of Satan's, or his instruments against their persons, or their ways. We have a strange generation of men abroad, whose very Religion consists in railing, reviling, reproaching the Servants of the living God; not the best men, nor the best Ministers under Heaven escape them; Are they not all, say they, Wolves, Dogs, Hirelings, Priests of Baal, Covetous, Carnal, Damned; and what not? Are they not all, say they (as the Devil said of Joshua) clothed with filthy garments? defiled totally, utterly defiled with the pollutions of Babylon? Christian! when you hear this language, learn you to conform to Christ; go you first to God with the Lord's own plea, Now the Lord rebuke thee O Satan, even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem, rebuke thee: Zach. 3.2. And then go on in vindication of their persons and their cause; are they not precious, gracious, holy able, shining, and burning lights? it may be some of their persons have been faulty; but say of such, Is not this a brand newly plucked out of the fire? failings, and human frailties have been in the best, yea in most of the Prophets and Apostles; but shall we therefore condemn to hell the generation of God's dear Children? or howsoever it may be with their persons, yet is not their cause and office of Christ's own institution? in this respect he that despiseth you, despiseth me, saith Christ, and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me, Luke 10.16. Are not the Ministers of Christ as stars in the right hand of Christ? they that would do them any deadly harm, must pluck them thence. Christians! conform you to Christ in this point; you see how Satan stands at the right hand of our Joshua's to resist them, now then plead you their cause, and answer the Adversaries accusations.

6. Christ by his intercession saves us to the uttermost, Heb. 7.25. O let us serve him to the uttermost; surely all we can do is too little to answer so great a love as this. Oh Christians! why should it be esteemed a needless thing to be most rigorously conscionable, and exactly circumspect? Christ paid our debt to the uttermost farthing, drunk every drop of our bitter cup, and now presents all unto his Father by way of intercession, and saves us, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , thoroughly, to the uttermost; why should not we labor to perform his service, and to fulfil everyone of his commandments, thoroughly and to the uttermost also? certainly there is a duty which concerns us Christians, as to be hot in Religion, Rev. 3.16. to be zealous of good works, Tit. 2.14. to walk circumspectly, or precisely, as the word carries it, Eph. 5.15. to be fervent in spirit, Rom. 12.11. to strive to enter in at the strait gate, Luke 13.24. to contend for the faith, Jude 3. with an holy kind of violence to lay hold upon the Kingdom of heaven, Mat. 11.12. Oh what ever men should be afraid of taking God's part too much, or fighting too valiantly under the Colours of Christ, of being too busy about the salvation of their own souls, of being singular (as they call it) in the duties of Religion; I observe men are content to be singular in anything, save in the service of God; you desire and labor to be singularly rich, and singularly wise, and singularly valorous, and singularly proud; but you can by no means endure singularity or eminency in zeal, and the Lord's service; in matters of Religion you are resolved to do as the most do, though in so doing you damn your own souls, Mat. 7.13. O come and learn this lesson of Christ, he saves us to the uttermost, and let us serve him to the uttermost; with all our hearts, and with all our souls, and with all our might.

Thus far we have looked on Jesus in his intercession, our next work is our last work, which is to look on Jesus as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his coming again, the very end of time to all eternity; he hath no more now to do, but to judge the Saints, and to lead them into glory, and to deliver up his Kingdom to his Father, and so to live with his redeemed ones forever, and ever, and ever.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS In his Second Coming. Book X. Part VII.

CHAP. I.

Job 19.25, 27. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another.

SECT. I. Of Christ's preparing for Judgment.

AND is not yet all done? O the unwearied patience, love, mercy, free grace of Christ in carrying on this mighty work! he begun it before the beginning of the world; since then he hath been laboring in it about six thousand years; and now the time of restoring being come, he will perfect what he hath begun, and bring on the other end of the Golden chain; Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified. In this piece also as in the former we shall first lay down the object, and then give directions how to look upon it.

The Object is Jesus, carrying on the great work of our salvation in his coming again to earth, and taking up with him all his Saints into Heaven. In this work I shall set before you these particulars:

- 1. Christ's preparing for judgment.
- 2. Christ's coming to judgment.
- 3. Christ's summons of the Elect to come under judgment.
- 4. Christ and the Saints meeting at the judgment day.
- 5. Christ's sentencing or judging the Saints for eternal glory.
- 6. Christ and the Saints judging the rest of the world.
- 7. Christ and his Saints going up into Heaven; when shall be the end of this world.
- 8. Christ surrendering and delivering up the Kingdom to God even the Father.

- 9. Christ's subjection to the Father, that God may be all in all.
- 10. Christ (notwithstanding this) being all in all to his blessed, saved, redeemed Saints to all eternity.

1. For his preparing for judgment. When once the number of all his Elect shall be completed, and the work of his intercession shall be at an end, then immediately will follow these particulars. As—

1. A great voice comes out of the Temple of Heaven, saying, it is done. It comes out of the Temple of Heaven, that we may understand it to be the voice of Christ. And if this speech be directed unto God, it is as if Christ had bespoke his Father thus. And now, O my Father, I have done; that office of the Priest-hood which by agreement we erected, is now at an end: here I have sate at thy right hand interceding for my Saints ever since my ascension; and of all that thou hast given me by thine eternal election I have not lost a Saint; in their several ages I produced them and gave them a being, and in their times I remembered them, and presented their conditions and necessities before thee; and now I have not a Saint more; in the Book of life there is not another name written to be born on earth; and to what purpose should I now continue the world? the Saints are they for whom I made the world, the Saints are they that hold forth the light of my glory in the world, the Saints are they for whom my eternal counsels before the world did work, the Saints are they for whom I was content to shed my precious blood when I was in that world below; and now their number is completed, I am resolved to unpin the fabric of the world, and take it down; it stands but for their sakes, and therefore now let the seventh Angel blow his trumpet, that the mystery of God may be finished. I swear by him that lives forever, that time shall be no longer.

2. No sooner this said, but the seventh Angel sounds. This seventh Angel (saith Pareus) is the Arch-angel that proclaims Christ's coming, with a great and mighty shout; For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Arch-angel, and with the trump of God. The Lord shall descend with a shout; but before he descend, and I believe upon the very discovery of his coming down, there will be a shout in Heaven; for so it follows, And the seventh Angel sounded, and there were great voices in Heaven; if we may believe Commentaries, these are the voices of blessed souls, and blessed souls, and blessed Angels in heaven; no sooner Christ bids the Angel sound] q. d. summon those blessed souls that were slain for the Word of God, and therefore cried, How long Lord, holy and true? summon those blessed souls that have cried so long, Come Lord Jesus, come quickly; summon all souls, and summon all Angels, and bid them wait on me, now I resolve to go down, and to judge the world:) no sooner I say Christ bids the Angel sound, but presently at the joy of this command, all the voices in Heaven give up a shout; why, this is the long-looked for day, the day of perfecting the number of the Saints; the day of joining the souls and bodies of the Saints together; the day of convening all the families both of Saints and Angels under one roof; the day of bringing up the Bride unto the Lamb, and of completing the Marriage in its highest solemnity: and therefore no wonder if at this news great voices and cries (such as are used by Mariners, or gatherers of the vintage) were made in Heaven. O what an addition of joy is this to Heavens joy itself! the spirits of the just, and the blessed Angels that have lived together in heavens bliss, had never such an adventitious joy as this before; now they shout and sing a new and blessed Song, The kingdoms of this world, are become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever. We may call this Heavens triumph for the finishing of God's mystery. Now is it that Christ will vindicate his Kingdom, and overthrow the power of his enemies; they had long set themselves against the Lord, and against his anointed; the Kings of the earth, and the Rulers confederated; they ruled all, and as much as in them lay, excluded Christ; but now the Kingdoms of the world will return to Christ, and he alone shall rule; and thence the winged Choristers of Heaven chant forth this Anthem, The Kingdoms of the world are become the Kingdoms of Christ.

3. After this shout, The four and twenty Elders which sit before God on their seats, fall upon their faces, and worship God, saying, we give thee thanks O Lord God Almighty, who art, and wast, and are to come, because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast anointed; and the nations were angry, &c. By these four and twenty Elders we understand all God's Saints of the Old and New Testament, comprehended under the two Patriarchs, and twelve Apostles; others would have them to be only those Saints of the Old Testament, and therefore called Elders; whosoever they are, we find they are so glad at this news, that Christ will now judge the world, that presently they rise off their seats, and fall on their faces; and first they praise, and then they pray: 1. They praise God for taking to himself his own power; Christ connived (as it were) till now at the power of his enemies; Antichrist, and not Christ seemed to rule, and to sit in the Temple of God; but now Christ is resolved to rule himself, and to make all his enemies his footstool: and therefore now We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, 2. They pray Christ to go on to judgment. 1. Because the nations were angry, q. d. they have been angry long enough, they have set themselves against Christ and against his Church, and therefore now it is time to bridle their wrath, and to break them with a rod of Iron, O let thy wrath come. 2. Because the time of judgment is now accomplished which God had decreed in his eternal counsel, and which the Father had put in his own power; This time was not for mortals to know, but now 'twas revealed to these celestial spirits by Christ, and therefore they beg, Go on Lord Jesus; reward now thy Servants, Prophets, Saints; and destroy them which destroyed the earth.

4. God the Father is well pleased with Christ's purpose of judging the world. The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. I know these words were spoke to Christ at his ascension into Heaven, yet that hinders not but that now God speaks them again to Christ; for as yet (saith the Apostle) we see not all things put under him; and God's purpose was that Christ should rule, until he had put all things in subjection under his feet. Nay, why not these words spoken now rather than before? Christ indeed reigned as King ever since his Ascension, but now more especially he is to manifest his Kingdom, for now is he to judge among the heathen, now is he to wound the heads of many countries, now is he to overthrow Pope, Turk, and all his enemies, and he alone with the Father and the Spirit is to reign in his Elect Saints and Angels. Thus all agree, that Christ in the latter days shall be fully honored in his Kingly power; hitherto Christ hath been much honored in his Prophetical and Priestly office, but not so much in his Kingly; but now he must be fully honored in his Kingly office; now especially The Kingdoms of this world must become the Kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ; and so he shall reign forever and ever. Certainly there is a difference betwixt Christ's reign before, and his present reign at the day of judgment, Christ hath a double Throne wherein he sits and reigns, To him that overcomes will I give to sit with me in my throne, as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. That Kingly rule that Christ hath from his ascension is upon his Fathers Throne, but the Kingdom that Christ shall have at the day of judgment and ever after, it is the joint reign of him with the Father, he shall have a Throne himself, and the Saints shall sit with him in his own Throne: And now saith the Father, Sit thou at my right hand, q. d. sit on thy own Throne by me; go on to judge the Nations; I will not judge them, but only in thee, and by thee; Lo I have committed all judgment unto the Son, and do thou judge them, until thou hast rewarded thy friends, and made thine enemies thy footstool. Mark, He hath committed all judgment unto the Son; the Father gives the Son a Commission; wherein is written (as it were) these words, My Son, now is the time or season which I had put in my own power; and my pleasure is, that all the world shall be set on fire: these heavens under thee shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up; and I will have new heavens, and a new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness; go too then, put on thy robes, appear in thy glory; empty thi• heaven of all those glorious spirits that are therein, and let them wait on thee to thy judgment seat; go, pass thy doom upon all flesh, and send reprobates to hell, and bring up hither all thy Saints, that they may live with thee, and here behold thy glory forever and ever. Lo here is thy commission; be gone, and return no more hither until it be accomplished.

Christians, I cannot but wonder at this joy and exultation in Heaven, and that we have so little or none of this on earth; we say with cold lips, and frozen hearts, Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven; but if our prayers were real and fervent, if we could but imitate those heavenly Citizens, what longings would be in our hearts after Christ's coming? how should we rejoice at the very thoughts hereof? Christ comforting his Disciples in respect hereof, he speaks these words, When these things begin to come to pass, then look up (said he) and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. The fullness of our redemption is a ground of consolation; all the spirits above are sensible of this; God, and Christ, and the Angels, and Saints rejoice, and again rejoice. The Spirit and the Bride say, come; and Christ himself saith, Surely I come quickly; O let us say Amen to it; Even so come Lord Jesus.

SECT. II. Of Christ coming to judgment.

2. FOr Christ's coming to judgment; no sooner Christ prepared, and all in readiness, but down he descends from his Imperial throne to the Judgment-seat. In this passage I shall observe these particulars.

1. He descends with his Train: He comes with his Royal Attendants out of Heaven. This is the glory of a Prince, that hath so many Nobles waiting on him; and this is the glory of Jesus Christ, that when he comes to judge the world, he shall have his Saints and Angels (the glory of the creation) to be his Attendants in that work. Behold the Lord comes with mighty Angels. Behold the Lord comes with ten thousands of his Saints, to execute judgment upon all. Certainly a numberless number shall wait upon him: Daniel tells us of a thousand thousand that this day Minister unto Christ, A thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: or if Heaven have more, I believe Heaven will empty itself of all the Saints, and all the Angels; not one Spirit, whether Saint or Angel shall stay behind when Christ descends: The Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy Angels with him. Oh what a glorious day will this be! if one Sun make the morning Sky so glorious, what a bright, shining, and glorious morning will that be, when so many thousands of Suns shall shine over all our heads, the glorious Body of our Christ surpassing them all in splendor and glory? here's a new Heaven of Sun and Stars, such as this nether-world never saw, Lo yond the Sun of righteousness with all his Morning-stars, singing and shouting for joy: Heaven now empties itself of all its created Citizens, and cleaves asunder to make way for Christ, and all his Train.

2. In his descent through the Heavens, he shakes the Heavens. And the powers of the heaven shall be shaken. The whole frame of Heaven, most strong and immutable in its being and motion; or the mighty bodies thereof, most mighty in their substance, lastingness, motion and operation shall be shaken. I know by the powers of heaven some mean the Angels, who at this wonderful descent of Christ shall admire and move; but I rather think the Heavens themselves are meant hereby, whose very nature shall be moved, and shaken at that day: At his nod the pillars of heaven tremble, and are astonished. As yet they are Subject to vanity and therefore 'tis no wonder if at the coming of Christ they tremble and are moved. In this moving or shaking the Evangelists adds, that the glorious lights of Heaven shall be altered, The Sun shall be darkened, and the Moon shall not give her light, and the Stars shall fall: Many interpretations are given of this: I am not for Allegories, but rather conceive these things are real; the very coming of Christ shall bring with him such a light, that the splendor of the Sun and Moon shall be obscured: this is most certain, saith Aretius, that both Sun and Moon shall really be darkened at that day; it is the glory of his Majesty that will dazzle those Candles.

3. As he passes through the Elementary world, a fire doth usher him. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. Whence this fire should come, I shall not dispute, only one tells us with some confidence, that 'tis begotten in the middle Region of the Air by Divine command; and that first it goes before him, ushering the Judge to the Judgment-seat, and that there it stays during the judgment; and that ended, and the doom passed on all flesh, then it sets on fire all the world. Let this pass as it may, Scripture goes thus far, that a fire goeth before him.— Behold the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind.—And the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty Angels in flaming fire. In which respect Daniel saw his throne like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire; a fiery stream issued, and came forth from before him: and at last this fire shall have that effect, that the very Elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. O Christians! what cause have we to make the Apostles use on this point, Seeing all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness? looking for, and hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the Elements shall melt with fervent heat?

4. He descends lower and lower till he is inwrapt with clouds. Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. When he went up into Heaven it is said, that a cloud received him out of their sight; and the Angels then said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. He went up in clouds and he shall come down in clouds. I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven. Here is the first sight of Christ to men on the earth, when once he is come down into the clouds, then shall they lift up their eyes, and have a full view of Jesus Christ; a cloud first received him out of their sight; and a cloud now discovers him to their sight; Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory: is it not plain that the first appearings, and sight of Christ at his second coming from Heaven, is in the midst of clouds? Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him. Some controversy there is about these clouds, as whether they be Angels? when the Psalmist speaks of all sorts of Meteors, as of Waters, Clouds, Winds, Flames, some say, all these are Angels; and of the Angels he saith, who maketh his Angels spirits, and his Ministers a flame of fire. For my part I take it in the literal sense, that upon the very backs of clouds Christ shall come riding along at the general day; and howsoever this may seem a small matter unto us, yet I cannot look on any circumstance of this transaction as small and trifling! the very clouds on which Christ rides, speaks terror, and comfort.

1. Oh what a terror is this to the wicked? They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds, and then shall all the Tribes of the earth mourn. These Tribes of the Earth are the Tribes of the wicked; no sooner shall they look up, and see Christ in his clouds, but with unconceivable horror will they cry it out, O yonder is he whose blood we neglected, whose grace we resisted, whose counsels we refused, whose government we cast off. O yonder is he that comes now in clouds, in tempestuous clouds; O see how he storms! do not those very clouds in which he rides speak or threaten a storm? In the eighteenth Psalm is a description of Christ's coming to judgment. But O how terrible! in the seventh verse, we find the earth trembling; in the eighth verse, a fire devouring; in the ninth verse, the heavens bowing downwards▪ in the 12, 13, 14, 15. verses, are thick clouds darkening the sky, thunders, lightnings, hailestones flying through the air, the foundations of the world discovered; thus the Mighty God, our Jesus descends. Oh how should the wicked but tremble at this, when but a consideration of this hath sometimes startled God's own people? behold Habakkuk with quivering lips, trembling joints, bones mouldering into dust, when he had only a Prophetick representation of Christ's second appearance! all the dreadful things that attended the presence of God in Egypt, at the red Sea on Mount Sinai, through the Wilderness, are made but types, but shadows of the terrible march of the Captain of the Lord of Hosts; and therefore shall the wicked mourn.

2. Here is the patience, and faith, and joy of Saints. And all the kindreds of the earth shall mourn over him; even so, Amen. This I cannot but understand of the wicked; only some tell us of a double mourning on that day, the one of joy and love, and the other of sorrow and despair; I shall not deny but there may be some sweet tears upon this sweet Subject, Christ's apparition in the clouds: Such a shine will be from Christ in the cloud, that the very shine will pierce the hearts of men with the golden-headed arrow of love, and how may this work tears? from this Text of John, Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail, &c. Some Divines gather, that Christ at that day, will show in his glorified body the wounds of his crucifying, as an infallible trophy of his victory over all his enemies; and hence the wicked who pierced, or crucified the Lord of glory, by their sins, will weep and wail. I can think no less, but that Christ at that day will open his bosom, and show those wounds of love, which he had in his heart from all eternity, together with those wounds which he received on the Cross, as they are glorified in his eternal love: and then as at the discovery of Joseph, he and his brethren fell upon the necks of earth other and wept; so will this discovery in the appearances of Christ bring a sweet confusion upon the Spirits of Saints; then shall a Saint fall at the feet of his Savior, and weeping say, O my Jesus! thou art my Father, Brother, Husband, Self; while there were other things, I loved other things besides thyself, but alas! they are everlastingly gone, and have left me alone, yet now thou ownest me; O my Jesus thou breakest my heart: oh I cannot but weep out tears of love, and tears of joy at this appearing; O welcome, welcome, sweet Jesus into these clouds! oh welcome, welcome, sweet Jesus into this nether world.

In these Clouds I must leave our Savior for a while, and the rather, because I believe he will descend no lower: only before I pass, one word of Use to all his Saints.

You see him still upon his old design; though the world now end, yet hitherto there is no end of his great transaction; his first coming and his second coming is to save your souls; his first coming was to purchase, his second to give you the possession of Salvation. What, are you not glad of this Gospel-news, that Christ will come at last from this Empyrean Throne to his judgment-seat, to give you the possession of salvation? is not the promise of his coming comfortable? is it not comfortable to believe in him, and to hope for him? why, muse then, what comfort will it be to see his person with all his glorious train coming for you? The Mighty God, the Lord hath spoken, and called the Earth, from the rising of the Sun, to the going down thereof; out of Zion the perfection of beauty hath God shined; our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him; he shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth that he might judge his people. It is indeed a most terrible day unto the wicked, but oh how sweet, and pleasant, and comfortable to his Saints? Christians! do we not long to have Christ's Spirit come into our souls with life? do we not droop while Christ is absent from our souls? are not the feet of them beautiful that bring glad tidings of peace, and of salvation by Jesus Christ? Oh then what will it be to see the King, not in his Ambassadors, but in his own person coming for us to fetch us into Heaven? if we have but a dear friend returned from some far Country, how do all run out to meet him with joy? Oh saith the child, my father is come; saith the wife, my husband is come; and shall not we, when we see our Father, our Husband, our Head, our Savior returning with great glory, and glorious Majesty, cry out, he is come, he is come? shall not we at the first view of him in his clouds, cry out, O yonder is he whose blood redeemed us, whose Spirit cleansed us, whose prayers prevailed for us, whose Law did govern us? yonder comes he in whom we trusted, and now we see he hath not deceived our trust, yonder is he for whom we waited long, and now we see we have not waited in vain.

I verily believe thus it will be with us one day; we shall have comfort then, oh let us comfort ourselves with these words; and ever and anon cry, Come Lord Jesu, come quickly! make hast my beloved, and be thou like to a Roe, or to a young Hart upon the Mountain of spices.

SECT. III. Of Christ's summoning of the Elect to come under judgment.

3. FOR Christ's summons of the Elect to come under judgment: no sooner is he in the clouds, his Throne of judicature, but there he stands, and thence he sends his holy Angels with a great sound of a Trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of the heaven to another. Christ's summons are effectual, if he will have the elect to meet him, they must come; to this purpose he sends his Angels, and they return with his Saints back again to the judgment-seat. In the carrying on of this affair, we shall discuss these particulars. 1. His mission of the Angels. 2. The manner of the mission. 3. The resurrection of the world. 4. The collection of the Saints; wherein, 1. whence, 2. whither they are gathered.

1. For Christ's mission of his Angels; he shall send his Angels. This was their office from their first creation; they were still sent of God this way, and that way; and indeed herein is one difference betwixt Christ and the Angels, he was to sit on God's right hand, but they were sent abroad to Minister to the Saints and people of God; To which of the Angels said he at any time, sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool? are they not all Ministring Spirits, sent forth to Minister for them, who shall be heirs of salvation? Now according to their office, Christ puts them upon employment at this day. q. d. O my Angels! you that wait upon me, that excel in strength, that do my commandments, and hearken to the voice of my Word: go your ways now into all the four winds of the World, gather all my Saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice; search into all the dusts of the earth, and leave not behind one dust that belongs unto any Saint; search into the bottom of the Sea; see what becomes of those drowned bodies of my dear ones; if either worms have eaten those in graves, or fishes have devoured them in the deep, why now restore them; am not I as able to recover them, as I was to create them? is it not as easy for me to raise the dead, as to make Heaven and Earth, and all of nothing? go then and gather together all those dusts and let every dust be brought home to its own proper body, and compact those dusts as soft as they are into solid bones; and prophesy upon those bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord; thus saith the Lord, behold I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live, and I will lay sinews upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live, and ye shall know that I am the Lord; why this is my will and pleasure, and therefore be gone, O my Angels, do your office, what? have not I commanded you?

2. The Mission, or commission, or dismissal given, the Angels, swift messengers of his will fall on the execution; and to that purpose immediately they sound the Trumpet; so it follows, And he shall send his Angels with a great sound of a Trumpet. Here is the manner of their mission; they go, and as they go they give a shout; what this shout is, or how it is made, is a curious question, and sets many wits on work: in this Scripture it is set out by the sound of a Trumpet. Now some would have it to be a material Trumpet, because the Scriptures frequently call it a Trumpet; He shall send his Angels with the sound of a Trumpet, saith Christ; and in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump we shall be changed (saith Paul) for the Trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised. And the Lord himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the Archangel, and with the Trumpet of God: But whether this Trumpet shall be of Silver or of Brass, or of the Air, or of the Cloud and Meteors whereon Christ rides, they cannot agree: others more probably look upon this Trumpet as nothing else but a metaphor; or a sound formed in the Air, like the sound of a Trumpet. A voice it is without all controversy; and metaphorically it may be called a trumpet, both from the clearness and greatness of the sound; so loud shall it be, that 'twill pierce into the ears of the dead in their graves; It will shake the world, rend the rocks, break the mountains; dissolve the bonds of Death, burst down the gates of Hell, and unite all spirits to their own Bodies. An horrible terrible voice shall it be: But how should Angels who are spirits make a voice? by a collision of the Air which the Angels can move at their pleasure; and who can tell, say some, but there may be some new-created instrument trumpet-like, adapted for the Angels; at the sides of which, by a force, and collision of the air, this great shout may be, to convene all the World? or who knows (say others) but that the Lord Jesus may fill the Angels, even as trumpets are filled with a loud blast, and that through them this loud blast shall come rushing like a mighty wind upon the dead Saints, and so awaken their bodies out of the dust? we all know this was usual in all the Jews solemnities to convene the people by the found of a trumpet. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Make thee two trumpets of silver,—That thou mayest use them for the calling of the Assembly;—And when thou shalt blow them, all the Assembly shall assemble themselves; and if ye go to war, then ye shall blow an alarm with the Trumpets; and in the same way (say they) Christ now will convene all the World with the sound of a trumpet, or with the sound of some such instrument of divine power and virtue, whereby the dead shall be raised, and their bodies and souls re-united. Amidst all those Authors, if I may deliver my opinion; I suppose the Text that will clear all to us above all that is written, is that of 1 Thessalonians 4.16. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trumpet of God. Give me leave to insist on it, that we may come up yet to a more full and perfect knowledge of this passage. In these words is shown, or held forth the coming of Christ in three particulars: with a shout, with a voice, and with a trumpet; some think this to be one and the same set out in variety of expressions; but I am of another mind. It is agreed by most that the transactions at the giving of the Law on Mount Sinai, were a representation of the proceedings which shall be at the great day of Judgment; now in that transaction we read of a three-fold voice, The voice of God, the voice of Thunder, and the voice of a Trumpet, (Exod. 19.16. compared with Exod. 20.1.) and accordingly we find the Apostle speaking of a three-fold voice, Of the voice of Christ, of the voice of Thunder, and of the voice of a Trumpet.

1. The Lord himself shall descend with a shout: Arius Montanus, and the vulgar translate it with a command; Lyra and others think this to be the voice of Christ himself, saying, with a loud voice, Arise ye dead, and come to Judgment. Thus Jesus cried with a loud voice, Lazarus come forth; and with such a voice will he call on the dead at the last day. So much Christ himself hath taught us; The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. The hour is, because by his voice he raised some at his first coming: and the hour is coming, because in the like manner he will raise up all men at the last day; Marvel not at this (saith Christ) for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and they shall come forth. As at the creation of the World, he said, Let there be light, and there was light; so at the dissolution of the World, he will say, Let the dead arise, let the Sea give up the dead that are in it, and Death and Hell deliver up the dead which are in them; and it will be so.

2. The Lord shall descend with the voice of the Archangel. Two questions here; 1. Who is this Archangel? 2. What is this voice?

For the first, some argue this Archangel to be Gabriel, others Raphael, others Michael. The Jews have an ancient tradition, that there are seven principal Angels that minister before the throne of God, and therefore called Archangels. The Scriptures seem to speak much that way, calling them, seven Lamps of fire burning before the throne: and seven horns, and seven eyes of the Lamb; and the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth; and seven eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth; and yet more plainly, seven Angels that stand before God. Now which of these Seven is the Archangel, here spoken of, is hard to determine; only probable it is, that all the Archangels, and all the angels are hereby understood, as comprehended under that one; to which agrees, Matth. 24.31. Mr. Ainsworth observes, that when things are done by a multitude; where one is chief, that the action is frequently ascribed either to the multitude, or to him that is chief indifferently; as Jehoiadah brought forth the Kings Son, and he put the Crown upon him, 2 Kings 11.12. or they brought forth the Kings son, and they put upon him the Crown, 2 Chron. 23.11. so David offered burnt-offerings, 2 Sam. 6.17. or they offered burnt offerings, 1 Chron. 16.1. and so he shall descend with the voice of the Archangel; or he shall scend his Angels with a great sound, Matth 24.3.

That there are seven principal Angels, Master Mede affirms; and that there is one which yet eminently, is called the Archangel; some others affirm, as among Devils, there is one chief Devil, called the Prince of Devils; and therefore the fire is said to be prepared for the Devil and his Angels; so from this Text of 1 Thess. 4.16. and of Dan. 10.13. and of Jude v. 9. Some probably conclude that the good Angels have a Prince, even Michael, whom Jude calls the Archangel. But of this no more; the Lord keep me from intruding into those things which I have not seen. The day itself will discover it, and so I leave it, as having said enough to satisfy the sober minded.

For the second, what is this voice of the Archangel? I conceive that thereby we are to understand thunder: here is (as we have said) a manifest allusion to the proceedings at the giving of the Law, now the voice there mentioned, besides the voice of God, and the voice of a trumpet, is the voice of Thunder; And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, there were thunders. In this sense some expound these words of the Apostle, where the Law is said to be spoken by Angels, because the Angels did raise up those extraordinary thunders, which happily were the matters of the articulate voice, in which the Lord spake to Israel: or if the Law was spoken by Christ (as I have delivered my opinion elsewhere) he being the Angel of the Covenant, Mal. 3 1, And the Angel of his presence, Isa. 63.9. Yet this hinders not, but that created Angels might speak the Law too, if not in respect of the articulate voice, yet in respect of the voice of thunders which attended on it; thus thunder is often called the voice of God, and the voice of his excellency, Job 37.4, 5. Psalm. 29.3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

3. The Lord shall descend with the trumpet of God. Such a voice was used also at the giving of the Law, Exod. 19.16. and Exod. 20.18. and so it will be now when men are called to account for the keeping or breaking of it. For the understanding of this, our last translation tells us, that Christ shall send his Angels with the great sound of a trumpet; but in four Greek copies, as Beza confesseth, as also in the Hebrew Gospel of Matthew, and in the Vulgar, and in the margent of our last translation, it is read, that Christ shall send his Angels with a trumpet, and a great voice. And so the latter words are exegetical, q. d. with a trumpet, that is, with a great voice, like the voice of a trumpet; so that this reading very provably proves, that the last trumpet is to be taken metaphorically. For the more full confirmation whereof I argue thus; when anything is ascribed to the Angels which is not suitable to their spiritual nature, and which they have no need of for the work they are about, is it to be taken metaphorically; unless the context or some other Scripture force us to a proper acceptation, but a material trumpet of Silver, Brass, or the like metal, is not suitable to the spiritual nature of the Angels; neither have they need of such a trumpet for producing a great sound in the Air; it is evident that without a trumpet they can make a great sound like the noise of a trumpet; and there is nothing at all in the Scriptures that will force us, or probably lead us to a proper acceptation of the word; add yet to what hath been said, that sometimes a great voice is set out by the similitude of a Trumpet; I heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, Rev. 1.10. and the first voice which I heard, was as it were of a trumpet, Rev. 4.1.

But why is this sound as of a trumpet, called the trumpet of God? I answer, for the greatness of it; for its usual in the Hebrew Language for the setting forth of greatness, excellency, or superlativeness of a thing, to add the Name of God to the word, whereby the thing is signified; as Gen. 23.6. A Prince of God, (i.e.) a Mighty Prince, Gen. 30.8. With the wrestlings of God, (i.e.) with great wrestlings, Psal. 36.6. Mountains of God (i.e.) Great mountains, Psal 80.10. Cedars of God (i.e.) very high Cedars. So here, the trump of God (i.e.) A very great sound, like the sound of a trumpet. It is said in the Law, there were thunders, and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud, so that all the people that was in the camp trembled; and if there was trembling at the giving of the Law, oh what trembling will be at the general Assize, when sinners shall be condemned for breaking of it?

3. No sooner the shout made, but the Saints arise; it is true, the Saints that are alive need no resurrection, but upon them will this trumpet have its effect. Somthing like death shall ceaze upon them, and they shall be changed. The order of this is given in by the Apostle from the Lord; This we say unto you by the Word of our Lord, that we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep, for the Lord himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the Trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them into the clouds. The first that shall be called are the Saints that sleep, and then the Saints that are alive shall be immediately changed. Oh what a day will this be? what a strange sight to see all the dead ever since the beginning of the World rise out of their graves? for the wicked I believe they shall rise like Toads from their holes, in a black, swarthy, ugly, color: A question is amongst the Schools, whether Reprobates shall rise again with all their deformities which they had in this life? as some of them being blind, halt, lame, maimed, deaf, dum, &c. Whether now they shall rise in the self-same condition? for my part I conceive that whereas God the author of nature, will at that day restore human nature, that therefore there shall be no defects of natural parts; certainly nothing shall be wanting in the damned, which may impede the sense of torment in any part; now a defect of any member would hinder these universal torments that must cease on every part of the bodies of the damned in Hell; their bodies therefore shall be whole, only the bodies of such shall be foul, ugly, heavy, lumpish bodies, as opposed to the glorious qualities of the bodies of Saints; why, what bodies (you will say) have they? I answer, glorious bodies: no sooner shall the bodies of the Saints arise, but they shall exceed with singular qualities; They were sown in corruption, but they are raised in incorruption; they were sown in dishonor, but raised in glory; they were sown in weakness, but raised in power; they were sown natural bodies, but raised spiritual bodies. The Sun in its shinings, doth but shadow forth the glory of their bodies; and this will in some measure torment Reprobates, to see the difference of their bodies, and the bodies of the Saints. O (will they say) yond are they, whom we despised, and now are they honored. See a world of Suns rising at once out of all parts of the Earth; sometimes we lived on Earth, and we never saw but one Sun rising in the East, but lo millions of Suns on East, and West, and North, and South; O those are the glorious Saints of Heaven: see with what swift and agile bodies they are preparing to fly into the Air, to meet their Lord and Savior there; whilst in the mean time we rise with such heavy, dull, and deformed bodies, that we cannot mount. O what will become of us? why this is the day of resurrection. The Angels have been here to unseal our graves to roll away the stones, and at their shout, and sound of the Trumpet, our scattered dusts have met together: and lo now we stand upon the Earth.

4. No sooner the Saints raised, and their souls and Bodies re-united with excellent Majesty, but then shall all the elect of God, from first to last be gathered together: if you ask whence? and whither? I answer—

1. To the question whence? from the four winds, from one end of Heaven to another. (i.e.) From all parts of the world, from East, and West, and North, and South, from one end of Heaven to another; a Vulgar term, in regard of our sight; for in itself Heaven is round, and hath no end: the meaning is, that not one Saint in all the world, from Adam to the last man shall be concealed, or lie hid; from the most hidden, inward, secret bosom of the earth all shall be gathered; howsoever their dusts may be scattered into a thousand thousand parts, yet the power of Christ shall restore all those dusts, and bring them together into their several compacted bodies.

2. To the question whether they shall be gathered? Some say to the Valley of Jehoshaphat, from that Text, Let the Heathen be weakened, and come up to the Valley of Jehoshaphat, for there, will I sit to judge the Heathen round about; but I believe this Text hath reference to a particular judgment of God upon Israel's enemies which dwell round about Jerusalem, and not to the general day of Judgment. Others say, to Mount-Olivet from that Text, This same Jesus which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into Heaven; then returned they unto Jerusalem from the Mount called Olivet. But I believe this Text speaks only of the manner how Christ shall come, and not of the place to which he shall come. Indeed 'tis not probable that either the valley of Jehoshaphat, or the Mount of Olivet can be sufficient places to contain all the men that ever were, are, and shall be; and therefore if such a thing can be determined, I should rather appeal to that Text, Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them (that are raised) in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. When Christ was asked this very question, where Lord? whither shall the Saints be gathered? where shall the general Judgment be? he answers, wheresoever the body is, thither will the Eagles be gathered together. By the body, Christ meant himself, and by the Eagles Christ meant his Elect, because their youth is renewed as the Eagles; now the elect must resort to Christ wheresoever he is; and the Apostle is express, that Christ is in the air, and in the clouds: and therefore thither must the elect be gathered; they shall be caught up by the holy Angels into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air.

O my brethren, what sights are these! what changes, wonders, strange face of things will be this day? how is it that we are not as frequent in the meditation of this Summons as Jerome was, who as he thought, heard daily that sound, Arise ye dead and come to Judgment? methinks a sad and serious consideration of these passages might keep us close to Christ; come try a little, if in the hurrying of the day we are so distracted, that we cannot reach the spiritual part of a meditation, yet in the evening or morning when all is still, or in the night-season when all is quiet, then labor to prevent the day of doom; so realize it, as if then we saw Christ in the clouds, sending his Angels on this errand, Away, and bring hither all the men, and women in the world; and in the first place, gather my Saints together unto me, Adam and Abraham, those Fathers of the world and of the faithful, let them see all their children, and let all their children see them, and bring them all to my Throne; awaken the world, let them who have slept in their graves, some thousand of years be now roused, and raised. Imagine then, as if we heard the Trumpet of God sounded by the Angels of God, and as the sound of it waxed louder and louder, that we saw the Mountains skip like Rams, and the little Hills like young Sheep. That we saw all the graves in Churches, or Church-yards, in Fields, or Plains, or Seas fly open, that we saw all the bodies of the dead beginning to stir, and to stand upon their feet, and presently the Angels coming, and taking all the Saints upon their wings, and so flying with them through the air till they came to the Throne, and judgment-seat of Christ: is it possible that such a meditation should pass without some tincture of it on our spirits? if my ears shall hear that sound, and if my eyes shall see these sights, is it not time for me to lay these things to heart, that I may be found faithful and well-doing? as sure as I have this Book in my hand I must be one of those that shall hear the sound of the Trumpet, and away I must from the mouth of my grave, where ever I shall be buried, to the cloud where Christ doth sit; come then, how would I rise? as foul as a toad? or as an Angel of God? O my God! set this home on my soul! O where's my Lamp? and where's my oil? are all ready? and am I ready, furnished, and prepared to meet the Lord in the Air? Christians! if we have any life in us, let us act and realize this to the life; O this would keep us close to Christ, and to the Banner of Christ; who would not march under this Banner, and adhere to him, that but reads over these summons of souls at the last dreadful day.

SECT. IV. Of Christ and the Saints meeting at the judgment day.

4. FOR Christ and the Saints meeting at the judgment day; no sooner are the Saints lifted up, and set before the Judge, but these things follow—

1. They look, and gaze, and dart their beams: and reflect their glories on each other. Oh the communications! Oh the darting of beams betwixt Christ and his Saints! look as when two admirable persons, two lovers meet together, their eyes sparkle, they look on, as if they would look through one another. So Christ and his Saints at first meeting, they look on, as if they would look through one another. And such is the effect of these looks, that they give a luster to each other by their Looks. Did not Moses face shine when he had been with God? and shall not the faces of the elect glitter and shine when Christ also looks on them? nor stays it there; but as they shine by Christ, so shall their shine reflect on Christ, and give a glory to Christ, and this I take it to be the meaning of the Apostle, That when Christ shall come, he shall be glorified in his Saints; not only in himself, but in his Saints also; whose glory as it comes from him, so it redounds also to him, For of him, and through him, and to him are all things.

2. They admire at the infinite glory, and beauty, and dignity, and excellency that is in Christ. The glory they reflect on him is nothing to the glory that is in him. Oh when these Stars the Saints shall but look upon Christ the Son of righteousness, they exceedingly admire. So the Apostle, When he shall come, he shall be glorified in his Saints, and he shall be admired in all them that believe. All that believe shall break out into admiration of Jesus Christ: they shall at the first sight observe such an excellency in Jesus Christ, as that they shall be infinitely taken with it: here we speak of Christ, and in speaking we admire; but how will they admire, when they shall not only speak or hear, but see and behold him who is the Express image of God, and the brightness of his Fathers glory? O the lustres that he casts forth each way! is not his very body more sparkling than the Diamond before the Sun? yea, more than the Sun itself now shining at noon-day? how should the Saints but wonder at this sight? Oh there is more beauty, and glory in Jesus Christ than ever their thoughts or imaginations could possibly reach; there is more weight of sweetness, joy, and delight in Jesus Christ, than either the seeing Eye, or hearing Ear, or the vast understanding Heart (which can multiply and add still to any former thoughts) can possibly conceive: every soul will cry out then, I believed to see much glory in Jesus Christ, when ever I saw him; I had some twilight, or Moon-light glances of Christ, on Earth; but O blind I! O narrow I! that could never have faith, opinion, thought, or imagination to fathom the thousand-thousand part of the worth, and incomparable excellency that I now see in him. Why, this causeth admiration, when we see more, than ever we could expect; the Saints shall then cry out, and say, I see more ten thousand times more than ever I expected; I see all the beauty of God put forth in Christ, I see the substantial reflection of the Fathers light and glory in Jesus Christ, I see thousands of excellencies in Jesus Christ that never were revealed to me before. This is the very nature of admiration; it is ever wondering or admiring at some new and strange thing: the glory of Christ will then exceed all former apprehension. O they admire to see the King in such a beauty, they admire to see the Judge in such a glittering and glorious Robe of Majesty, they admire, and they cannot but admire.

3. They adore, and magnify the grace and glory of Jesus Christ; as it is said of the twenty four Elders, that they fell down before him that sate on the Throne, and worshipped him that liveth forever and ever, and cast their Crowns before the Throne, saying, thou art worthy O Lord to receive glory, and honor and power, for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created. So all the Saints, now advanced to come up to Christ, and to stand before the Throne, they fall down before Christ, and they worship him that lives forever, shouting and singing about Jesus Christ, and setting out his glory, grace, and goodness. After this I beheld (saith John) and lo a great multitude, which no man could number, of all Nations, and kindred, and people, and tongues stood before the Throne, and before the Lamb—and cried with a loud voice, saying, salvation to our God, which sitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb; and all the Angels stood round about the Throne, and about the Elders, and the four Beasts, and fell before the Throne on their faces, and worshipped God, saying, Amen; blessing and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might be unto our God forever, and ever, Amen. Saints and Angels will both give glory to Jesus Christ that day; every elect man will then acknowledge, here is Christ that shed his blood for me, here is the Savior that laid down his life for me, here is the Sacrifice that gave himself a propitiation for me, here is the Person that mediated, and interceded, and made peace for me, here is the Redeemer that delivered, and redeemed me from the wrath to come; and then they begin those Hallelujahs, that never shall have end: Hallelujah, and again Hallelujah; and Amen Hallelujah; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

4. Christ welcomes them into his glorious presence; if the Father could receive his Prodigal but repenting with hugs and kisses, how will Christ now receive his Saints, wh•n they come as a Bride to the solemnization of the marriage; his very heart springs (as I may say) at the sight of his Bride; no sooner he sees her, and salutes her, but he welcomes her with such words as these: O my love, my dove, my fair one, come now and enjoy thy Husband, many a thought I have had of thee, before I made the world, I spent my infinite eternal thoughts on thy salvation, when the world began I gave thee a promise, that I would betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment; in loving-kindness, in mercy, and in faithfulness; It was I that for thy sake was incarnate, and lived, and died, and rose again, and ascended, and since my ascension that have been interceding for thee, and making ready the Bride-chamber where thou and I must live, forever and ever: and now I come higher into the clouds, to meet thee more than half the way; and my meaning is to take thee by the hand, and to bring thee to my Father; now do I take thee for my own; O my Sister, my Spouse, thou art as dear to me as my own dear heart; come, see into my bosom, see here Love written in the golden letters of free grace; come near, for I must have thee with me; and I will never more be so strange to thee as to this day; sometimes thy sins have made a wall of partition between me and thee; sometimes I withdrew and was gone, and I hid myself beyond the curtains; and for a time thou hast lain hid in the closset of the grave; but now we'll never part more; anon I will bring thee to my Father, and I will say to him, Father, behold here my Spouse that I have married unto myself; in the mean time welcome to thy Jesus, I have purchased thee with my blood, I have paid dear for thee: and now I will wear thee as a Crown, and ornament forever.

5. Christ sets them on his right hand; Upon thy right hand doth stand the Queen in Gold of Ophir. This is the sign of Christ's love, and respect to his Saints; when he himself ascended up into Heaven, then said the Father to him; Son, sit thou down at my right hand; and no sooner the Saints are ascended up to Christ, but he speaks the same to them, Sit thou down at my right hand; Christ entertains them, as God the Father entertained him, he at the right hand of God, and they at the right hand of Christ. And herein is set forth the great exaltation of the Saints; as Christ being set at God's right hand, God highly exalted him and gave him a Name above every Name, so now are the Saints highly exalted by Jesus Christ, now are they filled with unmatchable perfections, now is the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the fullness of perfection, and fullness of honor and glory conferred upon them; Upon his right hand is set the Queen in gold of Opnir, (i e.) in the best, richest, finest Gold; the Lord now puts upon his Saints heavens glory; he adorns them with all his ornaments fit for the marriage day; and indeed here is the beginning of the solemnity of the marriage of the Lamb; not but that the contract was before, but the solemnity was reserved for this day, and all the glory of this day is for nothing else but to set out the solemnity of the marriage. As the Bridegroom on the day of nuptials comes forth in his glory, and as the Bride on the marriage-day comes forth in her best array; and as the servants, and parents, and friends, and all appear on the marriage-day in as much glory as they can; so Christ on this day comes forth in his glory, with all his Angels in their glory; and the Saints, the Lambs wife, The Kings Daughter, is all glorious, without and within. Though Stars may lose their shining when the Sun ariseth, yet the glory of the Saints shall be no less, because of the Sun of righteousness, but rather more. This is the day that Christ shall honor his Saints before all the world; come (will he say) and sit you down at my right hand; as a Shepherd divideth his Sheep from the Goats, so will I separate you from wicked reprobates; why you are they for whom the eternal councils of my Father did work, you are they in whom I am now to be gloryfied forever; and therefore now will I exalt, and advance, and honor you; sit here, or stand here on my right hand: O come, come hither to the right hand of your Savior.

6. Hereupon Christ fully, and actually joys in them; and they in him; he joys in them, because now he sees of the travail of his soul; he sees the issue of all his doings and sufferings hereon earth, he sees now the great work he hath brought about, to wit, the glory of his Saints; and he cannot but rejoyce therein. As a man that makes a work that is very curious, and glorious, he takes abundance of delight to look upon it; when God made the world; he lokit upon what he made, and he saw it was good, and he delighted in it: So Christ looks on his Saints, and when he sees what he hath done, in raising so poor a worm to so high an excellency, he takes infinite delight therein; now he sees that he hath attained his end in that great design, and deepest councils that he had before the world: he was then resolved to save a number of sinners, and to bring them at last to himself that they might behold him in his glory, and manifest the riches of his grace; and to that purpose hath he still been carrying on the great work of souls salvation, as we have heard; and now that he sees it accomplished, and fulfilled in them, he must needs delight: In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, fear thou not, and to Zion, let not thy hands be faint, for the Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty, he will save thee, he will rejoice over thee with joy, he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing.

And as he joys in them, so they cannot but rejoice in him; as he delights in their glory, so they cannot but delight in his glory: are they not at Christ's right hand? and is not that the place of pleasure, the Paradise of God? In thy presence is fullness of joy, and at thy right hand are pleasures for evermore: The very setting them on Christ's right hand, is the beginning of Heavens joy. The presence of Christ makes joy, exceeding joy, saith Jude; oh but what joy? what fullness of joy, what exceeding joy will it be to be set at Christ's right hand? now begins that joy, that never, never shall have end. O the complacency which the blessed feel in their seeing, knowing, loving, and being beloved of Jesus Christ. O my Christ, let me have tribulation here, let me here spend my days in sorrow, and my breath in sighings; punish me here, cut me in pieces here, burn me here, so that I may there be placed at thy right hand; for then joy will come, and sorrow will vanish; sorrow is but for a night, this night of life; but joy will come in the morning of the resurrection, and it never shall be night again.

SECT. V. Of Christ's sentencing his Saints.

5. FOR Christ sentencing of his Saints; no sooner are they set on his right hand, but he prepares for sentence; in the opening of which we must consider, 1. The preparative. 2. The sentence itself.

1. The preparative before sentence will be some exploration or trial of the parties to be sentenced, as—

1. The Book must be opened. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the Books were opened, and another Book was opened which is the Book of life. It is spoken after the manner of men, in whose public Judgments are produced all the writings of the process, informations, depositions of witnesses, to show that all actions, even the most secret ones, shall then be rehearsed and made manifest; Augustine thinks these Books to be the Books of the Old and New Testament, wherein all things either to be done, or omitted, are prescribed by God: and then shall these Books be opened, because according to them shall sentence be given; In that day God shall Judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my Gospel. Origen, and all most all with him, think these Books to be the Books of our consciences, which now are shut up, and concealed from men; but then shall be made manifest to all the world: whatever these Books are, we find here one Book opened which is proper to the Saints, called the Book of Life; This Book contains in it the names of all that are elected from first to last; Thou John, and thou Joseph, and thou Judeth, and thou Mary, and thou Elizabeth, &c. you are all Book'd down; there is the particularity, and there is the certainty; Your names are written in Heaven, rejoice in it; Oh what is the joy of Saints when once they see this book opened, and their names enrolled, engraven there in letters of glory. This very Book clears it to me, that God from all eternity made choice of a particular and determinate number of Persons, to save them; and that none other can be saved, but those who were so elected; and whosoever are so elected, they shall not fall away. All that worship the Beast, their names are not written in the Book of life of the Lamb, from the foundation of the world. On the other side, He that overcometh, the same shall be written in the Book of life, and I will not blot out his name, but I will confess his name before my Father and before his Angels. This is the day when that book of life shall be opened, and Christ shall read the names of every elect person before God and Angels; not that Christ needs a book, or indeed reads a name, but that his Election stands so firm, that he knows every predestinated Saint as well, as we know their names, whom for our memories we commit unto our books: and then he will so honor his Saints, that he will publish their names to all the world.

2. All the actions, demeanors, graces, duties, and (it may be) sins of Saints shall be produced and laid open: the holy Ghost tells us, that the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the Books. It appears hence, that not only names, but things were written, and these things were produced, and accordingly they were judged.

1. As to evil things, unfruitful works of darkness. It is a question, and I dare not be too positive in it, viz. Whether the sins of God's People shall be manifest at the day of Judgment? Some are for the negative, because God in his promises speaks so expressly, Of forgiving iniquities, of remembering them no more, of blotting them out, of throwing them into the bottom of the Sea, of casting them behind his back: in which respect say they, the Godly are said not to come into Judgment. I suppose this last Text is ill urged, for by Judgment is not meant discussion, but condemnation; and in our best Translations so it is rendered; others are for the affirmative, upon these grounds. 1. Because many of the Godly and wicked men's sins are mingled together, and there cannot be a Judgment of discussion, preceding that of condemnation, unless Godly men's sins are also produced. 2. Because it is spoken generally in respect of all sorts, that the Books were opened; By which Books most understand the consciences of men, and by the opening of those Books, they understand the manifesting, clearing, and discovering of consciences at that general day.

3. Because the Scriptures are express for the affirmative; not but that those Texts are truths, that sins are forgiven, blotted out, thrown away, to be remembered no more, (i.e.) as to condemnation; but as for exploration or discussion the Lord speaks universally, that of every idle word that men speak, they shall give an account thereof at the day of Judgment. If the balance weigh down on this side (for my part I am not peremptory, but shall easily submit to the spirits of the Prophets) yet this manifestation shall not be for the shame, grief, trouble, ignominy, or confusion of the godly; but only for the setting up of God's justice, and that the goodness and free grace of God in Christ may be made more illustrious; how will Christ then be exalted, when all the world shall see his righteousness and goodness, his truth and mercy, now again meeting together, and kissing each other? it was so at his first coming, and it will be so at his second coming; then shall his justice and mercy, his righteousness and goodness be manifested to all; in that by his own merits, notwithstanding their sins, he will bring all his Saints to his heavenly glory.

2. As for good things, whether good works, duties or graces, there is no question but all these will be that day produced, and laid open. 1. We see Christ enumerating the good works of them on his right hand; for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; sick, and ye visited me; in prison, and ye came unto me. It is true, in this catalogue we find nothing of faith, but all of works; but certainly faith is included, as the life of the Tree is included in the fruit; not only, nor principally are works here mentioned for the goodness of the work considered in itself; but as these works did express our faith and love to Jesus Christ, in that by saith we could see Christ in a poor beggar, or prisoner, and could love Jesus Christ in these poor, better than all our worldly goods, or liberties. I do not wonder that Paul adviseth his Corinthians, See that ye abound in this grace of contribution to the Saints: and that he prayeth his Philipians, And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more; And that he prayeth for his Thessalonians, now the Lord make you to increase, and to abound in love one towards another, and towards all men; and that he praiseth God in their behalf; We are bound to thank God always for you brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of everyone of you all towards each other aboundeth. Christians! if we did but consider that every duty done to God or Man, that every penny given to a poor naked Saint, that every cup of cold water given to a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, should not lose his reward, but this day should be reckoned up, or drawn (as it were) into a full Inventory; Imprimis, For this piece of silver given such a day to such a one; Item, For this piece of bread such a day given to such a one, &c. Oh who would not abound in faith and love? oh who would think anything too much, too good, too dear to give to the needy members of Jesus Christ? there is a charge laid upon Ministers to preach this Doctrine, I beseech you give me leave to discharge my duty, and to lay it, and leave it at your doors, where beggars usually stand; Charge them that are rich in this world—that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to destribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. You to whom God hath given the riches of this world, as you would meet Christ with comfort, learn this lessen; consider whether of these too reckonings will be more comfortable at that day; Item, So much given to such and such a religious use? or so much given towards such a Feast, and for the entertainment of such brave gallants? so much to promote the Gospel? or so much at Dice, Cards, Horse-races? if one should tell you, that either you must feed Christ in the poor, or you must starve in Hell; you must either clothe naked Christ in the poor, or you must be laid naked to the fiery indignation of the Lord forever, oh what strictness would you call this? but I recollect myself; if Christ set you at his right hand, he will then recount all your charities, and all your labors of love to the Saints: you that are poor, and had nothing to give, he will tell you of your good works, if it was no more, but at such a time, you cast a mite into his Treasury, and at such a time you carried a Letter for the Lord Jesus; he will produce and commend these pittances of your poor charities to all the world.

2. Nor only good works to man; but all the Saints duties to God shall come in remembrance. Oh then it will be known who served the Lord in spirit and truth, and who did not; then Men and Angels shall know, such a day this poor Saints performed such a spiritual service; every prayer in public or private, every, tear shed for sin, every sob, or sigh, every spiritual meditation, or self-examination every glance, ejaculation, or looking unto Jesus, shall be recounted by Jesus: It was said of Cornelius, that as well his prayers to God, as his alms to men came up for a memorial before God; certainly every duty in reference to the first table is booked in Heaven, and at this day the book being opened, it will appear, that such a prayer thou madest such a morning and such an evening in thy closet; and now will Christ say, Did not I tell thee, that if thou wouldst pray to thy Father in secret, then he that saw thee in secret, should reward thee openly? why now shalt thou have thy reward in a full view, I will divulge here all thy secret duties, to Men and Angels; all the world shall know it, thy wanderings I told them, and thy tears I bottled them; lo here, are they not all written in my Book?

3. Nor only duties, but graces shall now be rehearsed; thy Knowledge, Faith, Hope, Love, spiritual Joy; thy Fear, Obedience, Repentance, Humility, Meekness, Patience, Zeal, Perseverance shall be fully discovered; time was that in the incense of such a Prayer many sweet spices were burned together; therein was Faith working by Love; therein was Humility, therein was Patience in submitting to God's will and pleasure, therein was Hope of a gracious answer in God's due time, therein was Holiness, brokenness of Heart, and love to others, &c. Time was (saith Christ) that I gathered my myrr with my spices, that I eat my honey-comb with my honey that I both accepted and delighted myself in thy heavenly graces; I shall never forget how thou didst ravish my heart, my sister, my spouse; how thou dost ravish my heart with one of thine eyes, and with one chain of thy neck. Why, thus shall the Lord set forth, and tell all the world what gracious children he had; then will appear indeed the Meekness of Moses, the Faith of Abraham, the Patience of Job, the Zeal of Phineas, the Love of Magdalene; and according to the measure of grace conferred upon thee, Christ will set thee out; We commend the graces of such and such Saints at their death, but oh let Christ blazon me, and his graces in me at the resurrection-day.

Thus far for the Exploration or trial before sentence.

2. For the sentence itself, then shall the King say to them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Every word here is full of life and joy; 1. Come] this is the King's invitation of his Saints to his Court; he had summoned them before to his presence, and now they are about him, he will not part with them, they must come a little nearer yet, they must go with him into his presence chamber; the mansions are ready, the Supper of the Lamb is ready, and now he begins the solemn invitation to his bride, Come. 2. Come ye blessed of my Father] Christ blessed them when he went up to Heaven, and whiles yet on earth he pronounced them blessed many a time; Blessed be ye poor; Blessed are ye that hunger; Bless'd are ye that weep; but now he calls them the blessed of his Father; not only Christ, but God the Father hath ever looked upon them as his children; it is the Father's will as well as Christ's that they should be blessed, Ye blessed of my Father. 3. Inherit the Kingdom] Christ had told them before, It is your Father's pleasure to give you the Kingdom; but then they were only as servants, or as children under age but now they are heirs, Heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; and now they are come to full age, To the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; and therefore they must have the inheritance in possession, they must all be Kings; this very word speaks them Kings, and makes them Kings; it is the solemn coronation of the Saints. It is the anointing, the setting of the Crown upon the heads of the Saints; Henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not for me only, but unto them also that love his appearing. 4. Inherit the Kingdom, prepared for you] as Tophet was prepared of old, so was this Kingdom prepared of old; it was the first creature that ever God made, In the beginning God created heaven; his first work was to make Heaven for himself and his Saints to dwell in; he prepared it for them, and then he prepared them for it: but why for them? were not the Angels the first creatures that possessed it? nay, were they not created in it, or together with it? yes, but yet the Angels are not, properly the heirs, sons, members, spouse of God and Christ, as the Saints are; the Angels are but ministering spirits, and the servants of the Bridegroom, but the Saints are the Bride herself, heirs and co-heirs with Christ. 5. Prepared for you from the foundation of the world.] This was the great design of God and Christ from all eternity; before the foundations of the world, and at the first stone laid, and ever since, they have been carrying on this mighty work: it is not a business of yesterday only; No, no; the eternal thoughts of God have been upon it, He hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world.

Oh what thoughts are in Saints, when this sentence is propounded! Oh what joy enters into them now they are to enter into their Masters joy? methinks if it were possible that tears could be in a glorified estate, the Saints should not see Christ reach out a Crown to set it on their heads, but they should weep, and hold away their heads, but Christ will have it so; This honor have all the Saints; praise ye the Lord.

SECT. VI. Of Christ and the Saints judging the rest of the World.

6. FOR Christ and his Saints judging the world: no sooner shall the Saints be sentenced, Justified, Acquitted, Anointed, Crowned; but presently they must be enthronized, and sit with Jesus Christ to judge the world. In the unfolding of this we may observe these particulars.—

1. As Christ is on a Throne, so now must the Elect be set on Thrones; To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my Throne. Thrones are for Kings and Judges; and in that Christ hath now lifted up his Saints to this condition, he will have them sit with him as so many Judges, and as so many Kings; or if it be more honor to have Thrones by themselves, than to sit with Christ in his Throne; John in his vision saw many Thrones; And I saw Thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them. And Christ himself told his Apostles, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve Thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Israel. Hence some argue that amongst all the Saints, the Apostles shall have their Thrones seated next to Christ; howsoever the rest shall not be deprived of their Thrones; for not only twelve Thrones, but twelve and twelve are set about the Throne of Christ; And round about the Throne were four and twenty Thrones (or seats) and upon the Throne I saw four and twenty Elders sitting clothed with white raiment, and they had on their heads crowns of Gold. Only four and twenty Thrones, and four and twenty Elders are numbered, but thereby is represented the whole Church of Christ; It is plain enough, that all the Saints shall appear plainly in the glory of Christ's Kingdom, having Thrones with him in the Air, during the time of his judgment.

2. The goats on the left hand shall then be called to receive their doom. No sooner the Saints enthronized, but then shall Christ say, Ye blessed Angels bring hither all those mine enemies, who have said I shall not rule over them, that I may bruise them with my Iron mace, and break them in pieces like a Potters vessel. O the fear and trembling that will now seize on reprobates! do but see the case of prisoners, when the Judge speaks that word, Come Jaylors, bring hither those prisoners to the bar. But alas! what comparison can we make to suite with the condition of these reprobates? now shall their hearts fail them for fear; now shall they seek death (oh how gladly would they die again!) but shall not find it; now shall they cry to rocks and mountains; Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. As a prisoner in a desperate case had rather remain in his fordid stinking dungeon, than coming into the open air for execution; so the reprobates newly raised from the earth, would fain return again into the earth, glad to remain, though not on the face of it with pleasure, yet in the bowels of it with rottenness and solitude; like malefactors pressing to death, they cry out for more weight, Hills cover us, mountains fall upon us, yet more weight, more rocks, more mountains; hide us, press us, cover us, dispatch us. But all in vain; the command is out, Angels and Devils will force them to the bar, for the Lord hath spoken it; Those mine enemies which would not that I should reign over them, bring them hither.

3. They shall look on Christ, and his Saints, now sitting on their Thrones. As prisoners that stand at the bar in the face of the Judge, so must these reprobates look the Judge and all his Assessors in the very face.

1. For the judge, they shall look on him; Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him. We heard before, that no sooner Christ in the clouds but they saw him then; as the prisoners that see the Judge riding to his Judgment-seat; Oh but now they shall see him in the Judgment-seat ready with sparkling eyes, and thundering voice to speak their sentence. Prisoners at the bar must not turn their backs on the Judge, when he begins their sentence; no more must reprobates; They must see him in Majesty whom they would not deigne to look upon in humility; that by so much more they may feel his power, by how much more they derided his weakness. Oh the difference betwixt Christ's first coming in the flesh, and in his second coming in the clouds; then he came in poverty, now in Majesty; then in humility, now in Glory; then with poor-Shepherds, now with mighty Angels; then the contempt of Nations, now the terror of the World; then crowned with Thorns, now with Majesty; then judged by one man, now judging all men; then as a Lamb, now as a Lyon; oh horror to conceive! how will the sight of this Judge amaze the wicked? and the rather because they shall see him whom they have pierced. Is not this the aggravation of their terror? conceive the guilty man-slayer coming to his trial, will not the red robes of his Judge make his heart bleed for his blood-shed? doth not that crimson clothe present a monstrous hew before his eyes? O then what sight is this, when the man slain sits in the Judgment-seat? the rosy wounds of our Savior still bleeding (at it were) in the prisoners presence? well my they hang their heads, but they shall not shut their eyes; They shall see him, saith the Text; yea, they also which pierced him shall see him. This very sight will be as convincing, as if they heard Christ say, Thou art the man that didst murder me, thou art the man hast pierced me, this wound, this skar, and this print of the nails in my hands and feet were thy very doings in thy sinning against me. And who can tell but Christ may speak in some such manner as this! Come all you on the left hand, prepare you for the sentence; I am them an whom you did crucify afresh; I am he whose person you despised, whose Commands you disobeyed, whose Ministers you abused; whose Servants you hated, whose Offers you rejected; and of whom you said, There is no beauty in him that we should desire him. Whatsoever he shall say, this I believe, that Christ's sweet face will be most terrible to the wicked at that day. Oh it will cut them to see him in the judgment-seat whom they basely shut out of doors, preferring a lust before his presence; then will they begin with extremist grief and bitterness of spirit to sigh and say, Oh, he that I look upon, and must look upon, and cannot choose but look upon: he whom I now see sitting on yonder flaming, white, and glorious Throne, is Jesus Christ, the Mighty God, the Prince of Peace, that true Messiah, whose precious blood was poured out as water upon the earth, to save his people from their sins: it is he, yea, the self same he that many a time whiles I lived on earth, invited and wooed me by his faithful Ministers, that besought and entreated me with tears of dearest love, to leave my lusts, and to bid the Devil adieu; that knocked again and again at the door of my heart for entrance, offering himself to be my all-sufficient, and everlasting husband, telling me that if I would but have embraced him, at this time should have been the solemnity of the marriage, and now he would have set an immortal crown of bliss and glory upon my head with his own Almighty hand; but I alas! like a willful desperate wretch forsook my own mercy, judged myself unworthy of everlasting life, and wretchedly and cruelly against my own soul, persecuted all the means which should have sanctified me, and all the Ministers which should have saved me, as instruments in the hands of Christ; and now happy I, if I were an hundred thousand millions of miles distant from this sight of Jesus Christ: oh that these eyes in my head were holes again, as they were but even now when I was rotting, or rotten in the grave! oh that I could turn any way aside from this glorious sight! oh that I were a Stone, or Tree, or Air, or any other thing that wanted eyes! oh that I had no eye within, nor understanding faculty to conceive of Christ, or to know Christ Jesus as my Judge, now ready to bid me go to Hell! certainly these will be the woeful wishes of the wicked, when they shall look on Christ as sitting on his Throne of Judgment.

2. For the Saints, they shall look on them. Indeed they sit so near their Savior, that they cannot look on him, but they must look on them; the Saints are on their Thrones, either in the Throne or about the Throne of Jesus Christ, and the reprobates stand in a direct opposite line to the Saints, so that their eyes cannot be off them; It is said in the parable, that the rich man being in Hell, He lift up his eyes, and saw Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom; but the distance being so great as Heaven and Hell, that cannot be literally understood, but only parabolically; it is otherwise here, for howsoever the separation be already made, yet neither is the sentence, nor execution past upon the reprobates; and indeed as yet, both the Saints and reprobates are in the Air; the one on the right hand, and the other on the left hand of Jesus Christ, and therefore they cannot but have a full view of each other. In the Apocryphal book there is a plain description of this view, Then shall the righteous man stand in great boldness before the face of such as have afflicted him, and made no account of his Labors; and when they see it they shall be troubled with terrible fear, and shall be amazed at the strangeness of his salvation, so far beyond all that they looked for; and they repenting and groaning for anguish of Spirit, shall say within themselves, this is he whom we had sometimes in a derision, and a proverb of reproach; we fools accounted his life madness, and his end to be without honor; how is he numbered *among the children of God, and his lot is amongst the Saints? Here is a sight that will trouble and amaze the wicked, that those who sometimes were their footstools should now be on Thrones; that poor Lazarus who lay at the gates of that certain rich man, should now shine like a Star near the Sun of Righteousness; that they who were reproached, reviled, massacred, murdered by them, should now be their Judges, joining with Jesus Christ to sentence them to Hell. Oh who can conceive the terrible thoughts of these men's hearts! now the world cannot help them, their old companions cannot help them, the Saints neither can, nor will; only the Lord Jesus can; but Oh! there is the soul-killing misery, he will not; Ye Men, and Devils (saith Christ) *joint-heirs of Hell, fit fuel for eternal fire, look on us in our Thrones, time was we could not have a look from you; Christ and Christians were an abhorrency of spirit unto you, you trod us underfoot, but now we are got above you; oh see the vast difference betwixt us and you; look on us, look on me and my Saints! see us on our Thrones, see us glittering in glory; and be confounded and amazed forever.

4. A particular strict account shall be then required, and given. Of what you will say? I Answer—

1. Of sins: Come (will Christ say) *Now confess all your sins before all the world; time was that you consealed your sins, but now every sin shall be laid open before God, Angels, and Men; and now is the black Book of their consciences opened, wherein appears all their sins original and actual; of Omission and Commission. For omissions of duties all those shall be discovered. Christ hungry, and I gave him no meat; Christ thirsty, and I gave him no drink; Christ a stranger, and I lodged him not; Christ naked, and I clothed him not; Christ sick, and in prison, and I visited him not. And for commissions of evils, all those shall be discovered. These and these sins I committed in my child-hood, youth, ripe age, old age: these were my gross sins, Blasphemy, perjury, Idolatry, robbery, drunkenness, uncleanness, profaneness, &c. and these were my less sins, anger, hatred, envy, distrust, impatience, pride, presumption, contention, derision, inconstancy, hypocrisy, &c. Oh the numberless number of evil thoughts, words and deeds that now are laid open. In the black book is not only written all sins done, but all such sins as were intended and purposed to be done; All the projects of the heart, though never acted, must now be discovered. Men little think of this; if I should tell you of such designs that died in your hearts, and never came out to light; you would be now ready to say, Tush, I never did such a thing, I only intended it, or had some thoughts about it, and what then? why then those very thoughts, secrets, purposes, projects shall come to light; or if there be anything more hidden or secret, as the very bent, and frame of your hearts, the very inclinations of your souls to this or that evil, shall then be manifest to all the World. Nay, yet more, such sins, as by the sinners themselves were never took notice of, either before, or at, or after the commission of them, shall this day come out. Conscience is such a kind of private Notary or Secretary, that it keeps notes or records of all acts and deeds, whether you observe them or no; conscience hath the Pen of a ready Writer, and takes in short-hand, and in an illegible character, from your mouths as fast as you speak, and from your hearts as fast as you contrive. Consciencess writing (saith one) *is not now legible; as that which is written with the juice of a Lemmon is not to be read by day-light, but against the sire by night you may read it; so consciencess writing cannot now be read, but in that day when Heaven and Earth are set on fire, this book shall be opened, and the cypher be discovered. Oh what a day will this be, when not a sin committed by any reprobate from the beginning of the world, but now it shall be rehearsed.

2. As an account of all sins, so an account of all temporal gifts which God hath imparted to reprobates, must now be given. Some have the gifts of the world; as riches, honors, places of authority; others have the gifts of the body, as health, strength, beauty, life; others have the gifts of the mind, as understanding, wisdom, policy, learning; now of all these gifts they must give an account. Come you that are rich (saith Christ) render you an account of your stewardship; how have you spent your riches? The like will he say to the honorable, and to those in places of authority; Oh remember you were in authority, and office, and place, but what service did you to me, or my members? you had wisdom, and learning, and knowledge, and understanding conferred upon you, but what good had the Church or Common-Wealth by it? the like will he say to others according to the talents bestowed on them, You excelled in strength, beauty, health of body, length of days; and now tell me, and publish it to all the world, how were these improved? I believe many a sad answer will be given to Christ of these things, riches mis-spent, and health mis-spent, and wisdom, policy, learning, gifts, and parts mis-spent; O consider it! if the Factor after many years spent in foreign Countries, at last returns home without his reckonings, who will not blame him for his negligence? but when his Master calls him to account, and he finds nothing but a bill of expenses, this in courting, that in seasting: who laughs not at so fond a reckoning? Thus many pass the time of their life as a time of mirth, then when they return to their Lord again, behold all their accounts are sins, their profits vanities.

3. I shall add one thing more; not only of gifts Temporal, but of all blessings spiritual, though but tendered, and offered, must all give an account. Oh the sad accounts that many a soul will make of these things! methinks I hear some wicked wretch confessing thus to Christ; True Lord, I lived at such a time when the Sun of the Gospel shone bright in my face; and in such a place where all was Goshen; I lived under such a ministry, who set before me life, and death; many and many a powerful, and searching Sermon have I heard; any one passage whereof (if I had not wickedly and willfully forsaken my own mercy) might have been unto me the beginning of the new Birth, and everlasting bliss. Sometimes in the use of the means I felt stirrings or strong workings in my heart, and then I was fully purposed to have been another man, to have cleaved to Christ, and to have forsook the World; I was almost resolved to have been wholly for God, I was almost persuaded to be a real Christian; Oh what thoughts were in my heart when such a faithful Minister pressed the truth home? methinks every Sermon I heard then, is now a preaching again; methinks I hear still the voice of the Minister, methinks I see still his tears dropping down his cheeks; Oh how fresh is the reproof, admonition, exhortation of such, and such a Preacher now in my mind? oh how earnestly did he entreat me! with what love and tender compassion did he beseech me: how did his bowels yearn over me! how strongly did he convince me, that all was not well with my sin-sick soul! how plainly did he rip up all my sores! and open to me all my secrets, and my whole heart! but alas within a while I made a jest of all, I hardened my heart against all, I stifled all his convictions, I shut my eyes against his discoveries; I cared neither for the Minister, nor anything he said, or did. And yet here is not all, not only the Ministers of Christ, but the Spirit of Christ sometimes speak to my heart; I remember at such a time Christ himself (as it were) condescended, and bowed the Heavens, and came down to entreat me for my souls health; oh the strivings of the Spirit of Christ, as if he had been loath to have took a denial! O Christ, I remember thy words, when thou cryedst to me, open sinner, open thy heart to thy Savior, and I will come in, and sup with thee, and thou with me. Why sinner, are thy lust's better than I? thy carnal pleasures better than I? thy worldly commodities better than I? why sinner, what dost thou mean? how long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? O take pity on thy Jesus! for here I stand, and wait at the door of thy heart, and my head is filled with the dew, and my looks with the drops of the night. But Alas! I resisted Christ and his Spirit; O thou Judge and Savior of all thine Elect, I dealt churlishly with thee, I tired out thy patience, I gave thee a repulse, I told thee I had entertained other lovers, and I would have none of thee; I trod on council, I trampled thy precious blood under my feet; and now I am expecting no other but to eat the fruit of my own way. Now mayst thou accomplish thy Word, because I set at naught all thy counsels, and would none of thy reproof, therefore thou mayst laugh at my calamity, and mock now my fear cometh. Lo, here the confessions of sins. Every thing now comes out, for Christ will have it so, as a preparative to his doom upon them.

5. Christ and his Saints proceed to sentence. First, Christ the chief Judge shall pronounce it, depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels, every word breathes out nothing but fire and brimstone, vengeance and woe; to depart from that glorious presence of Christ were Hell enough, but they must go with a curse; nor only so, but into fire; and that must be everlasting; and therein they shall have no other company or comforters but wicked devils, and they insulting over them with hellish spite and stinging exprobatations.

Give me leave a little to enlarge upon these words. No sooner Christ begins the sentence, Depart from me] but methinks I imagine the reprobates to reply; how? depart from thee? why O Christ, thou art all things, and therefore the loss of thee is the loss of all things; thou art the greatest good; and therefore to be deprived of thee is the greatest evil; thou art the very Centre, and perfect rest of the Soul, and therefore to be pulled from thee is the most cruel separation: we were made by thee, and for thee, O let us never be divided from thee; we were made according to thy Image, O never drive us from our glorious pattern; Away, away (saith Christ) ye have no part in me, or in my merits, never speak, or entreat me anymore, but depart from me. But secondly, they may reply again, if we must depart, and depart from thee, at least give us thy blessing before we go, thou hast great store of blessings to give, and we hope thou hast one yet in store for us, we crave but a small thing, but a blessing. O it is a little one; thou art our Father (witness our Creation) and it is a chief property of a Father to bless his children. No, depart from me ye Cursed, in place of a blessing take the full curse of your Father, you have been most prodigal and disobedient children: you have followed him who had my first curse; and now share ye curses with him, cursed be you in your souls, and in your bodies; and in your thoughts, and in your words, and in the heinousness of your sins, and in the grievousness of your punishment. But thirdly, if we must depart from thee, and depart accursed, yet appoint us some meet and convenient place to go into; Create a fruitful piece of ground, and let a goodly Sun daily shine upon it; let it have sweet and wholesome air, and be stored with fruits, and flowers, of all forms and colors; give us the variety of Creatures for our uses; O if we must go from thee, the source and fountain of heavenly sweetness, and afford us some plenty of earthly pleasures, which may in some sort recompense our pain of loss, speak but the word, and such a place will presently start up, and show itself. No, depart from me ye cursed into fire; though fire naturally burns not Spirits, yet I will lift and elevate this fire above its nature; you have sinned against nature, and I will punish you above nature; Fire? alas that ever we were born! who is able to rest in fire? the very thought of it already burns us. Of all the creatures appointed by God to be the Instruments of revenge, fire and water have the least mercy. But Fourthly, if we must into fire, let the sentence stand but for a very short time; quench the fire quickly, half an hour will seem a great while there; No, depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire; it was kindle by my breath, and it hath this property among other strange qualities, that it is an unquenchable Fire; as long as I am God it shall endure, and ye broyl in it; and when I cease to be happy, then shall ye cease to be miserable. O woe is us! what? to live in a fire perpetually without all end, or hope of end?—Yea Fifthly, allot us then some comforters, whose smooth and gentle words may sweeten our torments, or somewhat dull the most keen edge of our extremity: O let the Angels recreate us with Songs and hymns of thee, and of thy blessedness, that we may hear that sweetly delivered which others fully enjoy: No, no; depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels: they shall be your comforters, they that will triumph in your miseries, they that are your deadly, desperate enemies; they that will tell you by what deceits and by-ways they led you from me, and that will give you every hour new names of scorn and horrible reproach. O sentence not to be endured, and yet never, never must it be reversed. O my brethren, I tremble at the very mentioning of this sentence, and O what will they do on whom it must pass? I beseech you before we pass from it, will you ask but your souls this one question! what, can you dwell with everlasting fire? if you can, you may go on in sin; but if you cannot, why then stop here, and repent of sin: O now say, if this be the effect of sin, Lord pardon what is past, and O give me grace that I may sin no more, as sometimes I have done. Methinks if a temptation should come again for ordinary entertainment, you should fright it away with the remembrance of these powerful words, depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels.

2. The Saints shall judge the very self same judgment, do ye not know that the Saints shall judge the World? that they as well as Christ shall judge the World, is without controversy; And judgment was given to the Saints of the most high. Ye also shall sit upon twelve Thrones judging the twelve Tribes of Israel. Behold, the Lord cometh with twelve thousand of his Saints, to execute judgment upon all. Know ye not that we shall judge the Angels? not only shall we judge the World, but the God of the World; the Principalities and Powers that captive wicked men at their pleasure; even they must be judged by those whom they formerly soyled; so then there is no question but they shall judge.

Only how the Saints shall judge together with Christ, is a very deep question. For my part I am apt to think, that it shall not be directly known, ere it be seen or done. I shall only relate what others say to this point, and so leave you to your liberty of judging what is right.

1. Some say that the Saints shall judge the World by presenting their persons and actions, by comparing their good examples with the evil examples of all the Reprobates; and so, they shall convince and condemn the World. Behold the Lord cometh with Ten thousand of his Saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them; This I conceive to be a truth, yet surely this is not all truth.

2. Others say, that the Saints shall judge the World by way of indicting, impleading, accusing witnessing, &c. And I conceive it may be thus too; the Saints of the Law more especially accusing the breakers of the Law, by the Law. Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father, there is one that accuseth you to the Father, there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust. And the Saints of the Gospel more especially judging the profaners of the Gospel, by the Gospel: in that day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my Gospel. This likewise is truth, but I believe as yet we have not the whole truth.

3. Others say, that the Saints shall judge the World after the manner of exaltation, glorying, and rejoicing to see the vengeance. The Righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance, he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked. But this their exulting being a constant and perpetual act, not for a time, but for eternity, methinks this present act should be yet somewhat more.

4. Others say, that the Saints shall judge the World by way of assension, assent, vote, suffrage, comprobation, and the like subordinate, and conformable acts. And I heard another out of the Altar say, even so Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments. —And after these things, I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Allelujah, salvation, and glory, and honor, and power unto the Lord our God, for true and righteous are his judgments; this certainly is truth, and commonly so received, yet neither is this all truth.

5. Others say, that the Saints shall judge the World (i.e.) Christ in the Saints, and the Saints in Christ. He in them by those Infallible principles of Divine Justice which are imprest in them; and they in him, by those inseparable bounds of union, whereby they wholly relate to him: or he and they together as head and members, the act of the head imputed to the members, and the act of the members acknowledged by the head; his Judiciary Act (especially as from his Mediatorship and Manhood) having a peculiar influence upon them; and their Judiciary act (in a perfect conformity, though not any absolute proportion) having a peculiar reference to him. And methinks those Texts of Mat. 19.28. Jude 14.15. speak there of Christ's, and of the Saints judgment, as of one joint act.

Oh what terror will be to all wicked men? when not only Christ, but all the Saints shall say of them, away with them, away with them, let them be damned. You that are Fathers, it may be that your Children will thus sentence you, I remember when the Jews told Christ, that he cast out Devils through Belzebug the Prince of Devils, he answered, If I through Belzebug cast out Devils, by whom do your Children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges. They liked well enough of the Miracles of their Children who were the Disciples of Christ, but they could not endure them in Christ; and therefore he tells them, that their Children, whom God hath converted, and to whom he had given power to do the same works as he did, even they should be their judges to Condemn them. And so it may be with you, if any of your Children be converted to the Lord, and you remain still in a natural estate, your very Children shall be your judges, and condemn you to Hell. But of that anon.

6. In this doom which Christ and his Saints shall pass on Reprobates, our Savior tells us of some reasonings betwixt him and them; I was an hungered (saith Christ) and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink, &c.—Then shall they answer, Lord, when saw we thee hungry, or a thirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? and then shall he answer them, verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. As if Christ should have said, time was that I was under reproach, misery, calamity, necessity; I lay at your doors like Lazarus full of sores, and as I thought nothing too, much for you, so I expected also something from you; but oh cruelty to see thy Christ an hungered and not to feed him? to see thy Christ a thirst, and not to cool, or quench his thirst? to see thy Christ a stranger, and not to give him a nights lodging? to see thy Christ naked, and not to cover him with a garment, who would gladly have covered thee with the robe of righteousness, the garment of Salvation? O monstrous inhumane heart? O prodigious wretch! who among the Heathens ever dealt thus with their Idols? have any of the Nations starved their God's, turned them out of doors? and must I only be slighted? away Reprobates! you had no mercy on me, and now I laugh at your calamity: surely he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shown no mercy; They stand wondering at this, and cannot remember that ever they saw Christ in such a condition; Why Lord, (say they) when saw we thee an hungered, or thirsty, or naked? art thou not he that rose again from the dead, and ascended on high, and ever since hast been exalted above the highest Cherubims, a name being given thee above every name, at which name to this day, but especially now on this day, every knee doth bow of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; how then could we see thee in such a condition? is not this thy second coming in glory? and were we alive at thy first coming in humility? how can this be? oh how shouldst thou charge us with unkindness to thyself? surely if we had known thee in need, we would have given thee of thy own, thou shouldst never have wanted what things we enjoyed, but thou shouldst have commanded both us and them. To which our Savior replies, O deceitful, ignorant, and stupid souls! have you no better learned Christ than so? am not I Head of the Church, and can the Head be without Members? Verily, if you had loved, relieved, or done good to them, you had done so to me; but in being uncharitable to them, you were no less unto me. Never say you would have been thus, and thus kind to Christ, whiles you were unkind to Christians: herein lies the deceitfulness of your hearts; O they are deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, who can know them? but I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give to every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings; In as much as ye did it not to one of the least of my members, ye did it not to me, and therefore get you down into Hell, and get you out of my presence; take them Devils, away with them Angels to the Devil and his Angels forever.

These are the reasonings betwixt Christ and Reprobates; and if so, may we not imagine the like between Saints and Reprobates? is there not the same reason of reasoning betwixt them and the inferior Judges, as betwixt them and the supreme Judge? for my part I cannot conceive, but if we admit of such disputes betwixt Christ and them, well may there be the like disputes, arguings, and reasonings betwixt Saints and them: for they had on earth more familiarity, converse, and communion together; some of them it may be, were in near and dear relations to each other; and now that one shall judge the other to eternal flames, oh what passages will be betwixt them? I shall instance in our nearest relations upon earth, as of Masters and Servants, Parents, and Children, Husbands, and Wives, Ministers and People; no question but in these very relations some shall judge, and others be judged; our Savior tells us, There shall be two men in one bed, the one shall be taken, the other shall be left; two women shall be grinding at one Mill, the one shall be taken, and the other left; two men shall be together in the Field, the one shall be taken, and the other left; wherein the Lord seems to show that God's Election doth extend itself to all sorts of persons, and separates the most. They shall not be saved by Families, as in Noah's time, but one frie• shall be taken by Christ into Heaven, and another left for the Devil to carry into Hell. Give me leave but to enlarge on those reasonings, or discourses that we may imagine will be now betwixt these several relations. As—

1. Betwixt Master and Servant; if the Master be the Saint, and his Servant the Reprobate, then shall the Master say, O thou wicked Servant, how many a time did I call on thee to duty? how often have I told thee that I would have thee to be God's Servant as well as mine? how often came that word to thy ears; Servants obey your Masters in all things according to the flesh, not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart, fearing God? how often was that precious Word laid close to thy conscience, He that doth wrong, shall receive for the wrong which he doth; but in doing service to me as to the Lord, thou shouldst of the Lord receive the reward of the Inheritance, for in such service thou didst serve the Lord Christ? but thou wouldst not be warned, and now thou art justly condemned; I say Amen to Christ's Sentence; get thee down to Hell, and there serve Satan, and receive his wages in fire and Brimstone forever.—Or if the Servant be the Saint, and his Master the Reprobate, then shall the Servant say, O my quondam Master, how many a time hast thou tyrannized it over me? how didst thou use me, or abuse me to serve thy own lusts and corruptions? many a time I had strong desires to wait upon God in the use of public and private Ordinances; this morning, and that evening, I would have served my Master the Lord Jesus Christ, but thou wouldst not spare me one hours time for prayer, reading, meditation, &c. I was ever faithful in thy service, going to bed late and rising early; The drought consumed me by day, and the frost by night, and my sleep many a time departed from mine eyes; surely God hath seen my affliction, and the labor of my hands, and now he hath rebuked thee: dost thou not observe the admirable justice and righteousness of Christ in the sentences past on us both? remember that thou in thy life-time received thy good things, and I received evil things; but now I am comforted, and thou must be tormented. I now serve a better Master; after my weeks work with thee, I shall keep a perpetual Sabbath with God; but go thou with thy old companions from thy glorious Mansion to a loathsome dungeon; from thy table of surfeit, to a table of vengeance; from thy faithful Servants, to afflicting Spirits; from thy bed of doun, to a bed of fire; from soft linen and silken coverings, to wish a rock for thy pillow, and a mountain for thy coverlet.

2. Betwixt Parent and Child; if the Parent be the Saint, and the Child the Reprobate; then shall the Parent say, O thou wicked, rebellious Son! or O thou wicked, rebellious, and disobedient daughter! it is I that begot thee, or that brought thee forth; that during thy Infancy, laid thee in my bosom, and dandled thee on my knee, and carried thee in my arms, and set thee as a seal upon my heart; that during thy minority fed thee, and appareled thee and trained thee up in manners, learning a particular calling, and especially in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and then when I saw thy untowardness of spirit, and thy breakings out into things forbidden by God and man, O the admonitions, reprehensions, corrections! O the many thousands of warnings that I gave thee of this day, and of the wrath to come! and yet thou wentest on in thy stubbornness, till thou becamest many and many a time a grief of mind, a bitterness of spirit unto me: and then how often did I mind thee of thy duty. Children obey your Parents in all things. Honor thy Father and Mother, which is the first Commandment with promise. The eye that mocketh his Father, and despiseth to obey his Mother, the Ravens of the Vally shall pick it out, and the young Eagles shall eat it. But alas, all these expressions made no saving impression on thy hardened heart, thy brow was Brass, and thy sinew of Iron, thou wast ever stiff-necked, and now thou art justly damned; I cannot but approve of Christ's judgment upon thee; though thou camest out of my bowels, yet now I have no pity, no bowels of compassion towards thee; the glory of God hath so swallowed up all my natural affections, that I cannot but laugh at thy calamity, and joy in thy damnation; I gave thee a body, and God himself gave thee a Soul; but now let the Devils have both, and torment them in Hell; be gone! I shall never see thee again—Or if the Child be the Saint, and the Parent the Reprobate, then shall the Child say, O unworthy Parent; unworthy of everlasting life! I had my natural being from thee, but my Spiritual being was from the Lord; if I had followed thy steps, I had been everlastingly damned; did I not know thy ignorance, thy unbelief, thy worldliness, thy covetousness, thy pride, thy malice, thy lust, thy lukewarmness, thy impatiency, thy discontentment, thy vain-glory, thyself-love; didst not thou often check me for my forwardness, and zeal, and holiness in Religion? didst not thou ask me, what, art thou wiser than the rest of the neighbor-hood? are there not many gray hairs amongst us, whose wisdom and experience thou hast not yet attained? and canst not thou walk on soberly towards heaven, and either do as the most, or keep pace with the wisest? what, have any of the Rulers, or of the Pharisees believed on Christ? oh I shall ever remember to the praise and glory of Christ, what discouragements I had, and yet how the Lord plucked me as a fire-brand out of the fire; and now hath the Lord set me on the Throne to judge thee according to thy demerits; and therefore I join with him, who is the Father of Spirits, against the Father of my flesh; depart, go to the God's whom thou hast served, and see if they will help thee in the day of thy calamity.

3. Betwixt Husband and Wife; now if the Husband be the Saint, and the Wife the Reprobate, then shall the Husband say; Thou art she whom I knew in the flesh, whom I dearly affected with my heart and soul; whom I nourished and cherished as my own body; thou art she that was the Wife of my bosom, as near and dear to me as my heart in my bosom; thou wast my companion, my yoke-fellow, and my very delight: but oh! I could never rule thee, lead thee, guide thee in the way of life, in the path that is called holy: many a time have I wooed, sued, and sought to gain thy soul to that blessed Bridegroom, the Lord Jesus Christ, many a time have I prayed with thee, and for thee; many a time have I stirred thee up to hear the Word, to wait upon God in the use of all means public and private; and instead of embraces, or yieldings to these blessed motions, I have met with contentions and jars, as a continual dropping in a very rainy day; but death hath dissolved that knot, so that now I am no more thy Husband; this is *the day of separation, and I shall no more consort with thee; at the Resurrection there is no use of Marriage, but now I am to live as an Angel in Heaven; and because thou wouldst not draw with me in Christ's yoke, now therefore adue forever and ever; we shall never more lie in one bed, or sit at one board, or walk in one Field, or grind at one mill; thou hast lost me, and thou hast lost Jesus Christ, two husbands in one day; go now and take thy choice in Hell! thou art free from us, but thou shalt be bound there with indissoluble bonds to the Devil and his Angels—Or if the Wife be the Saint, and the Husband the Reprobate, then shall the Wife say; Thou art he who I looked upon as my second-self, my head, my governor, my helper, my husband; for whom I was willing to forsake my native home, Fathers house, dear Relations, of Father, Mother, Brother, Sister, and many comforts in that kind; and I expected to have found new matter, and a continued influence of comfort, and delight in a marriage-state; but oh the vexations of Spirit! hadst thou not almost drawn me away from Jesus Christ? was I not forced through many provocations sometimes to break out and say, Surely a bloody husband art thou to me? many a time I cried out, O my Husband when wilt thou set up the rich and royal trade of grace in thy Family? when wilt thou exercise prayer, reading, catechizing, conference, days of humiliation, and other household holy duties? oh for doing something to assure our souls of meeting together hereafter in heaven! But alas! it would not be; and now see the effect: here I stand like a Queen, deckit and adorned with cloth of Gold, with raiment of needle-work, with the white robe of Christ's righteousness; so that the King of Heaven greatly desires my beauty, and my soul is this day married to Christ; I acknowledge him, and no other Husband in the world; and for thee who refused to join with me in the worship of God, now God hath refused thee: fare well, or fare ill forever.*

4. Betwixt Minister and some of his people at least: if the people be as so many Saints, and the Minister the Reprobate, then shall the people say: O thou art the man that undertookst that high and mighty calling of feeding souls with the Word of life; but now are thy sins written in thy fore-head, for either thou run'st before thou wast sent, or being sent, thou hast been exceeding negligent in the gift that was in thee: Didst not thou prophesy in Baal, and cause God's people to err? didst thou not studiously and mainly seek for the Fleece, not regarding respectively the Flock? didst not thou strengthen the hands of evil-doers in Preaching peace, peace to wicked men? wast thou not profane, and wicked, and loose in thy life, and by that means ledst many thousands to hell! O thou bloody Butcher of Souls; hadst thou been faithful in thy Ministry, well might those damned Companions about thee have escaped the flames! but they are doomed to death, and now thou mayest hear their cries, and grievous groans, and complaints against thee, this was the man set over us to give us the bread of Life, but oh Christ, did he not fail us? did he not feed us with unprofitable matter, fables, conceits, airy sentences, rather than anything tending to godly edifying, which is in faith? did not our tongues, and the tongues of our Children stick to the roof of our mouths in calling and crying for bread, for the bread of life, and he would not pity us? we gave him the tenths which thou appointed, but he gave not us thy truth, which thou didst command him; why Lord Christ, thou Judge of all the world, didst not thou bid him feed, feed, feed? didst thou not bid him feed the flock committed to his charge? didst not bid him preach the word, be instant in season, and out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering? and notwithstanding all thy commands, did he not miserably starve us? instead of feeding us unto salvation, hath he not starved many thousands of us to our destruction. O Christ, thou that art the judge of Nations, and the revenger of blood! reward thou this man, as he hath rewarded us; he led us in the ways of wickedness, and (if it must be so) let him be our ring-leader to Hell; and upon his soul once buried in Hell, let this be the Epitaph, the price of blood, the price of blood; if thou didst hear the blood of Abel, being but one man, forget not the blood of many, now thou art judging the earth. Why thus do the damned cry about thine ears; and as for us, (say the Saints) who were once thy people, but now thy Judges, we consent to their cry, and to our Savior's doom, go ye cursed into everlasting fire.

Men, Brethren, and Fathers, I begin thus with the Ministers doom, that you may see I would deal impartially; and verily I believe it, if our case come to this, we of the Ministry shall be in a thousand times worse condition than any of you; for besides the horror due to the guilt of our own souls, all the blood of those souls who have perished under our Ministry, through our default, will be laid to our charge; little do you know, or consider the burden that lies upon us, a burden able to make the shoulders of the most mighty Angel in heaven to shrink under it. Chrysostom was a glorious Saint, yet casting his eye upon one only Text in the Bible, Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves, for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, He professeth that the terror of this Text made his heart tremble. Surely it is enough to make our hearts tremble, if we seriously weigh our terrible doom, in case that we should miscarry.

But now on the other side, if the Minister be the Elect, and sentenced to salvation; and many of his people prove no better than Reprobates, then shall the Minister say, O miserable souls, now you feel the truth of those comminations, and curses which we opened and unfolded, and discovered to you out of God's Word! We dealt plainly with you, that the unrighteous should not inherit the Kingdom of God: we advised you again and again, be not deceived, neither Fornicators, nor Idolaters, nor Adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor Thieves, nor Covetuous, nor Drunkards, nor Revilers, nor Extortioners, shall inherit the Kingdom of God: and such were you, and notwithstanding all our threats, warnings, intreatings, beseechings, thus ye lived, and thus ye died; and there is the issue, Christ now hath doomed you to hell, and here am I set on a throne to judge your souls; for the Saints shall judge the World as well as Christ himself; Oh what shall I do? Oh my bowels, my bowels! here's a case beyond all the former, each of them according to their relations judge another; but here's a multitude, not one, or two, or ten, or an hundred, but many hundreds, or thousands, according to the number of such and such Congregations, where I have preached.

In Christ's reasonings with the wicked we have heard of his sayings, and their answers, and of his replications to their answers, much said on both sides to and again; I may suppose the like here. O what shall I do (says the Minister) what doom shall I pass on this Assembly of Reprobates? can I absolve them whom the righteous God hath condemned? can I say, come along with me to heaven, now Christ hath said, go ye cursed into hell? and oh now shall I turn my speech from my wonted wooing, beseeching, entreating, exhorting, to a direct dooming, damning, condemning these souls to the pit of hell? sometimes indeed I opened to these souls the armoury of God's wrath. I thundered and lightened in their Congregations; but my design was to fright them out of hell-fire, and knowing the terrors of the Lord to have persuaded them towards heaven, and heavenly things; but now if I speak condemnation, no sooner shall I speak, but their souls will sink down to hell; O miserable souls, what shall I say? or what can you say for yourselves? Then shall they answer; Oh Sir, do not you aggravate the torment by your condemnation; the weight of Christ's doom is already unsupportable, but will you add more weight? Why remember, we are some of us (it may be) of your flesh and blood; many a time you told us that you unfeignedly loved us; and that we were dearer to you than all worldly enjoyments; many a time you told us that you were willing to spend yourself for us, as the candle that burns itself to give others light; you were pleased to bestow your prayers, tears, sighs, groans for our souls; your very Books and Writings were high expressions, and abiding monuments of your dear love to us; you weighed not your strength and spirits in comparison of our souls; and shall this fair comical scean end in a dismal, doleful, bloody Tragedy? would you do or suffer anything to save us, and will you now condemn us? Oh forbear!

Ah no, (saith the Minister) I cannot forbear; all is true that you say, I loved you dearly, and I was willing to spend, or to be spent for you; but this aggravates the more; ah my travail, pains, books, writings, words, fears, sighs, groans are in one volume together, and this volume has been opened this day, and now is the question put; what have you profited by all my words, prayers, tears, sighs, and groans? is not all lost? and are not your souls lost? and now do you tell me of love? what, did I ever love you more than Christ loved you? were the drops of my tears to be compared with the showers of his blood? were my pains for you equal with the pains of his Cross? and hath he not condemned you to hell? and shall not I be like-minded to Jesus Christ? Surely the Lord's will must be my will; he hath already judged you, and he will make me to judge you; so far am I from pitying you, that if he that formed you will show you no mercy, if he that saves me, and all the Elect people of God, will not save you, can I pity you, or save you, or descent from Jesus in his sentence upon you? speak no more of flesh, and blood, of labors, of love, Christ's Sentence must stand, and as I am a member of Christ, and a Minister of Christ, I cannot but approve of it, and so judge you to hell.

Why then (say Reprobates) we will curse thee, and blaspheme Jesus Christ in hell forever; cursed be the time that ever we heard of Jesus Christ, or that ever we knew thee, or thy Ministry; do not thy Sermons send us deeper into hell? had it not been easier for us at this day of judgment if we had lived in Tyre and Sydon, where the Gospel never was Preached? didst not thou harden our hearts in such and such Sermons, when the Word came home? didst not thou deny us the seals which might have been for confirmation of our souls salvation? didst thou not estrange thyself from us in respect of any inward, intimate, and familiar society, which thou affordest to others? doth not the event plainly show, that all thy tears, prayers, words, and works, as in reference to us, were hypocrisy, flattery, deceit, dissimulation? Oh cursed be the day that ever we lived under such a Ministry, or that ever we heard of Jesus Christ.

Nay then (saith the Minister) it is time for us to part; such were your invectives on earth, and now they are, and will be your language in Hell; but have I not answered these cavils many a time? have I not told you that the Word would harden some, and soften others, the fault being in yourselves? have I not cleared it that the seals are not to be set upon blanks, and that confirmation could not be without a work of conversion to lead it? and were we not commanded in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to withdraw ourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly? did not the wise man tell us? he that toucheth pitch shall be defiled therewith, and he that hath fellowship with a proud man shall be like unto him? can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burnt? can a man go upon hot coals, and his feet be not burnt? as for other cavils, the Lord be judge betwixt you and us; nay the Lord hath been Judge betwixt you and us; lo here we stand on the right hand of Christ, so, here we sit on our Throne to judge you, and that world of wicked men and Angels; let Christ be glorious, and let his sentence stand, and let that word of Judgment never be reversed; he that loveth cursing, let it come upon him; and he that clotheth himself with cursing as with a garment, let it come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones? no more, but adieu souls, adieu Reprobates, adieu forever; you must descend, but we must ascend. Go you to Hell, whiles we mount upwards to Heaven and Glory.

At this last word, down they go, the evil Angels falling like lightning, and evil men hailed, and pulled down with them from the presence of God, and Christ, and Angels, and all the blessed ones; even from their fathers, mothers, wives, husbands, children, ministers, servants, lovers, friends, acquaintance; who shall then justly and deservedly abandon them with all detestation and derision; and forgetting all nearness, and dearest obligations of nature, neighbourhood, alliance, anything, will rejoice in the execution of divine justice. Oh the shrieks, and horrid cries that now they make, filling the air as they go! Oh the wailings and wringing of hands! Oh the desperate roarings! Oh the hideous yellings, filling heaven, and earth, and hell! But I shall follow them no further, no sooner do they fall into the bottomless pit, but presently it shuts her mouth upon them, and there I must leave them.

SECT. VII. Of Christ and his Saints going up into heaven, and of the end of this World.

7. FOR Christ and his Saints going up into heaven, and so for the end of this world: no sooner are the Reprobates gone to their place, but the Saints ascend; now Christ ariseth from his judgment-seat, and with all the glorious company of heaven, he marches towards the heaven of heavens. Oh what a comely march is this? what songs of triumph are here sung and warbled? Christ leads the way, the Cherubims attend, the Seraphims wait on, Angels, Arch-angels, Principalities, Powers, Patriarchs, Prophets, Priests, Evangelists, Martyrs, Professors, and Confessors of God's Law and Gospel following, attend the Judge, and King of Glory; singing with melody, as never ear hath heard, shining with Majesty as never eye hath seen, rejoicing without measure as never heart conceived. O blessed train of Soldiers! O goodly Troop of Captains! each one doth bear a palm of Victory in his hand, each one doth wear a Crown of Glory upon his head; the Church Militant is now Triumphant; with a final overthrow have they conquered Devils, Death, and Hell; and now must they enjoy God, Life, and Heaven; sometimes I have with much wonder and admiration beheld some Regiments passing our streets; but had I seen those Roman Armies when they returned Victors, and made their solemn Triumphs in the streets of Rome, oh then how should I have then admired? never was the like sight to this of Christ and his Army in this World. O the comely march they make, through the sky, and through the Orbs, and through all the Heavens, till they come to the Heaven of Heavens! were ever so many glistering Suns together in one day? was ever so many glories together on this side the Kingdom of glory? not to speak of Christ, or his Angels, O who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the Moon, clear as the Sun, and terrible as an Army with Banners? are not in the head of these Regiments Adam, and Abel, and Noah, and Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob; and all the Patriarchs and all the Prophets, and all the Apostles? And (if thou art a Saint that readest this) art not thou one Son appointed by God amongst the rest to follow Christ? here's enough to fill thy heart with joy beforehand; as sure as yond Sun now shines in the Firmament shalt thou that believest pass by that Sun in its very orb, and by reason of thy glory it shall lose it shine? oh then what spreading of beauty and brightness will be in the heavens as all the Saints go along! what lumps of darkness shall those glittering Stars appear to be, when all the Saints of God shall enter into their several orbs and spheres? and thus as they march along higher, and higher, till they come to the highest, at last heaven opens unto them, and the Saints enter their Masters joy; what is there done at their first entrance, I shall discover another time; only for a while let us look behind us, and see what becomes of this nether World.

No sooner Christ and his company in the Empyrean heaven, but presently this whole world is set on fire; To this profane Authors seem to assent, As,

1. Philosophers, especially the Stoics were of this mind. Humor primordium, exitus ignis, said Seneca: Moisture was the beginning, and fire shall be the end of this World. And speaking of the Sun, Moon, and Stars; mark (says he) whatsoever now shines in comely and decent order, shall at last burn together in one fire.

2. The Poets grant this; Lucan speaking of those whom Caesar left unburned at the Battle of Pharsalia; Hos Caesar populos si nunc non urserit ignis, uret cum terris. If fire shall not now burn these, when Heaven and Earth, and all shall burn, then must they burn.—Ovid in like manner, Esse quoque in fatis—quo mare, quo tellus—ardeat. A time shall come, when Sea, and earth, and all the frame of this great World shall be consumed in flame.

3. The *Sybill*s grant this, to which the Roman missal seems to allude, joining them with the Prophet David, though I know not by what warrant. Dies ira, dies illa, solvet saeculum in favilla, teste David cum Sybilla.

A day of Wrath, a day of fire,

So David with the *Sybill*s doth conspire.

But to wave all these, one Text of Scripture is to me more than all these. 2 Pet. 3.10. The Heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. Hence all our Divines agree, that a fire shall seize on the Universe; only some difference is amongst Divines, whether the World shall be wholly annihilated, or renewed by fire? Jerome and Augustine, and many after them say, the end of this fire is for purifying and refining of the Heaven, and Earth; for all corruptible qualities shall be burnt out of them, but they in their substance shall remain still: if we ask them, to what end shall this nether world be renewed? some say for an habitacle of the restored Beasts; others for a fitter accommodation of men, and the glorified Saints; others for a perpetual Monument of God's Power and Glory. Polanus and some of our Moderns are of Opinion, that These Heavens and this Earth when purified with those fires, and super-invested with new endowments, they shall be the everlasting habitations of the blessed Saints. But on the contrary, others are of the other opinion, that all the World with all the parts and works (except Men, Angles and Devils, Heaven, and Hell, the two mansions for the saved and damned) shall be totally and finally dissolved and annihilated. And of this opinion were Hilary, Clement, and all the ancients before Jerome; and of our Moderns not a few. For my part I rather incline this way, because of the many Scriptures that are so express, I shall only mention these.—Man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more.—Of old thou hast laid the foundations of the Earth, and the Heavens are the works of thy hands, they shall perish, but thou shalt endure. All the hosts of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heaven shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all the host shall fall down as the leaf falleth from the Vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree. To which prophesy John seems to allude, And the heavens departed as a scrawl when it is rolled together, and every Mountain and Island were moved out of their places. Again, heaven and earth shall pass away (saith Christ) but my Word shall not pass away—The day of the Lord will come as a Thief in the night, in the which the Heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the Elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burnt up.—And the world passeth away, and the lusts thereof; but he that doth the will of God abideth forever.—and I saw a great white Throne, and him that sate on it from whose face the earth and heaven fled away, and they was found no place for them. Now I would demand, whether being no more, as Job; and perishing, as David; and rolling together, and falling down like a withered leaf, as Isaiah; and passing away, as our Savior, and Peter; and flying away, as John; do not include to utter abolition? If to these Scriptures I should add one reason, I would argue from the end of the Worlds Creation; was it not partly for the glory of God? and partly for the use of man? now for the glory of God, the manifestation of it is occasioned by the manifestation of the world unto man; if man therefore should be removed out of the world, and no creature in it be capable of such a manifestation, what would become of his glory? And for the use of man, that is either to supply his necessity in matter of diet, physic, building, apparel; or for his instruction, direction, recreation, comfort, delight; now when he shall attain that blessed estate of enjoying God, and seeing God face to face, these ends or the like must needs be frustrate. This argument is weighty, and we need no more. Only we shall hear an Antagonist's objections and give them their answers, and so conclude.

The Texts more especially objected against this opinion, are two; the first is that in Rom. 8.21. The creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the Sons of God: here (say the•) is an earnest expectation, attributed to brute Creatures, that they shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the Children of God. But I answer, that no immortal being of the brute creatures is here promised, but only a simple deliverance and dismissal from the servitude they were in, to ungrateful men. The Birds, Beasts, and Fishes, do now suffer for our diet; Horses, Mules, and beasts of that nature do now groan under the burdens of our pleasures, or necessities; their annihilation therefore to them must needs be a kind of deliverance; and at last they shall be delivered at the time of the glorious liberty of the Sons of God; the Text will bear it thus. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 pro 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , The Creature shall be delivered by the glorious liberty of the Sons of God. (i.e.) When such a deliverance comes to men, these shall be freed from their servitude by being not at all, having done all the business for which they were ordained, or created.

The second Text is that in 2 Pet. 3.13. We look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth Righteousness. These words (say some) imply a purging, rather than abolishing; a taking off the corrupt qualities only, not the substance. But I am of another mind, and if I must give my sense of the place, I say—

1. Negatively that by new heavens and new earth, is not meant renewed heavens and earth; is it not punctually in the seventh verse, that the heavens and the earth which are now, are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment? and doth he not descend unto particulars in the tenth verse, that the heavens which are now, shall pass away with a great noise? that the Elements shall melt with fervent heat? and that the earth also, and the works therein shall be burnt up? and doth he not infer thereupon in the eleventh and twelfth verses, that all these things shall be dissolved? and in the thirteenth verse, that we are therefore to look for new heavens, and a new earth? dissolution mends not a fabric, but destroys it; how then should that which is dissolved be said to be reserved, and let stand? surely if Peter had thought of this refining only, some words of his would have intimated so much. The end of these creatures was for man's use, and man using them no more, to what end should they be reserved? to say for a monument of what hath been; or for the habitation of the Saints; or for an out-let for the Saints, descending sometimes from the highest heavens to solace themselves here below; are but groundless surmises, and deserve no answer at all.

2. Positively, by new heavens, and a new earth, is meant the heaven of heavens, and place of glory. Now these heavens are termed new, not in regard of their new making, but of our new taking possession of them for our new habitation; and they are called heavens and earth, because they come instead of that heavenly covering, and that earthly habitation which we now enjoy; so that the Text may well bear this paraphrase, we look for new heavens (i.e.) the supreme court of God's presence, and a new earth, (i.e.) a new habitation for us; which shall infinitely exceed the commodities and happiness of these heavens and earth which we now enjoy, thus John in his Revelations. And I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven, and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more Sea. This new heaven, and new earth is the place or habitation prepared for the blessed Saints and people of God. A new heaven, where the Moon is more glorious than our Son, and the Sun as glorious as he that made it, for it is he himself, the Son of God, the Son of righteousness, the Son of Glory; a new earth, where all their waters are milk, and all their milk honey; where all their grass is corn, and all their corn is Manna; where all their glebe and clods of earth are Gold, and all their Gold of innumerable Carats; where all their minutes are ages, and all their ages Eternity; where everything is every minute in the highest exaltation as good as can be. Of these new heavens, and this new earth, I can never say enough, not know enough, till I come there to inhabit it. Something only we shall discover of it in our next Sections; for now are the Saints entered in with Jesus Christ.

Only one word of use; Christians! what's the matter that we are so busy about this world? why look about you, not one of these visible objects shall that day remain or have a being; those houses wherein we dwell, these Temples wherein we meet, this Town, this Country, this Isle, and the Seas and waters that surround it, shall be all on fire, and consume to nothing; the Sea shall be no more, and time shall be no more, or if we look higher, yond Sun, and Moon, and Star, shall be no more; that glorious Heaven which rolls over our heads, shall be rolled together as a scrol, and all the host shall fall down as a leaf falleth from the Vine, and as a falling Fig from the Fig-Tree:—the heavens shall vanish away like smoke (saith Isaiah) comminuentur in nihilum (as Jerome reads it) they shall be battered into nothing. Alas! alas! what do we toiling all the day (it may be all our life) for a little of this little, almost nothing—earth? you that have an hundred, or two hundred, or a thousand Acres, if every acre were a Kingdom, all will be at last burnt up; so that none shall say here was Preston, or here was London, or here was England, or here was Europe, or here was the Globe of Earth on which men trod: let others boast as they will of their inheritances, but Lord give me an inheritance above all these visibles; heaven shall remain, when earth shall vanish; that Empyrean Heaven, those seats of Saints, those mansions above, prepared by Jesus Christ shall never end, but for my riches, lands, possessions moveables, goods, real or personal, they will end in smoke, in nothing; what? wilt thou set thine eyes upon a thing that is not? upon this the primitive Christians took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, it was but a loss a little before the time, and they knew in themselves that they had in heaven a better, and an enduring substance. O let this be our care! here we have no abiding City, but O let's seek one to come, even that one that will abide forever and ever, Amen.

SECT. VIII. Of Christ's surrendering and delivering up the Kingdom to God, even the Father.

8. FOR Christ's surrendering and delivering up the Kingdom to God, even the Father, no sooner is he in heaven but these things follow.—

1. He presents the Elect unto his Father, of this the Apostle speaks, you hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable, and unprovable in his sight; to this end Christ died that he might wash us and cleanse us by his blood, and then that he might present us without spot unto his Father. We may imagine Christ as going to his Father with his bride in his hand, and saying thus, O my Father, here is my Church, my Spouse, my Queen; here are the Saints concerning whom I covenanted with thee from Eternity, concerning whom I went down from heaven, and died on earth, and ascending up I have interceded these many hundred years; concerning whom I went down to Judge the World, and having sentenced them to life eternal, I now bring them in my hand to give them the possession of thyself. These are they whom thou gavest me in the beginning of the World, and now I restore them to thyself at the end of the World, for they are thine. Thus he presents them to his Father. Indeed we read that Christ presents the Saints to himself, as well as to his Father, Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it,—that he might present it to himself, a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle; but this I take it was done before; when first a Soul believes, it is contracted to Christ, when the soul is sentenced to glory, then is the solemnity, and consummation of the Marriage, then doth Christ present the Soul to himself; and I know not but that the Ministers of Christ may have a part in this matter, for I have espoused you to one husband (said Paul to his Corinthians) that I may present you as a chaste Virgin to Christ.

And after this when Christ takes the bride home, brings her into Heaven, and leads her by the hand into his Fathers presence; then is his last presentation, then he presents her faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy. The word signifies leaping, springing, exalting joy: O what springing, leaping, exalting is in heaven, when Christ takes the hand of his Bride and gives her into the hand of his Father; q. d. O my Father, see what a number I have brought home to thee; thou knowest what I have done, and what I have suffered, and what offices I have gone through, to bring these hither; and now my Mediatorship is done, I resign all my charge to thee again; see what a goodly Troop, what a noble Army I have brought thee home, why all these are mine, and all mine are thine, and all thine are mine, and I am glorified in them; all those that thou gavest me, I have kept, and none of them is lost; see here is Adam, and Abel, and Noah, and Sem, and every Saint from the beginning to the end of the World, the Nuptial between them and me is solemnized? and whither should I lead them but to my Father's house, and into my Father's presence? I have already pronounced them blessed, and the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one, I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one. Here take them from mine hands, now give them a welcome into glory, and let them know that thou hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

2. He presents all his Commissions to his Father, as he is a Mediator (at least by Destination) from all Eternity; were not the Saints chosen in Christ before the foundation of the World? then was he a Mediator in the business of Election, and then was he Predestinated to be a Mediator of Reconciliation. I was set up from Everlasting, (i.e.) I was appointed and designed to be a Mediator from all Eternity. Howsoever he was a Mediator virtually and inchoatively from the Fall of Adam; then did he undertake that great Negotiation of reconciling God to man, and man to God; and actually he was a Mediator after his Incarnation; for then was he manifested in the flesh, then was he manifested to be what before he was, then did he act that part visibly upon earth, which before he had acted secretly and invisibly in heaven; then he entered upon the work of his active and passive obedience; then he discharged his Prophetical and Priestly office here on Earth, which having done, then he entered upon his Kingly Administration in Heaven. Now as to this work he was called by God (him hath God the Father sealed; it pleased the Father by him to reconcile all things to himself. And as to these offices severally he had Commission from God, (the Lord hath annointed me to Preach good tidings unto the meek; and the Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, thou art a Priest forever; and the Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool.) So now he comes with all his Commissions in his hand, and he delivers them all up unto his Father again. In this case it is with Christ as with some General, whom the King sends forth with Regal Authority to the War, who having subdued the Enemy, he returns in Triumph, and all being finished he makes a surrender of his place; thus Christ having discharged all his offices imposed on him, now the work is finished, he leaves his function by delivering up his Commissions to his Father. In Heaven there is no need of Sun or Moon, that is, as some interpret, there is no need of Preaching, or Propheying; of the Word or Sacraments, for the Lamb is the light thereof, Christ is the only means of all the communication that the Elect there shall have; and as for his Regal Office, the Apostle is express, then shall he deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father. Only here is the question, how is Christ said to resign his Kingdom to God the Father? for saith not the Scripture, that Christ's Kingdom shall have no end? and that Christ's Throne is forever and ever? for answer, I see no contradiction but that Christ may both resign his Kingdom, and yet reserve it. See a like case, All Power, saith Christ, in heaven and earth is given to me of my Father: shall we say now that the Father himself was quite stripped of it? no; but as the Kingdom which the Father gave the Son is nevertheless called the Father's Kingdom, or the Kingdom of God; so Christ shall return it, yet retain it also. Two things (we say) are contained in the Term of Reign, sci. Dominion, and Execution; to wear the Crown, and to bear the Scepter: now Christ in the former sense shall reign forever, the honor of dominion and of wearing the Crown he shall never resign up to his Father, for his Father's Throne disturbs not his, there are both their Thrones at once, Rev. 7.11. but the functions of a King, to sit in Judgment, to reward deservers, to punish evil-doers, to rescue the oppressed, to fight with the enemy, Christ in this sense shall cease to reign, and shall deliver up the Kingdom to his Father.

More particularly, Christ is said to deliver up the Kingdom in three respects.

1. Because he ceaseth to execute that Authority, which nevertheless he hath; as a Judge that goeth from the Bench is a Judge still, although he giveth no judgment, but employeth his time about other occasions; so Christ is said to resign his place, not that his Authority is subject to Diminution, but in that he makes no show; for when his enemies are all put under, there is no need that anymore blows should proceed from his Kingly power.

1. Because the manner of his Kingdom after the judgment day shall be wholly changed; he shall not Reign in the same fashion that he did before; there's no need in heaven of good Laws to keep men from starting into wickedness; the orders of this life are changed into a new kind of Government, and in that respect he is said to give over the Kingdom.

3. Because he ceaseth to increase his Dominion. In this World Christ was still gaining more souls to his Kingdom by the Preaching of his Word, and so he spread his dominion further, and further; but when the Lord shall have made up the number of his Servants to his mind, then he will end the World, and give up the Kingdom, (i.e.) he will cease to enlarge his confines anymore, he will be content with the number of his Subjects that he hath already. Here is the Second thing, Christ presents all his Commissions to his Father, he gives up his Priestly, Prophetical, and regal offices at his first entrance into heaven.

4. He presents himself unto his Father; not only his offices but Christ himself is presented, and subjected unto God. This I take it, is the meaning of the Apostle, when he saith, then shall the Son also be Subject unto him, that put all things under him. The words are mystical, and therefore we had need to understand them soberly, and according to the Analogy of Faith. The Arians hence infer'd, that the Son was not equal with the Father, because he that is subject must needs be inferior to him whose Subject he is. But the Answer is easy, Christ is considered either as God, or as man, and Mediator betwixt God and Man; Christ as God hath us Subject to him, and is Subject to none; but Christ as man and Mediator is Subject to his Father together with us. Some would have it, that Christ is Subject to his Father in respect of his mystical body, the Church; and that this only should be the meaning of the Apostle, then shall the Church be Subject to the Father; but I cannot assent to this Exposition. 1. Because the Apostle speaks expressly of Christ and of his Kingdom. 2. Because though Christ be sometimes in Scripture read for the Church, or for the body of Christ, yet the Son as opposed to the Father, is never so read or understood. 3. Because we read, that he that is to be Subject, must first, have all things Subject to himself. Now the Father doth not properly Subject or subdue all things to the Church of Christ, but only unto Christ, and therefore the Apostle speaks of Christ's subjection to the Father; In the same way as Christ delivers up the Kingdom to the Father, is Christ also to be subject to his Father; but Christ delivers up his Kingdom as man, and as mediator betwixt God and man; in these respects Christ (as we have heard) must Reign no more, at that day his Mediatorship shall cease, and by consequence in respect of his Mediatorship, or in respect of his humanity, he shall that day be subject to his Father.

You will say, is not, and was not Christ always subject to his Father as man, or as mediator betwixt God and man? how then do we limit this subjection to that day? then (saith the Apostle) shall the Son be subject.

I answer, this subjection will be then, or at that day more clearly manifested then ever it was before; then he must surrender his Kingdom to his Father in the sight of men and Angels; then he shall lay aside all his Offices in the view of all; so that henceforth God shall not Reign by the humanity of Christ, but by himself; nor shall we henceforth be subject to God through a mediator Christ, but immediately to God himself; nor shall Christ himself reign over us as mediator anymore, for the very glory of his Majesty shall become so illustrious, that all eyes shall see how transcendently eminent the Deity of Christ is above all creatures, even above the humanity of Christ himself. That a fuller view of Christ's subjection shall be at that day then ever before: we may illustrate thus; by night the Sun Reigns or rules over us, but by the Moon; for the light of the Moon is borrowed from the Sun, though in the night we see not any subjection of the Moon to the Sun at all: but so soon as the Sun riseth, presently the Moon surceaseth its office of lighting others, and becomes subject to the Sun itself; not by a new subjection, but by a declaration of its former subjection, so that now all may see what eminency of glory and light the Sun hath both above the Stars, and above the Moon, thus it is with God and Christ, now it is God reigns over us, but only by Christ as Mediator; God's immediate Reign we discern not so clearly for the present; but when the end shall come, and Christ shall surcease his Office of Mediatorship, then shall the glory of Christ's Divinity appear more eminently, not only above all creatures, but above the brightness of Christ's humanity itself; and in this respect Christ then shall be Subject, if not by a new subjection, yet certainly by a new declaration and manifestation of his subjection, so as never was before.

O the wonders of this day! O the admirable shows in heaven, at Christ and his Saints first entrance into heaven! O my soul, where wilt thou stand? or what wilt thou say, when Christ shall take thee by the hand, and bring thee into the presence of his glorious Father? when he shall present thee, and present all his Commissions which he received for thee, and present himself unto his Father with thee, saying, O my Father, here we are all before thy glorious God-head; thus far I have carried on the great work of man's Salvation, and now all's done according to the Covenant betwixt thee and me; lo here all the Saints which by decree thou gavest me before the world was made; lo here all the Commissions which I received from thee in order to their Salvation; lo here the humanity which thou gavest me when I came into the World; such were the sins of my redeemed ones, and grown to such an height, that Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not have, but a body thou preparedst for me, and lo here I present all these before thee; come, take thy Commissions, and be thou all in all; we praise thee O God, we acknowledge thee to be the Lord. Come welcome me, and welcome mine, we all stand here before thy glorious Throne, and expect every way as high an entertainment as Heaven, or the God of heaven can afford us. O my soul, what joy will possess thee at this passage? be sure now thy danger is over, and thy arrival is safe, neither shall it ever be heard, friend how camest thou hither? for the Lord himself will run unto thee, he will hug thee and embrace thee, mouth on thy mouth, eyes on thy eyes, and hands on thy hands; and each hand shall clap for joy, each harp shall warble, each knee shall bend and bow, and each heart be merry and glad. O for the day! Oh when will the day come on, when Christ shall deliver up the Kingdom to the Father!

SECT. IX. Of Christ's Subjection to the Father, that God may be all in all.

9. FOR the end of Christ's Subjection to his Father that God may be all in all. Surely this is the meaning: Christ therefore Subjects himself unto his Father, that God himself might be all in all; that God may no more Reign by a Deputy, or by a Christ, but that immediately and perfectly he may reign by himself, so that everyone may see him face to face. Here we enjoy God (as it were) by means as in the use of the Word, and Sacraments, and the like, but when that Kingdom (where these Administrations are made use of) shall be delivered up, then shall God himself be all in all, without means, without defect, without end.

It is observable that Christ in his mediatory Kingdom hath some such things as bear an Analogy to the means and instruments of governing in the Kingdoms of men; As, 1. He hath his Militia and his Laws, with threatenings and promises, in the ordinances of his Word. 2. He hath his grants, and seals, with many privileges to confirm his people in the Ordinances of his Sacraments. 3. He hath his Officers and Ambassadors for the management of spiritual affairs in the Ordinances of his Ministry; but the ceasing of Christ's Kingdom is the ceasing of all these; and he therefore ceaseth his Kingdom that God may immediately succeed all these; without any means, or without any Mediator at all, he himself may be instead of all; or all in all.

In prosecution of this, I shall discuss. 1. The meaning, what it is for God to be all in all. 2. The particulars, wherein more especially is God all in all.

1. For the meaning; it is a periphrasis of our complete enjoyment of God: that God may be all in all, is as much as to say, that we may enjoy God alone to all purposes, neither wanting nor willing anything besides himself; for a person to be all in all to me, it is to have an enjoyment of that person to all purposes, so that I neither do; nor need I to enjoy anything besides himself; thus God is to the Saints in glory, he is their exceeding great reward; they need nothing else besides himself, their very droughts of happiness is taken in immediately from the fountain, and they have as much of the fountain as their souls in their widest capacity, can possibly hold.

2. For the particulars, wherein more especially is God our all in all? I answer.

1. In our enjoying God immediately; here we enjoy God by means; either he communicates himself unto us through his Creatures, or through his Ordinances, and hence it is, that we know him but in part, we see him but in a glass darkly; but when he shall be our all in all, we shall see him face to face; we shall then see God as he is clearly and immediately. Oh how excellent is this enjoyment above all present enjoyments here below? as the enjoyment of a friend in his picture, letters, tokens, is short of what we enjoy when we have his personal presence; or as the heat and light of the Sun through a cloud is beneath that heat and light when the glorious body of it is open to us without any interposition; even so all the enjoyments of God in the use of means, graces, blessings, ordinances are infinitely inferior to that enjoyment of God which shall be without all means; all the ravishments of our spirit in prayer, hearing, reading, meditating, is but a sip of those Rivers which we shall have in heaven. I know the remembrance of God in a private meditation is sweet, Psal, 104.34. and communion with God in any Ordinance is a feast of sweetness and marrow, and fatness. Psal. 63.5, 6. But when the soul shall immediately possess God, when this Kingdom of grace shall expire, and all the Administrations of it shall vanish away, will not the fountain be much more sweet then all the streams? surely feasts, and sweetness, and marrow, and fatness, are terms exceedingly too diminutive to give us anymore than a small hint of that incomprehensible satisfaction by immediate communion. O the wonders of Heaven! there shall be Light without a candle, and a perpetual day without a Sun, there shall be health without physic, and strength of Body without use of food; there shall be knowledge without Scriptures, and settled government without a written Law; there shall be Comunion without Sacraments, and Joy without promises to be its fuel; the soul in glory shall go straight unto God, and immediately participate his glory and happiness. 'Tis the comparison of a Learned Divine, suppose you saw a company of Chrystal Globes placed in a parallel line, because their posture will not admit the Suns immediate beams; we'll suppose another single Globe set by the middle of them, to transmit the Sun-beams unto all those Globes, by this means they all shine, though it be only by reflection; but when the Sun shall so come about, as that they may immediately receive its beams, there's no further use of the single Globe then; so here, while we through our distance from God are uncapable of immediate enjoyment, there's a necessity of Christ's Mediation, but when all things that cause the distance are removed, and we brought into the presence-chamber of God himself, there's no such need of a Mediator then. Now here is one thing, wherein he is our all in all, shall enjoy him immediately.

2. It consists in our enjoying of God fully. Now I know in part (saith the Apostle) but then I shall know, even as I am known; our enjoyment of God is but here in its infancy, there it will be in its full age; here it is in drops, there it will be in the Ocean, here we see God's back parts, and we can see no more, but there we shall see his face, not his second face (as some distinguish) which is his grace and favor enjoyed by Faith, but his first face, which is his Divine essence enjoyed by sight. Yet I mean not so, as if the soul which is a creature could take in the whole Essence of God which is incomprehensible; but the soul shall, and must be so full of God, as that it shall not be able to receive, or desire one jot more. And oh how excellent is this enjoyment above all present enjoyments? it is now our highest happiness to have some glimpses of his glory shining on us, and some drops of his favor distilled into us, oh but when God shall be our all in all, we shall have as much of God as our souls can hold, we shall have the glory of God so poured in, till we shall be able to receive no more. And here is that which gives the soul a full satisfaction; never would it be satisfied till it came to this; suppose that God would draw out all the beauty, sweetness, goodness that he hath communicated to all Creatures in the world, and bring the quintessence of all, and communicate that unto the soul of one poor Saint, certainly it would not serve the turn, there must be a greater communication before the soul be fully satisfied and rest content; only once admit it into the glorious presence of him who is all in all, and presently it expires its infinite desire into the bosom of that God; for there's enough to fill his spirit, he cannot desire so much, but there is more and yet infinitely more; if there be enough in God for the spirits of all just men made perfect with God, if there be enough in God for Angels whose capacities are greater than the Saints, if there be enough in God for Jesus Christ, whose capacity is yet far wider than the Angels, if there be enough in God for God himself, whose capacity is infinitely greater than them all; then there must needs be satisfaction enough in God to any one poor soul. Here is another thing wherein God is our all in all, we shall enjoy him fully.

3. It consists in our enjoying God solely. Not as if there were nothing else in Heaven but only God; but that God in Heaven shall be all in all, and instead of all; it is God in Heaven that makes Heaven to be Heaven; the Saints blessedness, and God's own blessedness doth consist in the enjoyment of God himself; the School-men tells us, that we shall not properly enjoy anything else but only God; we may have some use of the Creatures, but no fruition; and therefore is God said to be all, or as good as all. And indeed what can we imagine to be in Heaven, which is not eminently in God himself: if it be greatness, power, and glory, and victory, and majesty, all these are his; if it be joy, or love, or peace, or beauty, or anything amiable or desirable, all these are in him. Hence some take it to be David's meaning, when he said, he had none in Heaven but God; that the sole enjoyment of God, (of God, and of nothing else but God) is the souls true happiness, when it is at highest; whom have I in heaven but thee? whom? why there are Angels, there are Saints, there are the spirits of just and perfect men; are these nothing with David? O yes! all these are good, but they are not able to satisfy a soul without God himself. Whether God will make use of any Creatures for our service then? or if any, of what Creatures? and what use? is more than I yet know; but to make up a full enjoyment there is required a gracious-glorious presence, a sweet effusion or communication of that presence, a just comprehension of the excellency of that communication, a perfect love, and a perfect rest in the love of whatsoever it is we comprehend; now this is proper only to God; it is he only that fills the whole capacity of the Soul, it is he that so fills it that it can hold no more, it is he only that is the object of love intended to the utmost, and therefore he only is properly enjoyed, he only is possessed with a full contentment as portion enough, and as reward enough for the soul forever.

But shall not the Saints have to do with something else in Heaven, but only with God? O yes! I believe there shall be in Heaven a communion of the blessed Spirits in God, an association of the Saints and Angels of God: yet this shall not take away the sole enjoyment of God, that he should not be their all in all. For they shall not mind themselves or their own good as created things, but altogether God; they shall not love them or one another as for themselves, but only for God; here we love God for himself, and it is a gracious love; but there we shall love ourselves for God, and 'tis a glorious love; why this is to enjoy God solely, in this respect he is all, and in all; whom have I in Heaven but thee?

Here's a point enough to wean us to the World. Alas! the time is coming on a pace, that all this World shall be dissolved, and then God shall be all in all; here lies the Saints happiness to have God immediately, God fully, and God solely; and will not Saints prepare themselves for such a condition as this? you that have the World, use it as if not, for the fashion of this World passeth away; and you that have but a little to do with the World, improve that condition; surely 'tis your own fault if you have not more to do with God, for you have little else to take up your hearts; God may dwell and walk in your hearts without disturbance, give me neither poverty nor riches (saith the wise man upon that account) a mean condition is more capable of happiness than that which over-loads us with outward things; whilst others are casting up their accounts, you may say with David, how precious are thy thoughts unto me O God? how great is the sum of them? whilst others are following their suits at courts of Justice, you may follow all you have at a Throne of grace; whilst others are numbering their Flocks and Herds, all your Arithmetic may be employed to number your days; whilst others cannot get out of the clutches of the world, you may get into the embraces of your God; why, this is to prepare yourselves for fuller and fuller enjoyments of God; it is God will be all in all, and this is the very top of Heavens happiness; surely the less you have of the World now, if you can but improve it, the more you may have of Heavens happiness even upon earth: for what is the happiness of Heaven, but the sole enjoyment of God? Christians! if you feel any inclinations, pantings, breathings after this world, give me leave to tell you, that you will never be happy till you have lost all, till you have no friends, nor estates, no enjoyment but God alone; when all his done, when this world is nothing, when means shall cease, both for bodies and souls, and when Christ shall cease his Mediators office, and the Son of man be Subject to his Father, then God shall be all in all.

SECT. X. Of Christ's (notwithstanding this) being all in all to his blessed, saved, redeemed Saints, to all Eternity.

10. FOR Christ's being all in all to his blessed, saved, redeemed Saints to all Eternity; we shall dilate in this Section. Some may object, if God be all in all, what then becomes of Christ? is not this derogatory to Jesus Christ? I answer no, in no wise; for—

1. It is not the Father personally and only, but the Deity essentially and wholly that is our all in all, when we say God is all in all, we do not exclude the Son, and holy Ghost, for the whole God-head is all in all to all the Saints, as well as the first person in the Trinity; the Father is all, and the Son is all, and the holy Ghost is all; and in that Christ is God, and the Son of God, we may say of Christ, that he is all in all only the truth of this position is not from the human nature but from the divine nature of Jesus Christ.

2. It is not derogatory to Christ, but rather it doth exceedingly advance Christ in the thoughts of all his Saints; while it was necessary Christ veiled his Deity, and when his work of Mediation is fully finished, Christ then shall reveal his Deity to his Saints more then ever before. In this respect might I say if any person in the Trinity receives more honor than other, Christ should have most; every Creature which is in heaven heard, I say, blessing, honor, glory, and power be unto him that sitteth on the Throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever; not only unto God, but particularly to the Lamb forever and ever. It is true, that God only, and God fully, and God immediately is all in all, but doth that hinder that Jesus Christ is not also only, fully, and immediately all in all? see how the Scripture joins them together, which plainly argues that they may consist, I saw no Temple in the City, for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb are the Temple of it, and the City had no need of the Sun, neither of the Moon to shine in it, for the glory of God does lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

Now then as I have spoken of God, so that I may speak of Christ, and conclude all with Christ, I assert this Doctrine, that the glory of Christ which the Saints shall behold in Christ to all eternity is their all in all. In the discussion of which I shall open these particulars. 1. What is the glory of Christ? 2. How the Saints shall behold his glory. 3. Wherein is the comprehensiveness of this expression, that the beholding of Christ is our all in all.

1. What is the glory of Christ? I answer, that the glory of Christ is either human, or divine.

1. There is an human glory, which in time was more especially conferred upon his manhood.

2. There is an essential or divine glory, which before time and after time, even from everlasting to everlasting issueth from the God-head; I shall speak to both these, that we may rather take a view of Christ in those glories (as we are able) wherein he will appear to his Saints as their all in all to all Eternity.

1. For his human glory, that is either in regard of his Soul, or body; for his Soul, Christ was from the first instant of his conception full of glory, because even then he received grace, not by measure, as we do, but as comprehension, he had the clear vision of God, even as the Angels of heaven, which arose from that hypostatical union of two natures at his first conception. It is true, that by the special dispensation of God, the fullness of thy accompanying that glory was withheld from Christ in the time of his passion, and the redundancy of glory from his soul unto his body was totally deferred until the exaltation of Christ; but Christ no sooner exalted, and set on the right hand of God, but immediately the interruption of joy in his soul, and the interception of glory from his soul to his body, was altogether removed. Then it was that his soul was filled with all joy, solace, pleasure, which could possibly flow from the sight of an object so infinitely pleasing, as is the essence, Majesty, and glory of God And then it was that his body was replenished with as much glory as was proportionable unto the most vast capacity of any creature; not only his soul, but his body is a glorious Creature; it is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a body of glory, that is a most glorious body in itself. And the spring of glory unto others, ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and so to enter into his glory? it is called his glory, as if it were appropriated unto him as the most eminent subject, and principal efficient of glory; as if he had the monopoly of glory: all the glory in heaven is in some sort his glory. Surely Christ's manhood is exalted unto an higher degree of glory than the most glorious Saint or Angel ever was, or shall be; principalities, powers, mights, and dominions fall short of his glory.

But some object, that the mediatory office of Christ shall wholly cease, and that the body and soul of Christ shall then be annihilated.

Indeed this was the opinion of Eutiches, that the human nature of Christ should be changed or converted into the divine; and thus he interprets that Scripture, then shall the Son also himself be subject, that God may be all in all, what is this subjection, (saith he) but a conversion of the Creature into the very substance, or essence of the Creator himself? But we deny the interpretation; the Son as man shall be subject, and yet the manhood of Christ shall still remain: it is true that his Mediatory office shall wholly cease, but it follows not that therefore the manhood of Christ shall be converted or changed into the Deity; there may be other reasons for the continuation of his human nature besides the execution of his Mediatory office; As, 1. That the luster of his Deity might shine through his humanity, and that thereby our very bodily eyes may come to see God, as much as is possible for any creature to see him, I shall see him (saith Job) not with other, but with these same eyes; 2. That the Saints may see how the power of an infinite God can convey the luster of his Deity into a Creature; upon this account I verily believe, that Angels and Men will be continually viewing of Jesus Christ, he shall come to be admired of the Saints; he shall be admired (as we have heard) at the Judgment-day; nor is that all, but the Saints in heaven shall see with their eyes such excellencies in Christ, as that they shall admire forever; I say forever, as much as they did at the first moment when they saw him; here if we see anything excellent, we admire at first, but after a while we do not so, but in heaven there will be so much excellency in Christ, that we shall admire as much to all Eternity, as we did at the very first moment; there will be no abatement in glory of our being taken with the sight of the glory in Jesus Christ. 3. That Christ by his humanity may converse more freely, and familiarly with his brethren in his Fathers house; oh the intimacy that will be there betwixt Jesus Christ and his Christian Saints! oh the mutual rejoicing and delight that will be there betwixt Jesus Christ and his dearest darlings! as Christ from Eternity rejoiced in the habitable part of his Earth, so will the Saints (his habitable Earth) to all eternity rejoice in Christ; the eye of the Saints in glory can never be off Christ as Mediator and God; now the eye of the Saints in glory shall never be off Christ as God and Mediator then. Thus far of his human glory.

2. For his Essential divine glory, it is that glory which Christ hath as God: this he never laid aside, but as the Sun in a dark gloomy day may not send forth its beams, so Christ the Son of righteousness in the time of his abode upon earth (except a little glimpse only in his transfiguration) did not send forth his glorious beams; but hereafter the body or humanity of Christ shall not hinder the breaking forth of all his divine glory. No sooner the Son subject, and his Mediatory office discharged, but Christ, as God will manifestly put forth his more immediate glory to all his Saints. Behold, now we are the Sons of God, and it doth not yet appear, what we shall be, but we know when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. Mark it, when he shall appear, at, and after the Resurrection day, we shall see him as he is, (i.e.) we shall see the very essential glory of Jesus Christ. But what is the essential glory of Christ? I cannot answer, it is a question not to be resolved by all the men in the World; we know little of the glory of Saints, how should we know anything of the essential glory of Christ as God? The Scriptures say, that God spake to Moses face to face, yet God tells him thou canst not see my face, and he favors him so far as to tell him the reason, for there shall no man see my face and live, q. d. No man in this life, he must first die, and be changed, and then he shall have a peculiar revelation of the divine Majesty; then he shall see him as he is; but how that is, I cannot tell; come, let us question this no further; surely it is a mercy that this infinite glory is not discovered to us; for as a weak eye is not able to behold the Sun, or to see in it rota, (as the School-men speak) in that wheel or circle wherein the Sun doth run, but only in the beams of it; no more can we see Christ as God in his glorious essence, or in his essential glory, but only in the beams thereof in his Word and Effects; if now we know so little of spirits and spirituals, oh then how little do we know of him who is the Father of Spirits? I shall say no more therefore, let us be content to be ignorant of these things, till we enter into the confines of Eternity.

But whether shall this glorious Essence, or Essential glory of Christ be more seen, or manifested, at, or after the day of judgment, then ever it was before? I answer. —

I believe it will. Some tell us of several periods wherein the glory of Christ is still more and more seen; as, 1. In this life we may see it in part, thus David speaks of himself, my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee, to see thy power, and thy glory, as I have seen thee in the Sanctuary; but this sight is very dim, we see only now as through a glass darkly. The second period is betwixt our dissolution and resurrection; and then shall we see the essential glory of Christ more immediately and fully, our creeping apprehension of God shall then be elevated, and our distance from God shall then be shortened, and all the riddles of grace and of Jesus Christ shall then be opened. This sight is so great, that if a soul should come from heaven to declare it, neither could that soul express it, nor we understand it; we read of Lazarus, whose soul Christ returned into his body, whom much people of the Jews came purposely to see, that they might hear stories of the other World, but not a word from him of any such matter; Paul's rapture may satisfy with the reason of it, he heard there 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, wordless words, such words as could not possibly be repeated on earth, and yet all this is but a second step to the full vision of Christ's essential glory. The third period is at the Resurrection, and during the time of the last Judgment, and then we shall see more of his glory; Cameron affirms that 'tis no curiosity to say, that the Saints and Angels in heaven had a new glory by the exhibition of Christ, the great mystery of the Incarnation being thereby better known; and we may as safely affirm, that the Saints shall have a new glory, by new visions of the glory of Christ at the day of Resurrection; they shall then see the solemnity of heavens glory carried on by Christ in his glorious actings; and all that ever the soul saw before in being with Christ in Heaven till the Resurrection, shall be swallowed up with the sight of this glory of Christ at the Resurrection-day. The last period is after the Resurrection, and that shall continue even to all Eternity; now all the manifestations of Christ's glory before this, are but as a few green ears rubb'd in our hands, so that the full crop or the full harvest is yet behind. But this is that (which as we told you before) we cannot tell, though we had the tongues of men and Angels. Thus far of the first point, what is the glory of Christ.

2. How shall the Saints behold this glory? I answer, As Christ hath a twofold glory, so there is a twofold manner of beholding it, (i.e.) ocular and mental.

1. There is an ocular vision, a sight of Christ with our very eyes, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold him; with these eyes in our heads we shall one day behold the human glory of Christ; I doubt not we shall behold the beauty of Heaven, the shining bodies of the Saints, but above all, our very eyes shall delightfully contemplate Christ's glorious body; and indeed this shall drown all the other sights, if any think that Christ's glorious body shall be too intensive, and too extraordinary a brightness for our weak eyes; let such consider that—

1. The eye in heaven shall be glorified; now glorification adds a singular excellency to the faculties, it advanceth the faculties, and raiseth them to an higher pitch of excellency; glorification adds a greater capacity to the eye then ever it had before. In this world there is a difference in our eyes and sight; a man of a clear sight sees more things, and more of everything then a dark sight doth; so a glorified eye sees more of things then our eyes now can see; it shall be enlarged exceedingly to take in objects which now it cannot receive; glorification adds strength to the faculties both internal, and external, so that the eye shall be able to look on the glory of Christ, not with difficulty, but with contentment; in this World every sense we have is apt to be destroyed by excellent Objects, and the more excellent, and transcendent the object is, the more it hurts and destroys the sense; as the Sun by its brightness darkens the eye, and other things by mighty sounds bring deafness to the ear; Paul indeed had a vision of glory, but because his faculties were not glorified, he was he knew not how, whether in the body or out of the body, whether alive or dead, he did not know; certainly the sight of the glory of the other world would amaze, distract, and destroy us, if we had a sight of it as now we are; but in heaven the eye shall have great pleasure in beholding the brightest light, because it shall be advanced to the highest pitch of strength that may be.

2. As the eye shall be glorified, so it shall act in a glorified body, and this will make the sight of the glory of Christ instead of hurting us, to leave upon us, a more sweet, enlivening, and powerful impression. By this means all the impediments that hinder the conveyance of divine influences from that heavenly object will be removed. To illustrate this, let the most excellent sight be set before a man that is defective in his bodily state, and it doth not take him; what should a sick man do with such things? he makes nothing of the most pleasant gardens, orchards, buildings, nor of the most glorious sights that are; when he is sick, they are but sick things to him, and of none effect; but in heaven the body shall be glorified, and stripped of all corruptions and imperfections, so that there shall be no bar unto the influences of the glory of Christ which shall there be seen.

3. As there shall be a glorified eye acting in a glorified body, so it shall be acted by a glorified Spirit; the eye is but the organ or instrument of sight, and without the spirit would convey no more then a glass doth; it is the Spirit of a man that gives life to vision, it is the Spirit of a man that discovers things, and sets them forth in their worth, virtues, ends; now in heaven the spirit of men shall be glorified, and enabled to perform all those offices in perfection; so that when a man shall look on the man Christ Jesus by virtue of a glorified spirit, he shall see more, know more, taste more than any other can; As a man of understanding when he looks on a diamond, or a wedge of gold he hath other apprehensions of it, and a further touch upon his spirit, then a beast or a child in a cradle hath; so where the sight of the eye is acted by a glorified mind, it takes in more from the sight of everything which is to be seen (inexpressibly more) then what can be done here by the most sanctified Spirit in the World. Now in these respects Christ's glorified body (though it be the brightest visible thing in the Heaven of Heavens) yet may it be the object of the eye of Saints, for they shall have glorified eyes, in glorified bodies, and acted by their glorified spirits.

2. There is a mental vision, a sight of Christ by the eyes of our understandings; and surely this exceeds the former, the eye of the body is only on the body of Christ, but the eye of the soul is on the body and soul, on the Humanity and Deity of Jesus Christ. This is the very top of heaven, when Saints shall be enlightened with a clear and glorious sight of Christ as God; Divines usually call it, Beatifical vision.

But how shall Saints behold the glorious Essence, or God-head of Christ?

1. Some say, Christ as God, or the God-head of Christ shall be known by the Humanity of Christ; such a luster of his Deity shall shine through his humanity, as that thereby, and by no other means shall the Essential glory of Christ appear.

2. Others say, That besides the Humanity of Christ there shall be a species representing the Divine Essence of Christ, and a light of glory elevating the understanding by a Supernatural strength; and that thereby the glorious Essence of Christ shall be discovered.

3. Others say, That the Divine Essence shall be represented to the glorified understanding, not by Christ's humanity, nor by any species, but immediately by itself, yet they also require a light of glory to elevate and fortify the understanding by reason of its weakness, and infinite disproportion and distance from the incomprehensible Deity.

4. Others hold, that to the clear vision of Christ as God, there is not required a sight of Christ's humanity as the first suppose; nor a species representing the Divine Essence, as the second suppose; nor any created light elevating the understanding, as the third suppose; but only a change of the natural order of knowing; It is sufficient (say they) that the Divine Essence be immediately represented to a created understanding; which though it cannot be done according to the order of nature, as experience tells us, (for so we conceive things as first having passed the sense and imagination) yet it may be done according to the order of Divine grace. I shall not enter into these Scholastical disputes, it is enough for a sober man to know that in heaven we shall see him face to face, his Servants shall serve him, and they shall see his face.

His face, what's that? I answer—

1. They shall see Christ as God, of the same Essence with the Father, and the holy Ghost, and yet a distinct Person from them both; they shall see the Unity in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity; they shall see how the Son is begotten of the Father, and how the holy Ghost proceeds from the Father, and the Son; they shall see the difference between the generation of the Son, and procession of the Spirit. These are mysteries in which we are blind and know very little or nothing, but in seeing his face we shall see all these.

2. They shall see Christ at their first being, or principle of all the good that is in the World; they shall see how all things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made; they shall see all the good in the creature as flowing from Christ, and as contained in the absolute perfection of Christ's Divine Nature; they shall see in one Christ all the excellencies of all the creatures united, which is indeed to see him in his eminency if there be any beauty, riches, honor, goodness in any creature, that is eminently, transcendently, and originally in Christ, and that shall be seen.

3. They shall see Christ in all his ways, counsels, decrees, executions, transactions, from everlasting to everlasting; that great business of Election and Reprobation will then be discovered; it is an expression of Augustine, They shall then see the reason why one is Elected, and another Reprobated; why one is rich, and another poor; they shall then see all the works that ever God did, or that ever God will do; it is not yet Six thousand years since the creation of the World, and what is Six thousand years to Eternity? certainly the truth of Origen's opinion touching the existency of other worlds before this, and the future succession of other Worlds after this, will then be known. If no worlds, before this, yet if God in Christ hath done such great things in only Six thousand years what he may do in the next Six thousand years, and so in the next Six thousand years, who now can tell? we see not these things, but the Saints in seeing the face of Christ shall see all things.

4. They shall see Christ in all his glory, ways, counsels, decrees, executions, transactions, as working for their happiness. Now this  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  more than the former; there's a great deal of difference in seeing an object as excellent in itself, and in seeing an object as conducing to my happiness; As one that is a stranger, and another is an heir rides over such a demesgne; the stranger rides over it, and takes delight to see the situation, rivers, trees, and fruits, but the heir looks upon it after another manner, this (saith he) is the land for which my Father laid out so much, and all to enrich me, and all to bestow it on me, as my Inheritance. So the Saints admitted into the glorious sight of Christ, they take not only a view of Christ, of the Essential glory of Christ, of the transactions of Christ, things excellent in themselves, but they see all these as to make them happy; they say of Christ, and of all his actings, these are mine, and for my happiness; A stranger may look upon a King, and see beauty and Majesty, and glory, and honor in him, but the Queen looks upon the King and his beauty as her own; so the Saints look upon the King of Heaven, they see Christ, and all in Christ as their own, to make them happy forever and ever.

5. They shall see Christ as he is; but what? do we not see him now as he is? oh no: we now see him not as he is indeed and truth, but only as he is in hear-say, and report; we now see him only as he is shadowed out to us in the Gospel of peace; and what is the Gospel, but the portraiture of the King, which he sent to another Land to be seen by his Bride? so Kings and Queens on earth woo one another; whilst the Bride is on earth, she never seeth him as he is in his best Sabbath-Royal Robe of immediate glory, she seeth him rather by the second hand, (i.e.) by messengers, words, mediation; he rather sends his portraiture, then comes himself; but in heaven the Saints see him as he is, they see Christ himself in his own very person; they see the red and white in his own face; they see all the inside of Christ; and thousands of excellencies shall then be revealed, that we see not now; the mysteries of that glorious Ark shall then be opened; his Incarnation, his two Natures in one person, his Suffering as Man, and his sitting in the seat of God as God, all these shall be seen.

6. They shall see Christ without interruption, and without intermission to all Eternity. If once the eye be set on the face of Jesus Christ, it will never be taken off again. Some conceive this to be the reason why the Saints in heaven can never fall away, because they shall have a continual view of Christ as God; Surely to have but one glimpse of Christ in this respect, though it were gone presently, it were a great happiness beyond all that the World affords; it was sometimes the desire of a Philosopher to see the nature of the Sun, though he were to be burnt by it; so if Christ should but grant us this happiness, you shall come to see me, but the sight of me will destroy you, this were a desirable thing; but to have such an excellent glorious sight as shall never end; that Christ should not only pass by, but stand still, so as the soul shall never lose his sight; O how glorious is this? if a man do but look upon a delightful Object, he is loath to have his eye drawn from it; surely the eye of Saints shall be eternally opened to see the divine nature of Christ; turn them which way they will, they shall never turn aside the busied eyes of their understanding from off the Deity of Christ; he fills heaven; he is that fair Tree of life, the branches whereof in all that huge and capacious borders of heaven have not room to grow in; for the heaven of heavens cannot contain him. O the wonders of heaven. There is Abraham, Moses, Elias, the Prophets, the Apostles, and the glorified Martyrs, but the Saints have neither leisure, nor hearts to feed themselves with beholding of creatures; no, no; all the eyes of heaven (which are a fair and numerous company) are upon (only, only upon) the Lord Jesus Christ; the Father hath no leisure to look over his shoulder to his Son; the Husband hath no leisure to look over his shoulder to his Wife; Christ takes all eyes off from such created things; surely 'tis enough for the Saints and Angels in heaven to study Christ for all Eternity; it shall be their only labor to read Christ, to smell Christ, to hear, see, and taste Christ; to love, joy, and enjoy Jesus Christ forever and ever. Thus far of the second point, how the Saints shall behold the glory of Christ.

3. Wherein is the comprehensiveness of this expression, that the beholding of Christ is our all in all? I answer,—

1. It comprehends the immediate seeing and looking upon all, that Majesty and Glory which Jesus Christ hath. In this sense Paul took it when he complained, we walk by faith, not by sight. q. d. on earth we have faith, and in heaven we have sight; it is some comfort that now I see Jesus Christ by faith, but comparatively to that sight which the Saints have in heaven it is as no comfort at all; alas! I am not, I cannot be satisfied so long as I am absent from the Lord, I look upon myself as one from home; And as a Prince in a strange Land sits down sadly, because he hath not the sight of his Father, so I am forced to complain; O I cannot see my Lord, I would fain behold him, I am a stranger on earth, a Pilgrim in this world, I am not where I would be, I am absent from him whom I most desire; O I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ; I walk with him here on earth by faith, but to walk with him in the streets of heaven by sight is far better; O I long, I pant, I breath, I desire, I think every day a year, and every year an age till I be in heaven, at home, in my Father's arms, that I may behold and see him, and that immediately, I say immediately in his glory. This is one way of beholding Christ, it is an immediate sight.

2. It comprehends the fruition and enjoyment of Christ in his glory. Surely the Saints shall not be mere idle spectators of the glory of Christ, but they shall enjoy him, and be taken into fellowship with him: it was said of Moses, that he did see the Land of Canaan; but he was not admitted into it; it is otherwise with the Saints, they shall see heaven, and they shall enter into heaven, come thou faithful servant, and enter into thy Master's joy; not only behold it, but enter into it; they must behold Christ, and take possession of Christ, and enjoy them as their own. And thus the word to see, or behold, is often used in Scripture; except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God, (i.e.) he cannot enjoy it: and Father I will that those whom thou hast given me be with me where I am that they may behold my glory, (i.e.) that they may enjoy my glory; for Christ is not only glorious in himself, but he is the spring of glory unto others: now in this respect more especially is Christ our all in all; he is all in himself, and if we enjoy him, he is all in all unto us: To see a little into the state and condition of the Saints in glory in this enjoyment of Christ.—

1. They possess Christ as their own; they go to Christ, and they lay hold on him, saying, thou art mine. It was indeed the language of the spouse whilst yet on earth, I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine; there's a right, and a propriety made over to her in her betrothing unto Christ, but after the solemnity of the marriage is over, the possession is then more full; when once the spouse comes to behold Christ in his Kingdom, she may then go boldly to her beloved, and say, all I see is my own; I had thee in hope, but now hope is vanished, and actual enjoyment comes in place: lo, now I have thee in my eye, and in my heart, and in my hands, and in my arms; and as nothing shall separate us now, for all our enemies are trod underfoot, so never will I part with thee, so far as to be out of my eye, I will still behold thee, and in beholding I will still possess thee, for thou art mine own.

2. They have the use of what they possess; and this is an infinite good to the Saints; they shall not only possess Christ, but they shall have what use they will of Christ, and of all in Christ; they shall as they please make use of his humanity, and of his Deity, of his glorious Essence, and of his glorious attributes; O wonder! that a Saint should come to Christ and say, O my Lord, thou art mine, and my pleasure is to make use of thy wisdom, power, and mercy; and that Christ should reply, and say, welcome sweet soul, use me and all my glory as thou pleasest, why thus it is; even as a friend will say to his friend, make use of all I have as your own; so will Christ come to his Saints, and bid them make use of all his riches, glory excellency, even as they will, even to the utmost that they are capable of.

3. They have the sweet and comfort of all they use; and this makes up a complete enjoyment. In things below we may have the possession of them, and the use thereof, but if we have not the sweet and comfort of that we use, we cannot be said truly or fully to enjoy those things; what is the possession and use of meat and drink, if we taste not the sweet of them? Hence God is said to give us all things richly to enjoy; no creature can give us richly to enjoy another, one may give us such and such things wherein there may be comfort, but he cannot give us comfort in such things, it is only God that can give us that; it is so with the Saints in glory, God gives them all things, yea, Christ gives himself to them as all in all, to enjoy him richly, fully, sweetly, to the very uttermost. This another way of beholding Christ, it is a fruition or enjoyment of Christ, wherein and whereby he is our all in all.

4. It comprehends all the effects and consequents of such a beholding of his glory, which are infinite delight and complacency in the will, and all praise and thanksgiving in the mouths of his Saints. For the first, It is disputed whether Eternal happiness be more in the acts of the understanding, or if the Will? and some conclude that it is principally in the will, because that is an active appetite, and predominant in a man, indeed the whole of a man, oh the joy, delight, and complacency that will arise in the will upon the seeing and beholding of Jesus Christ! they shall delight infinitely in the Essential glory of Christ, and in the declared glory of Christ; they shall delight in all that glory that is reflected upon Christ by all his creatures in heaven; they shall delight in his presence, and in his love, Christ is all delights, and how then should they but delight in Christ? for the second, as they delight in their wills, so will their mouths be filled with praises; we read of Saints and Angels continually praising God in heaven; there shall be none of our duties of mourning, fasting, praising, humbling; the acts of patience and justifying faith shall cease in heaven; but the duty of praising, and glorifying God will continue to all Eternity. Methinks I see the Saints following the Lamb; methinks I hear the familiar converses betwixt Christ and them; as Christ opens himself to them, so they to him; first, he begins; Oh my dearest Saints, you are they, for whom before all time I decreed this heaven, and now you see the execution of my decrees; whiles the world stood, I was still carrying on the work of your salvation, either in doing or suffering, or in successive works, applying my doings and sufferings, my active and passive obedience to your persons, and now the World is at an end, you see the end of my work, and the end of your faith, which is the Eternal Salvation of your souls; Oh how

*I have my wish, and you have your happiness; here you and I will live together, that I may forever behold you, and that you may forever behold me, and my glory; which no sooner said, but methinks I hear all those innumerable Saints in heaven to answer, worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing, and therefore unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us Kings unto God and his Father, to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen. Yea, methinks I hear every creature in heaven say, blessing, honor, glory, and power be unto him that sitteth on the Throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever. Amen. Why this is their continual work in heaven; they have nothing else to do, but with joy and gladness to sing forth the praises of God, and of Christ, and that his mercy endureth forever. And this likewise is comprehended under that notion of the Saints beholding of Christ, which completely makes up the proposition asserted, *that Christ, or the glory of Christ, which the Saints shall behold to all eternity, is their all in all.

Thus far we have propounded the object which is Jesus carrying on the Salvation of his Saints in his coming again to earth, and taking them up with himself and his Angels into heaven; our next work is to direct you how to look unto Jesus in this respect, and then we have done.

CHAP. II.

SECT. I. Of knowing Jesus as carrying on the great work of our Salvation in his second coming.

WHAT looking is, and what it contains, we have often heard; and that in these respects we may look on Jesus.

1. Let us know Jesus, carrying on the Saints Salvation in his second coming, and taking them to Heaven. Many glorious excellent things, many precious passages, many high and heavenly carriages are in this transaction; Is it not of high concernment that he that now sits at God's right hand interceding for us, should thence come again to judge the World, and after judgment take up his Saints with him into glory? can we read of the several actings of this general Assize, and not desire to read on still? nay, is not all our reading mixed with admiration of every passage? come! wonder, and sit, and pause, and stop, at every word; stay and wonder, and adore that light, which appears in any beam of truth, and in the admiration of that truth which doth appear, cast thyself down at the feet of Christ, and cry out; O the depth of Glory, and Majesty, and goodness, and grace in thee! O the riches of love that thou shouldst let out thyself in these several admirable dispensations! come be exact in this study; gather up all the crumbs and fillings of this gold; the least beams of the glory of Christ (especially as it shines and glitters at his second coming) have so much light, and love, and splendor in them, as that they will be very sweet to look upon them: every piece or part of this knowledge will be of special use and worth, yea the low and imperfect knowledge of this mystery is of infinite more value than the high and perfect knowledge of Ten thousand things besides. And one thing (O my soul) let me tell thee it is possible for thee to attain a very sweet, and satisfactory degree of this very knowledge. And therefore study close, run over again all that hath been spoken, and dig yet deeper into that glorious mine; content not thyself with a bare discovery of that gold-ore which is only upon the superficies or top of the mine, but go so far as to find out the inward spiritual, and experimental knowledge, which the Saints by the light of the Spirit may come to attain. O study Christ in his second coming to judgment.

SECT. II. Of considering Jesus in that respect.

2. LET us consider Jesus, carrying on this work of Salvation at his second coming. It is not enough to know, but we must meditate and seriously consider of it. A mere student may know Christ, and study Christ, as he knows and studies other things: he may keep together many notions concerning Christ, and his coming to Judgment, but he hath no impression of the holiness of Christ upon his heart: and in this respect he is a stranger to Christ and all his actings; alas, he studies Christ, but he doth not rightly, seriously, inwardly consider of Christ, but he doth not look unto Jesus, as one that looks to his pattern, or as one that looks to his refuge, hope, and help; true and spiritual consideration, is a serious matter; its not some few and fleeting thoughts that are the discharge of this work, but thoughts resting, dwelling, fixing, and staying upon Christ, until they come to some profitable issue; O it is another manner of business then many are aware of; it's a thinking with thought upon thought; it's a reiteration and multiplication of the thoughts of the mind upon the Subject propounded; so the Scripture expresseth it, I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and in that next verse, I turned to see; he looked, upon and considered his works, and he returned to behold them; he thought on them before, but now he returned to think; he renewed his thoughts upon the matter, and took a new view of them. Indeed when the understanding works seriously and spiritually, it will fetch things into sight, and not only so, but it will hold them there, and fasten upon them, and when they are gone, it will fetch them again, my soul hath them still in remembrance, my soul in remembering doth remember them, and will not off till the end he obtained; so a man eyes Christ, till he have more of Christ, more of his presence, and more of his light, and more of his favor, and more of his image. O let this be our work; let us thus consider Jesus in reference to his second coming to judgment. And that we may do it in Order—

1. Consider Christ's preparing for judgment; realize it as if thou sawest or heardst the same; no sooner the time determined which God hath appointed, but Christ commands, make ready ye Angels to wait upon me, and make ready ye glorious souls that now are with me; it is the Fathers pleasure, and it is my pleasure to go down into the nether World, and to call before me all the men and women that ever lived in it; there will I pass my doom upon all flesh, and reward everyone, good and bad, according to his works. O what a shout may I imagine in heaven at this news! what joy is in the souls of Saints that now they must go to their bodies, and enter into them, that both their souls and bodies, which sometimes lived together, may now dwell together with Christ, in glory, and never part more? if those that live on earth are commanded by Christ, To lift up their heads, because their redemption draweth nigh; how much more shall they joy in Heaven, who also have waited for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of their bodies, that now the long-looked-for day is come, it is come, O the exaltation of the Angels at this tidings! This is worthy a pause, a Selah to be set upon it.

2. Consider Christ's coming to judgment; all now in readiness, the Son of God comes forth with all his glorious attendants; For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his Angels, and with the souls of Saints, that for a time have been in Paradise. Oh what a goodly sight is here! In this meditation I may see with John, The new Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a Bride adorned for her husband. Down comes Christ, and down come the Angels, and down come the spirits of the just made perfect: and as they come along, see how they shake the Heavens, and dim, and dark the very lights of Heaven; see what a flood of fire goes before them; see how they pass into the cloud, where Christ makes a stand, and erects a Throne for himself to sit on. Sure 'twill be a gilded glorious cloud, when Christ with all his celestial servants shall sit upon it: a mornings cloud gilded with the beams of the Sun is admirably fair and shining; but what a shining cloud is that where the Sun of righteousness with all his morning stars do sit and shine? here's enough to dazzle my eyes, and to take up my thoughts; O my soul think on it!

3. Consider Christ's summons of the Elect to come under judgment; no sooner in the cloud, but He shall send his Angels with a great sound of a Trumpet, and they shall gather together his Elect from the four winds, from the one end of heaven to another. Will not this be a strange sight to see Christ a coming, with Trumpets sounding before him, causing all the dead to awaken out of their sleeps of death; the very sound of this Trumpet was ever in Jerome's ears, Arise ye dead and come to Judgment, and no question but thy ears shall be filled with the blast thereof; the Trumpet shall found that shall be heard over all the World; and then shall the dead arise out of their graves; and every Saints soul shall re-enter into his own body, by virtue of the resurrection of Christ their Head. Can I pass this meditation without some reflection on myself? O my soul how joyfully wilt thou greet thy body, when thou shalt enliven it again? how wilt thou say, O my dear Sister, whom I left behind me in the dust when I went to Heaven? how sweet is thy carcass, how comely is thy countenance? how do I enter into thee, and animate thee, and I will never more leave thee; thou wast my yoke-fellow in the Lord's Labors, and my companion in persecution and wrong; now shall we enter together into our Masters joy? see, lift up thy head, behold Jesus Christ yonder sitting in the cloud; and lo here the Angels waiting on us, and coming to take us with the rest of the Saints into the Air, to meet our Redeemer there. Could I but realize this summons, this resurrection, this meeting of the soul and body, and going with the Angels into the judgment-seat, oh how would it work! and what work would it make within!

4. Consider Christ and the Saints meeting at the judgment day; oh how shall the Saints look, and stare, and gaze at the beauty of Jesus Christ? oh how will they break out into admiration at the first view of those glories which never before appeared on this side Heaven? is not this he (will they say) of whom we read so often, that he was fairer than the sons of men? that he was white, and ruddy, the chiefest of ten thousands; that his countenance was as Lebanon, excellent as the Cedars, glorious as when the Sun shineth in his strength: but was ever the half told us of what now we see, and behold? O the super-excellent, transcendent beauty of this Son of righteousness! O the treasures of loveliness in this Jesus Christ never seen before! And thus as they admire, so they adore; now they begin those Hallelujahs, that never, never shall have end; they fall at the feet of Christ, and the Lord Christ takes them up with his hands, and folds them in his arms; oh what mutual reciprocal salutations are these betwixt Christ and his members? oh my head! and oh my body! oh my husband! and oh my spouse! oh my dear! and oh my darling! never two lovers met with such heat of love, as Christ and his Saints; come, saith Christ, and sit you down here at my right hand, and let the world be on my left hand; it was otherwise with you in your life-time, my gold and my jewels were then cast in the dust; you were then clothed with infamy, and the vilest of men were then guilded with honor; but now I will set all right, now the dust shall be swept away, and the jewels of my Kingdom shall be gathered up; now the Goats shall be driven into the desert, and you who are the Sheep shall be brought into my fold. Oh my soul, what a meeting is this? what a sight will this be, to behold the Saints in this condition, and thyself amongst them? couldst thou but realize this one very passage, it were enough to quench thy lust, and to kindle a flame of pure love in thy heart to Jesus Christ; it is a quickening, rousing, rising, rejoicing, consideration.

5. Consider Christ sentencing the Saints for eternal glory; then shall the books be opened, and all the good works of the Saints shall be revealed and made known; and then shall the Judge from his Throne of Majesty (in the sight and hearing of all the world) pronounce that sentence, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the beginning of the world. q. d. Come my Saints, come with me into glory; come now from labor to rest, from disgrace to glory, from the jaws of death to the joys of eternal life; for my sake ye have been railed on, reviled and cursed; but now it shall appear to all those cursed Esau's, that you are the true Jacob's that shall receive the blessing, and blessed shall you be; come now and possess with me the inheritance of Heaven, where you shall be for love, Sons; for birth-right, heirs; for dignity, Kings; for holiness, Priests: come, you may boldly enter in, for my Father hath prepared, and kept it for you, ever since the first foundation of the World was laid.

O my soul, dost thou not remember when sometimes thou hast been at the feet of Christ in the beauty of holiness, and there tookest in those droppings of his spirit; which were better to thee than the feasts of Kings? dost thou not remember when sometimes thou hast had the very beams of light darted from the face of Jesus Christ, when he whispered to thy soul the forgiveness of thy sins, saying, Fear not, thy sins shall not hurt thee, I am thy salvation? oh what joy was then? what meltings, movings, stirrings, leapings of heart were then in thy bosom? but was that joy anything to this, or to be compared with this? that was a drop, but here's an Ocean, here's fullness of joy; oh what leapings of heart, what ravishments will be within when thou shalt see thyself in the arms of Christ, and shalt receive words of life from the mouth of Christ, in the face of all the World? what a thing will this be, when Christ shall pass a sentence of death on others, and speak words of life unto thee? when thou shalt see him frowning upon the world (and oh those frowns will break the heart) and shalt behold him smiling in the fullness of his love upon thyself? that Christ at such a time should be delighting-thee with all the embraces of love, and with this sweet invitation to Heaven, Come thou blessed inherit the Kingdom, it were enough to a spirit a soul half dead; the very meditation of this must needs be sweet.

6. Consider Christ and the Saints Judging the rest of the world; no sooner are the Saints sentenced, but Christ turns to the wicked, and bids them go into everlasting fire; in which sentence the Saints shall join with Christ himself, Do ye not know that the Saints shall judge the World? when the Saints appear, it is not only by a Summons, but with commission; not only to be judged, but to judge; not only shall they stand at Christ's right hand, but they shall sit down on the Throne of the Son of God, to judge the wicked Angels and the World. O the torment! O the vexation of wicked men and Devils, when they shall see those very men whom they scorned, oppressed, persecuted, to be now advanced, not only to glory, but to be their judges! it is as if some Noble man had wronged some Poor man, and that the King should therefore deliver the Noble man into the power of the poor man, to take his own revenge: Surely, The ungodly shall see this, and be grieved, he shall gnash with his teeth for indignation, and melt away: but on the contrary, The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance, he shall wash his foot-steps in the blood of the ungodly.

O my soul, dost thou believe this truth? and art thou confident that thou shalt sit with Christ on his very Throne to judge the World? why then be joyful in afflictions, exercise thou patience in the censures and judgments of the World, know thou for thy comfort that there is a turn and time of judging, and therefore say, With me it is a small matter that I should be judged of you, or of man's Judgment, as the original hath it, of man's day. Is it not enough to command patience, if God's day be at hand, when I shall judge my unjust judges; hark what the Apostle saith, Be patient Brethren unto the coming of the Lord, behold the Husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain; be ye also patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh,—behold the judge standeth before the door. Come exercise patience, let the World be judging; if they will needs slander, reproach, and persecute thy soul, they had better abuse any judge on earth than thee: though thou art the poorest, weakest, meanest of God's Saints upon the earth, they will know one day that they have abused their own judge in abusing thee. And therefore be thou quiet, silent, patient; Say as David, let him alone, and let him curse, yea, let him judge, for the Lord hath bidden him; it may be the Lord will look, on mine affliction, and will requite good for his Judging this day; this is his day; but the day of the Lord is my day, and then shall I sit with Christ on his Throne to judge the World. Oh the sweet that I may suck from this honey-comb, of Christ and his Saints judging the World!

7. Consider Christ and his Saints going up into Heaven. No sooner hath he done his work with the World, and sent them away, but then he shall conduct all his flock like a faithful shepherd to their fold; then shall he go with all his troops following him into Heaven. Hath not Christ said so? If I go away, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there you may be also. O those songs of joy, and shouts of praise that will fill the World at that day! And thus as they go along, Heaven opens unto them, and they enter in; what welcomes they have there is past my telling; if we may imagine and guess, O the welcome that Christ will give! Come my spouse, and come my dear, come all my Saints; here be those Mansions that I went before to prepare and make ready for you, here be those everlasting habitations wherein you and I will dwell together; here is your Fathers house, the building of the wall is all of Jasper, and the worst piece of it is all of pure Gold, like unto clear Glass; why this is your home, your house made without hands, here you and I will spend our time, eternity itself, in joying, enjoying, and beholding of each other. And as thus Christ salutes them, so will the Angels, those Created Citizens of Heaven salute them too; for if joy be in Heaven at the conversion of one sinner, what joy will there be at the glorification of all these Saints? what welcome, entertainment, will the Angels give to these new guests at their first entrance into Heaven?

O my soul, if thou art one of them that shalt have this welcome, what wilt thou say when thou art admitted in thither! if weeping were in Heaven, wouldst thou not weep for joy? sure these things are no fictions of man's brain, but truths, and realities; and as they are true and real, so they are exceeding full of joy; all the excellencies of this World are but a dream in comparison of them; even the Sun in its brightness is but darkness to this glory that shall then be seen. Come, think over these things, and be so enlarged in thy thoughts, that before they go, thou mayest feel the sweet, and taste of this goodness of the Lord.

8. Consider all the several transactions that will follow in Heaven: then will Christ present all his elect to God his Father; then will he give in all his commissions which he hath received from his Father; Then will the Son himself be subject to the Father, that God may be all in all. I cannot stay to enlarge on these; Only remember, though God may be all in all, that excludes not Christ, for he also is All in all to all his Saints, even to all eternity; Immediate visions and fruitions of Christ, as God is the very top of Heavens joy: Christ is all, and in all; Christ is the center of Heavens happiness; Christ is the well-spring that fills the capacities of Saints and Angels; Christ is the object of happiness itself, there is as much happiness in Christ as happiness is; what ever belongs to glory, is in Christ, In him dwells all the fullness: whatever excellency is in Heaven, it is in Christ, not only in perfection, but connection, for all those excellencies meet together, rest in Christ; and Christ is all good things to all his Saints in Heaven; he is Beauty to their Eyes, Music to their Ears, Honey to their mouths, Perfume to their Nostrils, Health to their Bodies, Joy to their Souls, Light to their Understandings, Content to their Wills; he is Time without sliding, Society without loathing, Desire without fainting, Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending; wanting both, needing neither, yet the Author of them both, he is All in all, from one, not all. Even all the Strength, Wit, Pleasure, Virtues, Colours, Beauties, Harmony, and goodness that are in Men, Beasts, Fishes, Fouls, Trees, Herbs, and all Creatures, are nothing but sparkles of those things which are in Christ. Christ himself will then supply their use, so that the best Creatures which now serve the Saints, shall not have the honor to serve them then; There will be no need of the Sun, nor of the Moon, to shine in that City, for the glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

And hence the beholding of Christ is the All in all to his glorified Saints: this was Christ's Prayer, Father I will that those whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, to what end? that they may behold my glory. Christ's heavenly presence is conspicuous, he is not present as some things that are not seen, and yet are present; but his presence is, or certainly shall be conspicuous to all his Saints: when he was in the world his glory was covered under a mean outside, he was like a bright light in a dark-Lantern, and there were very few that knew him then; but in Heaven he shall be as a Cabinet opened, or as the Sun in his full glory; We shall know him as we are known, and behold him face to face, and we shall see him as he is. Nor only will he be conspicuous, but his presence shall be vital; a stone may be with us, and seen clearly, but there's little in the sight of that; in the beholding of Christ there will be an acting of kindness upon the Saints, there will be visions with life and dear refreshing: O the influences that the sight of Christ will have on his Saints in Heaven! nor only will he be conspicuous and vital, but his presence shall be fixed; he shall abide with the Saints, that they may forever behold him. Oh if there was such running after Christ in this world, some getting on hills, and others on trees, that they might behold him, when he passed by, what will the sight of Christ in Heaven be, when he shall be always in the eye of his Saints, and never out of sight, when they shall be always viewing of him, and be always satisfied with that view? nor only will he be conspicuous, vital, fixed, but his very presence shall transform; They shall see his face,—and they shall reign forever and ever. O the influence of this sight! it is of such a transforming Nature, that to see the King will make Kings; this vision of glory amounts unto a fruition of glory, if ever thou art a spectator of Christ, thou art sure to be a partaker of Christ in all his glory. I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; why so? for we shall see him as he is. And no wonder, for if the imperfect beholding of his glory in the glass of his Gospel, change the soul into the same image from glory to glory; how much more shall the full view of his glory in Heaven transform both the souls and bodies of his Saints into a fullness of glory? Here then is the top of Heaven; here is the All in all; here is the satisfaction of souls to the very uttermost; if Christ's glory in his transfiguration was so satisfactory to Peter, as that he desired his sight of it might never have end, or interruption; O it is good to be here, let us here build Tabernacles; and yet Peter was only a spectator of this glory, for he had himself no share in it; O then what infinite satisfaction mayst thou expect in the beholding of Christ's Glory in Heaven, which will be accompanied with an everlasting enjoyment? the lusture of his glory will be diffused unto all, so that some shall enjoy the glory of the Sun, others of the Moon, and others of the Stars. O my soul, if thou art but a Star there, yet if thou art filled with that light that comes from the Sun of righteousness, it is enough. O remember! oh consider! oh never forget this Looking unto Jesus! as it is thy duty on Earth, so it is thy privilege and highest happiness in Heaven forever and ever.

SECT. III. Of desiring after Jesus in that respect.

3. LET us desire after Jesus, carrying on this work of man's Salvation at his second coming. It is true, many shrink at the thoughts of death and judgment; and 'tis an high pitch to desire the dissolution of ourselves, and of this world; the best Christians are compounded of flesh and spirit, and if the spirit long to be in Heaven, yet the Flesh is loath to leave this Earth. Speak out of my soul, thou prayest daily, Come Lord Jesus, let thy Kingdom come; but is not the Flesh afraid, lest God should hear thy Prayers? Oh that we could loath our loathness in that respect! oh that we could long for this second coming of Christ to Judgment! And Christians, this is attainable, or otherwise I should not persuade you to it. I am in a strait (said Paul) between two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ which is far better: And this is the voice of the desolate Bride, Come; for the spirit of Christ within her saith come, The Spirit and the Bride say come. Yea, the whole Creation saith come, Waiting to be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the Sons of God; and not only they, but ourselves also which have the first-fruits, of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit the redemption of our body. Oh that we could groan! oh that we could come up to this high pitch, even to sigh out, not our breath, but our spirits! even to groan out, not some vapors, but our hearts.

I know it is suitable to flesh and blood to tremble at the thoughts of judgment; When Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and of judgment to come, Felix trembled. Weak Christians as well as Heathens may have many terrible fancies and notions of that day: Oh to think of a time, When there shall be a great earthquake, when the Sun shall become black as jet, and the Moon red as blood, when the Stars of heaven shall fall, and when the heavens themselves shall depart as a scroll; when the Trumpet shall sound, that will shake the Earth, and every Mountain and Island shall be moved out of their places; when the Kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief Captains, and every bonds-man, and every free-man shall hide themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the Mountains, and shall say to the rocks and to the mountains, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand? Will it not be terrible? if the people were so afraid when the Lord came without such attendants to give the Law upon Mount Sinai; certainly much more terrible must such a coming in this manner be, when he shall come like a revenging judge to take an account of the world for the keeping, or for the breaking of that Law.

In this respect, I wonder not at some weak Christians, that cry out, O Lord thou knowest, that I have not desired this woeful day; A wise Jew was wont to say, from a deep foresight of terror of this day, The Messiah will come, but Lord let me not live to see his coming. Now to conquer this fear, and to abate such slavish terror in such souls; oh that they would consider it in the whole notion of it, not only as it shall be a day of blackness, and of terror, but as it shall also be a day of rest and of release. Some are apt to take it up in the half notion of it, they look on it only as a day of judgment, and a day of condemnation, and so they fly from it as from a Serpent; but if they would take it up again, and look on the other side, the Serpent would be turned into a Rod. The day which will be so dreadful to the ungodly, and the beginning of their misery, it will be as joyful to the Saints, and the beginning of their glory.

But in what respect is this day of Christ so desirable a day? I answer, in these particulars—

1. It is a day of refreshing. Here the Saints work in a furnace; his fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem; but Christ in his second coming (when all the world shall be on fire) shall fan wind (as I may say) on his Saints to cool them; to the wicked it is an hot day, a day of everlasting burnings; but to the Saints it is a day of cooling, quickening, reviving, and refreshing.

2. It is a day of restoring of all things. Every creature is now in it's work-day dressed, all defiled with sin, but at that day there shall be a restitution of all things; all the disorders and ruins which sin hath brought into the world shall then be repaired, and man himself whose sin is the cause of all, shall then be restored to his original glory.

3. It is a day of the manifestation of the Sons of God. Then shall it be known who are true Saints, and who are Reprobates; here we live in confusion, and in our most refined Churches (if we have none scandalous) yet we may have many hypocrites, and we cannot discern them; but in that day it shall be known who are the Lord's, and who are not; the hypocrite shall then be unmantled, and the Sons of God shall shine and glitter as the Sun, that all may run and read, These are God's Elect, these are the Sons and Daughters of the Almighty.

4. It is the day of adoption, and of the redemption of our bodies. It is the day of our Sonship and deliverance; I deny not but that the Saints are adopted and redeemed before this day; but this adoption and redemption is not consummate, nor declared before Christ come again to judgment, then it is that he takes his Saints home to his house, and all the Angels and Men of the World shall understand the love wherewith he loves them; then shall Christ say, These are my sons whom I have redeemed, and as I have set them free, so now shall they live and reign with me forever and ever.

5. It is The day of Christ's coming. He was here not long since travailing about the Earth, and about our business; which done, he went away to Heaven upon a special errand for his Saints; and there now he is to intercede for them, to attend the court, to be their Advocate, and to agitate the business of their souls; and withal there now he is to take up lodgings for them, and to prepare them mansions for eternity: And no sooner shall he have dispatched his business there, but he will come for earth again; he will bow the Heavens and come down to give a report of his transactions there; hath he not left us a letter to that effect, I will come again, and receive you to myself, that where I am, there you may be also. O why are his Chariots so long a coming? why tarry the wheels of his Chariots?

6. It is the day of Christ's revealing. Christ to many of his Saints here is hidden and withdrawn; it is true, he may be in them, yea, certainly he is in them by his spirit, but no man knows it, no nor themselves neither, which makes them cry, O where is he whom my soul loveth; but at this day of Christ's revealing, all curtains shall be drawn aside, Christ shall be unhid, and the Saints shall see him face to face, they shall never lose him more; for without any intermission they shall stare, and gaze, and be ever looking unto Jesus.

7. It is the day of Christ's bright and glorious appearing. When he was upon the Earth he appeared in our dress, many then saw him, who then said of him, There is no beauty in him that we should desire him: Oh it was a sad sight to see him crowned with thorns and scourged with whips, and nailed to the cross? but in his next appearing we shall see him in his best attire, arrayed in white, attended with the retinue of glory, riding in his Chariot of light, and smiling upon all his Saints. Now is not this desirable? The Apostle tells us of the Saints, Looking for the glorious appearing of the great God, and of our Savior Jesus Christ; therefore surely they desire it.

8. It is the day of Christ's joy. Then he shall see of the travail of his soul, and he shall be satisfied. Now what is the travail of his soul? is it not the perfection of his redeemed ones? oh when Christ seeth this, when he seeth his spouse as without spot, or wrinkle; then shall be fulfilled that prophesy, As the Bridegroom rejoiceth over the Bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee: look how the joy of a Bridgroom is over his Bride upon the wedding-day, (surely then if ever) all is love and joy; so is Christ's joy over his Saints at the last day; then begins that joy that never, never shall have end, there shall be no moment of time wherein Christ will not rejoice over his Saints forever after.

9. It is the day of Christ's perfection. Christ as Mediator is not fully perfect till all his members be in glory united to him: As an head that wants an arm, or hand, or leg, we say is lame; so it is a kind of mystical lameness that Christ our head hath not with him all his members; the Saints are little pieces of mystical Christ, and it shall not be well till Christ gather in his arms, and thighs, and pull them nearer to himself in glory: and is not this desirable to see the Lord Jesus Christ as Head of the Church in his perfection? to see the Son of righteousness with every beam united to him? O desirable day!

10. It is Christ's Wedding-day, or the Marriage day of the Lamb. The Saints are betrothed to Christ when first they believe in Christ, that is Christ's word, I will betroth thee unto me, and thou art my sister, my spouse, not my Wife; thou art not yet married, only contracted here: but at that day the marriage of the Lamb will be complete, and then will the voice be heard; Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his Wife hath made herself ready. O the joy that Christ, and Saints, and Angels, and all that belong to Heaven will make at this marriage! Blessed are they that are called to the Marriage-supper of the Lamb. One of the seven Angels that came to John in visions, talked with him, saying, Come hither, and I will show thee the Bride, the Lamb's Wife. If the espoused Virgin be willing to be married, how is it that we cry not, Come Lord Jesus, come quickly?

11. It is Christ's day of presenting his Saints unto his Father; he delivers up the Kingdom to God, even the Father. Then shall he take his Bride by the hand and bring her to his house, and present her in all state and solemnity to the Father. Is not this a desirable day? surely Christ rejoiceth, and his very heart even springs again to present his Church unto his Father, Father here behold my Bride that I have married unto myself. It is true, a Child may sometimes marry such a one, as he may be ashamed to think of bringing to his Father's house; but how mean and sinful soever we are of ourselves, when once we are married unto Christ, he will not think it any dishonor, no not before his Father, that he hath such a bride, Father (will he say) lo here all my Saints of all that thou hast given me, I have lost none, but the children of perdition, these are mine, dearly bought, thou knowest the price, O welcome them to glory.

12. It is the day of Christ's glory. What glorious descriptions have we in scripture of Christ's coming to Judgment? The Son of man shall come from heaven with power and great glory; and the work no sooner done, but he shall return again into Heaven with power and great glory. Not to mention the essential glory of Christ, O the glory of Christ as Mediator; all the glory that Ahasuerus could put upon his favorites was nothing to this spiritual and heavenly glory, which the Father will put upon the Son; it is a glory above all the glories that ever were, or ever shall be; it is an eternal glory; not but that Christ shall at last give up his Kingdom to his Father; he shall no more discharge the acts of an Advocate, or intercessor for us in heaven, only the glory of this shall always continue; it shall to all eternity be recorded that he was the Mediator, and that he is the Savior that hath brought us to life and immortality, and upon this ground the tongues of all the Saints shall be employed to all eternity to celebrate this glory. This will be their everlasting Song, Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us Kings and Priests unto God and his Father, to him be glory and dominion forever and ever, Amen. Now is not this a desirable thing? do we believe there is such a thing as Christ's mediatory glory, and Christ's essential glory? as Christ's human glory, and Christ's divine glory? and have we no desires to behold this glory? surely Christ himself desired it of God, he would have his Saints with him where he is, that they might behold his glory; and shall not we desire it, whom it most concerns? O the sweet temper of the spouse when she cried out, Make haste my beloved and be thou like a Roe, or to a young Hart upon the mountains of spices!

Come now, and run over these particulars; surely everyone is motive enough to desire this day; it is a day of refreshing, a day of restoring, a day of manifestation of the sons of God, a day of adoption, and of the redemption of our bodies; a day of Christ's coming, of Christ's revealing, of Christ's appearing, of Christ's joy, of Christ's perfection, of Christ's Wedding, of Christ's presenting of his Saints, of Christ's glory; what are we not yet in a longing frame? the wife of youth that wants her husband for some years, and expects that he should return from over Sea-lands, she is often on the shore, her very heart loves the wind that should bring him home; every Ship in view, that is but a drawing near the shore, is her new joy, and new reviving hopes, she asks of every passenger, O saw you my husband? what is he a doing? when will he come? is he not yet Shipped, and ready for a return? souls truly related to the Lord Jesus Christ should methinks long no less; O what desire should the Spirit and the Bride have to hear when Christ shall say to his Angels, Make you ready for the journey, let us go down and divide the skies, and bow the Heavens; I will gather my prisoners of hope unto me, I cannot want my Rachel, and her weeping Children any longer, behold I come quickly to judge the Nations? Methinks every spouse of Christ should love the quarter of the sky, that being rent asunder should yield unto her husband; methinks she should love that part of the heavens, where Christ puts through his glorious hand, and comes riding on the Rain-bow and Clouds to receive her to himself. I conclude this with the conclusion of the Bible, He that testifieth these things, saith surely I come quickly, Amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus.

SECT. IV. Of hoping in Jesus in that respect.

4. LET us hope in Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his second coming. Hope is of good things to come; hope is an act of the will extending itself towards that which it loves as future; only the future good as it is the object of hope is difficult to obtain, and therein it differs from desire; for desire looks at future good without any apprehension of difficulty, but hope respects the future good as it is gotten with difficulty. Lazy hopes that will not be in use of means, though difficult, are not true hopes; we see many desirable things set before us, of which we may say, Oh that we had our part and portion of them! but shall we go on, and search and find out the truth, whether we have any part or portion in them? or whether we have any hopes of any such thing? oh this is worthy our pains! come then, let us yet make a further progress, let us not only desire that it may be thus and so; but let us say, on some sure and certain grounds, we hope it is thus and so; we hope Christ will come again, and receive us to himself, that where he is, there we may be also.

Indeed there is the Christians stay and comfort; such an hope is a sure Anchor, that will hold the ship in a storm; only because our souls lie upon it, we had need to look to it that our hopes be true; the worst can say, They hope to be saved as well as the best; but I fear the hopes of many will be lamentably frustrated. Our Savior brings in many pleading with confidence at the last day for life, who shall be rejected with miserable disappointment; Many shall say to me at that day, Lord, Lord, &c. and I will confess unto them, I never knew them; depart from me. Now to clear this point, that our hopes, are of the right stamp, and not counterfeit hopes, I shall lay down some signs, whereby we may know that Christ's coming is for us, and for our good, and for the grace that is to be given us at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

1. If we are born again, then will his glorious coming be to glorify us, Blessed be the God and Father of Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, to an inheritance incorruptible. Whoever hath the true hope of Heaven, he is one that is begotten again; so our Savior, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God. Many things may be done, as Herod heard John the Baptist, and did many things: but except a man be born again, those many things are in God's account as nothing. When Peter had told Christ, that he and his fellow-disciples had forsaken all, and followed him; Then Jesus said, verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the Throne of his glory, ye shall also sit upon twelve Thrones, Judging the twelve Tribes of Israel. q. d. Peter, you have forsaken all, and followed me; but know, that bare forsaking is not enough: but you who have felt the Work of God regenerating your souls, upon which ye have followed me, ye shall sit upon twelve Thrones. In those who are alive at the last day there will be a change, and this change will be to them instead of death; Behold I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. Certainly in those who at the last day shall sit on Thrones with Christ, there must be a change likewise in this life; (i.e.) a new spirit, and a new life must be put into them: Oh what a change is this! suppose a rational soul were put into a beast, what a change would be in that Creature! suppose an angelical nature were put upon us, what a change would there be in us? oh but what a change is this, when a man is born again of water and of the spirit; I must tell you, that the highest degree of glory in Heaven, is not so different from the lowest degree of grace here, as the lowest degree of grace here is different from the highest excellency of nature here; because the difference betwixt the highest degree of the glory of Heaven, and the lowest degree of grace is only gradual; but the difference that is betwixt the lowest degree of grace, and the highest excellency of nature is a specifical difference. Oh there's a mighty work of God in preparing souls for glory by grace, and this change must they have that must sit on Thrones. Come then, you that hope for glory, try yourselves by this; is there a change in your hearts, words, and lives? is there a mighty work of grace upon your spirits? are you experienc'd in the great mystery of regeneration? why here's your evidence, that your hopes are sound, and that you shall sit upon Thrones to judge the world.

2. If we long for his coming, then will he come to satisfy our longings. Blessed are they that hunger and thirst, for they shall be satisfied; how satisfied, but in being saved? Christ was offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin to salvation; unto them that look for him, or long for him, shall he appear the second time unto salvation; it is very observable, how this looking for Christ, is in Scripture a frequent description of a true believer in Christ. Who are true, sincere, and sound Christians, but such as live in a perpetual desire and hope of Christ's blessed coming? they are ever looking for, and hastening unto the coming of the day of God. Here are two signs in one verse, looking for, and hastening unto; true believers are not only in a posture looking for the coming of Jesus Christ, but also, as it were, going forth to meet Jesus Christ with burning Lamps. Luther could say, That he was no true Christian, neither could he truly recite the Lord's prayer, that with all his heart desired not this day of the coming of Christ. It is true, that whether we will or no, that day will come, but in the Lord's prayer Christ hath taught us to pray that God would accelerate and hasten the day of his glorious coming, thy Kingdom come, (i.e.) the Kingdom of glory at the Judgment, as well as the Kingdom of grace in the Church. It is true, that the day of the Lord is a terrible day, the Heavens, and Earth, and Sea, and Air shall be all on a bone-fire, and burn to nothing; nevertheless we according to his promise look for new Heavens, and a new Earth; we that have laid hold upon God, and laid hold on him by the right handle, according to his promises, we look for this day of the Lord, we look for it, and hasten unto it, we are glad it is so near, and we do what we can to have it nearer, with an holy kind of impatience we beg of the Lord, Come Lord Jesu, come, quickly. This was Paul's character, We know that the whole creation groaneth, and travelleth in pain together until now; and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit the redemption of our bodies: God's children, such as have the first-fruits of the spirit, the beginnings of true saving grace in them, they constantly look and long for the day of full deliverance, or of the coming of Christ. This the Apostle instanceth in his Corinthians, ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; and in like manner he writes to his Philippians, Our Conversation is in Heaven from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: And to Titus himself he writes the same things, We look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ. Now Christians lay this character to heart, do you long, pant, and look for this glorious and second coming of Christ? have you any such wishes, and sayings of heart and mind as these are; Oh that Christ would appear! Oh that Christ would now break the Heavens, and come to Judgment! oh that I could see him in the Cloud, and on his Throne! oh that his enemies were ruined, my sins subdued, my soul saved, that I might serve him without weariness, forever and ever! Surely if these elongations of soul be in you, it is a comfortable evidence that your hopes are sound, and that Christ will come to receive you to him. If, and to bring you to glory.

3. If we love Christ's appearing, then will he appear on our side, Henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto them also that love his appearing. A true Christian loves Christ's appearing in ordinances, and in all the means of grace, how much more in his own person? but how should we love that we see not? O yes! there's a kind of an Idea of Christ, and of his glorious appearing in every sanctified soul, and in that respect we love him though we cannot see him, Who having not seen ye love, saith the Apostle: and so your love and faith at the appearing of Jesus Christ shall be found unto praise, and honor, and glory. Those that have not seen Christ, and yet love the Idea of his sight, even they shall appear at the appearing of Christ in praise, and honor, and glory. Is not the Crown laid up for them that love the appearing of Christ? is it not a sign of a good cause to love a day of hearing? surely the love of Christ's coming cannot consist without some assurance that a soul shall stand upright in the Judgment. He that hath not a confidence in his cause, loves not the coming of the Judge; no guilty prisoner loves the Sessions, or loves the judges presence; it is the cry of Reprobates, O ye mountains, and O ye Rocks fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne. But as for Christ and his Saints; O the mutual loves, and mutual longings in their breasts! The last words that Christ speaks in the Bible (and amongst us last words make deepest impressions) are, Surely I come quickly; and the last answer that is made in our behalf, is, Amen, even so come Lord Jesus. I know this Character is near the former, and therefore I shall pass it over.

4. If our works be good, then will he reward us according to our works. At that great day this will be the trial, works? are no works? Then will he say to them on his right hand, come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you, for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in, naked and ye clothed me, I was sick, and ye visited me, I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Here were works, upon which followed the rewards of Heaven for these went into eternal life. I know Works are not meritorious, and yet they are evidences; I know works without Faith are but glisterrings sins, and yet works done in faith are signs, and fore-runners of eternal glory; I know that if all the excellencies of all the moralities of all the men in the world were put together, these could never reach glory, and yet a cup of cold water given to one of Christ's little ones in the name of a Disciple of Christ shall not lose its reward. If a Christian doubt, how should I know that my works are of a right stamp. I answer, 1. Look at the principle, is there not something above nature? do I not find some new light let out by God, that shows a glory, and excellency, and beauty in good works? is there not something in me that makes the same to be sweet, or pleasant, or agreeable to me? 2. Look at the end; natural works have no better end than self and creature-respects; but in my works is there no aim at something higher than self? whatever I do, is not this in mine eye, that all I do may tend to the honor and glory of God? I had need take heed of vain-glory, and self applause; the Godly at the day of Judgment do not know the good works they did; if my aim be at God I shall forget myself, as if all I did were swallowed up in God. 3. Look at the manner of my doing works: Uzzah had a good intention, but his work was not good, because the manner was not good; are my works according to the rule? do they carry a conformity to the Law of God? Let every man try his own work in this: O my soul bring thy works to the touch-stone, the Scripture, the Rule of goodness, is not all thy gold then discovered to be dross? the Scripture doth not only tell of works, but tells us the manner of performing them; as for instance, if rightly done, they must be done in zeal, in fervency, in activity; thus God's people are called a peculiar people, zealous of good works; a formal, customary, superficial performance of holy works fails in the manner of performing them: what, are my works performed in zeal? is there not too much of coldness, emptiness formality in all I do? why, thus may I know whether my works are of a right stamp; certainly all works, duties, actings, which are not done by a gracious heart, through a gracious power, to a gracious end, in a gracious manner, are sins, and not such works as shall have the rewards of Heaven. Some may object, this is an hard saying, who then shall be saved? I answer, 1. By concession, very few; What is the whole company of Christians, besides a very few (said Salvian) but a sink of vices? are they only good works which are thus and thus qualified? it were enough to make us all fear all the works that ever we have done. But secondly, here's all our hope, that in a Gospel-way Christ looks at our good works in the truth of them, and not in the perfection of them; no man goes beyond Paul, who when he would do good, found evil present with him: Alas, there's a perpetual opposition and conflict betwixt the flesh and the spirit, so that the most spiritual man cannot do the good things he would do; and yet we must not conclude, that nothing is good in us, because not perfectly good. Sincerity and truth in the inward parts, may in this case hold up our hearts from sinking; as he in the Gospel cried, I believe Lord, help my unbelief; So if we can but say, I I do good works, Lord help me in the concurrence of all needful circumstances, here will be our evidence that our hopes are sound, and that Christ will sentence us to eternal life. Come ye Blessed, &c. and why so? For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat, &c.

5. If we believe in Christ, then shall we live with Christ; if we come to him and receive him by Faith, then will he come again, and receive us to himself, that where he is, there we may be also. Good works are good evidences, but of all works those of the Gospel are clearest evidences, and have clearest promises; come then, let us try our obedience to the Commandments of Faith, as well as Life; let us try our submission to the Lord by believing, as well as doing. Surely the greatest work of God that ever any creature did, it is this Gospel-work, when it apprehends its own unworthiness, and ventures itself and its estate upon the righteousness of Jesus Christ: if we were able to perform a full, exact, and accurate obedience to every particular of the moral Law, it were not so great a work, nor so acceptable to God, nor should be so gloriously rewarded in heaven, as this one work of believing in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the work to which in express terms salvation, Heaven, and glory is promised; He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but he hath passed from death to life — And this is the will of him that sent me, that everyone that seeth the Son, and believeth on him may have everlasting life—And these things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is Christ the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name— Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved— And if thou shalt confess with thy mouth, the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved— And we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe unto the saving of the soul— And these things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have everlasting life. Why this above all is the Gospel work, to which are annexed those gracious promises of eternal life. So that if we believe in Christ, how may we be assured that we shall live with Christ.

O my soul, gather up all these characters, and try by them. Everyone can say, that they hope well, they hope to be saved, they hope to meet Christ with comfort, though they have no ground for it but their own vain conceits; but hope on good ground, is that hope that maketh not ashamed; say then, art thou born again? dost thou look and long for the coming of Christ in the clouds? dost thou love his appearing? art thou rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate? dost thou obey the commandments of faith as well as life? sure these are firm, and sound, and comfortable grounds of an assured hope. Content not thyself with an hope of possibility, or probability; but reach out to that plerophory, or full assurance of hope; the hope of possibility is but a weak hope, the hope of probability is but a fluctuating hope, but the hope of certainty is a settled hope; such an hope sweetens all the thoughts of God and Christ, of death and judgment, of Heaven, yea, and of Hell too, whiles we hope that we are saved from it; and are not the Scriptures written to this very purpose, That we might have this hope? are we not justified by his grace, that we might be heirs in hope, heirs according to the hope of eternal life? and was not this David's confidence, Lord I have hoped for thy salvation? why then art thou cast down O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance and my God.

If I may here enter into a Dialogue with my own poor, trembling, wavering soul.— Person— why art thou hopeless O my soul? wouldst thou not hope, if an honest man had made thee a promise of anything within his power? and wilt thou not hope when thou hast the promise, the oath, and the covenant of God in Christ? —Soul— Yes; methinks I feel some little hope, but alas it is but a little, a very little.—Person— Ay but go on my soul, true hope is called a lively hope, and a lively hope is an efficacious hope; no sooner faith commends the promise unto hope, but hope takes it, and hugs it, and reckons it as its Treasure, and feeds on it as Manna, which God hath given to refresh the weary soul in the desert of sin; go on then, till thou comest up to the highest pitch, even to that triumphant joyful expectation, and waiting for of Christ in glory— Soul— Why, methinks I would hope, I would ascend the highest step of hope; but alas I cannot; Oh I am exposed to many controversies, I am prone to many unquiet agitations; though I have a present promise, yet I extend my cares and fears even to eternity: Alas, I cannot comprehend, and therefore I am hardly satisfied; my sinful reason sees not its own way and end, and because it must take all on trust and credit, therefore it falls to wrangling; nay, Satan himself so snarles the question, and and I am so apt to listen to his doubts, that in the conclusion I know not how to extricate myself.—Person— Sayst thou so? surely in this case there's no cure, no remedy, but only the testimony of God's Spirit; but saith not the Apostle, That the spirit of itself bears witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God? if a Man or Angel, or Archangel should promise Heaven, peradventure thou mightest doubt; but if the Supreme Essence of the Spirit of God bear witness within, what room for doubting? why, this voice of the spirit is the very voice of God; hark then, enquire O my soul, if thou hast but this testimony of the spirit, thou art sure enough—Soul— Oh that it were thus with me! oh that the spirit would even now give me to drink of the wells of salvation! oh that the spirit would testify it home! oh that he would shine upon, and enlighten all those graces which he hath planted in me! fain would I come to the highest pitch of hope, oh that I could look upon the things hoped for as certainly future.—Person— Thou sayst well O my soul, and if these wishes be real, then pour out thyself unto God in prayer; this was the Apostles method, Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the holy Ghost; let this be thy practice, pray as he prayed, pray thou for thyself as he prayed for others; if an earthly Father will hearken to his child, how much more will God the Father give the spirit to them that ask the spirit of him.—Soul— Why if this be it; to thee Lord do I come, O give me the Spirit, the witness of the Spirit, the first-fruits of the spirit, the sealing of the spirit, the earnest of the spirit. O give me the spirit, and let the spirit give me this hope. *O the hope of Israel, and Savior thereof in the time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in my soul, and as a way-faring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night? Come, O come, and dwell in my soul, Come and blow on my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out: come and fill me with a lively hope; yea Lord excite, and quicken, and stir up my soul to act this hope, yea, so enlighten, or shine upon my hope, that I may know that I hope, and know that I joyfully expect, and wait for the coming of Christ: O Let me hear thy voice, Say unto my soul I am, and will be thy salvation.—Person—Well now, thou hast prayed, O my soul, Come, tell me, dost thou feel nothing stir? is there nothing at all in thee that assures thee of this assurance of hope? is there no life in thy affections? no spark that takes hold on thy heart to set it on flame? no comfort of the spirit, no joy in the holy Ghost?—Soul—Yes! methinks I feel it now begin to work, the Spirit that hath breathed this prayer into me comes in as Comforter; O now that I realize Christ's coming and my resurrection, I cannot but conclude with David, Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth, and my flesh also shall rest in hope. Oh what an earnest is this? what a piece hath the spirit put into my hand of the great sum promised? not only that he in great mercy promised me Heaven, but because he doth not put me into a present possession, he now gives me an earnest of my future inheritance. Why, surely all is sure, unless the earnest deceive me; and what? shall I dispute the truth of the earnest? oh God forbid! the stamp is too well known to be mistrusted; this seal cannot be counterfeit, because it is agreeable with the Word; I find in myself an hope, a true sincere hope, though very weak: I find upon trial that I am regenerate, that I look and long for the second coming of Jesus, that I love his appearance even before hand: that my works, though imperfect, are sincere and true, that I believe on the Name of the Son of God, and flesh and blood could never work these duties or these graces in me; it is only that good spirit of my God, which hath thus sealed me up to the day of redemption. Away, away despair, trouble me no longer with a musing thoughts; I will henceforth (if the Lord enable) walk confidently, and cheerfully in the strength of this assurance, and joyfully expect the full accomplishment of my happy contract from the hands of Christ. *The Lord is my portion, therefore will I hope in him; the Lord is good to them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him; it is good that I both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord— It is good that I hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto me at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

SECT. V. Of believing in Jesus in that respect.

5. LET us believe in Jesus as carrying on the great work of our salvation in his second coming. Now this believing in Christ is more than hoping in Christ; Faith eyes things as present, but hope eyes things as future; and hence the Apostle describes faith to the substance of things hoped for; it is the substance, foundation, or prop which upholds the building; or it is the substance, essence, existence of things hoped for, and consequently absent and a far off, to be by a firm apprehension of the believer as already present and real. And this is as necessary as the former; oh if we could but see things now, as they shall appear at that last general day of Judgment, how mightily would they work upon our souls? I verily think the want of this work of faith is the cause almost of all the evil in the world; and the acting of Faith on this subject would produce fruits even to admiration. If we could but see that glory of God in Christ, and those glorious treasures of mercies that shall then be communicated; if we could but see those dreadful evils that are now threatened, and shall then be fulfilled, would not this draw the hardest heart under Heaven? come, let us act faith this day, as if this day were the last day; a thousand years are but as one day to faith? it takes hold upon eternal life, whensoever it acts; it takes present possession of the glorious things of the Kingdom of God even now.

O then let us believe in Jesus in reference to his second coming to judgment. But how should we believe? what directions to act our saith on Jesus in this respect? I answer—

1. Faith must directly go to Christ.
2. Faith must go to Christ as God in the flesh.
3. Faith must go to Christ as God in the flesh made under the Law.
4. Faith must go to Christ made under the directive part of the Law by his life, and under the penal part of the Law by his death.
5. Faith must go to Christ as put to death in the Flesh, and as quickened by the spirit.
6. Faith must go to Christ, as going up into glory, as sitting down at God's right hand, and as sending down the holy Ghost.
7. Faith must go to Christ as interceding for his Saints, in which work he continues till his coming again. Of all these before.
8. Faith must go to Christ as coming again into this nether world to judge the quick and the dead; This is the last act of Faith in reference to Christ, From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. The coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the change of the living, the last judgment, and the glory of Christ with his Saints to all eternity, is that transaction which must be dispatched at the end of the world; now this is the object of faith as well as the former; Christ's work is not fully perfected till all these be finished, nor is our work of Faith fully completed till it reach to the very last act of Christ in saving souls.—Oh what an excellent worker is Jesus Christ? he doth all his works thoroughly and perfectly; the greatest work that ever Christ under took was the work of redemption, that work would have broken Men and Angels, and yet Jesus Christ will carry it on to the end, and then will he say not only prophetically, but expressly, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. Now Faith should eye Christ as far as he goes, if Christ will not have done till he comes again, and receive us to himself, and settle us in glory; no more should Faith, it should still follow after him, and take a view of all his transactions from first to last; what, will Christ come again? will he summon all the elect to come under judgment? will he sentence or judge them to eternal life? will he conduct them into glory, present them to his Father, and be their all in all to all eternity? why then let our faith act itself upon all these promises; or if I may instance in one for all, Christ's coming is the most comprehensive of all; and is not the coming of Christ very frequently mentioned in the promises, as the great support and stay of his people's spirits till then? do not the Apostles usually quicken us to duty, and encourage us to waiting by the mentioning of this glorious coming of Jesus Christ? why then let us act our faith on this glorious Object; Christians, what do we believe, and hope, and wait for, but to see this coming? this was Paul's encouragement to rejoicing and moderation, Rejoice in the Lord always—and let your moderation be known to all, the Lord is at hand; To think and speak of that day with horror, doth well beseem the impenitent sinner, but doth ill beseem the believing Saint; such may be the voice of an unbeliever, and it may be of a believer in desertion or temptation, but it's not the voice of faith. O believe on Christ, as carrying on our salvation at his coming again, For yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and he will not tarry.

9. Faith must principally and mainly look to the purpose, design, intent, and end of Christ in his second coming to Judgment. Now the ends are— 1. In respect of the wicked that they may be destroyed, for he must reign till he hath put all his enemies under his feet. He shall come with flaming fire, and then he will take vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. O miserable men! now it is God's design to be revenged on you. This is the day when the wicked shall suddenly start out of sleep, and meet with gastly amazedness at the mouth of their sepulchers; above them stands the Judge condemning, beneath Hell gaping, on the right had justice threatening, on all sides the world burning; to go forward is intolerable, to go backward is impossible, to turn aside is unavailable; which way then? Heaven gates are shut, Hell mouth is open, where they must end their endless misery; the last torment lasteth ever. O the shrieks of the wicked at every passage of this day! when the Prophet Joel was describing the formidable accidents of his day, he was not able to express it, but stammered like a Child, or an amazed imperfect person, A. A. A. for the day of the Lord is at hand. We translate it, Alas, for the day of the Lord is at hand. But Lyra, Ribera, the Vulgar Latin, and others translate it, A.A.A. in Hebrew it is indeed but one word, and sounds as Aha, which howsoever so written, yet is it pronounced without any aspiration, as Aharon, is pronounced Aaron. The best Critics would but have it one word, and so they write it, A-a-a- for the day of the Lord is at hand: thus they that stammer, and cannot suddenly speak, say A-a-a. it is not sense at first; the Prophet was so amazed, that he knew not what to say; the stammering tongue that is full of fear, can best speak that terror, which will make all the wicked of the world to cry, and shriek, and speak fearful accents; oh the shrieks! oh the fearful sounds that will then be heard! sure that noise must needs be terrible, when millions of men and women at the same instant shall fearfully cry out, and when their cries shall mingle with the thunders of the dying and groaning Heavens, and with the crack of the dissolving World, when the whole fabric of nature shall shake into dissolution, and eternal ashes. Now consider this ye that forget God, lest he tare you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you. Shall not the consideration of these things awake your spirits, and raise you from the death of sin? what? do you believe these things? or do you not? if you do not believe these things, where is your saith? if you do believe them, and sin on, where is your prudence? and where is your hope? but enough of this; it belongs to the wicked.

2. In respect of the Godly that they may be saved. Now this contains several steps. As—

1. They must be regenerated. It is true they partake of this grace before, but now is the full perfection and manifestation of it, and therefore the last day is called the day of regeneration.
2. They must be redeemed. So they are in this life; Paul could tell his Colossians, that Christ had delivered them from the power of darkness; and that in him they had redemption through his blood. Yet the Scripture calls the day of judgment in a peculiar and eminent manner the day of redemption. And grieve not the holy spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.
3. They must be adopted. It is true, they are adopted in this life, We are now the Sons of God (saith the Apostle) yet it doth not appear what we shall be; the glory which Christ will put upon us at the last day, is so far transcendent and superlative to what now we are, that we know not what we shall be; sons, and more than sons; and therefore the Apostle calls the last day, the day of adoption.
4. They must be justified. I know they were justified by Faith before, and this justification was evidenced to some of their consciences; but now shall they be justified fully by the lively voice of the Judge himself; now shall their justification be solemnly and publicly declared to all the world; The Syriac word to justify, is also to conquer, because when a man is justified, he overcomes all those bills and indictments which were brought in against him; now this is manifestly done in the day of judgment when Christ shall before Men and Angels acquit, and absolve his people: oh what a glorious conquest will that be over Sin, Death, and Hell, when the judge of the whole World shall pronounce them free from all Sin, and from all those miserable effects of Sin, Death, Hell, and Dominion.
5. They must inherit the Kingdom prepared for them, so is the sentence at that day, Come ye Blessed, inherit the Kingdom. Not only are they freed from Hell, but they must inherit Heaven. Now herein is an high step of salvation, and a great part of the design of Christ's coming, to bring his Saints into Heaven; he went thither before to prepare it for them, and now he comes again to give them the possession of it, come enter into heaven. Heaven? what is Heaven? surely it is not one single Palace; but a City, a Metropolis, a Mother-City, the first City of God's creation: When the Angel carried John in the spirit to a great and high Mountain, he shown him the great City, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God. But a City is too little, therefore its more, its a Kingdom; Fear not little Flock, its your Fathers good pleasure to give you the Kingdom; and at this last day he bids his Saints to inherit the Kingdom. Or if a Kingdom be too little, it is called a World; the Children of this world marry, and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage, neither can they die anymore. There's another world besides this, and for eminency it is called the world to come. O the breadth and largeness of that world! as the greater circle must contain the less, so doth that world contain this; alas, all our dwellings here are but as caves under the earth, and holes of poor clay in comparison. In the bosom of that Heaven is many a dwelling place; In my Fathers house are many mansions; there lodges many thousand of glorious Kings; O what fair fields, and mountains of roses and spices, are there? surely gardens of length and breadth above millions of miles are nothing in comparison. O the Vines, the Lilies, the Roses, the precious Trees that grow in Immanuel's land! an hundred harvests in one year are nothing there, The lowest stones in every mansion there, are precious stones; the very building of the wall about it is Jasper, and the City is pure gold, like unto clear glass. O glorious inheritance! Tell me Christians, in what City on Earth do men walk upon gold? or dwell within the walls of Gold? though none such here, yet under the feet of the inhabitants of Heaven there is Gold; All the streets, and fields of that City, Kingdom, World, are pure gold, as it were transparent glass. But alas, what speak I of Gold, or Glass; all these are but shadows; indeed and in truth there is nothing so low as Gold, or precious Stones; there is nothing so base in this high and glorious Kingdom, as Gardens, Trees, or Roses, comparisons are but created shadows, that come not up to express the glory of the thing. I shall therefore leave to speak this, because unspeakable.

6. They must live with Christ in heaven; they must see, and enjoy Christ there to all eternity. This is a main end of Christ's coming, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also—And Father, I will that those whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold the glory which thou hast given me. O let faith eye this above all the former! what? will my Savior come again? and shall I see his face? Oh what a pleasant sight will this same be? if Heaven, if the inheritance be such a wonder to the beholders, what a beauty is that which is in the samplar? oh what an happiness to stand besides that dainty precious Prince in Heaven? to see the King on his Throne? to see the Lamb, the fair Tree of life, the flower of Angels, the spotless Rose, that Crown, the Garland, the joy of Heaven, the wonder of wonders for eternity? oh what a life to see the precious Tree of life! to see a multitude without quantity of the Apples of glory! to see love itself, and to be warmed with the heat of immediate love that comes out from the precious heart and bowels of Jesus Christ! Oh what a dearness to see all relations meet in one! to see the Savior, the good Shepherd, the Redeemer, the great Bishop of our souls, the Angel of the Covenant, the Head of the body of the Church, the King of ages, the Prince of peace, the Creator of the ends of the Earth, the Song of Angels, and glorified Saints. Not only must they see Christ, but they shall enjoy him whom they see; they fly with doves-wings of beauty after the Lamb, and in flying after him they lay hold upon him, and they will not leave him; they can never have enough of the chaste fruition of the glorious Prince Immanuel, and they never want his inmost presence to the full; they suck the honey and the honey-comb; they drink of the floods of eternal consolations, and fill all empty desires; and as if the souls of Saints were without bottom, a fresh they suck again to all eternity. Now  $\langle \diamond \rangle$  is salvation indeed, the soul that attains this full enjoyment, is saved to the uttermost.

3. In respect of Christ himself that he may be glorified. Now in two things more especially will he be glorified at that day. 1. In his justice. 2. In his mercy, or free grace.

1. His justice will be glorified, especially in punishing the wicked here on Earth, little justice is done on most offenders; though some public crimes are sometimes punished, yet the actions of closets and chambers, the designs and thoughts of men; the businesses of retirements, and of the night, escape the hand of justice; and therefore God hath so ordained it, that there shall be a day of doom, wherein all that are let alone by men, shall be questioned by God; Shall not the judge of all the world do right! then all thoughts shall be examined, and secret actions viewed on each side, and the infinite number of those sins which escaped here, shall be blazoned there; all shall have justice; and the justice of the judge shall be so exact, that he will account with men by minutes; and that justice may reign entirely, God shall open his treasure: I mean the wicked man's treasure, and tell the sums, and weigh the grains and scruples. Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? I will restore it in the day of vengeance saith the Lord. Oh how will God glorify his justice at that day? surely his justice shall shine, and be eminently glorious in every passage.

2. His mercy, or free grace will be glorified in rewarding the Saints. And this is the main, the supreme end of his coming to judgment, He shall come (saith the Apostle) to be glorified in his Saints; not but that the Angels shall glorify the riches of his grace, as well as Saints; but because the Angels never sinned, (they have now kept their Robes of innocence, their cloth of Gold above five thousand years, without one spark of dirt, or change of color:) therefore the glory of his grace is more especially fastened on Saints, that sometimes were sinners. Oh what stories will be told at this day of graces acts? I was a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and an injurious person (said Paul) but I obtained mercy; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , but I was be-merciéd, as if he had been dipt in a River, in a Sea of mercy; it may be he will make the same acknowledgment at the day of judgment; I was a sinner, but the grace of the Lord Jesus to me was abundant, superabundant; I obtained as much grace as would have saved a world. Certainly free grace shall then be discovered in some purpose; then it shall be known, That where sin abounded, grace far more; it over-abounded, or more than over-bounded: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , It is a word borrowed from Fountains, and Rivers, which have over-flowed with Waters ever since the Creation; then all the Saints shall exalt, and magnify, and with loud voices praise the glory of his grace; they shall look on their debts written in graces book, and then shall they sing and say, O the mystery of grace! O the gold-mines, and the depts of Christ's free love! why this was the great design of our salvation: at the first, when God was willing to communicate himself out of his aloneness everlasting, he laid this plot, that all he would do should be to the praise of the glory of his grace; and now at his second coming, having done all he will do, the Saints for whom he hath done all, admire, esteem, honor, and sound forth the praises of his grace. Is not this their everlasting song which they begin at this day? Glory to the Lamb, and glory to his grace, that sitteth on the Throne forever more? not but that they glorify him in his wisdom, power, holiness, and his other attributes, ay but especially in this, it is his Grace in which he most delighteth; even as virtuous Kings affect, above all their other Virtues, to be had in honor for their Clemency, and Bounty; so Jesus Christ the King of Kings affects, above all, the glory of his grace. And to this purpose Heaven itself is an house full of broken men, who have borrowed millions from Christ, but can never repay more than to read, and sing the praises of Free-grace; Glory to the Lamb, and glory to the riches of his grace for evermore.

Thus for directions; one word of Application, or a few motives to work Faith in you in this respect,

1. Christ in his word invites you to believe; these are his Letters from Heaven, Come all to the marriage-supper of the Lamb; Ho everyone that thirsts come in; Heaven-gate is open to all that knock, but fools, foolish Virgins, foolish souls, which have no Faith, nor will have any, to render them fit for Heaven. This meets with some that scruple, what? will Christ come again to receive me to himself? shall I enter with him into glory? alas no unclean thing shall enter into that holy City, and shall such a sinner as I am be admitted? Oh believe, believe thy part in this coming of Christ, to receive thee to himself; and no sin, that thou feelest a burden, shall keep thee out of Heaven. There is Rahab the Harlot; and Manasseh the Murderer, and Mary that had so many Devils; a man that hath many Devils may come where there is not one;Lame, and Blind, and Halt may enter into Heaven, and yet still there is room; there is a great variety of guests above, and yet one Table large enough for all; no crowding, and yet thousands, and thousands of thousands sitting together; Ah poor soul why dost thou make exceptions, where God makes none? why shouldst thou exclude thyself out of these golden gates, when God doth not? believe, only believe in the Lord Jesus, and the promise is sure, and without all controversy, thou shalt be saved.

2. Christ by his Ministry intreats you to believe; come, say they, we beseech you believe in your judge; it may be you startle at this, what? to believe in him who is a coming to be your judge? but if your judge be Jesus, if the same person who died for you, shall come to judge you, why should you fear? indeed if your judge were your enemy, you might fear; but if he who is your Lord, and who loves your souls shall judge you, there is no such cause; will a man fear to be judged by his dearest friends? a brother by a brother? a child by a father? or a wife by her husband? consider! is not he your Judge who came down from Heaven, and who being on earth was judged, condemned, and executed in your stead? and yet are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Oh what an unreasonable sin is unbelief! nay, say the scrupulous, if I were assured of this; if I knew that my judge were my friend, I should not fear; but is he not my enemy; have not I provoked him to enmity against my soul? do I not stand it out in arms against my judge? am not I daily sinning against him, who justly may condemn me for my sin? give this for granted, that this and no other, no better is my case, and what say you then? if it be so, hark then to the voice of our ministry. We poor Ministers that love your souls (say what you will of us) would fain have all this enmity against God, and against Christ done away; and to this purpose we not only appear many and many a time upon our knees to God for you, but (mangre all your opposition against us) we could be content to come upon our knees from God to you, to beseech you not to provoke your Judge against your souls: what, is Christ and you at odds? is the difference wide betwixt your judge and you? I do now in my Masters Name, in the Name of God, and in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, beseech you to believe; I beseech you in Christ's Name; in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled unto God. Is not this the Apostles word? Now then we are Ambassadors for Christ,as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead? Christ's Ministers are not only God's Legates, but Christ's Surrogates; to make this plain to you, when a Prince sends a messenger to another Prince, that messenger is only an Ambassador, the Prince being not bound to carry the message himself in Person; but now Jesus Christ, he is the Father's Ambassador, and Christ is thereby bound to bring the message of peace himself, but being necessarily employed elsewhere (in the same design of grace) he constitutes us his officers; so that we do not come only in the Name of God, but in the place of Christ to do that work which is primarily his; As the Father hath sent me,even so send I you; and this was the commendation of the Galatians, that they received the Apostle Paul even as Jesus Christ. Now weigh our desire, we beseech you to believe;

we beseech you to sign the articles of agreement betwixt Christ and you; what? shall some base inconsiderable lust stand in competition with Jesus Christ? will you not make your peace with your judge whilst you are in a way, and before he sit in the Throne? behold we give you warning, the Judge is at the door, now believe and be saved. Oh how fain would we tempt you (as it were) with glory? we tender Christ, and we offer peace, we come in the judges name to beseech you to make ready for him, and for Heaven; we bring salvation to your very doors, to your very ears, and there we are sounding, knocking, Will ye go to Heaven, sinners? will ye go to Heaven? Oh believe in him that will judge you, and he will save you.

3. Christ by his Spirit moves, excites, and provokes you to believe. Sometimes in reading, and sometimes in hearing, and sometimes in meditating you may feel him stir; have you felt no gale of the spirit all this while? It is the spirit that convinceth the world of sin, especially of that great sin of unbelief; and then of righteousness, which Christ procureth by going to his Father; observe here, it is the work of the spirit thus to convince, so that all moral philosophy, and the wisest directions of the most Civil men will leave you in a wilderness; yea ten thousands of Sermons may be preached to you to believe, and yet you never shall, till you are over-poured by God's Spirit: it is the Spirit that enlightens, and directs you, as occasion is, saying this is the way, walk in it. It is the spirit that rouzeth, and awakeneth you by effectual motions, Arise my love, my fair one, and come away. He stands at the door and knocks; he stretches out his hand with Heaven in it, and he doth so all the day long; all the day long have I stretched out my hand; and that you may find his yoke easy, and his burden light; it is the Spirit that draws the yoke with you; and by secret animations, and sweet inspirations heartens, and enables you to do the work with ease; and in this respect the Saints are said to be led by the spirit; even as a mother leads her child that is weak, and enables it to go the better, so the spirit leads the Saints (as it were) by the hand, and strengthens them to believe yet more and more. I speak now to Saints, if whiles I press you to believe in Jesus, you feel the spirit in his stirrings, and impetuous acts, surely it concerns you to believe, it concerns you to be obsequious and yielding to the breathings of God's Spirit, it concerns you to co-operate with the spirit, and to answer his wind-blowing. As you are to take Christ at his word, so you are to take Christ's spirit at his work: if now he knocks, do you knock with him; if now his fingers make a stirring upon the handles of the bar, let your hearts make a stirring with his fingers also; O reach in your hearts under the stirrings of free grace; obey dispositions of grace as God himself; if now you feel your hearts as hot as Iron, it is good then to smite with the hammer; if now you feel your spirits docile, say then with him in the Gospel, I believe, Lord help my unbelief; I believe, what? I believe when Jesus comes again, he will receive me to himself, and that I shall be forever with the Lord, Amen, Amen.

SECT. VI. Of Loving Jesus in that respect.

6. LET us love Jesus, as carrying on the great Work of our Salvation for us in his second coming. In prosecution of this, I must first set down Christ's love to us, and then our love to Christ; that is the cause, and this effect; that is the spring, and this the stream; in vain should we persuade our hearts to love the Lord, if in the first place we were not sensible that our Lord loves us, We love him (saith the Apostle) because he first loved us; it is Christ's way of winning hearts, he draws a lump of love out of his own heart, and casts it into the sinner's heart, and so he loves him. Come then let us first take a view of Christ's love to us, and see if from thence any sparks of love will fall on our hearts to love him again. Should I make a Table of Christ's acts of love and free grace to us, I might begin with that eternity of his love before the beginning, and never end till I draw it down to that eternity of his love without all ending: his love is as his mercy, from everlasting to everlasting; he loved us before time, in the beginning of time, in the fullness of time, at this time the flames of his love are as hot in his breast as they were at first, and when time shall be no more he will love us still; this fire of Heaven is everlasting; there is in the breast of Christ an eternal coal of burning love, that never, never shall be quenched. But I have in some measure already discovered all those acts of his grace and love, till his second coming: and therefore I begin there.

1. Christ will come; is not this love? as his departure was a rich testimony of his love. It is expedient for you that I go away; so is his returning, I will not leave you comfortless, I will come unto you; Oh how can we think of Christ's returning, and not meditate on the greatness of his love? might he not send his Angels, but he must come himself? is it not state and majesty enough to have the Angels come for us, but that he himself must come with his Angels, to meet us more than half the way? what King on Earth would adopt a beggar, and after his adoption would himself go in person, to fetch him from the dunghill to his Throne? we are filthy lazars, from the crown of our heads to the soles of our feet we are full of sores, and yet the King of Heaven puts on his best attire, and comes in person with all his retinue of glory, to fetch us from our graves, to his own Court of Heaven. Oh the loves of Christ in this one act, he will come again, he is but gone for a while, but he will come again in his own person.

2. Christ will welcome all his Saints into his presence; and is not this love? after he is come down from Heaven; he stays for them a while in the Clouds, and commanding his Angels to bring them thither, anon they come; and oh how his heart springs within him at their coming! what throbs and pangs of love are in his heart at the first view of them? as they draw near, and fall down at his feet, and worship him; so he draws near, and falls upon their necks, and welcomes them. Methinks I hear him say, Come blessed souls, you are my purchase, for whom I Covenanted with my Father from eternity; O you are dearly welcome to your Lord, in that now I have you in my arms; I feel the fruit of my death, the acceptance of my Sacrifice, the return of my prayers; for this I was born and died, for this I rose again and ascended into Heaven, for this I have interceded a Priest in Heaven these many years; and now I have the end and design of all my actings and sufferings for you, how is my joy fulfilled? look as at the meeting of two lovers there is great joy, especially if the distance hath been great, and the desires of enjoying one another vehement; so is the meeting of Christ with his Saints; the joy is so great that it runs over, and wets the fair brows, and beauteous locks of Cherubims and Seraphims; and all the Angels have a part of this banquet at this day.

3. Christ will sentence his Saints for eternal life; here is love indeed, every word of the sentence is full of love; it contains the reward of his Saints, a reward beyond their work, and beyond their wages, and beyond the promise, and beyond their thoughts, and beyond their understanding; it is a participation of the joys of God, and of the inheritance of the Judge himself: Come enter into your Masters joy, inherit the Kingdom. Oh but if all the Saints have only one Kingdom, where is my room? fear not O my soul, thou shalt have room enough; though but one Kingdom, yet all the Inhabitants there are Kings; whole Heaven is such a Kingdom, as is entirely, and fully enjoyed by one glorified Saint, all and everyone hath the whole Kingdom at his own will; everyone is filled with God, as if there were no fellows there to share •ith him Oh that I may come under this blessed sentence! never was more love expressed in words, than Christ expresseth in this sentence, Come ye blessed, &c.

4. Christ will take up all his Saints with him into glory; where he will present them to his Father; and then be their all in all to all eternity. This is the height of Christ's love; this is the immediate love that comes out from the precious heart and bowels of Jesus Christ; this is that Zenith of love, when sensibly and feelingly it burns at hottest; it is true, that Christ's love breaks out in all those precedaneous acts, we have already spoken; Oh but what loves will he cast out from himself in glory? the more excellent the Soyl is, and the nearer the Sun is, the more of Summer, and the more of day; the more delicious must be the Apples, the Pomgranates, the Roses, the Lilies that grow there; surely Christ in glory is a blessed soil; Roses, and Lilies, and Apples of love, that are eternally Summer-green and sweet, grow out of him; the honey of Heaven is more than honey; the honey of love that is pure, and unmixed, and glorious in Christ, must needs be incomparable. I cannot say, but that Christ's love, like himself, is the same yesterday, and today, and forever; there is no intension, or remission of his love as in itself; for God is love, he is essentially love; and therefore admits of no degrees; yet in respect of the sense, or manifestation of this love of Christ, there must needs be a difference; thus if he loved his spouse on earth, how much more will he love her when his Bride in Heaven? If he loves us while sinners, and enemies to his holiness, how much more will he love us, when we are sons, and perfected Saints in glory; he that could spread his arms, and open his heart on the Cross, will he not then open arms, and heart, and all to them that reign with him in his Kingdom? if in this life such is loves puissance, that we usually say of Christ, Though the head be in heaven, yet he hath left his heart on earth with sinners; what shall we say of Christ in glory, where love like the Sun ever stands in the Zenith? where the eternal God is the souls everlasting refuge, and underneath are his everlasting arms?

5. And if Christ love thus; how should we love again for such a love? Lord, what a sum of love are we indebted to thee? is it possible that ever we should pay the debt? can we love as high, as deep, as broad, as long as love itself, or as Christ himself? no, no; all we can do is but to love a little; and Oh that in the consideration of his love we could love a little in sincerity! Oh that we were but able feelingly to say, Why Lord I love thee, I feel I love thee, even as I feel I love my friend, or as I feel I love myself. Such arguments of love have been laid before us, as that now I know no more; we have seen whole Christ cap-a-pe; we have heard of the loves of Christ from eternity to eternity; we have had a view of the everlasting Gospel of Jesus Christ, wherein his love is represented to us as hot as death, or as the flames of God; and do we not yet love him? hath Christ all this while opened his breast and heart to us, saying, Friends, Doves, come in, and dwell in the holes of this rock? And do we scratch his breast? do we turn our backs upon him, and requite his love with hatred? surely this is more than sin; for what is sin but a transgression of the law? but this sin is both a transgression of Law and Gospel.

What? to spurn against the warm bowels of love? to spit on grace? to disdain him who is the white and ruddy, the fairest of Heaven? Oh the aggravation of this sin! 'tis an heart of flint and adamant that spits at Evangelick love: Law-love, is love, but Evangelick love is more than love; its the gold, the flower of Christ's wheat, and of his finest love. Oh the many Gospel-passages of love that we have heard! Oh the sweet streams of love that we have followed, till now that we are come to a Sea of love, to an heaven of love, to an infinite, eternal, everlasting love in heaven! I want words to express this love of Jesus; a Sea of love is nothing, it hath a bottom; an Heaven of love is nothing, it hath a brim; but infinite, eternal, everlasting love hath no bottom, no brim, no bounds, and do we not yet love him? do we not yet feel the fire of love break forth? if not, it is time to turn our Preaching into Praying; O thou who art the Element or Sun of love, come with thy power, let out one beam, one ray, one gleam of love upon my soul, shine hot upon my heart, cast my soul into a love-transe, remember thy promise to circumcise my heart, that I may love the Lord my God with all my heart, and with all my soul. Surely the great Marriage of the Lamb is coming on, he will come, and welcome all his Saints into his presence; he will bid them inherit the Kingdom, and put them in a possession of the inheritance; and then we cannot choose but love our Jesus with all our hearts, and with all our souls; only begin we it here; let us now be sick of love, that we may then be well with love? let us now rub and chase our hearts (our dead cold hearts) before this fire, till we say with Peter, Why Lord thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee.

SECT. VII. Of joying in Jesus in that respect.

7. LET us joy in Jesus, as carrying on the great work of our salvation for us in his second coming. Christ delights to have his People look upon him with delight; for a soul to be always under a spirit of bondage, and so to look upon Christ as a Judge, a Lyon, or an offended God, it doth not please God; the Lord Jesus is tender of the joy of his Saints, Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, saith Christ; rejoice evermore,—rejoice in the Lord always; and again, I say rejoice. Let the righteous be glad, let them rejoice before God, yea let them exceedingly rejoice. All that Christ doth to his Saints tends to this joy, as the upshot or end of all; if he cast down, it is but to raise them up; if he humble, it is but to exalt; if he kill, it is but to make alive; in every dispensation still he hath a tender care to preserve their joy. This is the Benjamin, about which Christ's bowels beat; Let my Children suffer anything, but nothing in their joy; I would have all that love my Name to be joyfall in me.

Oh, say some, but Christ's day is a terrible day; when Christ appears, he will make the Heavens, and Earth, and Hell to shake and tremble. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. True! but what's all this terror but an argument of my Father's power, and justice against sinners? if thou art Christ's, and hast thy part in him, not one jot of all this terror belongs to thee, The Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust to the day of judgment to be punished. He knows how to make the same day a terror to his foes, and a joy to his people; he ever intended it for the great distinguishing and separating day, wherein both joy and sorrow should be manifested to the highest. O then let the heavens rejoice, the sea, the earth, the floods, the hills, for the Lord cometh to Judge the earth: with righteousness shall he judge the World, and the people with equity. If you find it an hard thing to joy in Jesus, as in reference to his second coming, think of these motives—

1. Christ's coming is the Christians encouragement; so Christ himself lays it down, You shall see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory; and when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. The signs of his coming are the hopes of your approaching introduction into glory, and what should you do then but prepare for your approaching with exceeding joy? many evils do now surround you everywhere; Satan hath his snares, and the World his baits, and your own hearts are apt to betray you into your enemies hands; but when Christ comes, you shall have full deliverance, and perfect redemption; and therefore look up, and lift up your heads. The Apostle speaks the very same encouragement. The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air,— wherefore comfort one another with these words. Christ's coming is a comfortable doctrine to all believers; and therefore all the Elect that hear these words, should be comforted by them. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people.

2. Christ our Savior must be our Judge; the same Jesus that was born for us, and lived for us, and died for us, and doth now pray for us, will come at last to judge us; is not this comfortable? you that have heard all his transactions, can you ever forget the unweariness of Christ's love, in his constant and continual actings for your souls? how long hath he been interceding for his Saints? how long hath he been knocking at their hearts for entrance? it is now above a thousand six hundred years that he hath been praying, and knocking, and he resolves not to give over till all be his, till all the Tribes in ones and twos be over Jordan, and up with him in the heavenly Canaan. And if this be he that must be our Judge; if he that loves our souls must Judge our souls; if he that hath a great interest and increase of joy in our salvation, must pass our sentence, will not this work us into a rejoicing frame.

3. Christ's sentence is the Christian's acquittance; (I may call it his general acquittance from the beginning of the World to the end thereof.) Hence some call this the day of the believers full justification; they were before made just, and esteemed just, but now by a lively sentence they shall be pronounced just by Christ himself; now is the complete acquittance, or the full absolution from all sin; now will Christ pardon, and speak out his pardon once for all; now will he take his book (wherein all our sins, as so many debts or trespasses are written) and he will cancel all; Your sins shall be blotted out (saith Peter) when the time of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. And is not this enough to cause our joy? when the spirit witnessing with our spirits, doth but in part assure us of sins pardon, is it not exceeding sweet? Oh but how sweet will be that sentence, which will fully resolve the question, and leave no room of doubting anymore forever? consider O my soul, the day is a coming, when the Judge of Heaven and Earth will acquit thee of all thy sins before all the World; it is a part of his business at that day to glorify his Justice and free grace in thy absolution. O Christians! how may we comfort one another with these words?

4. Christ in the issue will lead us into glory. As the Bridegroom after nuptials, leads his Bride to his own home, that there they may live together, and dwell together; so Christ our royal Bridegroom will lead us into the Palace of his glory. And is not this joy of our Lord enough to cause our Joy; Oh what embraces of love, what shaking of hands, what welcomes shall we have into this City? there shall we see Christ in his garden, there shall we be set as a seal on Christ's arm, and as a seal upon his heart; there shall we be filled with his love, enlightened with his light, encircled in his arms, following his steps, and praising his Name, and admiring his glory; there shall we joy indeed, For in thy presence there is fullness of joy, and at thy right hand there are pleasures evermore. There is joy, and full joy, and fullness of joy; there are pleasures, and pleasures evermore, and pleasures evermore at God's right hand. O the music of the sanctuary! O the sinless and well-tuned Psalms! O the Songs of the high Temple, without either Temple or Ordinances, as we have them here! can we choose to joy at the thought of this joy above? if God would so dispense, that even now we might stand at the utmost door of Heaven, and that God would strike up a window, and give us a spiritual eye, and an heavenly heart, so that we could look in, and behold the Throne, and the Lamb, and the troops of glorified ones clothed in white; would not this cheer up our hearts, and fill them with joy unspeakable, and full of glory? certainly this day will come, when Christ will bring us not only to the door, but through the gates into the City; and then we shall see all these sights, and hear all the music made in heaven: how then should we but joy in the hope of the glory of God? O methinks raised thoughts of our mansion in glory, should make us swim through the deepest Sea of troubles, and afflictions, and never fear. Come then, O my drowsy soul, and hearken to these motives; if yet thou seest not the Son itself appear, methinks the twilight of a promise should revive thee; it is but a little while, And he that shall come, will come, and he will not tarry. It may be thou art reviled, and persecuted here on Earth; and what then? hath not Christ bid thee to rejoice in afflictions? is it not his word, that in this very case thou shouldst rejoice, and be exceeding glad?—is it not his command, Think it not strange concerning the fiery trials, but rather rejoice, in as much as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. We must rejoice now, that we may rejoice then; indeed our present joy is a taste of our future joy, and God would have us to begin our Heaven here on Earth. Come then, come forth, O my dull congealed heart! thou that spendest thy days in sorrow, and thy breath in sighing, that minglest thy bread with tears, and drinkest the tears which thou weapest; thou that prayest for joy, and waitest for joy, and longest for joy, and complainest for want of joy; O the times a coming, when thou shalt have fullness of joy; the times a coming when the Angels shall bring thee to Christ, and when Christ shall take thee by the hand, and lead thee into his purchased joy, and present thee unspotted before his Father, and give thee thy place about his Throne; and dost thou not rejoice in this: art thou not exceedingly raised in such a Meditation as this? surely if one drop of lively faith were but mixed with these motives, thou mightest carry an Heaven within thee, and go on ever singing to thy grave; say then, dost thou believe? or dost thou not believe? if thy faith be firm, how shouldst thou but rejoice? if thou rollest thyself on Christ, and on that promise, I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you; how shouldst thou but rejoice, and be exceeding glad? if thou lookest upon the holy Ghost as designed by the Father and the Son to bring joy and delight into thy soul? how shouldst thou but be filled with the water of life, with the oil of gladness, and with the new wine of the Kingdom of God? O the blessed workings of faith on such a subject as this! if once we are but justified by faith, and that we can act our faith on Christ's glorious coming, then it will follow, that we shall have peace with God, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God; and not only so, but we shall glory in tribulation also.

SECT. VIII. Of calling on Jesus in that respect.

8. LET us call on Jesus, as carrying on our souls salvation at his second coming; this contains prayer and praise.

1. Let us pray for the coming of Christ; this was the constant prayer of the Church, Come Lord Jesu, come quickly. The spirit and the Bride say, come. Well knows the Bride that the day of Christ's coming is her wedding day, her coronation day, the day of presenting her unto his Father, and therefore no wonder if she pray for the hastening of it; Make hast my beloved, and be thou like to a Roe, or to a young Hart; thy Kingdom come. Many prayers are in the bowels of this, as that Christ, when he comes, may bid us welcome, and give us a place on his Throne, on his right hand, and pronounce us blessed, and take us to himself, to live with himself in eternal glory, &c. But I mention only this general, and let each soul expatiate on the rest.

2. Let us praise him for his coming, and for all his actings at his coming. Our engagement to Christ even for this transaction is so great, that we can never enough extol his Name; at that day the books shall be opened, and why not the book of our engagements to Jesus Christ? if it must be opened, I can surely tell you it is written full; the page and margent, both within and without, is written full; it's an huge book of many volumes. O then let our hearts be full of praises! let us join with those blessed Elders that fell down before the Lamb, and sung, Worthy it the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. Yea, let us join with all those creatures in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth, and in the Sea; whom John heard, saying, Blessing, Honor, Glory, and Power be unto him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever, Amen.

SECT. IX. Of conforming to Jesus in that respect.

9. LET us conform to Jesus, as coming again to judge the World. Looking to Jesus contains this; when the Apostle would persuade Christians to patience under the cross, he lays down first the cloud of witnesses, all the Martyrs of the Church of Christ; and secondly Jesus Christ himself, as of more virtue and power than all the rest; the Martyrs suffered much, but Christ endured more than they all; and therefore saith the Apostle, look unto Jesus; surely he is the best exemplar, the chief pattern to whom in all his transactions, we may in some way or other conform.

But how should we conform to Christ in this respect? I Answer—

1. Christ will in his time prepare for judgment; Oh let us at all times prepare for his judging of us; doth it not concern us to prepare for him, as well as it concerns him to prepare for us? if Christ come, and find us careless, negligent, unprepared, what will become of us? the very thought of Christ's sudden coming to judgment might well put us into a waiting, watching posture, that we might be still in readiness; it cannot be long, and alas, what is a little time when it is gone; how quickly shall we be in another World, and our souls receive their particular judgments; and so wait till our bodies be raised, and judged to the same condition, or salvation? it is not an hundred years in all likelihood, till every soul of us shall be in heaven or hell; it may be within a year, or two, or ten, or thereabouts, the greatest part of this congregation will be in Heaven or Hell; and I beseech you what is a year, or two, or ten? what is an hundred, or a thousand years to the days of eternity? how speedily is this gone? and how endless is that time, or eternity that is come? is it not high time then to prepare our lamps, to trim our souls, to watch, and fast, and pray, and meditate, and to remember that for all our deeds, good or evil, God will bring us to Judgment? herein is our Conformity to Christ's coming; before he comes he prepares for us, oh let us against his coming prepare for him.

2. Christ at his coming will summon all his Saints to arise, to ascend, and to come to him in the clouds; O let us summon our souls to arise, to ascend, and to go to Christ in the Heavens. What Christ will do really at that day, let us do spiritually on this day. It was the prodigal's saying, I will arise, and go to my Father, and say unto him. We are naturally sluggish, we lie in a bed of sin, and security; and we are loath to arise, to ascend, and to go to God. Oh then let us call upon our own souls! Awake, awake Deborah! why art thou so heavy O my soul? let us stir up our spirits, consciences, wills, affections every day; let us wind them up, as a man doth his Watch, that it may be in a continual motion. Alas! alas! we had need to be continually stirring up the gifts and graces that are in us; it is the Lord's pleasure that we should daily come to him, he would have us on the wing of Prayer, and on the wing of Meditation, and on the wing of Faith; he would have us to be still arising, ascending and mounting up in divine contemplation to his Majesty. And is it not our duty, and the Saints disposition to be thus? Whethersoever the dead carcass is, thither will the Eagles resort: if Christ be in Heaven, where should we be but in Heaven with him? For where your Treasure is, there will your hearts be also. Oh that every morning, and every evening, at least, our hearts would arise, ascend, and go to Christ in the Heavens.

3. Christ will at last judge all our souls, and judge all the wicked to eternal flames; oh let us judge ourselves, that we may not be judged of the Lord in that sad Judgment. If we would judge ourselves (saith the Apostle) we should not be judged. Good reason we have to conform to Christ in this point, or otherwise how should we escape the judgment of Christ at the last day? but in what manner should we judge ourselves? I answer— 1. We must search out our sins. 2. We must confess them before the Lord. 3. We must condemn ourselves, or pass a sentence against our own souls. 4. We must plead pardon, and cry mightily to God in Christ for the remission of all those sins whereof we have judged ourselves, and condemned ourselves.

1. We must search out our sins. Winnow yourselves O people, not worthy to be beloved. There should be a strict scrutiny to find out all the profaneness of our hearts and lives, all our sins against light, and love, and checks, and vows; winnow yourselves. If you will not, I pronounce to you from the eternal God, that ere long the Lord will come in the Clouds, and then will he open the black Book wherein all your sins are written; he will search Jerusalem with candles, he will come with a Sword in his hand to search out all secure sinners everywhere, and then will all your sins be discovered to all the World. O that we would prevent this by our search and scrutinizing a forehead.

2. We must confess our sins before the Lord; we must spread them before the Lord as Hezekiah did his letter; only in our confessions observe these rules; As—

1. Our confession must be full of sorrow, I will declare my iniquity (saith David) I will be sorry for my sin. His confessions were dolorous confessions; he felt sin, and it wrought upon him as an heavy burden, They were two heavy for me. There's nothing in the World can make an heart more heavy, than when it feels the weight and heaviness of sin.

2. Our confession must be a full confession, we must pour it out. Thus David stiles one of his Psalms, A prayer of the afflicted when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the Lord. We must pour out our complaints, as a man poureth water out of a Vessel. Arise, cry out in the night, in the beginning of the watches, pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord. Water runs all out of a Vessel, when you turn the mouth downward, never a spoon-full will then stay behind; so should we pour out our hearts before God, (and if it were possible) leave not a sin unconfessed, at least for the kinds, if not for the particular sins.

3. Our confession must be with full aggravation; we should aggravate our sins by all the circumstances, that may show them odious. Thus Peter when he had denied Christ, it is said that he thought thereon, and he wept. He thought thereon, or he cast in his thoughts one thing upon another; q. d. Jesus Christ was my Master and yet I denied him, he told me of this beforehand, that I might take heed of it, and yet I denied him; I professed to him that *I would never do it, I would never forsake him, and yet I denied him; yea, this very night, and no longer since, I said it again and again that I would not deny him, and yet I denied him; yea, I failed, Although others deny thee, yet will not I; and yet worse than all others, I denied him with a witness, for I affirmed desperately that I knew not the man; nay, I swore desperately that I knew not the man; nay more than so, I swore, and I cursed too, If I knew the man, let God's curse fall upon me; and all this I did within a few strides of my Lord; at that very time when I should have stood for my Lord, in that all the World forsook him; why, these were the circumstances of Peters sin, and meditating on them, He went out and wept bitterly. And thus we should aggravate our sins in our confessions; O my sins were out of measure sinful. O they were sins against knowledge, and light, against many mercies received, against many judgments threatened, against many checks of conscience, against many vows and promises; thus oft, and in this place, and at that time, and in that manner, I committed these and these sins; but of all the aggravations, let us be sure to remember how we sinned against the goodness, and patience, and love, and mercy of God; surely these circumstances will make our sins out of measure sinful. The Angel that reprov'd the Children of Israel at Bochim, after the repetition of his mercies towards them, and of their sins against him, he questions them in these words, Oh why have ye done this? q. d. The Lord hath done thus and thus mercifully unto you, oh why have ye done thus unthankfully towards him? why was his mercy abused, his goodness slighted, his patience despised? do ye thus requite the Lord O foolish people* and unwise? in like manner should we confess and aggravate our sins, O my God, thou art my Father; was I ever in want, and thou didst not relieve me? was I ever in weakness, and thou didst not strengthen me? was I ever in straits, and thou didst not deliver me? was I ever in sickness, and thou didst not cure me? was I ever in misery, and thou didst not succor me? hast thou not been a gracious God to me? all my bones can say, who is like unto thee; Lord, who is like unto thee? and shall I thus and thus reward the Lord for all his mercies towards me? hear O Heavens, and hearken O Earth; Sun stand thou still, and thou Moon be thou amazed at this! hear Angels, and hear Devils; hear Heaven, and hear Hell, and be you avenged on such a sin as this is! O the sinfulness of my sin in regard of these many circumstances.

3. We must condemn ourselves, or pass sentence against our own souls; Lord, the worst place in Hell is too good for me; Lord here is my soul, thou mayst if thou pleasest send Satan for it, and give me a portion among the damned. This self-judging, or self-condemning is exemplified to this life in Ezra; for—

1. He fell on his knees, he did not bow down his knees, but like a man astonished he fell on his knees; he had before rent his garment, and mantle, and plucked off the hair of his head and off his beard, and sate down astonished; and now at the evening sacrifice he falls on his knees, and on the ground in great amazement.

2. He spread out his hands unto the Lord; q. d. here is my breast, and here is my heart-blood, I spread my arms, and lay all open, that thou mayst set the naked point of thy sword of justice at my very heart.

3. He is dum, and speechless (as it were) before the Lord; And now our God, what shall we say after all this? for we have forsaken thy commandments; q. d. shall I excuse the matter? alas! it is inexcusable? what shall we say after all this? shall we call for thy patience? we have had it, but how did we abuse it? should we call for mercy? indeed we had it, but our stubborn hearts would never come down: O our God what shall we say? I know not what to say, for we have sinned against thee.

4. He lays down his soul, and all the Peoples souls at God's feet, q. d. here we are, thou mayest damn us if thou wilt, Behold we are all here before thee in our trespasses, for we cannot stand before thee, because of this. Behold here we are, rebels we are; here are our heads and throats before the naked point of thy vengeance, if now thou shouldst take us from our knees, and throw us into Hell, if we must go from our prayers to damnation, we cannot but say that thou art just and righteous; Oh its mercy, its mercy indeed that we have been spared, its just and righteous with God that we should be damned.

In this more especially lies self-condemnation; it makes a man to trample upon his own self, it makes a man freely to accept of damnation; They shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity, and then will I remember my covenant with Jacob; they save God (as it were) a labor, judging themselves, that they may not be judged.

4. We must plead pardon, and cry mightily to God in Christ, for the remission of all our sins. This is the way of judging ourselves, we see nothing but Hell and damnation in ourselves, but then we fling down ourselves at God's gate of mercy; we despair not in God, though in ourselves; God in Christ is gracious and merciful, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin; and hence we make bold to entreat the Lord for Christ's sake to be merciful to us; surely herein lies the difference betwixt nature and grace; the natural man may see his sins, and confess his sins, and judge himself for his sins; thus Saul did, and thus Judas did, but then they despaired in God, and were damned indeed; now the gracious man hath a conscience within, that represents to him his damned estate, but withal, it represents to him the free grace of God in Jesus Christ, and so he only despairs in himself, and not in his God; now thus far good: come Christians! do we despair in ourselves? do we fling off all our own hopes, and our own dependencies, hangings, holdings on duties, purposes, graces, performances? and do we go to God in Christ, and tell him, We hang upon nothing but the mere mercy, the free grace of God in Christ; and therefore Lord pardon, Lord forgive for thy Names sake, promise sake, mercies sake, and for the Lord Jesus sake: O let free grace have his work; Lord glorify thy Name, and glorify the riches of thy grace in saving us: Why, this is the best hold in the World, though the World cannot abide it; surely if we thus judge ourselves, we should not be judged.

4. Christ at his coming will be glorified in his Saints; not only in himself, but in his Saints also; whose glory as it comes from him, so it will redound to him: Oh let him now be glorified in us, let us now in some high way conform to the image of his glory, let us look on Christ till we are like Christ, not only in grace, but in glory; and this glory as it comes from him, so let it redound to him. I will not say, that the Kingdom of Heaven and glory is in this life, I leave this opinion to the dreamers of this time, I mean to the Familists, Quakers, and such like; but this I say, that even in this life the Saints of God enjoy a begun and imperfect conformity to Christ's glory; and this is that I would now press upon us; let us so behold the glory of the Lord in the glass of the Gospel, as that we may be changed into the same image from glory to glory; from a lesser measure to an higher measure of glory. The day is a coming that Christ will be glorified in himself, and he will be glorified in his Saints, O the glories that will then be accumulated and heaped upon Jesus Christ! come now, let us behold this glory of Christ till we are changed in some high measure into the same glory with Christ; Christ's glory rightly viewed is a changing glory: And herein the views of Christ surpass all creature-views, if we behold the Sun, we cannot possibly be changed into another Sun, but if with the eye of knowledge and faith we behold Jesus Christ, we shall be changed into the glorious image of Jesus Christ; if the Sun of righteousness cast forth his golden beams upon us, and we enjoy this light; why then, Who is she that looketh forth as the morning (as Aurora, the first birth of the day) fair as the Moon, clear as the Sun.

I know this glorious change is but a growing change by degrees, from glory to glory; and yet who can deny but there is some conformity to Christ's glory, even in this life? do not these very Texts speak the self same thing? These things have I spoken to you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full. And ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full. And rejoice with Jerusalem, and be glad with her all ye that love her,—that ye may suck and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations, that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory. And the God of all hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing. Surely all joy, and peace, are synechdochically put for all other inchoations of glorification. But how is a Saint in this life filled with all joy? I answer, 1. In regard of the object, God and Christ. 2. In regard of the degrees; though not absolutely, yet so far forth, as the measure of joy is in this life attainable; I might instance in the joy of Mr. Peacock, Mrs Brettergh, and of some Martyrs, who sung in the fires. 3. In regard of duration, rejoice always, not only in the calm of peace, but in the storm of violent opposition. A Saint may have his troubles, but these troubles can never totally or finally extinguish his joy, your joy no man taketh from you. He rejoiceth always.

O that something of the glory of Christ might rest upon us! oh that having this glory of Christ in our thoughts, we could now feel a change from glory to glory! Is it so that the Lord Jesus will be glorified in all his Saints? and shall we have in-glorious souls; base and unworthy affections and conversations? or shall we content ourselves with a little measure of grace? O be we holy, even as he is holy; let our conversations be heavenly, let us purify ourselves even as he is pure; let us resemble him in some high measure of grace. And lastly, let us glorify him in bodies and spirits; all our glory is from him; and therefore let all our glory redound to him; let us now begin that Gospel-tune of the eternal song of free grace, which one day we shall more perfectly chant in glory; Allelujah! and again Allelujah! and Amen Allelujah! salvation, and glory, and power, and praise, and thanksgiving, and obedience, be unto him that sits on the throne, the Lamb blessed forever and ever, Amen.

The Conclusion.

And now (my brethren) I have done the errand which Christ sent me on, I verily believe, I have now delivered this work of the everlasting Gospel, or of Christ's carrying on the great work of man's salvation, hath been somewhat long in speaking, but oh how long in acting! may I give you a short view of what I have said; and of what hath been acted from eternity, and will yet be acted to eternity; you may remember, that God in his eternity laid a plot or design to glorify the riches of his grace in saving sinners; and to that purpose first he decreed a Christ. 2. Presently after the fall, he promised the Christ he had decreed. 3. In fullness of time he exhibited the Christ that he had promised; then it was that the same Christ took upon him out nature, and joined it to his God-head to be one person; and in that person he was born, and lived, and died, and rose again, and ascended into Heaven; there now he hath been sitting, sending down the Holy Ghost, and interceding for his Saints for above one thousand six hundred years: And in this last work he will continue till the end of the World, and then he will come again to judge the World, and to receive his Saints to himself, that where he is, they may be with him, to see and enjoy him to all eternity. This is the epitome of all I have said; only in every particular I have set down Christ's actings towards us, and our actings towards Christ; in various forms, and out-goings of his love he hath acted towards us; and in various forms, and out-goings of our souls we have been taught fitly and suitably to act towards him.

Now in all these actings, How doth the free grace of God in Christ appear? Ye are saved by grace, saith the Apostle, Eph. 2.5. the decree, the means, the end of our salvation is grace, and only grace. The decree is grace, and therefore it is called the election of grace; the means are of grace, and therefore we are called according to his grace; and we are justified freely by his grace.

And the end is of grace, for eternal life is the gift of God, both beginning, and progress, and execution is all of grace. This is the riches of his grace, the exceeding, the hyperbolical riches of his grace; the conclusion of all is this, God's free grace which was first designed, will at last be manifested, and eternally praised by Saints and Angels; the same free grace which from the beginning of the age of God, from everlasting drove on the saving plot, and sweet design of our salvation, will at last be glorified to purpose; when Heavens inhabitants will be ever digging into this golden-mine; ever rolling this soul-delighting and precious stone; ever beholding, viewing, enquiring, and searching into the excellency of this same Christ, and this free grace. Now all is done, shall I speak a word for Christ, or rather for ourselves in relation to Christ; and so an end? if I had but one word more to speak in the World, it should be this; Oh let all our spirits be taken up with Christ! let us not busy ourselves too much with toys, or trifles, with ordinary and low things, but look unto Jesus. Surely Christ is enough to fill all our thoughts, desires, hopes, loves, joys, or whatever is within us, or without us; Christ alone comprehends all the circumference of all our happiness; Christ is the pearl hid in the large field of God's Word; Christ is the scope of all the Scriptures; all things and persons in the old World were Types of him; all the Prophets foretold him, all God's love runs through him, all the gifts and graces of the Spirit flow from him, the whole eye of God is upon him, and all his designs both in Heaven and Earth meet in him; the great design of God is this, That he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him. All things are summed up in one Jesus Christ; if we look on the creation, the whole world was made by Christ, if we look on providences, all things subsist in Christ, they have their being, and their well-being in him. Where may we find God but in Christ? where may we see God but in this essential and eternal glass? Christ is the face of God, the brightness of his glory, the express image of his Fathers person; the Father is as it were all Sun, and all Pearl; and Jesus Christ is the substantial rays, the eternal and essential irradiation of this Sun of glory: Christ out God as the seal doth the stamp; Christ reveals God, as the face of a man doth reveal the man; so Christ to Philip, He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father; q. d. I am as like the Father, as God is like himself; there is a perfect indivisible unity between the Father and me, I and the Father are one; one very God, he the begetter, and I the begotten; Christ is the substantial Rose that grew out of the Father from eternity; Christ is the essential wisdom of God; Christ is the substantial Word of God, the intellectual birth of the Lord's infinite understanding. Oh the worth of Christ! compare we other things with Christ, and they will bear no weight at all; cast into the balance with him Angels, they are wise, but he is wisdom; cast into the balance with him men, they are liars, lighter than vanity, but Christ is the Amen, the faithful witness; cast into the scales Kings, and all Kings, and all their glory, why he is King of Kings; cast into the scale millions of talents-weight of glory; cast in two Worlds, and add to the weight, millions of Heavens of Heavens, and the balance cannot down, the scales are unequal, Christ out-weighs all. Shall I yet come nearer home? what is Heaven but to be with Christ; what is life eternal but to believe in God, and in his Son Jesus Christ? where may we find peace with God, and reconciliation with God, but only in Christ; God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself? where may we find compassion, mercy, and gentleness to sinners, but only in Christ? it is Christ that takes off infinite wrath, and satisfies justice, and so God is a most lovely, compassionate, desirable God in Jesus; all the goodness of God comes out of God through this golden pipe the Lord Jesus Christ: It is true, those essential attributes of love, grace, mercy, goodness, are only in God, and they abide in God, yet the Mediatory manifestation of love, grace, mercy, and goodness, is only in Christ; Christ alone is the Treasury, Store-house, Magazine of the free goodness and mercy of the God-head. In him we are Elected, Adopted, Redeemed, Justified, Sanctified, Saved; he is the ladder, and every step of it betwixt Heaven and Earth; he is the way, the truth, and the life; he is honor, riches, beauty, health, peace, and salvation; he is a suitable and rich portion to every man's soul; that which some of the Jews observe of the Manna, that it was in taste according to every man's palate, it is really true of Christ, that he is to the Soul whatsoever the soul would have him to be. All the spiritual blessings wherewith we are enriched, are in and by Christ: God hears our prayers by Christ; God forgives our iniquities through Christ; all we have, and all we expect to have, hangs only on Christ; he is the golden hinge, upon which all our salvation turns.

Oh how should all hearts be taken with this Christ? Christians, turn your eyes upon the Lord; Look, and look again unto Jesus: Why stand ye gazing on the toys of this World, when such a Christ is offered to you in the Gospel? can the World die for you? can the World reconcile you to the Father? can the World advance you to the Kingdom of Heaven? As Christ is all in all, so let him be the full and complete subject of our desire, and hope, and faith, and love, and joy; let him be in your thoughts the first in the morning, and the last at night. Shall I speak one word more to thee that believest? Oh apply in particular all the transactions of Jesus Christ to thy very self; remember how he came out of his Fathers bosom for thee, wept for thee, bled for thee, poured out his life for thee, is now risen for thee, gone to Heaven for thee, sits at God's right hand, and rules all the World for thee; makes intercession for thee, and at the end of the World will come again for thee, and receive thee to himself, to live with him forever and ever. Surely if thus thou believest, and livest; thy life is comfortable, and thy death will be sweet; if there be any Heaven upon Earth, thou wilt find it in the practice, and exercise of this Gospel-duty, in Looking unto Jesus.

A Poem of Mr. George Herbert in his Temple. JESU.

JESU is in my heart, his sacred Name
Is deeply carved there; but th' other week,
A great affliction broke the little frame,
Even all to pieces; which I went to seek:
And first I found the corner, where was J,
After, where ES, and next where U was graved.
When I had got these parcels, instantly
I sate me down to spell them, and perceived,
That to my broken heart he was I ease you, and to my whole is JESU.

TO The Right Honorable, truly Religious, and Virtuous Lady, the Lady MARY VERE.

MADAM,

I Took it as a special Providence, that in my troubles at London I got acquaintance with your Honor: Your Contribution at my parting, won much upon my heart; but your fellowship and communion at our first meeting in Church-Assemblies, and especially at that sweet Ordinance of the Lord's Supper, obliged me more, and faster to you in purer loves. I bless God for the Friends I found in my distress, but for the Communion of Saints, and for the Comforts I found in such Communion, Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy Name. You may wonder, that upon so small acquaintance I should lay this Book at your feet; it is not because I wanted other Patrons, but because at that very time, when I left it with the Press, I observed God stirring you up, as a right Patron, to encourage, relieve and comfort the Composer of it. I was then (as the Lord ordained it) in some trouble, and you encouraged me, and relieved me; but especially you comforted me with your society at that Soul-feast, when originally I drew all my comfort out of the wells of Salvation. I cannot but love and honor you in this last respect; for indeed I am, and I desire to be very choice and careful with whom I join in that sacred Ordinance (yet am no Sectary;) and this increaseth my affections to the Saints so much the more. Madam, I hope you will countenance (for I partly know, and am verily persuaded, that you are a constant practioner of) all Duties, both Secret, Private and Public: and if this weak Work, Patronized by you, may in any sort be helpful to you, or to any of the Saints, I have my desire, and shall give God the Glory.

Your Honors in all Christian bonds, I. A.

TO THE READER.

OF many Books there is no end, and much study is a weariness to the flesh: The Experience of this Truth (especially in these latter days) hath sometimes put me to sad and serious thoughts, How should a Christian furnish himself with a sufficient Library, to help him on in his way Heaven-ward? Should he buy up all the Ancients, or (in case he want the Tongues) should he buy up all our Modern English Writers, Positive and Polemical, they might fill his Closet, but he should find no end of buying, as there is no end of making Books: and if he resolvedly fell to reading he might conclude with the wiseman, Much study is a weariness of the flesh; nay, in in such variety, he would find the most of his study so impertinent, so unprofitable, that he might further conclude, Such a study is a loss to his Soul, and rather an hinderer, then an helper of it in the way to Heaven. To prevent this, some have advised Christians to choose out, amongst that world of variety we now enjoy, such Authors as are most suitable to their Genius and Employment. The Lord Verulam, with some others, give their opinions, That if the choice and best Observations, which have been made dispersedly in our English Sermons (leaving out the largeness of Exhortations and Applications thereupon) were set down in a Continuance, it would be the best work in Divinity that hath been written since the Apostles times. And Dr. Hackwith repeats almost the same words, saying, That the Sermons of this latter Age, specially in this Land, have doubtless been more exquisite and effectual, then ordinarily they have been in any precedent Age; insomuch as it is observed, that if there were a choice Collection made of the most accurate since the entrance of Queen Elizabeth to these present times (omiting the large Applications thereupon) it would prove one of the rarest Pieces that hath been published since the Apostles times: Dr. Hackwith's Apology of the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World, lib. 3. Cap. 7.

Sect. 2. Indeed, had we such a Book extant, I would advise the Christians of our Age to buy the Bible, and that Book, and to study them, and no more, as to their Spiritual good. But alas, this Book is rather wished for, then hoped after; we may expect and wait for it till our eyes sink in our heads, and be never the nearer. However, it was my design to have carried on such a business as this in the main necessary things; not that I would read over all Authors on all subjects, but that I would first limit myself to such subjects, and then upon them cull out the best and choice Observations of many godly and learned Authors. In this design I have practiced and observed these particulars:—

1. I have brought into method the Duties of a Christian, which I call The Middle things, in reference to The First and Last things, before Printed: The matter I have for the most part drawn from others, only the method I have framed, as the Lord hath enabled; and wherein all Authors that ever I saw were silent, I have thereto added, to complete the work for the matter also.

2. I have purposely omitted the many Controversies, and tedious Disputes of this Age: For my part, I see little edifying in them; nay, is not the fat and marrow of Christian Religion lost by them? Were I to advise against any Error, Heresy, I had rather bid my Adversaries read some Books of Positive, Practical Divinity, wherein Truth and Religion is laid out in its life and power, then all the voluminous Controversies that ever I could write, or ever have been writ by any other of the Sons of men. I deny not but these kind of Books (the Spirit concurring) may convince men's judgments; but the other sort works both on judgment and Conscience, on their heads and hearts: The Controversial way of arguing, pro & contra, I cannot but approve; but the way of the Spirit, in which he leads and convinceth the Soul irresistibly, I must needs prefer. Hence you see the reason of the method I have propounded; wherein I dare say (yet with a spirit of submission) the workings of the Spirit, the breathings of Christ, the pantings of a Soul after Christ, are more fully manifested, then in all the jarring Pamphlets which this Age hath copiously afforded: My desire is both to inform, and to reform; to inform the judgment, and to reform life.

3. I have the rather fallen on this subject of Duties, both because necessary in their way, and because they are so much opposed by many of our Age, who surely are not acquainted with them (with the workings of the Spirit in them, and by them) for otherwise it could not be so: If this Error spread, it will quickly eat out all Religion, and throw down Souls to Hell. Their pretence is, who are the Abettors of it, That they have found out a near and easy way to heaven; but I rather believe Christ (saith Rutherford) who tells us it is a way of many miles, strait, narrow and thorny; indeed the Meritorious way to us is easy, but the way of a Christian conversation (whether they will or no) lieth through Duties; it is not words, Lord, Lord, but working, sweating, running, wrestling, fighting, striving, overcoming, bleeding, suffering, abounding in the work, denying ourselves, taking up the cross, enduring temptations, sowing to the Spirit, serving the Lord with all humility, and with many tears and temptations, watching, praying, taking Christ's yoke upon us, selling all our sweetest delights, keeping the commandments of Christ, which howsoever they are not grievous, yet they are not so easy, as that the only bare act of Believing should be the only Gospel work. Might we still lie in our Ivory Beds, under no Law, no Obligation of doing, no danger of sinning, no broken bones, no terrors, no sense of sorrow for sin, no progress in personal Repentance, Mortification, Sanctification, no care of watchful walking to perfect holiness in the fear of God, no abstaining from worldly lusts, no strictness of Conversation, but only Believe that Christ hath Suffered, and Christ hath done all Duties for us, Repented for us, Mortified lusts for us, walked strictly and holily for us, this were an easy work indeed. For my part, I would not willingly make the way to Heaven longer than Christ hath made it; but if we believe the Scriptures, we shall find other Commandments on us under the Gospel, then Believing only for Righteousness: There is the Righteousness of Christ received by us, and working in us; the first is the Righteousness of Justification, the second of Sanctification, and our Establishment lies in both.

4. I have in every Duty, prescribed the manner of performing it; not that I would tie every spirit to this particular way or method: those who are accustomed to these exercises of Devotion, may perhaps devise other more fitting courses, or ways of proceeding, than these are; and it is reason, and a point of wisdom, for every man to make use of those Rules which in his own Experience he findeth most proper to his own disposition, and most powerful for his own Reformation: Only the Reader that is not better furnished, may please to make use of these, and I trust (by God's Blessing) he will find them profitable; which if he do in any measure, it shall be to me sufficient joy, contentment, recompense.

5. I have made use in this Treatise, not of one, or two, but of many precious men; as, Angier, Ash, Ball, Bolton, Byfield, Downham, Dyke, Goodwin, Gouge, Hooker, Leigh, Mason, Rogers, Shepherd, Torshel, White, &c. that the Adversaries of Duties may see what a Cloud of such Witnesses are for Duties. It was sometimes Elijah's trouble, The children of Israel have forsaken thy Covenant, thrown down thine Altars, and I, even I only am left: but 'twas the Lord's encouragement of Elijah, I have left me Seven thousand in Israel which have not bowed the knee to Baal. I bless God it hath encouraged me, and me thinks it might trouble the Opposites, that not only many thousands of God's people, but many Eliahs amongst those thousands, should appear with me, and against them. This is one Reason, why I chose rather to bring in the Authors, who seem to be, and indeed are Pillars in the Temple of our God, then to speak only in my own Dialect, or altogether from my own invention.

6. I have writ nothing, but in some measure I have, by the Lord's assistance, practiced the same, and felt the comfort of it in my own heart and soul; yet by way of caution I desire the Reader to remember, if at any time in the exercise of any of the Duties within written, he also feels his heart warmed, or savingly affected (which is the very Spirit, Power, Grace, Comfort, Presence and Sweetness of Christ) that he consider, it is not the Duty, it is not the bare Ordinance that elicits such divine and noble acts in the heart and affection, but it is the Blood of Christ, the Intercession of Christ, sprinkling those Duties, that makes them work such Graces in the Soul. In this case, the Blood of Christ is as the salve, and Duty is as the cloth or leather to which it sticks, and by which it is applied: Now from the cloth (the Duty) comes no virtue; no, no, it is only the Blood of Christ which by Duty heals, and cheers the Soul. Many have wondered, why sometimes they are so lifted up in Duties, and sometimes again they are no more moved by them, then a Mountain of Brass is moved by the winds;

Why should the same Truth, the same Scripture, the same Meditation affect me at one time, and not at another, when I am as fitly disposed to be affected as at the first? Why should the same Instruction, the same Reproof, the same Consolation, awaken, wound and revive my Spirit at one time, and move me no more at another, then a charm doth a deaf Adder, as the Psalmist speaks? I grant, in respect of the subject, the Spiritual sense is sometimes benumb'd, and sometimes it is awakened; but in respect of the Efficient, it is only Christ's Blood, Christ's Intercession that doth all by an admirable and secret operation. I have no more to say of this Book, only, The Lord give a Blessing to it, and to the Reader of it: So prays Thy Servant in Christ Jesus, I. A.

FOR The Reverend, his worthily much esteemed Friend, Mr. Isaac Ambrose, Minister of the WORD at Preston.

Reverend Sir,

I Crave your pardon for keeping your Papers so long: I have at length perused them, and returned them. I wonder at, and could almost envy you, that can find so much leisure, and employ it so well, in these hurryings and clatterings of the Times. I am yet, by Ordinance of both Houses, a Licensor of Books to the Press, and have made use of that Authority, by Subscribing my Name at the end of your Papers. I pray God bless you, and them, and all the rest of your labors, to the good of his Church, and the praise of the glory of his Grace: So rests

Your true Friend, Brother and Servant, Charles Herle.

To the Conscientious Reader.

IT is thy privilege who readest, for Soul-help, to receive this Conscientious Contexture, a teaching and exciting pattern of choice Piety, out of the hand of thy dearest Husband Jesus Christ, who gave himself for thee, that he might give himself to thee; and with himself, that which doth convey himself, the Gifts, Graces, Evidences, Experiences, Improvements, and Spiritual actings of all those that are partakers of the Root and Fatness of that Olive. Here is then a Love-token, thy loving Husband hath been preparing for thee weeks and months (it may be some years) by the Study, Pains, Prayers, Tears, the Soul and Body-travel of a tender-hearted Brother; be thou ready for a meeting of Loves, that at the receipt, of this, comfortable fruit of love, Christ and thy Soul may rejoice together. Is there not not a cause? doth he not rejoice over thee with joy? doth he not rest in his love? doth not he joy over thee with singing? let this Love-token speak; herein thy free given Royalties are heaped up as high as Heaven, Justification, Reconciliation, Adoption, Sanctification, Glorification; Thy helpful Experiences remembered, and improved; thy heart-cheering Evidences collected, and cleared; thy love-Duty discovered, and precious Directions given, for an advantageous performance of them, in Secret, in Family, in Public, for the mutual overflowings of love betwixt Christ and thy Soul. Upon serious and sad thoughts, that the godly generally of later times, have been taken up with wrangling Disputes, and thereby taken off from Christian affection, and Communion

(and I fear from Christ too in dangerous measure) It hath been amongst my desires, That God would stir up the hearts of some of his Servants, to call off his people from these Soul-hurting Contendings, unto the Reading, and Study of Soul-helping Treatises; assuring myself, That if the people of God were helped against their contentious, and jarring Corruptions, the differences in their heads would be more easily reconciled, as to dear love, and due Spiritual Communion. I could not but observe, when these Papers were brought to my view, that the forementioned desires of my heart were imprinted thereupon, which made them more dear to me, and more willing to endear them to the sincere-hearted, as a happy mean of helping hearts, healing differences, and preparing the Lord's lot for those better times, which are more looked after, and boasted of, then prepared for: In reference to these restoring and refreshing times (though the workings of God have been very various, and seemingly contrary, now setting forward, and then setting backward) God hath not been wanting to feed the laboring, and sometimes almost fainting Faith of his people, by Divine arguments; amongst which, this is one, and not the least, That whilst Providence hath been at work to remove hindrances, and to open a full and free way amongst men, the in-dwelling Spirit hath been as busy in holy men, to stir up some to Pray, others to Preach, and others to Write, for the wide-opening of a door in men; the gracious enlarging of the heart, which gives assurance, that when God hath suffered them that are for no Religion, to play a first game, and them that are for all Religions, to play a second, that both the open and secret enemy of true Religion might be discovered, and discarded; he will then grant a longed for, joyful meeting of Holy times, and Holy hearts. To further the holiness of the heart, which gives the leading to holy times, is the happy project of compiling and Printing this Book. That it may be sanctified by the Spirit of Holiness, unto so good and promising an end, let be thy Prayer, that the Pains and Prayers of the Author, may be turned into Comforts and Praises; which is the hope and prayer of him

To the Christian Reader.

AMongst the multitude of Books in this Age, superlatively above our ability to buy or read, those seem to me most worthy of thy choice, which compendiously, in a methodical, plain and familiar way, set forth to us totum hominis, the whole duty of man, the service of God in holiness and righteousness, the right use, and wise improvement of the means of Grace: These being wells of Salvation to quench our thirst, and breasts of Consolation, to strengthen, revive, and comfort us in our Pilgrimage from Earth to Heaven: Voluminous Controversies may clear the understanding, and help to deliver and preserve that light from the poisoning clouds of Heretical darkness; but they do not quicken us to duty, to the love, and life of Christ, to the hope of Glory; they do not increase, but rather weaken the power of godliness. Diligence in reading of tedious Disputes, is not the way to possess that fatness and fullness of true life, peace and joy, which are treasured up for us in the Meritorious sufferings of our Redeemer. The Promises are the life of that faith, whereby the just do live; and good Works, uniform, steadfast and abundant, are the trial and glory thereof; whereunto not

Speculative, and Polemical, but Practical Discourses are an useful manuduction. In the reading of these with fervent Prayers, with serious and settled Meditations, many poor burdened sinners have been raised up out of the depths of a wounding, condemning Conscience, and brought to a transfigured Mountain, and Heaven on Earth in ravishing Consolations. Such a Discourse is here presented to thy view, by a Reverend and Religious Author, who hath experimentally learned, and doth daily copy out in his life the precious Truths of Jesus Christ, the Mysteries of Godliness. It is an high privilege, and great advantage to the Souls welfare, to learn of those, who have what they teach, not only in their lips, but also in their hearts and lives; who are able to say, In these ways we have found rest; as ye have heard or seen us do, so do ye. When the Conversation of Pastors preacheth Christ and Heaven, as well as their Doctrine; when vocal, real, and experimental Sermons go together, that's likely to be a successful Preaching. This Treatise may well be called, The Marrow of Christianity, A good and perfect guide to the New-Jerusalem, A golden Conduit-pipe, to convey to us streams of life from the Fountain of Living-waters, or the godly man's Vade mecum, wherein is compendiously, yet fully delivered the Rule and Life of the new Creature. Believe me, in the diligent, reiterated and religious reading thereof, thou wilt find, that these Titles are low enough, having a solid foundation, reality of Truth to bear them up; and that thy labor was not in vain, not a losing, but a regaining, a well improving of precious time, which ought to be redeemed. That the composing and publishing, the attentive reading and studying of this elaborate work, decked with the breathings of a gracious Spirit, may advance the glory of God, in the repairing of the Saints, and the edifying of the body of Christ, is the hearts desire and prayer of Halsall, April 19. 1649.

The Epistle to the Reader.

Good Reader, suffer me to say to thee, as that ancient and famous Orator, Isocrates, in his Oration ad Nicolem, said to his, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; Aut hisce praeceptis utere, aut ipse tu inveni meliora; Either make use of these wholesome Directions, or else publish better thyself: and if thou beest able to publish such in the future, yet will it much profit thee to make use of these for the present. Neither is it every speculative ability, that can bear such fruit; such as these must arise out of much inward observation of the work of God upon the Soul, and Christian long Experience: Weaker Christians may gain much growth in the diligent perusal of this sweet Composure, and strong ones may hence be instigated to try theirs; that which issues from the heart of an experimental Christian, usually reacheth to the heart of such as labor after the like Experience. Everyone that reads this work, perhaps knows not the Author so well as myself, therefore may I the more boldly speak of him: I have long known him of a weak body, but of a precious and strong mind; yet a man qui de se modice sentit, that judgeth but meanly of himself. These his (Media) nomine, so called in reference to his (Prima & Ultima) long since brought to light, thou shalt not (Christian Reader) find to be Media re, but Remedia to thy sighing soul: He is one that hath much fed up•n the Marrow of Practical Divinty, so that he may be ranked in a better kind amongst the Orators wise men,

〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ;Sapientes existima, non eos qui de rebus minutis curiose rixantur, sed qui de rebus maximis egregie dicunt. Such shalt thou find the Author. No more, but

THE Believers Privileges.

CHAP. I.

SECT. 1. The Proeme, or Entrance into the Book.

YOU have heard in my first things the Doctrine, Precepts, and the Pattern of a man in his second, or New birth: Now remains what follows all his life; and therein is considerable

- 1. His Privileges.
- 2. His Duties.

1. His Privileges, as he is now a Believer in Christ, are

- Justification.
- Reconciliation.
- Adoption.
- Sanctification.
- Glorification.

Of these some of our Worthies have written largely; and amongst the rest, that watchful Soul-rowzing, Soul-searching Shepherd: I shall not therefore dwell on them, but sum what he hath delivered, in these following Sections.

SECT. 2. Of the first Privilege, viz. Justification.

THE first Privilege which immediately follows our Union with Christ, is Justification; which consists in these particulars, Imputation of Christ's Righteousness, and Remission of sin.

To prevent erroneous misconceits, which spring from the confounding of things that differ, understand, That a man may be said to be justified either intentionally, or virtually, or actually; either in God, or in Christ, or in himself.

1. Intentionally in God (i.) in God's Purpose and Decree: This is from all eternity, but this Decree and Intention doth not put anything into a state of actual being, but in the fullness of time.

2. Virtually in Christ: And this is from the day of Christ's Passion, and in the virtue of his Satisfaction; yet this intendeth no more, but that Satisfaction is made, and Remission purchased by the Blood of Christ.

3. Actually in himself: When a man hath the possession of Justification, immediately after his Union with the Lord Jesus Christ. Now this Justification considered as it is a state of favor, a Covenant state with God, which a man at his first believing is put into, is not reiterated, no more then a wife, after that first entrance into the relation, is frequently made a wife; yet the particular acts of Pardon, and Imputation of Christ's Righteousness, are continually by God communicated unto the Believer. In this respect this actual Justification (or particular acts of pardon) hath its degrees of progression: The beginning thereof is laid in our first Union and Incorporation into Christ; the consummation of it is not till the Judge at the latter day hath solemnly pronounced the Sentence of final Absolution, and so set us in full possession of entire Remission: Between both these, there is a progressive work of Justification, by the constant actings of the Spirit, applying the blood of Christ by the hand of Faith, to the quiet and comfort of the soul: The first we may term initial Justification, the second progressive, the last perfective; the second is the fruit of the first, and the prelude assurance of the last: The first is wrought and sealed in the first Sacrament, the second is wrought and sealed in the second Sacrament; and both these branches of Sacramental Justification, are to us the preassurance of that complemental and perfective Justification, the sentence whereof putteth an end to all fears, changing our Faith and Hope into fruition and full possession.

It hath been commonly said by some of our best Divines, That Justification is transacted in our first Union and Incorporation into Christ; at which time it is conceived, That the pardon of all sin is sealed to the Believer at once. But I fear the misunderstanding of this point (not untrue in itself, if not mistaken and misapprehended) hath laid the ground upon which some build that unhappy Structure which turneth the grace of God into wantonness: who knoweth not that Justification in the proper acceptation of the word, according to the Scripture phrase, is the act of a Judge pronouncing a judicial sentence, wherein he absolveth the person of the sinner from all sin and punishment due to him for sin, and that for the alone Righteousness of the surety Christ freely imputed, and by Faith received of him. And according to this, I suppose we shall not err from the truth, if we say, 1. That the main work of Justification, is even as yet to us future, viz. at the great and last day of Judgment, when we shall receive a final Quietus est, and discharge, and when God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes: And yet 2. That in our first Union with Christ there is a work of Justification, viz. actual Imputation of Christ's Righteousness, and actual Remission of what sin for the present the soul stands guilty of, at that time when it is first united to Christ. I dare not say that Justification, quatenus it comprehends Imputation, and Remission of sin, is one individual act; or that all sins, past, present, and to come, are remitted to the Believer at once; but this I say, That in our first Union, all our sins past and present, are actually pardoned; and this favor received, is a pledge of assurance, That in future also, by applying ourselves to Christ, we may and shall receive the forgiveness of our daily sins, and that at the last day we shall at once be absolved from all Accusations and Charges laid in against us; and that Justification (besides those particular acts of pardon, and Imputation of Christ's Righteousness) doth connote a state that the subject at his first believing is put into, viz. A state of grace, and favor, and reconciliation with God for the imputed Righteousness of Christ, without Apostasy from it, either total or final.

O glorious Privilege! especially in these respects:

1. By this a sinner is righteous; a wonder that may astonish Angels, for a man accursed and sinful in himself, to be at that very instant blessed and righteous in another: Our own Duties, Works, and Reformation may make us at the best but less sinful, but this Righteousness makes a sinner sinless.

2. By this a sinner is righteous before the Judgment Seat of God: It is God that justifies, who shall condemn? not Christ, he is our Advocate; not Sin, for Christ was made sin for us; not the Law, for Christ hath fulfilled the Law for us; not Satan, for God is his Judge, and if he have acquitted us, what can the Jailor do?

3. By this we have perfect Righteousness: we are as perfectly righteous, as Christ the Righteous. Little children, let no man deceive you, he that doth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. Indeed our own righteousness, though it be the fruit of the Spirit of grace, is a blotted, stained righteousness, very imperfect, and very little; but by this, the Faith of David, Peter, Paul, was not more precious then ours is, because we have the same righteousness as they had: what sincere soul but esteems of perfect holiness, more then of heaven itself? O consider, we have it (in this sense I now speak of) in the Lord Jesus.

4. By this we have continual righteousness: Do we complain because we feel new sin, or old sins confessed, lamented, subdued, returning upon us again, and the springs in the bottom filling our souls again, that we are weary of ourselves? O but remember, this is not a Cistern, but a Fountain opened for us to wash in; as sin abounds, so grace in this gift of righteousness abounds much more: The Lord hath changes of garments for us, by means whereof there shall never enter into the Lord's heart one hard thought towards us, of casting us off, or of taking revenge upon any new occasion, or fall unto sin, so as for final destruction.

5. By this we have eternal righteousness, that never can be lost: If the Lord should make us as perfectly righteous as once Adam was, or as the Angels in heaven are, we might be in danger of losing this; but now the Lord hath put our righteousness into a safer hand, which never shall be lost: Christ hath obtained an eternal Redemption for us, he hath made an end of sin, and brought in an everlasting righteousness.

6. By this we please God more, then if we had a perfect righteousness in ourselves: Do not say, This is a poor righteousness, which is out of myself in another: Suppose it were in ourselves, such a righteousness at best would be nothing but man's righteousness, but this is called The Righteousness of God; Now what is Angelical righteousness, to the righteousness of God? 'tis but a Glow-worm before the Sun; the smell of Esau's garments (the Robes of this righteousness of the Son of God) are of sweeter odour then ours can be, or ever shall be.

7. By this we glorify God exceedingly: Abraham believed, and gave glory unto God; so when we believe, we glorify God, we advance his Mercy and Free-grace, and triumph in it.

8. By this we have Peace in our Consciences: For Christ's blood is sprinkled on them, and that cools the burning torments of them: None of our duties can pacify Conscience, but as they carry us hither to this righteousness; only if this Rainbow appear over our heads, it is a certain sign of fair weather, and that there shall be no more deluge of Wrath to overwhelm us.

9. By this all miseries are removed: When our sins are pardoned, there is something like sickness, shame, and death, but they are not; The inhabitants of Zion shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity; 'tis no sickness in a manner, nor sorrow, nor affliction, if the venom, sting, and curse be taken away by pardon of sin, this is the blessedness of all Believers. Blessed is he whose iniquity is forgiven, and whose sin is covered: Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity. Here's a blessing pronounced, what should we do but believe it, and rejoice in it?

SECT. 3. Of the second Privilege, viz. Reconciliation.

THE second Privilege is Reconciliation: This I called the state or condition which a Believer in his Justification is put into; and here I consider it as a Privilege, which in order of nature follows pardon of sin, as pardon of sin in order of nature follows Imputation of Christ's righteousness: Being justified by faith, we have peace with God;(i.) Christ's righteousness being imputed, and sins pardoned, we have peace with God; not only peace from God in our Consciences, but peace with God in our reconcilment to him, and in his favor towards us; in our Imputation and Pardon the Lord accounts us just, in our Reconciliation the Lord accounts us friends: Indeed our meritorious Reconciliation is by Christ's death; as the Kings Son, who procures his Fathers favor towards a Malefactor, who yet lies in cold Irons, and knows it not; and this is before actual pardon, or actual being: But actual and efficacious Reconciliation, whereby we come to the fruition and possession of it, is (to my weak conception) after pardon of sin. Now this Reconciliation consists in two things: 1. In our peace with God, whereby the Lord lays by all acts of hostility against us. 2. In the love and favor of God: he now loves us not only with a love of good will, as in our Election, but with a love of complacency and delight. O consider what a blessed state is this!

1. That God should be pacified with us after anger, after provocation by sin, after such wrath, which like fire hath consumed thousand thousands, and burnt down to the bottom of Hell, and is now, and ever shall be burning upon them in Hell.

2. That God should be pacified wholly and thoroughly, that there should be no consuming fury left for us to feel: Fury is not in me, saith God; indeed briars and thorns (i.) obstinate sinners, that prick and cut him to the very heart by their impenitency, he will burn them together: God out of Christ is a consuming fire, but in Christ he is Love; and though there may be fatherly frowns, chastisements, reproofs, and rods, though he may for a time hide his face, shut out our Prayers, defer to fulfil Promises, yet all these are out of love to us in some sort, and we shall see it, and feel it so in the latter end.

3. That the Lord should be pacified eternally, never to cast us off again for any sins or miseries that we fall into: This is wonderful. Those whom men love, if their love be abused, or if their friends be in affliction, they many times forsake, but the Lord's love and favor is everlasting: The mountains may depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the Covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee:

Nay, that which is something more, the abounding of our sin, is now the occasion of the abounding of his grace; our very wants and miseries, are the very objects and occasions of his bowels and tender mercies: O what a Privilege is this! Did the Lord ever show mercy to the Angels that sinned? Did not one sin cast them out of favor utterly? and yet that so many thousand thousand of sins should gush out of my heart, and thy heart that readest, against the mercy, love and kindness of our good God, and for all this he not be incensed; that the Lord who poured out all his anger upon his own Son for us, cannot now pour out, nay hath not one drop left (though he would) to pour out upon us for any one of our sins! Stand amazed ye Angels, and all the Host of Heaven at this!

4. That the Lord should be thus pacified with enemies: A man may be easily pacified with one that offends him but a little, but with an enemy that strikes at his life (as by every sin we do at the living God) what can we say to this?

5. That he should be pacified by such a wonderful way as the blood of Jesus Christ: This is such a love, as one would think the infinite wisdom of a blessed God could have devised no greater: It is enough to burst the heart with astonishment and amazement, to think that the party offended (who therefore had no cause to seek peace with us again) should find out such a way of peace as this: Woe to the world that despise this peace.

6. That being thus pacified, we may come into God's presence with boldness at any time, and ask what we will; I wonder what he can deny us, if he love us: This is the confidence that we have in him, That if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us.

7. That all Creatures should be at peace with us: Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field, and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee: As when the Captain of the Army is pacified, none of the Soldiers must hurt or strike that man; so no Creature must hurt us, nay all the Creatures that seem our enemies, shall be forced to do us good: O Death, where is now thy sting? O Grave, where is thy victory? All our wants will make us pray the more, our sorrows humble us the more, our temptations make us exercise our graces, our Spiritual desertions make us long for heaven, and to be with Christ; not only Paul, and Apollos, and the world, and life, but death itself is ours, to do us good: We may now sleep, and none shall make us afraid; we shall not be afraid of evil tidings, our hearts are fixed, trusting in the Lord.

SECT. 4. Of the third Privilege, viz. Adoption.

THE third Privilege is Adoption, which in order of nature follows Reconciliation; whereby the Lord accounts us Sons, and gives us the Spirit and Privilege of Sons: Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the Sons of God: The Lord accounts us just in our Justification, friends in our Reconciliation, Sons in our Adoption: Now this Adoption is either begun here in this life, or perfected in the world to come, when we shall receive all the Privileges of Sons, not one excepted. For this latter Adoption, to wit, The Redemption of our Bodies, we wait; but of the former we speak, the manner of which is thus:

1. God loves Jesus Christ with an unspeakable love, as his only Son, and our elder Brother.
2. Hence when we are in Christ his Son, he loves us with the same love as he doth his Son.

3. Hence the Lord accounts us Sons, having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will. O the excellency of this Privilege! It appears in these respects:

1. That the Lord should prize us as his Sons: A man that hath Sons, esteems them more than all his goods and Servants; so the Lord esteems of the poorest, unworthiest Believer, more than of all his household-stuff, more than of Heaven, Earth, and all the glory of it, more than of all the Kings and great men in the world.

2. That the Lord should take care for us as for Sons: In times of want we are ready to question, What we shall eat or drink? how we shall live? O consider, are we the Sons of God? then he that feeds the Ravens, and clothes the Lilies, will provide for us; or suppose we continue in the want of temporal things, why the Lord is therein plotting our eternal good: No chastening for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness, unto them which are exercised thereby.

3. That the Lord should love us as his Sons: Sometimes we think that the Lord loves us not, because we do not feel his love, or know his love; but do not we love our Sons, because whiles they are young, they know not their Fathers, or because their Fathers are sometimes out of sight, and have not them always in their arms? Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and the Lord hath forgotten me: Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the Son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet I will not forget thee. We may think, because we have so many sins, or so many afflictions, that therefore the Lord loves us not; but judge we righteously? have our children no love from us, because they are sick, and we keep them under a spare diet? God knows our mold, and that we are but dust: He hath freely chosen us to be his Sons, and therefore (notwithstanding all our sins and sufferings) he loves us still: If he sees Ephraim bemoaning his stubbornness, as well as sickness, the Lord cries out, and cannot hold, Is Ephraim my dear son? Is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still; therefore my bowels are troubled for him, I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord.

4. That the Lord should make us heirs and co-heirs with Christ: Sons by Nature are not always heirs, but all Sons by Adoption are: We are heirs 1. Of the visible world, 1 Cor. 3.22. 2. Of the other world, 1 Pet. 1.4. 3. Of all the Promises, Heb. 6.17. And herein Jehovah himself comes to be our Inheritance and Portion forever: O that such vessels of wrath, fire-brands of Hell by nature, should thus become the children of God by grace, and heirs of heaven!

5. That the Lord should give us the Spirit of Sons, The Spirit of Adoption, whereby we cry Abba Father, The Spirit of Assurance, witnessing with our Spirit, that we are the children of God: It doth not only witness to our Spirits, but with our Spirits, (i.) with our renewed Consciences, thus, All Believers are Sons, but I am a Believer, therefore I am a Son: Herein the Spirit bears witness with us in every part, premises, and conclusion; only it testifies more clearly, certainly, comfortably, sweetly, ravishing the soul with unspeakable joy, and peace, in the conclusion: Sometimes indeed it may be suspended, and sometimes we may not hear it; or if we do, we may object against it, through the unbelief in part remaining in us: yet if we want it in the witness and comfort of it, we have it in the holiness of it: Hence it is called, The holy Spirit of God, whereby we are sealed unto the day of Redemption.

SECT. 5. Of the fourth Privilege, viz. Sanctification.

The fourth Privilege is Sanctification, which in order of nature follows Adoption: No sooner are we Sons, but we receive the image of our heavenly Father in Sanctification; The manner of it is thus:

1. The Spirit works in us a Principle of Spiritual life: The Scripture sometimes calls it a Seed, sometimes a Spring, or Fountain, sometimes The life of Christ, because it is conveyed unto us by the Spirit of Christ, by means of our inseparable union with Christ. What name soever we give it, we may not conceive it to be a new faculty added unto those which are in men by nature, but an improvement of those abilities to work Spiritually, as they did naturally before Regeneration: Hence it is that a regenerate man in Scripture is said To walk after the Spirit, — To be led by the Spirit, — To walk in the Spirit.

2. From this Fountain springs all those habits of Spiritual grace, which are severally distinguished by the names of Faith, Hope, Love, &c. although to speak properly, they are but the diversifications of that Spiritual Principle within us, distinguished by these names.

3. From these habits of grace abiding in us, ordinarily proceeds Spiritual motions and operations according to those habits. And as it is with Natural habits, so it is with Spiritual, they are much increased and strengthened by their motions, operations (i.) by the use and exercise of them, and are as much weakened by disuse, and neglect of such an exercise. I deny not but for all this, there is within us a woeful, sinful nature, cross, and contrary unto holiness, and leading us daily into Captivity: yet here's our Privilege, even Sanctification in part; surely the Lord hath given us another Nature, a new Nature: there is something else within us, which makes us wrestle against sin, and shall in time prevail over all sin: A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory.

The excellency of this Privilege appears in these particulars:

1. This is our glory, and beauty, even Glorification begun: What greater glory then to be like unto God? We are changed into the same image, from glory to glory; every degree of grace is glory, and the perfection of glory in heaven, consists chiefly in the perfection of grace.

2. This will give us abundance of sweet peace: For whence comes troubles, and doubts of God's favor and love? Is it not some guile or decay here? Is it not some boldness to sin? Is it not our secret dalliance with some known sin, continued in with secret impenitency? On the other side, what was Paul's rejoicing? Hezekiah's peace? the one cried, that In all sincerity and simplicity he had his conversation amongst men; the other, Lord remember, I have walked before thee uprightly: not that this was the ground of their peace, for that only is Free-grace in Christ, but the means of their peace: That is a cursed peace, that is kept by looking to Christ, and yet loving our lusts.

3. This will make us fit for God's use: A filthy unclean vessel is good for nothing, till cleansed; a man must first purge himself, and then he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the masters use, and prepared unto every good work.

4. By this we have a most sweet and comfortable evidence of our Justification: Nor is this a running upon the Covenant of Works; Is not Sanctification (the writing of the Law in our hearts) a privilege of the Covenant of Grace, as well as Justification? and can the evidencing of one Privilege by another, be a running upon the Covenant of Works? O consider, how many Evangelical Promises are made to persons invested with such and such graces! as of Poverty, Mourning, Meekness, &c. and to what end? but that everyone may take, and be assured of his portion manifested particularly therein? surely none are justified, but they are sanctified; or if not sanctified, they are not justified.

SECT. 6. Of the fifth Privilege, viz. Glorification.

THE fifth Privilege is Glorification, which is the last in execution of God's eternal Purpose towards all his beloved and chosen ones: And hereby we are made partakers of those endless and unutterable joys, which neither eye hath seen, nor ear hath heard, nor the heart of any man conceived: But of this you have several Sermons in my Last things, enough to cheer up all those precious hearts that have any title to, or interest in the Lord Jesus Christ: My meaning therefore is to pass by these Privileges, and secondly to come to the Duties, which gracious Spirits, in all faithful and thankful obedience unto him that hath called them, are ready to fall upon.

CHAP. II.

SECT. 1. Of Duties in general: And first, of the Equity of Duties.

NO sooner is the soul translated into the state of grace, and crowned with those glorious Privileges, but immediately it cries out, O Lord, what shall I now do for thee? how shall I now live to thee? Good reason, the soul should now give up herself to Christ, for she knows, she is not her own, but Christ's. Can there be such a heart in any Christian, as now to cast off Duty, and to continue in sin, because so much grace hath abounded? O no! The love of Christ constrains us (saith the Apostle) because we thus judge, — That he died for all, that they which live, should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. There is a Principle of love now in the hearts of believers, and this love of Christ constrains them to live to Christ: Ye are now a chosen Generation, a royal Priesthood, a holy Nation, a peculiar People, that ye should show forth the praises of Christ, who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light: What blessed Titles are these? and to what end? but that they who are so ennobled by Christ, may now adorn the Gospel of Christ, and show forth the praises of him who hath called them? Dearly beloved (saith the Apostle) I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims, abstain now from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul, having your conversation honest among the Gentiles, that whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation. But what duties must they fall on? 1. Submit yourselves to every Ordinance of man for the Lord's sake. 2. Honor all men. 3. Love the Brotherhood. 4. Fear God. 5. Honor the King. 6. Suffer wrongs: You have herein Christ for example, and you must do all for Christ's sake; or if these Duties will not contain all, Zacharias tells us, that being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, we must serve him without fear, in holiness (in all Duties of the first Table) and righteousness (in all Duties of the second Table) all the days of our life. Indeed, how can we love Christ, and neglect duty to Christ? If you love me (saith Christ) keep my Commandments; the love of Christ will constrain us to embrace his Commandments, as a most precious treasure. I hope assuredly, that the God of grace and mercy will keep, by his power to Salvation, all those persons he doth deliver; and that he will sow the seeds of grace in their hearts, that they may not sin (i.) presumingly. And I hope also, God will meet with such as are disturbers of the truth of Christ, and peace of the Gospel, by their base and vile conversations: And I shall recommend to them the reading of the Epistle of Jude, where they may see the fearful wrath of God upon such persons as abuse the grace of God to sin. O let not the love of Christ thus manifested, be so basely requited at your hands, seeing the Lord hath so freely loved you, & given Christ to you, that you might be to the praise of the glory of his grace, in a godly Christian conversation, whereunto you are ordained. For you are God's workmanship (saith the Apostle) created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained, that you should walk in them. And I beseech you always to remember, That you cannot answer the free love of God towards you any other way, but by showing it in a fruitful conversation in the world; considering that one end of your Redemption, that Christ who gave himself for you, might redeem you from all iniquity, and purify you unto himself, a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Here's good equity for Duties; the soul cannot consider her deliverance by the blood of Christ, and by the Spirit of Christ, but she cries, What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me? I will take the cup of Salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord: I will pay my vows unto the Lord, now in the presence of all his people: O Lord, truly I am thy servant, I am thy servant and the son of thy handmaid; thou hast loosed my bonds. For a man that hath a touch of the loving kindness of Christ, and therefore stands ready to speak forth the praise of the glory of his grace, that hath so freely saved him, it must needs be an acceptable service to God in Christ.

SECT. 2. Of the Insufficiency of Duties.

BUT alas, what are these Duties to my Lord? or what are these Duties in themselves?

1. All the Duties of man, they are nothing at all unto God: Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wise can be profitable unto himself? Is it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? Or is it gain to him, that thou makest thy ways perfect? If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he from thine hand? O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, Thou art my Lord: And what then? what recompense to God for this propriety? Nay, David is here non-pluss'd, My goodness extendeth not to thee. All the service of men and Angels, though they run parallel with the longest lines of eternity, are insufficient recompense for my souls deliverance: When we have done all we can, still we must say, We are unprofitable servants.
2. All the duties of man, as they are done by man, are in that respect sinful: What is Duty, but man's tie to that which is due? or (if we follow the Latins) what is Duty, but obedience commanded by God, to be performed by man? Now wherein anything is to be done as of man, therein is some mixture of sin: All our righteousness is as filthy rags, as a menstruous cloth; How? All our righteousness? It is true, whilst a Believers heart is overcast with gross vapors, and is more then ordinarily dull in hearing, whilst it flies low and slow in praying, and is somewhat stiff, and untoward in fasting above measure, such Righteousness goes usually for sin; but if a soul gets under full sail; if it be filled with a stiff gale of the Spirit of Christ; if stoods of meltings flow from it; if it cry mightily, be swift to hear, be greedy in sucking in Divine Truths, and be somewhat exact in observing practical righteous means, to mourn and pray lustily, being helped by the Spirit herein: Are such Prayers, Mournings, and other Divine Exercises in any sort sinful? yes, as there is some mixture of man's infirmity in them; and in our best Duties there is some such mixture: for all our righteousness is as filthy rags, as menstruous clothes; I know who hath said it, and yet I know not wherein to contradict it. Christians may distinguish between that which is the Spirits, in works after renovation, and the whole work after they have done it: Now although the motions and assistance of the Spirit be pure, holy, and without skum in the spring, to wit, in itself; yet by that time these motions and assistance have passed through the channels of their hearts, and have been mixed with their manifold corruptions in doing, even the whole work thereby becomes polluted. If this be so, that our best recompense to Christ for his loves be unprofitable to him, and sinful as done by man, What shall I say? how must I carry (saith the soul) to my Redeemer?

SECT. 3. Of the healing of Duties.

I Dare not but obey; though all the Duties in the world are insufficient to recompense those bowels of God's mercies in Christ, I must not therefore cast away Duties. It is true, I cannot but sin in all I do, my best Duties (nakedly and barely considered in themselves) are tainted, poisoned, and mingled with sin: But will it follow, That because I cannot be more clean, therefore I must be more filthy then needs? Nay, O my soul, if thou art married to that Bridegroom Christ, Duties and all things else are clean to thee. The whole filth and dung of our works, through faith in Christ, is extracted by Christ, and he presenting the same, purged by himself alone, they are accepted with God: In this respect there is an healing of Duties, if we be in Christ. Certainly, that fruit which cometh from a root of Faith, must needs be good fruit: I believe, therefore I speak, saith the Psalmist: O my soul, canst thou say thus? I believe, therefore I pray; I believe, therefore I sanctify the Lord's day; I believe, therefore I do all Duties of obedience: Thy obedience then is the fruit of Paradise, for it grows on the very Tree of Life. Christ is The Sun of Righteousness, that ariseth with healing in his wings: Christ is that Sun, that by his heat of love extracts all the filth of sin out of thy Duties performed; and so thy Duties are healed, the Spiritual part of them being presented by the intercession of Christ, and the carnal defects covered by the Righteousness of Christ, in whom the Father is always well-pleased.

§. 1. Of the manner of healing our Duties.

NOW the manner (O my soul) how Christ heals our Duties, it is thus:

1. He takes our persons, and carries them in to God the Father, in a most unperceivable way to us; he knows, that if our persons be not first accepted, our Duties cannot be accepted: Love me, and love my Duty; hate me, and hate my Duty. It is true, that in the Covenant of Works, God first accepted of the work, and then of the person; but in the Covenant of Grace, God first accepts of the person, and then of the work: Now therefore, that our works (our Duties) may be accepted, Christ Jesus our great High Priest first takes our persons, and carries them into the presence of God the Father: This was plainly shadowed out to us, by that of the High Priest, who went into the holy of holiest, with the Names of all the Tribes upon his breast.

2. As Christ takes our persons, and carries them in to God the Father; so when we perform Duty, he observes what evil or failing there is in that Duty, and draws it out, before he presents it to God the Father: As a child that would present his father with a Posy, he goes into the garden, and gathers flowers and weed together; but coming to his mother, she picks out the weeds, and binds up the flowers by themselves, and so it is presented to the father. Thus we go to Duty, and we gather weeds and flowers together, but Christ comes, and picks out the weeds, and so presents nothing but flowers to God the Father: Who may abide the day of his coming (said the Prophet of Christ) and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiners fire, and like fullers sope: And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness; then shall the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord: mark, Thou shall their offerings be pleasant: then? when? When he had purged their sacrifices and their offerings. Thus it was in the days of his flesh, and much more now.

3. As Christ takes away the iniquity of our holy things, so he observes what good there is in any of our Duties, and with that he mingles his own Prayers, Intercessions, Incense, and presents all as one work mingled together unto God the Father: And another Angel (viz. the Angel of the Covenant) came and stood at the Altar, having a golden censer, and there was given to him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all Saints upon the golden Altar, which was before the Throne: And the smoke of the incense which came with the prayers of the Saints, ascended up before God, out of the Angels hand.

§. 2. The Souls Quaere's in this case.

[Quare. 1] 1. IF this be so, O my soul, what is thy case? are not most of thy Duties performed with many fillings, infirmities, hardness of heart, straitness of Spirit, distracting thoughts? and is there any healing for such a Duty as this?

[Answ.] O yes! For first, in every Duty we perform, there are two things; there is the sacrifice, and there is the obedience in offering of the sacrifice; the sacrifice may be imperfect, and yet our obedience in offering the sacrifice may be perfect with Gospel perfection. Secondly, God deals with our Duties as with our persons; though he find a great deal of ungodliness in them, yet he imputes his righteousness unto them, and so he justifies our Duties, which in our eyes are most ungodly. This indeed is a wonder; did we ever hear or read of any seal, that when it was set upon the wax, would change the wax into its own metal? or did we ever hear or read of any stamp, that being set upon brass, it would change the brass into silver, or being set upon silver, it would change the silver into gold? O but when Christ comes unto a Duty, and sets his own stamp, and his own righteousness upon a Duty, that which was brass before, (i.) full of failings, and much unrighteousness, he changes it into silver, into gold; he only hath the Philosophers Stone (as I may so speak) and all that Christ toucheth, it presently turns into gold; he turns all our Duties into golden Duties, and so presents them unto God the Father.

[Quare. 2] 2. But how should I know that Christ thus takes my Duties and heals them, and mingles them with his own incense, and carries them in unto God the Father?

[Answ.] Consider, didst thou never find a Spiritual fire come down (as it were) upon thy heart in Duty, or after Duty? In the times of the Old Testament, if they offered up a sacrifice, and a material fire came down from heaven, and burnt up the sacrifice to ashes, it was a certain testimony that the sacrifice was accepted: Now in the times of the Gospel, we must not expect material fire to come down upon our Duties, but hath the Lord at any time caused an inward and Spiritual fire to fall down upon thy heart, warming thy Spirit in Duty? there the Lord speaks thus much to thee, That thy sacrifice is turned into ashes, and it is accepted by Jesus Christ.

[Quare. 3] 3. O but whence comes this fire now in these Gospel times?

[Answ.] It issues from the blood and intercessions of Christ our Great high Priest; it is the efficacy of his blood, and power of his glorious intercession, that when thou feelest any good in Duties, doth at that very instant prevail with God the Father for what thou feelest: say then, Do I now in this Ordinance, or in this Duty, feel my heart warmed, or savingly affectect? O I see, I am bound to believe, that the Lord Jesus who sits in glory at the right hand of God, now, now he remembers me a poor worm on earth; now I feel the fruit of his death and intercession in Heaven; now I feel his spirit, power, grace, comfort, presence, sweetness; now I taste, I drink, I enjoy, and am abundantly satisfied with his rivers of pleasures: And if this presence of Christ be so sweet, what is himself then? O my soul, if ever thou dost thus relish the blood and spirit of Christ upon thy spirit in Duties, go thy way, and give glory to God.

SECT. 4. No resting in Duties.

AND yet be wary, O my soul: It was Luther's saying, Take heed not only of thy sins, but also of thy good Duties; they are apt (by reason of our corruption) to bring men into themselves, and this is very dangerous. Certainly, a man may not only exclude Christ from his soul by gross sins, but by self-confidence: You are they which justify yourselves, said Christ to the Pharisees. Take a profane man, what makes him drink, swear, cozen, game, whore? Is there no God to punish? Is there no Hell hot enough to torment? Are there no Plagues to confound him? Yes: Why sins he then? Oh! he prays to God for forgiveness; he sorrows, and repents in secret (as he saith) and this bears him out in his lewd prancks. Take a Moral man, he knows he hath his failings, and his sins, as the best have, and is overtaken sometimes as the best are; Why doth he not remove these sins then? Why is he not more humbled under his sins? The Reason is, he constantly observes Evening and Morning prayer, and then he craves forgiveness for his failings, by which course he hopes to make his peace with God: And hence he sinneth without fear, and riseth out of his fall into sin without sorrow; he maintains his sins by his Duties.

Take a Professor, such a one as may be exceedingly troubled about his sins, as endeavors very much after Mourning, Repenting, Reforming, and others commend him for a diligent Christian, Do you not see how he mourns, and weeps, and prays? and now the wind is over, the tempest down, and there is a great calm in his soul, how comes he to this quiet? Oh! his affections were enlarged, he hath reached so high, as to a very proportion of repentance, and tears, and sorrow, and fasting, &c. and this hath given him ease, this hath took away the burden, and laid his soul at rest: O poor soul, is this all the remedy to rid thee of the sting and guilt of sin? Hast thou no more pantings, but only after bitterness, heaviness, mourning, melting, extraordinary enlargements? Why then, let me tell thee, all thy righteousness (though it were more perfect than it is) is but a filthy rag. Couldst thou weep thy heart out, should thy heart melt like wax, dissolve into water; Couldst thou desire and pray till heaven and earth shook▪ till thou hadst worn thy tongue to the stumps; Couldst thou fast till thy skin and bones cleave together; Couldst thou promise and purpose with full resolution to be better; Couldst thou reform thy heart, head, life, tongue, some, nay all sins; Couldst thou live like an Angel, shine like a Sun, walk up and down the world like a distressed Pilgrim; Couldst thou die ten thousand deaths, lie at the fire back in Hell so many many millions of years, as there be piles of grass on the earth, or sands on the sea shore, or stars in heaven, or motes in the Sun; I tell thee, not one spark of God's wrath against thy sins, can be quenched by all these Duties, nor by any of these sorrows or tears.

It was Austin's saying, though it sounds harsh, that Repentance damns more than Sin; meaning, that thousands did perish by resting therein: It is no digging within ourselves, for power to leave sin, to be more holy, and humble, and religious, and conscientious, and so to think to work out ourselves in time out of this state: The words which the Prophet put into Israel's mouth, if they would truly turn unto God, were these, — Ashur shall not save us, we will not ride upon horses, q.d. We will trust no more to these outward means, we will not save ourselves by our graces, or our abilities.

But how shall any man know, that he rests in his Duties?

I answer, By these signs following:

1. It is a sign that a man rests in his Duties, if he never found it a hard matter to come out of his Duties: Examine, if thou never yet sawest, if thou canst not tell the time when thou didst rest in Duties, and then didst groan to be delivered from these entanglements, thou hast just cause to fear.

2. It is a sign that a man rests in Duties, if he exceedingly prize the bare performance of Duties; those Duties that carry thee out of thyself unto Christ, make thee to prize Christ: Now tell me, Dost thou glory in thyself? Dost thou say, Now I am somebody? I was before ignorant, forgetful, hard-hearted, but now I understand better, now I can sorrow for my sins, I can pray with some life, now I have done very well. Alas poor soul! if thou retest here, if thou thus inhancest the price of Duties, that thou beginn'st to dote on them, then do I pronounce from God, That thou dost rest in Duties: These things (saith Paul) I accounted gain (i. before his conversion) but now I account them loss: This is the reason why a child of God commonly after his prayers doubts much of God's love towards him; whereas another man that falls short of him, never so much as questions his estate: The first seeth much rottenness and vileness in his best Duties, and so adjudgeth meanly of himself; but the other is ignorant of any such vileness, and therefore he prizeth and esteems highly of them.

3. It is a sign that a man rests in his duties, if he never came to be sensible of their poverty, and utter emptiness of any good in them. Didst thou never feel thyself in this manner? Oh! I am as ignorant as any beast, as vile as any devil; what a nest and litter of sin and rebellion works in my heart? I once thought, at least, my heart and desires were good, but now I feel no spiritual life; O dead heart, I am the poorest, vilest, basest and blindest creature that ever lived! If thou never feelest thyself thus, thou never camest out of thy Duties.

4. It is a sign that a man rests in his Duties, if he gain no Evangelical Righteousness by Duties (i.) if he prize not, desire not, delight not in union with the Lord Jesus Christ: Hence a child of God asks himself after Sermon, after Prayer, after Sacrament, What have I gained of Christ? Have I got more knowledge of Christ? more admiring of the Lord Jesus Christ? on the contrary, a carnal heart, that rests in his Duties, asketh only, What have I done? I thank God (said the Pharisee) I am not as other men are, — I fast twice in the week I give tithes of all that I possess: So, I pray, and hear, and reform, and sorrow for sin, therefore I think verily I shall be saved; no such matter: let a man have a Bucket of Gold, doth he think to get water, because he hath a Bucket; no, no, he must let it down into the well, and draw up water with it: So must thou let down all thy Duties into the Lord Jesus Christ, and draw life, and light from his fullness, otherwise (though thy Duties be golden Duties) thou shalt perish without Christ.

SECT. 5. Of the Use and Ends of Duties.

AND canst thou not, O my Soul, be saved by thy Duties? to what end shouldst thou pray, or hear, or sorrow, or repent, or meditate, or examine, or confer? I answer, There are many ends and purposes, for which Christians may, and must perform Duties.

1. That herein, and hereby, they may express their obedience to God's will: Rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, in everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you (saith the Apostle;) and this was the ground of David's inference, Thou hast commanded us to keep thy precepts diligently: And what then? O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes.

2. That God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ may be honored by the performance of these Duties: Herein is my Father glorified, that you bear much fruit; and as the Apostle, Ye are a chosen Generation, a royal Priesthood, an holy Nation, a peculiar People, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light; Abraham believed, and gave God glory: So we should pray, and meditate, and hear, and all should tend to the glory of God. Indeed, Hypocrites aims are at other ends, by giving alms, and praying, and fasting, that they may have glory of men, — That they may be seen of men, — That they may appear unto men, — But the child of God aims at the glory of God. I confess, it is God's grace to account of man's Duty as his glory, seeing it is so defective.

3. That Duties may be as Evidences of God's everlasting love to them who are in Christ Jesus: They cannot save, but they let the foul into Christ, and follow, and accompany such a man as shall be saved. We hear of some that boast of joys, feeling, gifts, Spirit, and Grace; but if they walk in the commission of any one sin, or in the omission of any one known duty, or in the slovenly illfavored performance of Duties, they can have no assurance (say what they please) without slattering of themselves: If these things be in you (saith Peter) and abound, they will make you that you shall never be barren, or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; and he that lacketh these things is blind:— Wherefore, Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure. Duties bring you in to Christ, and are Evidences when you are in Christ, that the Lord and mercy is yours, even as at the Sacrament, the Elements of Bread and Wine are outward signs to bring Christ and the heart together; indeed, the heart must not rest in these signs, but when the soul is let in to Christ, then Faith must let go the outward Elements, and close, and treat immediately with the Lord Jesus Christ. So Grace and Duties are signs inward, and while men make use of them only, as bare signs, to let them come in unto Christ, and their rejoicing is not in them, but in Christ, their confidence is not pitched upon them, but upon Christ, there is and will be no danger at all in making such use of signs; especially seeing in nature, the effect is a sign of the cause: Neither is it more derogatory to Free-grace, or to Christ's honor, for God to make such effects Signs of our union with him, then it was to make outward Signs of his presence: It's true, these are not full testimonies without the Spirit of Christ.

4. That they that use and exercise Duties may obtain the Promises: Godliness is profitable unto all things (saith the Apostle) having the promises of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. There are many Promises scattered up and down in the Word, and hereby if God be not a debtor unto thee, yet he is to himself, and to his own faithfulness. Reddis debita, nulli debens, cried Augustine; Thou Lord payest debts, and owest to none; it was free for thee before thou hadst promised, whether to give me heaven, or no: but now the word is out of thy mouth, I use Duties as means, though I adhere only to thee, and to thy faithfulness, who hast promised. To prevent mistake, Duties are considered in a double relation: First, as services, in respect of the command; and Secondly, as means to obtain and procure blessings at God's hands, in relation to his promise: Now the most in the world perform Duties as acts of obedience only, and so rest in the present performance; but if we do them in Faith, we shall have an eye to the Promise, and look on Duties as means to obtain some mercy, yea, Salvation itself at God's hands, Phil. 2.12. Romans 10.10. 2 Cor. 7.10. 1 Pet. 1.9.

But is not this to be saved by Duties?

No such thing: For herein we speak not of Duties originally, or per se, but instrumentally, and with relation to the Lord Jesus Christ; not as meritorious causes, but as subordinate means of our salvation in the name of Christ: The best of Duties carry no such luster, beauty, and Energetical virtue in their own faces and natures; they are but mere empty pits, and dry channels (of themselves) though never so curiously cut out, but Christ fills them (and as some desire Ministers to do) so I am willing for my part to say and express thus much of Christ, that the people may clearly understand and remember so much, and be guided explicitly to the Fountain itself, Christ alone.

5. That these Duties may turn to our comforts: Not so, as to put confidence in them, to take comfort from them as a cause; that cannot be, for who can look upon anything he doth with that boldness? but as the testimony of God's eternal love to us. Thus Hezekiah, not as a proud Pharisee, but as a thankful acknowledger of what was in him, prayed, I beseech thee, O Lord, remember me, how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight: Some suppose, that such a temptation as this might fall on Hezekiah, that when he had labored to demolish all those Superstitions, and now became dangerously sick, that he had not done well; and therefore he comforts himself in his heart, That he did those things with a perfect heart, not absolutely, but comparatively perfect: We may therefore take comfort from Duties, not so as to rest in them, but so as to praise God thereby. It's a good way, nesciendo scire, in not knowing, to know, that so we may praise God for them; and sciendo nescire, in knowing, not to know, that so we may be humble in ourselves.

6. That others might receive good, and thereby be occasioned to glorify God: These things are good, and profitable unto men, saith the Apostle; and, Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. Christ doth not here encourage vain glory, but he propounds the true ends of our visible holiness; for godliness being light, it ought not (in suitable Duties) to be hid under a bushel: My goodness extendeth not to thee, but to the Saints that are on the earth, and to the excellent, in whom is all my delight. Jerome said of Augustine, That he loved Christ dwelling in Augustine; so ought we to walk, that others may love Christ dwelling in us.

There's an Exhortation to wives, so to walk, that their husbands may be won to the Lord: Sweet soul, it may be thou prayest for thy husband, in a carnal condition, thou desirest him to go to hear such a Minister, such a Sermon; go on in these Duties, adding this to the rest, See that thy life also may convert him.

7. That Duties may carry us to the Lord Jesus, the only Savior; he alone is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him (i.) in the use of the means: Hear a Sermon to carry thee to the Lord Jesus; Fast, and pray, and get a full tide of affections in them, to carry thee to the Lord Jesus Christ (i.) to get a more love of him, more acquaintance with him, more union in him, and communion with him; use thy Duties, as Noah's Dove did her wings, to carry thee to the Ark of the Lord Jesus Christ, where only there is rest: If she had never used her wings, she had fallen in the waters; and if she had not returned to the Ark, she had found no rest: So, if thou shalt use no Duties, but cast them all off, thou art sure to perish; and if they convey thee not to Christ, thou mayest lie down in sorrow: or as it is with a poor man, that is to get over a great water for a treasure on the other side, though he cannot fetch the Boat, he calls for it, and useth it, to carry him over to the treasure: So Christ is in heaven, and thou on earth, he doth not come to thee, and thou canst not get to him, now call for a Boat; though there is no grace, no good, no salvation in a pithless Duty, yet use it to carry thee over to the treasure, The Lord Jesus Christ: When thou comest to hear, say, Have over, Lord, by this Sermon; when thou comest to pray, say, Have over, Lord, by this Prayer to a Savior: But this is the misery of people, like foolish Lovers, when they are to woo for the Lady, they fall in love with her Handmaid, that is only to lead them to her: So men fall in love with, and dote upon their own Duties, and rest contented with the naked performance of them, which are only Handmaids, to lead the soul unto the Lord Jesus Christ.

8. That the Lord Christ may be exalted, and advanced by Duties. The main end of Duties, is the glory of him who hath Redeemed us with the price of his blood, and by the power of his Spirit; this sets the Crown on his head: Behold King Solomon, with the Crown wherewith his mother crowned him. How many perform Duties, not to set the Crown on Christ's head, but to set the Crown on their own heads? So do hypocrites, that seek their own praise, and credit, and profit; so do all, especially that do anything with a conceit of meriting at God's hands. Now this is the main end of right obedience, That the Crown may be set on Christ's head, that he who is King of Saints, may have the honor given him, due to his Kingly Office. In this respect, I cannot blame them who blame others, for crying up, and magnifying man's works in their own name. To say that Christ is always supposed as principal, is no sufficient Apology: For why only supposed? why not he named, as well as Duties, and Righteousness? Certainly, it is not good manners (to say no worse) to forget him, whiles his poor Instruments are so highly remembered. When Servants bring Presents from their Masters to any, they do not say, I bestow such and such a thing on you, but, My Master sends it you; if he should take it on himself, he should go for an arrogant fellow: nor will it salve the matter, when he is taxed for such arrogancy, to say, My Master should have been supposed, when he gave no hint of him. Me think it were comely (saith the Author rightly in this) in extolling of Mans Righteousness, explicitly to ascribe all the praise to the glory of Christ, and his grace: And, I see not (saith another ingeniously) but that Ministers may be humbled, that they have pressed religious Duties, but not so as to set up Christ: and hereby people have been content with Duties, and Sacraments, though no Christ in them: but as vessels were to be of pure Gold in the Temple, so ought all our Duties to be of pure and mere Christ for acceptation. Again, If Bernard said, He did not love to read Tully, because he could not read the Name of Christ there; how much rather may we say, That in many Sermons, in many a man's Ministry, the drift and end of all his preaching is not, that Christ may be advanced. And again, Let Christ be the matter of our Righteousness and Comfort, more then he hath been; you know the posts that were not sprinkled with blood, were sure to be destroyed, and so are all those persons and duties that have not Christ upon them. How sweet is the harmony of Dissenting Brethren? Me thinks, I would not lose a shred of that gold which both Authors (so strongly my heart beats and pants after unity) give out to be weight in the Ballance of the Sanctuary: It is observed by the former, That when the Church grew into credit, then Religio peperit Divinitas & filia devoravit matrem; I may as truly say, Christus peperit Justitiam, & filia devoravit matrem: just as if a King should promote a Favorite, and then he should be so applauded for his usefulness to the Subjects, that the King must be dethroned, and he Crowned in his place: — In all exigencies, wants and extremities, how few followers hath Christ himself? how rarely are men sent to shelter themselves under the shadow of his wings? In the mean while, what hideous outcries for Prayers, Mournings, Fastings, &c. to help men at a dead lift? What sending and posting to them in extremities, as if they kept a Court by themselves? for Christ is seldom heard of, at least not set up so high as to do all; and that this Righteousness is but merely his ministering servant: What the Apostle said of himself, I may as truly say of the best Righteousness best assisted, What is Prayer, Mourning, Fasting, Hearing, but ministers by whom ye believed, and received mercy? and if but as ministers at best, shall they be greater then the Lord? Let me not be mistaken, I intend no derogation to Righteousness, but the bringing of it into it's own place, namely, that it is to be used as that, where according to Christ's directions we may meet with him, from whose hands alone we may expect whatever we pant after, according to his will; reserving a submission to be disposed of otherwise, if he see fit. Again, it is not the Spiritualness, nor the fervency in the performance of Duties that carries it, but when Duties are performed as to the Lord, and for the Lord, and not to and for ourselves; O my soul, in respect of all these ends, use and exercise Duties, but be sure of Christ in all, above all, more than all: O let Christ have the Crown set on his head, give him all the glory. Cast not away Duties, but cast them down at the feet of Jesus Christ, as the Twenty four Elders cast their Crowns, saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power: for thou hast created all things (all Duties) and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

SECT. 6. Of the Saints abilities or power to do Duties.

[Obj.] BUT alas, how should I perform my Duty? by nature I am dead, and except God give me an heart and strength, what can I do? There is no power in my hands, I am nothing in myself, and therefore till God come, or naked Christ come, I will sit down in discouragements; Let God do all, I see I have no ability at all, &c.

[Ans.] What sayest thou (O my soul?) surely this is thine infirmity; these conclusions are ill drawn from a true Principle: It is true, all is of God, and by nature I am dead; but it is ill urged in this case, for that the Regenerate have in them a Seed, a Spiritual Principle, a power to do good: First, because such are living, and all life is a power to act. 2. Else there is no specifical difference betwixt a man regenerate and unregenerate, if both were still dead, and without strength. 3. Grace is a renewing of that image of God and Holiness which we lost in Adam; but that was a power to do what God required, therefore so far as that image is repaired, so far there is power. 4. Else we should not have as much benefit by the second Adam, as we had by the first: for the first would have communicated his power to do good, and being corrupted, doth communicate power to do sin; therefore much more by Christ have we a life, a power to do good in our measure.

[Obj.] It may be objected, Without me ye can do nothing.

The meaning is, Except ye be implanted into me, ye can do nothing: The word [Without me] signifieth, Seperate from me, or apart from me; and intimateth this only, That till we are knit unto Christ, we are but dead, and barren branches, and so Christ explains himself, As the branch cannot bring forth fruit of itself, except it abide in the Vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

[Obj.] It may be objected again, It is God that worketh, both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

[Sol.] This denies not that the Saints have in them A seed, a spring, a principle of life, a power; but on the contrary, it affirms, That they have a power, only that this power is of God: We should work out our salvation in humility, not boasting in our own selves, for all is received of God: More fully, God is said to work the will and the deed, 1. By giving a principle of Spiritual life, habitual grace, a renewed frame of heart. 2. By exciting and strengthening this grace: and both these are ever afforded to the Saints, only the latter is more or less, according to his pleasure: So that in the worst times, a Believer hath power to do good, though not alike at all times; and this power we must use, and put forth ourselves as we are able, or we cannot with reason expect his help. A Ship hath instruments of motion (though not an internal principle) and if the Mariner would have help by the winds, he must loose his Cables, and hoise his Sails; so must we, or else we may lie still.

Now that which we are to do, is, —

First, To stir up ourselves; for God hath promised to meet us, and to reach out his hand to help us, if we be not wanting to ourselves: It is certain, a godly man cannot by his own endeavors alone raise up his soul, nor recover his loss, though he should lay Mountain upon Mountain, and pile endeavors upon endeavors; yet as endeavors without God cannot, so God without endeavors will not help us herein, and therefore labor we to quicken ourselves (i.) work we upon our own hearts, by our understandings; as the striking of the Flint and Steel together begetteth fire, so the meeting of these two faculties, having an internal life in them, do quicken the soul. Thus we see David pleading with himself, sometimes chiding, Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? sometimes exciting himself to Duty, Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, praise his holy Name: sometimes comforting himself in God, Turn to thy rest, O my soul, for God hath dealt bountifully with thee: It was an usual thing for him to talk with himself, and he found so much good in this way, that he puts all upon it, Commune with your own hearts upon your beds, and be still; the understanding is to the heart, as the stomach to the body, all is fed by it: Set therefore upon our hearts with quickening thoughts: for as rubbing and chafing the hands with hot Oyls, is a means to recover them, when they are benumb'd; so the plying of the heart with stirring thoughts, and enforcing arguments, is a means to revive it: And amongst all thoughts, there are none more prevalent, then Of sins past, Of Heaven, Hell, Eternity, Love of Christ, these are strong Cordials to cheer up the Spirits.

2. To fall on the Duty; for if we be doing, he will work with us, in us, and for us. Is it thus (O my soul) that thy heart is stirred, rowzed, revived? then set to thy hands, idle beggars must be whipped, he that will not work, must not eat: Remember, we have a life in us, if we be in Christ; and as we have a life, so there is a never-failing presence of the Spirit, to attend that power which we have: If then we put forth ourselves to that we are able, and as far as our power extends, God will draw near to us. It is true, that which we want is out of our reach, we are not able to make crooked things to become straight, to lay those swelling Mountains of Corruption level, but yet we must set to the work: Joshua could not with the strength of Rams horns sounding, cast down the walls of Jericho, but yet he must set upon the work; when the Midianites fall, there must be The Sword of the Lord, and Gideon: The father holdeth an Apple to the child, the child cannot reach it, yet his short arm must be put forth, and then the father, whose arm is long enough, will reach it to him; we must be doing, and yet when all is done, our hearts must learn habitually to say, Not I, but Christ in me: Let us still interest Christ in all we do, as the efficient-final cause.

SECT. 7. Of the Saints delights in Duties.

MY yoke is easy, and my burden is light, saith Christ; and that which makes it so, is, The delights which the Saints have in God's service: I have delighted in the way of thy testimonies, saith David: I have? yes, and I will delight in thy statutes: I will? yes, and Thy testimonies are my delight: They are? yes, and My delight shall be in thy Commandments: They shall be? how long? even to perpetuity itself; I will delight continually in thy statutes. These are the strings David beats upon, and they make heavenly Music; Music even cheering him in the midst of his sorrows: Trouble and anguish are upon me, yet are thy Commandments my delight: and, Unless thy Law had been my delight, I should have perished in my affliction.

Now the reason why God's people find such delight in Duties, is, 1. Because in Duties they come to see the face of God in Christ: Hence Duties are called The face or presence of God; the Worship of the Jews was called, An appearing before God: David breathes out his desires in the same expression, When shall I come and appear before God? The Queen of Sheba counted it an high favor to stand before Solomon, What high favor then is this to stand before Jesus Christ, and to hear wisdom itself speak to our souls? 2. Because in Duties they have converses, and communion with God, who is the God of all Consolation; and with the Spirit of God, who is called the Comforter: Now as a man that walks amongst Perfumes, must needs smell of the Perfume; so they that converse with the God of all joy, must needs be filled with all joy: and therefore David calls God His exceeding joy. The Saints look upon Duties (the Word, Sacraments, Prayers, &c.) as Bridges to give them a passage to God, as Boats to carry them into the bosom of Christ, as means to bring them into more intimate communion with their heavenly Father, and therefore are they so much taken with them: When they go to the Word, they go as one goes to hear news of a friend; when they go to Pray, they go to talk with a friend; when they go to Read, they go to read a Letter from a friend; when they go to receive, they go to Sup with a friend: They look upon Duties and Ordinances, as those things whereby they have to do with God and Christ, and therefore are Duties so precious. Indeed, to them who have to do with nothing but Duty in Duty, but Prayer in Prayer, but Hearing in Hearing, to them Duties are dead, and dry, and spiritless things; but they that have to do with God and Christ in Duty, to them Duties are passing sweet and precious. This seems a Riddle to unregenerate men, they wonder what the Saints find in Duties, where the sweetness, what the comfort is, what secret golden Mines they find in these diggings, when themselves find nothing, but burthensom Stones, and Clay: Oh! the Saints meet with Christ in Duties, and therefore they cannot but find great treasure: David's soul was athirst, not for a Kingdom, but for God, for the living God, Psal. 42.2. It is the highest reward, the very wages which the Saints look for in Duties, to find God in them: Blessed is the man whom thou chooseth, and causeth to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy Courts: We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy Temple.

A good Caveat in these days, when so many do cry down Duties: What, My Brethren, Shall we look upon that as our burden, which is our delight? our bondage, which is our Privilege? What is the happiness of a glorified Saint, but that he is always under the line of love, ever in the contemplation of, and converses with God? And shall that be thought our burden here, which is our glory hereafter? Take heed of this; take heed you do not think it an hell, a pain, a vexation, to be in God-approaching, and Christ-meeting Duties. I know weariness may be upon the flesh, there are weaknesses, and distempers there, but chide them away, entertain them not: Number it among your choicest Privileges, Comforts, Delights, to converse with God in Christ: Consider if there be an Heaven, it is the very presence of this God in Christ. Hence they who meet with God in duty, usually find their hearts sweetly refreshed, as if Heaven were in them: For in thy presence there is fullness of joy, and at thy right hand there are pleasures evermore.

[Obj. 1] But if there be such delight in Duties, what is the reason that wicked men account it a wearisomeness, and burden, and snuff at it: Behold, what a weariness is it? and ye have snuffed at it, saith the Lord.

[Ans.] A wicked man cannot delight in God's service, because it is above his capacity: While he is at Duty, he is like a fish out of his Element; the Duty is heavenly and Spiritual, but he is worldly and natural, no wonder therefore he delights not in it. But more particularly, a wicked man delights not in Duties, —

1. Because of his ignorance of the worth and excellency of Duties, he cannot possibly delight in what he knows not: So much as we know, so much we desire and delight, and no more.
2. Because of his infidelity: Faith is the main organ of comfort, and therefore no wonder (as it was said of the Jews) if the word preached do not profit him, not being mixed with faith in him that heard it.
3. Because of the absence of the all-seeing and quickening Spirit: It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak to you are Spirit and life: As the Body is dead without the Spirit, so Duties without Christ's quickening Spirit, are dead and lifeless.

[Obj. 2] But if there be such delight in Duties, what is the reason that the Saints themselves do miss of their comforts in Duties

[Ans.] I answer, 1. There are none of God's people but they do sometimes or other find comfort, either in Duties, or from Duties. 2. If at any time they miss of comfort, it is because they do not meet with God, whom they came to converse withal: As when a man goes to meet with a friend, and meets him not, he comes away sadded in his Spirit; so when a child of God comes to some Duty, hoping to enjoy sweet communion with God in it, and then fails of his expectation, this must needs fill him full of sadness. It was an excellent speech of Bernard, I never go from God without God; happy Christian, that when he goes to converse with God in some Duty, can say, I never go from God without God; I never go to God, but I meet with God; and, I never go from God, but I carry God with me.

[Obj. 3] But if no comfort, no delight without God in our Duties, What then is my case, that have no sense, no feeling of God's presence in Duties? When I have done all I can, methinks I cannot find God, I cannot meet with Christ.

[Ans.] I answer, Hast thou indeed no sense of God's presence, and yet hast thou a sense of God's want? It is good then to observe the different effects of God's presence, or else thou mayest wrong God, as well as thyself; to say he was not with thee, when yet he was: As 1.

There are manifest and evident fruits of God's presence in Duties; as, Much liberty of Spirit, much Joy, much Peace, assurance of Faith. 2. There are more inward and reserved fruits of his presence; as, Sence of want, sorrow for want, desire of enjoyment, willingness unto further Duties, to find that which we want in some other: In the former, God is with us, and we know he is with us; in the latter, God is with us, and we know not so much: This was the case of the two Disciples going to Emmaus, Their eyes were holden, that they could not know Christ; yet afterwards when they did know him, they remembered, that they had sufficient evidence of his presence, even when they knew him not, Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and opened to us the Scriptures? Now whence was that fire, but from the Spirit of Christ conveyed in his Word?

[Obj. 4] But what is the reason that God's people do sometimes miss of God's comfortable presence in Duties?

[Ans.] I answer, They miss of God's comfortable presence, 1. Because (it may be) they bring no vessels at all to hold the Consolations of God; I mean, no hunger after God's presence in the Ordinance: or 2. Because they bring vessels so little, and so narrow-mouthed, that they will hold but very little water; I mean, they bring so little hunger after God, that God will not vouchsafe to satisfy it: or 3. Because they bring their ordinary hearts, their carnal and worldly hearts to heavenly and Spiritual Duties, hearts unsuitable to the Duties, hearts unsensible of the Duties: Thus a man finds no sweetness in his meat; the reason is not, Because his meat is unsavory, but Because his taste is distempered; the Ordinances are sometimes sweet, and would always be so, were the souls palate always in the same temper: or 4. Because there is some Achan unstoned, some sin unrepented of that eclipseth the light of God's countenance, some Spiritual obstructions; these, and such like are the causes, why the Saints sometimes miss of their comforts. — But the fault is never in the Duty, which is brim-full of rare and ravishing comfort; that as Bernard relates the story of himself, Sometimes when he went to his Prayers, he found himself dull, and heavy; but after he had struggled a little with his dullness, all on a sudden he was visited with the visitations of the Almighty: I should account myself happy (said he) if these visitations would always last; but Oh, it continues but a while! And Augustine relates this story of himself, that Upon a time, when he and his Mother Monica were discoursing together about the joys of Heaven, and the comforts of God's Spirit, they were so filled with joy, that Augustine useth these words, Lord, thou knowest in that day, how vilely we did esteem of the world, with all his delights. — The comforts of the world are not worthy to be named that day that we speak of these comforts: O the pure, the undefiled comforts and delights that are to be found in Duties, when God is found in them: Can a man who is cold, come to the fire and not be warmed? Can he that is in the dark, come into the open Sun and not be enlightened? God is the spring of Comfort, and therefore surely our hearts will be comforted, if we meet with God in our Duties.

SECT. 8. Of the essential Requisites in Duties.

BUT what are they we call Duties? or what are those essential Requisites (O my soul) in Duties? Many by Duties intend nothing but that which is external and sensible, as Coming to the Church, and receiving of Sacraments, &c.

I answer, These are like clothes upon a dead man, that cannot warm him, because there is no life within: The soul of all Duties is that which is internal, or essential; In which respect three ingredients are necessary, viz.

That they be

- From God.
- Through God.
- To God.

1. From God: It is of the very essence of a Duty, that it be commanded by God. Hence in one Chapter we read thirteen several times, I am the Lord; q. d. such and such Commands I enjoin you: Would you know the grounds? I am the Lord, a God of sovereign Power and Authority, and my Will it is that such Duties be done. Look to this (O my soul) in thy Duties, know the Commands, and do them, because they are commanded: If thou dost them, and yet knowest not that God commands them, this is no true obedience; or if thou knowest they are commanded, but yet dost them not because they are commanded, or in Conscience to his Command, neither is this obedience to God. In all Duties rightly performed, there must be a knowledge of, and an eye to the will of our God, Rom. 12.2. Eph. 5.17.

2. Through God (i.)

- Through the Spirit, who doth Spiritualize them.
- Through Christ, who presents them, and makes them acceptable to God.

1. Through the Spirit of God: Now the Spirit works on our Spirits, stirs up the regenerate part to the performance of our Duties; and therefore look how much there is of the Inner man, of the regenerate part, of the holy Spirit in Duty, so far it is sanctified, so far it is accepted, and no further. God is my witness (saith Paul) whom I serve with my Spirit in the Gospel of his Son: In every service we perform, our Spirit stirred up by God's Spirit, must needs have a hand in it, or it is but the body and carcass of a right service: The soul, will, and affection, must go together with our Duties (that I mean by our Spirit) or the vitals are wanting. Ex. gr. If a man come to confess his sins, and yet slights them inwardly in his heart; if a man pray for reconciliation with God, and yet have no longing, and sighing in his heart after it; if he earnestly ask grace, or the Spirit of Mortification, and yet his heart doth not inwardly seek it, Now he prays not in the Spirit, and therefore God will not accept it; For God is a Spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in Spirit and in Truth: In Spirit (i.) not only in the understanding and mind (Prayer is not a work of wit, or of memory) but also in will and affection: When all within us is opened, and explicate, and exposed to the view of the Lord; when we call in all our thoughts and affections, and recollect them together, as the lines in the Centre, or as the Sun-beams in a Burning-glass, That makes Prayer to be hot and fervent; whereas otherwise it is but a cold and dissipated thing, that hath no strength or efficacy in it.

[Quest.] If this spiritualness in Duties be so necessary, how is it that the Saints have so much of earth and flesh ordinarily in their Duties?

[Ans.] I answer, In every regenerate man there is both Flesh and Spirit; It may be the Flesh lies uppermost, and the Spirit lies in the bottom, so that a man, though a Saint, may hear carnally, receive carnally, pray carnally, that is, when the flesh hath gotten the upper hand, as in some fits it may, when the mind is filled with worldly sorrow, worldly rejoicing, and worldly desires; such Duties the Lord regards not, be the man never so holy: But if the regenerate part be acted and stirred up by God's Spirit, and the Flesh that always hinders, be removed by the same Spirit, then are the Saints able to do their Duties to God in Christ Jesus Spiritually.

2. Through Christ: For Christ perfects, perfumes, and presents our Duties to his heavenly Father; as Duties come from us, they savor of flesh, but the Angel of the Covenant mingleth much Incense with them, and so he offers them upon the golden Altar, which is before the Throne. Here is sweet comfort (O my soul) What though thy Duties are weak, and cold, and confused, full of distempers, and damps? yet through Christ they are fortified, and enlivened, with his pacifying perfection, and intercessory Spirit: Through Christ they are perfumed with the precious odors of his fresh-bleeding Merits, and blessed Mediation, and so they are made acceptable to God, that he may receive them, that he may not refuse and reject them.

Observe here a double Intercessor:

- One is the Spirit, that helps our infirmities.
- The other is Christ, that makes them acceptable to God.

3. To God: (i.) to set forth his Glory, and Free-grace; for as his Name is blasphemed when we walk in wickedness, so it is glorified in doing our Duties: This is the end of all our Duties, indeed of all our doings; Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God: One Duty sanctifying Christ and Free-grace in the heart, is more than a thousand. Yong Christians it may be do more works, but not as works of grace; the more Evangelical our works are, and the more to God (for that is the end of the Gospel, to honor Christ and Free-grace) the better they are: We are of the Circumcision, who rejoice in the Lord Jesus, worship God in the Spirit, and have no confidence in the flesh.

SECT. 9. Of the kinds of Duties in several divisions.

THESE Duties some have distributed according to their several objects, God, our Neighbor, and ourselves: 1. The Lord claims our Love, Fear, Honor, and Obedience. 2. Our Neighbor claims our Duty, Courtesie, Bounty: And for ourselves, we must 1. Instrust the Understanding: 2. Bridle the Will: 3. Moderate the Affections. Others in retribution to Christ, give us another scheme of such Duties, as they call mere Gospel-Duties. So it is our Duty, 1. To think and muse much on Christ, and upon his loves towards us. 2. To speak much of Christ, and to commend him to others: When the Spouse was asked, What her beloved was above others? she sets him forth in every part of him, and concludes with this, He is altogether lovely. 3. To be oft in the company of Christ, and to grow up thereby into a familiar acquaintance with him. Now Christ is with us here but two these ways, Either in his Ordinances, or Providences, by his holy Spirit: So that to be oft in Christ's company, is to be much in his Word, in Prayer, in Sacraments, in Christian communion, in Meditation, in examination of our hearts, in his Providences of mercies, Crosses and Trials. 4. To do much for Christ, and that willingly: This is love indeed, To keep his Commandments, and those are not grievous. 5. To suffer and endure any evil for Christ: What tell you me (saith Paul) of bonds and imprisonments? I am ready, not only to be bound, but to die for the sake of Christ at Jerusalem. My life is not dear to me, that I may finish my course with joy: For thy sake we are killed all the day long. No question these Heads will include all sorts of Duties: But the method I shall prosecute (wherein I desire to confound Duties, Ordinances, and Means, whereby a Christian walks on in the holy path) I have otherwise digested thus:

- The Duties of a Christian are either of
  - The first kind, as Watchfulness.
  - The second kind: And these have reference—
- Either
  - only to
    - Secret Ordinances, as
      - Self-examination.
      - Experiences.
      - Evidences.
      - Meditation.
      - Life of Faith.
    - Private Ordinances, either
      - In one Family, as Family-Duties.
      - In more Families joined, as Christian Society.
    - Public Ordinances, as
      - Hearing the Word.
      - Receiving the Sacraments.
  - Jointly to all three, and they are either
    - Ordinary, as
      - Praying.

- Reading the Word.
- Extraordinary, as
  - Fasting.
  - Feasting.

[Obj.] It may be objected, That in this Analysis there is not that express mention of Christ; and the reason why some vilify Duties, is because the very Name of Christ is not in them.

[Sol.] But I answer, If the Name be wanting, yet Christ is not. I have heard of many that have stood much in appearance for Jesus Christ, so that they would bow, and do homage to the very sound and syllables of his Name, and yet none more enemies unto Christ than they, being the very limbs of Antichrist: Many (saith Christ) will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name have done many wonderful works? (as if the name of Christ had been a Spell) And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me ye that work iniquity; and thereupon he concludes, that he only is a wise man, and builds upon the rock who hears Christ's sayings, and doth them. Hence learn (O my soul) that he that presseth to the practice of the word of Christ, he preacheth Christ, he sets up Christ, though he do not directly name Christ, or though his Text be not literally of Christ; even as a man may have no other subject of his Sermon but Christ, and yet betray Christ. Thus much of Duties in general.

CHAP. III.

SECT. 1. Of Duties in particular: And first, of the Nature of Watchfulness.

Watchfulness is the first and principal help to all exercises of Religion; it is the eye to see them all well done and used, and therefore we set it in the front of all Duties: We are to watch unto prayer, Eph. 6.18. and we are to watch unto hearing, Luke 8.18. and we are to watch unto fasting, Mat. 6.18. we are to watch to almsgiving, Mat. 6.1. and we are to watch in all things, 2 Tim. 4.5.

Now for our better direction in the exercise of this Duty, observe we the - Nature.

- Objects.
- Manner of it.

For the Nature of it: Watchfulness is a continual, careful observing of our ways, in all the passages and turnings of our life, that we still keep close to the written Word of God. Keep thy heart in all diligence: I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word.

SECT. 2. Of the objects of Watchfulness.

The object of our Watch is either

- Evil works, or sin.
- Good works, or Duties, or anything in its own being, good.

1. Watch we must over sin,

- More general
  - Original sin, or corrupt Nature.
  - Actual sin.
- More special, as sins of our
  - Calling.
  - Constitution.

2. Watch we must over anything (in its own being) good: And herein if we look for the adequate object, including everything that ought to be watched, it is either

- Hearts,
- Tongues,
- Actions,

which howsoever good in themselves, yet if we watch not, they will soon contract evil.

SECT. 3. Of the manner of Watchfulness over sin Original.

THat we may watch over sin Original, or that inward corruption we carry about us, observe we these Rules:

1. Let us take matter and motives to humble our souls under the sight and sense of this inherent pollution. And to that purpose, consider we the rueful complaints of the holiest Saints against it: O wretched man that I am (saith Paul) who shall deliver me from the body of this death? Behold, I was shapen in iniquity (said David) and in sin did my mother conceive me: Did not God in Christ accept of our complaining, striving, grieving, and hating this, how could we find any comfort?

2. Let us pray against it, that though it be in us, yet it may not hurt us, nor be imputed to us; That God would give us his Spirit to bridle our corruption, and especially that he would give us the Spirit of Sanctification, that he would cleanse us from this filth more and more, that he would season the fountain, and at last dry it up.

3. Let us strive after contrary holiness, and endeavor the reformation of our natures and lives: Put we off the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be we renewed in the Spirit of our mind.

4. Let us consider the Promises of Remission, and those Privileges which the Saints have in the blood of Christ; and let us actuate and exercise our Faith in respect of such Promises: I knew that thou wouldst deal treacherously (saith God) and that thou wast called a transgressor from the womb; yet for my Names sake I will defer mine anger, and for my praise I will refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off.

SECT. 4. Of the manner of Watchfulness over sins Actual.

THat we may watch over Actual sins, observe we these Directions: —

1. Avoid we all occasions of evil: Be afraid, not only of the fire and flame, but of the very smoke of sin; it is dangerous to approach near the Whirl-pit, or to play about the hole of the Asp, or the den of the Cockatrice; and therefore prayed David, Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; not my heart only from affecting it, but mine eyes also from beholding it: There is a shutting of the eyes from beholding evil, brought in amongst other Duties by the Prophet Isaiah, to which is affixed this promise, that such a one shall dwell on high, his place of defense shall be the munition of Rocks.

2. Resist we the temptations of sin: It may be (notwithstanding all our care) temptations will offer themselves, and urge us to evil, but then we must constantly resist, and this is praise worthy: If a man keep himself sober, when he cannot come to wine or strong drink, it is nothing; but for a man to be careful not to break the bounds of sobriety, when he shall be in place where wine is plenty, and no restraint of it, and where company will be urging him to take more then is meet, this is true temperance indeed: If a man live chastely when he wants his lewd company, it is nothing; but for a Joseph (sued and sought to by his Mistress, yea, urged and solicited day after day to condescend to her adulterous desires) to refuse then, and to choose rather loss of present liberty by not sinning, then to gain further preferment by consenting to sin, this is true chastity indeed. Away then with those idle apologies, I was urged to sin, I was provoked to lewdness, &c. Neither man nor Devil can compel you to sin, unless you will your own self: * The Devil may persuade, entice, suggest, and provoke, but he cannot enforce nor constrain; nor (unless your own hearts give consent) can he cause you to sin.

3. Confess we our sins, mourn we for sin, and especially labor we for hatred of sin: The fear of the Lord is to hate evil, Prov. 8.13. not only to forbear it, but (as the Apostle speaks) to abhor it, Rom. 12.9. as the meat that sometimes we have surfeited of, our stomach nourisheth and goeth against it; so should our hearts rise against sin: And to this purpose consider we 1. The foulness of sin; it is fouler then the foulest Fiend in hell. 2. The illness of sin; it is a greater ill then the damnation of a man's soul, or then the destruction of all the creatures in the world. 3. The infectiousness of sin; it is of that pestilential property, that it pollutes everything it comes near. 4. The perniciousness of sin; it deprives us of God's favor, of our part and portion of the blood of Christ, of the Providence of that blessed Trinity, of the guard of Angels, of the Communion of Saints, of heavens joys; and it brings upon us infinite sorrows, as blindness of mind, hardness of heart, deadness of Spirit, desperate thoughts, horror of Conscience, vexation of Spirit, and (without Repentance) all the terrors of Hell. 5. Christ's sufferings for sin; shall we not hate him that kills our Friend, Brother, Father? how much more sin, that put to death the Lord of life, who is indeed our dearest Friend, Brother, Father, Savior? Look on Christ crucified, and see if this will not make us hate sin.

4. Believe, and by Faith expect victory over our sin; yea, by that Faith in which we have confessed, mourned, prayed, let us rest persuaded, That such means shall not be used of us in vain: O lift we up the hand of Faith towards heaven, and lay hold on the promises of pardon, on the mercy of God in Christ Jesus.

SECT. 5. Of the manner of Watchfulness over special sins.

THat we may watch over our special sins, our Delilah sins, our darling-delights, observe we these Rules:

1. Endeavor we the mortifying of this sin: Some one sin there is in every soul of us that is most predominant. Now it is the main work of a Christian, as to fall out forever with all sin, so especially to improve all his Spiritual forces and aid from heaven, utterly to demolish, and to beat down to the ground this hold, this bosom-sin.

2. Lay we load of deepest groans, and strongest cries for mortifying grace against this dominiering sin; especially every Morning and Evening strive with God in our Prayers for a comfortable conquest over it, enforce and enlarge that passage with an extraordinary pang of fervency, cry we mightily to God for power and strength against this lust, that continually wars against the soul.

3. Bend we ourselves against the special acts, occasions, and opportunities of this sin; as suppose rash anger, the sin which a man sifteth, and pursueth to the extirpation of it; in this case, he should resolve with himself, not to speak harshly, nor to look fiercely, nor to use any churlish behavior, whether his Servant displease him with negligence, or his Friend offend him with unfaithfulness, or his enemy provoke him with ill language, or some malicious dealing.

4. As oft as we find any motion of this sin to stir, and show itself in us, it will be convenient, not only to with-hold our consent, but withal to exercise some act of contrary holiness: As suppose Desire of revenge be the sin, which stirreth up our blood, and boileth within us, we must not only forbear to avenge ourselves, but also bend ourselves to pray for him that hath offended us; and if he hunger, to feed him, if he thirst, to give him drink.

5. Settle we in ourselves a purpose of heart to forbear it for time to come: In undertaking of which purpose, it will be expedient to set ourselves some short space of time, in which we may force ourselves to the forbearance of it, as for a day, or a month, or the like; and when the prefixed time is come, we should then question ourselves, How well we have performed? or how, or wherein we have failed? and then begin a new purpose, and prescribe ourselves a like time, for shunning of the same sin; and so on from time to time, till we have gotten a full victory.

6. If in our daily or monthly review, we find that we have been defective in performing of what we had purposed, then with an holy revenge we should correct our former errors, beg pardon for our defects, and punish ourselves for such slothfulness, or willfulness, by abstinence from meat, ease, recreation; Keeping under our bodies, and bringing them into subjection, by mulct, or forfeiture of some portion to the poor, whereby we may feel smart: This holy revenge is commended by the Apostle, 2 Cor. 7.11. as a worthy fruit of serious Repentance.

7. Above all, without which all the rest are as nothing, Believe the Promises of pardon in the blood of Christ: It is Faith in the Promises which will be able to cleanse, and purge the heart from this sin; If the blood of Bulls and of Goats (saith the Apostle) and the ashes of an Heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your Consciences from dead works, to serve the living God? the sense is, When a man hath once applied the blood of Christ for his Justification, this effect will follow it, That there will accompany it a certain vigor, virtue, power, and strength, which will also purge his conscience from dead works; there will go a power of the Spirit together with this blood, that shall not only forbid him, and show him that he ought not to do such and such evil things, but it shall cleanse his conscience from those roots of dead works, those corrupt lusts, and sinful affections that are in him, and that dispose him to that evil: Now this power is gotten by applying the blood (i.) by applying the Promise of pardon and forgiveness by the blood of Jesus Christ: Let no man think by his own strength to prevail against any lust; it is not our endeavoring, praying, bending ourselves against the special acts and occasions, exercising some acts of contrary holiness, purposing to forbear it, punishing ourselves for it (if gone about by our own might, and power, and strength) will ever kill this sin; no, no, we must do all these at the feet of Christ, and draw virtue from Christ; we must Believe the Promises, get assurance of pardon, get assurance of God's love to us in Christ; we must labor to delight in God, to get communion with Christ, and then our hearts will grow to an application of the Commandment; and whereas before they resisted it, rebelled against it, they will then cleave to it, and love it, and delight in it, and receive an impression from it. This I take it is the meaning of that Text, Whereby are given to us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust; q.d. by believing the Promises we are made partakers of the godly nature, and we overcome our corruptions and lusts: Consonant to which, is that of the Apostle, Know ye not, that as many as are baptized into Christ, are baptized into his death? q.d. as many as are baptized into Christ, for reconciliation with God, must needs be baptized into his death; they must be dead to sin, as he was dead: We cannot be baptized into him for Reconciliation or Justification, but we must be baptized likewise for Mortification of the flesh, and for Resurrection to newness of life. To wind up all in a word, He that hath the strongest Faith, that believes in the greatest degree, the Promises of pardon and remission, he hath the holiest heart, the most mortified life: Sanctification and Mortification arise from that root of Justification. The blood of Christ hath not only a power to wash us from the guilt of sin, but also to cleanse us, and purge us from the power and stain of sin▪ And therefore I say, the best way to get a great degree of Sanctification, the best way to get a greater measure of the graces of the Spirit, the best way to mortify our sinful lusts, the best way to watch over our special sins, is to labor to grow in Faith, in the belief of those Promises of the Gospel of Christ; and this would be well observed by those that are a little legally biased, or carried to mortify sin only by Vows, Promises, shunning occasions, removing temptations, strictness and severity in Duties, fear of Hell and Judgments, scarce rising so high for their Mortification, as Christ. Now these in themselves are but empty, weak means of prevailing against sin, like the mighty Sails of a Ship, without wind and tide; no question but shunning occasions, strictness and severity in Duties, watchfulness, &c. dwell in their place and order, like Oars in a Boat (See Saltmarsh, Free-grace, page 68.) which though it be carried with the Tide, if well managed, yet they may help it to go the faster: Howsoever, it is Christ crucified which is the power of all in all; it is Christ lifted up, as Moses lifted up the Serpent, which strikes more soundness into the wounded beholder, then any other way; wherein some have toiled all their time for power over corruptions, and like Peter, have caught little or nothing, because Jesus Christ was not in the company.

SECT. 6. Of the manner of watchfulness over our Hearts.

THat we may watch over our hearts, observe we these directions:

1. Guard we the windows of our soul, the Senses: I made a Covenant with mine eyes (said Job) why then should I think upon a maid? Turn mine eyes from beholding vanities (said David) and quicken thou me in thy way. It is incredible, what a deal of pollution and ill the Devil conveys insensibly into the heart, through these floodgates of sin, and therefore we had need to watch over the Senses.
2. Go we down into our hearts, and consider well all our thoughts; these, if good, will bring forth good fruit; and if evil, they are the parents and begetters of all sins, the first plotters and contrivers of all Treasons and Rebellions of our life, the bellows and incendiaries of all inordinate affections, the Panders to all other lusts, that take thought to provide for the satisfying of them, the disturbers in all good Duties, that interrupt, and soil, and fly-blow all our Prayers, that they stink in the nostrils of God; and therefore consider and weigh well all our thoughts, for as our thoughts are, so be our affections, prayers, speeches, actions.
3. Let us make Conscience of our thoughts: By them especially do we sanctify, or sin against God; by them especially do we evidence ourselves, to be sincere-hearted Christians, or dissembling hypocrites; by them especially will the Lord judge us at the last day, when he will make manifest the counsels of our hearts; by them especially (if we will not make Conscience of them) will God lash us in Hell to all eternity, even by thoughts accusing; there shalt thou meditate terrors, and study God's wrath, together with thy own sins and miseries, forever and ever.
4. Resist and crush we every exorbitant thought which draws to sin, at the very first rising: Is the temptation strong? encounter it with this dreadful Dilemma, If I commit this sin, either I must repent, or not repent; if I repent, it will cost me more heart-break and spiritual smart, before I can purchase assurance of pardon and peace of Conscience, then the sensual pleasure can be worth; if I never repent, it will be the death and damnation of my soul.

5. Lodge we not so much as light thoughts, unprofitable or vain thoughts in our hearts; they will still be entering in, whilst we are in these houses of clay, yet lodge they must not. Hence the Apostle, Let not the Sun go down upon your wrath; q. d. if thoughts of anger come in, in the morning or day time, they must be turned out ere night; or if idle thoughts offer to come to bed to thee, let them not lodge with thee. I deny not but many good thoughts and motions may pass, as strangers through a bad man's heart, and multitudes of vain thoughts and motions may make a through-fare of a Believers heart, and disturb him in good Duties, by knockings, and interruptions, and breakings in upon his heart, but still they lodge not there, they are not there fostered and harbored.

6. Forget and stifle we all thoughts of sinful actions already passed: The mind is very apt to run over the passages and circumstances of the same sins, long since committed, with a new and fresh delight; this argues wickedness of heart, and such as when it is ordinary with the heart to do so, is not compatible with grace: What fruit had you of those things whereof ye are now ashamed? All that the Saints reap out of such fruits, is shame and sorrow, and many a sad sigh: When Ephraim remembered his sins, he was ashamed and repented; a truly sanctified soul will hate the appearance of his former sins, and will have his heart inflamed with a zeal and revenge against it. What, do you repeat to yourselves your old sins with delight? this provokes God exceedingly, you thereby stand to, and make good your former act; you show a delight to rake in those wounds you have given Christ already, and therefore in hell it will prove the greatest gall, to remember your old sins; every circumstance in every sin then, will be as a dagger in your hearts. O study not these thoughts, forget them, stifle them!

7. Entertain all good motions put into your heart by the blessed Spirit, howsoever occasioned; whether by the Ministry of the Word, mindefulness of Death, Christian admonition, reading some good Book, some special Cross, or extraordinary Mercy; feed, enlarge, and improve them to the utmost, so shall we preserve our hearts in a soft, comfortable temper, and heavenward, which is a singular happiness.

8. Endeavor we to preserve and keep up lively, holy, and Spiritual affections, and suffer them not to cool; or if we have grown remiss, endeavor to recover those affections again: Thoughts and affections are mutual causes of each other; Whilst I mused, the fire burned, said David: and again, How love I thy Law? It is my meditation day and night. First, his thoughts were the bellows that kindled and inflamed his affections: And secondly, his affections inflamed, made his thoughts to boil, and to meditate on God's Law day and night. Hence it is that men newly converted to God, having new and strong affections, can with more pleasure think of God then any else can.

9. Let us captivate and conform all the thoughts and imaginations of our heart, to the Rules and Sovereignty of grace; Bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ: If thy change in words, actions, and all outward carriages were Angelical, yet if thy thoughts be sinful and unsanctified, thou art a limb of Satan still: Purity in the inward parts, is the most sound evidence of our portion in the purity and power of Christ. O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved: How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? God seeth (saith the Psalmist) and understandeth our thoughts afar off: And hence it is that many humble souls, sensible of their secret sins, in the presence of God's pure eye, are more grieved (setting aside ill example and scandals) for the rebelliousness of their thoughts, than the exorbitancy of their actions, for of these the world sees the worst; but concerning the other, it cuts them to the heart, that they are not so well able to preserve their inward parts in purity, towards the all searching eye of God, as their words and actions in plausibleness towards man.

10. Get we our hearts possessed with deep, strong, and powerful apprehensions and impressions of God's Holiness, Majesty, Omnipresence, and Omniscience: If any thoughts be of power to settle, fix, and draw in the mind of man, they are thoughts of him. What is the reason that Saints and Angels in Heaven have not a vain thought to eternity, but that their eye is never off him? we find it by experience, a blessed means to avoid distractions in Prayers, to enlarge a man's thoughts in his preparations before, or at the beginning, if with a consideration of God's Attributes and Relations to us, he sets on the Duty.

11. Let us elevate, and often lift up our hearts towards heaven: Consider the blissful depths of God's boundless Mercies in Christ; Consider the glory, the everlastingness, the unutterable excellencies of that immortal shining Crown above, which after this life (and this life is but a bubble, a smoke, a shadow, a thought) shall be set on our heads by the hand of God; a very glimpse whereof is able to sweeten the bitterest griefs that can be, and to dispel those mists of fading vanities, which the world (heated by the fire of inordinate lusts) is wont to evaporate, and interpose betwixt the sight of men's souls, and the bliss of heaven.

12. Let us spend some thoughts, yea many thoughts, about the saving excellencies of Jesus Christ: Consider the wonder of our Redemption, the most admirable, and most astonishing plot of the blessed Trinity, sitting in Council about the saving of our souls; a Mystery which the Angels stoop down to pry into, an Orient Pearl, that will out-shine all the sparkling Jewels of the whole Creation; Consider the Love-letters of Christ in his glorious Gospel; the Love-tokens he hath sent to our dear souls: And ah! what flames of divine affection? what raptures of zeal? what ravishments of delights? what brinish sorrows, and great indignation against sin? what ecstasies of obedience can be enough for our blessed Lord, and dearest Redeemer?

SECT. 7. Of the manner of watchfulness over our Tongues.

THat we may watch over the tongue, two things must be heeded:

- 1. That it be not unseasonably idle.
- 2. That it be not sinfully exercised.

1. That it be not unseasonably idle; and herein observe those generally, and much neglected Duties of

- Christian Reproof.
- Heavenly Discourse.

1. For Christian Reproof, observe these Directions: —

1. If a Brother be overtaken with a fault, or some less offense, admonish him in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.

2. If he offend more grievously, then reprove him freely, and suffer not sin to rest upon his soul.

[Obj.] But in this case, when, or how must we reprove?

[Sol.] This case is clothed with such variety of circumstances, and constancy of alterations, that we cannot give any particular directions; only the Christian that is perplexed what to do, let him consult with these bosom-Counselors:

1. With his Spiritual wisdom; it is that must suggest to him, when, and how to reprove, whether presently upon it, or sometimes afterwards; whether directly and downright, or indirectly and by intimation; whether personally, or in the general; whether in a fair and milder manner, or with a more bold and resolute spirit; whether only by discountenance, or by discourse, &c.

2. With his heart: A reproof must not spring from any imperious humor, of censuring, and meddling with his brethren; from any secret ambitious desire, to purchase an opinion and reputation of holiness to himself, or from any other by-end, but from an heart truly humbled with sight and sense of its own infirmities, graciously resolved into compassion, and commiseration of the offender, and lifted up in a secret supplication for the success of the Reproof, and salvation of the party, all at once to God's Throne of Grace.

2. For Spiritual and Heavenly discourse, observe these Directions: —

1. Apprehend all opportunities and occurrences which may minister matter of digression from worldly talk, into Divine discourse. It is pity that Professors should ever meet, without some talk of their meeting in heaven, or of the blessed ways and means that lead thereunto; and therefore by some wise transcision, turn thou the current of the discourse towards some heavenly good: It was the practice of our Savior, upon mention of bread, he pressed upon his Disciples a disuasion from the Leaven of the Pharisees: And upon occasion of Drink being denied him by the Samaritan woman, he (forgetting his weariness, hunger and thirst) labors to allure her to the well-head of everlasting happiness.

2. Have ever in a readiness some common heads of more stirring and quickening motives to mind heavenly things; as the cursed condition of our natural state, the dear purchase of Christ to Redeem our souls, the incomparable sweetness of Christian ways, the vanity and vexation of earthly things, the uncertainty and misery of this short life, the everlastingness of our state in another world, the terrors of death, the dreadfulness of that great and last day drawing on now apace, the horrors of damned souls, &c. Mention of these things many times may strike full cold to the heart of the most sensual Belshazzar, and drive him into his dumps; and by God's blessing may sometimes prepare the hardest hearts, for some thoughts of remorse, and more heavenly impressions.

3. Get we into our hearts an habit of more heavenly-mindedness, by much exercise, and intercourse, and acquaintance with God, by often contemplation, and forecast of the sweetness, glory, and eternity of those Mansions above, by reflectings on time past, how long thy soul was detained in the state of darkness, what bitterness and terrors it passed through in the pangs of its new birth, what relapses and desertions it hath been incident to, ever since that time to this; and being thus busied at home in our own hearts, we shall find ourselves much more pregnant and plentiful in holy talk when we come abroad: Men for the most part speak most, and most willingly of those things they mind most; such provisions within, will make the tongue so ready, that it cannot be unseasonably idle.

2. Watch we must over the tongue, that it be not sinfully exercised: And herein observe these Directions: —

1. Be dumb to all unsavory communication; as, Lying, Swearing, Cursing, &c. O how do these sins wound the heart of Christ, and crucify again the Lord of glory?

2. Be silent from Slandering, Backbiting, False accusing, Censuring: A true heart is ever most angry and displeased with, most Eagle-eyed, and watchful over, most strict and severe against its own sins; which homebred employment haply hinders, and moderates a man from too much meddling abroad.

3. Give not that which is holy unto dogs, neither cast your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you: By Dogs are meant obstinate enemies, that maliciously revile the Ministers of the Word, and the Messengers thereof: By Swine are meant those sottish, scurrile wretches, who scornfully and contemptuously trample underfoot all holy Instructions, Reproofs, Admonitions, tendered unto them by any Christian out of the word of truth. Now if accidentally such a son of Belial, or scoffing Ishmael, be in our company, we are commanded by Christ to say nothing, at least of the consolations of Christ, of the special promises of Christ, of the gentle entreaties of the Gospel of Christ: Consider this, and tremble, all ye that are scornful, and furious opposites to the purity and power of the Word; it is the Lord's will that you should run furiously towards the pit of hell, and that nobody should stay you; not a man must call and cry unto you, to tell you of such things as are peculiar to the Saints, in way of application to you: But he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; let him drink, be drunk, despair, die, and be damned: All this while not a word of comfort belongs to you.

SECT. 8. Of the manner of Watchfulness over our actions.

Our actions are either

- Natural,
- Civil,

- Religious,

In all which observe these Directions:

1. Concerning Natural actions, as Eating, Drinking, Sleeping, Visitations, Recreations, &c. no constant Rule can be prescribed, because it is much diversified by health, sickness, age, constitution; and everyone hath either learned by his own experience, what seasons, and proportions of such natural helps are fittest for his temperament, or he is most unworthy of that precious thing (an Understanding soul) which he bears in his bosom; only let me inform Christians, that they may sin in any of these actions, and therefore let them beware and watch over themselves in the use and enjoyment of these things; which howsoever lawful in their own nature, yet by our corruption are capable of inordinateness and excess. Some are of opinion, That Christians are in more danger of being Spiritually undone, by a sly insinuation and insnarement of licentiousness and immoderation in such lawful things, then by the gross assaults of foul sins and temptations; their hearts may rise against any work of darkness, as Adultery, Murder, Swearing, Prophaning the Lord's day, Speculative wantonness, &c. which yet may too often be insensibly seized upon, by an excessive sinful delight, in things un sinful in themselves; and therefore we had need to watch over our Natural actions.

2. Concerning Civil actions, as Bargains, Contracts, Covenants, Dealings, Negotiations, &c. observe these Directions:

1. Think we seriously and solemnly of that Principle, Do as thou wouldst be done by: In a fellow-feeling real conceit, put thyself into the place, and impartially put on the person of the party with whom thou art to deal, and then returning to thyself, deal out and proportion unto him that measure in every particular, which thou wouldst be willing to receive at another's hand, if thou werit in his case: Whatsoever (saith our Savior) ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the Law and the Prophets.

2. Abhor with an infinite disdain, to get anything by any wicked means, wrong doing, or unconscionable dealing; we may assure ourselves in such cases, That besides the secret grumbings of our self-accusing Consciences, the angry eye of God sees secretly our doings, and will shortly, and most certainly revenge.

3. Let our desire and delight never fasten itself immoderately upon any earthly thing, though never so excellent: Exorbitancy and error this way, brings many times with it either a loss of the thing so doted on, or it may be a cross, or howsoever a curse. O consider we the vanity of these earthly things! Consider we the glories above! Methinks this one preservative would be powerful enough to keep the heart of every Christian from doting upon the world, or suffering it to be possessed thereof, it is this, Every Christian by a fruitful Faith, may be assured of a Crown of life, either by assurance of adherence, or evidence, or both: Now if that once a day he should take a serious survey of the glory, everlastingness, and unutterable excellencies of that immortal Crown, which our dear Redeemer holds for him in his hand, ready to set upon his head, when he shall be dissolved from this vale of tears;

Methinks it were able so to dull the edge, and dissolve the drossiness of all earthly desires, that they should never be able to heat or harden his heart anymore.

3. Concerning Religious actions, as Meditating, Hearing, Reading, Fasting, Praying, Almsgiving, &c. observe these Directions:

- 1. In general.
- 2. In special.

1. In general, observe, That we draw and derive from Christ by the attractive force of Faith, Special abilities, 1. To perform all Duties. 2. To exercise all Graces. 3. To resist and overcome all Temptations and Corruptions which shall be befall us: To this purpose are those Promises of Grace and Strength, Isa. 44.3. Ezek. 36.27. Zech. 10.12. Joh. 1.16. And these are Securities given us from God, that we shall receive grace through Duties, which are the Conduit-pipes or instruments of conveying the same into the soul from Christ. This is to do all in the strength of Christ, and to take forth a great deal of Christ into the soul, so that not I, but Christ may live in me.

2. In special, observe these Directions:

1. That before the doing of Duties, we remove all lets and impediments which may hinder, and improve all occasions which may forward us thereunto.

2. That in doing of them, we behave ourselves well and wisely, performing them rightly and religiously.

3. After all is done, that we be careful all be not lost through our own vileness, and viciousness, privy pride, or secret hypocrisy.

For instance, Would we watch unto Prayer, as the Apostle enjoins us?

1. Then, before we fall on our knees, let us shake off three impoysoning and heavy hindrances, which otherwise will clog and clip the wings of our Prayers, that they will never be able to ascend up into heaven; as, Sin, Anger, and Distrust: and let us possess ourselves of three excellent helps and inflaming furtherances; the first is a right apprehension of God's Dreadfulness, Purity, Power, &c. The second is, a true sense of our own Vileness, Abominableness, Nothingness, &c. The third is, an hearty survey of the Infiniteness, and unexpressibleness of God's Bounty, Blessings, and compassionate forbearance towards us.

2. After we are down on our knees, first repel with an undaunted Spirit, Satan's Blasphemous injections: Secondly, watch over the world with care and timely opposition, that if it be possible) not an earthly thought may creep into our heart all the while: Thirdly, strive to hold our hearts in heat, as well in Confession as Deprecation, in Deprecation as Petition; as well for purity of heart, as for pardon of sin throughout: Prayer is the creature of the holy Ghost, every part whereof we should heartily wish, and earnestly wrestle, That he would proportionally animate and enliven, even as the soul doth the body.

3. After we are risen off our knees, first, take heed of resting in the Duty, take heed of privy pride, and secret hypocrisy, take heed of returning with the dog to his vomit: Secondly, pursue and press after the things prayed for, by a timely apprehension, fruitful exercise, and utmost improvement of all occasions, and heavenly offers, which may any ways concur to the compassing of them: But of this I shall speak more largely, when I come to the Duty of Prayer. Thus much of Watchfulness.

CHAP. IV.

SECT. 1. Of the Nature of Self-Examination.

WE have done with Watchfulness, the eye that oversees and directs all other Duties: Now to the Duties themselves; wherein we shall follow this method: 1. To consider them as in reference to private persons: 2. As in reference to Families: 3. As in reference to public Assemblies. The Philosopher in his method of Practical Philosophy, first handles Ethics, in reference to particular persons; and then he proceeds to his Economics, in reference to Families; and lastly, to his Politicks, in reference to Cities and Countries. Of many particulars arise a Family; of many Families is constituted a City: The same order shall we follow in these Divine Arts, of our Ethics, Economics, and Politicks. And we shall first handle Duties in reference to particular persons; of which sort are these:

- 1. Self-Examination.
- 2. Experiences.
- 3. Evidences.
- 4. Meditation.
- 5. Life of Faith.

The first Duty is Self-Examination: And for our better direction in the exercise of this Duty, observe we

- 1. Nature.
- 2. The Objects.
- 3. The Manner.
- 4. The Time of it.

For the Nature of it, Self-Examination is a kind of judiciary proceeding, in which a man keepeth private Sessions at home, passing a Sentence on his Thoughts, Words, and Actions.

Or, for more distinct knowledge, two sorts of actions are implied in this Duty of Examination, some

- Essential.

- Accidental.

1. Of the former sort, or of Essentials, are these three,

- Discussion.
- Application.
- Censure.

1. Discussion is a sifting of our life and dealings, by which we pull things out of the heap, where before they lay confused, and unseen, and by which we set every fact of ours in open view, that it may be scanned, and seen by itself what it is.

2. Application is a laying of these acts, thus searched and found out, to the Rule of God's Law, which is the Touchstone of all our doings, and according to which God will judge us at the last day.

3. Censure is the judgment that our Minds and Consciences give upon our Thoughts, Words and Deeds, according to the Rule of the Law. These three laid together, make up the nature of this work of Examination: So that we may not unfitly describe it out of its own Principles, thus: —

Self-Examination is, A Discussion of a man's life, that his Thoughts, Words and Deeds may be seen, and censured according to the Rule of God's Law.

2. Of the latter sort (or of Accidentals) are these two; viz.

- The one going before Examination.
- The other following after Examination.

1. That which goes before, is a purpose to better a man's Spiritual estate, by

- Correcting what is amiss.
- Confirming what is right.

2. That which follows after it, is a practice of such Rules as may back our Examination, and make it more effectual to us: I shall mention only these three Rules:

1. That after we have examined, we then compare our present, with our former estate, and consider whether we have increased or decayed in grace.

2. That if we have profited in grace, we then consider by what means we have profited, that so we may make more constant use of such means; or if we have decayed in grace, we then observe by what temptations we were overcome, that so our former errors may make us more wary, and more resolute against them for the future.

3. That as we meet with any occasions of moment, concerning which we had a purpose to better our Spiritual estate, we then recall home our thoughts, and make use of our former resolutions, and practice what we did purpose. — Out of all these laid together, we may more fully describe it thus:

Self-Examination is a discussion of a man's life, for the finding out the true estate of a man's soul towards God, accompanied with a purpose and practice of whatsoever upon trial shall appear requisite for the salvation and good of a man's soul.

SECT. 2. Of the objects of Self-Examination.

The object of our Examination, is either

- Evil works, or Sin.
- Good works, or Duties.

1. We must examine our sin in

- General.
- Special.

1. In General, whether of Omission or Commission: For as in the last Judgment, our Lord will not only give Sentence against Murthers, and Oppressions, but against Uncharitableness, and Unmercifulness, in not feeding the hungry, in not lodging the stranger, in not clothing the naked, in not visiting the sick: So when we judge ourselves, we must censure not only our Robbing the poor, but our not Relieving the poor; not only our Commissions of evil, but our Omissions of good.

2. In Special, whether of our Calling or Nature: These sins may breed special danger, because we are ready to drop into them of our own dispositions; and therefore in the daily care of our souls, we had need to examine ourselves concerning these sins.

2. As we must examine our evil works, so our good works.

1. Because we are many times deceived with shows, thinking that good which is evil: Thus Paul thought he shown much zeal, when he persecuted the Churches of Christ; and Mica thought he highly merited God's favor, when he kept a Priest for Idolatrous service.

2. Because in the very works which are truly good, we do many times intermingle corruptions of our own; sometimes evil ends, and sometimes evil thoughts, and sometimes we perform them in an evil manner; but always in our best devotions there are many imperfections and failings. Indeed this Examination is a Duty necessary to all Duties: If we believe, we must do it with the heart, Rom. 10.10. If we sing Psalms, we must do it with the Spirit, 1 Cor. 14.15. If we come to the Lord's Supper, first Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat, 1 Cor. 11.28. If we pray, we must therein examine: And hence (as some observe) the same Hebrew word signifies to pray, and to judge a man's self.

But because Duties are of several sorts,

- inward
- outward

of

- Heart.
- Tongue.
- Action.

In examining these three, we shall inclusively examine all sorts of Duties that are in reference to them.

SECT. 3. Of the manner of examining our sins in general.

THat we may examine our sins of all sorts, observe these Rules:

1. Procure we a Catalogue of our sins, both before, and since our conversion; and to that purpose, go we through the Commandments one by one, and in each of them consider what sins are condemned, and what Duties are enjoined: And hereupon question with our own hearts, Whether have I committed this or that sin? 2. Whether have I neglected this or that Duty? and as the heart answers, be ready to note down those sins whereof we stand guilty.

2. The sins thus found out, make we a solemn Confession to God, with deep Humiliation; let them be dolorous Confessions, with grief and sorrow for sin, and from a sight and sense of it: Thus Ephraim did, and God was feign to acknowledge it, I have surely heard Ephraim bemoan himself: O the Lord loves to hear such bemoaning Ephraim's, and such bemoaning Confessions.

3. The sins thus confessed and bewailed, let us judge and condemn ourselves: This is that Duty instanced in by the Apostle, If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. There is a Tribunal that we should everyone erect within us, where Conscience is the Accuser, Reason the Judge, Fear the Goaler, Sorrow the Executioner.

4. After we have thus judged ourselves, let us then appeal to God's Throne of Grace; let us desire of God salvation in the Lord Jesus Christ; let us cast all our confidence on him; who never fails them that put their trust in him, and in his precious Merits.

SECT. 4. Of the manner of examining our special sins.

THat we may examine our special sins, our Delilah sins, observe we these Rules:

1. Endeavor we to find out this sin; and in our scrutiny, our examination, we may discover it by these marks:

1. That it is the Delilah, which thy own Conscience and the finger of God in the Ministry many times meets with, and chiefly checks thee for.

2. That which thou art lothest to leave, hast least power to resist, and which most hinders the resignation and submission of thy soul and body to the Word and Will of God.

3. That which God often corrects in thee, even in the interpretation and guilty acknowledgement of thyself-accusing heart; and if ever the sword of the Spirit shall cleave it from thy bosom (which is infinitely to be desired) it will cost the bitterest tears, and deepest groans.

4. Thoughts, Plots, and Projects about it (a thousand to one) ordinarily seize upon thy heart at the very first waking, if they have not broken thy sleep, and troubled thee in thy dreams.

2. The sin once found out, do we pursue it, and make we a solemn Confession to God of it; mourn we under it, and desire we help from God for his mortifying Grace.

3. Settle we in ourselves a purpose of heart, to forbear it for time to come: In undertaking of which purpose, it will be expedient to set ourselves some short space of time, as for a day or a month, &c. and when the prefixed time is come, we should then question ourselves, How well we have performed? or how, or wherein we have failed? and then begin a new purpose.

4. Be we ever jealous of ourselves, and of our infirmity and proneness to this sin. Now we have two grounds of this jealousy:

- 1. Lest we be deceived about it.
- 2. Lest we be overtaken with it.

1. We may be deceived, in supposing that we are utterly divorced, and quite delivered from this bosom-sin, when it is nothing so; as thus:—

1. We may change only in the outward form, and not in truth: For instance, whereas the same sin of Covetousness doth utter and express itself by Usury, Symony, Sacrilege, Bribery, Grinding the faces of the poor, Detaining ill-gotten goods, without restitution; we may perhaps insensibly glide out of one gulf of griping cruelty into another, or it may be from one of these more notorious, to some other less observed, and less odious in the world, and yet still abide in the chambers of Death, and under the tyranny of this reigning sin.

2. We may surcease, and refrain from the outward gross acts of such hateful villainies, and yet our inwards be still defiled with insatiable, sensual hankerings after them: For instance, Whereas the foul sin of Uncleaness doth actuate itself by Fornication, Adultery, Self-pollution, immoderate abuse of the Marriage-bed, Speculative wantonness, we may perhaps forbear the external acts of uncleaness, and yet lie and languish in the delightful revolvings of them in our mind, in adulteries of thought.

3. We may change the kind of our bosom-sin, in respect of the matter, form, object, every way; and yet upon the matter itself, it is but the exchange of one foul fiend for another: For instance, Wantonness may be our sweet sin in youth, and Worldliness in old age; Hypocrisy may reign at one time, Apostasy at another; Furious Zeal for one while, Profane Irreligiousness for another.

4. We may for a time pull our necks out of this strong yoke of Satan (out of a melancholic pang of slavish terror, serious fore-thought of death, lying everlastingly in Hell) but because it is not the work of the word, humbling us soundly under God's mighty hand, planting Faith, and infusing mortifying power, anon will this unclean Spirit return, and rule in us again far more imperiously then before.— I know it is not impossible, but that a man after his conversion, by the sudden surprisal of some violent temptation, and cunning train of Satan, may be hailed back to commit his sweet sin again (though it be an heavy case, and to be lamented, if it were possible, with tears of blood) yet he never doth, nor never can return to wallow in it again, or to allow it: Here is the difference, The temporary man, after his formal enforced forbearance, engulphs himself again with more greediness into the sensuality and pleasures of his bosom-sin, he lies in it, and delights in it, and hardens himself more obstinately in it: but the sound convert after a relapse, his heart bleeds afresh with extraordinary bitterness, and he cries more mightily to God, for the return of his pleased countenance, and he prays, and fortifies the breach with stronger resolution, and more invincible watchfulness against future assaults; observe then, if our change be but formal, outward, mistaken, temporary, we are utterly deceived, and therefore we had need to be jealous of ourselves.

2. We may be overtaken with this sin, before we be aware; our nature is very apt to take fire, our corrupt heart is like Tinder or Gunpowder: This sin is called Pecatum in deliciis, our darling pleasure, our minion delight; it is ever ready at every turn to allure us, tempt us, persuade us; and the soul by a secret sensual inclination is apt to follow it, to feed upon it, with much affectionate sweetness: It may be we have sometimes given it a death's wound, by the power of his might, who is our all in all, and yet as it is said of the first Beast, this deadly wound is ready to be healed again; it is an Hydra with many heads, and if we be not still hacking and hewing, it will revive and recollect strength, and at last rage more then before; and therefore what need have we to this holy jealousy?

5. Above all, without which all the rest are nothing, believe we the Promises of Pardon, and of Sanctification: The Promises of the first sort, I spoke to in our Watchfulness over this sin, and therefore now I shall speak of the latter. The Lord hath promised to deliver us from all our enemies, that we may serve him in righteousness and holiness all the days of our life; The Lord hath promised to write his Law in our hearts, and that can never be, except he obliterate all the old-writing: Now then believe these Promises, and press the Lord with them, or we shall never be able to outwrestle our lusts; what though we find our sweet sins, confess them, resolve against them, be jealous over them? unless we go to God and Christ in the Promises for strength, we shall lie down in sorrow: Could we of ourselves subdue our Corruptions, God would not take this upon him, to give us new hearts, and new Spirits, to sanctify us, to make us new creatures, to crucify the flesh, to weaken the dominion of sin: Alas, he knows our weakness, and he knows all is in his own power; and therefore if we would mortify these lusts, we must go to him, and beseech him to do it. When a man is once in Christ, he lives by a Principle without himself: I live by the faith of the Son of God (said Paul) who loved me, and gave himself for me: If we ask, Why will the Lord have our strength out of ourselves? why may not a man have sufficient habitual strength in himself, by which he may be able to outwrestle lusts, and overcome temptations? The reason is, Because no flesh shall rejoice in itself, and therefore Christ is made Sanctification unto us: O let us believe these Promises, and have continual dependence on the Lord Jesus Christ.

SECT. 5. Of the manner of examining our hearts.

THat we may rightly examine our hearts, observe we these Rules:

1. Use we retiredness when we fall on this work: To this purpose, saith the Psalmist, Commune with your own hearts on your beds, and be still: When we get alone purposely to study our hearts, our hearts will then come to us, they will be more apt to discourse with us privately, then in a crowd; and therefore set we some time apart out of our public or particular occasions to deal with our hearts, as David, who after the public business was done, turned home to visit, and to bless his own house.

2. Examine what thoughts are within, and which way runs the stream of our thoughts: The heart is an house of common resort, into which multitudes of thoughts, like so many guests, enter, and have free and open access; only if it be sanctified, it ordinarily distils holy, sweet, and useful Meditations out of all objects; as the Bee sucks honey out of every flower, and a good stomach sucks sweet and wholesome nourishment out of what it takes to itself: So doth a holy heart (so far as sanctified) convert and digest all into Spiritual and useful thoughts: But on the contrary, if it be wicked, then a world of vain, light, wanton, profane, and dissolute thoughts lodge there, and defile those rooms they lodge in; which made the Lord say to Jerusalem, O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved: How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?

3. If upon examination we find a loathness to entertain holy thoughts, and unsteadiness in them, a misplacing of them (which disorder is a vanity and sin, be the thought materially never so good) or if we find in us many times a taking thought to fulfil the lusts of the flesh, a representing or acting over sin in our thoughts (O how much of that precious sand of our thoughts run out this way) then let us humble ourselves for them; and thus Agur teacheth, If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast thought evil, lay thine hand upon thy mouth; (i.) be humbled, be ashamed of these thoughts.

4. After humiliation, we must proceed to Judgment: And to that end consider, what will be the subject of that great Inquest at the last day? The Apostle answers, The counsels of the heart: And who will be the Executioner? even Thoughts accusing: O then let us prevent this doom, and this execution, by our own Judgment and Self-condemnation; let us sentence our hearts, and whip out our evil thoughts, and give them their pass.

5. Let us watch over, and observe our hearts ever after: Thoughts will be crowding in, when we have done all we can, yet let them know that they past not unseen; where strict watch and ward is kept, where Magistrates, and Marshals, and Constables are diligent to examine vagrant persons, you shall have few of them there: The reason that such swarms of vagrant thoughts make their Rendezvouz, and pass in our hearts, is, Because there is no strict watch kept, we observe not our hearts with all diligence.

6. Set our thoughts in order every morning, strengthen and perfume our Spirits with some gracious Meditations on God's Holiness, Majesty, Omnipresence, Omniscience: My soul waiteth for the Lord (said David) more then they that watch for the morning; observe it, if you please, when we first open our eyes, there stand many suitors attending on us to speak with our thoughts, even as Clients at Lawyers doors; but speak we first with our God, and he will say something to our hearts, and settle them for all the day after.

7. Now and then propose we to our hearts these two questions: 1. Heart, how dost thou? a few words, but a very serious question: you know, this is the first question, and the first salute that we use to one another, How do you Sir? I would to God we would sometimes thus speak to our hearts, Heart, how dost thou? how is it with thee for thy Spiritual estate? 2. Heart, what wilt thou do? or, Heart, what dost thou think will become of thee and me? as that dying Roman once said, Animula; vagula, blandula, &c. Poor, wretched, miserable soul, whither art thou and I agoing, and what wilt become of thee, when thou and I shall part? This very thing doth Moses propose to Israel, though in other terms, O that they would consider their latter ends! And O that we would propose this question constantly to our hearts to consider and debate upon! Commune with your own hearts, said David; q.d. debate the matter betwixt you and your own hearts to the very utmost: Let your hearts be so put to it in communing with them, as that they may speak their very bottom. Commune,] or hold a serious communication, and clear intelligence and acquaintance with your own hearts: It was the Confession of a Divine, sensible of his neglect in this kind, I have lived (saith he) forty years, and somewhat more, and carried my heart in my bosom all this while, and yet my heart and I are as great strangers, and as utterly unacquainted, as if we had never come near one another: — Nay, I know not my heart, I have forgotten my heart; Ah my bowels, my bowels! that I could be grieved at the very heart, that my poor heart and I have been so unacquainted! We are fallen into an Athenian age, spending our time in nothing more then in telling or hearing News: How go things here? How there? How in one place? How in another? But who is there that is inquisitive, How are things with my poor heart? Weigh but in the Ballance of a serious Consideration, what time we have spent in this Duty, and what time otherwise? and for many scores and hundreds of hours or days that we owe to our hearts in this Duty, Can we write Fifty? or where there should have been fifty vessels full of this Duty, can we find Twenty or Ten? O the days, months, years we bestow upon sin, vanity, the affairs of this world, whiles we afford not a minute in converse with our own hearts, concerning their case.

SECT. 6. Of the manner of examining our Tongues.

THat we may rightly examine our Tongues, observe we these Rules:

1. Search we into our dispositions, whether we are men of few words, or given to much speaking? The tongue may offend both ways, but especially if we are wordy.
2. Peruse with a broken heart and bleeding affections, the many kinds of those sins of the tongue, whereof (no doubt, at one time or other) we have been deeply guilty. Some number them in thirty particulars; as, Blasphemy, Murmuring Defense of sin, Swearing, Forswearing, Lying, Equivocating, Slandering, Flattering, Cursing, Railing, Brawling, Scoffing, Giving ill counsel, Sowing seeds of Discord amongst Neighbors, Double-tonguedness, Boasting, Discovering of secrets, Hasty or indiscreet, Threatning, Rash Promises and Vows, Idle words, Loquacity, or Immoderate talkativeness, Filthy talking, Scurrility, or foolish Jestings, Tale-telling, Raising of rumors, Sinful silence, Rash censuring, Malicious informing, Whispering.

3. Consider we the last Judgment, when men shall give account for every idle word; for by our words we must be justified, and by our words we must be condemned. Will it not be a fearful Bill, wherein must be written every word that we spoke all our life long? O let us tremble to think of it, and judge and condemn ourselves, and seal up our lips with amazement, as if we were struck dumb.

4. Let us ever after set a watch at the door of our lips: I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue; I will keep my mouth with a bridle. It is storied, That when this verse was read, or Lectured upon to a religious person, he cried out, Stay there, and I will hear the rest when I have learned that verse: A long time after being demanded, Why he returnrd not to his old Master, he answered, that As yet he was not perfect in his first lesson: And hence the Apostle could say, If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. It is an hard work to bridle the tongue, and therefore we had need to watch over it.

5. Pray we the Lord for the guidance of his Spirit in right governing of our tongue; The preparation of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord; and therefore prayed David, Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips: O the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity, as the fire flies about, so the tongue is said to have wings; as the fire assimilates and turns everything into its own nature, so the tongue assimilates the hearts of men to whom it speaks; we had need therefore to pray, that God will order this fire in our mouths, lest we kindle such a fire in the breasts of others, as we shall never live to quench again, and so kindle the fire of God's wrath, which shall smoke to our destruction.

SECT. 7. Of the manner of examining our Actions.

THat we may rightly examine our actions (I mean such actions as are matters and concernments of the soul, whether the work of saving grace, or the individual companions of this saving work, as Duties and Graces) observe we these Rules:

1. For the work of saving grace or Conversion, examine—

1. Whether ever our souls were wounded by a clear discovery and wide opening of our many ulcerous secret corruptions? Whether ever they were affected and pressed with a through sense and feeling of the fierce wrath of God, ready to break out into unquenchable flames of vengeance against us?

2. Whether after these bruising and breakings, our souls ever cast their eyes upon that infinite sea of God's mercy, gloriously streaming through the bleeding wounds of Jesus Christ upon every truly broken, contrite and wounded heart? Whether ever they settled and fastened their sight steadfastly upon their blessed Redeemer, as he was hanging on the Cross, struggling with his Fathers wrath for our sins, and crying out at last, It is finished?

3. Whether after this sight, and consideration of the work of our Redemption, our souls ever hungered and thirsted after the precious blood of the Lord Jesus, far more greedily and insatiably, then ever the panting heart thirsted after the rivers of water? Whether ever with strong cries, prays, groans and sighs, they threw themselves with some comfort and confidence into the bleeding and blessed bosom of our dear Redeemer, and there hid themselves sweetly and deeply in his sacred wounds, and goared side, from the eager pursuit of the wounding Law, the rage of Satan, and stings of their own Consciences?

4. Whether after this fast-hold upon the Passion and Merits of Christ, our souls ever received this comfortable news, That we were pardoned, justified, intitled by the Covenant of grace unto a Crown of Immortality, and endless joys in the Heavens? Whether this ever melted us into an Evangelical Repentance, to bewail heartily all our sins, and former wretchedness of life, for having so vilely and rebelliously grieved and offended so gracious and loving a Father?

5. Whether after these comforts and sorrows, our souls ever resolutely abandoned the practice of every gross sin, and threw out of their affections the liking and allowance of every the least infirmity? Whether we have ever since settled ourselves to holiness of life, universal obedience to all God's Commandments, though not in perfection and height of degree, yet in truth and sincerity of heart?

It maybe every soul (truly converted) cannot speak affirmatively to every of these Quaeres in intention, or height of measure, though for the substance they can; and if so, we may conclude, there is the work of saving grace.

2. For the individual companions of this saving work, as

- Duties.
- Graces.

1. For Duties, examine —

1. How we manage them before, in, and after the work? Of this we shall inform more particularly in most of the Duties, as we handle them in order.

2. What sensible and quickening communion we have with Christ in our Duties? This is the main business and end of all the Ordinances of Christ. It is ordinary with us to terminate our Devotions with a circular course of praying Morning and Evening, or of coming to Church every Lord's day; we look no further, but only to the exercise of the body, we see not anything in the power of Christ shining out in strength in these Duties: And therefore examine we particularly—

1. Whether we have (in the use of any Divine Ordinance) an intimate, tender and effectual presence of Christ himself with us?

2. Whether we have a constant influence, a quickening power of Spiritual refreshing, a sensible Spiritual taste of Divine love, or of God himself by this presence of Christ? In right performance of Duties, we come to have fuller Union with Christ, and by this coming to him, we come to, and see the Father by him: And hence follows by this presence of Christ, these three things, 1. Peace with, and a Spiritual joy in God: 2. A strength communicated to walk with Christ, and in his power with God. 3. A sealed assurance of eternal communion with God in glory.

2. For Graces, examine —

1. The truth of our Graces.

2. The growth of our Graces.

3. The wants of our Graces: All which we shall discuss at large in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

SECT. 8. Of the time of our Self-Examination.

The Scriptures have determined no set time, yet some rules there are, partly in Scripture, and partly prescribed by holy men, which we may make use of, as thus:

1. There is no danger of surfeiting upon too much; the oftener we reckon with our souls, the fewer things we shall have to reckon for every time; and the fewer things there be, the more readily will they be called to mind, and more exactly be scanned: This made Bernard say of this work, If we will do it as often as we need, we must do it always.

2. The time that learned and devout men commend to us, is once every day: So Chrysostom, Let this account be kept every day; — Have a little book in thy Conscience, and write therein thy daily transgressions; and when thou layest thee down on thy bed, then bring forth thy book, and take an account of thy sins.

3. The time that especially Scripture holds forth to us, is at evening or at night: I call to remembrance, said David, my song in the night; I commune with my own heart, and my spirit made diligent search: And thus he bids us, Commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. Upon which words says Chrysostom, What means this that he saith, Commune with your own hearts upon your beds? q.d. after supper, when you lie down, and are ready to sleep, and have great quietness and silence, without presence or disturbance of any, then erect a Tribunal for your own Consciences.

4. Other times may be as occasion requires: When the Church of Israel was in distress, and sighed to God, then they encouraged each other, Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord. When Christians purpose to receive the Lord's Supper, then Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat: When we observe days of Fast for humiliation of our souls; or when we observe a Sabbath of Feasts, or especially when we are cast down upon our sick beds, and in expectation of our dissolution, then it's time to examine, and to judge ourselves, that we be not judged.

5. Besides those daily and casual times, it is convenient also, after some good space of time, to examine ourselves over again, ex. gr. after a month or a year, to consider ourselves for the month or year past, that we may see how we have profited or decayed for that space of time; for as our members grow, and our shape every day changeth, and our black hairs turn gray, while we perceive it not, yet after some space of time, we may easily discern; so it is in our souls, besides the manifest changes which sometimes appear at the instant, there are certain insensible alterations, which are not to be discerned, but after some continuance of time: And for rectifying of these, it is necessary to take a more general view of our souls, in a monthly or yearly examination; by this means we shall see wherein we are better or worse, how our zeal is increased or decreased; if we are bettered since our last general account, we shall have occasion to praise God; if otherwise, we must therefore be humbled, and blow the coals of zeal, and stir up the grace of God in us, that we may strengthen the things which remain, and are ready to die.

To this purpose we read of many Ancients that were accustomed to keep Diaries or Day-books of their actions, and out of them to take an account of their lives: Such a Register (of God's dealings towards him, and of his dealings towards God in main things) the Lord put into a poor creatures heart to keep in the year 1641. ever since which time he hath continued it, and once a year purposes (by God's grace) to examine himself by it; the use and end of it is this:

1. Hereby he observes something of God to his soul, and of his soul to God. 2. Upon occasion he pours out his soul to God in prayer accordingly, and either is humbled or thankful. 3. He considers how it is with him in respect of time past, and if he have profited in grace, to find out the means whereby he hath profited, that he may make more constant use of such means; or wherein he hath decayed, to observe by what temptation he was overcome, that his former errors may make him more wary for the future.

Besides many other uses, as of his own Experiences and Evidences, which he may (by the Lord's help) gather out of this Diary.

SECT. 9. The daily Register of a weak, unworthy Servant of Christ, for some years.

IT may be expected that I give some Example hereof; wherein, if I may any way advance Christ, or benefit his Church, though I lie in the dust, I shall willingly, in such things as are fitting to publish, subscribe the daily Register of a poor unworthy Servant of Christ, indeed one of the meanest of his Masters family for some space of time.

January 24. This day came the news of my Mothers death, whom (for the daily prayers made, and many tears shed for me) I esteemed as another Monica, and therefore I had cause to mourn for such and so great a loss.

May 20. This day in the Evening the Lord in his mercy poured into my soul the ravishing joy of his blessed Spirit. O how sweet was the Lord unto me? I never felt such a lovely taste of Heaven before: I believe this was the joyful sound, the Kisses of his mouth, the Sweetnesses of Christ, the Joy of his Spirit, the new wine of his kingdom; it continued with me about two days.

January 6. This day I observed a private Fast in my house; where by the Spirit of Prayer in some Christians, all hearts were warmed, affections moved, and Christ manifested his presence in the midst of us.

Feb. 2. I Preached (at the desire of the people) the first Sermon that ever was Preached in Garstange Chapel: I hope a blessed beginning, the Lord prosper the Word in that place.

Feb. 5. The Lord (as once before wonderfully) so this day again delivered me from the danger of fire, which had seized on some part of the house or stuff in it where I lived.

May 15. I first Preached against all Superstitious vanities, and particularly against the Cross in Baptism: This was the first occasion of the people's general discontent, ever since when some of them have been irreconcilable: Now begun the Divisions of Church and State. Reformation proves an hard work. I received strong consolation afterwards out of Psal. 37. v. 32, 33, 34. and out of Psal. 57. throughout.

Aug. 2. This day I observed a private Fast, with a godly Neighbor-Minister, wherein some of his, and some of my Hearers joined: I took this as a fore-runner of Consociation of Churches.

Novemb. 15. I was taken Prisoner, but some Gentlemen offered themselves to be bound for my appearing when called; and so the Lord set me free: Now began the troublesome times; and this year the Lord many a time assisted me in the Preaching of his Word boldly to the Enemy, both above ordinary, and far above myself.

Febr. 9. This day the Lord gave Preston (which was kept Garison by the Commissioners of Array) into the Parliaments hands. I saw much of God in it; O that Preston would have known, or yet would know the things belonging to its peace!

March 20. This day the Lord gave Preston again into the hands of the Commissioners of Array, much blood was shed; I was taken Prisoner, and yet preserved and delivered by the good hand of God.

July 5. The Affairs of this County were (by God's Providence) so altered again, that this day we observed an holy Fast, and Thanksgiving to God publicly, for his people's deliverances in Lancashire. There was many mixtures this year of God's frowns and smiles to his Saints.

Jan. 28. Many godly and sweet Ministers exiled from Yorkshire, were provided for in Preston, and the parts adjacent: And this day they were pleased to observe with me a private Fast in my house; it was a comfortable day.

May 2. Bolton was taken: Colonel R. Forces Routed, and many a sweet Saint slain; no Quarter would be given, so that it grew into a Proverb, Bolton-quarter (i.) present death without mercy: Now I removed into Yorkshire, and the Lord provided for me comfortably, especially in Leeds.

June 14. Other two godly Ministers of Lancashire with myself, observed a public Fast in Leeds new Church: The best people in and about the Town joined with us.

June 21. This day the same Ministers joined in a private day; some Christians of the place joined with us, and the Lord sweetly enlarged our hearts: A good sign that he would return favorable answers.

July 2. and 5. Two solemn Fasts were observed at Manchester: It was observed, That at the very same time of the former day, whilst an holy grave Minister was praying, that the Lord gave us the Victory (which was the turn of England) over Prince Ruperts Forces.

July 10. and 11. were days of Thanksgiving observed at Manchester for the same Victory: They were two comfortable days.

Aug. 17. I returned to Preston, and the next day Preached there before the General and Colonels: This was the Lord's doings, to him be the glory and praise forever.

Feb. 27. This day I had given me an Augmentation to my former Means; The Lord grant I may rightly improve it to his glory. Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness.

March 11. This day, with some other Christians, I observed a private, but solemn day of Thanksgiving: The Duty no sooner done, but News came to the house (which exceedingly heightened our joys in the Lord) that Bristol was taken.

Decemb. 2. This day Latham-Hall was delivered into the Parliaments hands: It is observed, That as it was twice Besieged, so on the same day twelve-month that the former Siege was raised, was the latter Siege laid; and it is supposed (as it was foretold by a well-wisher to the house) that the blood shed at Bolton pulled down those walls.

Febr. 8. This day, after the Lord had enabled me in the Preaching of his Word, one of my Hearers came to me with tears and complaints, doubting her case and Spiritual condition: Now the Lord bring in souls, and make his Word powerful unto them.

May 20. I came to Weddicre, which I did upon mature resolution, every year about that pleasant Spring time (if the Lord pleased) to retire myself, and in some solitary and silent place to practice especially the secret Duties of a Christian: In this place are sweet silent Woods, and therein this month, and part of the next, the Lord by his Spirit wrought in me Evangelical Repentance for sin, gave me sweet comforts, and Spiritual refreshings in my commerce, and intercourse with him, by Prayer, and Meditation, and Self-Examination, &c. discovered to me the causes of my many troubles and discouragements in my Minister: whereupon I prayed more fervently, pressed the Lord with his promises, set his Power, and Wisdom, and Mercy on work; and so waited and believed, till the Lord answered every Petition, and I could not but observe his hand in it. This was a comfortable time to my soul. June 26. I returned home again.

Aug. 7. I was ill troubled concerning the Divisions amongst us, and the reproaches of some cast upon me; but at last I drew comfort from Psal. 37.4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

Aug. 23. I Preached, and all the hour the Stitch was sore in my side; after Sermon I grew worse, and my sickness daily increased, the Physician could not by any means give me ease: I then made my Will, gave Exhortations to the chief of my Hearers; yet after it pleased the Lord to recover me, and September. 13. I Preached again, when Mr. A. joined with me as Assistant. O the fruit of Prayers!

Decemb. 8. We observed a private Fast: Some Ministers joined with me; it was a heavenly day, the Lord walking in the midst of us. All glory to him.

March 1. This day Mistress C. sent for me, expressing that my Sermons of Eternity had struck her with fear and trembling, and that she was troubled in Conscience, and desired to be informed in God's ways: I advised her, and prayed with her; many a tear came from her: The Lord by his Spirit work in her a through and saving Conversion.

March 3. Mr. B. a godly Minister in the North, being troubled in Conscience, came to me, and desired some Spiritual advice: After acknowledgement of my unfitness and weakness, I directed, as the Lord enabled. On March 8. we joined in a private day of Humiliation; and the terror of Conscience had so worn out his Spirit, and wasted his body, that he was not able (as he said) to perform: yet desiring him to depend on God, and to cast himself on him for ability; he prayed with such fervency, humility and brokenness of heart, that he opened the fountains of all eyes about him, and caused a flood of tears in my Chamber, I never saw the like day. All the glory to God.

March 29. This day I received a Letter from Mr. B. who expressed, That he had found a great and constant ease and quietness of mind, ever since that day he was by the good Providence of God cast amongst us; and that he enjoyed that quietness, as God's gracious return of our powerful Prayers. O our Father, hallowed be thy Name in this and all things.

March 30. I received a Letter from Mr. S.B. then at Warwick-house in L. who amongst other things, complained of our great Divisions, many fears, frustrated expectations; so that if God show mercy now, 'twill be strange to us: but this was our Unum Magnum, to have recourse upwards, to shelter ourselves there, and either to wait for better times, or our pass for eternity: This Letter coming from so worthy, holy, and able a Divine, sadned my heart exceedingly, which helped on the Duty of the next day, being a public Fast day.

April 1. Two Suns were seen in the Firmament by many in Preston: I dare not stick in the natural cause, but rather consider it as a token of God's heavy displeasure.

April 17. I received a Letter from Mr. C. Minister at H. who visited with sickness, expressed his grief for some former miscarriages; desiring that his head were waters, and his eyes a fountain of tears, to weep for his sins: adding, That whatsoever I was minded to say to him, whether by way of Exhortation, Admonition or Reproof, it should be heartily and lovingly accepted, and be as oil, which should not break his head. O Lord, make his Repentance sincere, and sanctify his sickness to his Spiritual advantage.

May 2. This day (after three years want) we administered and received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; it was the most heavenly heart-breaking day (especially at the time of the Ordinance) that of a long time we enjoyed: Many souls were raised, many hearts melted. Blessed be God.

May 19. This day I went to Weddicre, that in those sweet silent Woods (where I have found God many a time) I might fall upon the practice of some secret Duties, and enjoy sweet communion with my Lord and my God; accordingly I found him in the several Duties of Self-Examination, Meditation, Prayer, Praises, &c. June 21. I returned home again.

June 26. I visited (upon call) R. M. in his bed of sickness, who confessed that the Lord made me an instrument of his souls Conversion; and now in his sickness the Spirit of God had filled his soul with Comforts, and given him Assurance, which he drew from Christ in that precious Promise, Believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved.

June 27. I visited (upon call) E.W. whose heart God touched in the midst of our Prayers, and she received some Spiritual Comforts.

July 1. R. M. sent for me again, and drawing to his end, he proclaimed God's goodness, and sweetness, and mercy, which were his last words; and after, in the midst of our Prayers, he gave up the ghost. Now he enjoys that of which he had such sweet fore-tastes. The next day I Preached his Funeral Sermon on that Text which he hit on for his comfort, when he cried, It is come, it is come.

July 19. This night desiring God to sanctify my sleep and dreams, that I sinned not in them: I dreamed, that after some troubles of life, my time limited was at an end, and that I heard the very voice of God calling me by name into his glorious Kingdom; whither when I came, heavenly ornaments were put upon me by the hand of God, and of Christ: My soul was exceedingly ravished. The Lord grant I may make some use of this, to be more heavenly-minded, and to breathe more after Christ.

July 27. E.W. died in midst of our Prayers; the day after was our Monethly Fast; which done, I Preached again her Funeral Sermon, and the Lord was then pleased so to enlarge my heart, and to pour words into my mouth, that I am confidently persuaded he spake in me, and by me. O Lord bless thy word to the people, and enable me still by the power of thy might.

Octob. 4. This day I was called by some discontented Brethren to a private Fast: I construed this as good news from Heaven, was obedient unto it, and joined with them. Some sparkles of former love still remained in everyone of us: notwithstanding former breaches, I trust God will by degrees unite our hearts more and more.

Octob. 12. This day I was told by a godly Minister Mr. C. that Mr. B. residing in Glasco, and lighting by Providence on my Book of the First and Last things, it was a means (as he acknowledged) of his Conversion; at this time he was ordained Minister by the L. Classis, and reported to be a holy and able man. Glory and praise to thee, O my Lord and my God.

Octob. 15. A Letter full of Invectives, without any Name subscribed, was in the night cast into my house: I guess the man, but I desire to look up to God, to search my own heart, and to bind the Reproofs as a Crown unto my head; be the Author who he will, I much matter not, Psal. 27.11, 12, 13, 14.

Novemb. 29. This night I was told that Mistress E. D. was upon my Prayer the last Fast troubled in Conscience; and that since she had much talked of me, and desired to see me, but her Companion concealing it, she now apprehended the time was past, and utterly despaired: I sent to her, and at her first entrance into my Chamber, she cried, O that face! I dare not look on it! Shall such a lost creature as I look upon thee? — Had I seen thee yesternight, I might have been saved; but now I am lost time is past; — O the terrors of the Lord are upon me, &c. yet after she was pleased to hear me pray: And then I advised her, To search out her sin — To submit to the Lord, to wonder at God's mercy, that yet she lived, and was on this side Hell; — To acknowledge God's Justice; — To bear the indignation of the Lord; — Not to quarrel with the Lord; — Not to limit him to this or that time; — To learn Eli's and David's lesson, Here I am, let him do with me as seemeth him good in his own eyes. To this she spake sensibly, acknowledging God to be righteous, That she deserved the state she was in; yet promised to yield, and to be quiet under God's hand, and to search out her sins: so for that time we parted. After this I understood she grew to a deep melancholy, took Physic, but before she was cured, she was took by her friends into Ireland.

Decemb. 5. I was very weak in body; yet being desired, I went out to pray for R. G. who received thereby some soul-comfort, and within an hour after departed this life.

January 24. I was troubled in mind to hear, and consider of the many oppositions I found in my Ministry; at night I read a feeling passage in Rogers on Judges 13. thus: — I have often thought it God's mercy, to keep the knowledge of such discouragements from them that are to enter into the Ministry, lest they should be deterred wholly from it, till by experience they be armed against it.

March 17. I had news of a Justice of Peace who took offense at some passages in my Sermon before the Judges; and after a Messenger came to me from the Judges themselves, to give me an account of the Assizes, and especially of the Trial of the Jesuit S. concerning whom was the exception taken.

May 3. We had sudden news of some Cavaliers driven out of Scotland, and drawing towards us: At morning, in order of our Family-duty, we read Psal. 124. and at night 1 Pet. 5.7. both which places refreshed and cheered my soul.

May 5. We had blessed news from London, of an happy accord betwixt the Parliament, City and Army; a strange alteration on a sudden: Thus God, when he pleaseth, wheels things about, and is that Spirit in the wheels.

May 7. I administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; wherein I found much sweetness, and blessed impressions of the Spirit of Christ, and Spiritual enlargements above myself, and a return of Prayers, in that the Lord hedged his Sacrament, that some such came not in, whom I desired to keep out. Halleluiah. Blessed be God.

May 16. I came to Weddicre, to renew my engagements and loves with my Lord and my God this Spring also: My ground is that of Cant. 2.11, 12. Come my beloved, let us go forth into the fields, &c. there will I give thee my loves. The bridegroom of our souls (said Bernard) is bashful, and more frequently visits his bride in the solitary places.

May 17. I went into the solitary Woods, to practice the secret Duties of a Christian: No sooner stepped in, but the green Trees, and Herbs, and the sweet singing of Birds, stirred up my soul to praise God. After, I begun my work, and continued it during that month: At several times I ran through the Duties of Watchfulness, Self-Examination, Experiences, Meditation, the Life of Faith; and many a time I felt many sweet stirrings of Christ's Spirit: The Lord Jesus appeared to my soul, gave me the kisses of his mouth, especially in my Prayers to, and praises of his Majesty. Surely thou art my Lord, and I will praise thee: Thou art my God, and I will exalt thee. Halleluiah. June 19. I returned home again.

June 20. I observed this day an experimental truth, That it is the nature of Mortification to press forwards to have more virtue from Christ: So a Christian should 1. Prevail against the outward act of lust: 2. Against the rising and rolling of it in his fancy: 3. He should then come to hate it, and the thought of it. O Lord write this Law in my heart.

July 3. I observed with some Christians a private Fast, for the removal of God's hand in immoderate Showers, Sword, Pestilence, &c. and the next day we observed a public Fast to the same purpose. O when will the Lord return answers!

July 12. We had news that the Scots had invaded this Kingdom.

August 1. In the morning, a little before day, I dreamed fearfully of Satan's being busy with me about my bed, and in terror I awaked; the night was rough: Hereupon I meditated on God's Judgments now abroad on the earth. After in my Family-duty was read Psal. 103. and from ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. whence I drew some Spiritual comfort.

Aug. 5. I read the Story of Mistress Sarah Wight; I found many a sweet passage in it, that exceedingly affected me, and melted my heart. Now the Lord Christ be magnified and exalted, whom I desire to be my All in All.

Aug. 6. I read a Story of the Indians receiving the Gospel in New-England, written by Mr. T. Shepherd, wherein was expressed many gracious impressions of God upon them, as the precious first-fruits of America to Jesus Christ, it much affected my heart to read it. All glory to God.

Aug. 9. Upon further advance, and near approach of D. Hamilton and the Scots, I was forced to remove; and presently after I heard the enemy was come into Preston.

Aug. 16. A Fast was upon the occasion observed in Manchester. In my preparation unto it (reading in the Bible) I light upon Isa. 49.17.—51.12, 13. After the Duty begun, the Lord kept my heart up as in a flame: The day was sweetly observed, but the Conclusion of it (when Mr. Angier prayed) was exceeding sweet; his Prayer was so working, that I believe it melted all hearts: and for my own, it pleased the Lord so to soften it, and break it, that (so far as I can remember) it was never in such a melting frame in any public Ordinance before.

Aug. 22. I returned to Preston, and saw the wonderful works of God, and heard of many miracles of Mercies; — as 1. That the Infantry of the Scots was ruined, 150 Colours taken from them, 36 Barrels of Powder, 100 Barrels of Match, 6000 weight of Bullet, 5000 Muskets, 2000 Pikes, the Enemy being above 30000, and the Parliament forces not above 9000.— 2. That no place (whither the Enemy came) escaped Plundering, except Preston, which was prevented by the Armies coming in the very nick of time.— 3. That provision of meat was brought into the Town-Hall for the Scots, to the value of a thousand pounds at least, but the Armies seasonable march saved that provision for themselves.—4. That some of the Scots in the pangs of death cried out, They had broken the Covenant, notwithstanding that the word COVENANT was interwoven in their Colours. Upon meditation of the whole business, I believed that the Lord heard my Prayers: 1. In that my heart sympathized: 2. In that my heart was filled with joy in the accomplishment: 3. In that the Mercy concerned me, in respect of my person, Family, Congregation, as much as any other.

Aug. 30. and 31. we observed as days of public Thanksgiving to God.

September. 25. R.H. died: In his life he was incontinent, and run away with a Journeyman's wife that wrought with him; he was a frequenter of Alehouses, and kept in his Shop a Jugge, which he called Jack of Newberry, of large size, which he would have sent to the Alehouse sometimes about, and sometimes above twenty times in one day: He was a great Prophaner of the Lord's day, and ordinarily would have wrought in the way of his Calling on it: Once being demanded to pay Lays, he answered, How could they honestly demand moneys of him, that would not suffer him to work; there were but seven days in the week, and one day he must watch, and another day he must Fast, and a third day he must rest from his work, because it was the Lord's day. But this wicked life had a miserable end: for some weeks together he consumed away; at which time of his weakness, Mr. T.A. advised him to repent, to whom he answered in loud language, Let me alone, let me alone: Another advised him to call upon God; to whom he answered, I care not for God, and God cares not for me: A Gentlewoman advised him to send for the Minister to pray for him; to whom he answered, Yes, when I have need: and the party then going from him, he bade, The Devil go with her. Upon remembrance of that Text (which he often repeated) No unclean person hath any inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ; he concluded, That then he should never see God's face in his Kingdom. One whole night (which was terrible to the hearers) he spent in cursing himself and others, bidding often, The Devil take thee, and the Devil fetch me: Sometimes he was heard to say to the by-standers, See, do you not see that black grim fellow that stands there? there will be whisking even now: The very day before he died, he drank eighteen Cans of Ale, and (without any visible repentance) the day after, he died, without any man or woman in presence, to the amazement of them who first found him dead. O Preston take warning!

Octob. 23. I had this Relation, That one Sir G.C. of an ancient Family, sprung from many Knights, was much addicted to the sin of Uncleaness: An ancient Hall he had, which for the statelyness he Idolized; he left behind him one Son, and two Daughters: His on Sir H. C. followed his Fathers steps, and had only two Sons lawfully begotten, whereof his younger died first, together with his Lady; and the other Son having a Maid to wait upon him, she brought the Pestilence into the family, of which his Son and Heir died also: He himself (now being in a Consumption) said, That he knew his house was come to its period. About this time his fair house was made a Garison, by which means all his Barns and buildings about it were pulled down; but the storm being over, he began to repair the house, and two Workmen being lately come out of Ireland, having the bloody Flux, brought that disease into the Family; hereupon he removed: And when the house was clear, he returned, and began again to repair the Building; but then the Pestilence by some means or other was brought into the Family, and so he was forced to remove again: The house once again cleansed, he (being now far spent in his Consumption) desired two days before his death to be carried to it, saying, He must be the last of that house, and he would die where his Father died before him; accordingly his Servants conveyed him thither in a Chair. His great affliction was the want of an Heir, and especially that he knew none of his own Name in England (except Bastards) to whom he might convey his Estate: But after much enquiry, he was resolved that there was a Gentleman near his Name (it being but a syllable longer) who lived near the City of Y. This pleased him so well, that he made him (though a stranger) the Heir of all his Lands: In the mean while one of his Sisters died, and he himself (being conveyed as aforesaid) died in the same place he so much desired. There was none now alive of that Family, except one Sister, and she not long after his death, died also; at whose very time of death (as it was observed by strict calculation) a fire (not known certainly how) seized on that stately Hall, which was so vehement, that none could quench it, till at least two parts of it were burnt to the very ground. Here's a Looking-glass for all unclean persons, and vain-glorious worldlings.

November 6. At night in my sleep I was exceedingly troubled with fearful dreams of the Kings danger in reference to his person, and of great Commotions in the Kingdom, and Uproars everywhere; and that I was got into the throng, and could not avoid: At my waking I was exceedingly troubled.

Novemb. 8. Some Christians with me joined in a day of Humiliation, and sought God for a blessing on our Conferences the beginning of this Winter season.

Novemb 14. A public Fast was observed in Preston, for a blessing on the Provincial Meeting. Mr. A. and Mr. H. undertook the Burthen, and performed it very ably and sweetly.

Decemb. 6. The Army (as I heard) turned the City Guard back, as they were going to the Parliament House, and undertook the Guard themselves; after, forty one Members were seized on, and carried away, and the next day they turned all others back, whom they judged not expedient to sit in the House.

Decemb. 25. was a day of jollity to all about us; but some Christians considering the evil days we lived in, joined with me in humbling ourselves, and we found by sweet experience, that It is better to be in the house of mourning, then in the house of mirth.

January 30. The King (as I heard) was Beheaded before White-hall: The news came to me on Feb. 3. and on Feb. 4. I observed a day of Humiliation with my own Family; which was helped on (for some part of the day) by the public Ordinances: my ground was 2 Sam. 1.12.

Feb. 16. news, That the Commons Voted the House of Peers useless and dangerous, and therefore to be abolished: As also, That the Office of a King in this Nation is unnecessary, burthensom, and dangerous to the Liberty, Safety, and public Interest of the People of this Nation, and therefore also to be abolished. To this purpose they Voted further, That the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy should from henceforth be made void, and never more imposed upon any People in this Nation: On March 14. Acts were brought in to these purposes: Hos. 3.4.— 10.3, 4.

April 2. Some Christians with me joined in a private Thanksgiving day, for God's assistance and gracious appearings in our Winter Conferences: It was a comfortable day. All glory to God.

April 7. news, that the Lord Major of London refusing to Proclaim the Act for taking away Kingly Government, was put out of his Majoralty, put into the Tower, Fined Two thousand pounds: And that four Ministers were sent for by the Commons out of this County, to answer for their Papers against the Agreement of the People, whereof myself (the most unworthy) was one.

April 8. I preached upon that subject of the Two Witnesses, and cleared it by Scripture proofs, That they were Magistrates and Ministers, and that the time of their killing is yet to come: Zech. 4.14. Rev. 11.3, 4, 7, 10.

April 10. Some Christians with me observed a private day of Humiliation, in reference to our sins and manifold miseries threatening us more and more: It was a good day. O Lord return favorable answers.

April 20. I received a Summons from the Committee of Plundred Ministers, to appear before them, and to answer all such matters as should be objected against me, concerning a Paper entitled, The Agreement of the People taken into consideration, &c. by the Ministers of the Province of Lancaster; The next day I went up towards London.

May 5. I appeared, with the rest of my Brethren, before the Committee: where we confessed our Subscription, and owned the Papers for the substance of them. On May 10, 13, 21, 22, 23, 24, we appeared again, and were not at all questioned of anything in the Book, but some few Interrogatories were made, Whether we owned the present State-Government, and would submit to it? we had many precious Prayers put up to God for us in the City, many Prayers and private Fasts for us in the Country, many sweet encouraging Letters both from Ministers and people in our own parts, and many unexpected friends and acquaintance stirred up by God wheresoever we came; the Lord encouraged and enabled us from time to time, so that the last day Mr. M. (Chairman of the Committee, in whose eyes we found favor) wished publicly there, I would the business of the Lancashire Ministers were well rid out of our hands. All glory and praise be to our good God.

May 6. and 27. I received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at the hands of Mr. Nalton and Mr. Ash: Their Exhortations, Prayers, Consecration and Administring of the Sacrament, exceedingly melted my heart. Blessed be God for them: Blessed be they of the Lord.

May 28. Upon serious consideration of the manifold miscarriages both in Church and State, which I observed since my coming to London, I had some resolutions to spend the remainder of my uncertain days in a more retired and private way. At this time I set out of London, and left this Book in the Stationers hands for the Press. The Lord bless it to his people for his Names sake. Amen.

CHAP. V.

SECT. I. Of the Nature of Experiences.

EXperience (say some) is a knowledge and discovery of something by sense not evident in itself, but manifested by some event or effect. This description contains both Natural and Spiritual Experience; but my purpose is to speak only of the latter, and in that respect I look strictly at Experiences, as Real proofs of Scripture truths. When I mark how true every part of God's Word is, how all the Doctrines, Threatenings and Promises contained therein, are daily verified in others, and in my own self, and so improve, or make use of them to my own Spiritual advantage, this I call Experience.

SECT. 2. Of the gathering of Experiences.

THat our Experiences may further us in the way to Heaven, we must learn 1. To gather them: 2. To improve them. 1. For the gathering of them, the only way is —

1. To mark things which fall out; To observe the beginnings and events of matters, to eye them every way, on every side, that they may stand us instead for the future: This observation and pondering of events, with the causes that went before, is the ripener of wit; Who among you will give ear to this? who will hearken for the time to come? Whoso is wise, and will observe those things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord.

2. To treasure up, and lay in these observations, to have ready in remembrance such works of God as we have known and observed. The Philosopher saith, that Experience is multiplex memoria, A multiplied memory, because of the memory of the same thing often done, ariseth Experience: I remember the days of old, saith David; I remember how thou didst rebuke Abimelech, and overthrew Nimrod, and Pharaoh, and Ahithophel: and thus would we treasure up Experiments, the former part of our life would come in to help the latter, and the longer we live, the richer in Faith we should be; even as in Victories, every former overthrow of an Enemy, helps to obtain a succeeding Victory. This is the use of a sanctified memory, it will lose nothing that may help in time of need, or in the evil day; it records all the breathings, movings, stirrings, workings of a soul towards Christ, or of Christ towards a soul.

3. To cast these things thus marked and laid in under several Spiritual heads, of Promises, Threats, Deceits of the heart, Subtilties of Satan, Allurements of the world, &c. I might enlarge the Heads into anything that is good or evil: 1. Into anything that is good, whether it be God, or the things given us by God; his Spirit, his Councils, his Ordinances, his Work of Sanctification, and all the fruits of the Spirit. 2. Into anything that is evil, whether it be Sin, or the fruits of Sin, as Corruption, inability to good, vanity of all the Creatures, the Judgments of God. Thus we must sort our Experiences, as the Apothecary sorteth his Drugs.

SECT. 3. Of the improving of Experiences.

2. FOr the improving of Experiences,—

1. We must consider what Scripture-truth is verified thereby in

- Others.
- Our selves.

1. In others, as if we consider how God blesseth and cheereth the religious; wherein that Text is verified, Blessed are the righteous, for it shall be well with them, for they shall eat the fruit of their doings: Or if we observe how God punisheth the carnal and hypocritical, wherein that Text is verified, Woe unto the wicked, it shall be ill with them, for the reward of their hands shall be given them.

2. In ourselves, as if by a Spiritual Experience we taste God to be good; wherein that Text is verified, If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious: If we find the things given us of God to be good; as that his Spirit is good, according to that Text, Thy Spirit is good: That his Ordinances are good, according to that Text, It is good for me to draw near to God; — and, This is my comfort in affliction, for thy word hath quickened me: That Sanctification, and the fruit of the Spirit, are good; according to that Text, It is good that a man should both hope, and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord: — It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High:— It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing:— It is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; or if by Experience we discern the evil of sin itself out of measure sinful, according to that Text, Sin by the Commandment is become exceeding sinful: If we find out the corruption of our own Nature, according to that Text, Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me: If we discover the abomination of our own righteousness, according to that Text, We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousness are as filthy rags: If we feel our own inability to do any good, according to that Text, To will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good, I find not: — Not that we are sufficient of ourselves, to think anything as of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God: If we have trial of the vanity of all creatures, as of Riches, Honor, Wisdom, according to that Text, Vanity of vanities, all is vanity: O how will these blessed Experiences, backed by Scripture truths, kindle our affections! I deny not, Faith works more steadfastness, and firmness of adherence, but Experience usually breeds the greater strength of affections: I love the Lord, (saith David) and why so? because (of this Experience) he hath heard my voice, and my supplications.

2. We must endeavor to produce that fruit, that frame of heart, which the Lord requires, directs, and looks for in such and such cases. Thus the Sanctification of Experiences is evidenced by the Dispositions answering God's mind, which are left upon the heart, and brought forth into the life afterwards; namely, when Divine discoveries are the more strongly believed; the heart by threats more kindly awed; adherence to the Promises more strongly confirmed; the deceitful heart more narrowly watched; Satan's suggestions more watchfully resisted; the bewitchings of the world kept at a greater distance from the soul; in a word, when by this experimental application of God's works to his word, God is more advanced, and Self more abased, the honor of the Lord is more studied, and the edification of his people endeavored, holy love increased, service quickened, faith strengthened, Christ improved; then is this business Christianly managed indeed. But of these more largely in the next Section.

SECT 4. Of the Sanctification of Experiences in their several Uses.

The Sanctification of Experiences is evidenced (as we said) by such Dispositions as these: —

1. When Divine discoveries are more strongly believed; this is one fruit of Experience, it wonderfully strengthens our faith: When the Israelites saw the Egyptians drowned, then they believed the Lord, and his servant Moses. When we find all things in the event to be as we believed, this confirms our Faith, as David knew that God favored him, by his deliverances.

2. When the heart by threats is more kindly awed: This another fruit of Experience, The righteous also shall see and fear; first see, and then fear: When the Primitive Christians saw Ananias fall down, and give up the ghost, then great fear came on them that heard those things; this holy fear many a time possesseth the Saints: My flesh trembled for fear of thee (saith David) and I am afraid of thy judgments. — When I heard, my belly trembled (saith Habakkuk) my lip quivered at the voice; rottenness entered into my bones, and I trembled in myself, that I might rest in the day of trouble: As the child quaketh when he seeth his Father correct a servant, so the faithful tremble when they observe the severity of God's wrath against impenitent sinners.

3. When the deceitful heart is more narrowly watched: Hath it cozened us once and again? Experience hereof will breed in us a godly jealousy and suspicion over our hearts; we are now conscious of our own weakness, and of the snare that is in every creature, to take and entangle us; and this will make waking Believers circumspect and careful, how they entertain evil motions, how they keep up holy thoughts, how they perform holy duties, how their affections move towards that which is above, lest they should miscarry upon the sands.

4. When Satan's suggestions are more watchfully resisted, this is the voice of Experience in such a case, Doth Satan furiously assail us? be not dismayed; Are his temptations most fierce? be we most diligent in the means of grace, the practice of holiness, the labors of an honest calling; Pray earnestly, exercise faith, stick faster to the word of promise, stop our ears against scruples and doubtings; Draw nigh to God, for Satan will then cease to vex thee with his temptations anymore: Resist the Devil, and he will fly from you: it is true, the Believer is too weak of himself to withstand the least assault, but if we rely on the Lord, we may through his power be made victorious in the greatest assaults whatsoever; and here is the comfort of Experience, That a Soul having once returned with victory, through the power of his might, He will abide in the secret place of the most high forever.

5. When the bewitchings of the world are kept at a great distance from the Soul: This was Solomon's case and cure, after all his travels and great delights, he no sooner returns as to himself, but he fills the world with this news; What news? Vanity, And what more? Vanity of vanities; And what more? All is vanity: Experience of its vanity, weans him from the love of this earth, it takes him off the creature, and lifts him unto the Lord his Creator; so should we (if ever we were charmed with such Syren songs) be more careful, lest we be drawn away with the pleasing delights of things transitory, and keep them at a greater distance from us.

6. When the Lord Jesus is more studied and advanced: The man that feels Christ's gracious power and virtue, will be sure to exalt Christ, and set him up on high; when Israel saw the mighty work of David in overthrowing Goliath, then David was much set by: The Believers experience of Christ's mighty and gracious working, makes Christ very precious to him, then he cries, as the Soldiers of David, Thou art worth ten thousands of us: Hence it is that God's people value him above all their profits, friends, ease, credit and lives. Matthew left the Receipt of Custom, James and John their Ships, and Nets, and Father, and followed him, yea, many for his sake loved not their lives unto death; no wonder they had many sweet experiences of Christ: Christ to their apprehension was the fairest of ten thousand, none but Christ, none but Christ.

7. When the people's edification is endeavored: Have we tasted of the goodness of God? let us then provoke others to believe, and to serve the Lord together with us; this is one end of Experience, and that use we should make of it towards others. When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation thereof, he worshipped, and turned into the host of Israel, and said, Arise, for the Lord hath delivered the host of Midian into your hands.

8. When a man's own self is more abased: Do we live the life of grace and true holiness? this will teach us to deny ourselves wholly: If any man (saith Christ) will come after me, let him deny himself; q. d. If any man will come after me in the knowledge of my Will, in the belief of my Promises, in the love of my Truth, in the obedience of my Precepts, let him deny himself, let him lay aside his own wisdom, his own will, his own imagination, his own affections, his own ends, as base and unworthy marks to be aimed at: Let him deny himself; whatsoever is of himself, or belonging to himself, as a corrupt and carnal man; let him go out of himself, that he may come to me; let him empty himself of himself, that he may be capable of me, that I may rule and reign in him, and that he may wholly subject himself to me and my service: This the Apostle stiles, A living, not unto ourselves, but unto him that died for us; he alone understands, and hath experience of the end of Christ's death, that makes Christ's glory the end of his life, and lives not to himself, but to Christ.

9. When holy love is more increased: I love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice and my supplication: We cannot taste of the Lord, but we must have an hearty love to the Lord: Will you hear the voice of Experience? this 'tis, O taste, and see how good the Lord is; and then, O stay me with flagons, and comfort me with Apples, for I am sick of love; such a one truly affects Christ, and all that follow Christ; such a one loves the person of Christ, without his privileges; a naked Christ, as well as a Christ clothed with all his robes, in all his glory and resplendent beauty; Christ in a Prison, as well as Christ in a Throne: Thus John (after all his Experiences of Christ's love to him) could love Christ on the cross, when other forsook him, as well as in the Temple, when he was working miracles.

10. When hope is quickened, such times may come, that death and darkness may surround us, and we may grovel in the dust: But here is our comfort, That tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope: Have we any Experience of God's gracious dealings with us in former times? have we sometimes been refreshed by his hand? hath he sometimes helped us? was he found of us when we sought him? nay, often unsought for? hath he come to our souls, and renewed our stock, and filled our becalmed spirits with fresh gales of grace? how should we then but hope? As it was in this respect, it is, and ever shall be; if new temptations arise, and new lusts break in and spoil, it is the voice of Experience, I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lyon, and the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom, to whom be glory and dominion forever and ever—and, We had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead, who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver us, in whom we trust he will yet deliver us.

11. When joys of the Spirit are raised and stirred up: Who is he that hath not been delivered out of some miserable exigence? and if we have, we may well say with David, Thou hast shown me great troubles and adversities, but thou wilt return and receive me, and wilt come again, and take me up from the depth of the earth, and comfort me: Former comforts are as a bill obligatory under God's hand, to assure us that he will not forsake us: Whom God loves, he loves unto the end—Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.

12. When Faith is more and more strengthened, Experiences should be turned into Confidences: Thus David improved his Experiences, The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the Lyon, and out of the paw of the Bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine: In like manner should we take notice of God's dealings, and after we have once tried him and his truth, let us trust him for the future; Tryed Truth, and tried Faith unto it, sweetly agree, and answer one another. Hence it is that Experience of God's love, should refresh our Faith upon any fresh onset; So let all thine enemies perish (said Deborah, the heart of that blessed woman was enlarged, as it were Prophetically) when one falls, they shall all fall; there is the like reason, So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord. Experience in ourselves or others, will enlarge our faith to look for greater matters still from our gracious powerful God: Hath the Lord given us a victory over the Philistines? then Awake, awake Deborah, awake, and be enlarged, O my faith! Every new Experience is a new knowledge of God, and should fit us for new encounters: I deny not but we ought to trust God upon other grounds, though we had never tried him; but when he helps our faith by former Experiences, this should strengthen our confidence, and shore up our Spirits, and put us on to go more cheerfully to God, as to a tried friend. It was the speech of one eminent in holiness, upon occasion of the accomplishment of a great request made to God by him, I have tried God often, now I will trust him indeed. If we were read in the story of our own lives, we might have a Divinity of our own, drawn out of the observation of God's particular dealings towards us: we might say, This and this truth I dare venture upon, I have found it true, I dare build all my happiness upon it; as Paul, I know whom I have trusted, and I am persuaded he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day; q. d. I have tried him, he never yet failed me, I am not now to seek how faithful he is to all those that are his.

13. When scruples and doubts are removed, O (cries the soul) I have many Experiences, but no Comfort as yet. Thus David, after the remembrance of his songs in the night, left his soul still in doubt; and he goes on to say, Will the Lord cast off forever? and will he be favorable no more? In this case it is the duty of Christians, to call to mind their former Experiences of Faith and Joy again and again: for though they comfort not at one time, yet they may at another. Have we found a Promise (which is a breast of Consolation) milkless? yet again suck, Comfort may come in the end: If after we have impanell'd a Jury and Grand Inquest to search, and our first Verdict condemns us, or they bring in an Ignoramus; yet do, as wise Judges often do, send them about it again, they may find it the next time: Jonah looked once, it seems, and found no comfort, for he said, I will look again towards thine holy Temple: So some have looked over their hearts by signs at one time, and have to their thinking found nothing but Hypocrisy, Unbelief, Hardness, Self-seeking, &c. but not long after, examining their hearts again by the same signs, they have espied the Image of God drawn fairly upon the Tables of their hearts, and so found a world of comfort.

O but (cries the soul) I have tossed and tumbled over my heart, I have searched into the Registers and Records of God's dealings, and me thinks, I can call nothing into remembrance betwixt God and me: What, nothing? look again: Did God never speak peace to our hearts? Did Christ never shed his love abroad into our souls? Have we at no time found in our heart pure streins of love to Christ? Pure drops of godly sorrow for offending Christ? Have we never an old tried Evidence, which hath been acknowledged and confirmed again and again in open Court? What, not one? Surely, if we can now call to mind but one, if in truth, it may support us: If one Promise do belong to us, all do; for everyone conveys whole Christ, in whom all the Promises are made, and who is the matter of them: As in the Sacrament, the Bread conveys whole Christ, and the Wine conveys whole Christ: so in the Word, every Promise conveys whole Christ; if we can but say as the Church of Ephesus, This thing I have, that I hate sin: we may plead this to God, yea though it be in a lesser degree, if in truth and sincerity (for God brings not a pair of Scales to weigh, but a Touchstone to try our graces) if it be true gold, though never so little of it, it will pass current with him: He will not quench the smoking flax, though it be but a smoke, not a flame; though it be but as a wick in the socket, (as it is in the Original) likelier to die and go out, then to continue, which we use to throw away, yet he will not quench it, but accept it. O let us comfort ourselves with these words!

O but (cries the soul again) I have searched all crevases for light, but alas, I cannot see the least beam of it: What help now remains? If it be thus, poor soul, Be not faithless, but believing. Christ helps some to live above glorious Manifestations; sometimes in absence of these Manifestations, just ones may live, and rejoice in the invisible Essence of God: Christians may live waiting on God, when his face is wholly hid from them; or Christians may live depending on God, when all other subordinate stays or helps are lost: In such a soul there may be this resolution, Let God do what he will with me, Ile hang on him still, Though he kill me, yet will I trust in him, and there is comfort in this.

If so (saith the soul) then what need of Experiences, so long as I have the Promises, and may live by Faith? O but for all this, be not careless of Experiences: for 1. It is the goodness of God, that besides the promises of good things to come, he is pleased to give us some present evidence and taste of what we believe: This heightens his mercy, that besides Faith, he should train up his Children by daily renewed Experiences of his fatherly care. 2. Though it be one thing to live by Faith, another thing to live by sight, yet the more we see, and feel, and taste of God, the more we shall be lead to rely on him, for that which as yet we neither see nor feel: This is the very meaning of God, that by that which we feel, we might be strengthened in that we look for.

SECT. 5. The consideration of Experiences in a practical course; or some practical Rules to be observed.

IT were good for Christians intending the practical part, to observe these or the like Rules:

- Some Cautionary.
- Some Directory.

1. The Cautionary Rules may be these:—

1. In gathering Experiences, Beware of misprision of God's Providences. There are many mistakes nowadays, and therefore it is our best and only course, for our security, to interpret all God's works out of his Word: We must make the Scriptures [as we said before] a construing book to the book of God's Providences: Judge neither better of prosperity, nor worse of adversity, then God's word warrants us. This was the Psalmists cure, his Experience put a Probatum est to this prescription, When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me, until I went into the Sanctuary of God, then understood I their end: God may prosper a wicked man, and he may construe this as an argument, and note it as an Experience of God's gracious dealing with him, and dear love unto him: O take heed! To the Law and to the Testimony, if they speak not according to this word▪ it is because there is no light in them.

2. In improving Experiences, beware how we argue from one Experience to another: Judgments threatened, are not always inflicted after one and the same manner; God meets with the wicked sometimes in this life, and sometimes he reserves their plagues for another. In like manner the gracious Providences of God are not always dispensed after one and the same manner; indeed David could say, The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the Lyon, and out of the paw of the Bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine; and Paul could say, I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lyon, and the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work: and so we may say, that God many times hath delivered us, and doth deliver us, and therefore that he will deliver us still: But this manner of arguing, as it is demonstrative, so it hath some limitations, which we must carefully take notice of; as

1. That besides a mere Providence, we take notice of some Promise of God on which we build: Thus Paul delivered from death at one time, argued that God would deliver him at another time; but in his arguing he eyes the Promise, he hangs on God, which (saith he) raiseth the dead.

2. That we consider the manner of the Promise, because

1. Some Promises are disjunctive; as when God in his mercy conveys anything to us either in particular, or in the equivalent, by way of Commutation and Compensation with Spiritual things. Thus a Christians Experience works Hope, but not always of the self-same outward issue, and manner of deliverance out of his trouble, which he hath before time found; No, we must hope according to the Word, or according to the quality of the Promise: Paul's hope (after Experience of many deliverances) was not expressly or peremptorily, that the prick in his flesh should be removed, but that God's grace should be sufficient, and so he had the fruit of his former Experience, because he obtained an equivalent supply, but not otherwise.

2. Some Promises are conditional in respect of us; as when God promiseth protection from contagious sickness, and from trouble, and war: If my people which are called by my Name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land. In these or the like Promises, God may give us the Experience of his Word at one time, but deny it at another, because we fail in the condition of the Promise on our parts. Observe, Christians! would we conclude a deliverance as formerly, be sure then to look to the frame and disposition of our Spirits: If we are in the way of the Promise, then we may conclude it for certain; if we meet God in the course of his Providence, or in the improvement of the means he hath appointed, then we may set it down, That God will do whatsoever he hath promised to give, in his own way, or otherwise not.

3. Some Promises are indefinite; as that in Jam. 5.14, 15. Is any sick among you? let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him: — and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up: In this case God may sometimes, yet doth not always perform promise according to the letter, though a man may be truly qualified with the conditions specified in that Promise, toties quoties, again and again. It only intends thus much, That God may, and sometimes will save the sick, and raise him up at the Churches prayers, but he will not ever do so. Now as God doth not always perform, so neither are we absolutely, or infallibly, or universally to conclude, The Promise is not universal, but indefinite, and accordingly our conclusions should not be universal, but indefinite: we should indeed, because of the Promise, adventure ourselves upon God in such a condition, not knowing but in his outward dispensations he may make it good to us, yet with submission to his pleasure, if otherwise he dispose of us: And as this is all we must do, so this is all we can say, or conclude in such a case as this is.

2. The Directory Rules may be these:—

1. Let us communicate our own Experiences to the good of others. David in his deliverances invites others to have recourse unto him: Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name; then shall the righteous compass me about, when thou shalt deal bountifully with me. Conceal not within our bosoms those things, the communicating whereof may tend to public profit: Surely it were a course much tending to the quickening of the faith of all, if we would impart to one another our mutual Experiences.

2. Let us trade others Experiences to our own particular profit. Thus David in desertion hath recourse to God's gracious dealings with his forefathers: Our fathers trusted in thee, they trusted, and thou didst deliver them; they cried unto thee, and were delivered, they trusted in thee, and were not confounded. What favor God showeth to any one, he will vouchsafe to everyone that seeketh him diligently, if it may be for his good: Thus we find in Scripture, that sometimes a personal Experience was improved to an universal advantage, James 5.11. Psal. 73.1. Heb. 13.5, 6.

3. Let us cast our Experiences under several heads, and make the Word and Works face one another, and answer one to another: Or to make the work complete, it were not amiss to distribute the frame into three Columns; and in the first to set down Experiences, in the second the Texts, in the third Dispositions answering God's mind, in such and such a case, to be left on the heart afterwards.

4. Let us pray with fervency (when ever we set a time apart to view over our Experiences) that those Dispositions, answering God's mind in every particular Experience, may be written in our hearts, and brought forth in our life afterwards. This will be the chief use and choice comfort of the soul in this Duty. And this method a poor creature and servant of Christ hath followed in his own particular practice: whereof I shall give you a taste in the following Section.

SECT. 6. The Experiences of a weak Christian, cast into the method propounded.

§. 1. Judgments on the Wicked.

Experiences.

1643.

Feb. 9. Preston was taken by the Parliaments Forces; several Papists slain in it, some naturally of a good disposition, & therefore many mourned for their untimely death, but rejoiced in the accomplishment of the promise.

Octo. 29. This day a Soldier was slain in Preston in the open Fair; and not long after another Soldier was slain in the very act of drunkenness: It is reported that he was drunk the night before, and that he threatened that very morning, before night either to kill or to be killed.

June 6. H.M. (as it is said) drunk together 18 Cans of Ale, and presently upon it fell sick, & after died; others in like manner surfeited: But above all, most terrible was the death of R.H.

Octob. 23. A strange and fearful relation of the ruin of a family, and of a stately house, of one who was exceedingly addicted to the sin of uncleanness; and now (excepting two of his brothers base born) there is not a man left of his name in all England; for which cause he conveyed his Estate to a stranger.

Texts.

Rev. 16.6, 7. They have shed the blood of Saints, and thou hast given them blood to drink. — Even so Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

Rev. 19.2. He hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, &c.

Gal. 5.19, 20, 21. Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, — Hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like.

Isa. 5.11, 14. We unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink, that continue until night, till the wine inflame them: — Therefore Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure, &c.

Prov. 5.8, 9, 10, 11. Remove thy way from the strange woman, lest thou give thine honor to others; — lest strangers be filled with thy wealth—and thou mourn at the last, when thy flesh and thy body are consumed.

Dispositions required in this case, and to be prayed for.

Rev. 18.4 Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

Rev. 18.20. Rejoice over her thou heaven, and ye holy Apostles and Prophets, for God hath avenged you on her.

Gal. 5.16. Walk in the Spirit, & ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh.

Gal. 5.24. They that are Christ's, have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts.

1 Cor. 6.20. Ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body, & in your Spirit, which are God's.

Prov. 23.20. Be not amongst wine-bibbers.

Luke 21.34. Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and so that day come upon you unawares.

Rom. 13.13. Let us walk honestly, as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness.

Ephes. 5.18. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit.

Coloss. 3.5, 6. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth, fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection: — For which things sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience.

1 Thess. 4.3. This is the will of God, even your Sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication.

§. 2. God's love to the Saints.

Experiences.

1642.

SEpt. 29. This night some Christians observed a night of Humiliation and Prayer for besieged Manchester; and Octob. 1. the Siege was raised: God's love was exceedingly manifested herein to the Saints, both within and without that prayed for Town. O let the mercy never be forgotten!

Decemb. 23. Thus they prayed for Blackburn, and Decemb. 24. the siege was raised thence.

Feb. 11. This evening one was desired to pray for Mr. L. sick child; and it was observed in the heat of Prayer, at the commending of its soul to God, the soul at that very expression left the body: Blessed be God for this Providence, and for the assistance of his spirit at so needful a time 1648.

August 7. A Letter from Mr. Tho:Shepherd, of the Indians receiving the Gospel in New England: He calls them, The precious first fruits of America to Jesus Christ; it much affected the hearts of many.

Aug. 22. many Miracles of mercies to England, to the County Palatine of Lancaster, and especially to Preston, by that glorious Victory over the Scots: The Army came to Preston in the very nick of time, by which means it both escaped Plundring and firing, the Enemy having threatened it both ways. Surely, God now answered Prayers, of which the LORD gave some signs the very day before, at a public Fast observed in Manchester.

Texts.

2 Chron. 7.14. If my people which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land.

2 Chron. 6.28, 29, 30. If their enemies besiege them in the cities of their land, — then what prayer shall be made by any man, — hear thou from heaven.

Isa. 65.24. And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer, and whilst they are yet speaking, I will hear.

Acts 7.59, 60. Lord Jesus receive my spirit: — and when he had said this, he fell asleep.

Isa. 60.5, 8. The abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee: — Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?

Judge. 20. 28,42,43,45. Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother, or shall I cease? And the Lord said, Go up, for tomorrow I will deliver them into thy hand: — So they turned their backs before the men of Israel— but the battle overtook them, — and chased them, and trod them down with ease over against Gibeah— and they gleaned of them in the high ways, and pursued after them to Gidom, and slew 2000.

Dispositions required in this case, and to be prayed for.

Psal. 28.6. Blessed be the Lord, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

Psal. 116. 1, 2. I love the Lord, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications, because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live.

Psal. 6.8. Away from me, ye workers of iniquity, God hath heard the voice of my weeping.

Ps. 66. 16, 17, 18, 19. Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul: I cried unto him with my mouth, and he was extolled with my tongue: If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me; but verily God hath heard me, he hath attended to the voice of my Prayer.

Isa. 54.1. Sing O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, & cry aloud, thou that didst not travel with child: for more are the children of the desolate, then the children of the married wife, saith the Lord.

Psa. 2.11. Rejoice with trembling.

Psal. 44.8. In God we boast all the day long, and praise thy name forever. Selah.

Jan. 24. I had a grieved and troubled heart, by reason of some opposition of wicked people; at night I read a feeling passage of Mr. Rogers on Judges 13. thus, — I have often thought it God's mercy, to keep the knowledge of such discouragements from them that are to enter into the Ministry, lest they should be deterred wholly from it, till by experience they be armed against it.

July 1. or thereabouts, one gave me a Relation of her sad desertion, thus— That one night as she sate by the fire, she thought she saw the ground open, and a gulf of fire appearing; whereupon she cried, I am damned, I am damned: If at any time she saw any fire, she supposed that she must go into it, and that the Devils would fetch her into it. Once wringing her hand•, she cried ou•, O what was I born into the world for? one standing by, answered, To glorify God; to whom she replied, You say true, for God shall be glorified in my damnation: If any offered to pray, or to read, she usually cried out, It was too late to pray for her; and they should not read that pure Word of God by her, for it belonged not to her. At last God appeared, and she felt marvelous comforts.

Texts.

2 Sam. 16.11, 12. Let him alone, and let him curse, for the Lord hath bidden him; it may be the Lord will look on my affliction, and that the Lord will requite good for his cursing this day.

Isa. 51.7. Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law; fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revilings.

Mat. 5.12. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the Prophets which were before you.

Psal. 37.34. Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

Psal. 38.13, 15. But I as a deaf man heard not, and I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth: for in thee Lord do I hope, thou wilt hear, O Lord my God.

Isa. 26.16, 17, 18. Lord, in trouble have they visited thee, they pour out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them, like as a woman with child that draweth near the time of her delivery: — We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind, we have not wrought any deliverance in the earth.

Lam. 1.20. Behold, O Lord, for I am in distress, my bowels are troubled, mine heart is turned within me, for I have grievously rebelled.

Psal. 34.8, 9. O taste and see that the Lord is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in him; fear the Lord, ye his saints.

§. 8. The breathings of the Spirit in others, and my own Soul.

Experiences.

1641.

MAY 20. This day the Lord cast one into a Spiritual, heavenly ravishing love-trance; he tasted the goodness of God, the very sweetness of Christ, and was filled with the joys of the Spirit above measure. O it was a good day, and blessed foretaste of heaven.

1644.

April 21. This day one received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, but found not in it the comfortable presence of Christ as at other times; it troubled his soul, and then falling to examination and prayer, the Lord was pleased at last to give him a sweet visit, and spiritual refreshing.

1645.

March 17. After some extreme torment, one voided a Stone; and suddenly the Spirit of Christ injected this motion into his heart, That the best cure for the stone in his heart, was to look on Christ, whose heart he pierced; and to consider that Christ looks on him in every action, and therefore that he should still carry as in his presence, that his heart should be still on God's eye 1646.

May 22. The Lord by his spirit wrought in one a depth of humiliation for sin, and yet he was troubled that he was not more troubled for it.

1646.

May 13. One performed indeed a good action, but he exceedingly overprized it; which he found afterwards.

May 15. This day a poor soul upon strict examination of his heart, found that formerly he had judged many sinful actions lawful and good, and had excused many actions though in themselves sinful: he felt not such a powerful operation of his corruptions before, and so through Pride and Ignorance thought better of himself then he had cause.

March 27. A poor soul woefully breaking such Vows as he had formerly made, he now saw the unsoundness and unsettledness of his deceiveable heart.

1648. May 29. One felt many strivings and contrary workings in his spirit; sometimes in prayer ravished, and sometimes heavy; sometimes full of comfort, and sometimes exceedingly dejected; sometimes patient, and other whiles impatient. O the sickleness and uncertainty of the heart in the course of piety.

Octob. 24. One many times, but now especially, took notice of the slipperiness of his heart in the very act of performance: Sometimes (said he) it slily steals away after idle and wandering imaginations: sometimes it lets in base thoughts of praise, vain glory, &c. sometimes it raiseth up many good and holy motions, meditations, desires and affections, which yet are nothing to the present performance, and therefore come not from the Spirit of grace, but from Satan. O cheating cozening heart!

Texts.

Rom. 7.21, 22, 23. I find a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me. I delight in the law of God after the inner man; but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind.

Gal. 6.12. As many as desire to make a fair show in the flesh, they constrain you—only lest you should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ.

Gal. 2.14. But (howsoever I yielded not) I saw that I walked not uprightly according to the truth of the Gospel

Psal. 69.5. O God, thou knowest my foolishness, and my sins are not hid from thee.

Jer. 17.9. The heart is deceitful above things.

2 Cor. 12.11. I am become a fool in glorying, ye have compelled me.

Mat. 26.58, 70. But Peter followed him afar off unto the high priests palace, and went in, and sate with the servants to see the end; —and saying (to the damsel that came unto him) I know not what thou sayest.

2 Cor. 11.7. That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly in this confidence of boasting.

2 Cor. 12.11. I am become a fool in glorying.

Gal. 1.13, 14, 15, 16. For ye have heard of my conversation in time past, — being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers. But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mothers womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood.

Rom. 7.5. What I would, that do I not, but what I hate, that do I.

Rom. 7.18, 19. To will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not: for the good that I would do, I do not, but the evil which I would not, that I do.

Gal. 5.17. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other.

Rom. 7.22. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind.

Jerem. 17.9. The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, who can know it?

Rom. 7.21. I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me.

Dispositions required in this case, and to be prayed for.

Rom. 7.24, 25. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Matth. 16.24. If any man will come after me, let him deny himself.

2 Cor. 1.12. Our rejoicing should be this, The testimony of our Conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we had our conversation in the world.

2 Cor. 11.3. But I fear lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

Hab. 1.13. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity.

Heb. 4.13. All things are naked and open to the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

2 Cor. 12.5. Of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.

2 Cor. 12.6. But now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

Heb. 10.23. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised.

Psal. 40.10. I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart: I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation, I have not concealed thy loving kindness.

1 Cor. 4.7. And what hast thou that thou didst not receive? now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?

Jer. 9.23. Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom: — 2 Cor. 10.17. But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

Phil. 3.12, 13, 14, 15. Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect; but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark, for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore as many as be perfect, be thus minded, and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this to you.

1 Cor. 16.13. Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.

Psal. 76.11. Vow, and pay unto the Lord your God.

Eccles 5.4 When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it, for he hath no pleasure in fools; pay that which thou hast vowed.

Rom. 7.24, 25. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord: So then, with my mind I myself serve the law of God, but with my flesh the law of sin.

Gal. 5.18. But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

Gal. 5. 24, 25. They that are Christ's, have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts: If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.

Gen. 15.11. And when the fowls came down upon the carcasses, Abram drove them away.

Mat. 26.41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation; the Spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

1 Pet. 4.7. But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.

CHAP. 6.

SECT. I. Of the nature of Evidences.

THE Scriptures set out the ways of discovering things spiritual, by sight and by taste: By taste, Experience is meant; and by sight, faith, and assurance of faith is intended: Peter speaks of tasting that the Lord is gracious; and Moses by faith saw him which is invisible: David joins both together, O taste and see that the Lord is good: Blessed is the man that trusteth in him. We have done with tasting, the next is seeing, which I call Assurance, or Evidence: Would we know what these Evidences are? I look at them as inherent and habitual observations of the Spirits actings in the Soul; of which the beloved Apostle speaks so often, Hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his Commandments.—We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the Brethren: — By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his Commandments:—These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life; and the Apostle Paul, Now we have received, not the Spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

SECT 2. Of the gathering of Evidences.

NOW for Evidences (as Experiences) it is our duty

- 1. To gather them.
- 2. To improve them.

1. For the gathering of them, observe we

- 1. A right season.
- 2. The right way.

1. Seasons must be observed; for when thick mists surround us, and black clouds cover us, we cannot so well judge either of ourselves, or of our own concernments: David in desertion refuseth to be comforted; he spilled all the cordials and physic that was brought him, he was not only void of comfort, but refused it: What? bring me promises (will a Soul then say) you may as well carry them to one in Hell; What? are these the Evidences of God's love? I see no such thing, here's nothing but scruples, and doubts, and flaws: O how apt is such a one at such a time, to forsake his own mercy, to take Satan's part, to plead against his own title, his own interest, in the best things he can have interest in: Now therefore, if we will draw a Book of Evidences, it is good to observe times, and such precious opportunities of comforts and refreshings as God vouchsafeth unto us.

2. The right way must be observed, and that consists—

In eying

- 1. The precious promises of Christ.
- 2. The inward graces unto which those promises are made.
- 3. The truth of those graces written in our hearts.
- 4. The testimony of the Spirit, witnessing with our spirits that we are the children of God.

1. We must eye the precious promises, and yet not so as that we must close with them, or rest on them alone, without seeking for, or closing with Christ in those promises; the Promise is but the Casket, and Christ the Jewel in it; the Promise is but the field, and Christ the Pearl hid in it, and to be chiefly looked at; the Promises are the means by which we are assured, not the things on which we are to rest: It were folly for a man to think he hath an interest in an Heiress Lands, because by some means or other he hath got the writings of her Estate into his hands; all know that the interest of the Lands goes with her person, and with relation of marriage to her, otherwise without a title to herself, all the writings may justly be fetched out of his hands again; so it is with the Promises, they hang all upon Christ, and without him there is no interest to be had in them.

2. We must eye the inward graces to which the Promises are made, not that we must be too much carried away with the signs of Christ in our hearts, and not after Christ himself; as pleasures that are lawful in themselves, may be unlawfully used, when our thoughts and intentions are too long, or too frequent, or too vehement in them; so that to dead the heart either to the present delighting in God, or pursuing after him with the joint strength of our Souls, as our only chiefest good; so an immoderate recourse unto signs (barely considered as such) is as unwarrantable, when thereby we are diverted, and taken off from a more constant actual exercise of daily thoughts of Faith towards Christ immediately, as he is set forth to be our Righteousness; and yet the minds of many are so wholly taken up with their own hearts, that as the Psalmist says of God, Christ is scarce in all their thoughts: Let these consider, what dishonor this will be to Christ, that his train and favorites (our Graces) should have a fuller court, and more frequent attendance from our hearts than himself, who is the King of glory: Now to rectify this error, the way is not wholly to reject all uses of such Evidences, but to order them rightly; as thus,—

1. Let not the use of graces go before, but follow after an address of Faith first renewed, and acts of Faith first put forth upon Christ himself: Thus whensoever we would go down into our own hearts, and take a view of our graces, let us be sure first to look wholly out of ourselves unto Christ, as our Justification, and to close with him immediately, as if we had no present or by-past grace to evidence our being in him; and if then (whiles Faith is thus immediately clasping about Christ) we find either present or forepast graces coming in, as handmaids, to attend and witness to the truth of this adherence unto Christ, this will derogate nothing from Christ's honor, or the Doctrine of Free-grace.

2. Let us in the closure of all, begin afresh to act Faith upon Christ immediately, with a redoubled strength; as Faith should give a leading to the use of Graces, so the sight of our Graces should be as a back-door to let Faith in again, to converse with Christ: Even as at the Sacrament, the elements of Bread and Wine, are but outward signs to bring Christ and the heart together, and then Faith lets the outward elements go, and closeth and treats immediately with Christ: So grace is an inward sign; and whiles men make use of it, only as of a bare sign to let them come in to Christ, and their rejoicing is not in it originally, but in Christ; their confidence is not upon it, but upon Christ: There is no danger at all in making such use of signs; for thus we make our Graces subordinate and subservient to Faith, whilst it makes Christ its Alpha and Omega, The beginning and the end of all. I know it is strongly objected against Christians, That many forget, and seldom use an entire, immediate close with Christ, whilst in the mean time the stream of their most constant thoughts and deepest intentions, are ever running upon their Graces, and the gracious workings thereof in duties towards Christ: Others on the contrary run all on Christ, despising the Graces of the Spirit, because (say they) Christ is all in all to them; so that if we ask such, Have you any Grace, change of heart? &c. tush, what do you tell them of Repentance, Holiness, &c. they have Christ, and that is sufficient; they have the substance, and what shall they now do with shadows of Ordinances, Duties, Graces? they have all in Christ, what should they look for Evidences, from any Graces inherent in themselves? O let those mourn over themselves, that have with much affection been seeking after Christ's benefits, peace of conscience, holiness of heart and life, but have not sought first and last to embrace, and have the person of the Lord Jesus Christ himself; and let such tremble, who in advancing Christ himself, and Free-grace, will needs abolish and despise those heavenly Graces which flow from him unto all the Elect: The Law of God is written on the heart of Christ, Heb. 10.7. and if ever he wraps us up in the Covenant of Grace, He will write his Law in our hearts also, Heb. 8.10. The right way for both, is to order their Evidences aright, and by this course Graces will have their due, and the life of Faith will still be actually maintained and kept upon wing, in its full ure and exercise towards Christ alone for Justification.

[Quest.] Why would not some men have Grace or Sanctification an Evidence?

[Answ.] In some it ariseth from their lusts, which they have a mind to live quietly in, desirous to keep their peace, and yet unwilling to forsake their lusts; and hence they exclude this Witness of water or Sanctification, to testify in the Court of Conscience; in others, I think it doth not arise from want of grace, but because the Spirit of Grace and Sanctification runs very low in them; it can speak little, and that little very darkly and obscurely for them, therefore they have no great mind that it should be brought in as any witness for them; others I think may have much Grace, yet for a time they cast it by as an Evidence unto them, because they have Experience how difficult and troublesome it is to find this Evidence, and when 'tis found, how troublesome to read it, and keep it fair, and thereby to have constant peace and quietness: And hence arise those speeches, Why do you look to your Sanctification? it is a blotted Evidence, you may have it today, and lose it tomorrow, and then where is your peace? These men, because they feel not that measure of Sanctification they would, do therefore vilify and deny that they have; because they feel a Law of sin in their members, leading them away captive, therefore they will not take notice of the Law of their minds, whereby that inner man delights in the Law of God, and mourns bitterly under the body of death, by which they might see with Paul, That there is no condemnation to such, Rom. 8.1. But I shall propose one thing to Conscience: Suppose thou wert now lying on thy Deaths-bed, comforting thyself in thy elected and justified estate; suppose the Spirit of God should now grapple with thy Conscience, and tell thee, If thou art justified, then art thou sanctified, 2 Thess. 2.13. Is it thus with thee? what wilt thou answer? if thou sayest, Thou art not sanctified, the Word and Spirit will bear witness against thee, and say, Thou art not then justified: If thou sayest, Thou knowest not, thou lookest not to Sanctification, or the fruits of the Spirit; they will reply, How then canst thou know or say thou art elected or justified? for it is a truth as clear as the Sun, None are justified, but they are sanctified, and if they are not sanctified, they are not justified: O bless God for any little measure of Sanctification, do not scorn or secretly despise this Spirit of Grace, knowing that without it thou shalt perish, but if thou hast it, thou hast an Evidence of thy part in Christ; surely Grace is the image of Christ stamped upon the Soul, and they who reflecting upon their Souls, see the image of Christ there, may be sure that Christ is theirs; Christ hath given all himself to those, to whom he hath given this part of himself.

3. We must eye the truth of those Graces thus written in our hearts: There is a great deal of counterfeit Grace in the world; a true Christian can have nothing, as discernible to others, but an hypocrite may have and do for the outward semblance as much as he; it is good therefore to try the truth of our Graces, and herein the rise, manner and end of our motions carry much manifestation in them. But of this more largely in the Duties of Self-Examination, and Receiving of the Lord's Supper.

4. We must eye the testimony of the Spirit, witnessing with our spirit, that we are the children of God: As God hath set up a frame of holiness in every Believer, so he hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit: The Graces of the Spirit are a real earnest of the Spirit, yet they are not always an Evidential earnest, therefore an earnest is often superadded to our Graces.

There is a threefold work of the Spirit;

- 1. To convey and plant Grace in the soul.
- 2. To act and help us to exercise the Graces which are planted there.
- 3. To shine upon and enlighten those Graces, or to give an earnest of those Graces.

This last work the Spirit fulfils two ways;

- 1. By Arguments and Inferences, which is a mediate work.
- 2. By presence and influence, which is an immediate work.

This the Apostle calls Witness-bearing, the Spirit brings in the witness of the water, and of the blood, which is his mediate work; but besides and above these, he gives a distinct witness of his own, which is his immediate work, and is in a way of peculiarity and transcendency, called, The witness of the Spirit: Hence that of the Apostle, We have received not the Spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we may know the things that are freely given us of God: The things freely given us, may be received by us, and yet the receipt of them not known to us; therefore the Spirit for our further consolation, doth (as it were) put his hand and seal to our receipts; whence he is said, To seal us up unto the day of Redemption.

[Quest.] But how may a man discern between the testimony of the Spirit, and the illusion of Satan?

[Answ.] I Answer, There is ever an harmony and sweet accord between the inward and outward testimony, between the Spirit of God, and the Word of God, and therefore we may discern the testimony of the Spirit by the Word. Thus in the Old Testament, all Revelations were to be examined by the Word, Deut. 13.1. Isa. 8.20. and in the New Testament our Savior tells us, That the Spirit shall lead you into all truth: How so? For he shall not speak of himself, but what he shall hear, that shall he speak: And what is that which the Spirit heareth, is it not that which is already contained in the Scriptures?

[Obj.] Nay then (say some) the credit of the voice of the Spirit, must depend upon the Word, but this must not be allowed, that anything should be of such credit, as to give credit to the Spirit.

[Sol.] I answer, Why not? the Scripture we know is already known and received as the Word of God, and therefore what cometh after it, must needs borrow credit from it: Indeed, the truth of what the Spirit speaketh doth not depend upon the Word, yet the credit of it doth.

[Obj.] But there is no more Evidences (say they) save only the revealing Evidence, the Spirit of Christ, and the receiving Evidence, which is Faith; the Spirit within thee saith, Thy sin is forgiven thee, and Faith receiveth it, and sits down satisfied; now here is thy Evidence, if thou hast only these two, thou hast thy portion, thou needest no more.

[Sol.] I Answer: 1. In this way, what profane person is there in this world, which may not conclude for himself, if he will but force upon himself this persuasion, That the Spirit saith it, and I believe it. 2. The revealing and receiving Evidence (i.) the Word of the Spirit, and the subscription of Faith, do not lay the ground of perfect peace, except there come in also the Evidence of inherent qualifications. For the better understanding of this, observe, That the Evidence of the Spirit is either mediate, when it enables the Soul to frame a Syllogism, wherein the minor, sc. the dictate of the Conscience, so far maketh to this Evidence, as our Graces are witnessed unto by the Spirit, 1 Cor. 2.12. or immediate, which is indeed without any such discourse of our conscience, and wherein our spirit is merely passive or receptive, an act of irradiation or impression of God's love, or (as some call it) a transcript of the decree of God's election set upon the Conscience; the Scripture calls this especially, A seal of the Spirit, which imports the mere passiveness of the heart to it, as of the wax to the seal; and this Evidence is solitary, without reference to Inherent Graces, yet howsoever, it excludes them not, nor cometh in till that mediate Evidence precede, Eph. 1.13. Hence I infer, the mediate testimony of the Spirit, that ordinarily concludes; for hic & ill, doth not speak according to the Word, but where a Text of Scripture hath a Quicun{que} for the Proposition, and a work of the sanctifying Spirit for the assumption; as thus, the Scripture saith, They that repent and believe:— They that are led by the Spirit of God, are the sons of God, Mark 1.15. Rom. 8.14. Hereupon the renewed and sanctified Conscience saith, I do repent and believe, I am led by the Spirit, therefore I am the child of God: Now this conclusion deduced, if afterwards the immediate testimony of the Spirit (manifested by an heavenly impression and irradiation upon the Soul) comes in with his attestation to confirm it, we may not doubt either of this or of the former testimony, because now they both speak according to the word and work of Grace in the heart; the ground of all this is in the nature of this testimony of the Spirit, which is rather an attestation, then a testimony; a secondary, not first deponent: Is not this rightly concluded from that of Rom. 8.16. The Spirit witnesseth with our Spirit?] where we have two witnesses joining together their testimonies to assert this truth, That we are the sons of God; two, I say, viz. our spirit, and the Spirit of God: The witness of our spirit (i.) of our conscience, is the first, the Spirit of God is the second: His work is not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, but 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to witness together with our Spirit; (i.) To confirm and ratify what that hath asserted; so that indeed the evidencing of this testimony of the Spirit, is after the testimony of our own Conscience; if this do not first speak and conclude, that other of the spirit speaks not at all: Now the testimony of the Conscience is the conclusion of the practical Syllogism, and the certainty of this conclusion depends upon the verity of the assumption, which mentioneth the work of Grace in the heart: So then, let it be the care of the Christian, to make good the verity of the assumption, that he may truly say, I do repent, I do believe, I am led by the Spirit; and this shall not only afford him comfort by the conclusion, but also (when the immediate testimony of the Spirit comes in with his attestation to confirm it) it will assure him, that he is not misled by the suggestion of Satan, but guided by the Spirit in this point of assurance: Surely (will he say) this is the Spirit of God, for now he speaks according to the Word of God, and according to the work of his own Grace within me.

SECT. 3. Of the improving of Evidences.

2. FOR the improving of Evidences, we must endeavor to produce that fruit, that frame, that disposition of heart which the Lord requires, directs and looks for in such a case, as the admiring of God's unsearchable Grace in Christ Jesus; a sober, moderate and self-denying use of our Evidence-comforts; a fiducial pleading of all the precious promises of the Gospel; a cheerful bearing of crosses, a holy contempt of Creature comforts, a bold approaching to the Throne of Grace upon all occasions, a valiant adventuring for Christ, longings for the appearings of the Lord Jesus, a confident contest with sin, a courageous resisting of temptations; I may add humility, love to God, fear of offending, zealous labors to advance Christ in the power of Grace, &c. all which are the fruits of legible Evidences in true Christian hearts: And our Evidences thus improved, then is the whole business Christianly managed indeed. But of these in the next Section.

SECT. 4. Of the Sanctification of Evidences in their several uses.

THE Sanctification of Evidences is manifested (as we said) by several Dispositions: To enlarge myself; No sooner is the Soul settled in its Scripture-persuasions, and Spirit-persuasions, that God hath translated it unto Christ, but immediately there follows,—

1. A deep admiring of God's unsearchable grace in the Lord Jesus Christ: Hath the Lord assured me that I am his? O my Soul, stand amazed at this endless, boundless love of the Lord; it is of his grace that ever I did bethink myself of the danger of my sinful course I was formerly in; it is of mere grace that the Lord Christ died for my sins, and rose again for my Justification; It is of his special grace, that the Spirit of Christ should thus whisper to my Spirit, Thy sins are forgiven thee. O the bountifulness and love of God to man! O I am swallowed up in this depth! It is a mystery which may astonish Angels, an Orient Pearl which out shines all the sparkling Jewels of the whole Creation. When the Jews heard of the Proclamation of King Cyrus, by which they were set free from their long and tedious captivity, they were wrapped with joy, they were like to men that rather dreamed, then possessed the thing that their souls longed after: How much more will Assurance that we are set free from the perpetual bondage of sin, and restored to the everlasting freedom of righteousness and life, make us wonder at the infinite wisdom; and unspeakable goodness of our heavenly Father? The Saints considering the goodness of God towards man in his creation, brake forth into holy admiration, Lord, what is man, that thou art mindful of him? The Prophet calling to mind long after, what God had done for his soul, cannot pass it over without servant praise, What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits towards me? How much more ought and will that man that is assured of God's favor and love towards him, forever admire the mighty power, unspeakable goodness, and rich mercy of God, who hath delivered him from the pit of hell, from the power of Satan, from the curse of the law, and from the waiting for of all the wicked Devils, and damned Spirits, and withal, hath translated him into the kingdom of his dearest Son? O needs must his heart be inflamed with love, and enlarged in praises!

2. A sober, moderate, and self-denying use of Evidence-comforts: I speak not herein against the frequent actings of grace, or against the simply looking on them, or comforting ourselves in them, especially under sad hours; but against the excessive, overflowing, over-loving way of Evidence-comforts, against the abuses thereof: which may be in these particulars; as 1. When we pore more frequently upon the comforts of our own gracious actings, then upon Jesus Christ and his death; when we live too much on the sight of a new-created birth in ourselves, and the image of the second Adam, though indeed we have Christ himself to live on. 2. When we wonder so much at what is done in ourselves by the grace of Christ, that we begin to make a mixture of self therewith, and immediately we sit down and write of ourselves an hundred instead of fifty. 3. When we think graces and comforts so rooted in ourselves, that we neglect God and Christ for the upholding, increase and exercise of them. 4. When we rest upon, and too much confide in the power of inherent grace, former revelations, and witnesses of God's Spirit, which are all but creatures, acts of God upon us, and in us; and therefore in doing thus, we make an Idol of inherent grace, and put that trust in it, which we should repose in the Lord alone: and so, as the Lord speaketh, We go a whoring after our own hearts. Now all these flow from the corruption of our nature, and not from the nature of assurance; the product of true Evidences is, a praising of God for them, and a comforting ourselves in them, as in the fruit of his eternal and unchangeable love: Our rejoicing is this, even the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, we have had our conversation in the world; but not a making of them the only or chief grounds of our hope and comforts, for God in this case may leave us to ourselves, That no flesh should rejoice in his presence.

3. A fiducial pleading of all the precious Promises of the Gospel: And hath the Lord indeed given me a kiss of his mouth, a sure sign of his love? Why then, O my soul, arise, and lay hold on all the Promises, which God of his mercy in Christ doth offer in the Gospel: Be not dismayed by reason of thy unworthiness, for the Promise is of grace, freely offered, and freely given to them that be most unworthy in their own eyes: Thou art unworthy of the least crumb of Mercy, but of the riches of his grace God hath given thee the Promises of highest advancement, if thou wilt but embrace them. I will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty: — And it shall be in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, that there they shall be called, The children of the living God: — He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my Son. Surely Lord, I will lay hold on these promises: I will yet draw nigher to thee, and put my trust in thy mercy; I will henceforth fly to the throne of Grace, to get my title made surer and surer unto my conscience. O Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief. Thus the soul pleads with God, and God is well pleased with such pleadings; the soul is assured of salvation, and yet prayeth in the midst of assurance, Who am I, Lord, that thou shouldst make such ample and free promises unto thy poor servant? Of thy free mercy, and according to thine own heart hast thou spoken all these great things, to make thy servant know them; and now O Lord God, establish, I beseech thee, the word that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant.

4. A cheerful bearing of crosses: Hence Paul eying that object of assurance, that weight of glory, he counts all his afflictions light, momentary; he sung in the dungeon, and reckoned it a special favor to be a sufferer for Christ: The fire of divine love so inflames Christians in this condition, that much water of Persecution cannot quench it; yea, such is the nature of this fire, that it feeds on those waters, and grows more fervent by that which would quench it; no wonder: it is but a light affliction, but it causeth unto us a more excellent and eternal weight of glory; and parts of this glory the Christian now receiveth aforehand, as earnest of the whole: This makes him to rejoice (even in the midst of crosses and losses) with a joy unspeakable and glorious: And hence it is that a Christian despiseth the sufferings for the joys, yea, the sufferings are so overcome by the joys, that the sufferings do not turn his joys into sadness, but his assurance turns the sadness of his sufferings into joys, for he rejoiceth in his sufferings.

5. An holy contempt of Creature-comforts: This is another fruit of assurance, it will make a man endeavor to rid himself from such feculent matters here, to contemn them, to trample them under his feet, and out of the greatness and goodness of his spirit, ambitiously to long after the presence of the Lamb. Do I speak or write to the denizens of Heaven? tell me then, you that carry the Evidences of Heaven in your hands and hearts, is it not thus with you? hath not God wrought your hearts to this frame and divine disposition? if not, he will do it first or last; for citizens of Heaven set not much by the best things on earth, when they are themselves, and act like their Savior. It was a good speech of an Emperor, whatsoever he himself was, You (said he) gaze on my purple Robes, and golden Crown, but did you know what cares are under them, you would not take them up from the ground for them; but suppose there had been no cares but pleasures in them, yet Moses when he had this assurance of Faith, He refused to be called the son of Pharaohs daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sins for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of reward.

6. A bold approaching unto the throne of Grace upon all occasions: Because we are assured, therefore we beg anything of God with greater affiance; Prayer is nothing else but the stream and river of Faith, and an issue of the desire of that which we joyfully believe: Our Savior Christ knew that his sheep should never perish, and yet he prayeth, Holy Father, keep them in thy name: Paul knew assuredly, that the Lord would deliver him from every evil work, yet without ceasing he prayeth to be delivered from evil. Assurance adds fervency to prayer; the firmer our Faith, the more free is our access, with boldness and confidence to the throne of Grace, the more fervently and boldly can we pray, Abba Father: Assurance hearkeneth what the Lord speaketh, and speaketh back again in fervent groans and desires; it hath the promise of God, and therefore is bold to pray, and will not keep silence, Thou, O Lord of Hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed to thy servant, saying, I will build thee an house, therefore hath thy servant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee; nay, Assurance puts on the Soul to ask anything it wants; these be the times when the Spirit moveth the waters, therefore, Now (saith Assurance) cast in your Petition, and whatsoever grief it hath in it, you shall be cured of it: Now the King holds out his golden Scepter, And therefore (saith Assurance) let the Queen come in boldly with her request, though it be for a Kingdom; yea, this King likes it best, if first we seek a Kingdom, and the Righteousness inseparably annexed to it, for then we shall have all other things with it.

7. A valiant adventuring for Christ: Is a man assured of God's love in Christ? such a one fears not any troubles, he knows all comes through his Fathers hands, and that man and Devil cannot do what they would, and therefore he goes on comfortably today, tomorrow, and to the end; he is like one of David's Worthies, or like David himself, that having got experience, fears nothing; he walks up and down the world like a Giant, higher by head and shoulders than most men, he holds in his hand a strong shield, that the Devil himself cannot pierce, but it queneth his fiery darts: He gets a victory against the world by his Faith, and Samson-like, breaks all bands of temptation as straw, he leaps over a wall, breaks a bow of steel, lays heaps upon heaps.

8. An earnest longing for the appearing of the Lord Jesus: As he adventures and conquers in life, so he can think of death, without any prevailing fear; he can say with Paul, I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ; and with Stephen, Lord Jesus receive my spirit; and with the Spouse in the Canticles, Come away, my Beloved, and be thou like a Roe, or to a young Hart upon the Mountains of spices. It is the voice of Assurance, My life is hid with thee, O Christ, and therefore appear quickly, my Life, my Jesus, that I may quickly appear with thee in glory; let the day of gladness quickly come, wherein both soul and body, even my whole self, may eternally enjoy thee: I cannot be still put off with these tastes and earnest, my love and longing is rather inflamed by them to the fruition of thee: The very voice of these earnest is, Come; yea, they scarce know any other language but Come, therefore again and again they say, Come; yea, after they have said, Come, as if that were not enough, they say, Come quickly; and now, what can the Soul say more to her Lord? only as before she still said, Come, so now will she still say, Amen; even so, Amen and Amen.

9. A loathing of sin, indignation for sin, contest with sin, and a continual watch against the baits and allurements of sin: How can it be conceived that a man should be assured of the pardon and forgiveness of many sins, but it will work a greater loathing and detestation of sin, unfeigned abasement for former weakness, and continual watchfulness, to keep himself pure for the future, that he lose not his comfort, nor dishonor God, who hath done so great things for him? It is Satan's cavil against the Saints, That Assurance begets security: Assuredly, if it be true Assurance, it will through Christ mortify our lusts, and quicken us to more sincere, settled and constant obedience; nor is it possible that a Christian should hold his assurance any longer, than whiles he follows, cherishes and feeds in himself this heavenly affection.

[Obj.] But some may object, If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves:—Who can say his heart is clean?—There is no man just, that sinneth not: — And how can these two stand together, Sin and Assurance?

[Sol.] I Answer, Gross sins, grievous sins, are not compatible with the hope and assurance of a Christian, especially reigning sins committed with delight, or indulgence: This spot is not the spot of God's children, and yet such sins as we call infirmities, blemishes, remainders of Original corruption, under which the Regenerate must labor so long as they live: These are not altogether incompatible with Assurance, nor do they hinder the lively workings of faith, in receiving the promises; it is good therefore to distinguish betwixt sins, which administer matter of humiliation, and such as may give occasion to the Soul to question its Regenerate estate: As — 1. There are sins of simple ignorance, unavoidable infirmity, sins of forgetfulness, inconsideration, passion, pettishness, inordinate fear, whereto there is no advised consent, and these may stand with Assurance. But 2. There are foul sins, enormous crimes (not to speak of sins willfully committed with full consent, delight and contentment, to the utter extinguishing of the Spirit of Grace, which shall never befall them that are called according to the purpose of God) and those sins hinder Assurance, so that the sinner cannot for the present lay actual claim to any one privilege of Grace formerly enjoyed; I deny not but he may still retain his right and title to eternal life, but he is in this condition suspended from actual claim, until he rise again by Repentance, and so recover not a new right and title, but a new claim by virtue of the old title.

10. A courageous resisting of doubts, scruples, temptations; not but that doubts will come after assurance: We see the Sun is one day bright, and the next day is covered; Evidences may be lost, though interest be continued: yet Assurance and Evidences rightly improved and sanctified to us, may help us against all the shakings, and shiverings, and doubtings of the Soul, and of their own nature they do resist them: Hence the best cure and remedy of doubtings, is to perfect and strengthen our assurance; the more purely the fire burns, the less smoke it hath; when the light and heat of the Sun are greatest, then the clouds and misty vapors are fewest: Assurance and Doubting are like a pair of scales, where the weight of the one bears away the other.

[Quest. 1] But how should assurance be strengthened?

[Answ.] 1. Go we to God, for God who gave it can strengthen it: Every grace depends upon him, not only for birth, but also for complement; his strength must lead us on from strength to strength, and therefore if we would have strong assurance, we must go to a strong God, and beg of him for it: O Lord (say) my knowledge is dim, lighten that candle, open mine eyes yet more and more, that I may see thy truth; my assents many times shake, but do thou establish and confirm my heart in thy truths; my embracings, applications, are very trembling, and broken, and interrupted, but do thou guide my eye to look upon my Savior, and do thou guide my hand to lay hold on him, do thou enable my will and affections, to embrace all the goodness of thyself, of thy Christ, of thy Word; my faith is but weak, but Lord, I would have more faith, even full assurance of faith, and thou canst work it, O do it for thy weak servant.

2. Be in the way of strength: There are ways in which God doth reveal his arm (i.) his Ordinances; he that is too good for the Ordinances, will ever be too weak in his faith. One thing (could David say) have I desired of the Lord, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life: and to what end? that I may behold the beauty of the Lord, and visit his Temple: what this beauty is, he himself expounds, We thought of thy loving kindness in the midst of thy Temple: The loving kindness of God, his mercy and countenance upon his own servants, that is the Lord's beauty, that is it which makes him amiable in his own people.

3. Let assurance know its privileges, & then it will grow stronger. Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people: they who descended from the blood of Abraham had more privileges than others, and have not they greater who come of the blood of Christ? The Priests of the Law had singular exemptions, and Kings of all men are most highly privileged; and do Believers come short, who are not profane, civil, typical Priests, but royal Priests? who are not Priests only, nor Kings only, but both Kings and Priests: A royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people. If we did once thoroughly know our privileges, the grants of favor, the free access, the singular acceptance we have with God in and through the Lord Jesus Christ, how might we keep down our fears, and our doubtings, and with fullest eagerness embrace our God, our Christ, our Promises.

4. Observe, and call to mind our former Experiences of God's favor and love: I will remember (saith David) the years of the right hand of the most High (i.) the years and times of my life, wherein I had sweet experiences of God's mercies and love: why, what of that? he tells you, Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice. But of this point in the last Chapter.

[Quest. 2] But what if after all these means used, no Sun appears, our Evidences are quite lost, God suspends all comforts?

[Answ.] In such a case we must endeavor to live above Evidences, by working the soul to close with, and depend upon an absolute Promise: To this purpose it pleaseth the Father of Mercies; sometimes to convince and persuade the soul, that he will supply what is wanting, heal backslidings freely, work both will and deed fully, whereby he sustains the soul in life, and raiseth it up as it were from the grave of despair and dismal distress. Thus David expected to receive his Assurance, when he cried, Why art thou cast down, O my soul? — Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance: And if at our first conversion, when we had nothing but the offer of Free-grace to look upon, we cast ourselves on God, why not now, when our Assurances wholly fail?

SECT. 5. The Evidences of a weak unworthy servant of Christ, laid down according to the Rules aforementioned.

The life of all we have said, is Practice: Hence I make bold to lay down the Evidences of a poor creature, not worthy to be named, much less to have his Name written in the Book of Life.— He gives them thus:—

1. The Texts containing Promises.	2. The Graces to which Promises are made; or my particular Evidences.	3. The truth of these graces examined	4. The testimony of the Spirit.
	After acts of faith first put forth upon Christ himself, and closing with him immediately, as if I had no present or by-past grace to evidence my being in him: I now bring in these graces or workings of the Spirit of Christ in me, as handmaids to attend, and to witness to the truth of this	See in the duty of Self-examination and Receiving of the Lord's Supper. His Evidences thus gathered in, the prime and especial work of the soul is, the sanctification of Evidences in their several uses. But of that before, Sect. 4. And thus much of Evidences.

CHAP. VII.

SECT. 1. Of the nature and kinds of Meditation.

*ME*ditation is a deep and earnest musing upon some point of Christian instruction, to the strengthening of us against the flesh, world and Devil, and to the leading us forward towards the Kingdom of Heaven; or Meditation is a steadfast bending of the mind to some spiritual matter, discoursing of it with others, till we bring the same to some profitable issue.

Now this Meditation is either sudden or set, occasional, or solemn, and deliberate.

1. Occasional or Extemporal Meditation, ariseth from such things as God by his providence offers to our eyes, ears and senses. When I consider the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and Stars which thou hast ordained: What is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man, that thou visitest him? This Meditation of David's was occasional.

2. Deliberate, set, or solemn Meditation, ariseth out of our own hearts, when purposely we separate ourselves from all company, and go apart to perform this exercise more thoroughly, making choice of such matter, time and place as are most requisite thereunto: Now this Meditation is double, for it is either conversant about matters of knowledge, for the finding out of some hidden truth, or about matters of affection, for the enkindling of our love unto God: The former of these two we leave to the Schools and Prophets, the latter we shall search after, which is both of larger use, and such as no Christian can reject, as either unnecessary, or over-difficult.

SECT. 2. The Circumstantials of Meditation.

The circumstantials of our Meditation, are time and place; I shall add to these (though I cannot call it a circumstance) the subject matter, which by way of preparation to the duty we may take notice of.

1. For the time: No time can be prescribed to all men; for neither is God bound to hours, neither doth the contrary disposition of men agree in one choice of opportunities; some find their hearts most in frame in the morning; others learn wisdom of their reins in the night season; others find Isaac's time the fittest time, who went out in the evening to mediate: No practice of others can prescribe to us in this circumstance; it is enough that we set apart that time wherein we are aptest for that service.

2. For place: We judge solitariness and solitary places, fittest for Meditation, especially for set and solitary Meditation: Thus we found Jesus meditating alone in the Mount, John the Baptist in the desert, David on his bed, Daniel in his house, Isaac in the field. The Bridegroom of our Soul, the Lord Jesus Christ, is bashful (said Bernard) and never comes to his meditating Bride in the presence of a multitude: Hence was the Spouses invitation, Come my beloved, let us go forth into the field, let us lodge in the villages, let us go up early to the vineyards, let us see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grapes appear, and the pomegranates put forth, there will I give thee my loves: We must in this case abandon worldly society, both outward and inward: Many sequester themselves from the visible company of men, which yet carry a world within them; both these societies are enemies to this Meditation.

3. For the matter of our Meditation, it must be Divine and Spiritual; viz. God's Word, or some part thereof: It is woeful to think how some meditate on sin, contrary to God's Word, studying to go to Hell with the least noise of the world; others bend their thoughts only on the search of natural things; as, The motion of the Heavens, the reason of the ebbing and flowing of the Seas, the kinds of simples that grow out of the earth, and the Creatures upon it, with all their qualities and operations; but in the mean while, the God that made them, the vileness of their nature, the danger of their sin, the multitude of their imperfections, the Savior that bought them, the Heaven that he bought for them, &c. are as unregarded, as if they were not: The matter of our Meditation must be something divine; I remember thee on my bed, and meditate on thee: — I will meditate of all thy works, and talk of thy doings.

SECT 3. Of occasional Meditation.

Occasional Meditation ariseth from such things as God by his providence offers to our eyes, ears or senses: Examples of this sort are infinite, for a taste take these few:

1. Upon our first waking in the morning, meditate how the Lord can at the last day as easily raise up our dead bodies from the dust, as he hath now awaked us out of sleep; and as now we rise from the grave our bed, so then we must arise from that bed our grave.

2. Upon sight of the morning sky, meditate, That if one Sun make so bright a morning, what a shining morning will that be when Christ (the Son of Righteousness) shall appear, attended with all his bright Angels, Archangels, Cherubims, Seraphims, Bodies and Souls of Saints? When there shall be as many Suns on a day, as there are stars on a bright winters night.

3. Upon the occasions of the day, meditate, how the Lord seeth us, and understands all our thoughts, and is acquainted with all our ways: The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in behalf of them, whose heart is perfect towards him, and therefore we should do all things as in the awful presence of God.

4. Upon our particular callings we may accordingly meditate; as—

1. A Magistrate, thus, As I judge others, so will the Lord judge me; it will not be long ere death arrest, and I must go without bail: Me thinks I hear that sound in mine ears, I have said ye are gods; but ye shall die like men.

A Minister, thus, The time I have to spend is not mine, but the people's: Me thinks whiles I idle it away, I hear them crying after me, To your closet, and there pray for us that we perish not; study for us, that we may learn of you how to walk in his paths; for if we perish, and you will not give warning, then must our blood be required at your hands.

3. A Tradesman, thus, What is that balance in my shop, but a memento of distributive and commutative Justice? if my dealings be not just to a point or pin, I shall then be weighed in God's balance, and be found too light: A false balance is an abomination to the Lord, and so is a true balance, without true dealing with all men.

4. An Husbandman, thus, As I sow in spring, so I reap in harvest, and God hath said, He that soweth iniquity, shall reap vanity, but they that sow in tears, shall reap in joy: Lord, whiles I sow in tears, give me April showers of Repentance, that when the harvest comes, and the Angels must reap, they may gather me into thy barn of Heaven.

5. A Soldier, thus, What trade is this I follow? what devices are these I carry about me to murder afar off? whose image do I bear in this killing disposition, but his whose true title is, The Destroyer? I had need look about me that I be in a righteous cause; I am sure, all the titles of God sound of mercy and gracious respects to man, God the Father is his Maker and Preserver, God the Son his Savior and Redeemer, God the Holy Ghost his Sanctifier and Comforter: O Lord, that my enemies may be thy enemies, and my cause, thy cause, or that I may leave this calling.

5. Upon night approaching, meditate, That seeing our days are determined, and the number of our months are with the Lord, and our bounds are appointed, which we cannot pass, that one day more of our limited time is gone and past, and we are now nearer to our end by a day, then we were in the morning.

6. Upon occasion of lights brought in, meditate, If the light of a poor candle be so comfortable, which is nothing but a little inflamed air, gathered about a moistened snuff, What is the light of that glorious Sun, the great Lamp of Heaven? but much more, what if the light of that infinitely resplendent Son of Righteousness, who gave that light to the Sun, and that Sun to the world?

4. Upon the sight of a bright sky full of stars, meditate, How worthy a Science it is to see and observe those goodly spangles of light above our heads, their places, qualities, motions: But the employment of a Christian is far more noble, Heaven is open unto him, and he can look beyond the veil, and see further above those stars, then it is thither, and there discern those glories that may answer to so rich a pavement: I see indeed those glittering glorious stars, with my bodily eyes; but I see withal by the eyes of my faith, that this is but the floor of that goodly fabric, the outward curtain of that glorious tabernacle: I see within that incomprehensible light, which none can see and not be blessed: How many are these stars before my eyes? but Oh! what millions of pure and majestic Angels? what millions of happy and glorified Souls? how many mansions of my Father (one of them being my own) do I see by Faith? Come down no more (O my soul) after thou hast once pitched upon this heavenly glory; or if this flesh force thy descent, be unquiet till thou art let loose to immortality.

Thus from our uprising to our down-lying, we may upon every object presented to our senses, frame a sudden or occasional Meditation.

SECT. 4. Of deliberate Meditation, and the parts thereof.

DEliberate Meditations arise, and are wrought out of our own hearts: Now every such Meditation consists of these parts, The - Entrance.

- Proceedings.
- Conclusion.

1. The entrance is either

- Common.
- Proper.

1. The common entrance is some short, yet pithy prayer, that God may guide and direct us therein, by the gracious assistance of his holy Spirit.

2. The proper and particular entrance, is the choice of some theme or matter, and a settling of ourselves on that which we have chosen.

2. The proceedings of our Meditation are in this method:

- 1. To begin in the understandings.
- 2. To end in the affections.

1. Concerning that part which is in the understanding, it is good to keep that course which the common places of Natural and Artificial Reason do lead us unto: as to consider the matter of our Meditation, 1. In its description: 2. In its Distribution: 3. In its Causes: 4. In its Effects: 5. In its Use: 6. In its Properties: 7. In its Opposites: 8. In its Comperates: 9. In its Scriptural Testimonies; only in these heads observe these cautions:

1. That we be not too curious in prosecution of these Logical places; the end of this Duty is not to practice Logic, but to exercise Religion, and to kindle Piety and Devotion: Besides, every theme will not afford all these places; as when we meditate of God, there is no room for Causes and Comparisons: it will therefore be sufficient, if we take the most pregnant and voluntary places.

2. That if we stick in the disposition of any of these places (as if meditating of sin, we cannot readily meet with material and formal causes) we rack not our minds too much with the inquiry thereof, but quietly pass over to the next.

2. Concerning that part which is in the affection, it is good to follow that course which the common places of Rhetoric do lead us unto: These are six: viz.

- 1. A relish of what we have meditated on.
- 2. A complaint, bewailing our wants of this relish.

- 3. A wish of the soul for what it complaineth to want.
- 4. A confession of our inabilities, to effect what we wish.
- 5. A petition for the supply of our inabilities.
- 6. A confidence of obtaining what we petition for.

3. The conclusion of the work contains these parts:

- 1. A thanksgiving.
- 2. A recommendation of our souls and ways to God.

I shall add no more, but only wish the soul thus concluding, to lift up the heart and voice to God, in singing a Psalm answerable to its disposition, and matter meditated on; and by this means shall the soul close up itself with much sweetness and Spiritual contentment.

SECT. 5. An Example of the souls love to Christ.

AFTER entrance by Prayer, and choice of this theme, the soul may proceed thus:—

1. Description.

O my soul, what is this souls love to Christ, whereof thou studieth? It is a Spiritual fire kindled from above in the hearts of his darlings, towards their Bridegroom the Lord Jesus Christ.

Or it is a sparkle of that fire of the holy Ghost, struck into the tinder of our souls, which immediately smokes, and sends up the flame thitherward, whence it first had its rise: Or, it is the souls rest or reposal of itself in the bosom of Christ, with content unspeakable and glorious, being persuaded of her interest in that song of the Spouse, I am my well-beloveds, and my well-beloved is mine. This, O my soul, is the nature of thy love to Christ.

2. Distribution.

There is a twofold love, one of desire, which is an earnest longing after that which we believe would do us much good, if we could attain to it; another of complacency, when having attained that which we desire, we hug and embrace it, and solace ourselves in the fruition of it: Now the first of these loves is an Introduction to the second, and both of them (in relation to Christ) issue from a proportionable act of faith precedent: 1. That affectionate longing, and thirsty love, wherewith we pant and gasp after Christ, proceeds from the first acts of faith, whereby we assent to all Gospel-promises, as true and good in themselves, and better unto us than anything in the world, could we but once be assured that they belong unto us. 2. That other love of complacency, when (with the Psalmist) we return unto our rest, because the Lord hath dealt bountifully with us; when sweetly we repose ourselves in the lap of our Savior, with content unspeakable, and full of glory, it proceeds from the last act of faith, whereby we are actually persuaded by those welcome whistlers of the Spirit of adoption, that certainly Christ is our Savior, & that our debts are cancelled to the very last mite; only observe (O my soul) these two things of this love: 1. That 'tis subject to all variations or changes, ebbings and flowings of that persuasion; sometimes in a violent temptation, or in a sensible desertion, our persuasion fails, and so this love of complacency is either stupefied, or it falls back into that thirsty anxious love of desire. 2. That this love of complacency admits of degrees, proportionable to the degrees of our persuasion; if that be clear and strong, this love is more cheerful and pleasant; if that be weak and obscure, this love is more cold, with many fears and jealousies,—whence this love of complacency may not unfitly be subdivided into an Ordinary and Heroical love; ordinary love proceeds from a weak degree of that last act of Faith; Heroical love springeth from a more eminent and transcendent pitch of persuasion, concerning our own reconciliation in particular: It is called Ordinary, because most Christians (though effectually called) do ordinarily feel but such a timorous love in themselves; it is called Heroical, because it is constantly only in such, as either besides the evidence of the Word and Spirit, have had some special revelation to put them out of all doubt, concerning their estate to Godward; or in such as by a certain close walking with God, have been long exercised in a Christian course, have often entertained Christ Jesus at supper in their hearts, and habituated themselves into a more familiar acquaintance with that holy Spirit, which brings all the good news from Heaven, to those diligent souls which carefully wait for it.

3. Causes.

But whence is this love, O my soul? The Apostle is plain, We love him, because he first loved us: When the Spirit of God in the promises lets in some intimation of God's love into the soul, then she loves him again: That expression of the Psalmist, The Lord will command his loving kindnesses in the day time, is pertinent to this; it is a phrase taken from Kings and Princes, and great Commanders in the field, whose words of Command stand for Laws: so the Lord sends out his loving kindness, saying, Go out, my everlasting love and kindness, take a Commission from me, go to that humble, thirsty, hungry soul; go and prosper, and prevail, and settle my love effectually upon him; I command thee do it: It may be at the first visit, the poor soul cries out, What, I love? What, I mercy? will Christ Jesus accept of me? Oh, I am the worst of sinners; could I pray, or perform duties as some others do, I might have some hopes of mercy; but what? is it possible that the Lord of Heaven should love me? Yes, thee, even thee, saith the Lord: go out my loving kindness to that poor soul, break open the doors of that weary weltering heart, knock off those bolts of carnal reason, and all base arguments, and clear and warm that broken, bruised, humbled soul, and tell him from me, That his sins are pardoned, his sighs and prayers are heard, and he shall be saved; I charge thee do the work before thou comest in again: Here, O my soul, is the immediate cause, God's love thus affecting the heart, it breeds a love in the heart to God again: I drew them (saith God) with the cords of a man, even with the bands of love.

4. Effects.

And what are the effects (O my soul) of this love? O this love hath many holy gracious effects, it will make the soul to rejoice in Christ's presence, to grieve in his absence, to please Christ in all things, to desire union with Christ, though it never see good day, though it have no other wages; to bestow readily and freely anything it hath on the Lord Jesus Christ, to deny itself, or anything that may come in competition with Christ, to part with her Isaac's, her dearest things, To account all things as dung and loss, that she may win Christ, to be content with nothing, but love again from the party beloved, to be ever and anon thinking and musing on the Lord Jesus Christ, to be ordinarily and frequently speaking of Christ: Love is full of eloquence in the praises of her beloved, so is the souls love to the Lord Jesus Christ. O how that Spouse of Christ runs on in a description of his rarities and transcendencies, My beloved is white and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousand (or as it is more elegantly in the Original, He is an ensign-bearer among ten thousand)—He is altogether lovely, or he is all-entire, he is all composed of loves: Betwixt those Verses [10. and 16.] there's a description of Christ, so stuffed with choicest delicacies of expression, that thou canst not match it (O my soul) out of any of those Poets which have flown highest in amorous inventions; at last she concludes with a triumphant Epiphonema, This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem: Nay, love will make the soul not only speak, but do anything for the Lord Jesus Christ: O then she cries, How may I please Christ better? what duty must I do? and what sins must I avoid? if there be any of the bedchamber of the Bridegroom, tell me I beseech you, how may I hear, and pray, and walk, and approve my heart to my Christ and King, that nothing may displease him. Lastly, love will make the soul suffer for Christ, and to rejoice in such sufferings; it is a fire that much water of persecution cannot quench; nay, it feeds on those waters, and grows hotter by them: As opposition riseth against it, so it riseth against opposition, yea, it riseth by it, until it rise above it.

5. Opposites.

Now what are the contraries to this love of Christ, but an hatred of Christ? One would wonder there should be such a thing in the world, as hatred of Christ: But why then should the Apostle threat, If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema, Maranatha; (i.) If any man hate Christ, let him be accursed with all manner of execrations or curses in the most desperate manner, expecting due vengeance from the Lord, when he cometh with his holy millions, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly: No question there is a world of wicked men, that are under this curse; I speak not of poor Indians, and other Savages of the unchristian world, whose souls are over-clouded with the blackest mists of irreligion, that the prince of darkness can possibly enwrap them in, who come into the world, not knowing wherefore, and go out of the world, not knowing whither; an heavy case, which cannot sufficiently be bewailed with an ocean of tears and blood; but of those that live within the paradise of the Christian Church, that have nothing to distinguish them from those Indian Miscreants, but an outward conformity, outward formalities, the charity of other men, and their own slight imaginations: As 1. All open enemies, gross, heinous and grievous sinners, swearers, blasphemers, drunkards, railers against God, his Ministers, his People, these and the like love sin more then Christ, they love the Devil more then Christ. 2. All fawning Hypocrites, that profess (it may be) a marvelous affectionate love unto the Lord Jesus Christ, but they are inward haters of Christ.

6. Comparisons.

But to inflame thy love (O my soul) upon Christ, consider whereunto it is like, or to what it may be compared: The Scripture hath described the outgoings of such a Soul, 1. By the parched ground: My soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee, in a dry and thirsty Land, where no water is. 2. By the pantings of a chased Hart: As the Hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. 3. By the longings of a teeming woman: I have longed for thy salvation, O Lord, and thy Law is my delight. 4. By the fainting and swooning of one that is in good earnest sick of love: I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, if you find my Beloved, that ye tell him I am sick of love: Such souls are commonly cast into an agony, into pangs of love, that love Christ indeed.

7. Testimonies.

And doth not the Scripture express these loves of the soul to the Lord Jesus? If God be your Father (said Christ to the Jews) then will ye love me:—and, Thy name is as an ointment poured forth, therefore do the Virgins love thee:—and, We will remember thy love more than wine; the upright love thee:—We love him (saith the Apostle) because he loved us first: I will love thee (saith David) O Lord my strength:—I will cause those that love me (saith Wisdom) to inherit substance:—He that hath my Commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me, and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and I will manifest my love unto him:—Look upon me (saith David) and be merciful unto me, as thou usest to do unto those that love thy name.

Thus for Information of Judgment, now for the stirring up (O my soul) of thy affections.

1. Relish.

O divine love! O the pleasures, O the joys of this love! O honey and sweetness itself! it is the love of Christ, that sets a price on all other Duties; the least service (even a cup of cold water, or a widows mite) if it have but a grain of this love in it, is a most acceptable sacrifice to God; it is love to Christ that hath the Promises of this life, and that which is to come: I will cause those that love me, to inherit substance, and I will fill their treasures;—yea, there is a crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him; it is love to Christ, that by Christ assures to us all the glorious privileges, flowing from Christ, as Reconciliation, Adoption, Forgiveness of sins, Justification, Righteousness, Wisdom, Sanctification, Redemption, Possession of all things, All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours, and you are Christ's, and Christ is God's. O who can think of this love of Christ, and not be ravished therewith! Had I a thousand hearts to bestow on Christ, they were all too little, they were never able to love him sufficiently; it is the Lord Jesus that is all strength, and all wisdom, and all honor, and all beauty; the fountain of all graces, and virtues, and qualities in men: whatsoever grace, or virtue, or quality is in us, they are but so many rays that come from this Sun of righteousness; he is fairer then the children of men, and grace eminently is poured into his lips.

2. Complaint.

But alas! where is my soul? how dull is my understanding? my affection? how careless, how peevish is my soul, in a business which concerns it so much? how prejudicate is my opinion? how vain are my conceits? O my soul! how ignorant art thou of the incomparable worth, and delightful sweetness that is in the Lord Jesus? how secute, and sleepy, and senseless art thou? O this hard heart of mine! thou canst mourn for losses and crosses of this life, but for the loss of Christ, thou canst not mourn one jot: Didst thou, O my soul, truly affect Christ, the pillow would be washed with thy tears for thy want of Christ, and for thy want of assurance: Woe, and alas, that my mind is taken up with a confluence of worldly lusts, worldly cares, and worldly desires! O it is this that quencheth the Conjugal love of my soul to her bridegroom; my loves are now become very adulterous loves: woe, and alas, that I have loved the world, and the things that are in this world, that I have followed my base lusts, and adulteries, and abominations; that instead of loving Christ, I have loathed him, and whipt him, and scourged him, and crucified him, and preferred the vilest lust (any sin whatsoever) before the Lord Jesus. And now I am musing of this love of Christ, alas, I feel it not, or if I feel a little, little love of desire, yet I have no sense, no taste, no relish of that love of complacency; there is no such fire, no flames in my breast towards the Lord Jesus.

3. Wishing.

And yet, O that I could love the Lord Jesus! O that he had my heart! O that now I could bid adieu to all other lovers! O that the Father of love, and the Spirit of love would strike one spark of love from the Promise, to kindle it in the heart of his poor creature! O that I felt a dilatation of my desires after Christ! that God would stretch them, and widen them to the utmost, that I might love Christ with all my heart, soul and might! O that I were even sick of love! O that I were cast into the melting pangs of a divine Christian love! O my soul, consider the want of Christ, and the worth of Christ! O consider the benefits of Christ's death, the sweetness of Christ's promises, the pleasantness of his commands, the preciousness of his graces, and above all, the infiniteness of his love, and thou canst not but love him! Consider that soul-ravishing Text, God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; that in ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness towards us through Christ Jesus: and thou canst not but cry out with the ardency of affection, with the strength, the zeal of love, O! To him, unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God, and his Father, To him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen.

4. Confession.

O my soul, these are sweet motives: But alas, how dull is thy understanding, how dead thy affections? I clearly see there is no strength at all in thee. O how cold, and weak, and faint, and heartless are these thy wishes! O Christ! I would love thee, but I cannot; I find no ability in myself to love thee; I am no more able to love thee, then cold water is able to heat itself, O where be those scalding affections to Christ Jesus, which holy men have felt in all ages, and striven to express in their Soliloquies? O where is this holy, constant, conjugal love? O where are those swellings, and throwings, and wrestlings, which others have felt in their bowels? O where be those holy fits, those pangs of love, those love-trances, those Seraphical flames of conconjugal affection, which made the Spouse cry out, I am sick of love? Alas, I feel a distemper in my affections; I find it not so easy to love Christ, as many men think, surely it is a very hard and difficult thing to love the Lord Jesus.

5. Petition.

Come then blessed Lord, and show thy own self to me, I beseech thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, show me the way that I may know thee: —I beseech thee show me thy glory;— give me the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ; let me see the beauties and glorious excellencies, and by this means blow my love into a pure flame, yea advance it to a degree of Angelical sublimity. Surely, Lord, I cannot love what I see not, and therefore anoint mine eyes with thy eye-salve, that I may see thy loveliness, and love thee with my best loves: O kindle, inflame, and enlarge my love, that it may rest largely in thee; enlarge the crany which the Spirit hath bored through the flesh into my Spirit, that I may largely see thee, and so largely love thee; enlarge the arteries and conduit-pipes, by which thou the head and fountain of love flowest into thy members, that being abundantly quickened and watered with the Spirit of love, I may abundantly love thee: and do not only come much, but come often into me, and let my Spirit often be one Spirit with thee, in communitive and fruitive unions; for such often unions with thy Spirit, will make my Spirit more Spiritual, and the more Spiritual she is, the more will she love thee, the God of all Spirits. Blessed Lord, wilt thou love the image, and shall not the image much more love the pattern? O that I were sick of love! that my understanding, will and affections were all overflown, overcome and amazed, that my faintings were inflamed towards thee, and even melted into thee! O sweet Jesu, touch my soul with thy Spirit, that virtue may go out of thee into me, and draw me unto thee; let the savor of thy ointments (whose very breath is love) be ever in my nostrils: Give me the flagons of the new wine of the kingdom, which may lift up my soul above myself in my loves; give me to forget the low and base loves of this world, and by an heavenly excess, transport me into an heavenly love, that I may embrace Christ who is the Lord from heaven with a love like himself: O give me to believe, for faith and love grow together, and the stronger my faith, the greater will be my love.

6. Confidence.

And this (sweet Jesu) I am fully persuaded thou wilt do: I believe, Lord help my unbelief; surely thou art God, who canst not lie, and thou hast promised, that the upright shall love thee. O how should I but believe thee? and now thou hast in some sweet measure convinced me, now thou beginn'st to warm my heart, and to cast me into a love-trance; now that my Spirit is somewhat raised, my heart in some sort enlarged, my mind in some measure fixed upon thee: I make bold (Lord) to conclude with this Spiritual Epithalamium, Blessed Lord, I am thine, only thine, ever thine, all that I am is at thy command, and all that I have is at thy disposing; be pleased to command both it and me: I know whatsoever I adventure or lose for thy sake, I shall receive with infinite advantage in thy blessed self. I dare trust my Lord with the best thing that ever he gave me, my precious soul. O my bleeding heart and broken spirit doth languish, in a thirsty love, panting and gasping after thee, my blessed Savior: O let me taste how gracious thou art, by some real experiments in my own heart, smile upon me from heaven, answer me with some assuring whispers of the Spirit of Adoption; Kiss me with the kisses of thy mouth, for thy love is better then wine. O let me bathe my soul in the delicious intimacies of a Spiritual communion with thee my God, that I may forever adhere unto thee with a sincere constancy, and rest in thee with a love of complacency: for I feel, I find my soul cast into a longing sweat for thee, and nothing can satisfy the importunate longing of my perplexed soul, but thy own self; for thou art my Lord, my love, my life, and thou art altogether lovely, O my dear Jesu! O my dearest Husband! O these holy fits! O these sweet pangs of love grow upon me apace! Upon a sudden, my King, my Savior, I am even sick of love!

Conclusion.

And now, O my soul, return unto thy rest, for the Lord hath been beneficial unto thee: The reason of thy love is Christ's love; Thou lovest him, because he first loved thee. Is it thus, O my soul? hath the Lord Christ indeed discovered his will, to take thee for his Spouse? What, he that is so holy, to marry such an impure wretch as thou art? O how should this but melt thee into a flame of love? what stirrings of love shouldst thou now feel in thy bowels? how shouldst thou now value him, and prize him, and praise him? how should thy glory now sing praises to him, and not be silent? how shouldst thou admire and wonder, that thou couldst endure to be without Christ so long? that thou couldst so slightly think of Christ heretofore? O my soul, henceforward cling to thy Savior, go out of thyself, and creep to him, and affect not only union, but very unity with him; bathe thyself hereafter again and again, many and many a time in those delicious intimacies of thy spiritual marriage: And to that purpose (O my soul) if sometimes thy love to thy Savior shall cool, O then sweet Savior look upon me in mercy; one look of thine will awaken my love, and make me weep bitterly, that I have loved thee so little, whom to love sufficiently, my best and mightiest loves are most insufficient: Prevent my seeking with thy seeking, be thou present with me in thy providence and power, when thou seemest to be far off me, in the taste of thy sweetness and fruition of thy loves; and then when I have regained thee, I will hold more hardly, and keep more fastly, and love thee more vehemently, by thy power assisting: Provide a stock of loves in the summer, against winter, if it return anymore: Come Lord Jesus, and be as the Roe on the Mountains; my life is hid with thee, O appear quickly, that I may quickly appear with thee in glory, and in the happiness of a consummate marriage: Even so, come Lord Jesus, come quickly, Amen, Amen, Psal. 18. to ver. 7.

SECT. 6. Another example of Eternity.

AFTER entrance by prayer and choice of this theam, the soul may proceed thus:—

1. Description.

O my soul, what is this Eternity whereof thou studiest? It is the entire and perfect possession of a life (together and at once) that never shall have end: The description may be imperfect, and no wonder; For how can that be defined, which hath no bondage or limits: Whatsoever is said of eternity, comes infinitely short of it, no words can utter it, no figures number it, no time can measure it: Eternity is of this nature, take from it what you will, it is still the same, it is neither increased by addition, nor diminished by subtraction: What is Eternity? it is a circle running back into itself, whose center is always, and circumference, without all end: What is Eternity? it is a duration always present, it is one perpetual day, which is not divided into that which is past, and that which is to come: What is Eternity? it is an age of ages, never expiring, but always like itself, without all change: What is Eternity? it is a beginning without beginning, middle or ending, or a beginning never ending, always beginning: and this, O my soul is Eternity.

2. Distribution.

There is a twofold Eternity, an Eternity of woe, and an Eternity of joy: First of woe, O woe that never shall have end! The worm shall not die, the fire never shall be quenched: After a thousand thousand millions of years, there are still as many more to come, and when those many more are come and gone, the woes are yet as far from the last as they were at the first: It is now above Four thousand years since Esau, who hated Jacob, was cast into this pit of woes, and yet the number of his years of torments are as many, as it was the first day of his torment. Secondly, of joy, O joy, above all the joys in harvest; they are the joys of Heaven: There joys the understanding, by a perfect knowledge and vision of God; there joys the memory, by a perfect remembrance of all things past; there joys the will, by enjoying all manner of good, without all fear of evil: In this joy there is no corruption, no defect, no old age, but solemn glory, and continual solemnity; there is an everlasting spring, there is always the flower, and grace of youth and perfect health: With thee is the fountain of life, and in thy light shall we see light.

3. Causes.

Whence are these two Eternities, O my soul, but from him that is only eternal?

1. Eternal woe is from him, For he hath prepared Tophet of old: God is the efficient, but sin the meritorious cause of this woe, The wages of sin is death.

2. Eternal joy is from him, the Father bestows it, the Son merits it, the Holy Ghost seals and applies it: God hath given thee a Savior (O my soul) to give this eternal joy to thee, and God hath given thee faith, whereby thou mayest attain to this Savior; and God hath given thee his Word, whereby thou mayest attain to this Faith: Look up therefore to him as the beginner and finisher of this Eternity, and whilst thou magnifiest the author, be ravished with the glory of the work; there is nothing that is good, that is not comprehended herein: In thy presence is fullness of joy, and at thy right hand are pleasures evermore.

4. Effects.

What are the effects, O my soul, of this Eternity?

1. Of Eternity in Hell, these amongst others; heavy, heavy, most sad and heavy thoughts, when the damned shall consider their dooms, Go ye into everlasting fires, then shall they cast their deep thoughts on

- Time past.
- Eternity to come.

1. For time past they shall remember, that sometimes they lived (at least some of them) in a glorious Goshen, enlightened with the fairest noon-tide of the Gospel that ever the Sun saw, and that they heard many and many a powerful Sermon; any one passage whereof (had they not suffered Satan to blindfold and baffle them) might have been unto them the beginning of the new birth; that many times they were told of this danger by God's faithful Ministers; that they had many calls and offers of salvation, and the Spirit of God many a time cried behind them, This is the way, walk in it: That sometimes they were half persuaded to be Christians, and they were near salvation, and they had a golden opportunity for it; but alas, they revolted again, and preferred their lusts, and passed by those offers and opportunities, with an inexpressible neglect, and horrible ingratitude, and now they lie drowned and damned in that lake of fire and brimstone, which they might have so easily and so often escaped: O what a shriek will this cause in Hell? whiles at every of these considerations, the worm of conscience shall give them a deadly bite, even to the heart? that the memory of things here on earth, remains still with all spirits in the world of Hell, is manifest, Son, remember thou in thy life time receivedst thy good things, and Lazarus evil, now therefore is he comforted and thou art tormented, said Abraham to that rich man in Hell.

2. For Eternity to come, they shall consider, That this Eternity is another Hell in Hell; might they endure those horrible pains, and extreme horrors, no more millions of years, then there are creatures both in Heaven and earth, they would comfort themselves with this thought, My misery will at last have an end; but this word [Eternity] it rents their very heart in pieces, it rents their very throat with hideous roarings, it gives a new life to their insufferable sorrows: O my soul, doest thou not tremble at this consideration. Imagine thou heardst Judas roaring in Hell flames, I have now suffered above One thousand six hundred years since I betrayed Christ, and through the extremity of torment, I have thought these One thousand six hundred, to have been a thousand, thousand, thousand, thousand years: O when will be an end of these sufferings! When? couldst thou tell stellas coeli, stillas roris, undas aquei flueris, &c. all the stars of Heaven, stills of dew, drops of rain, fleeces of snow, flowers of the Spring, colors of flowers, fruits of the earth, grains of corn, leaves of trees, beasts of the field, motes of the Sun flying in the air, hairs on thy head, sands on the sea shore, piles of grass growing on the earth; and shouldst thou add to these, all the thoughts of men, the motions and mutations of all the creatures, and number all these by all the additions and multiplications of Arithmetic, enough to fill volumns reaching from earth unto Heaven, as yet thou hast not measured the length, the middle of Eternity: O Judas here is thy lot, thou hast fryed in Hell above a thousand years, thou must be tormented in those flames a hundred thousand years, ten hundred thousand years, a thousand millions of years, a thousand, thousand, thousand, thousand millions of years, of ages; and when all those years and ages are gone and past, thou art as far from the end of thy torments, as thou wert at the beginning, when thou hangedst thyself, and first wentst down to Hell. O my soul, here's a Meditation able to startle thee from the sleep of sin: No question, at these thoughts, Judas and all the damned in Hell take on with infinite anguish, and enraged indignation: Hence comes that horrible hatred, and perpetual blasphemies which the damned utter against God: O how they tear their hair, and bite their nails, and gnash their teeth, and dig furiously into the very fountain of life, desirous (if they could do it possibly) to spit out their very bowels. O my heart, well mayest thou tremble in the midst of this Meditation! O Eternity! Eternity! Eternity!

2. Of Eternity in heaven, these (amongst others) are the effects, rowzing, raising, and most ravishing thoughts, when the blessed shall consider their doom, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom: Then shall they cast their thoughts on

- Time past.
- Eternity to come.

1. For time past, they shall remember, That sometimes they were in troubles, in sorrows, in sicknesses, in contempt of others, in dangers by Sea and Land; That sometimes they were ready to perish, and to cast away their souls by this or that sin, but that God still held his special hand over them, and gave them grace, and now hath brought them into the Port and Haven of Security, where is no shadow of miseries: O what ravishing of Spirit will the souls of the just be cast into at this recalling of time past! and that the memory of things here below, remains still with all the Spirits of the just made perfect, is manifest: Remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom, said the good Thief to Christ.

2. For Eternity to come, they shall consider, That the joy they enjoy, they shall enjoy forever: They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever. They shall shine: how? as the firmament, as the stars, or as the Sun, saith our Savior: Not so (saith Chrysostom) as that they should not surpass the brightness of the Sun, but the Sun being the most glittering thing in the world, he takes a resemblance towards the expressing of their incomparable glory: But to heighten this glory, observe the auxesis, it shall be forever (i.) for eternity, or forever and ever, (i.) for eternity and eternity; or as the Latins, in perpetuas aeternitates, for perpetual eternities: If one eternity be without end, what are two? what are ten? what are an hundred? what are infinite? O what a life is this that knoweth no end? what a glory is this that never fadeth? what a love is this that never cooleth? what a joy is this that never ceaseth?

5. Opposites.

Why then, O my soul, dost thou set up thy rest on this side Jordan? what are those few short pleasures thou here enjoyest? what is this brittle life, on which depends eternal bliss or woe? what is earth to heaven? what a minute to eternity? if anything be contrary to eternity, what is it but this punctilio of time we have here to spend? this little brittle life, what is it but an ell, a span, an inch, a point? O dear pennyworth, to buy the merry madness of one hour, with ages of pangs, infinite and eternal! O dearest bargain that ever was, to sell away Heaven, (our everlasting inheritance) with Esau, for a sip of momentary pleasure. I see this world and the other are mere opposites; my life is so little, and eternity so long, that I cannot tell what is more contrary then these two: My life is nothing but a Now, this instant is properly my own, I cannot promise to myself anything future, and therefore my life and eternity are as contrary as may be.

6. Comparisons.

But to what shall I compare this Eternity? as a drop of water is unto the sea, and a gravel stone in comparison of the sand, so are a thousand years to the day of Eternity: Nay, if we multiply a thousand years a thousand times, it would not amount to the least fraction of the numberless number of Eternity. They say, That the eighth Coelestial Orb or Sphaere, is moved wonderful leisurely, for though it be daily wheeled about by the rapid motion of the Primum mobile, yet it finisheth not its own proper Circuit, but once in Thirty six thousand years; and this space of time they call the Great year, or Plato's year: but compare this with Eternity, and it will appear but as a moment, a very nothing at all; to what then mayest thou compare this Eternity? O my soul, it is like an Orb, every way round, and like itself, or like a wheel, that turns, and turns, and doth never cease turning; or like a year, continually wheeling about, which turns again to the same point whence it began, and still wheels about again; or like an ever-running Fountain, whither the waters after many turnings flow back again, that they may always flow; or like a Snake bowed back unto itself orbicularly, holding the tail in her mouth, which in its end doth again begin, and never ceaseth to begin; or like a Ring, or like a Globe, or like a Sphaere, or like the circuit of Sun and Moon, without all end.

7. Testimonies.

Is not the Scripture (O my soul) frequent in the mention of Eternity? These shall go into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal: — Their worm shall not die, their fire never shall be quenched: — Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire: — Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water, springing up into eternal life: — We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens: — Surely he shall not be moved forever, the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance: — They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever.

Thus far, O my soul, for the information of thy judgment: Now for the stirring up of thy affections.

1. Relish.

O Eternity, whether of joys or woes! O that thou wert written in a book, that thou wert graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! O that my heart were the book! that my Meditation were the iron pen and lead! and that this word Eternity were so imprinted and engraven in my heart, that I might still have it in my mind, when Pleasure fawneth, when Lust provoketh, when the Flesh rebelleth, when the Spirit faileth! O Eternity, how is it I forgot thee! O my soul, be established, and say with David, My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed: Set thyself in a sure place, and stand awhile; and standing, admire at this Eternity, which always stands, and never passeth away; and that thou mayest taste and relish, that thou mayest be affected and moved with this Eternity.

1. Consider the never-dying worm, and the everlasting fire: O the bitterness of this Eternity! there's a man in fire, and a worm at his heart; the fire burns him, and the worm bites him, yet neither of these make an end of him; there he roars, and yells, and howls, and cries, O woe is me forever! A man said I! alas, Broad is the way, and many there are that walk hell-ward: It were enough indeed to make all tremble, though there were but one amongst all the sons of Adam to suffer eternally, but that Hell should enlarge herself, and open her mouth without measure, and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp should descend into it; that there should be millions of men of the same flesh and blood that I am, chained together in hell, where one roars, and another answers, and all bear the Burthen, Woe and alas forever. In one nook of Hell there's a lamentable shriek, Woe forever: in another corner far remote there's another fearful shriek, Woe forever; in all the corners of those smoky Vaults there's a cry, or an echo of this cry, For ever, forever, forever, forever.—O my soul, how is it thou canst sleep in the night, or be merry in the day, whilst thou thinkest attentively, or considerest thoroughly of this Meditation? less matters have sometimes bestraght men of their wits, and bereaved them of their lives.

2. Consider the Eternity of joys. O the sweetness of this Eternity! O blessed estate of Saints in the kingdom of heaven! O glory, not to be expressed, even by those who are glorified! there is that perpetual spring, which through the fresh and sweet breathings of the Spirit of God, shall flourish ever; there is time (if it be time) always after one sort, not distinguished into evening and morning, but continued with a simple Eternity. O Eternity of joys, worthy of continual songs of Saints and Angels to celebrate thy praise! O Eternity of joys! how should I extol thee, desire thee, love thee, and hate all this world for thee?

2. Complaint.

But alas, where is my fear, my trembling for that Eternity? my love, my longing after this Eternity? what little taste and savor have I of that bitterness, or this sweetness? My soul, what dullness and heaviness is this that hangs upon thee? How hath the world bewitched thee, and thou art become so carnal, so corporeal, so senseless of spiritual things? Thy thoughts run after riches, and they are uncertain; thou art ambitious after honors, and they are slippery; thou art in love with pleasures, and their end is sudden, and there is bitterness in the end; thou art daily conversing with men, but death shall dissolve all knots of friendship with others. O preposterous care! what, all on the world? and now that Eternity is thy Meditation (on which thou shouldst taste largely, and be affected deeply) art thou now all a mort? O what dullness, what drowziness, what security is this? if thou hast in thee any sparks of that heavenly fire, first breathed into thee by the Spirit of God; awake, awake, O my soul, away, away with this dull senseless security, and consider there's but a step betwixt thee and Eternity.

3. Wish.

O that I could find this Eternity! that I could taste or relish this Eternity! that I were fitted and prepared for Eternity! O that I were wise, that I understood this, that I considered my latter end! O that now while it is called today, while it is the accepted time, and the day of salvation, I had a diligent and intent eye upon this Eternity! O that I could still reason thus, What if I endure hunger and thirst, emptiness and injuries, sickness and poverty? What if I were beaten with rods, or suffered shipwreck? what if I were stoned to death? all these are nothing to that Eternity of woes; on the contrary, What if I had Croesus riches, Solomon's Wardrobe, Belshazzars Cup-board, Samson's strength, Absalom's beauty? What if an Angel should take me up into an exceeding high mountain, and show me all the Kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, and say unto me, All these will I give thee? all these are nothing to Eternal glory: O when shall this day come, that I shall enter into these confines of Eternity, and solace myself in my God? As the Hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God: My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: O when shall I come and appear before God?

4. Confession.

I desire Lord, but alas, how weakly, how dully, how heartlessly? I am not able, Not sufficient of myself, to think anything as of myself, but my sufficiency is of God: It is nature that pulls me from this holy Meditation; nature favors itself, loves the world, abhors death and Eternity in another world: It is my misery that I dote on nothing, or on sin, that's worse then nothing: How long shall these vanities thus besot me? How long shall these vain thoughts lodge within me? Why Lord? there is no strength in me, I can neither will nor do; It is thou only must work in me both to will and to do (both to meditate on, and to prepare for Eternity) of thy good will and pleasure.

5. Petition.

To thee, Lord, I make my moan, to thee I tender my humble Petition, and pour out my soul: O give me a taste and relish of this Eternity; O give me this water, that I need thirst no more; O give me such a taste or relish of this water, that it may be in me a well of water, springing up into eternal life: O inflame my soul with a love of these thoughts, with a longing desire after this Eternity of joys: O let me not always be thus dull and brutish, but thou that hast prepared Eternity for me, prepare my soul for Eternity; teach me so to carry on this earth, that I be not shut out of those eternal Mansions in Heaven; give me repentance for sin, that I be not thrown into those Eternal woes in Hell; open my eyes that I may see, draw aside this veil, that I may know what Eternity is; give me so to live, as one that labors for Eternity, contend for Eternity, suffers for Eternity; let me never be so foolish as to settle myself on vanity, and to neglect this Eternity that never shall have end.

6. Confidence.

Behold, O my soul, and do not merely crave, but challenge this favor of God, as that which he owes thee; he owes it, because he hath promised it, and by his mercy he hath made his gift his debt: Is there not a promise made, Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound, they shall walk in the light of thy countenance, O Lord: and is it not an experience tried, I sate down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste: O what is this but the taste of Eternity? what is this but a glimpse of unspeakable joy? press on, O my soul, and do not only believe a taste, but a hearty draught of Eternity; these tastes are but earnest, but there is a promise of everlasting fruition: Hath he not given thee his word for Eternal life, for an Eternal inheritance, for everlasting righteousness, for an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away? Awake, arise, O my soul, and lay hold on the promises of this blessed Eternity; be not dismayed by reason of thy unworthiness, for the promise is of Grace, freely offered, and freely given to them that be unworthy in their own eyes: Christ hath purchased righteousness and everlasting life, believe in him, and live to all Eternity. O my soul, why art thou dull and sluggish, wherefore dost thou not put forth thyself to embrace and receive this promise of Eternity? God's promises are ever certain, never less, but rather more in accomplishment than in tender; why dost thou not cast thyself upon this blessed issue, If God be merciful, I am eternally happy? It is the sure promise of God, That he that believeth hath Eternal life; therefore if I believe, I am already a free denizen in the new Jerusalem; Eternity of joys is already reserved for me: Why Lord, I believe, come glory, come Eternity, come and welcome glorious Eternity, eternal glory.

Conclusion.

Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath been beneficial unto thee: O the incomprehensible love and favors of the Lord! Was it ever found that any King or Potentate should adopt the blind, the lame, the deaf, the dumb, to succeed him in his Inheritance? and shall such a one as I (the vilest, the worst of sinners) inherit everlasting life, a crown that never withereth, a durable treasure, which can never fade: O what shall I give unto the Lord for this Eternity? My soul, rejoice thou in the Lord, and bless his holy name: Now begin that Alleluiah on earth, which in Heaven thou shalt sing more sweetly to all Eternity, Alleluiah! and again Alleluiah! Amen, Alleluiah!

And now (O my soul) give up thyself to God, and repose thyself wholly on thy Maker and Redeemer; wait patiently on him, for the full possession of this Eternity, and walk cheerfully in the way that he leads thee thereunto: Say at the parting of this Meditation, O Lord, O Eternity itself, O thou First and Last, Alpha and Omega, without beginning, and without all end, I recommend my soul, my ways to thee; take me to thy keeping, and prepare me for Eternity, through Christ thy only Son, my only Savior. Psal. 16. beginning at Verse 7. ad finem.

CHAP. VIII.

SECT. 1. Of the Nature of this Life of Faith.

TO live by Faith, is by Faith in Christ to assent and adhere unto, and to possess the whole Word of God, as our own in all estates and conditions, resting quietly upon his gracious and faithful promise, and yielding ourselves unto his good pleasure, in sincere, universal and constant obedience: Or, to live by Faith, is to feed upon the several promises of God made in his Word, and to apply them to our own selves, according to our needs, and so to uphold, comfort and encourage ourselves against all temptations, and unto every good duty. This Life of Faith is a very Heaven upon earth, a sweet Sanctuary to any hunted soul; hereby our hearts will be cheered, our life will be sweet to us, God will be glorified, and the glory of his truth will be mightily advanced. O blessed Duty!

SECT. 2. Of the manner of this Life of Faith in general.

Our Directions for this life of Faith are either

- General.
- Particular.

In general, that we may live by Faith, we must endeavor two things,

- 1. To get matter for our faith to work upon.
- 2. To order our faith aright in the work.

1. That we may provide matter for our faith to work upon, we must observe three things: 1. That we store up all the good promises of God, and our own experiences seasonably: It is good to lay up in a good time aforehand.

2. That we lay in promises of all kinds: We had better leave than lack; it is the wisdom of a man, that he may not live feebly and poorly, but to have somewhat to spare.

3. That we so lay them up, that we may have them at hand: It is folly to say, I have good provision as can be, but I have it not here: Let the word of God dwell in you plenteously and richly in all wisdom.

2. That we may order our Faith aright in the work, observe these Directions:

1. Take possession of the promises, and value them as our own.

2. Expect nothing from the promise, but that which is suitable to the nature of it: To this purpose some promises are absolute, which God hath simply determined to accomplish; as the promise of the Messiah, Isa. 7.14. and of the calling of the Gentiles, Rom. 11.26. Some promises are conditional, which God will accomplish in his own order, in his own time, and in his own manner and measure; in a word, they are no further promised, than God seeth in wisdom to be most meet for his glory, and our good; as, all temporal blessings, less principal Graces, and the measure of all sanctifying Graces: now in all these expect nothing from them, but that which is suitable to the nature thereof.

3. That done, then eye that particular good in the promise which we stand in need of, and set God's power, and faithfulness, and wisdom awork, to bring it about; for instance, thou art in persecution, and either thou wouldest have deliverance out of it, or comfort and refreshment in it: In this case see all this in the promise (referring the order, and time, and manner to God) and then set God's power and faithfulness awork that can do it, and his wisdom awork to contrive it, which way he knows best: This is the meaning of that Text, Commit thy ways unto the Lord, trust in him, and he shall bring it to pass; and hurl your care upon the Lord, for he careth for you.

4. By faith wait upon God, in that way he hath appointed; it is true, God will work that good for us, yet we must use the means, and meet God in the course of his providence, otherwise we live not by Faith, but tempt God, and throw away his promises and all.

5. Set it down and conclude, that God will do whatsoever he hath promised, and we shall receive it in the ways of his providence: This is the very work of faith itself, thus it draws sap and virtue from the promise, when it concludes, That according to the good in the promise, it is sure to be done.

6. But imagine the Lord delays, and doth not suddenly accomplish, then must faith take up its stand, and stay till it come: He that believeth, maketh not haste, the vision is for an appointed time, and therefore wait for it; so the Psalmist, As the eyes of a servant look to the hands of his Master, and the eyes of a maiden to her Mistress, so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, until he have mercy upon us; not until we will, or until we see it fit, but until he will have mercy upon us.

7. Imagine the Lord not only delays, but seems to frown, and to say, He will not hear: In this case, labor with an holy humility to contend with our God, and by strong hand to overcome him, for the Lord loves to be overcome thus. When Jacob wrestled with God, Let me go, saith the Lord; I will not let thee go, saith Jacob: So do we catch the Lord Jesus, and strive with him, and leave him not, till we have those comforts he hath promised, and which we have begged: Surely this is the glory and victory, and triumph of faith, when the Lord is fain to lay down his weapons, and to yield himself as conquered; Thy name shall be no more called Jacob, but Israel, because thou hast prevailed with God.

Two cautions concerning promises, and the life of faith, are mainly to be observed in the general.

1. That not barely the promises, but the person of Christ, is the object of faith: We are not to wrest on the promises alone, but to close with Christ in those promises; and therefore in receiving of, or having recourse unto a promise, we are first to seek out for Christ in it, as being the foundation of it, and so to take hold of the promise in him: Thus Philip directs the Eunuch, Believe on the Lord Jesus: The promise is but the Casket, and Christ the Jewel in it; the promise but the field, Christ is the Pearl hid in it, and to be chiefly looked at: Thus it is said, That promises of pardon, are not as pardons of a Prince, which merely contain an expression of his royal word for pardon; but God's promises are made in his Son, and are as if a Prince should offer to pardon a Traitor, upon marriage with his child, whom in and with that pardon he tenders: The reason hereof is, because Christ is the grand promise, in whom all the promises are Yea and Amen.

2. That promises in things temporal and spiritual (not absolutely necessary to salvation) are not universal, but indefinite, (i.) he makes such promises, because sometimes (though not always) he grants accordingly. For instance, that promise of healing the sick, cannot be universal, for it might then be supposed, that sick men should never die, seeing the Elders may at all such times of danger of death, still come and pray with them, but we all know it is appointed for all men once to die; the meaning thereof is, that prayer is an Ordinance to which God hath made such a gracious promise, and he often doth restore the sick at their prayers; and therefore upon every such particular occasion, we are to rely upon God for the performance of it by an act of recumbancy, though we cannot with an act of full assurance, the promise not being universal, but indefinite: Of like nature are all other promises of things temporal or things spiritual, not absolutely necessary to salvation; as, long life, riches, honor, Assurance of Evidence to them that fear him, the tenor and purport of which promise, is not as if absolutely, infallibly, and universally, God doth always perform these to those that are truly qualified, with the conditions specified in those promises; the contrary both Scripture, instances, and common experience shows, they are therefore indefinitely meant, and so to be understood by us; because when ever God doth dispence any such mercies to any of his, he would do it by promise: And he requires answerably an act of faith, suitable to that his meaning in the promise; that as he intended not in such promises, an absolute, infallible, universal obligation of himself, to the performance of them to all that fear him, so the act of faith, which a man is to put forth toward this promise, in the application of it for his own particular, is not required to be an absolute, infalible persuasion and assurance, that God will bestow these outward things upon him, having these qualifications in him, but only an indefinite act (as I may call it) of recumbancy and submission, casting and adventuring ourselves upon him for the performance of it to us, not knowing but he may in his outward dispensations make it good to us; yet with submission to his good pleasure, if otherwise he dispose it; and if he grant, to consider then, That whatsoever we have, it is not by a mere Providence, but by virtue of a Promise.

SECT. 3. Of the manner of this Life of Faith in particular, as in Temporal evils.

IN particular that we may live by faith, observe we,—

- 1. The Promises.
- 2. The exercise of faith concerning the Promises.

And both these are considerable, either in regard of

- Our selves.
- Others.

1. In regard of ourselves; and therein we shall consider matters

- Temporal.
- Spiritual.
- Eternal.

Things Temporal are either

- Evil.
- Good.

We shall begin first with Temporal Evils; and concerning them, first give you the Promises; and secondly, the exercise of faith in respect of those Promises.

1. The Promises that concern Temporal Evils, have reference to those evils, either in

- General.
- Special.

1. Evils general, are afflictions and dangers, concerning which we have Promises, some to

- Prevent,
- Qualifie,
- Remove those Afflictions.

1. The Promises to prevent Afflictions, you may read in the Word, and they are these and the like: Psal. 91.10. Psal. 121.7. Job 5.19. Zech. 2.5. where the Lord promiseth to be a wall of fire to his people; not of stone, or brass, saith Theodoret, that it may both fray afar off, and keep off too at hand; protect them, and destroy their enemies.

2. The Promises to qualify evils, are these and the like: Psal. 103.13, 14. Isa. 49.13, 14, 15. Hos. 11.8, 9. In this last Promise, God imitates Parents (saith Theodoret) when any misery is upon their child, their bowels yern more; never sits the child so much on the Mothers lap, never lies so much in her bosom, as when he is sick: So the Spouse being sick of love (i.) in some misery, Christ stayeth her with flagons, comforts her with apples, his left hand is under her head, and his right hand doth embrace her: Psal. 56.8. where we may read God's compassion to his children in their calamities, that he narrowly observes everyone of them; Thou tellest my wanderings] yea, he makes so precious a reckoning of their griefs and sorrows, that not a tear falls to the ground, but he keeps it, preserves it (as precious liquor) in his bottle; Put my tears into thy bottle] yea, he keeps them in memory, he notes them and writes them his book, as if he would chronicle our tears for everlasting remembrance; Are they not in thy book?] 2 Chron. 4.17. Is there or can there be any richer or fuller expression in Tully, then there is in the Greek, where there is both an elegant Antithesis, and double Hyperbole, beyond Englishing, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; for affliction, glory; for light affliction, heavy, massy, substantial glory, a weight of glory; for momentary affliction, eternal glory: nay, the Apostle adds degrees of comparison, yea goes beyond all degrees, calling it more excellent, far more excellent, an Hyperbole, Hyperbole, exceeding excessive, eternal weight of glory.

3. The Promises to bear them, or in due time to remove them, are these and the like: Psal. 37.24. Jer. 29.11. Micah 7.8, 9. Psal. 97.11. as sure as harvest follows a seeding, so to the righteous, comfort follows mourning, John 16.20. 1 Cor. 10.13.

2. Evils special, are Sickness, Poverty, Famine, War, Captivity, Witchcraft, Possession, Oppression.

1. For sickness, we have Promises, some to

- Prevent,

- Qualifie,
- Remove sickness.

1. The Promises to prevent, are these and the like: Exo. 15.26. Deut. 7.15. Psal. 91.10.

2. Promises to qualify sickness, are these and the like: Ps. 41.3. Heb. 12.6, 7, 8.

3. Promises to remove sickness, are these and the like: Exo. 23.25. Deut. 7.15. Isa. 4.31.

2. For Poverty, we may store up these Promises, Psal. 23. throughout, Psal. 34.9, 10. Psal. 37.25. Heb. 13.15. The wicked indeed may have more abundance then the Christian, but here's the difference, the wicked hath all by a Providence, the Christian hath all by a Promise: and this distinction the poor Christian would not part with for a world of gold.

3. For Famine, we may store up these Promises, Job 5.19, 20. Psal. 33.18, 19. Prov. 10.2, 3. Psal. 37.18, 19. Isa. 41.17, 18. Some Martyrs being cast into Prison, and denied necessary food, they had faith to return this answer, If men will give us no meat, we believe God will give us no stomach. When Christ was an hungered, and Satan tempts him to command stones to be made bread, he answered, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God; q.d. a man may feed on a Promise, he must depend on God's allowance, and when provision fails, then not to distrust the provision of God, is a notable trial of faith.

4. For War, we may gather up these Promises and the like, Job 5.20. Prov. 3.24, 25, 26. Jer. 39.17, 18.

5. For Captivity, gather in these Promises and the like, Deut. 30.3, 4. which very Promise Nehemiah sueth out, Nehem. 1.9. Psal. 106.46. Ezek. 11.16.

6. For Witchcraft or Possession, consider that Promise, Numb. 23.23.

7. For Oppression, we have these Promises, Psa. 12.5. Psa. 68.5. Psa. 146.7, 8, 9.

2. For the exercise of faith, concerning these Promises, that we may live by them, go to

- Meditation.
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider these things, and let your faith chew on them.

1. That all affliction comes from God: Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it? I form the light, and I create darkness; I make peace, and I create evil: I the Lord do all these things. I know, O Lord, (saith David) that thy judgments are right, and that thou in thy faithfulness hast afflicted me.

2. That as God sends it, so none can deliver us out of it but God alone: O our God, wilt thou not judge them? We have no might against this great company that cometh against us, neither know we what to do, but our eyes are upon thee. This Meditation draws the heart from carnal repose, in means or friends; it expels vexatious and distracting cares, and estrangeth from the use of unlawful means of deliverance: The horse is prepared against the day of battle, but safety is of the Lord.

3. The causes of all miseries and sorrow, is sin, and therefore its time for us to examine our ways, to humble ourselves, and to set upon Reformation: I thought on my ways (said David) and turned my feet unto thy testimonies: when Manasseh was in affliction, He besought the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his Fathers: Surely it is meet to be said unto God, I have born chastisement, I will not offend anymore: That which I see not teach thou me; If I have done iniquity, I will do no more: The end of chastisement, is amendment of life, whence it receives the name of Correction, which signifieth, to set aright or straight.

4. That now God trieth our faith, patience, contentation, and meekness of Spirit, He hath said unto Crosses, Go ye to such a man, not to weaken his faith, or to waste any Grace of the Spirit, but to purge him, refine him, try him, exercise him, to breed the quiet fruits of Righteousness, to confirm his patience, support his hope, &c. — Hence God's servants by their faith have been enabled to say, I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him, until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me: And if he say thus, I have no pleasure in thee: Behold, here am I, let him do to me as seemeth good to him. This Meditation makes the heart willingly, freely and constantly to resign itself to the good pleasure of God in all things.

5. That 'tis God's will, after we have gone to the promise, to use all lawful means of help which God in his providence affords; but in point of dependence, that we solely rest on God's promises: Faith coupleth the means and the end, but looketh to the Promiser (whose truth, and wisdom, and power, and mercy, never fails) and not to the probability of the thing promised: Abraham against hope, believed in hope, — That what God had promised, he was able to perform.

6. That the promises are in Christ, Yea and Amen, and therefore set it down and conclude, that God will do whatsoever he hath promised, and we shall receive it in the ways of his providence; it may be not yet, what then? He that believes will not make haste: Daniel waited Seventy years for deliverance out of captivity in Babylon, and may not we wait Seventy weeks, Seventy days?

2. For prayer, and the parts and manner of it, observe this method:

1. Lay open our sorrows before the Lord, pour out our complaints into his bosom: I am the man that have seen affliction by the rod of thine anger, thou hast brought me into darkness but not into light: — Lord, how am I beset with miseries? how do my sorrows increase daily? how are they increased that trouble me?

2. Confess our sins with hatred and godly sorrow: I will declare my iniquity, I will be sorry for my sins: For want of this, God threatened the Israelites, I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offenses, and seek my face, in their affliction they will seek me early.

3. Importune the Lord, and direct we our supplications to our God: Lord, how long wilt thou look on? O rescue my soul from their destruction, my darling from the Lions; look upon mine affliction and my tears, for I am brought very low.

4. Then press we the Lord with his promises: Lord, thou hast said, The rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the Righteous: Thou hast said, Yet a little while and the indignation shall cease: Thou hast said, In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer: O these are thy promises, Lord, make them effectual to my poor soul.

5. For conclusion, tell we the Lord, whatever becomes of us we will trust in him: Though thou shouldst slay me, yet will I trust in thee:—For what time I am afraid, I will will trust in thee.

These are the acts of faith by which it puts forth, and exerciseth itself in time of afflictions.

SECT. 4. Of the manner of this Life of Faith in temporal blessings.

Concerning temporal blessings, or good things, consider we

- 1. The promises.
- 2. The exercise of faith in those promises.

1. Promises that concern temporal blessings, have reference to those blessings, Either in

- General.
- Special.

1. The general promises are these, and the like, 1 Tim. 4.8. Psal. 34.8, 9. Psal. 84.11. Phil. 4, 19. 1 Cor. 3.21. all things are yours, we are heirs of all the world.

2. The special promises have a relation, some to our name, some to our bodies, some to our estates, some to our callings.

1. Those promises that have a relation to our good name, are such as these, 1 Sam. 2.30. Prov. 3.16. Prov. 4.8. Prov. 14.19. Isa. 56.3, 4, 5.

2. Those promises that have a relation to our bodies, are either for long life, concerning which, Deut. 5.16, 33. Prov. 3.1, 2. or for health, concerning which, Prov. 3.8. Psal. 103.3, 4, 5. or for safety, concerning which, Prov. 1.33. Job 11.18. Hosea 2.18. Job 5.23. or for peace, concerning which, Levite. 26.6. Psal. 29.11. Psal. 37.11. Prov. 16.16. or for sleep, concerning which, Job 11.19. Prov. 3.24. or for food, concerning which, Psal. 37.3. Psal. 111.5. Joel 2.26. or for raiment, concerning which, Deut. 10.18. Matth. 6.25, 30, 32. or for posterity, the fruit of the body, concerning which, Deut. 7.12, 13, 14.

3. Those promises that have relation to our estates, are these, Job 22.24, 25. Prov. 8.18, 19. Psal. 37.5.

4. Those promises that have a relation to our calling, are either for plenty, concerning which, Prov. 10.4. and 12.11. and 13.4. and 28.19.—or for protection, concerning which, Psal. 91.11.—or for promotion, concerning which, Prov. 12.24. and 22.29. — or for good success, concerning which, Prov. 12.14. Isa. 65.21, 23. I deny not but the wicked may enjoy all these Temporal blessings by a general Providence, but only the just have a Spiritunl right to them; they only have them as rewards of their righteousness, as testimonies of God's love and care over them, and by virtue of a Promise.

2. For the exercise of faith concerning these Promises, observe that we may live by them, either in the - want

- enjoyment of these Temporal mercies.

1. Of the want of them, go we to

- Meditation.
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider these things:

1. That faith in this case doth ransack, and fan the soul narrowly to find out and remove whatsoever doth offend: If thou return to the Almighty thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put iniquity far from thy tabernacles: then shalt thou lay up gold as dust, and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks. This advice faith digests, and labors the reformation of what is amiss, and whatsoever hinders the Promise.

2. That faith is painful, provident and frugal; it shakes off idleness, takes the opportunity, husbands thriftily, and observes God's providence in all affairs, otherwise we live not by faith, but tempt God, and throw away his Promises and all.

3. That faith preserves from the use of all unlawful means: The believer consults ever what is just, not what is gainful; or what may be compassed by honest courses, not what may be gained by fraud, deceit, cozenage, or the like carnal dealings: Better is a little with righteousness, then great revenues without right.

4. That faith leans upon the providence of God, who will keep back nothing from us, but what is hurtful and pernicious: Here's a sweet act of faith, it submits to God's wisdom, and rests on his providence, after the use of all lawful means; and this maintains a Christian in some measure of contentment.

2. For Prayer, and the parts or manner of it, observe this method:

1. Confess our sins, especially those sins which upon search we are persuaded hinders prosperity: O Lord, I have thought on my ways, and I find (this or that) sin in my bosom, this or that corruption hath gotten head, and hinders thy blessings: O Lord, how should I expect needful things? What have I to do with thy Promises, that have committed such and such sins?

2. Importune the Lord for his Temporal blessings, at least so far as he seeth them to be for our good, and for the glory of his great name: Thus Bildad tells Job, If thou wouldst seek unto God betimes, and make thy supplication to the Almighty, surely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteousness prosperous: Though thy beginning was small, yet thy latter end should greatly increase. Thus Jabez prayed, O that thou wouldst bless me indeed, and enlarge my coasts, &c. and God granted him that which he requested. In like manner was Jacob's prayer, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my fathers house in peace, Then shall the Lord be my God: And thus may we importune the Lord, and make our supplication to the Almighty.

3. Then press the Lord with his Promises, as with so many Arguments: Lord, thou hast said, Godliness hath the promise of the life that now is, as well as that which is to come: Thou hast said, Fear the Lord, ye his saints, for there is no want to them that fear him, &c. O these are thy Promises, make them good to us as it stands best with thy wisdom.

2. In the enjoyment of these Temporal blessings, go we to—

- Meditation.
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider these things:

1. Faith in prosperity, keeps the heart in a holy temper and disposition (i.) in humility, meekness, tenderness and compassion towards others, in thankfulness, obedience, and in the fear of the Lord: Satan himself could reply to the Lord, Doth Job fear God for naught? hast thou not made a hedge about him? in this case faith will remember man of his duty, and persuade him to be so much the more serviceable, as God's mercies are more plentiful upon him.

2. That faith makes a man heavenly-minded in the use and possession of a prosperous estate; as it receives all earthly blessings from God, so it winds and pulls up the soul to God again: and if it be rightly considered, prosperity is the fittest season for heavenly contemplation; the less trouble lies upon our estate, the more liberty we have to think of heavenly things: howsoever, faith considers these things as pledges of God's love, as parts of our childes-portion, and so it makes us look at the better part, those never-fading riches which God hath reserved in heaven for all that fear him.

3. That faith breeds a godly jealousy and suspicion, lest the heart should be drawn away with the pleasing delights of things transitory, for by grace it is that we are made conscious of our own weakness, and of the snare that is in every creature, to take and entangle us: Prosperity is pleasing, but dangerous; a man may quickly surfeit of sweet meats. This makes the waking believer circumspect and watchful, and jealous, and suspicious of his own heart, lest he miscarry in prosperity, considering there is a snare in it.

4. That faith minds a change, even when our mountain seems strongest: The thing I greatly feared (saith Job) is come upon me, and that which I was afraid of, is come unto me; by this it appears, that Job always thought upon a change: There is no wind (saith the Proverb) which may not blow rain, if God so please. Riches have their wings, and take their flight like an Eagle: now faith minds this, and prepares for this; The prudent man foreseeth evil, and hideth himself.

2. For Prayer, and the manner of it, observe this method:

1. Confess and acknowledge God's mercy both in his Promises and performances: say, Lord, thou hast promised, That no good thing wilt thou withhold from them that walk uprightly; and surely thou art true in thy sayings, I believe by virtue of thy promise I enjoy this land, and those goods, &c. I have nothing, Lord, but merely of Free-grace, and by virtue of a promise.

2. Pray, importune the Lord for sanctification of prosperity, and for God's blessings upon the means: the more we prosper, the more earnest should the prayers of faith be; for of ourselves we have no power to wield a good estate well, no ability to preserve or keep it: in greatest wealth we lie open to many temptations, and if we pray not earnestly that God may sanctify all his Temporal blessings to us, we shall cool in grace.

3. Praise God for his mercies, and devote ourselves unto him from whom we have received all: What shall I render unto the Lord (saith David) for all his mercies towards me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord. Men look for thanks, for a small kindness, and shall not we magnify God for all his favors and loving kindness towards us? O praise the Lord, bless the Lord, O my soul!

SECT 5. Of the manner of this Life of Faith in Spiritual evils.

Things Spiritual are either

- Evil.
- Good.

We shall begin with Spiritual evils: and concerning them, first give you the promises, and secondly the exercise of faith in respect of those promises.

Evils Spiritual arise either from the Devil, or the Flesh, or the World, or from Man, or God, or from our own selves.

1. Those evils that arise from the Devil, are temptations of several sorts; and the man whose heart is upright, shall find strength enough against every temptation: To that purpose consider these Promises, Matth. 16.18. 1 Cor. 10.13. 1 John 5.18.

2. Those evils that arise from the flesh, are lusts or temptations of Uncleaness; and for strength and ability against such a temptation, consider these Promises, Prov. 2.10, 11, 16. Eccles. 7.26. 1 Thess. 5, 23, 24.

3. Those evils that arise from the World, are covetousness, cares, evil company, &c. and for strength against such, consider these Promises, 2 Cor. 6.17, 18. Gal. 1.4. 1 John 5.4. Heb. 13.5. < in non-Latin alphabet › , there are five Negatives together in the Original that strongly affirm; q.d. I tell thee, I will never, never, never, never, never forsake thee.

4. Those evils that arise from men, are either oppositions against truth, concerning which, Mat. 10.19. Acts 18.9, 10. or oppositions against goodness, concerning which, Mat. 5.10. 1 Pet. 3.14. — or oppositions against both, and so they fall either on our good name, concerning which, Psal. 37.6. where howsoever thy innocence be at sometimes covered (as it were) with a thick and dark mist of slander and oppression, yet the Lord will in his good time scatter and dissolve the mist, and so make thy innocence apparent to the world; yea, he will make thy righteousness as evident as the Sun when it ariseth, yea, as noon day, when it is at highest, and shines brightest, Psal. 68.13. Mat. 5.11, 12. 1 Pet. 4.14, &c.—or they may fall on us in respect of our liberty, and concerning which, Psal. 69.32, 33, and 102.19, 20. Rev. 2.10.— or they may deprive us of our goods, concerning which, 2 Chro. 25.9. Mat. 19.29. Habak. 3.17, 18.—or they may take away life, concerning which, Matth. 10.39. John 12.25. Revel. 14.13.

5. Those evils which arise from God, are desertions; and for comforts against them, consider these promises, Isa. 49.14, 15, 16. and 54.7, 8. and 50.10.

6. Those evils that arise from ourselves are sins and infirmities, and they are either spiritual blindness, concerning which, Luke 4.18. 1 John 2.27. Isa. 35.4, 5.—or spiritual lameness, concerning which, Isa. 35.6. and 40.31.—or heaviness of mind, concerning which, Isa. 35.1, 2. Jer. 66.12, 13, 14.—or weakness of memory, concerning which, John 14.26. or fears of losing God's love, concerning which, Isa. 49.15. and 54.10. Jer. 33.20. Psal. 89.33, 34, 35. Joh. 13.1. Rom. 11.29.—or fear of falling away from God, concerning which, see the impossibility in regard of God, 2 Tim. 2.19. in regard of Christ, Luke 22.32. in regard of the Holy Ghost, John 14.16. Ephe. 4.30. in regard of the promises, Psal. 94.14. 1 Cor. 1.8, 9.—or indisposition, distraction, defects in our best performances, concerning which, Numb. 23.21. Cant. 2.14.—or particular falls, daily frailties and infirmities, concerning which, Isa. 55.7. Jer. 3.1. Psal. 37.24. and 145.14. Hosea 14.4. 1 John 1.9.

2. For the exercising of faith, concerning these promises that we may live by them, go we to

- Meditation.
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider we these things,

1. That of ourselves we cannot resist these spiritual evils; all our comfort is, that neither the Devil, nor the world, nor the flesh, nor sin, can oppose any further then God will give them leave; not the Devil himself can tempt who he will, nor when he will, nor how he will, nor how long he will, but in all these he is confined by the providence of God. A legion of Devils could not enter into a Gaderene Hog, till Christ had given them leave: Satan could not touch one bleat pertaining to Job, till he had obtained liberty; nor after lay a finger on his body, till his liberty was renewed: O meditate on God and his power, who hath all our enemies in a chain; as for ourselves, we have no ability to resist any of these evils.

2. That faith fortifies the soul against all oppositions, the more they rage, the more faith heartens the soul to believe, and to keep close under the shadow of the Lord's wings: as the child affrighted, clings faster to the mother; so the poor soul pursued by the Devil, or World, or Flesh, or Man, or God, or our own Corruptions, it runs to Christ, the everlasting Rock, and in his name resists all these evils, and in his name gets the victory.

3. That in the most forcible tempests, which God, Devil or Man raiseth against us (when to present sense and feeling all sight and hope of the grace and goodness in Christ Jesus is lost) then faith tells the heart, that a calm is at hand. The last temptation wherewith Satan set upon Christ, was the most furious, and when he could not prevail thereby, he departed for a season: The Lord will not suffer us to be tempted above measure. This faith assures of, and persuades us quietly to wait for the issue.

2. For prayer, and the manner of it, observe this method:

1. Confess our sins of former ignorance, vanity of mind, self-confidence, solitary musings on the temptations of Satan, misinterpreting of the Lord's doings, &c. which set open the soul to all other spiritual evils:—O my God, I have disesteemed thy mercy, distrusted thy promises, harbored thoughts of unbelief, &c. and so hav<sup>e</sup> exposed my soul to the most violent, horrible and fiery temptations of the world, flesh, Devil, and my own lusts: my soul, which should have been ravished with the joys of Heaven, and with the kisses of Christ, is continually pestered and assailed with the black and hellish thoughts of Atheism, Blasphemy, and soul-vexing fears; my heart trembleth, my strength faileth, my life is spent with grief, my spirit within me is overwhelmed, and prevailing fears so tyrannize over me, that I cannot speak, I am sore wounded and broken, I go mourning and desolate all the day long.

2. Importune the Lord for pardon of sin, and for help against all oppositions: Pardon, O Lord, my yielding to the temptations of the Devil, or Flesh, or World, or Man, or Sin: Pardon, O Lord, the infidelity, doubtings, dejectedness, infirmities, and carnal excessive fears of thy poor servant; and for the future, deliver my soul from the snares, strengthen me in the combat against all my enemies: Arise, O Lord, disappoint Satan, cast him down, deliver my soul from the wicked one; O be thou my strength in my trouble, for I fly unto thee for help and for succor.

3. Then press the Lord with his Promises, as with so many arguments: Lord, thou hast said, That the gates of hell shall not prevail against us: That whoso pleaseth God, shall escape the strange woman: That whosoever is born of God overcometh the world: That if we suffer for righteousness sake, happy are we: That in a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy upon thee: That a good man though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. O these are thy golden sweet precious Promises; now Lord make them good to my soul, let me draw the sweet, and juy<sup>e</sup>, and virtue from every of these Promises; let not a word of these Promises fall to the ground, let me have my share, and part, and portion in these comfortable Promises, through the Lord Jesus.

§. An Appendix of the manner of this Life of Faith, in oppositions against truth and goodness, and more particularly against our good Name, whereby an unworthy servant of Christ sometimes found abundance of Spiritual comfort.

His innocence being sometimes overshadowed with a thick and dark mist of Slanders, Reproaches and Defamations, he endeavored first to review the Promises, and secondly to act his faith on them.

1. The Promises were these: Psal. 37.5, 6. Mat. 5.10, 11, 12. 1 Pet. 3.14. 1 Pet. 4.14. Psal. 68.13. Though you have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold; q.d. though hitherto you have been as so many abjects, cast into the ends of the earth, as thrown amongst black and smoky pots, oppressed with mighty calamities, yet the time is at hand that ye shall be made white as doves; your innocence and happiness shall appear, and your white shall be intermixt with the color of pure and yellow gold; (i.) you shall come to the top of the highest felicity, and ye shall be freed from slanders, and obtain illustrious glory.

2. In the acting of his faith, he endeavored 1. To Meditate: 2. To pray.

1. His Meditations were these:—

1. That we know not how to prevent it. Men may slander, and men will slander, so long as the world lasts; only we have these Promises for comforts, and it is the Lord who promiseth, and if he please, he can hide us from the scourge of tongues; or if he please, he is able to restore us double to our shame.

2. That true faith will fortify the soul against all Reproaches: There is an encouraging voice of the Lord to this end; Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness; the people in whose heart is my law: fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

3. That if the wicked reproach more and more, yet it is the duty of Christians to exercise patience. Experience of their vanities, and God's gracious dealings with us, will fortify our hearts: Fear not thou worm (thou poor despicable thing) I will help thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer; and as for thy reproachers, their doom is before, Behold, all they that are incensed against thee, shall be ashamed and confounded; they shall be as nothing, and they that strive with thee shall perish.

4. That faith makes the soul circumspect, and in this case doth ransack and fan the soul narrowly, to find out what is the matter and rise of those slanders & reproaches: If ye suffer for righteousness sake, happy are ye; it must be for righteousness sake, or there is no blessing upon it: and so the Apostle adds, You must have a good conscience, that whereas they speak evil of you as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ: for it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing, then for evil-doing. We are ordinarily more impatient at undeserved, then deserved sufferings; but it is better (saith the Apostle) so to suffer, then otherwise. Let none of you suffer as a murderer, a thief, an evil door, but if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this behalf.

5. That true faith esteems all such slanders as the most honorable badges of innocence that possibly can be. If mine adversary should write a book against me, surely I would take it upon my shoulder, and bind it as a crown to me. I rejoice (said Luther) that Satan so rages and blasphemes, it is likely that I do him and his Kingdom the more mischief. And they that reproach me (said Austin) do against their wills increase mine honor both with God and good men. The more the dirty feet of men tread and rub on the figure graven in gold, the more luster they give it: so the more causeless aspersions the wicked cast on the godly, the more bright do they rub their glory. And hence was that choice of Moses, rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt.

2. For Prayer, his method was,—

1. To complain to the Lord, as sometimes David did, Thou, O Lord, hast known my reproach, and my shame, and my dishonor: mine adversaries are all before thee. Reproach hath broken my heart, and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to take pity, but there was none, and for comforters, but I found none.

2. To petition to the Lord, as otherwhiles David did, Let me not be ashamed, O Lord, for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in the grave: let the lying lips be put to silence, which speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous. O how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that trust in thee before the sons of men? Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of men, thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues. Thus Lord I beg at thy hands, or if otherwise, thou knowest it best in thy wisdom: Let them alone, and let them curse, it may be the Lord will look on my affliction, and thou Lord wilt requite good for their cursing this day.

3. To press the Lord with his gracious Promises: as thus, Thou hast said, Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my names sake: And if ye suffer for Righteousness sake, happy are ye: And if ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye: These are thy golden promises, now Lord make them good to my soul, let me draw the juice, and sweet, and virtue from every of these promises; let not a word of these promises fall to the ground, but let me have my part, and share, and portion in them.

4. To pray to the Lord to forgive all his Enemies that trespassed against him, as sometimes Christ did, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do: Surely in these two things there is much matter of comfort: 1. That our hearts are well, and not ill-affected to any man. 2. That going alone we can humble ourselves, and pray for the authors of all the reproaches and slanders that are unjustly cast on us.

SECT. 6. Of the manner of this life of faith in spiritual blessings, as derived to us from God and Christ, and the Spirit of Christ.

Concerning spiritual blessings, or good things, consider we

- 1. The promises.
- 2. The exercise of faith in respect of those promises.

1. The Promises are of such blessings as arise either from

- God.
- Christ.
- The Spirit of Christ.

1. From God proceeds his

- Love of us.
- Presence with us.
- Providence over us.

1. Concerning his love of us, we have these promises, Deut. 7.7, 8, 13. Isa. 54.8. Jer. 31.3. Hosea 2.19. and 14.4. John 3.16. Ephe. 2.4. 1 John 4.19.

2. Concerning his presence with us, we have these promises, Gen. 26.24. and 28.15. Exod. 3.12. Joshua 1.5. Jer. 1.8. 1 Chron. 28.20. Isaiah 41.10. Math. 28.20. Rev. 2.1.

3. Concerning his providence over us, we have these promises, Psal. 34.7. and 91.11, 12. Job 36.7. Zech. 2.8. whence (He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye) observe, That the Lord to express the tenderness of his love, names the tenderest part of the body, nay the tenderest piece of the tenderest part, The Crystal humor, as the Philosophers call it.

2. From Christ we have promises

- 1. Of the person of Christ.
- 2. Of the benefits that flow from Christ.

1. Of the person of Christ, in Genesis 3.15. where was the first promise, and the foundation of all other promises, because God intended to make good every promise in Christ.

2. Of the benefits that flow from Christ, whether

- Redemption.
- Vocation.
- Justification.
- Reconciliation.
- Adoption.

1. Concerning Redemption, we have these promises, Tit. 2.14. Ephe. 1.7. Gal. 3.13. Heb. 9.12.

2. Concerning Vocation, we have these promises, Acts 2.39. Rom. 8.30.

3. Concerning Justification, we have these promises, Isaiah 53.11. Acts 13.39. Rom. 8.33.

Now this Justification consists of two parts, in

- 1. Not imputing sin.
- 2. Imputing righteousness.

1. For not imputing (or forgiving) sin, we have these promises, Psal. 32.2. Jer. 31.34. Isaiah 55.7. Jer. 33.8. hither tend all those Metaphors, Isa. 43.25. and 44.22. and 38.17. Micah 7.19.

2. For imputing Righteousness, we have these promises, Rom. 5.19. 1 Cor. 1.30. Rom. 10.4. Isaiah 61.10. Gal. 3.6. this phrase is used ten times in one Chapter, Rom. 4.3, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 23, 24.

4. Concerning Reconciliation, we have these promises, 2 Cor. 5.18, 19. Ephe. 2.14, 16. Col. 1.21, 22.

5. Concerning Adoption, we have these promises, Gal. 3.26. John 1.12. Rom. 9.26. Gal. 4.4, 5, 7.

3. From the Spirit of Christ, we have promises,—

- 1. Of the Spirit himself.
- 2. Of the operation of the Spirit.

1. Of the Spirit himself, in Joel 2.28, 29. Acts 2.17, 18. John 14.16, 17. Ephe. 1.13. Gal. 3.14.

2. Of the operation of the Spirit, and that

- 1. In general, as Sanctification.
- 2. In special, as
  - Spiritual Graces.
  - Spiritual duties.

1. Concerning Sanctification, we have these promises, Micah 7.19. Jer. 31.33, 34. Heb. 8.10. and 10.16. 1 Thess. 5.23. 1 John 1.7. Revel. 1.5.—

Concerning Graces and Duties, we shall handle them anon.

2. For the exercise of faith concerning the promises, that we may live by them, go we to

- Meditation.
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider these things:

1. That faith (considering the privileges of God's children) admires and adores, O how great is thy goodness which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee, which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee, before the sons of men?—How excellent is thy loving kindness, O Lord; therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings.

2. That faith (in consideration hereof) rests upon God, and Christ, and the Spirit of Christ, to receive whatsoever may be good and profitable to the Soul: The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want:—He shall lead his flock like a shepherd, he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young. What can they want, who have God for their Father, Christ for their Savior, the Spirit for their Sanctifier? Thou Israel art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend: Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant, I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away: Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God, I will strengthen thee, yea I will help thee, yea I will uphold thee with the right hand of my Righteousness.

3. That faith hereupon sets an high price upon Christ, upon God in Christ, upon the Spirit of Christ: These promises are more worth then Kingdoms, Empires, the whole world, which made holy David say, In the multitudes of my thoughts within me, thy comforts delight my soul; q. d. I have multitudes of thoughts, some running this way, some running that way, some on this pleasure, some on that profit, but my soul is only comforted in the thoughts of thee: Pleasures, profits, honors, all are vain and empty, and nothing is to be rested on, to be delighted in, but Jesus Christ; yea, there's a full content in Jesus Christ; let the world be filled with trouble and sorrow, even now faith carries a merry heart.

4. Faith in these promises doth greatly enlarge the heart towards God, and stirreth up to earnest study of holiness; if a Christian be much in the Meditation of God's singular goodness in Christ, it will even constrain him to yield up himself wholly to God, in all manner of godly conversation: Examine, O Lord, and prove me, try my reins and my heart, for thy loving kindness is before mine eyes, and I have walked in thy truth.

5. Faith ever runs to these promises in all straits, and here it finds comforts: Nature teacheth man and beast in troubles and storms to make to a shelter; the child runs to the arms of the mother, the birds to their nests, the conies to the rock, so must the soul have a sanctuary, an hiding place, when danger and trouble comes; now where can it take up a surer and safer refuge, then with God and Christ, and the Spirit of Christ? indeed God it dares not look at, but in Christ; and the Spirit proceeds not but from Christ, to Christ therefore it runs immediately; it is Christ, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: Come (saith faith) let us out to Christ, and if he receive us not presently, let us stay a little; he is full of bowels and tenderness towards poor sinners, h• keeps open house for all comers, he invites all, entertains all, old sinners, young sinners, great sinners, less sinners, his promise is sure to: him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out: Thus faith takes the Believer off from self, civil life, estate, friends, and hangs the soul alone upon that true friend, the Lord Jesus Christ, who hath manifested the greatness of his love to poor sinners, by dying for them, and sending his Spirit to sanctify and comfort them.

2. For Prayer, and the manner of it, observe this method:

1. Confess and acknowledge God's mercies both in his promises and performances: Say, Lord, thou hast said, I will love thee freely:—And I will be with thee, even to the end of the world:—He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye:— And all is yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's:—And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, &c. Surely Lord thou art true in thy sayings; I believe by virtue of this and that promise, I have the love, and promise, and providence of God, I am redeemed, called, justified, reconciled, adopted by Christ; I have the Spirit of Christ, I am sanctified in some measure by that Spirit, I have all this of free grace, and by virtue of a promise.

2. Pray for this increase of faith, and for a further and further sight of this belief: Give me, gracious Father, to believe as thou hast promised; create in me the hand of faith, and make it stronger and stronger, that I may effectually receive, what in mercy thou reachest forth; and then give me the Spirit of Revelation, that I may discern truly what thou hast given me, that my lips may sing of thy praise all the day long.

3. Praise God for his mercies, and quietly rest in the promises: *O Lord, thou hast freely loved, and redeemed, and sanctified my soul; O how should I praise thee, how should I advance and set thee up on high? Salvation, and Glory, and Honor, and Praise be given to thy name, &c. I praise thee for my Election, Vocation, Justification, Sanctification, &c. but above all, for the fountain of all, the Lord Jesus Christ; It is my Christ justifies, and my Christ sanctifies: Lord, thou hast given Christ for my Wisdom and Sanctification, as well as for Righteousness and Redemption: Lord, thou hast appointed Christ to be the beginner and finisher of my holiness, and surely he will not leave that work imperfect, whereunto he is ordained of the Father; were the progress of this building committed to my care and oversight, there might because of fear, but since thou hast laid all upon Christ, my only and all-sufficient Redeemer; Lord increase my faith, that I may hold him fast and be safe, and so at last I may sing Hallelujahs to thee in Heaven forever and ever.*

SECT. 7. Of the manner of this Life of Faith in Spiritual Graces.

The operation of the Spirit in general, we told you was Sanctification; now the operation of the Spirit in special, appears. in

- Spiritual Graces.
- Spiritual Duties.

1. Spiritual Graces we shall consider in their

- Kinds.
- Degrees.

And of them both give

- 1. The Promises.
- 2. The exercise of Faith in respect of those Promises.

1. The kinds of Graces are these, Knowledge, and Faith, and Hope, and Joy, and Love, and Fear, and Obedience, and Repentance, and Humility, and Meekness, and Patience, and Righteousness, and Uprightness, and Peace of Conscience, and Zeal, and Perseverance; sixteen Graces in number: concerning which the Lord hath made gracious Promises.

- 1. Of them, to give them.
- 2. To them, to reward them.

The first Grace is Knowledge, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, Psal. 25.14. Jer. 31.34. Isa. 2.2, 3. Micah 4.1, 2. Ephes. 3.5. Rev. 21.23. 2. To it, as Prov. 3.14. Psal. 91.14. 2 Pet. 1.2. Prov. 3.18.

The second Grace is Faith, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Ephes. 2.8. Joh: 6.37. observe here these promises of assurance, the highest measure of faith, Psal. 50.23. Ezek. 34.30. Isa 60.16. Psal. 97.11. 2. To it, as 2 Chron. 10.20. Prov. 29.25. Isa. 26.3. Acts 10.43. Rom. 18.4. Acts 13.39. John 1.12. and 7.38. and 3.16, 36. and 5.24. and 6.47.

The third Grace is Hope, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Psal. 65.5. Prov. 14.32. Job 13.15. 2. To it, as Psal. 40.4. Rom. 4.18, 22. Rom. 8.24.

The fourth Grace is Joy, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, Psal. 36.8, 9. and 64.10. and 68.3. and 97.11. and 118.15. Isa. 12.2, 3. Isa. 35. throughout, Isa. 56.7. and 66.13, 14. John 16.22. Rom. 14.17. 2. To it, Psal. 89.15, 16.

The fifth Grace is Love, especially of God, and we may find some promises, 1. Of it, as Cant. 1.4. Deut. 30.6. 2. To it, as Psal. 91.14. and 145.20. Prov. 8.21. Deut. 7.9. 1 Cor. 8.3. and 2.9, 10. James 1.12. and 2.5.

The sixth Grace is Fear, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Jer. 32.39, 40. Hosea 3.5. 2. To it, as Psal. 103.11. and 31.19. and 147.11. Mal. 3.16, 17.

The seventh Grace is Obedience, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Ezek. 11.19, 20. and 36.26, 27. 2. To it, as Deut. 28.1, 2. to 14.

The eighth Grace is Repentance, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Acts 5.30, 31. Exek. 11.19. and 20.43. and 36.31. 2. To it, as Mal. 3.7. Isaiah 55.7. 2 Chron. 7.14. Isaiah 1.16, 17, 18. Job 3.27, 28. Jer. 4.14.

The ninth Grace is Humility, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as 2 Cor. 10.4, 5. Gal. 5.22. 2. To it, as Prov. 15.33. and 22.4. James 4.6. 1 Peter 5.5. Isaiah 57.15. Matthew 5.3.

The tenth Grace is Meekness, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Isa. 11.6, 7, 8. Gal. 5.22, 23. 2. To it, as Psal. 37.11. and 147.6. Isa. 29.19. Psal. 25.9. Zeph. 2.3. Matth. 5.5. and 11.29. Psal. 149.4.

The eleventh Grace is Patience, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as James 1.5. 2. To it, as Hebrews 10.36. James 5.11.

The twelfth Grace is Righteousness, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Rev. 19.7, 8. 2. To it, as Psal. 11.7. Isa. 32.17, 18. Prov. 14.32. Psal. 112.2, 6. Mat. 25.46.

The thirteenth Grace is Uprightness, or Sincerity of heart, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Jer. 31.33. Jer. 50.5. 2. To it, as Psal. 84.11. Prov. 14.11. Psal. 112.2. 2 Chron. 16.9. Psal. 112.4. and 84.11. Gen. 17.1, 2. 1 Chron. 29.17. Prov. 12.22. Psal. 37.37. Prov. 28.18. Psal. 15.1, 2.

The fourteenth Grace is Peace of Conscience, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as John 14.27. Gal. 6.16. Isa. 57.19. Isa. 54.10. 2. To it, as Phil. 4.7.

The fifteenth Grace is Zeal, and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Jeremiah 20.9. 2 Cor. 7.11. 2. To it, as Numbers 25.12, 13. Revel. 3.19, 20.

The sixteenth Grace is Perseverance; and we find some promises, 1. Of it, as Psal. 89.28. Prov. 12.3. Isaiah 46.4. 2. To it, as Mat. 10.22. Revel. 2.26.

2. The degrees of Graces follow; and we find some promises 1. Thereof, as Isaiah 44.3, 4. Mal. 4.2. Psal. 84.7. Prov. 4.18. 2. There to, as Rom. 13.11. 2 Pet. 1.8.

2. For the exercise of faith concerning these promises, that we may live by them, go we to

- Meditation
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider these things:

1. That of ourselves we have no ability to attain any of these Graces: Everyone can say, I purpose well, but the question is, whether they build not on their own strength: Many a man (especially in time of his sickness, danger, disgrace) will make fair promises of amendment, but when the rod is removed, all is forgotten: What may be the reason? he stands on his own feet, he presumes to go alone of himself, and by his own strength, and then no marvel if he falls and catcheth many a knock: If we will have any of these Graces, then deny we ourselves: I will keep thy statutes (said David) but immediately upon his resolution he cries, O forsake me not utterly: Purposes thus grounded, bring forth holy performances, but of ourselves we can expect nothing.

2. That God's Spirit will infuse these Graces, and the increase of these Graces into them that believe: Many would fain have Knowledge, and Faith, and Hope, and Joy, &c. but they exercise not their Faith to believe God and his promises: I knew a man in Christ (could Paul say) concerning his Revelation; so, I know a man in Christ off and on, unstayed, dismayed at his manifold slips, strong corruptions, little prevailings against them, and (when all came to all) he could find no help till he went to a promise, and by faith believed that God would aid and assist, and do the whole work for him; it is good to believe that (according to his promise) God will sanctify our natures, enable us to holiness, and bestow all his graces on us.

3. That for the degrees of these Graces, it is necessary to improve them; graces improved, are the ready way to have them increased: God ever bestows the greatest measure, where he finds a care to put them forth to advantage: Whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; as men increase their substance by labor, and learning by diligence, so he that improves graces, shall more and more abound in them.

2. For Prayer, and the parts of it, observe this method:

1. Confess and acknowledge our inabilities: O Lord, I have no grace by nature, I have no power to cleanse my own heart: O Lord, I have defaced thine image, but I cannot repair it; I may say with the Apostle, When I would do well, evil is present with me, but I find no means to perfect what I desire: I am not able to crawl about the doing of that which is good: O when shall I be set at liberty, that I might do the work of God, and run the race of his Commandments: O that I had Knowledge, and Faith, and Hope, and Joy, and Love!

2. Look we up to the Power, and Grace, and Truth of God, and press him therewith: Lord, I have heard of thy power, thou art God Almighty, who callest the things that are not, as if they were; thou canst if thou wilt, work in me these Graces, and create them in me, as thou didst gloriously create them in Adam, the first man: Lord, I have heard also of thy grace and truth, thou art as faithful to keep, as free to make these sweet precious promises; Thy grace is unsearchable, thy word purer then silver seven times refined: O then make good thy promises, I press thee with thy Power, Grace and Truth: O replenish me with thy Graces, give me Knowledge, and Faith, and Hope, &c.

3. Look we on the promises, and pray by them, or turn them into prayers: Faith hearkeneth what the Lord speaketh, and speaketh back again in fervent groans and desires to whatsoever it hearkeneth: Hence we can make no prayer in boldness, faith or comfort, but for things promised, and in that manner as they are promised. Thus Jacob (Gen. 32.9.) and David (2 Sam. 7.27, 28, 29.) prayed by a promise; and thus should we pray by a promise, and then we may be sure we pray according to his will. In want of other Rhetoric and Oratory, let us urge God with this repetition: Lord, thou hast promised, Lord, thou hast promised, thou hast made many sweet precious promises of Graces, and of degrees of Graces: Thou hast said, The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and, All that the Father giveth me, shall come unto me; and, The Righteous hath hope in his death; and, The Righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and shall trust in him; and, They shall go from strength everyone of them in Zion, appearing before God: O make these promises effectual to me, blow on my garden, that the spices (these graces) may flow out.

SECT. 8. Of the manner of this Life of Faith in Spiritual Duties.

AS Spiritual Graces, so Spiritual Duties, are of the operation of God's Spirit: Now the duties are Twenty, concerning which we shall give

- 1. The Promises.
- 2. The exercises of faith in respect of the Promises.

The first duty is Prayer, to which are affixed these promises, Psal. 5.3. and 10.17. and 65.2. Prov. 15.29. Psal. 50.15. and 12.17, 18, 19, 20. Zech. 13.8, 9. Rom. 18.13. James. 5.15.

The second duty is Praises, to which are affixed these promises, 1 Sam. 2.30. Psal. 50.23. and 67.5, 6.

The third duty is Preaching, to which Matth. 28.20. John 5.25.

The fourth duty is Reading the Word, to which Psal. 19.8. Prov. 1.4.

The fifth duty is Loving the Word, to which Psal. 119.165. and 112.1.

The sixth duty is Waiting on the Word, to which Proverbs 8.34, 35.

The seventh duty, Hearkening to the Word, to which Isaiah 55.2, 3. Acts 5.20.—20.32.—13.26.

The eighth duty is Sacraments of

- Baptism, to which Acts 2.38. and 22.16. 1 Peter 3.21.
- Lord's Supper, to which Isa. 25.6. Proverbs 9.5, 6. Mat. 26.26..

The ninth duty is, A lawful Oath, to which Jer. 12.16. Psal. 15.4.

The tenth duty is Fasting, to which James 4.9, 10. Matth. 6.18.

The eleventh duty is Meditation, to which Psal. 1.2. Prov. 14.22. Phil. 4.8, 9.

The twelveth duty is Self-examination, to which 1 Cor. 11.31. Gal. 6.4.

The thirteenth duty is Sanctification of the Lord's Day, to which Isaiah 58.13, 14. and 56. 2. Jer. 17.26.

The fourteenth duty is Watchfulness, to which Mat. 24.46, 47. Luke 12.37, 38, 43. Rev. 16.15.

The fifteenth duty is Conference, to which Prov. 12.14. and 16.13. Mal. 3.16. Luke 24.32.

The sixteenth duty is Reproof, to which Proverbs 24.25. and 28.23.

The seventeenth duty is Almsgiving, to which Psal. 41.1, 2, 3. Luke 14.13, 14.

The eighteenth duty is Seeking of God, to which Psal. 34.10. Ezra 8.22.

The nineteenth duty is Waiting on God, to which Isa. 40.31. and 64.4. and 49.23.

The twentieth duty is Delighting in God, to which Psalm 37.4.

2. For the exercise of faith concerning these promises, that we may live by them, go we to

- Meditation.
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider these things:

1. That God deals graciously with his people, he might out of his absolute sovereignty over us, command only, and we were bound then to obey in every of these Duties; but he is pleased (the better to quicken us to obedience) to annex these gracious promises.

2. That as he is gracious to us, so we should be cheerful in our Duties to him: This cheerfulness of service, is the very fruit of faith; By faith Abel brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof, an offering to the Lord; By faith David went with the multitude unto the house of God, with the voice of joy and of praise: It is the voice of faith, I will sing and give praise with the best member I have.

3. That to make us cheerful, we should rouse ourselves to awaken to the work of our God: Arise, O my soul, why sleepest thou! stir up thyself with readiness to obey the charge of God in the duties prescribed; look on the Saints who have gone before thee, they endured imprisonment, loss of liberty, spoiling of their goods, hazard of life: Thou art not yet called to suffer, but to obey, why dost thou delay, or goest forth unwillingly? wouldest thou reign with them, and not labor with them? receive the prize, and not run the race? divide the spoil, and not fight the battle? look on the promise annexed to the duty: I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek me in vain, saith God: O my soul, arise, contend forward towards the mark, Heaven is worth all thy labor.

4. That to remove all remora's, the Lord hath promised to assist us in these duties by his own Spirit: Besides the promises to Duties, we have promises of duties, God deals with us (as we do by way of commerce one with another) propounding mercy by covenant and condition; yet his Covenant of Grace is always a gracious Covenant, for he not only gives the good things, but helps us in performing the condition by his own Spirit; he works our hearts to believe and repent, &c. he gives what he requires: For instance, in one place he commands, Cast away from you all your transgressions, and make you a new heart, and a new spirit; and in another place he promiseth, I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean from all your filthiness: A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: in one place he commands them, Circumcise the foreskin of your hearts; and in another place he promiseth, That he will circumcise their hearts: in one place he commands us, To keep his Commandments; in another place he promiseth to cause us, To walk in his statutes: in one place he commands us, To fear him, and in another place he promiseth, To put his fear into our hearts: in one place he commands us, To pray, to ask, seek, and knock; and in another place he promiseth, To pour upon us the Spirit of Grace and Supplication: These promises of duties are the foundation of all our performances, and those promises to duties are the rewards of his Free-Grace and good pleasure; we do not by working cause him to fulfil his promises, but he by promising doth enable us to perform our works, and so he rewards us accordingly.

2. For prayer, and the parts of it, observe this method:

1. Acknowledge the goodness and Free-grace of God in these promises: O Lord, why shouldst thou allure me to that which I am every way bound to? If I had none of these promises, I have already in hand a world of mercies, which do infinitely bind me to duty; and wilt thou yet add this and that promise, to this and that duty? O miracle of mercies! O the goodness of God!

2. Bewail our own dullness and sloth to the duty: And yet (O Lord) how dull, and remiss, and slightly am I in the practice of this or that duty? thou hast said, Cursed is the man that doth the work of the Lord negligently; and, Cursed be the deceiver, that hath in his flock a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: O then what is my portion, who have sacrificed that which is torn and sick unto the great King and Lord of Hosts, whose name is dreadful among the Heathen? no marvel if I feel no power, no sweet in the Ordinances of Grace, whilst I deal partially, hear perfunctorily, pray coldly, labor not to feed on the promise, and to suck vigor out of it: O Lord, thou lovest a cheerful giver, but my services are maimed, and corrupt, and dead, and superficial, and very uncheerful.

3. Importune the Lord to revive and quicken our dead hearts to the duty; so prays David, Teach me to do thy will,thy Spirit is good, lead me in the Land of uprightness; so prays the Church, Draw me, and we will run after thee; and so let us pray,Give me a cheerful heart in thy service, animate and enliven my heart by thy blessed Spirit, give me to do what thou requirest, incline my heart to thy statutes, and not to covetousness.

4. Implore the assistance of God's Spirit to every good duty, beg acceptance of our persons and performances in the Lord Jesus Christ, press him with his promises to set on duties, and to reward duties; and what ever duty we do, press him with that especially promise belonging unto it: Thus if we meditate and pray, and pray and meditate, we may live by faith, in reference to Spiritual duties.

SECT. 9. Of the manner of this Life of Faith in things Eternal.

THings Eternal are either

- Evil, as Damnation.
- Good, as Salvation.

Concerning both we shall first give you the promises, and secondly the exercise of faith in respect of these promises.

1. Concerning Damnation, or eternal confusion, we have these promises against it, Isaiah 45.17. Rom. 8.1.

2. Concerning Salvation, we have these promises for it, Rom. 6.23. 1 Thess. 4.17. God hath promised us a Kingdom, Mat. 25.34. An heavenly Kingdom, Matth. 7.21. And eternal Kingdom, 2 Pet. 1.11. A Crown of life, James 1.12. A Crown of Righteousness, 2 Tim. 4.8. An unaccessible Crown of glory, 1 Peter 5.4.

2. For the exercise of faith concerning these promises, that we may live by them, go we to

- Meditation.
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider these things:

1. That faith in the precious promises of eternal life, quiets and cheers the heart in the midst of discouragements: This we see in the lives and deaths of God's faithful servants, who took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing in themselves, that they had in Heaven a better and an enduring substance.

2. That faith strives to enter into the possession of this Kingdom by degrees: Men that purchase an inheritance to come in hereafter, they are glad if any part fall into their hands for the present: Fulness of glory is reserved for the life to come, but the beginnings of glory (as peace of Conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, Sanctification of the Spirit) are vouchsafed here; grace is the beginning of glory, and glory is the perfection of grace; now as grace grows, so we enter upon the possession of our inheritance: Hence lively grace covets grace more and more, that we may get Heaven by degrees, and by parcels.

3. Faith earnestly desires and longs after the full accomplishment of glory: Our selves also which have the first-fruits of the spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the Redemption of the body: I am in a full strait (said Paul) betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better: Salvation is the end of faith, Heaven is the home of Believers: Now all would be at home, all things desire perfection in their kind, this makes the Believer to long after glory.

2. For prayer, and the parts of it, observe this method:

1. Confess we our former carelessness to enter upon this inheritance: O Lord, I have slighted thy promises, I have neglected the motions of thy Holy Spirit, I have not carefully improved the gifts received, I have not labored more and more to be sealed with the promised Spirit: Ah Lord, what a dwarf am I in Holiness and Sanctification? by reason of my sloth, the powers of grace are so enfeebled, that I can scarce breath or sigh, or crawl in the way to Heaven: O that I have not so earnestly sought (as I might) to make Heaven sure to myself, that I have not entered possession thereof, so far as in this life I have given me of Grace.

2. Pray that the Lord would increase our Faith, seal us by his Spirit, lead us in the way of peace, cause us to grow up in holiness, make us wise to prize and value, to taste and relish the very joys of heaven; and above all, that he would assure our consciences of our right and title thereto: O it is God that sealeth, and makes us to read the sealing; it is God that promiseth Heaven, and affects the heart with the goodness and worth of the thing promised; it is God that (by the pledges of his favor, and earnestness of his Spirit) doth testify our adoption, and causeth us certainly to apprehend what he doth testify: pray then, Who am I Lord, that thou shouldest make such ample, and free promises to thy poor servant? it is of thy free mercy, and according to thine own heart: And now, O God, establish I beseech thee, the word that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant: O seal unto me the promised inheritance, and make me assuredly know what those hopes are, which thou hast reserved for me in Heaven: Of thy Free grace thou calledst me to this hope, therefore is thy servant bold to entreat the sense of thy love, the knowledge of this hope, the increase of Grace, the assurance of thy mercy.

3. Praise God for his Promises of eternal life: O Lord, thou hast looked on my base estate, and visited me with mercy from on high; of a stranger and forreigner, thou hast made me a free denizen of the New Jerusalem: Now I see, I read it in thy precious Promises, that my name is registered in heaven; an eternal weight of glory is reserved for me; Heaven is my home, my hope, my inheritance: O where should my heart be, but where my treasure is? where should my thoughts be, but where my hope is? now all glory, and honor, and praise be given to my God! O the incomprehensible love and favor of my dear Lord! What a mercy is this? What promises are these? my soul rejoiceth in thee my God, my spirit shall bless thy name forever and ever.

SECT. 10. Of the manner of this Life of Faith in regard of others.

WE have done with the Promises that concern ourselves: Now follows such special Promises as we find in Holy Writ concerning others, and they have reference To

- Our own Family.
- Godly Society further enlarged.
- The Church of Christ
  - Particular.
  - General.

1. The members of our Family are either

- Husband and Wife.
- Parent and Child.
- Master and Servant.

1. For the Husband and Wife, if godly, they have a promise from the Lord, Psal. 128. Prov. 31.28. & 11.16. Job 5.25.

2. For Parent and Child, God hath made a gracious Covenant with them, Gen. 17.7, 9. Acts 2.39. Jer. 32.39. Prov. 20.7. Good Parents (though poor) leave their Children a good patrimony, for they have laid up many prayers for them in heaven, and they leave God's favor for their possession, and his promises for a sure inheritance, Psal. 37.25, 26. Prov. 11.21. Psal. 112.2. & 25.13. & 37.29. Prov. 13.22. Isa. 44.3, 4. & 54.13. and Children obeying their Parents, have these promises, Exod. 20.12. Eph. 6.2. Jer. 35.18, 19. Prov. 1.8, 9. & 6.20.

3. For Master and Servant, they have sweet promises, Pro. 3.33. Job 8.16. Prov. 14.11. especially the servant that is truly obedient, Col. 3.23, 24. 1 Pet. 2.19. here consider

- Magistrates, Deut. 17.19, 20. Psal. 132.18.
- Ministers, Psal. 105.15. Rev. 2.1. Isa. 49.4.

2. Godly Society (out of our own Families) hath precious promises, as Prov. 13.20. Mal. 3.16, 17. Mat. 18.20.

3. The Church of Christ, whether particular (as public Assemblies) hath blessed promises, Isa. 33.20, 21. & 59.21. Mat. 18.20. 1 Cor. 5.4. Rev. 2.1. Psal. 26.8. & 133.3. Micah 4.4, 11, 12. or whether general and universal, it hath glorious promises, as Mat. 16.8. Isa. 27.3. Psal. 125.2. Zech. 9.16. here come in all the promises, First, of calling the Jews, as Isa. 59.20. Rom. 11.23, 26. Hos. 13.14. & 14.2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Secondly, of bringing in the Gentiles, as Isa. 49.22, 23. Rev. 21.24. John 10.16. Isa. 60.3, 5, 8. Acts 10.14. Eph. 2.12, 19. Thirdly, of the destruction of Antichrist, as 2 Thess. 2.8. Rev. 17.16. & 18.21. where each word hath almost a gradation, in that an Angel, a mighty Angel taketh a stone, and a great stone, even a millstone, which he letteth not barely fall, but casteth into the sea, whence nothing ordinarily is recovered, must less a millstone, thrust from such a hand, and with such force.

Now for the exercising of faith concerning these promises, that we may live by them, go we to

- Meditation.
- Prayer.

1. For Meditation, and the matter of it, consider these things:

1. That we have had the performance of many of these promises in hand; and this may persuade us, that the residue (especially of the Churches flourishing, and of Antichrists downfall) is as sure as that part already accomplished, which we see with our eyes; experience should strengthen faith, and breed an assured hope in God's people, of the Lord's most glorious appearing, and this hope shall not make us ashamed.

2. That the time is now for the Churches restoring, and for bringing in more Kingdoms from Antichrist to Christ; what else mean all the shakings in all the Kingdoms of the world at this time? therefore study we this time of God, and in our places and callings, work with providence, now we have a season to help up the Church, God's holy Mountain.

2. For Prayer, and the parts of it, observe this method:

1. Confess our former neglect in our several relations: O Lord, I have not done my duty in my own family, among Christians in the Churches of Christ, I have not performed my vows, served my generation, helped onward the building of Zion: And now Lord what shall I say, but confess to thy glory, and my own shame, my disrespect of others good, or of the communion of Saints.

2. Pray for a blessing on others, as on our own selves, forget not our relations to others in our best prayers; be importunate with God more especially for Zion, O look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities, let thine eyes see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; let not one of the stakes thereof be removed, nor any of the cords be broken.

3. Press we the Lord with all his precious Promises, either to our Families, or Christian Societies, or to the Churches of Christ: We have a promise, that The Lord will create upon every dwelling place of mount Zion, and upon the assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night, for upon all the glory shall be a defense: Now Lord make good thy word, &c.

Conclude with, I believe, that whatsoever God hath said in any of these respects, he will fulfil it in his own time: Heaven and earth shall pass away, but not one jot, one tittle of God's word shall fail. It may be for the present things seem contrary, yet God hath said it (should a soul say) and that's enough for me: If I can but really acknowledge, and believe, that God is able to do it, he will then speak from heaven, as he did once on earth, According to your faith be it unto you. Thus much of The Life of Faith.

CHAP. IX.

SECT. 1. Of the nature of Family-duties.

Hitherto of the Duties which concern every man in his own particular; next to them succeed Family-duties: And they are such Duties as ought to be jointly or respectively observed by the families and houses of the people of God. This is implied by that threat, Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy Name; and by that example of Joshua, But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord; and by that promise of God, At the same time, saith the Lord, will I be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people.

SECT. 2. Of the preparatives to Family-duties.

Now that we may comfortably carry on these Family-duties, observe we

- 1. Our entrance into them.
- 2. Our proceedings in them.

1. For entrance, we must lay a good foundation for tractableness unto Religion in those that belong to this Family, as

- 1. In the governor.
- 2. In the governed.

1. In the governor; whose duty it is

1. To endeavor in a special manner for knowledge in God's word, and for holiness of conversation in a Christian walking; this would tend much to the preservation of his authority, who otherwise will be slighted and disregarded, through an aptness in inferiors to take occasion therefrom.

2. To marry in the Lord, and then to live chastely in wedlock, that there may be an holy seed: Now that he may marry in the Lord, 1. Let piety be the mover of his affection, and personage, parentage and portion, be only as a comfortable accessory, considerable in a second place: Christianity and grace is the chief golden link and noble tie, which hath the power and privilege to make marriage a lovely and everlasting bond. 2. Let him ply the throne of Grace with fervency of prayer; a good wife is a more immediate gift of God: whence Solomon could say, Houses and riches are the inheritance of fathers, but a prudent wife is from the Lord: such a rare and precious jewel is to be sued and sought for at God's Mercy-seat with extraordinary importunity and zeal; and if she be procured at God's hand by prayer, he shall find a thousand times more sweetness and comfort, then if she be cast on him by an ordinary providence. 3. Let him observe and mark these six points in his choice; as, 1. The Report: 2. The looks: 3. The speech: 4. The apparel: 5. The companions: 6. The education: These are like the pulses, that show the fitness and godliness of any party with whom he ought to marry.

3. To beware whom he admits to dwell with him, that they be tractable unto religious courses: See David's resolution herein, Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way shall serve me; he that worketh deceit, shall not dwell within my house; he that telleth lies, shall not tarry in my sight.

2. In the governed; whose duty it is both to join together in the performance of Family-duties with their governor, to submit to his government: My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother, for they shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck.

These preparatives I pin upon the front or porch of this Family: Now to the Family-duties themselves, and how they must be exercised.

SECT. 3. Of the Duties of Governors in general.

IN the proceedings of these Family-duties, we are to consider the Duties

- 1. Of the governors.
- 2. Of the governed.

1. The governors, if (as it is in marriage) there be more then one; as first, the chief governor, to wit, the Husband; secondly, the helper, to wit, the Wife: both these owe Duties to their Families, and Duties to one another.

1. The Duties they owe to their Families, are either

- In general to the whole.
- In particular, according to their several relations.

1. That which in general they owe to the whole Family, is either to their - Bodies.

- Souls.

1. To their Bodies; concerning which, saith the Apostle, He that provideth not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse then an infidel. Now as the Spirit of God chargeth us with this duty, so he setteth us about such things whereby this may be compassed; as, 1. That everyone should have some honest and good calling, and walk diligently in it; Let him that stole, steal no more (saith the Apostle) but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good. 2. That he bear a low sail, and keep within compass; remembering that of Solomon, He that is despised, and hath a servant, is better then he that honoreth himself, and lacketh bread.

2. To their Souls; concerning which, some duties they are to

- Perform to the Family.

- Require of the Family.

1. The Duties they must perform to them, are—

1. To provide that they may live under the public Ministry, for otherwise how should they be brought into the sheepfold of Christ, if they hear not the voice of the chief Shepherd speaking unto them by those whom he hath sent?

2. To oversee the ways of their Families, that they serve God; and as in all other duties, so especially in sanctifying the Sabbaths: To this the very words in the fourth Commandment, do bind all Masters of families: Remember, thou and thy son, and thy daughter, thy man-servant, and thy maid;—Where the Lord speaks by name to the Governors, as if he would make them overseers of this work of sanctifying his Sabbaths.

3. To set their house in order for the service of God, to offer prayers and praises to the Lord morning and evening, before and after meals: This was David's practice, Evening and morning, and at noon will I pray and cry aloud, and he shall hear my voice; and this was Jobs practice, who sent for, and sanctified his sons and daughters, and rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt-offerings, according to the number of them all:—Thus did Job continually: And this was Abraham's practice wheresoever he came, to build an Altar to God, where God should be worshipped jointly of him and his family: And this was Christ's practice for himself and his family, Matthew 14.19. and 26.30. John 17.1.

4. To instruct their families privately in matters of Religion, that they may not only profess, but feel the power of Religion in their lives and conversations: This duty hath these specials belonging to it,

1. A familiar catechizing of them in the principles of Religion: Thus were Parents commanded of old, Thou shalt teach these words diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

2. A daily reading of Scriptures in their hearing, directing them to mark and to make use of them: So Timothy was trained up by his parents, and that from his childhood.

3. A careful endeavoring that they may profit by the public Ministry: To this end 1. They must prepare them to hear the Word, by considering God's Ordinances, Promises, and their own necessities. 2. They must remember them to look in the Word for a Christ, and for communion with Christ. 3. They must examine them after the Ordinances, what they have learned, and what use they can make of it; thus Christ, after he had preached a parable to his disciples, he said unto them, Know you not this parable, and how then will you know all parables? and then he expounds the parable to them.

2. The duties they are to require of the family, are both carefully to frequent the public Ministry, and diligently to be conversant in the private worship of God, and constantly to practice all holy and Christian duties comprised briefly in the Commandments of God; and they are to require these things, not only by telling them, calling on them, catechizing them, admonishing them, but if they be negligent, by correcting them.

Now this correction must be ministered in

- Wisdom.
- Patience.

1. In wisdom, whose property it is to find out the right party that committed the fault, to consider of what sort and nature the fault is, to weigh circumstances of age, discretion and occasions; and to look to the mind of the doer, whether negligence or mere simplicity brought him to it.

2. In patience, whose property it is to make the fault manifest to the offender, that his conscience may be touched therewith; to hear what the offender can say in his own defense, and accordingly to allow or disallow; to avoid bitterness, which sooner will harden the heart, then reform the manners of the offender: These Rules being observed, and the heart lifted up in prayer to God for direction and blessing, this Correction is necessary, as is evident in Gen. 30.2. Prov. 13.24. and 19.18.

These are the duties that Governors owe to their families, in respect of their souls; to correct them, catechize them, admonish them, call on them, read to them, pray for them, &c. only with these limitations:

1. That they presume not above their callings: This was Paul's Exhortation, That no man take this honor to himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron: The honor here, is the honor of the public Ministry, except that, and I know not but that every Governor of a family, who hath special abilities, utterance, memory, may read Scriptures, repeat Sermons, pray, teach and instruct them out of Scriptures, 1 Pet. 4.10. Thus Jacob said to his household, Put away the strange gods that are among you: And without all contradiction (saith the Apostle) the less is blessed of the better: And if the women would learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; thus Oriegen would have the Word expounded in Christian families; and Augustine saith, That which the Preacher is in the pulpit, the same is the householder in the house.

2. That they presume not above their gifts: This was Paul's Exhortation to every man, Not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith; yet I deny not but in some cases they may lawfully depute or substitute someone in the family, whom they judge fittest unto the service and employment, which they themselves should ordinarily perform, as in case of old age and weakness of body; Thus Samuel being old, made his sons Judges: Or in want of good utterance or expression of what is to be said; thus Aaron was Moses his spokesman, and instead of a mouth: Or in want of boldness and audacity, arising from a consciousness of weakness; thus the good Centurion sent the Elders of the Jews to Christ to intercede for him: Or in case that a Minister of the Gospel do sojourn in ones family, as Archippus did in Philemon his house: Or in case of necessary absence; thus the Apostle Paul made Timothy his deputy to the Christian Thessalonians: Or in case the Lord hath bestowed more of his gifts and graces to one than another: I know not in this case, but that we may Covet earnestly the best gifts in others, as well as in our own selves.

SECT. 4. Of the Duties of Parents to their Children.

The Duties in particular which Governors owe to the Family, according to their relations, are either

- As Parents to their Children.
- As Masters to their Servants.

The duties of Parents to their children, are either

- To their bodies.
- To their souls.

1. The Duties of Parents to the bodies of their children, are in many particulars, but may be all comprised under this one head, A provident care for their Temporal good; and this extendeth itself to all times, as,

- 1. To their infancy.
- 2. To their youth.
- 3. To the time of Parents departure out of this world.

1. The first age of a child is his infancy, and the first part of its infancy, is while it remaineth in the Mothers womb: Here the Duty lies principally upon the mother, to have a special care of it, that it may be safely brought forth. Why was the charge of abstaining from wine, strong drink, and unclean things, given to Manoah's wife, but because of the child which she had conceived?

The next degree of a child's infancy, is while it is in the swaddling-band, and remains a sucking child; in this also the care more especially lies on the mother, whose duty it is to take all pains she possibly may, for the education of her child; and especially to give her child suck, if she be able thereto: This not only Nature, but Scripture sets forth;

- 1. By Consequence, Gen. 49.25. Hosea 9.14. 1 Tim. 5.10.
- 2. By Example, Gen. 21.7. 1 Sam. 1.23. Psal. 22.9.
- 3. By Grant, the Word giving it as a ruled case not to be denied, Gen. 21.7. Cant. 8.1. Luke 11.27.

2. The second age of a child is its youth, from the time it begins to be of any discretion, till it be fit to be placed forth: Now the duty of Parents at this time is,

- 1. To nourish.
- 2. To nurture their children.

Under nourishment, are comprised Food, Apparel, Recreation, means for recovery of health when they are sick; in which if Parents provide not for their Children, they are worse then Infidels: And under nurture, are comprised good manners, a good calling, frequent admonition, reprehension, correction, the last remedy, which may do good when nothing else can, Prov. 19.18.—23.13, 14.—29.17.

3. The last time to which parents provident care extendeth itself, is the time of their departure out of the world, & then they are to set their house in order, & to leave their estates to their children.

2. The duties of Parents to the souls of their children, extends itself also to all times, as,

- 1. To their Infancy.
- 2. To their Youth.
- 3. To the time of Parents departure out of this world.

1. The first age of a child, is his infancy: and the first part of its infancy, is while it remaineth in the mothers womb. Now the duty of parents at that time are these: 1. That they pray for their children: Thus did Rebekah, while the children were quick in her womb. Those parents that neglect this duty to their children, consider not rightly that they are conceived in sin: and 2. That they make sure (so much as in them lies) that their children be born under the Promise, or under the Covenant, in respect of the Spiritual part of it: How? by making sure that they be under the Promise or Covenant themselves: If God in Christ be their God, they may have a comfortable hope, That God will be the God of their seed, according to the Promise, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed.

The next degree of a childes infancy, is when it is born: and the duty of parents then is, To give up their children unto God, casting them into the hands of his Providence, into the arms of his Mercy, begging for them a gracious acceptation with God; and to tender them to the Ordinance, The Sacrament of Baptism, to get the seal of the Covenant set upon them, to get them mark'd out for salvation.

2. The second age of a child, is its youth: Now the Duty of Parents to their children at this time, is to train them up in true piety, To bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. To this end—

1. When children begin to read, let them read the holy Scriptures: so was Timothy trained up from a child; and thus will children suck in Religion with learning.

2. Let children be Catechized constantly from day today; only with this caveat, That parents deal with their children, as skilful Nurses and Mothers do in feeding their children, (i.) not to give them too much at once: overmuch dulls a childes understanding, and breeds wearisomeness to it; it is most suitable to give them Precept upon precept, Precept upon precept, Line upon line, Line upon line, here a little, and there a little: Thus shall they learn with ease and delight, and in time a great measure of knowledge will be gained thereby.

3. Let parents declare to their children, the admirable works that God in former times hath done for his Church, especially such works as he hath done in their time: outward sensible things do best work upon children, and therefore this direction was given under the Law, Josh. 4.6, 21.

4. Let Parents be to their children a good pattern in piety, leading them to Christ by their examples: This will take place with children, more than all precepts or paternal instructions: But as for me (said Joshua) and my house, we will serve the Lord; he sets himself first, as a guide to the rest.

5. Let Parents reprove and correct their children for sin; and that the Lord may sanctify this correction unto them, Consider this, O ye parents, Do you observe such and such sins in your children? enter into your own hearts, examine yourselves, whether they come not from you: Consider how justly the hand of God may be upon you: and when you are angry with your children, have an holy anger with your own selves, and use this or the like Meditation with your own souls, Lord, shall I thus punish my own sin in mine own child? shall I thus persecute the corruptions of mine own ancestors? how then mayest thou be displeased with me for the too carnal conception of my own child? It may be, I then lay in some sin, or I asked it not of thee by prayer: Be merciful to me, O Lord, and in thy good time, show thou pity on me and my child!

6. As children grow in years, and in the knowledge of Christ, and of justification by Christ, let Parents train them up in the exercise of all Duties, as Prayer, Meditation, Self-Examination, Watchfulness, and all means public and private: if this be done, the world to come may reap the benefit of their education; such children as you bring up, such parents will they be (when you are gone) to their children; and such children shall they have, who are parents in the next generation, &c. You then are the very making or marring of the world: but on the contrary, if this be neglected, the rich man shall rise up against you in the day of Judgment, and condemn you; for he being in hell, had a care of his fathers house, that they might be forewarn'd, he desired Abraham to send Lazarus to his brethren, to testify unto them that they came not to that place of torment; but you will not admonish your children, you will not teach them Moses and the Prophets; you will not show them the danger of God's heavy displeasure hanging o•er their heads; you will not, whilst you live, lead a good example before them: O you may fear that your children shall be Furies of hell to torment you. Now the Lord open your eyes to foresee, and to fly these judgments to come.

3. The last time to which the Duty of Parents extends itself, is the time of their departure out of the world, and then they owe to their children

- Good direction.
- Faithful prayer.

1. For direction: when Parents observe their time to draw near, it is their duty then especially, to commend some wise and wholesome precepts unto their children, the better to direct them in their Christian course; so did Isaac, and Jacob, and David: The words of a dying Parent are especially regarded, and make a deeper impression.

2. For prayer: then is the most proper time for parents to pray and to bless all their children. As they commend their own souls into God's hands, so let them commend their children unto God's grace: God's providence and promises are the best inheritance in the world, and if parents (in their prayers) leave these to their children, they can never want anything that is good. O the faithful prayers of Parents for their Children (especially when they are leaving their Children, and going to God) must needs, in, for and through Christ, prevail mightily with God.

SECT. 5. Of the Duties of Masters to Servants.

The Duty of Masters to their Servants, is either

- To their Bodies.
- To their Souls.

1. The Duty of Masters to the Bodies of their Servants, consists in these particulars; viz. In a due provision of food for them, Prov. 31.15. & 27.27. In a wise care for their clothing, Prov. 31.21. In a well-ordering of their labor, so as they may be able to undergo it: In their ease, rest, and intermission from labor at seasonable times: In paying them sufficient wages, Deut. 24.14, 15. In a careful preserving of their health, and using means for their recovery in case of sickness, Mat. 8.6. and that not of the Servants wages, but of the Masters own charge, otherwise they undo not the heavy burden, but rather lay burden upon burden.

2. The Duties of Masters to the Souls of their Servants, consists in these particulars; viz. In teaching them the Principles of Religion, and all duties of Piety: In causing them to go to the public Ministry of the Word and Worship of God: In taking account of their profiting by the public and private means of Edification: In praying for them; and as they observe any grace wrought in them, in praising God for it, and praying for the increase of it: Nothing so much wins a Servants heart, or the affections of any gracious heart, as the edifying of it in grace.

SECT. 6. Of the Duties of the Husband and Wife.

The Duties which the chief governor and his helper owe to one another, are either

- Common and mutual.
- Proper and peculiar to each severally.

1. The common mutual Duties betwixt Man and Wife, are either

- Of necessity to the being of marriage; as
  - Matrimonial Unity.

- Matrimonial Chastity.
- Of honesty to the welbeing of marriage; as a
  - Loving affection of one another.
  - Provident care of one for another.

The former Duties presupposed: there ought to be—

1. A sweet, loving, and tender-hearted pouring out of their hearts, with much affectionate dearness into each others bosoms. This mutual-melting-heartedness, being preserved fresh and fruitful, will infinitely sweeten and beautify the marriage state. Now for the preservation of this love, let them consider

1. The compassionate and melting compellations which Christ and his Spouse exchange in the Canticles, My fair one, my love, my dove, my undefiled, my well-beloved, the chief of ten thousand: such a fervent and chaste love as this, all married couples should resemble and imitate.

2. The Command of God to this purpose, Husbands love your wives, Ephes. 5.25. and Wives (or young women) love your husbands, Tit. 2.4. Me thinks this charge oft remembered, should ever beat back all heart-rising and bitterness, all wicked wishes that they had never met together, that they had never seen one another's faces: when the knot is tied, every man should think his wife the fittest for him, and every wife should think her husband the fittest for her of any other in the world.

2. A provident care of one for another; which extends to the body: No man hateth his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it: and to the good name; Joseph was not willing to make Mary a public example: and to the goods of this world; in which if there fall out any cross providence, they are both to join with Jobs spirit, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken, &c. But especially to the soul; in praying together, for and with one another; in taking notice of the beginning and least measure of grace, and approving the same; in conferring about such things as concern the same, mutually propounding questions, and giving answers one to another; in maintaining holy and religious exercises in the Family, and betwixt their own selves, in stirring up one another to hear the Word, to receive the Sacraments, and conscionably to perform all the parts of God's public Worship: In case the one prove unconverted, let the other wait, and pray, and expect God's good time: or in case the one be a babe in Christ, or weak in Christianity, let the other deal fairly, lovingly, meekly, and let our Lord Jesus his tender-heartedness to Spiritual yonglings, teach us mercy this way, who is said to gather the lambs with his arms, and to carry them in his bosom, and gently to lead those that are with young.

2. The proper and peculiar duties to each severally, are—

1. Of the husband, whose Duty it is

- 1. That he dearly love his Wife.

- 2. That he wisely maintain and manage his authority over her.

For the former, consider,

- 1. The matter.
- 2. The manner of his love.

1. The matter of it is a dear love, a special love, and a more special than that common mutual love to one another: No question the Wife is to love her Husband, and a Brother to love his Brother, and a Friend is to love his Friend, but more especially, or with a more special love, is the Husband to love his Wife. To this purpose she is called, The wife of his bosom, to show that she ought to be as his heart in his bosom. He must love her at all times, he must love her in all things: love must season and sweeten his speech, carriage, actions towards her: love must show itself in his commands, reproofs, admonitions, instructions, authority, familiarity with her; the rise of which love must not be from her beauty, nobility, or because she contents & pleaseth her husband; but especially because she is his sister in the profession of Christian Religion, and an inheriter with him of the Kingdom of heaven; because of her graces, and virtues, as modesty, chastity, diligence, patience, temperance, faithfulness, secrecy, obedience, &c. because she bears and brings him forth children, the heirs of his Name and Substance, and the upholder of his family; and because of the union and conjunction of marriage. Love growing of beauty, riches, lust, or any other slight grounds, is but a blaze, and soon vanisheth, but if grounded on the considerations, and especially on this union of marriage, it is lasting and true: The want hereof is the fountain of strife, quarrelling, debate, which converts the paradise of marriage into an hell.

2. For the manner of this love, the Apostle gives it thus, Husbands, love your own wives, even as Christ also loved the Church. Now the love of Christ to his Church, is commended to us in these particulars:—

1. In the cause of his love, which is his love: He set his love on you, because he loved you; his love arose wholly and solely from himself, and was every way free: so should husbands love their wives, though there be nothing in wives to move them, but merely because they are wives.

2. In the order of his love: Christ began it to the Church, before the Church could love him: and as a wall is first smitten on by the Sun beams, before it give a reflection of her heat back again; so the Church is first heated and warmed at heart by the sense of Christ's love, before she love him again: We love him, because he loved us first:—Because of the savor of thy ointments, therefore do the virgins love thee; so should husbands begin to love their own wives: I know some wives prevent their husbands herein, and there may be reason for it; but the greater is their glory. This pattern of Christ should rather stir up the husbands to go before them.

3. In the truth of Christ's love: This was manifested by the fruits thereof to his Church; He gave himself for it, that he might sanctify it, and cleanse it, and present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle: So must husbands love their wives in truth and in deed, by guiding them in the way of life, and path that is called Holy: for this is the truest character of a sincere love.

4. In the quality of his love: Christ's love is an holy, pure, and chaste love: as he himself is, so is his love, such must be the love of husbands, an holy, pure and chaste love. Away with all intemperate, excessive, or any ways exorbitant pollutions of the marriage-bed! from which, if the fear of God, imitation of Christ, love of purity, awfulness of God's all-seeing eye cannot draw, yet that slavish horror, lest God should punish such a couple with no children, or with mis-shapen children, or with idiots, or with prodigiously wicked children, or with some other heavy cross, one would think should be able to affright them.

5. In the continuance of Christ's love: Having loved his own, he loved them unto the end. His love is a constant love, an everlasting love: no provocation or transgressions could ever make him forget his love; Thou hast played the harlot with many lovers, yet return unto me. Such must be the love of husbands, a firm love, an inviolable love: the ground of it must be God's Ordinances, and the support of it must be an inviolable resolution, that no provocation shall ever change it, or alter it. Husbands must pass by all infirmities, endeavoring in love to redress them, if possibly they can, or if not, to bear with them.

2. Duty of an husband, is, Wisely to maintain and manage his authority: Now the managing of it consists in two things:

- 1. That he tenderly respect her.
- 2. That he carefully provide for her.

1. He must tenderly respect her, as his wife, companion, yoke-fellow, as his very delight, and the desire of his eyes, and never be bitter against her. This bitterness ordinarily turneth the edge of his authority: if therefore any matter of unkindness arise (as sometimes certainly will) then must he carefully, with all lenity, gentleness and patience quiet all, and never suffer himself nor his wife to sleep in displeasure: Let not the sun go down upon your wrath; or if he shall have occasion to reprove her, he must keep his words until a convenient time, & not do it in presence of others, and then utter them in the spirit of meekness and love. Surely if she be not corrected by a word of wisdom and discretion, she will never amend by threats, or any hasty, rigorous carriage: and if she once begin to lose her shamefac'dness in the presence of her husband, it is likely there will be often brawlings and quarrels betwixt them, and the house will be full of disquietness: it is best therefore to deal wisely with her, to admonish her often, to reprehend her seldom, never to lay violent hands on her; and if she be dutiful, to cherish her, that she may so continue; if wayward, mildly to suffer her, that she wax not worse.

2. He must carefully provide for her: To this purpose he is called her Head, and Savior, as Christ is the head of his Church, and the Savior of the body: The Head (you know) is the fountain of motion, quickening, life, sense and lightsomness to the body; so should the husband be as the well-spring of liveliness, light-somness, light-heartedness to his wife: she hath forsook all for him, and therefore she should receive from him a continual influence of cheerful walking, and comfortable enjoying of herself. And a Savior (you know) both provides for, and protects the saved: Christ thus saved his Church, he is every way a sufficient Savior, able perfectly to save, even to the very uttermost; he saves soul and body, he saves from all manner of misery, from the wrath of God, the curse of the Law, the venom of all outward crosses, the tyranny of Satan, the sting of death, the power of the grave, the torments of hell, or if sin be the greatest evil, (as indeed it is) he will save his people from their sins: I cannot say thus of the husband; yet an husband carrieth a resemblance of Christ, and is after a manner a Savior to his wife, to protect her, and provide for her. David compares her to a vine, intimating, that as a vine is underpropped and raised by some tree or frame near to which it is planted, so is the wife raised to the height of honor by virtue of her relation to her husband; by his wealth is she enriched; by his honor is she dignified: he is under God and Christ, all in all to her. In the Family he is a King, to govern and aid her; a Priest, to pray with her and for her; a Prophet, to teach and instruct her; a Savior, to provide for, and protect her to his utmost, if not to the utmost, which indeed is proper and peculiar to the Lord Christ.

2. The Duties proper to the wife, are these,

- 1. That she be in submission to her husband.
- 2. That she be an helper to him all her days.

1. Wives must be in subjection to their own husbands: Sarah obeyed Abraham, and called him Lord: But here's a case of conscience:—

1. What if her husband be a son of Belial, an enemy to Christ? must she then yield subjection?— Yes: because in his office her husband is as in Christ's stead: The Church is compared to a lilly among thorns, she remains lilly like, white, soft, pleasant, and amiable, though she be joined with thorns, which are prickly and sharp: So a wife must be meek, mild, gentle, obedient, though she be matched with a crooked, perverse, profane and wicked husband: She must in this case remove her eyes from the disposition of her husband's person, to the condition of his place, and by virtue thereof (seeing he beareth Christ's image) be subject unto him as unto Christ.

2. What if her husband command things contrary to Christ? must she therein be subject? — No: Submit, &c. How? as unto the Lord: if she submits to things contrary to Christ, she submits not as to the Lord. Conscientious wives must remember they have an husband in heaven, as well as on earth, betwixt whom there is a greater difference, then betwixt heaven and earth: and therefore in case they bid contrary things, they must prefer God before man, Christ before all men.

2. Wives must be helpers to their husbands. Now this helpfulness consists in these things:

1. That she be careful to preserve his person, in sickness or health, in adversity or prosperity, in youth or old age.

A most memorable and famous pattern for this purpose, is recorded by Vives: A young, tender and beautiful Maid was matched (as he reports) to a man stricken in years, whom after marriage she found to have a very fulsome and diseased body, full of many loathsome and contagious diseases: yet notwithstanding, out of sense and conscience that by God's providence she was become his wife, she most worthily digested all with incredible patience: friends and Physicians advised her by no means to come near him, and for their parts they utterly forsook him; but she (passing by with a loving disdain those unkind dissuasions) becomes to him in their stead, Friend, Physician, Nurse, Mother, Sister, Daughter, Servant, everything, anything to do him good any manner of way. At last by extraordinary expense, and excessive charges about him, she came to some want of some necessaries, whereupon she sold her Ring, Chains, richest Attire, Plate, and choicest Jewels: and when he was dead, and friends came about her, rather to congratulate her happy riddance, then to bewail her widowhood, she not only abhorred all speeches tending that way, but protested, if it were possible, she would willingly redeem her husbands life with the loss of her five dearest children. Whence it appears, that this worthy woman was wedded to her husbands soul, not to his body, seeing no infirmity or deformity thereof, could cool or weaken the fervency of her love.

2. That she learn and labor to forecast, contrive and manage household-affairs, and business within doors, as they say: for which see a right noble glorious pattern in Prov. 31.

3. That she help her husband, in setting forward the rich and royal trade of Grace, in erecting and establishing Christ's glorious Kingdom in their house, and especially in their own hearts. This is that one necessary thing, without which their Family is but Satan's Seminary, and a Nursery for hell: This will marvelously sweeten all reproaches, cast upon them by envenomed tongues: This will sweetly seal unto them, their assurance of meeting together hereafter in heaven;—where the husband and wife perform these and the like Duties, there's an happy Family, there's a College of quietness; where these are neglected, we may term it an Hell.

Thus much of the Duties of Governors: we now come to the governed.

SECT. 7. Of the Duties of Children to Parents.

Duties of Children to Parents, are either

- inward, as Love and Fear.
- or outward, as
  - Reverence.
  - Obedience.
  - Recompēce.

1. The inward Duties which children owe to their parents, are, Love and Fear: Love like Sugar sweetens Fear, and Fear like Salt seasons Love; there must be a loving-fear, and a fearing-love. Hence the fear of a child, is opposed to the fear of a slave; for a childes fear being mixed with love, hath respect to the offense which a parent may take: but a slaves fear, which is ordinarily mixed with hatred, hath respect to nothing but the punishment which his Master may inflict upon him. This love-like-fear is so proper to children, as that the awful respect which the Saints bear to God, is called a filial fear: Children have received their substance, from the very substance of their parents, and therefore they are to perform this Duty of Love and Fear to them.

2. The outward Duties, or the manifestation of this Love and Fear in children, appears

1. In their Reverence, in speech and carriage: They must give to their parents reverent and honorable titles, meek and humble speeches, obeisance, as becomes their age and sex: Thus Joseph and Solomon bowed, the one to his father, the other to his mother. Contrary hereto is mocking and despising father and mother; of which said Solomon, The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out: a phrase that sets forth the end of a notorious malefactor, that is hanged in the air till the ravens pick out his eyes.

2. In their obedience to their Commands, Instructions, Reproofs and Corrections of their Parents, Eph. 6.1. Prov. 1.8, 9. the reason is, because of God, whom the father represents: Children must remember, that whatsoever they do to their parents, they do it to God; when they please them, they please God; when they disobey them, they disobey God; when their parents are justly angry with them, God is angry with them: nor can they recover God's favor (though all the Saints of heaven should entreat for them) till they have submitted themselves to their own parents; only with this limitation, that they submit or obey them in the Lord, Eph. 6.1.

3. In their Recompence: This is a Duty whereby children endeavor (as much as in them lies) to repay what they can for the parents kindness, care and cost towards them, in way of thankfulness: If any widow have children, or nephews, let them learn first to show kindness at home, and to requite their parents; in sickness, they must visit them, in time of mourning, they must comfort them, in want, they must provide for them; as the children of Jacob, who visited, comforted, and went to buy food for their father: in time of danger, they must endeavor their protection, as David did, Let my father and mother (said he to the King of Moab) I pray thee, come forth and be with you, till I know what God will do for me: And he brought them before the King of Moab, and they dwelt with him, all the while that David was in the hold. If God please to take children out of this world before their parents, and their parents be succorless (they must as they can) provide for their well-being after their deaths: Thus Christ commended his Mother to his Disciple John, a little before he gave up the ghost. It is recorded of the Stork, That when the dams are old, the young ones feed them; and when through age they are ready to faint in their flying, the young ones help them; and when they are past flying, the young ones carry them on their weak backs. Thus Nature teacheth children their Duty, how much more should grace?

SECT. 8. Of the Duties of Servants to their Masters.

Duties of Servants to their Masters, are either

- inward, as Fear.
- outward, as
  - Reverence.
  - Obedience.

1. The inward Duty is Fear: Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear, and account them worthy of all honor: So proper is this fear to a Servant, as where it is wanting, there is a plain denial of his Masters place and power: If I be a master, where is my fear? said God: observe, I mean not an excessive, slavish fear; as when a servant fears nothing but the revenging power of his Master (such was the fear of that unprofitable servant, who could say to his Master, I knew that thou wert an hard man,—and I was afraid) but I mean an awful fear of provoking his Masters wrath, so as it makes him cast every way, how he may please his master, and such a fear draws him on cheerfully to perform his Duty.

2. Outward Duties which issue from this fear, are

- Reverence.
- Obedience.

1. Reverence, which is manifested in speech and carriage. Thus servants must give reverend titles to their Masters, as Father, Lord, and Master, &c. They must yield obeisance to them; as The children of the prophets, when they saw that the Spirit of Elijah rested on Elishah, they came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him.

2. Obedience, which hath respect to the Commands, Instructions, Reproofs and Corrections of their Masters, 1 Pet. 2.18, 19, 20. But here's a case or two of Conscience:

1. How far they must obey; or what is the extent of servants obedience to Masters?— The Apostle answers, Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh: It is not sufficient that servants perform well their Duties in some things; they must do it in all things, yea in things that may be against their own mind and liking, if their Masters will have it so: This is clear in the example of Joab, the King commands him to number the people; Joab declares himself, that he thinks it a very unmeet thing, Why doth my Lord the King delight (saith he) in this thing? yet against his judgment he yields unto the Kings peremptory command, The Kings word prevailed against Joab. Look as Peter, when Christ bid him launch out into the deep, and let down his net for a draught, He answered and said, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless, at thy word I will let down the net. So must servants say, when they have a peremptory command, though contrary to their own judgments, this or that in all humility, I suppose, or I propound to you, Neververtheless, at your word I will let down the net, I will do as you please.

2. But what if God and Master should command contrary things?— In such a case the Apostle sets down an excellent limitation in these four phrases, 1. As unto Christ: 2. As the servants of Christ: 3. Doing the will of God: 4. As to the Lord:] All these imply, That if Masters command their servants anything contrary to Christ, they may not yield to it: Upon this ground the Midwives of the Hebrew women, would not kill the Hebrew children, They feared God (saith the Text) and did not as the King commanded them. In this case Joseph is commended in not hearkening to his Mistress; and the servants of Saul are commended, for refusing to slay the Lord's Priests at their Masters command. When Masters command or forbid anything against God and Christ, they go therein beyond their commission, and their authority ceaseth, so that servants may say, We ought to obey God rather than men.

3. But some Anabaptists object, That all men are alike, and that there is no such difference as betwixt Masters and Servants, nay it is expressly forbidden to be Servants of men. I answer, I answer, to be a servant, in that place, is not simply to be in subjection under another, but to be so obsequious to man, as to prefer him before God: Hence the Apostle elsewhere in the Duties of servants, lays down this Antithesis, Not as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ; again, doing service as to the Lord, and not to men: The meaning is, That we must do Duty to a Master, not as merely to a man, but as to one in Christ's stead. Masters by virtue of their office and place, bears the image of Christ; Christ communicates his authority unto them, and so in performing Duty to Masters, we perform Duty to Christ, and in denying Duty to Masters, we deny Duty to Christ: Thus the Lord said to Samuel, when the people rejected his Government, They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them. Consider this, all ye that are Servants, though Masters should neither reward your good service, nor revenge your ill service, yet Christ will do both: This is your prerogative that fear God, above all other Servants; others may serve their Masters with fear and trembling, in singleness of heart, and with good will, but only Christians and Saints do service as to Christ, and this makes them not content themselves with doing the thing, but to endeavor to do it after the best manner they can, so as God and Christ may accept of it.

I have now run through the Family, and informed you of the Duties both of Governors and governed. Christians, look within you, look about you, that man is not a good man, that is not good in all his relations. The same God that requires us to serve him as private persons, requires us to serve him in our relations: And therefore though you be never so careful of your Duty in the former respect, yet you may go to hell for neglecting your Duties, as Masters, Servants, Husbands, Wives, Parents, or Children; nay, Ile say a little more, that though you should be good in one relation, yet if you endeavor not to be good in every relation, you shall never go to heaven: for the same God that commands you to serve him as a Master, commands you to serve him as a Father, as an Husband, &c. And he that keeps the whole Law, and offends in one point, is guilty of all.

CHAP. X.

SECT. 1. Of Preparatives to Christian-Society.

Hitherto of secret Duties, and private Duties, so far as they concern every man in his own particular, and in his own family: Now as of many particulars consists a family, so of many families may consist this Christian-Society we are ready to treat of; and the rather do we fall upon it, because we hold it a Duty, to keep a constant, endeared and loving correspondence with the Saints, to communicate with experimental Christians, in their Experiences of Christ working and dwelling in them, To exhort one another, and so much the more, as we see the day approaching.

Now that we may jointly and comfortably carry on this Duty, observe we,

- 1. Our entrance into it.
- 2. Our proceedings in it.

1. For entrance, we must

- 1. Renounce all sinful and wicked Society.
- 2. Entertain such Graces as will fitly prepare us for this Society.

1. We must renounce and discharge all wicked society: For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? what agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols? as melted gold will unite itself with the substance of gold, but not incorporate itself with dross; so if God by his Spirit melts the heart, and fits it for union with Believers, then he separates it from that which is Heterogeneous and disagreeing to it: Lord, who shall dwell in thy holy hill? saith David; the answer is given, Psal. 15.4. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned, but he honoreth them that fear the Lord: Understand the Text soberly concerning Contempt of a vile person. David would not have us to deny him courtesies and civil behavior: We may eat, and drink, and buy, and sell, and show kindness, and pity him, and pray for him, and carry ourselves with all wisdom towards him, though he be without; but as for holy communion, we must say to him as Peter to Simon, Thou hast neither part nor fellowship in this body; or as Nehemiah to Sanballat, Tobiah and Geshem, You have no portion, nor right, nor memorial in Jerusalem.

2. We must entertain such Graces as will fitly prepare us for this Christian Society, and they are such as these:—

1. Humility: Humble men contend not, censure not, quarrel not, disdain not: They can meet with unequal respects of age, sex, state and parts; they can discern even in women what is to be honored, and if there be not always so profound a judgment, yet many times there is more holy, and more sweet affections: They have not the faith of Christ in respect of persons, but can say to the poor man (if he be of the poor whom God hath chosen, rich in Grace, and heir of the Kingdom) Sit thou here in a good place; they can prefer Grace before parts, and delight in the sweet scent of creeping Violets: They can make use of, and improve all other men's gifts, For in honor they prefer one another, and so they come to be kindly affectioned one to another in brotherly love; they can spy out Graces of all sorts, in all sorts and ranks of people: They observe the sweet affability and courtesy of some great ones, the honest diligence and patience of some poor ones, the blushing modesty and humility of some solidly learned, the cheerful activity of God's worship of some illiterate, that love Christ in sincerity, though they cannot dispute for him: Several sorts of men, have several lustres: now the humble learn of all, and so receive much benefit in communion from all: This Grace then gives him a fitness for this Society.

2. Acknowledgement, and the prising of others gifts: It is said of Apollos, That though he were an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures, yet he so far acknowledged and honored the Graces of God, and the gifts that were in Aquila and Priscilla, (a plain couple, an handy-crafts man and his wife) that he was content to learn of them: O let not Brethren envy and grudge at one another, but acknowledge and prize the gifts of others as their own gifts.

3. Self-denial: Let nothing be done through strife or vain-glory, but in lowliness of mind, let each esteem other better then themselves: Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others: How goodly is it to see a man who hath parts, and gifts, and graces, to deny himself, and all for the edifying of the body? Paul could endeavor to please all men in all things, Not seeking his own profit, but the profit of many: He hath a true public spirit, that prefers the body of Christ, before his own private; that can deny himself, so that God may be glorified.

4. Love: A grace of such use and influence, that without love there can be no Christian Society; it is love that joins hands and hearts: So the soul of Jonathan was knit to the soul of David, For Jonathan loved him as his own soul. Love disposeth men to all spiritual Offices, to pray together, sing together, talk or confer together; on the contrary, all the gifts in the world, how excellent soever, are nothing worth without love: Though I spake with the tongues of men and Angels; Though I had the gifts of all prophesy, and understood all mysteries, and all knowledge, and have not love, I am nothing.

5. Amiability, Facility or Condescension: Rugged stones unhewn and unsquared, cannot fitly lie and join together in one building; sour, harsh and sullen spirits, are not fit for society: If there be a Nabal, who is such a son of Belial, that no man can speak to him, he may not be entertained: I know there are some good men of an harsh and rigid disposition, who make many a poor Christian to startle back, though he came with a resolution to consult and learn something of them: But there is in some others (whom I always prefer) an alluring facility, that doth call in the modest and blushing, who would otherwise step back: Now this sweet disposition for gaining of souls into the liking and relishing of the good ways of God, is a commendable Grace.

6. Sobriety of spirit, in the suspending of all rashness of censures, and a patient bearing with some errors and offenses, which unavoidably will sometimes fall out: The Apostle had respect unto this, when he admonished the Colossians, To forbear one another, & to forgive one another, if any man have a quarrel against any, or a matter of complaint (as the word signifieth) even as Christ forgave you: How quarrellous are some men? How loud and shrill, and thunder-stormy in their complaints? on the contrary, heavenly souls resolve to do good, and to suffer evil: Such was David's carriage towards Shimei, and Shimei cursed him: Come out thou bloody man, thou man of Belial: David said no more, but Let him curse, because the Lord had said unto him, Curse David.

7. Innocency, harmlessness, or inoffensiveness of conversation: Nothing more destroys Christian-Society, then frequent lies, flatteries, whispering, scoffs, calumnies, and invented slanders: Hence James calls the tongue, An unruly evil, full of deadly poison;— And if this member be not tamed, all Religion is in vain; and consequently all Religious Society.

8. An holy coveting of excellent gifts: Emulation ordinarily engenders strife, and overthrows Christian-Society; But this holy contention, this spiritual emulation, this zeal after more perfection of gifts and graces, the Apostle enjoineeth, Covet earnestly the best gifts; q.d. affect, emulate, be zealous after a further growth or improvement.

9. Wisdom: Both to discern where the rich treasure lies, and to be able to draw it forth: There lies many times a great deal of spiritual wealth, in some obscure and neglected Christians, which many supercilious and conceited professors do pass by and neglect: One would not think what dexterity in Scriptures, what judgment in Controversies, what fervency and expressions in Prayer, what acquaintance with God and his Providence, what strength of Faith, what Patience, Meekness, Moderation, Contentedness, Heavenly-mindedness, may be now and then found out and discovered in plain people, that have plain carriage and plain speech: Here then is the necessary use of wisdom, to discover those gifts and graces; and when we find such a vein, to dig it, and draw it forth: Do you observe one of great dexterity in Scriptures? propound to him some difficult place where you were fain to make a stand: Do you observe one well studied in controversies? desire him to untie a knot, where you have been a great while looking for an end: Do you observe one acquainted with cases of desertion and soul-clouds? learn of him what experiments he hath collected, and which was his way out of the mist: Do you observe one powerful in Prayer? get him to commend your suits with you unto God: All men would be dealt with in the proper way wherein they are versed, and wherein they excel.

SECT. 2. Of a mutual exchange of gifts and graces.

After the Preparatives, we come to the Duties themselves; which consist,

1. In a mutual exchange and imparting of Gifts and Graces.
2. In a mutual serviceableness to the bodies and souls of one another.
3. In a mutual walking together, and holding of hands in the Ordinances of Christ.

1. There must be in Christian-Society, a mutual exchange and imparting of Gifts and Graces: God hath dispensed variety of gifts unto his people; as Job was exemplary for patience and uprightness; Moses for faithfulness and meekness; Josiah for tenderness and activity in the cause of Reformation; Timothy for Ministerial diligence and care of the flock: The gift of Christ is Grace, according to measure: He measures to one such gifts, to another such, to another such and such, as he pleaseth: Unto everyone of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ: God gave the Spirit without measure unto Christ, but we have it according to our scantling, and as he pleaseth to honor and entrust us: To one is given the word of knowledge, to another faith, to another prophesy, to another the discerning of spirits, to another divers kinds of tongues: Thus every man hath his proper gift of God, One after this manner, and another after that: One hath quickness of parts, but not so solid a judgment; another is solid, but not so ready and presential; one hath a good wit, another a good memory, a third a good utterance; one is zealous, but ungrounded; another well principled, but timorous: One is wary and prudent, another open and plain hearted; one is trembling and melting, another cheerful and full of joy: Now thus God freely gives, and most wisely disposeth, that we may be engaged to use his bounty to each others help: The knowing Christian is to impart to him that is weak in gifts, and the zealous Christian that hath fewer notions, is to impart his warmth and heat to his knowing friend: The Christian that hath collected experiences, or found out methods, for the advancement of holiness, must not deny such knowledge to the body; Christians must drive an open and free trade, they must teach one another the mystery of godliness: Tell your experiences, and tell your conflicts, and tell your comforts, make all that you have the bodies, and all the body hath, yours: Some say, The art of Medicine was thus perfected, as any one met with an herb, and discovered the virtue of it by any accident, he would post it up in some public place, and so the Physicians skill was perfected, by a collection of those experiments and receipts: We must one day account how we have laid out our Knowledge, our Utterance, our spirit of Prayer, our Ability of discerning, our experience of God, our taste of the Promises, our enlargements after Prayer, our improvements by Conference, our comforts after private Humiliation, our strengthening by Sacraments, or what else may be instanc'd in for the use of others; how we got rid of such a lust, how we mastered such a temptation, how we attained to such a facility in this or that duty, and there must be this commerce among them that are in this heavenly partnership.

SECT. 3. Of a mutual serviceableness to the bodies and souls of one another.

There must be in this Christian-Society, a mutual serviceableness:

- 1. To the bodies.
- 2. To the souls one of another.

1. To the bodies of one another: The primitive Christians excelled in this care, they put their estates (by reason of the persecution) into a common stock, that all, even the poorest sort, that in those hard and uncertain times, gave their names to Christianity, might be tended and looked on with equal care and respect: I know some have stretched this too far, to make it a leading case and binding example; but thus far it holds, that if the necessity of the faithful call for it, even all that we have must be serviceable in order and in due respects: The Catalogue runs thus; 1. The public state wherein we live, we must provide for. 2. Our selves. 3. Our wives. 4. Our parents. 5. Our children and family. 6. The household of faith. 7. Our kindred. 8. Our nearest neighbors and common friends. 9. Our countrey men. 10. Strangers. 11. Enemies. It is truly an acceptable service to God, and a glorious Ministry, to tend the Lord's poor and sick; therefore Paul sometimes took upon him the fellowship of the ministering to the Saints, as he was desired by the Churches of Macedonia, whom he commends for their charity, and whose example he wills the Corinthians to follow.

2. To the souls of one another, and this several ways:

1. In watching over one another: I know we have Enemies that maliciously watch over us for our haltings, but it is the part of a friend, to watch over his companion for good; we are apt enough to neglect our own watch, we had need to have either prying enemies, or faithful friends, to make us know ourselves.

2. In admonishing and reproofing those that fall: This is a great Duty, but much neglected. Reverend Mr. Bolton, speaking of that grave and religious Judge Nichols (who desired him sometimes to deal plainly with him) confessed after the Judges death, that he was grieved at his heart that he had done no more in that kind: O count not admonition an unnecessary meddling, we may through a foolish humor to be esteemed peaceable and quiet, suffer many to miscarry and be lost.

3. In recovering those that are fallen, through a spirit of meekness: Brethren, if any man be overtaken with a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Christians should not triumph over them that are on the ground, and thrown down by a temptation, but rather they should sit by them on the same flat, and mourn with them and for them, and feel some of their weight.

4. In instructing the ignorant, dull, and less capable: To this purpose we should rather keep a slow pace, then willingly out-go the young and tender Lambs: O despise them not here, with whom we shall have eternal company in heaven; it may be they can reach no higher then the very Principles of Religion, without which they could not be safe: yet if they know and can say anything of God in Christ Jesus, or if they would fain hear of him, be not too high for their Society; neglect not the rear of the Christian army, but strive with their infirmity or unfitness, whatsoever it be.

5. In encouraging weak beginners: bid them welcome that stand upon the threshold, that linger in the porch of this Society, and would be glad to sit down among the Disciples of Christ. It was prophesied of Christ, A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: It should be thus with Christians, they should not quench, but rather encourage the smoking flax into a flame: Do you perceive a poor soul to listen after Christ, and to hearken if some word of comfort may be let fall? open yourselves to him, and let him in to the pleasures and ravishments of the Kings chambers: Take heed of making any one go back, or grow out of love with the order and government of Christ's family.

6. In stirring up the Spirits and gifts of one another: Consider one another (saith the Apostle) to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, but exhorting one another. A mean person by asking a question, may lay the first stone, whereupon a goodly frame of excellent and rich discourse may be reared: Christians must quicken one another in the ways of godliness; as the iron sharpeneth iron, as rubbing of the hands makes both warm, and as live coals makes the rest to burn, so let the fruit of Society be mutual, sharpening, warming and inflaming.

7. In raising, cheering, comforting the dejected and dismayed Spirit: How did the Martyrs in their Prisons set one another at liberty from the bondage of fears? how did holy Bradford's sweet and cheerful company, make the very dungeons lightsom, and Palace-like to his fellow-prisoners? An unbelieving heart, oppressed many times with foolish cares and fears, doth sometimes (by a word duly spoken, or by a Promise applied in the season of it) feel the load quite taken away.

SECT. 4. Of a mutual walking together, and holding hands in the Ordinances of Christ.

There must be in Christian Society. A mutual walking together in the Ordinances of Christ: as—

1. In hearing the Word, by quickening one another unto it, by helping the negligent to apply it, by taking forth the several portions belonging to the several conditions and necessities of each, by praying for one another, that it might be useful and seasonable to all.

2. In the Sacraments, joining in one another, beholding their order and stedfastness of faith in Christ: How should they but rejoice together in the love of God, feeding at the same Table as those that shall meet and sit down with Christ in his Kingdom of Glory? How should they but behold their order and stedfastness of faith, now renewing their Covenant of love among themselves, and laying down all grudges, rancor, prejudice, uncharitableness, surmises for Christ's sake, and giving the right hand of fellowship, cordially and unfeignedly to one another, as those that find themselves to be all retainers to the same Master, and provided for with the same care, and purchased by the price of the same blood.

3. In Prayer for and with each other: In Primitive times, they used to transact one another's affairs in the Court of Heaven by Prayer: Pray always (said Paul) with all prayer and supplication, for all Saints, and for me:— and, Pray one for another (said James) that ye may be healed; q. d. if the heart rankles, or if there be any fallings out, any differences and jarrings among Christians, let them meet together, and humbly acknowledge where the fault lies, and make up the matter before God, who is both a witness of their mutual sincerity, and is only able to search the bottom of the wound, and to cure it: Sometimes Christians have known blessed experiments of this, and can tell when a Prob-tum est was written upon it.

4 In fasting for the afflicting, and humbling of the soul; so Ezra and his men, and Esther and her maids, maintained communion together: Such Fasting-days, are soul-feeding-days, and soul-curing-days; some diseases, some lusts will go out no other ways.

5. In mutual bemoanings, confessions, and opening of our sores and wounds; it may be, when the Apostle saith, Confess your faults one to another, he means more then acknowledgement of offenses, whereby a man hath sinned against his brother; viz. that Christians should also bewail their failings, infirmities, deadness, unsavoriness, coldness, narrowness, unfruitfulness to one another, to see whether others have been in the same case, and what course they took, and what remedy they procured: many souls may perish through too much reservedness and modesty.

6. In holy Conference: This indeed is it that might much improve the meeting of Christians. In the Prophets time, when proud scorers, and profane spirited men talked vainly, and did even what they list, then they that feared the Lord met, and spake often one to another; no doubt they spake of God, and his councils, of his works and ways, of his providence and goodness, of the baseness of Atheistical thoughts concerning God: would Christians thus meet and exchange words and notions, they might build up one another, they might heat and inflame one another, they might strengthen and encourage one another, as the brethren did Paul: and have we not an express Command for this Duty of Conference? Thus shall ye say everyone to his brother, and everyone to his neighbor, What hath the Lord answered? and what hath he spoken?

And now I am fallen on this Duty, give me leave to lay down some experiments and proceedings of some Christians as willingly joined themselves in a Christian Society, and by God's blessing thereby sweetly improved themselves.

SECT. 5. Of some Orders to which some Christians subscribed before Conference.

IN this Conference of Christians,

- 1. Some Orders were made, to which all subscribed.
- 2. Some Questions were propounded, to which all answered.

1. The Orders were these:—

1. That every Wednesday (especially during winter) we will meet for Conference about soul-affairs.

2. That if any difference in opinion shall arise amongst us, we will fully debate, and then submit to the judgment of the Society, as it shall be made good out of the Word.

3. If we observe any of the Society to fall into any sin or scandal, he that observes it shall first warn the party thereof; and if he offend again in the same kind, the observer shall then join with himself one or two more to warn the same party; and if he will not hear them, the observer or any other shall then acquaint the Society at our next meeting; and if he will not hear them, that then he be excluded till he repent, and be voted for his admission again.

4. That whatsoever is spoken amongst us (the telling whereof may tend to the prejudice of any one of us) shall be kept secret, upon pain of undergoing such Censure as the major part of the company shall think fit.

5. That for admission of any into our Society, we will not be too strict nor too large; not too strict in excluding any, in whom we have any good hopes of sincerity, and real desire to increase their knowledge, and mutual love, though they may be but weak in gifts; nor too large in admitting such, who may be either heretical in opinion, or immoderate in life: And by this Rule, those that are to be admitted shall be voted by the major part of us.

6. That for better regulating of this Society, we will have a Moderator. And what further Orders we or any of us shall hereafter think upon, we shall propound the same to the Society at our next meeting; and the same shall be confirmed or adnulled, as it shall be agreed by the major vote of our Society.

7. That the Moderator shall propound the Question and matter of our Discourse the week before it be discussed; and at every meeting begin with Prayer, and end with Thanksgiving.

SECT. 7. Of some Questions or Cases of Conscience, which at the Conference were propounded and answered.

The Questions concerning Cases of Conscience, were these and the like:

§ 1. Whether a Believer may profit more, or be more intent in public, or in secret Prayer.

IT was answered, That this Case might better be resolved by experience than Scripture; and accordingly some preferred public Prayer for these Reasons:—

1. Because in public they are stirred up by others; but in private or secret Prayer, they had none others to join with them.
2. Because in public they that exercised had more excellent gifts, which exceedingly tend to their edification; but in secret they found themselves weak, and dull, and dead-hearted ordinarily.

Others answered otherwise, and preferred secret Prayer on these grounds:—

1. Because in secret they could confess more inlargedly and feelingly their own sins, then others could do it for them in public, to whom they were not particularly known.

2. Because in secret they had fewer occasions of distraction, then in public, and consequently they kept closer to God in the Duty.

3. Because they found by experience, that in secret their hearts were more up; and when they themselves were to perform in public, the Society whom they joined with, did ordinarily more straiten them.

4. Because in secret they could take more pains with their heart; as in midst of Prayer to prostrate, or by breaking off to meditate, &c. which conveniently they could not do in public.

In conclusion this Case was resolved, That some Believers may profit more, or be more intent in public, others in private: And the reason rendered was, Because the Spirit that helps us to pray, is a free agent, and works diversely in the hearts of his people, to show the diversity of his gifts, and his diverse manner of working.

§. 2. Whether a Christian in his own apprehension decaying in Grace, may not yet grow in Grace? and if so, What are the reasons of his wrong apprehensions?

TO the first Question it was answered Affirmatively; as in case of temptation, Psal. 73.21, 22, 23. or in a Spiritual desertion, Psal. 51.12. Psal. 88. Isa. 49.14.

To the second Question these reasons were given in:—

1. The neglect of Self-examination.
2. The want of God's lively Ordinances.
3. A too much eying of our afflictions.
4. A too much poring upon sin, without any thoughts of Christ or Free-grace.
5. The want of the light of God's amiable countenance.
6. The insensibleness of grace, which is of a Spiritual nature, and not so easily to be perceived.
7. A present deadness or dullness of Spirit.
8. A misapplying of someone or more places of Scripture, as Heb. 6.6, &c.
9. Weakness of knowledge, or want of judgment in such experimental passages, especially in the beginning of Christianity.
10. The distemper of the soul (especially in desertion) when as in the distemper of the body, a man thinking or speaking idly, we say it is not he, but his sickness; so it is in this case.

In conclusion, these reasons were approved; but we agreed, That all the succeeding Answers or Resolutions should be proved out of God's holy word.

§. 3. What signs of true grace, though for the present but small or weak grace?

1. A Willingness to be admonished, and to have our sins discovered, Job 13.23. Psal. 141.5.

26. A careful endeavor after perseverance, Psal. 119.111, 112. John 8.31. Gal. 3.3.
27. The unutterable sighs and groans of the Spirit in prayer, Rom. 8.26.

28. A sense and bewailing of the hardness of our hearts, Isa. 63.17.

29. A pure love of God, and desire to fear his Name, Neh. 1.11. Psal. 18.1. Isa. 26.8, 9. Rom. 8.28.

30. A godly conversation, Psal. 16.8-50.23. Acts 2.25.

§. 4. Whether is a Christian always bound to reprehend an offender? or in what Cases may he forbear?

IT is answered, That a Christian is not bound ever to reprove, but he may forbear in such cases as these:—

1. When the party offending is a scorner, and we perceive he will but scoff at it, Prov. 9.8.—23.9. Mat. 7.6.

2. When the offender sins of infirmity, Gal. 6.12.

3. When the offended is not able to convince the offender that it is a sin, Job 6.25. Tit. 1.9.

4. When there is no hopes to prevail in respect of the evil times, Amos 5.13.

5. When the offenses are small, and but little, Prov. 19.11.—20.3.

6. When we know not certainly whether the supposed offense be a sin, or not, Josh. 20.16, &c.

7. When the reprehender is faulty in the same thing, Mat. 7.3, 4, 5.

8. When the party offending is not capable of reproof, as in case a man be an idiot, or drunk, or in the height of his passion, 1 Sam. 25.36, 37.

9. When our reproof may breed some dissention, or imminent and dangerous disturbance; as in case it be amongst rude, boisterous and desperate company, Mat. 7.6.

10. When the offender is obstinately and willfully bent to go on in his sin, Mark 14.60, 61.—15.4, 5.

§. 5. How may we know whether we profit by afflictions?

WE may know by these signs:

1. If by affliction we come to be sensible of God's heavy displeasure, Deut. 31.17. Ruth 1.13. Mic. 6.9 1 Cor. 11.37.

2. If by affliction we are drawn to search our ways, 1 Kings 8.38. Ezra 9.14. Psa. 32.4, 5. Lam. 1.5.—3.39, 40.

3. If by afflictions we are soundly and sincerely humbled, 2 Kings 22.19, 20. Job 1.20. 1 Pet. 5.6.

4. If our afflictions work on us to make our peace with our God, Isa. 27.5. Hosea 5.15.

5. If by afflictions we be drawn to make and pay vows of better obedience, Psal. 66.13, 14.

6. If in our greatest afflictions we rest upon God, 2 Chro. 14.11. and wait on God, Psal. 37.7, 34. Micah 7.9.
  7. If in our afflictions we mind the promises, and roll ourselves on them, 1 Sam. 30.6. Psal. 119.49, 50, 92.
  8. If in our afflictions we clear God when he is judged, Psal. 119.75.
  9. If for afflictions we bless God, and his afflicting hand, Job. 1.21.
  10. If by afflictions our graces are stirred up and exercised, Job. 13.15. Psal. 42.5. Jer. 31.18. Rom. 5.3. 2 Cor. 1.10. Heb. 10.34. James 1.3.
  11. If by our afflictions our prayers are more fervent, Neh. 1.3, 4. Psal. 77.2.—116.3.—142.4, 5.
  12. If in our affliction we gather in some experiences of God's love and help, Psal. 34.46.—66.16, 17.
  13. If in our afflictions we submit willingly and cheerfully to God's good will and pleasure, Levite. 26.41. 1 Sam. 3.18.
  14. If in afflictions we look more at the hand of God that strikes, then at the instrument, 1 Sam. 3.18. 2 Sam. 16.11.
  15. If in affliction we reject all worldly sinful hopes, and unlawful means of deliverance, and rest only on God, 1 Cor. 1.8, 9. Heb. 11.25, 26.
  16. If in present afflictions we gather assurance of deliverance from former experiences, 1 Sam. 17.37. Psa. 77.9, 10, 11. 2 Tim. 3.11.
  17. If by afflictions we find corruptions to weaken, and to be mortified, Isa. 27.9.
  18. If our afflictions beget assurance of our adoption, Heb. 12.8. sanctification, Heb. 12.6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. glorification, Mat. 5.12. 2 Cor. 4.17. 2 Pet. 2.8.
- §. 6. How should a Christian fortify himself against the reproaches of wicked men?
1. Let him consider the command of God in this case, Mat. 5.44. Rom. 12.19. 1 Pet. 3.9.
  2. Let him look on reproaches as the very hand of God, 2 Sam. 16.11.
  3. Let him consider what an honor it is to suffer reproaches for Christ, Acts 5.41.
  4. Let him eye the blessedness of those that are reproached for Christ, Mat. 5.11, 12. 2 Tim. 2.12. 1 Pet. 3.14.—4.14.
  5. Let him consider it as the lot of God's servants to suffer reproaches, 2 Tim. 3.12.
  6. Let him consider that in his reproaches he suffers with and for Christ, John 15.20.
  7. Let him consider, that though the wicked reproach, yet God will in his time justify and approve, Psal. 37.33.—147.11.

8. Let him consider, that the Lord in due time will both clear his servants, and punish the reproachers, Micah 7.8, 9, 10.

9. Let him set before him the examples of Christ, his Apostles, and Prophets, Isa. 53.7. Mat. 5.12. John 15.18. 1 Cor. 4.13. 1 Pet. 2.21.

10. Let him pray with fervency and faith, Job 16.20. Psal. 109.1, 2, 4. 1 Cor. 4.13.

11. Let him be sure to keep a clear conscience within, 1 Pet. 4.15.

12. Let him refer the issue of all unto God, 2 Sam. 3.39.

13. Let him exercise that heavenly duty of the life of Faith, and fasten it on these promises, Psal. 37.6.—68.13. Isa. 61.7. 1 Pet. 1.7.—3.14.—4.14.

§. 7. Whether a true Believer may not sometimes doubt? and what are the several causes of doubting?

IT was answered, That without controversy (and as the following Texts will evince) a true Believer may doubt of his salvation; and the causes are these:—

1. The prosperity of the wicked, Psal. 38.17.—73.2, 3, 12, 13.
2. His own want of necessary provisions for this life, Numb. 20.3, 4, 5.
3. Suspension of divine favor, Job 13.24. Psal. 77.7, 8, 9, 10.
4. Imminent dangers and fears, Exod. 14.10, 11, 12. Mat. 8.25, 26.—14.30, 31.
5. Apprehensions of God's denying his prayers, Psal. 22.1, 2.
6. The afflicting hand of God lying sore on his soul, Psa. 116.10, 11. Lam. 3.17, 18.
7. Mistaken apprehensions and weakness of judgment, Mat. 14.26. Mark 6.49, 50. Luke 24.37.
8. Relapses, or reinsnarements into former sins, Psal. 51.8, 12.
9. The littleness or smallness of faith, Mat. 14.30. Mark 9.24.
10. A poring on, or a studying too much of the life sense, Luke 1.18, 20. John 20.25.
11. A want of the true understanding of some divine mysteries, John 6.60.
12. A distrusting of God's promises, upon human reports, Numb. 13.32, 33.—34.1, 2, 3.

§. 8. What are the cures or remedies of doubtings incident to Believers?

1. FAith in the Lord Jesus Christ, Rom. 11.20.—14.23.
2. A wary and filial fear, Heb. 4.1.
3. A hope in God, Psal. 42.11. and waiting on God, Isa. 8.17. Jer. 14.19, 22.

4. Earnest prayer: 1. Against doubting, Mat. 21.21, 22. Mark 9.24. Luke 17.5.—22.32. 2 Cor. 12.1, 8, 9. and 2. To have our doubts resolved, Judges 6.37, 38.
  5. A depending on the faithfulness of God and his promises, Heb. 10.23.—11.11.
  6. A striving to keep down the life of sense, Mat. 6.28, 29, 30, 31.
  7. A recalling to mind the Lord's dispensations in our former afflictions, Lam. 3.18, 19, 20, 21.
  8. A recalling to mind God's former love to our souls, Psal. 22.1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Lam. 3.22, 24.
  9. Diligence in the use of all means, Psal. 73.17. Cant. 3.1, 2, 3.
  10. A trusting in God's Name, making him our stay and support, Psal. 73.26. Isa. 50.10.
- §. 9. What are those Remora's that hinder the growth of Christianity, or the spreading of the Kingdom of Christ?
1. Want of a pious and powerful Ministry, Pro. 29.18. Rom. 10.14, 15.
  2. Negligence of the Ministry in place, Jer. 1.21, 22, 23. Ezek. 34.4, 5, 6.
  3. A scandalous and vicious Ministry, 1 Sam. 2.17. Jer. 23.1, 2. Mal. 2.8. Mat. 23.13.
  4. The deceits and sophistry of false Prophets, Jer. 27.14.—28.15. Ezek. 13.6, 10. 2 Pet. 2.18.
  5. A presuming to teach others without God's call, Jer. 23.32.
  6. A despising of the Ministry of the Gospel, Mark 6.3. John 8.57.
  7. Envy and railing against the Word and Ministry, Acts 13.45, 46.
  8. Persecution of God's Messengers, Acts 12.1, 2, 3, 4.
  9. Ambitious, factious, and malicious spirits, 3 John 10.
  10. Fomentors of divisions amongst the people of God, Rom. 16.17, 18. 2 Pet. 2.2, 3.
  11. Enemies of the truth and power of godliness, 2 Tim. 3.6.
  12. The evil example of Superiors, 1 Sam. 2.23, 34. 1 Kings 14.16. John 7.47, 48.
  13. Seducing spirits, 1 Kings 12.27, 28, 29, 30. Acts 14.19.—20.30. 1 Tim. 4.1.
  14. Scandalous Professors, Heb. 12.14, 15.
  15. Evil Society, Psal. 18.26. Prov. 4.14, 15, 16.
  16. Conspiracy of the wicked, Acts 19.29, 34.
  17. Satan and Antichrist, Zech. 3.1. 2 Cor. 4.4. Rev. 8.10, 11, &c.
  18. Broaching and fomenting of errors, and especially of idolatry, 1 Kings 12.30. Acts 19.27, 28. 2 Peter 2.2. Revel. 2.20.

19. Mistake in the matters of Salvation, Hosea 4.6. John 6.66.
  20. A profanation of holy things, 1 Sam. 2.17.
  21. A preferring carnal things before Christ, Mat. 8.34.—19.22. Acts 19.26.
  22. Obstinacy and unbelief, Jer. 44.16. Mat. 13.58. Heb. 3.19.—4.2.
  23. Slavish fear, John 9.22.
  24. Abuse of Christian liberty, 1 Cor. 8.9, 10, 11.
  25. A giving offense in things merely indifferent, Rom. 14.13. 1 Cor. 10.32, 33.
  26. Persecution of the Church, Acts 8.1, 3. Revel. 11.7.
- §. 10. What means to prefer Unity and Amity amongst Christians.
1. FRrequent and fervent prayer, Psal. 122.6. John 17.11. Rom. 15.5, 6. James 5.16.
  2. Pithy and pious Exhortations, Rom. 12.10, 16. 1 Cor. 1.10. 1 Thess. 5.13. 1 Pet. 1.8.—4.8.
  3. The spirit of meekness and lowliness, of longsuffering and forbearing one another in love, John 13.14, 15. Rom. 12.10.—15.1, 2. Eph. 4.2, 3. Phil. 2.3.
  4. A not rendering evil for evil, 1 Pet. 3.8.9.
  5. A restoring such as are fallen with the spirit of meekness, Gal. 6.1, 2.
  6. A moderate reprehension of such as are contrary-minded, 2 Tim. 2.24, 25.
  7. A slighting of slanderous reports, Prov. 25.23.
  8. A quelling of the spirit of pride, Prov. 13.10.
  9. A seasonable visit of the Brethren, with whom we have had spiritual commerce, Acts 15.36.
  10. Meetings and Conferences about differences that have fallen out, Acts. 15.6.
  11. A ready submission to the judgment of one another, according to the Word, Eph. 5.21.
  12. An endeavor to speak the same things, and to be of one mind, 1 Cor. 1.10. Phil. 2.2.
  13. A doing of all things in charity, 1 Cor. 16.14.
  14. A readiness to forgive, as Christ forgave us, Mat. 18.33. Eph. 4.32.
  15. A spirit of wisdom and discretion, Proverbs 19.11. Eccles. 7.9.
  16. A mortifying of lusts, and subduing of passions, 1 Cor. 3.3. James 4.1.
  17. A loving carriage and deportment of the outward man, Prov. 15.1.—25.23.
  18. A cheerful admission of the weak into Christian-Society, and bearing with their infirmities, Rom. 14.1.—15.1. 1 Thess. 5.14.

19. An avoiding of such as cause divisions amongst Christians, Rom. 16.17.
20. An avoiding of ill speeches one against another, 1 Peter 2.1.
21. A not thinking too highly of ourselves, but soberly, according to the measure of faith God hath given us, Rom. 12.3, 4. 1 Cor. 4.6.
22. A desire to do to others, as we wish others to do to us, Mat. 7.12.
23. A study to be quiet, and not to meddle with another man's business, 1 Thess. 4.11.
24. A solemn entering into Covenant with God, and with one another, Jer. 50.5.
25. A consideration of the command, Be of the same mind one towards another, Rom. 12.16.
26. A consideration that we all know but in part, and therefore that we should bear with one another's infirmities, 1 Cor. 13.9.
27. A consideration that a passionate, peevish and froward professor is seldom acquainted with the truth as it is in Jesus, Psal. 25.9. Proverbs 11.2.—27.20. Isaiah 28.9. Rom. 16.17. James 1.21, 26.
28. A consideration that unity in judgment is the promise and blessing of another life, and that unity in affection is our present duty, Ephes. 4.13. Phil. 3.15, 16.

SECT. 8. Of some Questions or contraverted Points, which at the Conference were propounded and answered.

The Questions of contraverted points were these and the like:—

§. 1. Whether doth God see sin in Believers, so as to be offended at it? and how may it appear?

1. IT is answered affirmatively, that God doth see sin in his Saints, as appears by these Texts, Exod. 4.14. 1 Sam. 3.12, 13. 2 Sam. 12.9, 10. Psal. 135.14. Jer. 16.17, 18. Rev. 2.4, 13, 14. though not in reference to their justification, yet in reference to their conversation and sanctification, which is but in part.

2. This appeareth—

1. From the Lord's complaining against believers for sin, Isa. 1.2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Jer. 2.5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

2. From his threats if they do not repent, 2 Sam. 7.14. Psal. 89.30, 31, 32. Isa. 1.20. Rev. 2.5, 16.—3.8.

3. From his chastisements of them for sin, 2 Sam. 12.15. Psal. 74.1.—99.8. Amos 3.2. Jer. 30.15. Luke 1.22.

4. From God's withdrawing the comforts of his Spirit for sin, Psal. 51.12.

5. From the Prayers of Believers to God, for the hiding of his face from their sins, and removing of his anger for their sins, Psal. 6.16.—32.5, 6.—51.9.

6. From the Lord's reprovings of his people for their sins, 2 Sam. 12.7, 8, 9. Mat. 16.23.

§. 2. Whether are Believers to repent for their sins? and upon what grounds?

1. ANSwered, That they are to repent, as appears, Job 42.6. Jer. 31.19. Rev. 2.5.—3.3.

2. The grounds or reasons are these following—

1. Because God looks for repentance from them, Zech. 6.6.

2. Because God commands them to repent, Rev. 2.5, 16.— 3.3, 19.

3. Because it is God's pleasure that we should feel the bitterness of sin, as well as the sweet of sin, Jer. 2.19.

4. Because believers sin as well as others, 1 King. 8.46. 1 John 1.10.

5. Because in believers there is a proclivity and disposition to all sin, Psal. 51.5. Rom. 7.24.

6. Because repentance is a means for the diverting of judgments from a Land, or a person, 2 Chron. 7.14. Joel 2.13.

7. Because repentance is a means for obtaining mercies, Judge. 20.26. Neh. 1.9.

8. Because repentance is a means to

- Pardon, 1 Chron. 7.14.
- Salvation, 2 Corinth. 7.10.

9. Because repentance is a necessary fruit of faith, Zech. 12.10. Acts 19.18.

10. Because after repentance we may expect comfort, Psal. 126.5, 6. Mat. 5.4. 2 Cor. 7.9, 13.

11. Because that therein we shall give God the glory of his Justice, Psal. 51.4. Rev. 16.9.

§. 3. Whether are Believers to pray for pardon of sin? and what are the reasons?

1. ANSwered, that believers are to pray for pardon, as may appear from these Scriptures, Num. 14.19. 2 Sam. 24.10. Dan. 9.19. Psal. 25.11. Mat. 6.12.

2. The Reasons are these and the like:

1. Because Christ taught his Disciples so to pray, Matth. 6.12.

2. Because believers have renewed infirmities, Numb. 14.11, 19.

3. Because God is ready to pardon them that pray for it, Psal. 86.5.

4. Because God hath promised to pardon the sins of his Saints, 2 Chron. 7.14. Jer. 33.3, 8.

5. Because whatsoever we read in Scripture of pardon, it is always in reference to sins past, Isa. 43.25. Jer. 33.8. Psal. 79.8, &c.

6. Because yet the Judge hath not solemnly pronounced the sentence of pardon, neither will he till the last day, Acts 3.19.

§. 4. Whether is it the duty of Christians to observe the Lord's-day (now being the first day of the week) as a Christian Sabbath? and what grounds for it?

1. ANswered, That it is their duty; and proved from Mark 16.2. John 20.19, 26. Acts 1.1, 2, 3.—20.7. 1 Cor. 16.1, 2. Rev. 1.10.

2. The grounds are these and the like:

1. Because Christ as that day did perfect the work of Redemption for our eternal rest, Mat. 28.1, 2.

2. Because Christ did appear to his disciples upon that day more especially, John 20.19, 26.

3. Because (as it is observed generally) the Holy Ghost as that day did fall upon the Apostles, being met together in one place, Acts 2.1.

4. Because upon the same day the Apostles ordinarily dispensed the Word, Sacraments, and other Ordinances, Acts 20.7. 1 Cor. 16.1, 2.

5. Because such things as are named the Lord's in Scripture, are ever of the Lord's institution; as, The Word of the Lord, 1 Tim. 6.3. The Cup of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11.27. The Supper of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11.20. and so The Lord's day, Rev. 1.10.

6. Because God doth seem to honor the first day of the week above any other day, as appears by his great works done upon that day; viz. In the creation he made that day the first fruits of time; and in it he created the highest heavens, the place of the eternal Sabbath; and in it he brought forth the light of the world, answerable to which is the day of Christ's Resurrection, wherein the Son of Righteousness, the true light of the world rose up, and became the first fruits of them that sleep, and by virtue thereof will bring all his Saints into eternal rest, Gen. 1.1, 2, 3, 4, 5. compared with Mal. 4.2. John 1.9. 1 Cor. 15.20. Heb. 4.9, 10, 11.

§. 5. Whether may not Christians lawfully sing David's or Moses Psalms? and how may it appear?

1. ANswered affirmatively: Eph. 5.19. where, under those three heads, of Psalms, and Hymns, and Spiritual songs, David's Psalms are contained.

2. This is proved by Precepts, Paterns and Reasons.

1. By Precepts, Ephesians 5.19. Colossians 3.16. James 5.13.

2. By Paterns:

- 1. Of Christ himself and his Apostles, Mat. 26.30.
- 2. Of Paul and Silas, Acts 16.25.

- 3. Of the Church, Rev. 15.3.

3. By Reasons, as—

1. Because the people of God have used the very same words of David's Psalms in singing, 2 Chron. 15.13. compared with Psal. 136. and Ezra 3.11. compared with Psal. 118. and Rev. 15.4. compared with Psal. 86.9. and Exod. 15.2. compared with Psal. 118.14.

2. Because Paul directing to sing Psalms, gives the very same word or title as David gives in his Psalms, James 5.13. compared with Psal. 95.2.

3. Because David's Psalms were indicted by the Spirit of God, as well as any others that confessedly may be sung, 2 Sam. 23.2.

§. 6. Whether admitting of or joining with scandalous persons in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and not endeavoring to keep them back (whiles such) be not sin in the admitters and joyners? and how may it appear?

1. ANswered Affirmatively, That it is sin,

- 1. In the admitters, Mat. 7.6.
- 2. In the joyners, 1 Cor. 5.11. 2 Thess. 3.6.

2. This appears to be sin—

1. In the admitters, by these grounds:—

1. Because it is against the command, of keeping unclean persons from such like holy things, Num. 9.6, 7. 2 Chron. 23.19.

2. Because Christ cast out the man that came without his wedding garment, Mat. 22.11.

3. Because this was the practice of the Apostles, 1 Cor. 5.3, 4, 5. 1 Tim. 1.20.

2. In the joyners, by these grounds:—

1. Because they are forbidden expressly to join with such, 2 Thess. 3.14.

2. Because scandalous persons ought to be censured, and so to be esteemed of the joyners as Heathens and Publicans, Mat. 18.17.

3. In both admitters and joyners, by these grounds:—

1. Because God hath forbidden us to eat with such, 1 Cor. 5.11. 2 Thess. 3.6.

2. Because by this means their sins would become ours, 1 Cor. 5.6, 7. Gal. 5.9, 10.

3. Because the Ordinance of the Lord's Supper is defiled thereby; which is not to be understood simply in itself, but in some sort (i.) to them who are scandalous, and to them who join with such as they know to be scandalous: And this appears—

1. In that the Temple, which had a sacramental signification of Christ, was polluted by the coming of profane persons into it, Ezek. 23.38, 39.

2. In that the Sacrifices of old were defiled by profane persons, Haggai 2.11, 12, 13, 14.

3. In that the profane are as Swine, which trample the pearls under their feet, Mat. 7.6.

See these Proofs enlarged in Gelespi. Aaron's Rod blossoming, l. 3. ch. 15.

§. 7. In such a case, what is the duty of admitters and joyners, to keep themselves blameless, and the Ordinance undefiled?

1. IT is the duty of admitters—

1. To eye and observe the flock, over which God hath given them charge, Acts 20.17, 28.

2. If any be observed, or brought in as offenders, it is their duty—

1. To admonish them once or twice, Tit. 3.10. 2 Thess. 3.15.

2. If that prevail not, to suspend them, 1 Cor. 5.11. 2 Thess. 3.6, 14, 15.

3. If that prevail not, then to Excommunicate them by the lesser Excommunication, Matth. 18.17. 1 Cor. 5.4, 5. 2 Cor. 2.6.

4. If that prevail not, then (in some cases) to Excommunicate them by the greater Excommunication, 1 Cor. 16.22. Gal. 1.8, 9. 1 John 5.16. This is only when a man is visibly irrecoverable, or hath committed the sin against the holy Ghost; the case of Julian the Apostate, whom the Church would not pray for, but prayed against.

2. It is the duty of joyners—

1. To eye and observe one another's conversation, so much as they may, Heb. 10.24. and 3.12, 13.

2. If upon observation they find any faulty, then—

1. The Scandal being private, it is the joyners Duty,—

1. To admonish privately betwixt him and the offender alone, Mat. 18.15.

2. If that be not effectual, then to take one or two more with him, Mat. 18.16.

3. If that be not effectual, then to Tell it to the Church, Mat. 18.17.

4. If the Church be corrupt, and neglect its duty, he is then to mourn for it, 1 Cor. 5.2.

2. The Scandal being public, it is the joyners duty immediately to bring it to the Church, 1 Cor. 5.1. 2 Thess. 3.14.

§. 8. In what cases is it lawful to enter into fellowship, association, confederacy and covenants with scandalous sinners? and in what cases is it not lawful?

1. IT is lawful in some civil affairs to enter into association or Covenants with them, Jer. 29.7. Rom. 12.18. as—

1. For maintaining our own outward peace and quiet with them, Gen. 31.44. 1 Kings 5.12.

2. For commerce and traffic with them, Gen. 23.16.— 47.20, 21. 1 Kings 5.10, 11, 12.

3. For maintenance of the several Orders, Liberties and Privileges of the Towns and Cities where we live, &c. 1 Cor. 5.9, 10.

2. It is not lawful to enter into association or covenants with them:—

1. In some civil affairs; as—

1. In conjugal covenants, Deut. 7.3. 2 Kings 8.18. 2 Cor. 6.14.

2. In mili••ry covenants or expeditions, 2 Chron. 18.3. compared with—19.2. 1 Kings 22.49. 2 Chron. 20.35, 36, 37.— 25.7, 10.

2. In Religious affairs; as—

1. In the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, 1 Cor. 5.11.

2. In private Religious conferences, Mal. 3.2. Acts 2.42. compared with 2 Cor. 6.17. 2 Thess. 3.14.

3. Nor may we enter into any other Religious covenants, of what kind soever with Heretics, Blasphemers or Idolaters, Exod. 23.32, 34.12, 13. Judges 2.2.

CHAP. XI.

SECT. 1. Of the necessity of preparation to the Hearing of the Word.

Hitherto of Duties in reference to our Spiritual Ethics and Economics: Now follow our Divine Politicks; viz. such Duties as have reference to public or Church Assemblies; and they are either

- Hearing the Word Preached.
- Receiving the Sacraments.

1. For our right, holy and conscionable impartment in and about the Hearing of the Word, we must look to

- Our preparation before we hear.
- Our carriage in hearing.
- Our behavior afterwards.

1. For preparation, it is of such necessity, that the want and neglect of it, is the cause that the word to many becomes the savor of death unto death; and to some professors, even of good hearts and affections, but a dead letter, without any life or power in it. Is it not a general complaint of the best Christians, that they are ordinarily possessed with much deadness of heart, and dullness of spirit at these holy exercises? Alas, their zeal and fervency which should be quickened and inflamed at every Sermon, is dull and benumb'd with senselessness and satiety; they do not tremble at divine Comminations, and denuncements of God's Judgments against sin; they are not so refreshed with the gracious Promises of life and salvation, as they ought to be; they do not enjoy and reap the thousandth part of that delight, comfort and benefit as they well might, by the Ministry of the Word; they do not with that cheerfulness receive, with that sweetness taste or relish, with that life and vigor digest the food of life; they do not so clearly see and discern the infinite beauty of the sacred Majesty represented unto them, or that glorious grace, shining unto them in the face of Christ Jesus; their hand of faith doth not with that feeling and fastness lay hold upon, and clasp about the rich treasures revealed in the Gospel: and why? because their hearts are not purged and prepared for hearing. This duty then is of great necessity, and special use, for all those which look for benefit or blessing by the preaching of the word: Take heed how ye hear (saith Christ;) and Take heed to thy foot (saith the Preacher) when thou goest to the house of God; and be more ready to hear, then to offer the sacrifice of fools, for they consider not that they do evil.

But understand we aright: God would not have us make an Idol of preparation, as if therefore God draws nigh to us, because we are prepared; No, no: though preparation in ordinary course is a means to find God, yet doth God sometimes hide himself when his people are prepared? he would have us know, that if he be found of us at all, it is of mere mercy; he is not bound in Justice (setting aside his Promise) to reward this preparation: it's but our duty, and he can espy in it matter enough of displeasure, but ordinarily the godly find God according to their preparation; and hereto the current of the Scripture bears witness, They that seek the Lord, shall praise him: Open your gates, and the King of glory shall come in: — If any man open to me, I will come in to him: — If thou prepare thine heart, and stretch out thy hands towards him,—then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot.

SECT. 2. Of the manner of preparation to hear the Word.

The manner of this preparation consists in these particulars: 1. In Prayer. 2. In Meditation. 3. In Examination. 4. In the purging or cleansing our hearts. 5. In a right disposition of our hearts.

1. In Prayer: If thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding;— then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find out the knowledge of God. Christ bids us pray for our daily bread, and a blessing upon it; much more should we pray for a blessing upon our Spiritual food, for Man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord, doth man live. Now the particulars we are to pray for, are these:

1. For the Minister, that God would open unto him a door of utterance, to speak the mysteries of Christ; — and that he may make it manifest as he ought to speak. Direct him, Lord (should every soul say) that he may speak fitly to me, somewhat for my understanding, somewhat for my affections, somewhat to help me against such or such a temptation.

2. For the Congregation, that Christ may ride with triumph in the midst of them, that some may be converted, others may be confirmed and strengthened in their most holy faith.

3. For ourselves, that through God's assistance we may hear profitably, and be blessed in the hearing; that God would help us in our Preparation, Meditation, Examination, in the purging of our hearts, and putting them into a right disposition and frame: Open thou mine eyes (said David) that I may see the wonderful things contained in thy law.

2. In Meditation: I thought on my ways (said David) and turned my feet unto thy testimonies; he first looked over his own ways, before he would set his feet into God's ways.— Now the matter of our Meditation is, 1. Who we are, to hear God's Word: Alas, poor handfuls of dust and ashes, base and vile; thus Abraham and Job in their converses with God confess: and this consideration will stir-up our humility and repentance in us. 2. Into whose presence we come: Is it not into the presence of an high, and holy, and powerful God? Is it not the Lord, a person both of greatest place, and supreme authority? This consideration will further our reverence and respect of God. When Job's eye did see God, he abhorred himself in dust and ashes. 3. By whose assistance we come; we have no strength of our own to do any good, nor is there anything in us, that can procure favor and acceptance with God, we must therefore by faith depend upon Christ for assistance and acceptance: This consideration will stir up our humility and faith. 4. With what affections we come; if we come to purpose, we must come with inward Spiritual affections, with willingness, cheerfulness, reverence, repentance, love, humility and faith. 5. To what end we come; whether it be to God's glory, and our own souls good.

3. In Examination, let us search and try our ways:— Commune with your own hearts; — and then offer to God the sacrifice of righteousness.— Now the matter of Examination is, 1. The general frame and temper of our hearts, whether they be in a better or worse temper then formerly. 2. The special occasions, for which our souls at such or such a time desire to meet God: It is the complaint of some, I am weak in knowledge; of others, I want such and such graces; of others, I am like to encounter such and such temptations: of all these we are to examine ourselves, that we may accordingly receive supply. 3. Our sins, that we might have them slain by the sword of the Spirit in the Ministry of the Word. 4. Our graces, that we may have them strengthened and nourished by the Spiritual food of our souls. But the handling of these at large, I shall leave to the Receiving of the Lord's Supper.

4. In the purging or cleansing of our hearts, 1. From sin; Lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls: with which agrees that parallel place, Wherefore putting away all malice, as new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word; as it is with the body, when the stomach is foul and clogged with bad humors, we should first purge it, before we feed it, otherwise whatsoever we eat, will but nourish and increase the corrupt humors: so when the soul is stuffed or clogged with sin, whatsoever is heard in the Ministry of the word, will but be abused by it, and wrested to the destruction of it. 2. From worldly cares and thoughts, which may draw away the heart: The cares of the world (saith Christ) do choke the seed of the word. When Abraham went up to the Mount to sacrifice, he left his servants in the valley; and when we go up to the Mount where God appears, we should leave all our servile affections, and worldly thoughts in the valley; or if any enter, we should do by them as Abraham did by the birds that would have eaten up his sacrifice, chase them away. It is said, that in the Temple, though there was much flesh for sacrifice, yet there was not one fly appeared stirring. O that it might be so with us, that not one thought might arise upon our hearts, unsuitable to the place or work at hand: But this is the misery, we have not Spiritual hearts in temporal employments, and therefore we have carnal hearts in spiritual employments, the less of the Sabbath in the week, the more of the week we find in the Sabbath.

5. In a right disposition in our hearts: We must have hearts seasoned, 1. With softness, for if the heart be not soft and flexible, the power of the Word will not make any print or deep impression upon it; all holy admonitions, reproofs and instructions will be but as arrows shot against a stone wall. 2. With humility, For them that be meek will he guide in judgment, and teach the humble his way: The proud heart is so swelled with the wind of vanity and vain-glory, of self-love and over-weening conceit, that there is left no room in it for the precious treasures of saving Grace to enter. 3. With honesty, For honest hearts are the profitable and fruitful hearers, resembled by the good ground; hearts that have no manner of purpose to live and continue in any one known sin; hearts ready and resolved to serve and please God in all the ways of his Commandments, and that sincerely and continually. 4. With faith, for this makes the Word sink and soak into the soul with power and profit. The old Jews heard the Word, but it profited them not, because it was not mixed with faith in them that heard it: Faith animates and inspires the promises of the Gospel, with such a sovereign sweetness, that they are able to raise us from the depth of fears, yea, to put us into a Paradise of spiritual pleasures, and possession of Heaven, as it were already. 5. With teachableness: Sacrifice and burnt offerings thou wouldst not (saith David) but mine ears hast thou prepared; q.d. Thou hast bored new ears in my heart, that I can now reverently attend unto, rightly conceive, and with an holy greediness devour (as it were) the mysteries of Grace.

6. With openness, or readiness to receive every truth that God shall teach us: It is said of the Bereans, That they received the Word with all readiness of mind: When there is such an holy disposition in us, as to receive both in judgment and practice whatsoever God shall reveal to us out of his holy Word, this is a precious disposition.

Thus much of preparation, before we hear: what follows, but that we open our hearts and hands? Surely the windows of heaven will be set wide open, that all manner of spiritual comforts, all the blessings of peace and happiness, may in abundance be showered down upon us; the rich treasury of everlasting glory and mortality, shall be now unlocked to us, and we may row and tumble ourselves amidst the mountains of heavenly pearls, and golden pleasures, joys that no heart can comprehend, but that which is weaned from all worldly pleasures, and set apart, and sanctified for all holy services and business of Heaven.

SECT. 3. The duties of the soul in hearing the Word.

Our Duties in hearing, consists in these particulars:—

1. That we set ourselves in God's presence whiles we are hearing the Word, and that we consider it is God we have to deal withal in this business, and not man, and that it is God's Word; and not man's: This was the great commendation of the Thessalonians, That they received the Word as the Word of God; and it is the express saying of our Savior, He that heareth you, heareth me: The Lord himself is present in a special manner, where his Word is preached; Surely the Lord is in that place, as Jacob said of Bethel: Now this apprehension of God's presence in the assemblies of his people, will preserve our hearts from roving and wandering thoughts: I hate vain thoughts, but thy Law do I love; yea, it will keep us in that awful and reverent disposition that is meet for the majesty of Heaven.

2. That we diligently attend to that we hear, thus all the people were very attentive to hear Christ; or (as it is in the Original) They hanged upon him to hear him; they so carried themselves, as if their ears and minds had been tied to his very tongue: Look as a Prisoner will hearken to the sentence of a Prince, every word he speaks being life or death; or as the servants of Benhadad, when they were in their enemies power, observed diligently if any word of comfort would come from the King of Israel, and they did hastily catch at it; so should we with all diligence and attention hearken to the good word of God.

3. That we labor to understand what we hear; to this purpose, Christ called to the multitude and said, Hear and understand: Now the means to understand the Word are these: 1. Come to the Word with a willing mind to learn; though the Eunuch understood not what he read, yet because he had a mind to learn, the Lord provided for him, and we know what a comfortable success Philip's sermon had with him: Men love to teach willing Scholars, so doth God when we come with willing and ready minds to be taught of him. 2. Be well acquainted with the Grounds and Principles of Christianity; it is the want of this that makes men dull in understanding; they that are not first well nourished with milk, will not be fit to receive and digest stronger meat; if the foundation be not well laid, it is in vain to build. 3. Walk according to the light revealed; A good understanding have all they that do his Commandments: If we employ well the little knowledge we have, there is a promise to give us more.

4. That we hear the Word with all spiritual subjection, as that Word which hath power to command the soul and conscience: God to this purpose looks into a Congregation, to see what hearts will yield to his Word; the Spirit of God hovers over the Congregation, and here it waits, and there it expects, to this man it comes, and knocks at the door of his heart, to that man and the other man it goes, saying, Open your hearts, you everlasting doors, that the King of Glory may come in: Surely now should we say, These are God's testimonies, this is the Word the Minister of God speaks to me in God's stead, I must give account of it, and therefore I will submit myself to it.

5. That we hear the Word, with application of it to our own hearts and lives; Hear this, and know it for thyself: so did Christ's Disciples when our Savior told them, that one of them should betray him, They were exceeding sorrowful, and began everyone of them to say, Lord, is it I? as no plaster can do the Patient any good, unless it be applied; and as no meat is able to do us good, unless it be eaten and digested, no more can the Word preached profit us, unless it be mixed with faith, one principal work whereof is to apply those things that are delivered in the Word, and this is the meaning of the Prophet, Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good.

6. That in hearing, we look to our affections, that they be rightly exercised: Thus Josiah his heart is said to melt at the reading of the Law: Thus the Jews at Peters Sermon were pricked in their hearts, and said, Men and brethren what shall we do? Thus the hearts of the two Disciples that went to Emmaus, burned within them, when Christ opened to them the Scriptures: Now the means to stir up these affections, are, 1. A belief of the Word, as that which is undoubtedly true: God cannot lie, Tit. 1.2. Nor will he change his mind, Numb. 23.19. 2. A love of the Word, for it is purity, perfection, usefulness, and wonderful benefits to us. 3. An appropriation of the Word unto ourselves, for that which affects us, is that which most nearly concerns us; without this means of quickening our hearts, they remain dead and senseless, and the Word becomes utterly unprofitable. 4. A consideration of the nature of the Word, which ever requires and calls for suitable hearts and affections; it is a pure Word, and therefore we must cleanse and purify our hearts for the receiving of it; it is spiritual and heavenly, and therefore we must labor for spiritual and heavenly minds to entertain it; it is a word of power and authority, the very voice of Christ, and therefore our hearts must submit and stoop to receive it with meekness and trembling of heart: It is a sure word, 2 Pet. 1.19. A faithful word, Tit. 1.9. A vision that will not lie, Heb. 2.3. and therefore we must embrace it with faithful and believing hearts, without which the Word cannot profit us at all, Heb. 4.2.

7. That above all other affections, we make sure to delight in the Word; it is said of Christ's hearers, that they heard him gladly, and it is noted for an especial sign of Grace to hear the Word with delight: I rejoiced at thy Word (said David) as one that findeth great spoils.

[Quest. 1] But whether may not ungenerate men have a delight in God's Ordinances?

[Answ.] I answer, 1. Most of them have no delight at all in God's Ordinances: To whom shall I speak and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken; behold, the Word of the Lord is to them a reproach, they have no delight in it; and if this be our case, if we can hear sweet Gospel-preaching, the free offer of Jesus Christ, with all his glories and excellencies, to poor sinners, to vile, lost, undone souls, and are no whit taken therewith; woe to our souls, can we sleep away such a sermon? can we slight or neglect such Gospel-offers, nay, do we attend them coldly? have we not heart-risings? no stirrings and workings? no longings and desires? and thus we pass Sermon after Sermon, and Sabbath after Sabbath: O then we are wholly dead unto the life of grace, Jesus Christ as yet hath not given us his true light, no work of Conversion doth at all appear in us: The end which Jesus Christ had in sending out Preachers, was to discover his love to poor perishing sinners, that so they might be affected with him, and long after him, and if we have no such relish, our condition is sad.

2. Some unregenerate men may have some delight in the word: They seek me daily (said God) and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the Ordinances of their God: they ask of me the Ordinances of Justice, they take delight in approaching to God. The second ground received the word with joy, and Herod heard John the Baptist gladly. Ungodly men may delight in God's word, as in these cases:—

1. When the Ordinances are a leading way unto some end that suits with corrupt nature: Thus Jehu shown abundance of zeal in destroying the house of Ahab, and the Idolatry of Baal, that thereby he might establish the kingdom to his Posterity, and get himself a great name; Come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord: he was so full of vain-glory, that he could not hold in, but was forced to burst out.
2. When the manner of dispensation of the Ordinances doth suit with their disposition: An understanding judicious man may love preaching that is judicious and understanding; A man of meekness, may delight in a Sermon of Peace, peace; a temperate man may like a Sermon that is tart and bitter against drunkenness, uncleanness; the liberal man may delight in severe preaching against covetousness; as a man musically affected, may delight in singing of Psalms, because these things suit with their dispositions: The gifts of Ministers may have an affecting pleasingness; they may express their minds in such fit terms, or so pathetically, or they may have such a grace in utterance, as may affect: Lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song, of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument; for they hear thy words, but do them not.
3. When there is a common work of the Spirit of God upon them for a time: They may taste of the heavenly gifts, and be made partakers of the holy Ghost; they may taste the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, and yet fall away; but this work is rather a work upon them, then in them, a forced work, not natural, rather a flash, then a fire of affection; the affections are lifted up, they cannot be altered and changed, acted only by an outward principle; the experience that the Spirit hath forcibly and powerfully wrought on them, not by an outward and inward principle also, both by the Spirit of God, and suitableness of affection to that which is good: it was otherwise with David, I delight to do thy will, O God; yea, thy law is within my heart: and otherwise with Paul, I delight in the law of God after the inward man; till the law of God be within us, we cannot from within taste the sweetness of God's Ordinances: In true and solid delight, there must be a suitableness betwixt the heart and the Ordinances; therefore saith the wise man, It is joy to the just to do judgment: The Justice that is in him, is suitable to the Judgment to be done by him, and this makes the joy. Hence it follows, that so much grace, so much delight: were we more holy, spiritual, heavenly, as the Ordinances are, we should be more affected therewith. Thus it is not in the wicked, they have no such delight.

[Quest. 2] Why is the word so brim-full of comfort to the dear Saints of God?

[Ans.] Because in the word they have communion with God, who is the God of all Consolation; and with the Spirit of God, who is called the Comforter: Now as a man that walks amongst Perfumes, must needs smell of the Perfume, so they that converse with the God of all joy, must needs be filled with all joy; and therefore David calls God his exceeding joy. The Saints go to the word, as one that goes to hear news of a friend; they look upon the Ordinances, as that whereby they have to do with God, and therefore it is precious and sweet to them. No wonder, can a man who is cold come to the fire and not be warmed? Can he that is in the dark come into the open air and not be enlightened? God is the spring of all comfort, and therefore sure their hearts must needs be comforted, that meet with God in the Ordinances; on the contrary, if they meet not with God, if they miss of their communion with the Lord Jesus Christ, then is comfort afar off: But we must not argue against a general truth, from a particular temptation. The Position will stand, That God's word is brim-full of comfort to God's people, though every experiment comes not up to it.

SECT. 4. The Duties required after hearing.

THE Duties required after hearing the word, are these:—

1. That we carefully remember, and keep that which we have heard: My son, let thine heart retain my words,—keep them in the midst of thine heart. As a man that hath a Jewel will be careful to lock it up in his safest Chest, so should we keep the word in our hearts, in the midst of our hearts. Many hear the word desirously, but (as we say) it goes in at one ear, and out at the other, it stays not for any after-use, but a little present admiration: others hear, and the word smites them a little on their Consciences, and wounds them, and one would think some good thing would be wrought on them, but they go away, and the motion dyes; like unto metals which are soft and pliable, whilst they are in the fire, but shortly after they become harder then before. Take earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip; or let them run out as a leaking vessel, for so the Original bears it.

2. That we meditate, and seriously think of that we have heard: Meditate upon these things (said Paul to Timothy) give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all: Thus Mary pondred the words of the Angel in her heart, and David meditated all the day on God's law: Meditation is as the bellows of the soul, that doth kindle and inflame holy affections: Meditation is of a separating and settling nature, it seperates heavenly thoughts from earthly, for it often goes over with thoughts, and at last settles the heart on such thoughts as these, O this is the word of God, this is the law, the proclamation of the great King, whereby I must be judged: This may be the last Sermon that ever I shall hear whiles I live, such a gale of God's Spirit may never be offered to me again: I will be wise therefore, and give way to the Spirit of God, I will not beat it back again, but yield to the blessed motions of God's Spirit, that this day have been made.

3. That we repeat what we have heard, and confer of it, and examine the Scriptures about the truth of it: My tongue (saith David) shall speak of thy word, for all thy Commandments are righteousness: and, You shall lay up these my words in your hearts (saith God) and you shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thy house. This is it for which the noble Bereans are commended to us, They searched the Scriptures daily, concerning the things that were delivered by Paul: A man that comes into a pleasant garden, will not content himself with the present scent only, but will carry some of the flowers away with him: So after we have been in the Garden of spices, and have felt the savor of Christ's ointments in Church-Assemblies, let us take some of the flowers away with us, and smell of them again and again. Repeating, conferring, examining the word, is as the pounding of spices, that will make them smell more.

4. That we put in practice whatsoever we hear: Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own souls; we must do it, we must bring it nearer to us, that it may be an engrafted word in our understanding and affections, that it may be written in our souls, and in the tables of our hearts; that it may be incorporated and naturalized into our inward man, that so we may speak and think, and do nothing but that which is divine: and in doing, observe we this frame of Spirit, to be quick and speedy about it: I made haste, and prolonged not the time to keep thy commandments; This speedy, this immediate putting of the word into practice, is much advantage to the hearer; the affections of the heart are then lively and quick, which with delays die and decay suddenly.

5. That (when the word is heard, and we are returned home) that we pray again for a blessing on that we have heard, and as our memories will bear, let us turn the word into prayer, especially the heads or principal parts of it: Prayer must be the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending of this Spiritual duty; we must pray in preparation, and pray in conclusion, and pray always. And thus much concerning our Duties before, in, and after the Hearing the Word.

CHAP. XII.

SECT. 1. Of the two Sacraments of the New Testament.

THE next duty of a Christian, as it hath reference only to the public or Church-Assemblies, is a right receiving of the Sacraments, which are two, Baptism, and the Lord's Supper: Baptism is the Sacrament of our incorporation into Christ, of our initiation or investing into the glorious state of Christianity; The Lord's Supper is the Sacrament of our continuance in Christ, of our confirmation in spiritual life, and the power of Grace already planted within us: By Baptism we are washed, we are sanctified, we are justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God: By the Lord's Supper we grow in spiritual strength, we lay better hold by the hand of Faith, upon the merits and mercies of Christ; we feel more soundly and sensibly the power and virtue of his blood, we see more clearly, and are more fully and feelingly ascertained of the forgiveness of our sins: Concerning the former, it is to little purpose to give any directions, because infants (whom only are in our days baptized) are merely subjects receptive, not active, and so far as concern the Parents in relation to their infants, we have dispatched elsewhere.

SECT. 2. Of the duties in general, before we receive the Lord's Supper.

I Shall now therefore proceed to the second Sacrament, and for right receiving of the Lord's Supper, there are duties of necessity required

- before
- in
- after the Sacrament.

My meaning is not to speak of the habitual dispositions, but of the actual dispositions of the heart, in reference to which—

Before Sacrament, the duty is Self-Examination: Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of this bread, and drink of this cup: Of this Self-Examination we have spoken before; but in reference to this Sacrament, we shall handle it more fully, and so consider of it,

- 1. In its subject.
- 2. In its object.

1. For the subject matter, or the nature of this Self-Examination: Self-Examination is a holy work of the soul, whereby it casts its eye, and reflects upon its self, and so looks through itself, and takes, a true scantling and estimate of its spiritual estate; for instance, I find such and such sins forbidden in the Word, such and such Graces required in the Word; whereupon, comparing my present condition with the Scriptures, I examine, Am not I guilty of these sins? do I practice these duties? or am I possessed of these graces? The conscience being thus closely and sincerely examined, it will return a true answer to every question, whence it will be easy to give a true censure of our spiritual estate or condition.

2. For the object of our Examination, it is generally—

- Our sins.
- Our graces.

Of which in order.

SECT. 3. Of the manner of examining our sins before the Lord's Supper.

For the right examining of our sins, observe we these rules:—

1. Procure we a double catalogue of our sins, the one before, and the other since our conversion: Let us search and try our ways (saith Jeremiah) and then turn again to the Lord: If we will not, we may be sure God will: Thou inquirest after mine iniquity (saith Job) and searchest after my sin.

2. Confess we our sins: Bring we them out, as they brought the vessels of the temple, by number and weight: Aaron confessing for the people, he was to confess all the iniquities of the Children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins. As three make All, so here's three Alls to make up a right confession; not only must be confessed All their iniquities, and All their sins, but All their transgressions in all their sins; q.d. Aaron must number, and Aaron must aggravate their sins, by laying out how many transgressions were wrapped up in their several sins.

3. Labor we for grief and sorrow of heart for sin, otherwise all is to no purpose: I will declare mine iniquity (saith David) I will be sorry for my sin: His confessions were dolorous confessions; he felt sin, and this wrought upon him, as an heavy burden, they are too heavy for me; there's nothing in the world can make an heart more heavy, then when it feels the weight and heaviness of sin.

4. Judge we and condemn ourselves for our sin: This is that duty instanc'd in by the Apostle, If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged: O Lord, I am not worthy (could the Centurion say) that thou shouldst come under my roof: But, O Lord, I am not worthy (should everyone of us say) that I should come to thy table.

5. Pray for mercy, pardon and acceptance, in, for and through the Lord Jesus Christ.

SECT. 4. Of Examination of the wants of Graces, that should be feelingly in us.

FOR the right examining of our Graces, observe we this threefold search or scrutiny of

- 1. The wants of our Graces.
- 2. The truth of our Graces.
- 3. The growth of our Graces.

1. That we may rightly examine the wants of our Graces, practice we these particulars:—

1. Procure we a catalogue of Graces, such as that in Gal. 5. 22, 23. Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; or such as that in 2 Pet. 1.5, 6, 7, 8. Add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity: if these things be in you, and abound, they will make you that you shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. This Catalogue procured, set we the same before us, and consider which of these graces we have, and which of these graces we want. I know it is a question, whether all graces are not so connex'd and chained together, that one of them cannot be severed from another? But howsoever we may distinguish, quantum ad habitus, & actus; in respect of habit, we grant they are always connex'd and chained together, but not in respect of act or exercise: Add grace to grace (saith the Apostle) q.d. a Christian at first doth not exercise all graces; but as a man lives first the life of a plant, then of sense, then of reason, though all were radically there at first: so it is in graces, there are many forms that Christians go through, as Scholars at School do: The first form is to teach them their sins and miseries, and so they go to school to the Law, and are set to study it; and then after they have learned that lesson thoroughly, they are led up higher, to have their faith drawn out, and to be exercised about Free-grace, and about Christ his person, and union with him, and about the art and way of drawing virtue from him, and doing all in him: nay after this, though a Believer in his conversion hath the substance of all these taught him, yet he goes over them again throughout his whole life; and sometimes his thoughts dwell more about the emptiness of his own righteousness, sometimes about that fullness that is in Christ, sometimes about the Spiritual strictness he ought to walk in; and this is to add grace unto grace:— Nay, there may be addition concerning one and the same grace, as when a man's grace and the fruits thereof grow bigger, and more plentiful, when there are new degrees of the same, ex. gr. for faith, when from a man's casting himself on Christ, he comes to find sweetness in Christ, and from that grows up to an assurance of faith: So for prayer, when we find our prayers to grow better; when more Spiritual corruptions are put into our confessions, and stronger grounds of faith are put into our deprecations, or petitions for pardon; when we have more enlargedness us of thankfulness, more zeal to pray for the Churches, when we go to pray with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit: So for obedience, when we abound more and more in the work of the Lord, as it is said of the Church of Thiatira, that their last works were more than their first; when as the boughs are laden, and we are filled with the fruits of righteousness: this is to add grace unto grace, or one degree of grace unto another. Now if in this sense there be an addition of graces, or an addition of degrees, examine, what is the grace? or what is the degree of any grace that we want?

3. Pray we fervently for a supply of those wants in this Ordinance: Imagine we saw Christ compassed with all his privileges, and promises, and pardons, and mercies, and merits; imagine we heard him say, Come hither poor souls, you that are sensible of your wants, and of your spiritual poverty, there is in me bowels of compassions, and pardons in store; it is I that am your Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification and Redemption; what is it you want? What is it you would have me do for you? shall not these sugared words of our Savior melt your hearts, and bring you low on your knees: O Lord (should the soul say) I beg of thee saving Knowledge, justifying Faith, sincere Repentance, fervent love: O Lord, I would fain have assurance of pardon, strength of faith, power against some special lust, healing virtues, to launch my bloody issues: O Lord, that thou wouldst bestow on me meekness, or temperance, or patience, or obedience, or quickenings in thy Spirit: Lord, that a pardon might be sealed for all my sins, that I might receive the virtue of thy death, the comforts of thy Spirit, the mortifying of such and such a lust: Lord, that my unclean heart may be sanctified, that I may be enabled with more strength to perform such a duty:—O Lord, upon this very errand, and for this very end, do I now come to thee, for help in this or that particular do I now come to thy Ordinances: And, O Christ, I beseech thee, supply all my wants, and let me draw virtue from thee: If thus we would pray, and come to Christ, then would Christ out of his bowels and mercies, answer our souls: Receive (would he say) the Grace you feel want of; receive my Spirit, receive power against lusts, receive strength to obedience, receive all the Graces of my spirit, for I am all in all to you.

4. Raise and rouse we up our souls, and go we to the Ordinances, with strong expectations to receive the benefits and Graces we have prayed for; never any came to Christ to be healed, but they came with a strong expectation to receive health; if a leper came, he came with expectation of cleansing; if a blind man came, he came with expectation of seeing; if a lame man came, he came with expectation of walking, and we never read that any coming with such expectation, was turned empty away; the Creeple asking an alms of Peter and John, they said to him, Look on us, and then (saith the Text) he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them: If we would come to the Sacrament, with our eyes on Christ, to his Graces and Promises, Of his fullness (for he is full of Grace, a fountain ever-flowing, and over-flowing) we should receive grace for grace; say then, Christ hath promised to give in the Sacrament his body and blood, the benefits of his death and precious blood-shed; he hath promised to seal pardons, to manifest himself, to give power against lust, I will now therefore go to this Sacrament, with a particular expectation of such and such a blessing as my soul stands in need of.

SECT. 5. Examination of the truth of our Graces, and first of our Conversion.

Our sins and want of Graces thus examined, the soul is in good measure prepared; yet because the Lord Jesus abhors to be food to nourish, where he was not seed to beget, it concerns all who desire to taste of the sealing power of the second Sacrament, first to prove the sealing power of the former Sacrament; before they come to be nourished as Saints, let them know whether they are begot and made Saints: and to that end they must examine further,

- 1. The truth of their Graces.
- 2. The growth of their Graces.

1. For the truth of their Graces, it is good to begin with the beginning; and first to examine their conversion, and secondly the individual companions of their conversion, as their Knowledge, and Faith, and Repentance, and Love, and Obedience, and desires after this Ordinance.

1. For Conversion: A man may by such marks as these, try and consider whether he be truly and soundly converted or no.

1. If he have turned from Satan in all sins, and turned unto God in all duties; if he have left all gross sins, as Lying, Swearing, Usury, Drunkenness, Uncleaness, &c. in practice and action, and all frailties and infirmities, at least in allowance and affection, so that with watchful resistance, and earnest groanings of Spirit, he strive and pray against them, and be humbled and kept in awe by them, and that he perform obedience to all God's Commandments, though not in perfection and height of degree, yet in truth and sincerity of heart.

2. If he be willing in all his purposes, desires, endeavors and actions, to set himself in the presence of God, and in them to be wholly, unreservedly and entirely guided by his word.

3. If he can with an holy comfort, and humble triumph, think upon death, the Law, that great judgment, hell, and those endless torments.

4. If he lovingly hunger and thirst after spiritual nourishment, the growth in grace by the Word, Sacraments, Christian conference, sanctifying the Sabbath, and all other godly exercises both public and private.

5. If truly and heartily he love and long after the coming of Christ; and love such as are true Christians, and that because they make conscience of sin, and serve God with singleness and sincerity of heart.

6. If his chief delight and best comfort be in holy duties and heavenly things, and that he infinitely prefer them before gold, honors, pleasures, yea the whole world.

7. If he would not change his present station, though never so base, poor and neglected in the world (yet accompanied with the state of Grace and Christianity) for the most rich and glorious estate of the greatest man upon earth, where there is nothing but profaneness and unregeneration; if all this whole great world about, were turned into gold, honor and pleasures, and in respect of the comfort of Grace, it were dung, vanity, nothing.

8. If he would not be in the state and case he was before (though he then thought that good enough) for any worldly good, for ten thousand worlds.

9. If he be truly humbled with consideration of the long time of his profaneness, and impenitency, and very sorry he began no sooner, nor made greater haste into the royal and glorious state of Christianity.

10. If those sinful pleasures and vanities be most tedious, irksome and distasteful unto him, which formerly he pursued with greediness and delight.

11. If he mourn for the abomination of the times: Grieve at the wicked courses of others, and be very glad and heartily joyful, when godliness and sincerity gets the upper hand, and when any one is converted.

12. If to the power of his gifts at all occasions, he be still plotting, working and laboring the conversion of others with zeal and sincerity, especially those that are nearest about him, any ways depend upon him, and belong to his charge.

SECT. 6. Examination of Knowledge.

NOW for the individual companions of sound conversion: We must inquire within ourselves, for these Graces of Knowledge, Faith, Repentance, &c.

The first of these Graces, which every worthy and fit receiver must necessarily find in himself, is Knowledge; and by such marks as these, he may try and consider, whether his knowledge be a saving and sanctifying knowledge or no.

1. If it beget humility and lowliness of mind; if the sight of God's purity, majesty, just indignation and vengeance against sin; if the sense of his own blindness, vanity, inward filthiness, and natural corruption, makes him willingly entertain humility, and a lowly conceit of his own self.

2. If it be drawn into practice, and joined with conversion of the heart from sin unto God, and with reformation of life from evil to good, otherwise knowledge without practice will increase the guilt of Conscience, and the damnation in hell.

3. If it be edged and enagred with a longing desire and insatiable thirst after more of those rich and saving treasures: There issues from out the sanctuary Waters of Life (see their increase) first to the ankles, then to the knees, then to the loins, afterwards a river that no man could pass: If we have once tasted how sweet the Lord is, there will be a desire to increase more and more.

4. If it be diffusive and communicative of itself, if it shine round about, and work all the good it can in all places: The lips of the righteous feed many: —The lips of the wise disperse knowledge, but the heart of the foolish doth not so: It is as new wine in vessels, desirous to vent; not to purchase a little vain-glory, or profane praises, but to work spiritual good, and for the conversion of others.

5. If it beget reverence of that great majesty and love, to that holy truth it knows and apprehends in the Word, and an holy estimation of it above all possessions, Counting all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord.

6. If by it the soul knows God in Christ, and knows Christ as his own Savior, and knows the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death.

7. If by it the soul knows the things given it of God, and especially the inhabitation of the Spirit of Christ.

8. If it extinguish or greatly dull the savor of earthly things, and makes the soul heavenly minded, savoring of spiritual things.

SECT. 7. Examination of Faith.

A Second Grace which every worthy receiver must find in himself, is Faith; and by such marks as these, he may try whether his faith be a true and justifying faith.

1. If it sprung in the heart by the public Ministry of God's holy word; if the heart was broken, and bruised, and brought to an holy desperation, whereby it wholly renounced, disclaimed, and disavowed itself, as unworthy of life, of breath, or being; if then it began to lift up its eyes upon the precious promises of Salvation, revealed in the Gospel, and shining gloriously in the face of Christ: And if lastly it perceived some glimpses of comfort, hopes of pardon in the blood of Christ, whence arose an hungering desire, and longing thirst after the mercies of God, and merits of Christ Jesus; and so it casts itself with strong cries and prayers into the arms of Christ his blessed Redeemer.

2. If it grow, and daily spring up towards height of assurance, and fullness of persuasion: Ordinarily faith is weak at first, full of many doubts and distractions, fears and tremblings, but after long experience of our own sincerity, godly life, and good conscience, it grows up in time, and by leisure to be a strong faith.

3. If it purify the heart: Formalists may watch over their open outward actions, but true believers set themselves with special care, and all good conscience, to bridle and bring under all wicked stirrings of the heart. The desire of the righteous is only good (i.) the main streams of his desires, the course and current of his heart, is to godliness and goodness, though sometimes his corrupt Nature, and Satan's boisterous temptations, do unawares and violently carry his thoughts another way, for which he sends out many a prayer for pardon and purging.

4. If it bring forth a true and through Evangelical Repentance: Where God's comfortable favor shines, and is shed into the heart, it immediately melts and resolves into tears of sorrow and grief for former rebellions, and makes unfeigned and resolute vows, forever after, by God's grace, to throw out of his heart and life, those sins which have grieved so good a God.

5. If it beget in him whom it possesseth, a sanctification of all parts, both in soul and body, though not in perfection; if the understanding be enlightened with knowledge in the great mysteries of godliness; if the will be bent with the best things; if the memory be a storehouse of heavenly treasures; if the stream of our affections be turned from the world towards God's glory and good causes; if the heart be weaned from lusts, and fallen in love with eternal pleasures and heavenly things; if the Conscience be watchful to discover, and sensible to feel the approach and prickings of the least sin, &c.

6. If it work by love, first towards God and Christ, in that all his sins are remitted, and he is eternally beloved of God in Christ: Secondly, towards Christians, in that the saving graces of God's Spirit shine in them: Thirdly, towards himself, with relation unto God, and reservation of his glory: Fourthly, towards kindred, friends, not so much because they are of the same blood, as because of the mutual interest they have in the blood of Christ: Fifthly, towards enemies, because of the precious Command of Christ.

7. If it cause a forsaking the world: No man can do this (if it be his sweet sin) until his soul have received by the hand of faith from the Spirit of God, an assurance of an immortal Crown in the heavens, sealed unto him by the blood of Christ: but then how willingly doth he bid the world farewell? how resolutely doth he cast out of his affections all greedy thoughts, and excessive desires of earth and earthly treasures?

8. If it speak comfort in distress, joy in tribulation, glorying in afflictions: Faith teacheth that God casts us in the fire, not to burn us, but to refine us, and make us more orient in his sight: This is the beaten path to heaven (cries faith) which all the glorious Saints have trodden before us.

9. If it will maintain a Christian in some measure of sufficiency and contentment in all estates: The just shall live by faith, not by friends, money, earthly hopes, or helps, &c. if it makes a man lay hold on God's promises, and work an inward trust in God's never-failing providence, so as he will leave the success of all his labors to the Lord.

SECT. 8. Examination of Repentance.

A Third grace which every worthy Receiver must find in himself, is Repentance; and by such marks as these he may try whether his Repentance be a sound and sincere Repentance.

1. If it be ashamed of sin: not as a Thief is ashamed, which shame ariseth from the effect of sin, as punishment or disgrace, but as a Son is ashamed (whence it is called a filial shame) out of a sight of the filth and loathsomeness of sin; the impenitent glory in their shame, but the truly penitent are ashamed of such glorying, as of every sin.

2. If it mourn for sin: Thus David mourned (not for the punishment, he is willing to bear it, but) for sin, as it was sin. I deny not but sorrow may be godly, even for Judgments, and then our trial will be, if we can mourn rather for Spiritual Judgments, then for Temporal; and especially if we can feel and bewail hardness of heart, mourning because we cannot mourn as we ought.

3. If it cause a great mourning, at least so great as our mourning would be for outward losses: Thus Zacharias instanceth, the Spirit of God should cause them to mourn, as in the family one would mourn for the loss of their only Son, or as in the Commonweal the Subjects would mourn for the loss of a most worthy Prince.

4. If it rest not without cleanness: True Repentance is not water, but washing, nor every washing, but such as maketh clean; could a man weep his eyes out, yet if he weep not his sins out, what is he better? Sorrowing after a godly sort, what carefulness, what cheering hath it wrought? If I have done iniquity, I will do it no more.

5. If it bring forth fruits meet for Repentance: This was the sum, as of Johns, so of Paul's preaching, that Jew and Gentile should repent, and turn to God, and do works worthy amendment of life: nay, it is the very sum of the Gospel, To mourn, to be comforted, that they might be called Trees of Righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified.

6. If it be stirred up by the sense of God's goodness: So that nothing more fires a man to abase himself in the sense of his own vileness, then to feel and find the gracious goodness and readiness of God in Christ, to show him mercy; He feareth the Lord and his goodness.

7. If the same Spiritual means assuage it, that first raised it in the heart: Repentance that can be heal'd by sports, merry company, &c. was never sound; It is the voice of the Church, Come, and let us return unto the Lord, for he hath torn, and he will heal us, he hath smitten, and he will bind us up.

8. If it be joined with a secret trust in the acceptation of God in Christ: If no misery can beat thy soul from inward affiance, or hope of mercy; if in the very disquietness of the heart, the desire of the soul be to the Lord; if he be never so much cast down, yet he waits upon God for the help of his countenance, and in some measure condemns the unbelief of his own heart, and supports himself with the hope of the never failing compassions of God in Christ, wherein it differs from the Repentance of Cain and Judas.

SECT. 9. Examination of love to the Brethren.

A Fourth grace which every worthy Receiver must find in himself, is Love to the Brethren: and by such marks as these, he may try whether his love be a true love.

1. If it be to the Saints as Saints; not because they are rich, learned, wise, but merely because they have God's image upon them: Love one another with a pure heart, love must be pure, not mixed, and then it is pure, when it springs from no other fountain but grace, and holiness, and love of God in Christ.

2. If it be to the Saints above others: Others may have love and honor, according to their relations, qualities, worths; but true love bestows its Benjamins portion (the specialty and choice of its affections) upon the Saints.

3. If it be to all the Saints: if it love grace in rags, as well as in Robes; if it love the absent, as well as present; if it love for the truths sake those he never saw, yet this hinders not the difference of degrees of love, which by the special providence of God some Christians may have to others, in some special eminency of respects.

4. If it extends as to all Saints, so to all times, as well in adversity, disgrace, temptation, sickness, &c. as in prosperity, health, good estimation, &c.

5. If it delight in the fellowship of Saints: Such as find no need of, nor delight in the society of Saints, may doubt their condition, and be humbled for it.

6. If it cause forbearance of one another, Forgiveness of one another: if in case the person injuring desires no reconciliation, yet the person injured is willing to let fall all wrath, malice, or desire of revenge.

7. If it make a soul to honor them that fear the Lord: This honor hath in it—

1. An estimation of them, as the only excellent people in the world.

2. A free acknowledgement of their just praises in all places for their grace.

3. A willing proposing of them as examples to imitate.

4. An holy endeavor to cover their infirmities, taking things in the best part and sense.

5. An apology for them, against the reproaches and scorns of the world.

SECT. 10. Examination of Obedience.

A Fifth grace which every worthy Receiver must find in himself, is Obedience: and by such marks as these he may try whether his Obedience be true:

1. If it arise out of love to God in Christ Jesus; if it be voluntary and not constrained; if the heart be inflamed with the sense of God's love in Christ; and if it be humbled when it hath done its best, that it can bring no more glory to God.

2. If it be in all things, with all respect to all God's Commandments; if as Noah, we walk with God (i.) if in a settled even course of obedience, we keep close to him all the days of our life.

3. If it submit against profit, pleasure, credit, liberty, ease, &c. if it prefer God's Commandments above all things, yea above life itself.

4. If it obey the Commandments of faith, as well as life, submitting to the Lord by believing, as by doing, yielding to the Gospel as to the law.

SECT. 11. Examination of our desires after this Ordinance.

A Sixth grace which every worthy receiver must find in himself, is Holy desires after this holy Ordinance; and by such marks as these he may try whether his desires be holy.

1. If they carry the soul after Christ, fellowship with Christ, communion with Christ, a fruition of Christ and his benefits.
2. If they spring from any sense of the want of Christ, or from sense of former sweetness or goodness in Christ, found in the use of the Ordinances.
3. If there accompany them an holy kind of impatience in the want of the Ordinance: When shall I come and appear before God?
4. If nothing but Christ will content the soul: If Christ be desired for himself, and not for any base ends; If the soul be content with Christ, though he be cast into prison and banishment.
5. If there follow a great and sweet contentment in the use of the Ordinances; if (as it was with Sampson drinking of the water that God sent him out of the hollow of the jaw) our spirits come again and revive upon it; so that sometimes the heart is filled with strange ecstasies, with excess of spiritual pleasures, with an heavenly kind of satisfaction, contentation and delight.
6. If there follow after the Ordinance holy vows and wishes of infinite and eternal thankfulness; as also a growth and springing up as among the grass, or as willows by the water courses.

SECT. 12. Examination of the growth of Graces.

THE truth of Graces thus found out; In the last place, examine we the growth of Graces: True grace is ever growing grace, and if a man grow, it will appear by these signs:

1. By his outward appearance; not that any man can see him grow, but that we may discern him (as the corn that springs and grows up) after some time, when he is grown in Knowledge and Faith, &c.
2. By his appetite to his spiritual food: Young men have better stomachs than old men, because they are growing; and a gracious spirit hath ever an appetite or desire after Spiritual dainties.
3. By his spiritual strength; a Christian is at first weak, but if he grow, he is stronger and stronger, till at last he can wrestle with a spiritual enemy, with lusts and corruptions, Powers and Principalities, and get the mastery over them. To this duty of Examination, others add Excitation, as thus,—There must be a new exciting of Faith, and Repentance, and Love, and of desires after the Ordinances; but of that more fully in the Ordinance itself.

SECT. 13. Of the duties in Sacrament, of the exercise of Repentance.

THUS far of the duties before Sacrament: now follow the duties in the time of the Sacrament; viz. The exercise of our Graces, I mean such Graces as are suitable to the quality and nature of the Sacrament, as Repentance, and Faith, and Thanksgiving, and Love, and Charity.

The first of these Graces, which must be stirred up or exercised, is Repentance: And this will be actuated, if we consider God's love in Christ, and Christ's sorrows and sufferings for sin: There are many things in the Ordinance, which if but looked upon with the eye of faith, will open all the springs of true spiritual sorrow, or Repentance in the soul, but we name only these two particulars:

1. Here is a discovery of the love and sweetness of God, in giving his Son to die for us: So God loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. enough to cause us to mourn that ever we offended: O that God should be more tender to us, then to his Son, not sparing his Son, that he might spare us; give him to die, that we might live; pour the curse upon him, that the blessing might be poured upon us: Who can think on this, and withhold from tears!

2. Here is presented to us the sufferings and breakings of Christ, enough to break our hardest hearts:—Consider them—

1. In themselves: What breakings, woundings, scourges, crownings, piercings, did he endure in his body? what conflicts, strugglings with the wrath of God, terrors of hell? what weight, burden, wrath, did he undergo, when his soul was heavy unto death, when he drank that bitter cup, that cup mingled with curses, which if man or Angel had but sipped of, it would have sunk them into Hell? nay, it made him who was God as well as man, sanctified with the Spirit, supported with the Deity, comforted by Angels, sweet such a sweat, as never man sweet, drops, very clods of blood?

2. In the meriting cause of all our good, the procurers of all our peace, salvation: He was wounded, that we might be healed; scourged, that we might be solaced; He was slain, but not for himself: —He was wounded for our transgressions, broken for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed.

3. As the effects of our sin, as those things our sins brought upon him, and needs must this melt and thaw our icy stony hearts: It was I (should the soul say) who was the Traitor, Murderer, Judas, Herod, Pilate; they were my sins which were the bloody instruments, to slay the Lord of glory: Lord, I have sinned, and thou sufferedst, 'twas I that eat the sour grapes, and thy teeth were set on edge: This consideration must needs fill the heart with sorrow: They shall look upon him whom they have pierced; and how then? They shall mourn, and be in bitterness of soul, as one in bitterness for their first born: O how should we look upon Christ as wounded, scourged, pierced for us, and not be affected with, afflicted for our sins, the cause of it? If thou wilt be conformable to Christ (saith Bernard) as thou beholdest here a broken bleeding Christ, so labor to behold him with a broken bleeding heart: O who can with the eye of faith look upon a broken Christ, but with a broken heart? a wounded Christ, but with a wounded spirit? a bleeding Christ, but with a bleeding soul: God hath made in nature the same organ for seeing and weeping; and in grace he who sees clearly, weeps thoroughly; The eye will affect the heart: O Christ, that my eye would affect my heart; that whiles I behold Christ shedding his blood for my sins, my heart would melt out at my eyes, and shed tears for those sins for which I see Christ shed his blood: That I could turn the Sacrament of the Supper into a Baptism of tears, that I could wash and baptize myself with tears of Repentance.

SECT. 14. Of the exercise of Faith.

The second Grace, which in time of Sacrament must be actuated and exercised, is Faith; then should a communicant speak to his Faith, as Deborah to her soul, Awake, awake, Deborah, awake, awake, utter a song: so awake, awake, O my Faith, bestir and rouse up thyself, to receive Christ in this Sacrament.

But how, or in what manner is Faith to be actuated, and set on work in the use of the Sacrament?

In the Sacrament we must consider three things: 1. Sacramental representations. 2. Sacramental offers. 3. Sacramental promises; all which are in the words of institution: In the night that he was betrayed, he took bread and brake it:—He took the cup, and gave it, saying,—Take, eat, this is my body which is given for you:—And drink ye all of this, for this is my blood of the New-Testament, which is shed for you, and for many, for the remission of sins. 1. He took the bread, and brake it, and cup, and gave it,] there is the Representation. 2. He bade, Take, and eat, drink of this,] there is the offer. 3. He said, This is my body, which is given for you: This is my blood, which is shed for many for the remission of sins,] there is the promise: Now upon every of these must our Faith be busied and set on work: As thus in order;—

For Sacramental Representations:

1. In the breaking of bread, and pouring out of the wine, there is a representation of Christ's death and passion, both of his body broken and wounded, and his blood poured and shed.

1. Of his body broken and wounded: He was wounded for our transgressions,—And with his stripes we are healed: What sweet comfort may faith fetch hence? Look now upon the wounds of Christ, as healing wounds, as a City of refuge, whither thy pursued soul by the avenger of blood, may fly for safety and sanctuary: Indeed I am a grievous sinner, I have wounded my conscience with my transgressions, but behold my Savior here wounded for my transgressions: I may well have a troubled conscience for the wounds my transgressions have made therein; yet my conscience needs not sink in a despondency of spirit, whiles I look at the wounds of Christ: Here are wounds for wounds, healing wounds for stabbing wounds, curing wounds for killing wounds: O what comfort is here for faith in the wounds of Christ crucified, the nails, the spear, the wounds, all preach unto faith a reconciled God, that God is in Christ, reconciling the world to himself: The Lord's bowels are laid open by these wounds, so as throughout them we may see the tender bowels of his mercy, and so as through them, mercy flows from those bowels unto us:—O my dove, that art in the clefts or holes of the rock! Some of the Ancients understood by these clefts of the rock, the wounds of Christ, in which the dove, the Church, lies and shelters herself: This is one work of Faith in the Sacrament, when it sees these clefts of the rock opened, like a dove to betake herself thereunto for shelter security, against all fears that wrath and guilt may put their Conscience to: Do any fears of wrath trouble thee? doth any guilt of Conscience disquiet thee? why now for thy comfort, behold the holes in the rock, where thou mayest shelter: Dwell now in the rock, and be like the dove that makes her nest in the sides of the holes mouth; see, and fully believe thy peace to be with God through Christ, and look upon him broken and wounded for thy transgressions: Faith thus actuated, cannot but send the soul from the Sacrament with much comfort.

2. Of the blood poured and shed; and what is to be done now when I see this blood in the Sacrament, but to actuate my faith, and apply this blood to myself? Christ's blood is a reconciling blood, Rom. 3.25. A justifying blood, Rom. 5.9. A pacifying blood, Coloss. 1.20. A pardoning blood, Ephes. 1.7. A sanctifying blood, Heb. 13.12. A purging blood from dead works, Heb. 9.14. A cleansing blood, 1 John 1.7. A mortifying, crucifying blood, Gal. 6.14. A blood that sets prisoners free, Zech. 9.11. A blood that makes men Kings and Priests, Rev. 1.5, 6. A softening, mollifying blood, that makes the heart tender, a fleshy heart, Zech. 12.10. Goats blood (some say) breaks the Adamant, which neither iron nor fire can do; but surely the blood of this Lamb breaks the Adamant-heart of a man, which nothing else can break: It is a quickening blood, that brings life and strength with it; it is life-blood, blood full of spirit, that fills the soul with excellent vigor to holy performances, Heb. 13.20, 21.—Now what a deal of comfort may faith draw from all this? True, my person is unrighteous, but, O Christ, thy blood is justifying blood; my heart is unclean, but thy blood is a sanctifying blood; my lusts are many and mighty, but thy blood is mortifying blood; my heart is wondrous hard, but thy blood is softening blood; my heart is exceeding dead, but thy blood is quickening blood: In this blood of thine I believe, this blood of thine I thirstily drink down, this blood of thine I heartily apply, with a comfortable expectation of all these blessed benefits: Be of good cheer, O my soul, here is pardoning blood against thy guilt, sanctifying blood against the pollutions of thy nature, crucifying blood against thy lusts, softening blood against thy hardness, quickening blood to help thee against thy deadness.

2. For Sacramental offers, in the words, Take, eat, drink,] Christ himself is offered with all his benefits: Here then must faith actuate itself, and set itself on work, striving with all its might to take Christ, to eat and drink Christ offered: When Christ is offered to us, the act of faith then is that of the Psalmist, Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and why must these gates and doors be lift up? that the King of glory may come in: Christ makes offer to come into our hearts, and therefore we must open the gates, we must lift them up, even from off the hooks, that fair and foul way may be made for ready entrance. If a great man, especially a King, comes to a man's house, he will not only open the small wicket, his little door, but he sets open his great gates, he throws them wide open, to make spacious way for his entrance; so if thus it be, that Christ in the Sacrament offers himself to come to us, let our faith busily bestir itself in widening the passage, and opening our hearts to make Christ way, let us strive with might and 〈2 pages missing〉 so that Christ is full, and ever shall be full to the brim; there is in him a fullness of merit, for our justification, and a fullness of spirit, and habitual Graces for our sanctification: In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge (i.) vast heaps, for some pieces of silver and gold, are not treasures; all the treasures, all the heaps of Knowledge and wisdom that are in the world, all are in him; he is all in all.

2. Faith casts its eye on the promise, for the conveyance of Christ, and of Grace from Christ: Faith works by virtue of the promise; where there is no promise, there can be no faith, and therefore faith discovers the promise, That of his fullness we shall receive grace for grace; That his body is given for us; That his blood is shed for us, and for many, for the remission of sins: Hence the schools admit of a double fullness (i.) Of abundance and redundance: The promise speaks not only of the fullness of abundance in Christ, whereby he is sufficiently full in himself, but also of a fullness of redundance, by which he overflows and fills all his Saints: He is the well-head or fountain, which is not only full itself, but springs and flows over to the filling of the streams below it.

3. Faith looks upon this Ordinance, as an instrument, a means which God hath set up for the conveying of Christ, and nourishment from Christ: in Zacharias we find mention of two olive branches, which through two golden pipes, emptied the golden oil out of themselves: We may thus interpret, Christ is the olive branch, and the olive tree, and from whom comes all the golden oil of Grace and spiritual comfort, and he it is that empties it out of himself, into our hearts; but how? it is by his Ordinances, they be the golden pipes, by which this golden oil is conveyed unto us: Christ doth not immediately empty the oil into our hearts, but first into the golden pipes of his Ordinances, and so through them into us.

4. Faith being steeled by such considerations as these, it goes over to Christ, and by virtue of the promise, draws down his body and blood into the soul; this therefore is the main work, to awaken, and to actuate our faith, to set it on work upon Christ, and so to draw forth the efficacy of Christ in the Sacrament: Lord, I believe that thy body was given for me, thy blood shed for me, and for the remission of many sins: Lord, I cheerfully and gladly believe that I am now partaker of thy body and blood, and that my sins are pardoned in thy blood: I believe that Christ is mine, his death is mine, his resurrection is mine, remission of sins is mine, pardon and heaven are mine: Lord, I accept, I believe this sealed pardon of my sin: Lord, I believe that all Christ, whole Christ is mine, from top to toe: Lord, I believe his person is mine, his Godhead is mine, his Manhood is mine: Lord, I believe his merit is mine, his virtue is mine, his benefits both of Grace and Glory are mine: Lord, I believe that in Christ all fullness dwells, and that of his fullness I shall receive grace for grace: Lord, I believe that through this golden pipe of the Lord's Supper, I shall receive the golden oil of Grace from Christ, now be it to me according to my faith: Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief: O come down into my soul, and fill it full of the Lord Christ, of the body and blood of Christ. In this manner, as one said of the tree of Christ's ascension, though the fruit were high, and above our reach, yet if we touch him by the hand of faith, and tongue of prayer, all will fall down upon us: So here, if we can but touch him with the hand of faith, though a palsy hand, though a weak and trembling hand, if we can but go to him with a praying heart, Christ can withhold nothing from us.

By the way, this may discover to us where the fault is; when we return home, our faith never the more stretched, our hearts never the more warmed, our Graces never the more nourished, our corruptions never the more weakened, our assurance never the more heightened, it is a shrewd sign faith did not play its part in the Mount: Faith was entrusted in this employment, to go over to Christ for these and the like benefits, but thy faith did fail in the undertaking; therefore God, suspends the bestowing of these benefits, because thou suspendest thy faith:—Well then, if thou see not the fruit and benefit thou expectedst, to come into thy soul in the use of this Ordinance, charge thy faith with it, and bewail the weakness of it; and for the future, put it to its burden, let it have its full and perfect work, and thou wilt then find the comfort and fruit of it: Never did faith touch Christ in any Ordinance, but virtue came from him.

SECT. 15. Of the exercise of Thanksgiving.

THE heart being warmed, and growing hot with the sense of God's goodness, a man should then break out, and give vent to his heart, in magnifying the mercy of God for the death of Christ, and the fruit thereof communicated to us. Now this duty of Praise and Thanksgiving is actuated—

1. By our private ejaculations: Our souls should praise him, and all that is within us should praise his holy name; especially our affections of joy and love should taste largely of God. We should to this purpose now and then cast up such a dart as this to heaven, We praise thee, O God, we acknowledge thee to be the Lord, &c.
2. By our public and joint praises: Minister and people should both lift up their voices, with Glory to God on high, on earth peace, good will towards men.
3. By our singing of Psalms: Thus Christ and his Apostles, after the celebration of the Lord's Supper, they sung an hymn or psalm; and some say, it was one of David's Psalms, which was to present purpose (the Jews at their Passover used these Psalms, Psalm 113. to 119. which they called the great Alleluiah) but others say, it was a Psalm composed by Christ himself, containing the mystery of his Passion: howsoever, we learn our duty, as at other times, so at this especially, to sing unto God a great Alleluiah.
4. By our obedience, by devoting, and giving up ourselves to Christ, to be at the will of him, who is our sovereign Lord. The proof and life of Thanksgiving, is Thanks-doing; the life of thankfulness, is the good life of the thankful: Do we praise God for his excellency? that strictly is the object of praise: or do we thank God for his goodness? that strictly is the object of thanksgiving: O then let it appear, that we acknowledge God in Christ to be such a one as we say in our praises; and that we stand bound and beholding to him indeed, as we say in our thanks. Let us carry ourselves in our life towards him, as to God, who only is excellent, who only is God, our God, the God of our life and salvation.

SECT. 16. Of the exercise of Love and Mercy.

OUR love must be actuated—

1. In respect of all men, not only by doing them good, as we have opportunity, but if they be wicked, by pitying their souls, and by unfeignedly desiring (even at this Sacrament) the conversion of them.
2. In respect of our enemies; by forgiving, and forgetting all injuries, by praying for them, as Christ hath commanded.
3. In respect of the Saints, by delighting in them, as the most excellent of the earth, the only true worthies of the world, worthy forever of the flower, and fervency, and dearness of our most melting affections and intimate love, by sympathizing with them in their felicities and miseries, Rejoice with them that rejoice, and mourn with them that mourn.

Our mercy must be exercised to the poor, according to their necessities, and our abilities; only with this caveat, That we give in faith, and cheerfulness, and spiritual discretion, in preferring the Saints.

SECT. 17. Of Examination after Sacrament, and the result, if not a good day.

THus far of the Duties both before, and at the time of the Lord's Supper: Now follows the Duties after Sacrament, and they are these,—

- Examination.
- Thankfulness.
- Obedience.

1. A man is seriously and faithfully to consider, after he hath been at the Lord's Supper, what entertainment and welcome God hath given him? what comfort? what increasing of Faith and Grace? what quickening? what refreshment? what assurance? what friendship, and what communion with Christ? what virtue he hath found to flow out of Christ into his soul?

Now if upon such examination, a man have found no joy, no comfort, no enlargement, no communion with, nor answer from Christ; but on the contrary, his heart full of deadness, hardness, dullness, unfruitfulness, then two things are to be done:—

1. Let such a one suspect himself, that some miscarriage hath been in him, either in his preparation to, or in his performance of the Duty; and let him labor. to find out where the fail was; what it was that hindered the efficacy of that Blessed Sacrament: and having found out what hindered, let him judge himself for it, and be seriously humbled therefore: If he can but do thus, he needs not be overmuch dismayed, because this is one fruit of the life of Christ, which was undoubtedly received in the Sacrament; if he have not that which he would have, yet he hath that which was worth the going for: Let him construe this Humiliation as a fruit of going to the Sacrament, and be thankful for that.

2. Let him endeavor by after-pains in prayer and humiliation, to quicken and awaken the efficacy of the Sacrament: Sacraments do not always work for the present, but the efficacy may come afterwards; the actions of God are of eternal efficacy, though he put forth that efficacy in such times and seasons as he sees good. Physic doth not always work when it is taken, but sometimes afterward: Thus also it may be with the Sacrament, when a Communicant humbled for his unprofitableness in the Duty, endeavors by after-diligence and humiliation, to quicken and put life into it, it may work then. What hinders but it may be in the case of the Lord's Supper, as in the Sacrament of Baptism? the efficacy and force of Baptism doth not presently appear, no not presently upon the years of discretion: many a one lives viciously in a sinful course, a Swearer, Adulterer, &c. yet afterwards when God gives a man the heart to be touched with the sense of sin, and he begins to bestir himself, to seek God by faith and repentance, the Lord then quickens his Baptism, and makes it as powerful and efficacious, as if it had been administered that very day: So in this case possibly a man hath been at the Lord's Table, and hath more then once been an unworrrhy receiver, yet if he shall once come to be humbled for that unworthiness, God will make Sacraments so often received unprofitably, to become efficacious unto him: If then we have miscarried in our preparations and dispositions, so as we have found no benefit, no comfort, yet here is a remedy and help. Take this course by after-diligence, and after-humiliation, to fetch life into the Ordinance in which we were dead, and which was dead unto us.

SECT. 18. Of Thankfulness, if a good day.

IF upon examination we find that we were refreshed, had our hearts enlarged, had virtue from, and communion with Christ, then must follow

- Thankfulness.
- Obedience.

1. Thankfulness: Return home now, as with thy heart full of benefits of the Lord, so with thy heart full of praises to the Lord: Angels employments are most suitable to Angels food; Shall we bless God for a crumb, and not for a Christ? other mercies are but crumbs, in comparison of this rich mercy, and shall our hearts savor them so much, and not relish these? what's corn and wine to this? This is a mercy, in which all other mercies are folded up: Christ doth eminently contain all other mercies, and in the want of all, Christ enjoyed is exceeding great reward; nay, all mercies are not only folded up in him, and entailed to him, but he sweetens and sanctifies every mercy: let us then return home, as full of the blessing from on high, so full of praises to the most high: Thankfulness is the great grace to be exercised in, and Thankfulness is the great grace to be exercised after; and therefore while the present sense of this mercy warms our hearts, let the heat of it burst forth into Thankfulness toward God; it is the most suitable service, and the most suitable time to return it.

SECT. 19. Of obedience and fruitfulness in our lives.

THE second thing required in such a case, is Obedience. 1. Get we our hearts now further set against sin, let our souls say, Hath God been so gracious to renew and confirm my pardon, and shall I again dishonor him? Hath he wiped off my former scores, and shall I run on afresh to offend him? Hath he taken off my former burden, and cast it on the back of his dear Son, and shall I again lay more load on him? Hath he spoken peace to me in his Ordinance, and shall I again return to folly? No, far be it from me: I have washed my feet, how shall I again defile them? I have put off my coat, how shall I again put it on?

2. Get we our hearts further strengthened to service: In this Ordinance is a mutual sealing of Covenants between God and us; he seals to the first part of the Covenant, Pardon, Mercy, Grace, and we must seal to the second part of it, Service, Subjection, Obedience. God gives Christ to us, and we are to give ourselves back again to Christ. As there is matter of Bounty from God to us, so there is matter of Duty from us to God: There was never any soul, to whom God said in this Ordinance, I am thine, whose heart did not echo again to the same God, Lord, I am thine. Let us then labor to get our hearts further strengthened to service. And thus much concerning our duties before, in, and after the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

CHAP. XIII.

SECT. 1. Of preparation to PRAYER.

Hitherto of all the duties in reference only to secret, private or public Ordinances; now follow such duties as have reference jointly to all three, and they are either

- ordinary, as
  - Praying.
  - Reading the Word.
- extraordinary, as
  - Fasting.
  - Feasting.

The first of these duties is prayer, in which (as in the former) there is required some things,

- 1. Antecedent.
- 2. Concomitant.
- 3. Subsequent.

1. There is something required before, viz. Preparation; now this Preparation consists partly in

- Removing impediments.
- Using the means.

1. The Impediments to be removed are these:—

1. We must lay aside all carnal thoughts, and worldly cares, which might distract our minds: Keep thy foot when thou goest to God's house, saith Solomon; q.d. look with what affection and disposition thou comest to God in prayer.

2. We must put off our shoes (i.) remove our pollutions and corrupt affections, as carnal lusts, anger and doubting: I will that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting.

3. We must avoid surfeiting and drunkenness, which makes the heart dull and heavy: Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and the cares of this world; with ordinary prayer we must join a moderate diet, and with extraordinary, fasting.

4. We must cast off our sins: I will wash my hands in innocence, and so will I compass thine altar, O Lord.

5. We must draw off from prayer, from resting in it, or trusting upon it; a man may pray much, and instead of drawing nigh to God, or enjoying sweet communion with Christ, he may draw nigh to prayer, his thoughts may be more upon his prayer, then upon God to whom he prays; and he may live more upon his cushion, then upon Christ: but when a man indeed draws nigh to God in prayer, he forgets prayer, and remembers God, and prayer goes for nothing, but Christ is all.

2. The means to be used are

- Prayer.
- Meditation.

1. Prayer; a little eating prepareth a weak stomach, and setteth an edge upon the appetite to eat more: To this purpose David prayed before prayer, Let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as an evening sacrifice: Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips.

2. Meditation, 1. On our own unworthiness, that so we may pray in humility: I am less then the least of all thy mercies, said Jacob: O my God, I am ashamed and confounded to lift up mine eyes, said Ezra. 2. On the glorious majesty of God our Father: He that speaks to God, must remember that God is in Heaven; nay, what is prayer, but a coming before God, an approaching to God, a meeting of God? in prayer we have to do with God, and this will teach us to speak to him in reverence. 3. On the mediation and intercession of our Savior Christ, which is the very ground of our faith in prayer: Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that I will do. 4. On the promises of God in Christ, made to our prayers: Thou, O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed to thy servant, saying, I will build thee an house, therefore hath thy servant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee:—And deliver me, I pray thee (saith Jacob) from the hands of my brother Esau; Thou saidst, I will surely do thee good: Such promises have we all, Ask, and ye shall have; seek, &c.

SECT. 2. The general duties of the soul in prayer.

2. The duties in prayer, are either internal or external: The former are the duties of the soul, the latter are the duties of the body.

1. The duties of the soul we shall consider

- in general.
- in particular.

The duty in general is to pray,

- In truth.
- By the Spirit.
- In the name of Christ.

1. In truth, (i.) in sincerity and uprightness of heart: The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him in sincerity and in truth: Hence two faults are to be avoided.

1. Praying with feigned lips, this is to pray with an heart and an heart, as all hypocrites do: but 'tis otherwise with the Saints: Hear the right, O Lord, attend unto my cry, give ear to my prayer, that goeth not out of feigned lips.

2. Praying with wandering thoughts, arising partly from the flesh, and partly from the suggestions of Satan: The speech of the mouth must not go before, but always follow after the conceit of the mind: Many times as a Musicians fingers will run over a song which he hath been used to play, although his mind be otherwise occupied; so many in prayer will run over that form of words they have been used to utter, though their minds be roving about other matters: Such a prayer is called, Lip-labor: O let the absurdity of the fault, breed in us a loathing of it; Do our minds wander in prayer? endeavor we to join into one speech, the prayer of the mouth, and the speech of the heart, both which sound in God's ears, and then consider whether we would make such a speech (I say not with Malachi, To our Prince, but) to any man whom we regard, which yet we are not ashamed to offer unto the Lord: I will not deny in such a case, if we be grieved for, and strive and pray against such wanderings; this infirmity through God's mercy, and the intercession of Christ shall not be imputed unto us. It is good to distinguish of the cause whence these wandering thoughts may arise; if they come from weakness in ourselves, or from the temptations of Satan, the Lord will consider this, and deal mercifully with us; but if they arise from mere negligence, or voluntary admitting of loose thoughts, that is our sin, and we had need to repent and mourn for it.

2. By the help of the Spirit: It is the Spirit that helps our infirmities (saith Paul) for we know not what we should pray for as we ought, but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us, with groanings which cannot be uttered; q.d. when we put forth the graces of the Spirit in us, then the Spirit comes and helps, and what comes from us now, it comes from the breathings of the Spirit. This helping of the Spirit] is very Emphatical in the Original; as a man taking up an heavy piece of timber by the one end, cannot alone get it up, till some other man takes it up at the other end, and so helps him: So the poor soul that is a pulling and tugging with his own heart, he finds it heavy and dull, like a log in a ditch, and he can do no good with it, till at last the Spirit of God comes at the other end, and takes the heaviest end of the burden, and so helps the soul to lift it up. In our prayers we should eye the Spirit of God, we should cast our souls upon the assistance of the Spirit, we should press the Lord with this Promise, Lord, thou hast said, that thy Spirit helps our infirmities, when we know not what we pray for, nor how to pray for anything as we ought: Now make good this word of thine to my soul at this time, let me have the breathings of the Spirit of God in me; alas, the breathings of man, if it come from gifts and parts, thou wilt never regard, except there be the breathings of the holy Ghost in me.

[Quest.] But how should we know whether the Spirit of God come in, or no?

[Ans.] We may know it by this; The Spirit of God carries unto God, and it makes the prayer sweet and delightful, it leaves a savor behind it. O the breath of the Spirit of God is a sweet breath, and it makes sweet prayers; it never comes into the soul, but after it hath done any work it came for, it leaves a sweet scent behind: as Civit that is put into a little box, though you should take out the Civit, yet there will be a sweet savor left behind; so though the Spirit of God, in respect of the present assistance, withdraws itself, yet it leaves a sweet savor behind it.

3. In the Name of Christ: for whatsoever you ask the Father in my Name, that I will do. There is a necessity of praying in Christ's Name,

- 1. In regard of Admission.
- 2. In regard of Assistance.
- 3. In regard of Acceptance.

1. In regard of Admission: God is a consuming fire, and we are dried stubble; there is no approaching to him, but in Christ, in whom we have access with boldness to the Throne of Grace: God will not look pleasingly on us, if we come without Christ, he is no Throne of Grace without him; it is Christ who makes that which was a Bar of Justice, a Bench of Mercy; in him we have admission: Do we fall upon the Duty of Prayer? do it not in the strength of man, but in the strength of Christ: say, Lord, I come alone in the Merits of Christ, to partake of the Merits of the Lord Jesus: I have endeavored to prepare myself through thy grace, but I look not for admission through my preparations or dispositions, but through the blood and mediation of Jesus Christ.

2. In regard of Assistance: We pray, but we have no strength to do it without Christ; we might as well be set to move Mountains, as to pray without the strength of Christ: Without me (saith Christ) you can do nothing; without union with Christ, without communion with Christ, we can do nothing: from Christ we must have both operating and co-operating strength, both inherent and assistant strength; otherwise though we have grace, we shall not be able to perform any work, nor exercise our own graces: it is he that must work all our works in us and for us, the inherent work of grace within us, and the required works of duty for us: And blessed be that God, who hath given to us what he requireth of us, and hath not only made Precepts Promises, but Promises Performances.

3. In regard of Acceptance: Our works, they are not only impotent, but impure too, as they come from us: It is Christ that must put validity to them, it is Christ that must put his own odors to them, it is Christ that must put both Spirit and Merit to them, his grace to work, and his blood to own them, for whatever comes from his Spirit, it is presented through his Merit: Here is great comfort: Do we look over our performances, & wonder that ever God should accept them? so much deadness, so little life, so much coldness? consider then, that God looks upon them, not as ours, but as Christ's, in whom not only our persons, but our performances are accepted: Christ gives us his spirit, and Christ is willing to own what we present by his Spirit, and God is willing to own whatever is presented to him by Christ his Son. This rightly considered, it will cause us in every petition put up, to think ourselves so much beholding to Christ, that we shall be ready to say in our hearts, when any petition is granted, I may thank Jesus Christ for this.

But what is it to pray in Christ's name?

I answer, 1. To pray in Christ's name, is to pray with reliance upon the grace, favor and worthiness of the merits of Christ, in whom we have believed, and have access with confidence, by the faith of him: Christ's satisfaction is the ground of our intercession, because Christ's blood hath purchased this (we pray) therefore, O Lord, grant this.

2. To pray in Christ's name, is to pray from his command, and according to his will; as when we send another in our name, we wish him to say thus, Tell him, I sent you, and that I desire such a thing of him; so when we take those words which the Lord puts in our mouths, and desire those things only that the Lord commands us to seek, whether absolutely, or conditionally, this is to pray in his name.

3. To pray in Christ's name, is to pray for his ends, for the sake and use of Christ: Thus the phrase is used, To receive a prophet in the name of a prophet (i.) for this end and reason, because he is a prophet. Now let Christians observe, when they would have anything of God, to what use and end, and for whose sake it is: You ask, and have not, because you ask amiss, to spend it on your lusts. A lust is properly such a desire (though for lawful things) wherein a man must have a thing, because it pleaseth him: Give us water, that we may drink (was the brutish cry of Israel) not that we may live to him that gives it; holy desires or prayers (opposed unto lusts) are such desires of the soul left with God, with submission to his will, as may best please him for his glory.

SECT. 3. The particular duties of the soul in prayer.

The Duties of the soul in particular, are such as are—

- in the mind.
- in the heart.

1. In the mind, two things are required,

- Knowledge.
- Faith.

1. Knowledge

- of God to whom we pray.
- of that for which we pray.

1. We must know and acknowledge Jesus Christ whom he hath sent: Christ told the Samaritans, Ye worship ye know not what; far be it from Christians thus to do: Without this knowledge we shall wander into Will-worship, and superstitious inventions; And therefore know thou the God of thy fathers (said Solomon) and serve him with a perfect heart.

2. We must know and understand what we pray, otherwise we are subject to our Saviors reproof, You ask you know not what: two sorts of men are here condemned 1. Those that pray in an unknown tongue. 2. Those who pray in a known tongue, but understand not what they pray.

2. Faith,

- more general.
- more special.

1. Faith more general is such a faith, as apprehends the main promise of the Gospel concerning salvation by Christ.

2. Faith more special, is such a faith as apprehends the precious promises made to our prayers, whereby we are persuaded that our particular requests shall be granted unto us, only with this distinction,—in matters spiritual, necessary to salvation, we are to ask absolutely, as being persuaded that God hath subordinated our salvation to his own glory; and we are to believe absolutely, that the Lord will grant them unto us; yea, it is a good sign, if we desire any saving grace, that the same grace is begun in us: but in matters temporal or spiritual, not necessary to salvation, we are to ask them conditionally, so far forth as they may stand with God's glory, and the good of ourselves and our brethren; and we are to believe that he will so far forth grant them: Thus our Savior prayed in the like case, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me, nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt.

2. In the heart three things are requisite,

- Humility.
- Reverence.
- Ardency of spirit.

1. Humility, which is derived ab humo, from the ground; intimating, that when we pray, we should humble ourselves, as it were to the ground: Thus the Christians in the eastern Churches were wont to cast themselves down to the ground, when they called upon God: Thus Abraham acknowledged himself but dust and ashes; Thus Jacob confessed himself less than the least of all God's mercies; thus David professed, that he would be vile before the Lord; thus Isaiah cried out, I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: Thus Ezra prayed, O my God, I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God, for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the Heavens: Thus the Centurion, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof: Thus the woman of Sirophaenicia, confesseth herself a dog in comparison of the Israelites; and thus the Prodigal received to favor, confesseth himself unworthy to be called a son: Here's a cloud of witnesses, concluding that Humility in the heart is requisite in prayer.

2. Reverence of the majesty of God: Serve the Lord with reverence, and rejoice with trembling: The blessed Angels being in God's presence, and sounding forth his praise, are described as having six wings, whereof two pair serve to cover their faces and their feet, hereby betokening their wonderful reverence of God: How much more should we, who inhabit these houses of clay, (subject to infirmities, and corrupted with sin) be stricken with an awful reverence of Almighty God? did we consider ourselves to be in the midst of Angels, before the God of Angels, performing the like exercise as the Angels, how would this strike us with a reverence of this great King of Heaven?

3. Ardency, or fervency of spirit; this gives wings to our prayers, and causeth them to ascend before God; this sets on work all the graces of God's Spirit, and the more fervent the prayer is, the more they are intended, actuated, increased: I mean not thus of every fervency; there is a fervency of faith, and a fervency of mere natural desires: In this latter, there is no holiness, no fire of the Spirit, but in the former there is: When Christ lived upon earth, many came to him, and some were exceedingly importunate to be healed, or to have Devils cast out, &c. now if he answered their requests, his usual phrase was, Be it unto thee (not according to thy importunity and fervency, but) according to thy faith; q.d. I heed not, I regard not this clamor and earnestness, if it be only out of mere natural desires, but if it be out of Faith; if besides sense of need, you have in you a true hope of mercy, then be it unto thee according to that: This fervency is set out in the Word by divers significant phrases; sometimes it is called A crying unto the Lord, thus Moses cried unto the Lord, and Samuel cried unto the Lord, and Elijah cried unto the Lord, and Isaiah cried unto the Lord; sometimes a crying mightily: Let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God: sometimes a lifting up of our prayers; wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left, said Hezekiah to Isaiah: sometimes a pouring forth our souls before the Lord like water; O wall of the daughter of Zion,— pour out thy heart like water before the face of the Lord: Thus the Israelites drew water, and poured it out before the Lord, and fasted on that day, and said there, We have sinned against the Lord: sometimes a groaning in spirit, or groans of the spirit; The Spirit itself maketh intercession for us, with groanings which cannot be uttered: sometimes a praying exceedingly; sometimes a praying fervently, sometimes a striving with God: Now I beseech you brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that you strive together with me in your prayers to God for me: sometimes a wrestling with God: Thus Jacob wrestled with a man (i.) with God in form of a man, until the breaking of the day: —All these phrases do set forth the excellency, the necessity of this ardency, fervency of prayer, required in the text.

SECT. 4. The duties of the body in prayer.

THus far of the duties of the soul in prayer; as for bodily exercise (of itself) it profiteth little: but if joined with the soul, it is of great importance; Therefore glorify God in your body, and in your Spirit, for both are God's.

The duties of the body may be reduced to these two heads:

- The gesture of the body.

- The speech of the mouth.

Concerning the first; in public prayer we are to follow the custom of the Church wherein we live, if it be without scandal and superstition: In private prayer we may take our liberty, so that our gesture be correspondent to the affections and dispositions of the soul.—In Scripture we read of these several gestures: 1. Standing, which is a token of reverence and service, 2 Kings 5.25. 1 Sam. 16.21. 1 Kings 10.8. Job 29.7, 8. Gen. 18.22. 2 Cor. 20.5. Psal. 134.1. Luke 18.13. Mark 11.25. 2. Kneeling, which is a token of our humility and earnestness in prayer, Psal. 95.6. 2 Chro. 6.13. Dan. 6.10. Acts 7.60. and 9.40. and 20.36. Luke 22.41. 3. Prostration, or falling on the ground, or falling on the face, a gesture of the greatest humiliation, though not used amongst us in these parts of the world, Numb. 16.22. Josh. 5.14. Ezek. 9.8. and 11.13. Mat. 26.39. 4. Sitting, lying, walking, riding, journeying, in some cases, 2 Sam. 7.18. 1 Kings 19.4. Isa. 38.2. Psal. 6.6. Gen. 24.26. 2 Chron. 18.31. 5. Uncovering of the head in men, covering of the head in women, which is a token of subjection, 1 Cor. 11.7, 10. Rev. 4.10. 6. Lifting up, and casting down of the eyes, the former being a token of faith, the latter of dejection and hum•••tion, Psal. 123.1. Mat. 14.19. John 11.41. and 17.1. Luke 18.13. 7. Lifting up, or stretching forth of the hands; expressing humility and earnest affection; and knocking them on the breast, which betokens guilt, and earnest desire of pardon, Exod. 9.33. Psal. 143.6. 1 Kings 8.22. Psalm 134.2. Lam. 3.41. Luke 18.13. Luke 23.48.

Concerning the second; viz. The voice or speech of the mouth; it is necessary in Church or family, and most convenient in private: Now the voice used in prayer, is either

- Inarticulate.
- Articulate.

1. The inarticulate, is that which is uttered in sighing, groaning and weeping: Lord, all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee, saith David; and Hezekiah professeth, That he did chatter like a crane or a swallow, and did mourn like a dove; And the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings, which cannot be uttered.

2. The articulate voice, is the external speech itself, whereby the prayer is expressed, wherein three things are considerable,

- Quantity,
- Quality.
- Form.

1. For Quantity, we must not affect prolixity, as if for multitude of words we looked to be heard: When ye pray, use not vain repetition, as the heathen do: The Heathen thought, that their gods did not always hear, as being otherwise employed (so Elias told Baals Priests) and therefore they used to repeat the same things often, that if they did not hear them at one time, they might hear them at another time; thus Christians must not pray, they must not lengthen their prayers, as conceiving that either God hears not, or that he will hear for the lengths sake; but on the other side, where is variety of good matter, uttered with the attention of mind, and vigor of affection, there the longer we continue in prayer, the better it is.

2. For Quality, we need not be curious in respect of the style, God looking to the heart, rather than the speech: As it is not the lowness of a Preachers voice, but the weight and holiness of the matter, and spirit of the Preacher, that moves a wise and intelligent hearer; so not gifts, but graces in prayers, are they that move the Lord: The reason, prayer moves not God as an Orator, but as a child moves his Father: two words of a child humbled, and crying at his fathers feet, will prevail more than pen'd orations: it is the meaning of the spirit that God looks unto, more than the expressions, for the groans are said to be unutterable, Rom. 8.26. yet must we not be more careless and negligent for the manner of speech, than we would be, if we were to speak to a mortal man: If ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy Governor, will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the Lord of hosts, Mal. 1.8.

3. For the Form: We are not tied to any set form, nor are we so tied to conceived prayer, as that it must be without all study or meditation, either against the instant, or in former times: A man may conceive a prayer ex tempore, and yet without Euthusiasms, or extraordinary revelations; viz. by the help of his former studies and Meditations: and that I may afford some help that way, I shall in conclusion of this Chapter, lay down a directory for prayer, together with a form of prayer (though broken) in Scripture phrases.

SECT. 5. Duties after Prayer.

3. The Duties subsequent, which follow after prayer, are these:—

1. Quietly to rest in the good will and pleasure of God, not doubting but the Lord hath heard our Prayers, and in good time shall grant that which shall be most for his glory and our good; and this is the meaning of the word Amen, wherewith we seal up our prayers.

2. Diligently to use all good means for the obtaining of our suits; as if I pray for faith, or any other spiritual Grace, I must besides prayer, use all good means carefully, which the Lord hath ordained for the begetting and increasing of those graces in us, as hearing the Word preached, receiving the Sacrament, reading the Word, and meditating on it, otherwise our prayers are a tempting of God, as if he must grant, not by means, but by miracles.

3. Carefully to look after our prayers, and to cast up our comings in, and gainings by prayers, otherwise we are like foolish Venturers, who have a great stock a going, but look not after their returns: In the morning I will direct my prayers, and look up:] There are two military words in the verse, David would not only pray, but marshal up his prayers, put them in array; and when he had done so, he would be as a spy upon a tower, to see whether he prevailed, whether he got the day: For the better unfolding this mystery of grace, I shall propound and give Answer to some Quaeres or cases of Conscience as:—

1. Suppose I have prayed, how shall I assuredly know that God hears, and will answer in his own time?

2. Suppose the thing I desired shall not be answered, how may I assuredly know that God notwithstanding doth hear my prayers?
3. Suppose after prayer I observe all I can, I can by no means discern, that either God will answer, or doth hear my prayers, what shall I do then?
4. Suppose the thing I desire is answered, how may I assuredly know it was at my prayers, or out of common providence?
5. Suppose that others joined with me in those prayers now answered, how shall I know that my prayers had an hand in obtaining those answers, as well as any others?
6. Suppose I am assured upon former observations, that God hath heard and answered my prayers in their particulars, what must I do then?

SECT. 6. The first Case: Suppose I have prayed, how may I assuredly know that God hears, and will answer in his own time?

WE may resolve this case, by some observations before prayer, in prayer, and after prayer.

1. Before prayer: When God prepares the heart to pray, when he pours upon a man a Spirit of Grace and Supplication, a praying disposition; when he puts in motives, suggests arguments and pleas unto God, as materials for prayer; all which you shall find to come in readily, and of themselves; and that likewise with a quickening heat, and enlargement of affections, with a lingering, and longing, and restlessness of spirit, to pour out the soul unto God: This is a sign that God lends his ear, and will return answers: Thou wilt prepare their heart; thou wilt cause thine ear to hear; q. d. Thou fashionest the heart, and composes it into a praying frame, and that is a sign, Lord, that thou meanest to hear.

2. In prayer: As 1. when God draws nigh, and reveals himself to thy soul, in and upon such or such a particular petition, when God smiles upon thee, welcoms thee, falls about thy neck and kisseth thee; when no sooner thou comes into his presence to inquire of him, but he says, Here I am, as the promise is, Isa. 58.9. this thou art to observe as a sign that he hears thy prayer, and accepts both thee and it: Hear me speedily (saith David) and that I may know thou hearest me, draw nigh unto my soul, Psal. 69.17. 2. When God doth put a restless importunity into the heart, maugre all discouragements, for this or that mercy; and when this importunity is joined with a subjection to God's will, and runs along with it, then hath God stirred it up, and then look for something to come: You know the parable, how the unjust Judge heard the widow, for her importunities sake: So when God puts this importunity into the heart, it is a sign God means then to hear and answer.

3. After prayer: This will appear in several particulars; as—

1. When God quiets and calms the heart after prayer, by speaking something to the heart, though what is spoken be not always discerned; as when you see an earnest or importunate suitor going in to a great man, exceeding anxious, but coming out very cheerful, contented, and quiet in spirit, you would conceive that certainly something hath been said to him, which gave him encouragement: So when thou goest to God, and hast been importunate in a business, and thy desires were exceedingly up for it, and then thou risest up with thy mind, calmed and satisfied, and thou feelst the anxiousness, the solicitude of thy heart, about the thing taken off and dispelled; this is a good sign that God hath heard, and will return answer to the full: When Hanna out of much bitterness, and with strong desires, had poured her soul out unto the Lord, it is said, That she looked no more sad; And then God gave her a son, a son of her desires.

2. When God gives an obedient, dependent heart, in walking before him, when that consideration still comes in as a curb unto sin: If I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear me: When God doth still after praying, keep the soul in a more obedient frame of spirit; when he keeps thee from using ill means, &c. it is a sign that God hath heard thy prayers, and thou shalt have returns: David praying for his life, Hear my prayer, O Lord, give ear to my supplications; in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness:—Presently after he prays for holiness, knowing that sin would enervate and spoil all his prayers; Cause me to know thy way, wherein I should walk:—Teach me to do thy will.

3. When God after prayer, strengtheneth the heart to wait and expect for the mercy desired; when a man after prayer, begins to wait rather than pray (though he prays still) because he looks now God should perform; in this case, and at this time he may look for some good answer from God: David having prayed, says to his soul, Wait on the Lord, be of good courage, and he will strengthen the heart: wait, I say, on the Lord.

SECT. 7. The second Case: Suppose the thing I desire shall not be answered, how may I assuredly know that God notwithstanding doth hear my prayers?

WE may resolve this case, if 1. we observe these particulars:

1. Whether thy prayer was framed in a right manner? didst thou not pray absolutely for such blessings, as were never absolutely promised? if so, no wonder thy prayer is denied; or didst thou pray conditionally (as Christ prayed, If it be possible, &c.) then thy prayer may be heard, and yet the things denied; for otherwise Christ had not been heard, when yet the text says, He was heard in that he feared.

2. Whether there be not a reservation in that denial, for some greater mercy, whereof that denial was the foundation? if we had many of our desires, we should be undone: If the child had lived for which David so earnestly prayed, he would but have been a living monument of his own shame; God therefore denied his prayer, but after he gave him a Solomon.

3. Whether God doth not answer thee still according to the ground of thy prayer? Now the ground and intent of thy prayer, is after God's glory, the Churches good, thy own particular comfort; it may be God denies the particular mercy thou desirest, and yet he answers the ground of thy prayer, his glory shall be advanced, his Church preserved, thy comfort made up (even for that prayer of thine) some other way.

4. Whether God yields not far to give thee satisfaction, as if he were tender of denying thee? So the Lord answered Abraham, when praying for Ishmael, O let Ishmael live in thy sight! God went as far in answering his request as might be, I have heard thee (said God) and I have blessed him, and I will make him fruitful, and multiply him exceedingly, and he shall beget twelve Princes; but my covenant I will establish with Isaac.

5. What effects that denial hath upon thy heart? as—

1. Whether thy heart be enlarged to acknowledge God to be holy and righteous in his dealings with thee, and thine own unworthiness the cause of his denying thee? I cry in the day time (saith David) but thou hearest not:—Yet thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel.

2. Whether God fills thy heart with holy contentment in the denial?

3. Whether thou canst be thankful to God out of faith, that God hath ordered all for the best, though he hath denied thee?

4. Whether thy heart be not discouraged, but thou canst pray still, at least for other things? it moves ingenuous natures to see men take repulses and denials well, and so it moves God: Now if the case be thus, if upon observation thou canst say, that thy prayers, though denied, were conditional [if God will] that thou perceivest a reservation in God's denial, for some greater mercy; that God answered thee, at least, according to the ground of thy prayers, that God yielded far to thee; as if he were loath to deny thy prayers; that thou feelest such effects of denial upon thy heart, as these:—1. An enlargement, to acknowledge God holy and righteous. 2. An holy contentment in the denial. 3. A thankful heart. 4. An heart not discouraged howsoever. Surely then God hears, or God hath heard thy prayers, although the particular suits are not accomplished.

SECT. 8. The third Case: Suppose after prayer, I observe all I can, and can by no means discover, that either God will answer or hear my prayers, What shall I do then?

WE may resolve this case by laying open the duties appertaining to such a soul: Canst thou not discern God's dealings? spy no returns of thy prayers? it is then thy duty—

1. To examine what is the cause; and if the fault be in our prayer, because we did ask amiss, we must endeavor by God's grace to amend; or if the fault be in ourselves, because we are impenitent, we must first repent, and then renew our prayers unto God.

2. To persist and persevere in our prayers, without fainting, Continue instant in prayer, as Hanna, and David, and Daniel, and Bartimaeus, and that importunate widow.

3. To expect the Lord's leisure: I waited patiently for the Lord (saith David) and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry.

4. To rest in the good-will and pleasure of God: Let him do what seemeth him good: Who can tell, but God in time may give thee a sign of his good-will towards thee, and that he hath heard thy prayers? howsoever, it is the Lord that gives or denies, let him do what he please.

SECT. 9. The fourth Case: Suppose the thing I desire is answered, how may I assuredly know it was by my prayers, and not out of common providence?

WE may resolve this case by giving these directions to the soul, whereby it may be enabled to discern when and how things prayed for, come in by prayer; As

1. From the manner of God's performance: When God gives anything in answer to prayers, he often discovers a more than ordinary hand of providence in it: As

1. By bringing it to pass through many difficulties: Thus Peter was delivered out of prison at the prayers of the Church; and we find 1. He was sleeping between two Soldiers, if they had wakened, he had been discovered. 2. He was in chains, but they fell off. 3. The Keepers stood before the door, but they minded him not. 4. When one watch is past, he passeth quietly through another. 5. When both those were past, an iron gate flies open of its own accord: Now such difficulties are there in many businesses, which yet in the end are accomplished by prayer; iron chains fall off, iron gates, enemies hearts fly open of their own accord, and though not in that miraculous manner, by the means of an Angel, yet no less wonderful.

2. By facilitating all means, and causing them to conspire to accomplish the thing prayed for; thou hast wind and tide, and a fair day, and all the way paved and plain before thee; there falls out a great conjunction and meeting of many circumstances together to effect it, which had influence into it, wherefore if any one had been wanting, haply the thing had not been done: Thus when Israel went out of Egypt (which was the accomplishment of their prayers, their cry came up unto God (saith the Text) how were all things facilitated? the Egyptians that detained them, then came and entreated them to go out, Rise up, and get you forth amongst my people, said Pharaoh; Yea, they were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the Land; yea, They hired them to go out with their jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, and Pharaoh parts himself lovingly and fairly with them, and desires their prayers, Bless me also; yea, to show there was no resistance, the Text saith, A dog did not move his tongue; the brute creatures did not disturb them, though at midnight, when these creatures use to be most obstreperous through noises, especially at Travelers.

3. By bringing it to pass suddenly and unexpectedly; as the return of the captivity of Babylon, which was the conclusion of many prayers, was done in a trice; they were as men in a dream, they could scarce believe it was so, when it was done.

4. By doing above what was desired, with addition of other mercies; so Solomon asked wisdom, and God gave him more than he asked, Peace, Riches and Honor: When prayers are answered, usually mercies come thick; the thing we prayed for, comes not alone.

5. By adding some special circumstance, as a token of God's special hand in it; such a token as a man himself often takes notice of, yea, and others also often takes notice of it; Shew me a token for good (saith David) that others that hate me may see it, and be ashamed: So when Abraham and Isaac, and Abraham's servant, had prayed for a wife for Isaac; see by what a token God shown that he had heard their prayers; Rebekkah was the first that came out, and if she be the woman appointed for Isaac (prays the servant) let her offer me drink, and my camels also, and thereby shall I know thou hast shown kindness to my Master; and God gave him the token, and therefore the servant bowed at it, and worshipped the Lord: If we take notice of the sign, it was such as argued in her a kind, courteous disposition, which therefore (it may be) he singled out as a token of a meet wife, especially to be looked at in the marriage choice.

2. From the time, wherein the thing prayed for is accomplished: God who doth all things in weight and measure, shows his wisdom and love as much in the season, as in giving the thing itself: God considereth all times of thy life, and still chooseth the best and fittest to answer thy prayers in:In an acceptable time have I heard thee (saith God) As—

1. It may be at the very time when thou art most instant and earnest in prayer:Whiles they are yet speaking (saith God) I will hear; a time cull'd out on purpose, that they might rest assured it was an answer to their prayers.

2. At that time when thou hast most need, and when thy heart is most fitted for mercy (l.) when thy heart is most subdued, and thy lusts mortified, for then thou art fittest to relish his goodness alone, and not to be drawn away with the carnal sweetness that is in the thing;Thou wilt prepare thine heart, thou wilt cause thine ear to hear, thou wilt prepare thine heart in taking it off from the thing desired, in making it quieted and contented with God in the thing, and then thou wilt hear] this is the fittest time.

3. From the effects upon thy heart that prayest: As —

1. If the thing granted by thy prayers, draw thy heart more near unto God: Things granted out of ordinary providence only, do increase our lusts, and are snares to us; but if thou findest God's dealings with thee, to be a kindly motive to cause thee to mourn for sin, and to be a restraint against sin, it is a sign it was a fruit of thy prayer:Away from me ye workers of iniquity (saith David) God hath heard the voice of my weeping; or,

2. If thou findest God's dealings with thee, to be a kindly motive, to cause thee to rejoice in God, more then in the thing obtained, it is a sign it was a fruit of thy prayer. Hanna blessing God for her child,My heart rejoiceth in the Lord, saith she: She rejoiceth not so much in the gift, as in the giver, not so much in her child, as in his favor that answered her prayer.

2. If the mercy obtained by thy prayer, enlarge thy heart with thankfulness: Self-love makes us more forward to pray, then to give thanks, for nature is all of the craving and taking hand; but where Grace is, there will be no eminent mercy gotten with much struggling, but there will be a continual, particular thankful remembrance of it a long while after, with much enlargement: Great blessings won with prayer, are worn with thankfulness; such a man will not ask new, but withal, he will give thanks for old: Thankfulness of all duties proceeds from pure Grace, therefore if thy spirit stirs thee to it, it is a sign he made the prayer: See Hanna's song when she had her desire, 1 Sam. 2.1.

3. If the mercy gotten by thy prayer, doth encourage thee to go to God another time, to pray again more confidently and fervently, it is a sign thou hast gotten the former mercy that way:The Lord hath heard me (saith David) and I will call upon him as long as I live.

4. If the thing obtained by thy prayer, doth make thee careful to perform thy vows made in prayer: I will pay thee my vows (saith David) which my lips have uttered, and my mouth hath spoken, when I was in my trouble; and the reason follows, because that verily God hath heard me, when I cried to him; and so Eliphaz in Job, doth connect and hang these two together, Thou shalt make thy prayer to him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows.

5. If the thing granted by thy prayer, prove a real and stable mercy; if the curse be taken out, and it have few thorns and vexations in it: When the blessing of God maketh rich, he addeth no sorrow with it: It may be the heart was put to some trouble in the deferring, but its recompensed by the more settled; constant, immixt sweetness in the enjoying.

6. If the mercy obtained brings with it assurance of God's love, and an evidence of his favor: I need not make that a sign, for when this comes with a mercy, it carries its own evidence; you will then know well enough that it is the fruit of prayer.

SECT. 10. The fifth Case: Suppose that others join with me in those prayers now answered, how should I know that my prayers had an hand in obtaining those answers, as well as any others?

WE may resolve this case by these observations: As—

1. If thy heart did sympathize and accord in the same holy affection with those others in praying, then it is certain thy voice hath helped to carry it: If two of you shall agree on earth, (saith Christ) as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven: If two of you shall agree (the word is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ) q.d. if you harmonially agree to play the same tune (for prayers are music in God's ears, and so called melody to God) if you agree not only in the thing prayed for, but in your affections, for it is the affections that makes the consort and melody: If the same holy affections were touched and struck by God's Spirit in thy heart, that was in others, then didst thou help to make up the consort, and without thee it had been imperfect; yea, without thee the thing might not have been done, for God sometimes stands upon such a number of voices (as when he named ten persons in Sodom) and so one voice may cast it.

2. If thy heart be filled with joy in the accomplishment of what was prayed for, it is an evident argument that thy prayers did move the Lord to effect it, as well as the prayers of others. When good old Simeon saw his prayers answered in sending the Messiah into the world, he was even willing to die through joy, and thought he could never die in a better time: Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word.

3. If the thing concern others, and thy heart be thankful for a blessing on others, prayed for by thee with others, it is a sign thy prayers had some hand in it: Thus Paul prayed for the Thessalonians, and when Timothy came, and brought him good tidings of their faith and charity, he was not only comforted, but in his ravishment he cries, What thanks can we render again to God for you?

4. If the thing concern thyself which was prayed for by others, helping thee in their prayers, what cause hast thou but to think it was granted for thy own prayers, and not for theirs only? It may be indeed that God heard thee the sooner through the help of their prayers: I know this shall turn to my salvation, through your prayers, said Paul: but if God stirs up thy heart to pray for thyself, as well as others pray for thee, then God that gave thee an heart to pray, hath heard thy prayers also, and hath had a respect to thee as well (if not more then) to others, because it concerneth thyself especially, as being a more special mercy to thee then to others.

SECT. 11. The sixth Case: Suppose I am assured upon former observation, that God hath heard and answered my prayers in their particulars, what must I do then?

WE may resolve this Case, by laying open the duties appertaining to such a soul: Art thou now assured of answer and return of thy prayers, it is thy duty then—

1 To be thankful to God for his goodness: Blessed be the Lord (saith David) because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

2. To love God the more, and to resolve with confidence to call upon him so much the more: I love the Lord, because he hath heard the voice of my supplication; because he hath inclined his ear to me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live.

3. To have such a deportment and demeanor ever after, as is suitable to such who have commerce and intercourse with God; as, To depart from sin, to apply our hearts to obedience, and to pay all our vows: Away from me ye workers of iniquity, God hath heard the voice of my weeping:— And I will pay thee my vows which my lips have uttered;—For God hath heard me.

SECT. 13.

§. 1. A form of prayer in Scripture-phrase.

IN this form observe,—

1. A description of God.

O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh.—

Who hast created the heavens, and stretched them out, who hast spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it, who givest breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein: See Nehem. 1.5. Isa. 37.16. Jer. 23.24. Dan. 9.4. Psal. 65.2. 1 Tim. 1.17. & 6.16, &c.

2. A begging of Audience.

Look down from heaven thy holy habitation:—

Have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servants, to hearken to the cry, and to the prayer which thy servants pray before thee:— See Nehem. 1.6. Psal. 102.1, 2. Isa. 37.17. Dan. 9.17, &c.

3. A confession of the sins of our first Parents.

We confess, O Lord, thou createdst our first parents in thine own image, but the Serpent beguiled them, and they did eat of the forbidden fruit:—See Rom. 5.12.

4. Confession of Original pollution.

We are risen up in our fathers stead, an increase of sinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the Lord towards us:— See Psal. 51.5. Rom. 7.14, 23. Lam. 5.7. Ezek. 16.4, 6, &c.

5. A confession of actual transgressions in thought, word, deed.

The words of our mouth are iniquity and deceit:—

We have whet our tongues like swords, and have bent our bows to shoot out arrows, even bitter words.—

We have done deeds unto thee, that ought not to be done:—See Gen. 6.5. Isa. 6.5. Dan. 9.5. Mat. 12.36. and 15.19. Tit. 3.3. Ezek. 16.8, 15, 23, 25, &c.

6. Acted against light of knowledge.

We have trusted in our wickedness, we have said, None seeth us; our wisdom and our knowledge hath perverted us:—See Neh. 9.14, 16. Isa. 47.10. Jer. 6.16. Rom. 1.22. and 2.18. Tit. 1.16, &c.

7. Against checks of Conscience.

Our very Consciences have born witness, and our thoughts in the mean while have accused us:—See Rom. 7.15, 18, 19, &c.

8. Against long forbearance of God.

Many a year hast thou forborne us, and testified against us by thy Spirit in thy prophets, yet would we not give ear:—See Eccles. 8.11. Rom. 2.4, &c.

9. Against tender mercies.

Surely Lord, thy goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our life—

But we have observed lying vanities, and forsaken our own mercy:—See Deut. 32.15. Neh. 9.25, 26, 27, 28. Psal. 106.43. Isa. 63.9, 10, &c.

10. Against terrifying judgments.

Thou hast caused judgment to be heard from heaven:—

But we have not trembled at thy word:—See Deut. 29.19. Psal. 78.31, 32. Jer. 5.3, 5. Rom. 2.5, &c.

11. Against frequent Purposes, Promises, Vows of better Obedience.

We have not done according to our promise,—Nor paid that which we have vowed;—Nay Lord, they have been sin unto us:— See Deut. 29.25. 1 Kings 19.10. Psal. 78.10, 37. Jermiah 2.20.

12. Sins of our Age, Sex, Constitution, Relation and Calling.

We have found by experience, that foolishness is bound in the heart of a child:—

O remember not the sins of our youth:—See Gen. 42.21. Neh. 9.34, 35, &c.

13. Secret and open sins, our most beloved lusts.

We have sitten in the lurking places of the villages, in the secret places have we murdered the innocent, our eyes are privily set against the poor;—Nay, we have sinned openly in the sight of the sun; we have sinned without shame:—

We lodge within us many bosom lusts, right hands, and right eyes, and we are loath to cut them off, or pluck them out:—See Psal. 19.12. and 90.8. Jer. 6.15. Isa. 3.9. Mat. 19.22, &c.

14. Sins against the Law of God.

We have erred, and not observed all these Commandments, which the Lord hath spoken:—See Nehem. 1.7. Ezra 9.10. Rom. 7.15, 19, 20, &c.

15. Sins against the Gospel of Christ.

We have not obeyed the Gospel;—How then should we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation: See 1 Pet. 4.17, &c.

16. Our not thirsting after Christ.

Our souls break not for the longings that they should have unto Christ at all times:—See Psal. 42.1, &c.

17. Our not relying on Christ his merits and promises.

We have relied on the King of Syria (outward helps and means) and not on the Lord: See Heb. 3.12, 13.

18. Our grieving God's Spirit.

We have grieved thy holy Spirit, and turned the graces of God into lasciviousness:—See Mark 3.5. Heb. 3.10, 17. Genesis 6.6, &c.

19. Our continual impenitency, notwithstanding all means of Grace.

We have despised the pleasant Land, we have not believed thy word, but murmured in our tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the Lord:—See Isaiah 1.6. and 5.4. and 28.13.

20. Aggravations of sin by the person against whom.

Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight: See Numb. 21.7. Heb. 6.6. Heb. 10.29, &c.

21. By the number of them, time, place, &c.

Innumerable evils have compassed us about;—They are more then the hairs of our head:—See Psal. 38.4. Ezra 9.6. Job 9.3. Isa. 26.10, &c.

22. An accusing, judging, and condemning ourselves.

Shouldst thou whet thy glittering sword, and thy hand take hold on judgment,—Thou mightest make thy arrows drunk with blood, and thy sword might devour flesh from the beginning of revenges: See Dan. 9.7, 8, 9. Neh. 9.33. Lam. 5.16. Isa. 28.17. Jer. 5.9.—50.15, 25. Ezek 5.15.—14.8.—15.7.23, 33.—25.17. Rev. 4.5, &c. Thus for Confession.

§. 2. The 2<sup>d</sup> part of prayer is, Petition for

- ourselves.
- others.

1. We petition for pardon of sin.

LOrd, pardon our iniquities, and our sins, and take us for thine inheritance: See 2 Sam. 24.10. Neh. 4.5. Psal. 119.132. Isa. 1.18. Isa. 44.2, &c.

For his holy Names sake.

Do it Lord, for thy names sake:—See Ezek. 14.22. and 20.44. Psal. 25.11, &c.

For his Promise sake. Thou hast said, In those days, and in that time, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found, for I will pardon them whom I reserve:—See Neh. 9.17. Isa. 55.7. Jer. 5.1. and 33.8. and 50.20. Mic. 7.18.

For his Mercies sake. Make thy face to shine upon thy servants; O save us for thy mercies sake:—See Psal. 25.7. Psal. 79.8, &c.

For Christ's sake. O that God for Christ's sake would forgive us our sins:—See John 1.29 Psal. 51.7. Isa. 55.7. Jer. 33.20, &c.

2. For sealing of this pardon in our Consciences.

Shew us the salvation of God: — See 2 Cor. 1.22. Exod. 14.13. and 33.13, 18. Psal. 35.3, &c.

3. For Peace of Conscience, and joy in the holy Ghost.

Give us joy in the holy Ghost:—And the answer of a good Conscience towards God:—See Psal. 51.8, 11, 12. Rom. 8.15, 16, &c.

4. For justifying and lively faith.

Give us ever that gift of God, a soul-saving and justifying faith: See Ephes. 6.16. Phil. 3.9. Tit. 1.1. Heb. 11.1. Mat. 6.39.—7.20, &c.

5. For repentance unto life.

Give us to repent, and to turn ourselves from our idols:—See Psal 6.6. Ezek. 36.25, 26, 27. Mat. 11.21. Acts 11.18. 2 Cor. 7.10. Rev. 2.21, &c.

6. For saving knowledge.

Give us the Spirit of truth, who will guide us in all truth:—

Incline our ears to wisdom, and our hearts to understanding, that we may understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God, that we may be enabled to cry unto thee our God, We know thee:—See Hab. 2.14. Eph. 1.17, 18. Psal. 25.14. 1 John 2.20. Ephes. 3.17, 18, 19.

7. For love to God, Saints, Enemies.

Thou hast said, Thou wilt circumcise our hearts, and the hearts of our seed, to love the Lord our God, with all our heart, and with all our soul:—Give us also to love one another, as Christ hath loved us:—Cause us to love our very enemies, to bless them that curse us:—Luke 7.47. Ephes. 3.17, 18, 19. Phil. 1.9, &c.

8. For lively Hope, ardent Zeal, filial Fear, Patience, Perseverance, &c.

Give us to set our hope in God,—to be zealously affected always in every good thing:—Let the fear of the Lord be upon us;— Make us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith:—Help us to hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering:—See Prov. 14.32. Psal. 146.5. John 2.17. 2 Cor. 9.2. 1 Pet. 4.12, 13. Rom. 8.18. Phil. 1.29. Prov. 37.23, 24. Isa. 46.4. Psal. 48.14, &c.

9. For growth in Grace.

Guide us continually, and satisfy our souls in drought: O make fat our bones, that we may be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not: See Mal. 4.2. Prov. 4.18. Hosea 14.5, 6. Isa. 44.3, 4, &c.

10. For the means of Grace, as the Word, Sacraments, Sabbaths.

Let the word of God grow mightily and prevail:—Teach us to keep thy Sabbaths, and to reverence thy Sanctuary:—See Psal. 19.7. Prov. 20.12. Isa. 55.10, 11. and 50.4. and 53.10. Psal. 36.8. Isa. 26.8. Heb. 4.12, &c.

11. For a blessing on our outward callings.

Establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it:—See Gen. 28.20, 21. 1 Chron. 4.10. Neh. 1.11. Psal. 91.11, 12. Jer. 10.23, &c.

12. For sanctifying of all afflictions to us.

O Lord, see our afflictions,—and let our tribulations workout patience, and patience experience, and experience hope: See Psal. 68.20. Zech. 2.5. Heb. 12.20. Jer. 46.28. 1 Cor. 10.13. Isa. 27.9. 2 Cor. 4.16, &c.

13. Against all evil of sin, the Devil, World, Flesh, our special sins.

O Lord, deliver us from evil,—from all the wiles of the Devil,— from the worlds allurements; for what will it profit us to gain the whole world, and to lose our souls?—from all the filthiness of the flesh,—especially from our darling lusts: See Rom. 6.11, 12, 22. 2 Cor. 10.5. 1 John 5.18. John 16.33. 1 John 5.4. Rom. 8.8. Psal. 13.1, 2, &c.

14. Against all evil of punishment

- National.
- Personal.

Thou hast plagued our Nation; The stout-hearted are spoiled, they have slept their sleep, and none of the men of might have found their hands:—O heal the Land;—Let no evil befall us, neither let any plague come nigh our dwellings:—Our souls are among Lions, our soul also is sore vexed, but thou, O Lord, how long? See Psal. 57.3. and 6.2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. and 25.16, 17, 18. Mat. 26.39.

15. For all that belong to God's election, though uncalled as yet.

Look upon Zion the City of our solemnities.—Call home the Jews; thou hast revealed that they shall be graffed in again, and thou art able to graff them in again:—Bring in the Gentiles; thou had said, I will lift up my hands to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people, and they shall bring their sons in their arms, and their daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders:—Convert profane and ignorant Christians, search thy sheep, and seek them out,— that there may be one fold, and one shepherd:—See Isa. 49.16, 17. A*1.—5.15. Ezek. 34.12, 13. Isaiah 2.2. and 60.3, 5, 8. and 54.1, 2. and 60.18, 19, &c.

16. For those called in foreign Countries.

Awake, •wake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake as in the ancient days, in the generations of old:—Jer. 12.9, 10, 11. Psal. 17.7, 8, &c.

17. For our own Churches.

Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness, and of thy glory; where is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels, and of thy mercy towards us?—See Jer. 14. 19, 20, 21. Daniel 9.19. Jer. 12.7. Amos 9.11, 12. Mic. 2.12. Psal. 5.12, &c.

18. For our King, Queen, Seed-royal.

Let thy mercy and truth preserve our King, and let his throne be holden up with mercy:—See Psal. 72.1. Prov. 22.6. 2 Sam. 25.19. Psal. 89.29.

19. For Magistracy, Ministry, People.

Set godly Magistrates and Judges amongst us, which may judge according to the Laws:—Give the Ministers fully to preach the word of God, even the mystery which hath been hid from ages, and from generations, but now is made manifest to thy Saints:—Bless all from Dan to Beershebah, call them thy holy people, the Redeemed of the Lord: — See Proverbs 11.14. Isaiah 11.2. 2 Chron. 23.20. Psalms 105.22. Amos 5.24. & 6.12. Isaiah 53.10. 2 Samuel 17.11. Eccles. 12.10, 11. Isaiah 62.6, 7, &c.

20. For all afflicted in soul or body.

Give power to the faint, and to them that have no might:— Let them wait on thee, and renew their strength, and mount up with wings as Eagles:—See Isaiah 40.29. Psalm 41.31. — 68.20. — 79.11. Isaiah 30.26, &c. Thus far Petition.

§. 3. The third part of Prayer, is Thanksgiving for blessings

- Spiritual.
- Temporal.

1. WE bless God for our election, with all the golden chain of Graces hanging on it.

We give thanks to God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, whereby we are beloved for the Fathers sake, and for that golden chain of Graces hanging thereon, having predestinated us to the adoption of Children, by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will; — Having accepted us in the beloved, in whom we have redemption through his blood;— Having given us the forgiveness of our sins, according to the riches of his grace; — Having quickened us who were dead in trespasses and sins: — Walking in times past according to the course of this world, according to the Prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience:— But God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ:—And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus,—That in ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace unto us:—See Col. 1.12, 21. Rom. 11.7, 28. 1 Thes. 1.4. Rom. 8.15, 23. Gal. 4.5. Ephes. 1.5. Psal. 111.9.— 130.7. Rom. 3.24. Heb. 9.12, 15. Col. 1.14. Rom. 4.7. Eph. 4.32. 1 John 2.12, &c.

2. We bless God for his Word, Sacraments, Sabbaths, labors of the learned, &c.

Thou hast shown thy word unto Jacob, thy statutes and thy judgments unto Israel: Thou hast not dealt so with all nations, and as for thy judgments, they have not known them:—Thou hast been pleased by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe, by preaching at the first or second rebound, by lively voice, or printed Sermons:—See Acts 2.41. Tit. 1.3. 1 Pet. 1.25. Jer. 15.16. Ezek. 20.46.—21.2. 2 Cor. 5.19. Phil. 2.16. Col. 1.5. 2 Pet. 1.19. &c.

3. We bless God for any power over sin, Satan, or our own corruptions.

We acknowledge, Lord, to thy glory, that all our strength is in thee, and in the power of thy might: See Hosea 10.8. — 12.8. Rom. 5.20. and 6.6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Acts 26.18. Rom. 16.20, &c.

4. We bless God for our creation, preservation, life, health, peace, deliverance, victories.

We bless thee for our creation after thine own image;—for our preservation, by thy loving kindness and truth;—for our life once and again redeemed from destruction;—for our health once again restored;—for our liberty, prosperity, peace in our walls and palaces;—for our food and raiment convenient for us;—for deliverance from judgments national and personal, for a little moment didst thou forsake us, but with great mercies hast thou gathered us:—For all the victories over thine and thy Churches enemies, well may we sing, The Lord is our strength and our song, and he is become our salvation; he is our God, and we will prepare him an habitation, our fathers God, and we will exalt him:—Awake, awake, O my soul, awake, awake, utter a song:—Give thanks unto the Lord, call upon his name, make known his deeds among the people; sing unto him, sing psalms unto him, and talk of all his wondrous works; glory in his name, let the heart of them rejoice that seek the Lord:—Let the heavens be glad, and let the earth rejoice, and let men say among the nations, The Lord reigneth: O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever:—Blessed be the Lord God of Israel forever and ever, and let all the people say Amen, praised be God: See Psal. 22.9, 10.—71.14, 15, &c. Isa. 12.1, 2.—42.10, 11, 12.—44.26, 27, &c. Thus much of Prayer.

CHAP. XIV.

SECT. 1. Of the nature of Reading the Scriptures, what it is.

THE second Duty in reference both to secret, private and public Ordinances, is Reading the holy Scriptures, which is nothing else but a kind of holy conference with God, wherein we enquire after, and he reveals unto us himself and his will: when we take in hand therefore the Book of Scriptures, we cannot otherwise conceive of ourselves then as standing in God's presence, to hear what he will say unto us: So much the Prophet seems to imply, when he expresseth his consulting with God's Word, by that phrase of going into the sanctuary of God (i.) in going in unto God; as going into the Sanctuary is termed 2 Sam. 7.18. so by reading the Word we come in unto God, we stand in the presence of God, to enquire at his mouth.

SECT. 2. Of fit times and seasons for Reading the Scriptures.

There is a season to every purpose under the Sun, saith Solomon; the observation whereof not only adds grace to every good action, but many times facilitates the work itself we have in hand: Now the times and seasons most convenient to this duty of reading the Scriptures, are (besides the Sabbath) left to Christian wisdom; only we have general commands to be frequent and diligent in meditation of the Word, Josh. 1.8. Psal. 119.97. and the particular times may be either uncertain and occasional, or constant and set.

For the first, we may have occasions to read the Scriptures, to resolve us in doubts, Psal. 73.17. to comfort us in afflictions, Psal. 119.50. to direct us in matter of advice, Psal. 119.24. to guide us in our way, Psal. 119.105. to assist us in temptations, Eph. 6.17. such or the like occasions may make us to have recourse to the word extraordinarily.

For the second, respect must be had both to order and proportion; for the former, viz. Order, godly men have accustomed to begin the day with religious exercises, as with prayer, Psa. 5.3.—55.17.—88.13. now although Prayer and the Reading of the Word be two distinct exercises, yet they mutually help one another, and consequently are fit to be joined together: And as we must thus begin the day, so it is very fit to close up the day with the same duties: The evening was David's time, Psal. 55.17. and Isaac's time, Gen. 24.63. For the latter, viz. Proportion of time to be allotted for this exercise, it must indifferently respect both the duty, that we read all Scripture, and the person that undertakes it; for more time is required of Husbands, Parents, Magistrates, Ministers, then of others; though all must set apart some time for this duty; but that I may generally commend the practice of this order and proportion to all, I shall compose a Calender, to show how we may read all the Scriptures over in a year.

SECT. 3. Of the manner of preparation before the Reading of the Scriptures.

There is a double preparation needful; as first to the undertaking, secondly to the performance of the duty: 1. For the undertaking of the work, we had need to be prepared with a firm and constant resolution before we go about it, partly because of the sluggishness of our carnal natures to holy duties, and of our inconstancy and unsteadfastness in persisting and going through with them to the end; and partly because we know how dangerous it is to put one's hand to the plough and look back: Now the grounds upon which our hearts must be settled in the firmness of such resolution, must be drawn—

1. From the sense of our own blindness and ignorance, who of ourselves have not the knowledge nor understanding of a man, as Agur acknowledgeth.
2. From assurance that this is the means ordained by God to help us out of ignorance: We have a more sure word of prophesy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts.
3. From the delight which we may find in the use of it: This delight drew holy David to the continual meditation of it; the sweetness of the word arising out of its suitableness to his sanctified nature, overcame David.
2. A man's heart (being thus confirmed, with a full purpose and settled resolution to undertake and continue constantly in the study of the holy Scriptures) must be more particularly prepared to the work itself,
  1. By cleansing the heart of all superfluity and naughtiness; of all worldly thoughts and cares, of all unquiet passions of anger, fear, joy, sorrow, &c.
  2. By awing the heart with due reverence of God before whom we stand, because he can find us out in all our failings, as knowing our very thoughts afar off, much more having all our ways before him, and being one who will not forgive our willful transgressions: Such considerations will cause us to receive the Word with that trembling of heart which God so much respects.
  3. By stirring up in ourselves a Spiritual appetite to the word, such as Job found in himself, who esteemed the words of his mouth more than his necessary food; and David in himself, who opened his mouth, and panted, and longed for his Commandments; which appetite ariseth both from the sense of our emptiness (for the full soul loathes the honey comb) and from the fitness of the word to supply unto us whatsoever we want and hunger after, as being the food of our souls.
  4. By awaking our faith; and to this purpose we must consider, that it is the word of him that speaketh Righteousness, whose faithfulness is to all generations; and that God hath made it his power to salvation, mighty through him to cast down strong holds, and hath promised that it shall not return empty, but shall surely execute that for which it was sent.

5. By softening the heart, and making it pliable; and to this purpose we must cast aside our own wills and wisdoms, which stiffens our hearts against God's councils, and seek after the Spirit of tenderness, which is called, The opening of the heart, Acts 16.14.

6. By lifting up the heart unto God in prayer, to open our eyes, to enlarge our hearts, to incline our hearts to his testimonies, to keep them to the end, and (according to his promise) to send his Spirit, and to lead us into all truth: Some short effectual prayer to this purpose, to close up our meditations in this preparation of ourselves to the reading of the Word, representing unto God our dependence on him alone, to prosper us in the use of his own Ordinance, seldom returns without a gracious answer.

SECT. 4. Of the necessary Duties in Reading of the Scriptures.

The duty now fallen upon, it is good for our profiting to observe these particulars:—

1. That (in the beginning of our reading the Bible, or of each book in the Bible) we view and read over some Analytical Table, that so we better mark the drift and scope of the holy Ghost, and that we may with singular ease and delight remember the same: To that purpose I have added such a Table towards the end of this Chapter, which may well serve for the proposed ends.

2. That we attend diligently to what we read: Now there is good reason for this attention, 1. Because of the authority and wisdom of him that speaks; A child must hear his father, Prov. 4.1. and a Subject must attend reverently to the words of a Ruler, Job 29.21. yet none of them is our Potter as God is, Isa. 63.4. nor made us as he did, Psal. 100.3. nor consequently can challenge such respect from us as he may. 2. Because of the matter or subject which the Scriptures handle, not only for the weight and importance of those high mysteries which are therein revealed, but for the great interest which we ourselves have in those things, as containing our evidences and directions, which we and our children must observe, that we may do them.

3. That we keep still Jesus Christ in our eye, in the perusal of the Scripture, as the end, scope and substance thereof: What are the whole Scriptures, but as it were the spiritual swaddling clothes of the holy child Jesus? 1. Christ is the Truth and Substance of all the Types and Shadows. 2. Christ is the substance and matter of the Covenant of Grace, under all administrations thereof; under the Old Testament, Christ is veiled, under the New Covenant, revealed. 3. Christ is the center and meeting place of all the promises, for in him all the promises of God are Yea and Amen. 4. Christ is the thing signified, sealed and exhibited in the Sacraments of the Old and New Testament. 5. Scripture-Genealogies are to lead us on to the true line of Christ. 6. Scripture-Chronologies are to discover to us the times and seasons of Christ. 7. Scripture-Laws are our school-master to bring us unto Christ, the Moral by correcting, the Ceremonial by directing. 8. Scripture-Gospel is Christ's light, whereby we know him; Christ's voice, whereby we hear and follow him; Christ's cords of love, whereby we are drawn into sweet union and communion with him; yea, it is the power of God unto salvation, unto all them that believe in Christ Jesus; and therefore think of Christ still as the very substance, marrow, soul and scope of the whole Scriptures.

4. That we observe some special passages, where we find things represented unto us, either more weighty in themselves, or more proper to ourselves, for our particular use and occasions. I deny not, but all God's testimonies are wonderful in themselves, Psal. 119.129. All of them pure, ver. 140. All profitable to give understanding, ver. 130. And to cleanse our ways, ver. 9. And to make the man of God perfect to every good work, 2 Tim. 3.16. Yet there are some things in Scripture more important than others, and some more useful than others, for some persons, times and occasions: And to this purpose, I have in the end of this Chapter, composed some heads, or common places, for observation of such profitable things.

5. That we approve and assent to that we read, both because it is the truth of God, and because till our judgment approve it, we cannot believe it, nor possibly bring our hearts to yield to it true and sincere obedience: It is true, that every godly man at all times gives his assent to every truth of God revealed unto him, yet that assent is not alike firm at all times, because the evidence by which he acknowledgeth it, is not alike clear at all times; but when it shines to us clearly, when men clearly discern the glory and beauty of those heavenly mysteries, and taste of the goodness of them, they cannot but ravish readers with admiration, yea transport them with strong and heavenly affections of love, joy and desire, Psal. 119. v. 97, 111, 131, 162.—observe, that it happens sometimes such spiritual raptures may seize on a man, even while he is reading the Scriptures; as the Disciples hearts burned within them, whilst our Savior talked with them, going to Emmaus; and if so, then the heart opens itself to close with, and draw in that ravishing object, which will necessarily enforce the soul to make a pause:— And these pauses rather further than hinder us in our work, for a godly spirit quickened by such sweet refreshings, receives increase of alacrity, and is thereby strengthened to go on with much greater life, to the end of this holy exercise.

SECT. 5. Of Duties after reading the Scriptures.

The end of studying the Scriptures, is not only knowledge, but practice; wherefore after we have read any part of the Scriptures, our special care must be—

1. To recount and revolve in our minds those things we have read, and seriously to meditate on them.
2. To search out the true sense and meaning of the words, together with the scope unto which they are directed, and if our own understanding be too weak, we may do well to make use of other men's Writings or Conference.
3. To single out and apply what is of more special use to ourselves in such sort, as if we were specially named in any Precept, Reproof, Promise, Commination, Consolation, or the like, which is the most effectual means to awaken and stir up affections, and to set our endeavors, as manifestly appears in good Josiah his example, 2 Chron. 34.20, 21.
4. To work those things upon our hearts, till they warm our affections: This is best done—

1. By appropriating them unto ourselves; for that which affects us, is that which most nearly concerns us.
2. By believing what we read as undoubtedly true; thus David believed, Psal. 119.138.—151.—160.
3. By loving those counsels of God which we embrace by faith, for their purity, perfection, righteousness, and especially for the usefulness and wonderful benefit of them to ourselves, in quickenning the spirit, in giving wisdom, in converting the soul; these eminent excellencies of the Word, cannot choose but make these heavenly counsels precious in our eyes, and bring the soul to delight in them exceedingly.
5. To advise about, and to resolve upon the means to bring all into practice, especially for those duties which are laid before us in reading the word, or some part of the word, at such a particular time.
6. To examine our ways, how near they come up to the rule, or come short of it; that on the one side we may be encouraged in conforming our practice to the Law, and withal rejoice in the Grace of God, working in us with thankfulness; and on the other side, that we may be humbled and grieved for our failings, and driven to seek unto Christ, to make up our peace, and then look better to our ways for time to come, as David doth, Psal. 119.131, 132, 133, 176.

SECT. 6. A Calendar purposed to show how we might read over the Scripture several ways once in a year.

IN reading of Scripture, we spake of a proportion of time to be allotted for this Exercise; and that we may so proportion our reading with the time, that we read all the Bible or Scriptures over in a year, I had composed a Calendar, showing how we might read it over several ways.

As 1. by reading every day three Chapters or more in the Old Testament, and two or more in the New. 2. By reading three Chapters a day, and some more of the Psalms. 3. By reading strictly three Chapters a day of those that edify most. 4. By reading two Chapters a day, most of the Old Testament, and all of the New. 5. By reading only one Chapter a day out of such Books as are principal, and a Rule for the rest: But every private Christian may with a little industry find out this, or some other Calendar more beneficial to him; and therefore (not to swell this book needlessly) I shall leave it to him; only with this note, that after all these forms, it were not unprofitable, if he read at least every morning a Psalm, and every evening a Chapter of those that edify most in their order, which is now the constant use of a weak Christian in his family duties.

SECT. 7. Of the Analysis of the whole Bible, and especially (as in the first-place) of the Old Testament.

IN reading of the Scripture (Section 4.) we spake of an Analitical Table, that so we might better mark the drift and scope of the Holy Ghost, and that we might with singular ease and delight remember the same: To this purpose I have annexed this Analysis, 1. of the whole Bible; 2. of the several parts.

The whole Bible is divided into two Testaments,

- Old.
- New.

1. The Old Testament Christ divides into

- the Law.
- the Prophets.

1. The Law is in the Pentateuch of Moses, comprehended in this verse, —Genesis, Exo: Levi: Numerorum, Deuteronomi.

Wherein is

- 1. The object of the Law to whom it was to be delivered, viz. To the Church in its Original, in—Genesis.
- 2. The promulgation of the Law, which was delivered either
  - Jointly, the Law Ecclesiastical & Civil in—Exodus.
  - Severally, the Law
    - Ecclesiastical and Civil, in— Leviticus.
    - Political, in—Numbers.
  - 3. The repetition of the Law after once delivered in— Deuteronomy.

2. The Prophets are

- 1. Historical, declaring time past, comprehended in this verse, —Joshuae, Judicum, Ruth, Regum, Paralip. —Ez. Neb. Esther.
- 2. Dogmatical, instructing for faith and life present, as —Job, David, Proverb: Ecclesia: Cantic:
- 3. Prophetical, foretelling things to come, as —Isaiah, Jeremi. Thren. Ezekiel, Daniel{que}, Hose: Joel, Amos, Obedi. Jonah. Micah. Nahum{que}, Habbakuk, Zephani: Haggai, Zachari: Malachia.
- As for
  - Esdra: Tobit, Judith, pars Esth: Sapit: —Ecclesiastic.
  - Baruch, tres Pueri, Susanna, Bel, Machabaei. —Non sunt de Canone libri.

SECT. 8.

§. 1. Of the Pentateuch or Books of the Law.

SECT. 15. Of heads or common places of observations for profitable things.

I Declared before (Sect. 4.) that in Reading of the Scripture, it were good for our profiting to observe some special passages, where we find things represented unto us, either more weighty in themselves, or more proper to ourselves, for our particular use and occasions; and to that purpose I shall now compose some heads or common places for observation of such profitable things: Some I know herein advise these four points; 1. That every Christian following this direction, should make a little paper Book of a sheet or two, and write on the top of every leaf, the title that he would observe in his reading. 2. That he would observe such places as stare him in the face, that are so evident, that the heart cannot look off them. 3. That he set down under each title, only the Book, Chapter and Verse, and not the words, for that would tire him in the end; only when he hath done his quarter-task, or years task, then he may write out the choicest things, as he thinks good. 4. That he look not at the profit of this course the first week or month, but let him consider how rich it will make him at the years end; surely after he hath gathered them, he would not sell his collections for a great price, if it were but for the good they may do him in the evil day, when it shall come upon him: Of these I shall give you the experience of a weak Christian, the unworthiest servant of Christ, in the following Section and Paragraphs.

SECT. 16. Common places observed by one in his private Reading of the Scriptures.

9. Places hard to be understood, of which he desired and endeavored after resolution, as (amongst the rest) all the Titles of the Psalms, especially of these Psalms,— 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 16, 22, 30, 34, 38, 39, 40, 45, 46, 50, 53, 56, 57, 60, 72, 88, 90, 92, 119, 120, &c.

10. Other several heads hath he noted in his private little Book, which only I shall set down for others imitation: As—

- 1. Places that hold forth Experiences (or the wordwritten in our hearts) as the best Commentary.
- 2. Places that hold forth divers points of Religion, that a Christian may infallibly rest on, and live and die in the assurance of them.
- 3. Places that justify a precise respect of the least sin.
- 4. Places that show the godly have suffered all sorts of crosses, reproaches and slanders.
- 5. Choice Sentences, or memorable Sayings.
- 6. Promises of the Churches flourishing in the last times.

But above all, those which concern our own particular, I esteem most precious, and of singular use.

SECT. 17. Of the use of these Collections.

The use of them is diverse, according to the several heads: Now the first head was, Places that in reading, he found sensible comfort and ravishing of heart in? The use hereof is not only for present, but whiles he lives in any distress, for then he may have recourse to these places, as to so many wells of joy; and if in his grief, one, or two, or ten will not comfort him, yet it may please God that some of them will have spirit and life in them; besides, it cannot but marvelously establish his faith, when he remembers in how many distinct places of Scripture the Lord was pleased to comfort his soul.

The second head was, Places that in reading, he found rebuke of corruption in his nature or practice: The use hereof, is to open his eyes, and to let him see the Anatomy of his corruptions, and plainly to perceive what things are in his nature, that God hath a quarrel against; so that now it is time, that as such a one is guided by the finger of God to know his corruptions, so he should go to the Spirit of God for mortification.

The third head was, Places that directed him in his particular calling: The use hereof, is to consider the several Texts, as the crowing of Cocks, which ring in his ears: When wilt thou arise? why tarriest thou so long? why stirrest thou so slowly? See how the Sun rejoiceth as a Giant to run his race, why then dost not thou sharpen thyself to the work which God hath laid on thee? it may be thou meetest with many troubles, disgraces, oppositions, but what then? is not this God's command? is not this a service to the Lord Jesus? doth not the Lord assist? and is not he Pay-master sufficient? it may thy labor is in vain, thy work is without fruit, and what then? is not labor thy duty?

and good success God's work? what hast thou to do with thoughts about the blessing and success of thy labors? look thou to the duty, view the Texts well, and obey them, and leave the blessing of thy endeavors to the good will and pleasure of God; lay aside all care of the event, and roll thy burden upon the Lord, who will sustain thee: Thus these Texts cry upon him to submit to God's direction, and to depend therein upon his help and assistance. This is the double duty we all owe, First, To ask counsel at the word, and to follow the determination of it; for a true heart is ever obediential, subjecting itself to the will of God, as the rule of holiness, acknowledging his sovereignty, subscribing to his wisdom as most absolute, and to his ways as most true, just and merciful. Secondly, To put over all our businesses into God's hands, and in a manner out of our own, trusting in him for ability to the work, and for good success to come by them.

The fourth head was, Places containing passages that even melted his heart: The use hereof, is to call such passages to remembrance in times of mourning, only be sure that our affections prove spiritual, and not merely natural: I make no question but David's longing after God, Psalm 42.1, 21. his panting after the word, Psalm 119.140. his delight in the sweetness of it, Psal. 119.103. his trembling at God's presence, Psal. 119.120. his grief for the breach of his Law, Psalm 119.136. were spiritual affections; for they were raised by spiritual objects, so it is good for us to see to our affections, that they be raised by spiritual objects, and then they will prove singularly useful; it may be indeed that when a Christian peruseth over again the same Texts, he shall not have the like operation as before; all the godly find by their own experience, that those instructions, reproofs and consolations, which at sometimes awaken, wound and revive their spirits, at another time move them nothing at all; sometimes the spiritual sense is benumb'd, and they hear only by the hearing of the ear; but at other times, when those senses are awakened, they taste, and see, and feel the same, and consequently are affected, as Job was in that place, Job 42.5. so if at any time we find these meltings stirred in us by a spiritual object, and that they are answerable to God's dealings with us, then we can rejoice or mourn seasonably, when God calls us to either, Eccles. 7.14 I take this to be an holy and happy use made of those places.

The fifth head was, Places that hold forth comforts against the burden of his daily infirmities, inward temptations, and afflictions of spirit: The use hereof, is (when such a particular temptation comes) to eye the promises, and to betake the soul unto the Lord for succor promised: This is the voice of Faith, Be of good courage, here is a word of comfort, and there is help enough in heaven; the Devil may thrust sore at thee, but he shall not get the victory, for God is with thee; no question, but for these sins the Lord bestows on thee a pardon of course, only be vigilant and watchful at all times, in all places, upon all occasions, against all sins, with all the degrees thereof, specially against sin of constitution, calling, company, corrupt education: Indeed, this is the property of faith, both to rest on the promises, and to keep waking, for nothing is more wisely fearful than faith, nor more cautelous and circumspect than holy fear.

The sixth head was, Places that establish his heart against the fear of falling away: The use hereof is, in case of any such doubt, to learn and think upon these precious places, that we may be settled in believing our perseverance. This will encourage and quicken us in our Christian course, stablish us in well-doing, and hearten us against the greatest difficulties: Their objection, who say, The doctrine of assurance of not falling away, doth set open a door to all licentiousness, is most false; for the more assurance of salvation in a man's soul, the more fear and trembling in a man's course; he who is best assured, hath most power of God's Spirit, and the stronger the Spirit of God is within, the more holiness and fruits of grace are without.

The seventh head is, Promises that comforted him against outward crosses: The use hereof, is to live by faith in afflictions; for then is faith in these promises the only stay and support of the heart: I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living:— This is my comfort in my affliction, for thy word hath quickened me: In daily and lighter trials, a man of mild and patient temper, may hold up the head, but when one deep calleth unto another, and the waves flow over our head, when nature yieldeth, and the heart fainteth, then to stand fast, and be of good courage, is the only property of faith, which is grounded upon the rich mercy of God, made over to us in these precious promises. I cannot deny, but distrust many times wrings from a Christian such voices as these, Were it anything but this I could bear it; but now if in conscience of his impotency, he will seek to Christ to make him able, and he will fasten himself upon him by a true and lively saith in these promises, he may find strength enough through his might, whereby to bear that comfortably, which otherwise he may find most intolerable. Faith drives a man out of himself, as not able to bear the least cross as he ought, and through the power of God, it enableth him to bear that best with which God is pleased to try him.

The eighth head is, Places that hold forth his privileges in Christ, above all the wicked in the world: The use hereof is, 1. To believe and to rejoice in them: All these privileges are mine, will a soul say, the Lord hath given them for my portion, how then should I glory in God, triumph over death, sin and hell, through my Savior? 2. To live unto him who hath bestowed them on the soul: And now, O Israel (after all his kindness) what doth the Lord require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, and to love him and serve him with all thy heart, and to keep his Commandments? Oh (saith the soul) how should I now think much of Christ? and speak much of Christ? and converse much with Christ? and do much for Christ? and suffer much for the Lord Jesus Christ? and if I cannot do much, how should I desire and will to do much, which is accepted as if I did it? how should I continually go to him, to enable me to do more then of myself I can do? nay, how should I mourn and lament for what I have not done, either through want of ability or will: This is the use of such glorious privileges, to believe in Christ, and to live unto Christ.

The ninth head is, Places hard to be understood, of which he desired and endeavored after resolution: The use hereof, is specified in the very Title itself; and the resolution of the hard Texts cited (viz. those Titles of several Psalms) was by industry found out thus.

PSAL. 3. The Title is, A Psalm of David, when he fled from Absalom his son.

In which three things are contained, 1. The Author thereof, David King of Israel, who composed it. 2. The kind of the Psalm; which word [Psalm] is a word generally appliable to all those spiritual Hymns, without particular application to the Ceremonies of persons, time or manner of singing, as many others are: It was usually delivered to the whole Choir, on the Sabbaths and Festival days, to be sung by voice, and to be fitted to the instruments, used to be played upon in the Temple. 3. The expression of the time, and occasion of the composing thereof; (i.) when he fled from Absalom: the story is set down 2 Sam. 15. Many were the troubles wherewith this good King was afflicted, especially after his sin in the matter of Uriah, but never any so grievous, as to be driven out of his own Kingdom by his own Son, and his subjects to fall away from him, and to follow his enemy, that sought his life and Throne.

Hereupon he makes his sorrowful complaint unto God in this Psalm, and appoints it to be sung in the Church for his own comfort, and instruction to himself and the whole Church in such times of calamities.

And to this his pathetical moan, he joins this word [Selah] as a note of the attention of the mind, and stop or pause in the song.

For understanding the meaning and use of the word [Selah] note, that Selah is an Hebrew word, and signifies as much as Amen, forever, semper, in sempiternum, in seculo, &c. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , in aeternum.

Jerome observes, that the Jews used one of these three words in the end or conclusion of their writings or sentences, or in the end of their prayers, Amen, Selah or Salem, which signifies peace: And its noted to be a word to express an affirmation, or giving assent to that which is prayed or said, as Amen is, or else it imports a wish, vow or desire, that the thing spoken be certain, or may be forever, (i.) that it may be performed: And it is to be noted, that it is usually placed, when some special thing, worthy attention or observation, is spoken or delivered, or some desire to be performed, whether it be in the end, or in any sentence of the Psalm, Prayer, &c. that by a little stop or pause of the breath, the matter, worth or excellency of the thing may better be considered: And you shall not find it in any part of the Scripture, saving in the Psalms, and in the prayer of the Prophet Habakkuk, Hab. 3.3. whereupon its observed by Drusius and others, to be a word of note, used in those duties and music, to make a stop or stay, that the matter uttered may be better minded of the hearers, either to affirm it by their assent, or to desire the performance of what is sung by that intermission, which seems to be most probable, because the Greek Translators of the Hebrew Bible, express the word Selah, by the Greek word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , which signifies a stop, or intermission, and so comes to be used in the Psalmodie, and is rithmi Commutatio, a change of the note, or vicissitudo canendi, or as some say, alterius sensus exordium.

PSAL. 4. To the chief Musician on Niginoth, a Psalm of David.

The meaning is this, The Kingly Prophet David composed this Psalm, and delivered it to be sung and played in the Congregation, to him that was the chief Overseer, Master, and set over the rest of that music or consort, upon the instrument called Niginoth, which sounded by playing on with the hand: To understand this the better, we may observe, that some instruments used in the Jewish Temple, were 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 windy, such as sounded by breath, and motion of the fingers; as Organs, that are blown with bellows, and all hollow instruments, as Trumpets, Rams horns, Cornets, &c. such as the Priests and Levites used in the holy Ordinances, from the Hebrew word Nehiloth, which signifies bored through or hollow.

Others were pulsatilia, such as were played upon with the fingers only, either by a quill or otherwise; as the Harp, Dulcimer, &c. and had strings; and of this sort was the instrument in the Title of this Psalm, called Niginoth; now to everyone of these several kinds of instruments, there was one who excelled therein, appointed Overseer, or chief of the consort, and to direct those under him in the song, as there was of such as were the singers also for the song: Hence it is, that the Psalm being committed to be sung to the master of that Order, its said, To the chief Musician, or to him that excelleth: A Psalm of David.

PSAL. 5. To the chief Musician upon Nehiloth, a Psalm of David.

The Title of this Psalm may be understood by that which is said in the Title of the fourth Psalm, differing in nothing but in the name of the instrument, which was one of those that were hollow, and sounded by breath, as the Hebrew word shows, as afore, &c. Some of the Hebrew Writers say, It was a Musical instrument, whose sound was like the buzzing of Bees, or in regard of the multitude of them, which are like an army for number, and for that the master of that Choir was appointed to pray for all Israel, as for all the Armies of the Israelites, against the Armies of the enemies, that came against them in multitude and noise like a swarm of Bees; thereupon he gives the Title, Super exercitus Psalmus Davidis, &c. but improperly, the Title having no conformity with the Substance of the Psalm, nor is it approved by our Interpreters, &c. but the first followed.

PSAL. 6. To the chief Musician on Niginoth upon Sheminith, a Psalm of David.

The meaning of this Title may be understood by that which is said afore in the fourth Psalm, saving that here is added [upon Shemin•th] that is, it was played with the eighth time, note or strain, and sung with a very clear and high voice; we may better understand it by what is said, 1 Chron. 15.21. Mattithiah, Eliphaleh, and others were set over the base and tenor, which is the Sheminith, or the Eights, or Diapasan, as Musicians call it, so the meaning is; this Psalm was to be ordered by the chief Musician of that consort, to be sung and played upon the instrument Niginoth, with the highest and utmost strain of sound and voice, or instrument of ten strings.

PSAL. 7. Shiggaion of David, which he sang unto the Lord, concerning the words of Cush the Benjamite.

This was a Psalm of David, sung according to an ordinary song, the beginning whereof was Shiggaion, for its usual with us also to make songs to be sung, according to the tune of some others that were made before.

Tremellius and some others, from the Hebrew word, which signifies errare, &c. titles it Ode erratica, a wandering sonnet, because it is mixed, and consists of divers forms and distinctions of voice, and sound in playing artificially, joined to complete the music, as we see resembled in Prick-song.

And where it is said, Concerning the words of Cush, it shows the occasion of the Psalm, namely, That when David was most unjustly slandered by his enemies, and especially by Cush, &c. he makes his complaint unto God in this Psalm, desiring him to revenge his innocence, &c. and to be delivered from the persecution of Saul and his flatterers, such as this Cush was; [words] (i.) Accusations, &c. who this Cush was, is doubtful. Jerome affirms it to be Saul, and gives his reasons for it: Others (which I think is more probable) think it to be some Courtier of Ethiopia, whom Saul entertained in his Court, and was his special favorite, as if he had been of his family or stock (for Cush is the name of, and taken for Ethiopia) &c. this man for hatred against David, and flattery towards Saul, falsely accused him to Saul, and practiced all the mischief he could against him.

PSAL. 8. To the chief Musician upon Gittith, a Psalm of David.

The Title of this Psalm is diversely given, some thus, To the chief Musician, pro torcularibus, for wine-dressers; as if it was a prayer for fruitfulness of that fruit, &c. Others, that it was composed by David in the City of Gath, when he was banished; Others, that that kind of instrument was invented and used there: That which is most probable and agreeable with the Scripture, is, That Gittith was an instrument which Jeduthim and his posterity, being chief of the third Classis, or Order of Musicians, used to play upon, the custody whereof was committed to Obed-Edom the Gittite, and his family, that was of the posterity of Jeduthim; who for himself and his brethren, for his time, ministered and used them in the holy service, 1 Chron. 16.37, 38.

PSAL. 9. To the chief Musician on Muth-Labben, a Psalm of David.

Muth-Labben was the beginning of a tune, after which this Psalm was to be sung by the Choir, which contains a Thanksgiving for his victory, and for the death of Goliath, the Champion of the Philistines against Israel; therefore some read the Title thus, Magistro Symphoniae de morte illius bellatoris (i.) Goliath, &c. which typically is applied to Christ, as a song of joy of the Church and Saints of God, for Christ's triumphant victory over the Tyranny of Satan, and his Kingdom of sin and death: Some divide the words, and make Muth-Labben two distinct words, and make the sense to be this, Victori, super mortem filii, Psalmus David, as if David had made it for the death of his son, as Seldan; which sense Austin dislikes, and yields his reasons for the former, arguing from the substance of the Psalm, in that he mourned, and rejoiced not for his sons death, therefore the first sense is best.

PSAL. 16. The Title is, Michtam of David (i.) A golden or excellent Psalm.

The meaning is, it is a Psalm made by David, to be sung after a certain tune, named Michtam, well known among the Jews, which for the excellency, is compared to Gold, the beginning of which tune was Michtam; or else it is taken for a musical instrument of special esteem amongst them.

PSAL. 22. To the chief Musician on Aijeleth Shaha; (i.) The hinde of the morning.

Some take Aijeleth Shaha, to be the name of some common song, or to be the beginning of some ordinary tune, according to which this Psalm was sung; that's the Geneva note, which may be so: But Tremellius Lyra, and divers, take it to be otherwise, and better (as I think) who interpret those Hebrew words, in, or at the dawning of the day, as you would say, between break of the day and Sun-rising; because at that time, the comfortable light or shine of the day begins to break forth.

The meaning of the Title being this, David made this Psalm, and appointed it to be sung in the Church by the Priests and Levites every morning, so soon as the day brake out; at which time it was by the Law and Custom their duty to exercise their Ministry in the Choir, and to sing Psalms, 1 Chron. 9.33. which service the Lord would have to be done by the Church, that their faith and expectation of Christ, might daily be renewed and had in memory; the prophesy of whose Kingdom and sufferings are represented in this Psalm, looking (as the day springs from on high) that Christ should visit them.

PSAL. 30. Title, A Psalm or song of David, at the dedication of the House of David, which he composed to be sung at the dedication of his House.

Which Title showeth the occasion of this song, and time when it was used, which was at such time as he had built and finished his house of Cedar upon Mount Zion, which many good Authors think probable, and follow.

Or else when he was returned to his house again in safety, after Absalom in his rebellion had profaned it, and defiled it by his incestuous wickedness with his Fathers Concubines; and so to purge it from all uncleanness, he dedicates it to the Lord, praying him to sanctify and make it holy again, that it might be blessed and acceptable to himself, 2 Sam. 16.22. which is the opinion of learn•Tremellius, and the matter of the Psalm serves to imply as much; for it was a custom prescribed by the Law, Deut. 20.5. that whosoever had built a new house, he should dedicate it unto the Lord, sever it from wickedness and sinful abuse, or (as you would say) make God the Landlord thereof.

And this dedication imports three things:

1. That the Builder should devote it unto God, to testify that he would use it to holiness, and not to profane or sinful uses.
2. To testify his thankfulness for the work finished.

3. To offer prayers and sacrifices, that God might continue and confer his blessings upon them in it.

PSAL. 34. A Psalm of David, when he changed his behavior before Abimelech, and he departed.

This Title shows the occasion of the Psalm, rather than the ceremony thereof: The story is set down 1 Sam. 21.13. the sum is, David flying from Saul to Achish, King of Gath, who here is called Abimelech, for his safety, but being discovered by those about the King, and thereby in some danger, he changed his behavior, mutavit gustum suum, some vultum, meaning that out of policy to free himself, he feigned a distemper, as if he had been mad before Abimelech, who after sent him away, and so he escaped the danger he feared, and thereupon makes this Psalm of Thanksgiving for his deliverance: And it is to be noted, touching the name of the King, that here he is called Abimelech, which was a common name to all the Kings of that Country, as Pharaoh was to the Egyptians, Caesar to the Romans; and in Samuel he is called Achish King of Gath, which was his more proper name.

PSAL. 38. Title, A Psalm of David to bring to remembrance.

A Psalm which David made, to be sung by the Choir upon the Sabbath, after the Lord had afflicted him with sickness, and grievous chastisements, to put himself (and others of God's children in like case) in remembrance of his sin, which caused them; (which some think was the matter of Urias) and to admonish him of God's goodness, who had delivered him from those punishments, and pardoned his sin.

Some apply this to the agonies of Christ, and his powerful victory over sin, death, &c.

PSAL. 39. Title, To the chief Musician, even to Jeduthim, a Psalm of David. [Magistro Symphoniae Jeduthim.]

This Psalm was composed by David, and appointed to be sung and played on instruments to Jeduthim, even to Jeduthim (i.) To that excellent Musician, who for the excellency of his skill, was the chief of his Order, and father to those of his stock, which prophesied with a Harp, to give thanks and praise to the Lord, as 1 Chron. 25.3.

PSAL. 42. Title, To the chief Musician, Maschil, for the sons of Corah.

A Psalm committed to the sons (i.) posterity of Corah, of whom it seems Heman was chief, for the third Classis, or Order of those Musicians, to whom the holy service belonged, 1 Chron. 25.5. All these were under the hand of the father; viz. Heman, who sung in the house of the Lord with Cymbals, Psalteries and Harps, &c. that it might not only be kept, but sung by them in the tune beginning with the word Maschil, that both the fingers and hearers might be instructed in the matter thereof, according to the signification of the word.

Some think the Psalm was made by the Sons of Corah, after his rebellion against Moses; to whom after their repentance, &c. God gave the spirit of prophesy, whereby they made divers Psalms, whereof this was one, and therein foretold things to come of Christ, &c. which conceit Augustine mislikes, neither doth it agree with the matter of the Psalm; besides, the Hebrew letter Lamech, being prefixed to note the Dative case, shows it was made by David, for them to act by their music, and not of them; and that David in his banishment, to show his grief and zeal for the House and Temple, and to quicken his faith and confidence in God for his comfort, made this Psalm for his own and the Churches instruction in the like calamity, and delivered it to Heman and his sons, to be used in the song.

PSAL. 45. Title, To the chief Musician, Shoshannim, for the sons of Corah, Maschil, a song of loves.

Shoshannim was an instrument amongst the Jews, that had six strings, according to the Lily that hath six leaves or stems, thereby called Hexachorda, upon which instrument this Psalm was delivered by David to be sung to, and played to by Corah and his posterity; it begins with the word Maschil (as afore) (i.) To give instruction to God's people, touching the spiritual marriage and love between Christ and his Church, whereof Solomon's marriage with Pharaohs daughter, was a figure and type; and likewise to show the perfect love that ought to be between the husband and the wife; hence called, A song of loves, not unlike to Solomon's Canticles: And some put this difference between a Song and a Psalm; that, where no instrument, but the voice only is; this, the contrary; the Song is, when the instrument begins, and the voice follows; a Psalm, when the voice or ditty begins, and the instrument follows.

PSAL. 46. Title, To him that excelleth upon Alamoeth, or the chief Musician for the sons of Corah upon Alamoeth.

Some understand this Alamoeth, to be the tune of a song; I take it otherwise (after the best Expositions) to be meant of an instrument, not a tune, the meaning being thus much, A Psalm committed by David to be sung, and to him that was chief of the sons of Corah, to be played upon the instrument called Alamoeth; for 1 Chron. 15.10. it is expressly said, That Zachariah played with Psalteries upon Alamoeth, and then they played first upon that instrument, and so then sung the Psalm or ditty.

PSAL. 50. Title, A Psalm of Asaph.

Some think it is so called, for that Asaph was the author of it, having the gift of prophesy, which is but a weak reason, because all the rest were endued with a prophetic spirit as well as he. Augustine and other learned Divines, take it to be so called, not for that Asaph made it, but because it was committed to him and his posterity to be the singers thereof, 1 Chron. 25.2.

PSAL. 53. Title, To the chief Musician upon Mahalath Maschil.

Jerome thinks Mahalath to signify a tune of the whole Choir, or Company of singers, and that David committed it to be sung by the whole company of Levites, &c. but others better take it to be an instrument, such as was made to sound by breath and blowing, by reason of the hollowness thereof; the rest is expounded before.

PSAL. 56. Title, To the chief Musician upon Jonath, Elem, Rechokim, Michtam of David, when the Philistines took him in Gath.

The words of this Title in the original, have a double signification, and may be interpreted either metaphorically, a dumb Dove, for so Jonath signifieth, in a far or strange Country; So Jerome: or more properly, for a soul-suffering violence in a far Country; for howsoever usually the first word is interpreted, Columba, a Dove, yet its taken also in the other sense properly, and in its natural signification, for soul-suffering violence; in both which senses David applieth this Title to himself in his great distress: for David by a metaphor, compares himself to dumb Doves in a far Country; because when he was driven out of Judea, his own Country, by Saul that sought his life, and from the worship of God, and forced to fly to Gath amongst the Philistines, yet with patience, meekness and silence, escaping, he neither sought revenge, though it was in his power, nor shown any impatience, but betook himself in silence unto God, as if he had been dumb, and mourning like a Dove; and we may apply this Psalm to Christ, of whom he was a type.

Or which is better approved by Junius, he referreth it (which sense the words likewise bear) to the soul-suffering violence, enclosed by a band or multitude of Philistines, enemies both to him and his God. Some read the words, To the Master of the Harmony, which is all one in sense, as To him that excelleth, or chief Musician, Michtam of David; (i.) the excellency of this Psalm is as precious as gold.

PSAL. 57. Title, To the chief Musician, Altaschith Michtam of David, when he fled from Saul in the cave, or into the cave.

The general notes on this Title intimate, that the words are either the beginning of the song, Destroy not, or else words uttered by David in his extremity, staying and bridling his passion, &c. Michtam of David] as if he should say, This was the golden or excellent sonnet, which David composed and delivered to the Levites to be sung, and after the tune of the Psalm beginning with Altaschith, when he was in some wonderful fear and danger of death in the cave of Adullam, or En-gedi; whither he was driven by Saul, and so compassed about by his guard, that he saw nothing but death in the cave, or destruction if he came out, and thereupon prayeth, that he would not destroy, (i.) suffer him to be destroyed, which was the occasion of this song: See the story, 1 Sam. 22. and 24.

PSAL. 60. Title, To the chief Musician upon Shushan-Eduth, Michtam of David, to teach when he strove with Aram, Naharim, and Aram Zobah, when Joab returned and smote of Edom in the valley of salt, twelve thousand.

Shushan-Eduth is either the name of some instrument to be played upon in singing this Psalm, or the beginning of some song, so called according to the tune wherewith David would have this Psalm sung; or Michtam (i.) an excellent song which may be sung, either upon the instrument or tune Shushan-Eduth, or that of Michtam.

Some Titles have it Magistro Symphoniae in hexacorda, and then it signifies an instrument of six strings, upon which David would have this Psalm played, to testify unto the whole Church his faith, and the benefit of his victory given him by God, against the Aramites of Mesopotamia, and the other Aramites that inhabited Zobah, for which cause the word in testimonium is put in that Title; for further explication of the words, declaring the time and occasion of the making this, see the story 2 Sam. 8. and 1 Chron. 18.

PSAL. 72. Title, A Psalm for Solomon, or of Solomon.

Not that Solomon made it, or was the writer thereof, but that it concerned him, or was composed on his behalf by his Father David, when being ready to die, he commends his son Solomon, created King, to God, &c.

PSAL. 88. Title, A Psalm or Song for the sons of Corah, to the chief Musician upon Mahalath Leannoth, Maschil of Heman the Ezrahite.

Heman and Ethan were brothers, endued with an excellent spirit of prophesy and wisdom, wherein they were compared with Solomon, 1 Kings 4.31. Heman was the author that composed and made this Psalm, and Ethan the next Psalm, and committed them to be sung and played to the sons of Corah, to the chief of that company, upon Mahalath-Leannoth, which was the beginning of a song, after which he would have the Psalm sung, as some think, or else some instrument to which he would have the tune of it played and sung; and for the excellency of the matter contained therein, would have them preserved for a form of complaint unto the Church, in any private or singular distress (as in this Psalm) or in the time of affliction, or in persecution of Church or Commonwealth (as in the next.)

And it is to be noted, that some skilful in the holy tongue, affirm the Hebrew word Mahalath to be of divers significations, signifying both a musical instrument, or a Choir and company of Musicians, or infirmity; according to every of which acceptions it may be taken in this place, and applied to the instrument so called, to be sung by the whole company of the Levites, as well by voice as playing, in times of affliction of that people or others.

PSAL. 90. Title, A prayer of Moses the man of God (i.) A psalm of prayer made by Moses.

Its thought this psalm or prayer was made by Moses, for himself and the people, at such time as the Spies came back from viewing the Land of Canaan, murmuring and bringing an ill report thereof, for which the Lord threatened that they should not enter into the Land of promise.

PSAL. 92 Title, A psalm or song for the Sabbath day.

This psalm was made to be sung and used in the service of God in the Assembly, upon the Sabbath day, when the people met for the public exercises of the Church.

Some Hebrew writers say, it was made by Moses, in celebration of the memory of the Creation; there is no author thereof expressed in the Title.

This psalm for the Sabbath; and 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, Psalms, which the Jews call their Halleluiah, or praises of God, were sung at the Passover, and are the psalms or hymns which are mentioned in the Gospel, which were sung during the celebration.

PSAL. 119.

In this 119 Psalm, we find no less then ten several names or appellations, whereby David expresseth God's revealed will; sometimes he calls it God's Law, sometimes his Way, sometimes his Word, sometimes his Precepts, sometimes his Commandments, sometimes his Judgments, sometimes his Statutes, sometimes his Promises, sometimes his Righteousness, sometimes his Testimonies; but above all, notable it is, that there is not one Verse (excepting one, viz. 122.) in this long Psalm (containing according to the Hebrew Alphabet, two and twenty Octonaries) where we may not find one or more of these ten words or names: Hence we may gather, if David were so exact throughout the Psalm, that in every division (according to the letters 22.) and in every subdivision (every Verse beginning with the self same letter) he still makes mention of someone or more of these, so many appellations: O then, how were his affections inkindled, how was his love inflamed towards God's holy Word!

PSAL. 120. The Title, A Song of Degrees.

The Title of this Psalm hath more relation to the ceremony and manner of singing, then to the matter and contents of the Psalm, and I do not find so many different opinions touching the reason of the Title in any other, as in this.

Some suppose this and the 14 others next following to be so called, for that they were sung in some high and eminent place: Some refer it to the extension or lifting up of the voice in singing, or rising of the tune, that they might be better heard of the people; so Calvin: Some, that they were sung by the Priests and Levites, after the form and melody of some known and esteemed song, beginning with this Title: Some later Expositors conceive nothing to be meant hereby, but the excellency of the Psalms above the rest, because those places are accounted chiefest, whereunto we do ascend by degrees, therefore the word is used in the plural number [degrees,] as being choice Epigrams, as one would say, Most excellent Sonnets;

because the Hebrews use to express the superlative degree or excellency of a thing, by substantives of the plural number, as here, A Song of degrees, (i.) an excellent Song; so the Canticles of Solomon, called A Song of Songs, (i.) excellent; so the Lord is called The God of gods, Deut. 10.17. Lord of lords, Apoc. 19.16. (i.) without all comparison, above all other gods or lords: Daniel called him a Man of desires, Dan. 9.23. (i.) to be esteemed or desired above others; in this sense Junius takes it: Others think they were composed for Psalms of Thanksgiving, at the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon; and in that Jerusalem was situated amongst hills, whence soever they came, they must rise or ascend to come to it, as they do that climb up an hill; these songs therefore were appointed to be sung at every ascent and cleft, as the places they went up did arise, and for this cause called Psalms of Degrees.

Carolus Siggonius de rep: Hebreorum (whose judgment is more to be approved, as more agreeable to the truth) understands them to be so called, for that they were sung by the Priests and Levites, upon the several stairs that went out of the great Court or Porch where the people were, into the higher or inner part of the Temple, whither none but the Priests might come; and in Nehemiah 9.4. mention is made of the stairs whereon the Levites stood in the solemn feasts, crying unto God, &c.

For Solomon in building the Temple of Jerusalem, made certain Terresies, stairs or steps rising one above another, 2 Chron. 9.11. by which the Priests and Levites went up from that outward and great open Court or room adjoining to the Temple, 2 Chron. 4.9. (where the people prayed, brought and attended the Sacrifice, called, John 10.29. Solomon's porch, or the Court of the people, because it was open to all the people) into an higher room or place in the Temple, called The inner Court, or Lord's House, 2 Chron. 24.21. or Atrium Sacerdotale, because none but the Priests must enter thither: Now upon every feast day, the Levites, or they of them appointed for the song, sung these 15 Psalms, upon each stair one, being in number 15, as they went up into that Court of the Temple, making a pause upon each stair, from whence they had the Title of Psalms of Degrees.

This ceremony was used then as an outward means of preparation to the worshipping of God, to admonish all people to do it with cheerful hearts, renewed and lifted up to him by faith, from whence Cyprian observes, that in the Church Liturgy of his time, the Deacon called upon the people to lift up their hearts unto God, using this speech, Sursum corda.

Observations.

It may be observed, that in Titles many things seem strange, and hard unto us, because we know not (nor do the latter Jews of these times themselves) the particular instrument, form of singing, or the tunes used in specie, whether they be the same that we use in these days, or some resemblance of ours, in respect of the playing by the hand, or by breath; as Decem-chorda, an instrument of ten strings, is a resemblance of the Lute we use, &c. Cymbals, of our Cornets, &c. otherwise we know no more of theirs, then our songs, tunes or instruments are known to other strange nations and tongues, to whom we and our language is unknown and unheard of.

Again, where in some Titles its said to be sung after such a tune, it is no more but as in our psalms it is said, This is to be sung after, or according to such a psalm, because neither their nor our psalms have for every several psalm a several tune, but the tune of one is or may be referred to another.

Thus much of such hard places in the Psalms, as the weak Christian spoken of, desired and endeavored, after resolution in: For other difficult places of Scripture, because they would too much enlarge this Book, I purposely omit them. Thus much of Reading the Word.

CHAP. XV.

SECT. 1. Of preparatives to Fasting.

Hitherto of duties ordinary; now follow the extraordinary, Fasting and Feasting: but because the Book is swollen bigger then I had purposed it, and that much of the extraordinary is contained in the ordinary duties, I shall therefore deliver in few words what I have to say of these duties.

The first of these is Fasting, in which there is required something

- Antecedent.
- Concomitant.
- Subsequent.

1. The Antecedent, or preparation thereto, consists in these particulars:—

1. Take but a moderate supper the night before; for if a man glut himself over night, he will be more unfit for the duty of humiliation the next day.

2. Immediately after supper, all servile works of our calling laid aside, begin the preparation, and continue so long as we can conveniently sit up, even longer and later then on other days: From even to even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath, saith God; and therefore then set the time allotted apart for that holy work, propounding to ourselves the end of our intended Fast, resolving to keep it to God according to his will, adding serious petitions to God in our prayers in that behalf.

3. When we awake that night, let not our thoughts be upon worldly business, much less upon any wicked thing, but let them be holy, such as may tend to the furtherance of the holy actions to be done the next day.

4. Arise early the day of our Fast, this agrees well with a fasting day; it is probable, that for this cause some lay on the ground, others in sackcloth, in the nights of their fasts, not only to express, but to further their humiliation, by keeping them from sleeping overmuch or over sweetly.

5. In the morning (after some renewing of our preparation, and prayer for God's spiritual grace to enable us to sanctify a Fast that day) apply we ourselves to the main work of the day, of which in the next Section.

SECT. 2. Of the duties required in Fasting.

IN the action of Fasting there are duties

- inward.
- outward.

1. The inward duties are

- general.
- more special.

1. The duties that more generally concern the nature of the day, are such as these:—

1. In the true spiritual Fast, there must be fasting from sin, or the forsaking of all our sins; for whiles we abstain from lawful things, we are admonished much more to abstain from all things that are utterly unlawful at all times: It is the Lord's complaint, Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and smite with the fist of wickedness, ye shall not fast as ye do this day. It is plain, the Lord will endure no Fast of those that go on still in their wickedness.

2. The word and prayer must be added: I fasted and prayed before the God of Heaven, said Nehemiah:—And they stood up in their place, and read in the Book of the Law of the Lord their God, one fourth part of the day, and another fourth part they confessed and worshipped the Lord their God: But whereas prayer is a daily and ordinary exercise of the Saints, it is manifest, that by Prayer coupled with Fasting, is understood a special and peerless kind of Prayer, wherein two things are required: 1. Fervency of desire; now we must not only pray, but cry unto the Lord; yea, as the Ninevites speak, We are to cry mightily unto him: For the use of our outward abstinence, is but the wing of prayer, wherewith it might more easily fly up to heaven. 2. In such a prayer there should be an assurance of faith: The Lord hath made a gracious promise in many places to this Ordinance, 2 Chron. 7.14. Isa. 58.8, 13. Joel 2.18, 19. and let all the Fasts of the Church of Christ, both in the Old and New Testament, be looked at, as Judges 20.23. Ezra 9.6. Esth. 4.16. Acts 13.2, 3. and it will appear, that the end of their fasts (kept in any measure of truth and sincerity) was a feast, and the issue of their mourning, great rejoicing; all which may serve wonderfully to strengthen our faith in this holy performance.

3. Works of mercy must be added, Is not this the fast that I have chosen, to loose the bands of wickedness, to deal the bread unto the hungry, to bring the poor that are cast out, into thine house, and when thou seest the naked, to cover them? In all our fasts this must be observed, that the poor may have the gain of our fasting; If their loins and bowels bless us, the Lord also will bless us abundantly.

4. We must ever in these days of humiliation, renew our Covenant with the Lord; and not only unfeignedly purpose, but faithfully promise amendment of life; this making, renewing and keeping our Covenant, is the life and sum, and the one most necessary thing in this excellent and extraordinary exercise of fasting and prayer.

2. The particular duties, wherein we must seriously exercise our souls on such a day, are these:—

1. In a right survey and full comprehension of all our vileness, iniquities, transgressions and sins.
2. In a right apprehension of God's dreadful wrath and flaming vengeance against sin.
3. In a feeling sense of our own unspeakable, inconceivable misery by reason thereof.
4. In a vile and base conceit and esteem of ourselves, abhorring ourselves in dust and ashes.
5. In an inward sorrow, rent of the heart, bleeding of the soul, accompanied with an outward bewailing, with a plentiful and heart-piercing confession of all our sins before God's gracious throne.
6. In a resolute hatred, dislike and aversion in the will; in an impregnable resolution and strong reasoning of the mind; in a constant endeavor and watchful opposition against sin.
7. In an hearty grieving, that we cannot perform all these more heartily, sincerely and soundly.

2. The outward duties consist especially in outward abstinence: As—

1. From full sleep, whence that exhortation in some sense, Watch unto prayer, Col. 4.2. 1 Pet. 4.7.
2. From costly apparel, from ornaments, and better attire, Exod. 33.4, 5, 6. Jonah 3.6.
3. From matrimonial Benevolence, from that society which God hath sanctified by his word to married persons, 1 Cor. 7.5. Joel 2.16.
4. From bodily labors and worldly business, Lev. 16.29, 31.— 23.32. Joel 1.14.—2.15.
5. From food wholly; and yet this total abstinence from meat and drink is not so strictly required, but that they whose health cannot bear it, may in case of true necessity, take some little refreshing, lest otherwise they hazard or hurt their health, and unfit themselves for the spiritual exercise and duty; indeed we have no example of this case propounded in Scripture, yet we have a sufficient ground for it, Hosea 6.6. Mat. 12.7.
6. From all carnal delights and pleasures of this life, Joel 2.16. David and Daniel would. not anoint themselves at such a time, 1 Sam. 12.20. Dan. 10.3. And all these outward duties are to be observed, 1. Partly as helps to our humiliation, in renouncing the hindrances thereof. 2. Partly as signs of our humiliation, whereby we acknowledge ourselves unworthy of these delights. 3. Partly as evidences of our repentance, in that by way of godly revenge, we deprive our senses (which have all sinned) of their several delights.

SECT. 3. Of the Duties after Fasting.

WHen all is done and performed, observe these particulars:—

1. Take heed of inward pride, and resting in the performance: spiritual pride is that worm that will breed in the best fruits of the Spirit, that poison which the Devil (that hellish spider) will suck out of the best flowers in God's Garden; and if he can but prevail over us to be self conceited with our enlargements, or to trust to that service we have done, he hath what he looks for, and deprives us of all the comfort of our humiliation: Labor therefore as much as we can, to humble ourselves with a through view of our failings in the best of our performances; and for our enlargements, consider we the fountain of them, which is not any 〈2 pages missing〉 power, goodness, fatherly providence and bounty towards us, Psal. 16.5, 6. Mark 7.37. Rom. 8.28. and this acknowledgement, if it be effectual, will work affection in the heart, a sense of God's goodness and bounty towards us, causing us to love God, and to be obsequious towards God in all the duties of Thankfulness.

2. Cheerfulness and alacrity of Spirit; as the Lord loves a cheerful given, so a cheerful Thanksgiver, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 thanks, comes of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 to rejoice 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 must be 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 with joy, Phil. 1.4. James 5.13. The Holy Ghost in many places hath joined them together: I will be glad and rejoice in thee, I will sing praise unto thy name, O thou most high:—Rejoice in the Lord, O ye Righteous, for praise is comely for the upright:—It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most high;—For thou Lord hast made me glad through thy work, I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

2. The outward duty, is to express our inward Thankfulness and Cheerfulness: Our Thankfulness, by celebrating and praising the name of God, by extolling his goodness, by recounting his mercies, and by exciting others to praise the Lord: Our Cheerfulness, by making a joyful noise and singing unto God: Sing aloud unto God our strength, make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob:—Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye Lands, serve the Lord with gladness, come before his presence with singing: To this purpose we may sing the Psalms in the end of this Book, or some such other.

SECT. 3. Of the Duties after Thanksgiving.

THE Duty after, consists in these particulars:—

1. In referring the benefits and gifts received, to the glory of God the giver, in the good of his Church.

2. In seeking to glorify God, who hath been so gracious unto us, by bringing forth the fruits of a godly life: Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit.

3. In honoring the Lord with our substance, and acknowledging him to be the chief Lord of all we possess:Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruit of all thy increase.

SECT. 4. Of Psalms suitable to this duty, translated by Mr. W. B.

Psalm 100.

to the tune, Have mercy, &c.

All men of mortal birth, that dwell in all the earth,

2. O make a noise to God with joys, and serve the Lord with mirth.

2

O come before his throne with singing, everyone;

3. For certainly the Lord most high, even he is God alone.

3

He made us, and not we;
not we ourselves, but he.

His folk, and flock, and pasture stock
he made us for to be:

4. With praise come to his gate,

4 and to his Courts relate

His land and fame, and bless his name:
his honor celebrate.

5. For God is good forever,

5

his mercy faileth never.
His truth doth last all ages past, and constant doth persever.

Psalm 108. 1 part.

O God I fix my heart,

my glory bears a part,

And as my tongue, so shall my song praise thee with musicks art.

2. Wake Harp and Psaltery,

2 right early wake will I:

3. Thy praises, Lord, will I record,

3

the people standing by.

Ile praise thee with my song,

the nations all among:

4. To heavens high, to clouds of sky, his truth and mercies throng.

4

5. Exalted be thy name

5

Let earth below the trumpet blow of thy renowned fame.

Psalm 150.

PRaise, praise the Lord most high,

within his sanctuary,

In topmost tower of his great power, with praise him magnify.

2. Praise him for acts renown'd, with excellency crowned;

2

According to his greatness, do praise him with trumpet sound.

3. O praise him cheerfully,

3

with Harp and Psaltery:

4. And let the dance his praise advance, and Timbrels melody.

4

Praise him with joint consents of stringed instruments.

5. The Organs bring, loud Cymbals ring, each one his praise presents.

5

6. High sounding Cymbals ring,

6

let every breathing thing
The praise record of this great Lord, and Halleluiah sing.

Alleluiah, and again Alleluiah; Amen, Alleluiah.

Christian Reader,

IT is the desire of some precious men, That I should revise that Question about joining with the wicked in the Supper of the Lord, page 260. For my own part, I am fully satisfied, that the mind of God is clearly delivered in it; and yet lest any may think that I am singular in this, I have lately consulted with those Divines, to whom high (if not highest) respect is given in the Controversies of this nature; viz. Mr. Rutherford, and Mr. Gelaspi, to whom I may join the late Assembly of Divines convened at Westminster; and if you would know their opinions, consult but the Authors, as I have cited them, where you may find them at large. The Question is, Whether admitting of, or joining with scandalous persons in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and not endeavoring to keep them back whilst such, be sin in the admitters and joyners? and how may it appear? It is answered affirmatively:—1. That it is sin:—

1. In the admitters, Mat. 7.6. See Rutherford, Divine right of Church Government, page 254. and see Gelaspi, Aaron's Rod blossoming, page 548, 549, 550, 551.

2. In the joyners, 1 Cor. 5.11. 2 Thess. 3.6. See Rutherford, Divine right of Church-Government, page 238, 240, 250, 268, 356, 357. and see Gelaspi, Aaron's Rod blossoming, page 424, 427, 428, 429, 339. 2. This appears to be sin:—

1. In the admitters, by these grounds.

1. Because of the command to keep unclean persons from holy things, Numb. 5.2.—9.6, 7. 2 Chron. 23.19. See Rutherford, Divine right of Church-Government, page 241, 242. see Gelaspi, Aaron's Rod blossoming, page 96, 97, 98.

2. Because of Christ's casting out the man that came without his wedding garment, Mat. 22.11. see Gelaspi, Aaron's Rod blossoming, page 510.

3. Because of the practice of the Apostles, who cast out the scandalous from the Lord's Supper, 1 Cor. 5.3, 4, 5. see Ruth. Divine right of Church-Government, page 238, 240, 268, 346. Gelaspi, Aaron's Rod blossoming, page 239. and for 1 Tim. 1.20. see Rutherford, Divine right of Church-Government, page 354, 355. Gelaspi, Aaron's Rod blossoming, page 189.

2. In the joyners, by these grounds:

1. Because they are forbidden expressly to join with such, 2 Thess. 3.14. Ruth. p. 250, 360. Gelaspi, p. 281, 282.

2. Because scandalous persons ought to be censured, and so to be esteemed of the joyners as heathens and publicans, Mat. 18.17. Ruth. p. 303, 306. 223, 233. Gelaspi. p. 295, 296, 351, 361, 364.

3. In both admitters and joyners, by these grounds:

1. Because God hath forbidden us to eat with such, 1 Cor. 5.11. 2 Thess. 3.6. Ruth. p. 238, 240, 250, 268, 356, 357. Gelaspi. p. 424, 427, 428, 429, 339.

2. Because by joining with such in the Lord's Supper, their sin would become ours, 1 Cor. 5.6, 7. Gal. 5.9, 10. Ruth. p. 238, 239, 240, 339, 345, 349, 373. Gelaspi. p. 116, 117. 286.

3. Because the Ordinance of the Lord's Supper is defiled thereby, which we understand not simply in itself, but in some sort; (i.) It is defiled to them who are scandalous, and to them who join with such whom they know to be scandalous: And this appears:—

1. In that the Temple, which had a Sacramental signification of Christ, was polluted by the coming of profane persons into it, Ezek. 23.38, 39. Ruth. p. 452, 453, 496. Gelaspi. p. 546, 547.

2. In that the sacrifices of old were defiled by profane persons, Hag. 2.11, 12, 13, 14. Ruth. p. 272, 347, 348. Gelaspi. p. 547.

3. In that the profane are as swine which trample the pearls under their feet. Matth. 7.6. Ruth. p. 254, 255, 638. Gelasp. p. 548, 549. It is confessed that the word is a pearl, and yet the profane may hear the word, and instead of defiling it (if the Lord see good) be converted by it, Isa. 2.3, 4.—11.4, 5, 6, 7. but the Lord's Supper is such a pearl, as they can make no use of it, but pollute it to their own destruction; no more then dogs and swine can make use of pearls to feed, but only to trample on them: The Lord's Supper is such a thing as is ordained only for those that have saving grace, and not for dogs.

I hope these two witnesses (if they be thoroughly perused) will satisfy the scrupulous: But besides those two worthy Pillars, our own Assembly of Divines affirm this truth; who grounding the suspension of scandalous sinners from the Sacrament, though not yet cast out of the Church, they gave in these proofs: 1. Because the Ordinance itself must not be profaned. 2. Because we are charged to withdraw from those who walk disorderly. 3. Because of the great sin and danger both to him that comes unworthily, and also to the whole Church: The Scriptures from which the Assembly did prove all this, were Matth. 7.6. 2 Thess. 3.6, 14, 15. 1 Cor. 11.27. to the end; compared with Jude, v. 23. 1 Tim. 5.22. see Gelaspi, Aaron's Rod blossoming, page 339. I have no more to say, but the Lord lead us into all truth, and give us grace to walk humbly and obediently to every truth revealed: And as many as be perfect, let them be thus minded; and if any be otherwise minded, God shall reveal it in his due time: Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing.
